I would call the attention of hon. members to section 2 of the Immigration Act. My hon. friend the member for Vancouver Centre has spoken of the act of 1910. I now hold in my hand the law as it exists to-day, in 1927, and let us examine the law as it is to-day, and as it has been enacted by parliament. The law of the land to-day, in section 2, defines what an undesirable is, and if my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre will read the definition of an undesirable to be found in that section, he will find that the immigration authorities have complete authority to exclude from this country any person who would not be a citizen that Canada would like to have within its boundaries. I say, first, that the department has full authority to-day to keep out of Canada whomsoever they wish to keep out.

Now take the case of a British subject born in England who comes to Canada. Under the section which we are now seeking to repeal, that British subject has been placed by the amendment of 1919 in a position of exception. A Doukhobor who has come to Canada and become a naturalized citizen cannot be deported under the law of 1919, but a British subject born in England, even though he had lived here for twenty-five or thirty years, is deportable under section 41. The hon. member for West Calgary appealed to the House this morning on behalf of British citizenship. Is it fair for the parliament of a British dominion to leave on the statute book a law which says that a British subject born outside of Canada shall be deported, while a foreigner born in Russia who has acquired Canadian citizenship through naturalization shall not be touched under the same circumstances? That is the point, and that is the law we are asking the House to repeal.

Mr. McGIBBON: Why not amend it?

Mr. CANNON: We amend the law when there is something good in it; we repeal it when it is all wrong. According to the law passed in 1919, this parliament gave to the immigration authorities an exceptional power, and that exceptional power was directed against British citizens born outside of Canada. It has been asked, if British citizens come into Canada and commit offences against the state, is that a reason why they should not be deported? In answer to that I am not asking that the British citizen born outside of Canada should not be treated as they ought to be treated when they commit offences, but I say that under our law they should be placed on a parity with the other citizens of Canada, and in asking this House to repeal this law we are simply asking that they be treated by the immigration authorities as any other person who has entered Canada would be treated under the like circumstances. Is that fair? Can there be any objection to it? When my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre and my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George appeal to this House against this bill by describing the attempts of the bolsheviks in Canada to overthrow this government, my answer to that is simply that we can deal with the bolsheviks now under the existing law. But the section we are repealing here is a section which is directed against British citizens, not against Russians, not against bolsheviks. If you want to deal with bolsheviks or with people who come here from central Europe and have revolutionary ideas, you have power under section 40 to deal with them, but if you want to deal with British subjects and deport them at will in an arbitrary way, depriving them even of the right of appeal to a court to claim the liberty and freedom which they had as British subjects in England, so long as section 41 is on the statute book of Canada, an arbitrary Minister of Immigration can deport them to England without giving them a hearing in court or anywhere else.

Mr. STEVENS: May I ask a question? Paragraphs (n) and (o) of section 3 of the act deal with persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the government of Canada, or persons who are members of or are affiliated with any organization entertaining or teaching disbelief or opposition to organized government. Now, is it not competent for the Minister of Immigration, without trial, without reference to any court, without conviction, to deport persons who come under these two paragraphs, whether they be British subjects or aliens other than persons with a Canadian domicile of at least five years?

Mr. CANNON: I was waiting for my hon. friend right there. If such be the case, section 41 is not necessary, so why oppose this bill?

Mr. STEVENS: For this reason, that section 41 contains other offences of a similar character that are not included in these two paragraphs, and furthermore, I might add that we have repeatedly asked for the restoration of section 41 of the act of 1910 and the dropping of this present section.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend says: If you put in the act section 41 of the act of 1910, I have no objection. But this morning my hon. friend stated to the House that his objection to section 41 as it is to-day was that it would allow the deportation of people who were even suspected or reputed to be members of an illegal or unlawful association.

Mr. STEVENS: I did not say that. What I said was that if it would help the matter, then as far as I was concerned I would agree to the deletion of those words "who by common repute belongs to or is suspected of belonging" and so forth.

Mr. CANNON: The moment you delete those words from section 41, there is no difference of any importance between section 40 and section 41.

Mr. STEVENS: Oh, yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Is section 40 very long? If not, I would ask the Solicitor General to be good enough to read it.

Mr. CANNON: I wish hon. members to bear in mind that if we should pass this bill section 40 remains untouched. What does section 40 say? It reads:

Whenever any person, other than a Canadian citizen or person having Canadian domicile shall be found an inmate of or connected with the management of a house of prostitution, or practising prostitution or who shall receive, share in, or derive benefit from any part of the earnings of any prostitute or who manages or is employed by, in, or in connection with any house of prostitution or music or dance hall or other place of amusement or resort habitually frequented by prostitutes, or where prostitutes gather, or who in any way assists any prostitute or protects or promises to protect from arrest any prostitute or who shall import or attempt to import any person for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose, or who has been convicted of a criminal offence in Canada—

Any of these things.

—or who admits the commission prior to landing or entry to Canada of a crime involving moral turpitude, or has become a professional beggar or a public charge or practices polygamy, or has become an inmate of a penitentiary, gaol, reformatory, prison, asylum or hospital for the insane or the mentally deficient, or an inmate of a public charitable institution, or enters or remains in Canada contrary to any provision of this act, it shall be the duty of any officer cognizant thereof, and the duty of the clerk, secretary, or other official of any municipality in Canada wherein such person may be, to forthwith send a written complaint thereof to the minister, giving full particulars.

I call the attention of the member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) to the words:

—or enters or remains in Canada contrary to any provision of this act.

This means that, according to section 3, any persons who belong to the prohibited class enumerated in clause 3, even though they have entered Canada, even though they may be in Canada, fall under section 3 of the act, and they would be in Canada against the provisions of the act, and would therefore be liable to be dealt with under section 40. I think, Mr. Speaker, that section 40 gives the power to deal with all cases under normal conditions. Section 41, I understood, was brought into our law under exceptional conditions, with which I do not wish to deal.

Mr. STEVENS: No, it was amended only. It was brought in in 1910.

Mr. CANNON: The section as it stands to-day is the section enacted in 1919.

Mr. STEVENS: Amended only.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. CANNON: In 1919 section 41 was introduced in parliament. I do not wish to discuss the question whether the government of the time was justified in introducing it or not. These events are now past, and I do not wish to re-open the debate upon them.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I was seeking to find out whether, after the repeal of this section, there would be anything left in the act by which you could get after those who are referred to as undertaking to break down constituted authority, and that sort of thing.

Mr. CANNON: Has the hon. member the act before him?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): No.

Mr. CANNON: I ask my hon. friend to refer to clause 3 of the act, paragraphs (n) and (o), which read as follows:

(n) Persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the government of Canada or of constituted law and authority, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property.

These people can be dealt with under section 40. Then paragraph (o) reads:

I think I am justified in concluding that even though section 41 be repealed, we have provisions in the law which would enable the government to deal with all these cases in a very satisfactory way. My interpretation may be questioned, but in order to relieve the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite, I will quote the opinion of the hon. member for West Calgary. When this legislation was considered last year I took part in the debate, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) being present. I would call the attention of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre particularly to this because I know he has great confidence in the hon. member for West Calgary as a lawyer.

Mr. STEVENS: He is usually right.

Mr. CANNON: This is what took place:

Mr. Cannon: Section 40 covers the case.

That is what I argued last year and it is what I am arguing now.

Mr. Lapointe: I agree that section 40 would cover the case, and the only purpose of the bill would be to repeal section 41.

Mr. Bennett: The new section is of no value at all.

Mr. STEVENS: Is that a question?

Mr. CANNON: No, it is a statement from the hon. member for West Calgary who was heard in the House this morning denouncing this bill in such violent terms and asking hon. members to reject it on the ground that it would mean the overthrow of any form of decent government and of democracy in Canada. Last year, however, he declared that section 41 was of no value at all. I leave the bill in the hands of the House confident that, in view of the advice given by the hon. member that section 41 is of no value at all, hon. gentlemen will accept the amendment.

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (East Toronto): I am driven to my feet by the observations of the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) who has taken this opportunity of discussing the subject in the absence of the hon. member for West Calgary. I had not before heard of this statement attributed to the hon. member for West Calgary when the bill was under consideration on a former occasion. Anyone who has listened to what has just been read by the Solicitor General must come to one of two conclusions—either that the statement that section 41 was of no value at all is an interrogation, or that it was made upon the understanding that the former section 41 was to remain in the act.

Mr. CANNON: To be fair to the hon. member for West Calgary, I wish to add that after we had reached that conclusion we decided upon the section as now drafted and it met with the hon. gentleman's approval.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I cannot speak as to that. It is plain that the act as drafted this year is in different terms from the act of last year, and the assumption I had in mind when I first saw the bill was that section 41 of the Immigration Act of 1910 would be restored and become operative. It is however obvious that, if this amendment of 1919 is withdrawn, section 41 of the Immigration Act also disappears. I do not think there need be occasion for any difference of opinion with regard to what is stricken out of the law if this bill passes, but I want to call the attention of the House to the situation, which can be stated very tersely. Whether or not it is a corollary of what took place at the Imperial conference I do not know, but it seems that the Prime Minister and the government are now satisfied that while the immigration authorities shall retain the power to exclude from Canada or to deport any one who advocates the overthrow of the government of this Dominion, if he advocates the overthrow of the government of Great Britain he shall not be subject to exclusion or deportation. In other words, we can protect our own government but we are entitled to prevent any man from advocating the overthrow of the government of Great Britain or, say, of Australia. We are certainly enjoying our status to the full.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend has not read the law.

Mr. RYCKMAN: If the Solicitor General will pardon me, I will come to the point he has in mind. By this legislation, I say, we can protect ourselves. We can take by the scruff of the neck, if I may use that expression, and throw out of the country any man who advocates or proposes to advocate the overthrow of the government of Canada, but he may advocate with impunity the overthrow of the government of Great Britain and enter the country. I know that the Solicitor General will refer me to the words "constituted authority"; the act provides that we may deal with any one who proposes to attack constituted authority. But what does that mean? How is it interpreted? It is interpreted in the context in which it is found: it is not constituted authority in any other place than Canada. Would the Solicitor General say that the constituted authority of the Fiji islands was protected by this provision? Of course not. Nor can you say that the constituted authority of Great Britain is protected to any greater extent.

Mr. CANNON: I did not mention constituted authority alone; I read the law as it is.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Organized government.

Mr. CANNON: The law says, "any government of Canada or any other organized government". That includes the government of Great Britain.

Mr. STEVENS: Read beyond that clause; that refers only to the assassination of officials.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I suggest that before the Solicitor General attempts to interpret the law in relation to this most important subject, he should read it.

Mr. CANNON: I have read it; I have read more of it than my hon. friend.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I say now to the Solicitor General that the part of the section he has read does not refer to constituted government, other than the government of Canada, except in connection with the specific purpose mentioned. Now this is the legislation which the Prime Minister is asking us to pass. I am absolutely opposed to it. There is no country we admire anywhere on the face of the globe which has not the right to forbid the entry of undesirable immigrants who show anarchistic tendencies. What does Great Britain do? At the Channel ports there are two officers of Scotland Yard who inspect passengers as they land, and if there is anyone whom they suspect of harbouring such tendencies they ask him to justify himself; otherwise they put him back on the boat and deport him. And there is not an hon. member who will not approve of that course. The Solicitor General says that we control our immigrants. Of course we do. But unless we retain the provision which it is now being sought to repeal we have no control over the man who comes with a passport and who we know is seeking to destroy the constituted authority of Great Britain. That I submit is a privilege we do not wish to forego. And I for one stand resolutely for it. The Solicitor General referred by way of contrast to a Doukhobor and to British citizens. And who was the Doukhobor to whom he referred? It was a Doukhobor who had been crowned with Canadian citizenship, and the hon. member compared him to a British subject who had no Canadian citizenship. I say that this parliament gives credit to the man who has Canadian citizenship, no matter where he was born or what his extraction. That is why there is this distinction.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend mean that I am not a Canadian citizen? He draws that distinction between a British subject and a Canadian citizen, and says that a Canadian citizen has greater rights than a British subject.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I say that a Canadian citizen has greater rights in Canada than some British subjects.

Mr. DUNNING: We do not think so. I would like the opinion of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) on that point.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend is a lawyer. In order to complete his argument will he point out by what method a British subject born in England would acquire Canadian citizenship?

[Mr. Cannon.]

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; how can I become a Canadian?

Mr. CANNON: How can he do it? My hon. friend is a lawyer.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Behave yourself for a while.

Mr. DUNNING: It is hard to do with this kind of talk.

Mr. CANNON: Answer my question.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Give me time, and you will very soon get an answer. I will tell the House what a Canadian citizen is, and I will tell the Solicitor General that when he was objecting to what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre had said he did not read everything. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) read one section; the Solicitor General read the next section, but he did not read the third section. Why did he not give the whole interpretation of "Canadian citizen" as set out by the act? Let us have the whole thing read.

Mr. CANNON: I will say one thing to my hon. friend in order that we may not disagree further. If he wants to argue fairly I will do so, but if my hon. friend does not want to be fair I will not discuss it at all. I have been fair all through with my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre, and I am not used to these methods.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I have no quarrel except with the argument of the Solicitor General. I certainly desire to be fair and I want to read everything that is included in the definition of a Canadian citizen, which has not yet been given to the House. A Canadian citizen means a person born in Canada who has not become an alien; that was read by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. Or a Canadian citizen means a British subject who has Canadian domicile; that was read by the Solicitor General.

Mr. DUNNING: Then I am all right.

Mr. RYCKMAN: In that one particular you are all right. The part which was not read says that a Canadian citizen is one naturalized under the laws of Canada who has not subsequently become an alien or lost Canadian domicile.

Mr. STEVENS: Now read the definition of "domicile".

Mr. RYCKMAN: That is the whole of that definition.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will allow me, these are very complicated matters.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that if this bill passes it will be possible for men to land on our shores for the purpose of attacking the British Empire and the overseas dominions, and to carry on their machinations here. Section 40, the prostitution clause as I call it, does not cover this case, and no man of repute on either side of the House will say that it does. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that an unfair tone has been given the discussion by the introduction of a slogan which has been uttered more than once; "Oh, deportation without trial is not right". We have the privilege, which I think the Solicitor General will not deny, of turning back an immigrant who desires to land or who may even have his feet on our shores, because he is not desirable. That is deportation without trial. No man values more than I do the necessity of giving a fair trial to any Canadian citizen within our shores who has offended against the law or who is supposed to have offended in that way. He is entitled to that, even though it puts the country to an expense which sometimes is very heavy; that is quite proper. It certainly is not proper, however, that the machinery of our courts should be called upon at such expense to try men whom we know come here determined to destroy the government, anarchists and such like, instead of building up constituted authority throughout the world.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the hon. gentleman say which is the most serious, to attack the British Empire or to attack British rights?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I must frankly admit that I do not understand the question, because British rights are not available to the man who comes here seeking to destroy British authority; the House will admit that. There was a member of the British House of Commons, a man named Saklatvala, who admitted that he was against all constituted authority unless perhaps a soviet might be termed such. He sought to enter the United States; he was a man of ability and a member of the British House but his views were well known and he never got beyond Ellis Island. I do not think more than a dozen members of this House would say that he had a right to get any further. These problems will confront us, and we must be able to deal with them; we must deal with them as Great Britain does. When an anarchist is found seeking entry into Great Britain, Scotland Yard is there to send him right back; he has no chance and is not entitled to one. British law everywhere gives a Britisher or any decent foreigner a chance to establish his rights, but when they know a man has denied himself the privileges of a British citizen, then he does not get anything but short shrift. That is the essence of British law.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask if Scotland Yard was on hand to send Saklatvala back to India?

Mr. RYCKMAN: If the hon. member had been listening he would have heard me put the locale as Ellis Island; the United States sent him back.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But did Scotland Yard immediately ship this man back to India?

Mr. RYCKMAN: He was dealt with by the immigration authorities and got no further than Ellis Island. He had no chance to spread his propaganda in the United States, and we ought to put ourselves in the same position. Anyone who wants to indulge in propaganda against Great Britain and her people should not be allowed to come into the country, which is a part of the British Empire.

Mr. CANNON: Was that gentleman allowed to enter England on his return? When he was sent back from Ellis Island did they permit him to enter England?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I presume he was as a British subject. And I want to tell hon. gentlemen that a Canadian citizen, who was born in this country and has lived here, or a Canadian citizen by naturalization, is entitled, if he leaves Canada, to come back to it from any quarter of the globe, unless he has broken the laws of the land.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I suggest that Mr. Saklatvala was not born in England, he was born in India.

Mr. RYCKMAN: But he was a British subject.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the hon. gentleman suggesting that we should change our law and adopt that of the United States?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I prefer not to answer questions put by the hon. member for Temiscouata always under great heat.

I shall not detain the House further. I think that at this time it would be improper to cut out this section in the wholesale way that is proposed. I think the majority of this House are of one mind. We want to give fair treatment to everyone but we do not want to discriminate at the present time—especially so soon after the Imperial conference of which we have heard so much—against other portions of the British Empire. That does not comport with our new status, it does not conduce to inter-imperial good will and inter-imperial relations. I ask the House to consider this question, and that each member put it to himself: is he prepared to allow our immigration authorities to say to the man who is plotting against the government of Canada "You cannot come in, but if you are plotting against the government of Great Britain you can?"

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Leader of the Opposition): Before this motion is carried there are one or two things I should like to point out. The Immigration Act which obtained in this country in 1910 was one which was passed by this parliament at a time of peace. We had no difficulties of any kind in Canada, and we had no difficulties in foreign countries. If I remember correctly, the bill of 1910 passed this House without arousing opposition and, I think, without division. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister was in the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier at that time, the government that passed the act. I think he occupied at that time the position of Minister of Labour. I too was a supporter of the bill of 1910 and I think it was generally supported in the House and in the country. Now that act had been in force—there may have been some amendments to it, but I do not think there were any—until the year 1919 when, on account of the circumstances in which we found ourselves at the end of the war, it became necessary to enact provisions more drastic than ever had been in the act of 1910. Sections 40 and 41 which appeared in the act of 1910 reappeared in the act of 1919 but in different form. They were amplified, they were made broader in their application in many ways. It was thought well by the parliament of that day to do this owing to the peculiar circumstances in which we found ourselves at the time of the great conflict and which were so well described to the House to-day by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). However, several years have passed since the year 1919. I do not pretend to say that the situation in Canada to-day resembles in any respect the situation which existed when the act of 1919 was passed. But I do say that the situation which exists in Canada to-day very much resembles the situation which existed in 1910 when the Immigration Act was passed. Now that act worked well. It would work well to-day. Why not settle this dispute by reverting to the provisions of the act of 1910? In my judgment it provided all the safeguards necessary then. It would provide all the safeguards necessary to-day. But I am going to point out this fact just here. My hon. friend the Solicitor General has entirely misapprehended the effect of the present act, that is the act of 1919, which the government seeks to repeal by this bill. He has misapprehended the meaning of the sections which he read to the House a few minutes ago. He only read part of those sections. I maintain that in section 41 of the act of 1919 there are provisions which will not appear in our immigration law if that section is repealed. There was a difference of opinion between my hon. friend and the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman) a moment ago, and it merely involved the single question as to whether subsections (n) and (o) made provision against persons who attempted crimes against the government of this country, and possibly of other countries. It will be remembered that section 41 does make such provision. Section 41 is a very broad and comprehensive section. It provides:

(1) Every person who by word or act in Canada seeks to overthrow by force or violence the government of or constituted law and authority in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or Canada, or any of the provinces of Canada, or the government of any other of His Majesty's dominions, colonies, possessions or dependencies, or advocates the assassination of any official of any of the said governments or of any foreign government, or who in Canada defends—

And so on. I do not need to read the balance of the section. Now if that section is repealed we are left then to subsections (n) and (o) of section 3 of the act which deal with prohibited classes subject to deportation. Now what does subsection (o), which my hon. friend the Solicitor General read, say? It says:

Persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining or teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government,—

It merely applies to the assassination of the officers of the government of Canada, or the officers of any other organized government. The section we propose to leave includes the government of this country and the governments of other countries.

Mr. CANNON: I also read subsection (n). That is only subsection (o).

Mr. GUTHRIE: It was the other subsection which my hon. friend read.

Mr. CANNON: I read the two, subsections (n) and (o).

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am taking the clause which my hon. friend did not read.

Mr. CANNON: I read the two.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well now, you can follow me but you cannot interrupt me.

Mr. CANNON: Yes but my hon. friend must be fair in his statement as to what I read.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Subsection (n) provides:

Persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the government of Canada or of constituted law and authority, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property.

Now section 41, which this bill seeks to repeal, provides not only for the officials and for the government of Canada, but likewise for the government of Great Britain and of every British dominion and colony and constituted government in other countries of the world. It is a much broader section, anyone can see that at a glance, and if it be repealed all we have left then are subsections (n) and (o) of section 3 dealing with prohibited classes. I do not argue for a moment that at this time there is any necessity to maintain in its integrity section 41 as passed in 1919. But I do maintain—and I submit it with some confidence to my right hon. friend the leader of the government—that the section in the act of 1910 was an admirable section. If in its application to the citizen of Canada it is not definite enough, let us change it. But is it not sufficiently definite? It reads:

Whenever any person, other than a Canadian citizen, advocates in Canada—

And so on. A Canadian citizen is defined in that act by section 2, subsection (f) as follows:

"Canadian citizen" means a person born in Canada who has not become an alien, a British subject who has Canadian domicile, or a person naturalized under the laws of Canada and who has not subsequently become an alien or lost Canadian domicile.

Canadian domicile is not described in the act of 1910, it is in the act of 1919, and if the clause in the latter act is suitable to present conditions—and I submit it is—let us place it in the act of 1910. Then what does it mean?

"Canadian citizen" means a person born in Canada who has not become an alien; a British subject who has a Canadian domicile—

Now apply the domicile clause to the act of 1910, and after five years you have Canadian domicile. Let us revert to the 1910 act. Its provisions are sound. They were in operation up to 1919. No difficulty arose under them: they protected the government of Canada. Up to the war we had peace and good order in this country. What the object is now of blotting out section 41 without substituting some similar section, I cannot understand. I am perfectly ready to accept the law of 1910 as set out in section 41, which was probably drafted by my right hon. friend, because I know the Labour department at that time had a great deal to do with the act. Let us adopt that, and if it is deemed proper, extend the meaning of "Canadian citizen" to a British subject who has had a Canadian domicile for five years. I submit that ought to settle this whole discussion. It would satisfy me. But I do not agree that the whole clause should be struck out and nothing put in its place.

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take any part in this debate, but as I happen to be one of the "imported" kind, referred to by my hon. friend from Toronto, one of those individuals who would be liable to deportation under the act of 1919, if I happened to rebel against so-called constituted authority, I am going to make a few observations.

There seems to be a great fear in the minds of hon. members to my right that the British Empire is crumbling. They seem to be afraid that by a conspiracy of bolshevism or sovietism, something of that sort, the loyalty of this Dominion may be undermined. I think they have very little faith in the principles which underlie the British Empire. Those principles are not necessarily enshrined in stately buildings and coats of arms. The principles of the British Empire, to my mind, will last whatever happens. I think Lord Macaulay upon one occasion said: "The time may come when perhaps a single naked fisherman may wash his nets in the river of a thousand masts." No doubt he was referring to the time when, perhaps, even London would cease to be the capital of the British Empire, and the stately buildings of Westminster and the tower might crumble. But the principles of the British Empire will never perish, and I think my friends have very little faith in the British Empire when they seek to support it by such very little things as the maintenance of this legislation of 1919.

A good deal has been said about constituted authority. I am, I hope, a supporter of constituted authority. But I would refer my friends to my right, and especially my friend from Frontenac-Addington to the historic fact that the whole tenor of British constitutional development has been rebellion against constituted authority. What happened in King John's reign when the constituted authority was the king? Was it not a rebellion of the barons and others against constituted authority which won us Magna Charta?

Mr. STEVENS: No, the king violated constituted authority, and he was set right.

Mr. ADSHEAD: But if I said anything against the present king I should be liable to arrest. What happened to King Charles? Cromwell took up arms against constituted authority. As I said to my friend from Frontenac, what happened in the particular organization of which he is the head? The constituted authority of Great Britain at that time was King James the Second, and by organized force they put him off the throne and established the present constitution by rebellion against constituted authority. So we find the whole force of British liberty has been gained by opposition to constituted authority, I might go a step further. The grandfather of the Prime Minister rebelled against constituted authority, and a price was set upon his head. If he were living to-day I suppose he might have been deported, but he is one of the heroes of Canada, one of those who won for us constitutional government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let me correct my hon. friend. He says there was a rebellion against constituted authority. It was a rebellion against authority that was not properly constituted.

Mr. ADSHEAD: At the same time, he was regarded by those who had authority in their hands as a rebel against constituted authority, and probably the Immigration department would have deported him under such legislation as that of 1919. I am not so sure that even in this House the members to my right would object to overturning constituted authority and putting themselves on the treasury benches.

Mr. STEVENS: Not by force, violence murder, rape.

Mr. ADSHEAD: My friends who are so afraid that the British Empire is going to crumble into the dust are strongly opposed to any amendment of the 1919 act. Let me tell them that every time these so-called conspirators from Russia—that terrible country!—come to Canada or get in touch with the people of Canada, they at the same time get in touch with the principles underlying the British Empire, and they have gone back to Russia convinced that those principles are sound, and express the fullest freedom that can be found under any constitutional government. Therefore I shall support this measure in order that we may have a little more of that freedom granted by the British Empire.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Like the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Adshead), I had no intention of speaking on this matter, and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very brief indeed. The finest advertisements we have ever had for the greatness of this Dominion and of the possibilities it offers to the right kind of men are to be found in the persons of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning), the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Forke), and other gentlemen who have come to this country and made their way to the top of the ladder. That is the kind of people we want. I am the son of an immigrant who came to Canada in 1837. There was no trouble about those gentlemen. They will not be deported so long as they behave themselves—even as well as they have to date! Their conduct along certain lines has been somewhat doubtful—at least, from the standpoint of this side of the House—but not against constituted authority.

Mr. DUNNING: I was pretty hard on the Meighen government last summer.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, that is a sin you will have to answer for some day, but it is only one of many.

I just want to refer now to one or two remarks that were made by the hon. member for East Calgary. He is one who has seen fit to leave the old country and come to Canada, to the old country's loss and Canada's gain, we will all agree. He says that if the law is not changed he might as one coming from the British Isles be deported if he happened to rebel. Well, Mr. Speaker, if he happens to rebel, if he has any such notion as that in his mind, I want to tell him that he ought to be kicked out of this country. We do not want him here if he has that idea, even though he is a British subject. There are classes of British subjects that we do not want in this country at all, that we are better off without, and people who imagine just because they were born under the British flag that they can come to Canada and have license to misbehave themselves, have to be taught that we do not want them here, and we should deport them just as quickly as we would if they came from continental Europe. We do not want that class here at all.

I do not think the hon. gentleman was very happy in his reference to what he called so-called constituted authority in Canada. There is no such thing as so-called constituted authority here. Authority is well constituted in Canada, and there need not be any doubt at all about it. Nor was the hon. gentleman quite happy in his references to King John and King Charles. The people who were rebelling at that time were not rebelling against constituted authority. It was the kings who had utterly disregarded the laws of the land and had thrown them into the discard, and it was because the kings had over-ridden the law that the people rose in their might to put them in their place. Still less was the hon. gentleman happy in his reference to King James, for he utterly disregarded the rights of the people and the laws of the land, and it was because of that that he was deposed and that King William took his place. The people were behind him not merely because of the man but because of what he represented, just as they were behind Magna Charta which brought King John to his senses and forced him to have regard for the law which he had utterly disregarded.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it not in the Magna Charta that all Britishers should have the right to trial by jury?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is all right, and Britishers as a rule do have the right to trial by jury, but Magna Charta was only one step in the development of freedom, and further acts were passed as the years went by. It is because there has been a disposition shown in this country, and no one should know it better than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), to disregard constituted authority that we have to pass such an act as we passed in 1919. I am perfectly satisfied with the act of 1910, but it was perhaps because of the riotous proceedings that took place in the city of Winnipeg that this section was passed. I do not wish to say what was the attitude of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre at that time, but there was a disposition on the part of certain people in the city of Winnipeg who had come from other countries of the world, and some of them from Great Britain, to undertake to break down constituted authority and set up a government of their own in the city of Winnipeg. They even went to the extent of depriving the people, the little children and babies, of the milk that they required to keep soul and body together. They carried on their nefarious work to that extent, thereby giving us an inkling of what that kind of people would do if they were given a free rein. When it comes to dealing with people of that kind, it does not make a particle of difference whether they come from continental Europe or the British Isles, if they have that disposition of mind that they are going to come to this country and be a law unto themselves, and set up a government to suit themselves, I for one would be among those who would kick them out of this country and tell them to stay out, for we do not want them here whether they were born under the British flag or any other flag.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would like to think that the hon. gentleman wants to be fair in this matter. Might I ask whether he would not first definitely try to ascertain whether the charges against these men were true or not?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Machinery is provided in the act of 1910 sufficient for that purpose. I think a certain amount of latitude should be given in this matter of deportation. We do not want every Tom, Dick and Harry coming to this country and preaching sedition and being able to say "The worst that can happen me is to be hauled before the court, and that will take weeks and months, and in the meantime I shall be a sort of hero in the land, and my brethren who want to see this sort of propaganda carried on will raise a purse to pay my fine, and arrange for someone else to take my place." If he goes on advocating that kind of thing long enough he might even be sent to parliament to propagate the same kind of idea. We do not want that class of people here at all. We do not want them in parliament or in this country. Let them stay out of here. They deport them by the thousand from the United States without trial. They deport them from England without trial, and from all countries of the world. The liberty we enjoy under the British flag is a grand thing, a wonderful thing, but there are too many people in this country who want to substitute license for liberty, and who would carry their ideas of liberty so far that they would not allow any freedom to anyone else whose views did not coincide with theirs. They would even go to the extent that they did in the city of Winnipeg, taking possession of the city and putting up a government of their own.

We want immigrants in this country, we want more population, but we are not so hard up for immigrants that we can afford to open our doors to people who have no regard whatever for law and order, and who will set up their own government and advocate laws to suit themselves regardless of constituted authority and the laws of the land. The people who come to this country, no matter whether they come from continental Europe or the British Isles, should be taught the lesson, and we cannot begin to teach it too soon, that they must leave on the other side of the water these revolutionary and radical ideas which many of them bring with them to Canada. If people want to leave their own country because they do not like conditions there, and want to make a new home for themselves in Canada, let them come to Canada, but not with the idea that they are going to transplant to our soil the very conditions which they found intolerable in the country they left.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I only want to say a word or two. This subject is naturally very close to the hearts of those of us who were born in Great Britain. We are no more responsible for that than the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) is responsible for having been born in Canada. I appreciate very much the kindly references he made to myself and others of us who happened to be born overseas. The reason I support this measure is because it eliminates any possibility in future of discrimination as between the treatment of Canadian citizens who happen to be born here and Canadian citizens who happen to be born in other parts of the empire, more particularly the British isles. The difficulty was well illustrated by the remarks of my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman) when he drew an important distinction between the position of a Canadian citizen, one born in Canada, or naturalized in Canada, and one born in Great Britain. To my mind, at this time in our history particularly, when we are endeavouring to persuade people in the old land to come and take advantage of the opportunities which exist here, it is very unfortunate for anything to be said in this parliament which would indicate that a British citizen born in Great Britain, coming to Canada, would have any less rights than a Canadian born in Canada, or a man coming from another country and becoming naturalized here.

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Would the authorities in Great Britain not have the right to deport a Canadian citizen under similar conditions?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot answer the question, so far as my knowledge of British law is concerned. But if I were a Canadian citizen in England, knowing what I know of the English law—and it is not very much—I am pretty sure that machinery exists in England to enable me to get a fair trial there. I would be very much surprised indeed to find that a hand could be placed on my shoulder, and I, a British subject, could be hustled out of Britain without an opportunity for a trial. There must have been a great many changes in recent years if such a thing is now possible. In any case I do not see why, because I was born in England, I should be denied a trial in Canada if I am accused of some offence against constituted authority, while my hon. friend from East Toronto because he was born in Canada has the right to a trial. That is the point which worries me—not that I am standing up for those who would take action by means of force or anything of that kind. But if I, born as I was in the old country, can be kicked out of this country without a trial as is suggested, I see no reason why Canadian-born citizens should not be kicked out of this country summarily in the same manner. But in such a case there is no place to send Canadian-born people. The reason such a thing was not proposed in the original bill of 1919 is that there was no other country to which to send them. But I submit to this House that it would be quite as justifiable to send Canadian-born citizens to gaol without a trial for such offences as it would be to throw me out of the country for a similar offence. It is just a question of the nature of the punishment. The nature of the punishment in one case is deportation, and in the other imprisonment. In the one case the man cannot be imprisoned without a trial, and in the other case the man can be deported without trial, both being British subjects, one happening to be Canadian-born and the other British-born.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The Solicitor General referred to the case of a man born in Canada who had acquired Canadian citizenship and that of a man born in the British isles who wanted to be naturalized here. I merely wanted to emphasize what I value, namely Canadian citizenship. We have raised the Doukhobor to Canadian citizenship, and he is entitled to a superior status because he is a Canadian.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend is arguing that the Doukhobor, who is raised to Canadian citizenship by virtue of naturalization, is entitled to more rights and privileges in Canada than a British-born citizen, I dispute that proposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the impression his statement created in my mind.

Mr. ARTHURS: How many years must a foreigner be in Canada before he can be naturalized? Under the act a British citizen is deportable only if he has been in the country less than five years.

Mr. CANNON: No, no time at all.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not going to quarrel about what the law means, but if it means what the public in Canada have been led to believe it means, and what the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) both agreed last session it did mean, as evidenced by the concluding remarks in Hansard, where they both agreed that it was desirable that the bill before the House should be passed to eliminate that condition, then I am desirous of having this bill passed in order to eliminate that species of discrimination, which I feel sure is distasteful to all Canadians whether British-born, native-born or naturalized. Surely we have, or we can devise, machinery in this country that would not mean discriminatory treatment as between British subjects born in Great Britain and those who happen to be born in Canada or naturalized here.

Mr. STEVENS: On that point, does the minister not know that under subsections (n) and (o) of section 3 of the existing act, independent altogether of the 1919 act, these people who come from Great Britain may be deported within five years after their domicile in Canada without trial under the existing law which the government is now administering? I merely cite that to show my hon. friend's argument is not sound.

Mr. DUNNING: I am very much astonished to find that there is some new law on this subject this year, as compared with last year.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. DUNNING: Last year there was agreement finally as to the form which this bill should take to remedy what was admitted as discriminatory treatment.

Mr. STEVENS: Which we agree to, if the minister will agree to the restoration of the provisions of the act of 1910.

Mr. DUNNING: With very great deference to my hon. friend, while I have not much use for lawyers generally, in cases of this sort I must take my legal advice from the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice. Last year the Minister of Justice, dealing with this very matter, at page 4120 of Hansard, said:

> But we must keep the bill in order to repeal section 41. I am quite willing to agree with the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) to allow the bill to read:
> Section 41 of the Immigration Act, chapter 27 of the statutes of 1910, as enacted by chapter 26 of the statutes of 1919, is repealed.
> The rest is certainly covered by section 40.

That is the end of the quotation from Mr. Lapointe's remarks. Then I read the following from Hansard:

> Mr. Bennett: That is my view.
> Mr. Lapointe: I am quite agreeable if the Minister of Immigration is willing to do that.
> Mr. Stewart (Edmonton): I am always willing to take the word of the Minister of Justice.

Apparently the difficulty raised to-day was non-existent at the conclusion of the discussion last year. For my part I do not want to change my legal adviser every year. I want my position to be clear. I am satisfied with the bill, which is the same as last year. I am not at all sure where the legal complications suggested by my hon. friend would lead to, and for that reason I am supporting the bill.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I did not intend to take part in this debate, but I come from an industrial centre and would like to say a word or two.

I do not think this bill is in the public interest, but the government of the day must take the responsibility. It must be apparent to every thoughtful man in this country that we have had for a considerable period a certain amount of prosperity in the industries of the country, and I fail to see where there is any demand for an amendment such as is proposed.

Section 40 of the Immigration Act provided for the deportation from this country of certain classes of people. That provision was in force for a good many years. It was a good law; it was supported by judges and magistrates, and it was found to be efficient. Under section 40 there was no trial by jury and the minister had the power to deport anybody for offences under that section, without trial, on the recommendation of the magistrate or judge. In 1919 there was a great deal of industrial unrest in Canada and, just as in Australia and the United States as well as in England, it was found necessary to pass such legislation as is contained in section 41. Up to that time there had been no suggestion of any trial by jury. Ninety-nine per cent of the cases of deportation occurred under section 40. In 1919 a new act was passed to deal with a large class of persons who might be described as anarchists and red flaggers from the old country and from Europe. These people came over to Canada for the purpose of creating disturbance and indulging in agitation and strife. Under section 40, as I say, no trial by jury was provided because the minister could act of his own volition. Now if you repeal section 41 the minister will be deprived of the right to deport an undesirable except after trial, even though such deportation may be recommended by a police magistrate or by a judge.

There is absolutely no demand for this legislation; it is opposed by the chiefs of police in the large centres of population throughout the country. And let me say that the chiefs of police are responsible for the administration of law and order and not my hon. friend the Solicitor General. The authorities in England have taken a firm stand against the repeal of similar legislation in Great Britain, for they regard it as of a vital importance to the maintenance of peace and order. Do we want Canada to become like continental Europe? Do we want to allow anarchists to come into this country and stir up strife? Instead of loosening up the regulations the government should tighten them, as they have done in the United States. No agitator can create strife in the United States, as is done in Winnipeg and in Nova Scotia, without being deported. The Harding administration, when they discovered that native born Americans were likely to be outnumbered by immigrants, adopted what is known as the quota law, under which many Canadian soldiers are being sent back to this country. Drastic measures are also being adopted in Australia. An effort has been made there to remove some of the restraining regulations in that country, but the movement is being strenuously opposed. The Australian government has declared Australia to be a white man's country and the intention is to keep it so. An election there over this very question was decided in favour of the Right Hon. Stanley Bruce who is determined to put down agitation. If we repeal section 41 we are simply making Canada the happy hunting ground for anarchists and political agitators, a haven of rest for the reds and for all disturbers of the peace who claim to be victims of political persecution.

Who is asking for this amendment? We have heard from the former Premier of Saskatchewan. But does he speak for the people of Ontario? The people of Ontario do not want the law changed; their desire is to have the regulations kept as drastic as possible. I repeat, there is absolutely no demand for this legislation. It is opposed throughout the country. Section 41, I may point out, applies only to those British born citizens who have not been in the country more than five years; if they have been resident here longer than that the section does not apply. I venture to say that ninety-nine and three-quarters per cent of the British born in Canada are not affected by this law, and as to the other small minority of less than 1 per cent, are we going to open our doors to agitation and anarchy, a tendency towards which we have witnessed in Winnipeg and Nova Scotia? To-day there are in some of our large cities schools established especially for the purpose of teaching, on Sundays, communism and propaganda against the British Empire and British institutions. Why should we allow that element to come into the country? I cannot understand it. We were told last night that the government had no time to think of amending the Pensions Act or of introducing any legislation for the benefit of returned men, but apparently there is a good deal of time for the introduction of legislation, the object of which is to make easy the path of the agitator and the red flagger, the anarchist and the communist, and to give them privileges which this country would never before have dreamed for a moment of extending to them —privileges which certainly would not have been given in the days of Laurier or of Sir John A. Macdonald. I believe the time is coming when the people of Canada will protest in no uncertain terms against legislation of this character. The Canadian people will demand that Canada be preserved as a white man's country, and if there are any anarchists who do not like the country the best thing for us to do is to deport them as expeditiously as possible. The sort of people who would be protected by this legislation get no consideration at all in Germany, Austria, Prussia or any of those places, where there is no trial by jury. If they come to Canada they must be prepared to obey our laws; if not, they ought to be deported immediately. When this parliament prorogues, if the bill now before us goes through, all the agitators in the country will rejoice in the extension of their privileges.

[Mr. Church.]

The agitators in the large centres of population will take heart, and communism and anarchy will flourish. This legislation was not discussed at the last election and, as I have pointed out before, it is opposed by most of the provinces as well as by the police of the country. I fail to see any necessity whatever for it. It is fortunate that we have the Senate, which is the one bulwark against agitation and anarchy and all attempts against the peace and order of the country.

Mr. ARTHURS: Can the government give any information regarding the number of British citizens deported previous to the passing of the act in 1919?

Mr. CANNON: I cannot give the figures, but it seems to be the feeling of the House, judging by the debate that has taken place, that what is wanted is the elimination of the discrimination which now exists in section 41.

Mr. ARTHURS: If there have been no deportations under the act, why amend it?

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend had a bottle of poison in the house, would he leave it there merely because it had not been used?

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Deportation of undesirable classes.

Mr. STEVENS: I was somewhat worried and slightly upset when the Solicitor General quoted my colleague from West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) as being wholly in favour of this bill, and I admit that in reading Hansard as it was quoted by my friend it would appear as though the hon. member for West Calgary had agreed to the bill. I sent for Hansard, and I find that the bill last year was before the House on several occasions, and I noticed that the discussion then arose over certain provisions of the Criminal Code. I am sorry the hon. member for West Calgary was not in his seat to defend himself and his position, but in his absence I wish to make the matter right, and I think the Solicitor General will at least do the hon. member the justice of acquitting him of any inconsistency.

Without going through all the intervening discussion, which covers a great many pages of Hansard, I will turn to the introduction of this act last year, and the position of the hon. member for West Calgary will be recognized when I tell the committee that last year in repealing this objectionable section 41 of the act, the government proposed to substitute another clause which I will now read. I am referring to Hansard of 1926, volume 4, page 3818, when Hon. Charles Stewart, Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization at that time, moved the second reading of the bill. The House went immediately into committee, and the minister made a statement as follows:

> The amendment that we are proposing is as follows:
> 1. Section 41 of the Immigration Act, chapter 27 of the statutes of 1910, as enacted by chapter 26 of the statutes of 1919, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:
> 41. Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen has been convicted of any criminal offence as defined in part II of the Criminal Code, it shall be the duty of any officer becoming cognizant thereof, and of the clerk, secretary or other official of any municipality in Canada wherein any such person may be, to forthwith send a written complaint to the minister giving full particulars.

Mr. DUNNING: Other than Canadian citizens.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. I will deal with that in a moment. Then followed a long discussion about the Criminal Code and its efficacy in this matter, after which the hon. member for West Calgary, in the portion quoted, wholly agreed with the Minister of Justice regarding the applicability to the case of the new substituted clause.

I think in justice to the hon. member for West Calgary this should be stated, and now I wish to say a word in regard to the observations of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning). This I say in justice to myself, as one who was born outside of Canada but who has been in the country forty years, during which time I have enjoyed the full rights accorded any citizen of this country. I want to say to the minister that in our attitude there is nothing of a prejudicial character against Britishers; I have sufficient fighting blood in my veins to resent such an implication as much as anyone else.

Mr. DUNNING: I trust my hon. friend did not think I was implying that.

Mr. STEVENS: It so appeared to me, but let us get this clear. The Immigration Act contains paragraphs (a) to (t) enumerating every conceivable reason for deportation, including sections (n) and (o) which deal with persons who advocate the overthrow of government by violence, and persons who advocate or teach the assassination of officials, and so on. There is no trial in those cases for anyone in Canada other than a Canadian citizen, and I desire to make the definition of a Canadian citizen plain, because the Solicitor General rather humiliated me a while ago by pointing out that I had misstated the case.

Mr. CANNON I did not say my hon. friend had misstated the case; I said he did not state it completely.

Mr. STEVENS: I am going to complete even my hon. friend's statement, in order that we may have it all. A Canadian citizen means a person born in Canada who has not become an alien, or a British subject who has Canadian domicile. Then according to the act Canadian domicile means:

> Canadian domicile can only be acquired, for the purposes of this act, by a person having his domicile for at least five years in Canada after having been landed therein within the meaning of this act.

In other words, any British subject who offends against any of these sections is subject to deportation within five years after he comes to Canada; that is, if he offends against them in the way any foreigner might do.

Mr. CANNON: And after five years?

Mr. STEVENS: After five years he is not subject to deportation, nor is anyone else.

Mr. CANNON: I would like to clear this up. I do not want to prolong this debate, but at the very end of the paragraph which provides that the time must be so and so, my hon. friend will find these words:

> . . . . no person who belongs to the prohibited or undesirable classes within the meaning of section 41 of this act shall be capable of acquiring Canadian domicile.

Mr. STEVENS: That is quite so. We can meet hon. gentlemen opposite and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) in full so far as the extravagant terms of the section inserted in 1919 are concerned. Repeal them. We do ask, however, for the restoration of the safeguards of the act of 1910, and I wish to place myself right with my friend the Minister of Railways in this matter. We are not defending these extreme views but rather the general principles of the act of 1910.

Mr. CANNON: In connection with what I said concerning the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett), I stated he had agreed to the bill last year and that the bill as we have it now is the first paragraph of the bill introduced last year.

Mr. STEVENS: It is not the same bill.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. CANNON: The first paragraph of the first bill introduced last year is the bill this year. We agreed to strike out the second paragraph, which simply recited that when a person has been found guilty of an offence he can be deported. That is already the law, and we struck it out. Therefore I again say that the hon. member for West Calgary agreed to the very terms of the bill which we introduced this year, although he attacked and denounced it this morning.

Mr. STEVENS: His arguments last year were very similar to those of this year.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I am not going to run the risk of being misunderstood or misinterpreted by the Minister of Railways. I intended to say that I set a value upon Canadian citizenship either by birth or by naturalization, and that no matter what the extraction of the man who subsequently became a Canadian citizen, he is entitled to all the honours which go with that status. In contrast I would say that a Clydeside ship man, who probably does not act as he should and has been subject to the law in England, or a cockney from Limehouse, is not entitled upon his landing on these shores to the same standing that a Canadian citizen has who has been endowed with citizenship.

Mr. DUNNING: All I can say is that I absolutely disagree with my hon. friend. There are lots of decent people in Limehouse, in Glasgow and on the Clyde, and I do not know that any designation of that sort is creditable in a British House of Commons. We are inviting people here from the mother country whether they come from Limehouse or Glasgow or any other part of it, and to refer to those districts as indicating undesirable citizens is, to my mind, very wrong.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I may say to the minister that I have not used those districts as indicating undesirable citizens. I have said and I insist upon it, and I believe the people of this country will recognize that I am right —that once you have endowed a man with Canadian citizenship he is entitled to a preference in this country against the man who has not that citizenship.

FRUIT ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the House go into committee on Bill No. 228, to amend the Fruit Act.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Regulations.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 1 has been amended in committee by striking out subsections (f) and (g). Shall the clause carry?

Section agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: A new clause 2 has been added to the following effect:

Section 2 is amended by inserting as paragraph (j) the following:
"Packs" or "packed" means the placing of fruit in any package intended for sale.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is an interpretation of the word "packed".

Section agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: The following new clause, clause 3, has been added in committee:

Section 15 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
"An inspection certificate signed by an official inspector, appointed under this act, shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements contained therein.

Mr. TOLMIE: Does that include all fruit for export?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The particular kinds of fruit will be indicated by regulation.

Mr. TOLMIE: Are apples included?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Regulations will have to be framed indicating what fruit must be graded, but we have named apples to begin with.

Mr. TOLMIE: This act gives you power to make such regulations as will extend to all kinds of fruit?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All kinds of fruit.

Mr. TOLMIE: Starting with apples?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SALE AND INSPECTION OF AGRICULTURAL ECONOMIC POISONS

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 257, to regulate the sale and inspection of agricultural economic poisons.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. TOLMIE: Will the minister give a brief outline of the purpose of the bill?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I gave an explanation when the resolution on which the bill is based was being considered but my hon. friend could not have been here. The bill provides for the registration of all insecticides and fungicides that are used in connection with spraying, particularly of orchards and of potatoes. It applies to poisons that are employed in the treatment of fungi or insects. In order to make sure that those who are buying the poisons are getting their money's worth, the brands will have to be registered with the component parts of the poison. In that way when a man buys this poison he will know he is getting something that is effective and not something that will rather fatten than kill, as has happened in the past. Sometimes the poison used in spraying is so strong that it destroys vegetation on the trees to which it is applied. Registration is required in order to safeguard the quality, particularly of the active ingredients.

Mr. TOLMIE: Are you establishing standards for the various poisons?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. Each manufacturer usually has a formula of his own. He will register that formula with the active poisons which it contains, and if any doubt is thrown upon the preparation we will see that he lives up to requirements by having an analysis made from time to time.

Mr. BARBER: Will this law permit arsenate of lead, paris green and bluestone to be put in packages?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It will apply to all ingredients in agricultural poisons. The law will not apply to prescriptions put up by druggists for a medical man or for a veterinary surgeon, but will be enforced in the case of all agricultural economic poisons.

Mr. BARBER: To-day paris green, a standard poison is sold in bulk.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is a provision covering it when sold in bulk.

Mr. BARBER: I do not see it. Fruit men buy arsenate of lead in bulk as well as in packages.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When it is sold by a retailer the component parts of the poison must be stated to the purchaser. We will come to that section.

Mr. BARBER: Arsenate of lead, as I say, is a standard preparation, the same as paris green or arsenate of copper. They are set forth in the British pharmacopoeia. If the retailer breaks a pound package to sell half a pound to a fruit man, it sounds unreasonable that he must pay $25 a year on that particular line.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is provided for.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is the minister not going to set any standards of strength? How does he propose to guarantee the purity of the commodity?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It will be found in the regulations that we can determine the strength of the active ingredients.

Mr. TOLMIE: Under section 12, I think.

Section 1 agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Registration of brand, etc.

The CHAIRMAN: There is a slight amendment in this section—the registration fee of $25 in line 28 has been changed to $20.

Mr. BARBER: What is the idea of charging $20 a year? Many preparations that will come under this bill have not nearly the large sale of certain patent medicines, the sales of which in the aggregate perhaps would amount to a million dollars a year. The proprietor of a patent medicine registers his preparation for an annual fee of $1; but the man who manufactures a spray, for which he has a sale during only a few weeks in the year amounting in the aggregate to only a few hundred dollars, is compelled to pay $20 annually. This is very unfair and will, I think, work against the best interests of those who use the preparations, because necessarily the fee will be added to the selling price. I do not think the object of this bill should be to raise revenue. The fee might very well be the same as under the Proprietary and Patent Medicines Act, and I do not think any manufacturer would object.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, the general principle has been recognized and adopted in many other agricultural bills that the particular trade affected should bear part, at least, of the cost of administration. This fee is estimated to represent about half the cost.

Mr. BARBER: Under the Proprietary and Patent Medicines Act practically the same procedure applies, a preparation is purchased by an inspector and sent to Ottawa to be analysed, which is a considerably more expensive course than would be necessary in dealing with many of the poison preparations used in spraying. This $20 fee is an annual payment for a preparation that is in demand only in certain districts and only for a few weeks each year. I think the committee would do well to reduce the fee to $1, and thus not create any hardship on the manufacturer.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Inasmuch as the cost of administration is continuous the revenue should be continuous. This was threshed out in committee. A larger initial fee with a smaller renewal fee was discussed, but it was generally accepted that the principle was sound—to require the trade to bear a part of the cost. This is practically on a fifty-fifty basis, and justifies the renewal being the same as the initial fee. One of the manufacturers did propose an initial fee of $50 and a smaller annual fee of $10. We did not work out how much revenue that would bring in; but this fee represents approximately 50 per cent of the cost of administration.

Mr. BARBER: The principle of the bill is to regulate, and once the preparation is established I agree with the minister that it might not be a hardship to make the initial fee larger, but the renewal fee each year should certainly be reduced to a nominal amount.

Mr. McGIBBON: When the Patent Medicine Act went through I objected that the fee of $1 was not high enough, for I did not think the cost of administering the act should be placed entirely upon the government. But it does seem to me that in relation to that fee this fee is rather high. What proportion of the cost of administration does the country bear?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is not a new principle; we have it in the Fertilizers Act. In fact in all our agricultural regulations we have endeavoured to make the trade bear part of the cost of administration.

Mr. McGIBBON: I agree that the principle is right. This fee, the minister says, will cover 50 per cent of the cost of administration. How does it compare with the fees charged in the other acts?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is the same.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is, the government pays 50 per cent of the cost of administration of all of them?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Registration authority to sell —renewal—fee for renewal.

The CHAIRMAN: The fee is changed to $20.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is to correspond with the change made in the preceding section.

Mr. BARBER: I would suggest to the minister that he amend the section. The manufacturer of twenty preparations would have to pay $400 a year. I think this fee should be reduced to $5.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, the manufacturers are very apt to reduce the number of their preparations. This happened when the Fertilizers Act went into force. Sometimes a large number of preparations are simply used for display purposes, or to make the public think there is competition between the alleged varieties; but whenever the manufacturers have to pay a reasonable fee they reduce the number to three or four standard formulas, and I think that will be found to be the case here. I think we might try this for a year; I do not think it will be found to be onerous at all. The manufacturers who were represented there did not object very much to it, but they proposed that the initial fee might be larger and this one smaller, and we have compromised by reducing them both from $25 to $20.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—Contents of statement to accompany application.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lisgar has drawn my attention to the fact that sections 4, 5 and 6 were renumbered in the committee. I think that is shown on the House copy of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: I have the House copy, and the sections are not so marked here.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There has been no change made in the sections, but it was thought more convenient to arrange them in this new order, section 4 becoming section 6, section 5 becoming section 4, and section 6 becoming section 5.

Section agreed to.

Sections 6 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On section 9—Certain information to be set forth.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This is the clause that refers to sale in bulk. Has this been changed?

The CHAIRMAN: Paragraph (f) of this clause has been struck out and the following substituted therefor:

The guaranteed analysis stating the percentage by weight of each active ingredient.

Then in the eighth line of page 4 of the bill the word "only" has been struck out.

Section agreed to.

Section 10 agreed to.

On section 11—Advisory board.

Mr. McGIBBON: Who is going to be on the advisory board?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will try to have all the interests concerned represented on the board. The manufacturers will have a man, the fruit interests, and no doubt the vegetable interests as well.

Section agreed to.

Sections 12 and 13 agreed to.

On section 14—Inspectors.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This section becomes section 15, Mr. Chairman, and 15 becomes 14.

Section agreed to.

Sections 15 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

On section 19—Offences.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): I think the word "dealer" was changed to "vendor" in the committee, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The word "thereto" in line 2 of page 8 was also amended to read "therewith."

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 20 to 23 inclusive agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is the minister bringing this act into force right away?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, I think we shall have to let the manufacturers use up their present stocks before we bring the act into force, probably in the course of three or four months.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY ESTIMATES

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): With the permission of the House, I move that the estimates for the year 1927-28, respecting loans to the Canadian National Railway Company and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, laid on the table on Tuesday, 15th February, 1927, together with the third and final report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, be referred to the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT PRESENTED

Twelfth report of the committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Brown.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

PEACE RIVER RAILWAY OUTLET

Mr. A. M. YOUNG (Saskatoon) presented the eleventh report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, as follows:

Friday, April 8, 1927.

The select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines beg leave to present the following as its eleventh report.

Your committee has considered the following resolutions referred to it:

That, in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived for the commencement forthwith, and the completion in the near future of a direct railway outlet from the Peace River country to the Pacific coast.

Your committee, having heard evidence on the subject matter of the resolution from the premiers of Alberta and British Columbia and from engineers who have investigated this project, and others, is of opinion that building a western outlet from the Peace River area is feasible from an engineering standpoint.

[The Chairman.]

The weight of evidence before your committee indicates that, on economic grounds, such construction should not be commenced forthwith, as set forth in the resolution referred to your committee.

Your committee is of opinion that much greater traffic development is necessary in the area to make the building of such outlet economically sound.

Your committee is further of opinion that potentialities of that area are such as to warrant a continuous study of its development.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. M. YOUNG,
Acting Chairman.

SUPPLY

The House in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Railways.—Hudson Bay railway and terminals: construction and betterments, including E. B. Jost at $2,500, $5,130,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the minister intend to proceed? It is two or three minutes to six.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not expect this item would pass without discussion.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The House in committee on Bill No. 107, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada—Mr. Cahan—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Proportion of profits of participating business to shareholders to be reduced.

Mr. IRVINE: At nine o'clock on Tuesday evening I had just completed my argument against this bill. I had pointed out that the capital increase provided for in section 2 of the bill was not required, that the profits made on such capital would be unjustly awarded, and that those profits could only come out of the pockets of the policyholders. I also pointed out that the tendency of the times was towards mutualization and that an increase in capital would retard mutualization so far as this particular company was concerned. Inasmuch as there are a number of private bills to be considered by the House, and in view of the fact that this is a very contentious measure, I desire to move, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. HAY: This bill was very fully considered by the banking and commerce committee—

Mr. IRVINE: Is this debate in order?

Mr. LADNER: What is the motion?

The CHAIRMAN: I do not consider the motion in order; the House is in committee.

Mr. IRVINE: I move then that the committee rise.

Mr. JACOBS: We have not started to sit yet.

Mr. IRVINE: The hon. member from Jerusalem has been sitting for a long time.

Motion (Mr. Irvine) negatived.

Mr. HAY: I repeat that this bill had a very generous hearing before the banking and commerce committee; there was no attempt on behalf of the company unduly to hasten it, and the whole bill was considered fully and carefully. We have therefore had a full opportunity of hearing the case presented from the standpoint of the company.

I differ somewhat from my hon. friend who has just spoken in relation to life insurance. One must first of all popularize a company before doing business, and it must also be remembered that the selling of life insurance plays only a small part in the success of a company; many features enter into the operation of a successful life insurance company. I am not asking any special consideration for this bill or for this company, because I apprehend that hon. gentlemen who know something of the history of the company will let its actions, its statements and its officials speak for it, which makes it unnecessary for me to present any brief. The whole contention seems to have centred upon a determination of the capital of this company, in which connection a brief has been submitted to the officials of the Sun Life Assurance Company by a very eminent counsel, assuring them that no action on the part of this government is necessary to make it certain that the capital is already $4,000,000, the amount asked. In all fairness to the committee and to the company, these contentious matters could have been better worked out, I think, in that small select committee than in this House.

I point out these facts because statistics are deceptive and figures are hard to remember when they are in such large amounts as is the case with this company. We gave a considerable time to this bill in the committee, and as I said before there was no haste shown in putting it through. Therefore I think I can fairly ask the coöperation and support of hon. members in putting this bill through the final stages.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask a question? There is a doubt at least as to the amount of capital in this company. Let us assume that the doubt is well taken, and that the capital is only $2,000,000. Will my hon. friend justify this committee increasing it by another $2,000,000?

Mr. HAY: I am quite willing to give this company authorization for $4,000,000 or twice $4,000,000 if necessary, because I realize that this company as well as others must keep abreast of the time. If I were coming to Canada and had to select a bank or insurance company with which to do business, I would look at the assets and authorized capital of the company to ascertain whether I should deposit my money or take out a policy with a particular company. There has been nothing concealed or hidden on the part of the company; the whole bill has been open to consideration; it has been dealt with carefully, I submit, by a committee appointed for that purpose. The committee was not so large as it had been at earlier meetings, but there were good reasons for that, and I think we dealt with it generously; we devoted two full sittings to it and it does seem to me that it is hardly the proper thing to now attack the bill when the company have not an opportunity of presenting their side of the case.

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. member who has just taken his seat made the statement that this bill was very carefully considered. I think very few of the bills which have been passed in the last few weeks have been thoroughly considered; we have been trying to rush too much work through the committees. During this last week I was called to no less than three committees on each of four separate days, at either eleven or eleven-thirty in the morning, with the House sitting at the same time. It is quite impossible for members to attend all the meetings to which they are called. I attended the committee before which this bill came, and at that time there was a distinct difference of opinion; the bill was very contentious. At the next meeting I know there was a much smaller attendance, as the hon. member has said; I was unable to be there because I had two other committees meeting that morning. I had to make a choice as to the most important, and I suppose other members were in the same position. Since I was unable to be there to oppose the bill in the committee, I desire to take the opportunity now of saying a few words in opposition to it.

The main feature of this bill, I take it, is to give the company power to increase their capital by $2,000,000. The hon. member who just took his seat said it was the opinion of certain very eminent lawyers that the authorized capital of this company to-day is $4,000,000. If that is so, why do they come to this parliament to ask for that increase?

Mr. JACOBS: To make it clear and definite.

Mr. IRVINE: We are going to put it beyond doubt, all right.

Mr. JACOBS: We do not want fakirs to raise a question later.

Mr. SPENCER: I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, whether or not I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. SPENCER: I have no doubt that those hon. members who support this bill believe they are doing what is right, and we who oppose the bill believe the same thing. With regard to the assets of the company, I understand them to be made up largely in three ways. There is the shareholders' fund, amounting to a little less than one per cent of the total assets; the non-participating fund, amounting to about 15 per cent of the assets, and the participating fund, which amounts to about 84 per cent of the assets. When you consider that the interest of the policyholders in this company is a little over 99 per cent, it will be appreciated that those who control no more than one per cent of the assets are asking a lot when they request the right to double their capital, which would doubtless be done by the issuance of shares, commonly called watered stock. I have heard no member rise either in the committee or in this House to say that that is not the way in which the capital would be increased.

I understand that the amount paid in cash for each share of this company was not more than $30; those shares which were bought for that amount have to-day attained a value of $1,600. One wonders how this could take place. I understand also that the total amount paid in cash into this company was $305,000, but it is also true that there was a special dividend of $350,000, a stock bonus of $840,000, and a premium of $120,000 was credited to the shareholders. And yet apparently the shareholders are not content with the interest they are getting. Apparently the company is so well off that it does not know what to do with its profits. It would not look well to increase the amount of profits the company is getting to-day on each share. It therefore wishes to double the shares by this watered stock method; so that the dividends per share will not look so large.

Mr. HAY: Where do the profits come from?

Mr. SPENCER: The profits came from 99 per cent of the assets paid in as premiums by policyholders.

Mr. HAY: Nothing came from legitimate investment?

Mr. SPENCER: I shall be very glad to answer my hon. friend's question as to legitimate investment. I admit that those who have made an investment have a legitimate right to expect some return. I admit they also have a legitimate right to say that when they had risked a certain amount of capital they should be safeguarded in their investment. I will answer both suggestions of my hon. friend by this statement: the shares they paid $30 for have increased to the value of $1,600, and although they paid into this company only $305,000, they received a stock bonus alone of $845,000. It seems to me the company is amply recouped.

Mr. HAY: I assume that you do not say that comes from the policyholders?

Mr. SPENCER: The policyholders are the people who have made this company by reason of the premiums they have paid in. I should like to know how it is possible for a company like this—which I understand to-day has total assets of $350,000,000, and claims also, as it did before the committee, that it can double its assets every five years—to make these huge profits? Is it because so many policyholders pay one or two premiums and then find that they cannot carry on and have to sacrifice the premiums they have paid? I wonder if that is the reason? There must be some reason. If a company can pay these stock bonuses to the amount that we have on record, and can double its assets every five years, why is it not possible for it to cut down the premiums to the policyholders?

I did not answer my hon. friend's second suggestion regarding the risk that the shareholders run. That risk I think is well taken care of by the fact that the company has $56,000,000 in reserve. At least so I understand. Therefore with the amount it has received in dividends and bonuses, and the $56,000,000 it has in reserve, it should be able surely to take care of the shareholders' interests. Now we have to admit that to-day life insurance has become a necessity. Everyone should appreciate the fact that he ought to invest in life insurance. But I think there is great reason to believe that the premiums on these policies could be cut down to such an extent that people, even those of small means, could afford to take out life insurance, which they cannot do at the present time. The tendency, however, and I am very glad to see it, is to mutualize our life insurance companies. Such large companies as the Prudential Life Insurance Company and the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company have been mutualized and are doing a tremendous business. If this particular company wants to have a good talking point, it could not do better than follow the example of the other two companies I have named.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): Are they doing as big a business as the Sun Life, may I ask?

Mr. SPENCER: I do not happen to have the exact figures, but I have not the slightest doubt that if the Metropolitan Life carries on its business for many years in Canada, and such companies as this come to parliament to increase their shareholders' funds, the Metropolitan and other mutualized companies will certainly outstrip the company we are speaking about. The Sun Life can pay, I understand, 15 per cent on its present capital of $1,500,000 without drawing anything from the profits of the participating policyholders. If the capital is increased the participating policyholders' profits will have to be drawn upon, and section 1 of the bill fixes definitely the percentages to be drawn, namely, 4, 3½ and 3 per cent. To the extent that these profits of the participating fund are so drawn upon, the proposal is equivalent to a tax upon the participating policyholders.

I do not want to take up too much time, but I should like to quote some very interesting figures from the Canada Year Book of 1925 with regard to life insurance. First of all I will quote a few figures showing the profits earned by our life insurance companies to indicate what may be done by a contributory system built up by the government. For the year 1920, our Canadian life insurance companies showed an excess of income over expenditure of almost $40,000,000. For 1921 the figure was $47,000,000; for 1922, $50,000,000; for 1923, $60,000,000; and for 1924, $68,000,000 of an actual surplus. If you go over these figures right back to confederation you will find a tremendous surplus every year. In fact during the whole period I think it will be found that only about fifty per cent of the money paid in premiums is returned to the policyholders or their dependents.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I have on the order paper a resolution which reads as follows:

Whereas over four billion dollars of life insurance is now carried in Canada by private companies;

And whereas, the multiplication of services involves an enormous unnecessary expense;

And whereas, under modern conditions, life insurance has become a necessity.

Therefore be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this House, life insurance (like the postal service) should be established as a government monopoly.

That resolution was placed on the order paper in my name, but owing to the pressure of business this session I was unable to move it; still it has been a means of testing public opinion in this country. I have had correspondence from many people with regard to this resolution, which at least is very interesting to me, and I have not had a single criticism. I am going to quote extracts from two of these letters. One reads:

Having had eighteen years experience in the life insurance business I wish to congratulate you on your resolution re life insurance being taken over by the government. This would be a step in the right direction and help to reduce the taxation of the country as the millions now being made by private individuals out of the life insurance business would help the government, and also have a tendency to give the public a reduction of premiums.

The other one reads:

Kindly accept my thanks and I hope that thousands are writing relative to your noble suggestion of government ownership of all insurance companies of Canada.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that these letters reflect public opinion. One hon. gentleman in this House, speaking to me privately the other night, thought that the criticism we were making against the Sun Life was because of the fact that the Sun Life head office happened to be in the city of Montreal. The suggestion is absolutely absurd; we would criticize this bill even if the company had its head office in Winnipeg or Calgary. We have no enmity against the Sun Life because its head office happens to be in Montreal. I claim the time will come when the government will have to recognize the necessity of taking over all life insurance, and probably the first step towards that will be to mutualize our present insurance companies. I think this is going to be brought nearer to us by the action of such companies as this in coming to parliament to increase their capital when there is no need, and when their first duty is to their policyholders. If we pass this bill it will be detrimental to the best interests of such policyholders.

Mr. JACOBS: Mr. Chairman, I have listened for the last day or two that the committee has been sitting on this bill to the remarks of the gentlemen who have opposed it, and I have come to the conclusion that there is a misconception on their part as to its aims and objects. For instance, my friend who has just sat down (Mr. Spencer) seems to think there is some relation between the desire to raise the capital stock from two to four million dollars and the interests of the policyholders. He certainly could not have read the bill or he would not have come to that conclusion. The policyholders have their rights fixed by statute and by the by-laws of the company. They are entitled to 95 per cent of the profits of the company; that is fixed by by-law. Under the insurance law of 1910 the company has the right to take 10 per cent for dividends to stockholders, for management, and so on; but of its own free will it reduced that 10 per cent to 5 per cent, it is now taking 5 per cent, and there is nothing in the wide world to-day in the law which can prevent the company going back and taking from the policyholders the 10 per cent which by by-law it is entitled to take. I wonder what the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) has to say to that?

Mr. IRVINE: I will tell you in a minute.

Mr. JACOBS: Tell me now.

Mr. IRVINE: Go on with your speech.

Mr. JACOBS: I do not think you have any answer, because you are glib enough when you have an answer. The hon. gentleman just referred to me as the member from Jerusalem. I recognize the jibe. But in the days when Jerusalem was a city and Palestine was a country we would have dealt with him in the way which was then customary—stoned him or driven him out of the country. He ought to be mighty glad that he did not live in Jerusalem those days.

Mr. IRVINE: Hear, hear.

Mr. JACOBS: I pause for an answer to my question. The hon. gentleman cannot answer it. I ask him, is he aware that this company can charge 10 per cent to its participating policyholders and is charging only 5 per cent?

Mr. IRVINE: Yes.

[Mr. Spencer.]

Mr. JACOBS: He got up Tuesday night and spoke for an hour in a most learned way about insurance and finance, and he gave some people—those who do not know him—the impression that he knew something about those matters. If he were talking on the shorter catechism perhaps I would give him credit for knowing something of it. I want to tell him that he should remember the old adage Ne sutor ultra crepidam—the shoemaker should not go beyond his last.

Mr. IRVINE: That is what you are doing now.

Mr. JACOBS: What do directors of the company propose to do? They say: We have been taking 5 per cent; we are entitled to take 10 per cent; but we are prepared to go further, we want to reduce this 5 per cent eventually down to 3 per cent, that is, to 4½, then to 4, and at the end of ten years we are willing to take 3 per cent instead of the 10 per cent to which we are entitled. But these gentlemen here who are looking after the interests of the policyholders of the Sun Life say: we do not want that; we do not want you to fix by statute 3 per cent as the amount you are to take, we want to leave it open to you to say that at any time you can take 10 per cent.

Mr. SPENCER: Could the hon. gentleman assure the committee that this increased capital will not be made by stock bonuses?

Mr. JACOBS: I will read a letter from the president and manager of the Sun Life Company, a gentleman of some prominence and consequence in this country I have his permission to read it. Under date of April 8, 1927, he says:

> We have absolutely no intention of issuing even one share of new stock as a bonus to our stockholders. If our bill becomes law we propose gradually to increase the capital up to $4,000,000, but every additional share which we may issue will be subscribed for in the usual way, and will be paid for in hard cash at its full par value.

Mr. SPENCER: What does "part cash" mean?

Mr. JACOBS: "Hard cash." As we say in French argent dur. The letter is signed "T. B. Macaulay, President."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there anything in the bill to indicate that that must be done?

Mr. JACOBS: I would tell my friend from Winnipeg that the increased capital stock has no relation at all to the policyholders' interests —absolutely not. If this company were incorporated by letters patent at the office of the Secretary of State, we would go to his department, put our money down and ask him to increase the capital stock. And he could not refuse to do it. What interest has any person here to oppose an increase of the capital stock of the Sun Life Company? Here is a company with a capital stock under two million dollars, but it has assets of $350,000,000. It is top-heavy. In its business throughout the world, and particularly in England where, as hon. members know, the company has large interests, it occasionally absorbs other companies—it reinsures the policyholders of other companies, and this cannot be done without the consent of the court. When the company appears before the court to get permission to reinsure, the court finds that so far as the capital is concerned it is a halfpenny company in relation to its assets, and will refuse the required permisison because the capital stock is not large enough. The court feels that the larger the capital stock the greater the security there is for the stockholders, because if there is a subscription for ten or fifteen million dollars, and it is not all paid up, and something goes wrong with the company, every man who has underwritten that capital stock is obliged to pay up. Every lawyer knows that and every intelligent man knows that—I would say, every other intelligent man.

I can see where my friends from Alberta have gone wrong on this thing. They think if you increase the capital stock you are going to disguise the huge profits which the company is making, and it is in some way going to detract from the interests and profits of the policyholders. But their profits are fixed. It makes no difference whether the company is a million dollar or a hundred million dollar company, the profits which it makes are divided between the policyholders and the stockholders as ninety-seven is to three. As hon. gentlemen can see $3 for managing the business of this company out of every $100 is nothing more nor less than a postage stamp. A few years ago if you made out a cheque for $1 you had to affix a two-cent stamp. Here the policyholders are asked only to contribute $3 for the investment of their money, for the management of the company, and so on. Surely that is not unreasonable and I think the question never should have been discussed before this committee and before parliament. The bill should have been allowed to go through as a matter of course.

I ask again, how would the defeat of this bill affect the policyholders? If I thought for a moment that the company intended by the increase of its capital stock in any way to interfere with the profits of the policyholders, I would not be advocating its cause here. It is for the reason that I see the thing is just and right that I am asking for it. After all, large financial companies have some rights, even before parliament. It may be true that they are the poor little rich girl, but they have certain rights. My friends from Alberta have come to this House from time to time with bills affecting them, and which we found were just and right, and we voted for them, although sometimes—

Mr. SPENCER: Sometimes.

Mr. JACOBS: My friend laughs at this. May I remind him of the bills we put through this year affecting the welfare of the people of the province of Alberta?

Mr. SPENCER: What bills?

Mr. JACOBS: The old age pension bill and—

Mr. SPENCER: That will benefit eastern Canada more than Alberta.

Mr. JACOBS: We have also put through amendments to the Grain Act, and a rural credits bill. Surely those affect the people of Alberta.

Mr. SPENCER: They are paying for it.

Mr. JACOBS: Exactly, but we could have stood up here night after night and blocked those bills if we felt so disposed, but we do not do that because we feel that perhaps the members from Alberta will some day see the light and join the members from Saskatchewan who are sitting on this side of the House. We feel that there is some potential good in these gentlemen.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I notice the hon. gentleman's reputation as a humorist is not waning.

Mr. JACOBS: I am glad my friend from Bow River recognizes that I am a humorist; it takes an Irishman to recognize that. I say, Mr. Chairman, that if our friends were really sincere in this matter, they would not talk the bill out, but would take it up clause by clause and discuss it intelligently, and with the responsibility which I think they ought to feel, instead of simply blocking the bill holus-bolus without giving any particular reason except the alleged reasons of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin. I say that such a procedure is beneath the dignity of this parliament to countenance.

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. gentleman, I suppose, thinks that his is the only good reason.

Mr. JACOBS: I challenge my hon. friend who has just spoken or any member on the other side of the House to deny the statements I have made here. I challenge them and wait for an answer. I ask my hon. friend from Battle River if it is not in the interests of the policyholders that the shareholders' interests in the profits of this company should be reduced to three per cent, and that the policyholders should be allowed seven per cent to which by law they are not entitled. We are offering our policyholders 97 per cent of the profits. They are entitled to only 90 per cent, and these so-called friends of the policyholders say: No, we will not have it; there is something sinister in this; the company wants to increase its capital so that it can issue watered stock.

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. gentleman's words were, "We are offering our policyholders." May I ask him if he is connected with this company?

Mr. JACOBS: I am a policyholder in half a dozen different companies, but the Sun Life is not one of them.

Mr. SPENCER: Are you a shareholder or a director?

Mr. JACOBS: I am not a shareholder, unfortunately, I am sorry to say, and in that respect I am in the same position as a good many members of this House, but even if I were, it would not affect my argument.

With regard to clause 2, declaring that the authorized capital stock of the company is $4,000,000, they have the opinion of five of the most eminent counsel in Canada, led by Mr. Eugene Lafleur, a jurist of international repute, who tells the company that their capital stock is $4,000,000, and not $2,000,000. When the company was first organized, they obtained permission to issue $4,000,000 of capital stock, $2,000,000 for the life insurance, and $2,000,000 for fire and accident insurance. Subsequently they declared by act of parliament that they were not going into the fire and accident business and that the company would be a life insurance company and nothing else, but nothing was declared with regard to the $2,000,000 capital stock with which they were going to carry on the fire and accident insurance business. Mr. Lafleur takes the ground that inasmuch as parliament did not take away the right to issue $4,000,000 of capital stock, and inasmuch as the other right was taken away, they are still a company of $4,000,000 capital stock. But you can understand that a gigantic company like the Sun Life, one of the largest insurance companies in the world, wanted to put this question beyond all doubt and peradventure and so it is declared in section 2:

> Notwithstanding any doubts which may have arisen by reason of the provisions of any of the amending acts, the authorized capital stock of the company is $4,000,000, as contemplated in section 2 of the said act of incorporation, and the unsubscribed portion thereof may be issued from time to time by the directors in such amounts as they may deem in the interests of the company, but every such issue shall be sanctioned by a meeting of the shareholders.

In face of the opinion of these eminent attorneys, led by Mr. Lafleur, if I were the president of the company I would not come here hat in hand and ask parliament or the hon. member for Wetaskiwin to increase the capital stock from two to four million dollars. I would be content to abide by Mr. Lafleur's opinion. But here the bill is, and we have to deal with it.

Another clause provides that the company may issue capital stock of the par value of $10 per share instead of $100 per share, and an hon. gentleman on the other side professes to smell a rat there. He says: This looks serious. But, as a matter of fact, that provision is simply so that the stock shall be spread out more, particularly among the company's employees. Surely there is nothing sinister about that. There is nothing sinister about this bill at all, except what has been read into it by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin who spoke for an hour the other night and said nothing.

I have taken the trouble to look up some of the references to the insurance report of 1907, and I want to say that no reference therein applies to this bill. There is one passage which I would like to read, but I have not the time; I feel I should be standing in my own light if I talked till nine o'clock, and consequently would be doing the devil's work, and so I have decided to sit down. But when we discuss the bill clause by clause I can explain that point to the satisfaction of the committee.

Mr. IRVINE: I suppose that hon. gentlemen of the committee will be at a loss to understand this spontaneous combustion of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. He has spoken with the wisdom of the oracle and as a wizard of finance from that country to which he is so proud to belong. I have no doubt that if he had made the speech he has made here to-night at the time when Palestine was in her heyday, it would possibly have been all right, but I suppose hon. gentlemen who have read the bill and have tried to understand it are quite well aware that the hon. gentleman did not give a correct interpretation of these various clauses. He did not inform the committee, for instance, that the company made 73 per cent last year on the actual cash invested in the company. He did not tell the committee that all the $2,000,000 of capital stock, with the exception of $305,000, was issued by way of bonuses voted from the funds of the company, and which came from the policyholders.

Mr. HANSON: Did not the stock bonuses come from the profits of the stockholders?

Mr. IRVINE: If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to look up the figures I placed on Hansard last Tuesday night—I did not create those figures; they are from the Insurance department—he will find the answer to his question. He knows perfectly well, if he has looked them up, that I am not trying to misrepresent the situation at all. The hon. member who has championed the increasing of the capital stock of this company has failed to give us all the facts, and has taken the popular way of interpreting the clauses. For instance, he says that the company want to reduce the par value to $10 a share. What does that mean? Does that mean that they are going to cheapen the stock of the company accordingly? It means that they are going to be able to charge 179 per cent profit next year instead of 73 per cent.

Mr. JACOBS: Not at all.

Mr. IRVINE: Provided we confirm this $2,000,000 increase.

Mr. JACOBS: It is not true.

Mr. IRVINE: It is true, and I again challenge my hon. friend to show it is not true..

Mr. JACOBS: I will tell you this—

Mr. IRVINE: You will not tell me anything. I have the floor.

Mr. JACOBS: You challenged me to tell you.

Mr. IRVINE: You can tell me on some other occasion. I am not listening to the combustion of my hon. friend. It is all very well for the hon. member to challenge other people when he knows that he has the floor. I have the floor and I am challenging my hon. friend for the same reason he challenges me.

Mr. JACOBS: And I am ready to answer, but you will not permit me to do so.

Mr. IRVINE: My hon. friend knows perfectly well he was misrepresenting the situation.

Mr. JACOBS: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member says I have been misrepresenting the situation.

An hon. MEMBER: Knowingly.

An hon. MEMBER: Take it back.

The CHAIRMAN: I did not hear the hon. member make such a charge. If he did, it is not according to rule, and he should withdraw it.

Mr. IRVINE: Let me put it this way—

An hon. MEMBER: Take it back.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member said that my hon. friend behind me misrepresented the situation. No member in this House has the right to make such a statement and have it remain on Hansard, when the hon. gentleman says he did not misrepresent him.

Mr. IRVINE: That is the only reason that I will withdraw it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The statement is not worthy of any member of this House.

Mr. IRVINE: The statement my hon. friend made just now! The hon. member tried to make it appear that this company was doing a magnanimous thing by fixing its rate of profit at 5 per cent, or at 3 per cent subsequently; he tries to suggest also that they were reducing the value of their stock from $100 to $10, and that possibly would make it very popular with those who wish to purchase it when the stock is at that figure. But will my hon. friend say that there are no implications in that clause of the bill further than he expressed to the House?

Mr. JACOBS: I have read the letter of the president, and that is sufficient for me.

Mr. IRVINE: Well, it is not sufficient for me.

Mr. JACOBS: But you do not know the president. He knows you.

Mr. IRVINE: I am not interested in who the president is. I am not speaking against the president or the company itself. It is a Canadian company, an excellent company; it has performed splendid service to Canada, and I hope it will perform more service in the future. I believe the time will come when that company will thank me for talking out this bill, for they will discover, if they do not see it now, that it is in the highest interests of the company that this measure be not put through. I do not think that any company can for long enter into competition, in selling insurance and giving good service, with a company that is entirely mutual, which returns to its policyholders its entire profits and earnings. As long as any fraction of that profit goes to stockholders in a company where stockholders are not necessary and where capital is a hindrance, the company cannot possibly compete successfully with one that is entirely mutual. I believe this bill should be killed. I think the committee should have voted for my motion when I moved that the committee rise. The hon. member who has just resumed his seat jeered at the interpretation of the act which I presented to the House on Tuesday evening, but I notice that he did not make an attempt to answer one single argument. It is true that by suggestion he tried to undermine the force of the argument by making a personal attack.

Mr. JACOBS: Excuse me, I made no personal attack on the hon. member. The reason I did not answer the arguments is that there were none to answer.

Mr. IRVINE: Am I to assume the hon. gentleman can answer an argument when there is none? Why should he have taken half an hour to answer something that was not there? That seems rather a strange thing. Only a humorist like my hon. friend could do a thing like that. He did try to answer the argument which I presented by a sarcastic remark with regard to knowledge of finance which I pretended to possess. I am not laying claim to knowledge of any kind more than the average individual, and I think the remark came rather badly from my hon. friend. But he did not challenge one single point that I made. I argued that capital was not necessary in an insurance company. This company has got along very well, and has risen to a very successful point, having only a very small subscribed capital. It got through all its building years and through all the early stages of its development, on a very small capital, and built up a business so successful that they are making so much profit that they do not know what to do with it; and yet now they want to bring in more capital in order to make more profits. They know the capital is not required. The hon. gentleman tried to prove that it was required, but he knows it is not required and he also knows that capital that is not required has no more business to be paid than labour has any business to be paid when it is not working.

The hour for private bills having expired, the Speaker resumed the Chair.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

COMMERCE MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. F. W. HAY (North Perth): With the consent of the House I ask leave to present the seventh report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce on Bill No. 305, to incorporate the Commerce Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. HAY: I move that Bill No. 305, to incorporate the Commerce Mutual Fire Insurance Company, be placed on the order paper among private bills for third reading.

Motion agreed to.

UNOPPOSED PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Winnipeg South Centre): With the consent of the House, I desire to move that we now proceed to the consideration of the private bills which are not contested—divorce bills and others—of which there is a large number on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the sentiment of the House?

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Motion negatived.

SUPPLY

The House in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Railways and Canals—Hudson Bay Railway and terminals: construction and betterments, including E. B. Jost at $2,500, $5,130,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This item for the construction of betterment will carry the road to a point on the Hudson bay. Is that impression correct?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I thought it would probably facilitate the discussion of the item if I made a brief general statement regarding the whole matter. As is well known, it is the policy of the government to complete what is known as the Hudson bay route at as early a date as possible and to give to that route at the earliest opportunity a practical test. The plans which I am about to outline for the immediate future have that object in view. It is contemplated, in addition to the work on the railway and possible work on the port, to conduct an early investigation into the necessities for aids to navigation in the strait. That is not covered by the item at present under discussion by the committee, but no discussion of our policy in regard to the Hudson bay route would be complete without it. There will be found later an item in the estimates of the Department of Marine and Fisheries embracing the work which it is planned to do during this fiscal year in connection with the strait. In that connection I may say briefly that it is intended to send up a ship and a number of aeroplanes to establish in the strait three aeroplane bases and to arrange for a continuous early reconnaissance for a period of approximately one year in order to determine what aids to navigation are required and in order also to secure information looking to the lengthening of the known period of navigation through the strait. It is hoped, with the aid of modern equipment which will be used for that purpose, to make such a study of currents and ice conditions as will render available a mass of information for the guidance of mariners when the route is used, as we all hope it will be, in the not distant future. Further, it will be possible for the expedition to the strait to determine exactly the nature of the aids to navigation which will be required.

With regard to the work on the railway and at the port, I may observe that the development of the port facilities is by far the most extensive undertaking; the development of the port facilities will occupy the longest period of time. The construction of the railway is the simplest part of the work from the point of view of time. A large part of the study given to this subject by the officers of the government has been directed towards the most expeditious and economical method of port development. In connection with Port Nelson the feature which is the greatest time consumer is the necessity for dredging a portion of the channel. The natural channel extends up the estuary of the Nelson. The artificial island which is now partly constructed is some twenty-two miles from the bay itself and a navigable channel of sufficient depth extends to within approximately five miles of that island. For three and a half miles of that last five, the channel must be dredged. That has been well known for a number of years. The amount of dredging required is approximately five and a half million cubic yards in a channel three hundred feet wide and approximately three and a half miles long, varying in depth. At any rate the work involves the removal of five and a half million cubic yards of material.

Mr. TOLMIE: What kind of bottom?

Mr. DUNNING: The nature of the material is boulder clay which can be disposed of with a dipper dredge. That is the great time consumer in connection with Nelson. There is no doubt at all that we can complete the railway and the necessary dock and terminal facilities very much sooner than it would be possible for ships to come up to the dock, the reason being, as I have stated, the fact that so much dredging requires to be done. The department has been at some considerable trouble to estimate the length of time which will be necessary in order to accomplish this dredging. Of necessity, estimates of this character must be only approximate, inasmuch as delay may occur through breakage of machinery and operating under water. Another factor to be considered is this: the material dredged must be transported by scows over the twenty-two miles to the open sea or bay. It cannot be dumped in the channel or in the shallow water because the tendency would be to block the channel lower down. It is necessary therefore to plan not only the dredging of the artificial channel to which I am referring but to carry the dredged material twenty-two miles out to the sea. On the basis of operating these dredges with the necessary auxiliary craft the period estimated by the department's engineers before the complete channel up to the dock will be fully available for use will be six years. That does not mean that the port cannot be used at all before the lapse of that time. It may be possible to use the channel before it is dredged to its ultimate width but there are of course necessary limitations to such use. When the government was made aware of the study which the engineers had given to this phase of the subject it was deemed desirable, having regard to the need of getting operations started as expeditiously as possible, to secure the very best advice on port development. It was recognized, in view of the controversial nature of the Hudson bay project, that if any Canadian engineer were invited to make a study of it in all probability there would be charges or statements that he was prejudiced one way or the other; therefore the government decided to endeavour to secure the services of an unquestioned authority on port development. Through the coöperation of the High Commissioner in London the services of Mr. Frederick Palmer were secured for that work. Who is Mr. Palmer? Mr. Frederick Palmer is an engineer of long and wide experience in port development in many parts of the world; he was for many years chief engineer for the government of India in connection with railways, ports and irrigation; more recently he has been the head of his own firm in London; at present he is consulting engineer to the ports of London and Glasgow and is consulting engineer to the British government in connection with colonial port development. This year he also occupies what I believe is regarded as the blue ribbon position of the engineering world; he is president of the British Engineering Institute. I think there can be no question that in securing the advice of such a man in connection with an undertaking involving such large expenditures, the government has adopted a wise course. Mr. Palmer visited Ottawa and conducted here an examination of all the records and data in connection with the Hudson bay project; he will return in the summer to pay a personal visit to Hudson bay. Following consultation with him and after he had gone into the records very considerably, on behalf of the government I wrote him a letter of instruction which I propose to read to the committee, in order that the position of things from the point of view of the government's instructions to the engineer may be plain. The letter is dated January 5, 1927, and is as follows:

Dear Mr. PALMER,

In order that we may have record of the understandings reached as a result of our several conferences, I beg to advise you as follows:

In 1911, the Canadian government commenced the construction of a railway to Hudson bay. In 1912, in order that the road might be placed completely under contract, it became necessary for the government of the day to make immediate choice between the only two possible ports on the west coast, Nelson and Churchill. After a personal visit to both places by the then minister, and consideration of the information available at the time, the minister, on the advice of his engineering staff, recommended the establishment of the railway terminus at Nelson, and plans for harbour terminals were prepared by an engineer specially selected and sent to Nelson for that purpose. Upon consideration of the scheme of development then suggested differences of opinion arose, and the engineer resigned his appointment. A member of the departmental engineering staff was then assigned the task of preparing suitable plans, as a result of which the present scheme of development at Nelson was approved and actively prosecuted by the department during 1914 and the succeeding years, until the fall of 1917, when the work was discontinued owing to war conditions. During the following winter the construction of the railway was also discontinued upon completion of the bridge at the Kettle rapids crossing of the Nelson river, about 92 miles from Port Nelson.

On the railway $15,245,889 had been expended to March 31, 1926, and on the Nelson terminals $6,242,114.

At the present time that portion of the railway previously constructed is being reconditioned and it is planned to continue the construction of the railway in 1927. This imposes upon the government early consideration of the question of harbour development in order that the Hudson bay route may be assured fair trial as an ocean outlet for western grain and cattle, and for such other traffic in agricultural, mineral, forest and manufactured products as may develop.

Controversy has always existed as to the relative merits of Nelson and Churchill as the bay terminus, and notwithstanding the selection of Nelson in 1912-13, controversy has persisted. In 1920, a special committee of the Senate was appointed to examine and report upon the Hudson bay project generally, and upon the character of the ports and their fitness for terminals. Upon the evidence then adduced the committee reached the following conclusion upon the harbour phase of the project:

"That in the opinion of this committee sufficient care was not taken in the selection of Nelson as the terminus of the railway, and that the government should not make further important expenditures upon this port without first making a new and thorough examination into the relative merits of Churchill and Nelson as a terminus for the railroad."

In view of the substantial expenditure already incurred at Nelson, and the shorter rail haul to that point, the government is naturally predisposed towards Nelson, but desires, above all things, that the port chosen, and its arrangements, should afford the best possible opportunity for the development of trade through the bay.

The problem of harbour development in the two places differs very widely and, as regards Churchill, the use of that port would involve the construction, maintenance and operation of about 90 additional miles of railway. As to the suitability of the terrain between the Nelson and the Churchill rivers to railway construction we hope to have definite information in the course of the next few months. Should the survey now being made disclose conditions unfavourable to railway construction, this would, of course, dispose of any question as to Churchill, but if a railway is found practicable, we will require your advice concerning Churchill also. If that port should be found to be capable of such early and economic development as would afford better and safer facilities than Nelson, and more readily available, that would be a factor of great importance to the successful development of the Hudson bay route. For these reasons we think it unwise and not in the interests of Canada to restrict your investigation to the port of Nelson only, unless, meanwhile, Churchill should be eliminated for railway reasons.

In the event of Churchill becoming a possibility we should have, in addition to relative costs of construction and maintenance, a comparative estimate of the length of time necessary to provide terminals at either port sufficient to enable a proper test of the route to be made. We consider this element of time a matter of prime importance.

We want, also your opinion of the design of the existing works at Nelson, and as to whether any change could be made there which would either reduce the cost or the length of time required for development, or improve conditions in any way at that point.

What we have in mind as an initial test development—and this is suggested more for your guidance than as a conclusive and limiting instruction—would be the provision of accommodation in either harbour for six cargo ships in port at one time, with working berth for three of the six, the estimated draft of vessels to be not less than 26 feet. The minimum development projected at each port should, of course, be capable of such progressive extension as future requirements might dictate.

If a railway to Churchill be found practicable, we desire that your report should cover a possible development at both Nelson and Churchill, with estimated cost, your recommendation as to the choice to be made and reasons therefor.

In outlining, in this general way, the matters upon which the government desires your advice, it is not intended to ask you to consider problems unconnected with port development. We appreciate that, owing to climatic conditions, it will not be possible for you to conduct your personal examination of Nelson and Churchill before next summer. We shall, however, do everything in our power to facilitate your work at both points and would be glad to have your conclusions as soon as possible thereafter, as we are anxious to avoid delay in the prosecution of this important undertaking.

Faithfully yours,

CHARLES A. DUNNING.

Mr. STEVENS: What is the date of that letter, please?

Mr. DUNNING: January 5, 1927, when Mr. Palmer was out here conducting his examination. It will be seen from the letter of instructions that the object of the government is greater expedition, together with certainty as to the right thing to be done from an engineering standpoint. We are anxious to proceed in the light of the fullest knowledge possible, and we are convinced that the course adopted will involve no delay in the completion of the project. We recognize, as anyone examining the matter must recognize, that in connection with Nelson, the amount of dredging to be done to make a channel to the dock constitutes a material factor of time As to whether a change in the design of the works at Nelson might reduce that factor of time is a matter upon which we expect advice from Mr. Palmer.

Mr. McGIBBON: Could the minister give us some estimate as to the cost of that dredging?

Mr. DUNNING: I gave to the committee last year, when a similar vote was before it, the departmental estimate of the cost of completing the work at Nelson. It is understood, of course, that these figures are subject to revision in case a change of design or a change in the character of the work should be resolved upon as a result of the investigation now being made. This is the formal departmental estimate of last June based upon provision for 10 seven-thousand ton ships all in port at the same time. And here I would call attention to the fact that the departmental estimate is for a larger port capacity than that which we have set in our instructions to Mr. Palmer as the maximum design. That of course will be a qualifying factor. These figures also include provision for a four million bushel elevator. I am inclined to think myself that for an initial development a four million bushel elevator is not required; a smaller capacity would do. Now the estimate of the cost is as follows:

Entrance channel end island to opposite Allette 20′ below low water, earth and boulders 1,570,000 yds at 1.60	$2,512.000
Along dock face on island:
4,400 ft. to 30 ft. below L.W.O.S.T. earth and boulders 2,700,000 yds at 1.20	3,240,000
5,400 ft. to 15 ft. below L.W.O.S.T. earth and boulders 1,200,000 yds at 1.20	1,440,000
	$7,192,000
4,000 ft. dock walls at 77 yds. 308,000 at 12.00	$3,696,000
Sinking and preparing crib seats 308,000 at 4.00	1,232,000
3,000 ft. rear crib at 25 yds. 75,000 at 12.00	900,000
4,000 ft. anchorage crib 12 yds. 48,000 at 12.00	576,000
Anchorage bolts 4,000 ft. at 200 lbs. 800,000 at 14c	112,000
Filling of island above elev. 7 1,200,000 at 60c	720,000

That figure, of course, would be subject to qualifications by reason of any alterations in the design or capacity of the work, especially the latter amount. Then provision for a four million bushel elevator is made. Again I would qualify that. My own view is that a one million bushel elevator would be the most desirable form of equipment to instal, with facilities for enlargement as the use of the port developed. Then there is $300,000 for a lighthouse crib at the entrance to the harbour. This is the departmental estimate of cost based upon the existing works at Nelson, and provision for ten ships in port at one time instead of six which we have now set as the maximum initial development.

Mr. STEVENS: What is the total?

Mr. DUNNING: The total of these figures, including 10 per cent for engineering management, is $20,600,000, and that is identical with the figure I gave to the committee last year. And again I would emphasize that that figure will stand revision downward in proportion as the work may be modified in extent or changed in type as the result of the investigation now being conducted.

With regard to Churchill, there is one factor which I think I should bring to the attention of the committee, and that is a letter from Mr. Palmer with reference to the decision made with regard to the port in the first place. I desire in this connection to make it perfectly clear that I am not putting this forward in any critical spirit in relation to those who were in charge when the port was chosen, but simply, as a matter of fact, illustrating rather the need for care and investigation at the present time. Mr. Palmer says:

> I think it is necessary to call attention to the fact that there was a complete absence of engineering data at the time when the decision was arrived at to locate the port at Nelson. It is very desirable that this mistake shall not be repeated when reconsidering that decision. During the progress of the works at Nelson a great deal of information has been obtained from time to time, but in regard to Churchill the position to-day is that there is absolutely no data upon which anything approaching a reliable estimate of costs can be formulated. I have therefore given Colonel Dubuc a memorandum of requirements in regard to borings, trial pits, etc., information regarding which must be in my hands before a scheme can be prepared. About Nelson no further data seems to be necessary, and when those for Churchill have been completed, and the estimated costs of the railway works are forthcoming it will be possible to place before you a very fair comparison of the merits of both these ports.

Then follows a list of his requirements. It is important for the committee to know that the only data obtainable in the Department of Railways to-day regarding Churchill is a hydrographic chart of the harbour giving the depth of the water. There is no engineering data available. When Mr. Palmer asked a question in the department as to what the bottom of Churchill harbour consisted of, no one in this department or in any other department of the government could give him exact or certain information. Everyone said, there are boulders there. The important thing, however, was what lies under the boulders. If it is rock, manifestly that has a great bearing upon the engineering aspects at Churchill. If in the other hand it is clay and boulders, the same character of material as exists at Nelson, that again has an important bearing upon Churchill as a port. The government naturally hopes that investigation will show that the work should be completed at Nelson, because of the shorter rail haul to that port and the investment which has already been made there. I have said sufficient with regard to the length of time necessary to develop Nelson to indicate, I think, sound reasons for the present investigation, which I again emphasize will not involve any delay in the completion of the road. The minds of many people are fixed upon the railway. They say: Get the railway to tidewater and then we can use the route. That is an unfortunate misconception. It is not possible to use this route in the manner in which the people of western Canada wish it to be used, until it is possible for a ship to tie up to the dock in order to take on her cargo. That is the determining factor, and because it is the determining factor we must ascertain the amount of dredging to be done. The measurements are as reasonably accurate as underwater measurements can be made, and are the result of observations taken during the years through which the work was prosecuted at that point.

With regard to the railroad, work has been continued throughout the whole of the last fiscal year according to plan. I think everything that was expected to be accomplished during that period has been. The amount voted last session will, I believe, be practically all expended when we get the final accounts in. The work has been done for the Department of Railways and Canals by the Canadian National Railways in the same manner as they would handle a piece of their own construction work. There still remains a considerable amount of work to be done on the existing line. When we started in 1926 the steel was at mile 332, but, as the committee knows, a considerable portion of the line west of that point had not been operated for some years previously because of its very bad condition. No engine terminal facilities and no regular water facilities existed and the whole line had been allowed to run down in condition since the date at which work stopped in 1917. The line has been reconditioned and temporary steel has been laid as far as mile 350, which is the crossing of the Limestone river, where a bridge is now under process of construction. The mileage between 332 and 350 is not in operating condition. The steel was laid on the bare grade just for the purpose of getting forward the material for the big steel bridge across the Limestone river. There also remains considerable work to be done on the line west of mile 332. A lot has been done, but further reconditioning is required. Engine terminals at some of the divisional points are not yet completed, neither is the necessary increased plant at the Pas, which is the terminal of the line.

That is all, Mr. Chairman, that I can think of at the moment by way of a general statement. Doubtless other questions will arise. I think I have all the information here for the committee. I only want to emphasize in conclusion that there will be no holdup in the work as a result of the investigation now proceeding, and it is hoped that before the end of this fiscal year we shall be able to make a substantial start on the assembling of materials and machinery necessary for work at the port.

Mr. GUTHRIE: At what port, may I ask?

Mr. DUNNING: I have indicated, Mr. Chairman, that we expect to be guided by the investigation in that regard. We hope that it will be Nelson. It will be Nelson unless it is demonstrated to our satisfaction by the eminent engineer who is investigating it for us that Churchill can be more easily developed into a safer and better port, and that it will be economically advantageous to Canada to use that port instead of the other.

Mr. McGIBBON: When do you expect Mr. Palmer's report?

Mr. DUNNING Not later than August.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does the $5,130,000 which is asked for in the estimate carry the work to the port?

Mr. DUNNING: If Nelson is the port, yes. I should have made a statement with regard to a factor which undoubtedly the committee noted in the letter of instructions to Mr. Palmer, and that is the practicability of a railroad to Churchill. In previous discussions in this House members will recall it was frequently stated that the building of a railroad to Churchill was impracticable because of bottomless bogs and things of that sort. Of course if that were the case we would have to make the best of Nelson whatever the conditions were. So we determined to find out whether or not it was really practicable to build the railroad to Churchill. This winter the Canadian National sent out a survey party north from the Limestone river crossing to Churchill. They are within forty or fifty miles of Churchill now. The department is in touch with them constantly by radio. Up to the present they have discovered no impossible conditions whatever. So far as gradient is concerned there will be no difficulty; so far as bog is concerned, the reports which we get over the radio indicate that the terrain does not differ materially from the terrain through which this railway and other railways in northern Canada have been constructed. There is apparently no doubt as to the practicability of a railway to Churchill. I should like, however, to qualify this by saying that we should await the final report of the chief of the survey party before making too definite statements in that regard, the only information we have received being over the radio in the form of short, scrappy messages.

Mr. BIRD: When does the minister expect a complete report of the survey?

Mr. DUNNING: Within a month—that is an instrumental survey.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few brief observations to make in regard to this vote and this project. I am one of those who has been a supporter of the project since it was first brought up in this parliament I think in 1910, or perhaps 1909. I have continued ever since to have faith in the project, to the extent at least of carrying the road on to the bay. At the present time we must realize the actual situation. We have gone so far with the project that to my mind we cannot turn back.

Mr. DUNNING: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We are bound to go forward. If in the end it does not realize all our expectations, I believe that to a very large extent the expenditure will some day be justified. I think the government and the minister are acting wisely in making further examination and investigation in regard to what we understand is the Hudson bay route. But I do not suggest they are taking the best steps to secure satisfactory information. I have been told that aerial surveys will not prove satisfactory in regard to tides or currents or channels or ice, or the like, and that the only satisfactory manner in which this difficult water can be tested with respect to navigation is by actual navigation. I do not want to throw any doubt upon the proposal of the minister with regard to his aerial surveys, but—

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend will permit me? Maybe I did not make it clear and what I am about to say will facilitate his remarks. It is intended of course that the boat which is being sent up there specially equipped will also navigate during the whole open period in and through the strait. She is an ice-breaker.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have heard it stated that the only reliable information we will get in regard to navigation in the strait will be through actual experience of navigation in those waters. Now I think I have seen in these estimates a very large item, about three quarters of a million dollars, which I believe is to be appropriated for aerial investigation. My information is that if a third of that amount were used in actual navigation experiments, far more satisfactory results would be obtained. Has the minister ever taken into consideration the fact that we have a considerable marine fleet unused in this country at the present time? Could not these ships be used for the purpose of experimental navigation through this channel?

Mr. DUNNING: Which ships?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships.

Mr. DUNNING: There is only one unused.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Could we not take for this purpose some of the ships that are in use, or secure by purchase or charter or otherwise ships for this purpose? We could with the expenditure of a much less sum than is proposed to be expended on aerial observation get actual results in the navigation of these waters both this year and next year. That would save money, and the information we would get, I am informed by men who seem to know, would be far more satisfactory than any information we can get from aerial photographs or anything of that kind.

I think that the government and the minister are well advised to make full and careful examination before they go too far with this project. I hope that the project will be successful throughout. I have always supported it, but if some doubt has arisen in recent times as to the practicability, in fact, even as to the possibility, of successful commercial navigation of this water, no one knows of that doubt more definitely than the minister himself and the government. We have no satisfactory information yet as to the commercial practicability of this route. I agree that the road should be completed to a port; I think it would be idle to leave the road in its present incomplete condition. I agree too that the work should be expedited. I do not think that in any event the road is going to be a dead loss to the country, but I would not like to commit myself to the expenditure of a greater amount than is required to construct the road up to a port. Until we have absolutely definite information as to the practicability of navigation of the Hudson bay and Hudson strait —and the minister has his doubts on that subject—

Mr. DUNNING: Oh no.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the minister and the government have their doubts, and until those doubts are resolved I think we should go slow, and not proceed further than the best port on the bay. I have always understood that there were possibilities in regard to both Port Nelson and Fort Churchill, and I suppose that it was in the light of the information we had in former days, with the engineering staff we were then able to command, that Port Nelson was selected as the better port. But, so far, we know very little about Fort Churchill, and it may turn out that Fort Churchill is the better port. I do not think that anyone can speak positively as to that at present, but whichever port is selected, let us go there, and let us have pretty definite information before we launch on the larger scheme.

Mr. DUNNING: I appreciate very much the manner in which my hon. friend has received my observations on this subject. I would only point out to him that I evidently was not clear in the observations I made with reference to the work in the strait. The work in the strait, which is not comprised within this vote, of course, but which it is convenient to discuss as this stage, is not being done because the government has any doubt about the navigability of the strait. We certainly believe that the strait is navigable, and we have proof of that, of course, in the fact that navigators have been navigating the strait for the last three hundred years. We have also records of the voyages made by the ships belonging to the Department of Railways and Canals during the period when work was being done up there.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I meant commercially feasible navigation.

Mr. DUNNING: The point upon which we are desirous of securing information is as to the extent to which the period of open navigation through the strait may be lengthened at its latter end by the provision of adequate scientific aids to navigation. I do not object to the criticism of my hon. friend with respect to the value of aerial observation. I only desire to point out this in connection with it, that we are combining the two. We are sending up a ship which will navigate between the three bases to be established in the strait as long as navigation is possible, and in addition, we are taking aerial observations. Why are we taking aerial observations? My study of the matter, involving as it did a study of the track charts of all our vessels which have ever sailed through the strait in the course of the work done up there, indicated that while there might very frequently be ice in the strait, and very considerable fields of ice in which the ship would be temporarily stuck, if the captain of that ship had only possessed a wider vision than the instruments at his command permitted, he would have found that clear water was not very far away. That is the point. The testing of the strait will place at our disposal more than the ordinary facilities which the mariner possesses, and whose observation is limited, as those familiar with ships know. But we hope by aerial observation to be able to demonstrate that that route can, with modern aids to navigation, be kept open for a much longer period than the minimum of two months. I think it is admitted by all that the route is commercially navigable for at least two months in the year, and estimates run all the way from two up to ten months. I do not propose to quarrel either with those who believe in the minimum or with those who believe in the maximum. I only say that accurate information is desirable, and we believe that by combining constant navigation by a ship with aerial observations by aeroplanes we shall be able to demonstrate the feasibility of navigating the strait for a much longer period than is commonly believed to be possible.

Mr. PETTIT: Do I understand the minister to say that the strait can be kept open for a period of ten months in the year? All the data go to show that they are open only from two and a half to four and a half months.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will find that men of some prominence in western Canada who claim to know something about the matter state that the strait can be navigated during the whole year. I am not expressing any opinion on that point; I am merely saying that it is desirable that we should secure accurate information upon it.

Mr. McGIBBON: I remember very distinctly discussing this matter with a former member of the House, the late Captain Reid, representing Queens, Prince Edward Island. He told me that he had been in and out of those straits for a great many years, and that one of the difficulties he found was that the channel was constantly shifting on account of the sand.

Mr. DUNNING: In the strait?

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend must have misunderstood.

Mr. McGIBBON: No, I did not. I am positive that is what he told me, and I just wanted to draw the minister's attention to that fact, because this was the opinion of a man who has been going in and out of the strait for a great many years. Has the minister any information on that point?

Mr. DUNNING: With regard to the depth of water in the strait, navigators have been passing through the strait for hundreds of years, and we have also admiralty charts and hydrographic charts showing a hundred fathoms of water there. I do not think it is less than that anywhere in the strait. That question never has been raised in practical form.

Mr. KENNEDY: Will the minister tell me if it is estimated that this $5,130,000 will complete the route.

Mr. DUNNING: The route?

Mr. KENNEDY: Yes, complete the Hudson Bay railway, and develop the port to such an extent that grain can be carried.

Mr. DUNNING: No. I think if my hon. friend had listened to my previous statement he would understand that I was very clear on that. It would finish the railway if it were built to Nelson, and provide it with terminal facilities, and would leave approximately $2,000,000 to start work on the port. I gave the figures a little while ago, which I obtained from the department, not from Mr. Palmer, based on a larger port development than we have asked Mr. Palmer to base his calculations on, and they intimated that $20,000,000 in all will be the required amount to be spent on Nelson, if that is the port decided on, and assuming that we provide for ten ships in port at one time and for a four million bushel elevator, neither of which I consider is necessary.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How many miles is it from the end of steel to the bay?

Mr. DUNNING: The steel is at present laid to mile 350, and Nelson is 424 miles.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): And some of that is graded?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, but the grading is in bad shape.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In the event of Fort Churchill being decided on, can the minister give any idea at what mile he would branch off to go to Nelson?

Mr. DUNNING: It would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of mile 360, but that is not yet determined.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I suppose the minister has it in contemplation in the event of Fort Churchill being decided on that the railway will also be completed to Nelson?

Mr. DUNNING: That is not determined, but it is a possibility of course, depending upon what the investigation reveals.

Mr. TOLMIE: The minister gave us certain opinions as to the period of navigation. He gave us the opinion of one gentleman who said he thought these waters might be navigable from ten to twelve months of the year. Is that the opinion of the captain of a prairie schooner?

Mr. DUNNING: It is the opinion of a very distinguished supporter of the party to which my hon. friend belongs, Colonel Ralph H. Webb, the mayor of Winnipeg.

Mr. TOLMIE: When you take the opinion of anyone west of the great lakes and east of the Rocky mountains it is very likely to be questioned. With those ships which the minister spoke of using up there, a draught of about thirty feet will be required at low water.

Mr. DUNNING: Thirty feet at high tide.

Mr. TOLMIE: What kind of river is the Nelson? Is it a bad river for silting?

Mr. DUNNING: That is a very important point. Our information with regards to the Nelson river is that the present natural channel scours itself. The engineering plans upon which the present scheme is based contemplate that the channel which requires to be dug will also scour itself by operation of the same agency as scours the natural channel. I may say, without criticism of any former administration, that because of the lack of engineering knowledge a sandsucker dredge was sent up to Nelson and there is not any sand to suck. It has not done any work. The material is boulder clay and the natural channel scours itself completely out to sea. It must be borne in mind that the natural channel is a narrow channel of deep water through an estuary of about from five to fifteen miles in width.

Mr. TOLMIE: What are the possibilities of fisheries? Would there be salmon canneries established?

Mr. DUNNING: The Department of the Interior has issued a publication dealing with the fisheries, timber and other resources of the region. There are fishery possibilities.

Mr. KENNEDY: Do I understand the minister to say that the plans contemplated the construction of a four million bushel elevator at Nelson?

Mr. DUNNING: What I said was that the estimates prepared by the department in connection with the present scheme, which were prepared years ago and carried forward into the figures to-day, were for a four-million bushel terminal elevator. But that in my opinion, for a test, the provision of a one million bushel elevator with quick handling capacity would be sufficient, provided it was designed to permit of extension.

Mr. KENNEDY: The government has spent about $40,000,000 on it already. Did I understand the minister to say that the one-million bushel elevator was to be built to test the feasibility of the route?

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend understands perfectly that in opening a new trade route such as this, and under the conditions which prevail, we must provide just sufficient facilities and no more to provide an adequate test. I used the word "test" in that sense.

Mr. KENNEDY: It is an experiment?

Mr. DUNNING: I will not admit it is an experiment. We expect this route to be utilized. The degree of utilization is the question to be decided—not whether or not it will be utilized. We have sufficient information now to know that it can and will be utilized. As to the extent of utilization, we require to make tests.

Mr. KENNEDY: Does the minister intend to convey to the committee that if a million bushel elevator will be sufficient to take care of the grain that is to be shipped through Nelson or Churchill, or whatever port is finally decided on, the construction of the Hudson Bay railway will be justified for that amount of business?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not expect a million bushel terminal elevator will justify the expenditure. If justification for the expenditure is required at this late date, let me state the basis upon which I would put it. I would first state it in this way; that looked at at this date, upon the basis stated by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, we have already built a portion of the line, and we have graded the whole railway to Nelson. We have laid the steel to mile 350 and the whole line will be 424 miles. That is basis No. 1. Then I say that it is the closest seaport to the prairie regions of the middle west. The people of the west have been looking in the direction of the Hudson bay for the last forty years, and mineral developments have taken place along the Hudson Bay railway. It cuts through the mineral belt of northern Manitoba. There are pulpwood possibilities in northern Manitoba. Some of the largest water-powers we have in western Canada are situated on the Nelson and Churchill rivers. There are therefore local development possibilities. There are fisheries on the Hudson bay and in the Arctic generally, and then there is all the wealth of the Arctic products of one kind and another which would be available to a port which would be a Canadian Arctic base, and it would become a base for Canadian Arctic produce.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the minister is aware that Ontario, by a special arrangement, owns the right of way from the Ontario provincial boundary line through the province of Manitoba to Port Nelson. If the terminal is changed to Churchill will the province of Ontario have the right of way to the other port? There was a special reservation of a right of way in connection with the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway. There was a strip five miles wide to Port Nelson.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not sure as to the position to-day of what I may call the corridor arrangement referred to by my hon. friend. I remember in the original arrangement with Ontario there was a corridor, so to speak, through Manitoba.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is a five mile right of way.

Mr. DUNNING: That may be. However, the government would not be disposed to prejudice that arrangement in any way with respect to either Nelson or Churchill. It may have lapsed or for some other reason it may not now be in force, but the government sees no reason why the original understanding should not be carried out.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The land now belongs to Manitoba.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it belongs to this government.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When the boundaries of Manitoba were enlarged, and before the land was handed over to that province, a reservation was made by the Dominion government of a five mile strip, the rest of the territory being handed over to the province.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend's memory is at fault. The lands of Manitoba are still held by the federal government.

Mr. BANCROFT: Held is a better word than owned.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. The lands are held by the Dominion government. It is interesting to note in connection with this whole Hudson bay matter that only a week ago the Premier of Ontario announced the intention of that government to extend the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway to James bay, and those of us who know anything about navigation conditions in Hudson bay realize that if a port can be built on James bay it surely can be constructed on Hudson bay, for the reason that, as is well known, James bay is a large body of shallow water twelve feet in depth. Another important point in connection with James bay—here I am speaking again of ice conditions—is the fact that the drift of ice in Hudson bay, according to our records, is down the west side of the bay and into the pocket formed by James bay. I believe I am correct in stating that ice exists in James bay and blocks the exit from James bay for a far longer period than the exit into the bay from Nelson or Churchill would be blocked. I appreciate that the object of the Ontario government may not be to create a port on James bay but rather to develop the resources between the end of the present Temiskaming and Northern Ontario line and James bay itself. What my hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) says is a commentary on the resources of the north country generally. However, the province of Ontario finds it desirable out of its own resources to extend its own railway to the foot of James bay.

Mr. McGIBBON: A year ago the minister informed me several times that the ex-mayor of Boniface had said that he represented a company who had the necessary capital and who were prepared to build the road without any expense to the country at all. Is that statement true, and if so what effect has it on the situation? I interviewed the minister several times in the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: The government did not take the offer seriously.

Mr. McGIBBON: But was it made?

Mr. DUNNING: If you can call it an offer, yes. The complete details of it have gone from my mind, but certainly it was not an offer that could be seized by the government.

Mr. BROWN: Did they want the water-powers on the Nelson river?

Mr. KAISER: Does the minister think that one year's investigation with an aeroplane will settle any of the points in dispute in regard to Hudson strait. I am informed it would take a number of years to dispose of many of the points touching the navigation of the strait and I would refer the minister to some of the writings of Mr. J. B. Tyrrell, an old and personal friend of mine with whom I had a conversation not many days ago. There is not a man living who has spent as much time studying the Hudson bay as he has and his writings convince me that in his opinion the straits would not be navigable for more than two or three months in the year. As a Canadian and the representative of a constituency in Ontario I am inclined to think that in regard to all these young dreams of the people of Canada—

Mr. DUNNING: This is not a young dream, it is an old one.

Mr. KAISER: It may be old with the minister but it is by no means an old dream so far as the expending of millions of dollars of the people's money is concerned. One-half of the money that is to be spent in this undertaking will be raised by the people of Ontario.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. KAISER: The people of Ontario do not object to paying for anything that will make for the development of Canada as a whole but they are entitled to have some basis for their faith, and no effort has been made to inform either Ontario or Quebec regarding the merits of this proposition. It seems to me that we might investigate the question more in detail and, as the leader of the opposition suggests, ascertain by actual experiment whether or not the strait is navigable. If it is navigable we are willing to support the scheme. I go home every week and am constantly in touch with the people of my constituency and I run across men everywhere who are opposed to this undertaking. They consider that the government has not furnished them with sufficient information. I confess in my own case also to a want of knowledge of the subject. All I know is that the minister came here heralded as the man who was to put this business through.

Mr. DUNNING: Who me?

Mr. KAISER: But his faith is not quite so strong to-day as it was a year ago. He was satisfied then that the proposition was sound.

Mr. DUNNING: I am now.

Mr. KAISER: Now he says he is willing to have but one million bushel elevator and to try it out. There is no doubt that you could build an elevator at Port Nelson and construct the railway but it is doubtful whether the expenditure would be justified in view of the fact that many points that should have been investigated have not been fully gone into. Last year I read in Hansard a speech delivered by the Minister of Agriculture in which there were certain statements in regard to Nelson harbour that amazed me. He pointed out many things I did not know before. Where is this big dredge of which he spoke? I am told it is stranded up there and that it is impossible to reach it. We think that sufficient time has not been taken in investigating some of these matters. In Ontario we would like to support anything which is to the benefit of Canada, but we think we might go a little slow for a year or two and be more sure of our ground.

Mr. DUNNING: That sort of criticism compels me to say that if the investigation which this government has prosecuted and is prosecuting had been made at the inception of the work, a great deal less money would have been spent and we would have known more about the project. The responsibility for that condition cannot be laid at our door.

Mr. KAISER: We are not laying it there.

Mr. DUNNING: So far as the dredge is concerned, that sandsucker cannot be attributed to us, whatever our sins may be. With regard to the terminal elevator, I may say that in devising the instructions to be given Mr. Palmer I had in mind the attitude expressed from the opposite side of the House last year, which attitude then was, "Well, we are satisfied to let you go ahead with this thing provided you keep your initial expenditure to a minimum and increase your facilities only as the need for them is demonstrated." In speaking of a one million bushel elevator instead of a four million bushel elevator I was endeavouring to meet the views of those who held that opinion, and to-day I am accused of weakening in my faith in the project because I am trying to meet the views of those who desire us to investigate and know where we are going before we start out.

In connection with that million bushel elevator may I give some information as to what is possible with a fast-handling elevator of small capacity? The Department of Railways and Canals are to-day administering the elevator at Port Colborne. This elevator was first built, I believe, as a million bushel unit, and has since been increased to three million bushels. Do you know how much we put through that elevator last fall? We put through 62,000,000 bushels, and that is what can be done under modern conditions with a relatively small plant with fast handling capacity. I think those members from the west at any rate will concede that while I may speak with deference of engineers and others on the subject of port development, I do know something of the operation of elevators, and when I say a one million bushel elevator is sufficient to give a fair trial to the Hudson bay port, I think hon. members may be prepared to take my word in that regard.

Mr. EVANS: I was very much pleased, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CANTLEY: I think the attitude developed by the minister within the last year is admirable.

Mr. DUNNING: It was not developed in the last year.

Mr. CANTLEY: There is quite a change in his attitude to-night as compared with his attitude of a year ago, and I congratulate him on it. He has been very frank in regard to a great deal of information which he has given us, for which I also thank him. May I now ask the amount spent on dredging at Port Nelson? I noted down the figures which he gave, but I think I was mistaken as to the amount.

Mr. DUNNING: In actual dredging $89,000 exclusive of the cost of equipment.

Mr. CANTLEY: What does the minister estimate as the cost per cubic yard of dredging still to be done at Nelson?

Mr. DUNNING: The departmental estimate is $1.60 per yard. In that connection I may tell my hon. friend that all the work which has been done at Port Nelson up to date has been done without a railway back of the port; it has been carried out subject to whatever disadvantages there may be in navigating the strait of which we have been speaking, and it has all been done from the sea end. The department is not inclined to be positive about that figure of $1.60 per yard; with regard to the island dredging the figure is $1.20 per yard. I think the first figure is higher than the cost of any other dredging in Canada; I do not know of any dredging which actually costs as much as the department has allowed in that estimate. I am not an engineer, but my opinion is that the unit cost is altogether too high.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think the minister is quite correct; I think it is about four times as high as any dredging I am aware of.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; conditions are different.

Mr. CANTLEY: That depends upon conditions. The distance which the material has to be moved in view of the conditions prevailing, is simply enormous.

Mr. DUNNING: That is it.

Mr. CANTLEY: Are these to be steam operated dredges?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: How will the coal come in?

Mr. DUNNING: We are hoping to bring it in from Nova Scotia by sea.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is interesting, and I am glad to know it; I thought you were going to bring it down by rail from the northwest. I asked that question seriously because I really thought the coal would come down by rail.

Mr. DUNNING: It may be done either way, whichever is the most economical.

Mr. CANTLEY: The information which the minister gave as to the effects of the spring break-up of the Nelson river is very different from my previous understanding.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not speak of that.

Mr. CANTLEY: I understood the minister to speak of the effects of the spring break up, and to say that the channel cleaned itself.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the scouring.

Mr. CANTLEY: As to the break up of the Nelson river in the spring. I understood that when the Nelson broke up in the spring it went on a wild rampage, with the result that the channel shifted year by year. I understood that the estuary of the Nelson river was something like that of the Nile, that it was wide and shallow, and that the channel shifted from year to year; that was my previous understanding, although I may be wrong. I would like to know if the minister has any definite information on that point.

Mr. DUNNING: As Mr. Palmer intimated in his letter to me, the existing data at Nelson, due to the years of work and observation done there, is considered fairly authentic. I may say that the original hydrographic chart made prior to the time of the selection of the port has been proved to be wrong, or at least a better channel than the one indicated on the hydrographic chart has been discovered over part of the course. So far as the scouring is concerned, I would point out to my hon. friend that that goes on continually. That is not a matter of opinion; it is a matter of scientific fact ascertained through years of observation.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am not finding fault with it or challenging that in any way. I understand that a tremendous volume of water does come down the Nelson river during the spring break-up. I have not been there, but from what I have read—and I have read quite a deal about it—the river brings down enormous masses of ice and with them a considerable quantity of small boulders and stones. As I say, it goes on a wild rampage and very often entirely changes the channel from the course of the previous year.

Mr. DUNNING: That is not correct.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister may be right in that statement but I doubt it. In reference to the vessel he is sending up, I understand it to be the Stanley?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: The Stanley is the best ice-breaker we ever had in the maritime provinces. That vessel is now thirty-eight years old, and I understand a considerable amount of money is being expended in reconditioning and strengthening the vessel. Is it the intention to keep the Stanley in the bay during the winter?

Mr. DUNNING: Not in the bay, but at a base in the straits.

Mr. CANTLEY: The object being what, may I ask?

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will permit me to answer, perhaps I did not state it clearly previously. The vessel will continue to cruise in the strait; we are not interested in the bay, because the strait represents whatever problem there is. The boat will cruise in the strait as long as possible and will then tie up at one of the three bases that are to be established, until it is possible for her to cruise again.

Mr. CANTLEY: I thank the minister; I was not sure as to what was intended. May I ask the minister how many tugs and scows will be required to carry on this dredging work?

Mr. DUNNING: I should state here, with respect to the estimated cost of dredging, that one of the factors which make it so high in the opinion of the engineers of the department is the necessity of carrying the dredging material over twenty miles by scows before it can be dumped. The estimates include provision for 12,500 yards dump scows, and four large flat dump scows. That is the equipment contemplated by the department. Again, that is all subject to revision of the plan of port development.

Mr. CANTLEY: And the tugs to handle the scows?

Mr. DUNNING: There will be six tugs of the same size as the one we have there.

Mr. BIRD: What is the labour factor in the estimates?

Mr. DUNNING: The $1.60 includes labour. There is no separate estimate for labour.

Mr. GOTT: How many tugs and dredges are on the spot at the present time?

Mr. DUNNING: I think we have three tugs there now. It is very difficult for me to give a positive answer to my hon. friend's question offhand, because we may be able to take up there equipment now being used elsewhere. We have a dredge at Halifax which can be taken up there.

Mr. BIRD: Is the labour factor estimated at the ordinary wages for that kind of labour?

Mr. DUNNING: The experience before was that we required to pay higher than the normal rates for similar labour. As to whether that condition will prevail when we have a rail haul behind us, it is not possible at this time to say.

Mr. EVANS: I was pleased with the minister's statement when this item was called. While the plans do involve, perhaps, delay, and no doubt there will be some impatience on that account throughout western Canada, I believe that the reasonableness of the whole thing will appeal to the people there, and that they will see that the government is taking the best means possible to make the route what they have always expected it would be, one of permanent benefit to the west. I think the government is taking the right means in getting all the necessary data now before large expenditures are incurred, and I am sure the rest of Canada will see before long that the project is worthy of being completed.

Mr. PETTIT: I am not opposed to the project at all; I may state frankly that I am absolutely in accord with the completion of the railway to the bay, but I would ask how long this ship is to be employed in connection with the gathering of data in the straits.

Mr. DUNNING: The provision we are making is in the marine estimates and it is really out of order to discuss the matter at this point, although, of course, it is inseparable from the main project. The provision we are making is calculated on the basis of having the outfit up there in the strait for a year.

Mr. PETTIT: Does the minister not think it would be very much wiser to have the investigation extend over a period of five years? The periods of navigation may vary from year to year so that in order to obtain a definite result the gathering of data, in my humble opinion, should extend over a period of at least five years.

Mr. DUNNING: In that connection I have in mind, of course, that this money is voted by parliament each year,—it is not under a statute. In connection with the bases being established we are keeping in mind the factor of possible permanent requirements. I am glad to have this much encouragement from my hon. friend, because it may be necessary to come back another year for a considerable sum of money. The vision of my hon. friend in regard to the matter is of a practical character. While the same type of investigation may not require to be carried on after the first year, the work of the first year will demonstrate what is necessary to be done in succeeding years, and on that basis we will come to parliament again.

I have now information as to the point raised by the leader of the opposition with regard to the Ontario corridor. The corridor was to the south side of the river opposite Nelson. That is it ran from the Ontario-Manitoba boundary to a point on the south side of the Nelson river opposite Nelson. If Churchill were to be selected the understanding at the time was that running rights should be granted to an Ontario railway if the province so desired; but no corridor was provided beyond the point opposite Nelson on the south side of the river.

Mr. KENNEDY: I should like to ask the minister if an economic study has been made of the effect of the operation of the Hudson Bay railway on the other railways hauling out the produce of western Canada to the Atlantic?

Mr. DUNNING: We are endeavouring conscientiously to make an economic study of that matter. We expect that the natural growth of development in western Canada will justify every outlet that can be provided.

Mr. KENNEDY: Does the minister contend that this outlet is necessary because the other railways hauling out the wheat and grain of western Canada to the head of the lakes are overloaded, or will be overloaded in the future?

Mr. DUNNING: Well, we are managing to keep them pretty busy, increasingly busy. They are paying their way. I have not, of course, the vision of a prophet, but I have seen the growth of western Canada during the last twenty-five years, and I expect fully that the development of this route will not prejudicially affect other routes any more than the remarkable development of western traffic to Vancouver and Prince Rupert has had a prejudicial effect on the eastbound movement.

Mr. FORKE: I should like to tell the hon. member for Peace River that at certain periods in the year a train of wheat cars leaves Winnipeg every twenty minutes. That will give him some idea of the extent of the traffic.

Mr. KENNEDY: I am anxious, Mr. Chairman, to understand the basis upon which we are justifying this railway. I am doing so for the simple reason that I also am interested in railway construction and would like to see the same principle applied. Again I would ask if it is not a fact that the railways at the head of the lakes are capable of handling far more traffic than they are now handling at any season of the year?

Mr. FORKE: No, they are not.

Mr. DUNNING: I will not enter into a dispute with my hon. friend with regard to that point. I think the construction of this route can be justified on grounds altogether outside of its possibilities for hauling grain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: In fact I do justify it on other grounds. I hope it will prove a very successful grain and cattle route. If it does not, I am still convinced it will be justified in its contribution towards the development of Canada's northland, and especially on the basis of Arctic trade.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to remind my hon. friend from Oshawa that this railway has been more than paid for by the sale of western lands set apart years ago for that purpose.

Mr. STEVENS: Let us carry it then.

Mr. CAMPBELL: My hon. friend mentioned Mr. Tyrrell's report, which, he said, was his authority for stating that the strait was open only two months each year. Mr. Tyrrell points out in his report that he estimated there were only two months in the year when a vessel could not pass through the strait.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. KENNEDY: I have heard it stated on numerous occasions that lands were set aside in the three prairie provinces and that the money accruing from their sale has paid for the Hudson Bay railway. Is that a fact?

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the committee by going into ancient history. Whatever may be the case in that regard does not in my opinion have any bearing upon the present occasion. There is, however, ground for the belief stated by the member for Mackenzie that certain legislation was enacted many years ago, it was understood, to set aside lands which would afterwards be sold instead of being given away, the proceeds to be applied to take care of the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. The proceeds of those lands have never been set apart in any trust fund for the purpose, but certain it is that the understanding at the time was that this change in Dominion land legislation was for the purpose of securing from western lands a sum of money which would reimburse the Dominion for its expenditure in connection with the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. KENNEDY: I should like to call the minister's attention to the fact that about one-third of those lands were in the province of Alberta. I think it has some bearing on some other questions that are likely to come before the House.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

To provide for the establishment of a patrol service to investigate the conditions of navigation in Hudson strait and Hudson bay, $850,000.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, seeing that we have discussed item 221 on the previous vote, I think we may as well dispose of it while we have all the material before us. I think in fact the explanations in connection with it have all been given.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understand that tenders were called for the aerial work.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is being done by the air service. The procedure followed was to appoint an interdepartmental committee consisting of an engineering representative from the Department of Railways and Canals, a marine man from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and a representative from the air service. The report from that committee was the basis for the plan of the aerial work. The work is to be done by the air force.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): My question has nothing to do with the principle of the Hudson Bay railway. I understand estimates were called for from the air service of the Department of National Defence and the air service of the Marine and Fisheries department. Were such estimates asked for and given?

Mr. DUNNING: The Marine department of course has no air service. The basis of this estimate is the estimate of the air service itself for the work so far as the air part is concerned.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think there is an officer in connection with the air service of the Marine and Fisheries department and one in connection with the National Defence department.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is all under the Department of National Defence. The Marine department use this service of course.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is that correct? Because I understand two very widely different estimates were given, and that there is a man in connection with the Marine and Fisheries department in charge of the air service.

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend must have misunderstood, and that he refers to the air service in the radio sense. That is, the radio service is under the Marine and Fisheries, but there is no aeroplane service under that department.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is it the intention to establish stations for radio service?

Mr. DUNNING: Radio communication, yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is where the estimates may have come in in connection with this service.

Mr. DUNNING: It is to cover everything required.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understand that the radio service of the National Defence department could be given to this work for about one-tenth of the estimate furnished.

Mr. DUNNING: The estimates in toto were worked out by the inter-departmental committee consisting of a representative of the air service, a representative of the Marine department and a representative of the Department of Railways and Canals. I shall be very glad to look into the point raised by my hon. friend, but I do not think he is correct. The material from these various departments was assembled by the inter-departmental committee to make up this estimate.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who is the officer in charge of the radio service of the Marine and Fisheries department?

Mr. DUNNING: Commander Edwards.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister assure me that estimates were not asked for from the radio service of the National Defence department and from the Marine and Fisheries department?

Mr. DUNNING: I understand the two matters do not clash. All I can say at the moment is that I will look into the point raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Under some other item will the minister be able to give to the House the two estimates?

Mr. DUNNING: If they exist, yes. We are not clearly understanding each other, but I will endeavour to get the information my hon. friend desires.

Mr. PETTIT: I understand that the period to be covered by Mr. Palmer's investigations will be about five years?

Mr. DUNNING: No. I do not expect Mr. Palmer wil cover more than a month or six weeks including the time already spent.

Mr. PETTIT: Is it the intention of the minister to follow up the present expedition in the strait with another next year, another the following year, and so on for five years in order that he may have sufficient data before undertaking the construction of any of the large terminals in the bay?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend misunderstood what I said. We intend to go ahead with the railway and port development as expeditiously as possible. With regard to the strait—and Mr. Palmer's investigation has nothing to do with the strait; we are not asking about that—we will be guided in our future proposals to parliament by what we discover during the first year of the aerial and marine survey.

Item agreed to.

Trent Canal—construction and betterments, $19,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: Where is this money being spent?

Mr. DUNNING: On the Trent canal. The total amount of $19,000 is entirely a revote from last year. It is made up from the following items: Erection of lockmasters' houses, $9,000; payment for land damages, $10,000. The lock houses are to be built at lock No. 6 at Frankford, and at lock No. 12 at Campbellford. As the lockmasters are expected to be available at all hours of the day or night, it is necessary that they should reside close to the locks, and there are no houses available near these places. With regard to the payment for land damages, a number of claims for land damages on the Eastern and Severn divisions are still outstanding, and every year new claims are presented for various reasons, such as the loss of power, the flooding of land, expropriation of land, and so forth, some of which are allowed. The amount asked for is to pay such claims as may be settled during the next fiscal year.

Mr. McGIBBON: I want to ask the minister a question, although I do not suppose it is much use. After all the years during which this canal has been in course of construction and the large amount of money that has been expended upon it, and considering the fact that there are only a couple of locks left to build in order to reach the Georgian bay, does he not think it is wise to complete the canal, and will he not consider that in the near future? I really do not think the minister should be prejudiced in the matter, because the government have been spending money pretty lavishly this year on nearly everything that has come before parliament. I would also draw his attention to the fact that as a revenue producer the tourist business in Canada now stands third, and in the future it is likely to stand still higher. If this canal had to be started now, I do not think anybody would advocate its construction, but considering the fact that it is nearly completed, cannot the minister hold out some hope at least, since he is spending millions on the Hudson Bay railway and everything else, that the small remaining portion will be completed?

Mr. DUNNING: I was rather emphatic in my reply to my hon. friend on a previous occasion that I could not see my way clear to recommending to the government the completion of the Trent canal, but I assure him that that attitude on my part was not based on any prejudice whatsoever. I am endeavouring to look conscientiously at the economic factors involved. Perhaps I should say to my hon. friend that the door is never closed; that is to say, if it can be demontsrated to me as sound and in the interests of Canada, I shall be very glad indeed to give such consideration to the representations as they seem to warrant. I am informed by our chief engineer, who is speaking from memory, that $3,000,000 would be required to complete the Trent canal.

Mr. McGIBBON: It might cost that, but what was the use of building it this far if you do not complete it? This canal was started about 125 years ago, and every government has committed itself to it up to the present time. The important part of it, to my mind, excluding the power, has yet to be constructed, important that is from a revenue-producing standpoint, because once you get to the Georgian bay with the canal you would open up a large tourist traffic from the great lakes, and especially from the cities on the other side of the lakes. If these two remaining locks were completed I think that indirectly the country would gain considerably because of the tourist traffic, which is becoming one of our largest revenue producers.

Item agreed to.

To pay claim of F. A. Robertson and Company, $14,029.96 and interest on same at rate of 5 per cent per annum from July, 1919, $19,641.94.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is this for?

Mr. DUNNING: This is to pay the claim of F. A. Robertson and Company, arising out of the contract for the construction of section No. 3 of the Ontario-Rice Lake division of the Trent canal. I have here a lengthy memorandum from the engineer as to the case, and if the committee will bear with me, I will read it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is evidently a lot of interest taken in the matter, and perhaps the minister had better read it.

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Mr. DUNNING: The contract was entered into with the Canadian General Development Company, Limited, away back in 1908, the compensation being schedule rates. The superintending engineer's estimate of the cost of the work was $304,196, and the extended totals of all tenders received were as follows

David Conroy, Peterborough, Ontario	$410,715 10
Brown and Aylmer, Toronto, Ontario	404,580 00
Orillia Construction Company, Orillia	360,628 00
O'Leary Brothers, Ottawa, Ontario	297,197 00
Canadian General Development Company, Limited, Montreal, Quebec	289,520 20

With the consent of the minister, the Canadian General Development Company, Limited, contract was assigned on February 9, 1914, to Fred A. Robertson and Company and the section was completed in July, 1919. The total amount of the final estimate was $292,552.92.

When Fred A. Robertson and Company took over the work, practically everything had been completed with the exception of the dredging shown on the plan exhibited at the time tenders were called. The extent of the dredging was, however, somewhat misleading, as, about one and a half years after the Robertson Company commenced work, sweeping operations revealed that there were many places in the channel requiring shallow cutting which had not been shown on the plan. Besides these shallow cuttings, the dredging was further extended in the interests of navigation by widening some of the shallow cuts more particularly at curves in alignment.

In June, 1921, the contractors filed their claim which is still outstanding and includes;

1. Payment for the dredging not shown on the exhibited plan at an hourly rate for plant.
2. Payment for all hardpan material in the dredging shown on the exhibited plan at an hourly rate for plant.

The net amount of their claim was $44,251.82, and that is the reason why the claim has not been met up to the present time. The difference between the amount of the claim and the amount of the final award by the chief engineer is the difference between $19,000 odd and $44,000 odd, and I should add that the $19,000 includes interest also.

Mr. McGIBBON: Was this amount agreed to by both parties?

Mr. DUNNING: They finally agreed to accept this amount.

Item agreed to.

To pay claim of Dennon and Rodgers $8,386.64 and interest on same at rate of five per cent per annum from December 31, 1918, $11,966.47.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a similar claim made under somewhat different circumstances. In this case the original claim was for $98,000, but in the years that have elapsed while negotiations were going on the amount has come down until now we are suggesting a settlement of $8,386.64 and interest.

Mr. McGIBBON: Am I to infer from the minister's remarks that this was a fake claim? The original claim was for $98,000.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no, no.

Mr. McGIBBON: Why would they accept such an enormous reduction? It seems to me something must be wrong.

Mr. DUNNING: In May, 1919, the contractors filed claims for payment, which claims, with some alterations, were referred in September, 1924, to the Exchequer court. Subsequently an examination for discovery was held before the registrar of the court, but the case has not yet been set down for trial. The defence of the department rests on the terms of the contract and specifications.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Just as it is?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Welland ship canal—construction, $14,500,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is this under contract?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Have Peter Lyall & Son completed their contract on sections 3 and 4 of the canal?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It was a part of the contract that they were to take over the plant and stores owned by the government and were to pay $450,000 for them.

Mr. DUNNING: We will get the exact amount, but it was more than that. I think it was over $2,000,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It was to be taken out of the progress estimates, some $45,000 each month, and if that arrangement had been carried out they would have paid for the plant long ago. But an order in council was passed—and I speak subject to correction—in January 1924, releasing them from making these payments or these deductions for a period of ten months. Has this contracting firm paid back to the government the amount which the contract called for them to pay in monthly instalments? If they have not carried out their contract in that respect, how much is still owing to the government, in capital, in principal and in accumulated interest up to date? What provision is being made, if any, by the government to see that the contracting firm of Peter Lyall & Son meets its obligation in accordance with the terms of the contract entered into on the 27th of June 1922?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the detailed information before me, and I can only speak in a general way. It is true that, on several occasions since the contract was entered into involving the taking over of old machinery, large extensions of time for payment have been granted. Up to the present, speaking from memory, about one-half the amount has been paid, but the security held in the way of drawbacks on what is due the contractor, together with the value of the plant, is quite ample to protect the government. We have in addition the security of a deposit of over half a million dollars.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Is the security which has been deposited the general deposit put up by any contractor when he enters into a contract?

Mr. DUNNING: For the completion of the contract, which includes this equipment.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): My understanding was the amount put up by Lyall when he entered the contract, the usual ten per cent—

Mr. DUNNING: Five per cent.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): —was not supposed to cover the equipment, the plant and stores which he was to take over. I should not think it would. Are the plant and stores that Lyall took over from the government still there? Or can the minister inform me whether or not this contracting firm, although they have not met their obligations in regard to the payment for this plant and stores, have disposed of a part of the plant and stores?

Mr. DUNNING: Any plant disposed of has been replaced by a new plant on the work, and we have a mortgage on all the contractors' plant, including replaced plant. It is considered by the department, by the engineers and the deputy minister, that we have ample security, so ample indeed that if this particular contractor fell down on his contract now we could well afford to finish it ourselves, be amply secured and have something over.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): One question arises properly out of this expenditure. The completion of the Welland canal will involve the construction of a lake terminal, and I understand a committee has been appointed consisting of three representatives, one from the Department of Railways, another from the Department of Public Works, and a third representing the railways, to consider the location of the terminal port. I am interested, of course, in the town of Brockville. There are other points that are interested in the same matter, namely, Kingston and Prescott. Will the location of this terminal be in any way affected by the size, the number, the personnel, or the political complexion of delegations who wait upon the department, or will it have regard to the respective advantages of these particular places? I would hope that it would be disposed of on the basis of the economic merits of the different places.

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend is aware of the answers which as minister I have given to several of the delegations to which my hon. friend has referred. The answer is that we are not determining this question on the basis of representations made by those representing very worthily particular localities which are naturally looking after their interests to the best of their ability, but rather on the basis of an economic study. I think my hon. friend is familiar with the important questions involved, as they relate to the trade of Canada, particularly in the transportation sense, and it is the endeavour of the department concerned to deal with it on that basis, and having regard to that factor only.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. DUNNING: As to what may be done, it is a little early yet to indicate. But if as a result of what is determined upon, it is necessary for the Department of Railways and Canals to do anything this year, we can utilize a portion of the fund now voted for the Welland canal, because any work which is done is really a continuation of the Welland canal. We do not expect however, during the current fiscal year any expenditure under this head to amount to anything.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When does the minister expect to have the information which will enable the government to decide the location of the terminal?

Mr. DUNNING: It will be two or three months in any event.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is satisfactory.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. DUNNING: And it is not a matter we should jump at, because the Welland canal will not be completed until 1930 if we keep up our present schedule. But it was thought desirable to investigate thoroughly this other important factor before the completion of the Welland canal.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the estimated total cost up to and including 1930?

Mr. DUNNING: About $115,000,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What has been spent up to the present time?

Mr. DUNNING: The amount I have given does not include terminals. The terminals to the foot of lake Ontario is a matter for consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the cost to date?

Mr. DUNNING: $75,000,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the $115,000,000 include interest on the money spent all these years, or is it for bare expenditures?

Mr. DUNNING: Just expenditures.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the estimated amount of interest charges against that money?

Mr. DUNNING: The money is paid by the Department of Finance from time to time. We have in our department no calculation of the interest.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister made a remark regarding which I wish to have an explanation. I understood him to say that out of this vote of $14,500,000 which we are now making for the Welland ship canal construction there would be enough to provide for work in connection with lake terminals if necessary.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not mean to imply that. I meant rather that any necessary preparatory work, the taking of bearings for example, the determination of the nature of the works and any incidental expenses of that character would be taken care of out of this vote. We could not of course without coming to parliament spend the money on work in connection with the terminals.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I question very much whether you could take any money for the purpose out of this vote. What would the Auditor General say if you did?

Mr. DUNNING: If he decides that we cannot, then that settles it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the money is voted for the Welland canal construction that is the only purpose for which it can be used. I have always been under the impression that money voted in that way could not be used for any other purpose.

Mr. DUNNING: In mentioning the matter I had in mind preliminary work at the eastern end of the Welland canal.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What about work at Kingston or Brockville, say?

Mr. DUNNING: If the Auditor General objects we cannot spend the money. One of my objects in mentioning the matter was to make it clear to the committee that it was our intention to move forward and secure actual data upon which to base conclusions in the future.

Mr. STEVENS: You would have to take it out of miscellaneous.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Unless the rules in the Auditor General's department have been relaxed, I do not think you could spend the money in this way. In former days we were held strictly to account in matters of this kind.

Mr. DUNNING: The Auditor General holds me just as strictly to account and I do not expect to get past him. I thought however that reference to the matter in parliament might clarify the situation in that regard.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is the new Welland canal being built on a scale which will enable it to fit in with the larger scheme of deepening the St. Lawrence?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, or rather it is the other way. Unfortunately the Welland canal is larger than the capacity of the other waterway. Our engineers insist that the Welland is taken as a model for the other scheme.

Mr. KENNEDY: Will the Welland canal be required after the larger scheme is completed?

Mr. DUNNING: There may be considerable argument as to the degree of requirement. It will move the present head of deep water navigation from Port Colborne to some other port. As to where that point will be is a matter for inquiry and decision later on. But our largest lake vessels will find it possible to go, instead of to Buffalo or to Port Colborne as at present, through the Welland and up to the eastern end of lake Ontario.

Mr. KENNEDY: Would there be any saving as between the fixed charges on the new Welland canal and the extra cost of handling through the present canal?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend forgets that we do not charge anything for canal operation. Canada operates the canal and gives the service free.

Mr. KENNEDY: It must cost something even if the service is given free. Will the fixed charges in connection with the new Welland canal be any greater than the cost involved in this free service of which the minister speaks?

Mr. DUNNING: Obviously, of course, you cannot spend $115,000,000 without creating higher fixed charges than were paid before that money was spent.

Mr. GARDINER: That is not the point. Will there be any saving as a result of the construction of the new canal? By virtue of the new canal being larger, will the saving be equal to the fixed charges?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot agree with my hon. friend if he says that is the point. No one not gifted with prophecy could possibly answer this question. The present Welland canal is congested to the very last degree, and besides, it is too shallow.

Mr. SPENCE (Maple Creek): What is the depth of the new canal?

Mr. DUNNING: Twenty-five feet. The locks are thirty.

Mr. GARDINER: When the new Welland canal was first projected certain estimates were made of economies in freight rates on grain and other commodities. No doubt the minister has those estimates on file in his office; he may possibly have them with him to-night. It would be interesting to find out what saving it is expected will be made in consequence of the deepening of the canal.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the information here. I admit its bearing upon the project as at first introduced, but I suggest that once we have spent $75,000,000 in the undertaking we cannot leave it incomplete. The question is whether we shall finish it or abandon the work that has already been done. We cannot take advantage of that work unless we complete the project, and we cannot continue using the present canal indefinitely. The present canal is being maintained on an operating basis in anticipation of the completion of the new one.

Mr. SPENCE (Maple Creek): What differences will there be between the new canal and the present waterway in regard to locks?

Mr. DUNNING: The difference will be eight locks as against twenty-six, and eight hours instead of fifteen in the passage of vessels through the canal.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister any information to give in regard to facilities further down the lakes to take care of traffic? What will be the ultimate cost?

Mr. DUNNING: What cost?

Mr. GARDINER: The cost of the elevators at the points where the new headquarters will be.

Mr. DUNNING: That is under consideration at the present moment.

Mr. JELLIFF: What portion of the canal has already been constructed and how many more years will it be before the work is completed?

Mr. DUNNING: The whole work is now under contract, and we anticipate that it will last another three years.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I ask the minister if the department has taken into consideration the length of time required in the preparation of a terminal, whether temporary or permanent?

Mr. DUNNING: Of course I appreciate my hon. friend's interest; his question is very intelligent, emanating as it does from the hon. member for Kingston, one of the points which would be very materially affected by our decision. The factor to which he refers is being taken into account in the investigation now in progress.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I feel sure that we can trust the minister, but the point I had in mind was that the canal is expected to be open in 1930. Supposing it takes longer than two years to prepare a terminal, what will happen to the traffic going through the canal in the interval between the completion of the canal and the completion of the terminal?

Mr. DUNNING: Our engineering advice is that there will be no difficulty in providing the necessary new terminals in the time still available.

Mr. CHURCH: The minister says the canal will not be completed until 1930. I would point out to him that over two billion dollars has been spent on railways in Canada while only about one-tenth of that amount has been spent on canals. It is very important to the people of Canada that this canal be completed with all convenient speed, because this canal provides most of the revenue so far as the Department of Railways and Canals is concerned. The rapid completion of this canal is of the utmost importance not only to Ontario but to the transportation of the whole Dominion. Last year the old canal handled nearly six million tons, and there has been a yearly increase of twelve and one-half per cent. The work of building the canal has been proceeding since 1913, and we are told now that it will not be finished until 1930, or seventeen years in which to build a canal about twenty-seven miles long. The annual report of the minister is very encouraging with regard to the work accomplished, but I am sorry I have not before me the figures from the Bureau of Statistics. I may tell some of my hon. friends to my left that this is an economic canal and will be a very great help when finished. Therefore I would urge upon the minister the necessity of finishing the construction of this work as rapidly as possible, and to try and complete it before 1930.

Item agreed to.

Lachine, improvements, $76,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What improvements are contemplated?

Mr. DUNNING: This is one of the important St. Lawrence canals at Montreal. The present Lachine canal power house cannot continue in operation without extensive repairs, and even after such repairs the fire hazard in the oil-soaked timber portions of this old building would be unwarranted. It is therefore proposed to construct at Cote St. Paul a new power plant to replace the present Mill street plant. That is the major portion of the expenditure.

Item agreed to.

St. Peters Canal—to pay to the Atlantic Dredging Company further interest from July 16, 1926, at rate of 5 per cent per annum on claim of $12,151.96, $607.60.

Mr. GARDINER: What is this?

Mr. DUNNING: This is interest on the item included in the estimates last year, which was not paid owing to the fact that the estimates were not passed.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Might I ask the minister what his claim is?

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid I have not the data with me here, because it was dealt with very fully in the estimates of last year; I remember giving an explanation at that time. This is simply interest on the money not paid because last year's estimates were not voted. I have here the engineer's report; shall I read it all to my hon. friends?

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): No, not the whole thing.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a lengthy history, covering about three pages. The claim of the contractors was $46,820 and the amount of payment provided for in last year's estimates was $12,629.72. Each item of the claim is reviewed, according to the information I have, and either allowed or disallowed, or reduced, as the case may be. Perhaps my hon. friend would save the time of the committee by coming round to the office, and I should be glad to let him see all the documents connected with it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Was this work tendered for, and if so, what was the amount of the lowest tender?

Mr. DUNNING: The amount of the tender was $56,819.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Was that amount supposed to cover the entire work?

Mr. DUNNING: That depends upon whether the quantities estimated by the engineers turn out as anticipated, which of course seldom happens in under-water work.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): How was it that $12,000 was allowed this company after the government had entered into a contract with them for $56,000?

Mr. DUNNING: In order to answer that question I will have to read a memorandum I have here, which is as follows:

> The discrepancy between the original estimate of cost and the final amount paid is explained as follows: When the survey was made on which the original estimate was based, every effort was made to secure accurate information concerning the rock surface, and from points on the work where solid rock could be definitely located and also from the depth of old cribwork where it could be definitely ascertained, a profile showing the probable rock surface was plotted for the information of intending bidders. After the contract was let, it developed that the probable rock surface, as exhibited, for a length of 250 feet, was a very hard cemented clay intermixed with stones. Consequently the contractors were required to excavate this material to the bottom of the canal for the crib seats, resulting in a large increase in the estimated quantities of excavation, cribwork, stone fiilling in cribwork and earth filling behind cribwork.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Do not be in too much of a hurry.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to remind my hon. friend that the item he is now discussing was voted at the last session of parliament.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Had I been in the House at the time the item was passed I would have objected to it.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not sure whether my hon. friend was in the House or not.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I was not in the House at the time.

Mr. DUNNING: But that is not my fault.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): There are times when the estimates are rushed through and when it seems to be in the interests of certain people to have them go through in that way.

Mr. DUNNING: I rise to a point of order. I sat here all the evening doing my work in the manner in which it is my duty to do it, and I think such an insinuation is entirely uncalled for. If my hon. friend cannot take his seat in this House and watch for items in which he is interested I think he has no right to accuse me, or accuse any minister of trying to rush them through in his absence. It is his duty to be in his seat if he expects to look after his business.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Let me tell the hon. minister that there were nights last winter when the majority of us could not be in our seats. We remained here for a period of six months steadily, and this item slipped through one night when very few of us who were concerned were here.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend still insist that this item was slipped through in his absence purposely, or does he withdraw that insinuation? Let us have a square deal.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I do not say that it was slipped through for that purpose, but there are times when estimates are being put through and we ought to be made acquainted with what is coming up on that particular day. I was not aware until I came to the House that evening that these estimates were under consideration. I had asked another hon. member if he would not hold these estimates up for a time if they should come up, and I did not have an opportunity to speak. Had I been in the House when the vote came up I would have objected to it. I cannot understand why this $12,000 is to be paid this contractor. I know the location; it is within a few feet of my own door, and I feel that this extra amount of $12,000 should never have been paid to the contractor.

Item agreed to.

Trent canal—improvements (revote $83,000), $239,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What are these amounts for?

Mr. DUNNING: The details are as follows:

Item
	A.—Eastern Division
1.	Construction of lock gates	$16,000
2.	Dredging	25,000
3.	Extension to lock aprons	2,500
4.	Dam, Elliotts Falls-Gull River	4,000
5.	New concrete dam at Hawk river logslide	16,000
6.	Dam at outlet of Big Bear Lake	1,200
7.	Rebuilding and repairs to reservoir dams (revote $9,000)	10,000
8.	Reconstructing wharf at Gore's Landing	4,000
9.	Miscellaneous (Revote)	2,700
	B.—Severn Division
10.	Staff on construction	52,000
11.	Young's Point section (Revote)	5,000
12.	Dam at Lock No. 23 (Revote)	10,000
13.	Dam at Lock No. 24 (Revote $51,900)	65,000
14.	Cement	12,000
15.	House for Operator, Marine Ry. Swift Rapids	4,500
16.	Removal of rock and other excavated material	4,000
17.	Miscellaneous and unforeseen (Revote $5,000)	6,000
		$239,900

I can give the details of each of the foregoing items if my hon. friend desires further information. I should say that we get a revenue from the power developed on the Trent canal, as on all our other canals, when the head of water is developed as a result of works erected by the Dominion for navigation purposes.

Mr. GARDINER: It will be interesting to know what the income is from power produced on the canal, if you have it handy.

Mr. DUNNING: For one year it amounted to $95,317.22.

Mr. KENNEDY: What is the significance in the headings in the estimates, "chargeable to capital" and "chargeable to income"?

Mr. DUNNING: That has relation to an old government accounting system. I wish my hon. friend would ask that question some time of the Minister of Finance. I know what capital is, I think I know what income is. I am not entirely familiar with the distinction in the Dominion accounting as used in this sense. It has to do with a system of accounting in the Finance department which has no relationship to the business of our department.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): From whom do you receive the revenue for the power developed on the canal?

Mr. DUNNING: Principally from Hydro Electric of Ontario. There is a little revenue also from rent for water lots, transmission, telephone lines, and so on. There are some private lessees, but the Hydro Electric Commission of Ontario is the largest lessee.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the agreement with the Hydro?

Mr. DUNNING: They pay our standard rental of $4 per horse-power, or $2 in other cases, depending on the class.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has this department or the Hydro done the work?

Mr. DUNNING: The Hydro, of course, build their own plant for utilizing the head of water which our works create. We build the dam.

Item agreed to.

Welland canal, improvements (revote, $18,000), $95,500.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this for improvements on the present Welland canal?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. It is just a question of maintaining the present canal to carry the tremendous traffic. We passed 5,500 ships through it last year.

Item agreed to.

Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, maintenance and operation of, including the salary of A. D. Cartwright, secretary of the board, at $6,000, $263,440.

Mr. CHURCH: This is a vote, Mr. Chairman, which affects every citizen. The railway commission was appointed for the purpose of preventing unfair and unjust discrimination. In my opinion it has failed in its functions. It has a duty to perform to the public. I think the whole board should be reorganized. Instead of removing discrimination it has permitted a vaster discrimination than has been. Applications from time to time have been made for increases of freight and passenger rates, telephone rates and express rates. These applications have been opposed by the municipalities, which have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on experts and counsel to protect the public. The board should act of its own volition to protect the public. Does it protect the consumer? No. Does it protect the businessman? No. Or the farmer? No. There is universal dissatisfaction with the present board. The quicker the railway commission is abolished the better because it does not regulate anything except its salaries. It would be far better to go back to the old days when parliament, or a committee of parliament, had charge of these matters—or leave it to the law of supply and demand. To-day we have a railway commission that does not regulate anything and fails to carry out the various sections of the Railway Act. The Interstate Commerce Commission, a similar body, has given a great deal of satisfaction in rate regulation in the United States. Our railway commission has very wide powers and can relieve the people, but it has failed all along the line. I should like to know if there is any dissension among the members of the board. I would assume so from reading the various judgments written by them.

In the case of the application of the Bell Telephone Company for increased rates the city I come from spent over $100,000 on experts and counsel. It should not have had to spend this money to get a fair show before the commission, for the commission of its own volition should regulate the company. It will be found that in almost every case applications for increased rates have been granted by the board. It has taken the evidence of one side and failed to give proper consideration to the evidence on the other. The board spent weeks on the telephone inquiry, but after the evidence had been taken it refused the request of the lawyers for the municipalities to present argument orally and directed them to file it in writing. Did you ever hear of a case conducted like that? I am not here to criticize the Bell Company. I sympathize with public service corporations in these days of increased labour and material costs but more with the public.

Mr. DUNNING: Would my hon. friend permit me? I rise to suggest that as apparently he has extended remarks to make, and I know some other members desire to express their views on the railway commission, if it will meet the convenience of the committee I am willing to let this one item, the railway commission vote, stand over for a more convenient time and in order that we may pass the remaining items—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Put it through.

Mr. DUNNING: —if my hon. friend will agree.

Mr. CHURCH: I am not prepared to let the item stand, Mr. Chairman, because when I asked information from the minister some time ago he would not give it to me. He said it was not in the public interest. When I conclude my remarks I think it will be quite in order for the minister to ask me to let the item stand. The portfolio of Railways and Canals might as well be abolished altogether. Part of its work has been handed over to the railway commission. The minister might get busy and go into the offices of the commission. What does the commission do? Nothing but whitewash everybody that makes application for increase of rates. Has the railway commission any control over Sir Henry Thornton? No. The late Mr. Carvell doubted if the board could regulate the Canadian National Railways. The railway commission was appointed to prevent unfair and unjust discrimination. Three former chairmen of the board, Hon. Mr. Blair, Mr. Justice Mabee and Sir Henry Drayton, used the big stick on some of the corporations. They protected the public. But to-day this commission protects nothing; it simply grants holus-bolus the various applications made for increase of rates. I am going to move a reduction of this vote because I think that is the only way to get anything done. I do not think the minister has played fairly with me, and for that reason I should like the item to stand until he has brought down the information I have asked for. I asked for the production of papers early in the session, and the minister replied that it was not in the public interest to divulge this, that and the other thing.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not remember the occasion to which my hon. friend refers, but if he will tell me what papers he has asked for, I will look into the matter.

Mr. CHURCH: I asked for the production of papers with regard to the Bell Telephone Company, and whether the minister had made an agreement with that company by which the National Railways got cheap rates at the expense of the general telephone users of this country; and secondly, whether the government of Canada, after this application had been launched by the Bell Telephone Company, had secured a contract with the company at cheaper rates. The Bell Telephone application was made on the grounds of discrimination, and yet this railway commission, at the instance of the Minister of Railways and his department, with the assistance of Sir Henry Thornton, have granted rates to the company which will take from the people of this country several million more dollars, in order that the National Railways and the Department of Railways and the government may get cheaper rates.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is making so many wild statements that it is very difficult for me to follow him. I have some recollection of his asking for papers in connection with the Bell Telephone Company, and it is my impression that I have already tabled a return relating to that matter. Can he tell me whether he moved for a return, or give me the reference number, or any other information upon which I can act?

Mr. CHURCH: I will move to reduce the item. The Minister is not fair. I can prove all I say if I can get the papers. There are three or four other matters on which I have not received any information. We have a railway commission which is supposed to exercise some control over public corporations, but can the minister name one case where the railway commission has gone out into the highways and byways, of its own volition, to check up these large corporations? I say no, and I say that in the public interest there should be some reorganization of this commission. If there is any dissension among the members of the commission, the public are entitled to know it. We should have a commission that will regulate the railways, the telephone companies, the express companies, and all other public service corporations.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the government taken into consideration increasing or decreasing the membership of the board, so that there will be an odd number on the board? I think he will remember that there have been cases recently where there has been an equal division on the board, three and three, and that has prevented them from giving any decision on the matter that was under consideration. Is it the intention of the government to have an odd instead of an even number on the board?

Mr. DUNNING: The situation referred to by my hon. friend is, of course, before the government, and is receiving consideration. Beyond that I cannot go at the moment.

Mr. GARDINER: If the government enlarge the membership of the board, I suppose they will take into consideration that western Canada has only one representative upon it, and remember that we would like to have two instead of one.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend can rest assured that all these matters and many others will have to be taken into account in dealing with a situation such as this.

I should like to take the opportunity on this vote of correcting what appears to be a false impression regarding some remarks I made the other evening with respect to Crowsnest rates. Apparently there was an impression in the minds of some members, which is borne out by some of the press reports—I am not now imputing any sinister motive to anyone—that I had the belief, and expressed it, that the Crowsnest rates on grain were not profitable rates. I did not so intend, and I think the language attributed to me in Hansard will bear out the lack of any such intention. Two extremely opposing views were being expressed, one that the rates lost a very considerable sum of money for the railways, and the other, to use the expression of one of my hon. friends in that corner, I think, that the railways made very, very handsome, or very, very large profits out of carrying grain. I deem it my duty as Minister of Railways to endeavour to keep discussion along the line of fact, where I have opinions sufficiently based upon fact to express them, and to neither of those extreme views do I subscribe. I do not believe that the railways lose money hauling grain, as would be found if it were possible to separate the grain figures from the other figures. On the other hand, neither do I agree with the other extreme view that the railways are making handsome profits on hauling grain at present rates. I know that neither of these extreme views is correct. That is the attitude I take on the matter.

Item agreed to.

Canada Highways Commission—to provide for payment of staff of Canada Highways Commission, including A. W. Campbell, C. E., Chief Commissioner of Highways at $5,000 per annum, $25,000.

Mr. KENNEDY: I understand that the federal grant for highways expires some time in the near future. Has the government made any provision for renewing the grant, or making an additional grant?

Mr. DUNNING: We are endeavouring to conclude the distribution of the grants provided for under the present extension which expires on September 1, 1927. By then we hope to have the whole thing cleaned up.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is the question of renewing under consideration.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous services, including salaries and expenses of experts employed temporarily, $40,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Is it the intention of the government to provide for any further expenditure in connection with the standardization of the gauge of the Prince Edward Island railway? A considerable portion of the mileage is not yet standardized, and everyone knows what a serious handicap it is to people living on that line. I desire to ask also in regard to the car ferry. The Duncan commission recommended that something should be done in connection with the claim that the car ferry boat there was not giving satisfactory service. The report of the commission reads:

> Altogether the ferry boat service is unsatisfactory. The railway administration admitted that there was need for supplemental provision being made in the form either of a second ferry boat or a special freight boat. We recommend that the matter be gone into from the point of view of placing at the disposal of the island such satisfactory means of communication as will ensure as regular and complete a service as can reasonably be made.

Another matter I refer to is the fact that this boat is running in the fall to full capacity and cannot maintain this operation very long. There is a danger of disconnecting the province altogether from the mainland. Another item in the Duncan report reads:

> We further recommend that, so far as the ferry boat service is concerned, it should not be run as part of the railway operations, but should be run by the railway administration under separate account for the department. We feel that, by reason of its association with railway accounts, this service does not get the attention it should receive.

If the minister could give us any information about these different items we would appreciate it.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot answer offhand the question addresed to me by my hon. friend from Kings. I can only say to him what I think he already knows, that all these matters are at present under investigation. I think there is a question on the order paper relating to one of these items. They are all now under investigation, following the Duncan report.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): The standardization of the Murray Harbour line should not require any particular investigation; it would simply be a continuation of work carried on in years past. That is now the only branch of the railway that is not standardized. No investigation should be necessary; the work should be continued. It is a matter of great interest to the people of Kings county and southern Queens that assurance be given that that work will be continued this year.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend presses me for a more definite answer than the statement I made regarding investigations generally, I must say that the railway management hold the view, with respect to standardization on the Prince Edward Island railway, that the next important step is to complete the standardization of the terminal works at Charlottetown. That is more important than the rest of the standarization, in the opinion of the management. Then there is the bridge question as well, as my deputy informs me. The bridge will not carry a very heavy train.

Mr. BRADY: Will the minister tell me if there is any amount in this estimate for an inquiry into the feasibility of the construction of a railway into the Red lake district?

Mr. DUNNING: The matter of investigation of the economic feasibility of a new line of railway is one for the Canadian National Railways to deal with and does not come under this vote. I feel quite sure that the Canadian National Railways are watching very closely the development in the Red lake district.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the payment of salaries and expenses in connection with the St. Lawrence ship canal surveys and investigations, including the Canadian National Advisory Committee, and its employees and G. W. Yates, $1,200 as secretary, $70,000.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister inform me if the government intends to carry out that part of the Duncan report which relates to the appointment of an ad hoc commission to investigate the claims of the province of New Brunswick with respect to taking over the St. John and Quebec Railway?

Mr. DUNNING: The government regards the whole question of lines in this category which are not part of the Canadian National system as one which requires some form of investigation. We have not in mind the idea of setting up a tribunal in connection with a particular line, but the desirability of working out some sort of arrangement which would involve investigation of the different situations obtaining with respect to rates in the area referred to in the maritime rates act as "select territory," on lines which are not now part of the Canadian National system but which connect therewith. I would not like to promise my hon. friend to set up a separate forum for this road. We have not really thoroughly settled the matter of how we will proceed with the whole question of railway development.

Mr. HANSON: This investigation will be held covering the larger field?

Mr. DUNNING: While not absolutely determined by the government, I think my hon. friend may take it that it will be proceeded with.

Item agreed to.

Loan to Canadian National Railway Company, $22,500,000.

Mr. DUNNING: These estimates with respect to the railways and merchant marine are back from the committee and have been approved. Perhaps we could put them through now. If anyone wishes to discuss the one with respect to the Canadian National Railways I should be glad to let these items stand, but they have been examined by the special committee and recommended to the House.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Dunning the House adjourned at 12 midnight.

Saturday, April 9, 1927.

The House met at eleven o'clock.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES —DISMISSALS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. F. POULIOT (Temiscouata): When may I expect an answer to a return ordered on March 23, respecting employees of the Intercolonial railway?

Hon. CHARLES DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The matter will be looked into.

Mr. POULIOT: I am interested also in two other questions regarding employees of the House. I should like to know when I may expect returns.

Mr. DUNNING: The matter will be brought to the attention of the Secretary of State.

PRIVILEGE—MR. CHURCH

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. CHURCH: I wish to direct the attention of the House to a letter published in the Toronto Globe in which the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) criticizes the policy of the British government in China. As a member of the House I wish to protest against this.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no question of privilege.

OFFICIAL MOTOR CARS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): A month ago I put on the order paper a question regarding the number of cars used by members of the government. I have not yet received an answer to that question. I hope I shall not be left to estimate the number by the length of time it takes to get the answer. This is a question I desire to have answered before the House prorogues.

Hon. CHARLES DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): So far as the Railway department is concerned I was making inquiries only yesterday and I expect to table the return before prorogation.

DEVELOPMENT OF CARILLON POWER

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Now that the smoke of battle in connection with the Georgian bay question has cleared away, may I again ask the Minister of Railways whether he is prepared to lay before the House the policy of the government with respect to the development of Carillon power?

Hon. CHARLES DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I am not prepared to make a statement of policy at the present time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the House to understand that there will be a renewal of the lease to the National Hydro on the 1st of May?

Mr. DUNNING: The House cannot understand anything of the kind.

PRIVILEGE—MR. EDWARDS (FRONTENAC)

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): On a question of privilege I desire to refer to an editorial appearing in this morning's Journal, a paper I seldom pay any attention to. The article in question accuses me of insinuating that the government's federal district legislation proposes to beautify Kingsmere because the Prime Minister owns a summer house there. I am within the judgment of the House whether the Journal has any right to make such a charge against me.

My whole argument from first to last was against the money being expended on the other side of the river, and I mentioned the owning of property over there because it had been referred to. I think I did the Prime Minister a service in bringing the matter up in the way I did. So far as the Ottawa Journal and its representations regarding this or any other matter are concerned, and as respects its allegation about insinuations, I cannot altogether forget the time when the Ottawa Journal, starting in its present quarters, depended upon the Conservative party then in power for much of the money necessary to put up that building. By entering into a contract with the government for so much floor space, the government had made the way clear for the Journal. I can understand the editorials of Grattan O'Leary and what is back of anything he writes.

SLAUGHTER OF SWINE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria, B.C.): On leaving town last night the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) requested me to inquire of the government when he might expect an answer to an order passed by the House on March 30 for the production of certain papers relating to the slaughter of swine belonging to a man named Andrew Oberle, of Walkerton, Ontario. We are near the end of the session and I should be glad to know whether we may reasonably expect the production of these papers on Monday next.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The Minister of Agriculture is not in his seat but I shall be glad to bring the matter to his attention. He will be able to give my hon. friend a satisfactory reply.

MR. GEORGE REID

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): An order of the House was issued on March 9, for return of correspondence and other documents relating to the appointment and the cancellation of appointments of one George Reid of Yukon as a temporary mining recorder. The return has been brought down but I would call the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) to the fact that it is altogether incomplete. It is patent, from some of the correspondence on the file, that there is further correspondence still to be brought down particularly with reference to the application of Mr. Reid, forwarded to the Director of the Northwest Territories, Yukon branch, by the Gold Commissioner of Yukon under cover of a letter dated September 25, 1926, in which he advises that Mr. Reid has completed the necessary form, and encloses two copies of the same, as requested. These applications do not appear on the file brought down. I should like to have them along with the rest of the return as soon as possible.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I will inquire into the matter. I am not familiar with the file, which I handed in as it was given to me.

PRIVATE BILLS

OPPORTUNITY FOR CONSIDERATION

On the Orders of the Day.

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): I find on the order paper a list of twenty-two private bills, and as we are near the end of the session I ask the Prime Minister if an opportunity will be given to-day, to take care of at least the noncontentious private bills on the order paper.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I may say to my hon. friend that in the matter of private bill legislation I have no control over the House; it is for the members of the House to agree as to what they wish. I should like these bills to be considered in a way that will ensure their passing this session, but we cannot change the rules of the House to meet an individual situation. I have spoken two or three times about what seems to me a very great mistake, that of members holding up legislation by discussing private bills instead of letting them go to committee to be judged there, and possibly the object lesson we are getting from day to day may help to convince hon. members of the unwisdom of a course of that kind.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I should like to point out to the Prime Minister that the bill which is holding up other private bills has been to committee and reported by it. Therefore the delay is not caused by bills not going to committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But that is not true of other bills that were delayed.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—PORT IMPROVEMENTS

On the Orders of the Day.

Hon. J. A. MACDONALD (Kings): Now that the Minister of Public Works is in his seat, may I again ask a question with regard to an order for a return passed on 23rd February, which is over seven weeks ago. The return asked for was a very simple one and it surely should have been brought down before now.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): I may say that I made inquiries about the matter yesterday. I find the return is complete and it will be tabled today.

POSTMASTERSHIP OF OSHAWA

On the Orders of the Day.

Mr. T. E. KAISER (Ontario): The city of Oshawa has been for three years without a postmaster. Does the government intend to continue that situation, or is it disposed to have an appointment made?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): The appointment rests with the Civil Service Commission. The matter has been held up in some way or other; I cannot for the moment give the reason why. It has not been held up since I have been Postmaster General for any reason that I know.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): I desire to acquaint the government with the fact that hon. members are getting telegrams from the civil servants all over the country, who are very disappointed at not getting the flat increase of $120. I should like to know if the government are going to make a statement on the matter before parliament prorogues?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): It is quite true, as the hon. gentleman has said, that he has been receiving telegrams on this subject; we all have. Now, the government have gone carefully and sympathetically into the question of increasing the salaries of the civil servants. If the civil service of Canada is not satisfied it seems to me it is about time for some person to say a word on behalf of the tax-payers, and to inform the hon. gentleman and others that if the civil servants are not satisfied with the increases as granted, it will be very easy for the government to withdraw the measure. I am told that yesterday in the Senate a measure of interest to the civil service, a measure to extend once more the time for them to come in under the Superannuation Act, was under consideration, and that certain changes were made at the instance of the organized civil service which may delay the measure. This morning I asked the departmental officials to prepare for me an estimate as to what the changes will cost, and I say now to hon. gentlemen that unless I have full details so as to advise the government with respect to the additional cost, I will not proceed with that measure this year.

THREE RIVERS HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS' ACT, AMENDMENT

Hon. PIERRE J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. 302, to amend the Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners' Act, 1923.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Harbour limits defined.

Mr. CARDIN: The object of this bill is to change the limits of the harbour at Three Rivers. When the harbour was incorporated, part of the county of Champlain, adjoining the city of Three Rivers, was included in its limits. The bill proposes to take out from the harbour property belonging to the county of Champlain.

CHICOUTIMI HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS' ACT, AMENDMENT

Hon. PIERRE J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. 303, to amend the Chicoutimi Harbour Commissioners' Act, 1926.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Harbour limits defined.

Mr. CARDIN: The object of this measure is to amend the Chicoutimi Harbour Commissioners' Act. When the harbour was incorporated, Ha Ha bay was included in its limits. The bill seeks to take this bay out of the jurisdiction of the Chicoutimi harbour commissioners.

Mr. CHURCH: Why is this measure brought in as a public bill instead of as a private bill? Very little information has been given with respect to it. I should like to know what arrangement this harbour commission have with the government and what program it is proposed to carry out.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not know if I correctly understood the idea of the hon. gentleman, but this harbour commission has been incorporated like the others by a bill brought down by the government as a public measure. This is a public harbour, and the only way by which a change can be made in the legislation is by the same procedure, namely, by a bill brought down by the government itself.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. 304, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I wish to speak against not what the bill contains but what it does not contain. I do not think there is in the whole range of our statutes any act which so decidedly requires changing and remodelling as this one. It goes back to the days when internal combustion engines were unknown. It is obsolete in every sense of the word. It has been due for repeal and reënactment any time during the last twenty years and yet nothing has been done. As far back as 1908 the need was so apparent and urgent that a comprehensive and, I think, in many respects a suitable bill was drafted. Perhaps on account of the war or other causes the matter was postponed; but that is nearly twenty years ago, and we are still waiting for the reënactment of reasonable legislation in regard to these very important matters.

From one end of Canada to the other the shipping interests, seamen, masters, mates and so on are vitally concerned in the changes required in this bill. I think in 1924 or 1925, certainly in 1925, there is recorded on Hansard a definite promise that a bill would be formulated in the recess; that it would be submitted to the shipping interests concerned for their advice and opinion, and that it would be brought forward at the next session. That was in 1925; this is 1927 and what have we here to-day? A trumpery little amendment concerning the prohibition of touts on boats or wharves connected with the ships, while interests of infinite importance require attention.

I do not blame the minister at the head of this department because this concerns matters with which he cannot be very familiar. There is in his department a great deal of deadwood which is much in need of revivifying. The settled policy, in every instance when progress or reform is suggested, appears to be, to do nothing. Last year we heard a great deal about the customs scandal; but there is such a thing as scandal which originates not in wrongdoing, but in inaction, standing still, stagnation. This matter should be attended to at an early date. It is too late now, I presume, to do anything this session, but I take this opportunity of urging on the government that the advancement of British Columbia, which is so largely dependent upon the operation of matters connected with the seacoast, is being held back for lack of attention, not only in this but in several other matters as well.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I wish to protest against the principle of this bill. It may be all right as regards ocean navigation, but I see no necessity for this legislation in connection with ships on the inland lakes and rivers. This is simply going to create a monopoly on ships and on shore as well. I doubt very much the right of this parliament to enact legislation of this kind as affecting navigation on the great lakes. At Niagara ports where a million people a year travel backwards and forwards, they have public docks where anybody can go and solicit business. This is going to give a monopoly of the tourist business to the big corporations that control not only the vessels but hotels and every other agency in places where there is a huge United States tourist traffic. I do know that such lake ports as Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit, have no regulations similar to this. As this legislation is going to create a monopoly I wish to protest against it.

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): I have been given to understand that under the Canada Shipping Act there is a possibility that navigation proceeding from Ontario ports will be compelled to pay pilotage dues. This is the only part of the country in proximity to the St. Lawrence river which is compelled to do so. I understand a boat from Newfoundland or any other port can come here through the St. Lawrence without paying pilotage dues and that only boats from Ontario, whether they use pilots or not, have to pay pilotage dues. Before this bill is passed I should like to know from the minister if that is authorized by the Canada Shipping Act. In other words, is a straight discrimination against Ontario contained in the Canada Shipping Act?

Mr. CARDIN: There may be something in the observations of the hon. member for Kingston City, but it can hardly come under this bill. My hon. friend will have an opportunity of discussing the matter when we take up the departmental estimates which will be considered immediately after this. There is an item for pilotage on which the discussion can very well take place. The complaint of the hon. gentleman is not new; a similar complaint has already been made because Ontario boats navigating from the great lakes down to Montreal have been forced to pay pilotage dues. That is in accordance with the act. We have what we call pilotage dues, and every vessel going down from Montreal to Quebec has to take a pilot on board or at least to pay the amount required by the act for pilots' fees. According to the law, there is compulsory payment of pilotage dues not only in Quebec but in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It is a fact that vessels from the great lakes going down to Quebec or below have to pay pilotage dues.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has already spoken. He can speak in committee on the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Soliciting for hotels, lodging houses, etc., on ships or wharves, without written consent.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I wish to protest against the action of the government in bringing down such an unimportant and unnecessary amendment as this when the consideration of other far more important amendments to the Canada Shipping Act has been refused. I think this bill should be sent back to the department, that such unfair discrimination should be discouraged, and that other far more necessary amendments to the act should be brought in. It is quite clear that the act needs repair work of some kind, but this little bit of an amendment, in the absence of other far more important amendments, should not be allowed to go through. I understand that the international section of the St. Lawrence is under a different system, and that if a boat comes down, she can take on a pilot or not just as she sees fit, and she is not charged for the pilot. I consider this legislation before us is very unfair, because it discriminates against navigation on the Ontario lakes.

Mr. STEVENS: So far as the clause we are now studying is concerned, I think it is a desirable piece of legislation. Whether my hon. friend is correct in saying that it should come under provincial legislation, I am not competent to say, but the matter dealt with here is important. However, I agree with what the hon. member for Kingston and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni have said in regard to the necessity for amendments to the Canada Shipping Act. The act is certainly in need of a complete renovation; it ought to be revised throughout, and I would urge upon the government that during the coming recess a very careful study should be made of the act, and a bill be prepared and brought down early next session, because it will be a very, very extensive bill, and will take months of committee work to get it in proper shape, so it ought to be introduced at the earliest possible date in the session, and referred to a special committee. I do not know of many other statutes of equal importance; perhaps the Railway Act would be a parallel case. But as far as this particular measure is concerned, I have no objection to it; in fact, I must say that for some years I have recognized that this legislation is required. It is pretty late in the session to discuss whether this is constitutional or not. The provision here, I think, is a necessary one, and I would urge upon the minister to take into consideration what a number of members have said, and what I have just said, in regard to the necessity for a general revision of the act.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I agree that there is a necessity for the passage of this bill. The practice of touting on these boats has become in the nature of a public nuisance, and it is to remedy that nuisance that this bill is introduced.

In regard to the Canada Shipping Act, which we seek to amend by this bill, I endorse what has been said by other hon. members. The act is certainly due for revision. I have heard it discussed by men who are more familiar with it than I am, and I have heard it condemned because many of its sections are said to be obsolete; many, it is charged, are beyond the jurisdiction of this parliament, others are contradictory, and there are a great many omissions which should be supplied in the act. But the question at once arises, is this the proper time for a revision? The larger question of the Merchant Shipping Act, an imperial act, has been referred to a special committee of experts, under the recommendations of the recent Imperial conference, and I doubt very much whether we could usefully revise the Canada Shipping Act until we have the results of the investigation of that committee of experts before us. Undoubtedly there are many omissions which could be supplied now, but I think the general revision of the whole act should stand until we know just where we are at in regard to our jurisdiction in the matter.

Mr. TOLMIE: I quite agree with what has been said concerning the necessity for a revision of the Canada Shipping Act. An act of that kind should be revised from time to time, in view of the changing conditions and the rapid development of our commerce, particularly on the Pacific coast, but I think before a complete revision of the act is undertaken we should have before us, as my leader has pointed out, the results of the work of the special committee appointed under the Imperial conference to amend the Merchant Shipping Act.

With regard to this particular amendment, I want to endorse it. We are doing a tremendous tourist trade on the Pacific coast. We have excellent ships belonging to the Princess line, for instance, operated by the Canadian Pacific, and many other very good boats engaged in tourist traffic from the American boundary right up to Alaska, and calling at our Canadian ports. These ships bring tens of thousands of people during the tourist season, and it is a great nuisance to these tourists, travelling as many of them are for a rest, to be canvassed and bothered by solicitors of various kinds. In addition to that, the companies that operate these boats try to keep them nice and tidy and clean, but if solicitors are to be permitted to canvass on them, the boats will be littered up with advertising material of all kinds, and it will be impossible to keep them in decent shape. I think that anyone wishing to solicit either on the boats or on the wharves of the shipping companies should first obtain the permission that is made necessary in this bill.

Mr. CHURCH: I contend, Mr. Speaker, that it is outside the jurisdiction of this parliament to pass this legislation except as to navigation on the gulf and ocean ports. To apply it to Ontario is a ridiculous proposition. In the Niagara district, the Muskoka district and the Brockville district, the services rendered by some of these tourist transportation organizations is of the utmost convenience to the travelling public. Dear knows we are trying hard enough to get more American tourists, and this legislation, if applied to tourist traffic on the Ontario lakes, will greatly inconvenience the travelling public.

I would like to know who has asked for this legislation. We are charged on this side of the House with being the party of the big interests. I would ask what big interests are behind this bill? The Canada Steamship Company came to the police commissioners in the city of Toronto some time ago and asked us to pass just such a regulation as this. We did not need it in Toronto because we have an association of all the hotels and tourist bodies, working together in harmony for the good of the travelling public, and that is a great convenience to the travelling public. I doubt very much whether this parliament has power to pass this legislation, as it is in restraint of trade. What does the Justice department say about this bill? If they were consulted, I believe they would say that this parliament has no power to pass legislation affecting inland waters. The city of Toronto has spent millions of dollars to take over wharves, and the Toronto Terminals Company are running bus services where they cannot get a service from the National Railways, and are they to be prevented from going on the wharves which they have paid for themselves, just because the Canada Steamships Company wants this thing? Is the minister going to drive all the tourist business into the hands of the big corporations? The Canadian National Railways are doing this very same thing on their trains and boats. There is no demand for this legislation, and it would only lead to litigation, and furthermore it will do away with what is now a real convenience to the travelling public. It may be necessary to have some regulation of this kind with regard to ocean traffic, but it is an absurdity to apply it to the tourist trade on the inland lakes, and I say that this amendment should stand over till next session.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no doubt in the mind of the legal officer of the department that we have absolute jurisdiction to pass an amendment of this character. As long as Canada has full jurisdiction in regard to all navigation on inland waters as well as on the ocean, we have the power and the authority to say who shall be prevented from going on any of the ships under the control of the Canada Shipping Act.

I quite agree with hon. members who have spoken in regard to amending the act. The act is due for revision. The matter has been considered for a few years in the department, but we have had such rapid development in the last few years that it has been found that a provision that was adequate two or three years ago will not meet the present situation. New devices have been introduced in navigation.

The hon. leader of the opposition is quite right when he states that it would be useless to proceed to deal with the Canada Shipping Act when there is a commission dealing with the same matter. After the commission makes its report we will be in a better position to deal with the question, and we all agree that it is necessary to amend this very important act. The proposed amendment now before the committee is of a non-contentious nature; it has been asked for by the transportation companies and it is not intended to embarrass the tourist traffic. On the contrary it will help the tourist traffic, because it will prevent certain people going on the boats and worrying the passengers in regard to hotels and lodging houses. We want the passengers on the boats to be free. If any man is allowed to go on the boat to advertise hotels he should have the consent of the proprietor of the ship on which he wishes to advertise.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think there is a good deal in what the minister says, that passengers should not be annoyed by agents of any kind, but I think there is one feature of the situation which he has not considered. For instance, in my district one navigation concern is privately owned and another is a company, both in the tourist business. Does the minister not see that there is a possibility of the company in the navigation business and the company in the tourist business working hand in hand in dealing with the tourist traffic. They would have the power to send the traffic wherever they pleased, although they might not do it. They would be shutting out competition and working an injury in that way. Would the minister consider that aspect of the case?

Mr. CARDIN: I do not see any serious danger in that, because I have enough confidence in those operating the boats to feel that they will not prevent legitimate advertisement. The only thing these people have to do is to go to the office of the company and ask for a permit. If a reputable citizen goes to a company asking permission to distribute literature on the boat, I cannot imagine that the company would refuse him permission.

Mr. McGIBBON: If the minister will assure me that they would get that right—

Mr. CARDIN: I am sure they would get it

Mr. McGIBBON: It is not in the bill.

Mr. CARDIN: No. If we found any discrimination by any of the companies, after the act had been in operation for a while, I would be ready to introduce a measure to remedy it.

Mr. CHURCH: The minister has forgotten that in the larger Ontario ports the municipalities have police on the wharves and boats. That is the case in the Niagara and Toronto districts. Under the Canada Shipping Act and other legislation the officer commanding the ship, the mate, or other official, is charged with keeping order on the ship. In the city of Toronto the police commissioners, at large cost to the city, have policemen on the ferryboats and other boats, and there have been no complaints in that district, as far as I know.

It may be all very well for the minister to apply this amendment to the ocean ports, but if he applies it to the inland ports he is going to affect the inland trade.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

On the Order.

Third reading of Bill No. 234, to amend The Pension Act.—The Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) wishes to have this item stand till Monday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Very well.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES

The House in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to Dominion steamers and icebreakers, $1,500,000.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): This is to provide for the maintenance and operation of the vessels employed on icebreaking service in the St. Lawrence and the gulf, in construction work as required, and in the supply and maintenance of lighthouses, buoys, beacons and similar aids to navigation. All told we have twenty-seven vessels engaged in the service, nineteen on the Atlantic coast and in the St. Lawrence, four on inland waters and four on the Pacific coast.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I see the same amount is proposed this year as was voted last year. Was the expenditure last year up to a million and a half?

Mr. CARDIN: For 1925-26 the expenditure was $1,940,000; for 1926-27 up to January 1, it was $1,310,000 odd, and if we bring the figure up to March 31 we will reach the million and a half.

Item agreed to.

Examination of masters and mates, $20,000.

Mr. CARDIN: This is to provide for the examination and certification of masters and mates.

Mr. STEVENS: What about my friend Captain Eden, who gave lectures under this heading for a considerable time at night outside of his business hours and received no remuneration at all, although he put in a claim I think for a few hundred dollars. I understand that those who now give these lectures do so within their working hours.

Item agreed to.

Removal of obstructions in navigable waters, $5,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has any further consideration been given to the desirability of removing derelicts in harbours? They are the property of some company or individual and there does not seem to be any way by which those who wish to do so can remove them.

Mr. CARDIN: If they are an obstruction to navigation the Department of Marine and Fisheries undertakes to remove them and make a claim against the company or person responsible if there is any possibility of enforcing the claim.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Have you ever succeeded in getting anything under such a claim?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Inspection of live stock shipping, $4,500.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Why the increase—another official?

Mr. CARDIN: The increase of $500 is to provide for the salary of an inspector at Halifax, due to the increased shipments through that port.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the inspection of live stock come under the Marine and Fisheries department?

Mr. CARDIN: No, we inspect only the fittings of the ship.

Item agreed to.

To continue subsidies for wrecking plants—Quebec and British Columbia, $45,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has any application been made for a subsidy for a wrecking plant between Montreal and lake Ontario?

Mr. CARDIN: Not up to the present.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Would it be considered if made?

Mr. CARDIN: It certainly would be considered and decided according to its merits.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Why the $10,000 increase?

Mr. CARDIN: To increase the subsidy given to the Quebec Wrecking plant?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Why?

Mr. CARDIN: We have a contract with the Quebec firm under which we contribute $25,000 to the operation of their equipment. It was represented to the department that they could not meet their obligations, in fact for several years up to 1925-26 their aggregate loss amounted to $142,298. They represented to the department that they could not carry on without an increase of $10,000. Even with the augmented subsidy we do not think they will be able to meet their operating expenses; it will simply help them to reduce the losses.

Mr. TOLMIE: How many ships do they operate?

Mr. CARDIN: They have two powerful vessels with complete wrecking equipment.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Is it a private company?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Private companies do not usually carry on under such heavy losses. It would indicate that there is no necessity for a company of this kind, that there are no wrecks in the river to keep it busy, and that therefore this money had better be saved.

Mr. CARDIN: The company is connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but is also looking after the wrecks of other companies. This is the only wrecking plant on the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. GARDINER: How many wrecks were there last year?

Mr. CARDIN: They gave assistance in about fifteen or twenty cases.

Mr. GARDINER: Do they secure any salvage money from the owners of the vessels they assist?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, and this is taken into account. At the end of the year if they have made any profit out of the salvage money plus the subsidy they divide the profit with the department.

Mr. GARDINER: Do they keep proper accounts?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, they have to render accounts to the department.

Mr. McGIBBON: How much do they charge per ton for wrecking services?

Mr. CARDIN: It depends on the nature of the work. They cannot have a uniform rate for all cases. I am informed by the deputy that there is something in the contract in regard to it, but unfortunately I have not the document under my hand.

Mr. QUINN: Is any subsidy paid to wrecking plants in the maritime provinces?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

An hon. MEMBER: There are no wrecks there.

Mr. QUINN: Some hon. gentleman says there are no wrecks in the maritimes. He is mistaken. During the season there are wrecks, and the wrecking companies carry on their salvage work. When not so engaged they use their plant for other purposes. They seem to be able to carry on without any subsidy, and I do not see why this company cannot do the same.

Mr. CARDIN: If my memory serves me right, in years past certain wrecking companies were subsidized in the maritime provinces, but the business was not found profitable. The difficulty in granting a subsidy to any wrecking company in the maritime provinces is that there are so many wrecking plants there that we would be flooded with requests for subsidies. Apparently there is enough work in the maritimes for several wrecking plants to operate at a profit.

Mr. QUINN: Is this Quebec company engaged in wrecking work solely?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. DICKIE: In view of the immense losses made by this company and the statement of the minister that it expects to make further losses in the future, why does the company continue in business?

Mr. CARDIN: The purpose of our contribution is to have the company render efficient service.

Mr. DICKIE: But the minister says the company expects to make losses in the years to come.

Mr. CARDIN: This company is to a certain extent connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and looks after their ships, and we are giving this subsidy because it goes to the assistance of the ships of other companies.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): This appears to be a subsidiary company of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which the railway company find it necessary to maintain to protect their own shipping interests. Consequently the wrecking company should be part and parcel of the Canadian Pacific Railway's operating expenses. Under these circumstances I do not know how the minister can justify the subsidy. If the company goes to the assistance of other vessels it no doubt gets well paid for its services. I would suggest to the minister the advisability of cutting out the subsidy altogether, if not this year, certainly next year.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Did I understand the minister to say that no boats needed the assistance of this wrecking company last year?

Mr. CARDIN: No, I said fifteen or twenty boats received assistance.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who were the owners of the boats?

Mr. CARDIN: The Cunard line steamers Aurania and Ausonia; the Canadian Pacific Steamships steamer Montrose; the British steamer Manchester Guardian; the Canadian steamer Montrolite; the British steamer Bayrupert; the Norwegian steamer Storfjeld; the steamship Lord Strathcona; the Canadian steamer North Shore; the Canadian steamer New York News; the British steamer, Manchester Corporation; the Greek steamer Atlas; the British steamer Hochelaga; the French steamer Leopold L.D.; the British steamer Tritonia; the Canadian steamer, Emperor of Montreal. Assistance was given to these steamers.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Was no compensation received from the owners of those steamers?

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly; an account is given of the receipts that the wrecking company obtains from these shipping companies.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It would be interesting to know the amount.

Mr. CARDIN: Particulars are given in the accounts that the company files with the department at the end of each year to establish if there has been a profit or a loss. We are controlling all that.

Mr. TOLMIE: I do not agree, Mr. Chairman, with the suggestion that these subsidies should be discontinued. Certainly out on the Pacific coast where we have accidents occurring to ships at all times it is a great asset to have the equipment of one of these salvage companies always ready with steam up to proceed to the rescue of any ship in distress. Very often it means the saving of many lives and much valuable property. This service has been rendered on several occasions on the Pacific coast to the satisfaction of everybody, particularly of those people who were rescued from disaster. There seems to be a litle cloudiness about the desirability of paying a subsidy when there are no wrecks; but when business is poor is the very time that these wrecking companies need assistance.

Item agreed to.

Life saving service, including rewards for saving life, $80,000.

Mr. SHORT: Is the minister going to reopen the life saving station at Bay View, Digby county, Nova Scotia? It has been closed since July, 1925. This station was built in 1913, and was operated constantly until 1922, when it was closed and the boat shipped over to New Brunswick, where it was retained for nearly a year. Then the station was reopened, but after the staff had been appointed the Civil Service Commission claimed they should make the appointments. They advertised for applicants and appointed a new staff. Next year the station was closed again and the boat again sent over to New Brunswick, where it was kept for some time. Eventually it was decided that the appointments did not come under the Civil Service Act, and the staff was appointed by the Marine department. For some reason that I do not know the station has been closed ever since. This station serves very important fishing communities on the bay of Fundy. There are 250 fishing boats, perhaps more, that operate up and down the bay very nearly the year round, and the station was able to afford great protection to them. Since 1925, however, that station has given very little service indeed—in fact it has been used as a political football. I think it is time that these institutions were taken out of politics altogether and devoted to the purposes for which they were built. I impress upon the minister the necessity of opening this station and keeping it open during the fishing season and, if possible, throughout the year. There is no reason at all, why these life-saving stations should be used for political purposes.

Item agreed to.

Radiotelegraph service and to provide for the construction and maintenance of radiotelegraph ship to shore stations and the general administration of the provisions of the Radio Act and regulations throughout the Dominion, $499,865.

Mr. ERNST: Will the minister explain the exact nature of this service?

Mr. CARDIN: The proposed appropriation is to provide for the maintenance and repair throughout the year of government radiotelegraph stations and beacon stations throughout Canada, and for the general administration of the radiotelegraph service, including the licensing and inspection of ship stations, private and commercial land stations, radiotelephone broadcasting and receiving stations, and the examination of commercial operators for radio certificates. In a word, it covers the whole range of our operations in radiotelegraphy. As the hon. gentleman knows the radiotelegraph system is of great value in connection with navigation. It is being developed every day, and constant requests are being made to the department by those interested in the matter to augment the service and provide better facilities. The increase in the vote will help to enable us to meet this demand for the improvement of this service and to make it as efficient as possible. The service is not only giving splendid assistance to the shipping interests but is promoting to some extent Canadian trade as well.

Mr. ERNST: I had hoped that the increase in the vote would be devoted to measures for providing adequate protection for the fishermen who carry on their operations off the Atlantic coast. Earlier in the session I drew the attention of the minister to the fact that last year two schooners fishing out of the port of Lunenburg were wrecked on Sable island and forty-nine lives lost, owing to a storm of which they had had no warning, and which, when it broke, found them without sufficient sea room to escape. I suggested to the minister at that time that such accidents could be avoided in future if some action were taken such as broadcasting the weather reports by radiotelephone—say at nine o'clock every evening, or even twice a day—so that fishermen could pick the messages up at sea and take whatever precautions were necessary for their safety. I regret that apparently the appropriation does not contain any provision for this. I had a communication from the minister stating that apparently the service was not desired. I have taken steps to inquire into that, and I find that there is a certain amount of apathy—not opposition but apathy—amongst some of the owners who objected to the additional expense. On the other hand those who are engaged in going down to the sea, that is to say fishermen and others, are looking for some such measure of protection; and I believe it is incumbent upon the government to provide adequate measures in this direction. Under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act shipowners are required to equip their vessels with life-boats, and I fail to see why means should not be adopted in this case for the protection of our fishermen so as to prevent a repetition of the disaster to which I alluded.

Mr. CARDIN: We do broadcast storm warnings that are of great value to the fishermen, but I think my hon. friend has in mind that the government should provide receiving sets for those men.

Mr. ERNST: I would suggest that the storm warnings should be broadcast in plain English not in code so that the fishermen could get the messages on receiving sets.

Mr. CARDIN: That is what we are doing this year.

Mr. ERNST: At what station?

Mr. CARDIN: Louisburg.

Mr. ERNST: I am deeply gratified to know that is being done.

Mr. McGIBBON: Could the minister state what advance has been made in this particular field in the last four or five years?

Mr. CARDIN: The field indicated by my hon. friend is so very extensive that I would hesitate to enter upon it at this time. The subject is a technical one, and I have no hesitation in saying that I am not very familiar with the technical developments. The service we provide has been most useful in connection with navigation and has proven an excellent medium of communication between ships at sea, to say nothing of the transmission of telegrams, and similar conveniences.

Mr. McGIBBON: The possibilities of this work as brought out by scientific investigation during and after the war are simply enormous. Much was learned, for example, about guiding ships into harbours through mine fields and things of that nature. What I was anxious to know was whether the government was alive to the possibilities of the application of this science in various ways, in the matter of saving life and in other directions, or whether it was standing still contented with simply broadcasting weather reports. The possibilities in connection with the efficient navigation of ships and the saving of life by a proper utilization of recent discoveries are very marked indeed. I remember some years ago sitting on a committee of this House, which had to do with scientific and industrial research, and the members of that committee were very much interested in the research work carried on by Professor McLennan, of Toronto university. The name of that distinguished gentleman, it will be remembered, was connected with various discoveries during the war which were of great practical value, and served to demonstrate the possibilities which underlie what I might call radio science. I was wondering if the government was alive to recent discoveries, or if it was carrying out work of the routine character.

Mr. CARDIN: The information given to me by the officers of the department is that in this particular line Canada leads the world. We are taking advantage of the developments that have been made, and I think we can well afford to compare the advances we have made with those of any other country. We are doing all we can to utilize any new devices brought forward, and to keep the service as efficient as possible.

Mr. McGIBBON: What about submarine telephones?

Mr. CARDIN: I fancy that matter comes under the control of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. McGIBBON: I did not anticipate that the minister would have before him to-day the information for which I asked; it would not be quite fair to expect that. But the subject is of immense interest, and there are possibilities of great importance to this country in connection with it. I would therefore ask especially that next year the minister be prepared to lay before the House a comprehensive statement of what the department has accomplished along the line I have indicated.

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly:

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I presume the minister is aware that with regard to the service under this heading Prince Edward Island is not recognized in any respect. I understand there is no service station of any kind, and of late years, as we are situated, we have to depend on navigation wholly. In recent years the potato business has grown so enormously that we must depend on steamers very late in the season to get our produce shipped. Representations have been made by one of the principal insurance companies that when ships are being chartered to navigate the strait of Northumberland in the late fall, a handicap is experienced on account of there being no radio aids to navigation along this route. I have been requested to bring the matter to the attention of the minister and to urge that navigation on the coast of Prince Edward Island and through the strait of Northumberland be given some attention under this item.

Mr. CARDIN: I have no objection to looking into the representations of my hon. friend.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is the station at Barriefield in charge of the minister's department?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the department under consideration the building of radio stations on the Hudson strait.

Mr. CARDIN: The program in regard to the Hudson strait survey has not been absolutely completed and at the present time we do not know exactly what we shall be obliged to do. The observations which we expect to make during next summer will supply us with the necessary information. The matter has not been decided yet.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the stations be under the charge of the minister's department?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Radio service—to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners, $169,475.

Mr. BROWN: What machinery is provided by law for the collection of these license fees?

Mr. CARDIN: We have in all post offices in Canada licenses which are at the disposal of those who desire to buy them. The price is one dollar. Apart from the post offices any man of a certain standing may obtain from the department a certain number of licenses which he may sell, and he is entitled to retain 10 per cent of the cost of the license. If a man is in possession of a receiving set without having the necessary license he can be taken before the court and his receiving set can be confiscated.

Mr. BROWN: The post offices in all cases?

Mr. CARDIN: The larger post offices and several other people in the most important centres. In fact any person who is known in any locality may make a request to be permitted to sell licenses and the request will be granted.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Would the minister say a word on the general item? I do not quite understand it. Does it raise the question which we have seen so much of recently in the newspapers as to our rights and those of the United States in connection with broadcasting?

Mr. CARDIN: We have throughout the country a certain number of inspectors and staff whose business it is to aid in the maintenance of proper conditions for receiving sets. There is a dispute between Canada and the United States in regard to the allotment of wave lengths. I understand there are at present about ninety-five different wave lengths of some importance, fifty of them capable of being used for high powered stations and forty-five for rather lower powered stations. Canada has been using exclusively six of these wave lengths on high powered stations and at the same time has been sharing with the United States eleven other wave lengths. During the last few weeks we have been trying to reach an understanding with the United States since they have organized a commission to control broadcasting as we are controlling it in Canada. Prior to not more than two months ago broadcasting in the United States was free; their government had no control at all, and there was what is called pirating of wave lengths.

Since the United States have decided to appoint a commission to control broadcasting as we are controlling it in Canada under the Department of Marine and Fisheries, we have endeavoured to reach an understanding with them and we have claimed twelve wave lengths instead of six out of the ninety-five. We have claimed that we should share fourteen of the less important wave lengths but so far the negotiations have had no satisfactory result. The United States want to discuss the question from a population point of view. They say that according to population we would not be entitled to more than the six wave lengths which we are using exclusively at the present time. The department refuses to accept that as a basis of consideration. We say that the matter should be considered from the point of view not of population but of territory. We say that with only six exclusive wave lengths for Canada we cannot take proper care of the business of the country or give satisfaction to our people.

Mr. McGIBBON: Have they not stolen a number of Canadian wave lengths?

Mr. CARDIN: No. Pirating to a certain extent has been carried on but we have had the exclusive use of six wave lengths and a share in eleven others.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): What is the approximate revenue under this item?

Mr. CARDIN: The total revenue from the service is $292,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In regard to the station at Barriefield, which is doing good service in connection with lake navigation, has the department received complaints about interference with the general radio service, and if so, has the department taken any steps towards correcting it?

Mr. CARDIN: We are receiving complaints from practically all over Canada in regard to interference. It is very difficult to cure it. There is a certain amount of interference which we cannot prevent. We are taking all the necessary steps to stop that interference. We have men engaged, with the necessary machines for that purpose, and we are changing portions of our equipment in certain places, at Father Point, for instance, and at Kingston, where we have been receiving complaints in regard to the stations.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who is the official in charge?

Mr. CARDIN: The official in charge at Ottawa is Commander Edwards. In addition, we have a certain number of inspectors distributed all over Canada.

Mr. DICKIE: What control does the department have over these broadcasting stations? I have received a communication from Victoria signed by a number of radio listeners in, complaining about the broadcasting station in the city of Victoria. That station, I believe, broadcasts each evening, and while it is broadcasting the people in Victoria can get no radio stations in other parts of the continent. They ask that the station be moved ten miles outside the city. I had an interview this morning with Mr. Edwards, a very courteous gentleman, but he was unable to give me any promise of relief. I would like to know if there is not some way in which the department could remedy a grievance of this kind, because there are very many people in Victoria protesting against the station broadcasting each evening.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. CARDIN: The control we have over these stations is in the issue of the license. They cannot operate without a license from the department. We can, of course, refuse to renew a license if they are not operating the station satisfactorily. Then there is, of course, always a certain amount of interference which the experts have not yet found means of overcoming.

Mr. DICKIE: The minister can quite understand that when the license was first granted, this grievance did not exist, but with the increase in the number of radio stations, what was not a grievance a few years ago is one now, and I am quite convinced that this is a matter of very much importance to the people of Victoria and its environs who are interested in radio.

Mr. TOLMIE: I have received similar communications from Victoria, and I intended to mention them, when my hon. friend from Nanaimo spoke. I would ask whether it has been found that the radio apparatus on the ships off the coast interferes with radio receiving in a place like Victoria.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that it does interfere to a certain extent, and we are doing what we can to prevent that.

Mr. TOLMIE: In the event of a broadcasting station not complying with your regulations, what course do you adopt?

Mr. CARDIN: We can cancel the license.

Mr. TOLMIE: That is the only remedy?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BRADY: I would like to draw to the minister's attention the urgent need existing at Stewart, on the Portland canal, in regard to radio service. That is a very important mining district, and I would urge upon the minister the advisability of establishing a radio station at Stewart. At present the people of that great mining district have to depend entirely on American stations, particularly the one at Hyder. The minister also knows that very often throughout the year the telegraph communication breaks down, which leaves the people of that district entirely dependent on the American service at Hyder. I am sure that if the minister considered the advantages that would accrue to the mining interests as well as general business, by improved communication facilities, he would establish a radio station at this place, where existing conditions warrant its establishment. I think the time is now ripe for action in this matter, and that a radio station should be established at Stewart.

Item agreed to.

River St. Lawrence ship channel—maintenance and operating dredging fleet, $1,522,000.

Mr. GARDINER: I presume this is for dredging between Quebec and Montreal?

Mr. CARDIN: And below Quebec. This appropriation is for the continuance of operations in connection with deepening and widening the St. Lawrence ship channel between Montreal and Father Point. As I stated last year—we are working on a program of deepening the St. Lawrence ship channel to a depth of 35 feet between Montreal and Father Point. The amount removed last year was 1,523,130 yards. We shall have to dredge for a distance of about 38 miles yet to complete the 35 foot channel between Montreal and Father Point. Of course, in some places we were not obliged to dredge, where there was already sufficient water.

Mr. GARDINER: Have there been any soundings taken to ascertain approximately how many yards will still have to be taken out?

Mr. CARDIN: It is estimated that about 25,000,000 yards will have to be removed in this 38 miles necessary to complete the channel.

Mr. GARDINER: What does it cost per yard?

Mr. CARDIN: I have not the figure here, but I think it is about fifty cents. We are spending about $1,500,000 every year on this work, and my information is that it will take eight or nine years to complete it.

Mr. McMILLAN: What width is that channel?

Mr. CARDIN: At certain places it is 1,000 feet in width, and the narrowest part is not less than 500 feet.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Do I understand the minister to say that the narrowest part of the channel will not be less than 500 feet and that the widest part is 1,000 feet..

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the length of the longest boat coming up the St. Lawrence to Montreal? I am asking this in relation to some statements that have been made in regard to the upper St. Lawrence.

Mr. CARDIN: I think it would be in the neighbourhood of five hundred feet.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): And they have no difficulty in a channel not less than five hundred feet in width.

Mr. CARDIN: Of course they are not as free as they are on the sea. But with the aids to navigation which we have been providing and a good pilot on the boat, they are not experiencing difficulties. We have had no accidents in the channel.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister will remember the circumstances prompting these questions. Statements were made at a meeting in regard to the channel in the other end of the St. Lawrence. The minister says the length would be about five hundred feet.

Mr. CARDIN: I would not like to be bound to that figure, five hundred feet, but I think the average might be that.

Mr. HANSON: The tendency is to build larger boats.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: What is the effect on the level of the waters at Montreal of the deepening of the channel at lake St. Peter? As you dredge out the channel below Montreal, does it or does it not have the effect of lowering the water level at Montreal? That is a problem which the department has to consider, and I would like to know the experience of the department, because it is an important point.

Mr. CARDIN: Our engineer says it does not change the level in Montreal.

Mr. HANSON: I quite agree that where there is no tide there is no rise and fall. That is only affected by the tide. Is there a rise at Montreal?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. HANSON: Where do you have a rise?

Mr. CARDIN: Three Rivers.

Mr. HANSON: Is the level at Three Rivers not the controlling factor at Montreal?

Mr. CARDIN: It may be to a certain extent, but it is rather a technical point.

Mr. HANSON: It is an important point.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, but I have no doubt the engineers of the department have taken account of it.

Mr. HANSON: What is the shallowest point between the city of Quebec and the city of Montreal, and what is the depth at that point?

Mr. CARDIN: It is thirty feet.

Mr. HANSON: At what point?

Mr. CARDIN: Several places, but more particularly in the vicinity of Batiscan, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. HANSON: About nine miles above Quebec.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: If the channel is deepened at that point, will it not have the effect of lowering the level at Montreal?

Mr. CARDIN: I have to rely on the information of the engineers, and they say no.

Mr. HANSON: I am glad to hear it, and I hope it is true.

Mr. STIRLING: Is there much difficulty in maintaining that channel, once it is dredged?

Mr. CARDIN: Not at all.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): At what time does the department take the level of the harbours, or do they take them repeatedly?

Mr. CARDIN: During the whole year we have automatic gauges in all the ports, we are taking levels almost every day, and the record is kept in the department.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the maintenance and operation of Sorel shipyard, $154,000.

Mr. HANSON: This is a well-known milch cow for the city of Sorel. How many employees has the minister there?

Mr. CARDIN: I think at the present time in the vicinity of five hundred.

Mr. HANSON: Are they increasing?

Mr. CARDIN: No, I regret to say they are not.

Item agreed to.

Sorel shipyard—to provide for the reconditioning of Wharf No. 4 and for new foundations for buildings Nos. 3 and 4, $45,780.

Mr. GARDINER: What improvements are contemplated by this vote? I call attention to an item in the Public Works department for Sorel public works, something like $17,000 Why should there be a separate item?

Mr. CARDIN: This vote provides for the establishment of the government shipyard which is being kept for the repairing of the dredges and boats of the government. It is quite independent of the operation of the port.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Hanson.]

Salaries and allowances to lightkeepers, $700,000.

Mr. HANSON: Almost every year, as long as I have been a member of this House, we have had delegation after delegation of lighthouse keepers coming here asking for certain expenditures. Some of these have appeared to be very reasonable and some have appeared to be unreasonable. I wonder if the minister would make a statement as to whether they had looked into the question, say, of superannuation. I would like the committee to visualize one case. In the bay of Fundy there is a light called Gannet Rock. I have been there and any man who goes out and lives at Gannet Rock, even for the fairly comfortable salary that is paid to a man in that position, who spends his whole life there doing very useful public service, isolated almost beyond description,—because there are weeks and weeks at a time when they have no communication with the mainland at all, nine miles from Grand Manan island—deserves some consideration. It has appeared to me that these officials are very faithful public servants and some provision might be made for their superannuation.

Mr. CARDIN: I think provision is made for the superannuation of a certain class at least of these lightkeepers. If a lightkeeper elects to come under the Superannuation Act he can take advantage of it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What salary is paid to the lightkeeper at Knapp's Point?

Mr. CARDIN: I have not a list of the eleven hundred lighthouses.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What would be the average?

Mr. CARDIN: The salary starts at $3,240 at Cape Race for example, and goes down as low as $60.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): These men complain that it is almost impossible for them to live, because they get no such salary as the first amount mentioned by the minister. A very small salary is paid for taking care of a lighthouse such as this one, I have mentioned, from say April to the close of navigation. From what the lightkeeper told me I thought he had great reason for complaint. No man could live under such circumstances. In winter he is out of employment altogether.

Mr. CARDIN: There are some lighthouse keepers who receive substantial salaries in the more important places. One man gets $3,240 but there are others who receive only $60, $120 and $150 per annum. Those in receipt of these very small sums do not give their whole time.

Mr. HANSON: As regards the men who receive the larger sums, is it not fair to them to say that they are obliged to pay out of these salaries one, two and sometimes even three assistants annually? It is not fair to say that any lighthouse keeper gets $3,000 for himself.

Mr. CARDIN: As a matter of fact there is only one man who receives $3,240 and he has to pay three assistants. Others hire two assistants and some only one, while a few do the work themselves.

Mr. GARDINER: It seems to me that the proper thing would be for the department itself to hire the necessary assistants and pay them their remuneration direct. When it comes to superannuation the lighthouse keepers complain that they are rated on a lower scale than they should be and consequently they suffer great hardship. It would be well to have this situation remedied.

Mr. CARDIN: The question is worth considering. It must be remembered, however, that the lighthouse keeper ought to be in absolute control, and he would not be if his assistants were engaged and paid by the government. They might say, "We are independent of you; you have no control over us. You are only a superintendent." That would be unsatisfactory; the work could not be as efficiently done as if the lighthouse keeper were in charge.

Mr. HANSON: The minister is right. At times when political patronage is rampant, as it is in Canada now and then—

Mr. CARDIN: Is my hon. friend referring to last summer?

Mr. HANSON: I am not objecting at all. To be frank, I do not think that one party is worse than the other. But there might be a situation in which the lighthouse keeper would find himself faced with an incipient rebellion, with his assistants defying him. They might say, "We got our job from the government and we don't care for you." That would not be in the interest of efficiency.

Mr. GARDINER: That argument might apply to any other department.

Mr. HANSON: It does.

Mr. GARDINER: Consequently it cannot refer to this alone.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. GARDINER: When the committee rose we were discusisng the salaries of lighthouse keepers. I would suggest that the minister consider during the recess the advisability of fixing a scale of wages for the assistants of lighthouse keepers and paying the lighthouse keepers themselves a straight salary, allowing them to retain the right to complete control over their help. By that means there would be removed any doubt as to the basis on which the superannuation allowance of lighthouse keepers should be decided. I do not press the matter at the present time inasmuch as the situation is rather complicated, but I would ask the minister to consider this suggestion in the meantime, as to the possibility of separating the salaries paid the lighthouse keepers from any remuneration paid assistants. This is necessary for the purposes of fixing the superannuation.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and allowances to lightkeepers—to reinstate William R. Wallace as lightkeeper, Grade 2, Class 3, at Hope island, Ontario, with continuous permanent status in the said position, retroactively as of the 24th February, 1925, and he is hereby reinstated accordingly, and to provide for his salary for the current fiscal year, $1,920.

Mr. KAISER: Where is this island?

Mr. CARDIN: In Ontario. William R. Wallace was a permanent lightkeeper of grade 2, class 3, at Hope island, Ontario, and in 1918 was dismissed by order in council on the twenty-fourth February for reasons which at the time the department considered adequate. Later disclosures suggest the justice of reinstating him and in the meantime he has occupied a temporary position to the entire satisfaction of the department. He was dismissed on the ground of neglect of duty in leaving the station before the close of navigation, but further information supplied to the department shows that he could give a satisfactory explanation. The department feels that it is only reasonable to reinstate him.

Mr. GARDINER: Who is responsible for the charges?

Mr. CARDIN: No request was made for his dismissal but the light was out and it was discovered that he had left the station before his time. The explanation fully justified this.

Mr. KAISER: Where is the island?

Mr. CARDIN: In Georgian bay.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, $800,000.

Mr. DICKIE: Has the minister been apprised of the necessity for a new lighthouse at Active pass, which is one of the busiest navigation points in British Columbia? The lighthouse is about forty years old and is altogether unsanitary. The accommodations for the lighthouse keeper and his family are not at all what they should be. Everyone in the district agrees that the light is entirely inadequate and an up-to-date house should be put up.

Mr. CARDIN: I shall be pleased to look into the matter and if the facts are as represented we shall do our best to meet the request.

Mr. TOLMIE: There is a tremendous traffic between Vancouver and Victoria and Seattle and between Seattle and Alaska. It is one of the most important points.

Mr. DICKIE: I know that timbers in that lighthouse are so rotten that the structure is unsafe. I have examined it carefully during the past year, and the engineer's report will bear me out.

Item agreed to.

Construction of lights and aid to navigation, including regulation of traffic at such places as may be found necessary, $650,000.

Mr. ERNST: Does "aids to navigation" include the placing of buoys? What method is adopted by the department in placing buoys—is the work done by tender or is it given to some particular person?

Mr. CARDIN: Most of the buoys are placed by the employees of the department, but in certain cases we call for tenders and the work is done by contract.

Mr. ERNST: Is it the invariable custom to ask for tenders when the department themselves do not place the buoys?

Mr. CARDIN: In the case of all contracts over $200 we ask for tenders.

Mr. ERNST: I have in mind a contract which is under $200, to be precise $150, where I believe the work could be done more advantageously by tender than is being done to-day. I do not know whether it is an isolated case. I am asking the question because the work is being allotted to the same man every year for the same price, and it could be done just as well by men equally competent who would do it for half the money the department is paying.

Mr. GOTT: Has the minister at hand the cost of the construction of the Pelee passage lighthouse, a new lighthouse which was built a year ago? I do not know whether it is called Pelee light, Pelee passage, or Pelee island light. I should like to know what the cost of construction was.

Mr. CARDIN: Is that a new lighthouse or an old one?

Mr. GOTT: A new one, which was completed about a year ago.

Mr. CARDIN: I understand it is on the southeast shore.

Mr. GOTT: What was the cost of it?

Mr. CARDIN: Unfortunateiy I have not the figures under my hand, but I shall be pleased to supply the information.

Mr. GOTT: Have you the name of the lighthouse keeper?

Mr. CARDIN: No lighthouse keeper has been appointed yet.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance and repairs to wharves, $10,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Does this cover the whole of these repairs?

Mr. CARDIN: This is to provide for small repairs which become necessary during the year on the wharves which are under the administration of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Was anything expended last year on the building of a wharf at Simcoe island?

Mr. CARDIN: These wharves are constructed by the Department of Public Works, and when they are completed they come under the Department of Marine and Fisheries for administration. The present vote is to provide for certain small repairs.

Mr. GOTT: How is it that the wharf itself and the entrance thereto are handled by separate departments? Furthermore, does the minister not think that once a wharf is constructed the approaches thereto should be in keeping with the character of the wharf itself?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, but any repairs to an amount over $50 are made by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. GOTT: I have in mind the port of Kingsville. They have a very good wharf there but the entrance has practically gone to pieces, and it is up to some department to make repairs. Recently I made representations to the Minister of Public Works to coöperate with the board of trade and the town council in making repairs to the entrance of the dock and keeping that entrance in a state of repair.

Mr. CARDIN: The proper department to make the representations to in that case would be the Public Works department.

Mr. ERNST: I wish to ask one other question. Did I understand the minister to say that once a wharf is constructed it is handed over to the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries by the Department of Public Works?

Mr. CARDIN: That is the rule.

Mr. ERNST: Is that rule always followed?

Mr. CARDIN: As far as I know it is.

Mr. ERNST: What procedure is followed in case of the appointment of wharfingers? As a matter of fact do you appoint a wharfinger for every wharf, or just in particular cases?

Mr. CARDIN: When it is necessary to have a wharfinger he is appointed by the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. ERNST: Would the minister tell me why a wharfinger was appointed for the wharf at La Have in the county of Lunenburg? I ask the question because that particular wharf was constructed for a ferry landing and it was placed in charge of a wharfinger. That is the only instance that I know of in the county of Lunenburg, and the one instance where it should not have been done.

Mr. STEVENS: Fire him.

Mr. HANSON: Ask the member for Antigonish-Guysborough.

Mr. DUFF: Do you want an explanation?

Mr. ERNST: I was asking the minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. DUFF: Carried.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to pay pensions to pilots—Joseph Lapointe, Barthelemi Lachance, Alphonse Asselin, Alzear Desrosiers, Edmond LaRochelle, L. E. Morin, Joseph Plante, Victor Vezina, Raymond Baquet, Alfred LaRochelle, Theophile Corriveau, Alphonse Pouliot, Treffle Delisle, Alfred Gaudreau, Adjutor Baillargeon, F. X. Demaules, Joseph Pouliot, Arthur Baillergeon, John I. Irvine, Camille Bernier, Joseph Eugene Lachance, Elzear Normand, Phileas Lachance, Narcisse Lavoie, L. H. Lapierre, J. T. St. Laurent, J. V. Gourdeau, Samuel Rioux Joseph LaRochelle, Arthur Koenig, J. Alphonse Lachance, Raoul Lachance, J. O. Lachance, J. H. Talbot, Jules Asselin, J. B. Bernier, Frederick Bouffard, $11,100.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Could we have some explanation as to how this amount is divided among the various services? What amount is granted to each individual?

Mr. CARDIN: Three hundred dollars.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A year?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: After how many years service?

Mr. CARDIN: After reaching the age of seventy years.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Irrespective of the number of years of service?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, irrespective of their service. As a matter of fact all of them have been in the service for a long time.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me that this amount of $300 a year is very inadequate for men who have been long years in the service, especially such an arduous service as that of lighthouse keeping.

An hon. MEMBER: This relates to pilots.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In any case the same criticism applies. We are proposing to grant old age pensions to the amount of $240, and permit an income of $125 additional, making a total of $365 a year, or a dollar a day. It seems to me that when a man has so many years of service to his credit the Dominion government ought to be prepared to give some more adequate amount than $300 a year.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries—salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protection service, $860,000.

Mr. HANSON: This is a large item and I see there is a substantial increase amounting to $60,000 this year. We should have some explanation from the minister. That, however, is not the purpose for which I am addressing the committee. For a number of years an effort has been made to improve the fisheries patrol service on the St. John river. Heretofore the guardians have been appointed by local patronage committees. In New Brunswick in the county of York-Sunbury we have a fish and game association which is much interested in developing the salmon fishing off what is known as Hartt's island on the St. John river a few miles above Fredericton. This spring when the question of appointing seasonal guardians was brought up, the fish and game association asked for the appointment of two men who were specially qualified for the work. I do not know what report Mr. Harrison, the inspector or whatever his position is, made in regard to the matter, but I understand that request has been turned down. What was desired was that two special men who were particularly good men should be appointed to protect this pool. The fish and game association did not ask for the appointment of guardians over the whole river, of whom there are half a dozen or more; but they desired that two men named by them should be appointed by the department for this specific purpose. It is rather a pity that their request was not given more consideration, because this is the only part of the St. John river that is open to the public for salmon fishing. All the other salmon reaches are leased. I am referring now to the Tobique river. That Hartt island pool a stretch of two or three miles of very good fishing, is open to the public. The pool itself, in the absence of proper protection, is poached upon illegally every week in the season. It is felt --and I am not putting this forward in any partisan spirit—that with the men who in the past have been appointed guardians on that river, the pool has not received the protection which it ought to have received.

I am trying to put this forward in a very moderate way. I wish the minister would have his department communicate with the fish and game association and see if they cannot get, if not two special men, at least one special man put on as guardian of that Hartt island pool. They ask for the appointment of Roland Wheeler. During the interim last year when my hon. friend was out of office the fish and game association asked for the appointment of this man; we had him appointed, and he gave great satisfaction to everybody but the poachers. They have got their work in again this year and this man will not be appointed unless the minister looks into the matter. He was not an appointee of mine at all although I asked for his appointment. He is the nominee of the fish and game association which I need not assure the minister is a non-political body. In fact I think the president of the association is a supporter of the present government. I am asking in the most perfect good faith that the minister will see that at least that man is appointed as one of the guardians of the Hartt island pool which is, after all, the vital part of the whole river. I request that the minister take the matter into consideration before the season opens. I do not think the guardians have been put on yet. In fact the ice is not out yet, and as nothing will be done till June there will be ample time to deal with the matter before then. On behalf of the York-Sunbury Fish and Game Association I would request that Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Mills, the two names designated by the association, be appointed at that particular pool. I do not care about the other guardians at all; the department can appoint any others they want. This is a modest request and I ask the minister to receive it in the way it is put forward and to give it his best consideration. If he leaves the matter to his political friends they will tell him "no," because I understand they have already made the nominations. That is natural, but I am going to ask the minister this once in a limited degree to disregard political qualifications, because the matter is one of great importance.

Last year for the first time tourists began to come in and I know one man who spent $1,000 in the community. That is easy money, new-found wealth in the country. If we can get fifty or a hundred men coming in at different times to fish—and the waters are big enough to accommodate many rods—the result is a substantial revenue to the community. But unless there is adequate guardianship there, the fish will be gone. The danger of the situation lies in the inadequacy of the guardianship in the past and that is what we are trying to cure. I am going to ask the minister to be good enough to give the matter his personal consideration.

Mr. CARDIN: I certainly will.

Mr. TOLMIE: The fishing industry is becoming a very important one, particularly on the Pacific coast where last year we were able to get an output of about 46 per cent of all the fisheries in the Dominion of Canada. It is pleasing to note that a deputy is being appointed for the purpose of giving his sole attention to this important industry. Is it the intention of the government to create in the near future a separate portfolio of fisheries? The industry is growing rapidly and it is capable of vast development in the future. I sincerely hope the government will give this matter serious consideration.

Mr. CARDIN: Personally I would have no great objection to seeing another man dealing with the fisheries of Canada. So far the government has thought it would serve to meet the recommendation of the Duncan report which asked for a separate fisheries branch and the appointment thereto of a deputy minister. I do not know what the government might be inclined to do later on. The matter has already been considered but I cannot anticipate what the decision will be. It is seldom that a government is in a position to meet all the recommendations of such an important commission. We are endeavouring to meet all the recommendations and, according to conditions in the maritimes, this is among the most important. I am disposed to do all I can, even to go away from that branch of the service, if that would improve the service and give satisfaction to the parties interested.

Mr. TOLMIE: I had no thought of even suggesting to get rid of the very capable and affable minister who occupies the position of Minister of Marine and Fisheries at the present time. My object was to call attention particularly to the growing industry of fisheries and to suggest that the question of creating a portfolio of fisheries in the near future might be given consideration. If the chairman and members of the Duncan commission, after looking over the Atlantic side of Canada, thought it was necessary to suggest the appointment of a separate deputy, perhaps if they had had occasion to look into the conditions at the Pacific coast they would have recommended a separate minister also.

Mr. MacLAREN: The department has been doing certain work on the bay of Fundy in connection with the removal of obstructions in small streams. At the present time in some of the small rivers running into the bay of Fundy there are obstructions which prevent the salmon proceeding up the river. These small rivers are not and would not be useful for fly fishing nor for the netting of the salmon, but they would be of great value for spawning purposes. The department has been doing certain work in connection with the removal of these obstructions. It is the opinion of many people living in the district whose desire is for the preservation of the salmon and not for the purpose of sport, that the small streams should be preserved so far as possible for spawning. The preservation of the salmon has been rather remarkable. The salmon is holding its own in the bay of Fundy better, I think, than any other fish. At the same time, it is important that we do our best to help, and here is a means of assisting the continuance of our salmon fishing. While one of the large rivers, the St. John, is the principal source of spawning and of the supply of salmon, it is highly important to have many sources, and therefore I would ask the minister to tell the committee just what is being done in the matter of removing these obstructions in some of the small rivers on the bay of Fundy.

Mr. CARDIN: The question of my good friend relates more particularly to the next item, which has to do with building fishways and clearing rivers, but I have no objection to answering it under this item. I have a memorandum here as to the work that is being done in New Brunswick, as follows:

Magaguadavic river, Charlotte county—preparation of plans for a fishway over falls at south of river.

Pocologan river, Charlotte county—blasting and construction of concrete wing dams to provide a fishway over falls.

New river, Charlotte county—blasting of falls to improve passage for salmon.

Black river, St. John county—blasting of falls to improve passage for salmon.

White Marsh creek, Carleton county—examination of stream and measurements of discharge.

Mr. HANSON: Has the fishway on the Magaguadavic river been built?

Mr. CARDIN: It is going to be built this year.

Mr. MacLAREN: Is it proposed to continue that work this year?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, certainly.

Mr. HANSON: I understand that tenders were called for last year for building the fishway on the Magaguadavic river, but for some reason the contract was not awarded. May I ask what the reason was?

Mr. CARDIN: There was a vote, but the money was not available last year as everything had to be done under governor general's warrants.

Mr. HANSON: Can the minister assure us that the work will be done this year, and I presume by tender?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Is the department convinced of the feasibility of a fishway there?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: I am glad to see that there is an increase of $60,000 provided for the salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and guardians. I think that in previous years the amount provided has been too low. I am also pleased to note an increase of $186,000 under the general head of fisheries this year. I think the amount spent in the past has been inadequate, and I trust that when this money is being disbursed, the province of Nova Scotia will get her share, as there are places down there where guardians should be patrolling the rivers and streams as soon as the season opens. I trust that the department will see that a fair share of this appropriation is expended in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. HANSON: Is it the intention of the department to increase the number of fish guardians in the province of New Brunswick, and if so, where will the increases take place, or is this $60,000 just to provide for salary increases?

Mr. CARDIN: The department is considering the appointment of new guardians where, according to our information, that is warranted.

Mr. HANSON: I think that is all right. Last year I tried to get an extra man appointed on a particular water, and I was informed that there was no money available. When the unforeseen arises there ought to be some little leeway in the department so that a man could be put on when required. That has not been the case in the past, and I commend the department for having shown a little foresight in this matter.

Mr. CARDIN: We are providing for that this year.

Mr. McGIBBON: Looking into this matter some years ago I found that the value of the fishing industry in Canada was about $40,000,000, but that about $10,000,000 fish oils went absolutely to waste in the offal and waste products. Has the department taken any steps to preserve to the country the vast amount that is wasted in that direction every year, amounting to nearly 25 per cent of the value of the fisheries?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that there are on both coasts at the present time about twenty reduction plants engaged in this very work.

Mr. McGIBBON: Private plants?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Do they get any assistance from the government?

Mr. CARDIN: No. Evidently they are finding it profitable.

[Mr. Short.]

Mr. McGIBBON: What has been the result?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the products this year will be worth upwards of $2,000,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would suggest that the department might stir up a little on that question.

Mr. MacLAREN: The minister has a considerable number of highly trained men in his department who are engaged in scientific work and who move about the country to a greater or less extent. Now the amount of poaching, and disastrous poaching, that goes on is enormous, especially in the small streams and the spawning grounds. Sometimes it is done by professional poachers; other times by those who have lacked sufficient loyalty to sportsmanlike instincts, but the attitude of the farmers, indeed of the whole people, is not sufficiently antagonistic to this poaching. It is with great difficulty that poaching can be prevented simply by overseers or guardians, and I think by stirring up the conscience of the people living in the country a good deal more can be done, because they know that poaching is going on, and if there is an unfriendly attitude towards those who so offend, much good can be gained. Therefore I am suggesting to the minister that when these officials are going through the country in the execution of their duties, here and there they should have small meetings where the opportunity offers of gathering some of the natives about them, emphasizing the disastrous effects of illegal fishing, and pointing out that every man who lives in the neighbourhood can serve his own interests and those of the country by discountenancing this poaching as illegal.

Mr. QUINN: I wish to ask a question which I think might come up under this item. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is very good-natured, and I wish to pay my tribute to him right here and now. I do not think there is a minister on the government side of the House—there could not be on this side, of course, who carries his estimates through in such an admirable manner as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. CARDIN: I thank the hon. member.

Mr. QUINN: I am not looking for anything, but I wish to bring to the attention of the minister certain facts. An appointment made of inspector of fisheries in the St. Marys district in Guysborough county, Nova Scotia —George Wesley Fanning, a gentleman with whom I am not personally acquainted, but I have been given to understand that he has every qualification for the position. Presumably for political reasons his appointment was cancelled, and another appointment was made of a gentleman who lives ten miles from the seacoast, and who has never participated in the fishing industry. I have been given to understand that he knows absolutely nothing about it, but because of his political affiliations and representations made by certain gentlemen who conducted the campaign in the interests of the Liberal party in Antigonish-Guysborough, in the last election, he has been given this appointment. I wish to say seriously, not speaking from any political standpoint at all, that the fisheries of the maritime provinces and Quebec and British Columbia are of too vital importance to have officials appointed because they belong to one or the other side of politics. An appointment of this nature should be considered seriously. We have had a long discussion in this House over the Duncan report and maritime rights. I consider this as a real maritime right, because the fisheries enter seriously into the life of the people of the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Will the minister reconsider this appointment, and if this gentleman, Mr. Fanning, who was originally appointed to the position, is the man best qualified for that position, have him reinstated as inspector for that district. It is not too much to ask. The government is pretty safe to-day and one appointment in Guysborough county would not affect them very seriously.

Mr. CARDIN: The appointment of such as officer has not yet been made. The matter is still pending before the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. QUINN: That is why I brought the matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. CARDIN: Referring to the suggestion of my hon. friend from St. John-Albert in regard to calling together the fishermen in order to induce them to help in the protection of the fisheries, we have started that sort of campaign already. I am trying to induce the fishermen to form an association among themselves and to help protect the fisheries of the maritime provinces as well as those of other parts of Canada.

Mr. MacLAREN: I had in mind not only the fishermen but also the farmers living on the banks of the streams. I think it is more important to interest and get the support of the farmers in the district concerned.

Mr. HANSON: I would like to follow up the remarks of the hon. member for St. John with reference to the district southwards on the Miramichi river. The director of fisheries will know that within the last three or four years the situation there has been in bad shape. Part of the fisheries run through my constituency and that portion of the river is pretty well taken care of, but when you get down to the settlement where the farmers are the riparian owners, they have an idea that the fishery rights are the gift of Providence and that they have the right to come there and take the fish. I do not object to their taking an occasional salmon, but when they commence to commercialize the fisheries as they have done in Ludlow, Litchfield and Blackpool, Nova Scotia; when they fence off the river with a steel net, make a pond and capture the fish going upstream, a very serious situation is created. A difficulty again arises as to the question of guarding. A few years ago I think the department proceeded in accordance with public opinion in this matter and placed a portion of the river under the supervision of Inspector Harrison. I am disposed to think that there is a big improvement, but the matter to which the member for St. John referred as the great difficulty is that the riparian proprietor, if I may so term him, feels that he has perhaps the property rights in the fisheries, and the result is that many of the fish are not allowed to reach the spawning ground. I hope the department will give special attention to that river this year. The possibilities from the standpoint of the tourist and the possibilities for bringing in new money through the opportunities for fly fishing on the Miramichi are almost unlimited, but I am sorry to say that that stream is going back, due to the conditions that have been referred to and that are well known in the department. I am sure Mr. Found will bear me out when I say that every effort ought to be made to improve the conditions there. The men appointed no doubt do their duty as well as they can in that district, but you will not get a local fish guardian who will be very anxious to chase his neighbour, so that some other system, and of a drastic character, has to be adopted. One year, I think at my suggestion, Mr. Harrison, the inspector, adopted the system of sending men from Carleton county down through that district, with the result that they cleared up more than twenty huge impediments to the passage of the fish. I hope the department is alive to the situation and that there will be an improvement of the conditions in the river, because it is the best open salmon river in New Brunswick. None of the pools on the Miramichi is privately owned.

Mr. VENIOT: You mean the main river?

Mr. HANSON: Yes, I mean the southwest river where the good pools are. There is splendid salmon fly-fishing there, and with proper guardianship you will have a large influx of foreign tourists, and at the same time you will provide splendid sport for the people of the province who are so fond of salmon fishing.

Mr. NEILL: Will the minister disclose the policy of the department with regard to reviving the seaplane protection service on the Pacific coast? Members from British Columbia will recall that it was in force two years ago and did excellent service. Those who wish to break the law find it very profitable to go within the prohibited limits, and one guardian with a boat capable of a speed of only five or six miles an hour cannot possibly look after a coast line of fifty or sixty miles. The fishing poachers by long experience come to know a boat by the sound of its engine exhaust, and they can tell when the fishery guardian is coming an hour or an hour and a half ahead of his arrival, and this gives them plenty of time to get outside of the protected area. If the patrolman goes north they know for one or two days they are free to poach along the southern shore. Under the seaplane system the poachers would hear the whirr of the plane and within a few minutes it would come over some mountain and land in the sea a few yards ahead of them. As a consequence poaching was very largely stopped. After this system had been in operation for a year a dispute arose between the Naval department and the Marine department on the question of cost, and last year the service was in abeyance, but I remember an assurance being given to this House, in answer to an inquiry by the member for New Westminster, that the service would be reinstated in June—that was last June—under the Marine department. This was not done. We are all in hopes, especially in view of the remarks made in connection with the Imperial conference that Canada is going to take a greater interest in commercial aviation, that this greater interest will be most appropriately displayed in this branch of the service where it is so urgently needed. I believe the seaplane system would be not only more effective but more economical, for unless you put on a whole fleet of boats it is absolutely impossible to protect the mouths of these various rivers from fish poachers. It may be said that this has been done in the past, but conditions have changed in the last few years. To-day there is an enormous market for cheap, inferior fish that were practically unsaleable in former times. It is these fish that I am talking of. They are taken at the mouth of every river and creek, and there is an urgent necessity for their protection because the number of purse seines has increased as much as 400 per cent in certain districts. Therefore it becomes increasingly necessary to preserve the fish or else by and by there will be none to preserve. Some say, do away with purse seines altogether; but this is not always practicable because these fish cannot be taken in gill nets in all waters. My hon. friend from Skeena (Mr. Brady) I know will support me, as did his predecessor who was a Liberal. In his district the only remedy for poaching is for the department to again put the seaplane service in operation. I should like to know from the minister the policy of the department in this regard.

Mr. CARDIN: The representations of the hon. gentleman are already known in the department and the matter is at the present time under consideration. I hope a decision will be reached in the course of a few days.

Mr. DICKIE: What would be the estimated initial cost of operating two or three seaplanes for one season?

Mr. CARDIN: From thirty to forty thousand dollars.

Mr. DICKIE: I seldom disagree with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) on fishery matters, but I think you would have very much more effective guardianship if you took half that amount of money and placed guardians at the mouths of nearly all these creeks up along the northern coast. I can claim to be fairly familiar with the conditions there. There are days together when thick fogs and heavy storms prevail. At night time most of the poaching is done, and I do not think that such an expensive service would be justified from Alaska to the northern end of Vancouver island. With respect to the Comox-Alberni coast I am not so familiar of course as is the hon. member, but I think more effective supervision can be exercised by putting good men up there and paying them reasonable wages and supplying them with good boats. The present boats are simply a joke, and the present wages are a tragedy. What can you expect of men in that northern country if you pay them only $80 or $90 a month for but a part of the year? The remuneration is not sufficient to get dependable men. If you put fifty or sixty men up there and paid them at the rate of $100 a month I think you would get much more effective supervision than by seaplanes. That is my idea and I have made many trips up and down the coast. I would ask the member for Skeena if he does not consider my proposal the most practicable.

Mr. BRADY: Mr. Chairman, this is a subject of vital importance to the Skeena constituency. I am pleased indeed to see there is to be an increase in the salaries paid overseers. I place great reliance on men of integrity, tact and ability, in other words, men able to resist temptation, than on any other factor in securing effective supervision of our fishing grounds. You will do far more for the protection of your fisheries if you have at the head of the patrol system men who are immune from the many temptations that beset them in their very difficult work. I can vouch for what the hon. member (Mr. Dickie) said regarding salaries paid overseers. There was in the Naas district an overseer of considerable value to the government, a man who was faithful in every possible way. He has left that position. He was married and had two children, and he paid $40 a month in rent. I want to impress upon the minister the fact that out of a salary of $85 a month this man had to pay $4.75 towards superannuation, and that meant a good deal to him. I know that an improvement is being effected in regard to better salaries, but the importance of the patrol system on the Skeena cannot be exaggerated. For those who regard the matter lightly I would point out that this great area comprises five distinct divisions starting at Rivers inlet and going on to Smith's inlet, north to Addenbrook island to Bella Coola, Burke and Dease channels. The central division extends from Namu to Lowe inlet, and in the Skeena division there are Prince Rupert, Skeena river, Chatham sound, Naas river, Port Simpson to the boundary line.

The present patrol system in district number two is hopelessly inadequate. As an illustration of that I might refer the committee to the boats now in use. There is the Cloya, 54 feet long. She is three years old and her rate of travel is seven miles per hour. The Heron is eleven years old, is 45 horse-power, is 58 feet long and travels at eight miles per hour. The Hawk which is twenty years old is 32 feet long and has 14 horse-power. I computed roughly the obligations in connection with these boats to enable them to cover the area properly. It would be absolutely necessary for each of them to cover 200 miles per day, and inasmuch as they have to stop vessels for examination, which takes time, it necessarily follows that they must be properly equipped in the matter of speed. I would urge the minister to place in that district up to date patrol boats capable of a speed of fifteen miles per hour. They should have accommodation for four persons with extra accommodation for the officials.

I shall say just one word now in regard to aeroplanes. Though at first it was considered that the aeroplane might have met all the exigencies which it was called upon to meet, I do not think it does so to the extent suggested by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). Aeroplanes cannot operate successfully in cloudy, foggy weather, and most of the poaching is done on obscure days when the visibility is poor. A good deal of it takes place also at night. The aeroplane cannot meet these requirements completely, and though the government may consider the advisability of using them, I, still stress the importance of an efficient boat patrol. You want men as well as boats; the boats are essential but you cannot dispense with well trained men. So important is this fishing business to Canada that I am pleased to know that the government and particularly the minister is going the right way about it by providing up-to-date boats and, better still, men whose appointment will not be due to political pull. These men have charge of what may be considered a sacred treasure and if we did nothing else than provide for this great industry men of integrity we should be doing a good deal for the Dominion. Overseers should be given good wages so as to be removed from the sphere of temptation. I urge the minister to see to it that an up-to-date patrol system is put into operation in district No. 2 and wherever our fisheries demand them. Most important of all is it to pay the men good salaries. Just imagine a man engaged on these rough waters from morning till night from one end of the week to the other receiving a salary which any girl working in the post office on stated hours is paid—$85 a month. That is what the overseers in my constituency receive. I am pleased to learn that the minister and the Marine department are alive to the importance of good overseers, and I would ask him to have guardians placed at the mouth of the more important creeks in district No. 2 and along the whole coast.

Item agreed to.

Building fishways and clearing rivers, $20,000.

Mr. QUINN: The remarks I made in connection with the previous item have a bearing on this. There is a fish hatchery at Bedford in Halifax county, Nova Scotia, and in 1926 the assistant was removed for some cause or other and John A. Turner was appointed to the position. Turner was not in the position very long when he was removed to make way for his predecessor, who was reinstated. That gentleman has now been removed to the fishery station at St. John, New Brunswick, and the position in Bedford is vacant. I claim on behalf of John A. Turner that, having held the position in 1926, he should now be reinstated, not because of any special qualification but for the reason that he was the only applicant for the position. He has a good overseas record and, to quote from a letter I have received on his behalf:

He is the only returned soldier who has an application in and therefore the only eligible candidate under civil service regulations.

Will the minister seriously consider the matter and have John A. Turner reinstated?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that there is no vacancy. The man has been transferred temporarily and if a vacancy should arise later the appointment will have to be made by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. QUINN: He is transferred temporarily to New Brunswick?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. QUINN: That means that the fish hatchery at Bedford is undermanned. Cannot a man be appointed temporarily at Bedford for a couple of seasons?

Item agreed to.

To assist in the conservation and development of deep-sea fisheries and the demand for fish, $30,000.

Mr. NEILL: In what way is this money being spent?

Mr. CARDIN: This appropriation is to enable such work as searching for scallop beds to be conducted. As a result of such investigations new beds have been located not only in Nova Scotia, but in New Brunswick It is thought that there are still several unused areas about the coast that produce scallops in commercial quantities. The demand for scallops is much greater than the supply. If arrangements can be effected with the provincial governments to enable proper control of the beds to be exercised by the federal government, it is the intention to take up in as active a way as feasible the encouragement of oyster culture throughout the maritime provinces. Assistance to the Canadian Fisheries Association in a campaign to increase the demand for fish is also under consideration. In 1925 we assisted in such a campaign on the basis of 50 per cent of the cost up to $10,000. The results of this campaign were so satisfactory that the association is anxious to continue it. There is no question that the consumption of fish in Canada is rapidly increasing.

Mr. NEILL: Could not some of this money be spent on the Pacific coast in the development of oyster culture or crab or lobster culture?

Mr. SHORT: This has to do with scallops. My hon. friend is speaking of oysters, and oysters do not grow on the Pacific coast.

Mr. NEILL: Don't they?

Mr. SHORT: Not the kind we are familiar with on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. NEILL: Have you ever tried them?

Mr. SHORT: They are an entirely different species. The minister mentioned that this money was to be spent in the development of the scallop industry. I think that is a move in the right direction. The scallop fishery of Nova Scotia is rapidly developing, and it is getting to be an important branch of our shell fisheries. The demand for scallops is increasing all the time, and I hope the department will continue their investigations along the coast of Nova Scotia. I believe there are many places along that coast where excellent beds of scallops would be found but they are as yet undeveloped. This branch of work needs encouragement and any moneys spent upon it will, I am convinced, bring good results.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the maintenance of a fisheries intelligence bureau, $1,000.

Mr. QUINN: I observe there has been a decrease of $1,000 in this vote as compared with last year. What is the reason of that?

Mr. CARDIN: The full amount of this appropriation has not been needed; hence the reduction. Under this service the following work was carried on:

1. The collection of monthly statistics of the sea fisheries which are summarized and given to the press each month.
2. The publication of a quarterly bulletin containing these statistics in detail. The bulletin distributed to the trade and all directly concerned. The statistics are almost all collected by regular fishery officers in connection with their other work and at very little additional cost.

3. The collecting of information concerning supplies of bait, day by day, along certain stretches of the coast during the spring and summer months. The information is gathered by the officers of the department, who send it by telegram daily to certain ports where it is posted up for the information of masters of fishing vessels and those looking for bait.

I may add that last year the expenditure amounted to only $500.

Mr. QUINN: I must congratulate the minister upon the economy he has displayed in the conduct of his department. That economy has not been evident in any of the other departments of government because I have observed that in the case of every other department thousands and tens of thousands—may I say hundreds of thousands?—are being wasted; money is being spent without sufficient justification for the expenditure. But when it comes to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, so vitally important to my province and the maritime provinces generally, I notice that they are very anxious to keep down the expenditure. I must congratulate the minister upon that but I wish the heads of other departments would take a leaf out of his book and practise greater economy until we have succeeded in reducing our public debt. Until that time comes let them go very carefully in the matter of increasing the amount of their estimates.

Item agreed to.

Fish culture, $410,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Would the minister explain the reason for the increase of $120,000?

Mr. CARDIN: This proposed appropriation is to provide for the maintenance, repair and operation of hatcheries for the propagation of the more important anadromous and fresh water food fishes, and the construction, equipment and maintenance of the following hatcheries, which latter accounts for the increase.

New Hatcheries to be established

Lesser Slave lake.—whitefish hatchery.
Waterton lakes—trout hatchery.
Northern Saskatchewan—pickerel, perch and bass.
Antigonish, Nova Scotia—Atlantic salmon and speckled trout.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has there not been a removal of some hatcheries from the control of the department?

Mr. CARDIN: The hatcheries of the province of Ontario were transferred to the provincial authorities.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think the really important subject with which this department has to deal is the development of fish culture. Some three years ago I made some remarks on the subject and I should like to follow up those remarks, especially in view of the fact that in the Montreal Daily Star of April 11, 1925, there is an item headed as follows:

A half century of waste.

The article begins as follows:

After carrying on fish hatcheries for half a century the federal Department of Marine and Fisheries is now starting an investigation and series of experiments to find out whether after all it is worth while.

This is very much in line with the criticism which I will make and which, I hope, will be constructive and not destructive with relation to the work of the department. For years we have known in different parts of this country that fry and fingerlings have been put into the waters of rivers and lakes from which we have never seen one of these fish caught. It is quite true that in some parts the work has been successful, but I know of many places where there has been a lack of success and there is surely some reason for that. This subject was taken up by a section of the research council known as the biological board. These men made investigations, the result of which proved what many people had surmised, namely, that in many cases the fish culture had been successful as regards the development of fingerlings and fry; in other words that the hatchery had been successful in the development of these small fish, but that care had not been taken in the selection of waters and that consequently thousands of dollars under this vote had been absolutely wasted. This work was placed under the biological board which, I think in 1923, was put under the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

In order to show the necessity for this work I should state that during 1920 a report had been made in regard to lobster canning along the coast of the maritime provinces. A certain defect had arisen there in regard to lobster canning and the industry was suffering very much from it. A report was made that this was largely due to insanitary conditions. It was fairly well accepted that this might be the cause of a great deal of the trouble in this regard. However we find that in the following year there was still evidence of very unsatisfactory conditions prevailing. In fact in spite of the report of the biological board or the scientific men who were taking up this work, we found that the question of sanitation was being absolutely neglected. The 1922 report states:

I regret very much to have to report that over 75 per cent of the lobster canners still continue to violate one or more of the fundamental laws of sanitary science.

The final clause reads:

The conditions in and around factories as recorded in my report for 1920 are almost exactly the conditions recorded in 1921.

The object of the board was to standardize this work to produce a standard system of sanitation around these canning factories. The result was that whenever an attempt was made to put this into force, the large factories would refuse to do so because the smaller ones were not doing it. Some of the smaller ones went out of business because they were forced to put some more money into their factories.

After the biological board was incorporated in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the matter was followed up. Two stations were formed and three principles were to mark the work of those two stations. The method was to apply scientific principles to fish culture. At the head of the board there was Doctor Knight who had a great deal of experience in biological work. That gentleman is no longer on the board; he has resigned, and now I come to what I consider is the important thing. His resignation was made with the intention of securing better results in the department. I hope the minister will take the criticism which I am going to make as being of a constructive nature and that the treatment which Doctor Knight received will not be received by the gentleman who has replaced him.

The cause of Doctor Knight's resignation was distinctly want of coöperation between officials of the department and the biological board. That want of coöperation is exemplified in the class that will be held at Truro. To go back, let me say that the object of the research council is to develop a class of scientific research men in all departments in this country. The biological board set itself to the task of developing the present officials into some kind of scientific investigators, but it found that it could not go ahead owing to lack of data, and that the data could be gathered only by scientific operators or officials. The board decided to open up these classes and to bring the officials to them so that they could give them some instruction in this scientific work. It is quite true that many of these officials met in this class, but they exercised a passive resistance to the work. It may be quite true that the work at first may be a little heavy, a little beyond their grasp, but in time, just as the prospector in our mining fields has become an expert in his work, so these officials would gradually become experienced, so far as you can make them, along scientific lines.

The point is that in this work the department permitted a condition characterized by an absolute want of coöperation to exist, so much so that Doctor Knight felt called upon to resign. Now that this department is being reorganized and put under a new method of administration, I would like to draw the attention of the department to the fact that they must realize that advance in fish culture, in the whole fishing industry, will be developed by the study of these scientific men. That is the object of the research council, and if the department does not coöperate with it, these men, scientific men as they are, must drop out and leave. They have been given a fairly good start and I believe progress can be made with better coöperation.

I went up the Pacific coast to Alaska and I visited some twenty to twenty-two canneries on that coast. I was amazed at the degree of sanitation that prevailed around an industry of that kind, because any person who has gone into a cannery and watched the operation of bringing these fish from the sea, cleaning them and putting them into the cans, will understand that it is a difficult matter to adhere to sanitary methods. I was absolutely amazed to find that in all of these twenty-two canneries they had developed sanitary methods. In all the canneries I visited I found only one person handling the fish with bare hands. All the other employees in all these canneries were handling the fish with gloves, and were dressed in absolutely sanitary costumes. When you come to the Atlantic coast and deal with the matter of lobster curing, there is far more reason for sanitary methods there, because the anatomical features of this fish make it very difficult to prevent the tearing of the intestinal tract, causing the development of bacteria, and so on. These investigators and inspectors would find that after the lobster had been boiled and prepared for canning, instead of being put into the can at once, it would be left out for some hours during the day or perhaps left out over night. The fishing industry in Canada is now a large one, and it is a matter of importance to us that the canning should be done along sanitary lines and according to scientific methods. I trust now that the matter has been brought to the attention of the minister and the department, in view of the fact that we are going to have a new administration in connection with fishery matters—I am not censuring anybody, because I know that this work must be carried on under men equipped with scientific knowledge—that we shall hear of great progress in the future. The success of this industry means a lot to Canada. If our canning is not satisfactory and our canned fish is not acceptable to the retail trade, the industry suffers because of its reputation. I would like to be assured that the department will be more active in coöperating in these matters in the future. If some official stands in the way of coöperation, I believe that the industry is greater than the official, and he must be given to understand that in this as in all other matters science is going to play its part, and no official can stand in the way and block it.

Mr. CARDIN: I may say that the closest coöperation does exist at the present time between all the officers of the department and the board.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I thought the minister might say that, yet here is a motion passed by the research committee in 1925. I tried to get the report for 1926, but could not. The motion reads:

> That the committee believes that the coöperation set forth in resolution 3, meeting of the executive committee of the board for January 3, 1925, has not been freely given, and desires to so report to the executive committee.

Mr. QUINN: May I ask what encouragement is being given by the department to the average citizen who is interested in the development of our fisheries, particularly the salmon and trout industries? I know of a man in Nova Scotia who is very much interested in the culture of salmon and trout, and who has as a result several year's work established, something along the line of hatcheries for the development of the ova and the fish fry. He appeared before the officials of the department and asked to be allowed to give a demonstration. No doubt one of the deputies will remember the case. This man's name is Parry. He was asked to take his plant over to St. John, New Brunswick, but owing to pecuniary circumstances he has not been able to follow that up. He did remove the plant over there, but was not given the opportunity of supervising the working of the plant. I would point out to the minister and his deputy that it is in the interests of this country to encourage in every possible way men of this kind who are willing to volunteer their services and information for the development of our fisheries. I ask from the department their earnest consideration for such men as Mr. Parry, who are willing and ready to give their knowledge and their services to the department for the encouragement of the fish industry. I think there should be some financial assistance given to such men. We vote money to help the farmers and to encourage different industries throughout the country. Why should we not encourage such men as the one I have mentioned, who is interested in the development of the fisheries of this country? I would like to have a statement from the minister. Does he know of this case?

Mr. CARDIN: We know of Mr. Parry, and I am informed by the director of fisheries that he has been told that we were quite ready to provide the necessary facilities to make a trial of his method. We are doing the same thing in regard to everyone who is in a position to offer any valuable new suggestion. The department is always ready to receive new suggestions and to give them every consideration.

Mr. QUINN: I quite appreciate that, but this gentleman happens to be a poor apple orchardist in Kings county, and in the last two or three years the fruit industry has not been very successful, and he has not made much money. His time is taken up largely with the development of his orchard, and I understand that he cannot afford to lose the time and money in going over there to supervise the working of his plant. I ask the minister to take that into consideration, and to see if it would not be possible to allow this gentleman something for the loss of his time when engaged on a work that is for the benefit of Canada.

Mr. BARBER: I fully approve of this vote. I expect that a small portion of it at least will go to the province of British Columbia. I know they are carrying on excellent work in that province. There is just one matter on which I wish to question the minister; it is a matter I have already discussed with the department, and that is the question of restocking some of the rivers on the lower mainland near the international boundary in the province of British Columbia. I believe that there is some objection on the part of the department to restocking these rivers with certain kinds of game fish, such as cut-throat and speckled trout. The department consider that they could safely, in the interest of salmon culture, restock these streams with steelhead, and it was indicated that it would be possible to hatch this species of trout in the hatcheries in that vicinity. I would like to know if provision is being made under this vote for something along that line.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the matter is in hand and will be provided for next year.

Mr. BARBER: That is in the fall of 1927?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Marine and fisheries—salaries, $502,980.

Mr. CARDIN: That is civil government, salaries of the employees.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the salary of Hon, J. C. Patterson, commissioner to investigate titles of Great Britain to lands in the Arctic seas, $2,400.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item? It is an old one.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: He is a fine old gentleman.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

National Defence—cadet services, $500,000.

Miss MACPHAIL: What reason will the minister give for the increase in the cadet vote from $400,000 to $500,000?

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): The reason of the increase is that there have been actually organized, but not authorized, some forty-nine cadet units which have been functioning without any assistance from the department, and the amount of $100,000 will not very much more than take care of them. I will give the hon. member the number of these units and the provinces in which they are located.

Miss MACPHAIL: We shall be very glad to have that.

Mr. RALSTON: Four in Alberta, four in British Columbia, two in Manitoba, one in New Brunswick, five in Nova Scotia, fifteen in Ontario, sixteen in Quebec and two in Saskatchewan.

Miss MACPHAIL: I understand they are having province-wide shooting contests. Someone was telling me that where one boy won a contest he was chosen to compete against a boy from another town, and finally it came to be a province-wide contest. What does the minister know about these contests?

[Mr. Barber.]

Mr. RALSTON: There is a contest in which these teams participate. Scores are kept, and the contest is for a trophy presented by His Majesty. The South African boys won the contest for the last two years, and I think the Canadian boys were second.

Miss MACPHAIL: I have always been opposed to the military authorities having any influence on the educational system of the different provinces. Other Dominion departments do not interfere with the matter of education in the provinces. The provinces themselves are supposed to control education, and I am therefore opposed to the increase of $100,000 in the cadet vote, which increase is evidently due to the number of units that are being asked for. I believe cadet training is military training. It is supervised by the Department of National Defence and is paid for by that department. It certainly was the idea of the founder, Sir Frederick Borden, to build up a citizen soldiery. Up till now, as I said a moment ago, the vote has been $400,000. To-day $100,000 is to be added, and the total of $500,000 I believe will be supplemented by the Strathcona trust fund. Possibly the minister could tell us what will be contributed by that trust fund.

Mr. RALSTON: The Strathcona trust fund is $500,000, the interest on which is available for the giving of prizes to cadets in the various provinces. The money is distributed on the basis of the school population.

Miss MACPHAIL: In its issue of February 24, 1927, the Ottawa Journal very clearly pointed out that cadet training is military in character. It said:

If Agnes Macphail M.P., doesn't understand the purpose of high school cadets, and the need of men of courage who can shoot straight, the white women in Shanghai do.

I thank the Journal for that item. I think the newspaper is right and that cadet training is military training. I have always maintained this because I cannot imagine the Department of National Defence asking for a vote of half a million dollars and going to the trouble of having provincial contests, training officers, and providing uniforms and arms unless the organization was entirely military in character.

Mr. QUINN: To defend the women of Canada and every other country.

Miss MACPHAIL: That is an old joke. Nobody believes that any more.

Mr. QUINN: It is no joke, it is an absolute fact.

Miss MACPHAIL: The purpose of cadets, then, is to produce men who can shoot straight; or to state it more brutally, to teach the boys of Canada to be "killers of men." I think anyone who has watched cadets training before these buildings could hardly deny the fact that cadet training is military training. Every time the militia troops parade, to receive military visitors or at military funerals and displays, the cadets take part, clearly identifying themselves with the military machine. Military men train them. The Department of National Defence pays the bill. We can safely conclude that cadet training is military training.

The Teachers' Journal in an issue of a few years ago told of cadet reviews in military barracks in Winnipeg at which winning teams of school cadets took 28 to 34 seconds respectively to bring machine guns into action. The same journal states that teachers in military district No. 10 would get free transportation and subsistence while taking the cadet officers' training course in Tuxedo barracks, Winnipeg. Two years ago the Minister of National Defence assured us it was true that the instructor of cadets received two dollars per head for each cadet up to fifty, and one dollar per head for each cadet over that number. It is easy to see how the larger salary paid the instructor will make him a good recruiting officer, and how a boycott against boys not in the corps can be effectively used, and I believe is used, to swell the number of cadets.

There are many people whose boys are taking cadet training who say: It's just physical training. This, I believe, is an error, and if to-day I can but establish in the minds of even some Canadian parents that cadet training is not physical but military training, I shall think it worth while to make this effort. The development of a healthy body, if considered at all, is considered only as a means to an end in military training, not as an end in itself. The aim is to make soldiers out of boys. Men who have specialized in physical training affirm that military drill is not good physical training. Dudley A. Sargent, physical instructor of Harvard, physical instructor and medical doctor, has said:

> Taking the most favourable view possible of military drill as a physical exercise, we are led to conclude that its strained positions and closely localized movements do not afford the essential requisites for developing the muscles and improving respiration and circulation, thereby improving the general health and condition of the system.

Let me quote now from an extract taken from the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal:

> This defect, we are pleased to state, is recognized by the great military nations of Europe, and measures are taken to give all the recruits from three to twelve months gymnastic training to develop them as men before they are expected to conform to the requirements of the soldier.

I could quote many other authorities to the same effect, but I will give only one more. Mr. Claxton, former United States Commissioner of Education, said:

> All schools should provide such means of physical culture through outdoor games and exercises as will result in the best possible control of the body and all its members. I do not believe that military drill in our public schools is the best means to this end and I feel quite certain that rifle practice in the schools is undesirable. There is so much else that is better for all purposes that can be provided at much less cost.

During the war "setting up" exercises were freely used to counteract the bad results of military drill. I believe all military schools employ physical training in order to keep their men fit. In games, in the gymnasium and on the track boys and girls dress for vigorous exercise. They aim, one might say, to get up a sweat; but cadets go out in stiff-looking, warm clothing and carry heavy guns, and they have all the appearance of trying to keep cool. I believe that our youth, both boys and girls, need physical training, but that training should be of the kind that is pleasing to them. To be good physical training it should be something which in itself is so pleasing that those engaged in it become intensely interested. Let me quote John Langdon-Davies of England on this point. In his book, A Public School in War Time, I find the following at page nine:

> Physical training which is to form character must appeal to the child as a pleasure. A pleasant thing is one which appeals to healthy instincts, and this can never be the case of routine drill. This last has to rely on something else than healthy pleasure for its incentives, thus proving itself to be the bending of human nature out of its natural course for the sake of an external object, and is therefore the antithesis of education.

I should like to make it clear that it is not the sum of money involved that I am objecting to. I would favour a sum exceeding the amount now in the estimates, to be paid by the Department of Health to the Department of Education in the various provinces for them to use for physical training, but not for military training. I think we could safely model our physical training on the Swedish system. We should use the beauty of colour, music and form in training youth physically, but all military forms should be eliminated.

We know Sweden leads the world in physical training. As a matter of fact, in no other country have results been so striking, and she sticks to her athletic sports and games and does not indulge at all in military training. Is it not strange that Canada is increasing the military training of cadets at this time? I see no cause for it. I fail to understand why a department of the Dominion government is inducing the boys of Canada to take miltary training. France, after the crushing defeat of 1871 began to train her school boys to the practice of arms, but in 1890, after fifteen years experience, she abandoned the cadet system, not because the problem of defence was less urgent, but because military training was arresting the physical development of her secondary schoolboys. Australia tried the military system of training, but previous to the war her director general, after a thorough study of the problem in Switzerland, Sweden, Germany, France and England, recommended a system of games and organized athletic sports as the best training for schoolboys. I might quote other countries, but I will leave it there.

John Stuart Mill has said that all attempts by the state to bias the conclusions of its subjects on disputed points are evil. And that is just what the state is doing by influencing the education of the provinces. Education is being used as a political institution to form habits of thought and to circumscribe knowledge in such a way as to make one set of opinions inevitable. That is my greatest objection to military training The thing it does to the boy's mind is far more disastrous than the injury it does to his body. A great educationist, Mr. J. L. Paton, headmaster of Manchester grammar school writes:

> The people who instil military training permanently into our schools seem to me to be closing the gates of hope upon mankind.

These are very strong words coming from a great educationist. When in Canada not long ago he said practically the same thing. Bertrand Russell has said:

> I think it would be a real gain if men could be made to see that militarism is a form of cowardice. It is a desire for security that makes the common man acquiesce in the schemes of the militarists. Armaments are the most foolish method imaginable for seeking security, but fear makes men unable to think clearly and so they cling to old absurdities.

In our own families, as every one of us knows, active goodwill is the central principle that keeps the unit together, and that is true of our schools and of every form of government. It is true of every form of group life. If we have not active goodwill there can be no real progress. The world stands today in need of that spirit and, laugh me to scorn if you will, I think it is the only road to security. We cannot find security by arming ourselves to the very limit. I do not believe that preparedness for war will bring peace. What we carefully prepare for we usually get. If we prepare for war we get war; if we prepare for peace we shall get peace.

Mr. CLARK: Were we prepared for war in 1914, either in Canada or in Great Britain?

Miss MACPHAIL: Great Britain, I think, had been carefully preparing for war for a long time. She was not as unprepared as we have been led to believe. To my mind cadet training is the most vicious part of our national defence scheme. I have never attacked a permanent army if other people want that sort of thing, but I do object to imposing upon boys our own ideas instead of letting them think for themselves. I do not believe in imposing the thoughts of age upon the mind of youth. If we do not know the way out let us keep it to ourselves. Let us give the boys a chance to come to their own conclusions.

We may safely conclude that war settles nothing. It causes other wars by arousing hatreds. It brings unemployment, poverty, misery, crime and death. We can call as witnesses to this truth Viscount Grey, Lloyd George, Earl Haig, Sir Ian Hamilton, Wilson, Ponsonby, Morel, Sir Arthur Currie and a score of others. I will not tire the House by citing further authorities but they are innumerable. Yet military training in the schools leads the youth to think of it as the one method of settling international disputes. Military training is one of the ways of capturing the schools and colleges for the old philosophy. And it works. The militarist knows that all the talk about peace conferences, world courts and leagues of nations will fall on deaf ears if he can instil the war psychology into the minds of our youth. A boy who is trained in military methods will naturally think of war the moment trouble arises.

In the stone age men made use of brute force when groups quarrelled. We have progressed far since then. Surely no one in this House, even the most ardent Tory, will suggest for a moment that we have not moved forward considerably since the stone age. We live in a scientific age and our knowledge is vast. Great numbers of inventions, coupled with the sciences, have revolutionized our methods of living, but we still use force as the means of settling international disputes. Science has made war much more destructive than it was in the distant past, and it will be still more terrible in the future. Yet war is an institution which is mothered by the state and sanctioned by the church.

An hon. MEMBER: Not all the churches.

Miss MACPHAIL: No not all; most of them. Around war has been woven romance and adventure, beauty of form, colour and sound. It has been given a greater place in song and story than any other one theme. But we know that it is a grinning demon. We know that it has neither glory nor beauty. The best literature of to-day is almost a unit in denouncing war. Wars are now world-embracing, and civilization can stand few more of them. It is more than likely that it would find it impossible to stand one more. Would it not be more sensible to leave the minds of youth free to study the causes of war and the means of removing those causes? The Women's International League for Peace on July, 1926, in convention in Dublin put themselves on record as follows:

> We women of the W.I.L. are of the opinion that the time has come to educate all children for peace; we hold it to be a crime against the souls of ripening youth to picture war to them as a necessity, or even as a moral duty; to train them in war-handicraft and instruct them in the art of killing. We consider the present-day militarization of youth to be a vestige of barbarism; and that this militarization takes place simultaneously with the convening of disarmament conferences and court of arbitration proceedings, with the assurance of the "Locarno Peace spirit", we hold to be one of the greatest hypocrisies in the history of mankind.

That resolution does not overstate it. I am often led to wonder how Christian nations can find comfort for their consciences in the wholesale slaughter of human life. The soul of every one of us here to-day revolts at the thought of murder, but soars in ecstasy if the murder be multiplied sufficiently to be called war. Wars are fought to gain markets, to extend territory, to increase investments, to protect property, to procure some necessary raw product. For instance, we fight to secure oil in order that we may have oil to fight with. I do not think that can be doubted. There is more fuss about oil now than about any other one thing. We must therefore conclude that civilization values property above human life. Fear is one cause of war and fear can be largely eliminated by early training. Military training in the schools thrives on fear and produces it. Military training in schools creates a bombastic military spirit of toy soldierism. Here is a picture of cadets parading, preparing for the annual review on Empire day, and among them there are three little chaps, little drummers, three of the youngest drummers in the massed bugle band. Reading from left to right they are:

> William Wilkinson, of Fern Avenue school, aged six years.
> Chester Mueller, of Kent school, aged five years.
> Thomas Martin, of Park school, aged seven years.

Some returned soldier sent me this clipping and he had written in pencil at the top, with a dart pointing towards the little chaps:

> Over in Germany they teach the children to be soldiers, so we were told in 1914. In Canada we wait until they are grown up.

I do not know how any of you can get any pleasure out of thinking that boys of five, six and seven years were parading with bands, deeming themselves soldiers. But there is certainly no comfort in it for me.

The number of cadets has very largely increased. The minister proved that by showing that they need $100,000 to take care of new units. I have not the figures for the year ending March 31st, 1926, but for the year ending March 31st, 1925, there were 40,686 more cadets in Canada than there were in the year 1920. That is to say the number of cadets increased in five years by 40,686, the greatest increase taking place in Quebec and Ontario—and I would not like to say that the best thought of Canada is in those provinces, much as I would like to do so. There is world-wide movement against war, and particularly against militarizing the mind of youth. The youths of Germany, of France, of England, of the United States—in fact of any country you can name—have risen in revolt against being harnessed by the military powers. They are sick of it. They see that the thing has not led them anywhere. In Canada too we have heard among our people some indications of a revolt against militarism. In that connection I suppose the labour movement in Canada should be given first place; it certainly should have that position throughout the world. Not only is labour opposed to militarism but the farmers are also. The same feeling is evident among women's organizations like the National Council of Women and the organizations which represent the more advanced thought on this question, like the Women's International League for Freedom, and the Christian Student movement. There are not, I believe, in Canada, any International War Resisters. The Teachers' International Federation, which is to meet in July of this year in Toronto, is to discuss the elimination of militarism from among our school children. Canada has not taken as forward a step in the matter of discarding the military machine as some countries have, possibly because we have not suffered as much from war as some other countries, and do not know from actual experience how terrible it is. But there are some gleams of light even here. In the province of British Columbia last year—and they are preparing again for the event this year—many of the schools observed a "good-will day" on May 18th. That day was decided upon by the Teachers' Federation as the day on which the school children of the country should express what thoughts they had on good-will. This year, I am very glad to say, the city of Winnipeg has consented to the schools of that city also observing the good-will day on May 18th. The Winnipeg Tribune had a very interesting editorial on the matter quite recently, pointing out the need for celebrations of the kind. Children going to school should learn that the world is a much smaller place than it used to be, and that the children of all countries ought to be good friends and neighbours. But the lessons on that subject should not be limited to one day in the year. More frequent lessons would impress the subject on their minds more indelibly.

Resolutions have been passed by numerous public bodies in Canada in opposition to military training. For that reason I wondered why the vote for this purpose was increased at this particular time. Even in the city of Toronto the Ontario Educational Association passed two or three resolutions condemning military training and any teaching of a warlike spirit in the schools. A couple of years ago a survey was made of the public school system in British Columbia by two educationalists, Doctor Putman of Ottawa, and Dr. George Weir of the university of British Columbia. On page 95 of their report they say this in regard to military training:

> We take strong exception to the plan of having any part of this work—

Speaking of organized play and supervised games—

> —done by militia officers, who naturally give it a military bent.

Miss Macphail.]

Then on page 396 they say:

> We think the schools would suffer no real loss if every vestige of military training were eliminated from the school program.

I think the Prime Minister received a letter dated February 28th, 1927, from the Trades and Labour Council of Calgary, protesting against this increase in military training, and against the increased expenditure for national defence. That letter was signed by J. E. Young, secretary of the council. The Saskatchewan school trustees held a convention in Moose Jaw on February 16, 17 and 18, of the present year and resolution No. 19 passed by them was in effect as follows:

> We are opposed to the war propaganda, individualism and competition that we are teaching in our schools; and we go on record as being in favour of changing our history books and readers, and the teaching of peace and coöperation.

The students of the university of British Columbia revolted at military training in that institution. There was some talk about military training being made compulsory in the university, and an editorial appeared in the university paper taking a very strong stand against it. It declared:

> There has never been any wholehearted attempt to make militarists out of the students here, since the war, for the simple reason that the returned men at this college would not stand for it. Now that practically all of them have graduated, the tom-tom is beginning to beat once more.

It is quite evident that the students of that university are against allowing themselves to be driven where the military machine wants them to go. The Board of Education of Cleveland, according to the Christian Science Monitor, in its issue of January 13, 1926, came out in favour of eliminating cadet training from their curriculum, and it was to become effective last June.

I have not made any real attempt to gather all the protests that have been made against militarism or military training, but I have quoted sufficient to show that in Canada, indeed on the North American continent, there is a great body of public opinion in revolt against military training for our young people. It is evident that youth itself is in revolt against many old time institutions and customs, and they are very much in revolt against war. Speaking figuratively we can look upon Canada as a youth. When this nation is compared with other nations of the world, it is a very youthful one indeed. Such being the case, Canada should take its place in the ranks of those who have risen against war and all that it means. I ask against what enemies are we preparing the youth of our country to fight? Apparently we have no enemies. Therefore I should say that Canada is in an ideal position to lead the world towards other methods of settling international disputes.

If one-half of the things that we hear about Canada being an autonomous, self-governing nation are true, we are not going to be embroiled in all the wars of the continent of Europe. We live on the continent of North America, and it does not look as though we are going to have any enemy against which we need arm ourselves. The only one that I can think of is the United States, and we would have a tremendous time arming ourselves against the United States should they want to annex us, which I do not believe they want to do. Some one in conversation said to me just the other day: Why should we sit still and accept the protection of the United States? I say: Why should we not? I think we should take advantage of every position which is naturally ours.

I wish the parliament of Canada could for five minutes view this question of militarizing the minds of youth as I view it. If you want to train grown men to be soldiers, you can do so; they are grown up and they know what they want to do; but leave the boys alone. I wish the people would say to the Department of National Defence and the government: Take your hands off the schoolboys of Canada. That is all I am asking the government to do. If they want to increase their military appropriations in other directions, I do not suppose we shall be able to prevent it. I do not know whether it is true that about 40 per cent of the expenditure of Canada goes for wars, past, present and future; but if it is true, it is a terrific waste of money; it is far too much money. It is much more than the thing is worth, and if we would spend that amount of money in making life better for the people who are alive rather than in attempting to kill somebody, we would have gone a long way towards eliminating the causes of war.

I do not intend to detain the committee any longer. I will say once more to the government: If you are paying for the instruction of the men who train cadets; if you are buying the uniforms; if you are supplying the guns; if you are giving the prizes which I think it is said were given by His Majesty—at any rate somebody is giving them and I suppose the people of some country are paying for them—if you are doing everything you can to induce these boys to take military training against their own inclination—because I do not think the boys are very enthusiastic about it—you cannot wonder the number of units is increasing all the time. All I can say is that this expenditure will increase as time goes on, and the result will be that the minds of the boys in Canada will be biased while they are growing up and they will look upon war as the only method of settling international disputes. Because I do not believe it is the best method and because I think the government is doing the boys of Canada the greatest possible injustice it can do to them, I move that this item be reduced by $499,999.

Mr. BRADY: This is the first occasion on which I feel it incumbent upon me to object to the observations made by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). This is the first time that I find myself in utter opposition to any hon. member in the presentation of matters to this House. On the question of cadet training, I can present to the hon. member for Southeast Grey an experience of twenty-eight years in cadet work, not merely in Canada, but in Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. Tennyson once said: "Self-knowledge, self-reverence and self-control are the three great powers in the development of character and morality," and in cadet training we have taught and inculcated that in a degree which is perhaps not known by the hon. member but is known by all who have seen the effects of cadet training in the high schools and particularly in high schools throughout Canada.

I am sorry to have absolutely to oppose the views of the hon. member. I would like to be able to agree with her, but in a question of this sort we must be honest and we must recognize the fact that there is nothing military in the training given to-day to cadets in the high schools of this country. Furthermore the physical training is absolutely up to date and commensurate with the best improvements in the physical development of our youth. I would ask any hon. member just to ponder over this question: What is the purpose and aim of the educators of our youth in Canada to-day? It is this: To make good citizens; to make law-abiding citizens, to make citizens who will live up to their responsibilities. I say unhesitatingly and without fear of contradiction that cadet training in our schools to-day is bringing out from our youth all those attributes of honour, discipline and self-control that go to make a great country and a great nation.

Furthermore it is wrong, it is, to say the least, improper, that a viewpoint is given out to our people and to this House that our youth are made biased by the training which they receive in those schools. I would like the hon. member for Southeast Grey to visit the schools in British Columbia and see the actual conditions and the teachers who have charge of those boys. I would challenge her to see even a semblance, even a very shadow, of that military dragon which she has lifted up and presented to many people who are ignorant of the facts that lie behind this cadet training.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps the hon. gentleman has not read the report to which the hon. member for Southeast Grey has referred, namely, an inquiry into conditions in the schools in British Columbia, in which report the commissioners spoke very strongly against the cadet training.

Mr. BRADY: I had a part in the report of that commission. I likewise assisted in a small way in the work of the commission. Whether that report was adverse or not, you will always have opinions adverse to every scheme that has as its foundation the purpose of ennobling our youth and making them law-abiding citizens.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I hope the hon. member does not suggest that Doctor Putman and the other commissioner were opposed.

Mr. BRADY: I am quite pleased when I hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre refer to Doctor Putman. I know him personally. Of course, in any scheme, no matter what it is, there are imperfections, and he may have instanced a few things that perhaps he would like to see improved, but I say unhesitatingly that if there is one thing that has been for the good of Canada, it is the cadet training that is carried on in the high schools of the Dominion, and I say that that training should be continued until there is not one boy in the length and breadth of Canada who will not know how to stand up straight and control his body as well as his mind. That is the purpose of cadet training. Everybody knows that the newspapers to-day are full of instances showing how our youth are undisciplined and unwilling to accept authority. They want to go the wild and easy way. I say that there is no form of moral discipline more natural in its application and more worthy of commendation than the cadet training that is given in the high schools of British Columbia; I cannot speak for the other provinces.

As to handling a rifle, you would imagine from all this talk about shooting, that every boy is being taught to prepare for the day when he may point that weapon directly towards the enemy. That is not so. I will tell you why we are teaching the boys to shoot. There is not a season in which we have not scores of deaths through negligence and lack of knowledge of handling a rifle. By our cadet training we have reduced to a minimum the number of accidents in the hunting field in British Columbia. We teach the boy that in order to shoot well he must have perfect control over his muscles, that his brain and body must coördinate perfectly. I say that it is absolutely necessary that our boys be trained in the use of the rifle, not for military purposes by any means. I wish that those who are antagonistic to cadet training would only do the intelligent thing and go and visit the schools where this training is being carried on before they oppose it. I am speaking from experience, and I am very sorry indeed that I should be called upon to protest strongly against what I consider the exaggerated picture of cadet training that has been presented by the hon. member for Southeast Grey. I say that if we had more of this training, we would have less crime, and we would have a better direction of the energy of our youth into proper channels.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There are a few remarks that I should like to make with regard to this general question. I feel sorry in some ways that we have in the present Minister of National Defence a gentleman whom I think we all very highly respect. It makes it perhaps a little more difficult to speak against his estimates, but I am quite sure that none of us here thinks that when an hon. member speaks against these estimates he is speaking against any individual. I should also like to make it very clear that when we speak against militarism, we are not in any way making light of those who very sincerely think that that is the best way of defending their country. But we do say that there are other ways, as we see it, and we hope that our friends who differ from us will at least do us the courtesy of thinking that we are not doing this simply because we are cowards or because we have no love for our country.

I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Southeast Grey on her very excellent presentation of this case. I do not wish to make a speech of any length, because all I could do would be to endorse what she has already said so well. I would, however, like to congratulate the women of Canada upon having sent as their first representative to this parliament one who has taken such forward ground with regard to a great problem of this character.

Mr. CANTLEY: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Someone says no. I quite recognize that there are differences of opinion. Whilst we may have considered that in the past it was by force of arms we would best be able to protect our country, the war has taught a very large number of people that war is absolutely futile in settling any question whatever. I know that there are a large number of people in Canada who believe that. Perhaps they have not had the opportunity of voicing their sentiments as freely as I do; perhaps some are a little bit loath to voice their sentiments, but there are a large number of people in this country who are thinking along these lines. We do not stand alone in this. Reference has been made to the labour movement. Tens of thousands of labour men went overseas and fought in the war, and the Trades and Labour Congress has endorsed this movement. The Canadian Council of Agriculture, representing the great farm movement in this country, has also endorsed it, as well as a number of the churches. The United church, for instance, has passed this question of cadet training to all its courts, and it is now being discussed from coast to coast. More than that, I would point out that a large number of our younger men, headed by those who were themselves at the front, have decided that they cannot hope for any good result from any war in the future, and they are looking to some peaceful way of settling troubles in the days to come.

Perhaps we might have been prepared for some exhibition of militarism for some little time after the war. Long after a storm has ceased to blow we know that the waves run high, but after a while they begin to subside, and I had hoped that the military feeling would gradually subside as we got away from the war. Unfortunately, however, the increased estimates before us would seem to show that the forces that would carry on our affairs along the old lines are very strong indeed, and one of the greatest troubles about this military question is that we have professional militarists whose job is involved, men who are at the thing in season and out, trying in every way to use their influence to perpetuate it. They may be quite honest and sincere in their viewpoint. I am not suggesting that they are not, but they are professional militarists; in season and out of season they are pressing this matter, and the great mass of public opinion has no very easy way of manifesting itself. I should like to ask the minister if some time in the course of this debate he will be good enough to answer the question which I asked his predecessor and to which I received no answer, that is, against whom are we arming? With regard to any expenditure that is proposed the minister is expected to state its purpose. With regard to military matters the minister merely gives us in this case the specific purpose for which the expenditure is asked, but he does not state the great objective of the whole of the military estimates and expenditures. I ask, against whom are we arming? It is unthinkable that we could ever hope to fight the United States. I cannot think that after the last European war it is possible for Canadians to be dragged into another European war. I cannot think that we are going to travel over the Pacific to get into trouble in Asia. No country is more favourably situated than Canada for being in the forefront in a great peace movement. We have everything to gain by such a movement and nothing to lose. So far as external enemies are concerned, will the minister tell us definitely against whom we are arming? Some people have said that we are arming against the radicals in this country. I cannot believe that that statement was made seriously. Are we proposing to settle questions of domestic trouble by means of force? It seems to me we are surely in a position where we can remove causes of friction or misunderstanding in some other way. I cannot think that our Canadian people are going to be militarized to that extent. Against whom are we arming?

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): What is the cause of our great security at the present time?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Somebody suggests war weariness, that is part of it. It is because we are not an aggressive nation. No one wants to attack us and we do not want to attack anyone.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): The answer is that Great Britain is armed to the teeth and prepared to protect her possessions overseas as well as her home shores.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quite believe that that is the common position taken by many, but I do not believe it is a correct one. I do not believe that we are one bit safer because of the British army or navy.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is my opinion, and it is corroborated by the history of past wars in which Canada has been involved. In all probability the answer would be given that preparation for war is an assurance against war. Here again I think the experiences of the last war absolutely demonstrated that such is not the case. If any country was prepared, it was the great country of Germany, and her preparations were absolutely useless, as we all know to-day. Preparation for war is no assurance against war; in fact it is the surest way in which we can be led into war. I think that is the point to which we are coming and to which the thinking of the world is coming. The other day a despatch came from Geneva, and I will read one paragraph of it. Notwithstanding the treaty of Versailles, notwithstanding the Great war, as a matter of fact we are witnessing in Europe greater preparations for war than have existed in almost any other period. This despatch reads:

> With the failure of the commission to wring from Europe's leading conscript nations any basis for actual reduction of armies, no greater success was expected with either naval or aerial armaments. That means Europe's five leading nations, England, France, Russia, Italy and Germany, together with Japan, will continue to maintain their present armaments budgets which now average $1,500,000,000 annually, while the world total armaments budget, of which the bulk is European, will remain in the neighborhood of $3,000,000,000 annually.
> England alone now is spending nearly $13 per capita annually on armaments; France nearly $6; Italy nearly $4; Japan $3.70; Russia $1.50, and Germany, $1.70. In addition to the direct expenditure, the world's leading conscript nations will continue to deprive their young manhood of one of the most productive periods of its life for military training, while reserve classes up to an advanced age must remain under obligation to sudden summons to the colors.
> National Security
> The leading conscript nations of the world are France, Italy, Belgium, Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. With Japan, those nations, claiming the necessity for national security, have refused to accept any provision that would alter the present size of their armies, decrease their maximum permanent reserves or change their conscript systems.

Mr. QUINN: Has my hon. friend compared the figures he has just quoted with the amount of the premiums paid throughout the world for fire protection and fire insurance? Why do we insure our properties against fire? Is it because we want them to be burned?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, but the parallel is not a good one by any means. Why set fire,—except as we do sometimes in backfiring on the prairie,—to one corner of your building in order to protect the whole building? Why store a powder magazine in one corner of it in order to protect it? By its very nature military preparation is the thing most likely to lead to hostilities. We have recognized that very clearly with regard to quarrels between individuals; we have largely disarmed individuals, and to-day we are safer unarmed than we would be if every man carried a gun.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is the reason why we have a police force.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, but I would suggest that as years go on we are resorting less and less to force, and by our social adjustments we are actually removing the need for police of the older type.

Mr. DICKIE: If England had not been at least partly prepared for war, if the British ever had the same idea as my hon. friend has enunciated to-day, what would have happened when Germany invaded France?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not want to go into that question.

Mr. DICKIE: Let me tell my hon. friend that the result would be that Great Britain to-day would be eating sauerkraut.

Mr. DUFF: It is a pretty good dish.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should have thought that arguments of that kind would not be used during the last two or three years, after so many books have been written dealing with the causes of the last war. A great many people, no doubt, have not yet read the very many interesting and instructive books which have been published in the last few years and which have shown that the stories told during the war were absolutely untrue. I have a long list of those books and if anyone wishes me to quote from them I can do so. I do not want to enter into that discussion, but I say that England was well prepared; she recognized from the way things were going that war was inevitable, and she took good care to be prepared. But I would say that if she with other nations had sought to remove those causes of friction which everybody knew were present, we would not have had the war at all.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member says that England was prepared for war. How many units was she capable of putting into the field?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have already said I do not intend to go into that.

Mr. McGIBBON: Tell us.

Miss MACPHAIL: Let him make his own speech.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: England was not so much prepared on land. We know that. British policy for many years was based on the idea that if she were ready with her navy she would be more than a match for any nation that might come against her. She had the greater preparation. I shall be glad to go into that on another occasion.

Mr. McGIBBON: Seeing the hon. member does not know, probably he would like me to tell him.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There will be an opportunity. Before I close I should like to quote a paragraph which I came across in a little paper sent to me. It is rather pathetic that this should be issued by some unemployed veterans in Canada. I do not know anything about the Veterans' Review, but after speaking of the enormous cost of the war, not only in money but in human life and suffering, the article proceeds:

> Altogether it is a tremendous price and should bring a tremendous good to mankind. But no goods have been delivered; the world is not "safe for democracy"; wars are not ended; small nations are in deadly fear; minorities are not protected. On the other hand, there are many Alsace-Lorraines instead of one; wars are everywhere; another great war threatens; and the world is in chaos with suffering, oppression and distrust everywhere. Yet having paid the price, and having been cheated of the thing we bought, we are told we must get ready to pay again a like price to get the same goods.
> Those who talk of and prepare for the "next war" are the dangerous men of our time. They should be wholly discredited, however well-meaning they may be, for their advice and leadership have brought civilization to the verge of the abyss.

Many of the returned men speak in this way. I do not say that the men who have been to the front are the only men who have the right to speak; I think they have the right to speak, for they know at firsthand what war means; but I would say that any man who has made even a superficial study of the horrible evils of war, or who sincerely asks himself what the last war has accomplished, cannot but be anxious to ascertain if there is no other way of settling international disputes.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I remark that it saved your liberty?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not consider it saved my liberty one little bit. I would point out that all over the world to-day we are experiencing a period of reaction in almost every department of life. That is due directly to the war. To-day we are shouldering an enormous burden. As we all know, almost half our national revenue goes to pay for the last war. So I cannot see that that war accomplished anything.

I must thank you, Mr. Chairman, and the committee for your courtesy if I have gone a little far afield. I do not want to impose upon hon. members, but I would say that undoubtedly we cannot settle this cadet vote without having these larger issues in mind. If in the future as in the past war is to be the arbiter of our international disputes, then I say, train every man; let us go even as far as they do in France and train every woman too. I would say further, let us before this session closes pass a law to conscript wealth automatically the moment war is declared. Surely no one can say that wealth is worth more than men.

An hon. MEMBER: Yes, they do.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I say it would be far better before we go any further in training our boys for a future war to pass a law that the moment war breaks out every dollar in the hands of every man in this country should be conscripted for the service of the state.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think that is the only fair way. I am not here, as some may think, simply to be heard. It is not easy for me to do this. Some of you men can understand, perhaps, how difficult it is for me. But I have boys, as you have boys. It does not make so much difference to some of us; we will not be called to the front, we need not worry about these things; but I want to save my boys. I want them to be brave, I want them to do their duty to their country, but I certainly do not want them to become like some of the poor wrecks that survived the last war, and I would not lift my little finger to send my boys into the shambles.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Mr. Chairman, I wish you would declare it six o'clock. I adjourn the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, go ahead.

Progress reported.

PEACE RIVER RAILWAY OUTLET

OBJECTION TO MOTION TO CONCUR IN REPORT OF RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): moved:

That the eleventh report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines be now concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): I rise for the purpose of opposing the adoption of this report. The report, which will be found on page 2138 of Hansard of April 8th last, reads as follows:

The select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines beg leave to present the following as its eleventh report.

Your committee has considered the following resolution referred to it:

That, in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived for the commencement forthwith, and the completion in the near future of a direct railway outlet from the Peace River country to the Pacific coast.

Your committee, having heard evidence on the subject matter of the resolution from the premiers of Alberta and British Columbia and from engineers who have investigated this project, and others, is of opinion that building a western outlet from the Peace River area is feasible from an engineering standpoint.

The weight of evidence before your committee indicates that, on economic grounds, such construction should not be commenced forthwith, as set forth in the resolution referred to your committee.

Your committee is of opinion that much greater traffic development is necessary in the area to make the building of such outlet economically sound.

Your committee is further of opinion that potentialities of that area are such as to warrant a continuous study of its development.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

It is not my intention to take up very much of the time of the House in connection with this matter, especially in view of the fact that so many hon. members—nearly all of them in fact—have been working so hard and for such long hours during the last ten days in order to finish the business of the session. But I cannot allow the report as it has been presented to go unchallenged, because I cannot agree that it correctly interprets the evidence that was adduced before the committee. I am in general agreement with regard to the paragraph which states that a western outlet from the Peace river area is feasible from an engineering standpoint, although certain evidence was brought out before the committee in this connection that ought to be called to the attention of the House, because it affects to some extent the additional clauses in the report. The engineers commenced their report with these two paragraphs:

The undersigned were instructed to outline the engineering and economic features of the various proposed railway routes for a western outlet of the Peace river country to the Pacific coast.

A map showing the location of the various routes, giving distances, gradients, and other physical features would be of very little use, unless information as to costs of construction and comparable costs of operation were also given. We therefore have embraced in this report an economic study of the various routes considered.

We have a definite comparison of three routes any of which might be built to serve the Peace river country with an outlet to the Pacific coast. After having listened to the evidence, I claim that the engineers never made an engineering study outlining the engineering features of the various routes proposed. The first route that was examined and reported upon in the report is the Obed route. The survey in connection with this route is complete and it was in charge of Mr. Hill of the Canadian National Railways. Mr. Hill's official title is exploration and locating engineer of the Canadian National Railways. With regard to this route we have the following evidence by Mr. Hill:

Q. Who did the work in these routes?—A. We had regular surveying parties run over them. On the Obed route we have a complete survey from one end to the other.

Q. A complete survey?—A. A complete triline survey.

Q. Not a reconnaissance?—A. Not a reconnaissance, but an instrumental survey.

Q. In that case, Mr. Hill, you are in a position to speak definitely when you say that the new construction will be 204 miles from Aggie to Sturgeon lake and down to Obed?—A. Within a reasonable percentage.

Q. How much allowance is there for variation—either less or more?—A. We would not want any more than—it would be within 10 per cent, and probably within five per cent.

Q. And would you say the same thing for the capital investment?—A. Yes.

The point that I am making is, that, according to the evidence submitted by Mr. Hill who was in charge of the Obed route survey, there is a complete survey of that route. One would think that in order to make a proper comparison of this route with any other it would be necessary to have the same kind of a survey, but we find that that is not the case. The next route referred to is the Monkman pass route. We have the following evidence given by Mr. Hill at page 16 of the report of the committee on railways and canals with regard to the Monkman pass route:

Q. Is this a final survey or a reconnaissance or a trial survey?—A. This is a reconnaissance.

Q. What is the difference between reconnaissance, trial and a complete survey; will you kindly explain that? What do you do in the case of a trial survey, for instance?—A. Well, a trial line is generally an instrumental survey; it is an accurate survey.

Q. A trial survey is accurate?—A. Yes.

Q. What is a reconnaissance survey?—A. Well, they just trust the man that goes over it.

Q. He goes out with a pack on his back, is that it?—A. Well, they have different forms of transportation.

Q. Is a reconnaissance survey a question of making a trip there to see if it is at all likely a railway can be built?—A. Yes.

Q. A trial survey is a survey that actually gives you the level?—A. Actually gives you the levels and the relative positions.

Q. What is this Monkman pass survey? Is it a trial survey?—A. A reconnaissance.

Q. When we come to the question of costs and grades how reliable are these figures in connection with the Monkman pass as given in this report?—A. Just an engineer's guess, that is all.

So they make a comparison between one route, the Obed route, where there is a complete survey, and another route, the Monkman pass route, where we have an engineer's guess. The third route that was dealt with was the Peace River pass route. The gentleman who was in charge of this survey, such as it was, was Mr. W. A. James, assistant chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who gave this evidence before the committee on railways and canals:

Q. You are the C.P.R. engineer who signed the report?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you over the route from Spirit river right west through to Hudson Hope and from Berwyn west of Hudson Hope on the north side of the pass, and then through to Stewart?—A. On the north side of the pass I left Fort George and went up to Summit lake and down the Crooked river, the Pack river and the Parsnip, down the Peace river to Peace River Crossing and then northwest from Peace River Crossing, which is a station on the Peace river, and then back to Peace river and to Carcajou point. I drove west from there and down paralleling the Peace river about 20 miles as far as Fort Vermilion, then I came up the Peace river from Fort Vermilion to Peace River Crossing again. I was over two months on that trip.

Q. You were actually over the route, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the actual location of the railroad that is called Stewart to Prince Rupert and Vancouver via Peace pass?—A. I went by the Peace pass but I did not follow what you would call the actual route; I was on the river.

Q. We have no trial survey of this route, have we?—A. No, sir.

Mr. James made most of his exploration of this route from the Peace river which is in a valley 800 feet below the level of the territory to be served by the railway. As a matter of fact in the evidence he admits that as regards about 200 miles of the line that is projected on the map west to Stewart on the Portland canal, he was not over that route at all. We have what purports to be a serious comparison of the economic and engineering features of three routes, as regards one of which there is a complete survey and as regards the other two, we have simply engineers' guesses. The engineers claim to have made an engineering study and an economic study of these routes, but how can one claim to have made an economic study on the basis of an engineering study of that kind? This is the first time that I have ever known that a guess could be called a study. The two things are entirely different, and for that reason I am in complete disagreement with that paragraph of the report which reads:

> The weight of evidence before your committee indicates that, on economic grounds, such construction should not be commenced forthwith, as set forth in the resolution referred to your committee.

As a matter of fact the resolution did not set forth that construction should be commenced forthwith. The wording of the motion is "commencement forthwith." Commencement does not necessarily mean actual construction of railway mileage, although I think as I go along I can show that even that will be justified.

In connection with this whole question there has been constant confusion as between the relation of the outlet and the branch line mileage. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), in his speech on this question in the House of Commons, made this statement as reported on page 256 of Hansard of February 14, 1927, and I am in entire agreement with this part of his speech in which he refers to the need of branch lines:

> —but I think my hon. friend will also agree with we when I say that the problem is not in the main one of branch line construction to serve settlers now farming there. Only a relatively limited number of the farmers are now long distance from existing lines of transportation, and the problem is really one of providing a more economical way to the markets of the world for those situated within reasonable distance of those existing lines of transportation. I want to qualify that by saying that, as the engineers' report demonstrates, there is undoubtedly need for some further branch line construction on the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia system in order to enable the country to fully develop, in order to assist in its settlement and encourage immigrants, but in the main the problem is one of providing a more economical outlet to the people already there and within a reasonable distance of the existing lines of railway.

The outlet and the branch lines are not two separate and distinct matters at all; they are simply two parts of the same problem. Everybody will agree that that part of the outlet that would best serve the Peace river country in the way of branch line mileage would be the proper portion to build first, and I may say that it is because of the indefinite nature of the engineer's report that I would have to waive my pressure for the immediate commencement of construction of an outlet at the present time, because I do not believe that even an engineering study of the outlet question has been made, to say nothing of the economic study, which must be based upon a proper engineering study.

We all know that that country is being served at the present time by the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia railway. We all know that the branch line mileage that will properly serve the country as it is settled to-day and connect with the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia railway, will not fit in properly with an outlet to the Pacific coast. Mr. Czowski admitted that in his evidence, and I think everybody will agree that a branch line system constructed with one outlet will not necessarily, and will not likely, fit in with another outlet. I do not wish to take time quoting from the documents in support of that, because I think it is generally agreed. What I ask at the present time is that a real study be made of the Monkman, the Peace, and the Pine passes, and that a definite policy be laid down with regard to the permanent development of the Peace river country and an outlet to the Pacific coast. Then we can lay down the branch line mileage that is necessary to serve the Peace river country as it exists to-day, or will exist in the near future, in such a way that our branch line mileage will fit in properly and economically with that Pacific coast outlet when it is built, but I submit that it is absolutely impossible for the government of the province of Alberta or of British Columbia or the Dominion government intelligently to lay down a system of branch lines that will be of the proper ceonomic advantages to the Peace river country and the Dominion unless that policy is laid down with a full knowledge of where the Peace river outlet is going to be.

We all know the problem that has arisen in this Dominion because of the duplication of railways. We have an example of that west of Edmonton, where about 200 miles of track was torn up because duplication rendered one track absolutely useless. We want to avoid that thing in connection with the development of the Peace river country, and as a matter of fact the engineer's report shows that it can be avoided, because the estimate which they have worked out in connection with the various routes is based on the branch line mileage serving a country with about 6,000 acres of economic land in the Peace river country tributary to each line of railway, as compared with some 5,200 acres in the rest of the prairie provinces. I am anxious that we should study the question in the light of our past experience, in the light not only of our past mistakes but of our past successes, so that we may evolve a railway policy for the development of that country that will be best not only for its immediate future but for its ultimate future as well.

With regard to the contention that it is economically unsound to build an outlet at the present time, I have this to say: The engineer's report seems to lay down the principle, by inference at least, that until such time as the necessary tonnage is available to justify the route from its commencement, it is economically unsound to build. I know of no railway in the Dominion of Canada that has been built on that basis. I think it was stated years ago when the building of the Canadian Pacific railway was under discussion, that it would not pay for the axle grease used in running the trains across the prairies. Neither is the feasibility of the Hudson Bay railway being tested by that principle. I am quite sure that it was not the principle on which the feasibility of the Grand Trunk Pacific or the Canadian Northern was decided, nor is it the principle underlying the branch line program of the Canadian National Railways that was presented to parliament this year, because the roads are there referred to as development and colonization lines.

What I want, Mr. Speaker, and what I think is in the best interests of the country, is to complete the survey of these routes and have a policy determined upon so that we shall know where to build our branch lines, and let me say that once we have built a mile of branch line that fits in with a policy for a permanent outlet we can be said to have commenced construction of the Peace river outlet. In that sense I say that the time is ripe for the commencement of that outlet, for we need at least 100 miles of branch lines in that country.

It is the last clause in the committee's report to which I particularly object, reading:

> Your committee is further of opinion that potentialities of that area are such as to warrant a continuous study of its development.

The previous clause reads:

> Your committee is of opinion that much greater traffic development is necessary in the area to make the building of such outlet economically sound.

Now if the last clause of the committee's report is adopted by the House of Commons and the government, it will simply mean that we do not mean to do anything, because it obligates the House of Commons and the government to do more than every member of parliament is already obligated to do with regard to every problem facing the Dominion of Canada. A continuous study of the development of the Peace river country is an obligation upon all the members of this House without any report being submitted to us from the committee on railways and canals, just as a continuous study of the problems and development of the maritime provinces or of Ontario or Quebec is the duty of all members of this House, whether from the west or elsewhere. That is all that clause obligates the House and the government to do, and I submit that either a mistake was made in drafting this report, or else the report is an attempt to shelve this Peace river question.

With regard to tonnage, it was pointed out in the committee, I think, that the engineer's estimate was that in the years 1919 to 1923 we had moving out of the Peace river country about 48,000 tons of grain on the average each year. Then they set down the immediate traffic that would go to the Pacific at 35,000 tons.

The evidence of Premier Brownlee based on grain shipments up to I think March 31st of this year, shows that about 130,000 tons has gone out of the Peace river country in the last crop year, from an area of only 270,000 acres of land, and we have about 2,000,000 acres of land of the very same type in the Peace river country in the area served by railways or that can be easily served by branch railways. Again 50,000 tons of grain produced on the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia railway in the years 1919 to 1923 about 150,000 revenue tons of other traffic and yet the engineers state in their economic study that only grain traffic is going to be considered in connection with this Peace river outlet. They seem to rule out altogether the development that would take place in the Peace river country as a result of the construction of additional branch line mileage and the ultimate completion of the outlet itself. I submit that the committee has not given proper consideration to the engineering and economic features, and that the House is not justified in adopting its report. This question is of great importance to Peace river. The report says that all we are going to do in the immediate future is to study and watch the development of the country. I am glad the Prime Minister is in his seat, because he was not present when I spoke on this question before. I do not think we can say that the Prime Minister's statement cannot mean anything in view of the findings of the engineers, or the recommendations of the president of the Canadian National Railways. I am going to read again the statement made by the Prime Minister at Edmonton, and I hope that if he votes against the amendment which I propose to move, and for the report of the committee, he will at least tell the House, and especially the people of Peace River and Edmonton, what this statement meant. This statement appears in the Edmonton Bulletin of 11th October, 1924—I think it should be 12th October—and is headed:

King pledges self to Peace river cause.

Then there is a heading:

Premier promises outlet to Pacific.

Then sub-headings as follows:

Just as soon as humanly possible.

Railway will be built, declares Prime Minister at mass meeting here.

Government has but minority in Commons, says times now are different and everybody must have a little patience, but Liberal party is not falling down on any of its pledges.

The quotation reads:

"It is the policy of the government of which I have the honour to be the head to introduce a vigorous policy of immigration which will people the vast areas of undeveloped country in the great west" declared the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Premier of Canada, when addressing a mass meeting of citizens in the First Presbyterian church last night.

The future prosperity of this country is bound up in the development of its great natural resources, and to develop these resources it is necessary to have a large increase in the population of Canada. There is to the north of this city a great tract of land that is crying out for development. The Peace river country is amongst the richest in Canada, but before the proper development of that country can take place an outlet to the Pacific coast is an absolute necessity. I pledge myself that as soon as it is humanly possible the great Peace river country will be given that measure of railway relief that will bring to the pioneers of that country the outlet they have been so long denied, and will open up the country for prospective settlers.

"I must however, sound the same note to you here as I did to the citizens of Saskatoon."

I suppose that is in connection with the Hudson Bay railway.

"The times that we are passing through are very difficult, and I would ask you to have a little patience, and in as short a time as possible, a railway outlet will be provided for the Peace River and northern Alberta districts that will open up an era of prosperity for that country which will not be equalled by any other province in Canada."

In view of the Prime Minister's promise, in view of the needs for additional branch line settlement, some of the settlements being twenty, thirty and sixty miles from the railway, where there has been settlement for sixty years, and in view of the fact that branch line mileage cannot be constructed economically and properly unless we know where the Peace river outlet is going to be, and because I believe that such branch lines should be laid down as a part of the outlet, I am opposed to the adoption of this report and I therefore move the following amendment:

That the said report be not now concurred in but that the same be referred back to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines with instructions that they have power to amend it by striking out the three following paragraphs:

"The weight of evidence before your committee indicates that, on economic grounds, much construction should not be commenced forthwith, as set forth in the resolution referred to your committee.

Your committee is of opinion that much greater traffic development is necessary in the area to make the building of such outlet economically sound.

Your committee is further of opinion that potentialities of that area are such as to warrant a continuous study of its development."

And substituting the following three paragraphs therefor:

"The evidence shows that there are four possible outlets but that a complete survey has been made of two only.

"Your committee is of the opinion that a complete survey should be undertaken of the Peace pass, Pine pass, and Monkman pass and that on completion of this survey a definite policy of railway development for the Peace river country should be decided upon.

"Your committee further believes that the potentialities of the Peace river district justify the commencement of a permanent outlet as soon as the best route is definitely ascertained."

Mr. DUNNING: I understood my hon. friend to make a change in the wording of his motion.

Mr. KENNEDY: Yes, after the words "Peace pass" I have inserted the words "Pine pass," so as to make it read "Peace pass, Pine pass and Monkman pass."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just before the amendment is proceeded with I desire to ask His Honour the Speaker whether the motion is in order. No notice has been given.

Mr. SPEAKER: I intended to inform the mover of the motion that it was out of order because no notice has been given under rule 40, and if the motion is out of order the amendment is also out of order.

Mr. IRVINE: It can be taken as a notice of motion.

The SPEAKER: Very well, it will appear on the order paper as a notice of motion.

GERMAN REPARATIONS

Hon. Mr. STEVENS:

2. Was it the duty of the Reparations Commissioner to investigate and report upon all claims submitted to him for the purpose of determining which of the said claims were within the said annex 1, and the fair amount of such claims?

3. When was the first Reparations Commissioner appointed and who was he?

4. Did Germany undertake in the treaty of Berlin (United States and Germany) to make compensation for all damage done to the civilian population of the United States and to their property, and does Canada receive similar compensation under the treaty of Versailles?

5. Is not this undertaking expressly set out in article 232 and annex 1 of part VIII of the treaty of Berlin (Reparation), and also as relates to Canada in the treaty of Versailles?

6. Was it the duty of the Mixed Claims Commission at Washington to decide upon all claims submitted to it for the purpose of determining which of the said claims were within said annex 1, and the fair amount of such claims, in a similar manner to the Commissioner on Claims in Canada?

7. Is Germany carrying out the obligations assumed in article 232 and annex 1, of both treaties; namely the treaty of Versailles and the treaty of Berlin?

8. If so, is she carrying out such obligations by means of the Dawes payments, made under the so-called Dawes plan?

9. Are great Britain and the overseas dominions receiving their share of the Dawes payments?

11. Is Canada receiving her share of the Dawes payments?

12. If so, from what source?

13. What amount has Canada received under the Dawes plan to date?

14. What is the total amount which Canada is entitled to receive as her share of reparation payments under the Dawes plan during the next few years?

15. How much each year?

16. In addition to what has been received under the Dawes plan, is not Canada entitled to receive immediately from the British government a sum approximating $4,000,000 as her share of reparation payments in kind as announced in the British House of Commons a short time ago?

17. How soon will this amount be paid over?

18. When this amount is paid over, what will be the total amount on hand immediately available for reparation?

19. What is the intention of the government with regard to payment of the awards made by the Reparations Commissioner?

20. Is it the intention of the Secretary of State or any minister of the crown to reintroduce this session, the bill providing for payment of the commissioner's awards out of the Dawes money received and to be received and out of said amount which is to be received by Canada immediately as her share of reparation payments in kind?

21. Has there been an act passed recently in the United States providing for payment out of the Dawes money of all claims held to have been within the provisions of annex 1 of part VIII of the treaty of Berlin (reparation), and are such claims not exactly similar in character to those which the Canadian Reparations Commissioner has held to have been within the provisions of annex 1 to part VIII of the treaty of Versailles (reparation)?

22. Was there an act passed in Great Britain either during the war or shortly afterwards setting up a commission to adjudicate upon reparation claims and to provide a fund of £5,000,000 out of which to compensate claimants, and do any Canadians benefit from such funds?

23. Did the Canadian government make any claims before the Canadian Reparations Commissioner under categories 5, 6 and 7 of annex 1 of part VIII of the treaty of Versailles (reparation)?

24. Did the United States government make any claim before the Mixed Claims Commission at Washington under categories 5, 6 and 7 of annex 1 of part VIII of the treaty of Berlin (reparation), and did the government of Canada make any claim before the Canadian commission for reparation?

25. Was it stated by the Mixed Claims Commission at Washington, in their opinion, in the "Lusitania" cases of November 1st, 1923, that while under that portion of the treaty of Versailles which has by reference been incorporated in the treaty of Berlin, "Germany accepts" responsibility for all loss and damage to which the United States and its nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war, nevertheless the United States frankly recognize the fact "that the resources of Germany are not adequate—to make complete reparation for all such loss and damage," but requires that Germany make "compensation" for specified damages suffered by American nationals, and does the government of Canada share this view?

Hon. Mr. RINFRET:

1. By article 231 of the treaty of Versailles the allied and associated governments affirmed, and Germany accepted, the responsibility of Germany and her allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the allied and associated governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war.

By article 232 the allied and associated governments recognized that the resources of Germany are not adequate to make complete reparation for all such loss and damage. The allied and associated governments, however, required, and Germany undertook to make, compensation for all damage done to the civil population of the allied and associated powers and to their property during the period of the belligerency of each as an allied and associated power against Germany by land, by sea and from the air, and in general all damage as defined in annex I of part VIII of the treaty. By article 233 of the treaty it was provided that the amount of the above damage for which compensation is to be made by Germany shall be determined by an inter-allied commission, to be called The Reparation commission and constituted in the form and with the persons set forth in the following articles and in annexes II to VII of Part VIII of the treaty.

The loss to the civil population was to be the measure of the amount of reparation to be paid by Germany to the Allied and Associated Powers.

Subsequently at the Spa conference this method of computation was set aside and the total amount payable by Germany for reparation was fixed at 132 milliards of gold marks.

2. (a) The commissioner was appointed to investigate and report upon claims of persons residing or carrying on business in Canada who have been subjected to loss and pecuniary damages arising through the destruction of life and property through the illegal warfare of the enemy and

(b) Claims for damages to which persons residing or carrying on business in Canada have been subjected for breaches of contracts, which contracts were prevented from being carried out owing to the operation of the Statutory List of persons in neutral countries with whom such contracts were declared illegal; for the purpose of determining whether they are within the category set out in the first annex to section i of part VIII of the treaty, and the fair amount of such claims, and to make such findings as may be of assistance to the government in determining which, if any, of such claims should be paid, and the extent of payment thereof.

3. 31st October, 1921, the Honourable Sir John Douglas Hazen, K.C.M.G.

4. Section 1 of article 2 of the treaty of Berlin reserves to the United States the same rights to reparation as are set out in part VIII of the treaty of Versailles. The right of the Canadian government to reparation is set out in the answer to question 1.

5. There is no article number 232 in the treaty of Berlin, but article 232 of the treaty of Versailles provided as set out in the answer to question 1. The rights of the Canadian government are also set out in that answer.

6. Yes.

7. No, but payments are being made by Germany under the Dawes plan and London reparation agreement to the United Kingdom and Canada, and under the treaty of Berlin to the United States.

8. Answered by 7.

9. Subject to certain priorities Great Britain and the overseas dominions are receiving their shares of the Dawes payments as arranged at the Spa conference and the Imperial conference of 1921.

10. Yes.

11. Yes, subject to certain priorities.

12. Payments to Canada made through the treasury of the United Kingdom.

13. $4,009,517.24.

14. Canada is entitled to receive 4.35 per cent of the amount received by Great Britain, and Great Britain is entitled to 22 per cent of the amount payable under the Dawes plan and London reparation agreement. These proportions are subject to certain priorities.

15. Germany is required to pay under the Dawes plan and London convention the following annuities; (taking £1 to equal 20 gold marks): 1924-25 £50,000,000; 1925-26, £61,000,000; 1926-27, £60,000,000; 1927-28, £87-500,000; 1928-29, £125,000,000; and each year thereafter £125,000,000. The amounts may be increased by the operation of the "Prosperity Index," but this can only begin to operate after 1930. Canada is entitled to receive the proportion, as set out in answer to question 14, of the above amounts.

16. $3,789,430.

17. Payment of this amount is withheld by the British treasury pending settlement of certain other accounts between Canada and Great Britain.

18. $7,798,947.24 together with any instalments that may be paid in the meantime.

19. The policy of the government will be decided when the reparation commissioner has completed his report.

20. Answered by No. 19.

21. No act such as referred to has been passed by the United States. The claims considered by the United States Mixed Claims Commission are similar to those considered by the Canadian reparation commissioner.

22. No act passed, but an appropriation of £5,300,000, was made for distribution to claimants who had suffered loss and this distribution was carried out by the commission of which Lord Sumner was chairman. Claims of Canadians domiciled in the United Kingdom were considered by this commission.

23. No.

24. No.

25. The reference to the opinion of the Mixed Claims commission of the United States in the Lusitania case is correct. The view held by the Canadian government is that claimants for losses above referred to have no claims against either Canada or Germany. If there is any claim it is in the right of Canada against Germany under the treaty, and this right is being enforced as set out in answer to questions 8 to 12. This view is also held by the government of the United Kingdom. The Canadian government has under consideration the making of gratuitous payments to claimants, and if it is so decided, parliament will be asked to make an appropriation for that purpose.

NEWSPAPER REPORT OF DEBATE IN SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a copy of the morning Citizen of Monday April 11, and at page 17 I find certain statements made with refernce to the citizens of Ottawa, whom it has been my privilege with my colleague to represent in this House, because of the conditions—

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. It is quite evident from what my hon. friend is saying that he proposes to make a reply to some statements made by someone regarding the citizens of Ottawa. I submit that at this stage of the proceedings the hon. gentleman has not the right to make any such reply.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Speaker, because of the place where these statements were made—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I gather from the remarks of the hon. gentleman that he is referring to a report published in one of the morning newspapers purporting to be an account of a debate which took place in the other House. He is out of order. No reference can be made to the debates of the Senate.

ITALIAN IMMIGRATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): At the request of the Canadian Legion and the Trades and Labour Council of Calgary I wish to ask the government if any agreement has been entered into under which a large number of nationals from Italy have been recently brought into Canada. These two bodies are very apprehensive that the employment situation may be influenced because of this fact.

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I am not aware of any arrangement having been made, with reference to the entrance into Canada of a large number of Italian nationals.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria, B.C.): On Saturday last, in the absence of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe), I was requested to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) when the hon. member might expect certain returns with reference to the destruction of hogs belonging to a man named Oberle at some point in Ontario. The hon. member wished me to impress the minister with the fact that we are getting near the end of the session and that he would like to have these returns brought down as soon as possible.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): The file was completed this morning and will go to the office of the Secretary of State some time to-day, from whence I expect it will reach this House to-morrow.

Mr. J. A. FRASER (Cariboo): I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) when he will table a return passed by the House on March 30 in regard to the Chilcoten ordnance reserve lands in the Cariboo district of the province of British Columbia. I understand this is a short return and I am anxious to have it brought down before the end of the session.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): I assure the hon. member that the matter had escaped my attention, and I am very glad he has reminded me of it. I will see that it is tabled at once.

Mr. J. C. BRADY (Skeena): I would ask the Minister of Public Works when the return passed on March 30 with reference to the telegraph operator at Bella Coola will be available.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): The return is now in course of preparation, and I hope to be able to lay it on the table before the session is concluded. It must be remembered that a great many returns of that kind have been passed, which entail a great deal of work. This is a comparatively recent request, but I hope to be able to lay it on the table soon.

Mr. J. A. MACDONALD (Richmond-West Cape Breton): I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce, with reference to question number 27, having to do with the report of Inspector Tupper, when that report will be tabled?

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The report was tabled this morning.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Owing to the noise in the chamber I did not hear the answer of the minister.

Mr. MALCOLM: For the benefit of my hon. friend I will repeat that if he had been in the House he would have known that I tabled the report a few moments ago.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there are two matters to which I would like to draw the attention of this government, particularly as we have nearly reached the conclusion of the session. The first question is as to when we may expect an answer to question number 14, which to-day was made an order for return. This question was asked on April 6, and is not one which will require much time to answer. We would like to have that return tabled before the House prorogues, and I would ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) to oblige us in this respect.

The other question is in regard to the supplementary estimates. This morning I spoke to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) on that question, because I think the House should have these estimates at the earliest possible moment if there is any idea of proroguing in the near future.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): With regard to the supplementary estimates, I hope to be able to table those to-day.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONCTON—BUCTOUCHE BRANCH

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. A. E. BOURGEOIS (Kent, N.B.): I desire to ask the Minister of Railways whether he has received a recommendation from the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways in connection with the request of the citizens of Kent county, New Brunswick, supported by resolutions and petitions strongly urging the extension of the Moncton and Buctouche branch of the Canadian National Railway from Buctouche to Loggieville in the county of Northumberland? If that recommendation is favourable to the project, when will it be put into effect?

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): No recommendation has been yet received from the present board of directors of the Canadian National Railways in connection with the project mentioned by my hon. friend.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY COMMISSION

INTERIM REPORT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the House may expect an interim report of any kind from the Customs Inquiry Commission before the session is concluded?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I would prefer to have the Minister of Customs answer that question, but he is not in his seat at the moment. So far as I am aware it is hardly probable that an interim report will be presented.

LIVE STOCK AND LIVE STOCK PRODUCTS ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the House go into committee on Bill No. 229, to amend The Live Stock and Live Stock Products Act, 1923

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I desire to move a slight amendment to subsection (i) of this section. This question was discussed very fully in committee and since that time I have discussed it further with a number of members who desire the act to remain in this respect as it formerly was, and they are agreeable to the insertion of the two words "for export" after the word "meat."

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Very well; we will discuss it further. The members of the committee who were anxious to leave it the way it now is, will probably desire to say something also. I have had some correspondence with one of the provincial premiers whose government has passed concurring legislation, and he thought it would not be fair to make this change until the provincial governments were consulted. It must be remembered, Mr.

Chairman, that the very life of this act depends upon the concurring legislation enacted by each province, and I assured them that no radical change would be made in this act without first consulting them. This is an extension of the application of the act to local trade, and I think the committee will agree that we are playing fair with the provinces, because the amendment will leave the act as it at present stands with regard to exports.

Mr. KENNEDY: As a matter of fact there is far more chance of exploiting the people of Canada with ungraded bacon than of exploiting the people in the Old Land, because our bacon going over there comes directly into competition with Danish bacon as well as meat from other countries, and must conform to a fairly high standard. This amendment will enable the packers to do as they please with the Canadian consumer.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: For the sake of argument I will agree with my hon. friend, but it is still more important to preserve intact the concurring legislation of the different provinces, for the time being.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I am sorry the minister cannot see his way clear to allow this bill to go through as it came from the committee. The bill was approved by the committee exactly as it was brought in here, and these few words which prohibit the grading of meat products in Canada in reality take away the entire effect of the bill. We have passed acts for the grading of fruit, and for the grading of wheat, but when it comes to the live stock, to which the farmers feed their grain, there will be no grading at all if these two words "for export" are inserted in this bill. I think the time has arrived when the principle of grading live stock and live stock products should be established. Perhaps the time is not opportune for the enforcement of grading; perhaps that can only be brought about gradually. But a year will elapse before we shall have another opportunity of amending this bill if it goes into law, and I think, therefore, that we should now establish the principle of grading live stock both for export and for home consumption. I should be sorry to see a backward step taken in that regard; but I am afraid that if something is not done we are going to jeopardize the beef industry and seriously injure the bacon trade as well. I would urge the minister to allow this bill to go through as it came from the committee. Afterwards he can, by regulation, bring the act into force as he sees fit. In my opinion that would be the best course for him to pursue.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I agree with most of what my hon. friend has said. I should like to see the bill worded that way too, but it must be remembered that we are coöperating in team play with the provinces on this question. One of the most important provinces of the Dominion has drawn attention to the fact that this bill goes further, and in a more radical direction, than it did before, and that there has been no conference on the subject either with that province, or any of the other two provinces that were represented at the recent conferences at Regina and Ottawa. We all know the difficulty that we had in the matter of the grading of eggs. The greatest difficulty has been overcome but perhaps it would not have been but for the teamplay in that case also. I feel satisfied that we should do everything we can to avoid the possibility of weakening the confidence of the provincial governments, all of which have passed concurrent legislation, or of breaking faith with them. If the proposed legislation went through and it affected the principle of grading for the retail trade any of the provinces could say: You have defaulted in your undertaking with us by taking this authority. That is the point I wish to have borne in mind. But for that I should be inclined to leave the wording as it is. But adherence to the assurance I have given is of far more importance to me than having the two words in question left in the bill. There must be teamplay with the provinces if we are going to do the best work possible.

Mr. COOTE: Was the same wording in the old act?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: I do not think the words "for export" were in the old act.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They were not in the interpretation clause, but if my hon. friend passes on to clause (c) of section 9 on page 4 of the old Live Stock Act, he will see a reference there to live stock and meat intended for export. In order to make the matter clear, we are putting these words into the interpretation clause so that it will apply to all sections of the bill. In the last draft of the bill those words were inserted showing that was the intention.

Mr. COOTE: If the words are left in the present bill the grading of meat will not come into force in Canada until the department passes a regulation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Do you mean if the wording of the bill is left in the way it is?

Mr. COOTE: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If the bill is left the way it is it will give authority to grade all meat for home consumption, a question that has never been discussed with the provinces. That is why they are objecting.

Mr. COOTE: Could that be done if the federal department issued regulations to enforce it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Surely.

Mr. COOTE: Then surely it will be all right to pass the bill as it is, and the department can wait until it gets the consent of the provinces.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know, but in a communication I got from the premier of one of the major provinces, while admitting that he pointed out that according to our agreement before this power was taken the provincial assent and approval should be obtained, and I think he is right. The regulation of any matter is a thing that fluctuates. You can put a thing in to-day and take it out to-morrow, and regulations may be passed without persons interested being notified. Sometimes we confer with the provinces if the matter in question is very important; at other times we do not confer so much. My correspondent in this particular matter, being a provincial minister, knows that the regulations might be adopted and put in force and he would know nothing about it.

Miss MACPHAIL: Would the minister mind telling us which province it is that objects?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was the last one that came in, Ontario. It is most important that we should keep in accord with Ontario because the act was challenged in that province and there were two decisions given by provincial supreme court judges.

Miss MACPHAIL: Is the present Minister of Agriculture in Ontario very sympathetic about the matter of grading?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think he is, but they are not all like Hon. Mr. Martin. He is sympathetic, he understands the matter, but just like any other minister of agriculture he has to have the support of his colleagues in any undertaking. I should not like to give the province of Ontario any excuse or justification for saying that I had defaulted in any arrangement I had entered into with Hon. Mr. Martin.

Mr. TOLMIE: With regard to this amendment, I want to say that all of us—particularly those who are away from home a good part of their time and have to depend on the tender mercies of people who provide provender for politicians throughout this country—have all experienced the fact that there is a great deal of tough beef placed on the table in Canada. After experiencing this for a number of years I have come to the conclusion that we are a strong-jawed, hardy race in this Dominion. Now while it is very desirable that we should have grading applied in this country at the earliest possible moment, both to meats that are being exported and also to meats for local consumption, let me say that we should first have a clean-cut plan. Before we attempt to put this legislation into effect, let us have something to offer. Those countries that have been carefully investigating the grading of meats, particularly the United States, have not yet got a definite plan that can be applied; and what they are doing at the present time is to carry on experimental work hoping that something may be evolved from their investigations that will be of practical value. I would urge for Canada that this amendment be passed so that before going farther we may have the benefit of the experience gained in the grading of meat for export. After grading these meats for export for a year, or a year and a half, or two years, we shall be in the possession of much more knowledge than we have at the present time, and with that as a basis, we can introduce such legislation as will have a practical effect in improving the quality of beef in this country. This is a most important matter because at the present moment the consumer is as a rule a very poor judge of the quality of meat. In the first place this legislation when brought into force will have the effect of offering to the man who is willing to pay a little higher price for quality, an opportunity to secure what he wants, and that price will be reflected back to the man who produces on the farm. The general trend of the whole legislation is first-class but we should not attempt to put such legislation through now without a clean-cut, definite plan which we can apply with reasonable assurance of success.

Mr. COOTE: If we can grade meat for export, why can we not apply the same grades to meat that is to be sold at home?

Mr. TOLMIE: We export about 15 per cent of our cattle and we consume about 85 per cent at home. Is it not much easier to try out our new plans on the smaller quantity of export meat than to try it on what is consumed at home? After a year or a year and a half of experiment in this regard we can amend all those parts of our legislation that are not practical, and from our experience during that period we can evolve something that will be of real use in connection with handling the larger quantity.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Following up the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Tolmie), I would say that there is no mandate from this committee to the Minister of Agriculture to conduct an investigation should these words "for export" that are referred to be inserted after the word "meat" in paragraph (i) of section 2 of the proposed legislation. We would place those words there for no other reason than to stall off a thorough investigation, whereas if the bill is passed as it now reads, we should have ample opportunity to take one, two or even three years to investigate the matter thoroughly. This will be enforced by regulations and it is entirely in the hands of the department to issue those regulations when they see fit. In order that a thorough investigation may be conducted, I think this particular paragraph should remain as it is now printed.

The minister spoke of breaking faith with some of the provinces. I should like for a minute to review some of the work of the department. The department have very efficiently introduced in connection with nearly all live stock products a grading system whereby they are educating the producers to turn out a high quality product. After the quality product is put on the market, the producer has to accept the mean average price for his product although it is superior to the product of which the ex-minister (Mr. Tolmie) spoke. In keeping faith with the provinces, let us not lose sight of the fact that we should also keep faith with those who have gone to considerable expense in producing this high class product. I have correspondence, telegrams, from producers in western Canada urging the very thing for which this legislation calls, and I would impress upon the minister the necessity of seriously considering their request. No drastic change will be brought about if he takes plenty of time to investigate the matter before he issues regulations in order to carry this out immediately. I would strongly urge upon him to consider seriously the fact that the live stock men of this country are vitally interested in this matter. They have gone to great expense; they have studied the situation, and they are becoming discouraged in producing a high-class product. I am not speaking only for one section of the country; I have been in touch with many sections, and this is the impression I have gained. I have correspondence speaking very favourably of this particular clause as it now stands, and I would urge upon the minister, if he can see his way to do so, to let the clause go through as it is now printed.

The CHAIRMAN: I wish to get the amendment clearly before the House. It is moved by Mr. Heenan that the words "for export" be added after the word "meat" in paragraph (i) of section 2. Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think the main feature, at least from my standpoint, has been lost sight of. The provinces have entrusted to the Dominion the making of certain regulations regarding farm products, the understanding being that before any radical changes are made, we shall consult with them as to what those changes will be. We consulted with them in regard to all the rest of this legislation, but we did not consult with them in regard to this particular phase. It did not catch my eye at the time this bill was being drafted or it would not have appeared without the words "for export." The future of this legislation depends upon our living up to our agreement with the provinces. I cannot make the matter any plainer. Since the bill was introduced I have received a letter from the Hon. Mr. Martin drawing my attention to the fact that this change was not considered when I was consulting him in regard to the matter. We have everything to gain and nothing to lose by playing fair. Before two years pass by this bill is bound to be up again, because a number of new phases agreed to by all parties will be introduced into it. Before this legislation comes up again I shall have an opportunity of consulting not only Mr. Martin and Mr. Caron but every other provincial minister of agriculture, and then we shall have an opportunity of making changes in accordance with the wishes of everybody. Without their consent this legislation is a dead letter and we do not want to give them any excuse for withdrawing their consent.

Mr. McMILLAN: Is the legislation not also ultra vires?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Without the concurrence of the provinces it is. There are two decisions against the act.

Mr. McMILLAN: We share the opinion of our friends across the way that it would be well to have our products graded, but the matter is placed before us in a very reasonable way by the Minister of Agriculture when he says that, legislation on this subject having been held to be ultra vires, it is of first importance that we should have an agreement and come to a common understanding with the departments of the several provinces. Otherwise, as the minister has said, this legislation will be of no avail.

Mr. GARDINER: I understood the minister to say that this question had not been discussed with the provinces. Is it the intention of the minister to take this matter up in the near future and to discuss it with the provinces?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY: Will the whole matter be held up if one province objects?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would not say that. This whole bill is the result of two conferences differing considerably in their conclusions, but we have them pretty well harmonized and given visible form in this legislation. The fact that only one or two minor changes were made in the agricultural committee indicates that on the whole the bill is a good piece of legislation. Why then create a major difficulty by declining to meet Mr. Martin in this regard? Mr. Caron has not made any representations, but I gave him the same assurance.

Mr. KENNEDY: The minister will not be doing any more than taking power to do certain things.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, but they do not like that.

Mr. KENNEDY: As a matter of fact we know there has been a strong agitation in any event amongst Ontario producers of pigs for this very thing. I do not see why we ought to strike it out. It is where the packers score against the producers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not at all. I would be in agreement with my hon. friend if it were not for the necessity of having concurrent legislation. My view is along the line of our own legislation during the last five years, and along the line of my own wishes, but we have these limitations.

Mr. KENNEDY: If this section stays in the act as it is, and the proper regulations are drawn up, none of the provinces will be hurt, and it will not be breaking faith with the men at all.

Mr. EVANS: This request of the minister this morning looks like another case of special privilege to a certain class.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What special privilege does my hon. friend think I am espousing this morning?

[Mr. McMillan.]

Mr. EVANS: Well, we provide for the grading of practically all other products, and I do not see why this should not come into line. Some years ago when this matter was discussed in the committee of agriculture, the then member for South Oxford made a splendid argument for the inspection of all meats. It is a fact, I believe, to-day that at times our packers import a certain class of hog from the United States. I think we call them razorbacks for short, though they are more adapted for speed than bacon, as a rule. This meat is handled in such a way that it will not stand inspection, and I say to this House that the people of Canada do not know what they are getting on their breakfast table. I would like to see the House pass this measure. If it is found to work any injustice upon the packers, they can come back to the House in a year or two and have it corrected.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But if in the meantime some of the provinces repeal their concurrent legislation because I have not lived up to my engagement, what will happen?

Mr. EVANS: Has this understanding all taken place since the bill went through the committee?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. My original intention was to let the bill go through the House the way it went through the committee, but I have since had communications from the Hon. Mr. Martin. I would be pleased to put them on record, but I have not his permission. However, I have shown the correspondence to a number of hon. members on the other side of the House, and I must say that his request seems to me very reasonable. It will not make any difference as to the results, but it will have a tremendous effect on the team play between the provincial and federal governments. I think this is the first time in the history of Canada that the nine provinces have passed practically the same concurrent legislation as the federal parliament. It is an experiment, and are we going to spoil it all at the very first opportunity by breaking faith with the provinces? There is something far bigger in those two little words "for export" than the question of whether we shall grade for export only or for home consumption as well, and that is the question, shall we be able to carry on along these lines in the future if we break faith now? Unless we accept this amendment I fear that the act is going to be dead, just like the Lemieux Act is dead practically, and a number of other similar acts.

Mr. TOLMIE: I would like to point out to the hon. member for Rosetown who has referred to this "speed" bacon, that in the exchange of meats between the United States and Canada we have a mutual arrangement whereby the meats coming in from the United States bear the brand of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and our meats going into United States bear our government brand, so there is no question at all as to the wholesomeness of these products.

Mr. NEILL: I would like to point out to my hon. friends who are opposing this amendment that the issue is not simply shall we have the inspection of meats intended for export or of all meats, but rather, shall we have an inspection of export meats or no inspection at all? That is the inevitable result of refusing this amendment. I am not interested in the grading of beef, but I am interested in the grading of eggs, and there was a decision given by Mr. Justice Grant last October, I believe, in connection with egg grading in Ontario that the whole of this act was ultra vires as it concerned domestic and inter-provincial matters, and not only the grading regulations but everything provided under the act fell flat. That had an immediate effect in British Columbia. I had an interview with the minister, and it was found that we could not bring into force the egg grading regulations of the Dominion unless the provinces passed concurrent legislation. The minister was able to get all the provinces to pass concurrent legislation, very much to my surprise. As he says, it is almost a new departure for all the provinces to pass concurrent legislation with the Dominion. If we pass the act without this amendment it will mean that one or more provinces will break loose and be no longer bound by this agreement, and then not simply this particular section goes, but the whole act goes by the board so far as domestic and inter-provincial trade is concerned. So it is not a question of whether we shall have beef grading in the provinces, but whether we shall or shall not have export grading, because this act does govern exports, but it will not produce the results hon. gentlemen want unless we have this amendment. Without it, the whole thing will be in peril. I have no doubt that the minister will submit this matter to the Ontario Agricultural department during the next few months, and probably he will get their consent.

Mr. COOTE: I think the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is rather mixing up eggs and beef.

Mr. NEILL: Don't ham and eggs go together?

Mr. COOTE: But eggs are not beef. I think there are good grounds for striking out beef altogether, because if the minister is going to grade beef for export and not beef for home consumption, you will find that the best beef will be exported and the tough beef will be left at home for Canadians to eat. No packer would ask to have his product graded for export if he thought it would be graded No. 3, and he will take care that what he ships for export will be of No. 1 grade. But I am not going to oppose the minister's amendment any further, because I see that he has certain grounds for asking for it. I think, however, he could facilitate the acceptance of the amendment if he would pledge himself within the present year to ask the different provincial departments of agriculture to agree to such legislation being passed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Surely. I will do my best.

Mr. COOTE: If he will agree to that and give us their answers next year, so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to allow the amendment to pass. I think, however, the House is agreed that if it is desirable to have meat graded for export, meat for home consumption should also be graded.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I understand from what the minister says that there was a conference held in western Canada between the representatives of the producers' associations and the departments of agriculture in the western provinces. I know that a similar conference was held in eastern Canada, and that the representatives of the producers in eastern Canada are in favour of this bill being passed as it is now before the House. I have no doubt this bill was drafted after these two conferences had taken place at which everything was threshed out, and it seems to me rather strange that we should first of all have the bill provide for the grading of all meat products, which was approved by the committee, and then suggest this amendment when the only persons to object probably were the representatives of the packers and the live stock exchanges. I am thoroughly convinced that the representatives of the producers want this bill to pass in its present form. It may be a few packers or representatives of the stock exchange do not think it is in their best interests to have it pass. I think a good deal of the opposition is coming from that quarter—from interests which are against the producers of live stock in this country. We have to consider both. I think that the principle should be established in this bill that all meat should be graded and regulations brought in as conditions warranted in the years to come. It has been pointed out that the provinces must pass concurring legislation before this bill will become effective. We must have something to work to in the future if we are going to improve our live stock, and unless we establish the principle of grading and showing the producer where he can obtain more for a first-class beast when he produces it we are not going to improve the live stock industry of the country as we should. It is a question of dollars and cents. If a man can feel that it pays to produce good stock he will produce it. We may talk about grading and publish pamphlets and do all we like to try and convince the producer that it is a good thing to produce a first-class article, but unless he can receive some compensation for his efforts when he sells his animal, the argument is largely in vain. We have to tackle this question at some time; we should establish the principle now and work out the regulations in the years to come as they can be worked out in conjunction with the various provinces.

On section 4—Provisions to be included in by-laws.

The CHAIRMAN: There is an amendment to subsection (7) of section 4, to add, in the fortieth line, the word "only" after the word "minister", and also a new subsection, as subsection (8):

> Complaints the investigation of which necessitates an examination of books and records shall be made in writing to the minister and shall be supported by such evidence as may be available.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That merely indicates the method of making a complaint.

On section 6—Regulations.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand they have a practice on the stock exchange, when they start to bid in the morning, that the different commission men toss up a coin to see which buyer they will take first.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I heard about that. I think that is a little regulation of their own. It is not in the by-laws.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it not a fact that to all intents and purposes it is just as effective as if it were in the regulations?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, I think so. When they come to draft the new regulations I intend to make very extensive inquiries into that practice. Mr. Rice-Jones indicated in one of his interviews that it was the practice. Does the hon. member think there should be a regulation against that.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am disposed to agree with the hon. gentleman.

TRADE MARK AND DESIGN ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 171, to amend the Trade Mark and Design Act.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the nature of the amendments?

Mr. HEENAN: The amendments are quite acceptable. They are simply to make clear the designation of "union label." Where the word "label" appears this amendment places the word "union" before it, and provides fees to be charged for the registration of the union label, the same as in the case of a trade mark. Another provision is that the use of the union label shall be granted to any applicant.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY—OIL AND GAS RIGHTS IN WESTERN CANADA

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee of supply.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I desire to take this opportunity of bringing to the attention of the government, and particularly the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) a grievance which a large number of residents of western Canada have at the present time in connection with the oil and gas rights underlying land which many of the men have homesteaded. I wish to quote very briefly from an editorial of the Western Oil Examiner of recent date in regard to this question because it puts the case concisely:

> So near and yet so far. This describes the position of the farmer in the west, on whose land an oil well is being drilled unless he is lucky enough to own perpetual mineral rights.
> Since the latter part of the year 1889 the federal government has been leasing petroleum and natural gas rights instead of allowing these to remain with the ownership of the land.
> The prairie farmer may wake up one morning to find that the previous day there has been a filing stampede at a distant land office that has forever taken away from him the oil rights on his land and that some oil enthusiast for fifty cents an acre has acquired a lease that in many cases is worth more than the land itself. Pioneers go into remote districts and develop the country sufficiently to bring railways, making it possible for the geologist and wildcatter to follow.
> In the prairie provinces the Hudson's Bay company and the Canadian Pacific Railway are the owners of immense acreage of land which carries with it perpetual oil rights. The former under the Dominion Lands Act, 1872, secured 1¾ sections in every township and two whole sections in every fifth township in what is now the prairie provinces. The Canadian Pacific railway in 1881 was granted thousands of square miles of land, the mineral rights going with the surface rights.
> From 1872 to 1883 it was possible to file a homestead on land that ostensibly contained minerals but in the latter year it was enacted that land containing minerals should not be homesteaded. However, this did not affect land on which minerals existed but were not discovered until later.
> As a result of an order in council passed on September 17, 1889, all patents from the crown for lands in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories reserved to the crown all mines and minerals and a reservation clause to this effect appears on the majority of the titles. In 1908 parliament provided expressly by section 8 of the amended Dominion Lands Act, that no entry for homestead should convey any right to mines and minerals.
> To summarize briefly, the Hudson's Bay Company and the railway companies were granted land with no reservation and on selling their land usually kept the mines and minerals which were disposed of to other parties. Up to 1883 no homestead could be made on land which contained minerals.
> From 1889 to 1908 mines and minerals were reserved by the authority of an order in council. Since 1908 they have been reserved by statute.
> The 1889 order in council mentioned above made provision for working Dominion leases by providing that where the title to the mines and minerals was in one person and the surface rights vested in another that the owner of the minerals had the right to work the same, but first he must compensate the owner of the surface rights. If they could reach no agreement then the order provides for arbitration.
> The section of the regulations dealing with arbitration—I think it is section 8—provides that if the lessee of the oil rights cannot make satisfactory arrangements with the holder of the surface rights for entry upon the location, he must apply to the minister for permission to submit the matter in dispute to arbitration.
> Upon receiving such permission in writing, it shall be lawful for the lessee to give notice to the owner, or his agent, or the occupant, to appoint an arbitrator within a period of sixty days from the date of such notice, to act with another arbitrator named by the lessee, in order to determine what portion of the surface rights the lessee may reasonably acquire:—
> And—
> —the amount of compensation to which the owner or occupant shall be entitled.
> I have under my hand a letter from a gentleman who has had practical experience under these regulations. He says:
>
> I am writing you in regard to speculators having oil lease on my farm.
> They leased oil rights on one hundred acres from the government for fifty cents per acre and sold it to an oil company for $75,000, and reserved ten per cent royalty. Now they want to buy two acres from me for $100 cash and 100 shares to be held in escrow. I refused their offer and asked them $1,000 and 2½ per cent royalty. They claim they don't have to give me any royalty and that the government upholds them in it.
> We should be entitled to a royalty and then if they got a good well, which we all expect, we could afford to move out and let them have it. You are familiar with this field and its peculiar odour, and know that if the company got a well close to my house I would have to move out. And where could I go with a hundred dollars? All I want is fair play, and the government should see I get it.
> I may say the natural gas in that field has a very disagreeable sulphurous smell. As a matter of fact, the odour is quite noticeable five or ten miles away from this particular district.

Mr. ADSHEAD: More than that.

Mr. COOTE: Well, I expect sometimes it reaches as far as Calgary. But undoubtedly it is a very disagreeable odour. I think the people who own lands in that vicinity should have some consideration given them when these oil speculators wish to secure surface rights. May I quote from another letter from the same gentleman giving the results of an arbitration which took place in regard to this particular company?

He says:

The oil company appointed an arbitrator, and the Dominion land agent in Calgary appointed a man. They arbitrated on my land and fixed the price at $25 per acre for two acres.

This gentleman says that is all he was offered as compensation for the surface rights which the oil company wanted. The lessees of the oil rights had assigned them to an oil company for $75,000 in cash and 10 per cent royalty on any oil which might be discovered; but the owner of the surface rights where the company wished to drill this well was awarded by the arbitration board the handsome sum of $50. He continues:

My idea of what the government could and should do is to give the surface owners five per cent royalty at least, and the government still handle the leases. Then I don't think there ever would be any cause for arbitration.

The Canadian Pacific Railway, the Hudson's Bay Company and the Indians all own their surface rights, and oil rights and everything else, but the poor white man that pays the taxes and builds up the country gets nothing.

It wouldn't harm anyone to give the surface owner a small royalty. We all realize at this time the confusion it would cause to give the owners the lease—

That is, the lease of the oil rights.

—as there has been so much of it sold and resold. But it is not fair to let speculators buy it for fifty cents an acre and when they resell it to a drilling company they reserve an eighth or a tenth royalty. Nine times out of ten it is an American concern, and all the money will in time go out of the country, whereas if we were getting some of it it would stay here.

Another thing that is not fair is allowing a company to hold so much lease by letting the money they spend on drilling apply on rentals. That doesn't bring the government any money. It just favours the big companies by spending $500,000 or more drilling wells to blanket all the oil land they will ever want in a hundred years, and retards development.

He mentions the oil rights which the Indians have. May I point out that there is considerable oil development now going on on the Stony Indian reserve, which is a few miles north of where this gentleman lives. I am advised by the Indian department:

That when considering this question of issuing leases it was decided with the approval of the honourable the superintendent general that our regulations should be as closely as possible uniform with the regulations of the Department of the Interior. This policy was considered necessary in view of the fact that any oil or gas development on Indian reserves would undoubtedly affect development on adjacent Dominion lands.

I am advised by the Indian department that on an oil lease granted on an Indian reserve the company must pay to the Indian department a royalty of 10 per cent on all gas or oil produced. If this does not retard the development of these resources on Indian reserves—and we know as a matter of fact that it does not—I do not think it should be held that the granting of a royalty of 5 per cent to the holders of surface rights of other lands would retard development in those other areas. I do not think it would interfere in any way with the revenue derived by the Dominion government from these oil rights, and believe it only right and just that a small royalty should now be granted to the holders of surface rights in the prairie provinces. According to information which I have received from the Department of the Interior, the Hudson's Bay Company hold in Alberta 2,399,000, acres of land in which they possess the mineral rights as well as the surface rights, while the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and its subsidiary companies own mineral rights in a total of 13,035,548 acres in Alberta. If these two great corporations should be given the mineral rights in their lands, with the exception of gold and silver, would it not be a good thing for this House to say that the holders of surface rights, where the mineral rights have been held by the crown, should be allowed a small royalty of say 5 per cent to compensate them for the damage done to their lands when their surface rights are expropriated by the holders of leases covering the mineral rights? I do hope the government and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) will promise to give this matter their very careful consideration, their very serious consideration and, finally, their favourable consideration.

There can be no doubt that the surface rights of a great many of the holders have been depreciated by bringing in some of the wells, and these men are getting practically no compensation at all. I do not think that is fair. These people have said to me, "We think the government should treat us as well as they treat the Indians," but as a matter of fact they are not asking for quite the same treatment. I believe they would all be quite willing to accept a royalty of 5 per cent as sufficient compensation with the exception of any possible damage which may be done to the buildings or crops on their farms.

I do not want to delay the House and I am not going to take up any further time, but I do respectfully request the Minister of the Interior to give this matter his earnest consideration, and I again express the hope that within this year the government will consent to change the regulations so that these people who now own the surface rights may be granted, as part of the compensation which they should receive, a royalty of say 5 per cent on any oil or gas which may be discovered on their lands.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I will be glad to answer the statement of my hon. friend when my estimates are up for discussion.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee of supply, Mr. Bouchard in the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

National Defence—cadet services, $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Johnston): The item we are considering is: Cadet services, $500,000. When the committee rose at six o'clock on Saturday evening an amendment had been moved by Miss Macphail to reduce this item by $499,999.

Mr. ADSHEAD: In rising to speak to the question, in order to avoid making a number of short speeches, I propose to discuss briefly not only this item but the estimates for national defence in general. Before doing so I wish to join with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) in congratulating the House upon having obtained the services of the hon. gentleman who administers the Department of National Defence (Mr. Ralston). I am sure that the minister's genial and affable manners, and the clear and lucid way in which he speaks have earned for him the admiration and respect of hon. members in all corners of the chamber. And then, in connection with our opponents, may I say that after all it appears to me we are both working for the same end. They think that peace will be attained and maintained by the methods which they propose, while we here, who are just as sincere in our desire for peace, think it will be best secured by other means than those which they advocate.

Now in regard to the cadet movement, I think, perhaps that the most objectionable feature is the fact that it is supervised by a military officer in the schools; and after all the objections that have been stated by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail), and the leader of the Labour party in this House (Mr. Woodsworth), I think it is only fair that we should look at the question from all angles. The responsibility for the cadet movement does not rest with the Dominion government, nor does all the opposition to the cadet movement come from a few cranks, shall I say, in the House of Commons. There is no doubt that there is a concerted movement among the churches, and among other bodies, protesting very loudly, very sincerely and very emphatically against the cadet movement in this country.

Mr. GOTT: Cite a number of those that are protesting.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I could cite several, for instance the United Church of Canada in the province of Alberta has gone on record as protesting against such things. I need not name all the particular organizations which have done the same. I simply mention the fact to show that the movement is not confined to a few labour cranks in this corner of the House.

Mr. ARTHURS: The hon. member spoke of "churches". What other church has protested?

Mr. ADSHEAD: I said I did not wish to give a list of all the people that are protesting. I will simply add that I have received a number of letters along that line and leave the question there. At the same time it is only fair to say that the whole responsibility for this movement does not rest upon the Dominion government. It is optional—and it is only fair to put it that way—with the provincial governments to take what stand they please in the matter; and I am rather sorry to say—I wish to be absolutely fair—that I believe the Farmers government of Alberta have failed to make a protest against the cadet movement in connection with the schools of that province. The cadet movement is not a compulsory matter. If any school desires to adopt the cadet movement it is open to it to do so, if a school does not wish to take it up its wish will be respected. Therefore wherever the cadet movement obtains, responsibility must be shared by the province, the schools and the homes; it should not be fastened solely upon the members of the Dominion government or the members of this House. There appears to be a feeling that the opposition to the cadet movement is inspired by antagonism to the returned men. I want to say that there is no such attitude in my own mind. There is an old saying that "It is an ill bird that would foul its own nest"; and in view of my own experience in 1914, when I and a number of others marched down the streets seeing our own sons off to the war, it would ill become me to cast any reflection whatsoever upon the men who have returned from the war. As for the returned men, I believe the last thing they want in their inner hearts is another war such as the one that was brought to a conclusion in 1918.

In the discussion the other day an hon. gentleman to my right presented a simile to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He said to him "Would you not insure your house against fire"? and of course the answer came "yes". "Well," the hon. member in question said, "the military and naval organizations are an insurance against a conflagration of the kind of which you are speaking." I take issue with that position right now, and I wish to carry out the simile to what I believe to be its logical conclusion. Let us take it for granted that we are trying to insure ourselves, as well as our sons and our grandsons, against such a conflagration as occurred in 1914. Now when a fire occurs we do not damn the firemen but we curse the fire. We do not seek to cast any reflection against the fire brigade, but we try to remove all combustible materials lying around that would permit that fire to spread. So in this case we do not damn or condemn the soldiers, but we do most heartily damn and condemn war. Our object should be to use preventive measures in order to prevent the occurrence of these things in the future.

One of the first things a fire insurance company does is to come around the house and see if there is anything that might cause a fire and, if so, it asks that it be removed. If in a city there was a large fire and if some time after the fire you saw combustible materials lying around from which there was danger of another fire, you would not simply go to the city council and say: Let us increase the fire brigade; let us increase the number of fire engines. They would say: That is foolish; let us remove those combustible materials. That will be the proper procedure in that regard.

[Mr. Adshead.]

Let me carry this question a little further. If you had a fire so serious that it had devoured half your buildings and half your fire brigade, and if experts came to you some years afterwards and pointed out that the aggregation of combustible material was becoming so dangerous that, if another fire broke out, not only would all the buildings be destroyed, but the whole fire brigade and the whole city would go up in smoke, what would be your answer? What would be your earnest endeavour, the earnest endeavour of any serious-minded, sensible man? Would you go once more to the city council and say: Gentlemen, let us increase the fire brigade; let us increase the number of fire engines? No, the fire insurance companies would insist that you bend your efforts to removing the combustible material that might cause another fire. Their answer would be this: The next fire will be so far beyond you that no fire brigade, no fire engines, will ever be able to extinguish it and the city and the city brigade will all go up in smoke. Therefore, applying that as a principle, we should bend our utmost efforts to remove from Canada and in fact the world at large those combustible things that might cause such another war conflagration in which not only the fire brigades, that is the armies, but our citizens and civilization itself would be swallowed up.

I want to read just a few extracts so as to turn the attention of the committee to what I consider is the most serious thing in regard to war. I am not speaking of my own authority; I have in my hand a message from no less a gentleman than Sir Oliver Lodge, who, in speaking about these combustible materials in Europe and indeed the world at large, made this statement. He appealed to "world statesmen to curb the international tendency to produce instruments of destruction." He said that "aerial locomotion presents possibilities of overwhelming entire cities in vast destruction," and it threatens a return to the old days when populations, women, children and all that there is will be entirely wiped out.

The Montreal Herald, in connection with this matter, states that in the next war, about which some people talk so glibly, if it ever should come on this continent, "Montreal or New York wonld be a hell on earth before the newspapers could come out with the text of the declaration of war."

The London Observer comes out with a similar statement. It says:

The object would be to reduce permanently the population and resources of any conquered country and to prevent it by force from ever being a danger again. Next time there could be no faith in peace or humanity. Were it once proved that the peace movement after the great war of 1914-18 had failed in spite of the league, there could be no rational belief whatever that any new peace movement could succeed. Yet armies, navies, air-fleets are being organized all over the world on the assumption that such a "war of the future" as we have just described is a possibility of the world in which we live.

We have the position of France in the matter. France has entered into a mutual engagement with the United States, not to make it necessary to increase cadet forces and military accoutrements, but to outlaw war.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is France not rather increasing her navy and army rather than decreasing them?

Mr. ADSHEAD: I believe she is increasing her air force, but that does not alter the fact that as a nation she has entered into an agreement with the United States to outlaw war, and that is more than we have done.

Sweden and Belgium have entered into a solemn obligation never again to go to war, no matter what may happen, but always to resort to arbitration. They have seen the results of war and they realize what the increasing of armaments and military institutions will bring to them. The Citizen of February 7th of this year makes this statement:

> If chemical agencies furnish such means, they will be used. When the Germans used gas in 1915, the world recoiled in horror and alarm. But did the Germans stop? Not only did they not stop, but their opponents bettered their instruction—and invented deadlier vapours, more revolting gases.
> The remedy is not to prohibit any one form of warfare, even assuming such prohibition could be enforced. It is—and apologies are hereby tendered for suggesting it once more—to abolish war itself.

I have one more extract to read and it comes from our former enemies. The Germans, seeing the destructive force of war and what it has done, have taken a line of action that I wish we would take. This extract states:

> A chair of pacifism has been established at Kiel university. Doctor Walter Schuecking, member of the Reichstag, has been assigned to Kiel by the Prussian Ministry of Education as professor of international law and of the history of international pacifism.

Thus we have our old enemies the Germans seeing that peace is absolutely necessary for the world, and they have set us the example that we should bend our energies more toward the attainment of peace.

So far as Canada is concerned, so far as I am concerned, not for myself but for my children and grandchildren, for the children of my neighbours and their children's children, what are we doing in the direction of peace? The estimates show that we are appropriating about $13,000,000 for this year for military armaments and services, for the fire brigade, if you like. I will leave that question in abeyance. What are we doing for the prevention of another war conflagration? I have looked all through the estimates and on page 61 I find the only mention of peace:

> Grant to the Inter-parliamentary Union for Peace, $200.

There is the magnificent sum of $200 for peace. My protest to-day is perhaps not so much against the items that we have in the estimate of the Department of National Defence although part of my protest is against that. I say that we ought to wake up to the danger and not live in a fool's paradise; that we should do what any sensible fire insurance company would do, what any sensible man would do if the whole city was surrounded by combustible material. We should bend our best efforts to endeavouring to prevent such a conflagration rather than to cure it after it has taken place. It is said that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." The whole tendency in medical science is to prevent sickness rather than to cure it. In forest conservation the idea is to prevent fires rather than to put them out after they have started. So I would plead with the House to make for the maintenance of peace at least half the appropriation that we are making for protection against war.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I would like to make a few remarks in regard to this question that is now occupying the attention of the House. We may take it for granted that, no matter what views any hon. member may express in this House, those views are the ones that prevail in the constituency which that hon. member represents, and therefore the views expressed by the hon. member for South-east Grey (Miss Macphail) may be taken as expressing the sentiments of the majority of the people in that constituency. Similarly the views expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, whether we agree with them or not, and I am sure that most of us do not, may be taken as expressing the sentiments of that particular part of Canada, and the same may be said in regard to the views which have been expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Adshead). We can in this way learn something of the viewpoint of Canada as a whole, and we can by giving due consideration to these views guard against the dangers which these members indicate as existing in certain parts of the country which they represent. As Kipling puts it, I think we might say:

> And the things that you learn
> From the yaller and brown
> 'll 'elp you a lot with the white.

So the things we learn from the distorted, warped and twisted views and attitude of hon. gentlemen like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) may help us somewhat in dealing with more reasonable people in other parts of the country.

I have no quarrel with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in the eulogistic tribute he paid to the hon. member for Southeast Grey. It is perfectly within his right to say that the hon. member for Southeast Grey represents the women of Canada. That, I daresay, is his view, but I would not be dealing squarely, it seems to me, with the women of the part of the country I represent if I allowed that statement to go unchallenged. While willing to concede that the hon. member for Southeast Grey in the views to which she has seen fit to give expression may represent a considerable body of women in Southeast Grey, I unhesitatingly declare that the opinions which she voices and the attitude which she has taken at various times do not represent the sentiments and opinions and aspirations of even a small fraction of the women of the Dominion of Canada. In other words, in one sense the hon. member for Southeast Grey does represent the people of Canada in that she is the only woman having a seat in this House, but I repeat, in my opinion, that is the only respect in which she does represent the women of Canada. The hon. member for Southeast Grey in her remarks the other day used these words:

> I do object to imposing upon boys our own ideas instead of letting them think for themselves.

And further:

> Education is being used as a political institution to form habits of thought in such a way as to make one set of opinions inevitable.

And in her opinion that was disastrous to the minds of the boys of this country. When I read that expression of the hon. member in Hansard to-day, I wondered just when the hon. member had come to that conclusion, that she objected to imposing on boys our own ideas instead of letting them think for themselves. I wonder if the hon. member for Southeast Grey was letting the boys and girls in the schools in the constituency she represents think for themselves when she was loading up their youthful minds with the kind of stuff—I say that not in any offensive way, but simply because I cannot find any other word which expresses it better—which is contained in the letter which she sent to the school children in Southeast Grey. I hope the hon. member in her generosity did not go beyond the boundaries of her own constituency with that letter, because its contents are certainly contrary to the facts of history. It is a letter which is very generous in its regard for Russia and China, but, I repeat, it is perverting British history and is loading the minds of the school children who read it or have had it read to them with a lot of poisonous stuff that does not make for good citizenship in this country and is not in the interests of the children who hear it. In that letter the hon. member says:

> Russia, seeing that a rebellion was coming in China, wisely gave up all her rights within that country, and the Chinese are very grateful.

There is a fine impression to be conveyed to the minds of school children, to give them a good opinion of Russia in that regard, and then in the next sentence the hon. member says in her letter:

> There is little doubt that Russia is urging the Chinese to rebellion.

While Russia is largely at fault for the bloodshed and the war which is going on in China at the present time, the hon. member for Southeast Grey, I repeat, in her message to the school children, was very kind in the impression she wanted to convey to their minds of Russia and her activities in China, but was very harsh in perverting British history and loading up the minds of the children with poisonous untruths or misstatements of facts as to British history and the part Britain has played in international affairs.

The hon. member for Southeast Grey is very strongly opposed to cadet training. That is evidently the view held by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. I do not hold that view myself. I believe that cadet training in this country is one of the best and one of the finest things that has ever been inaugurated in the Dominion of Canada. I believe it is a good thing for the boys to come under a certain amount of discipline and be taught to play the game and coöperate with others. To say that a boy who is taught to march and countermarch and go through some of the simpler elements of drill in the schoolyard is having his mind filled with a desire to slaughter and that it makes him want to kill people is the most utter nonsense that ever was uttered by anybody in the world. To say that to teach a boy to shoot straight is to fill his mind with the idea of killing his fellowmen is colossal nonsense. We all can recollect the times in the past when the little boys wore a broad white collar about a foot wide, and a long flowing tie, with a little hat on the side of the head, and how pretty they were! How we loved those little fellows—little Lord Fauntleroys! We all admired and loved those little chaps, but where I differ, and where I think most other members of this House differ, from the hon. member for Southeast Grey is that while it is all right for these little chaps to be little Lord Fauntleroys when they are six and perhaps eight years old, we do not want them to be little Lord Fauntleroys when they grow up to be men, and to have an extra cookie when they go to bed at night and have grandma sing lullabys to them to put them to sleep. We do not want a class of men in this country that you might call she-men.

Miss MACPHAIL: I think it would be very much better for a lot of men, possibly for the hon. member who has the floor, if they could be called she-men. If that meant they had some of the attributes of women, it would be a very good thing for the men. I resent very deeply that the hon. member's insult to women calling boys whom he wishes to discredit she-boys. Since when did the male become greater than the female?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Far be it from me, Mr. Chairman, with such evidence of female superiority as we have in this House, to suggest for one moment that the male is superior to the female. I know, of course, that that is impossible, but, being a mere male, I still cling to the desire to have some of the attributes of a male and not to be led around by the apronstrings of any female, even when, rightly or wrongly, she possesses not only the attributes of the female sex and superiority, but also those of the male sex. I do not want to see boys grow up to be little Lord Fauntleroys all their lives. I do not want to see a class of boys grow up to be men who will be taught that the only resentment a boy must show when offered an insult is to slap the other fellow lightly on the wrist, and then go home and tell his grandmother, who will probably give him an extra cookie that night and recite some nursery rhyme to him. We have got to have both sexes in this country and I would be the last one to suggest otherwise. No person has a deeper or more abiding reverence for those of the opposite sex than myself. Any person who has lived in the world nearly as long as I have will understand me when I say that we appreciate their superiority and bow to their judgment and often to their authority, even when we think otherwise. As a matter of diplomacy it is a wise thing to do, and while that may be a good thing in individual cases I will tell the hon. member from Southeast Grey I do not want it to become wholesale. We may tolerate a few cases here and there, but we do not want our boys to grow up with the idea that it is their duty in life to shoot straight to kill their fellowmen, or with the idea that in the little drill they get in the school they are being trained for the purpose of killing their fellowmen, but we want them to be taught—and I believe from my knowledge of the school teachers of this country that they are taught—the horrors of war and the dreadful thing that it is, but they are also being told, and properly so, that it is a good thing to be prepared for contingencies if they arise.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to England as being prepared. The hon. member quoted the amount that a number of countries were paying out for national defence or armed preparations. He quoted what England and France were paying out for this purpose and judging from what we see at the present time and what we know of the storm cloud which is hanging heavily over Europe, I ask what would be the result if England and France to-day scrapped all their warships, took the uniforms off the boys and destroyed all the aeroplanes they possess? I venture to say that inside of thirty days we would have a war in Europe, and the powers which had not destroyed their means of defence would take advantage of the unpreparedness of England and France, and that war would result to the destruction of England and France and the breaking down of civilization.

Let us look a little further if I may for a minute or two into the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Speaking here day before yesterday on this question, in opposing this vote, he was heartbroken over the thought of voting money for such a purpose. Tears coursed copiously down his bronzed and weatherbeaten face as he thought of voting any money for this purpose. He was a veritable apostle of peace—that same hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He said, "I could understand the attitude of hon. members in this House, professional militarists, whose job is to keep this sort of thing going." But what about professional bolshevists and agitators, whose job it was to bring about a strike in Winnipeg in 1919? The hon. member asked the question, "Against whom are we preparing? Against whom are we arming?" The last world war was fought to make the world safe for democracy, and now the problem is to make democracy safe for the world. That causes a little laughter by certain hon. members in this House. I am glad they feel so highly elated and so humorous over it. But just so long as people, especially members of this House, give expression to the views voiced by the hon. member for Southeast Grey and just so long as we have members of this House educating the school children of this country with the kind of propaganda the hon. member has given out, just so long as we have members in this House, like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and his colleague from North Winnipeg, looking with an encouraging eye on such events as the Winnipeg strike, I can give an answer to his question: Against whom are we arming? It is not perhaps so much against trouble from outside. We are not arming against anyone or any nation in particular; but I repeat that it is important that the boys of this country should grow up with their minds filled with the idea that it is up to them as citizens of Canada to be prepared to meet just such contingencies as arose, apparently with the approval of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in the Winnipeg strike a few years ago. One can understand the attitude of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in opposing the vote. May I call attention to the fact that when that strike took place in Winnipeg the strike committee undertook to control the delivery of milk and bread, they proposed to establish depots which were to give preference to the families of those engaged in the strike, and they were not concerned about others, or about the families of others. On the 17th May the strike committee issued this bulletin:

> It is impossible to distinguish between the sick children owing to the fact that it would take days to establish a card system, and reports are fast coming in that children are on the verge of death for the want of milk.

So they issued this bulletin to explain to the strikers that they could no longer follow their former objective of looking after the children of strikers. They said, "We have not time to discriminate, and some of our own children, the children of strikers, are dying of starvation. If we could only discriminate or differentiate, if we had our card system perfected, we need not care about the children of those not striking; they might die of starvation, but we cannot discriminate" And they issued this bulletin. I wonder if the children of the member for Winnipeg North Centre were suffering from hunger or from the lack of milk. Or were the children of the member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) suffering in that regard? Possibly not. Their prominence in the line would see to it that they and their families were looked after. Such things are among the horrors of war—children dying from starvation, and so on. That is a terrible thing. Do not vote anything in this House to provide against contingencies of that kind. But it is all right in the estimation of the hon. member if it occurred as it did in Winnipeg in the strike conditions that existed at that time. Is there any doubt about that?

On the 7th of February the hon. member, speaking in Vancouver, said:

> The ultimate object of the federated Labour party is the collective ownership and democratic operation of the means of wealth production. This involves a complete revolution in our whole economic and social structure.

So the object was collective ownership and a complete revolution if necessary by such means as were undertaken in the Winnipeg strike. I am sure hon. members will understand why.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt for a moment?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have a right to ask a question. I have also a right to check statements.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have a right to check statements with regard to myself on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington has not only made the most glaring misrepresentation in regard to the charge—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, this is not a point of order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): State your point. You are not going to make another speech until I get through.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman is absolutely correct in his statement as to what I said, or at least I presume I said, and as to my attitude with regard to the necessity for our proceeding along the lines of complete economic changes in our industrial and social system. But he is absolutely wrong in interjecting the means by which he says

I propose to secure those changes. I protest that he has no right to put words in my mouth. That is my question of privilege.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member retract that interjection.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What interjection have I to retract? I think it is natural that I should ask that question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Just possess yourself in patience. If hon. members do not object I can keep this going with you from now until to-morrow, and enjoy it. The hon. gentleman says that he did state what I quoted, that he favoured:

> The collective ownership and democratic operation of the wealth of production.

He does not object to that. The other part of the quotation was:

> This involves a complete revolution in our whole economic and social structure.

Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he did not use those words?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I am quite content with that statement.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, I ask—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, I ask that a certain statement made by the hon. member be retracted, to the effect that I have indicated the means by which that could be done—the means used, as he states, in the Winnipeg strike. That is not so. I ask that the statement be retracted.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to retract. I have driven the nail in and I will clinch it on the other side before I get through.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, I absolutely deny the statement and I ask that it be retracted. I have a right to make that request.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman who has the floor made a statement which the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has denied in toto.

Mr. BENNETT: He has not. He said it was true.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman is showing unnecessary heat.

Mr. BENNETT: We saw you last year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I ask for your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BENNETT: Let us have your Cromwell.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I would be the last to ask consideration from the hon. gentleman who bobbed up a moment ago. I am quite capable of taking all the blows as they come, but—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The CHAIRMAN: Rule 19, subsection 249, states:

> It has been formally ruled by speakers in the Canadian Commons that a statement by an hon. member respecting himself and peculiarly within his own knowledge must be accepted, but it is not unparliamentary to temporately criticize statements made by a member as being contrary to the facts.

I am at a loss to see that the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) has said anything which has been directly contradicted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, I appeal against your ruling, and—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —I will explain my position.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have a right to do so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is no debate on an appeal against the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have a right to explain.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman is within his right in appealing against the ruling of the Chair, but the appeal is not debatable.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Vote.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Vote.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order. Vote.

The CHAIRMAN: Do I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wishes to force his appeal?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I appeal against the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: To clear the matter up, I must ask the hon. gentleman clearly to state to the House just what he is appealing against.

Mr. BENNETT: Put it in writing.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was going to proceed to do that. I appeal against the ruling of the Chair. I will give the grounds of my appeal.

The CHAIRMAN: On what point?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On your ruling, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington is in order. I rose to a question of privilege on the ground that the hon. member had alleged that I had made certain statements, which statements I absolutely denied.

Some hon. MEMBERS: You admitted them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington declined to take my denial; he refused to retract. The right which I have in this House, Mr. Chairman, a right which I do not intend to surrender, is to insist on a retraction by the hon. gentleman. You deliberately ruled against that right.

Mr. ARTHURS: Mr. Chairman, I submit there is nothing before the Chair at the present time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is an appeal.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, I read a moment ago—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER took the chair and submitted the question to the House in the following terms:

During the debate on item No. 92, being a vote for $500,000 for cadet services, Mr. Edwards (Frontenac-Addington) alleged that the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) in a speech at Vancouver stated that there should be a complete change in our economic conditions which might necessitate the taking of revolutionary methods.

Mr. Woodsworth objected to the allegation that he was ready to take revolutionary methods, and asked that Mr. Edwards retract his allegation. The Chairman ruled that Mr. Edwards was not bound to make any retraction.

From this ruling Mr. Woodsworth appealed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, may I say—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —may I say that is not a correct statement of my position. That is not the point I objected to—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I object that that is not—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: No discussion can take place on a ruling of the Chair.

The House divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be sustained? And the ruling was sustained on the following division:

Mr. SPEAKER: The Chairman's decision is sustained.

Mr. GLEN: Before you leave the chair, I should like to have your direction in this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no appeal after the opinion of the House has been taken.

Mr. GLEN: I am rising to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The House is now in committee.

SUPPLY

The House again in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. GLEN: I should like to get a direction—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As a matter of privilege I should like to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I wish to state here and now that if I have said at any time anything which any hon. gentleman in this House states is not in accordance with his own statement, I will be the first to correct what he might regard as a misrepresentation, for I have no wish to violate any rule of the House. I shall place upon Hansard again that part of the quotation which was accepted as correct by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre so that we may have the connection. I quoted him as saying—and to this he did not object, although I understand he objected to some conclusions I drew therefrom:

> The ultimate object of the federated labour party is the collective ownership and democratic operation of the means of wealth production. This involves a complete revolution in our whole economic and social structure.

Mr. STEVENS: Let it go at that.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Perhaps some gentleman did not get the whole of that sentence—"a revolution in the whole economic and social structure". Those are the words I read before, and Hansard will show to-morrow that I read them. Now I want to add to that the rest of the quotation:

> The federal authorities control the military and the courts, and labour is not going to get what it wants until it, in some way, gets control of the military and the courts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I maintain that there is a very direct connection between that statement of the hon. gentleman and the item under discussion, and I think that we can very clearly estimate the reasons why the hon. gentleman is objecting to this estimate which he claims is for militaristic purposes. Naturally in view of that statement he does not want to see the federal authorities control the military and the courts, and he tells us plainly that labour will not get what they want until they get control of the military and the courts. I just want to say in this connection that I do not regard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, or his colleague from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) as in any sense of the word expressing the sentiment of labour in this Dominion. May I add to what I have already read to show the kind of company the hon. gentleman was in, a quotation from a speech by the hon. member for North Winnipeg. Referring to the strike, which he called "a peaceable strike," he said:

> We were having beautiful weather, and we were having a beautiful strike, when the citizens butted into the game and began to attempt to assert their authority.

It was very inconsiderate of the citizens of Winnipeg that they should butt in on such a beautiful day when these people were having such a fine time. So I say that gives us an indication again of what they stand for.

Let me quote another bosom friend, and one who took an active part in the strike, a man by the name of Russell:

> The blood that is spilled in Canada will depend on the working class. We must establish the same form of government as they have in Russia so that we may have a Russian democracy here.

"Oh, it is a terrible thing to vote any money in this House for military purposes, it is all tending in the direction of war," says the hon. gentleman. He objects to that very strongly. But here is one of his bosom friends and colleagues in this strike that took place in Winnipeg, whose words I have quoted—"that the blood that is spilled in Canada;" not the blood spilled in war with any other nation, but "the blood that is spilled in Canada."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am not quoting the language of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to ask whether the member for Frontenac has any right to quote a Mr. Russell, and say that he is a bosom friend of mine—

Mr. STEVENS: That is not a point of order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —and imply—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —that I am in this position. I should like to ask if the hon. gentleman is in order.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington is certainly in order in quoting the remarks of a Mr. Russell.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is not the point again.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not understand that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre denies that this gentleman made the statement. Does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre deny the statement that Mr. Russell is a bosom friend of his?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I deny that the statement at all represents my position.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Very well, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre so far forgets the claims of comradeship as to state emphatically that Russell was not a bosom friend of his, I would accept his statement at once, but I am quoting from a man that he does not repudiate, who was one of his bosom friends during that "peaceable strike" that took place in Winnipeg, when people were starving and infants could not get sufficient milk to nourish them.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I rise to a point of order. My point of order is this: What has the Winnipeg strike got to do with the item under consideration?

Some hon. MEMBERS: A good deal.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down; take your seat.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I will answer that question in a very few words.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I should like to have a ruling on my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman is speaking to the point of order.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In regard to the point of order I would merely say that reasons have been advanced why this item should not be voted. I am giving reasons why in my judgment it should be voted, and some of those reasons have been furnished by what has taken place within the bounds of Canada. Surely if anything is pertinent to the question, that is. When we find hon. gentlemen saying that certain parties or classes must, in order to prevail, get control of the military and the courts of this country, I certainly think we have a right to discuss this vote from the standpoint of maintaining recognized authority in Canada.

The CHAIRMAN: Regarding the point of order raised by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien), since I have been a member of this House it has always been the custom to allow great latitude in discussing the estimates, but I thought both on Saturday and to-day that the discussion in connection with this item was going rather far afield. In my opinion the hon. member who now has the floor has not travelled further afield from the item than other hon. members, but I hope he will confine his further remarks more closely to the item before the committee.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I want to quote from one person who took a very prominent part in the Winnipeg strike in order that I may demonstrate to the committee reasons why we must make preparations against such things in the future. I quote from a man by the name of Ivens:

> The storm is about to break and this time the lightning is about to strike upward instead of downward. I think the parliament buildings on Kennedy street would make a good labour temple and the way things are going we will soon move in.

In such utterances as those reasons are furnished why we should back up a movement which will instil into the minds of the boys of this country some definite ideas as to their responsibilities and duties as Canadian citizens. But since an objection has been raised to my quoting from Ivens and Russell, we had an indication right in this House of the autocratic, if not the militaristic spirit last year when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) himself gloried in the fact that complications arising from the groups in the House at that time enabled him to dictate to the government regarding certain legislation. If that is not an indication of militaristic tendencies, it is an indication of an autocratic tendency to which I object and which I think we should endeavour to school our boys in this country to avoid. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in those trying days, when that peaceable strike took place, took very few risks himself. Seeing that he was a Canadian-born citizen he ran no risk of being deported. In regard to going into prison, I quote his statement at Calgary under date of October 29, 1919:

> I am not worrying as to whether they keep me in the pen or not. We'll win anyway. I don't think the workers of this country will let us stay in anyway.

There is not a great deal of courage behind a statement like that! He wants to gain control of the military and the courts in this country, so we can understand why he is opposed to the item at present before the committee. I do not intend to detain the committee any longer than to say this: I quoted from Kipling a little while ago and I have given indications of what Kipling perhaps had in mind when he said:

> And the things that you learn
> From the yaller and brown
> 'll 'elp you a lot with the white.

The things we have learned not from "the yaller and the brown," but from white gentlemen who have given their encouragement, at least not their discouragement, to such things as took place in Winnipeg in 1919, will help us a lot in managing the affairs of this country, if we only properly appreciate what they did or attempted to do and keep them in their place.

It has been my misfortune during this debate to refer to another hon. member, the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) in a way which evidently that hon. member did not approve. I have nothing whatever to say against the person who represents Southeast Grey. When I refer to that hon. member I am referring to the person who represents the constituency of Southeast Grey, just as I would refer to any other member in this House who represents any other constituency. I am speaking, not against the personality of the one who made the remarks any more than against the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but against the teachings and the general attitude of mind of the hon. member for Southeast Grey, which I think are not in the best interests of the Dominion of Canada. I would not have said so much about the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre if he had confined his remarks to Winnipeg North Centre. But he has been speaking in various parts of this country and I want the people of Canada to understand him as I think I do. I would refer him to a statement which he made as reported on page 1732 of Hansard of last year in reference to singing the national anthem. He said

> I remember that I became conscious that the tune was "God Save the King", but I paid no attention.

I represent people of the opposite class. When I recognize the fact that the national anthem is being sung I feel like standing to attention as I believe all loyal subjects will do, and in that way showing my respect for the head of the British empire.

It was my misfortune to bring down upon my head the wrath of the hon. member for Southeast Grey. In that connection I will close by saying that if before I came here this afternoon I did not appreciate the truth of Kipling's statement, I certainly do now when he said: "The female of the species is more deadly than the male."

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Having listened to the provocative speech of the hon. member (Mr. Edwards, Frontenac), there will be no longer any wonder in the minds of those who have wondered in the past why Ireland was such a distressful isle. The hon. gentleman has undoubtedly ability to stir things up and I think he has succeeded this afternoon. The reverberations of his utterances will not for some time cease to sound throughout this chamber. However, not having been referred to personally by that person I am not going to take issue with him because on this particular item of the estimates, while I may be no more obtuse than others, I did not hear him produce any worthwhile arguments as to why we should keep on increasing our appropriations for cadet training or for other military purposes.

I would like to ask hon. gentlemen and the minister concerned: What after all do we gain by the enormous increase in our military estimates this year? I have in my hand an editorial from a humble western newspaper, one of those little things that crop up from time to time showing signs of reasoned intelligence and logic. This paper which is called the Western Producers has this to say on the question of the advantages or disadvantages of continuing to arm. It asks itself: What have we gained by arming? And on the basis of that question it writes this:

It is certain that there is a large and growing sentiment in Canada that the policy of individual nation-arming, with the hope of being able to conquer any possible foe at any time, is a hopeless task, and in contradiction to the spirit of the age. The policy adopted by the Navy League is the old policy governing the conduct of all nations at all times since the beginning of history. It is the policy which has failed to protect past empires and past nations. It is the policy that has brought on war and increased the ferocity of war. It is the policy that has led to intense national pride and consequent international bitterness. It is the policy that has destroyed millions of lives and devastated continents. It is the policy which the Great war was supposed to terminate. It is generally accepted that the policy has worked well for the British Empire—

Hon. gentleman to my right have argued that again and again:

—but even that may be subject to challenge. Great Britain, largely as a result of her naval and military preparations, has been swamped in taxes. It can be imagined that if Great Britain had devoted her brains and her money to social improvement and industrial development—

And I might add international harmony and brotherhood:

—the million or so men now out of work and miserable would be employed and happy.

One million is too small a figure. Other eminent economists have put the figure as high as ten millions out of work and unhappy:

England has protected her shores and her commerce, but she cannot protect millions of her citizens from starvation and abject squalor. Her freedom, as it is called, has been maintained, but the freedom enjoyed by the destitute families of desperate men, is a doubtful asset from the standpoint of the workless.

I ask again, what do we hope to gain from this additional expenditure on armaments in this country? What excuse there was for Britain does not exist in this country. What excuse Great Britain might have had for adding to her army and navy and increasing her military and naval expenditures year after year does not exist in this country. We are in a geographical position that relieves us from the menace of European conflict. We have no enemies who wish to injure us. We have even the voice of some of the greatest statesmen that England has ever produced in support of our attitude. No one questions the brilliance and depth of thought of Arthur Ponsonby, who during the MacDonald administration was Under-Secretary of Foreign Affairs. Referring to the dominions, in his book, Now is the Time, he has this to say, and I commend these words to the minister and to the administration at page 82:

Any disposition on the part of our dominions to refuse to join in these wars of European origin will be all to the good. The deadweight of a reasonable pacifism from that quarter might have a moderating effect on the home government.

There is no question about it:

If the jingo does not want the break-up of the empire, he must moderate his tone and abstain from converting inter-governmental disputes into causes of war. In any case, however, so widely different are the circumstances—

This is the point I want to emphasize:

In any case, however, so widely different are the circumstances of life and world relations in our dominions, that it can only be a matter of time for them to have complete control over their own destinies. For us to prevent them from reaping the inestimable benefits of peace which their great distance from the European powder magazine would naturally allow them, must indeed, sooner or later, strike both the governments and the peoples of the dominions as intolerable.

There are many other references of like character in that volume and in other volumes that you can find; they were referred to by the hon. member for Southeast Grey when she was speaking. Lord Grey, Lord Milner, and many other of the greatest thinkers and statesmen that England has produced denounce the madness and insanity of war and of continuing preparations for war, because the result is always and inevitably the same. Some gentlemen sing of glory and victory and triumph. The hon. member for Frontenac this afternoon quoted Kipling. Let me answer him by quoting from one of our Canadian poets, Robert Service, in a volume dedicated to his brother, Lieutenant Albert Service, who was killed in action in France in August, 1916:

Victory! there can be but one, hallowed in every land;
When by the graves of our common dead we who were foemen stand;
And in the hush of our common grief hand is tendered to hand.
Triumph! Yes, when out of the dust in the splendour of their release
The spirits of those who fell go forth and they hallow our hearts to peace,
And, brothers in pain, with world-wide voice, we clamour that War shall cease.

Another tribute:

Glory! Ay, when from blackest loss shall be born most radiant gain;

When over the gory fields shall rise a star that never shall wane;
Then and then only our dead shall know that they have not fall'n in vain.
When our children's children shall talk of war as a madness that may not be;
When we thank our God for our grief to-day,
and blazon from sea to sea
In the name of the dead the banner of Peace
. . . . that will be Victory.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, and that is the direction in which I hope every effort of mine will be placed. In a peaceful country like this, without enemies, I do not want to see these estimates increased, for that increase in turn creates a psychology so inevitably drawing the nation sooner or later into military competition and into war itself. Would it not be much better that we should devote the moneys we have to other and worthier purposes? We find, for instance, that it is difficult for the returned men who fought in the last war to get the justice they feel is theirs. The Minister of Finance rose in the House on Saturday morning and referred in a very autocratic manner to the position which he was prepared to take if certain amendments to the Pension Act were not at once accepted. There are other questions that arise. There is need in this country for expenditure on post offices and other public works. There is need for expenditure in many districts that are awaiting development, to add to the prosperity and wealth of this nation, but we have no money for these things, while for war and preparations for war we have millions of dollars to spend.

I was interested enough to place on the order paper some little time ago an order for a return showing the total of appropriations for the fiscal year 1925-1926, both on capital and consolidated accounts. I asked that the figures be tabulated in various divisions showing, first, appropriations relating to past wars; secondly, appropriations relating to future wars, and other divisions showing expenditures on public works, science, social and ethical improvements, and so on. I received that return a little time ago. I have taken some trouble to analyse a part of it; I have not had time to go through the whole of it yet. But I find this: Out of the 1925-1926 appropriation we spent for past wars, and this will practically be the same as this year, $163,639,165.24. We are now preparing for another war in that we are spending nearly $14,000,000; $13,774,805 to be exact, on military preparations. In order to get a fair idea of how our development is tending, let us see how much is being spent by the federal government on science. The total amount spent in all departments of government on science during that year was the paltry sum of $2,944,000. How much was spent on social and ethical development? A total of $2,541,000. We spent $14,000,000 preparing for war, and $163,000,000 on account of past wars, and before we have measurably reduced our war debt, before we can spend hardly anything on science or on social and ethical development we are proceeding to add another $3,000,000 in one year to the military expenditures of this country. I do not think there is any defence that can be put up to support the hon. minister in the increase he is asking in these estimates this year, and I hope that when he speaks he will give us really worth while reasons that will appeal to common sense why this increase is being asked for.

I will give him another reason why there should not be an increase in these estimates. I have in my hand the Canadian Forum, one of our brilliant little publications in Toronto, whence other thoughts come than those emanating from the hon. member for Frontenac. One of the editors of this publication indicates that there is a psychological effect which is at once developed the moment we become a busily arming nation. He puts it this way:

> But the cardinal argument against Canada, at this of all times, beginning to build up defensive forces is psychological. The success of the league is bound up with the cause of disarmament. It is true that as yet little has been done towards the limitation of armaments, and it is possible that the next disarmament conference will be little more successful than other attempts in the past.
> But the forces working towards disarmament are strong and confident; we believe that they will triumph, because they represent the spirit of the age; but even those who have not that faith must admit that there are good grounds for hope that they prevail, although their first victory may not be until the time when France is faced with the near prospect of a Germany free to arm against her—and that time is not quite yet. At the present time and under these circumstances if Canada were to take measures towards arming herself, which she never previously considered, the adverse moral effect on world opinion might but out of all proportion to the importance of the measures taken.

I think that is only too true a statement. The adverse pyschological effect on the work of those who at the present time are pressing forward in the cause of peace is something the administration of this country might well pay some attention to.

> Even if those measures were merely to make a direct contribution towards Britain's forces which would relieve her and leave the total British armament unchanged, the facts would be distorted by every enemy of the commonwealth and the league, perfidious Albion would again be painted in sinister colours on the front pages of every Anglophobe news-sheet, and the forces working for disarmament would suffer a definite reverse.

The administration might consider the value of that argument. To me it is a very powerful one. One of the greatest contributions this country can make to the cause of peace at the distance we are placed from the continent of Europe, free from the constant touch of hate that influences the feelings of our statesmen on the other side of the water, free to view matters in a broader way and clearer light and weigh up incidents that occur from time to time, and free as we are to bless ourselves with a peaceful future, is to encourage disarmament by our own example and so add weight to the efforts of others in foreign countries in this great cause. It is to be condemned that a country like this, with such vast possibilities for peace advancement in its own home, should now, in this of all years, increase to such an enormous extent the armaments of this country. There are many deplorable things coming from Toronto, but some good things too.

Mr. ARTHURS: Has the hon. member considered the present naval armament of Canada, consisting of one or two mine sweepers? Do you base any argument along that line?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not think we need worry in the least about our navy and our army in this country unless it be demonstrated that the purpose can be served in line with the argument used by the hon. member for Frontenac. I fail to see why we should carry a burdensome, top-heavy army or naval force.

I have in my hand a communication which I received this morning from Toronto, headed—

Fellowship of Canadian Youth for Peace.

When I read it I had a glowing feeling of satisfaction. I felt that there was creeping into the people a realization of their destiny, and the need of the development of a desire for peace in the country. After all human nature is not what it is said to be. The healthy boy does not want to go out and kill. All he does is to arm himself with a wooden sword because he sees pictures of armed soldiers, he sees pictures of men on horseback gaily decked in glittering war array. It is not with a desire to kill that he marches round. It is not to train for future conflict. But if you are going to band your boys together in the way proposed, give them real guns and show them the easy way in which they can destroy life, pleading speciously that they should only use these guns when occasion arises, you are creating the probability of the very thing we desire to avoid. A letter I have received this morning is in the following terms:

I have the honour of sending you a copy of a resolution, which I am sending to the Minister of Militia on behalf of the Fellowship of Canadian Youth for Peace (Toronto Branch).

We hope you will give this communication your earnest consideration.

Yours sincerely,

(Mrs) AMY GUYOT,
Secretary.

And the letter to the minister reads as follows:

Dear Sir,

With an ever increasing number of people becoming alive to the fact that the greatest and most important task of our generation is the abolition of war; and as in the words of the League of Nations Union, "armaments are the chief obstacle to goodwill and peace among the nations," this fellowship views with alarm the increase in the Military estimates for this country of over $3,000,000.

We believe that the only effective "defense" is by the promotion of international understanding and goodwill and suggest that all such money should be used for this purpose.

On behalf of the Executive Committee of the Fellowship of Canadian Youth of Peace (Toronto Branch).

Yours sincerely,

(Mrs.) AMY GUYOT,
Secretary.

I add that to my contribution to Hansard as an indication of the development of a splendid psychological condition in the minds of the youth, at least, of one part of our country.

I now come to another stage in this matter. I have no doubt hon. gentlemen who support these estimates will support them for many reasons, among others those argued by Premier Bruce of Australia at the Imperial conference, and renewed by him when he visited this country shortly afterwards. He was eloquent about it when he came to Canada to instruct us as to what we ought to do as our contribution. Not having had an opportunity of concluding my speech on the Imperial conference to date, I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister on the speech he made in Toronto in which he deliberately and very splendidly castigated the Prime Minister of Australia for the unquestioned impertinence that that gentleman displayed when he came here to tell us what we ought to do in the matter of empire defence.

Mr. JACOBS: I hope the Prime Minister did not put it that way.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not worried about the way he put it; he put it very well. I listened in over the radio. With that part of the address I was in agreement. Mr. Bruce's argument was the imperialistic argument. He said that we had to make a contribution, give them support and throw our lot in with the rest of the empire in the matter of armaments.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask a question?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to finish my remarks, the hon. gentleman can speak later. He then proceeded to offer a great many figures. For example, he quoted Great Britain showing that the total per capita expenditure on war—that is the army and navy—was 51s. 1d., but Canada was contributing only 5s. 10d., as compared with 51s. 1d. He rebuked us very much for that, especially when he came proudly to announce that Australia was contributing 27s. 2d. for 1925-26, England 12s. 11d., and South Africa 2s. 6d. I am glad to see that one country was slightly below us, or we would have got a dreadful spanking from Premier Bruce when he was here. If hon. members would look at Premier Bruce's figures from the point of view which, in my opinion, they should be looked at, they would not find so much to complain about, nor could we. Does anyone realize what it should cost us to maintain an armed force in order to be secure? Of course it is a form of insurance, just as we insure our buildings against fire and just as we insure our lives against death. We are endeavouring to insure against some danger. Does it not follow then that the nation in the greatest danger, in constantly present danger, would naturally pay a very greatly increased premium over those which would be paid by the nation that was not in any way in danger, or with the possibility of danger so slight that it could be regarded as being almost negligible? It appeals to me that if more security is the basis for our armament this contribution Great Britain makes for her security, situated as she is in the midst of national hates, is not at all too high. On the other hand I refuse to admit that the contribution we make to our security is too low. In support of that I should like to quote from an article that appeared in the Manchester Guardian Weekly of Friday, March 18, 1927. It is headed, The Burden of Armaments—The Premiums paid for National Security, and is written by Walter G. Layton, editor of the Economist. The article is well worth reading. Mr. Layton has this to say:

It is surely very unsatisfactory that the removal of the menace of a world conflagration should not have been followed by a much greater easement of the burden of armaments than this. There is no way in which the taxpayer can hope to get a more substantial measure of relief than by a drastic cut in the scale of armaments as a result of the international conferences shortly to be held.

In this connection it is worth while pointing out the extent to which different countries are carrying the burden of armaments. According to the most recent and authoritative estimate, the national income of Great Britain in 1924 and 1925 (1926 was, of course, abnormal) amounted to about 4,200 millions. Our expenditure on war preparations (including certain items carried on other votes than those of the three fighting services) amounted to well over 120 millions. In other words, the premium paid for insuring national security was three per cent.

Three per cent of the income was devoted as a form of premium to guarantee security in so far as armaments would do it; that arming does ever guarantee security is again debatable.

This is a slight improvement on 1913, when the premium worked out at three and a half per cent, but is much worse than in the last three decades of the nineteenth century, when a premium of about two per cent was all that was considered necessary. (It should be remembered, in passing, that while this is a perfectly reasonable method of representing the burden of armaments on the population of Great Britain, it is not a true index of the military effort of the British Empire; for the figure would work out at a much lower rate for the empire as a whole, seeing that the dominions are taxed for war purposes at a very much lighter rate than the mother country—namely one-half per cent to three-quarters per cent).

Now we come to this point:

At the present moment France is paying a premium of some three and a half per cent, with a war budget of nearly 5½ milliard francs, as compared with a national income which M. Bérenger put at 130 milliard francs, but is probably nearer 160 milliard francs. Italy is paying a security premium of over four per cent with a war preparation budget of over four milliard lire and a national income of about 100 milliard lire. The figures for Germany are in striking contrast, and her war expenditure, at 560 million marks out of a national income estimated by the Berlin Chamber of Commerce at 35,000 million marks, is equal to a premium of 1½ per cent.

Of course, we all know why that is. Germany is not allowed under treaties to arm, on the scale she would like to. Otherwise I have no doubt the premium in her case would be higher.

This national income figure is, however, probably on the low side, and the premium therefore is rather less than this figure. The lowest premium of all the great powers is that of the United States,— —which works out at about one per cent, the national income being at least 6,000 million dollars and defence expenditure under 600 million dollars.

And this is where the comparison comes in.

The premiums naturally vary—like all forms of insurance premium—with the degree of risk, real or supposed, to which the insurer is subject; but it is fairly evident that the heaviest burden is being shouldered by those least able to bear it, and for this reason there is a real inducement for the nations of Europe to make a substantial reduction.

Now you have this situation. You have Italy with a four per cent war premium, England with a three and a half per cent war premium and France with a four to five per cent war premium. Why? Because they are all centered in a seething caldron of hate, they are in the heart of a continent where the unfortunate injustices of past wars and past treaties have inflamed race against race until there is no hope of peace while that hate continues. This is in direct contrast with the conditions on this continent, where we are free from that form of hate and are living in amity with the United States and the world. We are an industrious, peaceable people, and desire to remain so. I think to-day the greatest power in the world is the United States of America, and it pays a war premium of one per cent. Why? Because relatively she is secure in her geographic position. Then let us consider what should be the policy of Canada. Why should we be asked to pay the higher premium when we possess a security certainly equal to that of the United States of America?

I am satisfied because of our geographical position. We have the friendliness of those who are on one side of us, and our relations with world countries are always friendly—unless we happen to have been involved in unfortunate affairs of the mother country. We are not a quarrelsome people, we wish to trade with other countries, not to fight with them, and so long as Canadian resourcefulness and progressive thought continue, there is in my opinion no excuse, certainly no reason, for increasing in one single year our defence estimates by some $3,000,000. Nor do I think we are justified in adding to the armaments of this country for almost any reason whatever. I find hon. gentlemen to my right, and indeed a few opposite—not so many as there used to be, although there are still too many—prone to argue that after all human nature being what it is we must prepare for war. They tell us, You cannot stop people wanting to fight. I am not so sure. I will admit that if the member for Frontenac-Addington is around anywhere it sort of helps to liven things up a little bit and we may not be able to keep out of the scrap as long as we otherwise would. But I cannot admit that human nature is the secret of these war preparations. I have watched children, including my own, long enough to realize that there is no instinct in them to quarrel, no desire to kill one another. They like to play with flowers and with their fellow boys and girls, they love the sunshine and generally have a good time. What changes them is enrolling them into this sort of cadet training where they drill in stiff military attitudes and the Prussian spirit is developed in them. Then the little child becomes imbued with the war slogans, military jargon, the dreadful spirit of war that poisons life for him, and that some day or other he spews up in gasping death on the battlefield. That is the pitiful thing of it all. No one has put what I feel about this in better words than Shelley in his immortal Queen Mab, where he has this to say:

—yet fear not;
This is no unconnected misery,
Nor stands uncaused, and irretrievable.
Man's evil nature, that apology
Which kings who rule, and cowards who crouch set up
For their unnumbered crimes, sheds not the blood
Which desolates the discord-wasted land.
From kings, capitalists, and statesmen, war arose,
Whose safety is man's deep unbettered woe,
Whose grandeur his debasement. Let the axe
Strike at the root, the poison-tree will fall;
And where its venomed exhalations spread
Ruin, and death, and woe, where millions lay
Quenching the serpent's famine, and their bones
Bleaching unburied in the putrid blast,
A garden shall arise, in loveliness
Surpassing fabled Eden.

He turns then to the children and says again:

Nature! No!
Kings politicians, and statesmen, blast the human flower
Even in its tender bud; their influence darts
Like subtle poison through the bloodless veins
Of desolate society. The child,
Ere he can lisp his mother's sacred name,
Swells with the unnatural pride of crime, and lifts
His baby-sword even in a hero's mood.
This infant-arm becomes the bloodiest scourage
Of devastated earth; whilst specious names,
Learned in soft childhood's unsuspecting hour,
Serve as the sophisms with which manhood dims
Bright Reason's ray, and sanctifies the sword
Upraised to shed a brother's innocent blood.

I wish, Mr. Chairman, I could have put into such immortal words my feelings in this matter. I will, however, express my opinion by voting in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Southeast Grey.

Mr. RALSTON: I would like to say just a word in view of what has already been said by other hon. members. I do not think the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) or the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) or the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) can claim to have a monopoly of those sentiments which have been enunciated ever since the sermon on the mount.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Enunciated but never practised.

Mr. RALSTON: That is just the point; my hon. friends have their heads in the clouds, while I want to keep our feet on the earth.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): With an additional $3,000,000.

Mr. RALSTON: I will give my hon. friend a chance for discussion later.

Mr. McGIBBON: Don't do it; he never lets anyone interrupt him.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I beg your pardon for the interruption.

Mr. RALSTON: I have listened for two days to the enunciation of principles to which I believe every hon. member of this House can subscribe, in relation to the horrors of war and the desire for peace, and I am sure there are hon. members of this House within reach of my voice who are just as anxious for peace and just as intimate with the horrors of war as are any of the hon. gentlemen who have so far spoken, one of whom made a magnificent contribution to the war. I refer to the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Adshead), to whom I wish to give great credit.

I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that I could make the speech which my hon. friend has made against war and in favour of peace, if I had his eloquence and his quotations, in the hope that the world would realize that some day we must adopt this principle; and the next moment I could ask this House to vote the small amount which is being asked by the defence department of this country, because I believe the two things go hand in hand, and because I do believe the hon. members of this House and the people of this country do not quite realize exactly what is the duty which has been imposed upon your humble servant in filling this portfolio. I am presiding over the Department of National Defence, not over a department which has to do with the propagation of the principle of the abolition of war, and I do resent the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he said we have professional militarists whose job is in this thing, men who are at it in season and out of season, trying in every way to use their influence to perpetuate war. I say to my hon. friend that I do not believe that to be the case in the Dominion of Canada, and that I have yet to meet a professional militarist. I say to him, Mr. Chairman, and to other hon. gentlemen, in all sincerity, that I believe at least ninety-nine per cent of the men in the Department of National Defence and in the militia generally throughout Canada would be delighted if the time came when this country could do without its defence forces and disband them entirely. I want to say further that so far as I am concerned this portfolio of national defence is in the hands of my leader and of His Excellency the Governor General, because I do not propose to be here any longer than is absolutely necessary, in my humble judgment, to see that we have at least some form of defence such as that which is regarded as necessary having regard to conditions in the world.

Now let us get our heads out of the clouds, because I think we all admit and agree to the principles which my hon. friend has enunciated. Personally I was guilty on one occasion of using a good many quotations and a good deal of eloquence—and I was just as earnest and sincere as my hon. friend from Bow River—in delivering an address on international goodwill, and I say that I can occupy this portfolio and ask this House to vote these estimates while I still believe in every principle which I enunciated at that time. International goodwill is not being disturbed at all because some nations see fit to put a lock upon their front doors in the shape of a defence force within those particular countries. International goodwill is going to be maintained and furthered when we see to it that the will of war is uprooted from the hearts and minds of our people, and when we see to it that the things we have to say now, which perhaps are said thoughtlessly but are nevertheless said, do not engender hate and suspicion in the minds of those about whom we speak. We are too free in making snap judgments about other nations; that is one of the things working against international goodwill, and when our people realize that we can live together without criticizing one another, and that each nation can have its own peculiar customs without being made the butt of ridicule and criticism from other nations, then it seems to me we will have laid at least one stone of the foundation of international goodwill. So, Mr. Chairman, although I speak very earnestly, I believe sincerely that when I come to parliament—and I am going to discuss the whole subject if I may be permitted to do so, for a few minutes, since that is what other members have done—and instead of busily arming, as my good friend from Bow River suggests, I ask this House to be good enough to grant to His Majesty a sufficient sum of money to provide one permanent force soldier for every 3,000 inhabitants of the Dominion of Canada; when I ask that they grant a sufficient sum of money to provide for the training for about nine days of one citizen out of every 300 in this country, it seems to me that after all the charge of being busily arming can be harly sustained. It seems to me that I have been about as modest in my requests as I can be, and notwithstanding the opinions which have been very freely expressed around this chamber by those who, if they were asked, would not sincerely pretend to be military experts and who do not claim to have studied international conditions in order to know exactly the circumstances surrounding us which make it necessary for us to arm—notwithstanding these opinions I do prefer to take, as I should, the opinions of those who advise me in connection with this matter, and they advise me that this is the minimum which any self-respecting and self-reliant country in our position should expect to provide for its defence services.

Now let me give the figures whish were mentioned by the hon. member for Bow River, and when he talks about busily arming let us just compare ourselves for a moment with the other countries of the world. I know that in continental countries conditions are distinctly different, because of their situation, but I think we should know exactly where we stand in relation to the other countries of the world. A comparison will show that the percentages of the total budgets of the different countries, together with the amount per head devoted to their defence forces, is as follows:

	Percentage of budget	Amount per head
France	15	$5 70
Italy	19	4 90
Belgium	8¼	2 61
Japan	27¾	3 93
Germany	9½	2 28
Russia	16½	2 37
Spain	26	5 67
Turkey	34⅓	3 38
United States	16	5 11

My hon. friend made some reference to the insurance premium of one per cent; he will see now that 16 per cent of the total expenditure of the United States is devoted to the defence forces of that country. Further comparisons are as follows:

[Mr. Ralston.]

	Percentage of Budget	Amount per head
Great Britain	14½	$13 17
Australia	10½	6 46
New Zealand	4½	4 00
South Africa	3¼	2 86
Canada	3⁷⁄₁₀	1 45

Now let me tell my hon. friend something else. We have talked a lot about the professional militarists of this country, although I think perhaps only one hon. member used the expression. But when my hon. friends speak in that way I do not think they are being altogether fair to the men who make up these defence forces, so-called, of this country, and I want hon. members to know what is being done in that regard. I realize these things now as I did not realize them before, because I want to tell hon. members quite frankly that I was not a member of the militia; I knew nothing of the non-permanent active militia, and was not aware of the interest which was taken in these matters by the citizens of this country generally. When I began to make inquiries I found that the men who were in command of or who were officers of units, and even those who were simply friendly to units, were giving freely of their time and money in order that the interests of these units might be secured and that the support of the men might be maintained. I found further, strange to relate, that in a great many instances the money which is being voted for the pay of these officers and men of the militia was not being drawn by them at all, but was taken by them and put into this pool, into a regimental fund, as they said in order to provide comforts and attractions for the men. I know of one particular commanding officer who spent no less than $3,000—he is only commanding the battalion for three years—in order to take his men on a little trip, and I understand, he proposes to do the same this year. So I had a questionnaire sent out to the various districts to find out how general this thing was. I have before me a table giving the result and, to put it briefly, it is this: We have in Canada altogether, in artillery, cavalry, infantry, signal corps, and everything, 870 units. In 219 of these units 24 per cent, both officers and men, pool all their pay and do not draw any of it at all. In 57 of the units the pay is pooled by the officers, while they draw nothing whatever themselves. In some other units part of the pay of the officers and men is pooled, running from five per cent to one hundred per cent. That applies to 79 units in all, and in 47 units, that is 5½ per cent, a portion of the pay of the officers is pooled; making, in all, a total of nearly 50 per cent of the militia units of Canada in which the officers and men pool the whole or a portion of their pay. I do feel that people ought to realize that: They ought to recognize that there are men in this country just as honest and sincere in their views and just as desirous of the peace of the world as any others, who feel that they should give their time and their money in order that Canada may have, in some respects, what they consider to be an adequate defence force, and I pointed out the limitations of that force, which I do not think hon. members of this committee perhaps realize.

Now I have spoken of the general subject, and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) asked me to give some brief particulars of the matter in connection with which there are increases. I will just run over them in the hope that perhaps it may supply hon. members with information so as to avoid discussion when the items come up; but I assure hon. members that I shall be only too happy, if they think it necessary, to give all the information which can be given in connection with them when the proper time arrives. With regard to the $100,000 increase for cadet services, I have already stated that it is required to provide for the authorization of 49 cadet units which have been organized for the past year. Sixteen of these are in the province of Quebec, which province by the way has a considerable majority of the units in Canada, and splendid units they are. The increase of $100,000 is in order to provide for the expenses of these units for the past year, and to furnish money to meet their expenses during the present year as well as to meet the normal increase in the cadet service. It is for that purpose and for nothing else.

The increase of $237,000 in connection with engineer services and works—I am mentioning only the larger items—is in order that we may do what is absolutely necessary to preserve our property in this country, and see that it does not go into absolute rack and ruin. I have had a statement prepared showing the value of the property which we have in Canada, and I find that there is 2¼ per cent, or something like that, of an allowance for depreciation in connection with the buildings which the department own. I want to say that the vote which I felt I should ask for was an amount of over $1,000,000; but I realize that the House has not been making large votes in this respect, and I endeavoured to cut it down in every way possible. Therefore the amount in question has been finally agreed upon and submitted to the House for its approval. In connection with military property—I may as well mention the fact now—I find there is a considerable amount which I think can be disposed of. I shall be only too happy to take the matter up during the coming summer, but I want hon. members of the committee to remember that although the Department of National Defence itself owns the property, the moment it is disposed of the money goes into the hands of the Receiver General. I am endeavouring personally to get in touch with the whole situation as to the property of the department, which runs straight across the country, and will then come to a sound conclusion, in the light of the best advice I can get, as to the advisability of retaining some of these properties.

With regard to general stores, the increase there is logical. It is due to the fact that the stores of clothing we had during the war are now practically exhausted, and we have to buy more. It is not because we are preparing for another war; it is only that we may have sufficient stock in order to outfit the force that we have.

The next increase is in connection with the non-permanent active militia, and the increase has to do with the training of the force. I have felt, and I think it was generally felt throughout Canada, that the most which this country can hope to do is to train a small skeleton of officers and non-commissioned officers. We cannot hope to train any more, a very large body of men, and we are not trying to do that. But we have to have enough men to make a camp, and to make it possible for officers and non-commissioned officers to train, and to have their training made effective. All over this country there are rural units that have not been to camp for two or three years. We cannot send them to camp—I am sorry the vote does not permit of that—but I am endeavouring to make some further provision so that a limited number of men may possibly be taken into camp for a short time, and hope to be able to include in that some of the rural units. With that object in view I am hoping to look over the list of units. I do not want hon. members to carry this statement home to their constituents and say that this or that unit is going to be disbanded. Whatever is done in connection with this matter, although we have a most modest force, should be done along the lines of efficiency and I would rather have an infinitesimally small force, possessing efficiency and some esprit de corps, than spread my butter too thin all over the Dominion. The increase in this vote is to have a limited number of men in camp and make it possible for a certain number of officers and non-commissioned officers to be there.

As regards the increase to the naval service, I will give the details when that comes up. I will also deal with the vote for the air force in the same way. I will merely point out to the hon. member for Bow River that with respect to the $3,000,000 about which he is so shocked, $2,000,000 of it is taken up in the increase in the air force vote, and the greater part of it is in connection with what we call civil operations. When the time comes I will endeavour to go over these items with any hon. gentleman who cares to have the information. I have gone over them already with the officers of the department. I have had the recommendation of the civil committee on air operations, and I think we shall be able to satisfy the House that that vote is necessary and sound, and is in the interest of this country.

Now I come back to the cadet vote. My hon. friend for Southeast Grey suggests the cadet movement began with Sir Frederick Borden. But it really dates back to 1862, and at the time Sir Frederick Borden was head of the department over which I have the honour now to preside, there were 100 cadet units in the Dominion. Very soon after that what we know as the Strathcona trust, to which the hon. member for Southeast Grey referred on Saturday, was formed. The Strathcona trust was created to carry out the provisions of a trust fund established by the late Lord Strathcona, amounting first to $400,000 and afterwards to $500,000, and these were the objects of the fund as set out by the trustees:

> Not only to improve the physical and intellectual capabilities of the children by inculcating habits of alertness, orderliness and prompt obedience, but also to bring up the boys to patriotism, and to a realization that the first duty of a free citizen is to be prepared to defend his country.

I could go on and read further objects, but that is sufficient for my purpose. I am glad to say that my native province of Nova Scotia was the first to combine cadet training and physical training, and that was before the Strathcona trust was organized. Immediately Sir Frederick Borden sent out a circular under date of November 10, 1909, in which he invited the coöperation of the school authorities in the various provinces.

This circular reads:

> With regard, however, to the question of military drill and rifle practice for boys, a somewhat important misapprehension appears to exist in certain quarters, to the effect that the Strathcona Trust is designed to be used as the vehicle for the introduction of compulsory military training into the schools of the Dominion. I am directed to state, emphatically, that such is in no wise Lord Strathcona's intention, nor that of the executive council of the trust.
> As stated above, one of Lord Strathcona's main objects is to inculcate a spirit of patriotism in the youths of this country, together with a realization of their duty as free citizens in its defence, and, consequently, their training in the rudiments of a soldier's art is, in his opinion, desirable, in order that they may be able to give proper expression to that spirit in time of national danger; but His Lordship does not seek to insist that this military training should be made compulsory. All he asks is that the government of a province should undertake to encourage, as far as possible, the formation of cadet corps and the practice of rifle shooting in the schools under its control, leaving it to the parents themselves to decide whether their sons should join these corps. The proper military instruction and care of the cadets corps when formed is a matter which falls within the province of the Department of Militia. The Department of Militia, however, asks that the educational authorities will encourage, or, at least, place no obstacle in the way of their teachers becoming officers of their school cadet corps.

He goes on with the other conditions What was the result? I have under my hand agreements or memoranda signed by the educational authorities of every province in the Dominion except Quebec, and as regards Quebec I have under my hand the minutes of the Protestant committee of the Council of Public Instruction and a Catholic committee of the Council of Public Instruction, both agreeing to the terms and agreeing to carry them out. Quebec has made the greatest strides of any province in the Dominion in regard to this matter of cadet training. Here is a memorandum signed by the provincial authorities of Manitoba and dated at Winnipeg, March 22, 1911:

> The education department encourages the formation of cadet corps including the practice of rifle shooting under suitable conditions by the older boys, in all educational establishments under its control. A boy, however, before joining a cadet corps must first obtain his parents' or his guardian's consent.

Later the province of Manitoba sent a letter in which they said that they left it free to the individual school to make the application, but they did not in any way suggest that the terms of this agreement were to be repudiated. Further than that I may say in connection with Manitoba that Mr. Fletcher, I think the deputy minister of education, is a member of the committee of the Strathcona Trust which adminsters this trust from time to time.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the minister mind reading the letter from Manitoba?

Mr. RALSTON: Certainly not. The letter reads:

I am instructed by the minister to acknowledge receipt of your letters of August 29 and September 4, enclosing copies of circulars sent out by the district cadet officer at Winnipeg under dates of February 27 and March 27, 1925: and to advise in connection with the letter addressed to the principals of schools, that we take the position that the establishing of cadet training is entirely a matter for the various school boards of the province to determine for themselves; the consent of the parents in all cases we presume to be implied; consequently exception is taken to paragraph in the letter circular beginning "The Department of Education has endorsed the movement". We kindly ask you to have this paragraph withdrawn or in the alternative, the circular to the principals in its entirety be withdrawn.

Your truly,

(Signed) R. FLETCHER,
Deputy Minister of Education.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the minister would say there is distinctly a repudiation of the original agreement.

Mr. RALSTON: Absolutely not. I will quote again from the letter I have just read:

Consequently exception is taken to paragraph in the letter circular beginning "The Department of Education has endorsed the movement."

The school authorities had under their hand the agreement of 1911 in which they say they encouraged cadet training. They say now: We leave to each school to do as it thinks best. I point out further for the information of my hon. friend that Mr. Fletcher, who is the Deputy Minister of Education of Manitoba, is on the Strathcona board—which is the trust which encourages cadet training and provides grants for that purpose, and which says that the first duty a boy should be taught is to defend his country.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is he there as Deputy Minister of Education?

Mr. RALSTON: I understand he is. I understand three members of the committee are from the Educational department. I have from I think every other province the same sort of provision and this has worked out exceedingly well. Let me mention to my hon. friend who is interested in Manitoba the fact that in that province I think only last year two of the schools on the honour roll, not simply for Canada but for the empire, were from Manitoba. I am referring to the cadet corps. They were No. 897, the tenth Canadian Army Veterinary Corps, Cadet Corps, and No. 230, St. Margaret's Church cadet corps, Winnipeg. I am wrong in saying that they are school corps; they are cadet corps connected with those two institutions, but they are cadet corps in Winnipeg.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there any cadet corps connected with the public schools in Winnipeg?

Mr. RALSTON: I have not the list.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there a single cadet corps in connection with the public schools of Winnipeg?

Mr. RALSTON: I thought my hon. friend heard me. I said: I have not the list. I have no idea in the world. Perhaps my hon. friend could tell me. Further, one cadet unit in Manitoba won the Imperial Challenge Shield, another won the Governor General's trophy, and twenty schools in Manitoba were recommended for the efficiency grant of the Strathcona trust.

What is the nature of the work which is being done? The Department of National Defence provides an instructor who with the consent of the school authorities goes to the normal schools and teaches physical training to the teachers attending those schools. Those teachers go to the various schools for which they are qualified and they carry on physical training in those schools. There have been thus trained 65,000 teachers and at the present time 6,144 teachers are being instructed. That work is being carried on in every province in Canada, and of the amount which the hon. member for Southeast Grey suggests should be struck out I have counted up and I find that more than $300,000 is for the physical training side of this work. Some of the appropriation of course is a joint vote for the benefit of both the cadet training and the physical training.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In connection with the training of teachers, I notice that in normal schools statements regarding physical exercises are signed by officers of the district. Are all the teachers taking training in the normal schools included in those who are being trained by the military department?

Mr. RALSTON: I am sure I cannot tell my hon. friend.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister was speaking of the training of teachers. Does that include normal students?

Mr. RALSTON: It does. But my hon. friend asked me if all trained. I cannot tell him, except that I understand in Ontario—and I presume he is speaking of Ontario—not only do they provide for physical training of teachers but they may make grants by statute for cadet corps.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: And the normal students are included in the six thousand.

Mr. RALSTON: I assume so. These teachers are trained by the physical training instructors supplied by the department, and time and time again it has been suggested that the physical training should be taken over by the provincial authorities, but the provincial authorities realize quite clearly, I think, that it is not possible to provide the same efficiency in the matter of physical training as is provided in this way.

The hon. member for Southeast Grey held up on Saturday morning as a desirable system of physical training the Swedish system. I have in my mind the syllabus for physical training in the schools as taught by the physical instructors, and I want to assure my hon. friend from Southeast Grey that what is being taught is the Swedish system, prepared and approved by the British Board of Education, and adopted by every province in Canada.

Miss MACPHAIL: But why link it up with militarism? I want physical training, and I am not objecting to the amount of money spent on physical training.

Mr. RALSTON: I understood that the hon. member moved to strike out all but one cent of this vote, $300,000 of which is for physical training.

Miss MACPHAIL: They are so badly mixed, one cannot tell.

Mr. RALSTON: I assure my hon. friend they are not mixed in any way. I have stated what the provinces are doing. We are providing physical training, and we will encourage cadet training, and any school that wants cadet training will get it and any school that does not want it, will not get it. Any parent who wants his child to take cadet training may have him take it, so long as there is a corps in the school, and if the parent does not want his child to take it, that is all right. Speaking as one parent who had a boy in the cadet corps, I can only say that I am very proud to have had him there, and I do not feel that he received any injury from such training, but on the contrary was greatly benefited by it.

Miss MACPHAIL: Will the minister admit that the fact of the instructor of cadets receiving two dollars per head for each cadet up to fifty, and one dollar for each cadet over that number, will have the effect of increasing the numbers in the cadet corps throughout Canada?

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. RALSTON: I will not admit anything about it; I do not know. I would not think that the increase of $50,000 in this vote over the $450,000 which was the vote in 1923 is a very substantial increase, in spite of the inducement my hon. friend suggests.

Miss MACPHAIL: Is it or is it not true that the department is doing everything it can to stimulate cadet training throughout Canada?

Mr. RALSTON: I have no idea of what they do except what I have stated. They do provide cadet instructors, and in each district a cadet officer, who goes around to the schools where there are cadet corps. I presume they expect that the provinces will carry out their part of the bargain to encourage a cadet corps, but I have not heard of anyone being taken by the neck and forced into a cadet corps, nor have I heard of any province having physical training refused to it because it did not form a cadet corps. The provinces have got the benefit of all that, and I think my hon. friend will be the first to acknowledge that the physical training given has been splendid in every respect. That is the way this cadet corps works, and that is the service which the department performs. We are endeavouring to carry out the ideas of the founder of that trust. For myself, as a parent, I cannot see anything wrong with cadet training. I want to see every side of our national life, and I do not want to do anything which will inspire the spirit of militarism in our schools or in anybody else, but I do want to suggest that this word "militarism" has been pretty badly manhandled in this country for some time now. Militarism means the man or the country who puts the social and economic and commercial side of life second, and the military side first, and I have yet to find very much of that spirit in the Dominion of Canada. I think it is because of the free and, I think, improper use of that word, that some of us have got very far on the wrong track. I have seen the cadet corps; everybody has seen them, and I believe that the boys of the cadet corps are clean-limbed and clear-eyed, boys who would tell the truth, boys who are alert and will answer the call promptly, boys who have respect for authority and have some idea of obedience, boys who are polite. I do not think there is anything rough or Prussian—that word has been used to-day—about them. It seems to me it is pretty good training for any citizen, but any parent is at liberty to differ with me and say to the cadet instructor: I do not want my boy to take up that training. When we have that situation, where it is optional with the parent, optional with the school, and optional with the province, and when the physical training accounts for pretty nearly three-fifths of this vote, I submit that the criticisms which have been offered have not perhaps the foundation which they might appear to have had when hon. members first addressed this House.

I just want to say, in conclusion, in connection with this whole matter that I am trying without offending the feelings of anybody to make the department as efficient as possible in a small and modest way, and I do commend this vote personally to hon. members for their support.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): With the explanation and defence of these estimates that has been made by the Minister of National Defence I find myself in perfect accord. As one who has had actual experience of war, I want to assure the members of this House that I do not stand and speak as I shall do this afternoon in favour of cadet training because I love war. I do not at any time expect that my course will lead any boy or any citizen of this country to undertake tasks or training or sacrifice with the spirit of hate, murder or destruction in his heart. Those of us who have seen three or four years of actual warfare resent very much the words which have been used in this chamber to the effect, that these votes are passed especially for the preservation and maintenance of men with jobs. I want to say that the men at the head of that splendid Canadian corps were not experienced or practical military men. They were men who had realized in years gone by that a part of our citizenship was the necessary preparation for the maintenance and defence of that citizenship. As a member of the medical corps which in twenty-four hours had passed through its hands 5,900 wounded, it would be the last wish of mine, and I believe of the whole medical corps, that war should ever again be participated in by this or any other country. But as the minister says, we must look at these things from the practical and common sense standpoint.

We have listened to many speeches in this chamber denouncing war, but I fail to find one who has had experience in the sacrifice and has been in the service opposing the meagre amount requested by the Minister of National Defence for the protection of this country. The hon. member for Southeast Grey has been most aggressive in her opposition to these estimates, not merely this year but on many occasions. The hon. member and her supporters persist in setting up a case simply to be knocked down. I do not believe that any person connected with cadet training has any idea of making militarists of the citizens of this country, if by the word militarist you mean one who seeks war, one who seeks by hate to murder and destroy, but that is the case conjured up against cadet training by those who are opposing this vote.

The minister, I believe, went to the root of the matter when he read the Strathcona regulations stating that the object in cadet training is a twofold one. In the first place, it is to teach the boy that he is a unit of the country. This work implies a twofold duty on the country and on the men in connection with the care of boys. One is the teaching of patriotism, the idea that he belongs to a country, and the first principle to be inculated in that boy is the lesson that it is his duty to protect his country. I know no country that has ever become great, or that has ever been established as a nation of some reputation, which has not made this the primary teaching in the education of the boy. Above family, above individual interests, there is the interest of his native land, his country, and as a citizen it will be his first duty to protect that country. The next duty is that he has been given a body endowed with certain functions and it is his duty to develop that body along the best lines. I think it is accepted by every person that if we could place two schools together, one having physical training, or cadet training as they like to call it, and the other without it, the result would impel every parent in the country to ask for physical or cadet training for their boys. There is no mother that I know of who does not wish to see her boy develop physically along right lines, and if there is a defect, if there is a weakness in his respiratory tract or digestive tract, that that should be removed; and I know of nothing that will remove it so quickly as physical training. These two things lie at the bottom of all physical and cadet training. Greece, Rome and Sweden all adopted this system of training. At one time Sweden was the most militaristic country in the world. She has established herself now, she is still carrying on the training, and it is her system which we have adopted. In fact no country is so well known or highly respected for its physical training as Sweden, notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail).

The opposition to this vote is based on something more serious than we see at first. I cannot help bringing this out, and I believe it is the duty of every member in this House to look beyond the mere verbal opposition to these votes. There are principles deeply rooted in the systems of those who speak against it. Shriek after shriek has gone through the chamber, demanding to know against whom are we arming. I know of nobody arming in this country. I know no work of arming against any country, because I realize that every nation that has fallen has done so from causes within the nation and not from without. History has shown that those who decry their constitution and country and race, who teach the people wrong principles, who would sacrifice loyalty and patriotism, who would sell tradition and make easy the way of our enemy, are the people we fear most in regard to all our considerations of defence. Those are the people who are ready to open the doors for our enemies, to lull to sleep public opinion, and it is now time and I believe this is the place to speak about it. If the present Minister of National Defence had been in this House during the last four years he would have found a spirit with which he could not have agreed, and I am glad now that one with experience and one who seems to have some weight has come forward to improve conditions as they exist in this country.

I should like to draw attention of the members of this House not only to speeches which have been made in this chamber, but also to a matter which has been much talked of in this country within the last few days. I refer to a letter which has been written, and which profoundly affects this subject, because this is the kind of insidious secret work that tends to destroy national spirit and to interfere with those who would like to protect their country and their native land. I propose to read this letter clause by clause.

Progress reported.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1927-28

A message from His Excellency the Governor General, transmitting supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1928, was presented by Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the House, and referred to the committee of supply.

SUPPLY

The House again in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: It being six o'clock. I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Chairman, when the House rose at six o'clock I had expressed my complete agreement with the words of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston); I had approved of the spirit of the Strathcona trust fund and of the two principles which underlay the granting of that fund, namely, the inculcation in our youths of the spirit of patriotism and loyalty, the willingness to sacrifice themselves if necessary in the defence of their country and the willingness to develop their bodies and minds, which are claimed to be the results of cadet and physical training.

I had also dealt with the speeches delivered in this connection, and had expressed my opinion that there was something behind the verbal opposition to these grants. While we admit and grant to every person the privilege of their own opinions so far as service to the country is concerned, yet we do not grant the privilege of interfering with and taking unfair advantage of our young people. In this connection I made mention of a letter which was sent to me by a lady in the constituency of Southeast Grey, which letter I intend first to read and then to analyse. The letter is dated Ottawa, March 28, 1927. and is as follows:

Dear Teacher and Pupils:

This letter we will talk about the Chinese war. The Chinese use a great deal of a drug called opium. It is a very bad drug, much worse than liquor on the person who takes it. It gives them pleasant dreams; they live in a sort of a dream world, and are very happy, but when the influence has worn off they are nervous wrecks, and are sick. Then they want more opium to make them nice dreamers again, and if they do this thing for some time, it spoils their health, and they are not any good for anything. There was a war in China between 1839 and 1842, which is called the Opium war. The Chinese wanted to make the use of opium in China illegal, to keep it out of China, but Great Britain insisted that the Chinese government make the use of opium legal, because Great Britain own India and India sells opium to China. This made the Chinese angry. Then, too, nearly all the great ports where the big ships come in are controlled by Great Britain, or some great power like Japan, and in these Chinese cities the Chinese have no vote. The police are foreigners, the "whole show" is run by people who are not Chinese, and the Chinese have no rights.

The Chinese revere their dead, and their graveyards are a very sacred place. When western civilization came they ran railroads through the graveyards. This made the Chinese mad; and caused them to rebel. This rebellion was called the Boxer rebellion. The Chinese were defeated in this rebellion, and made to pay money called an indemnity, and Great Britain, to make sure she got this money imposed a five per cent tax—that is, five cents on the dollar—on goods coming in. This is called customs tariff. She always controls the post offices.

Many countries, Japan, Great Britain, and before the war, Germany, had factories in the big cities of China. The living conditions in these factories are horrible; the children work as young as six years, and are often hurt and killed. The Chinese government can do nothing because these are European factories and the owners of the factories will do nothing. A group of Chinese students walked the streets of one of their big cities about a year ago as a protest against the awful conditions of the children in factories, and the British police shot them down. You can quite easily see how all these things made the Chinese determined to put the British out of their country to bind their many provinces together in one federal government, to control their own customs, tariff and their own post offices, their own railways, etcetera. Russia, seeing that a rebellion was coming in China, wisely gave up all her rights within that country, and the Chinese are very grateful. There is little doubt that Russia is urging the Chinese to rebellion, but the conditions in China are so bad that one cannot wonder that these people rise in rebellion. Germany used to have much control in China, but according to the peace treaty of the Great war, she was forced to give up her privileges. I wish very much that Canada, who is a member of the League of Nations, would protest against what has been done in China. We have a right to try to stop anything that is breaking the peace of the world. We must remember that it is only a few very rich people in England who want to do these dreadful things in China, that most of the British people are very sad and grieved over what is being done, and that meetings are being held there in protest and some of the leading papers are saying that the action of the government and the big interests is all wrong and so we are in good company if we do say that we think the Chinese are being unfairly treated.

Many of the patriotic Canadians say over and over again, "We want Canada for Canadians". Then, if that is true, why do we not want China for Chinese? We send missionaries to teach them of Jesus, and his love, but unless we love them and act toward them as brothers, how can they know that we believe in Jesus and his love to all.

Thursday was my birthday and I had a lovely birthday party. We have two hours for dinner between six and eight. I had a party of fourteen. I got lovely flowers, three dozen roses, three boxes of candy, some nice maple sugar, hand-kerchiefs, and all sorts of good things.

I had a very gay time. My office has been much brighter with the flowers. The gardener of the House of Commons keeps flowering plants on my window, but the roses are even more beautiful than they are.

I must close for this time.

AGNES C. MACPHAIL.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have read that letter in its entirety, and I would ask you to study it. Read it over clause by clause, and paragraph by paragraph, and what do the contents of this letter constitute? Nothing more or less than a direct attempt to defame Great Britain.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Nonsense!

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Nonsense? Before I am through I will prove my assertion. It is nothing less than a distortion of historical facts, and I know nothing worse than to place such a distortion before pupils in order to give them a lesser opinion of their race, of the constitution under which they live, and of the empire with which they are connected.

Now I want to take this letter up paragraph by paragraph. The first paragraph deals with the Chinese war, and it goes back to the time of 1839 and 1845, and to a war to which the name "opium war" is given. Now there are none except those who wish to strike at and injure Great Britain who will call that war the "opium war." There is just enough truth in it, it had just enough connection with opium, to allow some person to make the statement without being open to the charge of asserting a complete untruth, and I want to give the facts as far as I can take them from history. The issue is one of Chinese cosmogony more than anything else. It is claimed by the Chinese that the emperor and his immediate advisers are direct sons of heaven, and when a request was made by outsiders to trade with their country, the Chinese took the attitude that trade was an inferior thing for them and they could not touch it. "Therefore," they said, "you must not go near Pekin; you must stay and trade in Canton, the farthest city away from Pekin, where you will be under the Canton officials."

The second issue in the war was this: There was a claim for port rights, and for the regulation of ports. The right to trade was granted. Before the British came there were Portuguese and there were Dutch trading there, but they had never been able to secure what they called treaty rights. There was also some demand for a schedule of customs. Up to this time it was up to the Canton officials to put on any customs duty they liked; to enforce a certain tax against a nation one day, another the next day or the next week to apply a different one. There was also the question of extra territoriality. That means that the Chinese demanded the right to try a British subject, or any foreigner who was in that port. There is a very celebrated case of where a salute was being fired and a gunner was charged with having killed a Chinaman. The Chinese demanded that this gunner be brought before them. For some time their demand was resisted, but under duress Captain Elliott, a very weak official who was in charge of British affairs in Canton at the time, handed this gunner over to the Chinese, their demand being that he should appear before them and offer an explanation. What was the result? The gunner was immediately strangled. From that day Britain adopted a different attitude anad never permitted any British subject to be tried by Chinese authorities. She was not autocratic about this because she accepted the situation later and said: "If you will establish Chinese courts, and will satisfy us as to the fairness of those courts then we have no reason to oppose it." These were the questions that brought on this war. But opium played some part in the matter. For years opium had been brought into China from India, not by Britain only but by the Chinese themselves. For every British vessel there were thousands of Chinese vessels engaged in the trade. Many long years before, there had been a law passed against the importation of opium but here was the situation: Opium was being brought in, not by the British but by their own people, and the son of the Canton governor was the biggest bootlegger in the business at the time.

Mr. PARENT: I should like to know if this discussion is in order. What connection has the situation in China got with the item we are discussing just now?

The CHAIRMAN: If I am asked to give a ruling, I certainly must rule that the discussion is not in order; it has no relevance whatever to the item now before the committee.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I take this stand that there was insidious, secret work being done against the passing of these votes, and one of the worst features that I know of in connection with it was the circularization of this letter. I contend that this is absolutely relevant to the subject under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN: Well, the rule is very explicit. Subsection 5 of rule No. 13 states:

Speeches in committee of the whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Very good. Now then, Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with military estimates are we not?

Mr. STEVENS: Regarding the question of order, the rule, if strictly interpreted, might apply, but I would call your attention to this—that the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Adshead), the hon. minister himself—I think quite properly—and other hon. members have been speaking in general terms of the estimates. I think there has been a rather tacit understanding that the discussion of all the estimates should take place on this item. It would seem to me to be rather unfair to rule my hon. friend out of order now after others have taken advantage of a general discussion and introduced matter which is of a very serious character.

Mr. PARENT: The Chairman having given his decision, I do not think it can be discussed.

The CHAIRMAN It is not the desire of the Chair to restrict debate in any sense. But when I am asked for a ruling I must decide in accordance with the rules. If it is the desire of the committee that the remarks of all the speakers should be strictly relevant to the matter before the committee, my hon. friend is certainly out of order. Up to the present time the scope of the discussion has been very wide, but it is for the committee to say whether they want to continue to extend such latitude.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Chairman, the question was asked: Against whom are we arming. I am endeavouring to answer that question and my remarks are strictly relevant to the military estimates.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the hon. member permit me to ask a question. He says that there is a secret, insidious propaganda being carried on.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: Do you mind saying what the secret propaganda is?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am dealing with it.

Mr. SPENCER: What you are dealing with is of a public character.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What I am dealing with is a wrong instruction given to the children in the schools, a distortion of historical facts, simply to aid opposition against these estimates.

Mr. SPENCER: It certainly is not secret; it is public.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The whole letter is an endeavour to prevent children from joining cadet organizations. I am trying to prove that in this letter history is distorted, and in contradiction of the statement made in the letter that this war was one of opium, I have simply to read Queen Victoria's letter to the Emperor of China on the subject.

Mr. PARENT: I rise again to a point of order. That has nothing to do with the item under discussion.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The Queen of England in her letter to the Emperor of China states:

The Queen of England desires that her subjects who may go into foreign countries should obey the laws of those countries; and Her Majesty does not wish to protect them from the just consequences of any offences which they may commit in foreign parts. But, on the other hand, Her Majesty cannot permit that her subjects residing abroad should be treated with violence, and be exposed to insult and injustice; and when wrong is done to them, Her Majesty will see that they obtain redress.

That is the reason for that war of 1839-42. Great Britain realized and took the position that her subjects must be protected wherever they were. Those who wish to strike Great Britain call this an opium war, but in the treaty settling that war there is not one mention of opium and there is not one reason for calling it an opium war. Therefore I would say that the first paragraph of the letter is absolutely misleading and is a half truth which is more destructive to children than an untruth.

Let me deal with the next clause of this letter which is another endeavour to keep children from having any sympathy with cadet movements. She says:

The Chinese revere their dead, and their graveyards are a very sacred place. When western civilization came they ran railroads through the graveyards. This made the Chinese mad; and caused them to rebel. This rebellion was called the Boxer rebellion.

This is another distortion of historical facts, another attempt to mislead children's conception of Great Britain, to lead them away from any sympathy, loyalty, or patriotism in serving their country. As regards the question whether the Boxer rebellion was due to railroads being built through graveyards, I want to read from the Story of the Nations, the History of China. In this book it will be found that at this very time the Dowager Empress of China was in charge of affairs in Pekin. She was well known as being antagonistic to the foreigner, and it was her wish to get rid of the foreigner, to get him out of China. She was looking around for some reason and this is what is stated:

The Chinese have no notion of declaring war on a question of policy. They prefer the more subtle method of instigating banditti to attack the foreign settlements, in the hope that in the consequent confusion they may find their opportunity. . . . . On this occasion the lot fell on the "Boxers" or "Fists of righteous harmony".

We have heard a great deal this afternoon about preventing arming and preparation for war. This was a society arming and preparing in their own way in China:

The Boxers were, therefore, a fit instrument for the Empress' use, and after making full and exhaustive inquiries as to their numbers, equipment, and the sincerity of their professions, she determined to employ them.

The empress determined to employ the Boxers only in an attempt to get rid of the foreigners in China, yet we are told that the Boxer rebellion was a protest against the building of railways through graveyards. What happened? The empress told her officials to be sympathetic to the Boxer associations. As a result, with that declaration they began to march on Pekin. What happened? Under pretence of opposing their march on Pekin, the loyal troops were sent out and as soon as the loyal troops met the Boxers, they immediately fell in with the Boxers and marched on Pekin. What was their object? It was to attack the foreign residences in Pekin and nothing else. That was the cause of the army and of the expedition sent against the Boxers in China, and yet we are told that the cause of it was the building of railways through graveyards. Not only Great Britain but all foreign nations who had interests in China joined in this expedition: it was an international affair. The letter states:

This rebellion was called the Boxer rebellion. The Chinese were defeated in this rebellion—

It was nothing but their own troops, the loyalist troops joined with the Boxers.

—and were made to pay money called an indemnity, and Great Britain, to make sure she got this money imposed a 5 per cent tax.

One would think from this paragraph that Britain was there to impose a tax for the purpose of getting money. I want to quote an explanation of that, just with the intention of contradicting this paragraph and proving to the committee that it is nothing but a distortion of historical facts. I read this from China and The Powers. Mr. Norton, an American, writing on this question and the supposed cause of this war, deals with it as follows:

Whatever the moral questions might be, the result embodied in the treaty of Nanking in 1842 was the opening to foreign trade of Canton and four other ports, including Shanghai, the cession of the barren island of Hong Kong to Great Britain, and the agreement that China should levy a 5 per cent tariff on both imports and exports. As the 5 per cent provision still left room for bargaining as to the value on which the 5 per cent was to be levied, a schedule was drawn up of the specific duties collectable on all articles of trade. This was the beginning of the conventional tariff".

Mr. WARD: Mr. Chairman, you ruled some little time ago, and yet the hon. member continues to read ream after ream of what, by any stretch of the imagination, is entirely irrelevant to the item before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN: In my opinion the point raised by the hon. member is well taken. Further, in my humble judgment no one discussing this estimate has gone so far afield as has the hon. gentleman who has the floor. I would again draw his attention to subsection (5) of rule 13 which states:

Speeches in committee of the whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The item under discussion is cadet training. There is an attempt throughout this country to mislead the children of our schools and to prevent them from joining or having any sympathy with cadets corps. I have been dealing with a letter written to all the schools in a certain constituency with the intention of encouraging this opposition. In that letter it was pointed out as a reason for preventing children from joining or having sympathy with cadet corps, that there were in China factories in which children under six years of age were employed and that these factories were all run by Great Britain; that as a result of that certain students in protest marched through the streets and Great Britain shot them down. This is an absolute distortion of historical facts made apparently with the deliberate attempt to mislead the judgment of the children, to wean them away from a spirit of loyalty and patriotism, which is a spirit that should be encouraged in this country and not destroyed. I say that those students were not marching there in protest against child labour in British factories, but they were marching in protest against the killing of a Chinese by a Japanese citizen, and in marching through the streets they took occasion to make themselves obnoxious to the British section of that city. The whole letter I might say is a continued distortion of historical fact, in order to warp the children's minds and to wean them away from a sympathetic relationship with Great Britain and the empire generally.

There is also an attempt in this letter to lead the children to believe that only the influence of the rich counts in Great Britain. There is no attempt to justify the position in which Great Britain found herself in China, which was this: Great Britain was the champion of all the foreign elements in China, and she had to take upon her shoulders the burden of the whole situation. I think Great Britain came out of it with great credit to herself, because not only did she establish in China a customs tariff that was fair to all, but she insisted upon the post office administration and revenues being entirely under Chinese rule. But those facts which are creditable to Great Britain have not been touched upon in this letter. On the contrary, anything discreditable that can possibly be laid on the shoulders of Great Britain is mentioned, to wean the sympathy of the children away from Great Britain. So much for this attempt, which I believe will be resented throughout the Dominion just as much as it was resented by this lady who sent the letter to me, and who believes that this House is the proper place to deal with this matter. In my opinion the permission of the school boards should first have been obtained before this letter was allowed to be read in the school by teachers.

I want now to take up in general some statements that have been made in this debate. It has been said that men whose jobs are in this movement are at the bottom of the demand for these estimates and for this cadet training. I want to say to this House that soldiers and trained men are the last people in the world to cause any war. Wars, we know, have been caused by politicians, not by soldiers and trained men. It has also been pointed out that England was prepared in the last war. How well prepared was England in the last war? If it had not been that all the nations joined together against the enemy, preparation would have won out. England was not prepared, and for that want of preparation 100,000 trained men laid down their lives in an attempt to stay the onrush of the enemy until some kind of training had been done.

It has also been asked, what has war ever done for anybody? Well, we might go back to Britain, and say that in Britain's wars she has established liberty and equality in most parts of the world. We can say also that there are some wars which have been brought about for religious and moral reasons. The Covenanters fought for moral and religious reasons, and secured results satisfactory to them. Cromwell fought for moral and religious reasons, and won out. Again, a great war was fought in the United States for the abolition of slavery, and I do not believe that that fight could have been won in any other way.

In conclusion, I want to point out as a reason for passing these estimates the new position in which we now find ourselves. We are asked to expend a small amount here in the way of the defence of our country. It has been declared by the last Imperial conference that we have an equality of status with Great Britain and every other dominion in the empire. Now if we are the equal of every member of the empire, then we are all equally responsible for the defence of the empire. I do not hold with some criticisms that have been made of the premier of Australia and others who have come to Canada and made speeches in this country. I think it is up to us to-day to ask the Prime Minister of this country, and I think it is up to every member of the empire to ask the Prime Minister and the government of Canada, what is our position at the present time with respect to empire defence. If we are to continue to reap the benefits of our empire connection, have we no responsibility for the maintenance of the empire? Have we not some little share to take in the protection of the interests of this empire and the lives of our citizens? I very much disagree with those who would look to the United States or to the Old Country for our defence. I do not think that is a satisfactory training for our children. I think we had better get back to the old principle that we are in the empire, that we belong to the races which make up the empire, and that we must take our share of responsibility for its defence. I hold that this government, in view of that declaration of equality of status, should satisfy the people of this country and the other members of the empire as to what our position will be in regard to the defence of the empire, and if that is done I think that the majority in this House will be, like myself, in accord with the Minister of National Defence, believing that we are only doing our duty in assuming the training of some part of our citizenship in the protection of this country and of the empire. I would regret if we ever lost sight of that first principle, and that a child should fail to realize that he belongs to a country, and that his first duty is to defend that country, because that is the basis of all these estimates; it is the principle upon which they are founded. I am sure that we will do credit not only to ourselves but to posterity and to our ancestry if we take upon ourselves this responsibility.

I am glad that the minister has placed upon Hansard the work that the province of Quebec is doing in this direction. Some three or four years ago I spoke on this matter, and I was very glad to see the excellent display made by the boys. I am sure there was no attempt to instil into them the principles of hate or the desire to kill their fellowmen or destroy the property of others. No, they were taught that they belonged to this country, that their home and their work was here, that their fathers and their mothers were here before them, and that in the interests of their ancestry they should be willing to take upon themselves some share in the defence of this country.

Miss MACPHAIL: First I would like the Minister of National Defence to know that I, and I am sure that in this I am speaking for other hon. members, have the very greatest respect for him personally. We all admire his ability and his sterling qualities of character. I feel that he is a man who will be well known in Canada in the days that are to come. Indeed, I think he is too great a man to administer the sort of department he has been asked to administer.

I remember reading an article written by Mr. Lloyd George describing events just previous to the outbreak of the war in 1914, in which he said that the military machine was relentlessly driving the politician towards the abyss and that the politicians were quite helpless. When I allude to the military machine I do not for one moment wish to be understood as referring to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston): He is capable of better things than managing the Department of National Defence. When reviewing the facts he said that we must not attack him, and that he was taking the advice of some of the officers in his department. Now, after his statement we must not be led to think that the word "democratic" is what it is commonly thought to be. We must not assume that policy will change when the government changes. We cannot change things in the Department of National Defence by putting one government out and another in. It is the permanent officials in the department who frame the policy, and they are not responsible to the people. These permanent officials are not of half as much consequence as they think they are. I say that with all understanding of the seriousness of my words. If we have a democracy then it is the voice of the people of Canada that should count, and not the voices of two or three people in the department who urge certain things upon the minister which he himself says he does not like. I am glad that the minister has made that statement. I thought he said that I was not correct in stating that Sir Frederick Borden instituted cadet training. Will he agree that this matter was not mentioned by statute until Sir Frederick Borden became Minister of National Defence.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think that statement is correct. I have before me the statutes previous to that, and I think my hon. friend will find it in the Militia Act previous to that time.

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Macdonald said not.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend will find that in the regulations and in the order in council in 1879. I have one of them here, regulations and orders of the militia of Canada, 1887. There are some considerably earlier than that.

Miss MACPHAIL: Since the letter I have written to the school children in my constituency has been placed on Hansard and an attack made upon it, may I make a reference to it now? Whether the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) was in order or not, I have a right to reply to the attack made upon me and to make a reference to the letter I wrote to my constituency. First, however, I want to thank the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) and the hon. member for Kingston for the courtesy they have extended to me in giving equal rights in this House, because I desire that women have equal rights in regard to criticsm, equal rights in matters of abuse, as well as equal rights in the best things of life. May I tell the House now how that letter came to be written? When I came here in 1921, fired with zeal in the service of my constituency, and finding that the wheels of justice turned very, very slowly—one might say provokingly slowly—and seeking for some way to help my people, I thought of trying to inform the children in school as to what went on in this House and I wrote a series of letters—I am not sure of the number, possibly twelve or fourteen—discussing government matters and the form or government we have in Canada. Whether the letters were good or not is not for me to say, but normal schools in Ontario have ordered them by the hundred from that time to the present, and I have been asked by teachers to put them in book form so that they might be used in the public schools. After finishing that series of letters I did not do much in that line, in fact I did not write a letter last session or the session before last, and during my campaign last year many teachers said to me: "If you are elected I hope you will write some letters again. We like them so much." I wrote one letter this session previous to the one under dispute—quite a lengthy letter, dealing with two subjects altogether unrelated. I told them about the new Governor General and his wife, how very much I liked them, and the impression I received when I was entertained at Rideau Hall. If hon. members do not believe me I can quote from a letter from one of the school children. I received dozens of them. The child said he was pleased to think my impression of the Governor General was so good, and he said:

I am glad the Governor General is a fine man and that you like him.

I was patriotic in that one thing anyway. The letter proceeds:

I hope the bill passes about the soldiers' farm lands, because it is much needed.

Then he said he hoped I had a good time when I entertained some little girls at dinner which I had told about. I described my visit to the penitentiary. Unless I tell hon. members about the work I carry on in my constituency, it may seem odd to them that I should deal with such a thing as a birthday party, but I know children, and I know they enjoy hearing of a birthday party. In the last letter I said that I had covered the form of government thoroughly, and there seemed to be so little in connection with parliament to talk about that I would be glad if they would suggest subjects for me to write about. I got ten or twelve letters suggesting that I should tell them what I thought about the Chinese war. I had not thought of it until it was suggested by letters that I received from my constituency. However, I must tell hon. members the whole thing, so that they will understand the matter. I sent them a little poem about two roosters having a fight and I suggested it was a very good thing, if two people wanted to fight, to let them fight it out and let the rest of the people alone. A little boy named John McMillan said, "I liked the poem; I thought it referred to the Chinese trouble, and would like to know what you think of it? That is the reason I wrote the letter. I have no apology to make for that letter. There may be one or two inaccuracies in it in detail, but it is substantially correct, as I hope hon. members will realize shortly. The hon. member for Kingston does not want to call the war in 1839 and 1842, the opium war. In the Encyclopedia Britannica, volume 6, page 199, it is indexed under the "Opium War." I want, however, to go into it more fully. In 1830 permission was given by the Lieutenant Governor of India to extend the cultivation of the poppy with a view to increasing the supply. This alarmed the Chinese emperor of that time. He knew it was a growing evil in his country, and he instructed Commissioner Lin to go from Peking early in 1839 to Canton, and his orders were to get rid of the opium evil. Mr. Lin did go there, and he took from the British merchants 20,283 chests of opium and destroyed them. This led to the war. I will quote from Black Opium, a book by the Rev. Eric Lewis, B.A., published by Marshall Brothers, Limited, London and Edinburgh. At page 21 they give this story, which I have told in briefer form, and then they cite several great British authorities. Dr. Arnold said:

> This war was so wicked as to be a national sin of the greatest possible magnitude.

Mr. Gladstone denounced it in these words:

> A war more unjust in its origin, a war more calculated to cover this country with permanent disgrace, I do not know and I have not read of. The British flag is hoisted to protect an infamous contraband traffic; and if it was never hoisted except as it is now hoisted on the coast of China, we should recoil from its sight with horror.

Those are strong words from Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Lewis goes on to say:

> This, our first war with China, has been justly called "the opium war", for the opium traffic was the prime though not the only, cause.

Let me give the committee one more authority. Sir R. Alcock, who was the British ambassador to Pekin soon after, was a witness before the House of Commons East India finance committee in 1871, and in the report of that committee at page 283 I find these words credited to him:

> We forced the Chinese government to enter into a treaty to allow their subjects to take opium.

I think that about proves my point. But that was not the only war. There was a second and a third opium war. I am going to quote only one authority in regard to these, Lord Elgin. He conducted these wars, and of the second he wrote in his personal letters in very frank terms. Under date of December 22, 1857, I find the following:

> When we steamed up to Canton and saw the rich alluvial banks covered with luxuriant evidences of unrivalled industry and natural fertility, I thought bitterly of those who for the most selfish objects are trampling underfoot this ancient civilization.

On December 9 he wrote:

> Nothing could be more contemptible than the origin of our existing quarrel. . . . I have hardly alluded in my ultimatum to that wretched question of the "Arrow" which is a scandal to us, and is so considered by all, except the few who are personally compromised.

On December 25 he wrote:

> Canton doomed to destruction, through the folly of its own rulers, and the vanity and levity of ours.

On August 30 he wrote:

> This abominable East; abominable not so much in itself, as because it is strewn all over with the record of our violence and fraud.

And under date of November 6 he wrote:

> In our relations with China we have acted scandalously.

An hon. MEMBER: That will hold them.

Miss MACPHAIL: I hope so. I am quoting now from the New Leader of January 25, 1927. Speaking of this opium evil, it says:

> The foreigners are entrenched in the treaty ports where they live under the protection of a system of injustice euphemistically termed extra-territoriality.

That quotation relates to the close of the opium war, which was terminated by several treaties. These treaties opened up what are now known as the treaty ports. Possibly it is worth pausing to say that the same treaties that legalized the sale of opium gave privileges for the "propagation and practice of christianity."

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I ask the hon. member in what part of the treaty can she find the word opium?

Miss MACPHAIL: I am not quoting from the treaty. I can quite understand that the people who were instrumental in bringing about the war would keep the word out of the treaty. That would not be hard for them to do.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If that was the whole subject matter of the treaty would not opium be mentioned therein?

Miss MACPHAIL: It was not the whole subject, but it was the prime reason for the war. I am sure it must cause everyone who believes in christianity to blush with shame to think that the same treaty dealt with these two things: legalizing the opium traffic and the teaching of christian doctrines.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the hon. member mention the clause in the treaty which legalized the opium traffic?

Miss MACPHAIL: All the authorities on the question agree that the treaty legalized the opium traffic. I have not the treaty under my hand.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Chairman, I would insist—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I would ask the hon. member to read the treaty clause dealing with opium.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am not quoting from the treaty, I am quoting from authorities dealing with the subject of legalizing the sale of opium in China. As I stated a moment ago, the teaching of christianity and the sale of opium were included in the same treaty, Rev. Mr. Lewis, author of Black Opium, quotes from official documents. I wish to quote for a moment from British Imperialism in China, a small volume published last year by the Labour Research Department. It can be procured at 162 Buckingham Palace Road, London.

An hon. MEMBER: A good road.

Miss MACPHAIL: Yes, it sounds patriotic. It says:

> Through the indemnities imposed on China for her feeble resistance to these attacks, a load of debt had been imposed, and foreign officials had been appointed to collect customs duties to meet the interest due. The foreign communities in the treaty ports established rights of extra-territoriality; they administered the local government, had their own police, and established their own assessors in the law courts; after 1912 the mixed courts became practically foreign institutions, even the Chinese representatives being appointed by the foreign authorities. The Chinese had become in effect a subject race.

It is said that at Shanghai, one of the treaty ports, there is a park at the entrance of which is displayed this sign:

> Chinese and dogs not admitted.

One can imagine how we would feel if before one of our parks we saw a notice warning us:

> Canadians and dogs not admitted.

The treaty that closed the first opium war was called the Treaty of Nankin, 1842. By it China had to pay $6,000,000 for the cost of the opium destroyed, $12,000,000 for the expense of the war, and $3,000,000 for debts due to British subjects, in addition to $6,000,000 already paid for the ransom of Canton. Hong-Kong was ceded to us for refitting ships, and four additional ports were opened to trade. In the New Leader of September 17, 1926, Bertrand Russell in an article, The White Peril in China, says:

> The extent to which China has been deprived of independence is not always realized. Let us illustrate it by an analogy. Suppose the Germans had won the war, and had compelled us to sign a treaty giving them the city of London, control of the railway from London to Harwich, the right to garrisons at Reading and Oxford as "treaty ports", the exclusive administration of the business quarters in Glasgow, Liverpool, Southampton, with a score of other ports, and the right to determine import duties, collect the customs, and hand over the proceeds only to such governments as they approved of, and to decide all disputes between Germans and British by German courts. This would represent fairly accurately the state of affairs which Europe and Japan have created in China. I think that even the present cabinet and foreign office would be found among the patriots if that were the condition of England.

I am sure that even the member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) would be found amongst the patriots if that were the condition in Canada.

In regard to the Boxer rebellion, it is said I should have guarded myself by saying that it was really a civil war rather than a rebellion. How could it be a civil war with foreign powers backing one faction and exacting very heavy indemnities from the section whose army was defeated? I cannot see why we should call it a civil war. It is as true to say that crossing sacred ground with railways aroused the Chinese populace to anger as to say that the Boston tea party was the cause of the American revolutionary war, or that the greasing of bullets with cows' fat was the cause of the Indian mutiny, or that slavery was the real cause of the Civil war. There is no doubt that the Chinese were ignorant and that they did not understand the real causes of the war, but I may say to this House that the people of any country never understand the real causes of a war while that war is proceeding. There was a huge indemnity exacted from China after the Boxer rebellion, amounting to £67,000,000.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Will the hon. member permit a question? In the opinion of the hon. member, would these indignities have been heaped upon China if she had been in a position to defend herself?

Miss MACPHAIL: No, I do not think so. But I think that if Great Britain had been as anxious about her Christianity as she was about the opium,—not all of Great Britain, but the ruling faction—China would not have had to defend herself while trying to get rid of something harmful to her own people. Who gave us the right to trot around the world settling the difficulties and quarrels, or imaginary difficulties, of the different countries? I have often wondered about that.

It was not at that time that the five per cent customs tax was imposed, but rather that the foreign powers undertook the administration of the customs after the Boxer rebellion. They collected the customs and used the moneys thus collected as a guarantee of the indemnity, turning the surplus over to whatever governmental body they chose. By controlling the customs they controlled trade; they would not allow an increase in that tariff. Fancy how the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) and the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) would feel if the United States controlled our customs tariff and would not allow us to raise it higher than five per cent. In the Western Producer of January 27, 1927, which is published by Harris Turner, a returned veteran and a well known Canadian who gave his sight in the service of his country, and who could scarcely be called anti-British, appeared the following article:

The Boxer war ended with the occupation of Pekin by allied forces for a period of one year and the extortion of enormous indemnities extended over forty years. The payment of the indemnity was guaranteed by the institution of a foreign controlled customs service; surplus funds being handed over to the central government. In addition to the Boxer indemnity, various foreign loans have been secured against customs receipts.

The hon. member for Kingston had scorn in his voice when he said that in my letter I stated that living conditions in the factories were horrible. On this point I wish to quote at some length from the Globe even at the risk of wearying the House; I do not weary it very often. The Globe is now very much interested in my letter, and I want to recall the things it printed in earlier days. The Globe of March 5, 1923, contains the following:

A hopeful sign in China is the demand of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce in Shanghai for higher standards of human welfare in industry. The chamber urges all firms and factories to employ no children under twelve, to permit one day's rest in seven and to safeguard the health of the workers by limiting working hours, improving sanitary conditions and installing safety devices for machinery.

Then they quote from Doctor Sherwood Eddy, as follows:

There are at least fifty cotton mills around Shanghai and more are going up. Thousands of children down to the age of eight or nine are employed. Little girls, eight or nine years of age, were standing between double rows of whizzing, unguarded machinery, steadily but wearily feeding the machines. One mite, perhaps eight years of age, was curled in an exhausted heap on the cement floor sound asleep. Over in a corner, under a pile of waste, a tiny baby was spending the night, while his mother worked at a machine near by. . . . In one small hospital there were one day this winter three children under ten years old. The arm of one had been caught in an unfenced machine and was all but torn off. The leg of another was smashed from hip to ankle by the teeth of a machine. The third, a little girl, had been caught by the hair in her machine and her scalp torn off. Not one of these accidents would have happened had the machines been fitted with safety devices. Most of the accidents happen in the night shifts, between two and four in the morning. Such are the terrible conditions in Chinese industry.

Then the Globe continues:

At Chefoo, where 17,000 women are engaged in the hair-net industry, the wage is six cents for a ten-hour day. In the forty pongee silk factories in the same city 26,000 men and boys work a thirteen-hour day for the same amount. Only Christian employers close their mills on Sunday. At Tientsin 15,000 boys in the weaving factories work an eighteen-hour day, from 5 a.m. to 11 p.m., the majority receiving no pay but their food. In the match-making industry in the city, eighty little workers must go to the hospital each day to be treated for the effects of cheap phosphorus and sulphur on the lungs and eyes. Better chemicals would prevent this, but profits would not be so great.

It is difficult to believe that a century ago, in the first stage of the industrial revolution, conditions in Great Britain were little better than in China to-day. There are few more poignant chapters in history than the victimization of British children by the rise of the steam engine and of mechanical invention. The abuses were gradually abolished by the public conscience and the growing power of labour organization, but such forces are still weak in China. The chief hope for the present generation of Chinese workers will come through international effort. The movement set on foot by the League of Nations for equalizing, so far as possible, labour standards throughout the world has borne fruit already in Japan and India, though the state of things in these countries is still deplorable. It is in the interest of all nations that industry in no nation shall be built on sweated labour. Economic and humanitarian reasons join in demanding the protection of the oriental labourers against the application of western industrialism without the safeguards that western countries have found it necessary to devise.

Then I come to the incident of the shooting of the Chinese students; this was just a year ago, and I think we can all recall it. The Chinese students were protesting by a peaceful parade against conditions to be found in Japanese factories, and they were shot down by Indian Police on the orders of British officers. The Indian police certainly would not have shot them down had it not been for the orders of their officers, so I think I am not very far from the truth when I say it was the British police. I was in error, however, and I very gladly accept the correction. An inquiry was made into this shooting incident, because the Chinese made a charge that they had been shot down, which charge was found to be substantiated in a very long account which is to be found in the London Times of June 16, 1925. This covers several pages and any hon. member can verify what I have said by reading it.

Much more recently than that, however, the anti-national forces in China as recently published in the New Leader of February 6, 1927, shot down those who were opposed to them. Sir Percival Phillips, writing to the Daily Mail, of which he is correspondent, describes the happenings in the following words:

The executions have been terrifyingly informal. Pickets and agitators, including ignorant coolies and spectacled students, are quickly beheaded wherever they are found intimidating shopkeepers or scattering Cantonese leaflets.

A runner is sent to summon the "execution patrol," which comes up with the headsman swinging the bared blade. The culprit is forced to his knees as the soldiers keep the crowd back.

A moment later his head is being fastened to a wooden cage, which is all ready, and is nailed to a pole for the contemplation of the populace.

Further on the New Leader, which is the official organ of the Labour party in England, says, and the words are in italics:

They would not have happened if the British forces had not been massed at Shanghai.

I think I am only stating a fact when I state that Russia wisely withdrew and gave up her concessions. I said she did it wisely. I do not think she did it from virtuous motives; she made a virtue of necessity. I have an article here which appeared in the Weekly News, published in Winnipeg, Manitoba, on Friday, March 25, 1927, in which this statement is made:

Russia was shrewd enough to make a virtue of necessity, and give up her privileges in China while the other powers were holding tight to theirs. Naturally, the Chinese appreciated this move.

Later on the article says:

Germany's privileges in China were taken away from her by the treaty of Versailles. As a consequence, though before the war Germany was probably the most unpopular western nation in China, German trade in that country is thriving while British trade is at a standstill, and even American commerce seriously embarrassed.

I want to quote just one more paragraph:

The moment western powers give up special privileges and base their intercourse with China on commercial grounds, there will be an end to drives and boycotts, and China will trade most with those who best meet her economic needs.

Such, at least, is the doctrine of European liberals.

I said in the letter that I wish Canada, which is a member of the League of Nations, would protest against the breaking of the peace of the world, or taking a chance at breaking the peace of the world, by the action of the powers in China. Under article XI of the treaty of Versailles that is possible:

It is also declared to be the friendly right of each member of the league to bring to the attention of the assembly or of the council any circumstance whatever affecting international relations which threatens to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

And so Canada would be well within her right in protesting against anything that tends to endanger the peace of the world. There was an interesting report in the McGill Daily, a student's paper issued at McGill university, of a speech recently made, by Captain Brace—who I believe was connected with the Young Men's Christian Association and who is a returned man—on conditions in China at the present time. He said:

The cause of the trouble in China to-day is the white man, who exploits the oriental and breaks all laws of civilization in doing so.

We as Britishers must take our just share as a consequence of so serious a charge. I want to close this defence, if it can be called a defence, of my letter to the public school children of Southeast Grey by quoting again from Bertrand Russell. He says this, in relation to the forces going out to China:

If we were fighting for a great cause, the prospect of loss might be faced with heroism. But the exact opposite is the case: We are fighting against everything progressive, upright, and intelligent in China, in favour of everything ignorant, reactionary and corrupt. We are fighting to keep civilization under in a great nation, in order that it may be the easier to exploit. We are fighting for the right to shoot down young unarmed students when they protest against the killing of Chinese workers by Japanese capitalists in labour disputes. We are fighting to prolong anarchy and civil war among self-seeking militarists dependent upon foreign support. We are fighting to preserve everything that is bad and to prevent the growth of everything that is good. This, alas, is our position throughout Asia. This is the sacred cause which we pursue with a pigheaded obstinacy that must, before long, bring ruin and national disaster upon us. Both as a patriot and as an internationalist, I view the situation with feelings little short of despair.

I want to say, regardless of what the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) and the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) may think, that I consider myself a patriot. I have no desire in the world to mislead the school children of Southeast Grey, or the school children of Canada, or the people of Canada on any question whatever. To the extent that any details of the letter were inaccurate I regret it, but the spirit of the letter was true and I stand by it be the consequences what they may.

Mr. MacLAREN: I rise to express approval of the vote now under discussion for the cadet services. I do so partly to take the opportunity of giving general approval to the votes under the heading of national defence. Hitherto in the last few years these grants have been entirely too small to effect efficiency, and the increases in many items which we notice this year will, I believe, give the Department of National Defence an opportunity to bring about efficiency, something which is very desirable.

So far as the cadet services go I believe that the great mass of thinking people in this country recognize the value of the cadet services and the physical training connected with them. I believe most of the fathers and mothers of this country recognize the qualities that the cadet service and physical training give to their children. As a result the great improvement in the physical condition of the youth of the country is noticeable. Not only is there a physical improvement but there is instilled into the children obedience, the sense of discipline, manliness and independence. All of these qualities contribute to form what we believe is one of the most desirable objects to be obtained in educating our youth, and that is the building up of character.

Mr. BOURASSA: I have a word to say just with reference to the vote which is supposed to be under discussion. I partly agree with the minister on one point—that it is not essentially nor exclusively the training of cadets which makes for militarism. It is to be regretted, I think, that the two objects in view—physical training and the cadet corps organization—are not separated, because some of us might be disposed to approve of the grant given for physical training and not for the organization of cadet corps.

Mr. RALSTON: I wonder if my hon. friend would permit me to interrupt at this point? It has been pointed out to me that I did not read the full policy of the Strathcona trust. It gives my hon. friend the reason why the vote cannot be separated. If my hon. friend will permit me, the objects of Lord Strathcona were set out in certain provisions. I read only part of those this afternoon and I wish to read the rest. What I read this afternoon set out the objects as being:

> Not only to improve the physical and intellectual capabilities of the children by inculcating habits of alertness, orderliness and prompt obedience, but also to bring up the boys to patriotism, and to a realization that the first duty of a free citizen is to be prepared to defend his country.

This is the rest:

> The intention of the founder is that, while physical training and elementary drill should be encouraged for all children of both sexes attending public schools, especial importance is to be attached to the teaching of military drill generally to all boys, including rifle shooting for boys capable of using rifles. All boys should so far as possible, be made to acquire a fair acquaintance while at school, with military drill and rifle shooting.

Mr. BOURASSA: I thank the minister for giving me this information because it puts me into a satisfactory position to support the amendment of the hon. member for South-east Grey.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think the hon. member had any trouble before.

Mr. BOURASSA: Perhaps I had more trouble than the minister realizes. To a large degree I am in favour of encouraging physical training, but I am opposed to joining the two things together. The minister says that the educational institutions and the parents are free to accept or to refuse the offer of the government. But knowing how things work, one realizes that, with the object of giving physical training to their children, people are being led into accepting, against their wishes, this military organization. In some institutions, in Quebec, the organization of cadet corps was presented to the people exclusively from the point of view of physical training, and it was accepted as such. Both the parents and the children were induced to accept it; then the cadet corps were formed, and once started, once the rifles had been received from the government, they were kept up.

As I said at the beginning, I am not prepared to say that the cadet corps organization is in itself a source of militarism in its most obnoxious form. For instance, take a country like Switzerland. I do not suppose there is any other democratic country in the world so thoroughly peaceful, and where, at the same time, such attention is given to inducing all classes of the population from youth to old age to prepare themselves for the defence of their country. Once we have a standard of national patriotism well inculated in the minds of our population, then of course we will have to do something in the way of preparing our youth for the defence of their country. But in the uncertain state of mind in which we have been for the last twenty-five years, not knowing whether the duty of our people is to defend our country, or to go out and fight wars that have no relation to national defence, then everything which tends to the development of the military mind, to inducing the youth of the country to enter those cadet corps and later on to enter the militia, makes them so-to-speak food for militarism, imperialism, and service to foreign countries, to the detriment of their own country. I do not want to say any more on the subject at the present time, because I think it is rather unfortunate that the whole scope of our military policy and foreign military ventures should have been brought under discussion on this item.

In Quebec many people are in a state of disquiet at the ultimate result of this training of the youth in our colleges. Undoubtedly it does not immediately make for the worst kind of militarism. I admit with the minister that even with some of our young men it has a better effect; it teaches them a sense of discipline which, if we are to have some kind of military organization, is certainly better than the kind of militarism which is developed at the approach of war or during war with no sense of discipline, when all sorts of inducements are held out to get untrained people to enlist. But there is also this other consequence. Once boys have been accustomed in colleges to military training, they get into their minds, precisely as is mentioned in that report of the Strathcona trust which the minister read, the idea that military duty is the primary duty of citizenship. It is against that spirit that a growing number of Canadian fathers of families are protesting, men who are thinking of the future of their sons and of their country, men who believe that the future of this country depends, not upon following the footsteps of European nations, but, on the contrary, on this generation taking full advantage of the dour experience of the war to induce our people to work for peace, to realize that their best contribution to the peace of the world is to make peace at home not only possible, but if we can, to make it unavoidable, to make the world understand through the League of Nations of which we form a part, that Canada is not prepared to follow any country, foreign or British, in launching the world once again into military ventures such as those through which the world has passed Therefore I think it is time, not only to talk of peace, but to work for peace. It is not sufficient to say that this military training has been going on for twenty or thirty years, and that the minister is simply asking for a small increase to meet new requests. If this government meant what it said through its representatives at Geneva and London, namely that it is prepared to help the British government, the governments of the other dominions and foreign nations in the development of a spirit of peace, it should begin at home and show in the estimates and in dealing with the public money that Canada means peace in fact and not only in words.

Therefore, instead of encouraging the development of those cadet corps in the colleges, we should on the contrary work towards changing that organization into a purely peaceful one of physical training. If it comes to that, then we have to remember the order of things as it was created and as it is maintained by our constitution. Everything which relates to civil education belongs to the provinces. This government and this parliament should have no business to come into the various educational institutions in this country and take the lead in introducing one branch of training into any educational institution. We have heard very often from the other side eloquent and even ferocious pleas in regard to absolute provincial autonomy in matters of education. Why should the federal government step in and subsidize physical training, if we mean only to prepare the youth of the country for the works of peace? But if this is connected with military organizations, if we are taking advantage of the trust first, and these estimates afterwards, to encourage the development of a military spirit in the colleges, then the minister must admit that the objection raised by the hon. member for Southeast Grey is well founded; that this government is stepping out of its normal functions; that it is entering into a field which is under the control of the provinces in order, through those institutions and under the pretence of physical training, to instil into our youth the spirit of militarism. I do not say that it is the worst kind of militarism; I do not say that all these young men will go out from these colleges with the idea of killing and murdering; I do not go to that exaggeration; but undoubtedly it creates in their minds what prepares them in after life to respond to the call of militarism. It turns their mind in that direction. Therefore I support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Southeast Grey, first because I think it is logical that we should invite the provinces out of their own funds to look after the matter of physical training, and secondly because I do not believe it is the duty of this government to take advantage of the system of physical training to introduce military training into the educational institutions.

With regard to the option of parents, I might give this information to the minister. I know of at least one, and I presume it is only one out of many, educational institution in the province of Quebec where they started with the idea of having physical training, but were induced by a representative of the federal government to organize a cadet corps, in connection with which the teachers received that premium which is offered to them. After the thing was launched, after a number of young boys had joined the corps, there was a certain spirit developed in the institution to try to make those who stayed out feel ashamed of themselves, to make them feel they were not patriotic, that they did not want to prepare for their patriotic duty, and all that kind of thing. The moment you create an organization of this kind in a school you cause a cleavage between those who join and those who refuse; and you put into the hands of those who receive help from the government and receive visits from the military instructors from the department a weapon which they use to force others to join the corps against their own wishes and against the wishes of their parents. For that reason, and especially in view of the attitude taken by most, if not all, of the government candidates in the province of Quebec upon this question, I have no hesitation in voting for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Southeast Grey, and in doing so I feel that I remain faithful to the Liberal platform as it has been propounded in the province of Quebec in many elections past.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to make a brief statement before the vote is taken in order that my position may be made clear. This afternoon the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington made an attack upon me; he went into the history of the Winnipeg strike. From my standpoint his statements entirely misrepresent the situation. I had no chance to protest against them. Further than that, he entirely misrepresented my connection with that strike. I do not think it is necessary for me to go into the matter to-night, but I might say that on one date which he quoted, on the 17th of May of that year, I was on the Pacific coast when these things were happening in Winnipeg, and I had absolutely nothing to do with what occured in Winnipeg at that date. I do not want to go into that matter to-night, but I could, I think, put up a very strong case for the workers. May I merely suggest in passing that one hon. member of the House last year who attacked me on that matter is not in the House this year, and the vote to-day showed that I had the support of the entire Winnipeg and Manitoba group who happened to know the situation much better than do the people in the east. I do not want to be too hard on outsiders with regard to this matter, because I know that propaganda was sent out through the press that misrepresented the entire situation. However, I leave that to one side.

I was anxious to speak on this question to-night because the vote on the Chairman's ruling this afternoon was not taken on the point to which I had raised objection, and I had no opportunity then of setting myself right. Later on, after the vote was taken, the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington—I want to give him credit—gave a fairly accurate statement of the case, but I think there was a decided misunderstanding on his part as well as on the part of the chairman as to just where my objection lay, so I want to make that clear. The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington quoted from what he said was a speech of mine. I think it was in reality a quotation from the preamble of the platform of the Labour party of British Columbia of which I was then a member, and where I happened then to be living. It runs as follows:

> The ultimate object of the confederated labour party is the collective ownership and democratic operation of the means of wealth and production. This involves a complete revolution in our whole economic and social structure.

Apparently the word "revolution" frightened or scandalized the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington. I might point out to him that according to the historians there took place in Great Britain about one hundred and fifty years ago what was known as the industrial revolution; that was the change from hand production to machine production. Every student of history knows that revolution is a term constantly used in industrial history and economics. A great many of us in the labour movement who have tried to study historical developments are of opinion that sooner or later the industrial revolution must be followed by an economic revolution, meaning a change in our way of controlling this huge machinery of production. I think I would be speaking in terms that would be best comprehended by gentlemen here if I should say that we believe that in the days to come public ownership is inevitable, and if you change from private ownership of a lot of little concerns to public ownership on a large scale by municipalities or by the state you are bringing about what might be termed an economic revolution. That is the point of view of the Labour party, and so far from wishing to repudiate anything of that kind, I might say that is the reason why I am in this House, for that is the platform of the Labour party both in Canada and in Great Britain. Let me read a paragraph of something

I wrote in 1919 which explains our position. I pointed out that a great many people were dragging in the Russian situation and I said:

Now, if instead of thinking so much about the dreadful things that are happening in Russia, suppose we consider the remarkable changes that are likely to take place in Great Britain. Within the last few days, several men prominent in civic affairs and in the Citizens' Committee, have confessed that they know nothing of the platform of the British Labour party. Yet, this party is now in opposition in the British House of Commons and, it is generally conceded, will before long become the government of Great Britain. Their policy is then already a matter of practical politics and may in the not distant future be carried into operation. Either this, say students of social movements, or the deluge!

And I quoted from the platform of the British Labour party:

The view of the Labour party is that what has to be reconstructed after the war is not this or that government department, or this or that piece of social machinery, but, so far as Britain is concerned, society itself.

That is what we belive: there has to be a general social reconstruction. I commented:

"Revolutionary!" certainly. But the exponents of this view are not persecuted as British and Scotch anarchists. A goodly number of them have been elected to parliament.

Then I went on to quote further from the British Labour party manifesto:

The individualist system of capitalist production based on the private ownership and competitive administration of land and capital with its reckless "profiteering" and wage slavery; with its glorification of the unhampered struggle for the means of life, and its hypocritical pretense of the "survival of the fittest"; with the monstrous inequality of circumstances which it produces and the degradation and brutalization, both moral and spiritual, resulting therefrom may, we hope, indeed have received a death-blow.

I went on:

We must insure that what is presently to be built up is a new social order, based not on fighting, but on fraternity—not on the competitive struggle for the means of bare life, but on a deliberately planned coöperation in production and distribution for the benefit of all who participate by hand or by brain—not on the utmost possible inequality of riches, but on a systematic approach toward a healthy equality of material circumstances for every person born into the world—not on an enforced dominion over subject nations, subject races, subject colonies, subject classes or a subject sex, but, in industry, as well as in government, on that equal freedom, that general consciousness of consent, and that widest possible participation in power both economic and political, which is characteristic of democracy.

Some of us were urging upon the labour people that they ought to bring this about in this country as far as was possible by participation in politics. I do not know whether it is possible for economic changes to come about in that way, but we were urging that the labour people should take advantage of this means of advancing their cause and go into parliament. Reference was made by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) to some statement by Mr. Ivens in which he suggested that labour should get control of the parliament buildings. He said, "We shall soon move in". That was a horrible thing to say! As a matter of fact, Mr. Ivens did move in before very long; he is a member of the provincial house to-day, with four or five of the men associated with him. They were urging political action. It is true that some labour men believe that the only way to bring about these social changes is by force. Some of us have taken the opposite stand. I do not know whether we are correct or not, but we have tried to oppose military force, both as a means of settling international difficulties and also as a means of settling class difficulties, and we have said frankly that we hoped that reason would prevail rather than events would be allowed to drift from bad to worse until there was a cataclysm. That has been the position we have taken. It then seems strange that the hon. member for Frontenac, when I was trying to reduce our own national armament—and I was elected on that platform, it is not only my personal view, but our party platform—should accuse me of wanting to build up a force for political revolutionary purposes. He made a statement to which I took exception. After quoting me correctly he said words to this effect:

So the object was collective ownership and a complete revolution if necessary by such means as were undertaken in the Winnipeg strike.

That was the sentence to which I objected. I said nothing whatever in this connection about the Winnipeg strike. I had not the Winnipeg strike remotely in my mind when at that time I used the platform of the Labour party of British Columbia. I had not a political revolution in my mind. I was getting back to the question of an economic revolution which we believe should succeed an industrial revolution. The only thing that makes me wonder whether there will be a political revolution is the stupidity of many of our people who refuse to see the changes that have come about. I want to make myself clear on this. I stand for this platform which has been read several times in the House. I urge the bringing about of this platform if possible by political means; whether or not it will come about in this way largely depends, on the men now in control of our business life. I wrote in 1919, during the time that feeling ran high:

> Do our Canadian business men suppose, with revolutions going on all over Europe, and with this program offered in England as a substitute for sudden and perhaps violent revolution, that we in Canada are going to be permitted to go with undisturbed step along the accustomed ways?
> No! we too must face the new situation. Whether the radical changes that are inevitable may be brought about peaceably, largely depends on the good sense of the Canadian business man who now controls both the industry and government of this country. We confess the prospects are not overly bright.

I trust that this statement will help to straighten out the tangle into which we got ourselves this afternoon, and I must thank the House for giving me an opportunity for explaining my position.

Mr. ROCH LANCTOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much attention to the debate which has been going on since eight o'clock. My hon. friend from St. John, N.B. (Mr. MacLaren) discussed just now the cadet question; he told us that the training which cadets received was an excellent thing for their health. I do not differ much from his opinion, for he is a doctor and a better judge than I am of these matters. However, in my part of the country we have other remedies to administer to our youth, it is the help given to us during their two months' holidays, and I contend that it is worth much more in promoting health than the one or two days' training per week in colleges. That is the reason why I am opposed to this item.

While on the subject, I wonder why the present government demands from us extravagant outlays for aviation and all kinds of military ends. I wonder how it is possible that intelligent people are so willing to spend the public funds for purposes which will not bring a cent to anybody. This, however, can be explained: I am aware that in the Department of National Defence there are "jobbers," people receiving salaries of $8,000 and $10,000 per year, who wish to enlist others; I contend that there lies the reason why they are always willing to claim larger sums for military purposes. If they had to contribute like we the poor people of this country have to, perhaps they might go slower on that subject and they would seek to have the least soldiers possible in order to bring down the expenses of those who have to stand the racket.

I have not spoken on this question since 1922. I had thought that once a grit government was returned there would be no more necessity to bring up the subject. The old time grits were sufficiently cautious, they seem to have almost entirely disappeared from the government of this country, yet there are some left. This is a very extraordinary year; ever since I have been a member of this House, I have never seen so much extravagance and to cap our misfortunes we are now asked to vote $3,500,000 of military estimates more than last year. When all the great countries of Europe seek to abolish militarism which the last war was to suppress forever, here we start all over again and must arm ourselves. Against whom? Against the countries of Europe? What have they been guilty of in the past against us; to what extent are we indebted to them?

Training young men in summer during six or seven days, spending millions to keep them in military camps where they remain for a week, I ask you, what is it worth? Instead you should be asking the farmers of this country to take these young men and train them. They may not be able to take them all at the same time, but all the farmers could take a few and pay them as much as they would get in training camps, their health would benefit and many families would be better off for it.

With the useless outlays inserted in the 1927 budget, you will be spending more than you will receive, and what shall be the outcome? Burden the people with new taxes. If you continue discussing aviation and militia, what shall become of us? We shall have to incur new debts just like during the war, and, on this point, I differ from you Liberals; I side with the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) and I shall vote with her this evening as I have done in the past.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I do not share the views of my hon. friend. I am not in favour of extravagant expenditure for militia purposes, but if there is an item which should receive the support of this House it is certainly this particular item. I would tell my hon. friend that all our scholastic institutions in my province, including the college at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière and the Academie de commerce and the seminary in the city of Quebec, take advantage of the militia grant for cadet training. Therefore I support this vote with great pleasure, for undoubtely cadet training is well thought of in my province and in the city of Quebec from which I have the honour to come.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I should like to relate to the committee, particularly for the benefit of hon. gentlemen to my right, an incident of the election campaign of 1925. In a mining town of my constituency a supporter of the Conservative candidate, a naturalized Canadian, was in the lobby of one of the hotels and I heard him make this statement several times:

Vote for the Conservatives. They are the rottenest party there is, and if we put them in power we will get a revolution all the sooner.

Hon. gentlemen to my right can make what use they like of that statement.

I am opposed to this vote. Our schoolboys are not lacking in warlike spirit, in fact you can get up a fight in the schoolyard any day on the least provocation. One of the greatest problems our teachers have is to keep the boys living peaceably together. I am speaking from my own experience when I was a schoolboy. I think we all favour physical training for our boys and girls attending school, but I do not think it is right to use the bequest of a lord who has been dead many years to induce us to consent to have this military training imposed upon our children. No doubt, as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) stated, parents can keep their children out of the cadet corps, but this places the youngsters in a very embarrassing position, because they are looked at rather askance and treated very coldly by the cadets. I do not think our boys should be put in that invidious position. Let us give our boys physical training by all means, but if we want to give them military training let us do it outside the school. Our schools are under provincial control and the Dominion government has no right to impose military training on the young people attending those schools.

Amendment (Miss Macphail) negatived.

Item agreed to.

Engineer services and works, $803,900.

Mr. BOURASSA: What is the object of the $237,900 increase?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think my hon. friend was in his seat this afternoon when I explained that this is in relation to buildings belonging to the department which have been getting into disrepair from year to year until at last some more active steps must be taken towards repair. I have prepared the most modest allowance in order to see that the buildings are properly kept up.

[Mr. Lavigueur.]

Mr. BOURASSA: Are the buildings in Ottawa?

Mr. RALSTON: All over the country.

Item agreed to.

General stores, $607,799.

Mr. BOURASSA: What is the increase of $217,799 for?

Mr. RALSTON: I explained that also this afternoon. The increase is mainly on account of the fact that clothing and other supplies of which there has been a considerable stock since the war have been gradually depleted, and we have now to make new purchases. This applies also to other stores.

Mr. GEARY: Has the minister taken any steps to supplement the existing stock of coloured uniforms?

Mr. RALSTON: I have not, but the matter is under consideration by the department. Representations have been made by some units, particularly the infantry association, with respect to this.

Item agreed to.

Manufacturing establishments, $472,395.

Mr. STINSON: How is this vote to be applied?

Mr. RALSTON: It has to do with the Dominion arsenal at Quebec and a similar building at Lindsay. The latter we are not using at present, we are simply maintaining it.

Mr. STINSON: How is the amount divided between the two?

Mr. RALSTON: About $464,000 for the Dominion arsenal at Quebec, and $8,000 odd for the Lindsay establishment.

Item agreed to.

Non-permanent active militia, $2,084,300.

Mr. BOURASSA: Why the increase of $424,300?

Mr. RALSTON: That also was gone into this afternoon, but not in detail. As I explained this afternoon, an endeavour will be made to train officers and non-commissioned officers throughout these various militia units, and this simply provides for sufficient personnel in order to enable that training to be carried out. Probably 33,000, all ranks, officers, non-commissioned officers and men, will be trained this year, and I may tell the committee that that is out of a paper establishment of something like 127,000, which is a very small proportion.

Mr. BOURASSA: I notice in the report of the Imperial conference that all the prime ministers, including the Prime Minister of Canada, agreed upon the following:

> The Imperial conference regrets that it has not been possible to make greater progress with the international reduction and limitation of armaments referred to in these resolutions.

That refers to the resolutions adopted at the conference of 1923—

> It is the common desire of the governments represented at this conference to do their utmost in pursuit of this object so far as this is consistent with the safety and integrity of all parts of the empire and its communications.

By the comments which were made and the speeches delivered by the various prime ministers, as well as the remarks appearing in the press later on, everyone understood that the result of the conference would be that in each of the countries represented, an effort would be made to reduce the expenditure on armaments. Now I see that this item, which refers to our force proper, the non-permanent active militia which is our real force—

Mr. RALSTON: No; the active force.

Mr. BOURASSA: There is the permanent force also, but there is no change there. So the result of this pious desire, if I may so call it, expressed by the various governments represented in London, to reduce armaments, results, so far as we are concerned, in a straight increase. It would therefore seem to me that we are not responding to the wishes of the conference upon which all the representatives agreed, by increasing the amount devoted to our militia by about 20 per cent.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I see that this item has been increased by $424,300, and I understand that this is for training?

Mr. RALSTON: For the training of the non-permanent active militia.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Would the minister say where this training is to be carried on?

Mr. RALSTON: We are endeavouring to arrange more training in camps than there has been. In the past there has been very little training in camps, and an endeavour is being made to reëstablish at least a few of the camps and have the training carried on there for a short period. It is felt that the rural regiments have not really had a fair show in that respect.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Is it the intention of the minister to utilize Valcartier camp this year?

Mr. RALSTON: I am not sure whether Valcartier can be utilized this year; the matter is under very serious consideration, and a decision has not been arrived at as yet. We have in mind the advantages of Valcartier, of course, and the expenditure which has been made, the only thing which deters the department is the fact that it will cost a considerable amount of money to put that camp in shape, because it has not been used for some time.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: What other camp could be utilized in Quebec?

Mr. RALSTON: I think the usual encampment is at Levis.

Mr. EVANS: I think it would be only reasonable for the government at this time to give us some statement regarding their policy in this matter, seeing that we have such an increase this year. I would like to know why the government sees fit, at a time such as this, to increase this vote in this way.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not know that I can add very much more to what I have already said. I only want to add that I think this vote is less this year than it was before the war. Perhaps some hon. members of the committee may not understand that this is purely a non-permanent active militia vote, and is only to provide for the training for nine days of about one-quarter of the paper strength of that force.

Mr. GEARY: I would like to ask the minister if there is any increase in establishment.

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. GEARY: There is no increase in the establishment; the only thing is that you are trying to train a greater proportion of the paper strength. As one who has had some occasion to learn of the work of the militia, I desire to say that the militiamen generally, and those who are interested in the defence force of this country, approve very highly of the action of the government in this regard. The rural battalions, particularly, have not had a fair chance in regard to instruction; a very small proportion of the paper strength of the rural battalions has been instructed at all. Now if we are going to have a force, even on paper, which can be called upon for the defence of our shores, for instance—and I think the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) would not object to that—that force must be trained in order to be effective if such an occasion should unhappily arise. Instructors are sent out; militia officers have devoted their time and money almost without stint trying to make the non-permanent force of this country as efficient as possible. Some pay is given to officers and other ranks, but I think in almost every case that pay is turned in for the good of the service. I cannot recall a case where any rank of the militia has taken the pay allotted to him for training and devoted it to his own use; that money is diverted to the service of this country in keeping up the different militia units. In the cities, while we have a good deal of trouble, we do not face anything like the difficulties which confront rural battalions, which under the previous appropriation could only train a very few of their men. There is no building up of a military spirit, as the hon. member for Labelle knows; it is purely a matter of preparing men should the time come when our shores must be defended.

I have only a further word to say, and I say it because I am not in the militia now and therefore am not talking of anything in which I am concerned. These men who have interested themselves in the permanent force of our country are deserving of the greatest possible praise and credit for the work they have done, for their sacrifices of time and money in order to keep up in some degree the potential forces of this country. I think the hon. member for Labelle may rid his mind of the notion that this is an increase in armament, because it is not an increase in any way; it is only an attempt to make a greater proportion of that paper strength trained and effective for the purpose for which they were raised. As forcefully as I can, I desire to support this vote, knowing that it meets with the approval of those who have the interests of their country at heart, as reflected in the establishment of the non-permanent active militia.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to ask the minister whether the armouries come under the control of the officers of the permanent or non-permanent forces?

Mr. RALSTON: The non-permanent.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like some information, then, as to the method of renting these armouries for meetings, dances, and all that sort of thing. Who is responsible for that.

Mr. RALSTON: I had a statement prepared, Mr. Chairman, by the Quartermaster General in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) the other day, but I have mislaid it for the moment. Speaking generally, the local officer in charge of the armouries has to do with the renting of it, subject to the approval of district headquarters; as the hon. gentleman knows, the country is divided into military districts. An application to that officer through the military district is generally all that is necessary. Sometimes an application is made by the officer in charge of the military district to headquarters.

Mr. GARDINER: Where do the funds go that are received for the rental of these armouries?

Mr. RALSTON: The funds are sent in through the military district. There was a case mentioned by the hon. member for Southeast Grey, which I had investigated immediately, where the funds were kept by the officer in charge and used by him for payment of the caretaker, for the payment of fuel and so on. He rendered an account but did not give the account in until the inspection was made. But the proper way is that these funds should go in through the military district to the Receiver General.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister ever heard of a case where the armouries have been rented for the game of badminton, and the rent paid was transferred to the mess account?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think that that has ever been done. I am informed that there may have been a case where some person contributed to the mess fund.

Mr. GARDINER: I mean where armouries were rented for club purposes.

Mr. RALSTON: No, I have no knowledge of any case of that kind.

Mr. GARDINER: I will make further inquiries, and as soon as I have received information I will bring it to the minister's attention.

Mr. RALSTON: I should be glad if my hon. friend would do so.

Item agreed to.

Permanent force, $4,800,000.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to ask the minister if he could give us the number of officers of different ranks and the number of men that are in the permanent corps, also the pay they are drawing.

Mr. RALSTON: I am afraid I cannot give my hon. friend the different ranks. I can give him the number of officers and men. There are 334 officers and 2,995 men, a total strength of 3,329 of all ranks.

Mr. COOTE: What rate of pay are the men receiving?

Mr. RALSTON: The average rate of pay is $994.79 per annum.

Mr. COOTE: I do not know that the minister understood me correctly. Can he give me the pay of the privates?

Mr. RALSTON: The total pay and allowances for a single man over 18 years of age on appointment amount to $876. For a married man the pay and allowances total $1,131.50 that is when he is out of quarters. After he has been three years in the ranks the single man receives $912.50, and the married man $1,168.

Mr. GEARY: That is pay and allowances?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, pay and allowances.

Mr. COOTE: May I ask the minister how men are secured for the permanent force?

Mr. RALSTON: They are recruited. They are examined, and if they pass the examination and there is a vacancy they are accepted. The establishment is very small, and there are very few vacancies. When there are vacancies they are very quickly filled.

Mr. COOTE: Is there any trouble in keeping the force up?

Mr. RALSTON: Not with a force of 2,900 men.

Mr. GEARY: Would the minister tell me what reduction was made in the pay of the private soldier following a report made some two or three years ago, and whether the amount of the reduction has been restored?

Mr. RALSTON: No, it has not been restored. The reduction was about five per cent.

Mr. GEARY: Has the reduction not caused the force to lose many men? I think it was reported by the then minister two years ago that it had resulted in the loss of a good many of the force.

Mr. RALSTON: I am instructed that quite a number of men did drop out, but that a great many of them have reënlisted.

Mr. GEARY: Is there any possibility of restoring the former rate of pay to the other ranks?

Mr. RALSTON: I have not taken it into consideration up to the moment. That is to say I have not taken it into consideration with the possibility of giving my hon. friend any hope just now.

Mr. GEARY: Perhaps the minister will be good enough to say he will take the matter into consideration in the future?

Mr. RALSTON: I will go that far.

Mr. COOTE: Is this amount all required for pay?

Mr. RALSTON: No. It is also required to pay for transport, transferring stores, equipment, printing and stationery, and miscellaneous.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the total pay list?

Mr. RALSTON: The estimated pay list in this vote is $4,020,000.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is there any increase in the strength of the permanent force compared with last year?

Mr. RALSTON: No, none.

Mr. COOTE: Could the minister tell us approximately where the units of the permanent force are stationed?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, the units with their numbers are as follows:

Ontario—
District No. 1	216
District No. 2	452
District No. 3	387
Quebec—
District No. 4	242

Item agreed to.

Topographic survey, $40,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this topographic survey made for military purposes alone?

Mr. RALSTON: Some of these maps are sold for civilian purposes. They are very detailed and very good maps.

Mr. GARDINER: Does this survey overlap the Topographic survey of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. RALSTON: No, it is not the same work at all.

Item agreed to.

Transport and freight, $165,000.

Mr. DICKIE: Perhaps I might introduce, under this item, a resolution which has been sent to me, without going much farther afield than previous speakers have done. The resolution in question is from the Cowichan branch of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League, and reads as follows:

> Owing to the fact that Canada has large trade interests in China, which are likely to expand, also to the fact that there are many Canadians in China who are being protected by the imperial troops—
> Be it resolved that the Canadian government be requested to pay entire costs of transport, maintenance and treatment of all imperial service men invalided to Canada from any cause whatsoever due to service in China.

I am in complete accord with this resolution. We look to the great British navy for defence in all parts of the world, but we contribute very little towards its upkeep and we of British Columbia feel ashamed that we do not contribute more. We can call ourselves an autonomous nation or anything else we like, but the fact is that we are simply a unit of the great British nation and I am glad that such is the case. Therefore I do not see why we should not contribute some modicum towards the upkeep of that splendid navy which protects us and our ships which sail at least some of the seven seas.

When that wonderful warship the Blake sailed into Esquimalt harbour, I am sure the rank and file and officers of that ship must have been greatly impressed. Our regular army consisting of two hundred and fifty or three hundred men were there to await the arrival of those officers and men and there were perhaps one hundred and fifty others, boy scouts and naval reserve men, making a total of some five hundred men to meet that great warship. When the officers were landing, the band at the head of those men played "O Canada, we stand on guard for thee." I am sure those men must have been favourably impressed with our Canadian regular army of three or four hundred men who stood on guard.

Those are good men, willing to do their share, all that they can do, but we think they should receive better treatment than they are receiving. We have naval reserve men, naval instructors, a number of them, men that we have borrowed from the Imperial army. They did good work in the Imperial army; they came to Canada and gave us their services, and have a grievance in this respect; they wish the time they spent in the Imperial army added for pension purposes to the time they have given their services to Canada.

That is a reasonable attitude on their part. I took the matter up last year, but as hon. members know, in the hectic days of last session little was accomplished. I wish the department would take this matter under consideration.

I wish the department would take under consideration also the resolution which has been received from the great Canadian league. Surely we should have some national pride. We do not want protection for nothing. This "peace at any price" movement stops at the Rocky mountains; we have very little of it in British Columbia. We hold in absolute contempt men who have no national pride and who belong to the "peace at any price" party as we call them in this country. We do not want them in British Columbia, and I would suggest that we set aside at Port Nelson—and I know of no more unfavourable place—a colony to which to transport those people along with the Doukhobors and bible students. I do not know that Port Nelson will be useful for any other purpose, but it would be of some use in that regard, so let us send them there. I was going to say: Let us send a few free traders with them but when I come back to consider the matter, practically every fanatic in Canada is a free trader and therefore that branch of politics would be well represented at Port Nelson. We want no "peace at any price" people in British Columbia and we have very few of them there.

If we are part and parcel of that great British nation, let us do something towards the upkeep of the navy which protects our ships. Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa all contribute many times more than we do towards the upkeep of the British navy. Surely we have some national pride. We call ourselves a nation; we say that we have perfect autonomy. I say this is hardly correct. Some day we may have; some day we may make this a great nation and we may have complete autonomy. I know of no reason why we should wish to separate from the great British nation. We receive from them more than we do from any other people in the world; they are our best friends, and we have an immense balance of trade with them. But we take their money and hand it over to our neighbours in the United States. Some of my weak-kneed friends to the left say that we can place reliance on the Monroe doctrine. What kind of a Canadian is one who would expect the United States to defend Canada on the seas or anywhere else? There is no need of war between Canada and the United States; the United States is at present effecting an economic conquest of this country.

Wherever you go you see great institutions owned by United States capitalists who come to Canada because they know this is a goodly land, and they are bringing capital into this country ad lib. In British Columbia most of our pulp mills, many of our great sawmills and our mines, are under the control of United States capitalists. It is said and it has never been disputed that 70 per cent of our timber belongs to United States people. They are effecting an economic conquest of Canada without going to war with us, as I am sure they never expect to do. I would be ashamed of any Canadian who said that we should come under the protection of the Monroe doctrine. Let us stay with the great British Empire until the time comes when we may break away and I hope that time will never come.

Item agreed to.

Naval service—to provide for the maintenance of the ships and establishments of the Naval service, including the Royal Canadian navy, the Royal Canadian naval reserve and the Royal Canadian naval volunteer reserve, $1,725,000.

Mr. EVANS: I would like to say a word at this point, not because I am going to oppose the item, but because of the insult that has been thrown out to this part of the House by the hon. member (Mr. Dickie). Patriotism throughout British Columbia does not end at the Rocky mountains. Members in this part of the House to-day have perhaps somewhat more patriotism than the hon. member himself has. Saskatchewan was one of the first to heed the call; it sent more men to meet the enemy at the front than did British Columbia. and moreover we did not talk about it. When the hon. member throws out an insult of that kind, it is only one of many that we have had to stand this year and last year. Saskatchewan has done its share, and when the hon. member throws out a blanket insult of that kind, it hurts everybody at this end of the House. I do not have to accept a lecture from the hon. member regarding my loyalty to the British Empire. I was brought up in Great Britain and I am glad that I was. I am British to the core to-day, and I want to tell the hon. member that two of mine went out of my home and faced the enemy for three years and a half in Europe. I do not know whether the hon. member can say that or not. Whether he can or can not he is not entitled to lecture us on our patriotism.

Mr. DICKIE: I said nothing at all against the patriotism of the hon. member.

Mr. EVANS: I want these hon. gentlemen to sit down and keep quiet while I am speaking. As regards charging anyone in this part of the House being weak-kneed, let me say that Saskatchewan to-day is making her own living, finding her own income and furnishing as large a part of the national income as any other province in Canada. More than that we are doing that by selling our products against the competition of the whole world, whereas the hon. member says that he cannot make a living in that way. We can do it, and to-day when we advocate peace, we are advocating peace through trade methods that will make for peace instead of war. I want the hon. gentleman to understand that when the call for war came, Saskatchewan was the first to answer, and more men while they were particularly needed, went from Saskatchewan than from any other province in Canada.

Mr. BOURASSA: What is the reason for the increase in this vote?

Mr. RALSTON: The increase is shown as $225,000, but it really is only $125,000, as there was a supplementary vote last year for $100,000. There is a slight increase, of five, in the number of the Royal Canadian Navy proper, and an increase of eighty in the Royal Canadian Naval Reserve. As hon. members know, that is a reserve of professional seamen, who are on what you might call a small retainer each year for service in the navy. There is also a slight increase in the Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve, which is still considerably below strength. Then the supply of fuel oil accounts for about $102,000.

Mr. BOURASSA: There was a special despatch from Ottawa which appeared in one of the Montreal papers last week to the effect that the government contemplated a renewal of practically the whole naval force, the scrapping of what remains at present of the so-called naval force, and the purchase or building of two new cruisers and a flotilla of destroyers. That was given as being the program of the government to be announced shortly. Can the minister give us any information as to that?

Mr. RALSTON: I assure my hon. friend that there is nothing in this vote which would justify any such suggestion.

Mr. BOURASSA: I do not say there is anything in this vote, but surely if this is the program of the government the House is entitled to know upon this vote if there is anything in the rumour.

Mr. RALSTON: There has been no decision as to the future provision of naval craft or as to the policy which will be adopted in that respect.

Mr. CLARK: Can the minister tell the committee what is the relative per capita expenditure on naval defence in Australia and Canada?

Mr. RALSTON: I am sorry I have not those figures at hand.

Mr. CLARK: Perhaps the minister could state whether the figures stated by Premier Bruce at the Montreal conference are correct. He states that the per capita expenditure in Australia is 17 shillings and 2 pence, and in Canada 8 pence; in other words 16 cents in Canada, as compared with $4 odd in Australia.

Mr. RALSTON: I think my hon. friend is about right with regard to the Canadian estimate. I cannot say as to Australia.

Mr. COOTE: How many ships have we in the Canadian navy now?

Mr. RALSTON: The question was answered in the House the other day. There are two destroyers, the Patriot and Patrician; and four mine sweepers, the Ypres, Festubert, Armentieres and the Thiepval.

Mr. COOTE: Do these ships make any cruises in the summer months?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, training cruises.

Mr. COOTE: Has the government considered the advisability of sending them up to explore ice conditions in the Hudson strait and Hudson bay, so that they can bring back a report to us as to the feasibility of that route, and as to whether there is safe anchorage at Port Nelson and Fort Churchill?

Mr. RALSTON: The answer is in the negative.

Mr. COOTE: Does not the minister think it would be a good idea to use these boats for that purpose? A great controversy has been waged in this House for years as to how many months of the year the Hudson strait is open. We have this navy, and we are passing a vote for it every year, and I understand from the minister that these vessels are making cruises anyway; so would it not be the part of wisdom to use these votes for that purpose? I am sure it would be good training for the men on the ships, and they might bring back some useful information.

Mr. MANION: Is my hon. friend anxious to lose the little navy that we now have?

[Mr. Bourassa.]

Mr. COOTE: I am not at all anxious to lose the navy, because if we did we would have to provide more ships. I really think I have made a worth-while suggestion which the minister might well accept.

Mr. RALSTON: I am afraid that I could not accept it at this stage.

Item agreed to.

Air force vote (Service)—for air force operations and training, including training for work for other government departments, $1,669,694.

Mr. BOURASSA: There is an increase in this vote of $675,000 odd. Will the minister explain that?

Mr. RALSTON: The increase of $675,000 is largely due to making provision for replacement of the obsolete military air craft which are now used for the training of the Royal Canadian Air Force by craft of more modern types. Hitherto the training has been carried out entirely on war type air craft. If any reasonable efficiency of the force is to be maintained, the personnel must have experience in the modern types. Hon. gentlemen will understand that a man cannot fly in a machine which has a maximum speed of 100 miles an hour, and then be expected to handle a modern machine flying at 175 miles an hour. It is proposed to replace these more or less obsolete craft with a very small flight of modern machines.

Mr. GARDINER: How many new aeroplanes is it proposed to buy altogether?

Mr. RALSTON: Twelve.

Mr. GARDINER: Where are they to be purchased? Are they made in Canada?

Mr. RALSTON: Any machine the name of which begins with a "V" is made by Vickers. Four will be purchased from Vickers probably, and the other four probably from the Armstrong, Whitworth Company, of England.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that the Vickers in Montreal?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: What do they cost per unit?

Mr. RALSTON: The cost depends upon the style. Would my hon. friend like the details?

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps the minister would give the total cost of each type.

Mr. RALSTON: The cost of the four planes which will probably be bought in England is $33,250 and of the four others $21,440 apiece. For Vancouver there are two machines and 8 engines, at a cost of $73,996; Camp Borden, two groups of four machines to be purchased in England with engines, at a cost of $316,852; Ottawa, one machine with two engines, costing $19,794; spare parts, $102,661; customs, sales tax and freight, $94,295; or a total of $607,598.

Mr. GARDINER: At which point is most of the training done, or is it all done at one point?

Mr. RALSTON: Most of the training is done at Camp Borden.

Mr. GARDINER: How many officers under training at the present time altogether?

Mr. RALSTON: Eighty-four.

Mr. GARDINER: Are you increasing the number from year to year?

Mr. RALSTON: That is the way it grows. There is some increase in this vote. The total number in this vote is 527 altogether, 97 officers and 430 men. You will understand the personnel has to carry out all the work on the civil side. In connection with the next vote there is an increase of something like $2,000,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister taken into consideration the advisability of separating the civil force from the military force? I understand there is a great deal of contention between the two services and that we are not getting the service which we might expect if we separated the civil from the military force. Has the minister any information about that?

Mr. RALSTON: The government has under consideration now the general idea that my hon. friend has mentioned. No decision has been arrived at.

Mr. ADSHEAD: There is no part of the military estimates with which I am more in sympathy than this, but as so much of the expenditure is said to be due to civil rather than military purposes, does the minister not think in fairness to his department that a large part of this should be charged to some other department rather than to his, because the result is that it makes the military estimates larger than they ought to be?

Mr. RALSTON: I think my hon. friend is right about that.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Will my hon. friend take that into consideration.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. BOURASSA: Is this program of organization carried on in conjunction with the British government—the increase or the reorganization?

Mr. RALSTON: We are on item 103.

Mr. BOURASSA: It is one of the items of this vote.

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. BOURASSA: It was agreed upon in London, with regard to the air service especially.

Mr. RALSTON: It is in the next vote.

Mr. BOURASSA: But this is in regard to the air force. The next vote is for the civil and this is for the military.

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes, it is in the report of the committee on defence, dealing with the coöperation of the officers for the land forces, for the naval forces and for the air forces.

Mr. RALSTON: I think I can say that the only connection with the British government in this regard is as to the experimental civil air service which it was suggested might be established between England and Canada. The suggestion was made at the Imperial conference that Canada would coöperate to the extent of providing a landing field and mooring house in connection with what would be strictly a civil, not a military service.

Mr. BOURASSA: It is a pity that in the report of the conference it has been mixed up with all the decisions taken with regard to coöperation in military affairs, because the part referring to the air service is put under the readoption of the resolutions already adopted at the conference of 1923. Now, one of the resolutions of the Imperial conference of 1923 on defence was as follows:

(e) The desirability of the development of the air forces in the several countries of the empire upon such lines as will make it possible, by means of the adoption, as far as practicable, of a common system of organization and training and the use of uniform manuals, patterns of arms, equipment and stores (with the exception of the type of aircraft), for each part of the empire as it may determine to coöperate with other parts with the least possible delay and the greatest efficiency.

That is all relating to the military air force. Another paragraph reads:

The conference takes note with satisfaction of the substantial progress that has been made since 1923 in building up the air forces and resources of the several parts of the empire.

That is military. Another clause of the report reads:

(b) Recognizing that the fullest mobility is essential to the effective and economical employment of air power, the conference recommends, for the consideration of the several governments, the adoption of the following principle:—
The necessity for creating and maintaining an adequate chain of air bases and refuelling stations.

Is that not included in this vote—refuelling stations and air bases?

Mr. RALSTON: The only provision which, so far as I know, has any relation or anything more than an incidental relation to the matter to which my hon. friend refers is a provision in vote 103a for a preliminary amount for the establishment of an air field and mooring mast in Canada for an experimental airship service. These purchases of air craft would be made irrespective of the policy laid down at the conference. They have nothing to do with the suggestions in that report, except with respect to the mooring.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think this is one vote with which most of us can agree, but I dislike frankly the inclusion of the civil air force. We are discussing that at the moment, are we not?

Mr. RALSTON: No. It is the next item.

Item agreed to.

Air force vote (Civil)—for operations for other government departments, including fire protection and suppression, photography, transportation, investigation of forest and grain pests and fishery patrols for Department of Interior (forestry branch, topographic surveys branch, water power branch, parks branch, geological surveys branch) Department of Indian Affairs; Public Works Department; Department of Agriculture; Department of Customs and Excise; Department of Marine and Fisheries; Department of Mines, $2,222,539.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think the civil air force in this country has been doing a remarkable work, probably preëminent in their line. I am glad to notice that some of the members of the civil air force are doing a great deal of propaganda work and educating the people as to just what this thing is going to mean to us in Canada. There is a tremendous field for the air force in the destruction of insect pests that are destroying our forests. I understand an attempt is to be made this year to smother the spruce bud worm. Also, I understand we are going to use these airplanes to try to stamp out wheat rust. I hope that is to be part of the policy of the department in the coming year. But although I am glad to see the department going ahead with these things, I should like to ask the minister if he considers it wise to continue the evolution of our civil air force within a military department. Frankly, I am opposed to it. I am of opinion that you will hamper its development, you will so strangle it with red tape that its propellers will not work properly.

Mr. CLARK: They worked all right during the war.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My hon. friend is always thinking in terms of war.

Mr. CLARK: They were fairly capable men there. Don't you think they will be capable now?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to see it kept out of military control—

Mr. CLARK: May I ask a question?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, when I finish my sentence. I should like to see this thing kept altogether out of the hands of military administration. My impression of military administration is that every tin pot general has to have a staff of batmen around him; every little brass hat has to have a little staff of servants officially to do saluting and that sort of business; a lieutenant cannot sleep in the same room with a sergeant; the sergeant has doubts whether it is right for him to sleep with a corporal, and that sort of thing. It strangles the civil development of aviation. Now, if the hon. gentleman has a question to ask me I am perfectly willing to answer him.

Mr. CLARK: Of course, my hon. friend must always become insulting to anything connected with the army.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I disagree with my hon. friend.

Mr. CLARK: You certainly used insulting language to officers of His Majesty's service, very insulting.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just a moment.

Mr. CLARK: The question I want to ask—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman cannot use that language to me in this House. I insulted no officer of His Majesty's army or anybody else. I ask that the hon. gentleman's statement that I insulted any officer of His Majesty's service be withdrawn.

Mr. CLARK: I certainly will not withdraw what I said. You were most insulting.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Most insulting! The hon. gentleman really must keep within the rules of this House.

Mr. BOURASSA: There is no rule for the Tories here.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. gentleman's reference to my language as being insulting—

Mr. CLARK: Certainly, it was insulting to His Majesty's forces.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I deny that my language was insulting, and I ask the hon. gentleman to point to a single sentence of mine which can bear that construction. If he cannot do so I ask him to withdraw his remark.

Mr. CLARK: There is nothing to be withdrawn. The question I would ask my hon. friend is this: Does he not think that a force that fought as the air force did in the war is capable of any work in civil life?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, I do not. I will be quite frank with you. I have given you some reasons why.

Mr. CLARK: They seem to be doing fairly well in civil life to-day, some of those who fought.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, but they are being crippled by the military administration. If you could turn these men loose you would give them a chance to develop their own ideas with respect to civil aviation. They possess immense capacity if given proper surroundings, but I submit that you strangle their initiative by keeping them as a military unit and subjecting them to the desciplinarian methods of militarism.

Mr. CLARK: If you had a little of that discipline you would be a better man.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My hon. friend is peeved. Aviation must appeal to the imagination of all youth to-day. One gentleman in this country I think deserves a good deal of credit, Mr. Chairman, for the work he has been doing in the last few years in endeavouring to develop public opinion along these lines. I refer to Mr. J. A. Wilson, Secretary of the Royal Canadian Air Force. I have in my hands several articles from his pen, that have appeared in various papers, and I think if more such work was done to develop the psychology of the public in respect to this evolution of the service would be much more rapid. In one of these articles Mr. Wilson relates an incident which I think is worth bringing to the attention of hon. members. A mining engineer travelling on the train from Winnipeg to Toronto received a wire from his principals to stop off en route to examine newly staked claims in the Red lake mining district. He left the train in the afternoon at Minaki where the Federal Airways Service, a Toronto company, had an aircraft ready for him. He then flew 120 miles northeast to the camp, where he was able to examine the claims and to fly back to Lookout, where he joined the same train that he had left at Minaki four and a half hours earlier. In the meantime he had undertaken his survey, and when he got on the train at Sioux Lookout he was asked by the aviator if he felt tired. He replied, No, I have spent my time writing my report. It shows what can be done in reaching out of the way places where no other means of transportation is available. I hope the minister will give sympathetic consideration to the suggestion I have made. I think civil aviation should be taken out of the National Defence department altogether. If you want to know where to put it, I would submit the best place in the world would be a department of transportation, which would take over not only air transportation, but railways and canals and all the work of the Marine department that is similar to this sort of thing, that is, the setting of lights, airway guides, flying fields, and so on, which after all cover very similar work. If all these were bulked into one department we would not only have a more efficient and economic administration, but we could possibly do without one or two ministers with whom at the present times we have the pleasure of conversing.

Mr. SPENCE (Maple Creek): In advocating the separation of the military from the civil air service, does not the hon. gentleman disagree with the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), who asks that naval cruisers be used to investigate the navigability of the Hudson straits?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We are talking of airplanes, not cruisers.

Mr. SPENCE (Maple Creek): The same principle is involved.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, I do not disagree. I think it would be a good thing to shoot a few airplanes up there to look over the ice field in order to find out the nature of the floating ice and whether the channel is blocked for a greater or lesser period.

Mr. CLARK: Is it the intention to investigate the Hudson bay route by means of this vote?

Mr. RALSTON: No. The committee will remember that last week there was a vote in the Marine and Fisheries estimates for the purpose.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Mr. Chairman, I suggest it would be a good idea for the minister to confer with the Minister of Railways with a view to establishing an air service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. On account of ice conditions the island is sometimes isolated from the mainland for days together. In fact, last year I remember going home from here on May 24, and the boat could not cross to the island because of ice conditions. The utility of the service could be demonstrated very well in getting mails and passengers across. A few days ago the car ferry was tied up on account of ice conditions. I hope the minister will consider the advisability of establishing such a service at this point.

Mr. COOTE: I wonder if the minister would be good eonugh to give us the amount to be spent in each of these departments which are named?

Mr. RALSTON: I am afraid I could not give that in dollars and cents although I can tell my hon. friend the work to be done and the provinces in which it is to be done; I have three or four pages of it here. I can say that I think the only item here which is not for some other department is that item which I mentioned to the hon. member for Labelle, with regard to the provision for the mooring mast.

Mr. COOTE: We are asked under this vote to spend $1,416,539 more than was spent last year; as a matter of fact, we are spending about three times the amount spent last year. I am not going to press the minister for these figures—

Mr. RALSTON: I am sorry I cannot give them.

Mr. COOTE: —but probably he can get them some other time. I want to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that if this work were done by a department of civil government rather than by military men it could be done at a much lower cost. I distinctly remember being told by a gentleman who has had a great deal to do with the administration of military affairs in this country that military men do not know the value of a dollar. The expression he used was, "They seem to have the idea that dollars grow on trees, and we just go out and pick them off." I suppose it is only natural that military men should not realize the value of a dollar, especially the men who have grown up in the service and who simply draw their pay at the end of each month. Whenever they want a new gun or a new aeroplane or something else, they simply put in their order and it is given them. I have been told by a man who has a great deal to do with the administration of a department of civil government in this country that so far as his department was concerned, it was his opinion that if they were allowed to hire their own aeroplanes and their own pilots and to do their flying on their own account, it could be done for approximately one-half of what they were charged by the Department of National Defence, and I think he is quite right. I do not know whether the minister has gone into that, whether he has asked these departments if they would like to have a grant of money with which to do their own air work, or whether they would prefer to have it done by the Department of National Defence. I will admit that I do not know much about it except what I have been told, but that is to the effect that it would be much cheaper to have this done by civil government rather than through the Department of National Defence.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend means by a government department?

Mr. COOTE: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: Under contract?

Mr. COOTE: Allow the civil government department to have charge of it; they could do it either by contract or by hiring their own men. In the forest patrol of the state of Montana, which is just south of us, I have been told that the work is done by their own force, and that they do it at a lower cost per unit than we in Canada are spending, and I have every reason to believe that statement is correct. That is my reason for pressing this upon the minister now. Of course, if he is going to have this money spent through his department anyway and wants to give positions to all these pilots and the men who are training for this work, there may be some argument in favour of continuing it in this way, but if that is not the case I contend that it would be much cheaper to let these departments provide their own services for the work rather than to have it done by the Department of National Defence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that the government has been carefully considering the point he has mentioned, the separation of the civil from the military aviation. We are entirely of one mind that the two should be separated, but as to whether they should be under a different minister than the one who now has charge of the Department of National Defence is a matter which we will have to consider further. As to keeping the two services distinct there is but the one view in the cabinet.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the statement of the Prime Minister mean that we are going to have one air force which will be absolutely a service force?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, absolutely distinct from the service force.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand that this is the case in the United States, India and Great Britain. If we follow this example we shall certainly be in good company.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is true.

Mr. BOURASSA: Do I understand that this will change the position placed before the Imperial conference by the Prime Minister? I think if the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) and the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) had looked at the appendices of the Imperial conference, they would have found the reason why the two forces have been kept together. However that may be, when the question of the co-ordination of all the air forces of Great Britain and the dominions in time of war was discussed, we find that the Prime Minister made this declaration:

> The organization and training of this force—
> The Canadian Air Force—
> —has followed closely that of the Royal Air Force, and very substantial progress has been made. Two training centres and six stations (three temporary, during the summer months) have been established in various parts of the country, so as to carry out the several duties of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Then later on:

> Officers of the Royal Canadian Air Force are in attendance at the Air Force Staff College, Andrew, and at the Naval Staff College, Greenwich. Others are taking courses at various schools in England.
> An exchange of officers has recently been arranged, and liaison visits are also carried out periodically.

Still further on the Prime Minister says:

> The Royal Canadian Air Force has made commendable advances in the civil side of its work. As I mentioned at a previous session of the conference, immense areas are being surveyed annually, and millions of acres of valuable forest land protected. The work on the civil side is of such a nature that it provides practical training for the air force personnel.
> Civil aviation has a direct relation to the creation of a military air force, and serves to create a reserve thereto.
> By the Air Force Regulations an individual who obtains a pilot's certificate automatically becomes a reservist.

So it must be well understood that the personnel of the so-calied civil air force is under the authority of the Department of National Defence, and if the Prime Minister has been correctly reported, these pilots automatically become members of the reserve. In other words, the civil air force is nothing but a training body for the preparation of a military air force, which I can understand quite well from a military point of view. Of course, if the object of this whole organization is to recruit aviators, train them for civil work and then keep them in the reserve so that in time of war they come under the authority of the Militia Act as a part of the air force, well and good. But I think the people of this country should be informed of that fact, otherwise we are simply beginning a repetition of what took place some fifteen years ago with regard to the naval force. It was represented in some parts of the country that this force was to be organized for the defence of the country, while in other quarters it was declared to be the most effective contribution Canada could make to the Imperial navy. One side was shown in Quebec, the other side was presented to Ontario, and there went on quite a good deal of equivocation which did not do much good, I think, for the moral unity of the people of this country. I hope we are not on the eve of a repetition of the same comedy of errors. If we mean to participate in the movement which some countries of Europe are undertaking, that is replacing the naval force, and to a large extent the land force, by aerial preparations, not only for the defence of the country but for participation in all imperial wars in coöperation with the British nation and the other nations of the empire, it is just as well that we should know it now. It is not a policy of peace, but at least it is a policy. If it is the policy of the government, those of us who are not in favour of such a policy should not be given to understand that this vote is merely the preparation of a civil air force and has no connection with the military air force. If the declarations made in London are to govern our air forces—or should I say our aerial policy?—then it means that the civil organization is nothing but a preparation for a military organization. That is what is taking place in France, that is what is taking place in Italy, that is what is taking place—I think to a certain extent although I am not quite sure—in England. As to Germany, everybody in Europe knows of course that if Germany is ever in a position to take her revenge, it will be precisely by the transformation into a military force of the enormous civil air force she is now organizing.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Has it not always been the case, in connection with naval matters, that steamships and men of the mercantile marine have been subject to conscription for service in war time?

Mr. BOURASSA: Not the personnel. The ships themselves have been subject to conscription. But in Canada nobody has ever thought that the men engaged, for example, on the government tugboats, or on small boats used for lighthouse purposes, or on vessels of the mercantile navy, formed a reserve for a war navy. Nobody has ever suggested that, and there is nothing, I think, in our laws which could make it possible. But here we have an undefined position. We have a declaration here to-day that the government is contemplating a complete separation of the civil organization and the military organization; and we have a report from the Imperial conference making the Prime Minister declare in London that there is a direct and close connection between the two services, and that as a matter of fact the civil force is a reserve for the military force. So I would be most happy—I am not criticizing; I am simply putting the two positions forward—if the Prime Minister himself would clear the matter up right at once.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I mentioned that in connection with our defence organization a part of the air force was doing civil aviation work; that under their regulations where the military were doing civil aviation work and the pilot received his certificate, he became a reservist in defence work. That all relates to defence; that has nothing to do with civil aviation as distinct from defence. I have just stated that the government was considering the separation of the two branches, the military and the civil aviation. What I have said will remain true as regards the military force should they continue to do civil work. But it is not proposed that they shall do civil work; it is proposed that civil work shall be carried on by aviators under a civil department of the government. A man who has learned to fly in civil aviation will be undoubtedly a useful man in time of war if men are needed for the purpose of flying in connection with the defence organization work. I do not think anyone will object to a man becoming qualified in as many directions as he possibly can. But let me point out to my hon. friend that the conference of 1923 laid down emphatically that the nature and the extent, if any, of the coöperation which this country should give in defence organization work beyond the shores of Canada was a matter for this parliament to decide, and nothing has been done at the Imperial conference that could imply we were in any way to go beyond what this parliament itself declares to be the extent to which we shall go. Nothing has been said in the conference to bind us in the matter of the use of the defence forces either on the military or on the civil side. I think that is clear.

Mr. BOURASSA: I thank the Prime Minister for his declaration. If that separation is made, the young man who will enter the civil air force and become expert will no longer be automatically a reservist?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh no, that relates to the military side only.

Mr. BOURASSA. Yes, but as the matter was put before the Imperial conference, and as it applies to the present system, it means that every pilot we employ, whether for civil or military purposes, becomes a reservist automatically. Once the separation is made, those who enter the civil air service will thereby incur no responsibility and no obligation whatever to form part of the military force?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Quite true.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The present estimate is entirely for defence purposes, it doesn't at all touch the proposed civil aviation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may tell my hon. friend that the reason I interrupted the Minister of National Defence was to speak on behalf of the government as a whole on a matter of policy which we have been considering in council. If we had had a few months carefully to prepare the organization, we would have brought to this House at the present time entirely separate estimates for military and civil purposes. We have not had the time to do that, so what we have done is to take an appropriation for military purposes, which is item 103, "air service," the amount which has just been voted, and we are taking a separate vote for the air service for civil purposes. Now that civil vote, once the contemplated organization is effected, will be available only for the work that is carried on for civil aviation. None of it will be available for military aviation work. Whether this civil aviation vote will be put under the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or whether it will remain under the present Minister of National Defence, or whether it will be placed under some other minister, is a matter which will require time to work out, but the two things are entirely different.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): As to the suggestion I made, I should like to have some expression from the minister as to whether he thinks it feasible and whether it will receive consideration.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend knows that I am acquainted with the general geographical location, and all these matters are worthy of consideration. It means a discussion of the subject between the Department of Railways and some other department, and would need pretty careful consideration before one could commit oneself. But the question is certainly worth considering.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I understand that up to the present time a very considerable portion of our air force has been used, for a period at any rate, by the Department of the Interior, and other departments, for civil purposes.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If this vote is to be used for defensive purposes, it is not really an increase of $675,000 odd, but an increase of a much greater amount. That is, it means the creation of a purely defensive force which will devote all its time to defence purposes.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, but to the extent that the overhead and the training of the air force personnel is for the benefit of the service which is represented in 103 and 103a, it is impossible to separate them.

Item agreed to.

Battlefields memorials, $200,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a vote for battlefields memorials, and in the supplementaries which we have not yet reached there is an item in regard to the walls of the city of Quebec. I understand that while we are voting money for the restoration of those walls, there is being built in Quebec a theatre called the Auditcrium theatre and they are actually using the material of the Quebec city wall in order to build that theatre. Would the minister make some inquiries about that and let us have the facts?

Mr. RALSTON: I shall be glad to do that.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

Customs and Excise—salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, including pay for overtime of officers notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,—and temporary buildings and rentals, $6,919,181.

Salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection, preventive service and in connection with the board of customs; the latter including salaries of $1,000 each for three members and $500 for the secretary, $862,510.

Miscellaneous—printing and stationery, subscriptions to commercial papers, flags, dating stamps, locks, instruments, etc., for various ports of entry, express charges on samples, stationery and legal forms, legal expenses, premiums on guarantee bonds, and uniforms for customs officers, $600,000.

To provide for expenses of maintenance of revenue cruisers and for preventive service, $376,510.

Special preventive service—amount required to create positions and make appointments of officers for the prevention of smuggling and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act; also to provide for expenses of such officers and for the purchase or charter of vessels and for the purchase or hire of automobiles to be used in the prevention of smuggling or other offences against the revenue laws, $350,000.

Amounts to be paid to Department of Justice to be disbursed by and accounted for to it, for secret preventive service,—amount required to create positions and make appointments of officers for the prevention of smuggling and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act, $100,000.

To provide for the administration of the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, and the Income War Tax Act, 1917, and amendments thereof, and authority for this purpose to create positions and make appointments, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and the staff so appointed are hereby wholly excluded from the operation of the said act and salary of $6,500 for the Commissioner of Income Tax, $2,000,000.

Mr. ERNST: Are appointments to the special preventive service to be made as a matter of political patronage or on the basis of efficiency?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of Customs and Excise): The item explains itself; it says: "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act".

Mr. ERNST: In my constituency on the recommendation of the former member a man was appointed a preventive officer who was twice convicted of being a boot-legger.

Mr. EULER: If that is the case and the hon. member can prove it to me, that man will be discharged immediately.

Mr. ERNST: He has been discharged, but I did not want a repetition.

Mr. EULER: I am glad to know he has been discharged. Efficiency is to be the first consideration in the employment of any of these men.

Mr. ERNST: He was discharged during what the minister might call the interregnum.

Mr. HANSON: Is the appointment made on the recommendation of a member of parliament?

Mr. EULER: I am quite willing to accept recommendations from members of parliament.

Mr. MacNUTT: Do I understand the minister to say that the government will dismiss an official on the recommendation of a member of parliament? I have received this morning from a friend in the county of Guysborough a letter which I wish to place on Hansard. It is dated Sonora, Guysborough county, April 6, 1927, and it reads:

Dear Mr. MacNutt:

I am forwarding you letters re my dismissal as customs and excise officer for Sonora. You will note by the letter I have been dismissed for political partisanship. This charge is not true as I have been following section 32 of the Civil Service Act, 1918.

And so on. This letter is signed Clarence Frank Burns. The letter dismissing him is dated March 4, 1927, and reads as follows:

I have the honour to advise you that an order in council was passed on March 1, 1927, dispensing with your services as customs-excise enforcement officer at the preventive station of Sonora, N.S., for active political partisanship, contrary to the provisions of section 32 of the Civil Service Act, 1918, as amended.

Your services will therefore require to terminate immediately upon receipt of this letter.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) G. W. TAYLOR,
Acting Deputy Minister.

Mr. Burns wired back denying the charge and asking for an investigation. His request for an investigation has evidently been refused, for he received the following letter from the Acting Deputy Minister of Customs dated March 30, 1927:

SIR:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of the 10th instant respecting your dismissal on account of political partisanship.

You are advised in reply that when a member of parliament has made a charge, in writing, that to his own personal knowledge an officer has been guilty of active political partisanship, the policy of the government is to dismiss such officer and your services were dispensed with in accordance with such policy.

I happen to know this young man very well and I am very much surprised to find that he has been charged with political partisanship. I would like to know if the minister has refused to give this young man an opportunity to disprove the charges made against him.

Mr. EULER: I would say to my hon. friend that the minister would never refuse a hearing to anyone who has any complaint to make. At the same time it is only fair to say that the practice and policy of the government is outlined in the letter. If a charge of political partisanship is made by any member of the House, and he states that of his own personal knowledge the man has been guilty of political partisanship, dismissal takes place.

Mr. HANSON: If any member of the House takes the responsibility of making such a charge, the minister's reply is that that officer will be dismissed without further investigation?

Mr. EULER: That, I understand, is the policy of the government. At the same time, I repeat what I said at the outset, that there is no intention whatever of refusing an investigation to anyone who asks for one.

Mr. HANSON: I would like to ask the minister with respect to this vote of $350,000, having regard to the vote of $881,835 in the supplementaries. That is a huge sum of money to ask parliament to vote without any adequate explanation. The two votes cannot be separated; one is supplementary to the other, and here is nearly $1,000,000 which the minister asks to spend. I think we ought to know what he is going to do with it.

Mr. EULER: I would have made an explanation earlier if hon. members had not taken the floor. This item of $350,000 which appears in the main estimates is exactly the same amount as was voted last year, and I think the year before. The reason why we have an additional sum in the supplementaries is that at the time when the main estimates were made up we had not decided just what further amount would be required. The work undertaken by the consultative committee appointed by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre, who was then in office, has been of considerable magnitude, as well as the duty that has fallen to myself to decide just what measures we should take with regard to the special preventive service. In the meantime the main estimates had to be made up, so we put in the same amount as we had in last year. In the supplementary estimates we have an item of $800,000 odd, which I will explain, if it is the desire of the committee, when we come to the item. As every hon. member will understand, it is the wish, I think, of parliament, as it certainly is the desire of the country, that we take every measure possible to curb and stop smuggling. The $350,000 which was voted in former years is not sufficient to do that work properly. It may be that the amount we are asking in the supplementaries is more than we shall need, but it was our intention to ask sufficient from parliament so that we could carry out the work properly. I want to assure my hon. friends also that it is not the intention to spend one dollar more than is necessary, but we would like parliament to show sufficient confidence in the department to give us sufficient money in order that we might carry out the object which the whole country and parliament wants to serve, namely, the stopping of smuggling.

Mr. HANSON: I am not objecting to the department taking the money to prevent smuggling, but what are they going to do with the money? In New Brunswick, on the gulf of the St. Lawrence, we are in close proximity to St. Pierre, Miquelon, and wholesale smuggling has been going on from these islands into the county of Kent, and from there distributed not only through the adjacent counties, but all over the province of New Brunswick and into the state of Maine. That smuggling has been going on without let or hindrance for months, yes, for years, until it is a byword in that province of New Brunswick. No real business-like attempt has been made to meet the situation. What is the minister's plan with respect to that traffic, which I can assure him has assumed wholesale proportions, so great indeed that it is alleged that one man in the traffic has practically become a millionaire?

An hon. MEMBER: What is his name?

Mr. HANSON: I could name him if necessary, but the hon. member for Kent can tell you his name because this man elected him.

Mr. CANNON: Is the hon. member referring to Doucet, by any chance?

Mr. HANSON: No.

Mr. EULER: If I may be permitted, it is perfectly well known to myself, as it is to every other hon. member who is following the course of events, that there is a great deal of smuggling going on such as my hon. friend refers to, and more particularly in the maritime provinces, and I am now trying to obtain the money so that I can get the men to enable us to put a stop to that traffic. Up to the present time we have not had sufficient money to get the organization to do the work as we want to do it, and that is exactly the purpose of bringing in these estimates. Our plans are not complete, being still subject to some qualification and variation, but we propose to put along the whole boundary line of Canada and the United States, in the maritime provinces and on the seaboard, a force of men which we think will be sufficient to cope with that evil, in a reasonable way, at least. It means not only putting on a force of several hundred men, but the obtaining of vessels to be used in the prevention of smuggling. It means also the obtaining of automobiles, perhaps 25 or 30 in number, for the purpose of patrolling the border and the roads in the maritime provinces. That is the organization we propose to build up as we are able to do so once the money is voted and the men can be obtained. For the benefit of the committee I may say that the framework of the organization is fairly well completed, but we have not yet clothed it with the men and officers. Nor have we been able to secure vessels. It is not so easy to secure suitable vessels, and it would take too long to build them, so we shall have to arrange to purchase or charter these boats. We propose to divide the whole country into districts: Nova Scotia combined with Prince Edward Island will form one district, under a sub-chief; New Brunswick another district, with probably the inclusion of the Gaspé peninsula in Quebec; Quebec another, Ontario another, the three prairie provinces another, and British Columbia still another. That gives a very brief outline of what we propose to do.

Mr. IRVINE: Has it been the general practice since the Civil Service Act was passed to make these appointments regardless of that act, or is this a special departure?

Mr. EULER: We are asking for the passing of these estimates in exactly the same way as they were passed last year and the year before.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: How much time do these preventive officers devote to their duties? Are they full-time men, or do they work one day or one week, or how much?

Mr. EULER: With the exception of about half a dozen officers, we propose that they shall use all of their time in this work.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Take the case of a man who devotes all his time to a very large mercantile business. Would the minister consider him a suitable man to appoint as preventive officer, particularly when he was formerly associated with the liquor trade.

Mr. EULER: Does my hon. friend suggest that he carries on his mercantile business and is also expected to give all his time to the preventive service? That is impossible.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: He is carrying on the mercantile business, and is giving none of his time to the other work.

Mr. EULER: Is he a full-time man?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: That is what I am asking.

Mr. EULER: If my hon. friend will give me the particulars I will see that that is remedied.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: He gets $100 a month, and is supposed to be a preventive officer under the department in my county.

Mr. EULER: If my hon. friend will give me his name privately—or publicly, if he wishes—I will investigate the matter.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to pay the firm of Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth for work in connection with the reorganization of the Department of Customs and Excise, $50,000.

Mr. POWER: I would like considerable explanation from the minister as to the future progress of this investigation. This is a vote of $50,000 to pay the firm of Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth. In another item we have a vote of $60,000 I think. Moreover we have two votes of well over $150,000 to defray the cost of this investigation. How much more are we going to pay for this investigation. We have been inquiring into the affairs of the Customs department for well over a year. I do not think we have wasted our time or our money, but there should be some finality. The minister has come down with a new law, the most drastic, I think, that has ever been brought before this House. He assured us that with this law he thought he could cope with the smuggling. Moreover, he has completely reorganized his department because he did not like the name of it. He thought there was a blot on its escutcheon and he changed the name. What more can we obtain by further investigation? We have found out that bootlegging is rampant in this country and that smuggling has been carried on almost unchecked. We know that. I do not know what in the world is to be gained by inquiring into it further.

Mr. HANSON: We might assist in the enforcement of the Volstead Act.

Mr. POWER: We may be able to be of some assistance to the United States by showing them just where the liquor from this country flows into the United States. But why spend good Canadian money for that purpose? Without entering into the details and without seeking to criticize a brother member of the bar, I think it is time that we put a stop to the large fees paid in this connection. I would be the last to criticize a fee of $200 a day to a member of the bar who was carrying on work proper to a member of the bar, but when he is delving into the filth and dirt of bootleg business, for purposes which are peculiarly his own, in order that he might be able to show to the people of this country that this business has been carried on extensively,—something that we all know—I do not think we should pay him $200 a day for his own enjoyment, and that is what it amounts to. The gentleman who is carrying on this investigation must, I am sure, obtain the greatest possible enjoyment out of it. For years he has been preaching prohibition and prohibitory legislation. He now has a chance to chase the demon rum right into his lair. He can show the evil effects of it, and hold himself up to the citizens of the United States, as he has already done, as being the greatest champion of temperance throughout the world. It seems to me the government of Canada knows enough about smuggling and that we need no longer pay $200 a day to this gentleman in order to find out more. Personally I object to any further expenditure under this head. The people of Canada are nauseated with the details of this investigation, and I think it is the duty of the minister, now that he has reorganized his department, changed its name, and knows just what steps he should take in order to stop the nefarious traffic, to close up the investigation at the earliest possible moment. Will the minister state how long he expects this commission to last, and how long he expects to be obliged to pay $1,500 to $2,000 a day in order to gratify the desire of one or two gentlemen to show the people of Canada that in their uplifting, reforming legislation of some years ago they were quite right?

Mr. EULER: I am afraid my hon. friend is labouring under somewhat of a misapprehension. The item under discussion has nothing whatever to do with the gentleman to whom he has referred, nor to the royal commission investigating the customs department.

Mr. BENNETT: To whom did he refer?

Mr. EULER: I do not know, but I draw certain inferences of my own. This investigation has nothing to do with the royal commission; it deals only with the reorganization of the department. I will give the House the items very briefly. It does not deal specifically with smuggling at all, but with the reorganization of the department right here in Ottawa and the bringing of the whole department up to date. Certain investigations were carried on with regard to importations at Vancouver. There was a prosecution of certain offenders at Montreal in connection with irregularities, and prosecutions of persons and firms as recommended by the special committee of the House last session.

Item agreed to.

To provide for payment, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, to E. D. Lennie, acting collector of customs and excise at Montreal, $1,200.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Can the Minister of Finance say how he stands in regard to these estimates?

Mr. ROBB: I have not looked at them yet.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Are they in order for discussion is the point.

Mr. ROBB: I am told by the Clerk that the resolutions are not prepared. If the House is ready to accept them, though, there is no objection to their going through.

Mr. COOTE: We cannot hear that down here.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the explanation for this item?

Mr. EULER: Mr. Lennie was sent to Montreal to act as collector after the position there became vacant. This is additional pay to compensate him for additional responsibility.

Item agreed to.

Customs and Excise—special preventive service—amount required to create positions and make appointments of officers for the prevention of smuggling and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act: also to provide for expenses of such officers and for the purchase or charter of vessels and for the purchase or hire of automobiles to be used in the prevention of smuggling or other offences against other revenue laws—further amount required $881,835.

Salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection, preventive service and in connection with the Board of Customs—and amount required to create positions and make appointments of Dominion appraisers notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act—further amount required, $100,000.

To pay Mrs. Charles E. McDonald, the widow of C. E. McDonald, sub-collector of customs and excise at Port Borden, P.E.I., who was killed, a compassionate allowance, $500.

To pay Mrs. W. J. Irwin, the widow of W. J. Irwin, customs excise examiner at port of Edmonton, Alta., who was killed, a compassionate allowance, $500.

To pay Mr. Joseph Laurent Doiron, customs excise enforcement officer of the preventive service staff at Matapedia, P.Q., a compassionate allowance for the loss of his right arm, due to an accident while on duty, $500.

To provide for expenses of maintenance of revenue cruisers and for preventive service—further amount required for the appointment of Mr. F. W. Cowan as chief, customs excise preventive service, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, with salary at the rate of $5,000 per annum, effective March 1, 1927, $5,416.66.

Mr. GEARY: Why are these appointments excluded from the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. EULER: We are following the same practice as last year. But I might add that it would be utterly impossible to get the service organized within five or six months if we had to depend upon the Civil Service Commission to make the appointments. In order to get quick action it is necessary to make the appointments outside the commission.

Mr. GEARY: What happens to the returned soldier's preference in such cases?

Mr. BENNETT: Pay no attention to it.

Mr. GEARY: I hope the minister is keeping in mind that the policy of this parliament has been to give the returned soldier preference in civil service appointments.

Mr. EULER: When the appointments are made I think the hon. member will find that a very large proportion of them will be returned soldiers. I am not giving any particular guarantee at the moment. I am anxious to get absolutely efficient men as quickly as possible.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it the intention to bring them under the civil service eventually?

Mr. EULER: I am not prepared to say that at the moment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is just a hand-out to their own friends.

Mr. BENNETT: These are political hand-outs.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it the intention of the government to bring these appointments under the Civil Service Commission eventually in view of the statement made by the minister that under the present conditions it is impossible to secure these men from the Civil Service Commission in time to reorganize the staff? That would indicate it was the intention of the government to restore these positions in time to the control of the commission.

Mr. EULER: It would not be a case of restoration because these appointments never have been under the Civil Service Commission. It is not the intention that these appointments should be made by the commission, for the reasons given and for others that I could give. As to what might be done next year, or some following year, I am not in a position to say now.

Mr. HANSON: The minister says it is impossible to have these appointments made through the Civil Service Commission. Has he ever consulted with the commission in regard to the appointment of the staff under this vote?

Mr. EULER: The plan we are working under now was advanced by a committee of which the chairman of the Civil Service Commission was a member.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Why does the minister think the Civil Service Commission cannot get competent men just as quickly as he can?

Mr. POWER: They don't know the bootleggers.

Mr. BENNETT: I would remind the minister that there is a large number of names on the civil service list of men eligible for appointments such as these. I happen to know several young men that have gone through the universities and taken special courses in commerce and economics, hoping they might secure employment in their own country. My attention has been directed to four or five young men particularly for whom there are no vacancies, but their names are on the eligible list. I do not say this offensively, but to reward political services with appointments of this character is not quite fair when a large number of eligible names are on the civil service list, especially when those men have endeavoured to qualify themselves for positions of this very character. They will be shut out.

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I know human nature. The minister, strong man though he is, will not be able to resist the pressure of political friends who will say, now, here is our chance, let us take advantage of it. The minister knows this is so, and I was hoping he might not put himself in a position where pressure could be exercised upon him. With his back against the wall and the grim determination that characterizes him he will make a valiant fight; but what is the use when he will yield in the end? These young men should be taken care of.

Mr. EULER: It does not follow that the young men my hon. friend refers to will not have an opportunity to send in their applications.

Mr. BENNETT: I am afraid they have not much chance.

Mr. EULER: A university education is not necessary to qualify men for these jobs.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not say so.

Mr. EULER: We will need men who will be more or less policemen. I do not say they will be disqualified; they might be suitable. To the extent they are they will get consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be political consideration.

Mr. EULER: I am not saying that.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the minister will look at the wording, he will notice that after enumerating the offices the item reads:

> And the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act.

That is the Civil Service Act.

Mr. EULER: Exactly.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is no question that by passing this vote we take all jurisdiction from the Civil Service Commission. I am aware, and so is my friend the minister, that there is a long list of applicants now before the Civil Service Commissioners, and many of those men are eligible for appointments. Will the minister undertake to consult with the chairman of the civil service board and see if he cannot get a considerable number of his appointees from that list? It will clear the list up for others.

Mr. EULER: Those men are at perfect liberty to make their applications just the same as others. I suppose we have nearly a thousand from men who are anxious to enter this special preventive service. It will not inconvenience me particularly if they are added to the list. They will be considered the same as others.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But this list in the Civil Service Commissioners' office is a list of men who are qualified, and they should be entitled to a preference on that account.

Mr. BENNETT: They are on the eligible list.

Mr. EULER: There are more qualifications than are needed for the civil service itself. Those engaged for this preventive service must be men of good physique, they must be young men, they must if possible have had certain experience in this particular kind of work. I am quite sincere when I say we are anxious to get men specially fitted for this service. The ordinary civil servant—and I do not use the word ordinary in any offensive sense—is not in my opinion adapted for this work.

Mr. BENNETT: One could understand that with respect to the preventive officers who patrol the border, but one finds it rather difficult to follow the minister with respect to what he calls the staff. Certainly there must be correlation between what you may call the office work on the one hand and the patrol service on the other. Some of these men are appraisers, who certainly should have a rather wide knowledge of the theory and practice of business.

Mr. EULER: For the office work, of course, men must be found with a fair degree of executive ability.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. EULER: As far as the office people are concerned, their number is comparatively small in relation to that of the whole force.

Mr. GEARY: Why cannot the Civil Service Commission make sufficient speed in this matter? By the time you cut out a few more departments the size of this, you might as well provide for the decent interment of the remains of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. EULER: The position is the same as that of the mounted police; no one would suggest that the Civil Service Commission should select the mounted police, and this work is very similar.

Mr. GEARY: I quite agree to that, nor should they select the men for the permanent force.

Item agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Post Office—outside service—salaries and allowances, including amount required to provide for salaries, reclassification, revision, promotions and increases which may be authorized by the Civil Service Commission, and amount required to cover provisions of order in council P.C. 1099 of June 27, 1924, $15,918,384.40.

Yukon Territory, $150,000.

Mr. HANSON: I would like to have an explanation from the minister with regard to the wholesale manner in which he is beheading postmasters in the province of New Brunswick and particularly in the so-called French counties. As I understand it, there have been cases of the most gross injustice perpetrated since the present Postmaster General took office, particularly in his own county. I have only one case in my own county; that is the case of the postmaster at Canterbury Station, but I anticipate that before the minister is in office many years I will have a great many others. The case of which I have particular knowledge is the case of a returned soldier who was appointed by the Civil Service Commission about two or three years ago, a man well qualified for the work, who served his country overseas and who was appointed because he possessed the necessary qualifications. In the same village where he lived was another person who aspired to the position at that time, but who did not succeed in getting it; he is a man who has since gone into bankruptcy and who is to-day an undischarged bankrupt. This man who was appointed has been relieved of his duty after a hearing which was nothing more than a farce; the evidence against him was that he was taking returns on election night over the telephone, and giving them out to the neighbours; that was the only offence of a political character reported to me. I know of my own knowledge that he took no part in the election; I especially warned him not to do so, because I knew his head would come off if anything happened.

Mr. VENIOT: How did you know who would win?

Mr. HANSON: I expected to win without question. I warned him against having anything to do with politics, because I thought discretion the better part of valour. He has been dismissed with no evidence of political partisanship, in the hope of putting another man into office who has been named to the minister by the Liberal Committee of Canterbury Station, and who has been installed as temporary postmaster. He is a man who owes everybody he can owe in that community, and a man who should not and, I think, will not be appointed to the position of postmaster. I do not think he will receive the appointment because as I understand it there is another good Liberal in the community, a returned man, who is applying for the position, and I believe that in justice to that returned soldier the Civil Service Commission will appoint him rather than the other person.

A return was brought down the other day which was very interesting. I did not know these estimates were coming up to-night or I would have brought it with me to put on Hansard. It showed that from September 24 to March 28 there have been some sixty-three dismissals of country postmasters in the province of New Brunswick. That is a very large number, and they are probably all in the northern communities. I call to mind the case of one George Chalmers, the postmaster at Charlo Station, commonly known as Charlo. I would like to explain to the House that George Chalmers is a first-class citizen and was a brother-in-law of James Reid, who for many years was a respected member of this House, sitting on the Liberal benches. If George Chalmers has any political sentiments at all they are undoubtedly Liberal, because he owed his appointment to Mr. Reid. Chalmers was dismissed, so far as I am aware, with no adequate investigation; speaking from memory, I think an inspector was sent up from Saint John, and was directed to a certain person who would give evidence against Mr. Chalmers. On the file there is a letter from that very person saying that he knows absolutely nothing as to any part taken by Mr. Chalmers in an election contest. There is also the frank admission on the part of Mr. Chalmers that he drove his family and some neighbours to the polls on election day, and did nothing more. I want to tell the Prime Minister that that man is not receiving justice. More than 90 per cent of the people who use that post office wish him to be retained. The general manager of a lumber company, the only mercantile firm in the community, a former member of the local legislature, has written to the department, and his letter is on file, to the effect that his company provides fifty per cent of the entire postal revenue of the office, and they object to the dismissal of Mr. Chalmers. I think this is a case of grave injustice, and I ask the Prime Minister himself to take ten minues and look over the file, from which he will find that this man should not have been dismissed. I do not remember who has succeeded him; I do not think anyone has been appointed permanently, but the man who wanted the job has been made temporary postmaster. Ninety per cent of the people of that community have signed a petition asking that Chalmers be reinstated, and if the Prime Minister is faithful to the memory of an old supporter and old friend he will look into the matter and will not allow such an injustice to be perpetrated on Mr. Chalmers.

[Mr. Hanson.]

Mr. VENIOT: I am a little surprised to hear the hon. gentleman pleading the case of a Liberal.

Mr. HANSON: I don't know what he is.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. member just stated that he was a Liberal, which reminds me of the devil rebuking sin. My hon. friend will remember that a policy was laid down in 1923 and concurred in by this House, that the certificate of an hon. member stating his personal knowledge of political interference on the part of any civil servant, would be sufficient for his dismissal without an investigation. That order in council was passed in 1923; the leader of the opposition brought it to the attention of the House, and after a full discussion it was concurred in. That is what I am acting on.

Mr. HANSON: I do not recall any such thing.

Mr. VENIOT: I do, because I read it, and if the hon. member will look up Hansard he will find that to be so. The then leader of the opposition asked the Prime Minister if that applied to both sides of the House, and the answer was yes. Now that goes back as far as 1897. Now my hon. friend seems to be very solicitous with respect to postmasters and the justice they should receive. Allow me to say that my hon. friend's own friends, from the 30th of June up to the end of their short reign on the 25th of September last, were not so solicitous of postmasters in this province as he himself appeared to be.

Mr. HANSON: I can only say that I asked for no dismissals of postmasters.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend feels that an injustice has been done Mr. George Chalmers, a gentleman that I know better than my hon. friend does. If he considers that an injustice has been done to that gentleman because he was dismissed on the recommendation of the member for the county, having a personal knowledge of his political activities, what does he think of the dismissal of postmasters in my own county during the election campaign with absolutely no notice except the receipt of a telegram?

Mr. HANSON: Two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. VENIOT: I want to say to my hon. friend that I accept the principle that two wrongs do not make a right. I also want to say to him that he ought to be consistent, and if he condemns me for having done that, then he should condemn the previous Postmaster General for having done worse than that.

Mr. MANION: I should like the minister to give the cases that he refers to. General statements are not quite sufficient.

Mr. VENIOT: I am prepared to give them. There is the case of Mr. Frenette, postmaster at Petit Rocher, twelve miles from my own home. Hon. gentlemen opposite assumed power on the 30th of June, if I mistake not, and on the 3rd of July there was an inspector at Petit Rocher, and Mr. Frenette was dismissed on the orders of the Postmaster General of that day.

Mr. HANSON: Who was the Postmaster General on the 3rd of July

Mr. VENIOT: I think it was Dr. Manion.

Mr. MANION: I do not think so, not on the 3rd July.

Mr. VENIOT: Oh yes you were. I wish the hon. member for York-Sunbury to remain in the chamber.

Mr. HANSON: I am not leaving it.

Mr. VENIOT: Let me go a little further. During that election not only were postmasters and postmistresses dismissed, according to the record I have here, but mail contracts were cancelled and new contracts awarded without any adherence to the principle of calling for tenders. Moreover, during that very period the then Postmaster General did not hesitate—and I do not see why I should be blamed when I took my time about it—when travelling in Nova Scotia to wire from Bridgewater to his secretary here in Ottawa to dismiss so-and-so as postmistress in Nova Scotia, and to wire him when he had reached New Glasgow to see that the thing had been carried out. These are some of the incidents which took place under hon. gentlemen opposite, and yet forsooth, because I took my time about making a change, after I felt satisfied that a change was necessary in the public interest, it is a crime on my part but it was a virtue when my hon. friend opposite was in the same position that I occupy today. I know that it has been spread abroad —I have heard it in the corridors of parliament, I have heard it in the corridors of my hotel—that our friends of the opposition were going to give me a hard road when my estimates came up.

Mr. HANSON: Is that why you brought them up after midnight?

Mr. VENIOT: No, it is not. The hon. member for York-Sunbury knows I never was scared or afraid to meet my political opponents. The hon. member knows that I can take care of myself in pretty nearly any sort of combat, so that I am not afraid to bring my estimates up at twelve o'clock midnight or three o'clock in the afternoon. It so happens that they have come up and I am prepared for the onslaught of my hon. friends.

Now, my hon. friend who brought this matter up wishes to go into the history of dismissals. We have got the whole record here, and I am able to give full information. I hold in my hand a list of the dismissals made by my hon. friends—not all of them, because there are some I see before me now who were not Tories at that time; they were Liberals—but by those that were Tories when they assumed power in 1911. I have the record here of the period from 1st of October, 1911 to 31st December, 1912, and I find that there were 908 postmasters and postmistresses dismissed without investigation at that time.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Making hay while the sun shone.

Mr. VENIOT: Then I find that from 1st of January, 1913, to 30th September, 1917, there were 696 more.

Mr. HANSON: Go back to 1896. How many were there then?

Mr. VENIOT: Go back to where?

Mr. HANSON: To 1896.

Mr. VENIOT: If I go back to 1896 I do not think my hon. friends will find there were so many dismissals of postmasters.

Mr. HANSON: There were 1,100.

Mr. VENIOT: But what about the ten or twelve thousand that were dismissed throughout the whole civil service of Canada by my hon. friends after they came into power in 1912? Our Conservative friends hold up their hands in holy horror because the Liberals have made some dismissals, but out of some 14,000 postmasters in Canada there have been somewhere around 168 dismissals made in the last six months, and those dismissals, or changes rather, were not made for political purposes. Out of the number recorded only 68 were made and stated to be made for political reasons.

Mr. BENNETT: Were there not 75 in Gaspé county?

Mr. VENIOT: There were not 75 in Gaspé county; there are not that many postmasters in the county.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the only reason, is it?

Mr. VENIOT: Perhaps if there had been that number they might have been all dismissed. The Lord only knows; I do not.

Mr. BENNETT: Thirty-six on the Speaker's recommendation.

Mr. VENIOT: No, it was not on the Speaker's recommendation, but on the recommendation of the member for Gaspe.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I thought. They are different people I know.

Mr. VENIOT: Quite a distinction—perhaps without a difference but a distinction just the same. Take the province of Quebec. My hon. friends dismissed in a very short time no less than 600 in that province, and my hon. friend from West Calgary wants to know if there were not 75 dismissed in Gaspe. In their time they dismissed no less than 600 in that province.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend is young yet.

Mr. VENIOT: I have a good memory, I think my hon. friend from York-Sunbury said I had dismissed somewhere around 63. I want to say to my hon. friend that is not all. I want to say to him that I am going to follow the Conservative practice, and wherever I find that an official in my department takes an active part in politics, or has taken it and I have the evidence—after an investigation has been held and the proof is forthcoming—he is going to go.

Mr. HANSON: All right.

Mr. VENIOT: That is the way I was treated when I was in the civil service. I was kicked out on five minutes notice in 1911.

Mr. HANSON: You have never complained about it.

Mr. VENIOT: So I learned in a very good school. I learned my lesson from my hon. friends.

Mr. BENNETT: You admit you deserved it?

Mr. VENIOT: Of course I did. I never blamed the Conservative party. I took part in politics, and I have laid down the principle that a public official who will take his official life in his hands deserves to lose his position. I want to thank the Conservative party for kicking me out at that time, because if they had not done so I would still be a collector of customs of the Dominion of Canada. I have no quarrel with my Conservative friends. They all know I did not blame them for doing it, because I have always laid down the principle that an official who takes part in politics has a right to expect to lose his job. If more of that sort of thing were done, there would be less interference in politics by public officials.

I want to be fair in this matter. I did not want to bring up these matters until they were brought up against me, and I feel that in self defence I have a right to bring them up. I do this without any ill-feeling at all, and without wishing to have any recriminations in the matter but merely to show what the record is. I know a number of questions will be put to me in connection with these dismissals, and I want to say that in no case where a dismissal has taken place since I have been in charge of the Post Office Department, has that dismissal occurred without my making some searching inquiries.

As regards Canterbury in York county which was referred to by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), I know the two gentlemen in question, and although the one who is now temporarily in charge of that office may have been a bankrupt, that has been the case of many a good and honest man in York county. My hon. friend has no right to reflect upon the standing of that gentleman because perchance he may have got into financial difficulties.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member said that he was an undischarged bankrupt.

Mr. VENIOT: There was no necessity to refer to that, but there was an object in doing so. An investigation was made in regard to the gentleman who held the office and the report of the commissioner shows that he was found to be guilty of political interference or activities. Acting upon that report I had an order in council put through dismissing the postmaster.

Mr. HANSON: What about George Chalmers' political activities?

Mr. VENIOT: He was dismissed on the certificate of the member for the constituency stating that he had personal knowledge of the political activities of Mr. George Chalmers.

Mr. HANSON: After the failure of an investigation to disclose any political activities. Is that not correct? I have the file under my hand.

Mr. VENIOT: All I look for is the report of the commissioner. Does he not state in that report: "I find the official guilty of political partisanship"?

Mr. HANSON: I have a copy of the file, which opens with a letter from the Postmaster General to the deputy under date of January 8, 1927, stating:

I desire to have an investigation made into the conduct of George Chalmers, postmaster at Charlo station, Restigouche county, N.B., and I submit as one of the principal witnesses, the name of Louis Giroux, Charlo station, N.B.

Mr. VENIOT: That is a request for an investigation into the conduct of the office, not into political activities.

Mr. HANSON: The letter does not say so, and I have read it all. A letter follows on the file from the chief superintendent of the postal service to the district superintendent at St. John, N.B. stating:

Will the district superintendent please have immediate inquiry made into this matter, it being understood that Mr. Louis Giroux, of Charlo station, will be one of the principal witnesses.

That investigation was held and I think Mr. Griffiths was the gentleman who made the investigation. The file contains a copy of his report, which I would like to read. This is the report of the superintendent when the investigation was made. It is dated at St. John under date of January 27, 1927, and it is addressed to the chief superintendent of postal service. It reads:

Re Charlo Station, N.B.

DEAR SIR:

In reply to departmental memo. of the 13th of January and in compliance with instructions contained therein that an investigation be held into the conduct of Mr. George Chalmers, postmaster of Charlo station, and that Mr. Louis Giroux of that place would be one of the prinicpal witnesses, the chief superintendent is informed that inspector H. B. Peck visited the locality on the 24th and 25th instants, and herewith submitted are copies of evidence obtained by him.

The inspector called on Mr. Louis Giroux who expressed surprise that his name was mentioned in the matter and stated that he being the mail contractor between Charlo station and post office, as well as River Charlo, was in close touch with the way the affairs of the office were conducted by the postmaster with whom he was on intimate terms and could only speak in the highest manner of his efficiency.

Mr. Louis Giroux not having any witnesses to produce was asked by the inspector if he could refer him to anyone else in the community who might have complaints to make and was advised to see Mr. Alexander Giroux.

I might say in passing that the file discloses that Mr. Alexander Giroux was the gentleman behind the guns who wanted the job and who is now, I believe, temporary postmaster. The report continues:

The latter was seen and stated he was an applicant for the postmastership and would make a statement himself and obtain evidence from others of political activity on the part of the postmaster.

Enclosed affidavits are from patrons of the office produced by him.

The inspector interviewed the postmaster in regard to these charges and he freely admitted that he used his car on election day and hauled voters on both sides of politics to the polls and that apart from this he had refrained from taking any part in the election and did not canvass or try to persuade any one to vote for any party.

An inspection of the office was made and the affairs of same found very satisfactory.

The inspector could find no one who had any complaint to make in respect to the conduct of the office or the postmaster and all spoke highly of the manner in which the public was served, the only charge being as stated in the declarations submitted that the postmaster used his car on election day to take voters to the polls.

This is the statement of Alexander Giroux, the man who was an applicant for the position, taken under oath on the 25th January, 1927. He said:

I, Alexander Giroux, of Charlo station, make oath and say that on the day of the last Dominion election I was driving a car in the interest of the Liberal party, and I met George A. Chalmers, postmaster of Charlo station post office, driving voters to the polls in his automobile.

I have no complaint to make regarding the manner in which the post office is conducted by him.

Mr. VENIOT: Before whom was that taken?

Mr. HANSON: Before Mr. H. B. Peck, inspector of postal service; the file as brought down does not disclose that there was any other investigation into this case, and I take it for granted that is correct.

Mr. VENIOT: There was none.

Mr. HANSON: I have not read the file for a few days, and subject to further pesusal of it I want to say that the only thing on file is a statement from the member for the county that the man was guilty of political partisanship on election day. But, this is the evidence that he drove voters to the polls of both political parties and no more. Surely he has the right of citizenship.

Mr. POWERS: He is guilty of double political partisanship.

Mr. HANSON: He denied absolutely that he had taken any partisan position, but he had driven his family and some of his neighbours to the polls. Surely that is not denied to him. I want to ask the Minister of Finance if he remembers James Reid? This gentleman was his brother-in-law, appointed by him.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. PARENT: What difference does that make?

Mr. HANSON: It shows that he was if anything a Liberal. I have many friends in the Liberal party, and I hope I shall always have.

Mr. POULIOT: It is a case of transfusion of blood.

Mr. HANSON: The hon. member for Temiscouata had better keep quiet. He opens his mouth and puts both feet in it. All the evidence that the man who wanted the job produces is that he saw this man driving voters to the poll in his car. He went on and swore that he had no complaint to make with regard to the manner in which the office was conducted. There are other documents here. There is a statement of Donald Poirier which absolutely proves nothing. There is a statement of Joseph McIntyre. He swore that he saw him in the car and that it was going to the polls. There is the statement of Louis Giroux, whose name was given to the Postmaster General as being the man who was convicting this postmaster of partisanship. He states in his memorandum—I do not see that it is sworn to—that he was not at that poll that day and knew nothing of what Mr. Chalmers did on that day, and had never discussed politics with him. I do think this is a case of injustice. I believe the minister has done wrong, and I wish he would be frank enough to correct the injustice. I have no personal knowledge of George Chalmers; I do not know him at all, but the people of River Charlo, the Continental Lumber Company, the Hon. Mr. Currie, an ex-Speaker of the legislature and a Liberal to the backbone, as the Postmaster General knows, all feel very strongly about this, and furthermore, Mr. Currie believes that the public service has suffered because of the removal of the post office from its previous location to the place of business of Giroux, which they say in the petition filed is not a fit place for the post office to be. I do not know anything about it personally.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not want to continue this discussion at any great length, but let me say to the hon. member for York-Sunbury that the post office inspector was not sent to Charlo to investigate into the political activities of the postmaster, but into his administration of the post office. He perhaps went a little further, but I might say to my hon. friend that no investigation is ever held by any post office inspector into the political activities of a post master or postmistress. That kind of investigation is held by a special investigator named by order in council under the regulations adopted in 1923. So far as Mr. George Chalmers taking no political part in the election is concerned, my hon. friend is restricting his remarks entirely to polling day.

Mr. HANSON: That is all the file shows.

Mr. VENIOT: I know more about Restigouche and political activities in that county than does the hon. member or any other member of this House, and I know just about who those are who take an active part in politics in that county not only on election day but on other days of the year, and when the hon. member for Restigouche writes me a letter over his own signature to the effect that he has personal knowledge of the political activities of this gentleman, I will accept his word before the word of those who merely sign a petition. Further, I have received a counter-petition, marked "Confidential," signed by a good many of those who signed the Chalmers petition, telling me that they did not want their names used, but that they could not refuse to sign the petition.

Mr. HANSON: The minister should not refer to a confidential communication unless he is prepared to put it on the table.

Mr. VENIOT: I can when I do not name the individuals.

Mr. ERNST: Table it.

Mr. VENIOT: I only refer to it to show how easy it is to get people to sign a petition for or against. Having acted in this case, I can assure my hon. friends that I feel perfectly justified in having taken the action I did. My hon. friend refers to Mr. George Chalmers as being a brother-in-law of Mr. James Reid, who was once the representative of Restigouche in this House. I know Mr. Reid. I conducted his campaigns in Restigouche county when he ran his first and his last election, and I want to say to my hon. friend now, in the presence of all these members and have it go to the country, that Mr. George Chalmers, although he is a brother-in-law of Mr. Reid, was not supporting him when he was running his election, and I know it. I cannot state that Mr. George Chalmers lately has taken any part in politics; I do not know of my own knowledge, but I do rely upon the word of the hon. member for that county, and I feel that I acted properly when I brought about this dismissal. Since my hon. friend has brought up the bad qualities of the Liberals, and suggested all sorts of political intrigue and patronage on their part in trying to get jobs for their friends—

Mr. HANSON: I did not say that.

Mr. VENIOT: Oh yes, you did. What is the use of trying to get away from it? Let me draw the attention of my hon. friend to some of the intrigues of his own political friends when they were in power. I hold in my hand a letter written by one of the most important members of the opposition touching a mail contract, when they were in power in 1921. The list of contractors shows that there were no less than six or seven tenderers. One man in particular tendered for $1,500 for that route. Three others tendered below him, the lowest tender being $543 below him, but the $1,500 tenderer got the contract. Why? Because the following letter was written:

> Some time ago you told me that you had two tenders for this route at $1,500 each, and asked me which should get it. I said I was going out to that part of the country and would make inquiries regarding the two men and let you know. I did so and found that every person, and I consulted eight or ten—

It must have been a very small district:

> —wanted Mitchell to continue. I told them their wishes would be complied with, and it is of the greatest importance to me that he gets the contract.

And he got it:

> The man mentioned by your assistant as having tendered is not considered reliable, and the people of Bedford township do not want him at any price.

He was a Liberal; that was the reason. The letter continues:

> I hope you will award the contract to Mitchell at once and greatly oblige.

That was signed by J. W. Edwards, the member for Frontenac, I guess. Let me go a little further.

Mr. ERNST: You will have to go a lot further before you are through.

Mr. VENIOT: I have nothing to fear from my hon. friend in that respect.

Mr. POULIOT: He is young.

Mr. VENIOT: He is rather young.

Mr. ERNST: I have not learned those ways yet, and I hope I never will.

Mr. VENIOT: Well, I want to say to my hon. friend that he did try to learn them, because I have received a letter from him.

Mr. ERNST: Quote it.

Mr. VENIOT: Let my hon. friend keep his seat.

Mr. ERNST: Read the letter.

Mr. VENIOT: I received a letter from my hon. friend in connection with a mail contract in Nova Scotia.

Mr. ERNST: Read it.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend laid down the principle that a government, any more than a private individual, could not terminate a contract at will, and he wanted to know why I had cancelled a certain contract in his constituency.

Mr. ERNST: Several.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, and I will cancel more if I find them the way I found that one. I wrote to my hon. friend that I had cancelled the contract following the very principle he had laid down, that his party when it came into power had cancelled the contract which had been duly signed and executed.

Mr. ERNST: I should like the minister to read my letter to him, read his reply, and then read my letter in reply to his. There is a file of three letters.

Mr. VENIOT: I wrote my hon. friend concerning a notice on 12th October sent by Mr. McLellan, the district superintendent, to Walter McDonald, mail contractor in Nova Scotia. My hon. friend wrote me saying:

Mr. McDonald is at the present time enjoying a contract for carrying mails between Port Joli and St. Catherine's River. This contract was renewed for a period of three years during the time that the Hon. Doctor Manion was Postmaster General.

Mr. ERNST: No.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, and Mr. Manion, Postmaster General, stated here that he cancelled the contract on request of my hon. friend.

Mr. ERNST: Nothing of the kind.

Mr. VENIOT: I am sure he would not have done it of his own motion.

Mr. ERNST: There was no contract cancelled. There was an expiry.

Mr. VENIOT:

The notice referred to was a notice of termination at the expiration of three months; that is to say your department appears to have dispensed with Mr. McDonald's services after the 15th of January, 1927.

I would be very pleased if you will inform me for what reason this has been done. Mr. McDonald is, I believe, a faithful servant and has given entire satisfaction. Further, I cannot understand why a department of the government any more than a private individual can terminate a contract at will.

That is a reason I could understand. That is why I terminated this one. The letter continues:

I do not, however, wish at the present time to press the matter of Mr. McDonald's right of action, but merely to try to secure justice for him through you, by having the notice of termination cancelled. If this is not done, I assure you that I shall have no alternative other than to press the matter further by every means at my disposal.

That did not scare the Postmaster-General. He wrote my hon. friend for Queens-Lunenburg on the 17th of November as follows:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours the 26th ultimo, with reference to the contract for mail service formerly held by Walter McDonald. I note you wish to know the reason why this contract to McDonald was cancelled, and you add: "I cannot understand why a department of the government any more than a private individual can terminate a contract at will".

McDonald held a contract which was to expire on 30th September, 1926. As usual the notice of its expiration was given three months in advance, around June last. Mr. Duff, who was then member of parliament, recommended that renewal be given to Mr. Mark Therian, service to begin October 1st.

That is the practice in the department—renewal or calling for new tenders three months in advance.

Mr. ERNST: May I ask—

[Mr. Veniot.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ERNST: I was wondering about the tenders.

Mr. VENIOT: There were no tenders. I am not trying to hide anything. It was transferred, just the same as my hon. friend during the last campaign transferred 254 contracts without tenders. The letter continues:

These instructions were issued June 26th and the contract executed in the usual way, effective September 1st. On August 5th you wired recommending that this contract be renewed with Mr. McDonald. Your request was submitted to Doctor Manion, then Postmaster General, and he issued instructions to renew contract with McDonald, completely ignoring contract entered into with Therian. Going on the principle that you "cannot understand why a department of the government any more than a private individual can terminate a contract at will", an order was issued on October 2nd restoring the contract to Mr. Therian.

This is the history of the case. It is not my intention to cancel that order as you would seem to suggest, because I claim there was justification in the first place to cancel the Therian contract.

Mr. ERNST: Will the minister read my reply to that letter?

Mr. VENIOT: I have not my hon. friend's reply, I am sorry to say, but the reply was along the lines of his first letter, only a little more severe and threatening.

Mr. ERNST: Not threatening, but asking why the minister did not ask for tenders in accordance with the practice of the department.

Mr. VENIOT: Why did my hon. friend not ask the former Postmaster-General why he did not call for tenders?

Mr. ERNST: Why the change without even asking for tenders?

Mr. VENIOT: It is done right along on small contracts.

Mr. ERNST: It is being done now certainly.

Mr. VENIOT: It was done to the tune of 254 by my hon. friend's friends between the 3rd of July and the 14th of September.

Mr. MANION: I rise to a question of privilege. The minister has been making statements many of which he cannot substantiate. He has brought me into this discussion half a dozen times to-night. He thinks he can dismiss everything we say on this side with a wave of his hand. He has just made a statement that we cancelled 254 contracts.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. MANION: The suggestion is that we cancelled 254 contracts.

Mr. VENIOT: No, no.

Mr. MANION: What did my hon. friend say?

Mr. VENIOT: I said that during that time 254 mail contracts were renewed without calling for tenders.

Mr. MANION: That is a different matter altogether.

Mr. VENIOT: That is what I said.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend did not give that impression to hon. members on this side of the House. I wish to say a few words now, in order to do justice to myself. I have sat here for an hour listening to the minister delaying his own estimates, talking big and throwing out statements about my having dismissed many officials and changed contracts, and giving us no substantiation whatever for the assertions made. I make the statement that there was no wholesale dismissal of postmasters in any shape or form in my time. I do not say that there were not some dismissals. I admit frankly in some cases where people came to me pointing out that a certain postmaster had been made president of a Liberal association or something of that kind, there would be a dismissal. I remember one or two cases but cannot remember the details. The minister has a great advantage over me because he has all kinds of papers and I have nothing but my memory. I remember on two or three occasions members telegraphed or wrote in that a certain postmaster had accepted the position of president of some political organization. Naturally it would be a Liberal organization. When a civil servant accepted the position of president of a political organization and took the chair at the meetings, that was sufficient ground for dismissal when the matter was investigated. I do not think anyone will deny that. There were a few dismissals of that kind. The minister mentioned a case and I could not stand up and discuss the matter at once because I could not remember the details, and that case shows how unjust he was. I consulted the member for the district after the hon. minister made the charge, and largely on his statement I remember the facts as he brought them back to me. These are the facts: A man named Fraelick was postmaster at Pleasantville for fifteen years. He was a cripple and his daughter did the work. He died just about the time of the smash-up here last session. He was replaced by a political henchman, and his daughter was cast aside. Practically every person in the community signed a petition requesting that the girl be given back her late father's job. That is the case which I had taken up once before on a wire from my hon. friend the present member. As apparently the case had not been considered I wired at once to Mr. Gaboury, who is sitting in front of the minister to-night, and demanded —having looked into the facts on the ground —that the petitioners should be granted their petition to have the girl re-appointed.

An hon. MEMBER: She was a Liberal.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend interjects that she was a Liberal. I do not know about that. But the proof that her appointment was a good move is that the present Postmaster General has not dismissed her, and she is still postmistress.

Mr. VENIOT: She is not there now because she got married, and consequently her office became vacant.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is a smooth politician and is an adept at getting away with a great deal of oily, slippery, political material.

Mr. VENIOT: There are two of a kind.

Mr. MANION: Thank God, no. I am not in the hon. gentleman's class at all, I do not pretend to be a politician. I repeat here tonight without fear of proof to the contrary being produced on the floor of the House that there were no wholesale dismissals during the time we were in office. I do not deny there were a few dismissals where proof had been given to me that officials had so acted as to justify their dismissal. But I resent the attitude of my hon. friend. I have enough sense of humour to take a joke, but I certainly resent his trying to put me in his class, because I never was and never will be in his class as a politician.

Mr. PARENT: What proof did my hon. friend require?

Mr. MANION: I required at least as much proof as my hon. friend the present Postmaster General when he dismissed postmasters by the score. I dismissed perhaps seven or eight. I am only guessing at the number, but the dismissals were very few. I had many wires from candidates on our side demanding that certain men be dismissed and that certain contracts be cancelled, but many of those demands I paid no attention to, for I did not think they were fair.

Mr. PARENT: But they were candidates, not members of parliament acting on their responsibility as such.

Mr. MANION: In a large proportion of the cases no attention was paid to the demands further than to make an investigation to see whether the allegations were justified. Where they were not nothing was done.

Mr. VENIOT: Since the hon. gentleman thinks I am going a little beyond the pale, will he tell me why since his party are such strict observers of the Civil Service Act he ignored it completely during the election and took on twenty or thirty extra men in Montreal, throwing aside completely the waiting list of the civil service? This was done under the hon. gentleman when he was Postmaster General.

Mr. MANION: I do not remember the incident at all. I presume they were temporary employees engaged to do temporary departmental work.

Mr. VENIOT: But they should not have been put on in the face of the waiting list.

Mr. HANSON: Such help is taken on every day.

Mr. MANION: I should not be surprised if there is no basis for my hon. friend's insinuation. He does not care to offer any proof.

Mr. KAISER: Do I understand the minister to say that during the regime of the Conservative party certain mail carriers whose contracts expired had them renewed without any tenders being called for? I had a complaint from my constituency that a certain mail carrier from Seagrave was allowed to continue on his route two or three months after his contract had expired without the department advertising for tenders or renewing his contract. When I took the matter up with the department I was told that it was a common practice to do this, and that you would not dismiss a man unless some complaint was brought against him.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not say it was not the practice. I was only giving it as justification for letting a contract without tender, for which I was blamed by the hon. member for Lunenburg.

Mr. KAISER: They told me it was the established practice.

Mr. VENIOT: Up to a certain figure. Every contract above $350 is under ordinary circumstances submitted to tender.

Mr. KAISER: This was for over $1,000.

Mr. VENIOT: It should not be the case.

[Mr. Parent.]

Mr. KAISER: They told me it was the established practice.

Mr. HANSON: Is it not the fact that on many occasions when a contract which has been satisfactory to the department is about to expire it is the usual custom to renew it without tender, irrespective of the amount? I have known of many cases where that has been done to the entire satisfaction of the department and the public.

Mr. VENIOT: Where the inspector reports that the contract is satisfactory and the service is good, yes, it is done; but in many cases where we think the price is too high—we have a regular schedule per mile—we call for tenders. I am not blaming the ex-Postmaster General for having renewed those contracts; but I was blamed for having renewed one to a political friend, and I simply wanted to show where my hon. friend had renewed 254.

Mr. HANSON: But you were insinuating that he had broken 200 contracts.

Mr. MANION: I do not admit that I even renewed 254 contracts. Before I believe any statement of the hon. gentleman that he makes in political speeches of this sort I want some proofs.

Mr. VENIOT: I say to the hon. gentleman that under the rules of this House he has got to take my word.

Mr. MANION: I don't have to do anything of the kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. VENIOT: When I make a statement that I say is according to the record the hon. gentleman has no right to contradict it.

Mr. MANION: Show the record.

Mr. VENIOT: I have the record here, right from your own file.

Mr. ERNST: Let us hear it.

Mr. VENIOT: If I were like my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) I would endeavour to have a little more courtesy and not so much sauce.

Mr. ERNST: Mr. Chairman, after my correspondence with the hon. minister, I came to the conclusion that he was the last person from whom I could learn any courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. PRICE: It is not my desire to detain the House for long. Since this administration came into power I have tried to work in harmony with the Postmaster General in matters affecting the maritime provinces, and I believe I have succeeded to a very large extent. But I wish to say in all fairness that I believe the Postmaster General has made a record—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. PRICE: —for dismissals. For a number of years there has been a certain amount of fairness between both parties, and I think both Liberals and Conservatives have exercised considerable discretion in the dismissal of employees of the Post Office Department. It is most regrettable, however, that the dismissals which have been made in the province of New Brunswick have included a great many ladies, some of them widows who have been receiving small emoluments. This is very regrettable, and I do not think it reflects very much credit on the present administration.

In 1917, at Dorchester, New Brunswick, an invalid named Tingley died; he was a Liberal and his family were all Liberals. His daughter had carried on the work of the post office during his illness, and instead of dismissing her the Union government, which has come in for so much censure, appointed her as postmistress in place of her father. I think the older members of the present administration are not very much in favour of the wholesale dismissals which have taken place, some of the names of which I desire to give the House. I notice in looking over this list that in many cases the recommendation for dismissal has been made by the Postmaster General himself. Mrs. Mary D. Murphy, postmistress at Black Rock, was dismissed for political partisanship; I presume that office was a large one, possibly carrying a salary of from $60 to $65 per annum. However, this lady was presumed to have Conservative leanings and I find from this record that the Postmaster General recommended her removal without investigation.

Mr. VENIOT: Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. PRICE: Pardon me; you will just speak when I get through, I would ask the minister to hold his horses for a few minutes. Mrs. Annie Chalmers, postmistress at Belledune, was dismissed from the service on February 8, 1927, in the interests of the service, on the recommendation of the Postmaster General. Mrs. Rose Barry was dismissed from the post office at South River in the interests of the service upon the recommendation of the Postmaster General, in February 1927. Mrs. Mabel Russell, postmistress at Newton Heights, was dismissed from the service on the recommendation of the Postmaster General for better service to the public. I have only mentioned a few names in order to call the attention of the House to these matters.

I do not know that it is necessary to add to what I have said in connection with these dismissals, but I will say that no administration to date, either Liberal or Conservative, has shown as much partisanship as has the present administration in dismissals of not only post office employees but also marine officials. In the parish of Salisbury, county of Westmorland, which I have the honour to represent, a number of fisheries guardians were recommended by the Liberal administration in 1926. When Mr. Meighen was called upon to form a government, I was asked to make recommendations to the department to fill these positions. My recommendations were in accord with those of the Liberal party, because it was too small a matter to bother with. When the election was over and the Liberal government returned to power, they singled out a returned soldier who had served four years in France, who had four children and who was endeavouring to make his way in the world in this manner. On the advice of their friends in that county the Liberal government discovered that this man might have voted for the Conservative candidate, and he was singled out for dismissal. His successor was a millwright, a man who did not require the position and who has not, so far as I know, given any real service to the department. There is the distinction. I want to tell the government that while they may take credit for the number of postmasters they have dismissed throughout Canada, a day of reckoning is coming, and there are a great many Liberals in this country who do not believe in such wholesale dismissals. I also wish to say to the minister that I am surprised that he has permitted these dismissals after his record in the province of New Brunswick. These are petty things, which amount to practically nothing, yet which make up the livelihood of a great many people who do good work for the service.

Now I presume we will hear from the Postmaster General, who had some criticism to offer of the Civil Service Commission a few moments ago. I want to tell him that when recommendations have been received from that Civil Service Commission he has overridden them, and if proof is necessary I think I can produce it.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend has said that I have overridden the certificates issued by the Civil Service Commission. I have.

Mr. MANION: On more than one occasion.

Mr. VENIOT: Here is one special occasion where I did not follow the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission. A man was called in as assistant to the postmaster who was very ill, and he carried on the work of the post office. When the postmaster died this assistant remained in charge, and when a temporary man was appointed pending advertisement of the vacancy by the Civil Service Commission, this other individual walked out and kept the key belonging to the office.

An hon. MEMBER: Too bad!

Mr. VENIOT: You will find out how bad it is before I get through. During the conduct of the office on the part of the temporary postmaster, this man holding the key visited the office at nights and took from there whatever he liked. That was discovered by finding the key which he had forgotten and left in the post office lock. When he came back looking for his key, which he thought he had lost, the acting postmaster told him that it had been found in the lock. He then admitted his guilt. Notwithstanding that he applied for a permanent position, and when the certificate was issued by the Civil Service Commission, having his admission in my possession I refused, as I had power to do under section 13 of the Civil Service Act, to accept that certificate.

Mr. PRICE: I ask the minister to cite one case and we will investigate it.

Mr. VENIOT: I will.

Mr. PRICE: Give us a concrete case.

Mr. VENIOT: I will. I will mention the post office at Odessa in Saskatchewan and the man's name was Dybold.

Mr. MANION: I wish to say a few more words as to the 254 renewals I was supposed to have made. I sent across a few moments ago to the Postmaster General and asked him to let me have the list which he told the committee he had laid on the table. He has not sent it to me but he did send the memo from Mr. Anderson which reads as follows:

> Referring to the Deputy Postmaster General's memo of the 21st ultimo, he is advised that a total of 254 contracts and temporary agreements were renewed without call for tenders between 30th June, 1926 and 25th September, 1926, as per attached list.
> G. C. ANDERSON.

I venture to assert that the great majority of those renewals were the ordinary, formal departmental renewals made every day in the affairs of the department and probably did not come before me at all. If these papers did come before the minister at all during his term in office, it was merely in the ordinary formal way that the ordinary routine papers do come. I make that statement without fear of contradiction by the Postmaster General or anybody else. The minister gets up and makes a big fuss about the renewals. That is no new thing. I remember the officials told me time and again that in all kinds of ordinary mail contracts where the man is carrying the mail for a very small sum per annum, perhaps carrying the mail once or twice a week, they did not call for tenders. It was a small matter, the man having been doing it for years, and the contract is simply renewed. I repeat that out of these 254 contracts that appear in my name a large proportion of them, if not the entire list, were ordinary formal departmental renewals of contracts sent up by the officials, and submitted to me in the ordinary course of routine.

Mr. ERNST: I wish to add only one or two words to what has been said with respect to this particular vote. The minister has seen fit to refer to a case in my own constituency, the postmaster at Pleasantville. That case has been explained by the former Postmaster General, and I want to endorse everything he has said in that connection. The postmaster at Pleasantville had been a man named Fraelick. He had been postmaster for fifteen years, and the office was looked after by his daughter. The minute his toes were turned up and he was placed under the sod, the office was changed and placed in another part of the community. As a result of a petition circulated very largely through the community the office was changed again by the hon. member for Fort William, who was then Postmaster General, and given back to the daughter rather than to the Liberal henchman who had it while hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. I believe that the number of dismissals which have taken place since the present Postmaster General has been in the office which he now occupies is somewhat out of the ordinary. In the province of New Brunswick from the last election up until the 28th day of March, 54 dismissals had taken place, and in the province of Nova Scotia there was a proportionate number. In my own constituency there have been three dismissals, one at Upper Branch, one at Aspotogan, and the name of the third place has escaped me for the moment. In each of these cases I wrote the Postmaster General asking what the reason for the dismissal was, and the gentleman who knew the facts courteously told me that it was in the interest of the public service and closed the discussion. I asked him why it was in the interest of the public service, but he has not yet seen fit to disclose why these men were dismissed.

One word more with reference to the mail contract. The Postmaster General has said that the mail contracts were cancelled because they were made without tender. In each instance in which he changed the contract he did so on the ground that no tender had been called for when the previous contract had been let, and yet in every case where the previous contract had been cancelled, he let it without tender. In every instance where a mail contract was let in my constituency the Postmaster General cancelled the contract and gave it to some other person without calling for tenders.

Mr. VENIOT: That is what my hon. friend has done.

Mr. ERNST: In every instance where that was done the person who had the contract had been carrying it out for years to the entire satisfaction of the community. Yet the Postmaster General awarded it to a new man without calling for tenders.

Mr. VENIOT: No tender was called in the McDonald case.

Mr. ERNST: I am giving the facts and I challenge you to name a contract which was given after calling for tenders.

Mr. VENIOT: I did give a contract after calling for tenders.

Mr. ERNST: I challenge you to contradict my statement in one concrete instance. If you cannot do so, you have to accept my word in the matter.

Mr. VENIOT: I have the information here and I contradict my hon. friend in my letter to him.

Mr. ERNST: Where did you give a contract to the man who had had it before?

Mr. VENIOT: What about the McDonald case?

Mr. ERNST: He had been carrying the mails for years in that district. You took the contract away from him and gave it to a man named Therian without even calling for tenders.

Mr. VENIOT: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I did not take the contract away from him. It was let in May or June and I was not Postmaster General.

Mr. ERNST: The contract was taken from a man named McDonald, who had had it for years before, and given to a man named Therian. Later, the Therian contract was cancelled and McDonald was given the contract. You cancelled the contract to McDonald without calling for tenders and awarded it again to Therian. That was not an isolated instance. That was done in several instances in my constituency. I do not believe that the Post Office Department has ever been administered in a more partisan manner than it is being administered at the present time.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): I do not rise for the purpose of making any criticism of dismissals by the Postmaster General, but rather to get some information regarding the dismissal of the postmaster at Hawkesbury, Ontario. I believe the appointment of a returned soldier named McAllister, was made by the Civil Service Commission, but I think that under the previous Postmaster General, Mr. Murphy, and even under the subsequent Conservative Postmaster General the appointment was held up. I understand that the position has now been taken away from McAllister, and that a Mr. Berthiaume, has been appointed. I should like to get an explanation of this from the minister. I do not wish to delay the House at all, but I would point out that the appointment of McAllister was made by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. VENIOT: I should be pleased to give an explanation to the hon. gentleman. Both were returned soldiers. When the advertisement was published for the vacancy it was understood that a person who could understand both languages should be appointed. That was done before my time, and when I became Postmaster General and the record was placed before me to be sent to the commission, I advised the commission of the fact that this had started as a bilingual appointment. They then issued a certificate in favour of Mr. McAllister, a returned soldier. I refused the certificate and sent word back to the commission that under the advertisement a properly bilingual person should be appointed and that was the cause of my refusing the certificate. As Mr. Berthiaume was also a returned soldier, I did not see that I was doing any injustice to returned soldiers as such. That is the explanation.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): So that this matter may be clear, does it rest with the Civil Service Commission or with the minister in the case of bilingual applicants as to who will be appointed? After the Civil Service Commission makes an appointment, does it lie in his discretion to refuse the appointment and to use his best judgment as to a bilingual appointment?

Mr. VENIOT: I will answer the last question first. Under the Civil Service Act the minister has power to refuse the certificate of the Civil Service Commission but he has not power to appoint anybody instead. The matter goes back to the Civil Service Commission and they make a new call for applicants or take the one who ranks next in merit. As regards the bilingual question I have not had experience along that line to know whether that comes from the department or from the Civil Service Commission. The case to which I refer was before the commission before I was installed as Postmaster General.

Mr. BENNETT: Was Mr. McAllister not bilingual?

Mr. VENIOT: I was informed that Mr. McAllister understood French and I signified my willingness to have McAllister and Berthiaume come before me so that I might find out whether they were sufficiently bilingual to occupy the position.

Mr. BENNETT: The observations which have been directed to the chair by my colleague the ex-Postmaster General, in the light of the statements that have been made by the minister himself would seem to me to be such as might fairly engage the attention of the committee for a few minutes. I listened very carefully and the minister certainly made a statement which would seem to indicate that the former minister, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) had cancelled 254 contracts.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not say that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Absolutely.

Mr. BENNETT: That was the sense of the observation. By analysis it would seem from what the former minister said that all that was done was merely formally as a matter of routine to renew those contracts. I do not concede that any minister, however eminent he may have been in provincial politics, has a right to come into this House and make the observations which have been made by the minister to-night. A disregard of the courtesies of parliamentary life was shown and this House is entitled to better treatment.

Mr. PARENT: Why were so many contracts renewed in such a short time?

[Mr. L. G. Bell.]

Mr. BENNETT: If my hon. friend will realize the time of year it was, he will appreciate the fact that a number of contracts were falling due.

Mr. PARENT: It is easy to find an average and it will be found there were many more renewals during that time than ordinarily.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend will realize that these contracts are in the course of routine renewed from time to time. The list is not before the committee, but this is a matter which I think the House should consider. We have listened to a great deal about dismissals, about dismissals of women, and I am going to cite a case to the committee. The other day I put on the order paper a question in regard to a very small post office called Bragg Creek which happens to be in the constituency of West Calgary. The people in that locality, for some strange reason, perhaps to the minister entirely inexplicable, voted for me. I can readily realize that many hon. gentlemen will find it difficult to understand why they should do so, but at any rate they did. In that little community there was a poor old man named White who had been postmaster and who was dying from cancer. His wife kept the post office.

An hon. MEMBER: Was he a Liberal?

Mr. BENNETT: So far as I know, because I never saw him, he had no politics. But at any rate the poor old gentleman was dying and finally passed away. His wife who had all the time been keeping the post office, which brings in the large sum of one dollar a month, had a little farm and she kept this little post office for her husband. The whole community signed a petition to have her appointed formally to the post office. What happened? The defeated Liberal candidate recommended to this government that a woman called Mary Wilson should be appointed to the post office in spite of the fact that all the people in that locality had signed a petition that this poor unfortunate widow, who had been left a small farm, should have this post office with its revenue of about one dollar a month. Therefore Mrs. White ceases to be postmistress, Mary Wilson gets the job and the settlers in that community travel to Calgary for their mail rather than get it from Mary Wilson.

That seems to me to be the sort of thing that makes people dissatisfied with our institutions. It is not just playing the game. What does the minister care about how these people in West Calgary feel? It is merely playing the part of politics. On the 27th day of January the defeated Liberal candidate makes the recommendation and Mary Wilson is appointed to that post office. Somebody got a post office box in Calgary, carried out the mail and distributed it rather than have it distributed through Mary Wilson. They cannot do that any longer and they say that conditions are intolerable. I receive letters from people whom I have never seen. I suppose that if I had seen them they would not have voted in such large numbers for me, but at any rate under those circumstances I think that is hurting this country among new settlers. It is a disastrous thing to have that idea spread abroad in this country.

When the former Postmaster General reappointed a Miss Fraelick who had been postmistress at Pleasantville for about fifteen years, my hon. friend tries to make political capital against him for so doing. That is what is called peanut politics; it is the sort of thing that degrades our institutions. The speech that was made in this House to-night by the Postmaster General is such a speech as I have never listened to in this House during my years in it, and it is an insult to parliament. This sort of bluff and braggadocio, the waving of one's hands and speaking of what one is going to do—that is the sort of thing that makes the populace of this country think Canada is not a fit country to come to. All you have to do is to read the statement made by the hon. gentleman to-night as it will appear in Hansard to-morrow, put it into the hands of decent settlers, and ask them if that is the sort of country they wish to live in. But the minister thinks that sort of thing entitles him to the decoration of the legion of honour; that is what he expects to get at an early date for this sort of thing. It is the kind of thing that is taking place in this country. He should remember that this is not New Brunswick, but the larger arena of the Dominion parliament.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. member's party did worse than that when they were in power.

Mr. BENNETT: If they did, I assume that is the reason they are out of power.

Mr. POULIOT: The words of my bachelor friend will not bring comfort to the widow.

Mr. BENNETT: It is just such observations as those of the hon. member for Podunk who has just spoken that bring discredit upon our institutions. It is a serious thing when a widow living on a few dollars a month is thrust out just because a defeated candidate says that a Grit must have the job, although she has been postmistress for a term of many years when her husband was on a sick bed, dying. I say we should consider these things as symptomatic. There are gentlemen in this government who look upon them as symptomatic, and I say to the Postmaster General, from what I have observed of his colleagues, that they do not glory in their shame.

Mr. VENIOT: I admit it is a shame for me to have followed the example of the Tory party.

Mr. BENNETT: Even the hon. member for Weyburn cannot swallow that. He laughs, so it must be pretty bad. There again is another illustration of it. I do entreat the Postmaster General—

Mr. VENIOT: Your entreaties are no good in that respect because I know you are not sincere. You would do it if you were in power.

Mr. BENNETT: That is but another illustration, Mr. Speaker, of the calibre of the Postmaster General of Canada. That is the type of gentleman who sits on the treasury benches of this country. That is the sort of thing that brings discredit on parliament. That is the sort of thing that cheapens us and makes us a joke, that degrades our institutions.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend forgets that when his party was in power they dismissed people who were dead.

Mr. BENNETT: To dismiss a man who was dead would be a pretty hard thing to do.

Mr. POULIOT: If he died, he would have dismissed himself.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman seeks applause for his own jokes, and sometimes, when it is lacking he becomes very disconcerted. But if he will gaze sufficiently long in the faces of his compatriots he may be able to find an answering smile.

Mr. POULIOT: I don't look for a smile in yours.

Mr. BENNETT: Every circus must have its clown, and the hon. gentleman is living up to his reputation. The conduct of the Postmaster General this evening, Mr. Chairman, would seem to indicate that the government is degenerating into a circus, and necessarily in that circus the hon. gentleman who has just spoken will play his part. I do think, Mr. Chairman, that we should look on parliamentary institutions as something beyond that. I do not think any minister should glory in the discomfort and unhappiness he has brought to the homes of people throughout Canada, and then say that the reason he did it is because somebody else did it on some other occasion. My observation is that when a statement of that kind is made, usually there is very little warrant for it. We in western Canada have known what it is to suffer from violent partisanship. I lived there from 1897 to 1911; I lived there under those conditions. I saw the change of government in 1911, and I saw a change in the personnel of the civil service, and I thought then that a very great injury was being done this country; I am on record on that point. I have always believed in the Civil Service Commission, and I have endeavoured to support it. I believe that it is the best safeguard the Canadian people have for the decent conduct of public affairs; I am firmly convinced of that. I was long enough on the treasury board to see the certificates sent in by the Minister of Agriculture and other ministers saying that in the interests of the public service somebody should be let out of their position, and in a short time I have seen two or three take the place of the one who was let out. The difficulties we are suffering from to-day, the telegrams that are being sent to every member of this House with respect to the civil service, are due entirely to the fact that we have too many officials in Canada doing the work that could be done with fewer employees, and that condition has been brought about by the very thing to which I am drawing attention to-night. I think the time has come when the Postmaster General should realize that instead of refusing to take the certificates of the Civil Service Commission, he should endeavour to get the commission to be the buffer between him and the demands of politicians and members for vengeance upon their opponents. I know exactly what that means, and it is not a good thing. The hon. gentleman from Weyburn is no different from myself in that regard. When an election is over the pressure of one's friends for recognition and for vengeance against those who hold office is very very great.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Not in the case of the hon. member for Weyburn.

Mr. BENNETT: Then he is inhuman, and I ventured to think for a moment that he was human. But every member of this House knows what that pressure is.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The hon. gentleman did not understand me. I said that the hon. member for Weyburn is not pressed like my hon. friend is to fire people.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not pressed now because we are out of power, but unquestionably any gentleman sitting in this House and supporting the government has the pressure of his friends behind him to appoint them to office, and dismiss those holding office who are not of the political faith of the government of the day.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): My hon. friend does not represent a Saskatchewan constituency or he would not talk that way.

Mr. BENNETT: He is very grateful that he does not, because there were striking manifestations of the high intelligence of the Saskatchewan constituencies when one lone member from that province in the committee the other day, supported the Georgian bay canal bill. That pressure I speak of, Mr. Chairman, can be met only by the intervention of the Civil Service Commission. Let us try to prevent the new incoming settlers to this country from believing that the Bragg Creek case is an ordinary incident in public life in this country. I say it is a disgrace to the country. It brings discredit on our institutions, and is injurious to every one of us who has to legislate in this chamber, and so far as that poor woman was concerned, it is inhuman. But, of course, the minister had necessarily under our political system to yield to the pressure of the defeated candidate to put this other woman who had supported him in that election into the office, regardless of what happened to anybody else.

I think the minister might well revise his manner of treating a matter of this kind. I do think that the flippant way in which he has approached it, and the glorying in his own shame with respect to dismissals, bring discredit on our institutions, and the time has come when some other method might well be resorted to. I resent the aspersions on my former colleague, which, on analysis, are found to be wholly unwarranted in fact.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a word or two to say as to what happened in my constituency. I asked for only two dismissals. In one case it was for the dismissal of a postmaster whom I had first recommended to be appointed postmaster. He was a friend of mine when I recommended him first. Last year I knew he was against me. That was not a reason to ask for his dismissal, but I knew that he had held a committee meeting in the post office, and he came to see me. I said to him, "Well, Emile, what is the matter with you? Why did you act this way this year?" He said, "I thought you would be defeated, so I voted against you." Then I asked him, "Why did you distribute liquor in your house, which is used for the post office?" It was not my liquor; I have none during an election. He said, "Well, I was very generous. I distributed it equally to Conservatives and Liberals." Then I said, "Well, now, I have a very good reason to ask your dismissal," and that is what I did, and everybody was satisfied.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I understood the minister to say that the rule had been laid down that if a member of the House made a charge of partisanship against an official, his word was accepted and dismissal would follow.

Mr. VENIOT: What I said was that if a member of the House wrote a letter stating that to his personal knowledge a postmaster or an official was guilty of partisanship or political activity, his word was sufficient to dismiss the postmaster.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If a defeated candidate comes into the minister's office and makes a verbal statement, is that sufficient?

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The minister has made a dismissal on such a statement.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I will show the minister the case.

Mr. VENIOT: I made no dismissal on the representation of any candidate of an official who comes under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. ERNST: The minister did not qualify it in that way.

Mr. VENIOT: The cases I am referring to are cases that come under the Civil Service Commission. That would mean any officer of the Post Office Department with a revenue of $400 or over—

An hon. MEMBER: No, $200.

Mr. VENIOT: And such an official cannot be dispensed with, under the regulations laid down and concurred in by this House in 1923, except by a statement of the member representing the county that he has personal knowledge of the political activity. Failing that the charge must be made, witnesses must be produced, and an investigation held by the appointed investigator. Any office with a revenue under $400 comes under departmental jurisdiction, in which case there is no necessity of personal representation of personal knowledge on the part of either the defeated candidate or the elected member.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then in that case the minister would take the word of a defeated candidate?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And dismiss without investigation.

Mr. ERNST: Would the minister take the word of an elected representative if he happened to be of the opposite political persuasion?

Mr. VENIOT: Try it and find out.

Mr. ERNST: I have tried it.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. ERNST: I have tried it in regard to a number of dismissals which have taken place in my constituency and backed it up by a petition of nearly every ratepayer in the district.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): If the Postmaster-General receives from a Conservative member of this House charges of political partizanship against a postmaster in the constituency represented by that member, will he, on the strength of such charge, made by a Conservative member-elect or a Progressive member-elect, dismiss such postmaster just as readily as he dismisses the postmaster if the charge is made by a Liberal member or a hyphenated member on the other side of the House?

Mr. VENIOT: I would be quite safe in saying that there are so few Liberal postmasters in the Dominion of Canada that the case is not likely to occur.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Now come across straight—

Mr. VENIOT: If the hon. member makes such a case, I will give it very careful consideration.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Come across square.

Mr. VENIOT: Does the hon. member want me over there?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The time will come when the hon. minister will be over here.

Mr. VENIOT: Not for a long time.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Sooner than the minister expects. The minister is in the same position as the boy who whistled when passing through a graveyard. He will be here before he has any idea of it. If a Liberal member of parliament makes a representation to the Postmaster General that a certain postmaster has been guilty of partisanship, that postmaster is dismissed.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The records show it.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Is the minister prepared to deal with a report made by a Conservative or a Progressive member on this side of the House and to give that representation exactly the same consideration as he would a representation from a Liberal?

Mr. VENIOT: I will.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I put a question on the order paper a while ago asking how many postmasters were dismissed at the request of Liberal members of parliament, of Liberal-Progressive members, of Progressive members and of Conservative members, and I have the return in my desk. The answer to my question was very funny. It stated that some fifty-nine or sixty had been dismissed at the request of Liberal members and a certain number at the request of Liberal-Progressives, but not a man had been dismissed at the request of Progresives or Conservatives.

Mr. VENIOT: How could I when my hon. friend never asked for it?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, maybe we will try it in a few cases.

Mr. VENIOT: Come along with it.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): We will, and I prophesy that when we do the representations will not receive the same consideration as when they come from the opposite side of the House. I want to tell the Postmaster General that in the dismissal of postmasters he has played absolute peanut politics.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give us the income and expenditure of the department last year?

Mr. VENIOT: The revenue was $31,024,-464.22, and the expenditure was $30,499,685.74.

Mr. GARDINER: That is to the 31st of March of this year?

Mr. VENIOT: The fiscal year ended 31st March, 1926.

Mr. GARDINER: You have not the figures for the last year?

Mr. VENIOT: They are not compiled yet.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the figures are in the Gazette every month.

Mr. HANSON: What is the effect on the salary of postmasters or the compensation paid to postmasters in those offices which are paid on a commission basis, by reason of a reduction in the postal rates?

Mr. VENIOT: Postmasters will lose nothing in 1927-28 as a result of the reduction. Last year the reduction had no effect on their salaries, and it will be the same this year.

Mr. BENNETT: But there will be a reduction to those who are paid on the commission basis.

Mr. VENIOT: No, an arrangement has been made by which the commissions will be proportionately increased, so that it will give them the same salary and commission as last year.

Mr. BENNETT: What has been the effect of the change in postal rates last July, roughly?

Mr. VENIOT: It was estimated that the two cent letter rate would result in a decrease of postal revenue of between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 per annum. However, as two cent postage was only in effect nine months during the fiscal year that has just closed, and owing to increase in postal business due to improved conditions and also improved postal facilities—lower parcel post rates, and so forth— the postal deficit for the fiscal year ended 31st March last will not exceed, according to figures so far available, $2,500,000.

Mr. BENNETT: My memory is that the estimate was $3,000,000 in the Finance department.

Mr. VENIOT: This is $2,000,000. There is an improvement right along. During the past three months, due to the increased revenue at the city offices which comprise two-thirds of our postal business, we have come within four per cent of overtaking the loss due to two-cent postage.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is any consideration being given to the representations of postmasters in smaller towns for increased compensation? In some cases their compensation is very inadequate.

Mr. VENIOT: As I have just explained, the salaries of such postmasters will not be affected as a result of the reduction from three to two cent postage. I stated to the postmasters assembled in convention here a week or so ago that no definite decision could be arrived at by the government until the fiscal year ending 1927-28, when we would have before us the complete result of the two cent postage.

Mr. HANSON: From 1922 onward the policy of the late Postmaster General was not to extend the system of rural mail delivery. I have always taken the view that the federal government could perform no more useful service to the people in the rural communities than the extension of these routes. I know of nothing that will bring more contentment to the people in the country than having their mail delivered frequently to their doors. In my constituency—which is a fairly large one as the minister knows—there are still communities without rural mail service, and there are other communities not served often enough. I have been only able to accomplish something along this line about election time, when a little pressure produces some consideration, but afterwards no matter what party is in power they freeze up. I suppose it is because of the expense and the desire not to have a deficit. But I would impress on the minister the desirability of giving a good rural service. The cities are well served. In my own city of ten thousand people we have three deliveries a day, but people within ten or fifteen miles are given only two deliveries a week. To-day with daily newspapers the people are entitled to a daily delivery, and I would enlist the sympathy of the Postmaster General for those people. We have a struggle to keep people on the land, and to make rural life more attractive I think nothing is more effective than rural mail delivery, telephones and good roads.

Mr. VENIOT: For the information of the House I may say that there are 213,000 rural boxes throughout the different sections of the country, which were purchased at a cost of $800,000.

Mr. HANSON: But that is all reimbursed to the department.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes. In the general estimates will be found an item of $75,000, and in the supplementaries another item of $35,000, for the purchase of rural mail boxes. We believe in extending the rural mail system as much as possible. For the information of my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) I may say that only recently I issued an order for a rural delivery from Peniac in his county, although it is for the accommodation of only six or seven families.

Mr. HANSON: I am much obliged to the minister. I have been trying to get that for seven years.

Mr. VENIOT: We have a number of applications from the western, central and maritime provinces. I would draw the attention of hon. members on both sides of the House to the fact that in many cases where we are asked to establish rural mail routes it is impossible because of the very low revenues. I have in mind three offices where the revenue is only $120, and to lay out a rural route cost practically $600 or $700. It is unreasonable under the circumstances to ask the department to assume that expenditure. True, the department is supposed to give the best accommodation possible and not to make any profit, but we cannot incur unreasonable deficits.

Mr. HANSON: The minister has referred to a feature that is not without difficulty, but I would point out that the mail service ought to be run more or less on the principle of the common school system—the rich districts should take care of the poor. The city of Moncton pays into the postal revenues over $300,000, and the city of Fredericton pays in twice as much as it costs to run the office. The thickly settled districts ought to pay for those sparsely settled. On no other principle can you establish many rural free deliveries. I am going to press for this, no matter who is Postmaster General or what party is in power, until there is a rural delivery box at the door of every farmer in my county.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I would like to add just a word to what the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) has said. I have stated in this House before and I state again that if there is one department of the government which is entitled to show a deficit without criticism it is the Post Office department. Let us look at this thing reasonably. The people of the country all contribute to building up Canada, but naturally wealth centres in the cities. These centres of population get their public works and enjoy the benefits of the money which is spent in their construction, while the only service which can be given the country districts is the rural mail service. I repeat that if there is any justification for a deficit in any department of the government in connection with services given to the public it is in connection with the service given the rural districts by the Post Office Department. I think a great deal of latitude should be allowed in serving these rural communities. because a mail service is the only thing the government can give these people to show that they are a part of the country. I appreciate the position of the Postmaster General if you want to argue this question from the standpoint of whether or not these routes will pay; in that case a good many of them will be wiped out.

Mr. VENIOT: We cannot do that.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is an unreasonable attitude.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): My constituency is strictly rural, and I appeal not only on behalf of that constituency, but for all rural communities. I believe they are well entitled to that consideration.

Mr. VENIOT: I agree with you.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I do not very often find myself in such hearty agreement with my hon. friends opposite, but I want to thank the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) and the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) for making this plea, and I do so on behalf of all the Liberal members from Saskatchewan. Last year when we came here we investigated the amount of money spent on rural mail delivery in the various provinces, and we found that the amount spent in the province of Saskatchewan was almost negligible, while New Brunswick and Ontario were reasonably well served. I quite believe that those two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken would not wish to see the rural mail delivery extended in their own provinces until Saskatchewan was brought up to their standard. That being the case we thank them for making these remarks on behalf of rural mail delivery in Saskatchewan. Now I would like to say to the minister that in my province we believe the time has arrived when the rural mail service should be extended throughout the entire province, and when we have the same service provided in the eastern provinces we will consider ourselves reasonably well served.

Mr. IRVINE: I just wish to say a word on behalf of the members from Alberta who are also anxious to see the rural mail routes extended. I would like to tell the minister that in my constituency we have a mail route which we would like extended; it is a very important route, and I believe he has the matter under advisement now. Then I would ask the Prime Minister if he is aware that it is now to-morrow, in fact it has long been to-morrow, and I believe it would be as well if we went home now for a little rest.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I was going to suggest that we pass items 358 and 20 and allow item 542 of the supplementary estimates to stand over, with the understanding that we may discuss anything in this connection on that item when it is called.

Mr. VENIOT: Very well.

Mr. GARDINER: I only wish to keep the House a moment; we have taken up a good deal of time discussing politics in regard to this item, so I do not think it will hurt the House to wait and hear what I have to say. Hon. members have made a plea for the extension of the free rural delivery service, with which I am heartily in accord. We in western Canada know that we have not very much service along these lines as compared with the older sections of Canada. Of course we do not expect to get that service immediately, but we would like to see the Postmaster General give some attention to that branch of his department. There is another point, however, which I think is probably even more important, having to do with the provision of small post offices throughout the length and breadth of western Canada, where it is impossible to expect free delivery, and where the people are so isolated that they have to go thirty or forty miles for their mail. I want to make a plea for those people. I received intimations from the Post Office Department recently that many of these isolated post offices will be closed because of the small amount of business being done, and I do not think that is a fair proposition at all; those are the places to which I think the Postmaster General should give a good deal of consideration, even if the service does not pay.

Mr. VENIOT: I can assure the hon. member that that is not the intention so far as I know.

Mr. GARDINER: I happened to receive some such intimation recently. Those are the people for whom I wish to plead; those living close to post offices are in a position to get their mail once or twice a week, but these people who have to travel thirty or forty miles should get more consideration, even if it costs the country some money. I hope the Postmaster General will take that matter into consideration and give it his earnest attention.

Item agreed to.

Post Office — salaries, including amount required to pay allowance to office appliance operators, grade 2, operating Hollerith card punching machines, in accordance with provisions of Order in Council P.C. 156/2521, dated 24th December, 1923, $1,240,419.

Contingencies, $195,000.

Mr. PRICE: I have a short letter which I think will be of interest to the minister in connection with this item. It is from the maritime president of the Dominion Postal Clerks' Association.

Mr. RINFRET: Does this relate to the civil service increases? If so, that will come up when we consider the supplementary estimates.

Item agreed to.

REPORT

Thirteenth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Young (Saskatoon) for Mr. Parent.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough) presented the report of the select standing committee on marine and fisheries as follows:

Your committee has had under consideration, matters in connection with the lobster fisheries in certain sections of the Atlantic coastal waters, and also the salmon fisheries of British Columbia.

Several meetings of the committee have been held. These meetings have been attended by the deputy minister, and the chief officials of the Fisheries branch, of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, who have rendered much valuable assistance in determining policies in the best interests of the fishing industry of Canada.

Through resolutions passed during the meetings of your committee, the following recommendations are submitted to the consideration of the House;

That owing to very strong representations having been received from the fishermen of Kent county N.B., and Prince county, P.E.I., to have the present lobster-fishing season, of August 15, to October 15, on that section of Northumberland straits, beginning at a point ten miles south of Richibucto, Kent county, N.B., and extending to River Philip, Cumberland county, N.S., changed to commence on August 1 and end on September 30, your committee recommends that such change be made for the present year; and your committee further recommends that the Biological board be requested to make a thorough investigation of the lobster-fishing conditions in said section, before and during the period of the catch, and report its findings as soon as possible thereafter, in order to determine what injury, if any, would be caused by such change in dates of season.

Having regard for the best interests of the salmon fisheries of British Columbia, your committee recommends that: Purse-seine-nets used in British Columbia waters shall have a minimum length of one hundred and twenty-five fathoms.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. DUFF: With the unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that the report of the select standing committee on marine and fisheries presented this day be concurred in.

Hon. J. E. SINCLAIR (Queens): Stand as a notice of motion.

Motion stands.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION RESPECTING PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move:

That the order for private bills be taken up on Tuesday, the 12th instant, at eleven o'clock a.m., and that rule 25 in relation thereto be suspended.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): It is twenty minutes after eleven now, Mr. Speaker, and the motion calls for having the order for private bills taken up at eleven o'clock. Private members have an opportunity at eight o'clock this evening of taking up private bills for an hour, and I understand that as a result of conferences some of the difficulties that were anticipated have been removed. I think that we should allow the business of the House to proceed in the regular way and take up private bills at eight o'clock.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: If we were perfectly sure that one hour would be sufficient to take care of the private bills on the order paper, or if we were perfectly sure that that hour would be extended to give ample time to take care of these private bills, I would be quite prepared to withdraw the motion, but we have no such assurance. We have had the experience in this chamber of the one hour allotted to private bills on Tuesday and Friday being wholly taken up with the discussion of one bill; in fact, we have had the experience this session not only of that one hour in the evening being taken up but of all of Monday being used on some two or three occasions to discuss one bill. At the present time there are on the order paper many private bills, some of which are of great importance, and I fail to see the wisdom or the justice of so carrying on our legislative affairs as to block any legislation that any person or any corporation desires. Therefore, I feel like pressing this motion, Mr. Speaker, until we have some assurance that justice will be done by those who come here for legislation.

I ask under this motion that rule 25 in relation thereto be suspended. Rule 25 provides that private bills may be taken up on Monday, also on Tuesday and Friday evenings for one hour from eight until nine p.m. As the session advances, we are all well aware that the government takes over Monday for government business, and that cuts us down to only two hours in the week for private bills. During the greater part of this session we have been cut down to the two hours time, because, as I purpose to show, practically all of the other time has been taken up in what we might call a futile discussion.

We are also told in our book of rules what the object of a private bill is. Under rule 88, paragraph 670 says:

> The object of a private bill is to alter the law relating to some particular locality or to confer rights on, or relieve from liability, some particular person or body of persons.

I think we are agreed in this chamber that the legislation in regard to any private bill is more or less useful. We have a great many divorce bills brought in under private legislation, bills respecting patents, bills respecting railway charters and bills respecting the organization of different companies. These matters are of great importance, and during this session, our time has been expended in such a way that these important matters of private legislation have not had due consideration in this chamber. We met here on Thursday, December 9, and on Wednesday, December 15, we adjourned after sitting for five days. I think during those five days we made a record for disposing expeditiously of matters before the House. We met again on Tuesday, February 8, and this is the 12th day of April, a matter of forty-seven sitting days since our adjournment. Counting to-day's sitting, we will have sat for fifty-two days during this present session of parliament.

I am not going to deal with what has been done on all the days but I would like to point out how the time allowed for private bills legislation has been expended. We had Bill No. 78, an act respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company introduced on Friday, the 25th of February. After our adjournment we met on February 8, and on Friday, February 25, this very important bill was introduced. It was discussed on Friday, again discussed on March 1 for an hour, again on March 4 for one hour, and on Monday, March 7, it took practically the entire day. On Tuesday, March 8, it was again discussed for one hour. On Friday, March 11, it was again discussed for an hour and on Monday, March 14, another day was spent on it. On Tuesday, March 15, and on Friday, March 18, another hour of each sitting was consumed. On Tuesday, March 15, and on Friday, March 18, another hour each day was devoted to it. On Monday, March 21, it was taken up again. On Tuesday, March 22, another hour was occupied. On Friday, March 25, and again on Monday, March 28, another hour was consumed with this bill. So that four Mondays and eight other days, an hour each day, were taken up with this measure—a total of twelve of the allotted days for private bills was consumed in the discussion of Bill No. 78. I am not going to say whose fault that was. I am simply pointing out what has actually happened, and the result has been that it has so held up other legislation as to leave us in the position we are now placed in, and it is possible that the other private measures cannot be taken care of before prorogation.

If, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) suggests we follow the regular procedure and take up private bills to-night from eight until nine o'clock, that will give us one hour for the consideration of private bills. But our rules are so framed that one bill may take the entire hour, and then if unanimous consent of the House is asked to continue beyond nine o'clock so as to take care of the other private bills, it is possible for one objector to block that procedure. We have had evidence of that recently in this chamber. If we propose to extend the time beyond nine o'clock one member can object and thus block consideration of private bills. I need not point out to hon. members that to-night is the last opportunity we will have for taking care of private bill legislation in this chamber, and if what has happened on past occasions should occur to-night, one bill, or possibly two bills, may consume the entire hour, and if someone who is not desirous of seeing certain legislation enacted should object to an extension beyond the hour, private bill legislation will be blocked. I claim that is not fair. No private legislation is introduced in this House unless some person or persons are interested in it and desirous of having it enacted. I do not say that all private bills should be passed in this House, but all of them should be given fair consideration. If the majority of members favour any private legislation which is introduced in this House, such legislation should be enacted into law, but it certainly is most unfair and unjust for this House to have itself tied hand and foot by rules so that it is impossible for any private legislation to be given fair consideration and enacted into law. After the consideration of private bills in this House they require to go to the Senate. I am not just sure how speedily the upper chamber moves, but if they move no more speedily than we in this chamber do it will take some time to consider before prorogation all the private bills on the order paper. I am assuming that prorogation will take place in the near future. In fact, it was stated on Saturday by the Prime Minister that they were prepared to go on with any of the estimates. The leader of the government told the House on Saturday that they were practically through with their legislation and that we could be prepared to deal with the estimates. In that case we can look forward to prorogation in the very near future.

Since the disposal of Bill No. 78 we have had experience of another bill blocking private legislation, Bill No. 107, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company. It was introduced as a private bill, was up for consideration on Tuesday, April 5, for one hour, and took the entire time allotted for private bills. It was before the House again on Friday, April 8, and took the entire hour. To-night Bill No. 107 will stand near the top of the order paper, and therefore it will come up for consideration in the early part of the time allotted for private bills, and judging from what has happened in the past, if we are to guess what may happen to-night, it is quite possible that Bill No. 107 will consume the entire hour allotted for private bills, in which case the other private bills will be left untouched. The purport of this motion which I present to the House is to give an opportunity for private bills to be considered. Some of them may be contentious. If so, the good points and the bad points should be brought out. I happen to be sponsor of one bill which is now so adjusted that it is not contentious. It did contain some matter of contention when it left the private bills committee, but that matter has been arranged, and I am prepared to present an amendment which will so direct the criticism of that bill that there will not be any objection from either side of the House, or from any religious persuasion; therefore I claim that this bill should not be blocked. The people who are asking for this legislation asked in 1924 to have an act of incorporation passed. They approached parliament that year, but did not follow up their initial move. Again in 1926 they came before this parliament for an act to incorporate their church organization. The bill was a private bill and received second reading, but did not get any further. This session they have done their utmost to have this bill considered and finally put through. The bill has not only been printed and received two readings, but it has been considered by the private bills committee and re-printed with the amendment as proposed in the private bills committee. The cost has been considerable. The printing alone—

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Leader of the Opposition): Would the hon. member allow me to make a suggestion? I have great sympathy with what he has said in this matter, and I would suggest to my right hon. friend the leader of the government (Mr. Mackenzie King) that he grant us an assurance that to-night, if it becomes necessary, we can continue after nine o'clock with private bills. I do not anticipate there is going to be much difficulty with private bills if we have a little extra time; perhaps we will not need any.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I were in a position to give the assurance required on behalf of the whole House I should be very glad to do so. Speaking for this side of the House, I have no hesitation in saying that we will be prepared to do what my hon. friend suggests; he no doubt can speak for his party; and the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Gardiner) can speak for his. If all three are agreed I think that will dispose of the difficulty which we are now labouring under.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not finished by any means. If the House is agreed that we shall have ample time this evening to consider private bills, I am willing to withdraw my motion; otherwise I certainly am not.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let it stand.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The mere statement that if somebody else will do something the right hon. gentleman will do something is no assurance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. leader of the opposition has, I take it, given assurance on behalf of his party, and I have given an assurance for this side of the House. The only party from which no assurance has come is that in my hon. friend's own quarter.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of personal interest to some members in this corner of the House, and I have not had an opportunity of consulting with them. Consequently I cannot give any assurance.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have assurances from the largest group and from the second largest group in the House. Possibly we can use our persuasive power sufficiently to persuade the smallest group to follow suit. All I desire is that every private bill should get the consideration of this House. If the majority are against any bill they will of course defeat it, but the House should pass judgment and not any group or individual. I hope that that course will be pursued this evening.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Is it the hon gentleman's view that when a bill is brought before the House the House should have a chance to vote on it, and that it should not be deliberately obstructed?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Yes. After every bill is reported from the committee that has considered it, it should then be considered by this House and disposed of.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the hon. gentleman have leave to withdraw his motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion withdrawn.

PRIVATE BILLS

MOTION FOR THIRD READINGS

Mr. A. M. YOUNG (Saskatoon) moved:

That Bills No. 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, being unopposed divorce bills which have been reported by the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills be now read the third time, and that rule 28 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to on division.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

ALLIED INDIAN TRIBES OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. L. S. R. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) moved:

That the second and final report of the special committee appointed to inquire into the claims of the allied Indian tribes of British Columbia, as set forth in their petition of June 1926, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

INVESTIGATION OF SUBSIDIARY OF TELEPHONE OR TELEGRAPH COMPANIES

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 336, to amend the Railway Act, 1919 (investigation of subsidiary of telephone or telegraph companies).

Mr. DUNNING: Explain.

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to extend the jurisdiction of the Dominion Board of Railway Commissioners. There are companies, one of which is in my mind, having to do with telephones and telegraphs, under the jurisdiction of the board. These companies may have their affairs investigated by the board with a view to ascertaining their profits, or what return it is fair to allow them by way of price they charge the consumer of their product.

Such company may have a great part of its business in the hands of a subsidiary company, which company—as in the case in my mind—is controlled by the company under the jurisdiction of the board and feeds on the parent company by virtue of having practically a monopoly in the sale of the products required by the parent company. That subsidiary company may, and in the case I have in mind does, make tremendous profits. With the parent company it does upwards of twelve or thirteen million dollars' worth of business out of a total turnover of twenty million dollars. The purpose of the bill is to enable the Board of Railway Commissioners to ascertain whether profits made by the subsidiary company should be paid in the form of dividends to the parent company instead of their being put away into reserve or dealt with in such a way as to be concealed. If the profits were turned over to the parent company they would to that extent relieve the consumer of the product.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LETHBRIDGE MINE WORKERS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Stewart) to a situation that seems to have arisen at Lethbridge, Alberta, according to a telegram which I have just received. It reads as follows:

> Resolution passed joint meeting sub district board miners union and coal committee board of trade, Lethbridge, whereas mines in this district practically shut down and other employment impossible for miners resolved that we press federal government to take immediate steps relieve situation. Wider markets essential. We urge that railway commission cost report be brought in at once.
> JAS. SLOAN,
> Sub district board member.

ITALIAN IMMIGRATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) whether there is any agreement between the Canadian government and the Italian government with regard to the bringing out of Italian labourers?

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration): I do not think there is any agreement whatever between the Italian government and the Canadian railways.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am afraid the minister did not get the question; certainly he did not answer it. I asked whether there was any agreement between the Canadian and the Italian governments regarding the bringing out of Italian labourers.

Mr. FORKE: The best answer is no.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of Customs and Excise) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 119, to amend the Excise Act.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of Customs and Excise) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 172, to amend the Customs Act.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the nature of the amendments?

Mr. EULER: The amendments are merely in the nature of corrections. There are only two; in the one case the Senate has changed the word "and" to "or," as was intended by the Commons, and in the other case it has inserted the words "for duty" in connection with the value of $200 under which a smuggler may be prosecuted and sentenced to prison. The Senate has merely confirmed what we intended to do but omitted from the record by oversight.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 260, to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. CANNON: The purpose of the amendment introduced by the Senate is to make the bill clearer as to the time of its coming into force. The bill will not come into force before June 30, and the amendment provides that sections 1 and 2 of the act shall come into force on the thirtieth day of June, 1927, and that in the meantime the operation of subsection 2 of section 19 of the Dominion Elections Act shall stand suspended. I am satisfied with the amendment.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

APPOINTMENT OF MR. JULES CASTONGUAY AS SUCCESSOR TO COLONEL O. M. BIGGAR

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In connection with the bill which has now passed both Houses for the appointment of a Chief Electoral Officer, it is provided that the appointment shall be made by resolution of the House. I stated during the course of the discussion on the bill that I would confer with my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) to see whether we could not agree upon a name. We are in agreement upon a name which I think will be acceptable to all. I would therefore ask the House for its consent to allow me at this stage to move the following resolution, which contains the name my hon. friend and I have agreed to submit to the House:

That, in conformity with the provisions of Bill No. 260, An Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act which was passed by both Houses of Parliament, Jules Castonguay be designated as the successor of Oliver Mowat Biggar as Chief Electoral Officer.

Mr. Castonguay has been for over twenty years in the office which has had charge of the work of supervising elections. Formerly elections were conducted by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and Mr. Castonguay was appointed assistant in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery over twenty years ago. When the change was made and a chief electoral officer appointed some seven years ago, Mr. Castonguay was made his assistant. He has been a very efficient officer, is permanently in the service of the government, and this resolution is a recognition of his merit and proposes what we regard as a very appropriate appointment. Mr. Biggar, who has been Chief Electoral Officer, informs me that he cannot speak too highly of Mr. Castonguay's qualifications for the position.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Leader of the Opposition): I have only to say that it gives me great pleasure to second this motion. I have known Mr. Castonguay a very long time. While the Dominion Elections Act was under discussion in the House five or six years ago I had a great deal to do with him and an ample opportunity for ascertaining his qualifications for a position such as this. I know too that Colonel Oliver Mowat Biggar, the retiring Chief Electoral Officer, who has had very intimate relations with Mr. Castonguay, expresses the opinion that he is well qualified for the position. I have therefore pleasure in seconding the motion.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): This is the first intimation we in this group have had as to whom the government proposes for the position. The position is quite an important one, and naturally all sections of the House should agree as to the person to be called upon to assume it. So far as we in this corner are concerned, we have not been consulted in the matter; we knew nothing about the name to be proposed. I would therefore ask the Prime Minister to let the matter stand until to-morrow, and in the meantime we will make inquiries as to the fitness of the gentleman proposed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am agreeable to my hon. friend's suggestion if he considers it desirable to have the matter stand. May I say to him, however, that there was no intention of being discourteous either to him or to any of those about him in not conferring with him in the matter. If he will refer to what I said when the subject was under discussion on a former occasion he will find that I made the statement that I would confer with the leader of the opposition. There are some questions regarding arrangements such as govern the whole House in connection with which the government and the opposition as such must confer. It is conceivable that we may at some time or other have eight or ten groups in the House, in which event it would be impossible to secure agreement on anything. On these matters, I suggest, where the law lays down a course of procedure which recognizes a government and an opposition as such, it ought not to be inferred that there is any intentional discourtesy in following that course.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): It seems to me that the position taken by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) is particularly sound. I am quite sure the Prime Minister had no intention of being unnecessarily discourteous, but at the same time, having in mind the excellent spirit of coöperation that existed last year between our group and the Prime Minister's party one would have thought that in his own interest, and with the view to developing a coöperative spirit in the House, he would have been induced to consult our group as well as the leader of the opposition. His failure to do so does not however entirely offend me. It tickles my sense of humor to realize that the forecast I made in my budget speech, of a close coalition between Liberals and Conservatives, is being justified. The suggestion of the hon. member for Acadia is worth considering. I think the appointment is an excellent one, and personally I approve of the principle of promotion by merit in the service, so I do not think it will be questioned. But after all, we must have some respect for the dignity of our own group, and I trust that in future the Prime Minister will see fit to consult with those who are always willing to coöperate in the public interest.

Mr. POULIOT: Is my hon. friend the leader of a thirteenth group?

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Stand.

Mr. SPEAKER: There was no notice given.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then let it stand.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

SUPPLY—ALBERTA COAL

CONDITION OF MINERS—TRANSPORTATION TO EASTERN CANADA

Hon. J. A. ROBB moved that the House go into committee of supply.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into supply I regret the necessity which compels me to introduce a subject which I would wish had not arisen at this late date of the session. During the past few days I have received a series of telegrams describing a pitiable condition in the province from which I come, and particularly in the constituency which I represent. On the orders of the day the leader of the opposition read a telegram from the Lethbridge board of trade relating to conditions there, and I now wish to place on Hansard one or two other telegrams which describe very vividly the conditions in my own constituency. On April 2, I received this telegram:

> There are about two thousand mine workers out of work at present in the Drumheller valley. This has caused great distress and we would urge upon you the necessity for parliament taking immediate action to relieve the suffering of these men and their families which is growing more intense each passing week in any possible way you may determine.

I did my duty on that occasion and drew the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) to the condition indicated by this telegram. While the reply he gave me may have been the only one he could give, it was wholly unsatisfactory and unsympathetic. In effect he said that an investigation was being made by the Department of Labour into these conditions, but in the meantime the suffering is continuing. I now come to the second telegram, as follows:

> Provincial government investigation—

Which was undertaken much more speedily than the investigation by this government:

> —discloses acute distress in Drumheller. Hundreds of miners idle owing to shut down and no credit available. Immediate resumption of work in mines best solution. Your immediate coöperation and action earnestly solicited. Work only possible solution, reply early.

That telegram is signed by the secretary and president of Local 59 of the United Mine Workers' Association of America. I now come to the telegram which I received this morning, and to which I would call the attention of the Minister of Immigration, reminding him of the pleas made from this side of the House from time to time that some action be taken to protect the people against the utterly unjust, misleading, inaccurate and false promises made by shipping immigration agents and others to induce people to come to this country in the belief that they will be provided with steady employment at remunerative wages. This telegram which is dated April 11, is as follows:

> Immigrants arriving Drumheller promised work coal mines quite number here now without funds and charge on community. Please advise government unless they can provide work through Ontario market to have immigrants directed elsewhere. Our own unemployment problem with mines closed too serious to countenance further immigration here.

That is signed by the Drumheller board of trade, whose members certainly are not of the radical type, and who would not put words of this kind into a telegram for presentation to this House if the situation did not compel them to do so. The next telegram is the one placed on record by the leader of the opposition this morning, and is as follows:

> Resolution passed joint meeting subdistrict board miners union and coal committee board of trade Lethbridge. Whereas mines in this district practically shut down and other employment impossible for miners, resolved that we press federal government to take immediate steps relieve situation. Wider markets essential. We urge that railway commission cost report be brought in at once.

This House will recall that just over a year ago, on February 13, 1926, as a result of the efforts made by members of the House from the province from which I come, the administration were induced to bring in an order in council instructing the Board of Railway Commissioners to undertake an investigation into the actual cost of transporting coal for a special seasonal movement, which order in council urged the railway commission to undertake an immediate investigation. It was not the intention of the government nor indeed of those associated with the government to have the railway commission unduly delay this hearing. Then what happened? First of all, the basis of the inquiry was to be the out of pocket cost, that is, the cost exclusive of the expenses the railway would have to meet whether or not this coal was moved; the railway board were directed to report on the cost both exclusive and inclusive of that expense.

On February 24, 1926, Mr. Woods, counsel for the province of Alberta, speaking on this occasion for the province of Ontario as well, asked the board to set a date for a hearing at which would be determined what information the provinces would need from the railways in order to complete their case. On April 16, 1926, such a hearing took place and the railways were directed to provide counsel with a great quantity of information which was considered essential. It took all summer for the railways to amass this information; there certainly must have been a great deal of it, or else there must have been some very unnecessary delay. The experts came together, but by the fall the board were engaged on the general freight rate inquiry, so the investigation into the coal rates drifted along. An attempt was made by Mr. Woods on behalf of Alberta and Ontario in December last, because of the urgency of this question and because of the absolute need of having the board report to parliament before prorogation, to have the board take up this inquiry as the first order of business after they reconvened in January, 1927, and it was believed that the inquiry would not take more than two or three days. This the board definitely refused to do under a judgment given on December 16, 1926, in which they stated that they would not take up the coal rate inquiry which was of such immediate importance until the general freight rate inquiry was concluded. On February 10, 1927, Mr. Woods representing Alberta and Mr. Lawson representing Ontario again brought the matter before the railway board with the object of avoiding any delay in going on with the coal inquiry as soon as the general freight rate inquiry was over, and the railways then insisted that they would need two months after their experts were released from the general freight rate inquiry, to enable them to prepare their figures for the second inquiry. As it was then thought that the general freight rates inquiry would be finished by March 15, the board ordered a preliminary meeting of the experts of the two provinces and of the railway companies on May 15, two months after they were expected to conclude the general freight rate inquiry. At this meeting both sides were to produce their figures of costs and the points of difference would be defined. The final hearing on these points was to take place on June 7, 1927.

An attempt was also made in this House by hon. members in the U.F.A. group to induce the Minister of Railways or the administration as a whole to take such steps they might properly take to get the railway board to expedite this hearing. The order in council which I have under my hand was particularly specific. It asked for an immediate examination and report upon the actual out of pocket cost of moving the coal. Why was it utterly necessary that this be immediate? Because we all understood that it would take some time to gather the facts and for the board to make and present its findings. That being the case, we realized that if action was to be taken at the coming session of parliament, the findings of the board should be in the hands of the government during the session and preferably early in the session. Every effort was made by this group and by our Alberta counsel before the board to have this action taken that was so necessary. The chairman of the board was advised again and again that if he delayed this hearing, the solution of the question as regards Alberta would go over for another season and it would not be dealt with until the next session of this parliament, with the result that no coal would move to Ontario for another year.

As a result of the decisions laid down by the board, we have now exactly the situation which we feared. We have a situation in which the board's refusal to make this inquiry in January last has now so delayed the question that the inquiry will not take place until after this House has prorogued and so too late for action by this parliament. That action by this parliament will be necessary is quite apparent from the wording of the order in council which does not give to the board any power to set the rate. All the board has power to do is to determine the cost rate on the values agreed upon between the railways and representatives of the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Once the board has found that and reported thereon to the government or parliament, its duties have ceased. It is then for the government to bring in statutory legislation making that rate effective.

As hon. gentlemen can readily see, the desperate conditions in the province in which I represent one constituency would certainly indicate that some remedial measure should be taken. I have simply this to suggest and I took the liberty of suggesting it the other day to the minister and following it up by letter. Having consulted with him previously in the matter, with his permission I will read a letter which I wrote him in that connection:

Ottawa, Ontario, April 7, 1927.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART,
Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. STEWART,

Following up my conversation with you of yesterday, in which I brought to your attention the necessity for some action by parliament at this session to enable the government to bring into effect whatever cost rate may be determined by the Board of Railway Commissioners as a result of the investigation into the actual cost of the transportation of coal.

May I recall to your attention the nature of our conversation—you will recollect that an order in council instructed the board to make this investigation and no powers were given to your board to set the rate that might be determined to be used as the coal rate. It is therefore quite clear to me that should the board of its own volition, attempt to set this rate (which of course is most improbable) the railways would at once serve an injunction upon that body.

I expressed the opinion to you if the Alberta coal operators are ever to secure a portion of the Ontario market, it will be necessary for the administrators to introduce a bill providing for a special seasonal cost rate for the movement of the coal.

I do most earnestly urge upon you, as the minister representing the province from which we both come, the necessity to secure from this parliament before it prorogues the necessary powers to enable you to put into effect the rate that will be allowed by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Yours very truly,

This is signed by myself. I have already briefly reviewed my reasons for doing this. Some exception may be taken by hon. gentlemen that to give such a blanket authority to a minister would be a dangerous matter. I submit that it would not in this case for this reason. If the out-of-pocket cost rate to be found by the board is to be at all effective in the movement of coal, that rate will have to be no more than $7 a ton. From my examination of this question, from the evidence given before our coal committees year after year by experts of both railways, I am satisfied that the out-of-pocket cost rate will vary somewhere between $6 and $7. I am satisfied therefore that the only spread, the only blanket right that need be granted in this matter is to set a limitation within a matter of a few cents. I would be quite satisfied if the administration could now take authority to put into effect the cost rate when it is determined, if that cost rate is less than $7 and not more than $6. That leaves them within a limitation of $1 for this coal rate.

May I repeat that the condition in my province justifies drastic action by this House? The miners there—and I know them only too well—have from year to year periodic, seasonal employment scattered over a period of from three to four months during only two of which they will have constant labour, and during the balance of the year they are picking up jobs wherever they can. No intellligent effort is being made by provincial or federal labour bureaux to transport these men at reasonable railway rates so that they may find employment during the slack season in some other occupation and to bring them back to the coal mines during the winter. Surely we ought to be able to work out some scheme whereby some occupations which are distinctly seasonal might be combined in order to spread employment over the whole year. There is a possibility in that direction; but in the meantime the crying need is markets for our coal.

We have ample coal of the finest quality for domestic purposes and there is no question as to the favour with which public opinion in Ontario has received our coal. The whole matter now rests with the administration. The people in this great province of Ontario will take the coal if they can get it at a reasonable rate. They are willing to pay within a reasonable margin of anthracite prices for it, and in passing I may say they are well advised in so being willing because, taking all in all, the wise householder can get as much heat value and with much less waste out of our Alberta coal than out of anthracite. However, at this stage of the session I do not want to go into the relative merits of our coal; it is indeed already well and favourably known.

I wish to ask now that the administration state definitely to me and to the House what their policy is going to be in this regard. I have not asked too much; all I have asked is that the cost rate to be determined by the board shall, as soon as determined and reported upon, be enacted into an effective measure so that the movement of coal may at once take place. The coal could start moving during the summer months when the rate would be in operation. The people of Ontario will welcome it with open arms, and they are accustomed to get in their coal supply during the summer months. Give them an opportunity to do that and you will enormously increase the prosperity and comfort of two of the great provinces of this Dominion.

Mr. L. H. JELLIFF (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I have the same telegram from the Lethbridge board of trade as that read by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) and referred to by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). I am deeply sympathetic with this message. The situation there is such that we have to find a remedy for it. It exists and comes forward to trouble our councils year after year, and it is time, Mr. Speaker, that some definite steps be taken to meet this problem. True it is that the winter is over and the prairie demand for coal has diminished, and the men who are engaged in the mines may expect less employment than they have had during the cold winter season. It is also true that more or less employment can be secured in the seeding operations which will soon be in full blast throughout the district which I represent, but at the same time that does not permanently and efficiently solve the problem which exists there. We have been chasing this problem from one side to the other during the last five years in which I have been a member of this House, and still we seem to be little closer to a solution of it than we were five years ago. We have tried through orders in council, through references to the board of railway commissioners, and through the taking of evidence month after month and year after year to arrive at some basis for a settlement of this problem, but as I said we are no closer to a solution than we were several years ago. I have got to the point myself where I feel that this problem can only be met definitely and finally by the passing of an act by this parliament fixing a rate at which coal from Alberta can be carried to the central provinces. That would put the question beyond all peradventure of dispute. After such an act is passed, we can determine from actual experience how it works out, and if it fails to work out well, if we find that it places too big a burden on this country or upon the transportation system, it will be an easy matter for us to repeal that act. I want to point out to the Prime Minister that we have a precedent, and a very good precedent, for dealing with this matter in the way I suggest in the action we have taken in regard to freight rates in the maritime provinces, and the rates on grain and flour under the Crowsnest pass agreement. I urge upon the government to bring forward a measure fixing a rate more or less based upon the investigations which have been carried on into the shipment of coal in trainload lots during the last four years. Let us try this method out and see if it works, so that we can definitely settle this problem for the good of our great coal mining industry.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): In reply to the reference made to the Minister of Labour by my good friend opposite, I may say that I received on April the first the same telegram that he did, and the very next day I had a man on the job looking into the situation, because I was not sure whether it was employment or unemployment relief that these men were asking for. The investigator is a very able man. He went into the coal district and there ascertained that the men were looking for work, not relief. I conveyed to the rest of my colleagues my suggestions as to the best ways and means of securing work for them, and that matter is still under consideration at the present time. I also took the matter up personally with Mr. Brownlee, the provincial premier, and he too is looking into the matter, all with the object of trying to provide work for the men in that district. I pointed out to Mr. Brownlee, when he was here, that if it was not a very serious affair and any financial assistance was required, I thought they ought to provide it locally, and he went back the same night for the purpose of going into the matter and conferring with me again.

The hon. member said that I did not give a very sympathetic answer. Well, the only thing I could do was to ascertain just what the real trouble was, and that message was the first intimation I had that there was any real trouble in the coal fields, and the very next day after receiving it I had a man investigating the situation right on the ground. He went right amongst the miners to find out what they wanted, and from all the correspondence it appears that they do not want relief, but work. That matter, as I say, is under consideration and I can assure my hon. friend that as far as I am concerned I shall do the very best I can.

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I might say a few words in reply to the hon. member's references to immigrants coming into this country. If we do not want immigrants, of course there is no more to be said. The trouble in Alberta in the coal mines may be serious enough in itself, but after all, it is confined to the locality, and is a matter all by itself. There is no doubt that quite a number of immigrants are coming in, but the season has been very backward in western Canada and seeding has been delayed, and consequently there may be some little trouble for a time. Although I know and thoroughly believe that we need more population in this country, I am very well aware of the fact that you cannot have from 150,000 to 200,000 immigrants coming into a country in any one year without dislocating employment conditions to a certain extent. That is inevitable, but I have no hesitation in saying that six weeks from now no one will be idle in western Canada who is seeking employment.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): With regard to the problem brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), one would gather from his remarks that he believes that action by the railway commission, or by the government consequent upon extraordinary powers being given to it by this parliament, might conceivably solve the present unemployment difficulty among the miners in Drumheller. I feel that he did not mean to convey that impression, but by linking the two things together he was apparently proposing a remedy for the presently existing disease. I feel that he did not wish to convey that impression, but that was the impression I gathered from his remarks. On that point might I say this: I have very great doubts if any action by the railway commission or any action that is taken with respect to freight rates will eliminate the seasonal nature of work in the Alberta coal fields. Personally, having conducted somewhat of an examination into possible markets, I cannot see how it is possible to overcome completely the seasonal rush and the seasonal slack time in the Alberta coal fields with the markets at present in sight and in view of the time and manner in which the people in those markets will consent to take the coal made available to them by the mine operators of Alberta and other places.

But the problem goes very much deeper even than that. There is nothing to prevent the mines of Alberta from constantly enlarging their seasonal capacity. That factor, as my hon. friend well knows, is very largely the controlling one in mining operations. If there is a large seasonal demand, every mine will so equip itself with mechanical devices and labour to attempt to take the fullest possible advantage of that seasonal demand. When that is the case, inevitably there follows a slack time. I am not endeavouring to convey the impression that the problem is not possible of solution, but rather that it is not one that can be solved by devising some measure of freight rate relief as between Alberta and Ontario, although that, of course might be a mitigating factor. My hon. friend referred to the order in council of last February. I have it before me, and I think he will agree that it does provide for the kind of examination into this matter which was desired by those most nearly interested, both in the coal producing sections of Alberta and in the coal consuming sections of Ontario.

I regret the delay on the part of the railway commission as much as he can possibly do. I might respectfully point out however that the work of the general rate inquiry has been very heavy. I am not now defending the railway commission, but I must remind the House that they are not supermen. There is only a certain amount of time in every day, and when counsel for the two provinces interested are also engaged in arguing the matter of the general freight equalization, it is difficult to see how the railway commission could have moved much faster in connection with the coal rate inquiry. Everything the government could do to expedite the work of the commission with regard to this particular matter has, I assure my hon. friend, been done. I, personally, have made representations to the chairman in regard to the necessity for expedition. I now understand from what my hon. friend says—and it is confirmed in other ways—that a definite move is to be made, I think he said on May 15.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, the hearing will be on June 7.

Mr. DUNNING: But the preliminary conference of the experts was to take place on May 15. We can therefore expect a conclusion reasonably soon after June 7, in time for the government to be made aware of the nature of the report, in time for parliament to act as soon as it meets at the next session, in accordance with whatever policy may be decided on, as a result of the report of the board on the matter of cost, plus profit, or without profit, as the case may be. My hon. friend indicated in his remarks that the railway commission were asked to determine the cost. I would respectfully point out to him that the order in council goes much further than that. It asks for several methods of computation. I think there will be, as a ressult of the bottom paragraph on the first page of the order, probably four or five separate statements received by the government from the railway commission as a result of the work. My hon. friend suggests extraordinary legislation. He suggests that parliament should be asked now to give to the government blanket authority to put into effect whatever rates it sees fit, as a result of this report.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, I made my statement very specific, because I was afraid, if I did not do so, the minister would use the very argument he is now using. I suggested that they should take authority to set a rate provided it was within six or seven dollars—within that one dollar limitation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not less than six nor more than seven dollars.

Mr. DUNNING: Between six and seven dollars a ton. Well, I do not think that improves the suggestion.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is a limitation of one dollar.

Mr. DUNNING: It is surely an unique authority to place in the hands of the government, a suggestion I have not previously heard. But the point I want to make in connection with it is that such action on the part of the government, even if it had the power at the time, following a report of the board of railway commissioners in connection with the matter, would not relieve the present unemployment situation upon which my hon. friend rested his whole case this morning, to advance or to convey the idea—I do not suggest my hon. friend did so wittingly—that something could be done along this line which would have the effect of relieving the distressful conditions complained of.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think I used that as an illustration of the conditions and the constant recurring need of some provision, as the strongest reason for immediate action by parliament in regard to special rates.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps I misunderstood my hon. friend in that regard. That was certainly the impression I gathered from his remarks, based as they were on telegrams calling attention to presently existing conditions. There is a very vital matter of principle involved, may I say, in any decision which may be reached by this parliament on this matter of freight rates on coal from Alberta to Ontario. We might adopt any one of several courses in relation thereto. For instance, should parliament say that the railway companies must haul coal without a cent of profit and let it go at that, or should parliament adopt the principle that the railway companies should charge a certain rate, and that part of the rate should be borne by the Dominion and part by the shippers of the coal? There are several ways of looking at the problem, and if I remember correctly, when it was my duty to introduce here not very long ago a measure having to do with the maritime provinces and their freight rates, the only opposition to it came from my hon. friends in that corner of the House, who are advocating in this connection the same general principle in respect of their coal industry with relation to the market of Ontario.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I can hardly accept that statement as completely fair. We are not asking for any rate below cost. We are asking a rate at which the coal can move without loss to the railway. We are not asking for a twenty per cent reduction all through.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend draws a fine distinction. Apparently he is willing, in connection with this commodity and this particular haul, to say to the railways, "On this particular class of traffic you are not entitled to any profit." He draws a distinction between that and the measure adopted with respect to the maritime province freight rates of paying for the twenty per cent cut ordered by parliament. He is capable of drawing distinctions too fine for my understanding, because I can see very little difference between those two propositions in principle. However, that may be, the intention of the government with regard to the mattter is well set out in the order in council, and I can say to my hon. friend, and others who may be interested, that the moment we get this information from the Board of Railway Commissioners as a government we will move in one of two directions. First, we intend to find out immediately from the nature of the report received whether the railway commission would have authority to do anything to meet any of the recommendations made which might appear to have the effect desired. That would be one course. The second course would be that I might undertake, as Minister of Railways, immediately to confer with the management of the Canadian National Railways, at all events, and probably with the Canadian Pacific Railway, who, I presume, would also be willing to confer on the matter, as to how far the railways would be prepared to go in advance of the meeting of parliament, having regard to the information made available to the government as a result of the inquiry by the Board of Railway Commissioners. That is as far as the government is prepared to go at the moment, all with the objective of bringing if possible, some relief to the situation prior to the next meeting of parliament; but I do think this parliament will desire to express itself upon the principle involved in legislation which will create for the first time a special rate in respect of transportation of one commodity from one part of Canada to another part of Canada. A very wide and important principle is involved in that. But in so far as the government can move upon the basis of the information we expect to receive from the Board of Railway Commissioners, the government will move along lines designed to mitigate the situation and widen the market for Alberta coal.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In view of the position the minister has just now taken, would he not secure the coöperation of his colleagues in order to remove the immediate distress in the district and bring into effect a supplementary estimate, in order to help move that coal, until he can put into effect the policy he has just enunciated? That would immediately relieve the situation.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot give an immediate answer to such a question. The hon. member is aware that it is much easier for hon. gentlemen to make suggestions than it is for the minister responsible to give offhand a reply as to a matter involving the expenditure of public money. My hon. friend well knows that this would be a subject of governmental policy. Efforts have been made in the past along that line, and they have not been attended with the very best success.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have just a word to say in regard to this matter which has been introduced by my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland). The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) has stated that in this question there are certain principles at stake, and he has discussed them. But one great principle he has not discussed. The situation to-day is this; the miners of Alberta want work, and the people of Ontario want coal. The principle at stake is: shall the Canadian people use Canadian coal? That is the principle which this government should undertake to apply. It should have a definite policy to lay before the House. For the last six years this has been a perennial subject of debate; but we have got nowhere—we have reached no conclusion, we have relieved no situation. Now, to anyone who takes an interest in this question—and my direct interest is only that of an Ontario consumer—it is discouraging when one recalls how the treatment of this subject has been delayed. I believe the order in council of February which has been referred to was not passed last February, but a year ago last February.

Mr. DUNNING: February, 1926.

Mr. GUTHRIE: On that order in council passed in February, 1926, we have as yet had no action. The matter was referred to the Board of Railway Commissioners; there it rests. An intimation is given to the House to-day that probably in June some finding will be made by the Board of Railway Commissioners, or that they will begin to deal with the question.

That brings me to the constitution of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Justice is not being done in this country to-day in regard to railway rates, and has not been done for the last two or three years, the reason being that the Board of Railway Commissioners, as at present constituted, are unable to do the work which has been delegated to them by the Railway Act and, in many instances, directed by this parliament. What are we going to do with that situation? It cannot go on as it is now. Is the government prepared to increase the personnel of that board and to divide it up, or is it prepared to divide up the present board, and allow us to have two boards sitting at the same time? If it requires the full membership of the present board to decide the cases which are referred to it, then it is quite within the range of possibility that there will be no finding on this coal question for another year, perhaps two years. What are the miners of Alberta and the people of Ontario to do in the meantime? There is a solution of this question, and so far as Ontario is concerned we complain of the delay in finding the solution.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to deal with the constitution of the railway board. I regret the delay in dealing with this matter as much as any member of this House, and I think a great many of our difficulties would be solved by more speedy decisions with respect to railway rates, particularly in regard to the complaint of the hon. member for Bow River. But my information from the locality from which the complaint comes is that during the past season a larger amount of coal has been mined than usual, and that the difficulty at the present moment is due to the local merchants having declined to continue to give the miners credit for supplies as in former years.

With respect to the movement of Alberta coal, I wish simply to point out that the special committee convened a year ago recommended a trial shipment of coal by rail and water. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that I made provision for that trial shipment. Let me remind those who are always talking about the anxiety of Ontario people to get Alberta coal, that they do not want our coal unless they can buy it as cheaply as the coal they are now getting from the States. That attitude is quite reasonable, but it makes the problem still more difficult of solution. There are two courses available. One is to put on a duty and shut out American coal, thus raising the price to the Ontario consumer. I assume that would be the policy my hon. friends opposite would adopt as a solution?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I hope so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend says he hopes so. That is the policy his party would adopt as a solution. It, of course, involves a higher price to the Ontario consumer. That is not the policy of this government. My hon. friend says we have delayed a solution of this problem, but I think he will agree with me, as will any other hon. gentlemen who have given the subject careful consideration, that it is an absolute impossibility to bring bituminous coal from Alberta into Ontario without increasing the price to such an extent that a very grave hardship would be imposed upon the manufacturing interests of the province. But we do think we can move lignite, and we have offered subventions for this purpose. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Bennett) last fall during the election campaign offered a subvention for the movement of 2,000 tons from Drumheller and another shipment from Lethbridge to Ontario. Only the movement from Drumheller took place. When we came into office, I conferred with the operators to see if they were not desirous of moving the balance of that coal, but in the course of the conference at Edmonton they pointed out to me that what they were anxious to get was a rate to move a large volume of coal as a seasonal proposition as provided for in the order in council. I had hoped that that decision would have been made. As I say, I provided for the trial shipment by rail and water. But I am informed—I may as well be open about this—that our people in Ontario who will handle the coal have no faith in the movement, that the deterioration would be too great. They say the movement must be by rail alone. With that view I am bound to say I agree, but I am prepared to carry out the recommendation of the committee. I am just as anxious as anyone else to secure the movement of a million or a million and a half tons of lignite coal from Alberta into Ontario. The people here are satisfied with that, but it is important that we move the coal at a price that will not increase the cost to the consumer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The great question is, when are we to get action? We have been waiting six years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It has been maintained by representatives of Ontario and Alberta, who are on the board, that they can substantiate the claim that coal can be moved at $7 a ton, which will be out-of-pocket cost to the railways.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. BENNETT: No, not out-of-pocket cost.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My understanding is that no overhead is to be charged in addition to the cost of moving.

Mr. BENNETT: But we knew what that was last fall.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The railway companies dispute it. I am simply stating what representations have been made by the two provinces: they claim that they can substantiate this assertion to the satisfaction of the board. It must be a $7 rate or even lower than that before we can move the coal without increasing the price to the consumer. But if that can be done I see no reason why the quantity suggested cannot be transported. The statement is frequently made about $100,000,000 now going into the United States and which could be saved if we mined our own coal. That is a most erroneous statement to make. It is not possible unless we shut out altogether the 17,000,000 tons of bituminous coal which is coming from the United States. And I have not heard anyone with the hardihood to suggest that. I am bound to say that in my opinion it would impose upon our manufacturing industries such a handicap as would make their survival impossible.

Mr. GOTT: What was the situation when the American strike was on?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There was no bituminous coal moved during that strike. Bituminous coal can be moved from Nova Scotia by an all-water route into a considerable proportion of Ontario, but not without increasing the cost. We have been devoting our attention simply to the domestic field, and I hope we shall secure the $7 rate which will enable us to move a million or a million and a half tons into Ontario. If that is not done I would even go so far as to suggest, as a member of the government, that we do something in this matter just as we did in connection with freight rates in Nova Scotia to meet a situation that does not prevail in other parts of Canada. I would say that parliament under those circumstances would be warranted in lending the necessary assistance to bring lignite into the Ontario field to the extent I have mentioned. On this matter I have taken the advice of members of the railway board and also of the legal department, and the two disagree. My officials are told by members of the railway board that this rate can be put into effect by order in council, but that view is not shared by eminent lawyers. I fail to understand how the Canadian National Railways could resist to put into effect a rate fixed by the board and accepted by the governor in council until such time as parliament might deal with the matter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Sir Henry Thornton himself, in a letter to the minister dated May 6 last, definitely indicated his attitude

> We will not voluntarily depart from the $9 rate, and we must resist by every reasonable and legal method any reduction in our gross revenue which might take place should any lower rate be named by the railway board.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He was referring to the $9 rate. That is correct. He said they would oppose before the board the application of a lower rate. However, I do not see why he would not put into effect until such time as parliament might take legislative action, a rate suggested after investigation by the board and requested by order in council.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): It is my opinion that the best solution for our land settlement problem is to send an immigration officer into Drumheller and to give assistance to those men who are willing to go on the land. If we did that we could solve the unemployment problem that now exists. I admit that there is seasonal employment, but at the same time there are too many in the industry, both in Sydney and at Drumheller, in proportion to the quantity of coal we are using. I do not think that coal can be economically moved from Drumheller into the cities of Ontario. Sir Henry Thornton speaks of a $9 rate while the minister hopes to secure a rate of $6 or $7. Now we have been continually told in this House that western grain is hauled at a loss. From Saskatoon to Montreal, grain costs 34½ cents per bushel or $11.49 per ton. If coal can be hauled at a rate of $6 or $7 a ton when grain cannot be carried except at a loss, paying $11.49, it is a mystery to me. There must be quite as much work in connection with the moving of coal as there is in moving grain: the trains would have to be broken up in every town and village. In other words, we are trying by uneconomical means to find a market for Alberta and Sydney coal, and that cannot be done. The natural place for Drumheller coal is across the boundary. The United States has for many years offered us free trade in coal, and I cannot see why we should not accept that as a solution for the present problem. Evidently the policy we are now following is a failure, and taking one thing with another it seems to me that it is impossible to haul coal into Ontario from Alberta at such a rate as will be economical.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I want to make a last appeal for the unemployed. Reference has been made to the unemployed in Drumheller. In the last few weeks I have received scores of communications from almost every industrial centre from coast to coast regarding the situation. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) says to-day with reference to Drumheller, that the men require work and not relief. He should not stop there. If there are in this country large numbers of people who want work and not relief it is the duty of the government to provide that work. It is absurd that we should be spending millions of dollars in an effort to bring men into Canada while there are already in the country thousands who need work. We must recognize that fact. The Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) puts it off by suggesting that there may be some little trouble. Let me assure him that it is not a small trouble, nor is it local or temporary in character. It has existed year after year and has brought dire suffering to thousands of families. We may frankly admit that we have a great deal of seasonal labour in Canada, but simply to recognize that fact is not to absolve ourselves from doing anything further. To suggest anything of the kind is very wide of the mark. If we have considerable seasonal labour in Canada the Minister of Immigration and the Minister of Labour ought to get together and devise some means of providing employment to those who need it, instead of allowing individuals to suffer. The situation is becoming more and more aggravated by the influx of large numbers of immigrants from Europe. I want to read to the Minister of Immigration and the Minister of Labour a resolution passed the other day by the city council of Regina, the constituency of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning). It was adopted on April 5, and was forwarded to me by some persons in Regina interested in the situation. It seems to me fairly to state the situation prevailing in a large number of our industrial communities.

> Whereas from time to time men seeking employment of a seasonal or casual nature are stranded without visible means of subsistence in our midst, although the labour of these men is of primary importance in the production and harvesting of our field crops and in the development of our country generally:
> And whereas the Dominion and provincial authorities by advertisement and the provision of special, low transportation rates to immigrants and men seeking seasonal employment, encourage these men to migrate without seeing that some provision is made for their protection against possible destitution or starvation during unseasonable climatic conditions and periods of unemployment;

And whereas a large number of such men have been arrested in this city and sentenced to varying terms of imprisonment as vagrants, while in some instances such arrests have been made by the police to protect men from the pangs of hunger and the danger of starvation;

And whereas in the opinion of this council the sentencing to jail of persons whose only crime is that of poverty and destitution is inhuman, unjust and anti-social;

Therefore be it resolved that we bring these conditions to the immediate attention of the premiers of the Dominion and of the province, to the federal Ministers of Labour and of Immigration and to the members for Regina in our parliament and legislative assembly, together with the urgent request that steps be taken forthwith to remedy the existing situation and prevent its recurrence.

Mr. FORKE: Might I just say now that I had inquiries made in regard to these people who were apprehended for vagrancy in Regina, and I was informed that not one of them was an immigrant; most of them were people who had been drifting around the city of Regina and who will continue to drift no matter what may be the employment situation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is quite true, and I was going to state that very frequently these men who are out of work are not newly arrived immigrants, although the majority of those men have come from outside of Canada. The point is that newly arrived immigrants take the place of native born Canadians or older immigrants to Canada. The railways are constantly introducing new people who oust the older people from their jobs. That is no solution of the problem—rather an aggravation. The minister has made an investigation; I would like to ask him if he has investigated the situation existing at present in North Battleford, where a considerable number of immigrants were recently stranded. These are newly arrived immigrants, and I can say the same with regard to the Crowsnest pass district, where a large number of recent immigrants are already seeking work in the coal districts. I can refer to my own city of Winnipeg, from which I have had communications along the same line, and I can refer my hon. friend to the conditions of which I was told in Montreal last Sunday by some of the social service workers of that city. The fact is that we are not making adequate provision for the immigrants who come here and who, after working a few weeks or months in the summer, drift into our cities and become a load upon the civic charities. Further than that, many of these people obtain employment for a time at the expense of those who are already at work in Canada.

Under these conditions I would urge upon the government that before bringing another immigrant to this country and before handing over to the railways the right to inundate this country with immigrants, they make adequate provision for the care of these people, and that they at least see to it that native-born Canadians or the older immigrants who have been living in this country for some time will get an equal chance to obtain work with those who are imported from central Europe.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (West Calgary): Mr. Speaker, I desire to add a few words to the discussion upon this matter.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House at any length, but I cannot understand why, in view of the time that has elasped since this matter was first brought to the attention of parliament, nothing has been accomplished. The minister was good enough to refer to the fact that last fall he endeavoured to ascertain the out-of-pocket cost per ton of moving coal from the west to Ontario. It was originally contemplated that we should move three trainloads, one from the Edmonton district, one from the Drumheller district and one from the Lethbridge district. As a matter of fact the train that moved from the Drumheller district did not get into motion until, I think, about the day that the government disappeared from the scene. The hon. gentleman said that they did not think it desirable to move the trains from the Edmonton and Lethbridge districts.

The figures with regard to the actual cost of moving that coal from Drumheller to Toronto are in the hands of the department. They include a statement of what it cost for fuel, watering, grease, and labour from the time the engines were attached to the train at Drumheller until the train was abandoned by the engines in Ontario.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the hon. member give us the figures?

Mr. BENNETT: I have not the details of the figures before me. They are in the department. The cost was something less than $2 a ton. Am I correct in that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is the amount for the train.

Mr. BENNETT: In other words it cost a little less than $2 a ton without including any charges at all for interest on the investment in rolling stock or for an allowance for cost with respect to roadbed or terminals or any matters of that kind. What I cannot understand is why the railway commission should be putting this matter off in the way in which it has, in view of the fact that the department at Toronto had this information all carefully collected and collated, and had put their freight expert, Mr. Oliver from Chicago, if my memory serves me aright, to work on those figures. After making every possible allowance Mr. Oliver arrived at a certain conclusion with respect to the whole matter. That conclusion I have not officially received in the sense that I do not know whether or not it has been made public.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have not heard of that phase of it.

Mr. BENNETT: I am speaking of the Ontario government, not my hon. friend's government. The Ontario government collected the data, and they secured the benefit of the services of the best expert they could get for the purpose of applying those sets of costs to the movement of that freight, and making adequate allowances for the cost and interest on investment in terminals, rolling stock, roadbed et cetera, in connection with the movement of that coal.

What I have been wholly unable to understand is why it should take so long to determine this matter. If one looks at the record, one finds that for several years at various periods of time the matter has been under discussion in this parliament. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), who was in this House two parliaments ago, discussed the matter then at length. It was discussed in the last parliament; it is now before this parliament, and no one has arrived at any proper conclusion as to the cost per ton of moving that coal from Drumheller or other parts of Alberta to Ontario. I hope the minister will not say that this is an expression of egotism with respect to what the government which was in power for a few months might have done; but I say this to the minister, that had the government that held office from July to September remained in office, we certainly would have known the cost of moving coal from Drumheller to Toronto. I can say that without boasting because there we had the first steps taken to have those figures analyzed by a freight expert for the purpose of determining that question. Why should the railway commission treat us in this way? I think I am not saying too much, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) who, in days gone by, expressed his opinion of the railway commission with great vigour and in terms that will not soon be forgotten by a long suffering populace—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Was that opinion justified?

Mr. BENNETT: I am about to come to that. It is so seldom that I find myself in such complete accord with my distinguished friend that I should mark this occasion by saying that I believe the railway commission is rapidly losing the public confidence of this country. I say that in no offensive sense, but with a due sense of deliberation and of responsibility. It is the duty of parliament, which created that body, to ascertain the causes of the delay. This is possibly neither the time nor the place to discuss this question at length, but the same reasons that induced my genial friend the Minister of Agriculture to arrive at his very definite conclusions and to express himself with that moderation which so characterizes him with respect to that commission, induce me with somewhat the same moderation to arrive at similar conclusions.

I suggest to the Minister of Railways and the Minister of the Interior that they should seriously take into account whether the railway commission has done everything possible in respect to the matter. From the casual investigation I have made I feel satisfied that, in the light of the figures we have as to the cost of moving coal this whole matter could be determined in one week's time, beginning on Monday and closing on Friday afternoon. That is my information, and I am making every allowance now for the delays that are incident to such an inquiry. I happen to know that the Ontario government has a vast mass of information carefully collected, carefully analyzed, and carefully collated. They have their experts ready to appear on a very reasonable notice. This government also has its figures ready, and the mine operators and the miners themselves are in a position to give any information that is required. So, if there was a desire to serve the public in this matter on the part of that great commission that has been set up by this parliament and is maintained at a high cost, I cannot understand why in a week's time it should not give us this information.

I agree with the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) that if we let this matter go on—the Minister of Railways must see this—if we leave this House with nothing done, we shall probably not convene again until next year; this is only April, and in the meantime the fall operations in the collieries of Alberta will commence along about September; I fancy it is not unfair to say that they begin to work the last week in August or the first week in September, and if we leave this House with nothing done in this matter what is going to happen?

I am not going to deal with the question of unemployment. I deprecate greatly the observations that were made in this House this morning by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), because if this country is ever going to make progress we have to get people into it, and the more people we get, the more work there is going to be. It is all nonsense to talk of a close preserve for occupations in this country, and everybody knows it; the idea is absurd. Instead of encouraging that sort of thing, we must frown it down. We are masters of our own fortunes and we must have the courage to grasp the situation and not tell people that they are coming to Canada to be pap fed, but that they must struggle, as we all have had to struggle, and as we must continue to struggle if we are to succeed.

Mr. DUNNING: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: And no more fitting illustration could be afforded than by the "hear, hear" of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways. When I picture him with a seat in the mother of parliaments, expounding on some future occasion to an amazed populace the benefits that will accrue to them from adopting some of the forms of government that he has learned in this country, I can realize that the future of the British Empire is assured. But seriously, Mr. Speaker, I cannot but think that the minister can bring some pressure to bear, and that this parliament should not be impotent with respect to the railway commission. Surely a body that parliament created is not going to sit there and tell us it has so much work to do that it cannot do a week's work for us on a vital question.

I am not going to take up further time because the ground has been fully covered already, and reiterating what has been said is not going to serve any useful purpose. What was said by the hon. member for Bow River and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) as to the real problem was placed before this House in half a dozen sentences in such a way that it must commend itself to everyone. Are we going to permit our great natural resources to lie undeveloped without giving employment to thousands of men, merely because we have in the commission a body of men who say that they cannot give five days of their time to the solution of the question of what it costs to move these natural resources to the province of Ontario? I am not concerned with any other problem at the moment, but it does occur to me that we should not leave this parliament without making some effort to place on the statute book legislation to make effective any measure which the government desires to adopt in the light of the information forthcoming by reason of an inquiry before the railway commission.

Mr. DUNNING: Before my hon. friend sits down, will he permit me to ask a question?

Mr. BENNETT: Any question put by the minister will be received with delight, and answered to the best of my ability.

Mr. DUNNING: It is based on what I know to be my hon. friend's desire to be constructive and for parliament to be constructive in this matter. In order to make my question intelligible, perhaps I might say that the government regards as positively scandalous the extent of time which has been consumed by counsel representing railways and some of the provinces, not all of them—I do not want to be unfair—in presenting their case in the general rate investigation. To be fair to the commission, I think my hon. friend will agree that several attempts have been made by the chairman of the commission and other members to expedite that inquiry. The question I wish to ask my hon. friend is as to whether he, being a member, and a very distinguished member, of the legal profession is of opinion that something could be done, without interfering with the rights of the people to present their cases, to limit the extent to which such presentations shall go. Possibly out of his experience, my hon. friend might be able to make some suggestion along that line.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, Mr. Chairman, a frank question deserves a frank answer: Give me another chairman of the board.

Mr. DUNNING: I hardly think that is an answer.

Mr. K. A. BLATCHFORD (East Edmonton): I agree with the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) that it is high time the railway commission settled this freight rate question which has been hanging fire for a number of years. I represent a coal province and a coal district, and I was elected on the coal marketing platform. I find that this government is dilatory in carrying on its work, and the so-called railway commission is even worse. I voted for the Duncan report and supported the legislation in favour of reduced freight rates for the maritimes, but the province of New Brunswick and the province of Nova Scotia, together with the board of trade of Montreal, were the very first people to attempt to take out an injunction to stop the introduction of the Crowsnest rates west and any reduction in the freight rates west through the mountains. If we had a 20 per cent reduction in our coal rates, as is proposed in the Duncan report, we could place our coal in Ontario for $7.20 a ton, and the operators in Alberta tell me that at that figure they could meet the American competition. I think we should decide right to-day as to whether this government has power to put into effect any finding of the railway commission on the coal rates. If it has not, then this parliament should give the cabinet power to put into effect whatever recommendations might be made by the board, and if the recommendations are not within reason, let us give the cabinet power to bring about a reduction in the freight rates so that Alberta coal can be delivered in Ontario at a rate that will enable it to meet American competition.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Coal mining in Canada is distinctly a seasonal occupation, and we are bound to have seasons when unemployment will be fairly general in that industry. I think, therefore, that the Immigration department should be very careful to see that that unemployment situation is not aggravated by the bringing in of immigrants who, within a very few weeks of their arrival in this country, drift into the mining areas to make the situation just that much worse than it otherwise would be.

I do hope that the government will press the railway commission for an early decision in the inquiry which they have been instructed to carry on to ascertain the cost of hauling coal in trainload lots from Alberta to Ontario. I hope also that when that report is received, the government will take some action, if such is possible, along the lines suggested in that report. It seems to be the opinion of the government that they have the power to take action if the railway commission should find a rate in the neighbourhood of $7 per ton.

I hope also that when this report is received, some reduction may be possible in the rate on coal from the bituminous fields in Alberta to the city of Winnipeg. May I point out to the House that at the present time the rates from points in the vicinity of Blairmore, which is in the bituminous coal fields, to the city of Winnipeg, a distance of 855 miles, is $5.20 a ton. I think hon. members who are familiar with the coal trade will realize that when the coal producers have to pay a rate of $5.20 a ton, they are faced with a very difficult problem in supplying the market with bituminous coal. Winnipeg is our chief market outside of the railway companies.

The present rate on coal from points in Alberta, from Drumheller, say, to Toronto, a distance of 2,100 miles is $12.70 a ton. I believe that the Canadian National railway officials have said that they can haul it for $9 a ton. I would like hon. members to compare that rate for hauling the coal a distance of 2,100 miles with the rate of $5.20 for hauling it a distance of 855 miles. I think it would be quite possible to put into effect a summer rate which would not injure the railways, but might be to their advantage on bituminous coal from the province of Alberta to the city of Winnipeg, and I think the argument which was used by some hon. members in the debate on the maritime freight rates bill would apply here, namely, that the increased traffic due to the decreased rate would bring more revenue to the railway.

I want to refer to a statement made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) this morning, when he said that the members in this corner of the chamber had opposed his bill granting reduced railway rates in the maritime provinces. I tried to make it very clear when I was speaking on that bill that I was not opposing that part of the proposal which had for its effect reduced rates on inter-provincial trade to overcome the long haul which separates the central from the maritime provinces. But I did oppose the bill in so far as it proposed to reduce purely local rates and to bonus them at the expense of the Dominion in general. If any proposal is made to subsidize rates on coal from Alberta to Ontario, it will be simply to overcome the long haul which separates our source of coal supply in Alberta from the central provinces, where the bulk of the population is. That is an entirely different matter from subsidizing local freight rates in a compact area such as the maritime provinces.

In closing I simply want to urge upon the government the desirability of dealing with this question as quickly as possible. We have this situation of unemployment arising every year in Alberta in the coal mines. We will have a certain amount of it, even if some arrangement is made whereby Alberta coal can be brought to Ontario. In my opinion we will never get a satisfactory solution of the coal problem in Canada until we have nationalization of the coal mines. A provincial royal commission investigated the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia about two years ago. In their report they indicate that the miners should accept a ten per cent reduction on the 1924 scale. This would give them an average yearly wage, according to the Bureau of Statistics, of $896.28, covering an average of 202 days' work per man. If under this decreased wage they should secure an increase of fifty per cent in the days worked per year—and I do not think it possible that they could be given 303 days' work per year—it would make their average yearly income $1,344.42. Evidence was given by Mr. C. W. Bolton, of the Department of Labour at Ottawa before the standing committee on industrial relations that the cost of a family budget for a year, on the minimum subsistence level, was $1,396.82. I think that goes to prove what I have already suggested, that if we are to have any real solution of this whole problem of Canada we must eventually have a nationalization of the industry.

SUPPLY—MARITIME CLAIMS

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I desire to refer to a matter that I conceive to be of very great importance to my native province, and in doing so I shall take up as little time as possible. Following the example of the Prime Minister when dealing with a matter that he conceived to be of very considerable importance, I propose to read much of my remarks so as to ensure accuracy as to statements to be made.

In discussing the action of the government relative to the implementing of the Duncan report, I fully realize what has so often been contended, namely, that Canada is a country most difficult to govern due to its geographical and sectional handicaps.

I wish now to thank the government for what they have done by way of partially implementing their promises as to putting into effect the recommendations of the Duncan report.

The Prime Minister in this chamber on Friday, March 18th last, when making a statement on behalf of the government arising out of the report of the royal commission on maritime claims, said:

> In concluding this statement, may I say that the government hopes that, by accepting as we have, the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Maritime Claims, virtually in their entirety, parliament and the country will recognize in the attitude of the government a wish to remove this great question as largely as possible from the arena of sectional discord and party strife, and a desire to give to our Dominion in the sixtieth anniversary of its founding, a renewed expression of the spirit which animated the fathers of confederation in their efforts to construct out of British North America a federal union under a system of government devised "to protect the diversified interests of the several provinces and secure efficiency, harmony and permanency in the working of the union."

In those words he conveyed the impression that the recommendations of the Duncan report have been entirely met, or virtually so, which impression has been given to the country through the press, with which I cannot agree.

On the 7th April, 1926, an order in council, P.C. 505, was passed appointing the Duncan commission.

This royal commission was appointed as a result of the dissatisfaction existing in the maritime provinces with reference to economic conditions then and theretofore obtaining in that part of the country for several years.

Under the terms of the order in council it was pointed out that "it is most undesirable that any section of the people of the maritime provinces should entertain the opinion that their interests are being knowingly prejudiced, and that the public interest requires that every occasion for the existence of a feeling of grievance should, if possible, be removed."

In the Prime Minister's letter, dated April 17th, 1926, to the chairman and members of the commission he made the following statement.

Mr. DUNNING: I rise to a point of order. If at this late day in the session we start in allowing hon. members to so far depart from the rules of the House as to read voluminous and carefully prepared speeches—as the hon. member is evidently doing—we will be starting something that may delay us very seriously.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If it is not permitted in this case, perhaps hon. members may start something which will delay us a good deal more.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a rule of the House with reference to reading speeches.

Mr. McGIBBON: The Prime Minister did the same thing. He read a statement.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad the hon. member does not call it a speech.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to put my statement on record and propose reading it for the same reason as that given by the Prime Minister when he recently read his speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must say that, strictly speaking, the hon. member is out of order. But he said he had carefully prepared a statement which he wanted to place on Hansard, which would take about twenty minutes to read. It is a very important subject, and under these circumstances, knowing the House is very indulgent towards hon. members I think perhaps the House might give the hon. member permission to read the statement.

Mr. CANTLEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I was proceeding to refer to the Prime Minister's letter. The letter reads:

My colleagues and I desire to emphasize our conviction that the commission should not interpret its instructions or its duties in any narrow or technical sense, but should take every opportunity for the fullest and frankest discussion of the economic difficulties facing this part of the Dominion, the endeavours which have been made to overcome them, the causes of any shortcoming in these endeavours, and the most effective and practicable remedies.

And farther down:

It is our earnest desire that the impartial and thorough inquiry which we anticipate will be made will result in clearing away any misderstanding or lack of appreciation of one another's problems, and will assist in working out constructive policies for the continued development of the maritime provinces and the welfare of all parts of our common country.

The commission entered upon its duties of taking evidence, and the prime ministers of the maritime provinces assisted by presenting the case for the people of these provinces, and altogether a formidable array of facts was presented to the commission, of which due acknowledgment is made in their report, and unfortunately as to one specific and most important part of the investigation no action was taken by the commission, the reason for which is stated in the report. I refer to the matter of the customs tariff in relation to coal and steel. On page 37 of the report it is stated in respect to this matter:

We do not conceive it to be our duty to express any opinion, since the question is, as we were informed by the chairman of the Tariff Advisory Board, who met us at our request, at the present moment under the consideration of that board. But we do regard it our duty to record that the significance of this industry to the maritime provinces was forcibly brought home to us, not only in the manufacturing towns we visited in the maritimes, but also throughout the agricultural districts of the maritimes. We record this in order to emphasize the need for prompt action.

The findings of the report may, after analysis, be reduced to eighteen.

1. Subsidy award.
2. Twenty per cent freight reduction.
3. The enlargement of the scope and power of the railway commission.
4. Horizontal war freight increases.
5. P.E.I. car ferry.
6. Port development and maritime trade.
7. Development of natural products.
8. As to fishing projects.
9. Coking plants.
10. Customs tariff on coal.
11. Steel customs tariff.
12. Steel bounties.
13. Recommendations as to more active advertising abroad of maritime provinces' attractions and advantages.
14. St. John and Quebec railway.
15. Kent Northern railway.
16. Appointment of Deputy Minister of Fisheries.
17. New geological survey of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.
18. Agricultural education to be regarded as technical education in the province of Prince Edward Island.

On August 25, 1926, before the Duncan report was made, but after practically all the evidence was in, and at about the period when the commission was making up its findings, the Prime Minister at numerous places in the maritime provinces—notably at the city of St. John on the 25th; at Windsor, in the county of Hants, and at Port Hawkesbury, in the county of Inverness—made definite, exact and specific pledges that if returned to power his government would introduce measures giving effect to the recommendation of the commission in its entirety. This pledge was made without reservation of any character, kind or description.

On March 18 the Prime Minister in the House of Commons—page 1332 of Hansard—made the statement already quoted.

As to the financial arrangements and subsidy award the commission recommended that immediate interim increases should be made to the three maritime provinces, as follows:

Nova Scotia	$875,000
New Brunswick	600,000
Prince Edward Island	125,000

and that these interim payments should be continued until the federal government has had time to complete its investigation and reassessment. These recommendations were based on the belief of the commission—no doubt founded upon the evidence and representations made to them—that the figures mentioned were the minimum addition that these provinces would have in any such revision.

The Prime Minister, in his statement of March 18, refused to accept this view, saying:

It is not possible in advance of the deliberations of the conference and of the detailed determination and assessment which the report recognizes is necessary, to accept the view for which no detailed grounds are advanced, that certain sums set forth in the report should be regarded as "the minimum addition that the three maritime provinces should have in any such revision.

The commission recommended that an immediate reduction of twenty per cent on all rates charged on (a) traffic which both originates and terminates at stations in the Atlantic division—including export and import traffic by sea; and (b) the same reduction on the through rates on all traffic which originates at stations in the Atlantic division—excluding import traffic by sea—which is destined to points outside the Atlantic division.

Under Bill No. 224, which has now passed this House, the recommendations of the commission have been limited to:

A.—Local traffic.
B.—Traffic moving outward westbound, all rail; and C.—Traffic moving outward, export traffic, rail and sea.

The government has expressly excluded from the operation of the act:

A.—All rail traffic to and from the United States.
B.—Inward traffic, eastbound, from points in Canada not on the eastern lines;
C.—Import traffic to Canada originating at points overseas.

These reservations and exceptions, particularly with reference to all rail traffic to and from the United States, are directly contrary to the recommendations of the Duncan report and fail to give relief to the fishermen of the province of Nova Scotia, the growers of potatoes and agricultural products in the provinces of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, and the manufacturers of pulp, paper and lumber in the province of New Brunswick—industries of the greatest magnitude, in which millions of capital are invested and which directly affect the whole population of these two provinces.

With respect to enlarging the scope and powers of the railway commission direct refusal was given to this recommendation.

The Prime Minister stated on March 18th that this recommendation would bring about a radical change in the fundamental powers of the railway commission, affecting the whole of Canada and that it has no immediate bearing on the rights of the maritime provinces any more than other parts of Canada. With respect to that statement we enter our emphatic protest; to argue the matter here would involve lengthy detail of a technical character and we register our position by this affirmation.

As to the horizontal war freight increases, the commission called special attention to this very important feature of the railway situation. We—

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend pardon a question? He keeps using the word, "we." I wonder if he will be kind enough to tell me for whom he is speaking?

Mr. CANTLEY: For myself.

Mr. DUNNING: Just alone?

Mr. CANTLEY: For myself. The commission called special attention to this very forcibly in regard to the railway situation and stated that the reaction of the burden which it imposes is so great that, in their view, it should be dealt with as a special problem. These horizontal flat percentages result in great hardships to the maritime iron and steel industry, the burden of which it has to meet now, as compared with Ontario plants, being much greater than it was prior to 1916. As to this most serious situation, no action has been taken.

As to the Prince Edward Island car ferry, the commission drew attention to the inadequate car ferry service and pier arrangements, and pointed out that the railway administration admitted there was need for either a second ferry boat or a special freight boat. As yet no action has been taken in this matter.

With regard to port development and maritime trade, the commission stated its belief that:

It is in the public interests of Canada and in the interest of the future growth and expansion of its activities that its Atlantic ports should be developed, just as it has been that its railways and canals should be developed.

This means, if it means anything, the true nationalization of the ports of St. John and Halifax, their equipment and development as national works for the general advantage of Canada in the same manner as the canal system of Canada has been developed and maintained. The creation of harbour boards at St. John and Halifax is accepted as a first step in this direction. But may I be permitted to point out that with respect to traffic to these Canadian ports very substantial steps forward will have to be taken by the government, the railways and the railway commission of Canada in order to bring about that which lies nearest to the hearts of the people of St. John and Halifax, namely, the ultimate utilization of their ports as the Atlantic gateways of Canada.

As to fishing projects, the commission recommended the extension of markets for the fishing industry of the maritime provinces, and in this connection the Prime Minister took occasion to refer to the attitude of his party on the question of reciprocal relations with the United States. May I suggest that if the government seriously contemplate taking up the question of reciprocal trade with the United States or with any other country, it should revise the Canadian tariff in order that they may have some weapon to bargain with, just as Australia, the French republic and other countries have done in the recent past.

Now, as to coking plants. The commission recommended that immediate practical steps be taken by the federal authorities in regard to the question of coking plants. Bill No. 233, "an act to encourage the production of domestic fuel from coal mined in Canada" was recently enacted by this parliament. This act, Mr. Speaker, will be of practically no advantage to the Canadian coal industry either in the maritime provinces, Alberta or British Columbia while tariff item No. 1049 remains in effect, which item reads as follows:

When imported after March 24, 1925, by proprietors of by-product recovery coke ovens, and converted into coke at their by-product recovery coke ovens, provided that no drawback shall be paid under this item on coal converted into coke at a gas retort plant or at a plant using any other process than the by-product coke process; also provided that drawback payable under this item is in lieu of drawback payable under any other item.

Officials of the government have been advised as to the governing facts in the case. Further, Bill 233 as enacted is unfair to existing coke oven plants and should be amended so as to apply to any by-product coke oven now existing in Canada, provided the coal used in the operation of such plants—

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is now clearly out of order. He is discussing a measure which passed this House this session after being fully debated.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman to discuss Bill No. 233?

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: Then he is out of order.

Mr. CANTLEY: Do you rule that I cannot proceed at all?

Mr. SPEAKER: No, but it is not in order to refer to a matter that has been decided this session.

Mr. CANTLEY: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will let that go. But I may say that the policy of the government reflected in the present customs tariff as to coal and coke is a repudiation of the clearly expressed policy of the Liberal party as expounded by the Right Hon. Mackenzie King. I suppose I can say that? Speaking at Amherst, the capital of one of the coal counties of Nova Scotia, namely, Cumberland, on August 5, 1921, before an audience estimated at five or six thousand, the right hon. gentleman repudiated his free trade policy and then announced the policy of his government with respect to coal and the transportation of coal to the markets of the upper provinces. I regret the Prime Minister is not in his seat, because I do not like to criticize any hon. gentleman in his absence. On that occasion the Prime Minister said:

Free trade is not the policy of the Liberal party. If it were I would oppose it because I believe it would bring disaster to our industries and remove from the farmers the home market, which is practically the only market they have left. Free trade may be all right for the wealthy grain growers of the west whose wheat goes to the foreign markets and who do not have to worry about selling their produce at home. But it would mean paralysis in the maritime provinces.

The right hon. gentleman proceeded:

I am a firm believer in the establishment of a national coal policy for Canada. No country, especially a country with cold winters, which depends on a foreign nation for its fuel, can claim to be independent of that nation.

He then announced his policy:

Every pound of coal purchased by the government should be mined by Canadian miners and transported over government railways to the points of consumption. Coal required by other consumers in Canada should be carried at cost.

That was the policy which the right hon. gentleman announced, and upon which he received the solid support of the constituencies of Nova Scotia in 1921. Had the government of the right hon. gentleman put that clearly declared policy as to coal into effect, Nova Scotia to-day, I submit, Mr. Speaker, would be in a quite different industrial and financial position, and Canada's political, economic and financial independence of the United States more fully assured. I submit that the difficulties with regard to the coal trade of Nova Scotia would now have been satisfactorily settled had the right hon. gentleman put that policy into force five years ago.

It is also submitted that the drawback on coal used for coke employed in the steel manufacturing is, in effect, the bonusing of industry to the extent of the rebate of duty, because no compensating advantage is given to Canadian coal so used, and the production of Canadian coal is very definitely discouraged, whereby the main object of the import duty on coal is frustrated. This rebate constitutes a very serious discrimination against the coal producers of Nova Scotia. The effect of the drawback is also to lower the production costs of companies competing with Nova Scotia steel producers.

In this connection, the commission also stated:

> We have thought it right to give consideration to a point which was emphasized in the course of evidence, namely, that a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty is given when imported coal is used for metallurgical purposes, and that this is tantamount to giving a bonus of that amount, since it means that the Dominion is yielding up money which otherwise, under the general policy in regard to bituminous coal, would accrue to it. While there are, no doubt, other angles from which this concession can be regarded, it does in this operation have the effect of a bonus, and it is difficult to say how the same bonus can be denied to native coal. The commission in this connection recommends that a bonus should be given in respect of steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture and that such bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture.

The commission further state that calculations show that as a result of the operation of the customs tariff if the labour employed in the production of iron and steel and its raw products is taken as the unit of measure of productive value, the protection afforded Nova Scotia labour under the present tariff is only 28 per cent, whereas elsewhere in Canada the protection to labour is between 85 per cent and 100 per cent and assistance was asked for in respect of the steel industry by way of appropriate tariff adjustments and bounty. They further add that it was submitted that the tendency of the tariff as affected by successive changes had been to lessen the protection upon the primary products of iron and steel and to greatly encourage their importation from other countries.

Having regard to the facts set out in their report, the commission recommended that a bonus should be given in respect of steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture, and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture.

As to this important recommendation, no action has been taken by the government.

As regards customs tariff on steel, it is pointed out by the commission that it was submitted that the tendency of the tariff, as affected by successive alterations, has been to lessen the protection upon primary products of iron and steel, and to encourage the importation of steel as the raw material for the fabricating of agricultural implements, and other manufacturing industries in Canada. In respect to the matter of tariff, the commission state that they do not conceive it to be their duty to express an opinion save to emphasize the need for prompt action. Here we note that the royal commission, in refraining from investigating and recommending remedies as to tariff tendencies and lack of adequate protection in the matter of steel, due to an intimation that the Tariff Advisory Board was considering the matter, in our judgment failed to act up to the full scope of the order in council and the terms of reference, particularly as stressed in the letter of April 17 last addressed to the chairman of the board by the Prime Minister.

Here it may be noted that the Tariff Advisory Board was created by P.C. Order April 7, 1926, the same date as that of the order creating the Duncan commission. The duties of the tariff board, as set out in clause 1 of the order in council of April 7, 1926, were as follows:

> The duties of the board shall be to inquire into and hear representations on all matters pertaining to the tariff and other forms of taxation, as may be directed by the Minister of Finance, and to advise the minister in regard thereto.

It is apparent that the tariff board could only deal with the matter of steel bounty and duties as and when directed by the Minister of Finance. Parliament has been informed as to the number of cases which the board was asked to investigate, and it was understood that thirteen cases only had been reported upon. But the House has no information as to the findings made in these cases. Both boards were created on the same date, April 7, 1926. The Duncan commission completed their investigation and submitted their report on September 23 last. The case of the steel trade of Nova Scotia was submitted to the Tariff Advisory Board on January 18, 1927, but so far as the House is aware no report has yet been submitted to the government by that body. At any rate, if such has been made, the findings or recommendations in the case are not within the knowledge of parliament.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The steel men have not yet completed the statement of their case to the Tariff Advisory Board.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am not aware of that.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): It is a fact.

Mr. CANTLEY: The Prime Minister, referring to the matter on March 18 last, stated:

> Owing to the uncertainty of conditions surrounding the iron and steel industry in the maritimes the government does not feel in a position to make at present any pronouncement as to bounty on steel.

The Prime Minister did not there infer anything of the kind suggested by the hon. member for Weyburn. We now enter our emphatic protest against the attitude of the government in this matter and the reason given by the Prime Minister for the government's inaction.

Mr. RALSTON: When the hon. gentleman says "we" does he mean "I"?

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: We may take it, then, that the plural pronoun in every case in which the hon. gentleman uses it, nominative, possessive or objective, is meant to be singular?

Mr. CANTLEY: I am speaking for myself. I do not know that it makes any difference whether I use the singular or the plural.

Mr. RALSTON: Is the hon. gentleman speaking for the person who wrote that brief, or for himself?

Mr. CANTLEY: The person who wrote the brief and myself are one and the same.

Mr. RALSTON: Then "we" is really singular—it refers only to the hon. gentleman? If that is so, Mr. Speaker, I again urge the point of order already taken. The hon. member is reading from a document in which he is constantly using the plural pronoun, evidently for the reason that he is embarrassed by the necessity for having to depend upon a written statement. I would ask that either he desist from reading, and make his address in the usual way, or, if he persists in reading from the document, that he use the singular pronoun and make the necessary changes in the statement as he has it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is not a point of order. The only point of order has reference to the hon. member's right to read from a document, and Your Honour, I understand, has ruled on that question. There is no point of order apart from that.

Mr. RALSTON: I did not understand the Speaker to give a ruling. I thought the Speaker intimated that through the indulgence of the House the hon. gentleman might read from the document. All I ask is that, if he continues to read from the paper he has in his hands, he transpose the pronouns and use the singular instead of the plural.

Mr. CANTLEY: I have no hesitation in declaring that I speak for myself. At the same time I believe I speak for the large majority of the people in the eastern section of Nova Scotia, and whether I use the singular or the plural I take full responsibility for the statements I make.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think that exception may be taken to the pronoun which the hon. member chooses to use. Sometimes personages of high degree use the plural in reference to themselves. Indeed, no document bearing the imprimatur of royalty appears with the singular pronoun. I would point out to the hon. member, however, that he gave the House an undertaking to conclude his remarks in about twenty minutes. He indicated that inasmuch as the question he wished to discuss was of a technical nature he preferred to use a written document, but he promised, with the indulgence of the House, to conclude the statement as briefly as possible. May I suggest that the indulgence of the House will soon be exhausted. I do not want to prevent the hon. member from concluding his remarks, but I would suggest that now and then he depend upon his memory and not refer exclusively to the document.

Mr. CANTLEY: I do not profess, Mr. Speaker, to be as experienced in debate as the Prime Minister—yet. I point out though that I am only taking advantage of the same privilege which the right hon. gentleman availed himself of when discussing his subject.

Mr. SPEAKER: All authors on parliamentary procedure are agreed in the positive statement that only the leaders of the House, on important occasions, may read their statements. With the indulgence of the House a new member may also resort to a document. I take it that the hon. gentleman is a young member.

Mr. CANTLEY: Thanks for the compliment, Mr. Speaker. Had I not been interrupted I should have completed my remarks by this time. There are several other matters which I should like to refer to, and I shall make a brief reference to them in their order.

Now I come to the recommendation as to more active advertising abroad of maritime provinces' attractions and advantages. The Prime Minister, in his statement of March 18, made no allusion or reference to this, beyond saying that the federal authorities would cordially welcome the larger measure of coöperation on the part of the provinces which the commission recognizes as fully desirable and necessary. No specific proposal to give effect to the commission's report in this regard has been brought down by the government, or action contemplated.

With regard to the St. John and Quebec Railway the commission stated—page 41—that in their opinion there was need for further investigation into the question of the alleged promise of the Dominion authorities to take over the railway, or into the grounds upon which the belief is founded, that such a promise was made and that a further opportunity should be given to the province to establish their case, and recommended that the government should, with the concurrence of the province, set up an ad hoc tribunal to inquire into the circumstances surrounding this matter, with power, if justified, to arrange the terms and conditions on which the railway should be taken over by the government. In other words, the commission recommended that this railway matter should be made the subject of a further full and fair investigation on its own merits, disentangled from any other railway problem in the maritimes.

The government does not take this view, but alheres to the view that the whole question of the acquisition of branch lines in New Brunswick and in the traffic area must be considered together. This is not in conformity with the commission's recommendations, and will not give satisfaction either to the government or to the people of the province of New Brunswick, their contention being that the matter is one which should be dealt with on its merits, and on its merits alone, and in accordance with the recommendation of the commission. Furthermore, the Prime Minister, in his statement of March 18, said that the matter would be taken up at the present session of parliament. In view of the imminence of prorogation, it is evident that no legislative action is to be taken for another year, against which I respectfully, but firmly protest.

With regard to the Kent-Northern railway, the recommendation of the commission was that the present was an appropriate time to reopen negotiations for the purchase of this branch line. So far as any pronouncement from the government is concerned, it would appear that this specific recommendation had been disregarded.

The government has given immediate effect to the recommendation that a deputy minister of fisheries be appointed, and in that respect is to be commended. The appointment of an experienced and properly qualified man to the position of deputy minister will be welcomed, but if the position is to be filled by a political appointee without experience and without the necessary qualifications, the benefit of the recommendation will have been largely, if not altogether, lost.

On the question of a new geological survey of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, a definite pledge has been given by the government to carry out this recommendation of the commission, which pledge is welcome, as is also the acceptance of the recommendation that technical education legislation should be given a broad application, and that agricultural education should be deemed to be covered by the term "technical education."

The Duncan report is disappointing in that it does not deal more definitely with some of the matters which most vitally affect the maritime situation, notably so as to discrimination in class and commodity freight rates on iron and steel products, coal and coke; also on domestic rates on cattle feed and grain products for human consumption.

Further, since the issue of the Duncan report, it has been discovered that for a number of years there has been in existence a secret rate on foreign import coal and ore of fifty-four cents per gross ton for a distance of 140 miles. This rate is 12.3 per cent of the class to which the traffic belongs, or 3.4 mills per ton mile, and is the lowest rail rate in force in Canada. It will be remembered that in January of last year members of this House asked the government to put in force a special rate of 3½ mills per ton mile, on a small tonnage of coal from Nova Scotia to Montreal as a temporary relief rate, which request was then refused, and has never been available to Nova Scotia coal.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Did he refer to an import rate on coal?

Mr. CANTLEY: That is what I am referring to.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): At what ports would such coal be landed, lake ports or ocean ports?

Mr. CANTLEY: Lake ports.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That would be American coal, then, with a special rate of 54 cents per ton?

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Does everyone enjoy that rate? The hon. member said it was a secret rate.

Mr. CANTLEY: If my hon. friend will wait a moment I will give him the information. Were Nova Scotia given the same class rate on the maximum standard mileage basis, the rail rate on coal from Sydney to Montreal would be $2.05 per gross ton of 2,240 pounds instead of the tariff rate of $4.50 per net ton of 2,000 pounds now charged, and Nova would be shipping one to two thousand tons per day to Quebec points and so would be able to provide steady employment for Nova Scotian colliery workers and railway employees. The same thing would apply to the coal operatives of the western territory referred to this morning. The people of the maritime provinces accept in good faith what the government has announced will be done in connection with the various matters on which action has been taken, and will hold the government accountable for the final completion of the whole program.

Mr. DUNNING: Before my hon. friend leaves that phase of his speech I wish he would give me some information regarding the secret rate tariff to which he refers. Can he give me the schedule reference number, or when it was approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes, I will give it to you later on. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for your indulgence, and I want to add in conclusion—

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend please answer my question?

Mr. CANTLEY: I will give it to you later.

Mr. DUNNING: I would prefer that it be put on Hansard, because it is a serious thing to say that there is a secret freight rate in existence. Our law does not provide for the existence of secret freight rates; all freight rates must be public. I think my hon. friend should put the full information on Hansard in order that it may be in our possession.

Mr. CANTLEY: I cannot give you the railway tariff, but I can tell you that the traffic originates at Point Edward in Ontario and is carried from there to Hamilton, Ontario.

Mr. DUNNING: And is the rate approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Mr. CANTLEY: So far as I know the Board of Railway Commissioners did not know anything about it until recently; no one else apparently knew anything about it except the railways and the parties enjoying that rate. It has been in existence for ten or twelve years perhaps rather more; it was originally made with the Grand Trunk Railway and has been continued until the present time. That is my information, and I think it is correct.

Mr. DUNNING: There is some illegal proceeding if that is being done, and I would like to get enough information to check it up.

Mr. CANTLEY: I quite agree with the minister, and I want to tell him further that while the opinion is prevalent in this House and throughout the country that Nova Scotia has enjoyed an exceptional freight rate on the Intercolonial railway, the fact is that Nova Scotia is discriminated against in regard to a score of rates in which the advantage is wholly with points largely west of Montreal as against the interests of the maritime provinces. I have a lot of information here and a mass of detail in my room with which I do not propose to trouble the House at this time, but with which I will deal at some future time, I will give the minister all the information in my possession in regard to that particular import coal and ore rate, because I know he will be interested in it. I give him credit for knowing nothing of what has been done in that regard, and so far as I know no one until recently knew about it except those directly interested. I learned of it a few weeks ago.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to all the members of the House and ask that, irrespective of provincial affiliation, they view this question of maritime claims on broad and patriotic grounds. If national unity is to be maintained; if confederation is to endure, if in this great country we are to remain undivided it can only be by the exercise of mutual forbearance, mutual goodwill and mutual fair treatment as between all the provinces of this Dominion. Such sympathetic understanding, such goodwill, such equal justice and fair treatment, we of the maritimes now ask of all our fellow Canadians as represented by the members of this parliament here assembled.

Hon. G. B. JONES (Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to detain the House for more than a few minutes, but I think it necessary to make a brief statement with regard to the Duncan commission. It is my belief that the report of this commission has not been implemented to a very large degree. At the present time I am going to speak about one of the largest industries, the lumbering and wood products industry, of our province. The legislation so far brought down has not afforded any relief to this industry. I wish to read a telegram which I received, copies of which were sent to the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Defence, the Postmaster General and myself. This telegram, which is dated St. John, April 5, 1927, reads:

> New Brunswick Lumbermen's Association strongly protests against reduction to United States points being left out of Maritime Freight Rates bill. Lumber and wood products are the principal industry in this province and it was a realization of the importance of this industry to these provinces that prompted recommendations for modifications respecting international freight rates in Duncan commission report. Further united protest will be made if lumber and wood products are not given full benefit of recommendations made by Duncan commission.
> New Brunswick Lumbermen's Association,
> W. E. ANDERSON,
> Secretary.

The lumber and wood products industry constitutes more than 36 per cent of the entire trade of our province. The lumbermen's association appeared before the Duncan commission and made their recommendation, and that is why the commission reported in favour of this reduction of 20 per cent in the freight rates.

Mr. DUNNING: I must rise to a point of order. My hon. friend is again discussing a matter which has been debated and passed upon this session by this House in the form of the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Mr. JONES: The bill which has passed this House is now before the Senate and there is no relief for the lumber industry of our province.

Mr. SPEAKER: I may say to the minister that the old principle applies—grievances before supply.

Mr. DUNNING: I understand the Speaker to rule that on a motion to go into supply a debate can be revived on any bill that has passed this House this session?

Mr. SPEAKER: There is nothing to prevent an hon. member from speaking on a question which is a dominant question to-day in the Dominion parliament. Even though the government has legislated on the basis of the Duncan report, this can not prevent the hon. member from expressing his grievance that some other matters dealt with in the report have not been adjusted.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member is debating a specific measure which has been enacted under the form of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and a matter which is expressly dealt with in the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not find in the speech of the hon. member anything which I could prevent him from expressing at this stage of the session. I think the hon. member spoke about one particular article, namely lumber.

Mr. JONES: I was saying that we had not received any benefit in connection with the recommendations made in the report of the Duncan commission.

I would like to refer briefly to the subsidy and particularly to the statement made by the Prime Minister when, in dealing with the subsidy question, he said that it was his intention to implement the report of the Duncan commission in the way of subsidies for this session only, but that the whole matter would be reviewed at the conference of provincial premiers which will take place this summer. That statement is all right providing that they carry out the recommendation of the Duncan commission that the minimum subsidies be $600,000 to New Brunswick; $875,000 to Nova Scotia; and $125,000 to Prince Edward Island.

Another matter to which I wish to refer is the Valley railway or the St. John and Quebec railway. The Duncan commission said that it was impossible for them to deal with that part of their work and they recommended that the government appoint a commission to make further investigations. I only hope that the government will carry out that part of the commission's report; that they will appoint a commission, and let us prove our claim that there was a distinct understanding that the St. John and Quebec railway was to be taken over, but that on account of conditions during the Great war that was found impossible.

Hon. W. A. BLACK (Halifax): I will take only two or three minutes of the time of the House in presenting to it the sentiment prevailing amongst all the maritime members with the exception of perhaps three. The great majority of them endorse this statement. It is unfortunate that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) could not see his way clear to fall in line with the rest of us, but he has presented his case and not ours to this House. Most of the hon. members on this side of the House from the maritime provinces feel it desirable before the close of the session to make a brief statement as to their position regarding the action of the government in implementing some of the recommendations contained in the report of the Royal Commission on Maritime Claims. We are not disposed to minimize in any way the benefits that might accrue to the maritime provinces from the legislation that the government has introduced in connection with those recommendations, and we beg to express our appreciation of what has been done.

Further, we are not disposed to be unreasonable in insisting on immediate fulfilment of all the recommendations contained in the said report as we realize that some matters intimately affecting maritime claims are now before the Board of Railway Commissioners, and others before the Tariff Advisory Board, and we are prepared to wait a reasonable time for the findings of both these bodies, and the government's action thereon before expressing any approval or disapproval. It must be noted that there is a number of matters of very vital importance to the maritime provinces that have yet to be dealt with, and we hope that when these are ripe for decision, the government's action will be such as to justify the Prime Minister's somewhat premature declaration that all the recommendations have been virtually met. Among the matters yet to be dealt with we may mention such important matters as:

1. The restoration to Canadian ports of Canadian trade now passing through foreign ports.
2. The acquisition of certain railway lines in the maritime provinces.
3. The question of affording adequate protection to the steel and coal industry.
4. Additional ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and the improvement in the railway and transportation service on the Island.
5. The enlargement of the scope and power of the railway commission.
6. Further consideration of the question of reduced freight rates, either by agreement or otherwise, to points not now covered by the present legislation.
7. Further attention to the great fishing industry of the maritime provinces, including curing, storage and transportation facilities to central markets.

In conclusion we beg to express our great satisfaction that the report of the royal commission has been such as to completely vindicate the stand taken by the maritime members at the last session of parliament. We cordially appreciate the attitude taken by hon. members of this House from the various provinces in their reception of the said report, and we close by expressing the hope that when all the recommendations are fully implemented, that the obvious handicaps under which our provinces have been labouring will be removed, and these provinces will share in the general prosperity of Canada, and enjoy to some extent the happiness that is their due.

I may add to what I have said that the great majority of us dissociate ourselves from what the hon. member for Pictou at this present time has placed before this House.

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, the discussion which has just arisen necessitates a clear statement of my position on the important matter of maritime claims, especially as I cannot agree with the position taken by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley). He has read a carefully prepared statement, but I think that the time is inopportune and the occasion does not call for much that was said. I fully agree with the statement just made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Black) which represents the opinion of many of the maritime Conservatives.

So far as my own position is concerned, let me say that I adopted the attitude of supporting the government in its implementing of the recommendations of the Duncan report. I have consistently done so, and I shall continue to do so until I find reason to adopt another course. My view is that the government has placed the maritime claims—and mark you, the maritime claims is a broader question than the Duncan report—in the hands of three different organizations: the Duncan royal commission, the Board of Railway Commissioners, and the Advisory Tariff Board. We have heard from the Duncan commission. Certain of their recommendations have been implemented; others have not as yet been implemented. The railway commission have not yet reported on their portion of the inquiry into maritime claims, and let me remind the House that their inquiry was with reference to the extent to which Canadian trade which now passes through American ports could be recovered and directed through Canadian ports. That is a very big question, and the report of the railway commission upon it has not yet reached the government. It is true also, I believe, of the Advisory Tariff Board inquiry with reference to coal and steel. That being the case, how can anyone come to a final judgment on how far and how completely the government will implement the maritime claims? They have gone a certain distance this session, and under all the circumstances I think a considerable distance.

As our statement says, we must be reasonable; we must give the government a reasonable time to complete its action. There are such questions, for instance, as the disposal of the maritime railways, the action to be taken regarding the recovery of our trade from American ports to our own ports, and the question of steel and coal, and other matters. A solution of all these questions can hardly be looked for, I submit, at this session of parliament. But we have them in mind, and we expect action to be taken on all these questions, but I maintain that the fair thing to do is to let our position be made plain, that we are willing to allow the government a reasonable time to implement their promises. We expect them to take action on all these matters, but in the meantime I propose to adopt what I believe is the proper attitude towards the government, and give them a reasonable opportunity of satisfying maritime claims.

Mr. R. K. SMITH (Cumberland): I want to say that I cannot at this time associate myself with the protest which has been uttered by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley), nor will I associate myself with protests made by any other member on this side of the House at this time in connection with the government's attitude on maritime claims. I realize that all the recommendations of the Duncan report have not been implemented by the government at this session, but my attitude is that as the Prime Minister has not closed the door with respect to the matters not dealt with, I am willing to give the government a fair chance to implement the complete Duncan report later, and I believe that most people of the maritimes are of this opinion.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Agriculture—live stock, including grants to exhibitions, feeder shows, etc., $1,280,000.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): As some hon. members would like to leave before this evening, I think I will take the three major votes first, Nos. 44, 45 and possibly 46. The item No. 44 has been under discussion intermittently all session, and I presume something will be said with regard to it. This vote includes grants for exhibitions, which account for nearly $300,000, leaving a little less than $1,000,000 for live stock.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What exhibitions are benefitting by this grant?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This vote covers both summer and winter fairs throughout Canada. A certain number of summer fairs are allocated to each province. Starting on the Pacific, the four western provinces have two summer fairs allotted to them, for which they receive $5,000 each. The two older provinces, Ontario and Quebec, have three summer fairs allotted to them and they receive the same amount. The three maritime provinces are each allotted one fair, and they receive the same grant. I think that constitutes about seventeen of what we call 'A" fairs, all capable of drawing as high as $5,000 each. Then there are about twenty-one "B" fairs, a grade lower than the others. They are not allocated according to provinces and seem to have no particular plans in connection with their establishment—no particular getting-on place or no particular getting-off place. These get a flat rate of $1,500 each. In addition to that there are about eleven or twelve winter fairs extending from Amherst on the east to Vancouver on the west, including Ottawa, Toronto, Chatham and London, in Ontario, and Valleyfield, Three Rivers and Ste. Scholastique in Quebec, Amherst representing the three maritime provinces. In the four western provinces, Manitoba has one, Saskatchewan and Alberta have two each, and British Columbia one.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister give us his opinion as to how a grant to one of these big fairs is any encouragement to the live stock industry?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend mean the larger fairs, the "A" fairs, Toronto or Ottawa, or any of them?

Mr. COOTE: I am referring to class "A" fairs. Is the grant made direct to the society?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Direct to the association. It is generally understood that where live stock growers assemble their products in competition with each other it always stimulates a desire for better and greater production, and it is a means of advertising, without which the stock men usually would be out of luck. As a matter of fact it usually costs the stock man about as much to pay his way to the fair as the prizes amount to. Then they have the advertising, which means that there is a balance coming to them. The people get to know about their class of stock, and a friendly competition is usually such a stimulant that it develops stock raising to a great extent. This applies to all the exhibitions whether large or small. The most primitive or youngest exhibition in a little village of two or three hundred inhabitants, representing a large rural district, will perform in a small measure the same object for the people locally. But it is not so noticable because they are not quite in the same class as the breeders of pure bred live stock.

Mr. COOTE: Why do you not spend the grant by giving prizes for live stock?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The major portion of these grants, in fact all of them, were given on the basis of the live stock exhibit. That is specified. My hon. friend knows that it was a perambulating exhibition from one province to another. It never went to Prince Edward Island, but they got a special grant instead. Just before the war this perambulating Dominion fair was held at Victoria. Subsequently it was divided into interprovincial fairs, these developed into "A" and "B" fairs, and these again into winter fairs. I have been endeavouring for some time to find a getting-off place so as to withdraw from this expenditure.

Mr. MacLAREN: Mr. Chairman, I had an opportunity of speaking to the minister not long ago on the subject of coöperative marketing, and I was pleased to find that he shared my enthusiasm. I call coöperative marketing the business end of farming. I believe if we had to choose between this form of marketing and fairs we would favour the former as conferring the greater advantage on farmers. In the Department of Agriculture, and perhaps in the Department of Trade and Commerce, there should be officials who are specialists in this subject, for it is no easy matter for a number of farmers to take up coöperative marketing. The average farmer may not know exactly what to produce, and what he does produce he sometimes finds difficulty in disposing of at remunerative prices. This is where the coöperative marketing specialist will be useful. I hope the minister will take steps along the lines I have suggested. I believe that if such an official explained to farmers in different parts of the country the practical advantages of up-to-date coöperative marketing it would add very materially to their welfare.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, coöperative marketing has taken a decided grip not only of the people of Canada but of the whole continent. I think nothing gave such a stimulus to coöperative marketing as the difficulties which faced our farmers after the war. Twenty years ago it became an objective on the prairies, where we were having very hard times, and we adopted it as a measure of necessity. The great wheat pools on the prairies are farmers' organizations, and to-day they are conducted without any governmental aid. This applies also to Ontario. But it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the time is ripe for the federal authority to become active. I have taken the ground recently that we might very well drop off some of our provincial activities and turn our attention to coöperative marketing. As a matter of fact, while we have not a distinct branch devoted to this work, we have been engaged in these activities for some time and have encouraged the coöperative marketing of poultry, eggs, sheep and swine. As soon as I knew the nature of the Duncan fruit report of two years ago I took the responsibility of calling the fruit men from all over the Dominion to a conference in this city. We paid their expenses and discussed with them the best methods of national salesmanship in view of the selling methods that the Duncan report had condemned. If my hon. friend has a first-class man available for this work of coöperative marketing I am in the field for one if I can get him past the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MacLAREN: Are you referring to me?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. There is another limitation. I have branches of my department in about eighteen buildings scattered throughout the city and across in Hull as well as on the experimental farm, and I rather dread the thought of establishing one more branch in one more building. We have this year in the estimates half a million dollars for a departmental building. The hon. member for St. John-Albert and all others who believe in coöperative marketing will facilitate the establishment of a branch devoted to the subject if they will help me secure a wing of this prospective building so I may have my staff within immediate call to confer on any particular question. Until that time arrives I hesitate to appoint any more branch heads.

Mr. COOTE: I suggest to the minister that he might hasten the time when he will have completed the new office of the Department of Agriculture. By eliminating grants to class "A" fairs he would have a good deal of money to secure the building he needs and he would use the rest of the grant to maintain a bureau of coöperative marketing. Such a bureau was established in the United States two years ago and I remember seeing in the Congressional Record the statement that they had appropriated $200,000 per annum as a start. The minister might very well reduce the vote of $200,000 to these big fairs, or cut it out and use the money for the creation of a bureau of coöperative marketing. It may be that the grant to these fairs does some good, but I believe the fairs would run just the same whether they got the grant or not. The minister since coming into office has adopted the policy of cutting down the grants particularly to the small fairs, and if the small fairs can get along without this assistance the larger ones surely ought to be able to do so. The larger fairs are held in places where there is a large population. The gate receipts are good and the fairs can carry on without a grant. I labour this point now because I think it would be of much more assistance to the live stock industry if the minister were to establish a bureau of coöperative marketing such as I suggest, than continuing grants to fairs. I want to compliment the minister for the sympathy he has shown towards coöperative marketing, as evidenced in the live stock bill brought down the other day. He tried to meet the wishes of the coöperators in that regard and I wish to thank him for what he has done. I hope however he will go further and set up a bureau of coöperative marketing and, instead of asking for more money from parliament, take from the grants to the class "A" fairs whatever he needs for the purpose. The minister might tell us what is done with the million dollars that are voted for live stock. The farmers are anxious to know to what use the money is put. The minister proposes to cut off the money he has been spending in furnishing pure bred sires to cattlemen. He has been cutting down the grants to the smaller fairs and still he is asking for the same amount he has been voted before. What use is made of the grant under live stock?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have been trying to eliminate the votes to fairs and I hope to have in my hon. friend a champion in this regard.

Mr. COOTE: You will so far as the class "A" fairs are concerned, anyway.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The live stock vote is divided as follows: For the horse division there is $149,000. My hon. friend is familiar with the horse club policy inaugurated in 1913 or 1914 throughout Canada. That policy, I think, has done a lot of good. I do not know how long it will be continued but I may observe that there has been no agitation for its abolition. To the cattle division there is devoted $260,000. There has been some discussion in the House off and on with regard to some alteration in policy in that direction, but the vote has not been reduced inasmuch as we have 1,400 bulls throughout Canada at the present time, and the cost of upkeep is considerable. The cost of service therefore, during the next couple of years, will be practically what it has been all along. For sheep and swine we are asking $230,000, and very much the same form of assistance is given in this regard. It has been a question with me—and I frankly admit it—how far we should go in promoting poultry, sheep and swine production in the various provinces. I have had a strenuous time, as my hon. friend realizes, endeavouring to get the provinces to take over some of the work in this field, but there is still a good deal left to be done in the maritime provinces. We have felt rather sympathetic towards them. No one loved them, and I wanted to let them know that at any rate the Department of Agriculture did. But we have been engaging in activities that are decidedly provincial and I think we shall continue for some time yet to do so. When we have had so much difficulty in weaning the rest of Canada from some of these services hon. gentlemen will realize what a whale of a time we shall have in the maritime provinces. I do not want to make life miserable for myself by eliminating too many of these activities all at once. It is all good work and whoever initiated it deserves our commendation. For the administration of the various stockyards, of which there are eight or ten in Canada, we are spending $50,000, and for exhibitions and judges the amount allotted is $200,000. The latter is exclusive of the winter fair at Toronto, which receives $35,000 per annum. We do not set up exhibits in regular places, but at the semi-provincial fairs and the smaller fairs throughout the country we do so whenever requested. They are anxious in some of these places to have the experimental farm set up an exhibit because it helps to advertise the products of Canada while at the same time it makes for the success of the exhibition. The national live stock movement, as the committee understands, embraces a vast number of live stock associations. The organization comprises live stock institutes from horses down to foxes, with pedigrees that are recorded in the National Live Stock Association. Mr. Brant has charge of this section.

Mr. KENNEDY: How nearly do the fees in connection with live stock pay for the work?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is a straight grant. The officer referred to is not in the department. The money helps the association to carry on its work.

Mr. McMILLAN: What is the amount of the grant?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: $27,000.

Mr. SPENCER: With regard to the cost of the administration of stock yards, the $50,000 is rather high, is it not?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are several yards—two in Saskatchewan, two in Alberta, one in Manitoba, one in Toronto and one in Montreal. We have to keep a staff of at least three, and of course the cost in connection therewith comes out of the amount. For printing and stationery the amount asked is $43,000; general, $15,000; and advertising $25,000. We have not done very much in the matter of advertising for the reason that the vote would not permit anything extensive. The total of the amounts thus expended is $1,280,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The minister said his department loved the maritime provinces. How is it that while agriculture is recognized to be the best industry in that part of Canada the Duncan report contains no recommendation in its behalf?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I fancy Sir Andrew Duncan thought I was doing all that was good for them at the present time.

Mr. COOTE: Does the grading of live stock come under this vote?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: How much is used for grading?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is only one class of live stock in the world graded on the hoof, and that is hogs. Sheep and swine together take up $230,000, and for grading purposes we have a staff of twenty-two, established three years ago. I will give, later on, information in that regard.

Mr. McMILLAN: Is there any change in the grading system?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There was very nearly a pronounced change about a month ago, but I took the responsibility for calling a conference of those who constituted the original gathering in the fall of 1921 which met to formulate a policy in connection with the building up of a better bacon trade in Canada based on a sound bacon hog. That conference was held in 1921 and at it there were representatives of the departments of agriculture of the nine provinces. I do not know whether all the departments were represented, but at any rate they were invited. Invitations were extended also to the railway companies, the swine breeders' associations and the live stock unions. Since that time two or three organizations have come into existence, and they of course will add to the representation at the forthcoming conference. The conference is to be held towards the close of next week to ascertain the next step to be taken in the matter of developing the bacon trade of Canada in the light of present conditions.

Mr. McMILLAN: It is to be held in Ottawa?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, the packers have taken the ground that they cannot afford to pay the 10 per cent premium. They have been losing money, they claim, on that account and also because of changed conditions in Europe, but I persuaded them not to depart from the undertaking of 1921, at least until all those who had entered into that arrangement had had an opportunity of talking the matter over.

Mr. CAYLEY: What advertising is being done now?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the year just passed we spent about $10,000 in advertising in the farm papers, and occasionally in others. We have done some advertising also in the old country papers.

Mr. TOLMIE: I do not agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Coote) in his proposal to wipe out the grants to fairs. I have been brought up, I might almost say, in the live stock industry in Canada, and having observed the development of these exhibitions I know what work they have done towards the improvement of our cattle business. I do not think we have yet reached the point where we can afford seriously to cramp the work of these exhibitions. At the same time I fully realize the importance of assisting coöperative marketing wherever we possibly can, because I am a firm believer in the fact that the farmer is certainly entitled to whatever he earns, whether through live stock or the cultivation of the soil. I want to see the farmer assisted in every possible way, not only through coöperative marketing but through every other means that will bring to him the greatest return for what he is doing. I would like to see the cost of shipping his exportable products to tide-water reduced to the lowest possible figure as well.

Now I propose to take up a few minutes of the time of the House in looking over the cattle situation as it is to-day and as it affects the live stock producer of Canada. We in Canada have three markets, the British market, the United States market and our home market; we export about 15 per cent of all the beef cattle produced in this country, which means that we must consume about 85 per cent of our production at home. The British market has been a great help to us, since it has created a competitive market for our products and has a stiffening effect upon our prices at home. This market was good from the removal of the embargo until 1926, increasing each year until that period, when it fell off to some extent. Our exports to the British market in 1925 were 110,000 head, but in 1926 this number was reduced to some 70,000, which is explained by several causes. First there was a severe coal strike, which reduced their consuming power; foot and mouth disease was also rife in the country, making it dangerous to handle cattle. There was a depression of business as a result of the strike and also a meat war in the Argentine between British and American packing interests, with the result that a vast amount of cheap Argentine beef was thrown on the market. This all had its effect on the British market and accounted for the falling off in our exports during 1926. However, I think prospects are better for the future, remembering that the freight rate has now been reduced to $15 per head, and that in addition there is a general improvement in the mother country. I had the pleasure the other day of meeting a gentleman just returned from the old country, a man in business on the Pacific coast, and I was very glad to hear from him that a feeling of optimism was being developed in England that the Britishers are gradually regaining those markets which they lost some time ago, and that they expect better business in the near future. This should assist to a great extent in providing a better market for our Canadian beef producers.

The market in the United States, of course, is one with which we would naturally fall in line if it were not for the barrier raised against us. In 1920 I think we reached the peak of our exportation to the United States, when we shipped something like 520,000 head of cattle. The emergency tariff came into effect in 1921, followed by the Fordney tariff of 1926, with the result that our shipments to the United States have been very much reduced. Last year we exported to that country only 90,000 head of cattle, and the year before we exported about 85,000 head.

Mr. McMILLAN: I think the figure is 290,000 head.

Mr. TOLMIE: Exported to the United States last year?

Mr. McMILLAN: Yes, for the year ending March 31, 1926.

Mr. TOLMIE: No. In 1925 we exported to the United States 86,748 head, and in 1926 90,000; those are the figures I have. That United States market takes about 65 per cent of our feeder cattle, that is, cattle which are taken to the corn belt and fattened up for the market at a later time of the year, and I think we can be proud of the fact that on the ranges of western Canada we produce a very high type of feeder, perhaps as good as can be produced in the world. The market in the United States would be very suitable to us on account of its close proximity, but because of the tariff we are not able to take advantage of it to the extent we would wish.

Perhaps a brief glance at the cattle situation in the United States may be of interest. The cattle population of the United States before the war was about 58,000,000 head, in 1921 this had risen to 67,184,000 head, and in 1922 to 67,264,000, while in 1926 the figure receded again to about 58,000,000. In 1914 the human population of the United States was 97,927 516; in 1925 that had risen to 115,378,094, or an increase of 9 per cent in eleven years. The beef consumption per capita in the United States is 61.1 pounds, and in Canada 74.9 pounds. The marketing of cattle in the United States has not shown any increase from 1919 to 1925; in fact there has been something of a falling off. In 1919 the cattle marketed amounted to 24,623,000, while in 1925 that figure had fallen to 24,067,000. About 40 per cent of that includes dairy cattle, stockers, feeders, and calves, and so we must deduct that from the other leaving about 14,978,920 head of cattle in the United States for slaughter purposes. Those cattle average about 506.16 pounds per carcass, so that the total beef production of the United States is about 7,581,730,147 pounds. The yearly consumption amounts to 7,049,601,543 pounds, so that there is a surplus of 532,128,604 pounds that must find a market somewhere oustide of the United States, or enough to support 8,723,255 of an increased population in that country. The average annual increase in population is 1,586,416, so that unless the United States is able to secure new sources of supply of cattle, the gradual increase in population should get rid of that surplus in a period of about six years, and then the United States would cease to be an exporting country in regard to beef cattle. I do not say it is impossible for them to increase their production of beef, but no doubt that beef will be produced at a higher cost, because in the United States the ranching country where cheap beef is produced was about gone some time ago.

I do not think the 90,000 head of cattle that we sent to the United States last year seriously interferes with the market in that country because it is so small in proportion to the large volume of beef that is handled. As an indication that this might be true, let me say that the secretary of agriculture in his report of 1925 refers to the splendid, beneficial effects of the tariff as affecting dairy produce, fruit, wheat, sheep, flax, sugar beet and sugar cane, but he makes no reference whatever to its advantage in connection with the beef industry.

We come now to our home market, the most important one of all as I pointed out a while ago, using about 85 per cent of our products. In 1926 about a million head of cattle went through our live stock yards. Probably half a million more are slaughtered in country places, on farms and so forth. We find however that a tremendous raft of scrubs go through our live stock yards; more than 50 per cent of the animals passing through our yards are graded as common and look as though they were raised in some cases for speed and trained a little fine at that. There is a difference of about $30 a head between grades good and common, showing what a tremendous loss our farmers are suffering as a result of, first, losing in the weight of the animal and, second, on account of its poor quality having the price lowered again. Less than six per cent of our cattle as they pass through our yards are of sufficiently good quality to compete with the 2,000,000 Argentine cattle that are exported every year. Only about 10 or 15 per cent of our cattle going through our yards are of sufficiently high quality to obtain the highest average price. Therefore this is a clean-cut indication that 85 per cent of our cattle are badly in need of improvement not only in breeding but in more liberal feeding.

Mr. McGIBBON: How do our cattle compare in Great Britain with cattle from the Argentine?

Mr. TOLMIE: As regards the quality of Argentine cattle, I never before saw such uniform beef as I saw in the Smithfield market from the Argentine. The beef that the British market has taken from the Argentine is on the average considerably ahead of ours.

What do we find in regard to our beef as it goes on the market? Consumers in Canada have very little knowledge regarding the quality of meat. We eat more beef than we do of all other meats in Canada and we would eat a great deal more if we were only sure of the quality. We find that in Canada we buy tender steaks instead of tasty steaks. That is why we find on many of our tables what I call a two-way steak, probably secured from an animal that is poor, a steak that is taken from a tenderloin. I call it a two-way steak because in addition to being tender it is also tasteless. The cheaper cuts are usually bought by the working people, and in this regard again no knowledge is shown of the improved quality between beef from the finished animal and beef from one of the poorer kind. We find too that much of our beef going on the market is tough and unpalatable, and after living around our boarding houses in this country for a number of years since I entered politics about ten years ago, I have come to the conclusion that we in Canada are a tough, strong-jawed people. What does this cheap trash do? It takes up the goodly part of the market that would be supplied by the better quality. The man who buys, let us say, a roast for his Sunday dinner, finds that roast is of poor quality, and the result is that he simply gives up the eating of beef for a week or ten days and buys mutton or pork or chicken. Herbivorous people became numerous during the war and immediately after; a campaign was started to encourage the eating of more salads and fruits, and this was carried to such an extent that it reduced the consumption of beef by some millions of pounds on this continent. In fact some of these people pushed the matter so far that they became almost wholly herbivorous and would have become cud-chewers in another generation or two. This might have reached the stage where they would have simply turned their families out on the lawn in the summertime and they would rustle for themselves.

What are we going to do to meet the situation? I was much interested in the Live Stock Act which was brought up the other day for amendment in which there was a proposal for beef grading. This would be of great advantage; but we must carry on a campaign of education and teach our consumers to buy the better cuts, so that we may in that way bring back the higher prices to the man who takes the trouble and goes to the expense of producing an animal of high quality. The great difficulty is this, that while the United States, Canada and some other countries are much interested in beef grading, they have not yet evolved a plan that will protect the consumer. Under ordinary conditions a man might buy a second class or No. 2 cow, cut her up into steaks, and I would defy anybody buying those steaks, in many cases to tell the difference between them and a steak from a No. 1 steer. The result is that there must be some means of educating the people and of clearly designating the difference between No. 1 and No. 2 beef.

That is the problem which is being faced in the United States now where they have several committees created which are being backed up with a good deal of money. These committees are carrying on a careful investigation, and in a year or two we shall be in a good position to benefit from what they have learned and to avoid the mistakes which they are bound to make in their experiments. I sincerely hope some plan will be evolved to mark permanently that beef as No. 1 quality so that the marks will be found in the steaks and roasts as they are cut off.

It is estimated that our farmers, on account of the production of poor beef, are losing at least $10,000,000 a year on their animals as they market them. I pointed out a few minutes ago that the average weight of a carcass in the United States is about 506 pounds. I remember very well going through an abattoir in Toronto a few years ago where they were putting about 700 head of cattle across the floor on that particular day. I was astounded to find that those carcasses weighed from about 275 to 320 pounds, indicating that they were cheap, common trash. I do not say that all our cattle are like that, but what I saw on that particular day impressed me most forcibly with the importance of improving the quality of our cattle. That indicates, too, that this problem is largely in the hands of the producer, and that he must coöperate with the government in the improvement of our beef.

I have shown the great importance of the quality of our live stock. It must be remembered that we have no less than $7,000,000,000 invested in this great industry of agriculture in Canada, and if we can bring about even a small proportion of improvement in that industry, you can readily see what a great benefit that would be to the general business of the country. Under these conditions it is most surprising to me that our Minister of Agriculture and the government have seen fit to cancel the pure-bred sire policy which was introduced in this country a few years ago, in 1913, by the Hon. Mr. Burrell, then Minister of Agriculture. That policy has rendered a most excellent service to those people who are settled in the newer parts of the country, settlers, say, in northern Ontario, in New Brunswick, or in the northern part of British Columbia, men who under ordinary circumstances would never have enough money in five years to buy a pure-bred sire. It was in these districts that we formed little clubs, of five or ten farmers, and sent to them a pure-bred sire. We would loan it to them for so many years, would take it to the station, pay the freight on it, and all they had to do was to take him home and give him enough to eat. After a period of five years we would find, in the first place, that the cattle in that district were very much improved, and in the second place, those ten farmers would have been educated as to the great value of the use of pure-bred stock. So the policy was rendering a splendid service to the country, and I was very much surprised to find that this year the Minister of Agriculture is proposing to eliminate entirely that policy which has been of such benefit to the cattle men of the country. I know that he is a man of high intelligence, a gentleman with a good knowledge of the live stock business, and that he appreciates the value of this policy, and why he should be eliminating it I cannot quite understand. Perhaps he has had some of the experience I had during the time I had the honour of occupying that position, when I found the greatest possible difficulty in trying to drive into the heads of the lawyers and the other men who made up the remainder of the cabinet the value of agriculture in Canada. It is strange, too, that just at this moment when the minister is proposing to eliminate this pure-bred sire policy in Canada, our friends in Ireland, our greatest competitors in the British market so far as cattle is concerned, are introducing that very policy and are going to put it into general effect.

There is another point I cannot quite understand. We will all recognize the fact that the winter fairs in this country were created for the purpose of improving the commercial live stock of the country. I remember very well when the Royal Winter Fair was started at Toronto. As minister, I had the pleasure and the honour of assisting in establishing that fair, and Toronto was selected as the most suitable place to hold the fair because it is one of the best exhibition cities in the world. The Canadian National Exhibition has rendered a splendid service to this country in training our people to like exhibitions, and the result is that when an exhibition is staged in Toronto it is largely patronized by the people of that great city. The object of that winter fair, I remember very well, was to improve the quality of the commercial live stock, because we had watched the splendid results attained at the great International Live Stock Show in Chicago. Clearly that was the object in establishing the Royal Winter Fair. Now during this very session when the minister is proposing to eliminate the pure-bred sire policy, something like $35,000 a year is being offered to the Royal Winter Fair for a period of twenty years. This is simply robbing Peter to pay Paul, and in this case Peter needs the money worse than Paul does.

Before taking my seat, I want to say a word about the World's Poultry Congress which is to be held in the city of Ottawa during the coming summer. This congress is one of very great importance. It is a world show, and it is being held on this continent for the first time. There will be representatives here from all over the world, and I sincerely trust that the congress will receive the patronage of the Canadian people. The government, I understand, has dealt liberally with it, and a very excellent show should be staged. Let me point this out: We shall have here on that occasion representatives from all over the world interested in poultry and, no doubt, in every class of live stock, and I hope that an effort will be made to have these delegates travel clear across this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, going by one route and returning by another, so that they will have an opportunity of seeing what a wonderful country this is and what great opportunities it offers for settlement. Some people think that chickens do not amount to very much. I would just like to point out what one little three-pound hen has done for the province of British Columbia. This was a hen bred at the University of British Columbia, and entered at the egg-laying contest at Agassiz farm last year, the Dominion farm, so she was under Dominion supervision. This hen produced in 365 days 351 eggs. Hon. gentlemen will realize what a wonderful record that was when I say that the average biddy in Canada produces only 86 eggs per year. They have refused over $1,000 cash for this hen. Her stock is already booked for sale in 1927 to the amount of $1,275, and they have other inquiries pending to the amount of $1,000 more. It required two stenographers to answer the correspondence with regard to this particular hen for some length of time after this record was made and had had time to reach out to different parts of the world. Inquiries came from Africa, from all parts of Europe, Asia, the United States and other parts of the world. Now if that one hen has done so much to advertise the province of British Columbia, hon. gentlemen can get some idea of what this wonderful poultry congress can do for Canada if only it is handled right.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Would the minister tell the committee what the annual grant for the Maritime Winter Fair and Live Stock Show held at Amherst, Nova Scotia, amounts to, that is, what amount is to be allotted this year, and also the amount allotted last year? The reason I ask this question is that last year there was a provincial exhibition held at Amherst as well as the Maritime Winter Fair and Live Stock Show, and I would like to know if the minister would feel inclined to grant the same amount this year to the Winter Fair and Live Stock Show as was granted to the two exhibitions last year, as this year I am told only one show is to be held; they are not having the provincial exhibition.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend, I presume, knows the story of the Amherst fair, of how they struggled along for some time with old and inadequate buildings. Inasmuch as it is the only winter fair, I think, in the maritimes, it was felt that it was really a rallying point for the live stock industry of the three maritime provinces, and consequently we are giving them a special grant. These grants, of course, are very dangerous things to start, because you never know where you are going to get off at, but, and this is in line with the remarks I made a few moments ago, we did not know what was going to be done in connection with the Duncan report, and so we adopted a policy of reasonable generosity towards the maritimes so far as my department is concerned, and here is one of the evidences of it. This winter fair at Amherst is getting $7,000 a year; there is no specified period during which the grant will be continued, but that is $2,000 more than the ordinary grant given to the regular summer fair.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I am glad indeed to know that the minister is giving special consideration to this important show. I may say that it has been in operation for twenty-seven years, except for a period during the war, and it certainly has made great strides in the standardization and scientific breeding and raising of fat cattle for commercial purposes in the maritime provinces. The attitude of the government in increasing the amount for the maritime winter fair will, I can assure the minister, be deeply appreciated.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I thought, from memory, it was $7,000. My deputy tells me it is $8,000—one better. But there is something else that we must bear in mind. Before the war Halifax had a provincial exhibition, and if they ever come back with proper buildings—and I understand they have been living in expectation of that for the last five or six years—then we will have to consider the question as to which of these two will have the federal grant for Nova Scotia. We may be able to come to some arrangement between them whereby the fair will be alternated, the same as it is between St. John and Fredericton, but as the matter stands at present, only one fair goes to the maritime provinces and sometimes there are two equal claimants. However, it is quite possible that when Halifax comes back to her former position Amherst will claim to have a vested right and will not want to give it up, and we may have to alternate between the two. I simply mention that to show that the fair at Amherst is not a fixture. Halifax is showing evidence of coming back to life after the great disaster during the war, and when that city does come back there will be a difficult question to solve.

Mr. MAYBEE: Does this vote include a grant to the Cobourg horse show, and if so what is the amount?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was one of the little shows that got the better of somebody's good-nature at some time, and I am going to try to get rid of it. I have nothing against the Cobourg horse show, but we have got to stop somewhere. I think the grant was given up to two years ago. Was there an exhibition last year?

Mr. MAYBEE: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I thought it was dropped. At any rate that was a straight horse show, a fancy show and a very nice show, but I am getting away rather from the principle of giving grants to every place that has a show of some kind or other. I wish to make the exhibition grants federal in nature and stop some of them, and I am afraid we will have to discontinue that grant.

Mr. MAYBEE: Does the minister think the encouraging of horse breeding is commendable, as well as the breeding of other live stock?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, yes, it is. It was a small grant of $1,000, but we are giving substantial grants to horse breeding through the grants to winter fairs practically from one end of the country to the other. These small shows are springing up all over the country, and we will have the same trouble in connection with all of them. There will not be a small fair in the Dominion that will not sooner or later claim a grant and unless I draw the line of demarcation somewhere between where the Dominion will stop and the province begin there will be no end of requests.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I was interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Tolmie) when he painted the picture of improved marketing conditions and improved demands for our beef cattle in the old country. I was interested in his resumé of conditions in the United States. Further in his remarks he made reference to the quality of our beef cattle in Canada and I want to deal with that point for a few moments. For fourteen years we have had a policy in Canada, wisely adopted I think, and it has been improved during the years, of loaning pure bred sires to clubs, but for some reason or other the minister has seen fit very recently to discontinue that policy. I think possibly that is of more vital importance to the cattle industry of Canada than anything else that can be done, and I regret very much that the discontinuance of this policy has been decided upon. Now that we are, on the eve of prosperity in the agricultural line, and our products are reaching markets further and further every year, with the possibility of the United States market opening up to us in the near future, I would ask the minister seriously to reconsider his decision on the sire policy that has been discontinued. We have $15,000,000 for defence, and we have a paltry $6,000,000 for agriculture. We have half a million in the estimates for house and grounds at Washington, and we have many other items in the estimates to which I could draw the attention of this House that seem to be out of all proportion to the grant which is given to the great basic industry of this country. Nobody will deny that. We hear it every day. I think the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., was quite correct when he said that it was very hard to drive into the heads of professional men the value of agriculture. If we are going to improve the live stock in this country in any great volume we must get back to the man who is hesitating as to whether he will go into beef cattle or into the scrub class. The policy adopted so many years ago has done more to improve the quality of live stock than all the class A and class B fairs in the country. Those are more or less superficial in their nature. I do not condemn them in any way. That is where the men with fancy cattle meet and contest for prizes. But the man who produces beef which goes into the foreign market is the man to whom the hon. member for Victoria made reference. I ask the minister again to think seriously before he decides definitely to discontinue the policy. He says he has a staff on hand, is retaining 1,400 animals, and it will take very little more to continue that policy. I can assure my hon. friend, from first-hand knowledge, especially in western Canada, that that policy is reaping more profit for the beef industry of the country than any other expenditure that has been made by us.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I intended to make a reply to the hon. member for Victoria, but he is not in the chamber. However, as the hon. member for Last Mountain referred to the same matter, I will make a statement with regard to it. I refer to the abandonment of the bull loaning policy. I do not say that that policy has not done good work, but I think we can introduce something that will do better work. Anything you can get for nothing is never appreciated. Without going into the weaknesses of the system, I am quite free in my admission of the good work that has been done and the improvement of the live stock industry under it. Nevertheless I think we can evolve a better policy.

I had my first experience of this system in Saskatchewan in 1908, when the provincial government, of which I was a member, introduced the policy of the sale of live stock, both male and female, to settlers on easy cash terms. That policy was inaugurated following two exceedingly bad years, 1907 and 1908, for the live stock industry, and it has continued to this day. What Saskatchewan has done any other province can do. Let me pay this tribute to the eastern provinces. Over fifty years ago the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and at least two of the maritimes assisted in the distribution of bulls through the agricultural societies, and they are still continuing that policy. Consequently only a small number of the provinces have been relying entirely on Dominion assistance in this respect. So far as Manitoba and Saskatchewan are concerned, we have already made tentative arrangements, particularly with Saskatchewan. Later on I expect to see the represenative of the Manitoba government when possibly we shall be able to complete arrangements with him. The Saskatchewan government are purchasing on an average about forty bulls a year at the regular bull sales and selling them on easy terms. I had an opportunity of meeting Mr. Hamilton recently and concluded with him a tentative arrangement under which the federal government will bear half the loss up to 15 per cent incurred by the provincial authorities in the distribution of these male animals.

I freely admit that good work has been done, but there are two sides to this question. I believe we can do better work through the purchase and sale of animals in the manner I have described. Even in poverty-stricken Russia the government sold to the peasants on long-term payments the horses which they purchased from Canada. I am receiving numerous communications like the following, which is from a gentleman named James Moffat:

> I am in perfect sympathy with your policy, and hope you carry it out. It is time people were trying to walk alone without being "pap fed".

That is frank, but it is the situation. Under the loan policy we have great difficulty in keeping the animals in condition, and sometimes it takes fifty dollars to put them in good condition after they have been on circuit and the club has decided to discontinue operations. Let me put on Hansard a letter, a copy of which I have supplied to several members, indicating the reason why we adopted this new policy:

OTTAWA, March 8, 1927.

DEAR SIR:

Your representations, relative to the federal bull loaning policy, have been duly noted.

Replying, I may say that while it is freely admitted by all that a great deal of good has come out of this method of encouraging the improvement of Canadian live stock, still, I think it must be conceded that a free distribution of anything such as this, is usually unsound as a permanent policy, it being much better to adopt the wiser program of helping those who help themselves. Besides, it is generally admitted, I think, that any agricultural activity so directly related to production as this is, naturally devolves upon the provinces to take care of it, if they so desire. As an evidence that this has been so looked upon, by at least some of the provinces, might I draw your attention to the fact that in 1908 the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture, over which I had the honour to preside, inaugurated a policy of selling cattle to pioneer settlers who were unable to finance the undertaking themselves, on small, initial cash payments and credit term subsequent payments, which is yet in vogue.

Shortly afterwards, the adjoining provinces of Alberta and Manitoba adopted somewhat similar policies, all indicating that provinces whose conditions seemed to warrant such an enterprise were prepared to take it on as a provincial duty. Indeed, the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan still operate an annual live stock train, in which they feature very prominently the advantages of using pure-bred bulls and pure-bred males generally. Carlots of stock and suitable lecturers accompany this train, making the sales as they travel from point to point.

This is educational work of a high order with the sales part conducted on a purely business basis. Since, therefore, education has always been recognized as peculiarly the prerogative of the province, what justification is there for the federal government butting into such essentially educational work as these provincial train lecturers engage in, and worse still conducting the commercial end on a gift basis, with all its obvious weaknesses, instead of on a business basis, with all its obvious strength? In addition to this, overlapping of the federal and provincial work ensues, which should be reduced to the lowest possible minimum.

Further, if the western provinces, as well as New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec (the last three through the medium of agricultural societies) can engage in this worthy enterprise when necessary, it would appear quite reasonable to expect that the remaining provinces could do likewise. It is not, however, very likely that such remaining provinces will take it up as a new venture so long as the federal continues in this provincial field.

I find also in actual practice that it is very difficult to get proper amounts allocated to federal agriculture in the annual estimates so long as considerable portions of such estimates are devoted to what are admittedly provincial activities directly associated with production. For many years this department has been criticized for its overlapping policy with the provinces, and this is one more attempt on my part to remove as far as may be possible any justification of such criticism.

We have been endeavouring for some time to find some line of demarcation between provincial and federal agricultural activities, but this is not easy to define clearly. Generally speaking, those activities directly associated with production are conceded to be provincial, while the agricultural activities associated with the standardization, grading and marketing of exportable farm products, together with the health of farm animals generally, are usually conceded to be federal.

With this in view, we have been gradually dropping some distinctively provincial work, preparatory to taking up new work of a more federal or national character, also having in mind that we can more justifiably and more effectively urge for larger and more generous estimates when the expenditure is confined as nearly as possible to federal services.

In conclusion, I may say that when any one of the nine provincial departments of agriculture shows a desire to take up, resume, or continue the distribution of pure-bred cattle to farmers on an easy sales basis, the federal department will be prepared to discuss it with them, with the view of working out some mutually agreeable business policy, under which some tangible federal encouragement and coöperation could be afforded and defended.

In the meantime, the 1,400 federally loaned bulls throughout Canada will be continued in commission.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

I would appreciate it very much if you would endeavour to see these angles of the question, although it is not easy to do so, I admit, except by one who has had an opportunity to administer this work from both the provincial and the federal standpoint.

Commending these views to your very best judgment, I remain,

Yours very truly,

W. R. MOTHERWELL.

We are not scrapping the original policy, we are simply changing it from a loaning to an easy sales policy, with the Dominion cooperating with the provinces to the extent of carrying half the loss up to 15 per cent.

Mr. ROWE: The hon. minister says that he is changing the original scheme slightly to the extent of making it to an easy sales policy. Well, let me remind the minister that although he has been good enough to give to the Royal Winter Fair at Toronto an annual grant of $30,000, he apparently proposes to take it from the agricultural industry at the rate of $100,000 a year, because the cost of this federal sire system to-day amounts to over that sum annually. He says he is ready to coöperate with the provincial governments on very easy terms. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the farmers throughout the Dominion will accept his proposal as readily as those of us who are anxious to see parliament prorogue. In many parts of the Dominion undoubtedly this better sire service scheme has been of great advantage to the agricultural industry. The minister admits that himself, every member of this House admits it, and yet we find to-day he has abandoned it entirely so far as his department's responsibility financially is concerned. In answer to the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Maybee) the minister said he did not know there was a horse show at Cobourg last year.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: How should I know? I was otherwise engaged at that time, and very successfully too.

Mr. ROWE: I admit it, but I would remind the minister that the Cobourg horse show was very successfully staged last year, as it generally is, and it is one of the best shows in the Dominion.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Sure.

Mr. ROWE: I know the minister is interested in live stock production, and this being so, surely it is not good judgment on his part to withhold the grants from the agricultural shows that are endeavouring to put on better exhibits every year, but yet have sometimes to struggle along at a loss. I think there is money in the production of horses, and a horse show of the magnitude of that held at Cobourg should surely be recognized especially at a time when the department is reducing agricultural estimates to the extent of $65,000, while asking the farmers to endorse the payment of $35,000 per annum to the royal show at Toronto. We do not object to that, but when, as I say, the department is saving $65,000 in agricultural expenditures it is hardly right to withhold consideration from horse shows. I am not speaking particularly for the province of Ontario because I know that province will not be materially affected At the present time only about fifty-two sires are maintained in Ontario while in the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Quebec—where from $20,000 to $25,000 is being withdrawn from general expenditures—there are from 300 to 330 sires being maintained. These provinces are therefore suffering in this respect to the extent to which expenditures for agricultural purposes are being curtailed, while being correspondingly generous to other departments of the industry.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend, I know, really wants to know the facts. We should like to make a grant to Cobourg but we must cut our coat to suit the cloth, and we have not enough cloth to go round.

Mr. McGIBBON: You are cutting the cloth in the wrong way.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend from Dufferin (Mr. Rowe) is under a misapprehension regarding the alleged relationship between the grant to the winter fair at Toronto and any change that has taken place in the bull loaning policy. There is no connection whatever between the two. As a matter of fact it is now two years since the government was first committed to the grant to the Royal Winter Fair at Toronto. And let me make it clear that the grant is not to the city of Toronto, but to the live stock industry of Canada. My hon. friend represents the constituency of Dufferin: Et tu, Brute! Does he object to this money being voted for the fair at Toronto? Surely the fair must be established somewhere, and the object is to provide some place in which to house the pure-bred live stock of Canada. That is the primary object, and we believe Toronto to be the most convenient centre. I repeat, there is no relationship whatever between grants to fairs or to anything else and the policy of the department regarding sires, because before the latter policy was even thought of, two years ago next June, if my recollection serves me, an order in council was passed committing us to the principle of granting assistance to the winter fair at Toronto. What possible connection is there between the two, and why should my hon. friend wish to misrepresent the situation and convey the suggestion that Toronto is getting something at the expense of the farmers of the country? Where could we put the buildings if not in one of the large centres? My hon. friend knows that, but I want to draw his attention to it, and I am sure he will not continue to misrepresent the situation as he has unwittingly done.

Mr. ROWE: I cannot let the minister place the statement on Hansard that I am dangling anything before the people of Toronto, and I say to him that I am quite capable of looking after myself in my affairs with that city. I have not been misrepresenting the situation, and the minister has verified what I have said. He has carefully misrepresented the statement I made, when he said that I expressed the opinion that the grant should not have been given to the Royal show in the city of Toronto. Hon. members of the committee will remember that I said we had no objection to the grant being made.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But my hon. friend said that it resulted in the impoverishment of some other place.

Mr. ROWE: I want to make it quite clear to the minister just what I did say, although I think he understands it fairly well; with his experience in parliament he does not need to have it explained to him more than twice, surely. I would be one of the last to oppose this grant; I have been an exhibitor at the Royal show and have been interested in it since its inception; as a matter of fact, I would have been keenly disappointed if that grant had not been made. What I did say was that the Minister of Agriculture has given this grant to the city of Toronto, and to that no member of this House has ever objected. The minister poses as a great agriculturist, and as one interested in the agriculture industry, yet he has taken from that industry $100,000 annually, which would amount to $2,000,000 in the next twenty years, to give to the city of Toronto, $35,000 a year for the next twenty years, a total of $700,000. I do not want to be misrepresented, but I think the people of this country will quite understand.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What does my hon. friend call that if it is not dangling? He has mentioned it now half a dozen times.

Mr. ROWE: I hope the minister will allow me to make it clear to him, because I am sure the people of Toronto will understand it quite readily. They know that no member of this House has objected to this grant of $35,000 a year, and I ask the minister if he has ever received a protest from either side of the House against this grant. It does seem strange, however, after saying that this better sire scheme which has been carried on for a number of years and which has done splendid work for the live stock of this country cannot be continued, and that he must cut his cloth according to his measurements, that the minister now proposes to continue this grant of $35,000 to the Royal show in Toronto. I would not object if that grant were increased to $50,000. The minister has shown that he is interested in the large shows but that the small shows, such as the Cobourg horse show, do not matter. That show has had a great reflection cast upon it to-day, although it is one of the best horse shows in the province of Ontario. The grant to that show has been eliminated while the city of Toronto is to receive a grant of $35,000 a year. I would not object, as I have already said, if that grant were increased to $50,000, because by the abandonment of this scheme which the minister has said is a splendid one, the department will be saving enough money to permit of such an increase. The minister is merely passing the buck, asking the provincial governments and the farmers to co-öperate, and assuring them that he will do everything possible to make it easy for them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course I know passing the buck is quite a favourite pastime for some, but I want to tell my hon. friend that nearly twenty years ago the provincial government of which I was a member started the first policy of buying and selling live stock to farmers on small cash payments down with the balance distributed over a considerable period. Now I am suggesting to the provinces that if they will do as Saskatchewan and Manitoba have done, and as Alberta has begun to do, the federal government will get behind them and help share the loss up to 15 per cent. Surely that should not be deprecated; it was at least good enough for the first province to which it was offered to accept immediately.

Mr. BENNETT: There is just a word I would like to say. I am not a farmer or an agriculturist, but I do know that this departure from the policy heretofore followed by the department has had a very distressing effect upon the pure bred sales which have been conducted in Calgary during the last twenty years. The people of that city have heard the news of this departure with very great sorrow, because this has had a stabilizing effect upon their business by reason of the purchases made at spring shows by the government. I think the minister will admit that it was most advantageous, and this departure has certainly caused a great deal of surprise, because it is not felt that the alternative suggestion will be of nearly the same benefit to the community. I am not speaking with any degree of authority, of course, but I wish to represent the view expressed to me from time to time. I recently received some communications which I brought to the attention of the minister and which indicated that the effect of the announcement of the change of policy had been very injurious upon the spring pure bred sales. I thought possibly the minister might find some method by which this policy could be continued for another year, but he quite properly pointed out to me that when you do give notice at the expiration of a period such as this, there is always the same opposition to a change as there would be if the announcement were followed up immediately by the act itself. I can quite understand that. I think the sum of money saved in this way is very great and will be a loss to the industry except in a broad way with regard to the Royal show in Toronto.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the minister say if class "B" fairs are receiving anything?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are getting the $1,500 flat.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): There is some misapprehension as to the hog grading. Would the minister give us a little outline of that work?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend is in Ottawa I will give him an invitation now to be an interested spectator at the coming conference. I do not know what the result will be. The packers, swine feeders and other interested parties entered into a gentleman's agreement in 1921 which resulted in a great improvement in our bacon hogs, and it would be very lamentable if anything should happen at this time in any way to interfere with this improvement. Our swine have been so improved that Canadian bacon to-day is on a parity with the best bacon sold on the British market. I shall be glad to have any suggestions as to an alternative policy which will be nearly as good, and that is the purpose of the conference.

Mr. GARDINER: Then the grading is not compulsory at present?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is compulsory for stock yards and producers but not in the country.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it true that an intimation has been received from the packers to the effect that they desire to discontinue the agreement?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. They wanted to discontinue it some time ago, but I prevailed upon them to continue until representatives from all the interests concerned could meet together.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister tell us anything in regard to the demand for Canadian bacon in Great Britain, whether it is falling off or increasing?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The demand is splendid. Our bacon is sometimes very scarce on the British market, which is the reason for the good prices.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the question of compensation for the slaughter of animals come under this vote?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. That comes under item No. 46.

Item agreed to.

Experimental farms, $1,600,000.

Mr. MILLAR: This grant is quite large, but I do not think it is too large. One of these experimental farms lies almost at my door, and I have had an opportunity to observe the good work which is being done.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

THIRD READING

Bill No. 305, to incorporate Commerce Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Morin (St. Hyacinthe).

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The House in committee on Bill No. 107, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada—Mr. Cahan—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Capital stock.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 2 has been amended by adding after the word "shareholders" in the thirty-first line the following:

Of the capital stock hereafter issued an amount limited as hereinafter provided may be designated as "Class B" stock, the voting power of which shall be vested solely in the directors of the company, including both those elected by and representing the stockholders and those elected by and representing the participating policyholders under the provisions of any act of parliament, each director being empowered to vote, in person or by another director as his proxy, an equal whole number of shares to be found by dividing the total number of issued shares of such class B stock by the total number of directors then in office. Any issue of class B stock shall be made by a special resolution of the board of directors and approved by a majority of the votes cast at a special meeting of the stockholders duly called for considering the matter. Capital stock now issued or issued hereafter not being class B stock shall be known and designated as "class A" stock. The amount of class B stock issued and outstanding at any time shall not exceed twenty per centum of the total stock, classes A and B, then issued and outstanding.

Mr. COOTE: I wonder if whoever is sponsoring this bill will be good enough to explain to the committee this very lengthy and what seems to me to be a complicated amendment. The bill has not been reprinted and we have not the amendment before us.

Mr. CAHAN: The matter was discussed in committee, and the committee added a clause that 20 per cent of the additional stock issue might be voted by the directors of the company including both those who represent the policyholders and those who represent the shareholders. This is simply a provision to make it difficult for foreign companies to buy up and control this Canadian company. I could explain it at greater length, but the time is short now and there are many other bills to be considered. The matter was fully explained before the committee and this is the substance of it.

Mr. SPENCER: When I was speaking on this bill the other night, one of the main reasons why I was critical of it was because I was afraid that this increase in capital stock was going to be carried out by the very common practice of what is usually termed cutting a melon or watering stock. After I had sat down the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) read a part of a letter from the president of the Sun Life. I have since been informed that the writer would have welcomed the whole of the letter being put on Hansard, and I therefore read it:

Montreal, April 8, 1927.

SAMUEL JACOBS, Esq., M.P.,
Parliament buildings,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My dear Mr. JACOBS,

As you have very kindly undertaken to look after our bill in the absence of Mr. Cahan, I take this opportunity of replying through you to a question which has been put to me.

We have absolutely no intention of issuing even one share of new stock as a bonus to our stockholders. If our bill becomes law we propose gradually to increase the capital up to $4,000,000, but every additional share which we may issue will be subscribed for in the usual way, and will be paid for in hard cash at its full par value.

We are quite willing that this letter shall be placed on record as a permanent pledge on behalf of the company to that effect.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) T. B. MACAULAY,
President.

Since that letter was written I had an opportunity of seeing Mr. Macaulay, and he led me to believe that he was anxious to guarantee against any possibility of people thinking there was going to be the usual melon cutting in regard to this stock issue. He went further and said that he was quite prepared to support an amendment being added to the amended clause 2. One was submitted to me which I was willing to place before the House. However, as Mr. Macaulay was anxious to look after the interests of the policy holders, and was not anxious that the shareholders should have more than a reasonable amount of return on their investment, I have added to the suggested amendment; I therefore move to amend clause 2 as amended by adding these words:

[Mr. Cahan.]

Of the capital stock to be hereafter issued no shares shall be distributed to the stockholders as dividends or bonuses, or shall be issued in any other way than in return for the payment to the company of at least the full par value thereof.

After the issue of any capital in excess of two million dollars no dividend to shareholders shall be declared by the company in excess of fifteen per cent per annum.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, without discussing the first clause of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Battle River, I accept it at once on behalf of the company. As to the second clause, I must object to that. Section 104 of the act of 1917 dealing with insurance, which is chapter 9 of the statutes of 1917, provides by enactment of this parliament that the participating policyholders shall be entitled to 90 per cent of the profits arising from the participating policyholders' business, which leaves to the stockholders 10 per cent. The Sun Life Company, by a by-law of its own, has reduced its share from ten to five per cent, and, in the bill before the House, they propose to reduce it still further to three per cent. Having reduced their share to three per cent, and leaving the remaining 97 per cent to the policyholders, they think that is fair since under the general law they are entitled to 10 per cent.

That part of the amendment of my hon. friend from Battle River which would provide that never in the future shall the company pay over 15 per cent to their stockholders is utterly unfair, because this company, which was incorporated just before confederation paid to its shareholders in cash dividends on its subscribed stock for nearly forty years never more than 2¼ per cent, and frequently less than that. In that way they have accumulated as a guarantee to their policyholders over $30,000,000, which belongs to the stockholders and is the stockholders' money, and to say that at no time in the future shall they pay over 15 per cent, if this company should in the future be in a position to distribute more, is utterly unfair, and I say that this parliament should not insert such a provision on account of the forty years during which the stockholders got practically nothing. I am not going to deal with the matter any longer. I accept the first clause, and if it is possible, Mr. Chairman, I would like you to put these clauses to the vote of the committee separately, so that we may have a separate vote upon them. If that is not possible, I will have to move in amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for Battle River that the second clause of his amendment be struck out.

Mr. COOTE: Could the hon. member inform the House in which years the company was paying the stockholders only 2¼ per cent?

Mr. CAHAN: The rate per cent of cash dividends paid to the stockholders was as follows:

Year	Rate per cent
1871..	Nothing
1872..	"
1873..	6/10 of 1 per cent
1874..	"
1875..	"
1876..	"
1877..	1 3/10 per cent

Mr. PARENT: How many shareholders were there then?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know. I am dealing with the rate per cent. It got up to 1¼ per cent in 1883, and then went down to 75/100 of 1 per cent in 1887, came back in 1889 to 1½ per cent; 1890 and 1891, 1½ per cent; 1892, 1.69 per cent, and so on.

Mr. PARENT: The same shareholders all the time?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know whether they were or not, but they were guaranteeing the policies of this company, and receiving comparatively little return on their liabilities. In 1898 the rate went up for the first time to 2¼ per cent, in 1910, 1.58 per cent, and in 1911, 3.75 per cent, and so on. I am not going to discuss this amendment at length, Mr. Chairman, because I think that every word I utter is preventing other private bills from getting through this House.

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. member has spoken of the small percentage the company has been paying. At the same time, I understand that the total actual cash paid into this company by the shareholders was $380,000. The hon. gentleman has just stated that the company has accumulated $30,000,000 which is the property of the shareholders. It seems to me the shareholders have done pretty well.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has indicated his willingness to accept the first clause of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Battle River, and has asked that the clauses be put separately. That is a matter for the committee, not the chairman, to decide.

Mr. SPENCER: I will not stand for the amendment being divided, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CAHAN: Then I move in amendment to strike out the second clause of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Battle River.

Mr. COOTE: I do not want the committee to be under any misapprehension as to the dividends which this company has paid. I do not want to delay the committee at all, but I would like to quote from the evidence given before the royal commission on insurance in 1906, where at page 2810, of volume 4 of the evidence, Mr. Macaulay was asked this question:

Q. Then for 1893, similarly, you take interest $4,256.07 and then 6 2/3 per cent of the profits; it is only $2,046.50 this year?—A. Yes.

Then on the next page I find the following:

Q. Then in 1897 you seem to have carried down interest the same as before, $5,871.13. It is a little more, but your capital was increasing then and instead of six and two-thirds per cent of the profits you seem to have gone down to five per cent of profits declared.
A. Yes.

As the committee is so insistent on having this matter put through, I simply say that if they would read the evidence taken before this commission they would find out that they were paying fifteen per cent. I will quote from a further question put by Mr. Macaulay:

Q. Then from 1898 to 1905 inclusive the dividend has been fifteen per cent on $105,000, or $15,750 per year?—A. Yes.

And the answer is yes. It is stated very clearly many times in this evidence that the rate of dividends that were being paid over a long period of years was fifteen per cent. I am totally unable to understand how my hon. friend (Mr. Cahan) can make the statement that the dividends are sometimes at the rate of one per cent and two per cent. I am sure he is under a misapprehension or is putting the committee under a misapprehension in regard to the matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. McGIBBON: A number of us are getting tired of being lectured by hon. members on every subject, particularly by my hon. friend from Macleod.

Subamendment (Mr. Cahan) agreed to.

Amendment as amended agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Election of first board of directors.

Mr. CAHAN: Section 4 as amended here was suggested by Mr. Finlayson of the department. According to the original bill passed before confederation the directors of the company must be subjects of Her Majesty. Under the general act applying to all other companies incorporated since 1910 the majority must be subjects of Her Majesty. Mr. Finlayson admitted to me last night that in drafting this section he made an error. He has not changed the purport of the original act. It should read:

Notwithstanding the provisions of section 9 of the said act of incorporation the board of directors of the company may be composed, to the extent of one-third, of persons who are not subjects of Her Majesty.

Every other insurance company incorporated or licensed to do business since 1910 must have a majority of British subjects. This company having been incorporated away back in the sixties contains a section which provides that all must be British subjects. In view of the large amount of business done in the United States, the company desire to be able to appoint one or two American directors to safeguard the interests of the policyholders. Therefore I move in amendment, in order to correct that error—and I think this will be agreed to by everyone:

That all the words after the word "company" be struck out and that there be inserted in lieu thereof the words "may be composed, to the extent of one-third, of persons who are not subjects of His Majesty".

Mr. ROBB: Before the amendment carries, would my hon. friends who are promoting the bill consent to this amendment which has been given me by the Superintendent of Insurance? I thought it was agreed upon with the promoters of the bill.

Notwithstanding anything contained in section 9 of the said act of incorporation at least two-thirds of the members of the board of directors of the company shall at all times be persons resident in Canada and subjects of His Majesty, and the remaining members of the board may be qualified as to residence and nationality in such manner as the by-laws of the company may prescribe.

Mr. CAHAN: I am perfectly willing to take either one. It is exactly the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend may move it.

Amendment agreed to.

Section agreed to.

Sections 5 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the preamble carry?

Mr. ROBB: I understand one section was passed as printed. I want to suggest to my hon. friend promoting the bill to make the section read as follows:

After the close of the calendar year in which this act shall come into force the proportion of the profits of the participating business accruing to shareholders shall be reduced to not exceeding four per cent.

At the end of "five years thereafter," I want to put in the words "not exceeding three and a half per cent," and following the words "a further period of five years," the words "not exceeding three per cent."

Mr. CAHAN: I am quite willing to carry out the view of the Minister of Finance, but I think the words "not exceeding" are not the correct words. I should suggest we might word it this way in the fourth line:

The profits of the non-participating business accruing to the shareholders shall not exceed four per cent.

That makes it clearer and more definite. Strike out the words "be reduced" and add after the words "the profits of the participating business accruing to the shareholders" the words "shall not exceed four per cent."

Mr. ROBB: All right.

Mr. CAHAN: And at the end of five years thereafter strike out "to" and put in "shall not exceed three and a half per cent," and "at the end of a further period of five years" strike out the word "to" and put in "shall not exceed three per cent." I think it is better to make it declaratory than imperative.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the desire of the committee that clause 1 be reconsidered?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN: Then the amendments as stated by the sponsor of the bill will be as follows: In the sixteenth line substituting "not exceeding" for "be reduced to"; in the seventeenth line substituting "shall not exceed" for "to"; in the eighteenth line substituting "shall not exceed" for "to".

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read a third time?

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, there have been many important amendments proposed to this bill, so important that we would like to have a look at them in the printed form. Therefore I suggest that the third reading stand till the next sitting of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Next sitting of the House.

JOHN E. RUSSELL COMPANY, LIMITED, PATENT

The House in committee on Bill No. 117, respecting a patent owned by the John E. Russell Company Limited.—Mr. Chevrier—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Term of duration extended.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) is not in his seat. I should like the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) to look at the amendments.

Mr. CANNON: Mr. Chairman, when this bill was before the special committee it was fully discussed. The committee ruled that the principle of extending a patent was vicious, and should not be entertained unless the promoters put before the committee the condition of things which would justify the members adopting a very exceptional view. After the discussion had taken place the committee decided to pass the bill. I do not wish to enter into the details of the discussion but the committee felt that the promoters had made out their case. The amendment passed by the committee has for its object the protection of any vested interests that may have been acquired as against the patent, and they are thoroughly protected.

Mr. GLEN: I was rather struck by the fact, Mr. Chairman, that the sponsor of this bill was the member for Ottawa, who was also sponsor of the bill for the Georgian bay canal. This probably accounts for the bill being remitted to the private bills committee without discussion in order that there might be an ascertainment of the facts before any vote was taken upon it. This you will remember, Sir, was the attitude which a good many hon. members took in this House, that on the second reading of a bill it should go before the private bills committee for the facts to be investigated. In the committee the facts were ascertained and an amendment was moved that the bill should not be reported. The reasons for that amendment I will deal with shortly. I have no intention of talking out this bill because I think it can be defeated on its merits, and I hope the day will never come when I shall have to take my place here to talk out any bill if it cannot be justified on its merits.

The purpose of this bill is the renewal of a patent granted to a citizen of the United States. He sold his rights to the company who are now applying for an extension of the term. The only reason given to the committee for the passing of this bill was that during the four years of the war the company did not make sufficient profits to meet the expenditure incurred in connection with the patent. In the committee I asked the solicitor for the bill if any royalties had been paid. He answered: Yes, royalties had been paid to the inventor. I asked where the royalties came from, and he said they were paid out of dividends. Now, the only reason given by the solicitor for the renewal of the patent was that the company wished to recoup themselves for a certain sum of money they had put into the patent; but it was shown before the committee that the company had made profits during these years when the solicitor claimed no profits were made. Out of these profits, as I have said, the royalties were paid to the inventor.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): The company had to pay the royalties whether they made a profit or not.

Mr. GLEN: Just a minute. Only to-day we had another patent bill before the private bills committee and it was thrown out, but that is likely to be only one of a succession of such bills because of the fact that we have already this session passed a bill for the renewal of a patent. In the bill to which I have referred renewal was asked for, although the patent would not expire for at least eight years. The promoters of that bill were asking for it on the very same grounds as the promoters of this bill, that they had received no profits during the war years and wanted to be recouped for that period.

In the private bills committee I put this question to the officer of the patent office: What is the intention of the legislation which grants a patent to an inventor? He replied: A patent is granted in order that the inventor may recoup himself, or at all events gain the profits that his invention would give him in the open market, and only to this extent should an inventor be protected. Now, in this bill it is not the inventor who is asking for a renewal of the patent but the company which purchased it. That is, it is not the inventor who is to be protected, but the company, and they are asking this parliament to grant them an extension of eight years. That, I submit, is a principle which this parliament cannot stand for. If the inventor by his genius brings out something worth while, then in all countries his right to the profits from it for a certain period is recognized. In the old country that period I believe is sixteen years, and eighteen years in the United States. It was stated in the private bills committee that on no occasion within memory had a patent been renewed after its expiry. If we grant this renewal to-night we are doing so in spite of the admission that was made in the private bills committee—and I am stating what is the absolute fact—that there was nothing to justify it except the loss that might have accrued to the company during the four years of the war by reason of the fact that this material was not extensively used. Let me observe here, as I said before the committee, that during that four years there was as much building of roads and as much use of concrete pipes in the west as at any time since confederation, so that if the company lost its opportunity for securing a market the fault was theirs and nobody else's. Apart altogether from that consideration, we are giving to this company the right to charge against all the municipalities of the country the increased profits which they might derive from the exercise of the privilege. Hon. gentlemen who were in the House not long ago will remember that application was made for a renewal of a patent on radio appurtenances and that application was killed on the floor of the House for the reason that it would mean a substantial loss to the citizens of Canada. It is apparent to-day that this refusal was warranted, for the price of the article in question at the present time is half what it was then. This is due to the fact that there was open competition and other companies were allowed to come in and sell to the consumers at a much lower figure. The consumers must be looked to. They are the people who will pay for the granting of this privilege and I do not think that this House can take upon itself the renewal of the license after a period of eighteen years. Surely in all conscience eighteen years is a long enough term during which any man should be allowed to exercise a privilege against all competitors. I submit that this bill should not pass and parliament should to-night register its recognition of the principle that when a patent expires, unless in the most extreme case, it should not be renewed.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I simply wish to support what the hon. member (Mr. Glen) has said. An application for a renewal of patent, which was thrown out, was before the private bills committee to-day and the basis of the plea was that we had granted such an extension a few weeks ago in the case of this Bill No. 117 regarding the John Russell Company.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): This is not the first application for a renewal of a patent which the private bills committee has recommended to the House. A week ago a bill came before parliament for the renewal of the application of a Frenchman named Frigon, who asked for an extension of a patent he brought from Switzerland. He had had bad luck, had met with an accident that laid him up for two years with both legs broken, and had suffered the loss of considerable money. The private bills committee in that case saw fit to grant the extension, and I was one of those who supported the committee. I am glad to see the chairman of the private bills committee here to-night. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) made some reference to the fact that the member fathering this bill had also introduced the Georgian bay bill. That is a matter of coincidence. This bill went through the House last year after thorough discussion from every angle. It got its third reading here, went to the Senate, was passed there, and only failed to obtain the royal assent. Naturally in the circumstance the John E. Russell Company went on developing their business on the strength of the expectation that the patent would be renewed. The application came before the private bills committee again this year, was fully discussed in the forenoon and deferred to the afternoon, and after very careful consideration hon. gentlemen to my left agreed to an amendment to the bill. There was proposed a saving clause which, I presume, is not in print at present. The bill was adopted by twenty-seven to five, a substantial majority in the committee. Surely if there is any use of a private bills committee, who give the fullest consideration to matters of this kind, their recommendations should be given every consideration. I trust that hon. members will favourably consider the bill, especially seeing that these people have put a large amount of money into the business.

Mr. WARD: If we defeat this bill to-night will it hinder in any respect whatever the John E. Russell Company from going ahead with their business?

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): No, but it will prevent them from earning the money which the patent has cost them. The company have spent $150,000 on patterns and forms and so far they have not realized half that investment. The hon. member for Marquette said that there had been a great development in Manitoba during the war, necessitating the use of the material covered by the patent. Let me assure the committee that there was no such development in Ontario, particularly around Toronto, because there was no work in connection with the construction of roads.

The amendment moved in the committee was agreed to by my hon. friends to the left, and why they are opposed to it to-night I do not understand. That amendment reads:

If any person since the fifth day of August, 1926, commenced to construct, manufacture, use or sell in Canada the inventions covered by the said letters patent, such firm may continue to construct, manufacture, use or sell such inventions in as full and ample a manner as if this act had not been passed.

I hope hon. members will agree to the extension of the patent. The company has not made one-quarter of the money it has spent, for the reason that there was no development during the war. Particularly was this inactivity evident in the city of Toronto and in that part of the country where the Russell people do most of their business. Were it not for that fact I would not urge the extension of the patent, but I do trust that the committee, after the careful consideration which the private bills committee gave to the matter, will pass the bill.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I desire to register my protest against the passing of this bill. The patent has already run its full eighteen years, and the company asks the renewal of it for one purpose only, and that is to continue to exploit the common consumer of Canada.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to make that statement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is only another form of special privilege and it does no credit to anyone who advocates it. It is another way of soaking the unfortunate consumer. It is in the same category as the application which was made some years ago for the renewal of a patent on radio valves. That application was opposed by hon. members in this group and the wisdom of the House in voting it down was justified: the result has been a reduction in the price of these valves from $9 to $3. That has meant a saving of millions of dollars to the people of the north American continent. This very patent was also granted in the United States. There it has expired and it has not been renewed. That should be borne in mind.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): That is because the gentleman who owned it died.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That has nothing to do with it. The patent ran its course and its renewal was refused; it does not matter what the reasons were.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We are being asked to renew a patent in favour not of the man who invented the article but of a private company whose object is to soak the people. I am absolutely opposed to anything of the kind. In Great Britain the term of patents is about fourteen years and in the United States about seventeen years. In Canada it is eighteen years—longer than anywhere else. Surely eighteen years is a long enough period in which the owner of a patent, or any private company controlling it, should be allowed to exploit the public.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): As soon as the noise has subsided I might suggest to the hon. gentleman that he is quite right when he says that when an attempt was made to secure full information with respect to the condition of this company, that is, with respect to its profits, its books and accounts and so on, that information was not forthcoming. There was some general statement made which in my opinion was not satisfactory, and until the company produce more adequate proof that they deserve some consideration I fail to see why this parliament should be asked to continue a principle as vicious as that proposed in this bill. After all, our primary duty is not to represent private interests but to represent the interests of the great consuming public. If this bill is permitted to pass we may anticipate a flood of similar bills coming up for consideration, and if we once create a precedent we will have great difficulty in justifying any objection to bills of this character which may subsequently come before us. Picture it for yourself; use your own imagination and consider what is liable to happen if we create a precedent now for renewing these wretched patent bills after almost illimitable periods have elapsed, bills which deliberately steal from the pockets of the people that which the people can ill afford to pay.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): The John E. Russell Company are well respected and well known, and are not asking for anything unreasonable.

Mr. ROBB: I am not questioning the respectability or the financial standing of the John E. Russell Company; I did not attend the meeting of the private bills committee, so I am not very well posted as to the nature of the patent. But if, as I infer, this is a patent which will enable this company to collect royalties from all the municipalities making cement pipes, I agree with the observations made by the hon. member for Bow River. It may be that the fact that the bill passed the House last year and did not receive royal assent places those of us who were in the House last year under some obligation, but certainly not to grant this extension for eight years, and I would suggest to my hon. friend that he cut down that period considerably.

Mr. KAISER: It was cut down to eight years last year. When this came before the committee last session and the committee went into it, they unanimously agreed that it was right to grant an extension of time, but the time requested was twelve or fourteen years. The company reduced that to eight years. This company has invested already some $150,000 on account of this patent, and because of the attitude of the House last year they have invested still more money, and they simply ask the House to complete what was done last year. The evidence convinces me that it is a fair proposition, and I think parliament should grant the extension.

Mr. ROBB: All over this country there are small industries making sewer pipes and pipes for road drainage for the local communities. It seems to me that it is very unreasonable to put this company in a position to collect royalties from these other small companies.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): I do not think there is any intention on the part of the John E. Russell Company to collect royalties. However, if the Minister of Finance wishes that two years be taken off the term, and the House is satisfied, we will do so..

Mr. ROBB: I would like to suggest that you move an amendment which will safeguard the municipalities.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): So far as we know there are no firms making these pipes; it is an invention whereby two pipes are cemented together; it is a wonderful thing, and these people have a right to some consideration.

Mr. ROBB: Cut it down by six years.

Mr. GLEN: When the hon. member states that no one else has any interest in this business, he is stating what is not according to the evidence given before the private bills committee. A representative of the Dominion Sewer Pipe Company appeared before that committee and stated that they were about to manufacture these concrete pipes, that they had already purchased a site for which they had paid $15,000 in cash, on which they were to manufacture concrete pipes. When my friend says there was no opposition to it, he is also wrong; opposition was expressed right in the committee.

Mr. KAISER: This year, but not last year.

Mr. GLEN: The length of time is not the question at all; the question is whether this House shall decide upon a principle of renewing patents which have expired for a good many years, and whether this House is prepared to sanction that as a rule by which to be guided in the future.

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member for Marquette has stated what I was about to say. It is a fact that last year this bill passed through the committee without opposition but this year encountered strong opposition, and that fact alone is sufficient to warrant us in departing from the position taken a year ago.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not happen to be on the private bills committee, and of this House there are perhaps 215 members who were not present at that meeting and who are not aware of all the circumstances connected with this patent. That is so in the case of all private bills, and one who is not on the committee must trust to the findings of the committee in these matters. We did not hear the evidence but we have the report, in which we are informed that this committee, while it unanimously passed this bill last year, passed it on this occasion by a vote of 27 in favour with 5 against. The only safe course for those who were not present at the meeting and who did not hear the discussion, I think, is to follow the report of the committee under these circumstances. That is a rule which has been laid down for many years in this House and it is a rule which I propose to follow tonight.

Mr. GLEN: Would the leader of the opposition consider this position, that the statements which have been made in opposition to the bill have not been denied and cannot be denied by any hon. member of this House? If these statements are correct, surely it is for the House to decide and not for the committee, as to whether we shall establish such a principle?

Mr. SPENCER: I have been very much interested in the discussion and the arguments put forward by some hon. members to my right in giving their reasons why this bill should go through. One argument is that it went through the committee last year. I would like to remind hon. members that the Georgian bay canal bill went through this House thirteen times, and those who opposed it most strenuously this year were the hon. members to my right. I think they were right in so doing. Another argument advanced is that the bill we are now considering went through the committee this year with a vote of 27 to 5, so we are told. I want to tell the committee that there was no vote counted at all, and as one of the minority I know that more than five voted against it.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private bills having expired, I now resume the chair.

Mr. ROBB: If we might have the unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, there are some bills which have been held up, and the government offer no objection to continuing for at least another hour. I think we were committed to that by some hon. gentlemen opposite, but we are entirely in the hands of the House since it must be by unanimous consent.

Mr. COOTE: May I ask a question on that point? Will the Minister of Finance give us any assurance as to when the House will rise to-night if we permit this suggestion? Last night we sat until half past two, after a late session the night before—

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend is making a mistake; it is not a question of consent but a matter to be agreed upon among the members of the House in order to expedite business. We do not want to rush anything.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is no motion before the House.

Mr. ROBB: I did not make any motion. I said that the government offered no objection to continuing another half hour or hour in committee on private bills if the House was unanimous in regard to the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: Am I to understand that it is the judgment of the House that it should resolve itself into committee of the whole on private bills for another half hour? By unanimous consent?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY BILL

Mr. CAHAN: Before Your Honour leaves the chair I wish to make a motion which appears to be in order. I beg to move:

That it is urgent that Bill No. 107, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada (as amended), be now read a third time, because private bills will not be placed on the order paper until Tuesday the 19th instant for consideration by the House, under rule 25 and resolutions passed by the House.

Mr. PARENT: That has been decided already.

Mr. CAHAN: My motion is in order under rule 40 which provides that a motion may be made without notice in respect to a private bill, and under rule 52 which provides:

Every bill shall receive three several readings on different days, previously to being passed. On urgent or extraordinary occasions, a bill may be read twice or thrice, or advanced two or more stages in one day.

It is well within the knowledge of the House that we are approaching prorogation and this is the opportunity which I take. I think I am in order in making the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is in order according to rules 40 and 52. According to rule 40, the two days' notice shall not apply to private bills, and rule 52 states:

Every bill shall receive three several readings on different days, previously to being passed. On urgent or extraordinary occasions, a bill may be read twice or thrice, or advanced two or more stages in one day.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, is it not necessary that a motion of this nature should be rather in the form of a notice of motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is not necessary under rule 40.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does it not then require unanimous consent?

Mr. SPEAKER: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The question I should like to ask is: What constitutes an extraordinary occasion? There must surely be some sort of definition of an extraordinary occasion. If it means simply when a bill is of interest to me or to my group, then we know where we stand, but I cannot see just where the extraordinary occasion comes in. We have had bill after bill in this House that have been standing for weeks. Surely the promoters of any of those bills might have claimed that they were interested in getting them through. I would like to have your ruling as to what constitutes an extraordinary occasion.

Mr. ROBB: May I submit to the House and particularly to the hon. member who is promoting the bill, that I am satisfied that his measure was hurried along to-night because some hon. gentlemen had other bills which they desired to promote? I have just said on behalf of the government that we offer no objection to the House remaining in committee for another half hour or an hour. It seems to me that my hon. friend, in view of the statement made by the leader of the Progressive party a few moments ago that he desired some delay, is not expediting his measure by pressing this motion at this time. I recommend that he withdraw his motion until at least we have disposed of the sheet of private bills.

Mr. CANNON: If we follow the rules of the House private bills can come before us only on Friday, so that all private bills which we are considering to-night, unless they receive third reading to-day, will not be proceeded with any further.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why not?

Mr. CANNON: Supposing prorogation should take place in the meantime?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Who is in such a hurry for prorogation?

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend is jumping at conclusions. I am explaining the situation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We can pass them on Friday evening.

Mr. CANNON: I wish simply to point out to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) that he is in exactly the same position as promoters of all the other private bills, and therefore he need not move this motion at all. If for some reason or another there is some urgency in having more than one reading, I think the House will agree that all bills, including his, will be treated in the same way.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: Am I to understand that the hon. gentleman persists in moving this motion?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not want to take precedence or stand in the way of any other hon. member. It is usual in the House, when bills have passed committee, for them to be read a third time, and this motion is in order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is in order. It is not debatable under rule 17-A because it is not on the order paper. It is in order under rule 52, and if the hon. gentleman persists in moving this motion I will put the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

Motion negatived.

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Am I to understand there is an understanding that the House will now consider other private bills for half an hour?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CAHAN: Am I in order in asking for a recorded vote?

Mr. SPEAKER: Nobody rose when I asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARDINER: I desire to ask a question on this bill which has now been read a third time.

Mr. SPEAKER: It has not been read a third time.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that the motion to read it a third time was defeated.

Mr. SPEAKER: No. The motion was that the bill be read a third time now on account of an extraordinary and urgent situation. But the House said that there was no extraordinary or urgent situation, and therefore the bill which was standing for third reading remained where it was. As the House is in a good humour I take it that the House will sit in committee for half an hour to consider the other private bills.

THE JOHN E. RUSSELL COMPANY, LIMITED

The House again in committee on Bill No. 117, respecting a patent owned by the John E. Russell Company, Limited—Mr. Chevrier—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On clause 1—Term of duration extended.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): I was just speaking to the Finance minister, and he agreed that he would not oppose an extension of five years, so I move, Mr. Chairman, that the word "eight" in line 17 of the bill be struck out and the word "five" be substituted therefor.

Amendment agreed to: Yeas, 75; Nays, 44.

Mr. SPENCER: At nine o'clock, Mr. Chairman, when I was speaking on this bill, I was about to point out that the company had had this patent for eighteen years before it ran out. This company is trying to get this bill through at the present time by claiming that they have a right to the renewal of this patent because of the war years. Now the war lasted only four years, and I would like to know what this company was doing in the other fourteen years. Another argument put up in favour of this bill is that this company suffered certain losses during the war, or did not make as much profit because of the war as they wanted to, and now they want to recoup themselves. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, what would happen if all the men and all the companies and all the firms who lost money during the war, and hundreds of thousands did, looked to this parliament to recoup them.

Another reason why I am opposing this bill is because the solicitor who supported it admitted before the special committee that the only reason they wanted this extension was because they wanted a good talking point for sales. When that is the only reason they give for wanting this renewal, I think it is about time the bill was turned down.

Mr. RENNIE: I would ask who these men were who lost money during the war.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to: Yeas, 64; Nays, 34.

Mr. NEILL: I rise to a point of order. Does an amendment to a private bill not require notice? No notice was given.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is too late to take the objection now.

The CHAIRMAN: The point is well taken, but the amendment was proposed and accepted by the committee. The objection is too late.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. GLEN: Next sitting of the House.

Motion stands.

THE FREE METHODIST CHURCH IN CANADA

The House in committee on Bill No. 177, to incorporate the Free Methodist Church in Canada—Mr. Carmichael—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. CANNON: Before this bill is proceeded with, a point of order was raised a moment ago by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, which point of order was well taken. An amendment to a private bill cannot be moved in committee unless notice thereof has been given.

Mr. STEVENS: Except by consent.

Mr. CANNON: Except by consent. This bill may not be considered as contentious if an amendment is made to it, and I understand that the hon. member in whose name the bill appears is willing to move an amendment.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I was on my feet to make an explanation when the Solicitor General commenced to speak. This is the general act of incorporation for a church body. There is nothing unusual about the bill. It has been considered in the private bills committee and has been safeguarded by such clauses as the committee thought necessary. Some objections were raised to the part of schedule A of the bill which set forth the articles of religion of the body. In the committee no amendment was made to that part of schedule A, but I am since authorized by the solicitors who were promoting the bill to make an amendment striking out completely the articles of religion from the bill and substituting a short clause in lieu thereof, directing the attention of the body to their book of discipline. When we proceed with the bill I will move these two amendments, and I trust we will have the unanimous consent of the House to these amendments; otherwise we might as well not deal with the bill at all.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Objects.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Before accepting section 2 I desire to move an amendment, because the wording of this section was arranged in such a way to suit schedule A as passed in the committee. My amendment purports to strike out the first part of that clause, so as to bring it in line with the subsequent amendment which I will propose to the schedule.

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the hon. member what he means by striking out all of subsection 1 of section 2?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The section says:

> The religious belief and creed of the said church is that set forth in articles 1 to 23 inclusive in schedule A.

We propose to strike out all articles in schedule A, and it is necessary to strike out section 1.

Mr. PARENT: I may say that this bill was thoroughly discussed in the private bills committee, and the representations made by the hon. member who has just spoken were acceptable to the members present when the matter was discussed.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 3 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

On section 19—Provisions effective as far as parliament has jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN: This is a new section.

Section agreed to.

On schedule A—Articles of religion.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move:

That schedule A be amended by striking out all of pages 6, 7, 8 and 9, and page 10 to the end of line seven, and substituting the following therefor:

Schedule A

Articles of Religion

The articles of religion of the Free Methodist Church in Canada shall be those contained in the doctrines and discipline of the Free Methodist Church, edition of 1923, division 1, from page 11 to page 18.

Amendment agreed to.

Schedule as amended agreed to.

Schedule B agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read the third time?

Mr. LADNER: Next sitting of the House.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that Bill No. 177 as amended is not a contentious bill. The amendments were put in with the unanimous consent of the committee so as to remove the contention. I have tried heretofore to have this bill taken care of in this chamber so it could go on to the upper chamber and be disposed of before prorogation. I fail to see the point in asking that the third reading of this bill be held over until the next sitting of the House. I believe that only one hon. member has objected, and I would move that the bill be now given its third reading so that it may be disposed of at this session.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am in the hands of the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to take the third reading of this bill now?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Am I to understand that there is unanimous consent?

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

LA CONGRÉGATION DE SAINT-DOMINIQUE DU TIERS-ORDRE ENSEIGNANT

The House in committee on Bill No. 116, to incorporate La Congrégation de Saint-Dominique du Tiers-Ordre enseignant.—Mr. Raymond—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On section 11—Assent of council.

The CHAIRMAN: Clause 11 is amended as follows:

In respect to all real property which by reason of its situation or otherwise is subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada a license in mortmain shall not be necessary for the exercise of the powers granted by this act; but otherwise the exercise of the said powers shall, in any province of Canada, be subject to the laws of such province as to the acquisition and holding of lands by religious corporations in so far as such laws apply to the corporation or to the houses of the institute.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NORTH AMERICAN RELATIONS FOUNDATION

The House in committee on Bill No. 154, to incorporate North America Relations Foundation—Mr. Jacobs—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 1 has been amended by adding the following names:

Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, Osgoode Hall, Toronto, Ontario, McKinnon building, Toronto, McMaster University, Toronto—

Mr. SPENCER: Mr. Chairman, before this clause is carried I would ask the hon. member who has charge of the bill kindly to explain it, as many of us have not had an opportunity to read it. The bill is rather lengthy.

Mr. JACOBS: As you will notice, Mr. Chairman, the bill is for the purpose of promoting friendly relations between Canada and the United States. That is a pretty big order. The promoters are some of the principal people in Canada and the United States. I may say that Professor Farrand of Cornell University, Mr. Justice Riddell and Professor G. M. Wrong and other gentlemen interested are at the head of the movement. The bill was thoroughly discussed in the private bills committee and met with no opposition whatever. I think it should go through as a matter of course.

Mr. BROWN: I think the bill met with almost unanimous approval on the part of the committee. Its object is most worthy and there is no reason for opposing it.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Objects.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 4 has been amended by striking out paragraph (d) and designating paragraph (e) as paragraph (d). The latter paragraph has been amended by adding after the word " of " in the second line the following:

—the United States of America and Canada, and the British commonwealth of nations generally—

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 5 to 19 inclusive agreed to.

On section 20.—When to come into force.

The CHAIRMAN: This is a new section and reads:

This act shall come into force on the day of its sanction.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

RED RIVER DRIVING CLUB

The House in committee on Bill No. 237, to incorporate the Red River Driving Club—Mr. Beaubien—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. HOWDEN: I wish to oppose the further progress of this bill. The object is to incorporate a racing club in the city of St. Boniface, and as I come from that city I am interested in the proposal. I was not in the House when the bill was referred to the private bills committee or I would have opposed that motion. In the province of Manitoba we have six racing clubs to-day, there being three race tracks in greater Winnipeg. Provincial legislation provides for a week's racing in each of the spring and fall meets, and as a matter of fact it is impossible for three or four of the six clubs in Manitoba to stage any events at all. The men behind this bill are seeking to circumvent the laws of the province of Manitoba and to carry on racing there and in other provinces west in spite of provincial legislation. The purpose of the bill is not to provide racing in the true sense of the word; it is not to encourage the purely sporting spirit. The purpose is to enable the incorporators to use the pari-mutuel machines in order to transfer sums of money from the pockets of citizens to their own. If the pari-mutuel privilege were removed from the bill this measure would fall flat. The business interests of Winnipeg, the citizens themselves, and the legislature of the province of Manitoba are all opposed to it. I have received from the Attorney General of Manitoba the following telegram:

Have wired Premier King as follows: "To-day's newspapers item states Red River Driving Club, Bill No. 237, reported from private bills committee of House of Commons. The government of Manitoba submits that already there are sufficient tracks in Manitoba to accommodate the public requirement for horse racing. The holding of numerous race meets in Manitoba became a serious evil and the Manitoba legislature after careful consideration enacted the Horse Racing Regulation Act in 1926. Any increase in present number of associations which have power to hold race meets makes the situation more difficult to handle. Government of Manitoba therefore submits that your parliament should not pass this bill. Am confident Manitoba legislature would not pass similar bill." Would appreciate your opposition to this bill.

There are also telegrams from the board of trade and other prominent corporations in the city of Winnipeg opposing this bill. There is ample provision for racing in Manitoba at the present time. We have four weeks of racing every summer as well as race meets on the ice two days in every week of winter. It is becoming a serious problem for the local legislature to deal with and I wish to protest against the progress of the bill. If in order, I beg to move that Bill No. 237, to incorporate the Red River Driving Club, shall not now be proceeded with but that it be referred back to the special committee on miscellaneous private bills for reconsideration.

Mr. BENNETT: This legislation is wholly provincial in character and in the ordinary course of events it should not be before this House at all. The Solicitor General might advise us whether or not, in his opinion, it should be considered by this parliament. Its objects are purely provincial, it incorporates a body which will function within the province, and it does not touch any other province. The bill should be considered by the legislature and not by this parliament.

Mr. PARENT: It was represented to the private bills committee that the corporation intended doing business in other provinces and that brought it within the federal scope.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. HOWDEN: I want to correct my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett). The object of the bill is to enable the corporation to circumvent provincial laws.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I understood, and for that reason I consider it altogether bad.

Mr. CANNON: As the hon. member for West Calgary has pointed out, these bills are generally submitted to the provincial legislatures. I do not think that this parliament since confederation has been called upon to pass any such legislation. In order to give a tint of federation jurisdiction to the bill it is provided that the new company shall have the right to operate in more than one province, but I do not think that the bill should be adopted by the Dominion parliament. If the promoters wish to operate in Manitoba or in any other province they should apply to the provincial authorities. This point was brought out before the committee and it was doubted very much there whether, in the first place, this parliament had jurisdiction and, secondly, if it had, whether the bill should pass. I agree with the hon. member for West Calgary that it would be much better, legally speaking, to leave such legislation to the provinces.

Mr. BENNETT: The usual practice has been to deal with such measures under the Companies Act.

Mr. CANNON: We have never passed a bill like this.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment is not in order at this stage.

It reads:

That Bill No. 237, to incorporate the Red River Driving Club, do not now receive its third reading but that it be referred to the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills for reconsideration.

It is not up for third reading at the moment and I think such a motion should be made when the Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. CANNON: I would move that the committee proceed to the next order.

The CHAIRMAN: The motion is in order.

Motion agreed to.

R. T. VANDERBILT COMPANY

The House in committee on Bill No. 261, respecting a certain amendment of R. T. Vanderbilt Company—Mr. Edwards (Ottawa)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. SPENCER: I would like to ask what hon. member is looking after this bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is a Senate bill.

Mr. COOTE: We have not this bill, and I think we should not proceed until we at least have the bill or some explanation from the sponsor.

Mr. CANNON: We might suspend consideration of this bill for the moment.

The CHAIRMAN: Stands.

[Mr. Cannon.]

THE SEALRIGHT COMPANY INCORPORATED

The House in committee on Bill No. 253, respecting certain patents owned by the Sealright Company Incorporated—Mr. Young (Toronto)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Extension of time for application to revive patents.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill give some explanation?

Mr. YOUNG (Toronto): If any explanation is desired, this bill deals with patents in connection with sanitary containers for milk and such products. There is a minor discrepancy in the Patent Act.

Mr. WARD: Let us have something to base our judgment upon. Not a member in this corner of the House knows what is taking place.

Mr. YOUNG (Toronto): I am sorry that I am unable to speak any louder. There is a minor conflict with a previous patent, as I remember the situation, that previous patent being one which is really non-existent, that is, it has not been exercised. The patent itself is for containers for milk and such products. That is the best explanation which I can give to the House at the present time without going into voluminous details which I do not think the importance of the matter justifies.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

On the motion for the third reading of Bill No. 107, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Cahan.

THE MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY OF MANITOBA

Mr. THORSON: May I ask, Mr. Speaker, the same privilege with regard to Bill No. 144, respecting the Midland Railway Company of Manitoba, as has been accorded with regard to Bill No. 177?

Mr. SPEAKER: I am in the judgment of the House.

Mr. LADNER: Will Bill No. 107 have the same consideration?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Thorson moves that Bill No. 144, respecting the Midland Railway Company of Manitoba, be now read a third time. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

THE INDEPENDENT ORDER "FIOR D'ITALIA"

Mr. ODETTE: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. 175 is not a contentious bill. There was no objection raised to it in committee, and the Superintendent of Insurance has reported favourably upon it. I therefore move the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. LADNER: I object.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would refer the hon. gentleman to Rule 56 which says:

When a bill is reported without amendment, it is forthwith ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. STEVENS: It is amended.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not amended.

Mr. STEVENS: It is marked on the order paper as amended.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Before the item carries I should like to make a statement with regard to the experimental farm in Ottawa. I have spent considerable time at the experimental farm since coming here, and I have found that there is not nearly enough land there to carry on the work of the farm properly. I think that in this House we are not voting nearly enough money for agriculture. Agriculture is responsible for the employment of over half the people of Canada, feeds all of them, and we vote only $6,000,000 for it in our estimates. At the experimental farm in Ottawa we are using for field crops only about 120 acres all told. That is not nearly enough to do the work that should be done by the experimenters there. For instance, the animal husbandry department has only 23 acres, and they have over 200 head of cattle for dairy purposes, 100 head of beef cattle, over 150 head of swine and a great many sheep to look after. Practically every department at the experimental farm is over-crowded, and proper work cannot be done. The work at the experimental farm has been responsible for enriching the Dominion of Canada by hundreds of millions of dollars in the last few years, because they have been able to find new kinds of grain, new kinds of fruit and by breeding and selection to improve all kinds of farm animals. The House should seriously consider, at least another year, the buying of more land adjacent to the farm at Ottawa. I think that members of parliament, the Minister of Agriculture and the Prime Minister should know that adjacent to the experimental farm at Indian Head, Saskatchewan, a man named William Patterson has lived for a great many years on a beautiful section of land. He has good buildings, good stock and machinery. Mr. Patterson has turned over to the Dominion government that entire piece of land, with all equipment, at a rental of $1,000 a year, and is providing that upon his death it shall revert to the government, free, for experimental purposes. He has seen the work that has been carried on at the experimental farm and has been so strongly impressed by it that, as I say, he is leaving his entire fortune in the shape of a section of land in Saskatchewan, worth at least $100 per acre, to the government. I think the government and the House of Commons should in some way recognize the gift of Mr. Patterson of Indian Head.

I would like, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has done, to place upon Hansard a report giving the exact use of all the land at the experimental farm in Ottawa to show how crowded they are for experimental work there.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not wish to object, but I notice a growing habit of placing things on Hansard without members knowing what they are. If this is an official report prepared by the department, containing official information, I see no objection, but it is decidedly bad practice to get the habit of placing things on Hansard of which the House has no knowledge.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): This is a typewritten report of information I gathered at the experimental farm in regard to the number of acres used for each class of work. Am I to be allowed to put it on Hansard?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): I think the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) is well taken. There has been a growing practice of placing on Hansard long citations which really should not be incorporated in the debates, and unless this is an official document I am afraid the hon. member will have to refrain from placing it on Hansard.

Mr. JELLIFF: What is the reason for the increase of $160,000 in this vote?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Our vote last year proved too small owing partly to the fact that it started too small and also to the inclement weather which made our field and harvest operations more expensive. At least $60,000 of this increase is already spent. The preceding government started nine new experimental farms; its predecessor started eight, but we take the ground that before we are justified in establishing any more of these farms we should properly equip the 22 farms we already have. I think that policy is supported by the country generally. As the work of these farms has increased so their acreage has been added to with the exception of the Lethbridge farm, which I think the hon. member for that district has in mind in wondering what I am doing with all this money. For a number of years we have intended to extend the Lethbridge farm by 100 acres in order to carry out experiments in irrigation. There are 100 acres of land adjoining, but the owner is holding it at $175 an acre, which I consider too high for prairie land, although a pipe line crosses it and the water privileges add considerably to the value. It is quite possible that we will have to take proceedings in the Exchequer court. That is the principal reason for the delay in acquiring the land. There is another expenditure we should like to make. Tobacco growing has become so profitable, due to the acceptability of our crop in the British market, that we have felt warranted in encouraging its growth in Quebec, in western Ontario and in the Okanagan valley. In Montcalm-L'Assomption there is a small tobacco farm and we have been negotiating for a parcel of land to extend the farm, but there too the price is, I think, rather high. Of course, when the government wants a piece of land it does not get less in value in the opinion of the owner. Probably in this case also we shall have to go to the Exchequer court.

Now as to the central experimental farm. Forty years ago it consisted of 460 acres, but in the intervening years a little piece has been taken off for this and for that, until the farm land proper now consists of only three fields of forty acres each. The result is that our farming operations are not sufficient to carry the large head of stock there, most of which have to be kept in the stables all summer. I should like some additional land for this farm. We will never get it cheaper than it can be had to-day, and unless we get it soon we will not be able to get it at all. As a show proposition the farm is top-heavy, but it is very much below what it should be in regard to farm operations. We are putting up hay twelve miles away on the rifle ranges at a cost delivered at the farm of six dollars a ton—an absurdly high figure, and a practice which we could not commend to the farmers at large.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): I agree, Mr. Chairman, that the experimental farm should be extended by at least two or three hundred acres, which can be procured perhaps to better advantage now than at any other time. In regard to the increase of $160,000, is any of it to be given to improving the wages of the employees at the experimental farm in order to remove the present anomalous condition prevailing there? For instance, in a workshop at the farm you have carpenters working for the Public Works department at 56 cents an hour for a nine-hour day, while perhaps by their side you have carpenters of the same department doing the same work at 75 cents an hour for an eight-hour day. You can never have a contented service when the workmen are paid at different rates. Either one set of men are being paid too much or the other set are being paid too little. One carpenter will leave an hour ahead of another, and while he draws seventy-five cents an hour, his fellow workman, although he puts in an extra hour, is paid only fifty-six cents. More than that, the man receiving seventy-five cents an hour gets two weeks' holidays as compared with the statutory holidays which the other enjoys. That is something that should be looked into. Men working in other branches of the service, and who are not putting in so strenuous a time as the employees of the experimental farm, have had their salaries increased from time to time, but the men on the experimental farm are ill paid in comparison. I consider they are entitled to equal treatment with the others. I would support the minister in any effort he might make to have the farm area increased. Now is the time to do this. The district is growing in the western section and it will not be long before the government will be unable to procure any land at all.

Mr. JELLIFF: The minister is thoroughly well aware that the people of Lethbridge are anxious to have the experimental farm there extended. During the last two or three years he has been importuned by the superintendent of the farm, Mr. Fairfield, as well as by the Lethbridge Board of Trade and other persons in official capacity in the constituency to increase the area of the farm. I do not believe that the minister fully appreciates the great value of that farm and the necessity that exists for experimentation on a larger scale, than is possible at the present time. There are in the neighbourhood of 250,000 acres of land under irrigation, served to a greater or less extent by the farm. A number of irrigation districts have been formed in that vicinity in the last few years. The farmers who have created these districts have hypothecated their lands to the extent of $30, $40 and $50 an acre to obtain the necessary water to redeem the land and render it a dependable source of income. If therefore, there is an experimental farm in this country whose activities should be extended to meet the exigencies of the situation it is that Lethbridge farm. The minister seems to object on the ground that the price of the additional land is too high. As I recollect, the first price asked was $200 an acre. A desirable tract of land of 100 acres lies right across the road from the farm. The superintendent of the farm would like to annex it and it is the most convenient piece of land that could be secured anywhere adjacent to the farm itself. It is under irrigation. The land is owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway and has been used for the purpose of raising hay to supply their own needs in that district. It is one of the most valuable tracts of land in that vicinity and the company is not asking so high a price as is demanded for lands not equally well located and not so well adapted for the purpose. The minister said there had been a reduction of $25 an acre due to the intercession of the superintendent of the Lethbridge experimental farm. I understand that the price has been reduced now to $150 an acre, which is moderate indeed. I hope the minister will take the matter into consideration and endeavour to obtain the additional land for the purposes of the farm. The farm at Lethbridge has a dual purpose to serve and its problems are more difficult than those in connection with any other farm in the Dominion. This is explained by the fact that the district is semi-arid and provision must be made for experimentation both in the dry farming and irrigation processes. The additional land is absolutely necessary for experimentation especially in connection with the raising of forage crops. It is wanted particularly to aid the farmers in the irrigated districts in the production of these crops. It is also necessary to instruct them in the economical and efficient use of water. In connection with the development of the dairy industry it is of vital importance. I cannot urge the need of this land too strongly. I do not feel like letting the item go through until the minister promises to buy that land. Two or three years ago there was an item in the estimates of $20,000 for its purchase, but the land was not secured. The price was then $200 an acre, whereas to-day it can be obtained at $150, a lower price than is asked for other land in the neighbourhood suitable for the purpose. I hope the minister will make the purchase.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend say it can be got for $150 an acre?

Mr. JELLIFF: Yes. I have a letter here from Mr. Mackay the manager of one of the banks of Lethbridge, and president of the Lethbridge Board of Trade, in which he intimates that the land is now obtainable at that price.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was the intention of my officials to have another interview with the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities who own the land. The officials were under the impression that the price was still $175.

Mr. JELLIFF: Perhaps I had better read Mr. Mackay's letter:

Dear Mr. JELLIFF,

As you may have heard, a short time ago the board of trade here took up with the government the matter of purchasing from the Canadian Pacific Railway an additional hundred acres of irrigated land for the use of the Dominion experimental farm. It appears that this land was originally offered by the C. P. R. for $200, an acre and that on two occasions thereafter this figure was reduced by $25, so that the price now stands at $150 per acre but the Dominion government evidently feel that this price is still too high. The land in question adjoins the gaol farm and is directly across the road from the experimental farm buildings.

It is part of what is known as the C.P.R. hay farm and is generally considered to be the choicest piece of irrigated land in the district.

I had an opportunity of talking with Mr. S. J. Porter of the C. P. R. Natural Resources Department at Calgary a few days ago. Mr. Porter was formerly in charge of the Natural Resources Department in Lethbridge and is familiar with the foregoing details mentioned in this letter. I endeavored to have him recommend to the company that the price of this land be reduced to $125 an acre but Mr. Porter stated that he could not make such a recommendation as he was firmly of the opinion that the land was worth more than $150 an acre, that the C. P. R. could undoubtedly dispose of it at a figure close to $200 an acre and from the tenor of the conversation I judged that they had not been active in their endeavors to sell it in view of their knowledge of the government's desire to acquire it.

Mr. Buchanan has, I understand, had this matter up with the minister and I would appreciate it greatly if you would interview him on our behalf.

The farm as it stands is not sufficiently large to carry on feed lot experiments which Mr. Fairfield would like to commence this year. With the increase in irrigation in this district it is hoped that there will be a steady growth in the feeding of cattle, sheep and hogs and it is particularly with regard to this class of agricultural work that the additional acreage is required.

With kindest regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,

E. E. MACKAY,
President.

I trust that the minister will find it possible to buy this land.

Mr. EVANS: I see that there is an increase of $638,000 in agricultural estimates. I wonder whether that increase is warranted at this time. While the minister's explanation appears reasonable it is given altogether from the departmental standpoint. I think it is time somebody undertook to speak from the point of view of the actual farmer himself. I would like to know if agriculture was ever in a worse condition than it is at present, even though we are increasing the experimental work year by year. Not only do we have to go to other countries to find settlers to take up our vacant lands in the west, but farms are lying idle even in the eastern provinces. With all the expense of this experimental work, agriculture does not seem to be in the prosperous state we think it should be. There are vacant farms here in Ontario close to the cities; in fact I do not know but what we could have had a Duncan report on almost any corner or county in Ontario. I am sorry to see that the department this year is cutting down on the distribution of thoroughbred animals. The real work of the farm does not seem to prosper, but the overhead with regard to experimental work increases from year to year. This is not as it should be, but somehow the actual farmer is not receiving the benefit of these expenditures. I am not sure but what the minister has made his explanation entirely from a departmental point of view.

Mr. BARBER: I would like to ask the minister if there is anything provided in this vote for the experimental farm at Agassiz. That farm is very badly in need of improvements; it is a very important farm and has established many records both in stock and poultry. On my last visit there it was sadly in need of money; the buildings are old and in need of repairs, and I would like to know if anything is included in this item for that purpose.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not in this vote, but in the public works vote there is an item for new buildings and repairs. There is a small amount for repairs and something like $6,000 for a horticultural building and a cottage.

Miss MACPHAIL: I would like to support the remarks of the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Jelliff). I believe if we are going to spend money in extending experimental farms or if we are going to buy more land for experimental purposes it should be done at Lethbridge, which is in a very arid region. The farmers of that district are not used to farming under such conditions, and I think here in Ontario there is no need of extending the amount of land we now hold, since we have a large experimental farm at Ottawa and another at Guelph. I think we should spend the money where it would be of the greatest use to the producer. I think the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) told the truth when he said that sometimes the people who are producing in Canada feel that they reap very little benefit from the money spent under the vote we are now discussing. By giving way to the request of the hon. member for Lethbridge I believe the producers in the province of Alberta would be very well served, and as one hon. member for Ontario I would like to urge upon the government that they spend any additional money on new land where it is most needed, which I feel to be in Lethbridge rather than in Ottawa.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The leaven is already working in the Minister of Agriculture with respect to the Lethbridge farm. If that farm can be secured for $150 an acre we will buy it, although it has to go before the Treasury Board, of course.

Mr. JELLIFF: And we will give the minister our entire support.

Mr. BRADY: Before this item passes I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the great importance and the great need of continuing to add to the experimental farms of Canada. I think the minister has said that the increase in these farms has practically ceased since 1920, and the time has now come for the Department of Agriculture to consider the advisability of establishing another experimental farm in northern British Columbia. As the minister well knows, in northern British Columbia we have a great new country which claims the right of consideration. The experimental farms at Agassiz and Summerland are serving parts of British Columbia which are absolutely different in climate and in other conditions from other parts of British Columbia. The minister knows that the area to which I refer has become very prominent lately because of the fact that at the Chicago exhibition the first prize for timothy seed for the whole of the North American continent was won by a farmer of that district; furthermore, at the Victoria agricultural show in 1926 this district took most of the prizes for root crops. If the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) had had the opportunity now in the power of the present minister, I know that an experimental farm in northern British Columbia would be a reality to-day; although I am not an expert on experimental farms I do know what the farmers of northern British Columbia need, and I know what experimental farms have done already in developing agriculture, live stock and poultry to that high state of perfection which has made Canada prominent in the eyes of the world. I would like the genial Minister of Agriculture to turn his eyes towards northern British Columbia which one day will take its place in wealth and in its contributions to Canada alongside of the more established parts of this country—I mean Ontario and Quebec. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Agriculture will not forget this district, even though the session is now almost at an end.

Mr. TOLMIE: I would like to take just a moment to endorse the demand for more acreage in connection with the central experimental farm at Ottawa. It is impossible to carry on with such a restricted area to the very best advantage. I also want to endorse what the last speaker said with regard to that great inland empire of northern British Columbia. That country has a rich soil and a sufficient rain fall, and is particularly well suited to mixed farming of all kinds, and in that northern section there is not an experimental farm for a distance of some two hundred miles. This would be a tremendous help to the farmers of that section, particularly those newly settling there, and I would like to give this request my strong endorsation. The minister or the deputy will remember that along in 1920 or 1921 we had this area looked over by some of the experts of the department, and they decided on that occasion that that section should have an experimental farm if it was to progress in the manner which was to be desired.

Mr. GOTT: Has the government purchased or is it purchasing land in the city of Oshawa or in that vicinity for the purpose of establishing an experimental farm?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What research work is being carried on at the central farm in conjunction with the research council?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are carrying on experimental work at Winnipeg in connection with rust investigation, particularly with respect to the discovery of some variety of grain that will be immune from the ravages of rust. We are also conducting research work in the laboratory in Hull in connection with the Health of Animals branch.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is that along the line of the treatment or prevention of diseases?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Tuberculosis in cattle and, in fact, in all domestic animals and the prevention of it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is that all the research work that is being done?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have a list of the work that is being conducted at the new laboratory in Hull. The following tubercular problems have been undertaken and research work with regard to them is in progress. We have not yet moved into the new building and at present we have facilities only to the extent of a room about 10 by 12, the drawing room of a private citizen there, in which the research worker himself is living.

Tuberculosis research has been in progress for many years in the laboratories of the Health of Animals branch at Ottawa, Hull and Lethbridge.

This work has been given more particular attention at the research station at Hull and will be carried on more extensively as soon as better facilities are available upon the completion of the new building now under construction at that station.

The following tuberculosis problems have been undertaken and research work with regard to them is in progress:—

1. Vaccination with a view to immunizing healthy cattle against infection.

2. The relations of the human and avian types of tubercle bacilli to tuberculin reaction in cattle.

3. The possibility of the interchangeability of infection among man, swine, poultry and cattle.

4. The comparative study of human, bovine and avian types of tubercle bacilli, and of the infection and lesions produced in different species of animals.

5. The nature and significance of the so-called "skin tuberculosis of cattle".

6. The standardization of tuberculin is maintained and efforts are being made to isolate the active principle by absorption and careful chemical separation, so that the different fractions may be studied. If the active principle is isolated some of the known defects of tuberculin might be eliminated.

7. Complement-fixation and serological tests as compared with, and as an auxiliary to the tuberculin test for diagnostic purposes.

8. The study of immunological reactions, tuberculosis antigens and anti-substances; resistance to re-infection; production of anti-tuberculosis and immune serums.

We have stables there and all sorts of rabbits, guinea pigs and such animals as are associated with work of that kind. When we have our new laboratory finished and equipped in August, we hope, we shall have one of the best laboratories on the continent.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What difference is there in the work being done at the experimental farm at Kapuskasing and that done at the provincial farm at Monteith? I wondered if there was an overlapping of work or two distinct branches.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Monteith farm is a residential school with a farm attached, something like the one at Kemptville. In Alberta there are similar farms. Very little experimental work is being done. The work is largely scholastic in conjunction with some practical work.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is any of this vote for the extension of the experimental farm system in the Peace river country?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As my hon. friend knows we have not a full-fledged farm there. It is a substation.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is it the intention to extend it?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, but we intend to put in three demonstration plots if we can secure suitable men for the work, one at McLennan junction, one at Waterhole close to my hon. friend's home, and one at Spirit River. Those places are widely separated.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is the land purchased for them?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, just rented from the owner, 40 acres for each plot.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): While most of the members seemed to be in favour of acquiring additional land for experimental farms, I do not think there is a proper balance between the money expended in connection with experimental farms and the experiments conducted on those farms and the money expended in order to get across to the farmers the facts that are discovered. This vote indicates that we are going to acquire more land and to do further experimentation, but to my mind it will be largely used in supplying bulletins which will be sent out to the farmers and in a large measure the real discoveries that are made at these farms and stations are not of as practical benefit as they ought to be to the actual dirt farmers. The greater proportion of the money should be devoted to the marketing end of this business. Any big business, no matter whether it is agricultural or otherwise pays a good deal of attention to the marketing of its product. Any manufacturing establishment devotes considerable attention to the marketing of its product. We have paid too much attention to the productive end of agriculture, to producing greater yields and better varieties, which is all very well, but we have fallen down on the marketing end of the proposition. Any increases that should be made in connection with the Department of Agriculture for the next few years should be along the line of the marketing of farm products, and there should be established in connection with the department a branch which would have this for its study. I am convinced that a great deal of the useful work that is done by experimental stations is not fully understood by farmers and that something should be done to bring the work more closely under their observation and attention.

Item agreed to.

Health of Animals, administration of the Animals Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Foods Act, and necessary buildings, $2,155,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain the increase of $250,000?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As the House knows, we have been doing very active work in connection with what we call restricted areas where we test all the cattle in a given area, choosing as far as possible an area with natural boundaries so as to avoid the danger of reinfecting as much as possible. I think I have recited the areas before, but since the last time we were discussing them, we have established a small area in New Brunswick ten or twelve miles out of Fredericton, on an upland piece of ground which is largely isolated, and where we have 2,640 head of cattle of high quality. Out of that number, we discovered only twenty reactors on the first test. That area which we have established in New Brunswick will, I think, be the means of developing the idea throughout the entire province. There are, of course, many advantages in having animals free from this disease. Not only is their product free, but the animals themselves when free from this disease are much easier to sell, because cattle that have passed this test are always in greater demand.

We have also on the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture for Ontario agreed to start the first area in this province in Prince Edward county, in what is practically an island there is a canal that practically makes an island of that area. We always try to select sites of this nature, in conjunction with the provincial authorities, where we will have a natural boundary so as to avoid the danger of reinfecting other cattle. That is why we chose Prince Edward Island two years ago, because it was entirely surrounded by water, and that is why we have chosen Prince Edward county in Ontario, which is practically an island. We propose to establish an area there in the course of a month or two, possibly before the cattle are on grass.

Mr. LUCAS: How many restricted areas are there?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When this area in Ontario is established, there will be restricted areas in all the provinces except Alberta and Nova Scotia.

Mr. LUCAS: Is this the main policy the government is carrying on in regard to stamping out tuberculosis?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, we are carrying on the accredited herd system as well.

Mr. LUCAS: But is this the favourite policy of the government?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would not say it was the favourite policy. One policy reaches one class of people, that is the breeders of pure-breds and I might say that some people take the view that the accredited herd system is not so valuable because they say when you pick out a herd here and another one there, you leave all the intervening herds capable of reinfecting the cattle. They take the ground that whether the cattle are pure-breds or grades, the better way is to start an area and clean it all up. But I think it is a good policy as it stands. Both policies have their advantages, and we are trying to call attention to both. There are 2,710 accredited herds throughout Canada, and in course of being accredited 2,433 herds, making a total of 5,143. We are not extending, however what we call the municipal order in cities. We find we are not getting much satisfaction out of that because of the very common practice in herds contiguous to the cities of pasturing the cattle in common pastures and that means that we have to keep on retesting the cattle, which means a big bill of expense.

Mr. LUCAS: Does the minister think that once he has the country covered, we shall be able to stand this burden in connection with the matter of compensation? I placed some questions on the order paper some time ago as to the number of cattle slaughtered in connection with bovine tuberculosis and the amount of compensation paid, and since 1915 I find that over 73,000 cattle have been slaughtered, and $4,190,000 has been paid in compensation.

There is a very large body of opinion growing throughout the country that the policy which the government is carrying on is not the best policy for the elimination of bovine tuberculosis. I do not want in any way to deprecate the work that has been carried on by the department. I think they have been doing the best they can under the policies they have adopted, but I would just like to ask the minister if he thinks that the department is doing everything possible to develop new methods such as the production of immunizing vaccines. I might say we have four policies that are being followed by the government: the supervised herd policy, adopted in 1905; the municipal testing policy, adopted in 1914; the accredited herd policy, adopted in 1919, and the restricted area policy, adopted in 1923, showing that as time went on the government have been receiving new ideas and evolving new policies in dealing with this question. The point I want to make is this:

I think there are other systems to which the department might give attention, and which would be superior to the policies they are carrying on at the present time. I find, for instance, that the Alberta government has been carrying on a great deal of experimental work in connection with the vaccine developed by Calmette, and this work has been further carried on under the Alberta Tuberculosis Research Association. I should like to quote from the report of that committee of last year:

Since March, 1925, the tuberculosis research committee of the province of Alberta has been conducting experiments (assisted by a grant from the National Research Council) with Calmette's B.C.G. vaccine—live attenuated tubercle bacilli—with the object of ascertaining its value as a preventive of tuberculosis in bovines. While the results of these experiments have been encouraging the evidence is not, as yet, sufficient to form a basis for final conclusions, although it may be said that the vaccine does not appear to be harmful to the animals vaccinated, and the resistance of vaccinated animals seems to be appreciably increased. Further, experiments are in progress and it is hoped before the year is out definite conclusions may be reached. It is recognized that this procedure is a considerable advance over methods which have been advocated and experimented upon up to the present time. The work of the Alberta committee on this vaccine is, as far as is known, the most extensive in Canada.

I might say also that both in Great Britain and the United States they are recognizing that a vaccine can be developed that will play a very important part in this work. I quote from an article on the prevention of tuberculosis in cattle by Nathan Raw, C.M.G., M.D., M.P., a member of the British House of Commons.

It is estimated that a million dairy cows in Great Britain are at present affected with tuberculosis, of which about five per cent are affected in the udder, rendering these cows extremely dangerous to the public health.

If all these cattle were destroyed to-morrow, and full compensation given to the owners, it would not solve the problem, as another generation of calves is coming on, many of them already infected, either by living in contact with their mothers, or infected in the early weeks or months of life by drinking the milk of a tuberculous cow.

The only solution to the problem is prevention of infection.

Then we have a memorandum from Doctor W. C. White, of Washington. I am not going to weary the committee by reading all of this long letter, but they are proceeding very much on the same principle as we are in Canada, that is slaughter and compensation. He says:

In cattle I believe the process will be by vaccination and by pasteurization of food products and not by the fearfully wasteful method of condemnation and destruction of the present time.

I ask the minister just what work they are doing across the river at Hull, in regard to this research investigation, and what success they are having. Is he doing any practical work with animals or just laboratory work?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have already given, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Kingston, a list of the research work, or nearly the whole of the research work. We have two stables over in Hull pretty well filled with live animals, calves, grown cows and guinea pigs, and so on. I think it would be worth my hon. friend's while to go over there and see it, because it is very interesting. When we get through the seven restricted areas with three of them with less than one per cent of reactors in the first test we are persuaded it is not so expensive a method as it would be in the old country and is in the United States. In the case of Prince Edward Island, Last Mountain in Saskatchewan and the small area in New Brunswick, the reactors on first test all came below one per cent. The time to get the disease is when it is in the early stages. If my hon. friend has any better method we should like to know it. We hope to develop a vaccine in the new laboratory that will act as a preventive, so doing away with the necessity for adopting the slaughter cure. I believe in time we will be able to get good results, but this Calmette vaccine has not as yet attained that end. No veterinarian will advocate that as a cure. The best they will do is to say that it may benefit for a year or two, but that is not satisfactory. The research workers are coming nearer the solution all the time. In the meantime we are making use of the best methods that are at our disposal to cope with this matter.

Mr. KAISER: I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that in my constituency we are concerned with the important high class breeding animals, although we are not a dairying country. Our breeders complain that the embargo placed on the importation of breeding cattle from Scotland and England is too rigid. That embargo was put in force owing to the fact that in England a few years ago there was an outbreak of the foot and mouth disease. In England they isolated the sections in which the disease existed. Last month this restriction was lifted, because in England and in Scotland they considered that there was no danger of the spread of the disease over there. Our people think that the time has come when the department should ease up and permit our breeders to import high-class stock from the sections of the old country from which it would be perfectly safe to bring them. I point out this peculiar situation. I am told by the department here that unless six months have elapsed after an outbreak from any cause in the old country they will not permit high-class cattle to be brought from England to Canada. Why should we be so rigid when the United States only insist upon sixty days? I will read a short paragraph from a letter which I received from the chief of the Bureau of Agriculture in Washington. It says:

> It is a rule of this department not to permit the importation of domestic live stock from any country where the foot and mouth disease exists until sixty days have elapsed after an outbreak.

What we cannot understand is this: If the United States permit the importation of these animals sixty days after an outbreak, why do we in Canada insist upon a period of six months? I think the government should act in conformity with other countries and not be too rigid in this matter in which many of our breeders are concerned.

Mr. HOWARD: I cannot allow this opportunity to pass, even though it is late, without making a few remarks to the minister. I am heartily in accord with this restricted area development throughout Canada, and it is especially important to the section I am interested in, because already the department has an area reaching between the American boundary and the St. Lawrence river as far as the Richelieu river, which is now a practically clean area. I am glad to see this increased estimate of $250,000 this year, and I hope the money will be used to continue that restricted area, and if not to restrict it, throughout the entire province make it so as to cover the special section around Sherbrooke, Shefford, Stanstead, Richmond and Wolfe, Arthabaska, and so forth. The reason that this area should have preference over other areas is that of all the cream exported from Canada to the United States, eighty-five per cent comes from that section of the country. There are more accredited herds in that district than in any other district throughout Canada, and if there is one section more than any other where the restricted area should be continued and pushed ahead, it should be this section. In this district there are 90,000 head of cattle. If you deduct from that 90,000 the accredited herds, about 20,000, it leaves about 70,000 animals which have not been tested. Under that test only about ten per cent will go down, which means about 7,000 animals. The government would be called upon to pay $35 apiece or an expenditure of approximately $250,000 to make this section absolutely clean. By making this a restricted area you would enable the farmers to ship their cream into the highest market at all times even if that market was the United States. We have throughout this section of Quebec the provincial agronomists, a selected capable group of men who are dealing with the farmers in that section, and are giving a course of instruction second to none in the world. These men are willing to co-operate with the federal department and to get a petition signed requesting the government to complete this within the next two years at the outside. I sincerely hope the $250,000 increase is for this purpose.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Part of this vote will go to extend the Chateauguay-Huntingdon restricted area to the Richelieu river, which will make it contiguous to the other counties referred to by the member for Sherbrooke. Then the next step will be in the direction indicated. Replying to the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser), I am afraid we will still have to be open to the charge of being too severe in our restrictions against the admission of cattle from any country where foot and mouth disease is prevalent in that country. We would much prefer to err on being too strict in this respect rather than too lenient. Besides within the past week we have had reported a fresh outbreak from England.

Mr. BARBER: Mr. Chairman, I think the Fraser valley is about completed as a restricted area. I take exception to the criticism of the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas) in regard to the amount of compensation paid. It may seem large in the aggregate, but if he had lost his entire herd and received $30 compensation per head, and afterwards had to replace his stock at $125 to $150 a head, I do not think he would object to the amount of compensation paid. I heartily support this vote.

Mr. LUCAS: The hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) misses my point entirely. I was not criticizing the amount of money paid in compensation. I was trying to get a better system. If we can do so I think it is the duty of this House and the country to try to evolve such a system. I agree that this is one of the most important subjects we have to deal with in the country, because I know there is a very large body of opinion that believes the present system is not doing sufficiently good work for the money it costs. I think if this $250,000 were turned over to the National Research Council they might in a very short time formulate a system that would give much better results. The minister stated that the immunizing agent is effective for eighteen months. This being so, would it not be better to use the vaccine every eighteen months rather than slaughter the cattle?

Mr. ROWE: Some time ago I asked the minister for information regarding compensation paid to one Andrew Oberle of Walkerton, Ontario, for the slaughter of swine. I received the papers only to-day, and as they comprise a bundle of 182 pages it has been almost impossible for me to peruse them closely. I notice, however, that the deputy minister on December 3, 1925, wrote to Oberle saying that he and the minister both felt that the department was under no obligation whatever except for the price of sixteen hogs which had been killed by mistake by the inspector, and therefore if he did not accept a cheque for $240 the account would be closed. On the following day a cheque for this amount was sent to Oberle. But I find that on February 24 of this year an order in council was passed to compensate him to the extent of $1,910. Under whose recommendation was this order in council passed?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The responsibility for paying that was placed upon me by the House. It appeared in the estimates just the same as a number of small payments appear this year in the main estimates and in the supplementaries. These items cannot be paid under the law because the animals sometimes die on the way to be slaughtered. We changed our decision after reviewing the case. As the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., knows, there are mild types of hog cholera which one man will diagnose as such, while another will be of opinion that it is not hog cholera. This case became more complicated by the local authorities calling in veterinarians, and Dr. McGillivray of Guelph College diagnosed the trouble as cholera. But our men did not so diagnose it. When veterinarians differ our policy is to give the man who suffers the loss the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. ROWE: I do not think the minister has made the case clear in view of much of the evidence that I find in this file. It seems rather strange that Oberle lost so many hogs. He is an experienced hog dealer and feeder, and prior to any inspector from the department visiting his farm he had lost one hundred hogs that had not been reported to the department at all. That, I understand, was before May 1 last year. There is no doubt that he had been turning over a large number of hogs because on June 12 an inspector found 260 hogs on his farm. On June 25 the department received a telegram asking that an inspector be sent to the farm and that he, Oberle, had only 20 hogs left out of 300. On June 29 we find an inspector arrived and found 283. Mr. Nichols, the inspector, slaughtered a couple of hogs and later another hog to ascertain the trouble, and he was absolutely convinced there was no evidence of hog cholera, after sending the carcasses to headquarters for examination. The inspector visited the farm on July 19 and found only 16 hogs there. Oberle had lost 47 hogs in one interval and 49 in the other. Oberle was doing an extensive business and none of the hogs were kept on the farm very long. The inspector's report shows that Oberle purchased from fourteen different farmers, and the investigation demonstrated that none of those farmers' hogs were infected. During all this time Oberle was allowed to ship hogs, and he sold 182 and another shipment of 142 to the packing houses in Toronto. No quarantine was imposed on his farm. Everyone who understands anything about such a fatal disease as hog cholera will realize that if these hogs were not in quarantine some other farmers in the district would have had their animals infected. But we find that Mr. Oberle continued to conduct his business. The veterinary director general in his report stated that had Mr. Oberle followed the advice of Mr. Nichols he would have lost scarcely any hogs. The fault was due to improper feeding; he was giving the hogs tankage, slaughterhouse offal and buttermilk which was altogether unfit for them. It is rather strange that the district inspector, Mr. Watson the chief pathologist, Doctor Hilton, the veterinary director general and others, being of the opinion that there was absolutely no sign of cholera, the department should have undergone such a change of heart as to pay $1,910 instead of $240 which they had agreed upon long before. The minister says that there were evidences of hog cholera, but according to his letter he forwarded the cheque of $250 as payment in full for the sixteen hogs that were killed in error. He admits that there was no cholera, because, if there was, why should he pay $250 "in full"? Under the Animals Contagious Diseases Act, wherever cholera is evident only two-thirds of the value of the animals slaughtered is paid, whereas in this case the full value is given. It will readily be admitted that $15.60 on an average for 115 hogs is a good price for such animals as these. The department paid not only for sixteen hogs which admittedly should not have been killed, hogs that had no cholera, but there were ninety-six more that died and were paid for. I remember the Minister of Agriculture making the unconsciously humorous statement last year that these hogs had "all died on the road to death". Well, it seems they were a long time on the road to death, because they were dying all the way from June 12 to September 1. The minister declared that the reason the department paid for these hogs was that they had died before they could be slaughtered. If they died before they could be slaughtered it is evident that the department paid for hogs which the inspectors never saw. These hogs went to the dealer who was turning over hundreds of animals per month. Sometimes he would handle as many as 400. The act provides that no owner shall be reimbursed unless the hogs are slaughtered by order of one of the inspectors, but here we find ninety-six hogs being paid for in full although the inspector had never seen them. The inspector had only the word of the dealer that the hogs had died before they reached his place.

I cannot understand how the minister can claim that the hogs were suffering from cholera, because he knows that no such report was made by the inspector. The chief inspector of Ontario, the veterinary director general, and the pathologist took five of these hogs from Walkerton and examined them at headquarters and their report was that the hogs were not in good condition. They were not thrifty, there being evidence of undernourishment. They inoculated one hog with the blood of another to see whether cholera was present and they failed to infect any of these five animals. One of them died from pneumonia, and it was only after the other four had been inoculated with cholera germs that they succumbed. It was no wonder therefore that Mr. Watson reported no signs of hog cholera in these animals. They even brought three new experimental hogs and injected into them the blood from the hogs taken from Walkerton, and they failed to infect any of these three with cholera. Nevertheless, in face of all these experiments which could not reveal one trace of cholera, we find the department paying not only for the sixteen animals slaughtered by mistake, but for ninety-five others which the inspector never saw.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, there was one.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister owes the committee an explanation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have given one. My hon. friend seems to think there is something strange about the matter.

Mr. McGIBBON: There is something strange.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is nothing strange about two diagnoses about the same trouble. Someone has to decide and we made the best decision we could. We had the agricultural college of the Ontario government on the side of one of our veterinarians, while there were two other veterinarians on the other side, and we arrived at the soundest decision possible in the light of all the circumstances. Where there is any doubt in a matter of this kind the preference is always given to the man whose property is at stake. My hon. friend has played baseball and he knows that in a doubtful decision the base runner gets the preference. I do not see anything strange about it.

Mr. ROWE: I appreciate the minister's explanation and I think his reference to baseball is rather appropriate. In this instance Mr. Oberle was playing shortstop, because so far as I can see he has got favours which nobody else has enjoyed. While there was a difference of opinion I do not think that the payment for all these hogs can be justified. I would not criticize the minister for paying for the sixteen hogs slaughtered by mistake. It was purely a mistake, as the minister admits. The deputy minister acknowledges that too, as do the chief pathologist and the veterinary director general. No one would be so critical as to find very much fault over a mistake. At the same time it is difficult to understand why the department should pay for ninety-five hogs which there is not the slightest evidence to show had been inspected. We have not the slightest trace of any evidence that the inspector had looked at one of them. The minister will not deny that forty-seven of them died between June 12 and June 29, not one of them having been seen by the inspector; and between June 29 and July 14, when Inspector Tennant visited the farm, forty-nine more had died. Besides these there were three which Inspector Nichols killed and sixteen Inspector Tennant had slaughtered by mistake, making 115 in all. I contend that only 19 of these 115 hogs could properly have been paid for under the Contagious Diseases Act. The minister has not explained it at all, because I have not noticed in the 182 pages of evidence any mention that the inspector saw one of the 96 hogs. He said that Mr. Oberle told him they had died in the interval, and all this correspondence was carried on by the hon. member for South Bruce and some members of the provincial legislature, on behalf of their friend Mr. Oberle. I feel that so far as these 96 hogs were concerned, the department have deviated considerably from the limitations of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not want to let my hon. friend go into his back townships and talk that kind of nonsense; that is what he is playing the game for.

Mr. ROWE: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just sit down for a moment.

Mr. ROWE: I was not prompted by any such motive as that of going into my back townships and talking nonsense. Therefore I claim that the Minister of Agriculture has no right to impute motive.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member has no right to say that it is strange, or that I was playing favourites.

Mr. McGIBBON: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member rose to a point of order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I don't know Mr. Oberle from Adam.

The CHAIRMAN: I heard the point of order, and I do not think there is any point of order at all.

Mr. McGIBBON: Then give your decision, and do not sit there like a dummy.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I never saw Mr. Oberle and if the hon. member will consult the gentleman sitting in front of him the hon. member for Victoria he will learn that this is not the only case in which there has been a difference of opinion in regard to diagnosis. Mr. George Alderson of Ingersoll, in South Oxford, had his case brought to my attention by a prominent Conservative who is not sitting in this House now. Lest the same fault befall my hon. friend, he might better leave well enough alone.

Mr. TOLMIE: What was the final diagnosis in this case? I have been listening but I did not hear that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. McGillivray of the Guelph Agricultural College insisted to the last that it was cholera. One of our men also insisted that it was cholera, while two of them said it was not. I had to give a decision as between them, and I decided in favour of the man who lost the hogs, and would do so again.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the Minister of Agriculture say that there was a diagnosis made of all those hogs which were paid for?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The animals died, and that was sufficient. Some of them had cholera, and the presumption was that the others which died had the same trouble.

Mr. McGIBBON: It was merely presumptive evidence, with no proof at all?

Mr. ROWE: I did not intend to hold up this estimate for so long, Mr. Chairman, but in view of the explanation made by the minister the committee might be interested in hearing a letter written from the Veterinary Director General to the deputy minister, under date of May 27, 1926, which is as follows:

> I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 21st, instant, enclosing copy of a claim made by Mr. Andrew Oberle regarding compensation for fatalities among his hogs.
>
> In reply to your request in this connection I desire to first point out that Mr. Oberle shows in his statement of claim approximately one hundred more fatalities than those reported by our officers, and which I outlined in my letter to you of April 30, last.
>
> Special measures were taken in this case in an endeavour to demonstrate the existence of hog cholera infection, with negative results. The premises were not maintained under quarantine and still the disease did not spread through the district. I am consequently not in a position to change my opinion, which has been expressed on more than one occasion.
>
> The act which I am administering makes no provision for paying compensation for animals dying from diseases which it purports to control.
> The sole object of the act is to control diseases which are a menace to our live stock, and provision is only made for paying compensation for animals ordered slaughtered by our officers for the protection of other live stock owners. I am, therefore, of the opinion that Mr. Oberle will be receiving fair treatment in the circumstances if he is paid the full value of the sixteen hogs slaughtered by Inspector Tennant and for the three slaughtered for post mortem purposes by Inspector Nicholls. This would involve a payment of $270.

Salary and expenses of Agricultural Produce Marketing Agent in Great Britain, $15,000.

Mr. TOLMIE: I notice an increase of $5,000. What is the reason for that?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He is doing more advertising, and I think he has a secretary now. His advertising is carried on not only in the newspapers but my hon. friend may have noticed a despatch appearing in the press recently which stated that Mr. Wilson gave an all-Canadian dinner of all-Canadian products in the Hotel Cecil in London, to which he invited a large number of the trade to sample Canadian products fresh from Canada. This was a very good means of advertisement.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is this increase of $5,000 accounted for by expense or by an increase in salary?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Wilson's salary has not been increased, with the exception of the statutory increase.

Mr. STIRLING: Will the minister see to it that Canada is represented on the Fruit Advisory Board by a fruit man? He will probably realize that Australia and Tasmania have three representatives on that board, all fruit men; New Zealand has a fruit man, South Africa has a fruit man, Great Britain has two fruit men while Canada, so far as I am aware, is represented by Mr. Wilson, who whatever his great knowledge of cheese may be is not a fruit man.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When we get a sufficient vote we will consider that matter; I think we should remember just now that we have to creep before we walk.

Mr. STIRLING: I would like to remind the minister that we have an excellent fruit man in London now. Would it not be possible for Mr. Wilson to delegate to that gentleman his place on the Fruit Advisory Board?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend refer to Mr. Forsythe Smith?

Mr. STIRLING: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will think that over. I think he is in consultation with Mr. Wilson.

Fruit, including grant of $8,000 to the Canadian Horticultural Council, $230,000.

Mr. COOTE: Is the Canadian Horticultural Council that is mentioned as being the recipient of a grant of $8,000, the body that has appealed to the tariff board for an increase in the duty on fruits and vegetables?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think it is.

Mr. COOTE: Is it the policy of this Liberal government to finance bodies in Canada which are appealing for more protection? We should have some explanation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think we could make one of the conditions of the grant that they must not appear before the tariff board.

Mr. COOTE: Is this to assist them in appearing before the tariff board?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, it is to assist them in carrying on their work. They have established in Canada a registration bureau for new plants and flowers. For instance, I might mention the MacIntosh apple. They register them just the way one would an animal. They are doing excellent work in that direction. The increase in the general vote is due to the shipping point inspection which costs $5 a car and which carries itself. This extra money will go back into the coffers of the Minister of Finance.

Item agreed to.

Seed, feed and fertilizer control, including grants to seed fairs, et cetera, $325,000.

Mr. COOTE: What is the explanation of the increase?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I would like to ask the minister a question with regard to the inspection of seed potatoes and potatoes of grade A. We find that when a farmer is selling a carload of certified seed potatoes and he gets an inspector to give him a certificate covering the grade of those potatoes, he does not pay anything; the service is free. But if the same farmer or his neighbour is selling a carload of grade A potatoes and he wants a certificate covering the grade of those, he has to pay $5 a car for the inspection certificate. It seems hardly fair that the man who is getting the higher price for the certified seed potatoes should go scot-free, while the man who is selling grade A stock and getting the lower price has to pay a fee for the inspection certificate. I would like to suggest that both farmers should be put on the same basis in this respect. Has the minister ever considered this matter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We want to encourage the production of certified seed because it is a very valuable commodity. It is one of the chief sources of revenue from not only Prince Edward Island but the maritimes generally. If you are going to sell potatoes abroad in Virginia or elsewhere as certified seed potatoes, you must have them inspected and the government's certificate for them. That is obligatory and no fee is charged. The other is a purely commercial transaction. The potatoes are not what we call certified seed; they are table stock. The owners of this stock want to sell their goods abroad, and the only way in which they can sell them to the best advantage is by having somebody examine them, see that they are of uniform variety—usually white is in the best demand—and that they have the government's certificate behind them. Those people are ready and offer to pay $5 a car for that service. The certificate is worth many times $5 to them for putting their goods on the market. We had requests from so many places in the maritimes for inspectors that we were not able to pick up enough men there for the work. This inspection is optional.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): First of all I do not consider the explanation at all logical, and further I should like to criticize very strongly the action of the department in that regard. In the first days of December last in Prince Edward Island every inspector with the exception of one to the east of Charlottetown went out of service and any dealer who had an order for a carload of potatoes loaded east of Charlottetown had to get an inspector from Charlottetown. The result was that orders had to be turned down because inspectors could not be secured. The trouble was not the matter of the $5 inspection fee, although I maintain there should not be such a discrimination between the growers. This is the situation. A farmer goes to work and grows, say a ten acre field of seed potatoes under inspection from certified seed, and he intends to sell them as certified seed. If he succeeds in passing all the inspection and his stock is all right, he gets the inspection certificate when he loads the stock on to the car, and his bags are tagged. This service costs him nothing. But supposing his stock fails to pass inspection, he will probably get 25 cents a bushel less for the stock and then he has to pay $5 for having it inspected. That is not fair.

Then there is the other feature. In December, January and February last, inspection could not be secured at all with the result that farmers or dealers wanting to sell carloads of table stock had to refuse orders which demanded inspection. With the situation as it is in Kings county, Prince Edward Island, where there is one train a day, how is one inspector from the centre of the province in Charlottetown going to serve the whole of the eastern part of that province. The situation is absolutely absurd. It puts out of business the people who want to sell potatoes under inspection. If they have orders for any grade of potatoes, they can not secure the inspection and consequently they have to turn down the orders. This is an important matter in Prince Edward Island and I would certainly very strongly urge the minister to give it his serious consideration.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am very glad there has been such a land office demand for these inspectors that we have not been able to supply my hon. friend with them in sufficient numbers. If we are going to put them in there with the speed with which he would like to have them, he must expect to pay something for their service because we do not pick them up for nothing. This is a purely commercial service which we are glad to see that he appreciates. During the rush we had twelve inspectors at work. I am informed by the deputy and by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Sinclair) that during the winter there were always at least four inspectors on the island. They may not have all been in Charlottetown but they were doing work somewhere in Prince Edward Island. The only way to equalize the matter is to charge my hon. friend's customers for the service in connection with the certified seed potatoes and that will put both on a parity. We cannot afford to give the other service for nothing. If my hon. friend insists on equality of treatment, then we shall have to charge for the certified seed inspection also, a thing which we do not intend to do.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I do not understand the minister and I cannot see how any other hon. member can understand him. I am not objecting to have the certified seed inspection free.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But the hon. member is pleading for equality of treatment.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): The man who is receiving the lower price for his product should not be charged an inspection fee when the man who receives the higher price is not so charged. The minister says there were four inspectors on the island last year. I do not know how it is with my hon. friend from Queens county, but certainly conditions there are much better, because he has inspectors at Charlottetown and Summerside in his vicinity, but I say that the situation is absolutely impossible in Kings county under an inspection service where there is only one inspector in the city of Charlottetown who has to cover the whole of Kings county and the whole eastern half of Queens county. It is absolutely impossible, for it takes that one man two days to inspect two cars of potatoes. The situation is absurd, and the result is that there is a great deal of trouble and difficulty, and consequent loss to the farmers.

I would suggest to the minister that an equality ought to be maintained between the growers of different classes of potatoes. There is no reason in the world why the man who is growing a high grade or a low grade potato should get his inspection free, while another grower raising another grade has to pay $5 for his inspection certificate. It is not fair, and that is the reason I object to it.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): I am a little interested in this service to which my hon. friend from Kings refers. So far as the service which was given last year for the inspection of table stock is concerned, it was fairly satisfactory. At one period of the season when the large shipments were taking place before navigation closed, there were twelve inspectors at the service of the shippers in Prince Edward Island. When the middle of December came, eight of these inspectors were let out, but they were still always available for service from day to day if required, and were used by the day at times when they were required during the balance of the season. The inspectors were chosen from each of three counties, at least two from each county, which would make six, and the others were chosen from where they could best be secured for the purpose.

In regard to the cost of the inspection I may say that I and my colleague from Queens were waited on by shippers in Prince Edward Island in the early part of October, and were asked to try to provide this service. The shippers of potatoes particularly were desirous of having this service, and they themselves offered to pay a reasonable fee. The fee charged previous to that time was $5 a car when the certificate was given by the inspector. Before last year we were only in a position to inspect a few cars. Some were inspected before they went aboard the ferry, but during the last season most of the inspection was done where the cars were loaded, which was a more satisfactory inspection.

I think it would be a mistake to urge the minister to make a charge for the inspection of seed stock or for certifying seed potatoes. When you inspect potatoes for certification, you must inspect the growing crop twice during the season; you must also inspect the tuber after it is put in the pile, after the pile sweats, as it is termed, and later you must inspect the potatoes when they are in the bags ready for shipment before the tag is put on them. So it involves a series of inspections, and it is proving worth while not only to our people in the east but to Canada as a whole, because we have a growing industry in the producing of certified seed which is shipped to the United States, and which helps in a large measure to make favourable to Canada the balance of trade between Canada and the United States. It is a business to which I feel the Department of Agriculture should give every attention, and I do ask the minister not to think of making a charge at this time for the inspection of certified seed, because that is a growing industry and one that will mean a great deal to the maritime provinces and the eastern part of the province of Quebec, which is really the territory in Canada that will in the future supply seed potatoes for the southern growers.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I do not understand the logic of the hon. member for Queens any better than I understand the logic of the minister. First of all, he has stated that several inspections are required for seed potatoes; at least two or three in the field in the growing season, then an inspection in bulk after harvesting, and a further inspection on being loaded on the cars. For all that service the seed potato grower pays absolutely nothing, and I agree with that; that is right. I am not asking that a charge should be made for that. But the fellow alongside of him who is growing table stock costs the department nothing up to the point when he wants his car inspected, and yet he has to pay a $5 fee if he has only one inspection.

There is another matter. The hon. member for Queens is not correct in stating that inspectors were available last fall. They were not. On the first of December every inspector in Kings county was taken off, as well as in eastern Queens, and not a single inspector was available after that date. At that time of the year we are shipping very heavily, especially during the first half of December, more particularly in the eastern part of the province, and it was a serious hardship for these inspectors to be all taken off last fall. I know the hon. member for Queens is stating what he thinks is right, but his statement is not correct, for I myself tried on several occasions to get the men who had been inspectors up to December 1 to inspect cars of potatoes, and they said, "No, we are off duty, we are not allowed to do it. The only man you can secure is in Charlottetown," and that is all there was. I am not joking about this matter. It is a very important matter, and I want to impress this strongly upon the minister. First there is the cost. I believe that the potato grower who is selling table stock should be placed on a level with the man who is growing seed stock, and neither of them should have to pay a fee for their inspection. Secondly, the inspection should be reasonably available during the whole shipping season instead of being cut off on the first of December when the shipping season is not half over.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): I must correct my hon. friend because we have had the inspectors during the whole season, and they are on yet.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Just the one in Charlottetown.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): During the whole season when shippers required inspection they had to apply to the head office in Charlottetown, which controlled the whole inspection service. At some times you might get inspectors out on the road to do the work, but the organization required that you had to apply to the head office in Charlottetown from where the inspectors were controlled.

I want to say another word to show just what it has meant to shippers in Prince Edward Island during the last year to have this inspection of our commercial stock. During this season, with the official certificate of grade attached to the shipping bill for our commercial potatoes, Prince Edward Island potatoes have commanded a premium in the Canadian markets of from ten to fifteen cents per ninety-pound bag as compared with potatoes grown in any other part of Canada, as you will find by referring to the market reports for November, December, January, February and March. My hon. friend who has spoken to-night is the first shipper I have heard complain about the inspection fee being charged for the certificate.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I do not think my hon. friend knows what he is talking about. The inspection act has been in force in regard to potatoes going to Montreal and other markets for years. I want to tell my hon. friend one thing that he does not know, or he would not have made the remarks he did, and that is that there is not one car in ten inspected. They have the "Canada" A tag on them and they must be that grade, but the inspection does not give them that grade.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): They do not have the inspector's tag.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): They did not need it.

[Mr. J. A. Macdonald.]

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): When they do not have the inspector's certificate they do not pay for it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): My hon. friend spoke about inspection giving an added value of ten or fifteen cents a bag for potatoes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is a voluntary service, and you do not need to accept it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): The price is paid on the quality and not on the inspection certificate. Nine out of ten cars are never inspected, and they sell on the Toronto and Montreal markets just the same, if they have a grade A tag attached. The name of the shipper on the tags is of a great deal more value than the certificate of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Who puts it on?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): The shipper.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is not worth anything.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): It is worth everything. It is the whole thing. If a car is ordered with the requirement of an inspection certificate, an inspector is employed and examines perhaps ten bags out of five hundred in a car. Very often those ten bags are at the door of the car, and he does not know any more than the Minister of Agriculture what is in the car, so that he would have a very poor idea of it. The member for Queens thinks it is the inspection certificate that gets the price.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): No. The certificate is the guarantee that the shipment is up to the grade stated.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): You are not getting a higher price on account of the inspection certificate, but on account of the quality of the potatoes. There are cases where inspection is required. There were many cases last fall, and in December and January, where inspection was required but could not be obtained because there is no inspection service given to the people.

Item agreed to.

For experiments in dehydration of fruit and vegetables, $10,000.

Mr. BARBER: Where are these experiments carried on?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have been conducting experiments in small places, one here in Ottawa, one at Grimsby, one in the Okanagan, at Penticton. We have got stations in various places. The dehydration committee recommended that we should use part of the plant at Grimsby for the establishment of a real commercial plant there. The equipment at Grimsby is worth about $10,000. If we add this $10,000 to it, we will be able to start a real commercial plant large enough to operate under commercial conditions. We do that because we find that where commercial plants start of their own accord with limited capital they are apt to meet with some difficulty, the result being that they cannot operate cheaply. Burlington I think is the place we have in mind. My deputy tells me that the dehydration committee is at Burlington to-night, endeavouring to organize a unit there for the purpose of establishing commercial dehydrating plants such as I have described.

Mr. BARBER: Is it carried on with small fruits, or just apples?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, all fruits.

Mr. BARBER: Is it possible to get information in regard to these experiments?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, we shall be glad to supply my hon. friend with all available information.

Mr. TOLMIE: As this is the last item, I wanted to get a little information with regard to the dumping duty on eggs. I understand that with the dumping clause in operation on purchases made at certain seasons of the year there is no guarantee that it may be applied later on in the season, and there is great risk in having all this money in Canadian eggs. There is a very strong probability of the investors holding back in the event of there being plenty of cheap eggs in the United States which may come in and compete with Canadian eggs on the market here. I was going to ask if the minister has given consideration to the question whether it would not be better to have a fixed tariff higher than three cents, so as to give these dealers some assurance and stabilize the market.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will give the matter serious consideration, but a lot of my friends on this side of the House do not like the idea of a higher duty or a dumping clause, so we will defer the consideration of that question.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the executive committee of the World's Poultry Congress to meet expenses in connection with the World's Poultry Congress, 1927—additional amount required, $50,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the total amount for this conference?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: About $115,000.

MINES AND GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

Geological Survey—
For explorations, surveys and investigations, wages of explorers, topographers and others..	$205,000
For publications of English and French editions of reports, maps, illustrations, etc..	55,000
For maintenance of offices, and Museum, instruments, chemicals, books of reference, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies..	57,000
For museum equipment..	15,000
For purchase of specimens..	3,000
	$335,000

Mr. FRASER: What is the reason for the decrease in this vote?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Mines): We have practically the same number of parties in the field, but they do not require as much for maintenance this year.

Mr. FRASER: How many parties have you in British Columbia?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Nine; the same as last year.

Mr. FRASER: What part of the province did they cover last year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Southwest Yukon; Skeena river, Portland canal, Clearwater lake—

Mr. FRASER: I would direct the attention of the minister to the country around the Clearwater. It is pretty much in the same range as the main Cariboo gold fields, that is, south of east of the main range. In a small area of the Cariboo country you have a geological survey, but there is that large area between those two points to which attention should be given. It is all in the same mineralized zone, and the survey should be extended from the Clearwater lake through to the Cariboo country and on as far north as Fort George. When the minister is arranging his further survey I should like him to take into consideration the advisability of continuing it to the northwest until he reaches pretty nearly the Fort George country. It is all in the same zone and requires the same careful study and inspection. I think the result will justify any money expended there.

Mines — salaries, $571.085 — contingencies, $6,700.

Mr. QUINN: While we may be in a hurry to get through these estimates, Mr. Chairman, I think it is of importance that we should know what we are discussing. Where is this item to be found?

The CHAIRMAN: At page nine, and the details at page 91.

Mr. QUINN: Thank you.

Item agreed to.

Grant to Imperial Institute, $12,849.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the minister explain what the institute does?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is the usual contribution to the Imperial Institute, which is supported by all the governments of the empire. The exhibits are in London, England. At the Imperial Economic Conference in 1923 a resolution was passed providing for the reorganization of the Imperial Institute and the amalgamation with it of the Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau. It was agreed also that the exhibition galleries of the Imperial Institute should no longer be maintained, and in consequence the expenses of supporting the two bodies would be greatly reduced. The annual cost of maintaining the reorganized institute on the basis mentioned is estimated at £39,000 per annum. Of this amount £14,000 will be obtained from endowment, annuity, fees for work and rent of part of the building, leaving £25,000 to be provided annually by the governments concerned. The conference agreed that this amount should be provided as set forth below—each government agreeing to contribute its share annually for a period of five years:

Great Britain	£9,000
Colonies and protectorates	8,000
Canada	2,000
Australia	2,000
South Africa	1,200
New Zealand	1,200
India	1,200
Irish Free State	200
Newfoundland	200
	£25,000

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the institute for and what benefit does Canada get from it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is a central bureau for the advertising of the mineral resources of Great Britain and the overseas dominions. It is maintained in London.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it a sort of museum?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are displayed all the minerals of the country so that visitors to the institute may see exactly what each dominion possesses.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In other words, it costs $12,400 to satisfy the curiosity of some individual who may be interested?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is well worth the money from the advertising standpoint alone.

Mr. BRADY: Are the provinces represented individually or is Canada treated as a unit?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Dominion is treated as a unit.

Mr. FRASER: Is the exhibit supplemented with literature?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mines Branch—to provide for operation of peat bog at Alfred, Ontario (revote $45,000).

To provide for a trial shipment of Alberta domestic coal to be made by rail and lake under the supervision of the Dominion Fuel Board in order to ascertain the possiblities of moving Alberta coal in large volume with modern loading and unloading facilities, provided one-third of the total cost of the movement is borne by other governmental, municipal or private organizations, $80,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In what respect is the Mines branch of the federal department different in its functions from similar departments in the provinces? Is there any overlapping? Take for instance the peat bog at Alfred. Why should that not come under the provincial department?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The work was originally undertaken jointly by the two provinces and carried forward to the point where the necessary machinery for the manufacture of the peat had been developed. There is coöperation on the part of the provincial government and the two departments are still jointly experimenting. The chief duty of the federal Mines Department has relation to the three prairie provinces, the Northwest Territories, Yukon and the railway belt in British Columbia, which are all strictly federal lands. We have been doing a great deal of work in connection with the mines branches of the provinces, always coöperating with a view to eliminating duplication as far as possible.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How much has been spent on the peat bog at Alfred to date?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): About $300,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I do not want to knock anything but I think it was well demonstrated to the committee investigating the matter that for two or three reasons this work would not be worth carrying on. The minister is now going into the coke business and that should relieve the fuel situation. The committee thought that the results would not justify further work in this direction.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It has been demonstrated that peat can be manufactured at $3.50 a ton on board the car, and delivered within reasonable distances at $5 a ton. This makes it an economical fuel compared to coal. Anthracite costs from $16 to $17 a ton while the lower grades are about $12. Peat is not an all-winter fuel but in the fall and spring it is quite serviceable. Inasmuch as there are large deposits of peat throughout Ontario it was thought well to complete the experiment. There is a private company which intends manufacturing peat at Ste. Hyacinthe, Quebec. They have written asking for information. I must conclude therefore that peat fuel will be a rather important factor in the future for use in grates and for fall and spring, when there is not too high a head of steam required in the furnace for domestic use.

Mr. PETTIT: Has the minister considered developing a large peat bed in the county of Welland where there are several thousand acres available? A number of years ago a company did a certain amount of work there but nothing seems to have come of it. It would be advisable for the minister to look into the matter to see whether that bed could not be utilized.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Examinations have been made by the officers of the department, as well as by the department of the Ontario government, into a number of peat beds lying within a reasonable distance of Toronto. I do not know anything about the one at Welland, but at Holland landing a complete examination has been made. They are all serviceable, but we are trying to demonstrate that we can manufacture peat and sell it successfully in a way which will meet with the approval of the consumers.

Mr. FRASER: Did I understand the minister to say that the federal government administered the minerals in the railway belt of British Columbia?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton). Not now. If I said that I made a mistake. I am simply dealing with the geological work of our branch as carried on in British Columbia.

Mr. FRASER: The provincial government administers all the metals?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to ask the minister if this work is carried on now on a commercial scale by the government?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It will be this year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It has not been heretofore?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It has been in the experimental stage.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In view of that fact would the minister give the committee figures to show the cost of production of one ton of peat?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I just gave that figure; $3.50 per ton f.o.b.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is what it actually costs to produce it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, delivered on the car.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it proposed to sell the peat at cost or to reimburse the treasury by charging a reasonable margin to make up for the enormous sum invested?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We intend to sell it on a commercial basis in order to demonstrate what can be done. That is, we will manufacture and sell the peat at a price which will make it reasonably profitable.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it the policy of the government to turn over this almost completed plant to private interests, or does the government propose to carry on the work itself?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Once having demonstrated the feasibility of this undertaking, we do not intend to continue it as a government institution.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What private concern will take it over, and at what cost?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They will have to reimburse the government for all the outlay.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): For the $365,000?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, that was experimental work, but any investment made now by the government will be returned.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Do I understand that it is proposed to turn over the existing plant without cost?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Perhaps I have not made it clear. The plant is privately owned; we have leased it on a rental basis for experimental purposes for one year from the company, who have not been able to carry on. The plant will go back to the company with the definite understanding that they repay us for any outlay we have made for which we have not been able to reimburse ourselves by the sale of the peat.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the present capacity of the plant?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is very difficult to say, because a great deal depends upon the weather. If it is damp and rainy the drying process does not take place so rapidly.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Assuming the weather to be suitable, what is the estimated production of the plant?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We estimate that we could manufacture about 20,000 tons.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister tell us in a few words what process was found to be the best?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The air drying process is the one we have adopted. It simply involves taking the peat out, putting it through a macerator and working it up into a fine substance, then spreading it out on the ground to dry.

Mr. McGIBBON: That could only be done during a few months of the year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, just during the summer.

Mr. BENNETT: I saw the agreement under which this lease was executed, and at that time I declined to carry it out. I was of the opinion that the proposal was not in the public interest, since it necessitated spending a large sum of money for the lease of a property at a rental which I thought was exorbitant, without the assurance that the result would be of use to the country. Whatever may be said about it, in the short period I was acting minister I declined to execute the agreement. But I suppose it has been signed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. I confess that I shared my hon. friend's doubts at the inception of this scheme, but after two years' experience I am still of the opinion that it is well worth while to test this experiment on a commercial basis. I am bound to say that I think it can be done, and that a fuel can be manufactured which will be quite valuable.

Mr. IRVINE: Does the minister think this vote will be sufficient to complete the experiment?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, we think so.

Mr. COOTE: Have they ever made any peat there which burns successfully?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. COOTE: The work that is to be done this year, as I understand it, is to carry on the producing and marketing of the peat?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There is a second part of this vote which was not called, amounting to $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN: The total amount was called.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The second item was not mentioned. It provides $15,000 for the trial shipment of Alberta domestic coal by rail and lake.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will recall that a special committee of this House recommended that a trial shipment of this coal should be brought into Ontario by lake and rail from Alberta. I thought it well to make provision for carrying out the finding of the committee provided, as my hon. friend will note, that both governments will join in that project. It is not my intention that we should spend all the money necessary for that shipment unless the governments of Alberta and Ontario are prepared to join with us.

Mr. BENNETT: I am told that the coal is so friable that if it is dumped down a chute into a steel vessel it would be nothing but dust in the hold. I hope the minister will satisfy himself on that point before he spends any money. I have satisfied myself that the effect of dropping the coal into a steel ship would be to convert it into dust.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is probably correct, I suspect that is what would happen, without having expert advice about it. Inasmuch as this committee deliberated for some time, however, and brought in this recommendation, I felt it my duty to at least carry out my share of the program. I am also informed that Mr. Ellis, though I did not get this direct from him, has expressed the view that this was not a feasible proposition. If that is found to be so. I can assure my hon. friends that the money will not be spent.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has any attempt been made by the minister to get in touch with either of the governments with a view to carrying out this trial?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have taken the matter up through some of the officers of my department, with Mr. Ellis.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Do the officials of the Department of Mines think there is any possibility of getting a similar grant from either of the provinces for this trial?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is not a question of a grant, but a question of the provinces agreeing to coöperate in the movement as a test. If, as I am informed, Mr. Ellis, who advises the Ontario government, is opposed to a trial shipment of this character, as well as the operators in Alberta, of course nothing will be done. If on the other hand they should agree to a trial I shall have the necessary funds to enter into a three-cornered agreement with them.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): To what amount?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Simply to the amount required to cover any loss which may accrue.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the estimate for that amount $15,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. We cannot estimate what the loss will be.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It might be more than that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot say. A good deal will depend upon the cargo that is brought.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I agree almost with the statement of the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett). I do not know whether any more mad proposal was ever brought before this House than was brought forward last year by one of the front benchers on the Conservative side that the coal should be shipped lake and rail. No one knows better than those of us who live in Alberta that while our coal is of a domestic quality fully equal to any other used in this country, it will not stand harsh handling. One or two handlings are the most that it will stand without serious deterioration. I submit therefore that this vote is practically worthless and I venture to predict that not one dollar of it will ever be used. I venture to assert further that not a single operator in Alberta would prejudice the possible market for his coal by consenting to have it moved by lake and rail. Our operators know too well the danger of putting this coal down chutes into the hold of a vessel, hauling it out again with great clamshells and dropping it on the dock. The coal will not stand that treatment, but it will stand reasonable handling in box cars all rail. This morning we had a brief discussion in regard to the coal miners in Alberta. If the minister had the interest of the miners at heart—and I really think he has, but possibly officials of his department are leading him off into little highways and byways on other questions instead of letting him go ahead in the direction in which I feel sure he wants to go—he would have devoted this $15,000 to assisting the movement by rail until the Board of Railway Commissioners had reported on the cost rate. In that way the minister would have done infinitely more good to Alberta in the marketing of our coal than he will do by this vote in connection with the lake and rail shipment of it.

Ms. MALCOLM: The hon. member is assuming that Alberta coal is going to disintegrate in going over a tipple and in being taken out of a boat. A big portion of Ontario can be served from Georgian bay and lake Huron ports. I do not think the hon. gentleman knows, nor do I think anybody knows, to what extent Alberta coal will deteriorate under lake handling. For my part I think it is a very small contribution to the experiment to send a trial shipment, putting the shipment of coal by rail over the tipple at Duluth, and I do not think it will jeopardize the marketing of the coal. If the experiment should prove successful, a large portion of Ontario can be served from Georgian bay and lake Huron ports with that coal. Personally I would like to see the experiment tried.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have no intention of blocking this item; I am simply pointing out to the committee the uselessness of it. In reply to the Minister of Trade and Commerce I may say that we know just about how much handling our domestic coal will stand, and we know that with the present machinery for loading and unloading boats where a box car is raised high above the level and the whole carload is dumped at once down a chute into the hold some thirty or forty feet below, considerable disintegration occurs. When the boat arrives at the unloading dock the coal is taken out of the hold by driving clam shells into it, lifting it up, swinging it around and dropping it loose on the dock. The Minister of the Interior can inform the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the disintegration which would probably take place would render at least 50 to 60 per cent of that coal nothing but slack. It might be possible to get a single shipment for trial purposes if the source of the coal were kept secret, but there is not in Alberta an operator who would consent to allow his name to be attached to a shipment of coal that was to be used for this experiment.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I think the hon. member for Bow River is speaking of only one district in Alberta.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am speaking of all the domestic coal fields in the province: The Saunders creek field, the Drumheller field, the Edmonton field, and the Lethbridge field.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): From what little experience I have had with coal in western Canada I have found that coal from the Lethbridge area will stand much more handling than coal from the Drumheller area. It might be possible to ship coal from Lethbridge by lake and rail and that it would stand up.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The committee of which the hon. member was a member brought in this report.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Against my vote and wishes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can not help that. That report was concurred in by this House, and if reports are to be of any use committees should be careful about agreeing to them.

[Mr Malcolm.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not blaming the minister.

Item agreed to.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It has been argued that we do not require subventions to bring our coal here, and that if a reasonable rate had been fixed, the coal could be moved. I agree with that most heartily. That explains why in our estimates there is no amount for a subvention to bring Alberta coal east, because we think a rate can be fixed that will bring it here.

Item agreed to.

Compassionate allowance to Mrs. Nancy Waugh, $3,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What is the explanation of this?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There was in the department an ethnologist who disappeared at Montreal. We have not heard of him for three years and during that time we have been giving this compassionate allowance to his wife who, may I say, is a deserving woman. We have no knowledge of the death of the man who has simply disappeared. The last heard of him was that he was going to Caughnawaga Indian reserve, and from that time on no report has been had of him. We are asking for this amount for the support of his wife.

Mr. PARENT: This department seems to be unlucky. A short time ago we voted the sum of $1,000 for a man who met with an accident and now we find another sum of $3,000 for a compassionate allowance to a wife whose husband has disappeared. If every department were following the same procedure, we would find in the estimates any number of items of this character. We ought to consider such votes very carefully.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am in complete accord with appropriations of this nature. Compassionate allowance votes are infinitely to be preferred to votes for war memorials or celebrations of a bombastic nature.

Item agreed to.

PENITENTIARIES

Penitentiaries—Kingston, $441,472.

Mr. QUINN: I see there an increase of $8,000 in this item. Is that on account of prohibition or government control?

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Acting Minister of Justice): There is an increase of $7,000 in salaries and retiring allowances, and $1,000 additional for extra equipment required, the increase being due largely to a 50 per cent increase in the prison population.

Miss MACPHAIL: Has the Department of Justice done anything towards carrying out the resolution which the House passed last year to provide that prisoners should be given a sufficient amount of productive work to do to help towards keeping their dependents.

Mr. CANNON: When my hon. friend moved her resolution in the House last year, the hon. Minister of Justice stated he would endeavour to carry it out to the best of his ability. I understand he has taken steps in that direction, but unfortunately, as my hon. friend will understand, I am not in a position to give her any details. I have been called upon to present these estimates to the House, but I am not as fully conversant with them as the Minister of Justice would be. I am quite sure, however, from the knowledge I have acquired in the department that the Minister of Justice has done his best to improve the situation in the direction the hon. member outlined last year.

Miss MACPHAIL: I believe that the act as it stands is drawn up on the old idea of vengeance by the state, and in view of that fact I think that the wardens and other officials of the penitentiary are doing most excellent work. Certainly in the penitentiary I visited I was very much impressed with their efficiency. I think the wardens, the matrons, the guards, and the officials in charge of the prisoners are doing everything they can to change—shall I say distort?—the meaning of the act and to reform rather than to revenge, using punishment only in so far as it will help in reformation. I do think that the act should be revised to express the new spirit that is to be found to some extent in the penitentiaries. In the report which the superintendent of penitentiaries makes every year, he asks for certain things. He has made certain recommendations over and over again, and I hope that the Department of Justice will endeavour to carry them out. Brigadier-General Hughes is most interested in this subject. He devotes his whole time and energy and all his reading and thought to it. He has made certain specific recommendations for many years past, but they have not been carried out. I cannot see the force of having a man who is to advise the government if the government does not take his advice. These recommendations which he has made over and over again are very important. There are some seven or eight of them. One is that prisoners be given a sufficient amount of work to do, and get paid for work well done. He also asks that the officials in the penitentiaries, the guards and all who take charge of the prisoners, shall have training before they go there, and another one which I forget at the moment; but I would refer the minister who is putting these estimates through to the report of the superintendent of penitentiaries, and most respectfully suggest to him and the government that they should carry out the recommendations made yearly by Brigadier-General Hughes.

JUSTICE

Expenses of litigated matters—Department of Justice, $38,000.

Mr. KENNEDY: What is this for?

Mr. CANNON: This is for the litigated matters. There is a decrease of $50,000 in the vote this year.

Mr. BENNETT: It was larger last year on account of the Labrador boundary dispute.

Mr. CANNON: Yes, that accounted for last year's vote being much higher.

Item agreed to.

To complete the revision of the Dominion statutes; payments may be made notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or regulations thereunder, $20,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When will these statutes be completed?

Mr. CANNON: The commission was to complete its work by the 1st of January last. In the fall when I was Acting Minister of Justice I had a conference with the commissioners and they pointed out that in view of the fact that practically no legislation was passed last year, if the revision were completed by the end of this year we would be in the rather abnormal position of having a revision which would be minus very important legislation, and they suggested that they should be continued in office, in order to be in a position to include in the revision legislation which would be passed this session.

Mr. McGIBBON: Why not go on forever?

Mr. CANNON: Allow me to finish. Take, for instance, the amendments brought in by last year's budget or this year's budget, the Pension Act, and all these important pieces of legislation: I do not think it would be fair to the commission to ask them to terminate their work without including the measures we pass this session. The hon. member for West Calgary and the leader of the opposition will admit that it is in the public interest, and also in the interests of the bar, that we should include in our revisions the legislation of this year, and I have the assurance from the commissioners that they will be able to complete their work in a very short time. I asked them if it would be possible to finish by July 1, and they told me they would endeavour to do so, I can assure the House that their work will be finished within a very short time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are two things I have despaired of, one is the revision of the Dominion statutes and the other is a solution of the question as regards Alberta coal. The Dominion statutes were last revised in 1906. I remember that in 1921 a very able lawyer offered to do the whole job in one year for $10,000. The offer was accepted, but subsequently it was set aside by another government. This commission has been working ever since. They are paid an annual salary.

Mr. HANSON: What is the cost?

Mr. CANNON: I do not know the total cost, up to the present time.

Mr. McGIBBON: What has been the total cost up to date?

Mr. CANNON: $103,000.

Mr. POULIOT: Who is the president of the revising board?

Mr. CANNON: Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, former Chief Justice of Canada.

Item agreed to.

Justice—salaries—to provide for the appointment of Antonio Berthiaume as clerk, grade 4, in the minister's office, $1,500.

To provide for the salary of a stenographer, grade 2, $1,020.

To provide for promotion of a clerk, grade 2 to clerk, grade 3, $120.

To raise the salary of one senior advisory counsel, $4,620 to $5,000, $380.

Mr. QUINN: Can the Acting Minister of Justice justify the additional appointments to the staff?

Mr. CANNON: The staff of the Justice department is a very small one. It is the only department which is really under-manned.

Mr. QUINN: They are all over-manned.

Mr. KENNEDY: Why is it necessary to have increased salaries for stenographers and clerks? Why do they not come under the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. CANNON: They do. The stenographer in this item belongs to the Penitentiaries branch and after two years' temporary service was made permanent last year, the salary having been included in the general items of promotion from classification. Owing to the delay in passing the supplementaries for 1926-27 the salary was omitted when the main estimates for 1927-28 were considered. All these classifications and increases are statutory.

Item agreed to.

To provide increase of $3,000 per annum for Hon. Lucien Cannon, payable to him from the consolidated revenue fund, for the period during which he occupies the position of Solicitor General, the acceptance of such salary not to vacate his seat in parliament, $3,000.

Mr. HANSON: Explain.

Mr. CANNON: I am not going to deal with that item. Someone else will attend to that.

Mr. BENNETT: The Solicitor General will not misunderstand me when I say that it should be a matter of policy, so far as the government is concerned, that both law officers of the crown should not come from a civil law province. There should be one from a common law province and one from a civil law province. I have always felt that. In the previous adminstration with which I was connected it was not so, but that made it no better. As far as the item is concerned, if the Solicitor General of this country is charged with the same duties as the Solicitor General in England with respect to litigation,—and I believe that is the intention here—the compensation at present paid to him is wholly inadequate and he should be put on a higher basis. In England the Solicitor General undertakes a great deal of the civil litigation, and sometimes undertakes criminal prosecutions, but only in very important cases. In addition to his salary he is paid for the work he undertakes by the solicitor of the treasury endorsing on his brief a fee exactly the same as would be paid to other lawyers who might be called in. The idea of increasing the salary to $10,000 if the work is done is not at all paying the Solicitor General more than he should receive. As long as he undertakes this work I think he should be paid this salary. However, as I said, I think one of the law officers should come from a common law province and one from a civil law province.

Supreme Court of Canada—To provide for portraits of chief justices, $1,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What is this for?

Mr. CANNON: The custom in all our law courts is to have a picture of former justices and chief justices. In our Supreme court we have portraits of former chief justices, and this item is to provide for the portraits which we have not yet obtained. If my hon. friend will visit the Supreme court of Canada he will come to the conclusion that that building should be considerably improved. I think this very small item of $1,000 should be voted without any hesitation. The Supreme court is not what it should be.

Mr. McGIBBON: The court or the building?

Mr. CANNON: The building. I have no criticism of the court, but I think it ought to be better lodged.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How many dozen do you get for this thousand dollars?

Mr. CANNON: It depends on the artist.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think there are portraits of the last two chief justices, Chief Justice Taschereau and Chief Justice Davies. There are portraits of Chief Justice Richards, Chief Justice Strong and Chief Justice Ritchie.

Mr. CANNON: I think the intention is to complete the series.

Miss MACPHAIL: Would not photographs be cheaper and twice as good?

Item agreed to.

Penitentiaries—Kingston—to provide pension at the rate of $600 per annum to Mrs. Violet L. Jenkin, widow of late penitentiary guard, M. E. Jenkin, from September 1, 1926 to March 31, 1927, $350.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): On what basis is this pension granted?

Mr. CANNON: On the basis of $50 a month up to March 31 of the present year. Then she will be drawing a pension as provided for in the main estimates.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is this pension on the basis of the mother's allowance in certain provinces?

Mr. CANNON: The basis is the precedent established in the department, that is, it is the amount that would be granted if there had been an award by the compensation board.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think the pension is not sufficient. A widow with five children cannot possibly carry on on such a pension. The man was killed while on duty, and I think the department should increase the amount. Under the mother's allowance legislation a widow with three children gets $54 a month.

Mr. HANSON: At the rate of assessment under the Pension Act she would get a great deal more.

Mr. CANNON: But that act does not cover these cases. I appreciate what my hon. friend says, and I will take the matter up with the officials. If there is any possibility of increasing the pension I am sure the department will do something further.

Mr. HANSON: How long has this scale been in effect? I am informed it was established fifty years ago and has never been varied since.

Mr. CANNON: The first payments in cases of this kind were made in 1913, and the same basis has prevailed ever since.

Mr. HANSON: Of course the value of the dollar has gone down in the meantime.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There is another man in Kingston now, a complete invalid, who is receiving $25 or $26 a month. Whether he was injured while on duty through his own fault or not, it looks to me a pretty small piece of business. The guards are dealing with the most dangerous type of criminals, and one can appreciate the hazardous character of their duties by visiting the machine shop. This widow's husband was a bright young guard, and the minister must be aware that $600 a year is not sufficient to maintain her and her five children. The department ought to realize that the rate is too antiquated to meet present day conditions.

Mr. IRVINE: I believe it would meet the general approval of the committee if some arrangement could be made to increase this and similar votes. If this woman had been the widow of a judge I have no doubt she would be getting a much larger pension. A penitentiary guard has a much more dangerous job than a judge, and I think this amount should be increased.

Mr. CANNON: The widows of judges do not get pensions.

Mr. IRVINE: They do not need any.

Mr. HANSON: This is not by statute.

Mr. CANNON: The law governs us in fixing the amount, but the money has to be voted by parliament.

Mr. COOTE: On what basis do we grant these pensions? When the Department of Mines estimates were up we granted some lady, supposed to be a widow, $3,000.

Mr. CANNON: I understand from my colleague of the Interior that the item my hon. friend is referring to is a lump sum. This is a pension at the rate of $50 a month.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Chairman, is it not time that the government followed the example of the railways in providing for the dependents of officials killed while on duty? I cannot move an amendment to increase this vote, but surely the government will recognize that the stand I am taking is right.

Mr. CANNON: I understand these cases are dealt with directly by the department, but the amounts paid are the same as would be paid by the compensation board.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If this widow could come under the Mother's Allowance Act of Ontario she would get more than the department is paying her. I think you should put the pension on the same basis as under that act.

Mr. CANNON: I understand that that is the basis.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The duty of the government in considering cases of this kind is to treat them on a parity with the provisions of the compensation board of the particular province concerned. In the event of accident or death the widow receives the pension she would have got had her husband been employed in similar service in the province. It is eminently fair.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I take it that I have the promise of the Solicitor General to go into the whole matter?

Mr. CANNON: I surely will.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to pay amounts awarded to the United States government by the Pecuniary Claims Convention in the following cases:
The "Tattler" claim, $630.
The "Gerring Jr." claim, $9,000.

Mr. CANNON: The Pecuniary Claims Convention having concluded its labours, it is necessary for the various countries to arrange for the payment of awards made by the tribunal. The schedule considered by the tribunal comprises forty-one claims by the United States aggregating $5,515,958.29, and fifty-nine claims by the British government, including the claims of Canada and Newfoundland aggregating $5,717,138.75. Of these various claims thirty-two were awarded the United States totalling $81,113.06, and nineteen to the British government totalling $239,506.20. The United States government has appropriated funds to meet its indebtedness while the British and Newfoundland governments have undertaken to make similar provision. It is now the duty of Canada to take steps to pay the awards included in the above-mentioned cases. As the United States were awarded $81,000 and the British government, including Canada and Newfoundland, $239,000, it will be seen that we have made a fairly good bargain.

Item agreed to.

Litigated matters—To authorize payment of a special fee to C. P. Plaxton, K.C. for services in connection with the Labrador-Newfoundland case, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $2,500.

Mr. QUINN: What is this $2,500 for?

Mr. CANNON: Mr. Plaxton, of the Justice department, was entrusted with the preparation of the Labrador case and he did a good deal of extra work, having devoted his time to the task for several years. This amount is supplementary to his salary to compensate him for that extra work.

Mr. QUINN: It is apart from his salary?

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Mr. QUINN: Does he refund anything to the department for any time which he takes off?

Mr. CANNON: I do not think he has lost any time.

Mr. QUINN: If he takes a vacation does he refund anything?

Mr. CANNON: I want to assure my hon. friend that the Labrador case is an important one and Mr. Plaxton has done very good work.

Mr. QUINN: I do not wish to minimize the work of gentlemen of the legal profession but I must observe that their fees are becoming enormous. When we recall some of the events of the past twelve months I think it will be admitted that the legal profession is running crazy.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the government?

Mr. QUINN: The government too. We are paying too much in fees and it is time we called a halt. Why should we pay a gratuity like this to a man who is in receipt of a permanent salary from the Department of Justice?

Mr. HANSON: What about Rowell?

Mr. QUINN: I have Rowell in mind.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): What is the full amount paid counsel in the Labrador case and what was the full amount paid the Right Hon. Mr. Doherty?

Mr. CANNON: I am not in a position to state the exact amount that will be paid counsel in this case. As to the Right Hon. Mr. Doherty, the amount he received, as fixed in 1921, was $10,000. That covered work done during a period of five years and is certainly not exorbitant.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. QUINN: It may be carried, but I protest.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Pay of force (including salaries of two constables, Ellesmere island district, at $2.25 per diem, to insure department against loss through death), $1,065,653.75.

Maintenance (including billeting, travelling expenses, forage, fuel and light, clothing, repairs and renewals, horses ammunition, stationery, etc., medical, hospital, etc., transportation and freight, buildings, repairs, contingencies and criminal investigations, and establishment of new detachments and renewals, $1,112,345.09.

To compensate members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for injuries received whilst in the performance of duty, $8,500.

To assist in enforcement of federal statutes (expenditure chargeable to this vote shall be in connection with such federal police duties as may be defined by the governor in council upon recommendation of the Minister of Justice, $75,000.

To provide for special services in connection with the enforcement of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, $25,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. CANNON: Forty-three new men have been engaged in the northern sections of Canada.

Mr. KENNEDY: What part of the northern section, west or east?

Mr. CANNON: Some of them will be employed in Baffin island—and others in Hudson bay and on the Mackenzie river, in the northernmost sections of the country.

Mr. HANSON: Are any of the police to be used in the Peace river district for the protection of ballot boxes?

Mr. CANNON: I hope so. We shall have a few years to prepare for that emergency.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Has anything been done to reinstate those police who were removed a few days prior to the last election? In Saskatchewan, I believe, two or three officers of the mounted police were removed, one from Prince Rupert and another from the Yukon territory, because they were Liberals. The idea was that they should not be able to use their influence nor to vote. At the same time I believe one man was appointed aide de camp to the lieutenant governor in Regina, and that man is the president of the Conservative organization of that city.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad to hear the observations made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, who knows so much about everything, because what he has said indicates that these men should be very thankful they were not dismissed from the service. He says they were prevented from using their influence, being Liberals; apparently they desired to take part in the elections and that would have brought about their dismissal, in accordance with the observations made last night by the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot). As it is they should be thankful they were moved and not removed entirely from the public service for using their influence on behalf of the Liberal party in the election. The truth is that the gentlemen were moved on the strength of reports made by the superintendent, who sits on the floor of this House at the moment. With my own eyes I saw the report, which was received some months previously, and which suggested that they should be removed not because of their political faith but in the interests of the force. That report is a matter of record in the Department of Justice and can easily be brought down to substantiate my statement; it was on the strength of that report that these men were removed.

If the hon. gentleman desires to investigate the movement of men at the public expense from Toronto to Regina, on vouchers which can now be found in the department, in order that they might vote at Regina in the election of 1925, he would not have a great deal of difficulty in so doing. I would like to inform him that in that case the vouchers under which they were removed disclosed the fact that they were sent to Regina to vote at the public expense. These vouchers were subsequently altered, because that was thought to be even too raw to go through the department files. That is the position if the hon. gentleman desires to know it.

Mr. CANNON: I will state in reply that I will make inquiries into the facts brought to my attention to-night, and the House may rest assured that the efficiency of the service will not suffer by any action which may be taken.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If the statement is true, would it not require some further evidence that this was done to prevent them from using their influence?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I would ask the Solicitor General if he would ask the commissioner of police as to the advisability of providing police posts in the different parts of Canada with automobiles. I have a case in mind in my own riding; it is a place called Emerson, where two mounted policemen are stationed. I bring this matter to the attention of the minister because it was directed to me by the citizens of the district. These men do a lot of work for the revenue department, going around hunting up private stills and so forth, and I think their work would be much more efficient if they were provided with a small automobile in order to carry out their operations.

Mr. CANNON: Automobiles will be supplied gradually as the needs arise.

Mr. HANSON: Are any of the mounted police now being used in the suppression of smuggling, and if so, where? While I am on my feet I would like to call the attention of the Solicitor General to the necessity of sending a force in the coming spring, if the preventive service is not manned by that time, into the county of Kent, New Brunswick, where smuggling in alcoholic liquors is rampant.

Mr. CANNON: A certain number of officers of the force were put under the Customs department last summer, and are still with that department but in a decreasing number. My hon. friend will recall that a considerable sum was voted last night for the organization of the preventive service, and we hope that the Customs department will take hold of the entire preventive service in order that the mounted police will be freer to perform the duties allotted to this force, and those duties only.

Mr. KENNEDY: I would ask the Solicitor General if the government is considering adjourning very soon; it is now two o'clock.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. CANNON: I may say to my hon. friend that a very good way to expedite adjournment would be to help me through my estimates.

Mr. KENNEDY: I do not know about that. Some of us have been around the building since nine o'clock this morning and we are tired.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I just wanted to reiterate the position I have taken in recent years; it seems to me that there is unnecessary duplication as between the federal authorities and the provinces. I am not sure why it is necessary for us to have so many of the federal police stationed within the organized territories. I noticed a year or so ago a speech by Mr. Brownlee, the premier of Alberta, in which he protested against the mounted police in that district. I would ask why the Dominion government, in the face of a protest of that kind, still persist in maintaining the mounted police in the organized provinces.

Mr. CANNON: The question of how the administration of justice and the police work in the provinces should be handled is now under study. I have had occasion to discuss the matter with the provincial authorities, and I can assure my hon. friend that we will try to devise the best possible methods as between the federal and provincial authorities, in order that both may remain within the scope of their jurisdiction.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the Solicitor General recognize the fact that there has been a great deal of duplication?

Mr. CANNON: There has been.

Item agreed to.

Pensions—families of members of the force who lost their lives while on duty—

Mrs Mary Emma Bossange.. ..	$457 50
Mrs. Margaret Johnson Brooke.	823 55
Mrs. Margaret Cox..	501 75
Mrs. Elizabeth Fitzgerald.. ..	525 00
Mrs. Mabel Forbes..	411 75
Mrs. Myrtle L. Richards..	756 00
Mrs. Amy Lillian Searle..	408 09
Mrs. Elizabeth Willmett..	54 90

Mr. QUINN: Would the minister explain why the item in connection with Mrs. Elizabeth Fitzgerald has been reduced by $43.75?

Mr. CANNON: One of her children became of age so that the pension is granted to the widow and to the children under a certain age.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Why the decrease?

Mr. CANNON: Because the children have become older.

Item agreed to.

To assist in the suppression of the white slave traffic, $2,500.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What can be done with $2,500?

Mr. CANNON: This is to cover expenses incurred in occasional cases where the mounted police have to deal with white slavery. The amount is not very large because this is only in exceptional cases. The cases are usually dealt with by the police authorities in the different cities.

Mr. HANSON: How much was spent last year?

Mr. CANNON: A few hundred dollars.

Item agreed to.

Pensions—to provide for an annual pension from April 1, 1926, based on a widow's pension, under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police statutes, to Mrs. Letitia Kennedy, widow of the late Inspector G. W. Kennedy, deceased July 14, 1922, prior to the enactment of chapter 66, 1924, $423.50.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to this item and the following one for a pension to Mrs. Caroline Elizabeth McIllree, I am in great difficulty. The effect of these items is to give the widows a privileged position on the assumption that had their husbands lived to a certain date, they would have received a larger pension. I recently had occasion to bring to the attention of the department the fact that men who took their superannuation allowances in the force while the bonus was being paid which was subsequently made a part of their salary, received a much smaller pension than they would have received had they waited a few months longer and received the benefit of the increased salary. These pensions are based on the assumption that the increased salary had been paid. This widow is being paid on the basis of the 1924 pension and this is making it retroactive, while men who remained in the force, who took their pension and who are still living, have been refused the benefits of the amending legislation that a short time after increased the salaries of their successors by making the cost of living bonus a part of the salary.

Mr. CANNON: I am informed that this is to meet the inconvenience suffered by this lady owing to the fact that by a technicality she did not have a pension at the time of—

Mr. BENNETT: The change in the legislation.

Mr. CANNON: Yes. But the point made by my hon. friend is that we are increasing the pension so as to make it as high as it would have been if her husband had lived longer.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: That is not the case. It is to recoup her for what money she did not receive through some technicality.

Mr. HANSON: Is this a permanent addition to her pension?

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: We have just voted one pension to this lady and we are now voting another.

Mr. CANNON: No, that is to cover the 1927 pension.

Mr. HANSON: But this is an additional pension. She will be receiving two pensions.

Mr. CANNON: I am sure that if she is getting two pensions, somebody will soon find it out and it will be reduced to one.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister look at the next item and see what it says:

To provide for an increase, from May 18, 1925, in the annual pension of $962.50 granted under section 51, chapter 91, revised statutes of 1906—as amended—to Mrs. Caroline Elizabeth McIllree, widow of the late ex-Assistant Commissioner J. H. McIllree, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who died on May 17, 1925, said pension to be increased to $1,303.75 per annum, the amount to which she would have been entitled had she been eligible therefor under the increase in police pensions granted by chapter 24, 15-16 George V, an act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

That is exactly as I put the matter to my hon. friend. I recently had occasion to take up with the department the case of a superintendent who retired just before this amendment was put through and who is now receiving the smaller pension that this widow was receiving, and who, had he received the benefits she is receiving, would have got a few hundred dollars more of a pension. As he served his full period he receives a total pension which is equivalent to seven-tenths of his salary. If he had waited until the statute referred to was enacted; he would have received that increase. He did not receive it, and now we are giving it to the widow although we declined it to the living man.

Mr. CANNON: These items are to meet changes introduced in 1924, but not to cover the bonus to which my hon. friend is alluding.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the increased salary.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police—maintenance including $100 to reimburse ex-constable E. H. Woolams, loss of personal effects in the Northwest Territories and revote of $76,197.25 for special northern services in the western Arctic subdistrict, $76,297.25.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): A few years ago quite a number of members on this side of the House raised their voices against the large amounts being spent in this country on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and I recall plainly that Sir Lomer Gouin, then Minister of Justice, decreased the estimates for the mounted police. We have just passed one vote providing for an increase of $237,000, which in my estimation is a very large vote. Of course, I appreciate that it is difficult for a private member to understand whether or not some of these estimates are justified, but as we have already voted one large increase I think we should have some explanation of this item.

Mr. CANNON: The increase is easily understood. The work of the force has been extended, and therefore the personnel has been increased. As to whether the force should be increased or not, that is a matter of policy which might be discussed, but with the increase in the duties of the force this extra amount is required.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Is this $76,000 to provide for an increase in the force?

Mr. CANNON: There is no increase in the force this year. This is a revote.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): If there has been no increase in the force why should we vote $237,000 more than last year?

Mr. CANNON: As I stated before in answer to one of my hon. friends, we are establishing new stations in the northern section of the country.

Item agreed to.

Public archives, $90,000.

Mr. GARDINER: We have just passed one item for public archives. Why are there two different items?

Mr. RINFRET: This is a cumulative amount covering branches of the Archives department throughout the Dominion, in Montreal and the maritime provinces, also branches of the Archives department in London and Paris. The rest of the amount is required to make purchases of manuscripts, pictures and historical documents which we keep in the Archives building at Ottawa.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): What is the salary now paid to the Dominion Archivist?

Mr. RINFRET: $8,000.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): That is all he receives?

Mr. RINFRET: As archivist.

Item agreed to.

Expenses in connection with the Early French Colonial Historical Exhibition in Paris, $2,500.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is this vote for?

Mr. RINFRET: This is a revote for an exhibition that is to take place in Paris next year of early French colonial establishments.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment) moved the third reading of Bill No. 234, to amend the Pension Act.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Leader of the opposition): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) has just left the chamber. He is very much interested in this bill, and has an important amendment to move to it. This is no time of the night to bring on a question of this kind, and I submit that the government should not press this motion, but that we should adjourn.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not wish to press the measure, but it is important that it should pass so that it may go to the Senate. It is an important piece of legislation. It was understood that it would be given third reading to-night, but if the hon. leader of the opposition desires to have it stand over until to-morrow, we should take it up first thing in the morning.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would like it the very first thing to-morrow if it can be done.

Motion stands.

On motion of Mr. Stewart (Edmonton) the House adjourned at 2.30 a.m. Wednesday.

Wednesday, April 13, 1927

The House met at eleven o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION RESPECTING PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to make a motion with respect to a private bill of which no notice is required under rule 40: but the motion itself is under rule 17A regarding routine motions for the management of the business of the House. The motion is:

That in the opinion of this House it is expedient that private bills be considered and dealt with at three o'clock this afternoon.

I have shown the motion to the hon. Minister of Finance; I had not the opportunity to show it to the Prime Minister.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is understood that my hon. friend would be prepared to limit the time to not more than one hour at the most.

Mr. CAHAN: Oh yes. I have no desire to prolong the debate, and if it is the intention to attempt to talk these remaining bills out on the third reading, we will in the exercise of our discretion comply with the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I would draw to your attention the fact that there are no private bills on the order paper. Private bills are done with, and I submit that this motion is out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is a matter for the House to decide. If the House decides that private bills, even though they are not on the order paper, shall be taken this afternoon they will be taken. It has happened in the last two weeks that bills which were not yet down on the order paper were considered in the House and given a second and a third reading. The House can decide whether the time is opportune to take private bills this afternoon. I consider that in view of the present urgent circumstances the motion is in order under rule 115.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Can a motion of this kind, Mr. Speaker, leading to a suspension or alteration of the rules be moved without notice of any kind?

Mr. SPEAKER: The House can always suspend its rules, and the motion is in order.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Is it understood that if this motion passes, private bills will be taken up for one hour only? Is that the effect of the motion?

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood from the statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), which was acquiesced in by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), that the discussion on private bills will not last for over one hour this afternoon.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

PEACE RIVER RAILWAY OUTLET

OBJECTION TO MOTION TO CONCUR IN REPORT OF RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin) moved:

That the eleventh report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines be now concurred in.

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): I beg again to move the amendment which I moved the other day and which stood as a notice of motion:

That the said report be not now concurred in but that the same be referred back to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines with instructions that they have power to amend it by striking out the three following paragraphs:

"The weight of evidence before your committee indicates that, on economic grounds, much construction should not be commenced forthwith, as set forth in the resolution referred to your committee.

Your committee is of opinion that much greater traffic development is necessary in the area to make the building of such outlet economically sound.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Your committee is further of opinion that potentialities of that area are such as to warrant a continuous study of its development."

And substituting the following three paragraphs therefor:

"The evidence shows that there are four possible outlets but that a complete survey has been made of two only.

"Your committee is of the opinion that a complete survey should be undertaken of the Peace pass, Pine pass, and Monkman pass and that on completion of this survey a definite policy of railway development for the Peace river country should be decided upon.

"Your committee further believes that the potentialities of the Peace river district justify the commencement of a permanent outlet as soon as the best route is definitely ascertained."

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Does this mean, Mr. Speaker, that there are to be all kinds of speeches on the amendment?

Mr. SPEAKER: I have seen the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) and he is entitled to speak.

Mr. TOLMIE: Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak at any length on this amendment. When I consider this vast area of country which was thrown open to settlement some time ago—an area rich in agriculture, rich in timber and rich in minerals—and that the shortest possible route to tidewater for the products of this great district is down to the Pacific coast, I feel it is unfair to the settlers to leave them there without any outlet to their market. I know the great handicaps of living in a pioneer country without having suitable outlets for our products. I had experience of farming under those conditions in the early days on the Pacific coast, and therefore I fully appreciate the duty of any government to relieve these conditions at the earliest possible opportunity.

When I contrast the opportunities presented to settlers in this great district and the practicability of connecting it with the seacoast by rail with the present proposal to build a railroad to Hudson bay and take the chances of navigation through the strait, about which very little seems to be known, I say without hesitation that the two projects are not comparable at all. We have evidence of the rich quality of the land in this Peace river country, we have evidence that minerals are to be found there, we have evidence of its great timber resources, and we are assured as far as the outlet is concerned that it is a simple matter of connecting with ports that are open the whole year round. So the opening up of this particular area is not only practicable but is certain to result in its rapid development, which will ensure ample traffic for the railway.

Now while I realize that we must be careful before embarking on heavy expenditures for railway construction, and that nothing can be undertaken along this line until the finances of the Dominion are in a somewhat better condition, still I believe we should carry on the necessary surveys in the three other passes that have not yet been explored, and that this work should be commenced during the coming summer. Then when the time comes to consider the building of a railroad from the Peace river to the Pacific coast we will have before us sufficient data to make a careful study of the whole situation.

The view that before we do anything at all we should wait until there is more settlement in that country is in my opinion very narrow. The other day I was looking over the history of British Columbia when she entered confederation in 1871, and I had the pleasure and amusement of reading some of the comments by our public men of that day and also the editorials in the press. Some of the statements to-day strike one as absolutely ludicrous. It was said that not a single bushel of wheat could ever be exported from Saskatchewan to Great Britain because the cost of transportation would exceed the value of the commodity. It was also said that British Columbia was a sea of mountains, and that the traffic would not pay the cost of the axle grease used in the operation of the Canadian Pacific railway. Other so-called authorities said that it was an insane idea to think of building a railroad at all, and that all the resources of the British Empire would not be sufficient to pay the cost of constructing the Canadian Pacific railway and its maintenance. Those opinions were expressed at a time when very little was known of our great western lands even by our leading men and newspaper writers. At that time they did not know that in British Columbia we have more than half the standing timber of Canada, 366 billion feet. It is interesting to know that last year we sold two billion feet of this timber at eighty-two million dollars; that the output of our mines was worth $67,000,000; that our agricultural production west of the mountains is $70,000,000, and that we were responsible for 46 per cent of all the fish produced in Canada. And we have many other advantages in that province, but I will content myself with merely pointing out the great resources of that portion of Canada so as to make it clear to hon. members that to wait for settlement under the present conditions in the Peace river country before a railroad is built will be perhaps to wait a hundred years. From my experience of pioneering days I am confident that that country will not be settled until a railroad is in operation there. I need not point out at any length the part played by our railways in the development of the prairies and the country west of the mountains. A man has to be sure of his market before he will go into those sections and develop the country.

Taking all these things into consideration, Mr. Speaker, I think a survey should be made of these passes as asked for in the amendment, and that the necessary work should be commenced just as soon as practicable. I have much pleasure in supporting the amendment.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the House of some important factors connected with the Peace river situation. In the first instance, we must remember that the land in the prairie provinces is held by the crown. The even-numbered sections in most parts of the west, chiefly in Alberta, are left for homestead purposes. Some time about the year 1910 the Department of the Interior advertised the Peace river country as a splendid place for new settlers, and people went there on the understanding that within a reasonable time they would be provided with transportation facilities. We maintain that, a certain policy having been pursued over a number of years, it is now the duty of the federal government when they open these lands for settlement purposes to see that the transportation facilities required by the people are provided. In the Peace river area the federal government has not come to the assistance of the settlers in the matter of transportation facilities to the extent that it has done in other sections of the country. Alberta has been called upon to build these railways and to stand the expense of construction. The province has had to build colonization roads which, because of the policy of the present government, should by right be a charge upon the Dominion. In the circumstances the provincial government now finds itself in the Peace river area with a railway construction costing something like $22,000,000. And that is not all. The provincial government at this moment has many applications for extensions of branch lines to serve people who have been settled since 1912 and who are expecting transportation facilities. We are spending something like $3,000,000 to bring immigrants to this country, and, after placing them in certain areas, if we fail to give them adequate transportation facilities we simply lose them: they either flock to the cities or they leave the country altogether. What is the use of having an immigration policy if we do not follow it up with a proper system of transportation to meet the requirements of the people whom we bring in? I suggest to the government this morning that in view of the demand of the Peace river people upon the provincial government for an extension of branch lines the federal administration should at the earliest convenient moment determine which of the routes should be selected as the ultimate line to the Pacific coast. There are, I believe, four proposals in contemplation at the present time: the Obed route, the Pine pass, Monkman pass and the Peace river pass. These are the alternatives. If the provincial government go ahead and build branch lines they may build them in the wrong direction from the standpoint of the ultimate outlet to the Pacific, and it is only fair to the people of the Peace river district and to the provincial government that the route finally to be decided upon should be chosen as quickly as possible so that we may know how to build in the future, I appeal to the government therefore to accept at least the proposal that an instrumental survey be made immediately and that the route be chosen. When that is done, when the route is determined upon, then if the provincial government is compelled to extend branch lines this government will know in which direction to construct its roads so that there may be no duplication and no branch lines will be wasted in the future. Let me remind the House that we have a considerable railway problem on our hands, a problem which is costing us a good deal of money. But how did we come into that problem? We came into it exactly as I have described, by throwing open large areas of land and letting people settle wherever they pleased, without recognizing the fact that they must be provided with transportation facilities before they can produce and market their crops. I appeal to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) in the hope that he will accept the suggestion I offer, which is the least the government can do in the circumstances.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will withdraw the amendment, which goes further, I shall be pleased to accept the suggestion right now.

Mr. GARDINER: I have nothing more to say on the question. I do not wish to take up the time of the House further but I make that proposal as a fair one under present conditions.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): As one who has been interested for almost twenty years in the Peace river country and who, I believe, recommended to the Alberta government the construction of the Edmonton-Dunvegan railway to serve the people of that territory, I can say with some assurance that I know something about the situation there. I travelled through that district before there was a railway in the country, my object being to advise the provincial government what should be done. Perhaps I may be allowed to recite briefly the situation as it existed in 1913.

The Canadian National Railways projected a line into the Peace river country by White Court, crossing the Macleod river and heading for the Peace river pass. In my opinion no other road will serve the country as acceptably as the route by the Peace river pass, and I have never thought otherwise. I believe the reconnaissance surveys made at that time amply warrant that statement; it is the only outlet that will properly serve that whole country. Other routes have been discussed but they will all entail a longer mileage and a more expensive haulage than the road by the Peace river pass. In support of my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Tolmie), I may add that the Peace river route will open up a greater area of good agricultural country in British Columbia than any other road proposed. A road from Grande Prairie to Obed would not meet the requirements of any considerable proportion of the country, while the mileage would be longer and the cost greater. When I went into the Peace river country I found a great many people who had gone in during the winter and had passed a period of two years away from civilization. I therefore recommended the construction of the Edmonton-Dunvegan railway and that road has served the territory fairly well, apart from the fact that it necessitates a big haul for grain and live stock which would be avoided if there was an outlet to the coast. I am a strong advocate of the outlet to the coast and I support the suggestion that there be a survey made with a view to having the route definitely settled, this year if possible. I see no reason why that should not be done. I understand however that the committee went thoroughly into the matter and I am afraid that there is an impression abroad in the minds of a good many members that the Peace river route would involve not only the construction of a connection between Fort George and the existing Edmonton-Dunvegan railway, but also the purchase of that railway and the Pacific Great Eastern railway, both of which have entailed considerable expenditure. So far as I am concerned, with the information before me, I am perfectly agreeable to the suggestion of an immediate survey in order to submit to the House at the next session all the evidence available, and to have parliament take action thereon at that time. As I said before, however, the committee gave the matter serious consideration, and now that it has reported to the House I propose to stand by its finding.

Mr. J. A. FRASER (Cariboo): I am pleased to hear what the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) has had to say. Because with his extensive knowledge of the country his remarks carry great weight. A vast body of opinion has grown up from information available before the railway committee and I am sure that if hon. members will study that report carefully they will come to the conclusion that the Peace river country is not asking for anything unreasonable. Let us consider for a moment what we are aiming at. In the first place, we are trying to bring into economical use an area of great potentialities. Canada requires just such areas to afford its population the employment they need, and that particular district contains very large tracts of agricultural land of proven value. Those lands are without adequate transportation facilities. There are very substantial areas of timber in the same region, as well as adjacent water powers which in my opinion would be sufficient to electrify a railway from the Peace river country to the coast, which should appeal to the House after the discussion we had during this session in regard to electrical energy. In addition to that, there are many mineral developments which would be opened up by a properly located railway; there is no doubt about the minerals located in the Omineca area, and very large recoveries may be expected not only of gold and silver but of zinc, lead and copper as well. That will give an idea of the possibilities of this route.

Why do the people in that area look to the Pacific for an outlet instead of to the east? Just consider for one moment that a railway 800 miles in length will provide them with an outlet to the Pacific coast which is open the year round, while if they come east they must ship their products three times that distance in order to get them to Montreal, which is only open six or seven months of the year. The report which I have under my hand seems to indicate that if a road were built to the Pacific it would not be possible to lessen the cost of transportation. Can you imagine the people of the Peace river country subscribing to an idea of that kind when they have only 800 miles to travel to the Pacific, where they will have a port open the year round, while they are 3,000 miles from the Atlantic? You cannot make the people of that country believe that their proper outlet is not to the Pacific coast.

Now let me take up for a few moments the report presented by the engineers, in which they eliminate the possibility of all traffic except that resulting from agriculture. After what I have said in regard to the other potentialities of that district, I am sure that no member of this House will agree with that opinion. I am sure the engineers have surveyed this matter in a general way, but in my opinion they have not given it the careful consideration which the problem requires. So far as the engineers are concerned I believe they presented their report in good faith but in any case, as pointed out by the Minister of the Interior, there is no doubt that the question of the Obed route will not in any way relieve the necessities of the Peace river country. That is a temporary expedient of the worst kind, and should not be considered for one moment. The Premiers of Alberta and British Columbia appeared before that committee and condemned this route, and I should think that would be sufficient evidence to make this House forget all about it.

Now let me draw a picture, if I can, of the situation connected with the Peace river outlet, and in my opinion the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) was absolutely right when he said there is no route to consider except that via the Peace river itself, which has been the natural route into that country from time immemorial. British Columbia was first opened up by the Peace river route, which has continued in use up to the present time. On this route is the lowest continental divide on the North American continent, 2,350 feet; all other proposed routes must climb to an elevation of at least 3,750 feet, and when grades are such a compelling factor in the construction of a railway, I submit that this question must be given very serious consideration. Let me point out again that taking into consideration the topography of that country, everything indicates that the controlling factors from a transportation point of view all converge at Prince George; all these routes come to that point.

There you have at present the Canadian National railways running from Red Pass Junction to Prince Rupert, and a very significant statement was made in the committee the other day by the Deputy Minister of Railways for Alberta, who stated that if you do not provide the Canadian National Railways with the traffic of the Peace river country there is no justification for further continuing the operation of the Grand Trunk Pacific branch of the Canadian National from Red Pass Junction to Prince Rupert. That road carries an investment of the people's money of something like $70,000,000 or $80,000,000, and its operating loss alone is something like $2,000,000, per annum. If you are going to give that road an opportunity of doing away with that operating loss, you must give it the traffic from the Peace river country. The railway is tributary to that country, and, as stated by the deputy minister, that is the only opportunity the road has of paying, so far as the people of this Dominion are concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will not object to making it clear that that statement was made by the Deputy Minister of Railways for Alberta, not our deputy minister.

Mr. FRASER: I thought I had said so; that is quite true. Prince George is the centre of that whole country, and if you bring this railway through the Peace river pass you not only have the opportunity of shipping grain to Prince Rupert, but you have the alternative route to Vancouver, and if you are not satisfied with either of those you have the third alternative of providing a new route down the Fraser river from Prince George to Vancouver, a distance of 480 miles with a grade of four-tenths. I submit that the solution of the whole proposition is to connect Prince George with the Peace river country, and I submit that the solution is not difficult; it will be necessary to build only 400 miles of road, and there is no necessity for a preliminary survey at present. Put your engineers to work, make your location surveys and go ahead and build the road.

What will be the expenditure entailed? I have the estimate of the Deputy Minister of Railways for Alberta, given before the committee, in which he gave an expenditure of $12,160,000 as necessary to connect the Peace river country with Prince George via Pine pass. It is from 50 to 75 miles longer via the Peace river pass, but if you add a proportionate amount for the extra mileage, construction of the road by way of Peace river pass will entail an expenditure not exceeding $15,000,000. That is all that is required from the government at present. It is not a question of the immediate investment of another $100,000,000, or $80,000,000, or even $60,000,000; what is involved at the present time is simply the investment of another $15,000,000.

Now I am going to take up an angle of this question which has never been presented, so far as I know, either before the committee or anywhere else. I have an intimate connection with this railway problem by virtue of the fact that during the time of the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Pacific Great Eastern, I represented that district in the local legislature. My connection, in the first place, with the Pacific Great Eastern dates away back to 1912, and 50 or 60 per cent of that road was within the confines of the district that I represented locally. You can readily understand, therefore, that it was impossible for me to do otherwise than gain some knowledge in regard to this question. The point I want to make is this: The province of Alberta and British Columbia are in exactly the same position so far as this question is concerned. It will be found from the records, which are easily available to every member of this House, that except for fifty miles—as stated by the Premier of Alberta the other day—not a single dollar of money has been contributed towards the construction of this railway by way of cash subventions from the federal government. I submit and know that when we undertook the construction of the railway in British Columbia we expected to receive a cash subvention from this country of $6,400 per mile. The province of Alberta is in exactly the same position, and you can easily see the strength in my argument when I tell you that the government of that province received a cash subsidy of $6,400 per mile towards the construction of fifty miles of the railway. Now my point is that the province of Alberta has made an investment of $40,000,000 in provincial railways for the purpose of developing that province which naturally belonged to the federal government, because the lines in that province are federal lines. Such being the case the province would naturally expect some assistance from the federal government when railway lines were built in that province, especially when it is remembered that Alberta does not possess her natural resources. The province of British Columbia is in a different position in that regard. She has invested in the railway $50,000,000, but both provinces came before the committee and said that they had gone to the length of their financial resources as regards the completion of these railways. My point is this: There is a thousand miles of railway undertaken by these two provinces for no part of which, other than the fifty miles already referred to, has any federal assistance been received. Now whether this project goes through parliament this year or not, both these provinces are going to make a claim for a cash subvention, and in my opinion they certainly are entitled to it. They are entitled to it because if you refer to the report of the Department of Railways and Canals you will find that subsidies have been provided in the case of all the other provinces to an amount of $78,000,000. Do you mean to tell me, therefore, that if it is the general policy of the Dominion government to provide cash subventions for the construction of these railways, the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia are not to make claims for these grants?

Mr. DUNNING: Was it the policy of the federal government, at the time these railways were commenced, to grant such subsidies anywhere in Canada?

Mr. FRASER: All over Canada, I tell the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: At the time these railways were commenced?

Mr. FRASER: At the time these lines were commenced.

Mr. DUNNING: And they were commenced when?

Mr. FRASER: In 1912.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will remember who was in power in 1912.

Mr. FRASER: Certainly I remember who was in power in 1912. The proof of what I say is that the province of Alberta, in line with that general policy, made application for a cash subvention for fifty miles and actually received it. The Premier of Alberta admitted that at the conference the other day. Now when you take this thousand miles of railway and multiply that mileage by $6,400, you will find it amounts to $6,400,000. Therefore I say that in any case the federal government is going to be presented with a bill for that sum. In addition, the total expenditure for connecting this road up to Fort George and the Peace river country is only $15,000,000. So that all we are asking the federal government to do in connection with the construction of the line is to put up about $8,000,000 in addition to what they will have to pay in any case. I submit that is not a very unreasonable demand to make on behalf of the people who are in the Peace river country, when you take into consideration the amount of available land and the other possibilities there are in that district. At the present time I am speaking on behalf of the people of the district and pointing out the potentialities of that country. Now may I point out that the House is already committed to very substantial expenditures which are not justified if the Peace River railway is not undertaken and an outlet provided for that country. We have undertaken liabilities to the extent of $20,000,000 in connection with the branch line program of the Canadian National Railways, and these further amounts are being voted: $10,000,000 to satisfy the claims of the maritimes; $5,000,000 for the construction of the Hudson Bay railway, which the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., very well remarked could not be justified at all on the same grounds as those which justify the construction of the Peace River railway, and there is the further fact to be borne in mind that there is a prospective liability of another $20,000,000; $4,000,000 to beautify the city of Ottawa; $250,000 for the diamond jubilee; $3,000,000 of an increase for the civil servants; and an increase of $2,000,000 for the air service. The people of Peace River have not complained about these expenditures, they do not argue that these expenditures are not justified; but they do say that when a reasonable claim is made on their behalf they are entitled to the same consideration as the people in other parts of the Dominion.

Now, I want to consider as briefly as I can some of the evidence submitted to the committee in regard to the area of land available in that district. The engineers report that there are eight and a half million acres of agricultural land available for development in the limited area they had under consideration. An officer of the Department of the Interior, a man of experience, a man who has been over the district judging from his remarks, estimated that in the same area there were 12,000,000 acres of land of that sort. There you have a discrepancy right at the start, and that acreage is only in a limited area. I maintain there are 25,000,000 acres easily available for agricultural development. The engineers will only admit a maximum total of 2,790,000 tons of freight for the area they were considering—not the minimum but the maximum—and let me say that they exclude everything except the products of agriculture—they give no credit for anything else. If the estimate of the engineers is correct as to the tonnage and the acreage you have a total yield from each acre of land of 0.33, or one-third of a ton from each acre. The Premier of Alberta when he was before the committee stated that the actual tonnage of the Peace River crop this year moved over this line amounted to 179,611 tons. Now the minimum tonnage which the engineers estimated could be developed within ten or fifteen years was 170,000 tons, so at the present time the Peace river country is producing, according to Premier Brownlee's statement, more than the minimum tonnage which the engineers estimated it was possible for that country to produce within the next ten or fifteen years. That tonnage was produced from 270,000 acres of land under cultivation, which amounts to .66 tons per acre, or two-thirds of a ton; in other words, the actual tonnage at present is exactly double what the engineers estimated in their report. I do not think it is fair to allow the impression to go all over this country that the tonnage will amount to only one-third of a ton per acre, when it is actually twice that now. Taking Premier Brownlee's figures, and the figure of 8,500,000 acres which the engineers admit is in that area, that territory will produce if the same ratio of production is applied to the whole area, 5,600,000 tons of freight, which is double the maximum tonnage estimated by the engineers.

I want to impress upon the House, first, that the construction of this railway will simply be the ordinary railway construction. That is stated in the report. The grade required to connect these two points I have mentioned is four-tenths of one per cent; all the engineers admit that. Not only that, but it is the lowest grade which the engineers have submitted for any of these routes. The Peace river pass provides the best gradient for the opening up of that country. In addition to that, on page 15 of the engineers' report you will find that they admit that the Peace river route is the most likely to produce the maximum traffic.

Now I want the House to ask itself this question. What are we considering? Are we considering simply the construction of a temporary expedient which will last only a few years and then have to be reconstructed, or are we considering the construction of a permanent railway that will have for its object the maximum development of that country? If you are thinking of permanent construction for the maximum development of the country, I submit that you should take the long view and put the railway where the best grades are, even if it involves a little longer mileage. Again I repeat, the summit of 2,350 feet is the lowest on the North American continent.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, after the promises that have been made not only by this government—I do not want to inject any political animus into this question at all—after the inducements that have been held out to people to go into that country and settle, such as the literature of the federal government which was read in the committee, and the situation being what it is at the present time, I do submit that this House would be justified in going ahead during the coming year and making an actual location survey of that route for the permanent development of that country. It is the shortest route to the coast, and there is no proper way of providing an outlet except as I have indicated. I state that on my responsibility as a resident of that country for just about forty years. I know the situation of the people who went into that country expecting this railway to be built, and I do submit that in view of all the frills and furbelows for which we have been voting money here this session, this is the most reasonable, the most sensible, and the most feasible project that has been submitted to parliament this session.

Mr. A. M. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, as acting chairman of the railway committee I think perhaps I should say just a word as to what took place in the committee. I do not intend to delay the House longer than a very few minutes.

In the committee a very great deal of time was given to the study of this question. We had before us the chief engineers of the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific Railways, the men who were responsible for the preparation of the report that has been mentioned. We had also before us Premier Oliver of British Columbia and Premier Brownlee of Alberta, also the Deputy Minister of Railways and the Chief Engineer of the province of Alberta. We adjourned from day to day in order that all the evidence might be brought before the committee.

With regard to the engineers' report, I would like to say in the first place that I am not going into any details whatever, but that report distinctly is of the opinion that it is economically unsound, in view of the present volume of traffic, to begin to construct further railways in that country. I would like to quote just a few words from Premier Oliver's address. After stating at length the policy which he favoured he said:

> The policy outlined will require the expenditure of a large amount of money and the present volume of business may not warrant further capital expenditures. Any policy adopted should afford a reasonable assurance that in a short time the returns from the expenditure made would be sufficient to meet operation and maintenance as well as interest charges, and eventually liquidate the original capital outlay.

Then he asked himself this question:

Is it practical to justify the necessary expenditures by the production of a sufficiency of revenue, and if so, how is it to be done?

He answered that in this way:

A careful and conservative survey of available resources should be had, and a liberal estimate of expenditures and time necessary to develop the resources so as to provide a volume of traffic sufficient to make the railway pay should also be made. The methods to be employed and the costs incurred in procuring the necessary population and development should be considered. There are many other factors also, but generally speaking, settlement and development upon a sufficiently large scale is imperatively necessary to accompany railway construction. Any other course would be madness.

Premier Brownlee had this to say in reply to a question by the hon. Minister of Railways:

So far as I am concerned I have tried to indicate—I may have failed in my argument—that in my opinion, steps should be taken at once to lay down a program leading to the ultimate development of the Pacific coast outlet. I think there should be some kind of a body gathered together, such as an independent commission, to hear evidence as to the proper outlet. A definite program should be laid down that the route will go a certain way, and the necessary extensions should be made at once to adequately serve the territory. So far as the time of completion is concerned, I would prefer to leave that, to some extent at least, to those who are engaged in developing the route, having regard to the increased traffic that would come from a move of this kind.

Then the Minister of Railways asked him the following question:

It would involve, in your judgment, the taking over of the E. D. and B. C.?

To which Premier Brownlee replied:

Yes.

I want to go a little further and say that the engineers and Premier Oliver and Premier Brownlee and the Deputy Minister of Railways of Alberta apparently do not agree on which is the best route. Both premiers are apparently of the opinion that this matter should be further studied. That is as far as I wish to go in regard to the evidence.

Apparently we are all decided that the Peace river country has wonderful possibilities, and that those possibilities should not be neglected, but at the same time all seem to agree that we have not sufficient data at the present time to proceed forthwith with construction. What does the resolution call for?

Mr. POULIOT: What would be the approximate cost?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I do not think I can go into that question. We had the approximate cost of several sections of the road but I am not an expert in the cost of railways. The resolution submitted to the House says:

That, in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived for the commencement forthwith, and the completion in the near future of a direct railway outlet from the Peace river country to the Pacific coast.

Having regard to the evidence before us, we in the committee did not believe that we could recommend that this be done forthwith. The actual report which has been submitted to this House was submitted to the committee and, upon the question being put, was passed by the committee unanimously, with the exception of a few members.

Mr. GARDINER: How long before the committee rose was this report submitted to them? Is it not a fact that it was submitted after only a few minutes' notice and with no opportunity to consider it?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): There was no limitation to discussion in that committee. The report of the committee goes on to say:

Your committee, having heard evidence on the subject matter of the resolution from the premiers of Alberta and British Columbia and from engineers who have investigated this project, and others, is of opinion that building a western outlet from the Peace river area is feasible from an engineering standpoint.

The next clause reads:

The weight of evidence before your committee indicates that, on economic grounds, such construction should not be commenced forthwith, as set forth in the resolution referred to your committee.

Your committee is of opinion that much greater traffic development is necessary in the area to make the building of such outlet economically sound.

I understand the hon. member for Peace River takes more objection to the last clause than to any other. The report continues:

Your committee is further of opinion that potentialities of that area are such as to warrant a continuous study of its development.

I think the hon. member said that the effect of the last clause would be that this project would be shelved. In my humble opinion this clause means the very reverse of that—that the potentialities are such that the matter cannot be neglected, but that a continuous study should be made; not that that study should be given next year, but that it should begin now in the interests of the development of the country. So that, instead of the report of the committee meaning delay, I take it that it means that the study should begin now, that it should proceed with as much haste as possible, and that after all the matters are investigated a policy should be brought to the House and should be acted upon as soon thereafter as possible.

Mr. KENNEDY: I should like to ask the hon. member to state one thing which the report recommends should be done.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): There was no limitation placed upon it. It says "continuous study." That means, not a study of one branch, but a study of all phases, and a report brought in and acted upon. I think that is a fair statement of the facts.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I should like to make a few remarks on this matter before the debate is closed. One can well understand the anxiety of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy); as he has himself said, he is here for this purpose. I think perhaps he over-states it when he says that, but at least it is the most important objective he has in view, as the representative from Peace River. Therefore one must commend him for diligence in prosecuting this matter

Mr. KENNEDY The minister is merely stating his own opinion.

Mr. DUNNING: I am commending my hon. friend for his diligence in prosecuting it. If he disagrees with that opinion, I could offer some criticism as to the method followed by the hon. member in endeavouring to get the support of other hon. members with respect to the problems of his district, but I will refrain from doing so. There is an old saying that you can catch more flies with molasses than with vinegar, which I hope my hon. friend will take to heart. With regard to the treatment accorded the matter by the House and by its committee, I think I am safe in saying that no question has been given fairer consideration by this House, or by one of its largest committees, than the question raised by the hon. member for Peace River on this resolution. I have in my hand the printed evidence taken on motion of my hon. friend and available to him for his own purposes for propaganda, to which I register no objection at all. The committee agreed to that and spent day after day on the matter, and heard evidence from the engineers who drafted the report; the report was agreed to as a result of former representations by my hon. friend and those interested in the project. My hon. friend had perfect liberty to cross-examine the engineers and I am prepared to leave it to the judgment of any member of this House as to whether or not the reading of the evidence of those engineers justified in the main the position they took in the report. I am willing to leave it to the people most nearly concerned, the people of Peace river district. The committee heard evidence also from the premiers of British Columbia and Alberta. The resolution moved originally in this House by the hon. member for Peace River and submitted to the committee does not represent the full picture of the problem of the Peace river country by any means. I offer in testimony in that regard the evidence of the premiers of British Columbia and Alberta, both of whom urged the committee to look into the matter carefully, and to look at what they described as the larger picture or the larger question. And what is that? Not only an outlet from the Peace river line to Prince George, but the position of each of the two provinces with respect to the lines now owned by themselves—a much larger picture from the point of view of the financial commitment by this Dominion than is involved in the resolution submitted to the House by the hon. member for Peace River. As Minister of Railways, responsible in some degree, I cannot ignore that larger picture which was also presented by my hon. friend from Cariboo (Mr. Fraser). I find no fault with him for presenting it. We might differ in opinion as to the extent to which those considerations should be taken into account, but we cannot ignore the fact that, from the point of view of the people of the two provinces, very much more is involved than the building of a railway from the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia line to Prince George.

Mr. FRASER: Does the minister not think, having regard to what has been done by the provinces, that taking the larger picture he is submitting now he would get reasonable assistance from those provinces for the further development of the project?

Mr. DUNNING: My impression, after listening to the premiers of those two provinces, was that what they wanted was not so much to give assistance to the Dominion, as it was to get the Dominion to take off their hands two white elephants which they possess. That was the view held by members of the committee.

Mr. FRASER: So far as we are concerned, we did not consider the Pacific Great Eastern a white elephant. It would not be a white elephant at all, if it were properly proceeded with. It is because it is hung up in the air that it is a white elephant as the Liberal government said at the time.

Mr .DUNNING: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, if the use of the term "white elephant" is offensive. I intended merely to convey the idea that by the testimony of their respective premiers the provinces now have railways on their hands which are involving them every year not only in very heavy operating deficits, but that also they do not earn a cent toward their capital charges.

Mr. BENNETT: A deficit of a million a year in Alberta.

Mr. DUNNING: A deficit of a million a year in Alberta, my hon. friend from West Calgary says. I believe that was the figure submitted by the premier of Alberta. I merely used the term "white elephant" as illustrating that condition. This government is not prepared immediately to take any position which can be construed as an admission that the Dominion must take over the liabilities of these provinces. I am not saying that in the working out of a larger picture consideration will not be given to these factors, I am not in any sense closing the door, but I do say that in the light of the information now available, and in the light of the present railway responsibilities of the Dominion, we are not ready to proceed forthwith along that line.

Confining my remarks now entirely to the outlet, the cut-off, so far as the people now in the Peace river country are concerned, may I, with all respect, point out to the House that they are not at such a very great disadvantage in shipping their products to the Pacific coast as compared with the people of the central west generally. With regard to freight rates alone, may I point out that the furthest distant points on the existing Edmonton, Dunvegan and central Canada railways have a freight rate to Vancouver exactly similar to the freight rate paid from points in central and western Saskatchewan in the neighbourhood of Saskatoon. In other words, it is just as cheap for the people of the Peace river country to get their grain to the Pacific coast over their existing lines as it is for the people in central Saskatchewan to ship their grain to the Pacific coast. That is the degree of the disadvantage and the discrimination under which they labour.

I said a little time ago that I did not think any case had been given fairer consideration by a committee than this particular case. The committee's report was moved and seconded and agreed to. My hon. friend from Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) complains that the proceedings of the committee terminated shortly thereafter. He does not suggest, I gather, that no opportunity was given by the chairman of the committee to those associated with him to move the amendment to the report which they now move in this House. I submit that the proper procedure to amend the report was, in the first instance, to attempt to do so before the committee of the House dealing with the matter, which had the advantage, not possessed by this House, of having heard all the evidence submitted. If the hon. members were dissatisfied with the draft report as presented before that committee, it was within their power there to have moved the amendment which they now bring before the House, and so to have brought to bear upon it the judgment of the members of the committee who had the advantage of hearing the evidence. They did not do that. I gather from the remarks of the hon. member for Acadia that the proceedings terminated shortly thereafter. I would have thought that hon. members so vitally interested would themselves have drafted something in the nature of the report which they desired the committee to make, and would have been ready to present it to the committee. I confess frankly that one or two members of the committee coöperated that morning in an endeavour to shape up what appeared to be the consensus of opinion. There was no effort on the part of the members most interested to put before the committee anything in the nature of a draft report, nor was there any effort on their part to amend the draft report which was put before the committee.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it not true that the chairman of the committee and the hon. minister were the only ones that coöperated in drafting the report, and that it was drafted only a few minutes before its submission to the committee?

Mr. DUNNING: That is not true, Mr. Speaker. Several of its members spoke to me during the sittings of the committee as to the nature of the report which should be submitted, and that morning I think—probably the chairman will confirm me—half a dozen drafts of one kind and another were before the chairman and myself, emanating from one source or another. But that is not my point. I submit my friends from Alberta had an opportunity in the committee of moving the amendment which they now move in the House. I am not complaining, but I must confess their doing so did take me somewhat by surprise. I was made aware of their intention only three-quarters of an hour before they took action, and consequently I had very little opportunity to look into the procedure necessary.

Mr. KENNEDY: The minister surely will admit that when I sent him a copy of the amendment I intimated that I was willing to wait a day or even two days before moving it?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. I would further point out that in the committee itself, on the motion that the report be adopted, there were only a very few dissentient voices. I think I can fairly say that members of the committee from the opposite side as well as members from this side who attended the sessions faithfully were impressed with the manner in which the evidence was presented, and concurred pretty generally in the judgment of the committee as presented in the report.

In answer to my hon. friend from Cariboo (Mr. Fraser) with respect to his support of the suggestion by the deputy minister of Railways for Alberta that unless action as proposed by the amendment is taken the line from the Red pass junction to Prince Rupert will have to be abandoned, I want to say with all the force at my command that we have no intention whatever of abandoning that line, even if no outlet from the Peace river is ever built. We intend to continue to build up that line and its resources and the port at the end of it.

As to the engineers' estimates quoted by my hon. friend from Cariboo, in my experience when I had before me estimates from four or five engineers with respect to the cost of a particular project, I have found it the part of wisdom to base my calculations upon the highest estimate, not the lowest, because it is well known that in large construction projects the tendency is for the actual cost of construction to go beyond the estimate. In this case, my hon. friend based all his calculations upon the evidence of Mr. Calloghan, chief engineer for the province of Alberta, which disagrees with the evidence submitted by the four eminent engineers who signed the report. Mr. Calloghan's estimate is very much below the estimates of the other engineers.

I will not discuss the question of Dominion subsidies to provincial railways. I think my hon. friend will find that the provincial lines to which he refers were built after the time when the Dominion discontinued the policy of granting subsidies.

Mr. FRASER: I must absolutely disagree with the minister on that point.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: Then the hon. gentleman must account in some way for the fact that the party of which he is such a distinguished member, and which was in power at that time, did not make any move to grant subsidies in these particular cases.

Mr. STEVENS: In 1912 a subsidy was voted of $6,400 a mile for a line into the Peace River district, which subsidy expired in 1914, when it was renewed for a further two years. But it was not applicable to provincial roads. It was voted for a road into that district.

Mr. FRASER: In answer to the point—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman has already spoken. Is he putting a question?

Mr. FRASER: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has not helped the situation very much with respect to the complaint of the hon. member for Cariboo. That complaint, to put it in his own words, is that the provinces have a bill to present to the Dominion for $6,400 per mile for the whole mileage they have constructed.

Mr. FRASER: They sure have.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre says, and I believe very correctly, that the subsidies voted by this parliament with respect to roads into that area were not applicable to provincial roads.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister has not stated the matter correctly. He said that the parliament of the day did not think it wise to vote any subsidies for roads in that district.

Mr. DUNNING: For these roads.

Mr. STEVENS: I tell him that not only was a vote passed but a bill actually went through parliament in 1912 for a subsidy to a line into the Peace river country. It was not however applicable to a purely provincial road, and naturally so. This road, the Pacific Great Eastern, was built by the province but it was understood that later on, when the connection was made with the Peace river district, the bill in question would become applicable.

Mr. FRASER: Is it not apparent to the minister that the real reason for the suspension of the subsidies was the war, the Dominion government requiring all its resources at that time?

Mr. DUNNING: I shall have to let my hon. friend from Cariboo and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre settle that point between themselves. It is at least quite apparent that the claim made by the hon. member for Cariboo with reference to this big bill to which he has alluded has been well answered by the statements of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. The subsidies did not apply to provincial roads, says the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. These two roads were then and are still provincial roads. My hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) might well pray to be delivered from his friends, for I am sure that it does not forward the task of getting through this parliament a vote for the Peace river outlet to have submitted to us prospective bills of all sorts both by the premiers of British Columbia and Alberta and, in further degree, by my hon. friend from Cariboo.

Mr. BENNETT: You will pay for them just before the next election.

Mr. DUNNING: We shall pay for them before the next election, says my hon. friend. Well, that brings me to the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr Gardiner), the leader of the United Farmers of Alberta group. That hon. gentleman proposes that as soon as practicable we determine which of the passes should be used for the railway when it is built, without in any way committing ourselves to the construction of the railway this year or next year or in the immediate future. That I understood to be his suggestion. I intimated while the hon. member was speaking that the government was prepared to accede to that request if the amendment now before the House were withdrawn; and, indeed, whether it is withdrawn or not—my hon. friend can press it to a vote if he desires—the government does intend in any event to secure further detailed engineering information in order to be able to say to the people of the Peace river country and to the people of British Columbia, who are vitally affected, "When a western outlet is built, this in our opinion is the pass through which that line of railway should be constructed." We are prepared to do that in any case.

My objection to the amendment is this: it does seek to commit this parliament more definitely than I think the facts now available warrant us in committing ourselves so far as the immediate future is concerned. My hon. friend from Peace River naturally desires something to which he can in the future refer back and say, "The parliament of Canada said so and so; parliament decided to do this immediately." That is the general tenor of the amendment, particularly in its last two paragraphs. The government is prepared to go the length I have indicated to the hon. member for Acadia. We are prepared to ask the Canadian National Railways to determine definitely as early as possible which pass should be used when a railway is to be constructed from the Peace river country into British Columbia and down to Prince George. That is as far as we are ready to go at present.

Mr. FRASER: Would the minister be prepared to go the length of allowing the deputy ministers of the two provinces to be associated in the suggested inquiry by the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. DUNNING: I should not like to give offhand an answer to that question. After all it is a matter of assembling engineering data and making an instrumental survey. That is what is involved. We heard a great deal before the railway committee about surveys of various kinds, but undoubtedly in this matter an instrumental survey would be necessary. It is a question of getting the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: An election survey?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no election in prospect.

Mr. FRASER: Is it not apparent in any case that these bodies will have to be associated with the Canadian National Railways in the determination of this complicated problem?

Mr. DUNNING: I can assure my hon. friend that every consideration will be given along that line to the views of the governments of Alberta and British Columbia. I will not say that we will have this deputy minister or that deputy minister associated with the work. I do not know where that might lead. It might, of course, prove to be practicable but I should prefer not to be committed in advance at this time. I want the House clearly to understand that beyond that limit the government is not prepared at this session to go; and my hon. friend from Peace River in the light of the evidence submitted to the committee, is rather unreasonable in asking us for a further commitment than that. If he presses his amendment I shall very reluctantly be compelled to vote against it for the reasons I have stated. I do not want to find myself in the position of being represented as opposing the development of the Peace river area. In conclusion I would call to the attention of the House the evidence before the committee as to what would really be involved in this matter. I submit that a fair calculation of what would be really involved, to carry out the desires of the governments of the two provinces and to build the outlet as well, would fall not very far short of $85,000,000 before we got through with it, and for that reason I do not think it fair to press the government to a commitment on an enterprise of such proportions immediately.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Does the minister really say that the amendment would involve such a commitment as he has just indicated?

Mr. DUNNING: No, I would not say that exactly, but it would involve approval of a basis of action by this House which I believe would ultimately result in an expenditure of that size.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER: The hon. member has already spoken.

Mr. IRVINE: I wish to speak to the amendment. It occurs to me that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) has taken the amendment much too seriously. He suggests that if we want to catch flies we ought to proceed in some other manner. Let me assure him that I am not trying to catch flies, nor do I regard the minister himself as one of that breed. Neither do I think the member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) has in mind any political or ulterior motive in moving the amendment. We consider the minister fair and we believe he intends to do the best he can for the people of Canada. We therefore present the case to him on a basis that is reasonable.

The situation in Peace River is not denied. The necessity for the railway for which we are asking is admitted by everyone and more specifically by the minister himself than by anybody else. Speaking on a resolution moved by the hon. member for Peace River the minister used these words:

> —as the engineers' report demonstrates, there is undoubtedly need for some further branch line construction on the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia system in order to enable the country to fully develop, in order to assist in its settlement and encourage immigrants, but in the main the problem is one of providing a more economical outlet—

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River has only that object in view. We are not seeking to commit parliament or the government to the taking over of all the government railways of British Columbia or all the government railways of Alberta. This may be subsequently considered, as the minister has said.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: Might I just point out to my hon. friend that the last paragraph except one of the amendment contains the following:

> —and that on completion of this survey a definite policy of railway development for the Peace river country should be decided upon.

That is the country which is now partly served by a provincial railway.

Mr. IRVINE: We are seeking to lay down some policy regarding the whole railway problem, and are not trying to commit this parliament to the taking over of one or the other of the provincially owned systems.

I think the minister has indicated that the suggestion of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) would be acceptable to the government. As I understood that suggestion, it was that some progress towards providing the people of the Peace river district with transportation facilities should be made, and that in order that this progress might be made, he suggested an instrumental survey with the view of determining an outlet in order that subsequent branch lines may tend to the development of such an outlet.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George) moved the third reading of Bill No. 107, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): When opposing this bill last night I submitted an amendment to clause 2, which reads as follows:

> Of the capital stock to be hereafter issued no shares shall be distributed to the stockholders as dividends or bonuses, or shall be issued in any other way than in return for the payment to the company of at least the full par value thereof.
> After the issue of any capital in excess of two million dollars, no dividend to shareholders shall be declared by the company in excess of fifteen per cent per annum.

The supporters of the bill objected to the second part of this amendment, which was afterwards deleted by the House. When the bill went to committee it went through far too rapidly. Its amended provisions were not read, and it was therefore most difficult to grasp the details of it. When you, Mr.

Speaker, asked when the bill should be read a third time, the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) made the following statement:

Mr. Speaker, there have been many important amendments proposed to this bill, so important that we would like to have a look at them in the printed form, therefore I suggest that the third reading stand till the next sitting of the House.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) moved this morning that we should take up private bills at three o'clock this afternoon. Now, to show the importance of the suggestion of the hon. member for Acadia last night that we should have time to read over these various important amendments, I want to make a few comments on the bill. I am very sorry that the second part of my amendment to clause 2 was rejected last night, for with the rejection of the amendment restricting dividends the prohibition of stock bonuses is senseless. All that it will mean will be that instead of declaring a bonus of stock, there will be declared a special dividend to be repaid immediately as a payment by shareholders on their stock. The so-called concession by the company in respect of stock bonus is therefore a joke. It is probable that the company's refusal to accept the amendment limiting dividends to 15 per cent is due to the fact that since the beginning of 1927 the company's dividend rate has been increased from 15 per cent to 25 per cent. This makes the actual rate of dividend on the payments made by shareholders on their capital 123 per cent per annum, or on the total payment by shareholders on capital and premium account, 89 per cent.

It is also to be observed that the amendment respecting stock bonuses made in this section contradicts the provisions of section 9 of the bill. I will refer to section 9 in a few minutes. So rapidly did we go through the bill last night that I was glad on going through it again this morning to notice that we overlooked something in section 3 which should have been called to the attention of the House. This section is one of the most pernicious sections of the bill. Its apparent effect is to put life insurance stock on the same basis as mining stock. The real object of the section is to enable dividends to be quoted as so much per share rather than so much per cent and thus to conceal the real rate of dividend paid.

If the amendment respecting dividends had been made in section 2, section 3 would not have been, from this standpoint, so objectionable, but with section 2 left as it is, section 3 should come out.

Now I should like to say a few words regarding section 9. This section contradicts the amendment adopted respecting stock bonuses in section 2. Section 9 declares that so long as any stock of the company is not fully paid, dividends may be applied in reduction of the unpaid amount thereof. This means that dividends may be applied as stock bonus although the amendment adopted in section 2 declares that there shall be no stock bonus. The two sections can be made to harmonize by inserting after the word "company" in the first line of section 9 the words "heretofore issued." This will mean that so far as the stock already issued is concerned, dividends may be applied as stock bonus, but so far as any stock issued in excess of $2,000,000 is concerned, dividends must be paid in cash.

Those are the only criticisms that I have to make with regard to this bill. As I cannot move two amendments, Mr. Speaker, I am going to take this opportunity of moving one which I hope will improve this bill, making it a good deal safer and more in the interests of the policy holders. I therefore beg to move, seconded by Mr. Gardiner, that section 2 be amended by adding the following words:

After the issue of any capital in excess of two million dollars no dividends to shareholders shall be declared by the company in excess of fifteen per cent per annum.

Mr. CAHAN: I object to that motion, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. My point of order is that there cannot be a distinct motion to amend a bill when a motion for its third reading is before the House. It must be a motion to refer the bill back to committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: I was just about to say that no amendment of this nature can be moved unless it is preceded by the words, "That the present bill be referred back to the committee of the whole."

Mr. SPENCER: That was my intention, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to have those words added to my amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the amendment is in order with that addition.

The House divided on the amendment which was agreed to on the following division.

The House went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. CAHAN: I desire to say that an amendment in the exact terms of the present amendment was voted down last night by a large majority.

Mr. SPENCER: No vote was taken.

Mr. CAHAN: There was a standing vote and that vote was against this amendment. I am not interested in the Sun Life Assurance Company in any way, shape or form, political or otherwise. I have a policy of $2,500, which I took in my early life, which is now paid-up. The Sun Life Company has proved to be one of the best administered financial companies in this country. I may say one of the best in the world. A year ago sixty-three per cent of its business was done outside of Canada. Probably, as the business is progressing, this year seventy-five per cent will be done outside of Canada. This company is increasing its business in the United States, where its reputation is of the highest, and it has been increasing its business, particularly in Great Britain, where its reputation is of the best. The main reason that this bill is brought before the House is that the charter of the company granted sixty-five years ago by the parliament of old Canada fixed its authorized capital at $4,000,000. Subsequent acts of the parliament of Canada in early times reaffirmed its authorized capital at $4,000,000. In the seventies it was provided that $2,000,000 of its capital might be applied to accident insurance and other branches of a like kind. In a year or two the general policy in this country with regard to life insurance companies developed, in the direction of maintaining life insurance companies, in fact, as life insurance companies, and the company came to parliament and asked leave to discard its accident branch, and wound it up. Since that time, from time to time in the returns which this company has made, its authorized capital has been $4,000,000. The Insurance branch of the Finance department, until something like a year ago, returned its authorized capital as $4,000,000. But a short time ago, in re-insuring and in taking from English line companies—because these English companies distribute their insurance both to American and Canadian companies—the question arose in England as to what the capital of this company was and how much was paid up. I am instructed that it arose in this way: In order that there may be a transfer from the English line companies to foreign companies—and this is a foreign company, so far as England is concerned—it is necessary that the re-insurance and distribution of life policies by English life line companies to other companies be made only by the approval of the court, and so the matter came before the judge of the court in England. There was an inquiry to ascertain what was the capital of the company, and the company informed the judge that they had always believed and still believe that their authorized capital is $4,000,000, upon which a certain portion had been paid up. The judge took the view that the paid-up capital of the company is one of the strongest guarantees, in the long continuation of risks, for the policyholders of the company, and he intimated that he would decline to approve of re-insurance by an English line company having 1,000,000 pounds sterling of capital paid-up in a Canadian company, whose authorized capital was in some doubt and of which only a million and a half dollars had been paid-up; and so the negotiation fell through, and it was simply to place this Canadian company in a position to carry on the great financial operations which it has been carrying on in England that it asked to have its authorized capital declared, as stated in the original act, to be $4,000,000. This bill was debated in standing committee for two days. It has been debated in this House on the three days open to private bills. On every occasion in that committee and in this House up to the present it has received the support of the majority. Last night this very amendment, as now proposed, was defeated by a majority of the House. The adverse suggestion, as I have understood it, is that this company might issue a stock bonus. I wish to say—and it cannot be contradicted—that on the subscribed capital of this company the average cash dividend annually paid from the time that it was incorporated in 1865 down to the present time has been 3.5 per cent,—three and five-tenths per cent. The company had the right up to 1910 to share whatever it pleased with the participating policy holders, but was restricted, as, other companies were, in 1910, to receive only ten per cent of profits arising from its participating policy business. This company comes before this House and offers to reduce that ten to three per cent. I say that this company is entitled to fair consideration, and further that a company which, of its own accord, has reduced its share of participating policy profits from ten per cent to three per cent cannot be properly accused of attempting any sort of jobbing transactions by the favour of this House. I repudiate that. There is nothing in it. This company is proceeding in a fair, open, straightforward way to do its business, to add to the reputation of the company no doubt, but to add to the reputation of this country as well.

Now, I ask for reconsideration of this amendment, because if it passes the company must withdraw the bill. It will be absolutely impossible for it to proceed under the circumstances, and it will have to take the best means available outside parliament for protecting its business in such way as its financial advisers may see fit to suggest. The company can, as everyone knows who is accustomed to life insurance, cease from this day forth its participating policy branch and confine itself to ordinary insurance; it can take several alternatives—it can reinsure in an English company for a large part of its business, or it can organize an English company and carry on the English business under an organization known as the Sun Life Company of Great Britain; in short, it can take a dozen expedients. But it came before this House and for two days it explained frankly to the committee on banking and commerce the purpose of the bill, and received the assent and approval of the majority of that committee. The bill came before this House again, and on three occasions there was an attempt to talk it out. I make no complaint of that. I merely say that in respect of private bills there must be self-restraint on the part of members or it may be impossible in the future to secure private legislation. Last night I might have stopped all the private bills following this bill, but I did not; I allowed them to go through for third reading, although under the rules, I had strong grounds for opposing them. I deemed it right and just that the parties interested in those bills should have an opportunity to be heard. I have had an opportunity to be heard to-day under a special resolution. I do not understand the cause of this House reversing its judgment, and all I can say is that if this amendment is made to restrict the dividends of this company for all time in the future to 15 per cent, it is not right, it is not just, because during sixty-five years, in order to give to the policyholders a greater guarantee, the management have left in the company $30,000,000 of individual shareholders profits, and intend to leave them there until the Sun Life Company is the foremost in strength throughout the British Empire—as it might well have been in the near future if it had received the support and confidence of this House.

Mr. WARD: I have been given to understand that since this bill was introduced the company has held a meeting of its stockholders—quite a hurried one—and declared the dividends would be 25, not 15 per cent. Is that so?

Mr. CAHAN: I cannot say as to that, Mr. Chairman, but I doubt it very much. I never heard of such a thing. The company did have a meeting of which they notified, as required by law, every policyholder and every stockholder, and not a single policyholder or stockholder raised any objection to this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN: When this bill was before the banking and commerce committee and the superintendent of insurance registered such strong objection to it, did he not repeatedly say that the main purpose of the measure was to conceal the actual profits that the stockholders were going to pay to themselves; and is not the very fact that the company now refuses to accept the restriction of 15 per cent confirmation of his statement?

Mr. CAHAN: All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that under the proper practice of this House and of its committees in times past—and I have attended before them on many occasions—departmental officials appeared before committees and gave their evidence. That rule seems to be abandoned now, and instead of members of the committee and of the House reaching a decision on the facts presented to them, we have some permanent officials not only attempting to usurp the functions of this legislative body but of its standing committees. In contradiction of what was alleged by Mr. Finlayson, I say on my judgment as a lawyer and my honour as a gentleman that there is no intention on the part of this company to make a stock-jobbing venture of its proposed issue of additional capital.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, I protest against any reflection in this connection on an official of the department. Further, I protest against the statement by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George that there was an attempt to talk out this bill. He has done more himself to-day to talk the bill out than any other member has ever attempted. This is the first time I have spoken on the bill, and I would not do so had not the hon. member sought special privileges before this House. The advice has been tendered to some of us that we should "learn to contain ourselves," I think if anyone needs to follow that advice it is the hon. member himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not speaking on the merits of the bill at this moment, but I protest against a member, simply because he has been disappointed in carrying his bill, reflecting on the House and on an official of the Finance department.

Mr. CAHAN: I utterly repudiate the suggestion that I cast any reflection upon the members of this House or the committee. So far as the bill goes, I am not disappointed; I accept the judgment of the House.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to offer any defence of the superintendent of insurance. That gentleman requires no defence from any person. In the insurance field of Canada he is recognized as a fearless official who is afraid neither of the wealthy company nor of the company on the verge of bankruptcy. With all that my hon. friend the member for St. Lawrence-St. George, the promoter of the bill,—

Mr. CAHAN: I beg my hon. friend's pardon, I am not the promoter of this bill.

Mr. ROBB: Then I withdraw that. With all that he has said regarding the Sun Life Company being one of the best insurance companies in Canada, yes, one of the best in the British Empire, and of its excellent management, I quite agree. As a Canadian I have been proud of the Sun Life Assurance Company as I have travelled about from place to place and find it doing business that is a credit to Canada. But the fact that the Sun Life Assurance Company has been so well managed that it is very profitable to its stockholders is no reason why this department or the department of insurance should neglect the protection of its policyholders.

Now, it seems to me that my hon. friend, although he has displayed much heat, has not challenged the amendment presented by the hon. member as to the value of the 15 per cent. And 15 per cent on $4,000,000, where the actual cash put into the whole business from the start is only $305,000, is not a very bad return. It is true, as my hon. friend has said, that the company proposes to issue the shares for the additional capital for cash payments. But had my hon. friend listened to the advice of the superintendent of insurance, that there should be a guarantee that the actual cash be put into the business, there would have been no opposition from this side of the House. I want to assure the House that I am not one of those who is afraid of big business. I am proud that the big institutions of Canada can go throughout the world and say they are strong; but I have a duty as Minister of Finance of this country, and the superintendent of insurance has a duty, to see to it that all these companies are kept on a parity. If legislation is required for this or any other company it should be brought in in the form of a general bill. I propose during the year to have the superintendent of insurance confer with the different life insurance companies of Canada and if necessary, at the next session of parliament, propose such amendments to the insurance laws of the country as will meet the new conditions that have arisen since the last amendment was adopted. We shall be glad to do this, always bearing in mind that the insurance companies have no greater rights to profits from their investments than has any other business. We will take care of the policyholders, for after all it is their money that provides the capital. I want to say that the policyholders' investments in the Sun Life Company have been well managed, and I am proud of the company. At the same time, I believe that 15 per cent is not an ungenerous interest on the investment.

Mr. LADNER: The minister intimated that the policyholders would be adversely affected by this bill. Will he say in what respect?

Mr. ROBB: I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. IRVINE: The law governing insurance companies is general in its application and the policy of the department has been to unify the legislation to provide for better control of all companies. This legislation provides for special treatment for the Sun Life Assurance Company, which it is not intended to make general, and the departure in this regard is to be deplored. The hon. member who sponsors the bill emphasized before the committee that the company has made slightly over 3 per cent on its subscribed capital in the early years. If it made 3 per cent on $2,000,000 what would be the percentage on $305,000 which was the entire capital they had actually paid in? They must have made 21 per cent on their actual investments during those lean years. I do not wish to talk the bill out, and I shall therefore refrain from saying anything further.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report the bill?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it in order at this stage to bring in an amendment to section 9?

The CHAIRMAN: Such a motion would be out of order. The House instructed that the bill be referred back to the committee and it has been reported.

Bill reported.

Mr. CAHAN: As there is another bill which I desire to have read the third time, and in order to avoid further discussion of this matter, I would ask that this bill be withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member may make his motion when I put the question. When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. CAHAN: In view of the fact that useless discussion in connection with this bill is consuming the time which might be devoted to other private bills, I respectfully ask the leave of the House to withdraw the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill is now in possession of the House and may be withdrawn only by consent. Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member have leave to withdraw the bill?

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill is withdrawn.

Bill withdrawn.

THE JOHN E. RUSSELL COMPANY, LIMITED

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa) moved the third reading of Bill No. 117, respecting a patent owned by the John E. Russell Company, Limited.

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): Yesterday when this bill was before the House I endeavoured to indicate what I considered to be the real purposes of it, and I believed when speaking then that I was echoing the absolute truth as represented to the private bills committee. No hon. member of the House has contradicted any statement that I made on that occasion, but inasmuch as many members were not present when I spoke I venture now to state again very shortly the reasons I set forth. I pointed out that the patent laws of the Dominion were intended to protect the inventor and that if for any reason the inventor should sell his rights to some one else then that protection ceased. The protection cannot extend to the assignees for the reason that the patent is granted only to encourage the genius of the inventor and not to provide a basis for speculation on the part of any company. In this case the inventor is a man in the United States. He sold the patent to a company carrying on business in Canada and it is now the assignee who is asking for the renewal of the patent.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am in the judgment of the House, but I understood this morning that private bills would this afternoon be considered for one hour. The hour has expired.

Some hon. MEMBERS: One hour.

Mr. DAVID SPENCE (Parkdale): I appeal to the good sense both of yourself, Mr Speaker, and of the leader of the government (Mr. Mackenzie King) to allow the House to consider for a short time longer the bill now under consideration. I have not asked for any privileges this year but I should like to have the motion disposed of. I shall not speak to it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am entirely in the judgment of the House. If the matter were left to me I should say yea, but it is not for me to decide.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Leader of the Opposition): I read the motion which was made this morning with respect to the consideration of private bills this afternoon and I must say that I saw nothing in it in any way limiting the time.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend the leader of the opposition is quite right; there was nothing to that effect in the motion, but there was an understanding by which it was agreed that it would be one hour. I have no objection to giving my hon. friend fifteen minutes more.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The agreement was made with my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan).

Mr. SPEAKER: Am I to understand that we are to proceed for fifteen minutes?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I can only remark that the language of the motion passed this morning contains no limitation. My hon. friend did ask the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George whether an hour would be sufficient, and he said yes, but there are other members of this House who were not committed in any way. It was an open motion that we should proceed to private bills at three o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would like to know whether we are to go on for fifteen minutes or an hour or for the whole afternoon.

Mr. ROBB: I am willing to make it half an hour.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have no desire in the matter one way or the other; I am only pointing out what the motion contained.

Mr. ROBB: Fifteen minutes?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am not suggesting any term; I have no right to do so and I do not propose to try. I am calling attention to the fact that this House passed a definite motion to go on with private bills at three o'clock; the motion is in writing, and there is no limitation.

Mr. ROBB: I would move that private bills be continued until 4.20 p.m.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The order was altered this morning on the express understanding, which was clearly understood by the House, that the time would be limited to one hour. I objected this morning to anything which would interfere with the regular routine for the purpose of permitting a private bill to be proceeded with, and I would now have to maintain that position, which I think is correct.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Time is up.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Would the clerk read the motion which was passed this morning, in order that there may be no mistake?

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no question about the motion; there was no fixed limit, but I heard the conversation between both sides of the House and I gathered that the motion was intended to cover a period of an hour, although that is not stated.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): As a private member of this House, may I say that when we voted this morning there was a distinct understanding that the period would be one hour.

Mr. CAHAN: I can only say that the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister, I have forgotten which, did ask me, and I said I certainly would not take more than an hour. It was in my mind that I would adjourn the discussion or withdraw the bill rather than exceed that time limit.

Mr. CANNON: The House must bear in mind that when that motion was proposed and adopted this morning it was with the desire to give all private bills a chance to be disposed of. and no one had any idea that this particular bill would take so long. I think that within ten or fifteen minutes we could dispose of the remaining private bills, providing we do not discuss the details too much.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Let us have a vote, and that will end it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was interrupted a moment ago by an hon. member who claimed that the time was up, and that I should not speak. I wish to finish what I started to say, that there was a distinct understanding when we voted this morning. If these understandings between the various sections of the House are not lived up to it means that we must insist in the future upon every detail being put into every motion. When we voted in favour of the motion it was on a definite understanding, and I urge that this be not altered now.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must be guided by the principles which are followed in courts of law; written evidence is always taken in preference to verbal evidence. We have a motion which contains no limit, and since there is a disagreement in the House I must take the motion as it stands.

Mr. ROBB: I have just presented a motion, in which I am seconded by Mr. Dunning, that we extend the time until 4.20. We have now wasted five minutes, and I will amend the motion to make it 4.25.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House that the time for private bills be extended to 4.25?

Mr. COOTE: Might I be allowed one moment to point out that for the last ten days the House has been working under high pressure, with the view of having prorogation before Easter. For the last two nights we have sat until half past two in the morning and it does seem strange to me that the government should block the accomplishment of that purpose by deliberately giving way in the matter of government business to allow the passage of private bills.

Mr. SPEAKER: I take it that the judgment of the House is that the time be extended to 4.25?

Mr. GLEN: I have not heard from any of those asking for the extension a denial of the understanding which was made before the vote was taken. Will the leader of the opposition or any other member say that there was no understanding that private bills would be taken up for one hour this afternoon?

An hon. MEMBER: That is settled.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. GLEN: I do not propose to talk this bill out, but I wish to remind the House of the merits and demerits of the bill as I see them, in order that this House may voice an opinion upon the principle involved.

Mr. McGIBBON: I rise to a point of order, the hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not see a point of order; the hon. member was getting some explanations with regard to the time limit. I think he should continue, having regard to the parliamentary amenities and with the desire of concluding this session at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. GLEN: I suppose I may now go on, although I do not know what was said. I wish to enumerate some of the demerits of this bill, because some hon. members do not know why we are objecting to it. We are not taking exception to the renewal of this patent in any captious mood, but we do take exception on the ground that there is a general principle involved which we say this House should not establish. That principle is that here we have a bill in which the inventor of the patent is not asking for a renewal.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Because he is dead.

Mr. GLEN: It doesn't matter whether or not he is dead; the inventor—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GLEN: The indications coming from the other side of the House are those which will be given when this bill comes to a vote and is defeated.

An hon. MEMBER: Let it come to a vote.

Mr. GLEN: I just wish two or three minutes more, if those hon. gentlemen will give me that time. Here is a bill which is giving effect to something which this House cannot allow on any account; under the bill we are asked to grant an extension of eight years after a period of eighteen years to the assignee of this patent. Not only that, but the company which is now asking for the renewal of the patent will be enabled to collect royalties under it. In these circumstances I desire to move the following amendment:

That Bill No. 117 be not now read a third time but that it be read this day six months.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is put.

Mr. CANNON: The minister has a statement to make.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CANNON: This morning Your Honour allowed other speakers to express their views. I think the minister has a statement to make.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must say I did not see the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MALCOLM: I rose three times, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: My eyes were not directed towards the minister. However, under the circumstances it will be quite in order for him to proceed.

Mr. MALCOLM: As minister of the department administering the Copyright Act and the Trademark and Design Act I have given some consideration to this bill, and to the principle involved in it. We have been loth in British countries to renew a patent unless it could be shown that through some circumstance the patentee did not have an opportunity during the life of his patent to profit thereby, and further that no hardship was being done by the renewal of the patent. As minister of the department I cannot find in this case but that a hardship would be inflicted by the renewal of this patent. There are three principal firms in Canada desiring to manufacture this product, which is a lock-joint cement pipe used largely by municipalities. The three principal firms in Canada now wanting to manufacture this product are the Standard Clay Products Company, Montreal, the Nelson River Construction Company of Winnipeg, and the Consolidated Pipe Company of Montreal. These firms attest the fact that the holder of this patent is asking an exorbitant price for his patent. In reviewing what took place before the committee I cannot find that any evidence was submitted to justify the renewal of this patent on any principle that has heretofore been considered by the department, and I intend to vote against the measure.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Should we not have a vote?

Mr. SPEAKER: The amendment is carried. The time allotted for private bills having elapsed, Bill No. 255 cannot now be considered and the House will now revert to the order of motions. The debate had not concluded on the motion of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) that the House concur in the eleventh report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and the amendment thereto of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy).

PEACE RIVER RAILWAY OUTLET

OBJECTION TO MOTION TO CONCUR IN THE REPORT OF RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): When the House rose at one o'clock I had almost completed my remarks on the question under discussion. I was at that moment referring to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) which the Minister of Railways virtually accepted, and I was trying to show that there was very slight difference between that suggestion and the amendment. I would urge the minister to accept the amendment. The fact is that the last clause of the amendment to which the minister takes special objection merely means this: That branch lines are required in the Peace river district; that these branch lines when they are built should be directed so as to fit in with the outlet; that if the proper course is now taken, that of surveying and deciding the outlet, then the subsequent construction of these lines, in keeping with this plan, would really mean the "commencement" indicated in the amendment. That is all that is implied in the last clause, so I suggest that the minister accept it.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Kennedy) which was negatived on the following division:

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PENSION ACT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. YOUNG (Toronto Northeast):

1. Is the Pension Act administered by the Board of Pension Commissioners or by the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment?

2. If the provisions of the act are given effect in part by the Board of Pension Commissioners and in part by the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, what part is within the respective jurisdiction of the department and the board, and what parts if any, are under the board and the said department jointly?

3. How is the degree of pensionable disability ascertained, and in such ascertainment what part is the responsibility of the board and what part, if any, is the responsibility of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment?

4. By whose authority are pension examination or re-examination carried out?

5. Has the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment any control over the Board of Pension Commissioners as to administration or otherwise?

6. Is the Board of Pension Commissioners entirely independent of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. The relations between the Board of Pension Commissioners and the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment are defined by P.C. 2722 of the 17th August, 1921, which provides that:—

"...the Board of Pension Commissioners shall, through the department, lay down the policy to be followed in the administration of the provisions of the Pension Act."

2. The board is a court of judicature rather than an administrative body. It determines questions of eligibility, of degree of disablement, and is the sole authority competent to award or refuse pension. The department pays the pensions awarded by the board, arranges for the routine medical examinations of pensioners and prospective pensioners and is generally responsible for the administrative work involved in giving effect to the decisions of the board and in collecting and collating evidence relating to pensionability. No parts of the act are administered jointly by the board and the department.

3. The degree of pensionable disability is ascertained by the medical examiners and specialists employed by the department, who have been specially trained in assessment work by the medical advisers of the board. They examine individual pensioners and make recommendations as to the degree of disablement. The medical advisers of the board review such recommendations and place them before the board, which approves, rejects or amends them as to it appears proper. The department is responsible for the accuracy and completeness of the medical reports and examinations presented to the board and in respect of investigation reports made by departmental officials for the information of the board.

4. The treatment branch of the department recommends the review dates for medical examinations and the board approves or amends such recommendations. In certain circumstances, the board calls for special medical examinations at other than the regular review dates.

5. Answered by No. 1.

6. Yes.

CANADIAN BEEF CATTLE

Mr. ALLAN:

1. Is the government aware that the beef cattle industry is in bad shape in Canada?

2. Does the government anticipate any improvement in the near future?

3. Why has the export of beef cattle to Great Britain fallen off in the past 15 months?

4. Is the government doing anything to overcome this very unsatisfactory situation?

5. How many cattle were exported to the United States in 1926?

6. How many cattle were exported to Great Britain in 1926?

7. Is the government aware that the trans-Atlantic freight rate on cattle has been reduced to $15? If so, will this rate be in effect this summer from Montreal and Quebec?

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. The average price of the rank and file of cattle marketed during 1926 was higher than in any of the previous four years, and the market has since 1922, shown a very definite upward tendency. The total value of live stock publicly marketed in 1926 exceeded $47,500,000, as compared with approximately $43,000,000, in 1925, $37,000,000 in 1924, $36,000,000 in 1923, and $37,000,000 in 1922. The year 1925 was considered by the rank and file of producers to be the best year experienced in any of the past twenty-five years. At most markets in Canada, the average prices received for the various classes of cattle, marketed in 1926 were in excess of those marketed in 1925.

2. During the present year, the market for good classes of cattle, as well as the ordinary sorts of stock, is either strongly on the upturn, or steady.

3. The price spread as between the British market and the Canadian domestic market has been too narrow to allow of extensive export. The cause for this narrowness has been the poor condition of the British market, due to a depressed industrial situation, as compared with the relatively strong price situation existing in Canada under a keen domestic inquiry, and steadily improving industrial conditions.

4. The government has no control over the state of the British cattle and meat trade conditions.

5. The number of cattle exported from Canada to the United States in 1926 was 92,962 head.

6. The number of cattle exported from Canada to Great Britain in 1926, was 79,985 head.

7. Yes. When this freight reduction was announced, it was understood that it applied to exports from winter ports. We have not been advised as to whether this rate will be extended to include the summer months.

HONEY PRODUCTION

Mr. HEPBURN:

1. What is the annual production of honey in Canada?
2. Is honey produced to any extent outside of Ontario and Quebec ?
3. Has any honey been exported from Canada in recent years?
4. If so, to what country or countries?
5. How does Canadian honey compare with honey from other countries, (a) in colour; (b) in flavour; (c) in body or density?
6. Is honey graded by the federal Department of Agriculture, (a) for export; (b) for domestic use?
7. What is the federal Department of Agriculture doing to help develop the production of honey in Canada?

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. In 1925 the production was 21,000,000 pounds; in 1926 it was slightly less.

2. Yes, in the year 1925 Ontario produced about 10,000,000 pounds, Quebec between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 pounds, Manitoba slightly over 4,000,000 pounds, Alberta and Saskatchewan several hundred thousand pounds and the maritimes a small quantity. The production in Alberta's irrigated areas is increasing enormously.

3. There has been considerable export since the year 1925 which now amounts to between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 pounds per annum from the province of Ontario alone, this being exported largely by the Coöperative Honey Producers' Association. Quebec also has established a small export in clover honey.

4. Exports are mostly to Great Britain but there is also some to Germany, Holland, Denmark and other continental countries.

5. Canada's honey in colour, flavour and body is unsurpassed by other countries exporting to Great Britain. This naturally applies to superior grades. As evidence of this, Canadian honey has taken premier honours in the London show for several years.

6. (a) No official grading; (b) No grading. In explanation of the above, it is only fair to state that the federal department has been assisting the Ontario exporters who had large stocks for export, to the extent of inspecting their honey before it was exported and basing the inspection on sound honey of good quality and according to the grades adopted by that association.

7. The federal department of Agriculture is doing a considerable amount of work toward the development of the honey industry in Canada. Among the present activities are the following:

1. Experimental and demonstration apiaries scattered all over Canada on Dominion experimental farms.

2. Investigating new areas by placing out apiaries from these branch farm apiaries.

3. Improving the raising of bees now kept in Canada through selection of proper strains, breeding of superior queens, and so forth.

4. Investigating more suitable methods for different parts of Canada in the feeding, methods of establishing apiaries, methods of strengthening colonies, methods of wintering, methods of swarm control, the prevention of robbing, and distribution of disease, extermination of disease, etc. In addition thereto experiments and demonstrations are continuously made in the handling of honey and general management problems.

5. Assistance in inspection of honey for export as above mentioned.

6. In addition to the above the compilation of bulletins, annual reports, pamphlets, press articles and a very heavy correspondence shows a great demand for information in regard to honey throughout Canada. The bee division works closely in coöperation with provincial apiaries toward assisting them in their general educational work, service work, etc.

ALBION R. FOSTER

Hon. Mr. JONES:

1. Has Albion R. Foster of Hartland, New Brunswick, been appointed to a position in the customs service?
2. If so, by what authority was the appointment made, and what is the nature and character of his duties?
3. What is the amount of his remuneration (a) for services, (b) for expenses, and how much has been paid to him to date?
4. Is his employment temporary or permanent?
5. Was the Civil Service Commission consulted as to his employment?
6. Is the said Albion R. Foster the same Albion R. Foster who was the Liberal candidate in Carleton-Victoria in the last federal election?

Hon. Mr. CARDIN (for Mr. Euler):

1. Yes.

2. Appointed by the hon. minister under authority vested in him by subsection five of section two of the Department of Customs and Excise Act (Chap. 26 of the Statutes of Canada, 1921).

Customs excise enforcement officer on the staff of the special preventive service.

3. (a) $1,200 per annum; (b) $170.55 (December 3, 1926—March 31, 1927).

4. Temporary.

5. No.

6. No information.

ST. CAMILLE DE BELLECHASSE POSTMASTER

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Why is the appointment of a postmaster to fill the vacancy at St. Camille de Bellechasse being delayed?
2. In filling this vacancy will a preference be given to a veteran of the late war?

Hon. Mr. RINFRET:

1. Certificate appointing Florent Corriveau was issued by the Civil Service Commission on the 30th March, 1927.

2. The only overseas active service candidate who applied for this position, was not considered qualified.

CIVIL SERVICE—"AMPUTATION CASES"

Mr. WHITE (London):

1. Have instructions been given (as stated in the public press of London), by the Civil Service Commission, that no veterans of the Great War who are known as 'Amputation cases" may try examinations for positions in the postal service in so far as London, Ontario, is concerned?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

2. If so, is this policy to extend throughout Canada?
3. Is the government of the day or any member of the government responsible for this decision?
4. If not responsible, does the government endorse the regulation of the Civil Service Commission?
5. How many employees are in the inside service of the Post Office department at London, Ontario?
6. How many are in the outside service?
7. How many in the inside service are returned solders?
8. How many in the outside service are returned soldiers?
9. How many "Amputation cases" are employed in the London post office?

Hon. Mr. VENIOT:

1, 2, 3 and 4. The employment of amputation cases in city post offices was discussed by representatives of the Post Office department, Civil Service Commission and Great War Veterans Association.

The department's views were expressed as follows:

The department has no objection to the employment of amputation cases in those positions where their physical handicap does not prevent their giving the department satisfactory service.

The department at the present time has so many employees who are not 100 per cent physically fit in the operating branches of the service, including a large number of men of advanced years who have entered under the returned soldiers' preference. that to further load down these staffs with amputation cases would simply mean that the department could not give an efficient service.

It was pointed out at the interview that the department had no objection to the employment of amputation cases in such positions as mechanical operators in the Money Order branch, telephone operators, stenographers and other similar clerical positions.

It was further stated that the department would assist in every way possible in obtaining properly qualified amputation cases for such positions. This attitude was satisfactory to both the Civil Service Commission and the representative of the Great War Veterans' Association and it was agreed that the department would, as far as possible, when suitable vacancies occurred, to which amputation cases could be assigned, to specially draw such cases to the attention of the Civil Service Commission when asking for vacancies to be filled.

Mr. LADNER:

1. What is the total (a) production, (b) consumption; (c) importation of hen's eggs by dozen in each of the provinces of Canada annually from 1922 to 1926, inclusive?

2. What is the total importation of hen's eggs by the dozen into Canada annually from China and Japan during the years 1922 to 1926, inclusive?

Memorandum concerning the importation of Chinese eggs into Canada

The customs figures giving the importations of whole eggs into Canada from the orient do not distinguish between salt duck eggs and hen eggs. The figures given in the accompanying table are those taken directly from the customs report.

For the most part these figures represent the importations of Chinese salt duck eggs with the exception of the fiscal year 1924, when some Chinese hen eggs did come into Canada. On inspection a large proportion of these were diverted to the United States, only a small quantity being held for local sale in Calgary by a representative of the oriental exporter. These eggs incidentally found very slow sale.

Previous to the introduction of the import regulations of 1922 large shipments of Chinese eggs reached Canada, a number of which were turned back to the United States through the coöperation of the Department of Health because of their containing such a large volume unfit for human consumption.

Accompanying is a statement of the exact nature of the so-called Chinese salt duck eggs or "century eggs", which comprise the bulk of the imports given in the customs figures.

Chinese salt eggs

More or less is heard about the Chinese "century eggs". These are duck eggs which have been preserved by a coating of mud, rice hulls, lime and wood ashes. The whites become a transparent brownish green, and the yolks a yellowish green. These eggs are held in the preservative for 100 days, and it is probably from this that the name "century eggs" arose. These eggs are considered a banquet delicacy. They do not have a disagreeable odor but taste "eggy". The egg plays an important part in many Chinese customs. In some places, when a child is born, the father sends a red egg, an egg the shell of which has been dyed red, to each of his many friends. Upon receipt of such eggs, the friends return a gift or some money.

STEAMSHIP HOCHELAGA

Mr. QUINN:

1. Has the Steamship Hochelaga been put in the government patrol service in Halifax?
2. If so, who are the owners?
3. What price has been agreed upon for her services?

Hon. Mr. CARDIN (for Mr. Euler):

1. Yes, for a period not exceeding six weeks.
2. Hochelaga Shipping and Towing Co. Limited, Nova Scotia.
3. $5,000 per month.

PATRONAGE IN SOUTH ESSEX

Mr. GOTT:

1. Who holds the patronage for the constituency of Essex South?
2. What is the attitude of the government relative to his recommendations before governmental undertakings become operative?
3. Is it the intention of the government to adhere strictly to a line of party patronage in Essex South?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think this question was ruled out, Mr. Speaker, some time ago. I would like to ask Your Honour's opinion whether it is a question that should be asked.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. SPEAKER: The question was ruled out because I found that the language was not in conformity with parliamentary usage, but the language of the question as now framed is, in my humble judgment, parliamentary.

Mr. GOTT: Is the question embarrassing to the Prime Minister?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

On the question being reverted to later:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The only answer to this question is that the government controls the patronage.

ITALIAN IMMIGRATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Yesterday I asked the Minister of Immigration a question concerning Italian immigrants. I should like to ask today whether the department has under consideration an arrangement for bringing in Italian immigrants, and if so, under what conditions?

Mr. FORKE: I might answer no.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BENNETT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (West Calgary): I rise to a question of privilege. I was absent from the House Friday afternoon and the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) made a statement—I cannot think he did it designedly—in which he asserted that in a previous debate last year I had supported section 41 of the then act respecting the deportation of undesirables, and had alleged that the section was of no value at all. His language is to be found on page 2123 of Hansard this year. The fact is that there is no warrant for any such statement. If he had read a few lines further in Hansard he would have seen that I not only opposed the repeal of section 41 at that time, but stated my reasons for so doing in terms similar to those employed this year, and further I pointed out that the section as then drawn, which was a new section 41, was a needless repetition, inasmuch as the point was covered by the then section 40 of the act, and I stated that the section proposed to be substituted was of no value. That is an entirely different thing from stating that section 41 of the act was of no value. I supported the retention of section 41 last year as part of the statute law of the country. I will not take time to do more than point this out, because at this stage it is not necessary I should read what I stated on that occasion, but if desired I will do so. But I desire to make it clear that I supported the retention as part of the statute law of this country in the present statute. I made that very clear then. I said:

> This is not the day to relax the arm of the law, this is not the day to lessen the authority of our officials to bring to account men who are deliberately endeavouring to destroy our institutions.

I think it necessary to correct the misstatement placed upon Hansard in respect to my attitude last year on this question.

Mr. CANNON: One moment—

Mr. SPEAKER: This question is not debatable.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend concluded his remarks by saying I had made a misstatement.

Mr. BENNETT: No doubt about that.

Mr. CANNON: I never intended to say anything unjust or unfair about my hon. friend from West Calgary. The Hansard report is exactly what was said, and I leave it to the House to judge of the matter. I repeat I had no idea of being in any way unjust to the hon. member.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): I wish to make a reply to the question asked by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) in connection with the railway mail clerks. I will quote the question and I will give the reply and have it placed on Hansard, because inquiries are being made from different sections of Canada and it might be as well to put it on Hansard, so that one answer will do for all. The inquiry of the hon. member for South Toronto was as follows:

> I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he will give an answer to a question which comes from London and which arises by reason of an accident which occurred the other day in which certain railway mail clerks were injured. They desire to know whether the fact that railway mail clerks are engaged in a hazardous occupation will have any effect upon the civil service salary revision as it affects their class.

The answer to that would be: The more or less hazardous nature of railway mail clerks' duties was taken into consideration when the original compensation schedules were fixed, and the present salary revision is not intended to alter the relativity between the compensation schedules for the different classes, but simply to provide a general increase to the service as a whole. The compensation for accidents is dealt with on the merits of each case and such sum put into general estimates each year. This year the estimates contain $5,000 to meet such cases.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT BOARD AND DEPARTMENT OF SOLDIERS' CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): I have been requested by the organization in Calgary to ask if it is the intention of the government to bring under the Civil Service Act the Soldier Settlement Board or the Department of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): The matter is under consideration, so far as the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment is concerned.

SALE AND INSPECTION OF AGRICULTURAL ECONOMIC POISONS

SENATE AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 257, to regulate the sale and inspection of agricultural economic poisons.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the nature of these amendments?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The amendments are comparatively unimportant. They have made some slight changes in the bill. For the word "poisons" they have substituted "pests' control," and the definition of packages is changed to mean any container. They have made some unimportant changes, which make the bill neither better nor worse in my opinion.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION

SENATE AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 280, respecting the Federal District Commission.

He said: This amendment simply vests in the Federal District Commission the assets of the Ottawa Improvement Commission and imposes on the Federal District Commission the duties of the Ottawa Improvement Commission.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

THREE RIVERS HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS' ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 302 to amend the Three Rivers Harbours Commissioners' Act 1923.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment) moved the third reading of Bill No. 234 to amend the Pension Act.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (West Calgary): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move the following amendment, seconded by Mr. Guthrie:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"the bill be recommended to the committee of the whole house, with instructions that they have power to add thereto the following section as section 4:

4. It is hereby declared that the Pension Act shall be construed and administered as remedial legislation, and that if there be a reasonable doubt as to the right of an applicant to pension the applicant shall be given the benefit of such doubt.

(2) If the decision of the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada be reversed by the Federal Appeal Board acting within its statutory jurisdiction, the judgment of the Federal Appeal Board shall thereupon for all the purposes of the Pension Act be deemed to be and be the decision of the commission.

(3) For the purposes of the Pension Act the disability on discharge of an applicant for a pension who actually served in the theatre of war shall in the absence of misrepresentation or concealment on enlistment be conclusively presumed to be attributable to military service."

I do not propose Mr. Speaker, to take any considerable time in speaking to this amendment. The matter has been discussed in committee and it is only necessary that I should make two or three observations to direct the attention of the House to the purpose intended. It will be observed that subsection 1 of the proposed section declares that the act shall be considered and administered as remedial legislation. It is true that section 15 of the Interpretation Act applying to all statutes passed by this parliament provides in terms that every statute:

—shall be deemed remedial, whether its immediate purport is to direct the doing of anything which parliament deems to be for the public good, or to prevent or punish the doing of anything which it deems contrary to the public good.

But it will be observed there is no provision that such statute shall be administered as remedial legislation, and in this instance I submit it is desirable, having regard to the observations made by the Minister of Defence the other evening as well as by the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, that the Pension Act should be not only construed as remedial legislation but administered as such, and if there is a reasonable doubt as to the right of an applicant for a pension that doubt should be resolved in his favour. By "reasonable doubt" is meant an uncertainty of mind, not based upon affection or prejudice, but representing a real and reasoned indecision from given facts. If there be a doubt or uncertainty under those circumstances, it may be designated as reasonable, and in the administration of the act that doubt should be resolved in favour of the applicant.

With respect to the second subsection of the proposed section, it is merely a provision to overcome the difficulty to which I directed attention the other evening. Where the pension board has been overruled by the Federal Appeal Board, that judgment, instead of remaining nugatory and inoperative, shall be deemed to be the decision of the commission itself, the word "commission" being defined by the statute to mean the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada.

With respect to the third subsection, there is of course much difficulty. It is true that post war condition has sometimes been directly referred back to the pre-war condition of a soldier who enlisted for service, and all that is hoped to be accomplished at this time —having regard to the statements made by the ministers the other evening that they are inquiring into the whole operation of the act—is to provide that where a soldier has been in the actual theatre of war his condition on discharge must be conclusively presumed to be the result of his service. In other words, it is not open for this Dominion to say that the condition of a soldier on discharge is attributable to his enlistment condition. If he was sound enough or of sufficiently good health to be attested and enlisted, it must be taken that if he served in the actual theatre of war there is conclusive presumption that such disability was caused by his military service.

In regard to this, I hold in my hand a letter that I have received from a city in Ontario since I last addressed the House. The writer, a young man, says:

> I saw a service in France, and when I state "service" I mean front line service from October 3, 1916 to August 25, 1918, which includes the Somme, Vimy Ridge, Hill 70, Passchendale ridge, Amiens, Mount Kemmel and the commencement of the drive for Boulon Woods. In the latter all my company with exception of about eight men were badly gassed, myself being one that was gassed and invalided to England where I remained in hospital until about two weeks before armistice was signed. Now Mr. Bennett I think you will agree with me that whatever my disabilities were when I enlisted they surely were not improved any after two years of continuous privations. I think if my war service is checked up I missed seven or nine days of front line duty while out in France. I doubt whether there are many first division men with as much continuous front line duty to their credit, if credit be such.

Now, that young man when dealing with the question of a pension was confronted by the fact that prior to enlistment his health had not been as sound in one particular as he might have desired, and it was by the Board of Pension Commissioners concluded that a part of his disability was attributable to his pre-war conditions. It is to overcome such a difficulty that this amendment has been suggested.

I have also a communication received from another town in Ontario, in which the young man says that he had a piece of metal in his eye, the wound entirely healed, and he thought his eye was all right, but he told the attesting officer that fact. He joined the flying corps and:

> —while flying another plane flew across the tail of my plane at about four thousand feet which made me crash. Somehow I managed to pull up near the ground, how I don't know, but I landed upside down, bruised my head, hurt my ribs and lost the sight of my right eye and damaged my knee.

The pension authorities assumed that his disability should be 16 per cent instead of 20 per cent because he had the injury to his eye in the days of his youth, which he had entirely forgotten except to mention it when he was attested.

I bring these matters to the attention of the House in no party sense. I realize the difficulty of the minister with whom I have discussed the matter, and I realize also the difficulty there is in endeavouring to deal with the multitudinous cases that have arisen under the statute. My effort has been to deal with what I conceive to be those pressing cases which should be dealt with so as to restore in some degree a sense of confidence in the good faith of the country as a whole when we made the promise during the war that those who were disabled in the service of their country would be taken care of through our Pension Act. I am not unmindful of the many difficulties that have to be encountered in the administration of the statute, and I realize there are many, many suggestions that might be embodied in the form of amendments to this measure. The minister pointed out the other night that he proposed to reconsider and consolidate the Pension Act. I apprehend that the act will be consolidated by the commission dealing with the revision of the statutes. But he will revise and consolidate it during the recess and submit it to parliament for consideration in the early days of next session. But I cannot think it desirable—nay, I do not think it is at all in the interests of the country as a whole—that at this time we should leave our places in parliament without at least making a declaration in the form of the amendments I have suggested. We ought in the first place to declare that it is our wish, wherever there be a reasonable doubt—and the word "reasonable" is always construed in the sense I have indicated—that such doubt be resolved in favour of the applicant, and that where any man has been attested as sound, after having seen service in the front line trenches in any theatre of war, to use the words of the statute, this country should be precluded and estopped from setting up that the condition of the soldier on discharge was not attributable to military service. I cannot, in any amendment I might suggest, deal with all cases that are likely to arise, but that is the general principle I lay down. The other difficulty concerns the relative position of the Board of Pension Commissioners and the Federal Appeal Board, and it is a difficulty that might readily lead, one might almost say, to public scandal. I suggest that wherever it is within the statutory jurisdiction of the Federal Appeal Board to hear an appeal, and wherever such an appeal has been heard and the judgment of the pensions board has been reversed, the judgment of the appeal board should become thereupon the judgment or decision of the Board of Pension Commissioners itself.

Respecting the general power of a private individual even to suggest amendments of this character, I realize the limitations that are imposed upon us. I therefore have endeavoured to eliminate any possible charge of having proposed new legislation involving the expenditure of public moneys. Rather, I have contented myself with making procedural declarations calculated, in my judgment—it is of course entirely for the House to say to what extent these declarations reflect the general feeling—to make somewhat easier the way of those who have claims upon the state by reason of services they have given. Above all, I submit that what I propose will make for a more contented state of mind among the soldiers, a calmer and fairer appreciation, perhaps, of the difficulties under which the ministers are carrying on their duties. And these difficulties are quite serious in every country where pensions have to be awarded. I do commend these amendments to the House, and I do so in none but the most earnest desire, by means of these short provisions, to afford some temporary relief until such time as the government may be able to deal with the matter in more comprehensive terms.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): On April 1, in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans), I intimated that the government, after having reviewed the mass of material submitted by various soldiers organizations in February of this year requesting amendments to the Pension Act and changes in the administrative regulations, had decided that the whole subject was so comprehensive that they did not feel they would be justified in altering this session the principle on which pensions had been heretofore granted. Our Pension Act, I pointed out, had been built up during the war. The present act passed in 1919, and the subsequent amendments thereto, have been the controlling instruments for the administration of pensions in Canada. It is well known to hon. gentlemen that the pensions board is composed of three members, a chairman and two others. The chairman has been associated with the administration of pensions since 1917. He is a man of high educational attainments, with a good overseas record, and, I understand, is an eminent lawyer. He is the son of a former Minister of Justice and Prime Minister of this country.

A suggestion was made in the debate on April 7 that there had been a hardening in the administration. Well, that is difficult to say. We know that our pensions bill is growing from year to year. It may be that the act should be broadened, and I am satisfied that the people of Canada have every wish to deal justly with soldiers. I believe an attempt has been made by parliament to formulate legislation broad enough to realize that wish of the Canadian people. It is the duty of the government to interpret the will of the people, and parliament is the place wherein the government may learn the point of view held by various sections of the country.

The act was brought into being in 1919 and was amended in the years 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925. Probably the most important contribution to the amendment of our pensions legislation was due to the efforts of the Ralston commission, which was appointed in 1922. That commission has perhaps contributed more information and general knowledge to the consideration of one of the most important questions, if not indeed the most important, before the Canadian people than any other governmental activity, and out of it many far-reaching amendments were made to the statute in 1924 and 1925. My colleague, the Minister of National Defence (Mr Ralston), was chairman of that commission. He is now a member of the government, and with his wide knowledge of all matters affecting the returned soldiers—a knowledge gained in the course of an extensive investigation into the subject—he will be invaluable to the government and to the people of Canada in dealing with our soldier problem. I indicated on April 7 that the government were of the opinion that this material submitted to us in February of this year should be thoroughly digested departmentally and in government circles, and that such legislation as the government deemed necessary, in the light of the representations then made, should be prepared in the form of amendments and submitted to parliament at an early date at the next session.

It has been the practice of parliament and of different governments when important amendments were mooted in this connection to have the question under advisement submitted to a representative committee of the House. And is not that the wisest course? I think it will be generally conceded that that has been the proper procedure; it has done more than anything else to keep our pensions administration out of party politics. I appeal to the House on this occasion to see to it that the same course shall be pursued in the future, and I will undertake as minister to see that all representations submitted in behalf of the soldiers shall be given serious consideration during the summer with a view to having any amendments growing out of them referred to a special committee of the House at the next session.

Let me briefly refer to the amendments proposed this afternoon. I will not discuss them at any length; as, I think, it would be better for the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon), with his wide knowledge of the statute, to deal with these amendments. I wish however to direct the attention of the House to the third amendment. If the principle therein propounded should be adopted by this House we surely have introduced something new in connection with the granting of pensions in Canada, and I am told by the officers administering the act that it would entail a very large addition to our pensions bill. I am satisfied that on the third reading of a bill this parliament will not wish to adopt a new principle of this character; if that principle is right, involving as it does millions of dollars, then it should be carefully considered and its effect made known not only to members of the committee but to members of this House. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the course originally suggested by myself, speaking for the government, should be followed at this time, and that the bill should not be referred back to the committee but should receive third reading.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Before the minister concludes would he say what principles contained in the amendment are new?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think my hon. friend will understand that it opens the door very wide and brings in a new principle.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have repeatedly heard representatives of the pension board tell committees of this House that they deal with cases of a reasonable doubt, but of course we know they do not. What other is a new principle?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am told that it opens the door very wide and will make a great difference in administration and in the cost.

Mr. McGIBBON: Surely the minister does not raise the question of cost.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not raising any objection as to the cost, but I say parliament should be advised of that cost.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must remind hon. gentlemen that we are not in committee of the whole but are considering the third reading of this bill.

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): I did not quite catch the substance of the amendment of the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett). I would like to draw the attention of the minister to a case in my own city of Calgary, that of a man who had been afflicted with a form of Bright's disease before he enlisted. He said, "I was good enough to be taken into the force and I was anxious to serve, but I had this little trouble." During the course of the war this disease was aggravated and he is now unable to do any work; he applied for a pension and was refused on the ground that his disability did not result from the war. I would like to know if this new pension act would apply to cases of that kind, because the application of this man has been refused several times already.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am trying to indicate to the House that amendments of that character, which would enlarge the field of pensions, should be considered by a committee of this House rather than rushed through hurriedly, and that is why I am asking the House not to consider favourably the amendment that has been proposed. I am not taking exception to the amendment, but rather to the time of its presentation.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Would the act cover a case such as I have referred to?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I could not say, because each of these cases must be judged on its merits.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): I am fully in accord with the principle of the amendment. I will not take the time of the House to narrate instances of which I know, but as I have said before it does seem to me that the act is too rigid and does not permit of a sympathetic interpretation, which the amendment would seem to cover.

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): Just before the amendment carries, I would like to say a few words on this question. I have asked the minister on one or two occasions for certain information with regard to the number of appeals made to the appeal board, and the number which were successful. I have not those figures under my hand at present, but doubtless the minister has put them on Hansard. I would point out that whereas the committee which sat two years ago intended that all appeals should come before the appeal board, at present only those appeals are heard which have to do with the eligibility of a man for pension, and the board has nothing to do with the cessation of pension, with the increase or decrease of the amount, or with the diagnosis. That board simply says whether a man is or is not eligible for a pension, which does not cover the real cause of complaint. I am satisfied that the minister has not taken the best course in not having this question looked into during the present session; I believe it should have been done, and I sincerely hope that if the government press this to its absolute conclusion to-day, they will make up their minds to have a committee appointed in the regular way next year in order to go into this matter regardless of what any other chamber or parliament in this country may or may not do.

Mr. W. J. WARD (Dauphin): I would not have risen at all in connection with this matter, except that I wish to state my hearty agreement with the amendment offered by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett). The minister in charge of this bill made some reference to the cost of these pensions, and pointed out that the amendment would broaden the act. I do not see it in that light at all. It is not a question of broadening the act, but a question of giving equality of opportunity. I could enumerate a great number of cases which I have on file and which involve the question of equality; I have one case in mind, that of a boy who enlisted in 1915, and who, when he left the army, was shown by his medical sheet to be blind in the right eye. I have repeatedly taken up the matter with the Board of Pension Commissioners and they insist that the boy was blind in that eye when he enlisted. If that was the case, and a partially blind boy was accepted by the examining officer, surely there must have been something seriously wrong. I knew this boy before he enlisted, and personally I am convinced that he was not blind at all. I merely mention that case because he is a chap who should be getting at least a 40 per cent pension, and has received nothing at all.

I remember the case of another boy, who was suffering from diabetes. He was accepted for service, spent three years in the army and came out a physical wreck. Since that time he has never been able to earn a livelihood, yet because his medical adviser told him he had suffered from diabetes before entering the army, he is debarred by the present law from participating in any pension. I think the government could do many worse things than accept the amendments of the hon. member for West Calgary; in fact I believe they are about five years overdue. I am sure any member of this House who has had occasion to visit the pension board and the appeal board during the last four or five years must be impressed with the difficulty experienced in getting consideration for returned men. That fact has resulted in our having demands from all over this country for the abolition of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, the pension board and the appeal board. I have had applications from returned men demanding that these organizations be abolished. Why? Because the returned men believe that these organizations are not giving the service they should, and that they are costing too much for the service given. Personally I think that the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment should be abolished; I think it has outlived its usefulness. There ought to be ways and means of dealing with disabled returned men much more expeditiously and effectively, and at a lesser cost, than is the case at the present time. I was hoping that the government would accept the very moderate amendments of the hon. member for West Calgary; it would relieve the members of this House of a great deal of difficulty. I can visualize in the next few years a continuation and an increase of the difficulties we are having in trying to get redress for returned men who are to-day suffering from grave disabilities incurred during their war service, but who cannot get justice done them under the present act.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I think this amendment is in the right direction and something that we have needed, for the last two or three years at any rate. I have had several cases brought to my attention of men who I think need a little more reasonable treatment by the pension board, and I would suggest to the minister that he should accept this very moderate amendment. I think that the men should not be asked to wait for another year till the government considers the proposal which seems to me to be so necessary and which, after all, is so very moderate in its character. The country can very well afford to pay whatever increase in expenditure would be necessary if this amendment goes through. I hope the minister will change his mind and permit the amendment to pass.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to express the same hope from another section of this corner. It does seem that there ought to be a more generous interpretation of the act, and until the act can be changed the amendment would appear to be one way of overcoming the difficulty. I trust that we shall not be asked to wait for another year before doing something for the men who need help.

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): As the mover of the amendment has stated, this is in no way a political matter, and should not be treated as such by the House. Every member, no matter on which side he sits, is of one mind on the question at issue, and that is to treat the returned man in the best possible way. I have listened to speeches which have been made in the course of this debate by members who are more conversant, it may be, with the condition of the returned man than I am, perhaps myself. My contribution to this debate will have no reference to the technical side of the subject; I wish to state in a very brief way what the real meaning of the amendment suggested by the hon. member for West Calgary is, in so far as the law is concerned.

The hon. member suggests that the bill should be referred back to committee and that then we should insert in it three amendments. The first amendment may be summed up as meaning, that whenever a reasonable doubt exists it should be resolved in favour of the applicant, that is in favour of the soldier who is before the board seeking a pension. Everyone will admit that whenever a reasonable doubt exists the soldier should be given the benefit of it, so that the only question is whether the amendment proposed by my hon. friend is necessary or not. If I vote against the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Calgary I do not wish my vote to be construed as meaning that I am against the principle of the amendment, but if I find that that amendment is useless under the existing law I think we should not insert it in the bill. What is the law as it actually exists? It is that the commissioners who are called upon to decide a case shall weigh the evidence to the best of their ability; and I need not recall to the House that the members of the board as at present constituted are competent in such matters. When a doubt exists there is absolutely nothing in the law as it is to-day which prevents that doubt from being resolved in favour of the applicant. The commissioners can take that course now.

Mr. RYCKMAN: But they do not.

Mr. CANNON: And moreover not only is there nothing in the law which prevents the applicant from being given the benefit of that doubt, but there are the provisions of section 15 of the Interpretation Act, which deals with all legislation that we have on our statute books, and which applies consequently to the Pension Act. My hon. friend from West Calgary says that clause 15 only mentions "interpretation" but that clause mentions "interpretation" when the law is to be applied.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not deal with administration.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will allow me, section 15 says that every act, and every provision and enactment thereof, shall be deemed remedial. There is no practical object in inserting in an act what is actually the law at the present time. My hon. friend in his amendment says:

It is hereby declared that the Pension Act shall be construed and administered—

Mr. BENNETT: "And administered."

Mr. CANNON: —

—as remedial legislation.

Mr. BENNETT: "And administered." That is not in section 15.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will allow me, I am making my argument. It says:

It is hereby declared that the Pension Act shall be construed and administered as remedial legislation.

Now our law in our statute says:

Every act and every provision and enactment thereof, shall be deemed remedial, whether its immediate purport is to direct the doing of any thing which parliament deems to be for the public good, or to prevent or punish the doing of any thing which it deems contrary to the public good.

Therefore, the general rule is laid down that every piece of legislation is remedial. Let us now read the last part of section 15, and here we come to what divides my hon. friend and myself:

—and shall accordingly—

These are instructions contained in our law:

—and shall accordingly receive such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best ensure the attainment of the object of the act.

How can you attain the object of an act when you do not administer it? Therefore, I say that this section 15 applies to administration or it has no sense at all, and then I conclude that the first part of my hon. friend's amendment is useless because it is in the law already.

Coming to the second part, when he says that the benefit of a reasonable doubt must be given to the soldier, he is simply stating what the commissioners can do already. The only objection that can meet this point in my argument is the objection that has been raised by my hon. friend opposite when they say: But they do not do it. My answer to that is very simple. If a judge does not interpret the law as it should be interpreted, and the way to interpret and administer the law is laid down in section 15 which I have just read, the remedy is not to amend the law in order to supply the defects in the mind of the judge, but to improve the judge and see that he interprets the law as it should be interpreted or else remove him. That is the sensible way of looking at things.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister advocate removing the board?

Mr. CANNON: I do not advocate that. I am simply answering the argument. I am saying that gentlemen on the other side wish to put in our law an amendment which has absolutely no practical meaning, which does not add in any way to the existing law, and the reason which they give is that the commissioners in certain cases have not given the decisions they should have given. My answer is this: Suppose a judge is on the bench dealing with a criminal case, and for some reason or other his decisions are not in conformity with the law; are we to amend our criminal code in order to correct the misjudgment of the judge, or are we to see to it that the judge himself improves his decisions, either by removing him or by giving him directions that will guide him in his future decisions? I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the debate which has taken place will show to the board the mind of the representatives sitting in parliament, and that the commissioners, being apprised of what the members wish, will certainly follow the instructions of parliament; and as I say, they have in the law as it exists to-day everything needed to meet the objections which have been pointed out in debate in this House.

Coming to the second amendment, it deals with the case where there is a conflict between the pension board and the appeal board. This conflict arises—I ask my hon. friend from West Calgary to follow me in this and correct me if I am not right—simply over one point, namely, when the pension board deems that the appeal board has rendered a judgment in matters which are outside their jurisdiction. That is the only point over which conflict arises between the two bodies to-day. It is a conflict as to their respective jurisdictions. Would we be removing that conflict by adopting this amendment, if it is adopted? Not at all. I call the attention of hon. members to the wording of this amendment:

> If a decision of the Board of Pension Commissioners of Canada is reversed by the federal appeal board acting within its statutory jurisdiction—

So this amendment simply says this: When the federal appeal board gives a decision, if that decision has been given by the board acting within its statutory jurisdiction, then the judgment of the federal appeal board is final. But nothing is added by this amendment; the law says that already. Whenever the federal appeal board gives a decision within its jurisdiction, the law now says that that decision is final; and whenever it gives a decision outside its jurisdiction, why should that decision be acted upon?

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it not a fact that there are cases where the federal appeal board gives decisions favourable to the applicant for a pension, and yet he gets none.

Mr. CANNON: Certainly, and I say that that is a state of affairs which ought to be remedied, but I add that the amendment introduced by my hon. friend would not remedy it.

Mr. McGIBBON: Sure it would.

Mr. CANNON: Perhaps my hon. friend will follow my argument before jumping at conclusions; that is all I ask him to do. The conflict between the two boards is a conflict which arises out of the fact that the jurisdiction of the appeal board is contested by the pension board. Now this amendment says that only decisions given by the federal appeal board which are within their jurisdiction shall be final. But the law says that already; this amendment does not improve things in any way; things remain exactly the way they are. The proper remedy would be to define that jurisdiction. The proper remedy would be, if we wish to extend the powers of the federal appeal board, to extend them, but the moment those powers are extended we should define their jurisdiction in such a way that there can be no possible ambiguity as to the extent of the board's jurisdiction. My hon. friend does not do that by his amendment. The first amendment has no meaning in law; the second amendment has no object in law; but this amendment, if I may say so, has another object, and the members of this House, if they do not examine carefully these amendments, will be placed under the impression, like some hon. members who have already spoken, that in voting against them they are voting against the soldiers and putting them in a more unfavourable position than they are in to-day. If these amendments improved the condition of the soldiers in any way I would support them, but I say it is useless to adopt these amendments because we would only be putting in the bill something that does not mean anything.

Coming to the third amendment, it seeks to change altogether the basis upon which pensions are to be granted. We may do that; we have the authority to do it, but should we not pause before doing it and ask ourselves this question. This bill is now up for its third reading. We are at a stage of our proceedings where there is very little opportunity to study the real consequences and meaning of this amendment. Is this the time to introduce in our legislation such a radical change? Why not follow the suggestion of the hon. minister, which is very fair? The hon. minister does not bar the door to any amendments. He does not refuse to the soldiers any improvement in the situation. He does not bind the government or this House to refuse any amendment in the future. On the contrary, he admits the situation offers features of such a nature that parliament should intervene and change the law. But he says, we must have time to consider these amendments. He says, "Let us see to it that the amendments which are adopted will be the result of mature consideration and not of hasty drafting of sections the significance of which is uncertain and indefinite. This is the stand we take. Is that not fair and reasonable?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the minister suggest that we stay here until the question of pensions to the soldiers has been properly arranged?

Mr. CANNON: My answer is very simple. I have no objection to staying, and those who wish at this time really to improve the legislation which exists should not adopt the means of moving amendments to the third reading; the amendments should be submitted to a committee which would have time to consider them maturely.

Mr. IRVINE: Were those amendments not submitted to the committee?

Mr. CANNON: No.

Mr. IRVINE: Not discussed?

Mr. CANNON: No, these amendments are the result of a general discussion which took place in this House, but they are drafted in such a way that two of them mean nothing, and the last one introduces in our system a new basis. Are we willing to accept that basis?

Mr. IRVINE: What is that?

Mr. CANNON: The new basis, as far as the medical evidence is concerned, if I understand it, means that if a man has given his service at the front, the fact that he has enlisted and given that service will be sufficient to prove that any disability is attributable to his war condition.

Mr. BENNETT: This is on discharge.

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has the government any alternative to meet the situation for this year?

Mr. CANNON: Yes. First, when it comes to improving the law and amending it, we wish to have a committee composed of the most competent members on both sides of the House to examine the question, go into it to the fullest extent, and then bring to the House, to those who are less conversant with the matter, reports which will enable us to have the law as perfect as the human mind can make it. This is one suggestion made by the minister. Our second suggestion is that if there are really needy cases there is a clause already in our law, the meritorious clause, which enables the board to deal with them immediately. This is not a political matter in any way. All members of the House are of one mind. The principles that have been expounded by the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and others in the House are principles in which we all join. Our only differences in views are as to the means and methods to be adopted to attain the object. These proposed amendments would not meet this object. They have been drawn up in such a way that they certainly do not mean what the hon. member for West Calgary intended them to mean.

Mr. BENNETT: I will take a chance on that.

Mr. CANNON: This is not a matter in which we should take chances.

Mr. BENNETT: I will take a chance that they mean what I intended them to mean.

Mr. CANNON: We are dealing now with the serious question of pensions. Are the members willing to take a chance on an amendment? Will they vote on an amendment, the meaning of which they are not sure of?

Mr. ADSHEAD: Then what chance have the men who are in need of and entitled to pension of obtaining that pension before parliament meets again?

Mr. CANNON: There is a meritorious clause in the act.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How many cases have been dealt with under that meritorious clause?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I understand thirteen cases have been taken up, and others are under consideration. It is only recently that it has been made effectual.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does that fact not show that it has not been effective?

Mr. WHITE (London): How long has that clause been in the act?

Mr. CANNON: That would not matter. I suppose the soldiers understand that if they apply to the board and their application is refused, it is final.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the hon. member deny that the adjustment bureau has again and again tried to take advantage of that clause and finds it impossible to do so?

Mr. CANNON: We are coming to the same point. We admit we have in our law all the remedies which we need. For instance, if there is a needy case we have the meritorious clause. But the objections are that the board does not apply the law as it should be applied.

Mr. IRVINE: Change the law.

Mr. CANNON: Again I come to the first question I put to the House. If the law is badly interpreted by any tribunal in the land, are we to amend the law to meet the interpretation, or are we to improve the tribunal? We are going to have a vote on this question, and if the vote has any meaning, after examining these amendments as I have examined them, it is simply this: even if the two first amendments were adopted the condition of the soldier would not be improved. Are we going to make this a party question and divide the House when we have no practical object in doing so? Or are we going to say: "Here is a question that has to be settled. People are not satisfied, as they should be." Let us assume that during the recess this question is taken up by people who are qualified to deal with it and competent to solve it, and at the opening of the next session a committee composed of the most competent members on all sides of the House will sit, examine the question and make a report. We will then be in a position to amend our law in order to meet the just demands made upon us, whereas if we try to introduce these amendments now we are simply confusing the issue.

Mr. BARBER: I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I waited on the board this morning and was informed that the minister acts under the meritorious clause.

Mr. COOTE: The minister deprecated dividing the House on party lines. Why is it necessary to do so? Why not let every member vote according to his judgment?

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Bennett) which was negatived on the following division:

SUPPLY

The House in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What estimates shall we take up to-night?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Indian Affairs.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at 8 o'clock.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Indians—Nova Scotia, $76,840.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a little increase here; what is the matter?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Superintendent General of Indian Affairs): There are two items of increase, one of $315 to provide for the statutory increases and the other of $3,000 for medical attendance. We find that we are having considerable difficulty in satisfying the communities near these reserves, and we have to spend more money from time to time for medical attention. As my hon. friend will notice in running down the list, there are several increases which are largely for medical attention and for other things of that kind.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Prince Edward Island, $6,035.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is this increase due to the same reason?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In one case this is for relief and seed grain and in the other for medical attention, $300 additional.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec, $274,003.02.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There is a decrease of $12,745 here; the Indians must be more healthy in Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are asking for an additional amount in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This decrease of $12,745 is more apparent than real, then?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. We have an increase of about $19,000 for medical attention and hospitals in Ontario and an increase of $26,725 on repairs to roads, bridges, and drainage. We have a considerable increase for medical attention, but as frequently happens when the provincial highways are being built through the reserves, we have to spend a considerable amount of money to supplement the provincial vote, which is not so high this year.

Mr. PETTIT: How is that vote divided between Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is $183,358 devoted to Ontario and $91,645 to Quebec.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How much is to be expended on the reservation at Deseronto?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know that I can give that to my hon. friend. We have not the totals for the individual reserves.

Mr. McGIBBON: If the minister has the information available, will he tell me how much money the government hold in trust for the Indians in Rama?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have not the exact figures, but it is in the neighbourhood of about $160,000 of band funds.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is that all the money?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not know we would be asked for that, but I will get it for my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories, $775,657.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Would the minister be good enough to separate these provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Manitoba, $192,578; Saskatchewan $280,828; Alberta $204,640; Northwest Territories $97,611.

Item agreed to.

Indians—British Columbia, $350,970.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understand from the report that went through the other day that the $100,000 recommended by that committee is in addition to that amount?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, that is true. The recommendation in the report is that the government should spend on increased services for hospitals, education, and the like, an additional $100,000, which it has been suggested, will appear next year as segregated from the regular vote of the department.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That $100,000 is out of the money that belongs to the Indian band themselves?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, but it will be voted by parliament.

Item agreed to.

Indians—general, $231,500.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How is this money spent?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The details are as follows:

Payments to Indians surrendering their lands under provisions of section 89 of the Indian Act, which will afterwards be repaid from the avails of the land	$ 50,000
Relief to destitute Indians and Eskimo in remote districts	100,000
To prevent the spread of tuberculosis	50,000
Printing and stationery	5,000
Grant to assist Indian Trust Fund Account 310 suppression of liquor	3,000
Surveys, Ontario, Quebec and Maritime provinces	6,000
To provide for expenses in connection with epidemic of smallpox and other diseases	10,000
To provide an amount to pay agents' fees in connection with registration of births, deaths and marriages	500
General legal expenses	7,000
Total	$231,500

Mr. FRASER: Are there any amounts for survey in British Columbia under this vote?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): A considerable amount of survey work is done in British Columbia in connection with the laying out and surveying of reserves.

Mr. FRASER: Does that come under this vote?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, it appears in the British Columbia vote.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is there any way in which an Indian may become enfranchised? I am asked that question by Indians very often. They would like to become fellow British subjects, and to be able to exercise the franchise.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Generally the difficulty about the enfranchisement of an Indian is that when he leaves the reserve he is regarded as a white man. He takes his share of the band funds and is enfranchised; he is no longer a resident of the reserve. There is another system whereby he can be enfranchised in an allotted portion of the reserve, but that is very seldom resorted to.

Mr. BENNETT: By order in council.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: The band as a whole cannot be enfranchised?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They can be as individuals.

Mr. McGIBBON: And still retain their property rights?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, if they so desire, and have their allotment on the reserve.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But they cannot vote.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How many acres of land are there in the Caughnawaga reserve?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am told there are approximately 25,000 acres.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Are any of the lands on that reserve leased, occupied, or operated by white men?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): To whom are the rents paid?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are paid in through the Indian agent to the band fund in all cases.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Are any of the lands on that reserve occupied by members of this House?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not aware of it, if there are.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Does a gentleman by the name of Lanctot occupy any of these lands?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The member? Not that I am aware of.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I do not know that he is a member. My information was that his name was spelt the same way Roch Lanctot.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We would be glad to get that information. There are a number of leases, but I have no knowledge of that name.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I wish to ask another question, and the minister can get this information probably at his leisure. My information is—I am not giving it as correct; I am trying to find out whether or not it is correct, and I am sure the minister will wish to find out also—that parts of the land on this reserve are occupied by or leased to white men. My information, whether correct or not, is that some of these white men who have occupied these lands have for years absolutely refused to pay one cent of rent. They are years in arrears for the rental, and absolutely refuse to pay a cent. That is something which I think ought to be looked into. And since I have mentioned a name, which happens to be the same as that of a member of this House, perhaps the minister would also look into the matter and find out whether that particular gentleman, or a man of that name, does lease any land from the department, whether he is years in arrears for rent, and whether he has absolutely refused for years to pay one cent of rent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall be very glad to look that up.

Mr. BENNETT: I was struck with the statement made in committee the other day of the very rapid decrease in the number of Indians in British Columbia, and it led me to make certain investigations with respect to the conditions in my own province. I cannot think that the medical service given to the Indians is all that it should be, and I strongly urge the desirability of having better medical service for the Indians in Alberta. They have very valuable property which they occupy, they have substantial funds, and I feel that it is not very creditable to us that they should be disappearing as rapidly as they are. It is not, to say the least, creditable to us that so many of them have passed away so quickly, and I refer particularly to the children and to the younger men and women. I think that a better nursing service could be established in some of the reserves in Alberta, and more frequent medical attention given. The Indian is not always amenable to our methods of medical care, but I should like to ask the minister if he would have the matter looked into, and see what can be done to improve conditions. On the Sarcee reserve there has been very considerable improvement. I will not go into the details to-night, but I cannot urge too strongly the desirability of more careful supervision and better attention being given to the Indians than they now receive.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I may say for the information of the committee that in my short connection with the Indian Department I have discovered that there is a great deal of tuberculosis amongst the Indians, and we have adopted inspectional work by nurses and strengthened the medical staff. I think the work being done amongst the children will have a very beneficial effect; but undoubtedly if we are going to stamp out the plague of tuberculosis, it will require a great deal more money than we are spending on that work at the present time. However, I hope to get the service strengthened, and see if it is not possible to stamp out, in very large degree, this plague amongst the Indians of Canada.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister be good enough to tell me what steps are taken to cope with this disease when it breaks out? Has the medical man authority to send them to a sanatorium?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In regard to the reserve I mentioned a moment ago, perhaps the minister can tell us whether or not there was some trouble down there over the obstruction of a right of way which resulted in the shooting of one of the Indians?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, there has been a rather serious dispute, but the matter is now in the court; I do not know what the outcome will be. It threatened to be rather serious at one time.

Item agreed to.

Indian education, including the construction of school buildings, $1,990,080.

Mr. MILLAR: Is this for establishing new schools or renewing old ones, and where are they located?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It includes both. We have constructed quite a number of new schools in the past five years, and have purchased some which were in a good state of repair from the church organizations. What we are trying to do in the matter of Indian education is to provide the plant for the residential schools, and the various churches are carrying on the educational work under a system of grants.

Mr. LANCTOT: I have been informed that in my absence the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington stated that I had leased lands from the Indians. Is that a fact?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I did not say it was a fact. I was asking whether it was a fact or not. I am glad the hon. gentleman is here; he can say whether it is a fact or not.

Mr. LANCTOT: I may say to my hon. friend that I have enough land in my parish not to want to lease land from the Indians at the present time.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I have no doubt that that is correct, but, of course, it does not answer the question whether the hon. gentleman has leased land from the Indians. He says that he does not now, but he did not say that he had not leased land from them in the past. Perhaps he might make the matter quite clear.

Mr. LANCTOT: I have never leased any land in the Caughnawaga reserve. I am sixty-one, and neither I nor my father before me have ever leased land in the Caughnawaga reserve.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I did not make the statement that the hon. gentleman had, but I said the name given to me was exactly the same as the hon. gentleman's, and I asked the minister whether it was the member of the House. I am very glad to have the hon. gentleman's statement—

Mr. LANCTOT: It may have been some other Lanctot, no relation of mine, because none of my relations has leased land from the Indians. If there is a man by the name of Lanctot leasing land in the reserve at the present time, and I do not think there is, I cannot say who he is.

Mr. SMOKE: Is any part of the cost of construction of new school buildings on the Six Nations reserve at Tuscarora borne out of the funds held in trust for the Indians, or is the cost met out of moneys voted by parliament?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They were day schools built by the funds of the band themselves on the Six Nations reserve.

Mr. SMOKE: No portion of this vote is for that purpose?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. SMOKE: Why should not the Six Nations Indians participate in the funds this government expends in building schools for the Indians? Why are they excepted from the benefit of this vote?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In a great many instances where there are day schools, they are erected by the religious organizations who are carrying on the work, sometimes out of the funds of the band, frequently assisted by the department. In the case under discussion the schools were constructed from the band funds of the Six Nations, but the usual assistance is given to the teachers such as is given to any other Indian school in Canada. But the residential schools are all constructed and paid for by the government.

Mr. SMOKE: I think there is some discrimination being shown in this matter against the Six Nations Indians. The fund which is in the hands of the government in trust for the Six Nations Indians was derived from the sale of Indian lands belonging to the Six Nations Indians. I do not think it is fair to the Six Nations Indians that the whole cost of their edcuational facilities should be borne by the band, when other Indians throughout the Dominion receive grants for education.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is really no difference between the system in vogue on the Six Nations reserve and that prevailing on many other of the reserves throughout Canada. In addition to that, the institution in Brantford called the Mohawk institute is maintained altogether by the government for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. SMOKE: But the Mohawk institute is not on the reserve.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, and many of these residential schools are not on the reserve they are serving. The children are brought from the reserve to the school.

Mr. SMOKE: As I understand it, the department is taking care of the education of all Indians throughout the country except the Six Nations band. They happen to have been fortunate enough in the early days because of the part they took in the revolutionary war, to have had a certain section of land in western Ontario set aside for their use. Certain portions of that land were afterwards surrendered to the government in consideration of a certain sum of money. That money has been held in trust by the government for the Six Nations, except to the extent that it has been encroached upon by expenses paid out of it, and I say the Indians of the Six Nations reserve are entitled to be educated at the cost of the general public of Canada just as much as the Indians in any other portion of the Dominion.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed that they have never made any demand other than for the grant that is paid them. This is one of the oldest reserves, and perhaps one of the most highly civilized, and certainly one of the best cultivated reserves in Canada, and they have been pretty well taking care of themselves not only in an educational way but in an agricultural way as well. I think it is well that they should be encouraged to do so. I hope the day will come when all the Indians will be in a position to take care of themselves. As the days go by, and the effects of education are felt among the Indians there is no reason in the world why they should not take their place along with the white man and bear the same burden.

Mr. SMOKE: If, as the minister says, no complaint has been lodged hitherto, I am lodging a complaint now on behalf of the Six Nations. It is time that there was a complaint lodged. These funds have been set aside for the benefit of the Indians, and the money belongs to the Six Nations; it does not belong to this Dominion. The people on the reserve in the township of Tuscarora are paying, as I understand from the minister, the whole cost of their local education, the Mohawk institute at Brantford being maintained by a New England society formed in the old country many years ago. The Mohawk institute is not on the reserve, and I do not know to what extent the government assists in that, nor am I concerned with that at present, but I do say that if the Indians in other parts of the Dominion are educated entirely at the expense of this country the Indians of the Six Nations should to some extent at least derive assistance from the government.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Has any application been made to the government from the Caughnawaga reserve for the building of a Protestant school in that reserve, and if so, what action, if any, has been taken?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, we are making arrangements for a Protestant school on this reserve.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The minister informed me that this reservation included about 25,000 acres. Has the Indians' title to ownership of any part of that been at any time questioned, or is it being questioned now?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not very familiar with this particular case, but I am informed by the deputy superintendent that the claim is that the title to the property rests in the province of Quebec rather than in the Dominion of Canada, for the benefit of the Indians, and we are fighting the case.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The title goes back to 1758 or 1760?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, so I am told.

Mr. FRASER: Are there any appropriations in this vote for new schools in British Columbia?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, at Lytton.

Mr. FRASER: Is that for a new building?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. The old building is a frame structure entirely unsuited to the purpose.

Mr. FRASER: Will tenders be called for?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister give us a a list of the structures being erected and where they are?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): These are residential schools. In Nova Scotia we are spending $35,000 on a new school. At St. Philips, Saskatchewan, we are spending $75,000; Onion lake, $115,000 Lytton, $174,000, and Alert Bay, British Columbia, $1,950. We are renovating the school at Sydney and at Tobique at a cost of $3.000. At Spanish River we are spending $35,000. At Little Saskatchewan, Manitoba, we are spending $2,500 on teachers' residences. At Hollow Water River, Manitoba, we are spending $3,500; Split Lake, $2,000; Baie Verte, $2,000; Pointe au Pic, Quebec, $5,400; Ebb and Flow, Manitoba, $2,440; Mohawk, to erect a dairy building $600. These are the additions.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is that the Mohawk reservation?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mohawk reservation.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. HANSON: It is not so long ago that a new school was erected at Tobique.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is to erect a new building.

Mr. SMOKE: Is the band growing?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, they require more accommodation.

Mr. DICKIE: Has provision been made for the furnishing of motor cars to nurses in the district which I represent, in the district of the Saanich and the Cowichan?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, where it is necessary for the nurses to have a car we are furnishing it, but it comes out of the general fund.

Mr. DICKIE: Am I to understand they are to have a car this year? I know the conditions out there. They must have a car to perform efficient service.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Wherever it is necessary we furnish the nurses with cars. In some cases they are asking for cars where they are hardly the best kind of conveyance for getting about.

Mr. FRASER: How do you call for the tenders for the schools?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): By public advertisement.

Mr. FRASER: You advertise in the public press?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I see an item for "repairs to roads and bridges and drainage" in Ontario and Quebec, $43,400. I would like to know if there are any amounts that are especially mentioned for improvements to roads in the Bersimis reserve on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have an understanding with the province of Quebec that as soon as they reach this reserve we will continue the road. Our information is that they do not intend this year to build the road and we did not provide an item for it. But the moment they reach the reserve we will do it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Have you considered the proposition of renewing the road?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): With regard to this particular road?

Mr. CASGRAIN: With reference to the churches connected with this reserve I remember that last year a request was made on behalf of certain authorities regarding contributions that might be offered by the government as a contribution to these reserves. For instance at a place called Les Escoumains, which forms part of the reserve of Bersimis, some Indian bands reside in large numbers, and they want to know whether they will have a contribution for the erection of a church there on account of the fact that for nearly a generation the Indians have been loked after at that place by the church. I think I made a recommendation to the department last year in that behalf.

Mr. GEARY: Are the Indian children educated at the expense of the government?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. GEARY: Are the children of the Mohawk reserve educated at the expense of the government, and if not, why not?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend was not in his seat when I answered a similar question put by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Smoke) who represents the constituency contiguous to the reserve. The Indians of this particular reserve have always provided the funds for the erection of their own schools and have carried on their educational system with an annual grant from the government of $2,500. This is being done in other instances as well. My hon. friend said he thought it was only reasonable that the Six Nations should be given the same amount of assistance as other bands. I have visited the reserve on several occasions and have found them a very progressive band; they carry on their own affairs very well. We spent a considerable sum of money to assist them in road building.

Mr. GEARY: Why should they be penalized?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are not penalized; they have never asked for anything more. I am informed that this has been the practice from the very inception of the reserve.

Mr. SMOKE: There is a different form of government on the Six Nations reserve to what obtains on most of the other reserves. The Six Nations Indians are allowed to lease land, but they have no actual freehold title to any portion of the reserve. I do not think it is proper that any portion of the funds belonging to the band should be appropriated for educational purposes when the Dominion government takes care of the whole of such cost for the other Indian bands.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is not correct in stating that the government takes care of the whole cost of education on the other reserves.

Mr. SMOKE: Well, there is a large sum of money devoted to that purpose, and I do not think the Six Nations Indians are getting their share.

Mr. PETTIT: What do the items of miscellaneous and unforeseen under Nova Scotia and general expenses under Ontario and Quebec cover?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The first item covers the weekly removal of refuse and garbage from the Sydney reserve and repairs to water system, $200; water rates, Sydney reserve, $200; travelling expenses and contingencies of Superintendent Boyd as well as the various agents' travelling expenses, postage and other contingencies, $6,000; removal and establishment of Indians on the new Sydney reserve, $20,000.

Mr. MacNUTT: What is the vote of $75,000 under Nova Scotia to be used for?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is my hon. friend asking in regard to the amount to be expended in Nova Scotia on the construction of buildings?

Mr. MacNUTT: Yes, where is the construction to take place?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I gave a list and it will appear in Hansard to-morrow. I can repeat the details if required.

Mr. PETTIT: The hon. minister's explanation in regard to my question is satisfactory so far as it refers to Nova Scotia; but I also asked him what the item of general expenses under Ontario and Quebec covered. I do not want the details.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The items my hon. friend has reference to cover the cost of management and general expenses in all the provinces.

Mr. SMOKE: How many Indians are there in Canada at the present time?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are 104,000.

Mr. SMOKE: There are between four and five thousand Indians on the reserve at Brantford,—one twenty-fifth of the whole number. Under item 282 nearly two million dollars is expended on Indian education. This sum divided by 25 would give the Indians of the Six Nations reserve $40,000 instead of $2,500 a year. Why are they receiving only the smaller sum?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot give my hon. friend any further answer.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): What is the Indian population of Nova Scotia?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is 1827.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is an increase of $6,000. Why?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The explanation of the increase is as follows:

		$6,400

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister explain why there occurs so often in these estimates the last sentence in this vote:

Appointments and payments will be made notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or regulations thereunder.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is not intended to remove any permanent appointments from the control of the Civil Service Commission.

[Mr. Smoke.]

Mr. BENNETT: But that is exactly what happens. They take a man and put him in temporarily and in that way get around the Civil Service Act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This vote is to provide for the salary of some young astronomer from abroad. The appointment will be for one year and the intention is to have the office filled alternately at Victoria and Ottawa. The selection will be made each year by the department on the recommendation of the head of the astronomical branch.

Mr. BENNETT: Why from abroad? Is this a German?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We do not know yet who will be the appointee nor from what country he will come. There has been for some years a Belgian on the staff here. This is the system adopted by these men to broaden their knowledge and it is very much the same as that practised by teachers in the educational field, who exchange positions for temporary periods. The appointments are not permanent.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister assure us that the appointee will not be a German?

Mr. CHAPLIN: For a number of years the minister has promised that the cost of the Topographical survey and the Geodetic survey would gradually become less, but according to the estimates they are growing every year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There has been a very considerable reduction in the staff since I have had charge of the department. I do not think my hon. friend is correct in saying there could be very much reduction in the Geodetic survey. The increase will be explained later on when we come to it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Not one of these items shows a decrease.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understand that this country is going to give a fellowship to some person outside of Canada, the only condition being that the student or graduate in astronomy will come to our observatory. No such thing was ever done before, and I think we would do better to give scholarships to our own students. It is a common occurrence to grant amounts for fellowships to enable persons to go to universities abroad, but I never heard of a fellowship to enable some person to come to Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The idea is not to confer some favour on the individual we are bringing from abroad, but rather to widen our own knowledge of what is taking place in other institutions outside of Canada.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then the proper course is to send our young men abroad to get the information; that is the principle adopted in fellowships given by universities. I think you will have every university in Canada up in arms if they know you are bringing an astronomer here from abroad.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We do send our men abroad sometimes; they are abroad too much, if you ask me.

Mr. BENNETT: Some of them are, about election time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not so much interested in elections as my hon. friend. I am bound to say that if it is a good idea to exchange teachers in order to broaden the knowledge which they may impart to their pupils, surely there can be no complaint when we bring in a young man from some other institution for one year.

Mr. BENNETT: Is any other country giving one of our students $2,500?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot say.

Mr. BENNETT: If not, let us cut out the item.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The arrangements are made for this year; if it is not agreeable to parliament I will see that it ceases, but I want to say frankly that I cannot see anything wrong about it.

Mr. GEARY: Is it an instructor fellowship?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The idea is simply to bring an astronomer from outside of Canada for a period of one year to work with the staffs at Ottawa and at Victoria alternately. He may be from Germany this year, from England the following year and from Australia the succeeding year, but surely hon. gentlemen opposite will not claim that Canada possesses all the knowledge of astronomy and that there is nothing to be learned from other institutions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Do other institutions give these fellowships?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT: These matters should be dealt with by our universities if $2,500 is to be offered some person to qualify in astronomy, which requires a knowledge of higher mathematics and the careful study of many subjects. Why should we give $2,500 to a foreigner, using the word in the broad sense, to come here and stay at Ottawa or Victoria for a year as astronomer, when we all know that $2,500 will not get a man worthy of being called an astronomer? What kind of man are you going to get for that amount? You will get a $2,500 man. The thing is wrong in principle; why should the money of the taxpayers go to pay an astronomer at $2,500, which will not secure a high class astronomer, while we lose an opportunity to offer a fellowship to a Canadian in one of our universities to go abroad and get a first-class working knowledge which we have not the facilities to give him. Isn't that the way to do it? More than that, what effect will it have upon the boys going to the universities in order to train themselves in astronomy? Should not this money go to some young man who desires to become a first-class astronomer, to permit him to go abroad and study at Greenwich or another of the great observatories? I submit the item should not pass.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think we are approaching this from the wrong end. Obviously if you bring a man here you are giving him $2,500 with which to educate himself, because it is impossible to get a man for that sum to give instruction in our institutions. He would benefit from it, I dare say, but on the other hand if you take one of our students and send him abroad, he would get the benefit of the knowledge of all the professors of that institution. I would like to impress upon the minister that we are starting at the wrong end, and I move that the item be struck out.

Mr. ROSS(Kingston): Rather than strike it out, if the minister is going to do something I would leave it there and let him go to McGill University and say, "We will give you a fellowship for one of your graduates in astronomy, to permit him to go abroad for a year and study and then come back to give us the benefit of his knowledge." Then go to Toronto and let Queen's be last, if you like. Remember our own Canadian universities, and give our students a chance to go abroad and gain this knowledge not only at one university, but in Germany this year, possibly England next year, and the United States the year after. I am not saying this for political reasons, but I am afraid that every astronomical student and professor in Canada will be up in arms when he realizes that you are giving away this fellowship in the reverse order to that in which any other fellowship is given.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot speak with knowledge of what is being done with these young scientific men in the observatories, but so far as the work in the mines branch, in geological investigation and other kindred studies is concerned, we do send the staff abroad for a year or two to perfect their knowledge of their various kinds of work. I cannot say whether that is done in this case or not, but I fail to see why this should be criticized so severely. In bringing an individual from an outside institution we are bound to receive some benefit from his presence here.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a $2,500 man.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That may not be the total amount the young man may receive.

Mr. BENNETT: But we have no reciprocal arrangement; if another country was doing the same thing for us, I might understand it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That may be in effect, I do not know.

Mr. McGIBBON: In that case we should pay our own man and let the other country pay their man.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There may be such an exchange.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is evidently a new departure; the item was not in the estimates last year or the year before. May I ask the minister if this is done at his own suggestion, or if it is done at the suggestion of the chief astronomer, or some other official? If a suggestion of this kind is made it is based as a rule upon the fact that there is somebody in sight for the position. Now who is the man that the minister has in view?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot tell.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Where are we to get him from?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot tell.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Where are we to get him from?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot give my hon. friend that information.

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: Has the minister no plans in regard to the matter at all?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, for this reason: this is a proposal by the director himself.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Of the Astronomical survey?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No doubt the director has some man in view, or at all events some scientific institution from which such a man is to come. The committee is entitled to that information; we are entitled to know what we are doing. Therefore I should like to have these questions answered. Who is the man proposed, whence is he coming, who made the arrangement, and is it a reciprocal arrangement? Why is it introduced as a novelty?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All I can say is that I should be very glad to let the item stand and get the information.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Very well, let it stand.

Mr. GEARY: Will the minister also consider the advisability of establishing a travelling scholarship in connection with one of the universities having a course in astronomy? The winner of the scholarship could travel abroad and study this science in the universities on the other side. Then he would come back to Canada with his knowledge and we could keep it here.

Item agreed to.

Topographical and aerial surveys for the development of hydro-electric forested and mineralized areas and for aerial fire patrol; expenses of Geographic Board of Canada; classification of lands for settlement and forest reserves; traverse of northern rivers and lakes for administration of Northwest Territories; surveys for administration of Dominion park and game reserves; miscellaneous legal surveys of Dominion lands; testing of standard measures and instrument repairs; plotting and printing of plans, etc., $375,000.

Mr. COOTE: I brought to the attention of the minister on Monday the position of the holder of surface rights on lands in Alberta on which drilling for oil has been carried on, and the minister promised to make a statement when the estimates were before the House. I wonder if he would care to do it under this vote?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The matter was brought up at six o'clock on Monday and I did not have an opportunity of replying. The administration of the crown lands in regard to both surface rights and subsurface rights is a rather complicated affair. On the crown lands we give free homesteads. The individual gets the lands free for living on them for six months in the course of three years, paying a fee of $10, and performing certain other obligations. He then gets the ownership title in fee simple to the surface rights. Up to 1887 the base mineral rights went with the crown lands. In that year the system was changed and the mineral rights were retained for the crown and sold and subsequently leased to anyone making application for them. I want to say that as regards doing injury to the surface every precaution is taken to protect the owner of the surface rights. He cannot, of course, prevent mining operations upon the land by the individual who takes the lease, but his interest is protected and, of course, he has the same right as any other individual to file on the mineral rights if he desires to do so. My hon. friend pointed out that he does not always know when applications are being made, or when a certain district is liable to produce minerals, he does not know perhaps until the rights are gone. But in our own province, with one or two exceptions, I have not heard of any very serious hardship. I would be prepared to say at once that I would go the full length of protecting the owner of the surface rights, but as we only collect now the royalties between 2½ and 5 per cent, there is not very much hope of giving anything to the owner of the surface rights in the way of royalties. In the period of seven or eight years in which I have been dealing with the leasing of lands, both surface and under-surface, particularly in the search for oil, there have been millions and millions of dollars expended, not uselessly but in development work to locate oil. The locating of oil is a pretty expensive proposition at best, and as my hon. friend knows there are only two localities in the province of Alberta that give promise of being oil fields at the present. One is very close to his own home in the Turner valley. An immense amount of money has been spent in attempts to obtain oil and gas in the province of Alberta. The securing of gas has been fairly successful, but it cannot be said that the securing of oil, considering the amount of money that has been spent upon it, has been entirely successful. So far as I am concerned I am willing to enact regulations that will give full protection to the owner of the surface rights, and if he suffers injury as my hon. friend has pointed out on account of the odour arising from the natural gas, that flows from these wells, assuredly in the event of any injury being done to his land he should secure full compensation for the same. If the regulations are not sufficiently wide to do that, I would be quite prepared to make them wide enough to cover any injury of that character.

Mr. COOTE: I am very glad that the minister is sympathetic enough to say that he will change the regulations to protect these men. May I point out to him that all that is necessary to secure these men is simply to make a change in the regulations? It is possibly true that not a great many people are as yet affected by this matter which I have brought to the minister's attention, but I do think there is no doubt that in the years to come hundreds of thousands of acres of land are going to be filed on for oil leases, and this trouble is going to grow all the time. No doubt there will be in the future many cases of hardship just in line with the one I pointed out the other day. I do not think it will hinder the development of the oil fields of Alberta if a change were made requiring 5 per cent royalty to be paid to the owner of the surface rights. On the Stony Indian reserve, quite close to the Turner valley, the holder of an oil lease must pay 10 per cent royalty to the Indian department out of all the oil that he gets, as well as pay a dollar a year per acre rental. Now that is not stopping development on the Stony reserve because I am told there are several wells being drilled there. I cannot see how 5 per cent royalty for the owner of the surface rights would hold up development of lands outside of the reserve. Some of these oil wells are great wealth producers. The Royalite well is, I am informed, producing annually to the value of one and a quarter millions; it is one of the greatest wealth producing wells in the world. It is true that the others are not quite as large producers, but they are giving handsome returns to the companies that have drilled the wells. I do not want to delay the minister's estimates at all but I should like him to give very careful consideration to this matter. I am sure that the owners of the surface rights are entitled to more protection than they are getting to-day, and I think the most satisfactory manner of protecting them would be to give them a small royalty of five per cent. That is a very small royalty. Most of the men who secured these leases are speculators who came in between the government and the oil companies, and they are the ones who are getting a royalty in almost every case. I think it would be much better to have a small royalty go to the holder of the surface rights, and less go to the speculator who comes in between the government and the oil companies that do the drilling.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Who owns the oil under the land in the province of Ontario?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am speaking only of federal crown lands.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The question I was coming to was this: If the people in Ontario who own the land and got it from the government also own the oil, why should not the same apply to the people in the northwest? Why should the government retain the oil for themselves out there? It seems to me an absurdity. The people who own the land are entitled to the oil. I am quite content to leave the metals to the crown, because they belong to the crown, but the oil should belong to the people who own the land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Hudson's Bay Company when they sold their rights to Canada reserved in the area which the company retained, the base metals, which, of course, include oil. The Canadian Pacific Railway got large tracts of land to assist in the building of their railway and they own the oil rights. Up until 1898 the homesteader who homesteaded these lands owned the base metals under his lands.

Mr. BENNETT: Until 1887.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In Ontario the Canada Land Company—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend will sit down and calm himself I will give him an answer.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If you will only come to an answer.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will come to it at once. I still think if we are to have oil development in the northwest and in the Northwest Territories some assistance will have to be given, and it has been given, to encourage development work for the purpose of discovering oil. I am free to say that very little has been done by the government in that respect, but if these oil rights were owned by the individuals owning the land I am bound to think that development would be retarded to a very great degree.

Mr. CHAPLIN: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Then we differ, but that is my opinion, and I have been dealing with this matter for five years.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister may have full information on the subject, but how do they do in the United States? Is there any lack of development there? The people who develop oil take leases from the owners of the land. We have the development of gas and oil in Ontario, and I can tell the minister that in Ontario the oil fields do not pay nearly as well as those in the northwest. The wells are much shallower in Ontario, and they are not as good producers. Out west when you get a well, you get something, but with us it is different. In Pennsylvania, right opposite from Ontario, the oil goes with the land. There is no doubt about that, and it should go with it.

Mr. COOTE: I do not want to delay the committee but I would point out that in the state of Montana right across the line from us there is far more oil development than there is in Alberta. There is a reason for that. Most of the wells in Montana are much shallower than those in Alberta. I do not think it would have retarded development if the owners of the land had been given the oil along with the surface rights. I do not think that at this time we can give the oil to the owners of the land, because in so many cases where the oil has been withheld from the owner of the surface rights, it has been leased by the government to speculators or to the oil companies. Under the regulations now in force an oil company can hold thousands of acres under lease by just drilling one well, and the amount they spend in drilling can be credited up against the rent they owe the government on account of the lease.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Only in the development stage, only until they strike oil.

Mr. COOTE: I think if the owners had been given the oil rights these oil companies would have gone in and made an agreement with a number of farmers or owners of land in a certain district until they had got all the oil leases they wanted. That is the way it is done in the United States, on a straight royalty basis, and as a rule the men in a certain neighbourhood are willing to sign up with the company on a royalty of probably ten per cent. The company then know just what they must pay to secure the oil, but under our system the government leaves it largely in the hands of the company to say what royalty they will pay, and they can change it from time to time. I would ask the minister how many acres a company may hold and how far apart the different leases may be that a company acquires and controls simply by the drilling of one well.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have not the regulations with me, but the most they are credited with is only 50 per cent of the cost of the development work. to be applied against the rental. There have been amalgamations of leases, but one individual is entitled to hold only 1,920 acres. I have forgotten the restricted area to which the leases are limited, but it is not a very large area.

Mr. COOTE: To interest the rest of the committee in this case, I might say that the Hudsons' Bay Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were granted all the mineral rights in connection with their lands, except as regards gold and silver. I hope the committee will see what an unfair position the rest of us were placed in, because we were given only the surface rights, while these two great corporations get the surface rights and everything underneath as far down as they care to go. I do not think we have used our pioneers fairly, and all I am asking is, not that you give them the mineral rights underneath the land, but that you say when any company or owner or lessee of the mineral rights is going to go in and drill, the owner of the land shall be given a royalty of five per cent; that is only one-twentieth of the oil that might be found, and if no oil is found the holders of the lease will not be required to pay anything. If, on the other hand, they secure a good well, the owner of the surface rights gets a royalty of five per cent. It is true that most of these men when they got their patent did not know that the oil rights were being withheld from them, and some of them are anxious to fight the case in the courts, because they hold that oil is not a mineral. I am not a lawyer and would hesitate to express an opinion on that point, but the Department of the Interior could easily settle the dissatisfaction that exists out there by giving these men a royalty of say five per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member from Macleod labours under a misapprehension with respect to part of the situation. When the lands in the west were homesteaded, the original patents issued by the crown conveyed to the patentee all the oil, all the gas, and all the minerals under the land except gold, silver and copper. The grants to the railways also conveyed to them all the minerals under the land except the precious metals. The land grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company carried with it oil and gas rights, and the rights to other minerals except the precious metals. The grant to the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company also carried with it all the minerals except the precious metals. It was thought by the government of the day between 1896 and 1911 that there was good reason for contesting the right of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company to the mines and minerals under the land. Litigation followed. The case went to the Privy Council and it was decided that the railway company had the right to the mines and minerals; that included oil and the natural gas. When the Hudson's Bay Company, whose patents also gave them mines and minerals, except precious metals, sold lands; when the Canadian Pacific Railway sold lands; when the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company sold lands, they reserved to themselves the mines and minerals, the coal, the oil, the natural gas, but not, however, the gold and silver, which still belong to the crown. In 1887 a regulation was passed following a statute by which thereafter the crown reserved in all patents the mines and minerals. The pioneers have patents that convey to them the oil and natural gas. Such patents the minister encounters every day. Hence it is that we find in one part of Alberta a man who owns a quarter-section owning the natural gas and the oil, because his right to the patent accrued before the change in the law. What happens now is that the whole of southern Alberta is blanketed by leases issued by the crown conveying to the lessee the right to the oil and natural gas, and in some instances the coal beneath the surface of lands which have been patented with these reservations. It seems strange, but the fact is that the railway companies are receiving substantial sums of money from royalties on oil and natural gas, and this country, within the next few years, if the oil development in Alberta is worth anything near as much as is probable, will be receiving not less than $1,000,000 for royalties. This parliament forgets that. The reservation made in favour of the crown in right of the Dominion, which will one day pass to the provinces when they obtain their natural resources, will bring in a million dollars a year if the development is anything like it is expected to be. The difficulties referred to by my hon. friend from Macleod are real ones. They arise out of the past legislation. The minister can do nothing now for the obvious reason that leases are outstanding blanketing the whole territory from almost the northern part of Alberta to the boundary line, and those leases carry with them a rental, but that rental may be absorbed to the extent of fifty per cent if the owner of the lease will go upon the land and drill for oil. The minister is not entirely responsible for that regulation. It was almost the last act done, I think, by the government of 1921.

Oil drilling operations were being carried on in Alberta, and a revolving credit was established in order that there might be some measure of development in that province, and the cost of the development to the extent of fifty per cent thereof was applied to payment of rentals to the crown. Those who did not develop lost their leases, and those who did develop paid rentals by work. Over four millions have been spent by one company in development in Alberta. That expenditure has produced nothing in the way of results, except at the Royalite well which has been profitable. That position is well known to all of us who reside in Alberta. The efforts the government made might have been made in another way by expending public money in development, but instead of spending public money they expressed a willingness that fifty per cent of the money expended by oil operations should go to pay rent, thereby ensuring that over given areas holes were to be sunk to ascertain whether a profitable oil field can be developed in that province. Up to the present there is no conclusive evidence that we have a commercial oil area in Alberta. In Montana south of Alberta they have the Sunburst field, but the structure apparently does not extend north of the forty-ninth parallel, and up to this moment we have no substantial quantities of crude oil in that locality. We have crude naphtha, which has been extracted from natural gas, but we have not been able to secure any quantity of petroleum. We have one place in that district where the well produces about fifty barrels of crude oil per day. It is not the class of crude oil they are seeking, but it is an indication that there may be an oil pool under the surface. One well is a mile deep. Another well went down five thousand feet, and they have not secured results that warrant the assumption that they will be able to find oil at less than four thousand feet. The minister is powerless to break the outstanding leases. He could not pay a royalty to the farmer who owns the surface. When he bought his land his contract did not give to him subsurface rights to oil and gas. He has a right under his contract with the railway or under his patent to demand a reasonable compensataion for the surface used and occupied in sinking an oil well, but the operator is not subject to the caprice of the owner in that regard. If the land owner and operator do not agree upon the amount to be paid it is settled by arbitration. It is natural that when natural gas is found beneath a homestead the homesteader should expect to receive some benefit from it, but when he looks at his patent he finds he is only entitled to the surface subject to the right of the crown or company or lessee to the subsurface rights, and the government or company will receive the royalties if gas or oil is found there. The oil leases up to 1930 do not provide for the payment to the crown of a royalty. The right to seek for and to discover oil and market it without payment of royalty was supposed to be an incentive to carry on such operations. But after 1930 royalty is payable, which royalty, with respect to natural gas and naphtha in the case of one of the railways, already amounts to approximately $90,000 per annum. If operations are successful the money the province will obtain in the way of royalties, will compensate the province of Alberta when they secure their rights for the loss sustained by the pioneers and owners of the surface by reason of their not being the owners of the subsurface rights. But this advantage is more apparent than real until they succeed in discovering oil. Until that time there is no benefit. But when 1930 is reached, and the resources pass to the province of Alberta, that province in a very short time will be receiving as a minimum, outside of taxes—and the taxes are considerable—at least a million in a year as royalties, which will mount to five million a year or more if the developments materialize as we hope.

I do not know how the minister can deal with the situation. I have had occasion to look into the matter many times, I quite agree with my hon. friend from Macleod, but there is no method other than for the government to compensate those who have obtained leases in good faith for the losses they have sustained by reason of being placed in the position they occupy. But there is no reason to adopt that course, because the government is holding these resources as trustees, as one day they will pass to the western provinces. There will be no change in respect of that. It will be the crown in the right of the province rather than the crown in the right of the Dominion. We all hope that that day may be not long distant, even though it may result in depriving the Minister of the Interior of any work in his department.

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. member stated that there is only one oil field in southern Alberta. Surely he does not claim that there is no oil in the Wainwright field?

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad my friend from Battle River has made that observation. From the standpoint of commercial success there is not yet a producing oil field in Alberta, but there has been a very valuable natural gas field, the most valuable except one in the world, and crude naphtha has been successfully abstracted in very profitable quantities from the original Royalite well in the Turner valley. According to reports that appear in the newspapers from time to time the yield represents a value of about a million dollars a year. Outside of that, every person who has put any money in oil has experienced not dividends but losses. As to what my hon. friend from Lincoln says, the question is entirely different in Ontario from what it is in our territory. My friend from Macleod put the issue very clearly when he said that it is contended that perhaps oil is not a mineral. I will merely put it to my friend in the way it was put by a very eminent judge not long since. All substances taken from the soil must be animal, mineral or vegetable; oil is neither a vegetable nor an animal substance; therefore it must be a mineral. In those few short sentences that eminent judge in an older civilization than this dismissed the claim that oil is not a mineral. I cannot add anything to his observation.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to make it clear that I am not objecting to the policy the department has adopted of allowing development work to apply on rentals due under a lease, but I would say that the holder of such lease so far as I can see has no right to the surface except under regulations which are made by the crown—the Department of the Interior in this case.

Mr. BENNETT: In the patent issued to the owner of the soil the reservation is made that it is subject to a grant being made by the crown to any lessee to enable him to mine minerals owned by the crown. That is the basis of the whole matter.

Mr. COOTE: Admitting that that is so, I still hold that the terms upon which he can enter on the land must be determined by the regulations—made by the Minister of the Interior. All I am asking is that the minister should insert in the regulations a condition that the compensation to be given to the owner of the surface rights shall be a royalty of five per cent on any oil or gas taken from the property. It seems to me there is nothing impossible about it. It is the most feasible way of giving the owner of the surface rights some equitable protection.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no doubt that it might be done, but it could not be done with respect to existing leases.

Mr. COOTE: The longer the matter is neglected the more difficult it will be to deal with it.

Mr. ADSHEAD: In 1914 when we first had the oil craze in Alberta a number of companies were floated, but since then nothing has been heard of them. Since the new oil boom started a number of shareholders in those old companies have tried to get information from the department as to what happened to the leases they held, how they were transferred, and so on. On behalf of a large number of such shareholders I applied to the department for information regarding certain affidavits that had been made for transfers of leases, as we had good reason to believe that those affidavits were not true, but the department would not give us any information.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not understand why my hon. friend should not get full information. In all probability the leases were cancelled, but he should have been furnished with the fullest information.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Let me give the minister an instance. The regulations require that the head office of the company shall be in His Majesty's dominions; and at one time all the directors were required to be British subjects, but this requirement has since been changed. Now, somebody made an affidavit that the head office of a certain company was in His Majesty's dominions, when as a matter of fact it was not. We tried to find out who made the affidavit, but the department refused to give us any information.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know of no reason for withholding such information. If my hon. friend still desires to get it I will see that it is furnished to him.

Mr. WARD: Mr. Chairman, Alberta is not the only place on the face of the earth where there are oil fields to-day. Probably the most active oil prospect in western Canada at the present time is in the district of Grand View in Manitoba. Last summer an American oil prospector located in that district, shipped in a drilling outfit, and is supposed to have discovered oil. The greater portion of the district was originally homestead lands. A short time ago a very small area there changed hands for $132,000. I think this shows that the suggestion of the member for Macleod should be given very serious consideration. Oil promoters from Winnipeg and other points come in and buy up leases at fifty cents an acre and sell them to an oil company at a greatly enhanced price, while the original owners of the land get no royalties whatever upon any oil that may be found under their property. They are not even given an opportunity of leasing the land that they have been farming for the last thirty years. Upon my word, I cannot understand the reasoning of the member for West Calgary. Why cannot this parliament enact a law requiring any oil promoter to pay to those owning the surface rights a royalty on any oil that may be produced? I am not a lawyer, but my common sense makes me believe that this parliament could pass a law to that effect. Morally I think it should be done. I hope the minister will give this matter his very serious consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: Two or three years ago I brought the question of the transfer of oil leases to the attention of the minister. In the city of Calgary to-day he will find oil leases being peddled on the street and advertised for sale. Is it the practice of the department to allow these speculative ventures to proceed when transfers are asked for? Perhaps the minister will explain how the transfers are made.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It was about the year 1922 that certain changes were made in the regulations by which a lessee might transfer a divided portion of his location. Formerly there could be no transference except for the whole of the lease of 1920 acres, but in order to encourage the small investor to take advantage of his opportunity, and not to shut him out altogether and create a monopoly for the rich companies, we made the reduction. As hon. gentlemen will know, many of the small companies were made up of stockholders of quite limited means.

Mr. BENNETT: Many of them with five or ten dollars.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know about that. At any rate we tried to enable the small investor to coöperate with others and so reap some advantage. Otherwise there would be no development except by the large companies who would entirely exclude the small men. There is of course the other evil of investors taking leases and waiting for other people to do the developing. Altogether it is a difficult matter to devise regulations that will cure all evils. The plea put up to me was that the regulations shut out the small men altogether. They were squeezed out and eventually lost their money, and it was to help them that we cut down the lease and allowed its transference in the event of all rentals having been paid up beforehand. That explains why the leases were allowed to be subdivided. It is useless to begin sinking a well with less than $30,000 or $40,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the maximum acreage which anyone is allowed to hold.

[Mr. Ward.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not sure. A number of the companies sometimes get together and drill one well, then apply 50 per cent of the amount expended on the well in the payment of rentals for the whole of the property.

Mr. GARDINER: The government should not allow speculators to get control of a lease merely to wait until someone desires to obtain it and then proceed to develop the property.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are development clauses in the regulations.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know of anything that discourages development more than the speculator who waits for somebody to come and purchase the lease. The department should be more active in looking after this phase of the business. In Calgary to-day you will find dozens of oil leases advertised in store windows and in the newspapers. These leases can be secured for a consideration. Speculation has been the curse of the west and the department is not doing anything to relieve the situation. Not very far from where I live a certain company a few years ago drilled two or three wells, and in order that they might get hold of a large block of leases they usually got returned men in Calgary or Edmonton, to whom they gave the necessary funds, to secure the leases which were afterwards transferred back to the company. They gave $10 for the time the returned men spent securing the leases. In the particular area I have in mind the company had carried on a certain amount of development work, but for some mysterious reason they ceased drilling and instead capped their wells.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What company?

Mr. GARDINER: It was in the Monitor field. The committee would like to know what is in these wells. After a certain amount of development has taken place, and before the companies are allowed to cap the wells, the department should ascertain what is in them. Knowledge is what is needed in this matter and I suggest that some steps be taken to find out what the wells contain. I do not want to deprive any company of the fruits of its labour, but at the same time any knowledge derived as the result of the granting of a lease from the crown should be regarded as the property of the department.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have full authority in the case of crown lands to make an examination, and we have a staff in Calgary kept doing that work; but we are prohibited from entering private lands.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and expenses connected with the administration of the territories, including the erection of buildings, investigation work, schools, relief to destitutes, maintenance of prisoners and insane patients, administration of the North West Game Act and the Wood Buffalo park, etc..	$190,000
Exporations—salaries and contingencies, equipment and supplies, etc.. ..	75,000
	$265,000

Mr. KENNEDY: What success are you having with the buffalo park?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That comes under Dominion lands and parks.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Lands and Parks, salaries, contingencie, etc., $4,080,022.

Mr. KENNEDY: Last year and previous years Mr. Kitto was sent to the Peace river country to carry out a certain investigation. Does that work come under this item?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He is in the Natural Resources Intelligence service. His work consists in the making of investigations of natural resources.

Mr. KENNEDY: I understand that he has made an investigation of a large section of the Peace river country but there is still a considerable area right across from Fort St. John in British Columbia to Fort Vermilion, Alberta, that has not yet been examined by anyone in the service of the government. I think it important that that district be investigated, and I was wondering if the minister would undertake to see that someone makes an inspection of that territory in order that we may know what is there.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are always trying to keep ahead of settlement, as well as we can. The staff is limited, but we intend to investigate that whole territory wherever there is a prospect of settlement, and that will probably be continued from year to year.

Mr. SPENCER: Under this item could the minister give me the total amount of revenue and expenditure in connection with the buffalo park at Wainwright?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will have to get the Superintendent of Parks to secure that information.

Mr. COOTE: While the minister is looking that up I wonder if he could tell me whether the aerial forest patrol at High River is to be continued?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is an increase in the vote for the aerial patrol for forestry and survey services, but I do not think that is in this particular vote.

Mr. COOTE: I see there is a vote here of $1,293,500, which includes the protection of forest reserves, and I was wondering if any provision is made under that for the High River patrol this year?

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is not the air patrol under the Department of National Defence?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, the planes are under that department, but we have an arrangement whereby they do flying for the Department of the Interior for forest patrol work and aerial survey work.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is not that included in the vote of the Department of National Defence?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They have a vote in the Defence department in connection with this work, but we are also increasing our vote to some extent for services for which we must provide. I might say that the station at High River will be continued.

Mr. ADSHEAD: There is a very large item under the Department of National Defence for work done for other government departments.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They go on trips for the payment of treaty money for Indians; they fly for forest patrol work and for fire protection work; that is, the Department of National Defence supply the aviator and aeroplane and the cost of the operation of the plane is charged to the vote to which my hon. friend has referred. But in addition to that we have men employed in our own department, particularly in the surveys branch. This is all arranged by a committee representing all the departments interested; some of this aerial work is done in Quebec by private corporations, for which we pay outright. It is a little difficult to explain the exact amount entailed in these works.

Mr. KENNEDY: Are aeroplanes being used in northern Alberta in connection with forest patrol work?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have an item in the supplementaries for the aerial survey of the new buffalo park, in order that we may be sure of the boundaries, to keep settlers from getting into that area.

Mr. KENNEDY: How does the aerial survey compare in cost and efficiency with the old methods?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is very much cheaper for topographical survey work.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are there aeroplanes belonging to this department?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. Of course on occasions we hire commercial planes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understood we were to have two separate services.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We abandoned that some years ago, and we now have a committee headed by Colonel Biggar to allocate the work. We must know before the season starts the number of flying days we can depend upon from the Department of National Defence.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understood there were to be two air services, civil and service.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is all the one service, although the items are divided, some for civil work and some for defence.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understood we were promised that there would be the two services.

Mr. KENNEDY: There is a question in my mind regarding the land selected by the Hudson's Bay Company in the Peace river country. Under the deed of surrender the fertile belt in which the Hudson's Bay Company were to select land is described as being bounded on the south by the United States boundary, on the west by the Rocky mountains, on the north by the northern branch of the Saskatchewan river and on the east by lake Winnipeg, the lake of the Woods and connecting waters. There seems to be a great deal of dissatisfaction in the Peace river country because the Hudson's Bay Company have been allowed to select land wherever they chose. In the fertile belt, as defined in the deed of surrender they took certain sections throughout the surveyed area. In Peace river they were allowed to select what they wanted and they took a quarter section here and a quarter section there wherever the land appealed to them. It is also felt that it was not right to allow them to go north of the Saskatchewan river, because of the boundaries set out in the deed of surrender. I would like to hear what the minister has to say in this regard.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In the settlement of the claim of the Hudson's Bay Company, we did not care to have them go into our parks or our Indian reserves, which they had a perfect right to do under the deed of surrender, and in making arrangements with them we had to have some latitude in order to effect a settlement of that character. I had trouble, for example, in the Rocky Mountain park at Banff in the adjustment of one claim, where the Hudson's Bay Company had sold the property, in order to get settlers out of the park. Now they have surrendered their rights within the park boundaries and on Indian reserves, and in addition have surrendered their right to a very considerable acreage in the three prairie provinces. The Hudson's Bay Company took crown lands in lieu of the lands given up in these reserves I have mentioned. Some resentment is felt if they happen to take the land in a block, it must be remembered that they have the right to select from what was known as the fertile belt in the three prairie provinces. I am bound to say that I think we made a very favourable settlement with them.

Mr. KENNEDY: The acreage surrendered is scattered over the three prairie provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY: Was the acreage they were given the privilege of selecting in the fertile belt equal acre for acre to what they surrendered in the park?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, practically so.

Mr. KENNEDY: What portion of land did they surrender in Alberta?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have not the figures with me but I shall be glad to bring them down.

Mr. KENNEDY: Have they selected any lands in Saskatchewan and Manitoba?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I think in all three of the prairie provinces, but they have not completed the selection yet.

Mr. KENNEDY: I wish to register a formal protest on behalf of the people in the district affected. We all know what it means to settlers to have lands selected in this way by these companies. It means a tremendous burden upon the people who are developing a particular part of that country in connection with roads and so on. I cannot understand why the surrender should have been made in the way it was, and why the northern limits of the area should have been extended north for 150 miles or more to please the Hudson's Bay Company. The problem of developing a new country is a serious one, and the difficulties in the way will be aggravated, so far as the pioneers who are carrying on development work are concerned, by the selection of lands in this manner.

Item agreed to.

Dominion lands and parks, $71,000.

Mr. BRADY: Is there any intention of doing anything towards the Mackenzie park in the Bella Coola district, and making it into a national park?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed that we have not yet secured possession of that land. The matter is now the subject of negotiation with the provincial government, and we cannot do anything until the land is secured.

Mr. BRADY: My reason for asking the question is this: a great number of inquiries have been made regarding Mackenzie park, and this year a direct descendant of Sir Alexander Mackenzie came all the way from Johannesburg, South Africa, in order that he might see the place where the great explorer came across the continent. I thought the Minister of the Interior, realizing the importance of that splendid area for a national park, might consider that the time was fairly ripe to establish another of these splendid national parks for the benefit of the people of Canada.

Item agreed to.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I have passed the item that was allowed to stand? It will clean up my estimates. I will get the information desired with respect to the astronomer provided for in the $2,500 vote.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think that the principle is so absolutely wrong that we should oppose it. Boiled down it means that the Dominion of Canada is going to pay the cost of a post-graduate course for some student in France, Germany or some other country.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Rather than have the other items stand, I would prefer to cut that particular item out altogether, because it is a very small one among the total number, and wait a year. Unless some arrangement is made, I can assure the committee this money shall not be spent; it will take a full year to ascertain whether or not there is an exchange available. I do not want my estimates to stand over for the sake of this one small item. At any rate I will give the assurance that the money, in the absence of some arrangement, will not be spent this year.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I would take it that there was need of education along astronomical lines, and if the need is so urgent, why not take the course we suggest and appoint one of our own young Canadians to this position, rather than send overseas for a man? I am surprised that the Minister of Labour is not taking issue with the minister for trying to induce someone from outside to come here and take a position when the same work can be done by our own young people. Astronomy is a subject that has not been very much encouraged in Canada, and this is one way in which we could encourage it. There is no question but what you can get the man in Canada. I would point out that Canada has produced one of the ablest astronomical professors now in the United States, Professor Mitchell, of Columbia University. He is a Canadian graduate, and I think he is recognized as one of the big men in astronomy in the United States to-day. Why not train more of our own men along the same lines?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is a matter that would have to be given consideration, and rather than delay the committee I am willing to strike out the item.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then the minister must admit that there was no great urgency for the work.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is not that at all. I have tried to explain to the committee for half an hour that it was good business to do this, but there are certain hon. gentlemen who do not think so. It will not wreck the service to deny us the right to employ a foreign astronomer, and I am willing to strike out the item of $2,500.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I move, Mr Chairman, to strike out the item of $2,500.

Motion agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

External Affairs—salaries, including secretary to Prime Minister, $8,000, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $103,655; contingencies, $30,500.

Mr. McGIBBON: This is another one of those items that we were complaining of a little while ago, where the Civil Service Act is being disregarded. I think we ought to have some explanation.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The item to which I think my hon. friend refers is a new item, "Secretary to Prime Minister, $8,000, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act." I gather that there is a misunderstanding as to the precise nature of the position as described in this estimate, and I am going to ask the committee to allow me to substitute the words "executive assistant" for the word "secretary." The impression has gone abroad that what is desired in the office of the Prime Minister is an additional private secretary. It is nothing of the kind. What I am asking the committee to vote is a sum for an executive assistant to the Prime Minister.

May I explain to the committee that the Prime Minister is the only minister of the crown who has no deputy minister. When he takes office as matters stand he goes into an empty room so far as staff is concerned, and from that time on, in the office of prime minister, he has no assistance other than that of private secretaries. That arrangement may have worked in the past, by a process of combination with other departments of the government but the work of the office of prime minister has grown to such an extent, that in the public interest it is imperative that the office be organized on a business basis just as other departments of the government are organized. What is required is a business manager to coördinate and supervise the work.

At the present time may I say that in addition to holding the office of Prime Minister I am filling the office of President of the Privy Council, and also the office of Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the latter part of Sir Robert Borden's days those positions were held by other gentlemen with separate portfolios in the cabinet. In addition to the executive duties of those offices, the Prime Minister has, as the House well knows, a very special responsibility to parliament. He is supposed to keep track of the business in the House and to be acquainted with the different questions that come up for discussion. He is the leader of his party and he has also the same responsibility as every other member of the House has as the representative of a constituency. I think members will readily understand that if the public business is to be carried on satisfactorily, any individual who has as many concerns to have regard for in the course of one day as the Prime Minister has, needs someone who can relieve him to some extent of the work incidental to his office, and who will be in a position to deal, at least in part, with individuals in the Prime Minister's name.

[Mr. McGibbon.]

In addition to the executive work of the office and the work of the session in parliament, with which hon. members are familiar, there are other obligations falling upon the Prime Minister which occupy a great deal of time. I might mention, first of all, the relations with the Governor General. The Prime Minister represents the government and parliament in relations with His Excellency. These relations are of a personal character, and properly discharged, they take up a certain amount of time. There are the relations with the representatives of foreign countries, the personal relations with consuls general representing their countries in a quasi-diplomatic way, and the impersonal relations carried on by correspondence through the External Affairs department and which involve keeping abreast of events in different parts of the world. Very shortly a minister will be appointed to Ottawa as the representative of the United States. He will expect to have personal interviews with the Prime Minister, particularly if the Prime Minister is holding the position of Secretary of State for External Affairs. I understand that in all probability Great Britain will appoint a representative to Canada in a similar capacity, someone who will be in the position of a high commissioner to the Dominion, who will expect more in the way of opportunity of personal contact with the Prime Minister than with other ministers of the crown.

As members of the House know, the Prime Minister is expected to be prepared to take part in the name of the country in numerous public events and upon ceremonial occasions of which I need not make mention, all of this regardless of the fact that he has from day to day without cessation a very heavy official and personal correspondence, has endless personal interviews and is supposed to give time and thought to the shaping of public policies. Since the office has reached these proportions it would seem that if the work is to be satisfactorily done the Prime Minister must be given some officer of high standing, someone well qualified to fill a position which will correspond to that of deputy minister in the other departments of the government. I do not think that official should be appointed by the Civil Service Commission. I think he should be appointed by the Prime Minister himself.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have only this to say, Mr. Chairman, in regard to this vote, and particularly in regard to the $8,000 item to which the Prime Minister has referred, that with the explanation which the House has received to-night I have no serious objection to take to the item. But as it was placed before the House when the estimates were first brought down the general impression was that this position was in the nature of a glorified secretaryship; it was to be a private secretary with a salary of $8,000. That was the impression in the House, and certainly the impression that prevailed throughout the country, because I have seen a good many newspaper comments upon the proposal. I remember that in former governments the office of Prime Minister was held by one person, that of President of the Privy Council by another, and that office of Minister of External Affairs by another. There was a deputy minister in the External Affairs department. There was the equivalent of a deputy minister in the department of the president of the Privy Council, and I think the office of the Prime Minister was equipped with four private secretaries. That, I believe, is the equipment of the establishment to-day in regard to private secretaries, but the appointment now sought is not that of a private secretary, but rather a position corresponding more to that of a deputy minister. I think under all the circumstances, and considering the present Prime Minister is practically looking after three departments, we might let this item pass. However, this comment might be made in reference to certain estimates, in almost all departments; there is an evasion of the Civil Service Act. In the supplementary estimates I have ticked off five or six more instances of it. Are we to pay no regard to the Civil Service Act in this parliament? The other night we considered the estimates of the Department of Customs. We voted hundreds of thousands of dollars for the appointment of supervisors, appraisers and the like, and took those appointments out of the operation of the Civil Service Act. In all the special appointments we make we manage in some way to evade the provisions of that act. In this particular instance I do not think serious exception can be taken, because I think it is the right of the Prime Minister to appoint his own confidential secretary. But in regard to the new appointments in the civil service which in effect are made in the estimates we are now considering, time after time we find the phrase, "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act", which simply means that those who have qualified for civil service appointments and are now upon the waiting list and have been patiently waiting for a long time are simply turned aside in case after case by this government through the insertion in the estimates of the words "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act." Some special political favourite of the government is put in the service, notwithstanding the provisions of the Civil Service Act. It is neither fair nor right. However, in this particular instance I think there is propriety in the suggestion that the Prime Minister should choose his own assistant.

Mr. CAHAN: Is the confidential assistant who is to be appointed under this appropriation supposed to retire when the office of prime minister changes? I quite appreciate the fact that the Prime Minister has very pressing duties. He performs also the duties of Secretary of State for External Affairs, and President of the Privy Council, which are too extensive and varied for any one man to carry out, without capable assistance. But if the person to be appointed is to occupy a confidential position, if he is to be a confidential executive of the minister with the status of a deputy minister, it seems to me that this very fact carries with it the other presumption that he will not be presumed to have any right to continue in office when the Prime Minister vacates, if he ever does, his present position.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would say certainly that should it be the wish of the successor of one prime minister to appoint someone other than the official the previous prime minister has had as confidential assistant and executive, he should have that right. But I would draw the attention of the House to this circumstances, which I think is deserving of note; that in England the Prime Minister has found it very much to his advantage to have as his chief assistant one who has served in the same capacity to his predecessors—not only one such chief assistant but two. It is becoming increasingly the practice in England, even in the Prime Minister's office, to retain the services of those who become accustomed to the special duties pertaining to particular offices. I shall mention a name which will be well known to members of this House, that of Sir Maurice Hankey. Sir Maurice acted, one might say, in a confidential way, as executive to the cabinet of Great Britain during the period of the war. He was with Mr. Bonar Law, he was with Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, he is with Mr. Baldwin at present, and I have no doubt if another Prime Minister comes in his services will be retained.

Mr. BENNETT: He is secretary of the cabinet.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is more or less the position that is required here. Sir Maurice receives $15,000 a year, and Mr. Thomas

Jones, his assistant, receives $11,000 a year. Mr. Tom Jones has been assistant secretary to three or four prime ministers in succession. These two chief assistants are in addition to other private secretaries, six in all, which the prime minister of Great Britain has, as well as the permanent staff of his office. I wish to say however with regard to the present position that it should be understood that whoever is appointed will retire with the prime minister unless his successor wishes to retain him.

Mr. CAHAN: I have noticed that prime ministers who have had confidential private secretaries generally expect them to be appointed to some other office in the civil service, if one is available, after leaving the office of the Prime Minister, and a good deal is to be said in favour of that. But the relations are so close between the retiring Prime Minister and his confidential secretary that often it might not seem expedient to continue the same person in office, and I thought we ought to have a declaration from the Prime Minister in regard to that.

Mr. BENNETT: I had thought possibly the situation the Prime Minister referred to might have been met in another way and thus overcome the difficulty of imposing, not to use the word offensively, a permanent official upon the country at an expense of $8,000 per annum. I thought perhaps he might have followed the course that was tried, not without some favourable result, in days gone by, of the Prime Minister appointing some member of the House to act as his executive assistant, without his being subject to an election, but retiring with the administration. He would thus be able not only to discharge his duties to the Prime Minister as his executive assistant, but he might be able to make statements for the Prime Minister, who, while he cannot always be in his place in the House and follow every piece of legislation, should be informed from a confidential source as to what is going on in the House from day to day.

Mr. CAHAN: By his secretary I suppose.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. For instance, the parliamentary secretary in England very frequently has served the Prime Minister without compensation. Sir Philip Sassoon acted for Mr. Lloyd George, without any salary of course. In a country such as this it does seem to me that it may offer an opportunity to well qualified, ambitious young men to get an excellent knowledge of parliamentary practice and procedure while serving a very useful purpose, not being in the cabinet but acting as confidential secretary and adviser or representative of the Prime Minister. I quite agree that the Prime Minister cannot be here —and he should be in this House—and carry on the miscellaneous duties that attach to his office while parliament is in session. But it did occur to me that my suggestion might meet the situation better than to appoint a permanent official at $8,000 who probably would pay into the superannuation fund and would thereby acquire certain rights, and then would expect possibly to be retained by the succeeding administration or to find some other position in the public service, which could not well be done having regard to the salary paid. I only offer the suggestion to the Prime Minister because I do agree that in a country such as this, which is entirely different from an old and more settled land, the Prime Minister must always be available for almost every citizen who desires to present grievances or suggestions to him for consideration, and he must have some buffer between him and the public. But that buffer might well be able to come into the House and discharge very important duties without being a member of the cabinet, and yet carry practically cabinet responsibilities with respect to the Prime Minister.

I think my right hon. friend overlooked the fact that we had several under-secretaries during the war. Between 1911 and the breaking out of the war Sir Robert Borden discharged the duties of President of the Council, Minister of External Affairs and Prime Minister. The Department of External Affairs was at that time in charge of Sir Joseph Pope. Sir Robert had no deputy as Prime Minister, nor had he as President of the Council, except to the extent that the clerk of the privy council then discharged, and still discharges, more or less confidential duties with respect to the Prime Minister. He is a permanent official and retains his place notwithstanding changes of administration. The same may be said with regard to the deputy head of external affairs. Since these two are continuing officials, it might be regarded as somewhat unfair to impose upon the country—using the word not in any offensive sense—a third official whose salary would become a permanent charge upon our revenue unless at the very threshold of his employment it is clearly stated that he is being paid the salary of a deputy minister with the understanding that he retires with the administration. No doubt if a place were found for him in parliament and he could discharge the duties that the members of the cabinet are too busy to discharge in many instances it would be all the better. Because it will be remembered that Sir George Murray, who came out here at the request of Sir Robert Borden, made a special report upon the matter, and he suggested that these under-secretaries might serve very usefully in the organization of the Canadian administration. It was tried during the war, as I have said, but I am not sure that it was the success Sir George Murray hoped it would be. I still think with respect to the office of the Prime Minister the experiment might be made. I quite concur that the office of the Prime Minister is very difficult and that every possible assistance that its incumbent desires should be made available in order that the duties and obligations and responsibilities of his high position may be discharged in a manner creditable equally to himself and the country he serves.

Item as amended agreed to.

High Commissioner's office—salaries, including High Commissioner, additional to salary authorized by chapter 15, R.S.C., $2,000—$42,840.

Mr. BENNETT: The High Commissioner's office in Great Britain is being regarded by a great many people as the office of an ambassador. It is thought by others that it should be regarded as a trade office and serve a useful purpose. Recently a friend of mine who is interested in these matters has made a rather extensive survey of the London offices of the various dominions. I am going to read it because I think our people should have a clear understanding of what the Canadian High Commissioner's office in London now means compared with the offices of the other dominions, and what it should mean to us. Australia is first considered:

Australia

If the object of the dominions over seas having offices in London is to attract settlers and capital to their several countries, in addition to maintaining relations with the government departments of the old country, then it would seem to a visitor to London that Australia has learnt the art of publicity to perfection.

Australia House, situated at the east end of the Strand, is a magnificent building, admirably suited for its purpose. In its spacious area it houses two Australian banks and the Orient Line's office, besides providing an office for each Australian state. The visitor enters a splendid hall, paved with Australian marble, in which he will find set out to the best advantage, the various products of the country, some of them well known, and others not so familiar. The walls are decorated with beautiful dioramic views of Australian life, reminding one of those exhibited in various pavilions at Wembley.

Among the products displayed are wool, cotton, butter, cheese, jams, honey, canned and dried fruit, and in the season fresh fruit. When Australian apples arrive a big poster outside tells the passer by that inside the building is a display of his fruit—leather goods, wines, tortoise shell, mother of pearl, grain and cereal manufactured goods, various nuts and beans, tobacco, soap, chocolate, eucalyptus. So artistic is the display that naturally there is a daily stream of visitors, though the number is not as large as the officials would like. Another great attraction is the cinema show descriptive of Australian life, industries and scenery, which is kept going from ten-thirty to five every day.

All these attractions weigh with a man who wishes to migrate and does not know to which country to go. On the same floor is a spacious emigration office where information is readily obtainable. The windows looking on the street, both in the Strand and in Aldwych, of the banks as well as of the High Commissioner's office, are filled with coloured pictures of agricultural life in Australia or of other scenes, such as the harbour at Sydney.

There is nothing of its kind in London to be compared with Australia House, which is in itself the finest advertisement for the commonwealth. The High Commissioner for Australia seems to be always well chosen, a man of affairs, who never neglects an opportunity of putting Australia well to the front.

Some of the Australian states have their own display of exhibits in separate buildings. Thus, Victoria, which occupies a wing on the western side of Australia House—which by the way was built before Australia House—has a capital show of exhibits in its window in the Strand, and in those round the corner on the western face of the building. In one of these buildings is a model, beautifully erected, of an irrigated farm, with a printed description and a label inviting the passer-by to go inside and make inquiries. In other windows are dried fruit (raisins, currants, sultanas and apricots), canned fruits, honey, wines and other goods, with cards which indicate where these goods can be bought and their prices. One of these windows is made the more attractive by having a stuffed koala (Australian tree bear) and a cub in a tree. Inside the office the ground floor is devoted to more detailed products. Here are samples of cereal, flax, oils of various kinds, fruits, wool, minerals, including gold bearing quartz, timber, etc. On the walls are attractive pictures.

Western Australia has its office at the corner of the Strand and Savoy Hill, with windows in both streets. One of the windows is peculiarly attractive as it represents a little known industry, viz; the pearl fishing. Beautiful specimens of mother of pearl are shown, and in the centre is a life size figure of a diver to show how the product is obtained. In another window are samples of wool and of rugs, etc., made from the product. In the second window in Savoy Hill are samples of Western Australian timber. Inside the office are to be seen wool, wheat, various kinds of hard wood, gold and other minerals, butter and fresh fruits in their season.

The offices of the Queensland are situated further west on the right hand or north side of the Strand. The window was devoted at the time of writing to the various timbers produced by the state. It should be said that these windows of the various overseas government offices afford the finest publicity. Their contents are constantly changed, and always there little knots of people stopping to look at the exhibits.

Inside the Queensland office the whole of the ground floor, with the exception of an enquiry counter, is devoted to an excellent display of products. Very interesting are the tropical products, such as cotton, sugar and such fruits as oranges, grape fruit, mangoes, custard apples, bananas, pineapples, parsimmons, breadfruit, figs, passion fruit and papaws. Then too, one finds samples of wool, wines, turtles (edible and from the shell only), beautiful furs of wallaroo, kangaroo, opossum and rabbit, ostrich feathers, large ornamental shells, wood and woodware, sisal hemp, butter, canned goods, cigars, etc. Mention should be made too of a magnificent piece of Queensland cedar—many settlers houses are built and roofed with this wood—and a fine slab of Kauri pine. There are also specimens of minerals, canned goods and jams, fish, coral, edible turtle and two tortoise shell turtles.

New Zealand

The High Commissioner for New Zealand has his offices close to that of Queensland in the Strand. There are two large windows, the contents of which are frequently changed and always attract the passer-by. There is not a minute in the day that does not bring its half-dozen people who stop to look at the exhibits. New Zealand claims to be the empire's dairy farm, and so just now one of the windows is given up to a display of butter, cheese, Ceslin "Glaxo" and other dried milk made in the Dominion.

In the other window are some charming coloured pictures set out to attract the tourist and the sportsmen. New Zealand's position as a butter exporter rivals that of Denmark, while in cheese she is rapidly coming to the front. Inside the office on the left is an enquiry office, and on the right a lounge for visitors. On the first floor again there is a visitor's room and library. There is no produce in the hall, the windows being considered sufficient for this kind of advertisement. Sometimes the windows are devoted to mutton and lamb, of which more is sent to this country by New Zealand than by any other country. The wood, kauri gum, minerals, hemp and other products come in turn.

The New Zealand publicity officials send exhibits all over the country to bazaars or for Empire Shopping weeks. Then they have no fewer than twenty films of produce shown in various places every day. The Dominion also encourages children at school to write for a book on New Zealand, and in this way it sends out to the children's private addresses as many as 240 books a day. It also distributes as many as 4,000 photographs to schools. Just now, when the Duke and Duchess of York are visiting the Dominion New Zealand is getting a large amount of publicity in the press free.

South Africa

The Union of South Africa occupies the position on the east side of Trafalgar Square for many years occupied by Morley's Hotel. The display of fruit in the lower windows is always extremely well done. Apricots, nectarines, peaches, grapes, plums, pears, all follow in their season. Just now two of the lower windows are devoted to ostrich feathers. On the door are the words "Exhibition open to the Public," and inside in a comparatively small space is an interesting exhibition of New Zealand products.

[Mr. Bennett.]

As one enters one notices a stuffed spring bok, which dainty, graceful animal is the emblem of the Union. The exhibits include ostrich feathers of which South Africa supplies 85 per cent of the world's requirements, merino sheep and samples of their wool, an Angora goat, and articles manufactures of mohair (motor rugs, etc.), a stuffed seal, and a dressed skin, cases of grain of all kinds, wines, china clay, asbestos, mica, talc and other minerals, tobacco, fertilizers, manufactured cereals, jute, representation of gold ingots showing the output of the miners in one day, cotton, raw and manufactured, whale oil, a huge piece of leather, being the whole hide of an African bullock.

The attendant explains that their larger exhibits are in the South African gallery at the Imperial Institute. Would-be settlers are attended to just inside the main entrance to the building.

Southern Rhodesia

The High Commissioner for Southern Rhodesia has his office in Aldwych. The building is small but the display of products is effective. In the windows are exhibits of asbestos, chrome mica, tobacco, beans and sunflower seeds, maize and other cereals, and there are large printed notices reminding one that in southern Rhodesia "taxation is light and good land is cheap". Inside the office there is a small but well arranged show room, where one finds specimens of minerals, including coal, timber, cereals, gold, etc. All the furniture of the office is made of native wood.

The migration office is on the ground floor, and on the counter will be found literature in abundance dealing with the country and its conditions, and the new advantages offered to settlers.

Newfoundland

Newfoundland's High Commissioner is housed in Victoria street almost at the top of the building. The office has no display of products. It seems to exist not so much to encourage settlers as to manage the Dominion's business with this country, and for the convenience of visitors.

Colonies and dependencies like British Guiana, the Federated Malay States and the Gold have also offices in London, and they have windows showing products.

Finally we come to Canada.

Canada

The contrast between the Canadian Building in Trafalgar Square and say, Australia House, is surprising. It would seem that the Canadian conception of what a High Commissioner's office should be is totally different from the ideas of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. The Canadian Building has the word "Canada" carved over the doorway, and flies the Canadian flag from the roof, but otherwise the passer-by would think he was passing a club or some institution, for there is nothing else to tell one that it is the Canadian government office.

Inside the building the contrast is even greater, for there is no kind of display of Canadian produce. The visitor is impressed with gorgeousness, not to say gaudiness of the building, which seems to smack of ostentation rather than of business. No pictures of Canada meet the eye, nothing in the nature of propaganda.

On either side as one enters the building are spaces devoted to reading and writing accommodation for visitors, and there is not much room when the visitors are many. Passing through columns with gilded tops one finds a small counter with inconspicuous labels stating that emigrants may enquire at the counter. On the left is the general enquiry office with one man in charge. Further on is a large open space, with about twenty clerks at tables. If you wish to enquire about any particular matter, you are conducted into this large hall where there are no divisions keeping one department apart from the others—an uncomfortable arrangement.

The emigration staff proper which you would expect to find on the ground floor is up on the second floor, where officials and clerks are very crowded together. Here again, with the exception of the Director of Emigration and his assistant director, officials are herded together, and it is rather disconcerting to find yourself discussing business with one official while someone else within earshot is doing the same with another. When a handful of emigrants are also being examined in another corner of the room it may be imagined how unsuited the accommodation is to the work that has to be done.

Much attention seems to have been paid to appearance. All the old furniture from the former office was scrapped and the new building was expensively furnished with mahogany. On the staircase (marble) are expensive carpets, and the floors of the offices are similarly covered. In corners one finds little cabinets ornamental and expensive, but serving no useful purpose. The enquiry man needed a row of pigeon holes for visitors' letters, and he was provided with a fifty guinea cabinet. The whole building seems to be intended for show, and not for use. For publicity purposes its value is nothing. It is surprising that any emigrant dares to enter such a gilt and gingerbread palace. Can one wonder that Canadians come to London and say that Australia is miles ahead of Canada in publicity? Yet one feels sure that Canada's building and office cost more to maintain than does Australia House. And when one reflects what a magnificent display of natural resources and produce might be made by Canada one feels an opportunity has been lost.

Then follows the report regarding the Canadian agents general of Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia, and the Canadian railway offices:

The Canadian Agents General

The Canadian agents general are doing much to bring their provinces into notice. Mr. F. A. Pauline, the Agent General for British Columbia, has a fine building and only occupies one floor, letting the rest of the building, so that the representation of the province can cost but little. Mr. Pauline has earned the good opinion of Canadians in London for his efforts to keep his province to the front.

Ontario's Agent General, Mr. Wm. C. Noxon, has his office in the Strand, where he has a whole building. It has a window on the Strand, always attractive with displays of raw and manufactured products, and Mr. Noxon has brought the office to a high state of efficiency; his efforts to secure settlers have been highly successful.

Quebec, which is represented in London by Dr. L. J. Lemieux, has an office in Kingsway with two large windows full of a variety of Quebec products, and inside there is a display of minerals, cereals, etc.

Nova Scotia occupies a house in Spring Gardens. Mr. John Howard, the agent general, is the doyen of Canadian agents general. He is highly thought of in his province.

The Canadian Railway Offices

The absence of any display of produce at the Canadian building is to some extent made up for by the Canadian railways, which have offices nearby on the opposite side of the road. The Canadian Pacific Railway's windows are always attractive and are never allowed to remain unchanged for any time. They make a fine advertisement for the Dominion.

A couple of hundred yards away are the offices of the Canadian National Railways, who also have two large windows for display of Canadian produce and propaganda of various kinds. When the "£2 Rate to Canada" scheme came into being, it was the railways that did the advertising of it. The Canadian building had not either inside or outside any notice of this attractive appeal to settlers.

Canadian visitors who grumbled at the poor publicity Canada obtains in London were recently further disappointed to find that Canada did not participate in the Empire Marketing Board's section of dominion and colonial exhibits at the British Industries Fair, or at the Ideal Home Exhibition. The Imperial government, when it established the Empire Marketing Board to promote the empire sale of produce in the old country, voted a million pounds to the board to be spent in furthering this purpose, and the refusal of Canada to participate seems ungracious in the extreme, and very disappointing. Someone has blundered!

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my hon. friend tell us who the author of the communication is?

Mr. BENNETT: I said I had the memorandum prepared and I do not propose to name the author. He was purely an independent observer of the situation and what I have read represents the impression created on a casual onlooker.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will be the first to agree with me that when documents are quoted in the House authority means everything.

Mr. BENNETT: I am assuming the responsibility for it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But my hon. friend is not prepared to say who wrote the document?

Mr. BENNETT: No, but I assume the responsibility for it because I made a personal investigation with relation to a part of the memorandum the last time I was in London and I made up my mind that I should like to have in writing a commentary on conditions as seen by a casual observer. I will leave it to the Prime Minister himself to say whether his own observation does not confirm the correctness of every statement I have read to-night.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On the contrary I was never more surprised, because in a conversation I had with my hon. friend on his return from England I found him most enthusiastic about the Canadian building and the High Commissioner, so much so that when he rose to read to-night I thought he was about to pronounce a eulogy upon both.

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister is quite right, and before I conclude I shall have something to say in that regard. What I am asking, however, is whether or not we should maintain in London an ambassador's office or a business office. The Canadian building is admirably located. It is a magnificent structure, beautifully built and quite appropriately furnished, and I desire here and now to pay tribute to the generous, disinterested patriotism of the High Commissioner. He has spent his own money with lavish freedom on the building, which he has partly furnished at his own expense. On the walls he has placed almost priceless works of art. Altogether, in my judgment, he discharges the duties of his office in an excellent manner, and. it will be interesting to note, he has purchased at 94 Lancaster Gate a splendid residence upon which he has spent thousands of pounds. It is a house which is in every way dignified and eminently worthy of the finest traditions of the country in which it stands. The hospitality which the High Commissioner dispenses is nothing short of princely, and no munificence could surpass the extent to which he has expended his own money and the willingness he has displayed in going to any pains in the world to assist his fellow citizens from Canada in obtaining such information as they may at any time be in need of. All that I freely concede.

But that is not the point I am trying to make. The question is whether or not we should maintain in London, side by side, if need be, with an ambassador's office, an office in which business considerations alone will prevail. I certainly desire to supplement my own observations with what I have just read from an altogether different source, which proves the soundness of the view I hold, that we have not been taking advantage from the business standpoint of the situation as it exists in London. That office does not display our products nor does it assist in propaganda work. Within the last four months an Englishman coming to this country from London made this observation: "I cannot conceive any immigrant going to these magnificent offices, because there is nothing that would attract him or induce him to believe that Canada was the sort of place to which one might migrate. On the other hand, if you go down the Strand a short distance you will find in Australia House the conditions that will appeal to the visitor." If any hon. gentleman has visited Australia House, as the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) doubtless will at no distant date, he will find that building a speaking monument of propaganda. From moving pictures which are shown from morning till night, to the marble floor and the various products scattered around one, there are evidences of what Australia is capable of doing. The same may be said in relation to Ontario, in lesser degree with respect to Quebec, and to some extent regarding Nova Scotia. But the Dominion as a whole, apart from what the railways are doing, carries on in the magnificent property which we own in Trafalgar Square no propaganda work calculated to induce people to come and settle in Canada. It may be that the policy of the government is opposed to such inaction, but the present condition should not be allowed to continue. I had intended referring to this matter at the last session had an opportunity arisen, but I found it impossible. I do suggest, however, that we endeavour to treat this splendid property in London as a home for business administration and not the home of the Canadian ambassador. And I do not use that word in any offensive sense. I desire to place on record my appreciation of the services of the High Commissioner, but I do point out that we are not getting results from the standpoint of having people settle in this country, by maintaining Canada House in its present condition. I will leave it to the Minister of Immigration, when he goes to London, to see if there is a single word over-stated in what I have said or in this memorandum, and to consider if it is not time a change was made and that magnificent site used for the greater advertisement of this country. It does advertise Canada, but that advertisement is not calculated to attract people; it is an advertisement of our pride, our seeming wealth and our gorgeousness, but it is not an advertisement calculated to invite people who desire to go on the land and make for themselves a home while developing the resources of this country. I have brought this to the attention of the government because of my conviction that the time has arrived when we must determine whether we will use that site and the money we have invested for the purpose of business and propaganda, or whether we will use it as the dignified and very magnificent residence of a Canadian ambassador to the centre of the empire. That is the position I desire to bring to the attention of the government and the Prime Minister.

Mr. CAHAN: If the Prime Minister has no intention of replying to the remarks of the hon. member for West Calgary, I would suggest that this is an opportune occasion for the Prime Minister to state the intention of his government with respect to the appointment of a diplomatic agent in London, or the conferring upon the Canadian High Commissioner in London of diplomatic duties and responsibilities. That has been suggested by the public press of this country and of England, and I think rather acquiesced in by the Prime Minister in one of his statements to this House in connection with the report of the Imperial conference. It has also been stated that at an early date the government of Great Britain are likely to send a diplomatic representative to Ottawa, and the suggestion was made that Canada was likely to assume new or closer diplomatic relations with the government of Great Britain through its agent or representative in London. I would like to know whether it is the intention of the government to grant semi-ambassadorial powers to the Canadian High Commissioner in London, or whether his duties will be restricted to matters of trade and commerce and another agent appointed to assume the duties and responsibilties of the diplomatic office which I understand is to be created.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not mean to avoid replying to the hon. member for West Calgary; as a matter of fact with much of what he said I am in agreement. I believe we should be doing very much more in London in the way of publicity with respect to Canadian produce and products; in the advertisement of our resources and the like. In that connection hon. members will find in the supplementary estimates now before the House an item of $100,000 to supplement the British scheme for marketing empire produce, which was placed in the estimates in the hope that this parliament would vote a sum of money which will enable the High Commissioner and those associated with him to do more in the way of developing that side of his work, particularly in association with the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Immigration will be leaving for London after parliament prorogues to discuss with the High Commissioner just how, with respect to trade and immigration, the office over which he presides can be made to serve more effectively the purposes which we in Canada desire it to serve, and which in large part have been outlined by the hon. member for West Calgary.

Referring more particularly to what was said by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, I would point out that the position of High Commissioner has been from the outset in part diplomatic and in part commercial, at the very outset more commercial than diplomatic perhaps. As the years have gone by the number of questions of a quasidiplomatic character arising between the mother country and our Dominion have very largely increased. Most of our real problems those which have caused the most concern and occupied the most of the time of ministers and officials, are those which have arisen directly or indirectly out of the war; the business of government departments has been increased many-fold, particularly with respect to overseas questions, as a consequence of the problems which have grown out of the war and which did not exist to any extent prior thereto. With the growth of Canada and the equality of status we have been discussing of late, there has developed more and more a tendency on the part of our respective governments to deal with each other through personal representation rather than exclusively by despatches; I think all governments have found that in the long run it saves a great deal of misunderstanding if a government can communicate with its own agent, have that agent interview the other government and report back. Where communications are left entirely to written despatches, very frequently these despatches are drawn as much for the purpose of concealing as of revealing what it is most desirous to have expressed.

Mr. CAHAN: I have noticed that sometimes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, my hon. friend has noticed that. The position of High Commissioner in London to-day is materially different from what it was a few years ago; what it was prior to the war. During the war the position developed more and more on the diplomatic side and the High Commissioner came to have personal contact with the ministers of the crown in England, which he had not had previously. To-day the British government gladly concedes to our High Commissioner the right to call upon any minister of the crown and interview him in regard to departmental matters of concern to our country without first going through the formality of being accredited by the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs. As a consequence the position of High Commissioner has become increasingly significant as a diplomatic post, and within the empire between Canada and Great Britain his position does correspond to the position an ambassador would hold between nations. He has also the other equally important position as the representative of our country or the agent of our government in the supervision of all our activities in Great Britain, related amongst others those to commerce and immigration. I may add that to the splendid services rendered Canada and the Empire by our High Commissioner, the Hon. Mr. Larkin, this higher recognition has been increasingly due. Mr. Larkin has helped to make the position what it is. I do not know whether I have answered my hon. friend's question, but I have tried to indicate the development which has taken place.

Mr. CAHAN: What is the status of the present High Commissioner in London as compared with the minister representing Mexico at London, say, or the ministers representing South American states such as Chile, Peru, or Patagonia?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That all depends on whether my hon. friend has in mind such matters as precedence at ceremonial occasions, or whether he has in mind the substantial relationships between governments.

Mr. CAHAN: Social relations count for so much in London.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They count for a good deal. The British government have recognized that, and they have given the high commissioners of the British dominions a position of great prominence in the table of precedence. My recollection, speaking offhand, is that the high commisisoners of the dominions take precedence immediately after the members of the Privy Council in Great Britain. That procedure has been adopted within the last year or two, and with the distinct object of giving a higher recognition to the office of high commissioner. I believe the British government hope to give increasingly to the high commissioners of the several dominions that recognition which, in the eyes of the world, will cause them to appear in the light of ambassadors, which in fact they are, though naturally within the empire itself we do not use the term "ambassador" in speaking of the representative from one dominion to the mother country but rather hold to the term "representative."

Mr. GUTHRIE: Getting down from principles to details, may I ask my right hon. friend a question? I see the details of this vote are set out on page 78 of the main estimates. I should like to inquire in what capacity Colonel Reid Hyde is employed at the High Commissioner's office in London.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The work of the High Commissioner's office falls into two divisions, the one having immediate relation to the government departments in England and having more or less to do with diplomatic relations, and the other having to do with the business and commercial relations of the office. Mr. Pacaud, who is in the high commissioner's office, is more directly concerned with those questions that relate primarily to diplomacy. Colonel Reid Hyde is identified with business and commercial questions. He has not been permanently appointed. He has been retained on a per diem basis, but the intention is to engage him permanently.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What allowance does he get per diem for the services he is rendering?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Seven pounds a day when employed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And has his employment been fairly continuous for the last two years?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am informed that last year he was paid $4,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: All told?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And he is on the commercial side of the embassy, or legation, or whatever we call it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He has had largely to do with some of the financial transactions we have had to consider, that is, matters affecting the treasury.

Mr. BENNETT: Reparations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And the settlement of financial claims.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is Colonel Reid Hyde a Canadian?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He comes from Montreal.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the total cost of the High Commissioner's office?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The total cost last year was $120,000, but that does not include any outlay for the building that was purchased in the country's right.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And the annual allowance which the High Commissioner receives for living or house is $5,000, I believe?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is right.

Item agreed to.

To provide for representation at Washington, including salaries and allowances for minister plenipotentiary, secretaries and staff, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act or any of its amendments, $130,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: "To provide for representation at Washington, including salaries and allowances for minister plenipotentiary, secretaries and staff," and again "notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act." May I ask what the salary of the Canadian minister is?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government is giving to the Canadian minister at Washington the same salary that has been paid to our representative in Paris, Hon. Philippe Roy, $12,000 a year. The High Commissioner in London will have the same salary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Are there any allowances in addition to the $12,000?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: An allowance for house and representation, for rent of building, entertainment and the like. I may say to my hon. friend, by way of explanation at the outset, that when this estimate was originally prepared it was prepared on the assumption that the government would rent quarters at Washington for offices, and also rent a residence for the minister. We have gone very carefully into what this will involve in comparison with the owning of a building, which will provide offices for the legation combined with a residence as well, that being the customary method of housing a legation in Washington, and if later the committee adopt the item which appears in the supplementary estimate to enable us to purchase a building, I shall be glad to assure hon. members that we will be able to lessen by $30,000 a year the amount asked for under this vote for the legation at Washington.

Mr. CHURCH: My opinion of the Canadian ambassador at Washington is that he is nothing but a figurehead, and the government will have to take the responsibility for an expenditure which I am sure the country will not approve of. If I am the only member of the House of Commons to vote against this item, I propose to do so, and if I can find a seconder I will move that the item be reduced to one dollar.

Mr. CAHAN: Is it understood that in discussing the vote in the supplementary estimates for $500,000 the committee will be at liberty to consider at the same time the items making up this appropriation of $130,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I had thought it would be advantageous if we were to consider the item in the supplementary estimates at the same time we were considering the item for the legation. I am quite agreeable to take that item up immediately if the committee wishes, and to discuss in connection with it anything relating to the legation.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest that it will be convenient to discuss both items together.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This item might be passed, and then we could take up the item in the supplementary estimates with the understanding that we could discuss in connection with it anything relating to the legation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This item, Mr. Chairman, must be considered in connection with item No. 467 in the supplementary estimates for 1927-28, which is to provide $500,000 for the purchase of land, building, equipment and furnishings for the Canadian Legation at Washington. In order to express my views in regard to the matter as concisely as possible I propose to move that item No. 467 of the supplementary estimates of 1927-28 be reduced by the sum of $475,000. That would leave $25,000 in the vote, which amount in my estimation ought to be sufficient to provide office and house room for the gentleman who occupies the position of Canadian minister at Washington.

I believe that I am not going beyond the mark, Mr. Chairman, when I say that the announcement of the government that a sum of $500,000 would be appropriated for this purpose was a shock to the people of this country. I judge that from press notices which have appeared since this item became public. The question is this: Why does Canada need a property of this kind and of this cost in the city of Washington? Why should we expend half a million dollars of the hard-earned money of the taxpayers of this country to equip what will prove to be more or less of an ornamental establishment in a foreign capital? We realize that this embassy has been established at Washington, and I believe we are all in agreement that suitable quarters should be secured for our representative there, but why should not suitable quarters be secured at a rental of from $20,000 to $25,000 per annum? Our representative in London, Mr. Larkin, is in a position of as great importance as will be our minister at Washington. For our representative at the capital of our empire we provide the modest allowance of $5,000 for living expenses, and we give him—and we only gave it within the last year or year and a half—a suitable building. Until about a year and a half ago the High Commissioner for Canada in London was accommodated in the capital of the empire in very humble offices, but offices which were sufficient for the purpose and cost this country no very extravagant sum of money.

We know what conditions will exist in the city of Ottawa when the representative of the United States government comes here. So far as office accommodation is concerned he is to be housed, according to report, in the Metropolitan Life building, a very handsome building, and he will no doubt have a very handsome suite of offices. No one will object to that. Rumour also has it that he is here at his own expense, and that he will secure living quarters in the city. If that is the condition in this capital with regard to the representative of the richest power in the world, why should not a similar arrangement be made for the Canadian representative in the capital of the United States?

To my mind, Mr. Chairman, this proposal involves the grossest kind of extravagance on the part of this government, and I believe that that is how the members of this House and the people of this country view this proposal. I know that around the corridors of this building it is suggested that Washington is over-crowded, that everything is at a premium, that it is difficult to secure suitable quarters. These things may be so, but I will guarantee that if any of our large companies wanted to equip themselves with office and living accommodation in the city of Washington, they would be able to go down and rent it to-day, and have no very great difficulty in doing so. Why should we not follow the example which is going to be set to this country by the rich government of the United States in their treatment of their representative in the capital of Canada? To my mind this proposal to expend $500,000 of the money of the people of this country in a foreign capital, under the conditions that exist in Canada, is worse than extravagance; it is worse than folly. We heard the Minister of Finance tell this House two months ago that this very year, six months hence, we have to pay $100,000,000 of debt in this country, and we cannot pay it; we have to go to the markets of the world and borrow the money.

Mr. ROBB: I did not state that we could not pay it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister said that such as he was able to pay, he would pay, and in the same speech he gave figures to the House which showed that he is going to have a deficit in his accounts for the present year. If he wants the figures I will give them to him if the committee will allow me in this debate to refer to a previous debate of the same session. His figures speak for themselves. With his main estimates, his supplementary estimates, his railway estimates, with his expenditure as he states it, and with his revenue as he estimates it, he is coming out short this very year, when we have $100,000,000 of debt to pay next October and November. Under such conditions what can we think of ourselves if we vote this money? What will the people of this country think if we vote $500,000 unnecessarily at a time of financial stress in this country? The money will have to be borrowed; we have not got the money; we cannot pay our debts as they mature. We can renew our loans, it is true, because our credit is good, but that is no excuse for unnecessarily spending money.

I wanted to bring this matter definitely before the committee as early in the discussion as it was possible to do so, and that is why at this juncture, and not with any idea of closing the discussion at all, I give to the committee the views which we on this side of the House hold upon this question, namely, that this vote should be reduced to the sum of $25,000 which will allow us to rent appropriate office premises and appropriate living quarters for our representative in the city of Washington. I do not even know that he is entitled to any living quarters beyond the allowance which he gets. With the $25,000 left in this vote, there would be $5,000 for living quarters and $20,000 a year for the rent of an office. That is all we pay in London; that is all we were to pay in Washington according to the statement made here to-night. That is ample, sufficient in every way to maintain our representative in proper state in Washington, and as much as will be paid to the minister at Ottawa by the richest country in the world. I therefore beg to move, Mr. Chairman, that this item be reduced by the sum of $475,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The committee will recall that in speaking on the item making provision for the legislation I intimated that if the government were in possession of a property of its own in Washington I would be able to reduce that item, not by $25,000 but by $30,000, and that I am prepared to stand by.

May I present the position as I believe it will appear to anyone who resides in the United States—and it is to the United States that we are sending a minister—having regard to the custom of all other countries in the matter of legislation? There are at Washington at the present time between fifty or sixty embassies or legations. Canada has not been in that list until within the last few months. In fifty of these cases I am informed the countries having embassies or legations at Washington have their embassies or legations housed in buildings which are owned and known by the name of the respective countries. The British embassy has a large building in which are the offices of the embassy, the reception room of the ambassador, and his living quarters. France, Germany, Italy, Japan and other principal countries have similar buildings of their own. Even the South American republics adopt a like practice. I believe there are a few cases where a country owns the building its minister lives in and has separate quarters in another part of the city for offices. However, they are very much the exception. The practice at Washington in regard to the representation of foreign countries is for each country to own its own building, and in that building to have its offices and there to house its minister. There are two reasons for this; one the note of permanency which pervades the institution, and another the readier accessibility on the part of the public to the legation at any hour of the day or night. We have to decide, having agreed that we are to have a minister at Washington, whether we will adopt a different practice from that followed by other countries, whether in the eyes of the Americans it is to our interest to appear as a people who are not prepared to do for the minister whom they have at Washington what other countries are prepared to do for their representatives.

By way of illustration, may I cite one or two cases that will appeal to the committee? The republic of Argentine in 1913 purchased a building which cost $300,000. With necessary alteration it cost $368,000. That was at pre-war prices, and without any furnishings whatever. The building provided by the Argentine republic for their minister and legation could not be obtained to-day for the amount we are asking the committee to approve for the building for the representative of the Dominion of Canada. There are two countries which border on the United States, one is our Dominion and the other is Mexico, In 1922 or 1923 Mexico purchased a building for a legation at a cost of $350,000. The addition and structural alterations which were required to make it suitable for the legation brought the amount, including land, up to $465,000, and the furniture cost over another $100,000. Mexico has spent over $565,000 for the building in which her minister is housed and her legation offices located. The question is whether we in Canada, starting out as we are with representation at Washington, are to have our representative housed in quarters inferior to those of other countries which certainly, from our point of view, have not the importance in relation to the United States which our country has. The question is, shall we do that, or shall we start out right at the outset? The government has gone very carefully into the wisdom of leasing or renting as against purchasing. We could, it is perfectly true, rent temporary quarters for offices and temporary quarters for the minister, and that was what we had in mind at the time the estimate of $130,000 was prepared in the first instance. However, we have asked our minister to make a survey of the situation in Washington. We have had others make a survey. My colleague, the Minister of Public Works, the deputy minister and the chief architect of the department have visited Washington; they have all reported to the administration upon the cost at which we could obtain a building which would be Canada's own, and we have come to the conclusion that it would be more economical to own a building outright than to lease premises. From a business point of view it would be more economical, and this quite apart from the advantage to be gained in the eyes of the people generally from adequate and suitable accommodation. In the eyes of the people of the United States, the building at Washington can perhaps best be described as a symbol of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a part of Canada in international law.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. The building itself becomes a symbol of Canada.

I believe that hon. members, on reflection, will feel that it is better we should have in Washington from the outset a building that will be dignified, not pretentious or ostentatious, but modest in appearance, substantial, suitable, in which Canadians can have some pride, rather than that we should have temporary quarters for our legation in one part of the city and a residence for our minister in another part of it, in marked contrast to the legations and embassies of other countries.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Do such buildings come under local taxation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is another feature; I am glad my hon. friend has mentioned it. If we lease premises we have to pay taxes on them, both on the residence for the minister and the office, the taxes appear in the account as rendered to us. Under the regulations at Washington, buildings owned in that city by other countries and other governments are tax free. By purchasing outright we are in a position to acquire property, that will be exempted from taxation and which having regard to its location in the city will prove an asset to the Dominion, increasing in value year by year.

The reason we have brought this item forward now rather than later is that in looking about we have discovered that there is a chance to secure immediately a building, now for sale, that is of exceptionally good value, a building erected shortly before the war and admirably adapted for a legation. We tried to secure a lease of it, but we could not get a lease of it. We were told it was for sale, not for lease or rent. We have had the building carefully appraised, the site and the building itself and an estimate made of the furnishings. To give us an opportunity to purchase, if parliament approves, we have taken an option on it. We have made no purchase or promise of purchase up to the present time, but have simply taken an option in the hope that parliament will vote an appropriation which will enable us to negotiate a purchase. Should the building in question be purchased we will be acquiring an asset for the Dominion. It is located in a part of the city which is both near the business portion and near the residential section. Washington is changing a little in character, as all cities do. The residential portion of Washington is going further and further to the north. This particular property is very near where the Belgian embassy is at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: The old Danish embassy?

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No. A statement to that effect has appeared in the press, but it is quite wrong. I believe the gentleman who occupied the house was a member of the Danish legation, but the house itself was never occupied as an embassy. It is on Massachusetts avenue, between 17th and 18th streets.

May I present this point of view to the committee? The United States have recently appointed a minister to Canada. They have chosen as the minister whom they are sending to Canada a gentleman who held the high office of ambassador to Belgium. A gentleman who has held the position of ambassador to Belgium is to hold the position of minister to Ottawa, implying as clearly as any words can imply that in the opinion of the United States government the post of minister in Canada is of more importance than that of ambassador in Belgium. Now I wish to ask the committee, in the light of that will we in Canada feel we are doing our part if we have in Washington a legation or a legation building of a character inferior to that which Belgium has? The building we have in mind at the moment is similar to the building in which the Belgian legation is housed. I submit that as to whether the style of building is right or not, that is about as fair a test as one can make.

My hon. friend has spoken of what the United States minister may receive and how he may be housed when he comes to Ottawa. May I point out that while the minister of the United States will be here, the consul general to this country will also be retained with his office and staff. In a word, the United States will have more than one representative in Ottawa. And may I draw the attention of the committee to this fact: the minister who comes to Ottawa is the one and only foreign minister in the capital of Canada. In Washington our minister has to hold his own with the representatives of fifty or sixty legations and embassies—a very different position altogether. Unless we support our minister to the United States with a proper staff and suitable accommodations, Canada instead of having its prestige raised by being represented at Washington will have it materially lowered.

I do not wish to take up too much of the time of the committee, but I do submit, Mr. Chairman, that from the point of view of economy, from the point of view of national dignity, from the point of view of what is appropriate in our representation at a capital like Washington, it is essential that we have a suitable building in which to house our legation and our minister under the one roof

Anything else than that will not be satisfactory. To get anything at all satisfactory is extremely difficult, and I do not believe we can lease or rent with an advantage to the Dominion at all comparable to that which will result from an immediate purchase.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I disagree entirely with the payment of this money at this time. Our country with a debt of two and a half billion dollars is told that its position in the world is to be measured by the ostentation of its display. Shortly put, that is the story of the Prime Minister. Never mind the mortgage on the farm; all you have to do is to keep the front up and you are a great man. That is what this means. I do not think the people of Canada are prepared to believe that their position in the world is to be measured by the ability with which they buy and mortgage premises in Washington . Let us look at the facts as they are. Up till the Great war and for some time after the United States of America, the richest country in the world, had in London no premises in which its ambassador lived.

Mr. SPENCE (Maple Creek): The ambassador complained about it, though.

Mr. BENNETT: And I am complaining about it now.

An hon. MEMBER: You are not the ambassador.

Mr. BENNETT: I hope not. And I never will be for the sake of the country that I live in. Let us go a step further. Mr. Page, one of the greatest ambassadors the United States ever had in Europe, lived at the Langham hotel in London. And what he could do Vincent Massey may not do!

Mr. CHAPLIN: His Excellency!

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Page lived, as I say, at a hotel in London. I remember seeing him there. That was good enough for the United States, the richest country in the world. But Canada with nine million people and a debt of two and a half billion dollars is going to spend half a million dollars in Washington. Are the Canadian people anxious that that should be so? Do you believe they want it? Does any man in this House believe that the farmers of western Canada or the farmers of eastern Canada desire that at a time like this when we cannot spend money on pensions to our soldiers we should spend half a million dollars for the purpose of buying a building in Washington? Half a million dollars for an embassy in Washington, when the embassy of the United States in London is a building that the late J. P. Morgan gave to his country for that purpose. And the United States do not own an embassy in Paris today. As I say, they did not own a building in London until Mr. Morgan presented to them their present embassy. What is their position in relation to us? We have an ambassador or minister coming from Washington to Ottawa, and the great rich United States are content to house him in rented premises. And we are told—if the logic of the Prime Minister is right—that the United States will suffer in prestige because they do not own an embassy here! Does any man think we are in our sane senses when we vote money as we have this session, which means a deficit if the figures are carried out?

Without going, as my hon. friend has said, to past deficits, our railway deficit for the last fiscal year was ten million dollars—not less than 22 millions is the vote mentioned for the current year. But suppose it is less than that, suppose it is only ten million, with the main estimates and the supplementary estimates, with no provision made for old age pensions—and they must be paid because British Columbia is now going to introduce old age pensions—we are now told we must spend half a million dollars more—in Washington. The reason given is that we must put on a bold front and have the people of the United States respect our prestige! Well, if it comes to measuring our prestige in dollars, that is a kind of diplomacy I do not believe in. The worth of Canada is to be measured by the dollars we put into a building! Since when was it the policy of a Canadian government to say that our value in the eyes of foreign countries is to be measured by the kind of house we live in? And it will be a mortgaged house. That is what it means. How many members in this House recall villages, towns and cities in which a great splash has been made by a man with a mortgage on his house, eventually he was lost sight of in the great silent, forgotten past. Is Canada's position to be that a mortgaged embassy—that is what it means—is essential in Washington that we may keep up a bold face, a fine front, a fictitious pride, and have people take off their hats at the embassy and not at what is in it? That is the story. That is what we want. We want people walking down Massachusetts avenue, at 17th and 18th streets, to doff their hats at the Canadian flag on the embassy and not at the brains in the building. I tell you, that is not the policy of the Canadian people.

I have nothing to say with respect to the incumbent of that office, but, Sir, I feel stronger in regard to this than to any other vote that I have ever had to give in parliament, and to the fullest extent of my ability I shall oppose it. This country apparently is entering on a great adventure, the last great adventure in our relation to the British Empire. I am wholly opposed to the establishment of this embassy at Washington. It is but the doctrine of separation, it is but the evidence in many minds of the end of our connection with the empire. For that is what it means. It means nothing else ultimately, because if we are a sovereign state we cannot belong to the British Empire. We have had so much talk in days gone by of the British commonwealth of nations—but we can never be a nation unless we are a sovereign power; we are not a sovereign power unless we are an independent state; and we cannot be an independent state and remain a part of the British Empire. This proposition does not require any argument. It has been stated frequently. Lord Parmoor put it clearly the other day. There is no doubt of the position. But we use words improperly and illogically, and then conclude that by establishing an embassy at Washington, at an expenditure of $500,000, we are going to command the attention of all the world—to the building. Is it any wonder that the people of the United States laugh at the idea of our putting half a million dollars into an embassy in Washington? Talk with any first-rate business man in the United States and he wonders: What is the matter with the nine million people in the north of the North American continent whose pretensions are thoroughly out of keeping with their position in the world? Our debt is two and a half billion dollars and here we have an estimate of $130,000 for the legation in Washington with $500,000 for the building and furnishings. We are going to strike off $30,000 in connection with the new property, which leaves $100,000 for the legation plus $500,000 for the building and furnishings. We have also an embassy or legation in London and one in Paris, in the latter case the building being rented. In the city beautiful, one of the oldest cities in the civilized world, we have a rented building; yet no one doubts for a moment that Canada is held in high esteem in France. We are held in great respect there, notwithstanding the fact that our building is rented. How strange! And there are more than sixty other embassies in Paris. Why is Canada held in high respect in France and among the other nations of the world? Not for these outward and visible evidences of display, this ostentatious mortgaged wealth; not for these things, but because of the qualities of its citizenship and the manhood that constitutes the Canadian people. That is why we are held in such respect in France and in other countries as well; and it will be an evil day for this country when the doctrine is promulgated by the government that the respect that is to be paid its citizens is to be measured by the ostentatious display which we are able to make in the capitals of the world. And that is just what we are doing now.

Mexico and the Argentine have been cited as examples for us to follow. These nations have had representation in Washington for fifty years—one of them at least—ever since they became organized communities, and they have only recently acquired buildings. Canada on the other hand, only just entering into the ambassadorial realm, is going to buy in the first year a $500,000 property. What will be the effect of this on the world at large? It will be this: the men who occupy that building will evidence pretensions in keeping with the front of the building, and instead of being concerned so mightily with the future of this country their great care will be to maintain the "swank" that goes with a building worth half a million. That is the trouble. Is there a man here who does not realize it? Everyone who has read any of the books recently published with respect to the last twenty-five years of civilization on the American continent understands the tendency of people to get away as far as they can from the modest building in the back street and to establish themselves in the brownstone front in the leading street. We know how the head of such a man expands, and how his self-importance increases. But what about the effect on his neighbours? The Prime Minister asks whether we want Canada to occupy a less dignified position than do other nations in Washington. Let me say this, that, until such time as the richest nation in the world is prepared to pay to the Canadian people the compliment of establishing a legation in a specially erected building in this city, we can afford to live in rented premises abroad. Why should the Canadian people spend half a million dollars to put up a building in Washington, ostensibly for the purpose of maintaining the dignity of this Dominion, when the richest country in the world treats Canada as it does, housing its representative in a rented flat with an office in the corner? Let us be fair about this matter and put on the statute books the provision that when other nations are prepared to set up their embassies in Ottawa in corresponding style, we will erect buildings in foreign cities for our representatives.

An hon. MEMBER: Reciprocity.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, reciprocity in that sort of thing—reciprocity in respect. We have been told what a great compliment was being paid us in connection with the appointment of the ambassador from Belgium. Is it worth half a million dollars to have such a compliment paid us? Ask the farmers of the country their own opinion in that regard; ask the returned men whose pensions we cannot increase; ask the civil servants; ask any of these people whether they think it is worth half a million dollars to have a foreign representative live in a rented building in Ottawa while we build premises in Washington to accommodate our legation.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend referred to the fact that most American ambassadors had no buildings of their own but lived in rented lodgings. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. BENNETT: I mentioned two cases that had come under my observation.

Mr. CANNON: Is it not a fact that at the outbreak of the war most Americans had to go to the British ambassadors for protection?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: I am surprised that my hon. friend should make that statement. I consider that $3,000 improperly voted last night.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. gentleman referred to books written by American ambassadors themselves.

Mr. BENNETT: Ambassador Gerard was in Berlin at the outbreak of the war but the fact is that the British abandoned their embassy and Mr. Goschen went home to London. And it is equally true that everyone whom he could get into the American embassy went there.

Mr. CANNON: That is not what I said. I said that most Americans went to the British ambassadors for protection.

Mr. BENNETT: What does this man mean?

Mr. CANNON: I will tell you what I mean.

Mr. BENNETT: Judging by the arrogance with which the hon. gentleman gazes around at his supporters he seems to be quite sure of himself. Is the Solicitor General serious when he suggests that American citizens fled to the British embassy for protection? Surely he must know that in every field of hostile operations the British embassies were at once closed, and the ambassadors were obliged to go home. Surely he must know that.

Mr. RYCKMAN: He doesn't.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, it was on the assumption that he did that we gave him an increase in pay last night. It seems to me absurd for anyone to say that people fled to the British embassy in any country engaged in the war.

Mr. CANNON: I never said that.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member said they fled to the embassy.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend knows I never said that. He has changed considerably. No doubt he is getting tired.

Mr. BENNETT: I assure my hon. friend I shall not be tired even by the ridiculous observations I have heard to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: It is perfectly ridiculous for anyone to say that American citizens fled to the British embassies in any field of hostile operations.

Mr. CANNON: I never said that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what the hon. member said.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BENNETT: What did he say?

Mr. CANNON: In view of the hon. gentleman's state of mind I would rather not discuss the matter with him now. Perhaps we can consider it later.

Mr. BENNETT: I can only say that such a remark is perfectly natural to my hon. friend at all times. That is all I can say.

An hon. MEMBER: Go on and finish.

Mr. BENNETT: And it is not due to artificial stimulants either. I was about to observe, with such courtesy as I could, that until such time as the United States was prepared to pay to the Canadian people that tribute of respect which is due us we should not endeavour to make ostentatious displays on borrowed money. That is all I was trying to say, and I repeat it. What ordinary man in any business transaction would act as the government proposes to act in this regard? Would you spend $500,000 to put up an agency in a foreign country, when that country was not prepared to spend five cents in putting up a building in your country? That is the question; it is a very simple matter, and that is all there is to it. I referred to the United States not owning its embassies; I think the late Mr. Morgan gave them their embassy in London; the late ambassador, Mr. Page, lived at the Langham hotel, and in Paris they rented premises, yet I have not heard that any citizen of the United States suffered by reason of that fact. It may be that I did not correctly read history, although I have read a great deal of it, and I have yet to read of any American citizen who lost the protection of his flag by reason of the fact that the embassy of his country was in a rented building. That is the suggestion but I cannot find any trace of it.

Mr. CANNON: I never suggested anything of the kind.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry if I did an injustice to my hon. friend, because I understood him to say they had to seek safety and protection in the British embassy because they had no suitable quarters of their own. If I misunderstood my hon. friend I very much regret it; I did not do it intentionally.

Mr. CANNON: I appreciate my hon. friend better than I did a moment ago.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the position in that respect. Now I put this proposition: First, this is a new venture; we are entering upon a great undertaking in setting up a separate diplomatic establishment in the capital of the richest country of the world. Cannot we pause and see how it works out before we commit ourselves to such vast expenditure? Secondly, they are reciprocating by sending a minister to Canada, and they are sending him without endeavouring at this moment to buy premises for his use. We do not own the premises in which our ambassador in London resides; Mr. Larkin owns 94 Lancaster Gate, which he bought at very great expense to himself, and fitted for his home; we do not own our building in Paris, nor do we own the buildings occupied by our trade commissioners in other parts of the world. This country has a debt of two and a half billion dollars; this year we would not be able to meet our obligations, if we complied with the demands made upon us by our National railways, out of the estimated revenues of the country. Shall we, then, spend half a million dollars in putting up a pretentious residence, with fittings to match, in the capital of the richest country in the world, when they do not show any willingness to do the same with us? My submission is that there should be reciprocity; when they are prepared to open up their building here we should be prepared to do the same in Washington, but in our present impoverished condition this young state is not doing justice by its people in expending money for this purpose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend made a rather amazing remark when he said that the establishment of a legation in Washington was part of a doctrine of separation.

Mr. BENNETT: That is my personal view.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know whether my hon. friend and those who applauded him recall the fact that it was the government of Sir Robert Borden which first made the arrangements for the establishment of that legation.

Mr. BENNETT: I do.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When I was seated where my hon. friend opposite is sitting I heard Sir George Foster announce with great pride that the government of which he was the then acting Prime Minister had arranged for the establishment of a legation in Washington.

Mr. McGIBBON: They never filled the appointment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They voted money for the purpose of filling it, and hon. members opposite who were in the House at that time voted for it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Not half a million dollars.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They were not in that vote purchasing a building, but they were taking the initial steps just as our government did. We did ask parliament to vote the funds necessary for a building until after our minister was appointed, but having appointed the minister and being prepared to commence business, we then proceeded as any responsible business institution in like circumstances would proceed. I wish the country would understand that until this moment, so far as I have been aware, both sides of the House have been as one with respect to the desirability of opening a legation at Washington, and in that connection I will refer hon. members to my remarks in this House on the address in December last, when I spoke of the appointment of a minister to Washington and asked pointedly if there was anyone in the House who took exception to that appointment. There was not a reply from any hon. gentleman opposite. I was going to say something which I do not believe, but which is in my mind. It may be that some hon. gentlemen opposite think this is the beginning of a separation, but I can hardly conceive that they really think that, when one recalls that they themselves initiated the policy. I would rather believe that all parties of the country are as one in their faith in the British Empire and in this Dominion as a part of it, in any undertaking upon which as a country we may venture.

In this connection may I ask my hon. friends opposite since when we in Canada have begun to take our lessons from the United States? We have heard a great deal from hon gentlemen opposite to the effect that the United States should not be our example but that the British Empire should be the guide for everything done in this country. Need I remind this committee that in respect to legations and embassies the attitude of Great Britain has been diametrically opposite to that of the United States? The United States have worked on the principle that because they happened to have within their boundaries a number of very wealthy men who are able personally to finance the positions they should fill these diplomatic posts; the United States has been prepared to give these diplomatic posts to wealthy men and to keep them more or less as a preserve for wealthy men. Great Britain on the contrary has never taken that position; she has taken the position that she should seek for her diplomatic posts the best brains she could command, and she has sought so to arrange her legations and embassies that when a minister or an ambassador was appointed he would be provided with his house and his officers, and that every other necessary provision would be made. I say, Mr. Chairman, that in opening a legation in the United States we are taking a sound and safe line when we follow the example of Britain rather than that of the United States.

My hon. friend had something to say about what a business house would do. He is a director of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, which has constructed a great building in Ottawa. I wonder if my hon. friend opposed the idea of a United States company constructing a building in Canada which would stand for something, even as a building? Was it just a show of front of which my hon. friend was thinking?

Mr. BENNETT: Does my right hon. friend desire me to answer now or wait? I will wait until later; I will not interrupt.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am just pointing out that my hon. friend belongs to a company which has thought it to be serving its own interests by having in another country a building which of itself would be an expression of strength and power.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): And of prosperity.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, and of prosperity. May I go still further. My hon. friend referred to Mr. Walter Hines Page, the American ambassador to London, and said that Mr. Page lived at the Langham, and that if Mr. Page could get on in that way he thought our minister should be able to get along in the same manner. What did Mr. Page say of his accommodation? I have in my hand a copy of a letter written by Mr. Page to the President of the United States. It is dated London, June 5, 1914; in it Mr. Page did not hestitate to express his views pretty frankly. What was his conclusion? It was that unless the United States changed its policy, he wished the United States to accept his resignation, that under the conditions of living at the Langham, he would not stay in the position of American minister in Great Britain any longer. He spoke of the experiences of an ambassador in London, and after mentioning at some length what the obligations are, he proceeds as follows:

> Now, such activities as these are not merely the fashion. They have become fixed by long use and habit. Things of mere fashion I have persistently omitted and disregarded. In other words, a man who is going to be the American ambassador in London has got to do these and such things, else he would not represent the United States to these people at all. He could be a clerk and transmit and carry messages to the foreign Secretary. But he could have no influence on public opinion—could not be a personage in any sense; he could not know the English people, he would not be highly regarded by them, nor could he ever hear or find out such things as I have sometimes written you in my letters.
> Of course I have thought all this out. I have thought of omitting most of these things and of taking a small house on a side street and living within my salary. That's possible, and, seen from the United States, it seemed practicable. But it isn't practicable without utterly changing the nature of the task and omitting the most important parts of it. As it is, the United States government (God knows) is held in contempt enough for not providing its ambassador with a house. This omission has been flung in my face, I am sure, every day that I have been here. Even in official circles it is continually held against us. This British government has a house in Washington and it makes its ambassador an allowance for various expenses. It is regarded as a poor return compliment that our government has no home here and skimps our ambassador. They don't like it. Every other country that has an ambassador here (except the Turkish) owns a house or has a house on a long lease; it has furnished it well; it allows a fund for entertainment.

And then there is the concluding paragraph:

I pray you pardon all this, my dear Mr. President. It is an unpardonably long explanation of an unfortunate situation. I imagine after all that the best way out of it is for you to relieve me of further duties that I cannot pay for, find a man of fortune for this post, too, and let my resignation help, if it can be made to help, toward an understanding of the whole diplomatic problem. Perhaps that's the best service I can render, after all. But I shouldn't be candid if I didn't express a profound regret, for I am eager now, since I have begun to learn how, to serve you and to do what I can to building up a right understanding of us and of our government abroad. The first step in building up such a right understanding here must be a house for our ambassador. If I go away, however, because I can't afford it and my successor has to pay for his own house —that'll not be a flattering or helpful condition for him to begin his labour under. It's surely a bad predicament.

Yours most heartily,

WALTER H. PAGE.

Now what has been the result of that and similar representations? The result of that kind of protest has been that the United States government last year appropriated $10,000,000, for the purpose exclusively of erecting buildings for its ministers and ambassadors abroad. The sum of $10,000,000 last year was appropriated for that purpose on top of a very large appropriation that was made a few years before. I hold in my hand a volume reporting the hearings on this subject before the committee on foreign relations of the House of Representatives, and I would commend it to hon. members to read. It contains an expression of what the United States itself has come to regard as a fatal mistake made through not having proper accommodation for its embassies and legations and confining the positions merely to wealthy men. May I say we are anxious that these positions abroad should not be made a monopoly or preserve for men of great means. We are anxious that they should be open to any men in our country who possess the ability and skill to fill them with honour and credit to themselves and their native land. If that is to be done, we must arrange to secure furniture and equip the proper premises both for offices and residence. My hon. friend spoke about Paris. May I say to him that I understand a part of the $10,000,000 that has been voted by the United States is to go towards erecting a building for the embassy in that city? So I repeat that whether we take the view of the United States as it has been borne in upon them through conviction, or whether we take, as I prefer to take, the example of Great Britain, we will be wise in following the course which experience has shown to be the best. And may I just make clear that what we will be allowing our minister—in connection with the salary, representation, residence, and everything else—will equal only one-quarter of what Great Britain allows the British ambassador? With that understanding of the outlay involved hon. members will surely have reason to feel that if we are to have a legation at all we are beginning in as modest a way as can be.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Just one further word, because I do not wish to take up too much of the time of the committee: I think this country has been particularly fortunate in the appointment of Hon. Mr. Massey as Minister Plenipotentiary to Washington. The press of this country, the press of the United States, and the press of Great Britain have been one in these expressions of appreciation of his exceptional qualifications for that high position. We have been more than fortunate in securing to fill this all important post one who is so eminently qualified, and I submit that we owe something to the minister whom we have appointed as well as to our country which he represents.

Mr. CHURCH: The House is asked to vote half a million dollars for the purchase of land upon which to erect an embassy building at Washington. In addition a sum of $130,000 is provided for salary and other purposes. If I am the only member of the House to do so, I am going to vote against this expenditure. Six hundred thousand Canadians have gone to the United States to look for work and yet we are asked to make expenditures of this kind. The government seem to think they can do nothing for the unemployed in this country, nothing for the returned soldier. But they have found an unemployment cure. They have discovered the "ambassador cure" for unemployment in Canada. They have appointed an ambassador at Washington, and they are going to appoint ambassadors to all the countries bordering on the seven seas. I am opposed to the principle underlying this vote which expresses the idea that Canada is a separate country. Apparently all that the government are going to do in connection with this embassy is to provide comfortable jobs down at Washington for some of the politicians. They have appointed an ambassador so that he may be able to strut around with the title of "His Excellency". There have been representatives at Washington in the past and what have they done? With reference to the Chicago diversion of water, for example, they have done nothing; the American people have seen fit to make a football of that particular question. What does the economical Minister of Finance think about the way things are going? Here we have half a million dollars in the supplementary estimates for an embassy at Washington that is not going to be worth fifty cents to the people of this country but will do Canada more harm than good. We have become a nation overnight. That is one of the wonderful announcements the Prime Minister brought back from the Imperial conference. To-morrow, after this vote goes through, Canada will be known as the "Mexico of the North". A few weeks ago I asked what flag the government was going to fly over the embassy at Washington. I was told by the Minister of Justice, "the same flag that flies over the High Commissioner's office in London". There is another office that the people of this country are not getting value for. The Union Jack will not fly over the embassy at Washington. We shall be like one of the sixteen Latin republics. No wonder some of the people of this country are wondering if we are not at the parting of the ways so far as our relations with the mother country are concerned. The people of this country are opposed to appointing any ambassador from Canada to Washington. We sent Mr. Fielding and Mr. Paterson down to Washington in 1911, and we know what they did. They nearly landed this country into the reciprocity pact, and one of the first moves of this embassy, it is stated. will be to bring forward within the next few months the reciprocity agreement with the United States.

I am going to record my vote against the principle of this appropriation. It is opposed to the basic principles which attach this country to the motherland. The government propose to spend $500,000 in buying land at Washington before we even know what the functions of the proposed embassy are to be. So far as I can see, all that our ambassador at Washington is doing so far is making a lot of political speeches in the United States, in New York and other cities, doing this country more harm than good. Let me say to the Prime Minister that Canada has become to-day a happy hunting ground for American millionaires. They cross to Canada to the number of several hundreds, and seize our water-powers, our mines, and all our great natural resources. We have no money for unemployment relief in this country, Mr. Chairman. We have not one cent for the soldiers, but here we are proposing to spend $11,000,000 in the supplementary estimates. I am surprised at the Minister of Finance, who tries to stand for economy, supporting this utter folly. The Canadian ambassador at Washington will be nothing but a figure-head.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment on the grounds of plain, ordinary good business. The reason can be easily and briefly stated. The leader of the opposition moves to cut down this vote to $25,000, his object being, as stated by himself, that we should rent premises for $25,000 a year instead of buying premises for less than $500,000. On grounds of sound good business, may I suggest to the members of this committee that $25,000 a year would pay the interest and sinking fund and amortize the whole cost of the building in about twenty-five years, and at the end of that time we would own the building. But if we adopt the method proposed by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, we would pay $25,000 a year for eternity, and we would own nothing. By adopting the policy proposed by the government, we become the owners of property in a city in which the values are constantly increasing from year to year, a property in one of the best parts of that city, an asset that will remain at least at its present value, if it does not increase throughout the years. In addition, by virtue of the laws of the United States we shall be getting our property tax free, whereas if we rent accommodation, we shall undoubtedly have to pay taxes to someone else in the form of rent.

I desire to say only a word or two with reference to the argument of the hon. member for West Calgary. His style is always very interesting. His constant reiteration of the term "mortgaged premises," depreciating the importance, the standing, the prosperity and the dignity of his own people—

Mr. BENNETT: Is it true or not?

Mr. DUNNING: Well, if it is true, will my hon. friend say that the British government, which is to-day spending $1,500,000 in building an embassy at Washington, are doing the thing he accuses us of doing—the British government which has a very much heavier mortgage on its people proportionately than we in Canada have? Will my hon. friend say that the British government is disgracing its people?

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say disgrace. I never used the word. Take it back now.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend omitted to use the word disgrace, it is the only epithet he omitted.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not use the word. I rise to a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw.

Mr. DUNNING: I will, of course—

Mr. BENNETT: Well then, don't do it again.

Mr. DUNNING: —on the condition that members of the committee will read Hansard in the morning, where in the hon. member's remarks they will find many adjectives much stronger.

Mr. BENNETT: But not the word disgrace. They will not find that.

Mr. DUNNING: When my hon. friend throws at us the charge of acting in a manner unbefitting the decencies of nationhood, I do not think I am going too far in saying that he accuses us of putting up a false front because we would be putting up what he described as a mortgaged building. What terms, then, can he apply to Great Britain whose mortgage to-day is infinitely heavier than ours, but who at the same time is spending one and a half million dollars in the same city to erect a building befitting the dignity of that country in which to carry on the business of its citizens. Are they putting on a false front?

Mr. KAISER: How long have the British people had an ambassador at Washington?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is apparently not aware of the fact that Great Britain has owned another building at Washington for many years past, and they have found it necessary in recent years to make provision for a larger building rendered necessary by the increased responsibilities and increased work of the British ambassador to the United States.

I revert to my first argument. It is simply a matter of good business. The opposition in this House, with all their talk characterizing us as extravagant for proposing this vote, designed, of course, to go throughout the country, are themselves prepared to spend each year an amount which would be gone for good if spent in rent, but which if used in the way I have indicated would amortize the cost of the whole proposal inside of a period of about twenty years. I will leave it to the judgment of the Canadian people which is the businesslike proposition.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Would the minister just explain how he can amortize a debt of $500,000 in twenty years with annual payments of $25,000? Where does the interest come in?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is forgetting the Prime Minister's announcement that as a result of this proposed expenditure we can take $30,000 off from the ordinary vote for the maintenance of the legation. He forgets further that the total cost may not, and in all probability will not, reach the maximum figure of $500,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It will go over it. Show me a government estimate that does not.

Mr. IRVINE: This vote, Mr. Chairman, has developed into rather an important one. I shall have to vote for or against it, and as it has become so important I feel that I want to go on record, setting forth my own position personally. I want to say first, Mr. Chairman, that I felt a good deal of pride when Canada appointed a minister plenipotentiary to Washington. I realized at the time the appointment was made that there would be a good deal of expense connected therewith, and I must say that I regret that this vote should have brought about such a debate, and particularly do I regret the shade of politics that is coming into this discussion. I would like to see every hon. member of this House regard our minister at Washington as the representative of Canada, not as the representative of this party or that party, and I imagine that if I were in his position and heard suggestions in the House of Commons of a political character I would feel pretty much discouraged.

In reference to the vote, I believe that it can be justified as a business proposition. I do not claim to be very much of a business man, but I can see that if the purchase of the property is judiciously and wisely made we shall have to begin with a very good collateral, and I imagine that we will be able to save at least sufficient in rent to pay the interest on the investment, and even if we only do that we shall break even.

Some hon. members have said that we ought to follow the example of the United States, and others have said that we ought to follow the example of Great Britain. I am going to say that we ought to follow the example of Canada. We ought to stand upon our own dignity, and this is really a matter in which the dignity of Canada is involved. I do not think I will have much trouble in explaining to the people interested in my presence here my reason for voting for this item. I do not question the motives of the hon. member who moved the amendment. I have no doubt he can justify his position as well and perhaps better than I can justify mine. But we have undertaken to send our plenipotentiary to Washington, and we must provide in some way or another for an abode that will be a credit to the country he represents. It matters very little perhaps whether we pay rent or purchase, but I believe that in the last analysis the purchase will be our very best way out, and I hope the vote will carry and that we will not divide the House on a matter in which the dignity of Canada should be paramount.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I think that if any hon. member were outside of this House and had a proposal made to him that in view of our debt we should make this payment of half a million dollars, he would say that anyone who proposed such a thing was without an atom of sense or a suspicion of brains. No man in business, situated as this country is, relatively, would think of making an investment of this kind at this time. We are told as a reason—and it is a reason that is often given when someone wants to buy a piece of property which is beyond his means—that "this property will increase in value". When a man thinks a piece of property is going to increase in value he says, "I will go into the real estate business". I want to tell the House that the people of Canada are not satisfied that this country should go into the real estate business in Washington. I am constrained to say this because of something that appears in to-day's Toronto papers. An investigation is being held at the present time in Toronto into the Customs department. It has developed that the collector of customs, a most reputable man, a Liberal, Mr. Bertram, said to the commission that by reason of the fact that there is no proper examining warehouse in Toronto the country is losing immense sums of money. Further, Mr. Bertram is reported to have testified yesterday that if he carried out the law—and I am glad the Minister of Customs is here—as he was required to do, the port of Toronto would be out of business in two weeks. Chief Commissioner Brown said to him, "Well, you had better do it, in order to bring the country to its senses", or words to that effect, urging the collector to draw to the attention of this House and the government the necessity of providing accommodation. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott), knows that there is no accommodation there, and the deputy knows it. The minister knows that a lot of money is absolutely lost to the country by reason of the fact that goods are brought in without being examined and that no duty is paid upon them. This money could be saved to the country if the government provided a proper examining warehouse in Toronto, and yet they will not do it. But they are prepared to go to Washington and invest $500,000 in a building which they say will probably increase in value.

I think that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) reads to-morrow the two speeches that he made in the course of this debate he will be surprised. He started out by saying, "We have got to do this, to show the Americans a good front and to earn their good opinion"—in other words, "keep up with the Joneses." That proposition has ruined many a family and will ruin any nation. Later on he said, "since when have we begun to take lessons from the United States?" Those are the people whose good opinion he wants to win by putting up a building with a front, and at the same time he says, "Oh, we are not learning from the Americans, we are learning from England." I want to tell the Prime Minister that the American people will have no respect for the Canadian nation if, in our present financial condition, we borrow money—and that is a fair way to put it—to purchase this building in Washington. Let us remember the pledges that we gave when we asked our electors for their suffrage in the last election. In many cases it was no idle pledge; I believe the members of the House when they made the pledge intended to carry it out, and the pledge of economy was given. The statement was made to the electors, "We believe that if ever there was a time when stringent and drastic national economy was necessary, this is the time, and Canada should have a government which would carry on the affairs of the country economically and avoiding undue expense to the people." The practice of economy has been urged upon this country by all those whose opinions we value, presidents of banks, general managers of financial institutions, and so on, and here is an opportunity to exercise economy. But now we are asked to rush into this unjustifiable, unreasonable expenditure. Did we ever have a representative at Washington? Yes, we did. We had three or four men, any one of whom—without being personal in this matter—would compare favourably with the present incumbent of the office, His Excellency. We had a commission of business men at Washington at the time of the war. It was necessary, for there was tremendous business between Canada and the United States then, more than there will be for a long time to come. Who were those men? Lloyd Harris, a fellow director with Vincent Massey of the Massey Harris Company and the president of several other companies; J. Allen Ross, president of the Wrigley Company;

Ross McMaster, president of the Steel Company of Canada, and Frank Rolph, president of the Rolph Clark Stone Company. Those men were spending on their country's business all their time in Washington with the exception of journeys from time to time on business connected with the conduct of the war. These men had an office not very far from the White House. It was not pretentious, but it was suitable for the business of Canada. Those men rented a house and lived together in it, but in so doing it was not thought they were not representing Canada and the people of Canada as they should be represented at that time. I am not arguing that our minister in Washington should live in a house that does not do him honour and credit; but it is not necessary to spend money on a fine house, either by way of rent or purchase, in order to gain the respect of that community. I think we might well make a start at Washington in a sane, sensible way that will win the good opinion not only of our own people but of the people of the United States.

I regard this as one of the most important votes that could come before parliament this session. I believe the attention of the people of Canada is centred on what we are doing in this respect. In this connection I cannot help making a personal reference. In my early life Hart Almerrin Massey, the grandfather of our minister at Washington, was one of the very best friends that I ever had. I was intimate with him and I owe to him my first start in life. I believe that he would turn in his grave at a proposition such as this. His grandson cannot carry the judgment of those who know him well if he is prompting the government to undertake this unnecessary and unreasonable expense. Therefore I ask the government to reconsider this vote in order to find out what the people of Canada really think about the proposed expenditure. It is not absolutely necessary; that is certain. After all, it is simply a question of values. I plead with the government to consider this matter on a business basis, take the opinion of some of our prominent business men who wish this country well. Then I am sure the government will come to agree with me when I say: Let us avoid this unnecessary expenditure.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, every time a discussion on any subject takes place in this House we hear hon. members from the government side telling us about what some old time Conservative said or did in the past. I know the Conservative party got contaminated by contact with the Liberal party during the war, and as a consequence they made many mistakes. I am not criticizing those mistakes made in war time, but I know that that was the only time when the Conservative party did make any mistakes. However, we do not propose that the party opposite to-day should continue making mistakes simply because we made a few in the past; for two wrongs do not make a right. There is no need for a Canadian minister in Washington. What we should do is to appoint there a real Canadian trained in the business world who could sit in with the British ambassador and help us in the very best way possible. But no, we must have a minister plenipotentiary in Washington, and I presume we shall have to buy and furnish a building in keeping with the hon. gentleman's position such as he might have if he remained in the city of Toronto—a building worth about $50,000. I know Washington well, I have been there many times, and when I hear hon. members talking about the appreciation in the value of real estate there, I say to them that Washington is as dead as Ottawa—and hon. gentlemen know what that is.

The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman) has mentioned the fact that the government did not build a customs house in Toronto five years ago when they came into power. That would have cost about $500,000, and, as Mr. Bertram, the head of the customs branch in Toronto has said, a suitable building would have saved this country a million dollars. To-day you are going back on the city of Toronto in that respect, you are going back on the improvement of the harbour, you are going back on the building of a sea wall; but when it is proposed to spend $500,000 on a building in Washington the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) is as dumb as a clam, although when we ask for any money for revenue-producing public works he says, "You will have to see somebody else."

An hon. MEMBER: Where is Toronto?

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Never mind where it is; we pay our way. As I say, when there is a proposal before the House to spend half a million dollars in Washington the hon. Minister of Finance sits in his seat very quietly, but when money is required for absolutely necessary public buildings in this country he tells us how difficult it is to get any money. As business men we know how much we have to pay in taxes—

Mr. ROBB: I have taken some of them away.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): —and the people of this country can stand very little more taxation. What we need to-day in this Dominion is an economical business administration, not the extravagant administration that the country has been burdened with from the day you came into power. There has been no consideration for the business world since you took office. You have pandered to the faddists from the day you took possession of the treasury benches, and I suppose you will continue to do so until you are deprived of your seats and a sane business-like party—the Conservative party—forms an administration that will do something for Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, three questions were asked me which I shall endeavour to answer. The first question submitted by the Prime Minister was whether or not in my capacity as a director of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company I opposed the construction of the building yonder. I can assure him that I did not; I supported it to the extent of my ability. Nothing could more aptly illustrate the point I desire to make than the history of the enterprise in respect to that building. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has more insurance on Canadian lives than any other insurance company in Canada, and they found it desirable to invest in this building a portion of the premiums paid by those policyholders. But during the early days of its existence the company occupied those little premises down on Elgin street that are so small that I suppose people would think it impossible for the business of the company to be there transacted. In other words, in its early days the company occupied a very insignificant structure, but as it developed and it became apparent that the magnitude of its business demanded better accommodation, the company built the present premises on Wellington street.

The point we have endeavoured to make is that in the early stage of our career among the nations in Washington we should be content to make our way as other nations have done—occupying premises in keeping with our condition and the effort we were making to establish ourselves. That is what is done in ordinary business by ordinary people. It is an exemplification of the old saying, that children creep before they walk. It is fitting that Canada should emulate the policy of great enterprises, namely, in the early days establish themselves in keeping with their ability financially, and then develop their premises as their resources increase. The building that the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company spent over two millions on at the corner of Wellington and Bank represents the company to-day with assets of two billion dollars; the small property on Elgin street represented the company when its assets were something over a hundred million dollars. I mention that because it clearly illustrates the position of this country.

The second question to which attention was directed was that I had said I did not favour an embassy. My views are well known. I do not believe Sir Robert Borden when he desired to establish a representative of Canada in Washington had in mind any such pretentious effort as is now being made. The desire arose out of the trade commissions that we had in Washington during the war. I have always felt, and I still strongly believe, that Canada should have an active trade commissioner in Washington, a gentleman who, if you wish, should occupy a position similar to that which Mr. Larkin occupies in London. He is High Commissioner, and there might well be a high commissioner at Washington who would devote his attention to the development of our trade. At this moment we are the second best customer of the United States and our effort should be to induce them to buy more of our goods. I do not think it is consistent with the position we occupy financially and with the balance of trade as it now is—that is, our buying ever-increasing quantities from them and selling them correspondingly smaller quantities, except of raw material and partially fabricated goods—that we should establish an embassy there. What we ought to establish is a trade commissioner's office, a high commissioner's office, if you will. Just as we have in England various trade commissioners, with a high commissioner at the head, so we should establish in Washington, not an embassy but a trade commissioner's office. We do not need diplomats but trade commissioners. We require men who will extend our commerce and not men who will make us known as the occupants of fine premises. That I believe is the view which the major number of our business men in Canada entertain in this regard. I have always believed that it was the duty of this country to have a trade commissioner in Washington; it seems to me that we have suffered a considerable loss because of that deficiency. But when we speak of an ambassador and a trade commissioner in the same breath we are confusing terms and making a great mistake.

It has been suggested that by reason of rentals we shall be able to own the premises outright after twenty years. Let me offer this comment on that suggestion. I directed the attention of the House last year, as I did many years ago, to the fact that in Ottawa from 1896 to 1911, and further from 1911 to 1917, a continuous effort was made to construct new departmental buildings on the other side of the Supreme court chambers. We have been content to pay rentals in this city aggregating several hundred thousands of dollars per annum, and we have never attempted to apply the principle expounded by the Minister of Railways to-night. In other words, during the last few years we have been renting buildings to provide post office accommodation in many communities instead of putting up new structures in Ontario and in other places, for the reason that we would not undertake such construction. When the Minister of Railways in his glib manner passed over this matter as lightly as he did, he overlooked the fact that the doctrine he preaches we have declined to follow. No business man goes and borrows half a million dollars rather than pay rent if he finds himself burdened with fixed charges amounting to over $120,000,000 per annum. If he finds himself in that position he is content to make temporary arrangements until his condition improves, because he knows that he can make expenditures that will not involve any sacrifice.

Now is it desirable to have a new public building erected in Toronto or an embassy in Washington? Which is more desirable—to have post offices in Canada or a $500,000 building in a foreign country? If the principle were sound, that we should put up buildings rather than rent them, we should not be suffering to-day from any lack of accommodation in this regard. I recall the circumstances mentioned by an hon. member from Toronto with respect to the examining warehouse. I can recall that efforts were made during the war to obtain that building, but these efforts were unsuccessful. In this city hundreds of thousands of dollars are being paid out in rentals and we are not building, simply for the reason that we do not feel ourselves in a position to do so. We are hoping against hope that we may be able so to improve our condition as to be in a position to engage in construction. Tell the electors of the country, the taxpayers, that we cannot afford to put up new post offices where they are demanded—although, by the way, we are building a new one in Regina at a cost of $150,000—that we cannot supply the needed facilities in connection with the public service; that we cannot increase the salaries of the mail clerks and letter carriers: tell the electors this and then ask them whether in their opinion it is desirable to pay half a million dollars for a building in Washington as against renting premises for a temporary period. Put that case before the people and see what they will say. I believe that when the experiment has been made it will be found that the embassy as such will not satisfy the people. We want trade commissioners. It is not gold lace we want but a gold balance of trade in this country. We want increased exports and decreased imports in our trade relations with the United States. If they insist on our buying their manufactured goods, then they must be prepared to receive more of our wheat and cattle than they are now buying. They have shut us out of their market altogether and they want us to import goods from them. Their mass production is having an injurious effect on the industrial life of this country, and what we require is a trade commissioner to represent us in that country. But what are we doing? We are proposing to take half a million dollars, wrung from the taxpayers of the country, for the purpose of setting up an establishment of this description. We have no great accumulations of wealth in this country; we have no great resources to draw upon; and the debt of Canada is more staggering to us than the national debt is to any of the older countries. Every thoughtful man who analyses the situation knows it. I am not opposed to Canada maintaining a dignified position among the other nations, but let me impress upon hon. members the fact that dignity is never measured in terms of dollars and cents. You cannot measure the natural latent dignity of a man by his bank account; the value of citizenship has never yet been determined by any such means.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Nor can you measure his worth by his arrogance and his manifestations of ignorance. You cannot do it either way. The importance of Canada in the eyes of foreign countries will not be gauged by the premises we occupy; and just as Mr. Page said in the letter read by the Prime Minister, that it was a poor compliment to England for the United States to occupy the premises it did in England, so I say it is a poor compliment to Canada that the American ambassador should be willing to maintain an office in yonder building, occupying a flat or a rented house. When Canada finds herself complimented in the manner suggested by Mr. Page, then we will be more ready to consider such an application as we have before us to-night.

I have endeavoured to answer the questions submittted to me. The answers I have given may not commend themselves to the committee, but at least they are answers, whether satisfactory or not. When we are asked to undertake something of this magnitude we should know first whether our circumstances and our resources will warrant it. Mexico has been referred to. I took the trouble to send for a reference book from which I learn that Mexico's debt is less than $300,000,000 while her population is 16,000,000. Yet Mexico, according to observations made in this House last year or the year before, acquired premises in Washington only recently. If the diplomatic relations of Mexico with the United States could continue under such conditions for so long a time why cannot Canada be content to rent a building in Washington? Why has the government not adopted the policy of erecting buildings in the city of Ottawa and elsewhere in Canada if that policy is considered so sound? During all the days of buoyant revenue that policy has been ignored. These are questions that demand an explanation.

There is one other question which was suggested and that was that the increase in the value of real estate would compensate the country for going into this business. If the Canadian people are going into the real estate business, I do not believe they will choose an embassy for an experiment with which to start. I can only ask the Minister of Agriculture, in view of certain observations which he has made, whether he thinks the farmers on the plains, the stock growers, will be better satisfied to have half a million dollars spent in Washington rather than have that amount spent in endeavouring to improve the pure bred stock, for which assistance has been cut off this year.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will attend to both of them.

Mr. BENNETT: I am pleased to hear the minister say that, but the Minister of Finance will probably have something to say about it. That is the real position; can we afford to do this? Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce do it? That successful manufacturer did not build his business in just that way; he did not suddenly blossom out into a great manufacturer but proceeded gradually to develop that business which is now one of the greatest in the country; may it long prosper. That has been the case with respect to every Canadian enterprise of which I know which has really made progress, and we must follow that practice in the United States if we are going to make the progress I hope to see. I will vote for the amendment and against the adoption of this item more gladly than I have voted against any contemplated expenditure in this parliament under any circumstance, because I am satisfied that the people of this country in their present condition, with the burden of taxation they have to carry and with the unamortized buildings in this city which are absorbing hundreds of thousands of dollars every year, are not anxious to have this experiment tried abroad. I do think in the end it will be found that if Canada is to make progress at Washington we must develop there a great trade commission which will help increase our trade and change the balance as it exists between the United States and Canada. That is what we need, not gold lace, as I stated, but gold dollars flowing into this country under a proper balance of trade.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am opposed to this expenditure because I regard it as a breach of faith with the members of this House and the people of this country, and I will tell you why I make that statement. During the years of the war we were told by the governments that they could not engage in this or that expenditure, which was admitted to be necessary, because the money was required for other purposes. All parties agreed on that, and members representing constituencies all over the country did not press their demands. That they had just demands was admitted, but our financial conditions were such that those demands should not be pressed, and that was not done. But we were told after the war was over and in the years immediately following that those works, which were acknowledged to be necessary would receive consideration. Therefore I could not conscientiously support this expenditure in Washington in view of the implied promise and definite understanding that works in this country would be gone on with, which understanding is still being disregarded while the works are not being undertaken. I can see only one reason why this expenditure should be made. We will have a deficit of several million dollars this year; we will have to get the money somewhere, and perhaps the Minister of Finance will go to the United States to borrow it. In that case, I can understand him putting on a good front. Many years ago an old friend of mine gave me this advice; he said, "If you go out to borrow money, put on your best clothes and look as well as you possibly can." So if we have to go to the United States to borrow money perhaps that would justify the government in this expenditure, and that may be the reason the government is putting on such a magnificent front in Washington.

Amendment (Mr. Guthrie) negatived: Yeas, 54; Nays, 90.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—salaries and expenses of the Paris agency office, $45,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the object of this vote?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is to meet the expenses of the office in Paris, which has been in existence for many years. The increase is accounted for in part by the necessity of acquiring further premises, and some alterations are also required.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Where is this agency quartered, in a rented building?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On the Boulevard des Capucins. The premises are rented.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How long have they been renting these premises?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: About fifteen years I think.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I ask what use we are making of the Scribe hotel?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I understand it the Canadian National railways have their headquarters in the building, which is no longer in the possession of the Canadian government. Apparently the company made a mistake in selling the building; it would have been much better to have kept it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Scribe hotel is still operating in the same building?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): You made two mistakes; you made a mistake when you bought it, and you made a mistake when you sold it.

Item agreed to.

To provide for representation at Geneva, $12,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is in connection with the League of Nations, is it not?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. J. W Edwards.]

Grant to the Interparliamentary Union for Peace, $200.

Mr. CHURCH: What is this for? I fail to see any advantage to the people of this country in this expenditure.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to know what this Interparliamentary Union amounts to?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is a vote of $200.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why not cut it out?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is an international organization, and different countries contribute something towards it. A $200 contribution from Canada to an interparliamentary association towards the cause of peace ought not to be amiss.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is precisely it. Canada is contributing $200 toward the cause of peace. That is the Prime Minister's assertion. It seems to me absurd. This is an old organization that is practically superseded by the League of Nations, as I understand the matter, and we simply continue to give a few dollars out in this way. If these were a few hundred thousand dollars to be expended in any reasonable way in the cause of peace, I would vote for it; but here we are giving small amounts to some half obsolete organization.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Department of Labour—Annuities Act, $20,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is an increase of $15,000 in the administration of the Annuities Act. What is the ground for that?

Mr. HEENAN: The amount is the same as that voted last year. There was $5,000 in the main estimates and $15,000 in the supplementary last year. It is the same this year.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is an increase of $15,000 shown.

Mr. HEENAN: In the main estimates.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What steps are being taken to popularize this service?

Mr. HEENAN: This amount is practically for that purpose. We started a campaign with that object in view last month, and up to date the services of two stenographers have been necessary to answer inquiries made in connection with it. There were 4,000 inquiries last month.

Mr. BENNETT: The advertising is carried out in newspapers with political affiliations. That is the main thing.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has any special appeal been made through the post offices?

Mr. HEENAN: This applies to newspaper advertising.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What has been the effect of your advertising?

Mr. HEENAN: There have been 4,000 inquiries.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What has been the actual effect in the matter of increasing the sale of annuities?

Mr. HEENAN: It takes quite a while after we start to advertise to get inquiries in and to send information out before we really sell an annuity.

Item agreed to.

Administration, Employment Offices Coördination Act, $17,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What steps are being taken to carry forward the actual service to industrial conditions in this country? It is all very well to have offices to which employers may appeal for help, but if we are to have a solution of our labour problems, especially as regards seasonal labour, it seems to me that this department ought to formally work out some scheme for correlating winter and summer industries in such a way that one may dovetail into the other, and thus provide regular work for the men who need it. I would ask the minister whether anything of this kind is in contemplation?

Mr. HEENAN: As I understand it, the offices are just for that purpose, and my information is that they move on an average of 200,000 men each year from one place to the other. About 50 per cent of these men travel one hundred miles back and forth. I realize, of course, what the hon. member has in mind. It is one of the means of contributing towards regular employment. But the difficulties in the way are many. In the first place the greatest difficulty is to persuade men that they ought to move from one place to another in order to get seasonal employment. I know because I have had a great deal of experience in that direction myself. For instance, take railroad men. They are employed during the busy season, but when work slackens it is difficult to get them to move to another place where there is more traffic. I can easily understand how difficult it is to get miners, for example, when mines close down, to move to the wheat fields or to the lumber camps. We shall have to carry on an educational campaign to bring home to the men the fact that this is a country of seasonal employment.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has the minister done anything in the way of an educational campaign among the employers so that the industry itself may be regularized?

Mr. HEENAN: I was just going to add that we must try and get the employers to look for their labour to those parts of the country where men are out of work instead of bringing in more immigrants from European countries. But that is a work that cannot be done in a minute.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why do you let them go to Europe to bring in immigrants when you have men unemployed here?

Item agreed to.

Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, $20,000.

Mr. CHURCH: The Privy Council has decided that this act is ultra vires of this parliament. Why, therefore, is this vote continued year after year?

Mr. HEENAN: The act is not ultra vires of this parliament. Very good work is being accomplished under it in settling disputes in this country. It is worth much more than $20,000 a year.

Mr. HARRIS: What work was done in this connection by the department last year?

Mr. HEENAN: We received fourteen applications, ten boards were granted, and in each case a settlement was reached.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How much money was spent?

Mr. HEENAN: For the nine months to the end of the year $8,521. There are a few boards still sitting.

Item agreed to.

Joint Industrial Councils, $3,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There has been an item in the estimates year after year with regard to joint industrial councils, and the previous Minister of Labour failed to show us that anything much was being accomplished in this direction. We have had difficulties in connection with the postal workers from time to time, and a good many disputes with various other branches of the civil service. It does seem to me that the only way in which we can have any freedom from friction, and in which we can develop efficiency, is by the establishment of something like joint councils. So far from undertaking to do anything of this nature in outside industrial establishments, we have not even done anything in that direction with our own civil service, and I would like to have a statement from the minister as to what he proposes to do.

Mr. HEENAN: As my hon. friend no doubt knows, this vote arises out of the recommendations of the commission on industrial relations which sat in this country after the war. I understand that there was a very much larger sum originally granted for the establishment of these industrial councils, but apparently the idea was not very favourably received in the country. I cannot say at the moment just what I intend to do, because I have not had time to go thoroughly into the matter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is a very unsatisfactory statement, it seems to me, to come from the minister. When there was a big trouble in the labour field in Canada just after the war, an industrial commission was appointed and considerable expense was gone to, and certain recommendations were brought in for the securing of better relations between employers and employees. Among the recommendations was one that there should be established in the industrial life of this country an arrangement known as joint councils, on which the representatives of the employees should sit jointly with the employers. We were told that this was to be a partial solution at least for our problems. The Department of Labour exists for this purpose; it is absolutely failing to do anything in a large way along these lines, and the minister tells us that he has not thought about the matter. Further than that—I want to put it very definitely—why can we not have joint councils in the postal service and in other departments of the civil service? We should begin at home. We ought not to slide this over year after year without making some definite effort to carry out the recommendations of that commission, and also to act to a certain extent at least as a model employer.

Item agreed to.

Technical Education Act, $4,000.

Mr. BRADY: What is the nature and scope of the Technical Education Act, and how is this money going to be applied?

Mr. HEENAN: There is a grant of $1,100,000 extending over a period of ten years, under which any province that takes up technical education receives a grant from the federal treasury on a fifty-fifty basis.

Mr. BRADY: To what extent did the province of British Columbia avail itself of this grant last year?

Mr. HEENAN: British Columbia got approximately $53,000.

Item agreed to.

Labour—salaries—
To increase the salary of H. H. Ward, deputy minister of labour, to $8,000 per annum	$ 2,000
To provide for two clerks, grade 4, in lieu of two clerks, grade 3	540
To provide for one chief clerk	3,000
	$5,540

Mr. GARDINER: I notice in the estimates this year that the salaries of several of the deputies have been increased to the extent of $2,000, which is a pretty large increase. I think we should have some explanation as to why these increases have been granted.

Mr. HEENAN: There were three deputies whose salaries were increased. The Deputy Minister of Labour was one. He was $2,000 below the others, and this item is intended to equalize the salaries of the deputies.

Mr. GARDINER: How long is it since he was appointed?

Mr. HEENAN: I think he has been about five years deputy, and about fourteen years in the service.

Mr. BENNETT: Upon what principle is the increase made?

Mr. HEENAN: He is the deputy in the best department in the government, and in order to equalize the salaries we have made this increase.

Mr. BENNETT: There are other officials in the employ of the government who have not been so well treated. I think there should be some uniformity in the matter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me if we are going to pay salaries of $8,000 a year to the deputies we ought to get something more from the Department of Labour than we are getting at the present time. Before the present minister took office we had had year after year a steady decrease of the amount expended by this department. Not only that, but there was a limitation of the activities of the department. As a matter of fact this department is more or less of a sham to-day and is not doing the work it is designed to do. It is not to any large extent meeting the needs of labour in this country, and I think that should be clearly recognized. I do not want to do anything that will still further put labour back, or put the department back, but if we have a Labour department I think it should be made worth while. There is no use having a full-fledged department with a large staff of officials unless we are going to get some service from it, and unless labour is going to get more than it is getting at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: The chairman of the Civil Service Commission has the rank of a deputy minister and receives only $7,000. The Clerk of the Privy Council and the Deputy Minister of Labour both receive $8,000. Will anybody who has any understanding of the nature of the work of the two offices suggest that Doctor Roche should receive only $7,000, while these other gentlemen receive $8,000 each? The Clerk of the Senate has the rank of a deputy and receives $6,000. I do not know what the salary of the Clerk of the House of Commons is, but I suppose it is the same. Doctor Roche's salary has not been raised, while the salary of these other officials has been increased. Why should the government single out some people? Is it because their appointments go back to certain dates? I think we should have some answer from the government as to why these invidious distinctions have been made.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. HEENAN: I am talking about the Labour estimates now.

Mr. RINFRET: I think my hon. friend will agree with me that the Civil Service Commission comes rather under parliament than under the government.

Mr. BENNETT: It originates with the government.

Mr. RINFRET: As a member of the House, not as a member of the government, I say that I would be in favour of raising not only Doctor Roche's salary but those of the other two commissioners. The Civil Service Commission is rather under parliament than under the government.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who then is going to take the initiative in procuring a raise? No ordinary member can move to increase salaries.

Mr. RINFRET: Nothing has been suggested in regard to this particular matter up to tonight, and perhaps I can gather from what hon. members are now stating—although the members present are not very numerous—that it is the impression of parliament that the Civil Service Commissioners are underpaid.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly their duties are equally onerous with those of the deputies whose salaries have been raised.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Probably we can dismiss the Civil Service Commission and pay the $300,000 into the treasury.

Mr. RINFRET: We will come to the vote for the Civil Service Commission very soon, if the House will pass this item.

Mr. IRVINE: What is the entire cost of the Labour department?

Mr. HEENAN: $203,000.

Mr. IRVINE: Does the minister really think the work the department is doing is worth while?

Mr. HEENAN: The Labour department is the best department in the whole government

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I do not think we should pass this item when we have a representative of the Labour party telling us how worthless that department is.

Mr. HEENAN: The labour men generally consider the Labour department is worth while and think it is doing good work.

Mr. GARDINER: The answer of the Minister of Labour is not satisfactory. We have asked for information as to the activities of this department and we have received no information. I think he should tell us about the activities of his department. We are not justified in passing the item until we get the information from him.

Mr. HEENAN: I thought it was intended more as a joke.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not joking. I did not say the department was not worth while. I tried to say the department was not serving the purpose that such a department should serve. I think of the manifold activities of the Agriculture department, for example, and contrast them with the meagre work carried on in the Labour department. It is not my idea to lessen the work but rather to increase it. We ought to know what is being done and, more than that, what is proposed to be done in the extension of this department.

Mr. HEENAN: I thought most hon. members would have read the departmental report. We have an annuity branch, which I think is doing good work. We administer the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Did you do anything with the fruit combine?

Mr. HEENAN: We broke up the fruit combine in western Canada, and those implicated were fined $200,000. Only the other day I received a cheque for over $77,000 on account. The department also administers the Technical Education Act, the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, the Conciliation and Labour Act, and we see to it that the fair wages policy is observed on government contracts.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Has the department so increased its activities as to necessitate the extra expenditure for the deputy?

Mr. HEENAN: For many years the deputy was paid $8,000. We do intend to increase our activities. This year the administration of the Old Age Pensions Act will add to our responsibilities. We have also under consideration the desirability of extending the annuity system. Only those in contact with the Labour department really know what heavy responsibilities and long hours the deputy has.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister mentioned the fair wage policy in connection with government contracts. What steps does he take to see that proper wages are paid on such contracts?

Mr. HEENAN: We have fair wage officers to investigate and ascertain the prevailing wages in the district in which the contract is to be let.

Mr. GARDINER: Do these officers get information from the various departments when they let contracts?

Mr. HEENAN: All the departments apply to my department when they are about to let contracts.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What work is the department doing in connection with unemployment? I know in other years it has had a good deal to do.

Mr. HEENAN: The policy has not been changed. Under the order in council where the cost of looking after unemployment becomes too heavy for the local authorities, and the provincial government agrees to pay one-third, we also contribute one-third. As an indication that conditions of employment are improving, our expenditure has gradually diminished; in 1920-21 we expended $341,000, as against only $76,000 for the last fiscal year. At the outset this year very few applications came in from the municipalities and none at all from any of the provincial governments, but about a week ago applications were received from Ontario and Manitoba.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister says the policy has not been changed. According to that, whenever municipalities make application should not they almost automatically receive assistance?

Mr. HEENAN: No, there must first be an investigation to ascertain whether the burden is too heavy for the municipal authorities to shoulder.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the minister of opinion that unemployment is really less than it was the year before? And in what trades is there unemployment?

Mr. HEENAN: The unemployment situation is greatly relieved. In 1922 the index basis was 78.9 as compared with 95.4 during the past year. That embraces all trades. In manufacturing it was 73 in 1922, and 90.7 in 1927, or an increase of 17.7. Some municipalities have actually written to say that they do not need assistance and that will indicate the improvement that has taken place.

Mr. GARDINER: There has been a big decrease in unemployment, but in 1926 there was still a good deal. Can the minister say what classes of business are mostly affected?

Mr. HEENAN: I cannot give that information now.

Item agreed to.

Public printing and stationery—salaries, including $500 to Fred Cook as secretary to the government printing and stationery committee, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $77,445; contingencies, $10,500.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I notice in several of these items the phrase, "notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act." We are steadily undermining the act and very definite reasons should be given for this.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): This is an additional allowance paid to Mr. Fred Cook. He was regularly appointed to the Printing Bureau through the commission, but as secretary to the government printing and stationery committee he receives the additional grant.

Mr. GARDINER: He receives his ordinary salary and this is for extra services rendered?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Civil Service Act states that no civil servant may receive two salaries; hence the "notwithstanding."

Item agreed to.

Printing, binding and distributing the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, English and French editions, $125,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the minister tell the committee when the revised statutes will be ready?

Mr. RINFRET: That question was put to the Solicitor General yesterday and I do not quite recollect the answer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will not get them until next year.

Item agreed to.

Expenses under the Naturalization Acts, 1914, and 1920, $10,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would not that amount be largely done away with if we had the revision of the Naturalization Act?

Mr. RINFRET: We cannot have that this year. We will have to print new forms, and this item is to provide for the printing of forms used in applying for naturalization, and for the expenses before the courts. I may say that there is another item in addition to this in the supplementary estimates, amounting to a few thousand dollars. On account of the revision of the statutes we expect we will have to have new forms printed, and we are asking a larger amount. If we were changing the proceedings my hon. friend's remarks would be correct, but it is not the intention to do so this year.

Item agreed to.

Dominion—Provincial conference, $10,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As I understand it, it was announced a year ago that the conference would be called to deal with the question of the reform of the Senate. Later on the question of the minimum wage was referred to the conference as well, and I think we should now be told what will be the scope of that conference.

Mr. RINFRET: I may say it is the intention of the government to send invitations to all provincial premiers for a conference this fall, and at the same time they will be asked to mention any matter with which they would like the conference to deal. Any hon. member who would like any question brought before that conference might well bring it to my attention.

Mr. GARDINER: I will take advantage of the minister's offer right now, and suggest that the conference discuss the possibility of eliminating the Senate.

Mr. RINFRET: I will not fail to see that that is included in the agenda, but of course as to the result I will make no pledge.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Could we not have a statement of what the government propose to place on the agenda?

Mr. RINFRET: We are going to take up the matter as soon as the session is over, but I could not give my hon. friend any positive data at this time.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the appointment of Miss Yvonne Coutu as a stenographer, grade 2, at $1,260 per annum from April 1, 1927, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary.

To provide for a stenographer, grade 3, in lieu of a stenographer, grade 2.

To provide for a stenographer, grade 2, in lieu of a stenographer, grade 1.

To provide for the salary of a typist, grade 2.

To provide for the salary of a clerk, grade 3, $3,840.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps the Secretary of State would be good enough to say what is the special case of Miss Yvonne Coutu?

Mr. RINFRET: I may explain that Miss Coutu is a lady in Ottawa who was for a number of years private secretary to Lady Laurier. She naturally has a very extensive knowledge of social life in Ottawa, and can be of great use to the department in that respect. We decided we might well ask the committee to pass this item.

Item agreed to.

Dominion—Provincial conference — further amount required, $15,000.

Mr. IRVINE: Why are these amounts separated?

Mr. RINFRET: Because the main estimates were prepared in January, and we found later the vote would not be large enough.

Item agreed to.

Expenses under the Naturalization Acts, 1914, and 1920—further amount required, $5,000.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): I would like to ask the minister if any reduction will be made in the cost of naturalization to those Canadians who went over to the United States and have since returned. A great many have gone away from the maritimes, and in order to find employment in the United States they have had to take out naturalization papers; when they return here they find that they have a hard road to travel before they can become Canadian citizens again, and I think we should make it as easy as possible for them.

Mr. RINFRET: There is nothing we would not do for the maritime provinces this year. The matter is under consideration, but I understand it was taken up at the Imperial conference, and there might be a little difficulty. If we can overcome that you may be sure that your friends will be given every possible attention.

Item agreed to.

Adjustment of war claims—Secretary of State, $25,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: There is an increase of over $8,000 which I would like explained.

Mr. RINFRET: I believe the main reason for the increase is because we require a little more money in that branch of the service than was provided last year. Part of that $25,000 is to cover the deficiency of last year. There is really no increase, and we may not require the whole amount.

Civil Service Commission—salaries, $198,535; contingencies, $45,000.

Mr. IRVINE: I wish to ask the minister one or two questions in regard to certain classes of civil servants. I am not sure that I am bringing this matter up on the proper item, but I had to bring it up some time and I may as well do it now. There was a reclassification, I understand, in 1919 when certain senior employees were classified as senior clerks at a minimum salary of $1,320, and a maximum of $1,680. Then there was another reclassification in 1924, when the senior employees were divided into two grades —grade III with a minimum salary of $1,260 and a maximum of $1,500, grade IV with a minimum salary of $1,500 and a maximum of $1,800. Now the reclassification of 1927 is offering I think, an increase of $120 to grade III. The point I want the minister to give attention to is this: When the fourth grade was formed there were a great many senior clerks who were receiving almost the maximum under grade III but they were left there and were not passed on to grade IV, and the result is that they do not receive any of the increase which is being given this year. I should like the minister to give me an explanation in regard to that and to indicate if there is any way to meet that situation.

Mr. RINFRET: We are dealing now with the vote for the salaries of the members of the Civil Service Commission. Perhaps we might pass this item, and then go on to deal with the subject of the revision of civil service salaries.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not want to make this speech again, so I hope my hon. friend will remember what I have said.

Mr. RINFRET: I will memorize every word that my hon. friend has said so that he need not repeat his speech.

Item agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

Civil Service salary revision—to provide for flat increases to the civil service, both inside and outside, $2,700,000.

Mr. RINFRET: I have been asked to make a short statement about the revision of civil service salaries, and I desire to do so now. I may say that before recommending this revision to the House, we had to take into consideration the three main aspects of the question. One was the total sum of money that should be expended; the second was the classification of the civil service as it now exists; and the third was the previous increases which have taken place since 1924. The high cost of living bonuses were withdrawn in some cases, they were partly absorbed or withdrawn in others, and in still other cases they were prolonged on a scale which provided for gradual disappearance. The committee dealing with the revision of salaries did not think it should recommend any increases without taking into consideration the absorption or removing of the bonus in certain cases, and the retention of the bonus in other cases. The recommendations of the associations of civil servants all over the country which met us on this matter, and the recommendations as well from the Civil Service Association in Ottawa, simmered down to a proposal that there should be a flat increase, instead of having increases varying according to the different classes in the service. Other proposals were considered. Some argued that the increase should go only to the lower classes because they needed the help more. Other representations came to us rather in the spirit that we should recognize the special knowledge and aptitude of technical and other specially qualified men of the service. I wish to point out at the start and to have it well understood, that we are not coming with a proposal which sprung from the earth, if I may use that expression, but that we had to consider quite a number of proposals before we adopted the one that I now lay before the committee. However, the general sentiment of the associations of the civil service was to the effect that a flat increase would be the more satisfactory to the civil servants—a flat increase placed very much on the same basis, I would say, as that which obtains in labour unions, where no difference is made in the treatment accorded but where the same salary or wage applies to every man in the one class irrespective of the quantity or quality of work that he performs.

Mr. BENNETT: May I make a suggestion to my hon. friend? It is a very thin House, and I happen to know that there are a very large number of members who would like to hear the minister's statement, and I should not like him to be asked to repeat it tomorrow. Would it not be desirable therefore, to go on with something else so that the minister can have a full House, or a full committee, to hear what he has to say, and thus save him the trouble of making a second speech?

Mr. RINFRET: I thank my hon. friend for his suggestion that a large House is waiting to hear me.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a fact.

Mr. RINFRET: Then I will ask that the item stand.

Item stands.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Does not the disposal of waste paper come under your department?

Mr. RINFRET: I might tell my hon. friend that when a motion is made for an item to stand that ends the discussion. The matter of the waste paper contracts could not possibly come under the item of salaries for the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): It always used to come in under the estimates of the Minister of Labour. I have been watching the items right along because I should like to have some questions answered and to obtain some information.

Mr. RINFRET: The estimates to which my hon. friend refers have been passed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What department does the matter come under?

Mr. RINFRET: The Printing Bureau.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Can we not refer back to an item in the estimates concerning the Printing Bureau?

Mr. RINFRET: I am in the hands of the committee, but I would submit that the Printing Bureau estimates have been passed long ago.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I know that, but it is not an uncommon thing to have a reference back.

Mr. RINFRET: All right, if that is the will of the committee.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It will only take a moment.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): I simply wish to get some information. Have you any information as to the price you got for waste paper during the last five years?

Mr. RINFRET: My hon. friend will appreciate the fact that I had my officers with me about half an hour ago; they are gone now. If my hon. friend would ask a general question about this contract, I am in a position to give him the information, but if he wants figures I cannot give them to him now.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Has it been customary to advertise for tenders?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Did you advertise for tenders this year?

Mr. RINFRET: I did, and I will explain under what conditions. This question is familiar to me because—

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): And to me too.

Mr. RINFRET: —because it occupied my attention for a while. When I came into the government last fall, it was represented to me that Mr. Betcherman, who had the waste paper contract at the time, had lost quite a lot of money in trying to perform the work and pay the amount that he had tendered at some two years ago. I would remind my hon. friend that this is a very big contract. The tender is for a flat amount, and it is a kind of gamble for the tenderer as to the amount of paper he will collect. He has to collect the waste paper every month, or oftener, from each department, and it is therefore very difficult to estimate the quantity he will collect, so it has been the custom for a number of years to ask the tenderers to submit a flat amount, the contractor taking his chances on the quantity of paper the contract will bring. In October last the Betcherman Company had not been able to meet their payments for I think three or four months, and they came to the department and made very strong representations to me that they be relieved of the contract. I was not of the opinion that we should do that, but at the same time I appreciated the fact that this was a one-sided contract, as I said, and the contractor being on the losing side by a very heavy sum I thought perhaps we might be able to make an arrangement with the company. I found on looking up the file that the same situation had presented itself in June or July, 1926. At that time the department, expecting that the Betcherman Company would not be able to carry on, asked for tenders from several firms, but no action was taken on the tenders then called for. In October last the Betcherman Company offered to carry on at a higher price than the highest tender put in in June, provided the contract would be renewed at that figure. At the expiration of the contract, I believe it was on April 1st, the contract was renewed with the Betcherman Company at a figure that was higher than the highest tender obtained by the department in June. My hon. friend will pardon me if I make this statement in a rather crude way. I crave indulgence for having to go into this rather involved matter without the aid of my officers, but I think I have stated the situation fairly.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): There are some people who are interested in the disposition of this paper who would be willing to make a tender. In the last five years I understand that the department got from $26,000 to $27,000 a year for waste paper.

Mr. RINFRET: It would be around that figure.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): And last year over $20,000. Then this year you give the Betchermen people the contract for two years at $13,000 per year thereby losing $12,000 or more to the country. Is not that right?

Mr. RINFRET: That is not the case, Mr. Chairman. During the war years this contract, which is a one-sided contract—do not let us lose sight of that fact—ran very strongly against the government because the amount of paper collected amounted to a small fortune, and I know of people who made a fortune by obtaining that contract at a certain figure. But the collection of waste paper in more recent years has not been profitable. I do not remember the name of the company that had the contract before Betcherman, but I am told that they lost heavily, and the Betcherman company also lost heavily in the last eighteen months. We take the stand that it is not fair that any man should lose money on a contract with the government. I do not like this contract myself, and I will tell my hon. friend that I took steps to see if we could not have the contract on a different basis.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You would rather have a contract that the government would lose money on, is that the idea?

Mr. RINFRET: I do not want any kind of contract such as my hon. friend's friends had when they were in power. I want to keep in the mood of the committee as I find it to-night, but I can tell my hon. friend that during the years when his friends were in power those who had the contract made an awful lot of money. During the last two or three years, however, there has been less waste paper collected in the different departments and the contractors have lost money. We thought it was only fair to give the company a chance to recoup in the next two years at a price which, although lower than that obtained some years ago, was still higher than the highest tender we received in June last.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale) I know there are five people in Ottawa and some people in Toronto who would be willing to pay more than you are getting. I think it is only fair that tenders should be asked for and the public given a chance to tender, but I shall not press the matter any more.

The CHAIRMAN: Am I right in understanding that item 535 stands?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mail Subsidies and Steamship Subventions, $804,675.

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Chairman, there is a long string of items from No. 161 to No. 208 inclusive for mail subsidies and steamship subventions. There are no increases in these items; with the exception of item 194. This was due to changing from a part-time service to a full year service, and that is the only increase in the whole list. The large decrease shown in the total vote this year as compared with last year is accounted for by taking out of the mail subsidies the $340,000 which was in there last year for the West Indian service, so the total estimate is $804,675 this year, as compared with $1,139,880.41 last year. I would ask the committee to take up these items and pass them en bloc.

Mr. FRASER: I see there is a total decrease of $7,450 in the two items 166 and 167. How is that accounted for?

Mr. MALCOLM: The claims were not in when the Auditor General closed his books, and they afterwards appeared in the supplementaries which went through recently.

Item agreed to.

The Canada Grain Act, administration of, $1,504,600.

Mr. EVANS: Is it proposed to make Moose Jaw a grain inspection point?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. EVANS: I am rather wondering why that is being done, because the farmers have never asked for it, and it will mean another overhead expense on the grain trade. So far as I know, no organization has ever asked for this, and by all accounts it is going to be quite an inconvenience in many respects. It will mean, I suppose, something like a quarter of a million dollars added to overhead expense. It was not warranted, and the need of it was not felt.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend will appreciate the fact that as a new minister I cannot explain the need for the item, any more than that I believe representations were made to the government by the people of Moose Jaw, and the order in council was passed creating Moose Jaw an inspection point on January 5, 1927. The estimated cost of this is $120,000 per year. It is rather difficult for me to make a speech on this item, because I am not familiar with the benefits to be derived from creating Moose Jaw an inspection point, but from what I have learned from the officers of the grain board I do not think the expense is going to be out of line with the benefits to the people at that point.

Mr. JELLIFF: Referring to the grain board, there has been a great deal of complaint in the west that no appeal is permitted from the judgment of the inspector as to damp grain, a matter which affects the western farmer to a pretty large extent. Will the minister tell me if it is the purpose to introduce a new practice and to provide that appeals will be allowed on damp grain?

Mr. MALCOLM: It is the opinion of the department, which opinion is being conveyed to the Board of Grain Commissioners, that the act does not in any way preclude them from having a re-test on damp grain as well as on grade, and I intend consulting with one of the grain commissioners on that point and recommending that an appeal be allowed.

Mr. JELLIFF: The reason I asked the question was that I understood the grain board was unfavourable to permitting such an appeal.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend has been misinformed. I understand the chairman of the grain board did not believe that an appeal should be allowed, but that the other members of the board are quite satisfied that appeals should be allowed.

Mr. JELLIFF: Is there to be any attempt to reorganize the grain standards board which fixes commercial grade? Under the organization of the grain standards board as it stands to-day there are about ten representatives from Manitoba, seven from Saskatchewan, and only two from Alberta. Taking into account the proportion of grain produced from these three provinces, it looks to me as if the allocation of membership should be vitally changed. Both Saskatchewan and Alberta to-day are producing a whole lot more grain than is produced in Manitoba. I understand also that the Manitoba representatives are largely members of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, and organizations of that kind. As far as Alberta is concerned I doubt whether they have a pool member on that board. Will the minister not do something about reorganization?

Mr. MALCOLM: I received representations from some of my hon. friend's colleagues from Alberta, and I promised that I would take this matter up with the board after the first meeting.

Mr. GARDINER: Does this vote include a sum of money for a laboratory?

Mr. MALCOLM: The laboratory work at Winnipeg is included.

Mr. GARDINER: How much is supposed to be expended in that regard?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry that we have not complete figures of the work we are doing, but whatever will be adequate is going to be supplied. We are paying bills and passing orders for equipment every day.

Mr. GARDINER: What kind of building have you for that laboratory?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have not seen the building, but I understand from the board, which recommended the building, that it is quite adequate for the requirements. Further than that I cannot say.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to draw attention to the very unsatisfactory state of the moisture testing machines that are being used by the elevators to-day. These testing machines when first brought out were supposed to be a very valuable asset to the grain growers. To-day we are realizing that they are not satisfactory. You cannot get guaranteed results from them. For instance, you can take three or four samples from the same bin, have them tested by different machines and get different results in each case. I have sent three tests, one to Winnipeg, and one to Edmonton, and one to the local elevator, and got three separate results, 13.80, 14.40 and 15½ per cent moisture from wheat from the same bin. I draw attention to this because it is the farmer who has to pay for the unreliable testing machines.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is a difficult and technical problem. The testing laboratory and Doctor Birchard are working on that at the present time. I may say that I have had some personal experience in the testing of moisture in lumber, and I must admit that we had the same trouble, but we constantly improved the devices until we had them almost perfect, and I believe good work is being done now in improving these grain moisture testers.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not think the hon. member was complaining of the grain commission, but rather of the tests made by the local elevators. There is a machine on the market now for that purpose. The situation is simply this; that those machines would be fairly good if they were worked by men who knew something about the business, but the men who are doing the testing have not had the experience. The farmer who takes the grain to those elevators wants to see it tested to satisfy him in his own mind that he is getting a proper grade. The different methods of testing by the different operators bring different results with the same class of grain, consequently the farmer is very much dissatisfied. As far as those machines are concerned, I think the Board of Grain Commissioners would do well to order them thrown out of the elevators, put under a train and run over. They are causing a great deal of dissatisfaction. It would be better for the farmers to depend upon the inspection department to give them the proper test. I trust the minister will take this matter under consideration, because under present conditions the test is worse than useless. Would the minister tell me the total income from this department, the expenditure, and the surplus?

[Mr Malcolm.]

Mr. MALCOLM: The total vote for this year is $1,504,600, or a decrease of $275,400. The main estimates are $1,430,000, the supplementaries $350,000. The requirements estimated by the board are $1,654,000. We have reduced this amount by $150,000. We expended in the ten months of last year $1,363,000. Of this amount, however, $147,000 was for accounts of 1925-26 paid in 1926-27 owing to shortage of funds, leaving for 1926-27 an expenditure of $1,216,000. We estimate the expenditure for February and March will be $425,000, which will make the expenditure for the past year $1,640,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the income?

Mr. MALCOLM: For 1925-26 it was $1,642,054.

Mr. JELLIFF: Is there included in that item the amount paid to the Board of Grain Commissioners by the public terminals on account of overages for the crop year ending 1926?

Mr. MALCOLM: For the past year the gross surplus was $410,832.

Mr. GARDINER: That surplus, I take it, is on the administration of the Grain Act in regard to inspection.

Mr. MALCOLM: For operation and maintenance of elevators.

Mr. EVANS: Who is in charge of the laboratory at Winnipeg?

Mr. MALCOLM: Dr. Birchard.

Mr. EVANS: Are reports published from time to time?

Mr. MALCOLM: I understand so, as he makes progress.

Mr. LUCAS: Has Doctor Birchard any help?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend the full staff. The temporary staff Doctor Birchard has now, which he intends to supplement, consists of a chemist in charge at $4,600 a year, paid from civil government salaries; four assistant chemists, one miller, four helpers and one stenographer.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not think the minister is yet convinced of the evil nature of the practice of leaving in the hands of local warehousemen moisture testing machines with power to test farmers' grain. There is no question that there is in many cases deliberate deceit on the part of those men in dealing with the grain. As a result the question of moisture-tested grain is causing a great deal of dissatisfaction to everybody in western Canada. The member for Acadia recommended that the Board of Grain Commissioners should seriously consider the abolition of the use of these small lamp machines by local warehouses. They serve no good purpose for no accurate test can ever be made with them, and in the majority of cases I doubt whether even in the hands of an expert the results would be as satisfactory as with the electrical apparatus in the laboratory and inspection plants. Therefore I add my word to that of the member for Acadia in advising the minister that he will serve the interest of the grain growers best by forbidding the use of these small testing machines by the local warehousemen.

Now I come to another point. Early in the crop season this year, evidently convinced that the quality of the grain was not as serious as first anticipated, the Board of Grain Commissioners raised the standard of the moisture test required to 14.4. That gave a certain amount of relief and was of some benefit to the farmers. But at the same time the board made announcement which puzzled the farmers exceedingly, and of which an explanation should certainly be given, namely, that although the farmer would have his grain graded tough if it was more than 14.5, yet the board would permit the terminals to warehouse grain carrying 15 per cent moisture. That is an injustice. If the grain was in such condition as to stand warehousing, then according to all the laws of logic it should have been graded dry or standard grade. Instead of that the elevators got an enormous advantage over the unfortunate farmers of western Canada when their grain graded more than 14.5, and they lost hundreds of thousands of dollars. I would urge the minister that unless he is willing to sacrifice the prestige of the Board of Grain Commissioners, he should impress upon the chairman at the earliest possible opportunity the importance of a frank and clear statement being placed before the public, especially the public of western Canada. I hope the minister will take this into consideration, because he knows only too well that the continued satisfaction of our western farmers with the Department of Trade and Commerce will largely depend on the sympathetic attitude of the department in the case that I have mentioned.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I should like to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Board of Grain Commissioners have given too much consideration to the view put forward by the member for Bow River. As a matter of fact the better grain growing districts of western Canada are losing by having a higher moisture content allowed in the straight grade. The damper grain from the northern portion of Alberta, southeastern Saskatchewan, and the greater portion of Manitoba is coming in as straight grade, and thereby cutting down the price of our Canadian grain in the markets of the world.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Absolute rubbish. I challenge the hon. gentleman to state a single fact that will prove the statement he has just made.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The people buying grain in the markets of the world are not foolish enough to pay for water; and when you raise the moisture content you raise the amount of water that is allowed in the grade. That is the proof. The dry grain, or low moisture content grain, is grown on what is known as the bald-headed prairies, down in the southwest portion of Saskatchewan, part of central Saskatchewan, part of central Alberta the southeastern part of Alberta, and a small portion of southern Manitoba. They should be able on account of that dry grain to get a premium. As a matter of fact the grain today coming from these districts is mixed with damper grain from Alberta. It goes on the Liverpool market with the result that the whole grade is below what it should be and we receive a lower price than we ought to get. I should like the Minister of Trade and Commerce to take up the matter with a view to having the moisture content lowered instead of raised.

Mr. SPENCER: I support the hon. member for Bow River in his criticism of the moisture testing machines, particularly in respect to their use by local elevator men. These machines are so unreliable that samples taken from the same bin will often give different results. The minister will appreciate the seriousness of this. A difference of eight cents per bushel between dry and tough grain frequently amounts to between $300 and $500 to each farmer who has to bear a heavy loss. This is the reason for the discontent that prevails in regard to these machines.

Mr. MALCOLM: The question of testing grain for moisture is an important one. I have had some experience in the matter and it is difficult for the non-technical man to figure the relative humidity in grain, even when the tables are made out mathematically. There is a great deal of difficulty in the point he raises, but the trouble is to get a clever enough man to work out the humidity. There are however small machines which are easier of operation than the present type. I can speak with some assurance on this subject, of which I have personal knowledge, and I will discuss it with the grain commissioners and give them the benefit of the experience I have had.

Mr. JELLIFF: Has the minister any returns submitted by the Board of Grain Commissioners on overages from the public terminal elevators for the crop year 1926? I do not believe that report was received until a short time ago and it would be interesting to discover why the Board of Grain Commissioners did not collect on these overages.

Mr. MALCOLM: I have a long statement here which I will send to my hon. friend.

Mr. JELLIFF: Perhaps the minister had better put it on Hansard.

Mr. MALCOLM: I will hand it to Hansard.

The statement is as follows:

Annual weigh-up of grain in public terminal elevators, at Fort William-Port Arthur, and Vancouver and interior terminal elevators at Calgary, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon and Edmonton, July 31st, 1926.

Summary of grain, and total value of same, comprised in that portion of surplus which is to be delivered to the Government under section 87 (4), Canada Grain Act, 1925.

Item agreed to.

Honorary Advisory Council for scientific and industrial research, $170,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: This is one of the most important items in the whole Department of Trade and Commerce. We are asking for a small increase this year. It had been my intention in conjunction with the Minister of the Interior to ask the House this year for a substantial sum for the research council.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Many of the older members will recall a speech made by a former representative of London in this House, Mr. Hume Cronyn, who in 1921 discussed the need of industrial scientific research. At that time the member for Prince, now Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), spoke on the same subject, which I believe is of interest to the whole Dominion from every point of view, industrial, agricultural, mining, fishing and forestry. It affects all parts of Canada and is of interest to every Canadian who is anxious to see his country develop. Every man in Canada, whether he belongs to the maritime provinces or British Columbia; whether he is engaged in fishing or mining or agriculture, or in the manufacturing phases of the development of our raw materials, will, I am sure, support us if at any time we should submit a substantial vote for industrial scientific research. It is the avowed policy of the government to prepare plans during the coming year and bring down at the next session a considerable vote to enlarge the work to an extent which heretofore has not been contemplated.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is unfortunate that this matter should be discussed at this hour of the morning. There are one or two questions I want to ask the minister. In what way are the subjects to be taken up by the various students? Who allocates the various branches of investigation—the president of the council? Or is it a matter of application?

Mr. MALCOLM: I presume the board will have to do that under the president.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It has struck me that some of this research work is purely academic, going perhaps a little beyond the scope of industrial investigation. It seems to me that where you have a scientific committee engaged on a subject its findings should prevail. In the fisheries department a good deal of labour has been lost through lack of coöperation.

Mr. BENNETT: I certainly think that this is a matter which the full committee would like to discuss. The Minister of the Interior the other night discussed it at some length and I pointed out then that it was useless for ministers to talk about research so long as there was no coöperation. He made a complete statement on that occasion and now the Minister of Trade and Commerce has something to add. Then the universities and the research council and the provinces all come in. It is this lack of coöperation that is responsible for waste of public money. Industrial research should be specific and not theoretical, as pointed out by my hon. friend from Kingston. The Minister of the Interior did say that we should have a large sum for research. But what is the sense of talking about one department, then another department, then the universities and somebody else, when there should be one department handling these estimates covering the whole matter, in order that there may be intelligent use of that money with the coöperation of the officials appointed for that purpose?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have listened very carefully to my hon. friend and I have a copy of Hansard before me containing his previous speech on this subject. I have looked into it, and in reviewing the report of the honorary advisory council I find they have this to say of coöperation:

> It has always been the policy of the research council to co-operate in every possible way with the various departments of the federal government and to avoid duplication of effort. The research council is not a body acting in antagonism to the government departments, where research work is done, but is intended to be a coördinating agency for the purpose of the promotion and development of research wherever possible throughout the whole of Canada and, to this end, to coöperate with and assist scientific divisions of the government service in every possible way in furthering the work which they are in a position to undertake.

Mr. BENNETT: That sounds nice.

Mr. MALCOLM: I must say to my hon. friend that it does sound well; it sounded well to me when I read it. It seems that if the council has not coöperated to the extent which they should, it is not because that was not its intention. This is a new subject to me, and I think the committee is tolerant with a new minister; I have not given it the consideration I should, but I will say that between now and the time when I again present my estimates, I can assure my hon. friend that any plan which is brought down will have regard to the coöperation of all these branches.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In regard to the subjects taken up and worked out by the students, I never see anything about the conclusion. Just as an example, take the diseases for fur bearing animals; they are considered one year then dropped for another, while the research should be carried on until a conclusion is reached. A student in a university must carry on an experiment to a conclusion, but we have never heard of a conclusion being reached except in one or two things. I would like the minister to look into that.

Mr. McGIBBON: I want to ask the minister if he will not promise us that in the coming year he will buck up enough courage to put a real amount in the estimates in order to facilitate this work, which I heartily support. The minister knows I have supported it in the past and I hope to do so in the future. My only criticism is that the government has not sufficient courage to come out and do for the country that which should be done.

Mr. BENNETT: In which department?

Mr. McGIBBON: I don't care which department. I do feel that research work in this country is of so much importance and so much hinges on it that if Canada is ever going to take its place among the nations of the world our great mineral resources must be exploited in accordance with the very best methods. I realize the handicaps the minister and the government are under, because I know that in times past this House has voted substantial sums for this purpose, which have never gone through. I ask the minister to promise us that next year he will put a sum in the estimates, say two or three millions of dollars, for this purpose, and let him for once throw himself upon the tender mercies of the opposition, if he cannot get his own party to help him, and see if we cannot assist him over that last hurdle.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend must have been out of the chamber when I made my statement at the beginning. I said we were making plans to bring down a substantial estimate next year; I warned the House of it.

Mr. McGIBBON: What does, "a substantial item" mean?

Mr. MALCOLM: It will be sufficient for the first year.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not think anything less than two or three million dollars will be substantial, and I will back up the minister in such a proposal.

Item agreed to.

Prince Rupert elevator site, $165,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this to pay for the site on which the elevator now stands?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, it is a revote. The amount is payable from the Dominion government to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, now the Canadian National Railway.

Mr. BENNETT: This is the property which is leased for $100 per year, including the site?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: And the elevator is built upon railway property. Now it is being turned over to the elevator company, and the $165,000 is a bookkeeping item?

Mr. MALCOLM: Surely.

Mr. BENNETT: And the rental is $100?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, it is rented to the pool for $100.

Item agreed to.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—Vancouver, B.C., and the British West Indies, steam or motor service between, $36,000.

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Mr. GARDINER: Is this a new subvention? If so, what are the particulars?

Mr. MALCOLM: This is a new subsidy, one of the best arrangements we possibly could have made. It is only costing us $3,000 per month, and is probably one of the cheapest foreign subsidies we have been able to secure. It has been backed up by all the industrialists of Vancouver because it is giving the shippers of that city an opportunity to take advantage of the West Indies market. We are shipping very great quantities of canned goods, lumber and other products from British Columbia to the West Indies, and we are very glad to recommend this appropriation to the committee.

Item agreed to.

National Defence—memorial to those citizens and residents of the United States who enlisted in the Canadian forces and lost their lives in the late war, $10,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to know what this item is about.

Mr. RALSTON: As the particulars show, it is for the purpose of erecting a memorial to the citizens of the United States who enlisted in the Canadian forces and lost their lives in the late war. A memorial is to be erected in the Arlington national burying ground in the United States—the national soldiers' burying ground.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the purchase of rural mail boxes, $35,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: I take this opportunity of asking the Postmaster General if he has decided on a type of rural mail box and if he has awarded the contract for the same?

Mr. VENIOT: No, I have not. I expect within the next five weeks to be in a position to begin the distribution of some of these boxes.

Mr. IRVINE: I would ask the Postmaster General if he has decided to give us a rural mail route from Rimbey to Lockhart in my constituency?

Mr. VENIOT: I could not say from memory. I know that we have quite a number of applications, and I feel that western Canada should get a little more attention than it has got in the past in the way of rural routes. That is why there is a vote of $35,000 in the supplementary estimates. That will give us about 27,000 boxes.

Mr. McGIBBON: I should like to congratulate the minister on his action in this regard.

Mr. GARDINER: I would ask the Finance minister how long we are going to continue sitting.

Mr. ROBB: We might clean up a few more items. I am sure hon. members are anxious to have prorogation as soon as possible. I am getting pretty tired myself but I think we might put through a few more items.

Mr. GARDINER: We have just passed an item to erect a memorial in the United States for United States citizens who fell while serving in the Canadian forces. At the rate we are proceeding, we will need a memorial for every member of this House.

Mr. BENNETT: The committee had better rise, it is half-past three o'clock.

Mr. ROBB: Very well, I am willing that the committee should rise and report progress.

Mr. GEARY: Before the committee rises may I ask the Postmaster General if he could give me information readily as to the profits or loss on the carrying of newspapers?

Mr. BENNETT: He gave that information the other day, and it is in Hansard.

Mr. VENIOT: I may say that 90,000,000 pounds of newspapers and periodicals were carried at a cost of $8,500,000. The revenue was only $1,500,000, so there is a deficit of $7,000,000.

Mr. GEARY: That being the case, is it not true that the reduction in postage on newspapers provided for by statute the other day is in reality, to the extent of the loss caused thereby, a bonus paid by the country to the newspapers taking advantage of the reduced rate?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ROBB: I move that the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. SPENCER: May I say to the Postmaster General that I was informed by his department a year ago that it was their policy to create two new rural mail delivery routes each year for each federal constituency?

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I am very sorry, but there is a motion before the chair to report progress.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Mr. GEORGE W. McPHEE (Yorkton) moved that Bill No. 337 (from the Senate), for the relief of Joseph Albert Georges Lachance, be read the first and second time.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the first and second time.

Mr. McPHEE moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I object to the motion for third reading at this stage.

Mr. PARENT: If this bill stands it has no chance to come back again.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But it stands.

Mr. SPEAKER: It must be by unanimous consent.

Motion stands.

On motion of Mr. Robb the House adjourned at 3.40 a.m., Thursday.

Thursday, April 14, 1927

The House met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

THIRD READING

Mr. GEORGE W. McPHEE (Yorkton): By leave of the House I move that Bill No. 337 for the relief of Joseph Albert Georges Lachance be read a third time.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand this measure is not opposed. It came up from the Senate last night and was given first and second readings.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

APPOINTMENT OF JULES CASTONGUAY AS SUCCESSOR TO COLONEL O. M. BIGGAR

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I beg to move, seconded by the hon. leader of the opposition, the motion which I presented to the House on April 12, and which reads:

> That, in conformity with the provisions of Bill No. 260, An Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act which was passed by both Houses of Parliament, Jules Castonguay be designated as the successor of Oliver Mowat Biggar as Chief Electoral Officer.

I may say that I have spoken with my hon. friend, the leader of the Progressive party concerning the motion and I am now in a position to state that it appears to meet with the cordial approval of all parties in the House.

Motion agreed to.

DIAMOND JUBILEE OF CONFEDERATION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

Resolved that as Canada is approaching the sixtieth anniversary of her founding as a Dominion, the parliament of Canada place on record its deep appreciation of the achievements of the fathers of confederation, and with united voice express its faith and confidence in the future of this our country, and its development as a member of the British commonwealth of nations, owing allegiance to His Majesty the King.

It is the earnest wish of parliament that the diamond jubilee celebration, for which plans are now being rapidly matured, shall commemorate appropriately and enthusiastically the accomplishment of confederation and the subsequent progress of the Dominion. We trust that this commemoration will lend added inspiration to the patriotic fervour of our people, and afford a clearer vision of our aspirations and ideals, to the end that from sea to sea there may be developed a robust Canadian spirit, and in all things Canadian profounder national unity.

Yesterday I handed a copy of this resolution to my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) and to my hon. friend the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Gardiner). The leader of the opposition was kind enough to say that he would be pleased to second the motion. I know from the leader of the Progressive party that he would be equally ready to do so. The resolution requires nothing in the way of explanation or amplification. It speaks for itself. A similar motion will be presented in the other chamber to-day. We may, I think, count upon the voice of parliament being unanimously expressed with respect to its representations and the patriotic purpose the resolution is intended to serve.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY BELT WATER ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 339 to amend the Railway Belt Water Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. STEWART moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is this bill?

Mr. STEWART: It came over from the Senate.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That does not help it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Some years age the right of issuing water licenses in the railway belt of British Columbia was delegated to the provincial controller. Last session we passed an amending act providing that before any licenses were granted we must be consulted. This legislation was introduced by us largely on account of complaints made by some of the residents in the water belt with respect to the manner in which such licenses were being issued. As a result about sixty licenses have been held up. The matter was of interest to the Speaker of the Senate and others who were affected and a mutual agreement was reached between the parties interested. This bill is for the purpose of suspending our rights under the amending act in order that the licenses may be issued. The bill was introduced in the Senate.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We cannot agree to it, anyway. It is a very controversial measure.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I admit it. The difficulty is that, as hon. members from British Columbia are aware, licenses are being held up. It was in order to overcome the difficulty that we were anxious to pass this legislation. However, if hon. gentlemen object I am not going to press the matter. The measure is entirely in the interests of residents in the railway belt of British Columbia; it does not affect any other part of the province.

Mr. SPEAKER: Next sitting of the House.

Motion stands.

TOBACCO PRODUCTION

Mr. HEPBURN:

1. What is the present production of tobacco in
A. Canada,
B. Ontario,
C. Quebec?
2. What is the farm value of annual tobacco crop?
3. What is the growth and present status of export trade?
4. What commercial types of tobacco are grown in Canada?
5. Is Canadian grown leaf used in domestic manufacture? If so, to what extent?
6. Are there any districts in Canada not growing tobacco which may be suitable, in view of the increasing export trade?
7. What steps are being taken to increase our export trade?
8. Through what channels has the work of the department been instrumental in forwarding the tobacco industry to date?
9. What are the possibilities of increasing our export trade?

[Mr. Rinfret.]

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. A. For all Canada about 28,000,000 to 35,000,000 pounds.
B. Ontario—20,000,000 to 25,000,000 pounds.
C. Quebec—8,000,000 to 10,000,000 pounds.
2. Slightly over $7,000,000 in each of the last two years, to the growers.
3. The export is practically all in raw leaf form and has increased very rapidly during the last five years, from 200,000 pounds in 1921 to more than 5,000,000 pounds in 1926.
4. A. Ontario—Burley, flue cured, Green River, dark fire cured.
B. Quebec—Cigar binders, cigar fillers, rough cut pipe smoking.
5. At the present time more than half of the leaf used in manufacture is grown in Canada. Adding to this that portion smoked in the raw leaf state it is estimated that 70 per cent of the tobacco consumed in Canada is grown in Canada.
6. Two years experimental results indicate that the Okanagan valley, B.C., may be able to produce export leaf of superior quality.
7. A. Improving the quality and increasing the quantity of export types in established growing districts.

B. Testing out export types in districts not now growing tobacco commercially.

C. Publicity through exhibits, etc., to acquaint the British trade with the merits of Canadian leaf.

8. Introducing and acclimatizing superior varieties suitable to Canada and Canadian trade.

B. Selecting and improving varieties for Canadian conditions.

C. Testing commonly used varieties and eliminating sorts of inferior commercial value, thus assisting in raising the types and standards of Canadian leaf.

D. Raising large quantities of high quality seed of approved types.

E. Cultural methods in the production of plants and growing the crop as a result of experimental work have materially changed and enormously improved in Ontario and Quebec.

F. Fertilizers. Results of experimental work on fertilization have given farmers reliable information on the proper mixtures and most economical application for different types and on different soils.

G. Experiments and demonstrations in the most efficient and economical handling of tobacco crops in suckering, topping, harvesting, curing, stripping, sorting and packing have had, and are having, a marked influence towards improving the quality of Canadian leaf for domestic and export purposes.

H. The tobacco division during the past nine years has repeatedly demonstrated on the British and other foreign markets the quality and types of leaf produced in Canada. This has had a marked effect in creating interest and confidence in Canadian leaf by British buyers and to no small extent has been responsible for the rapid growth in our export trade and still greater growth in the demand for Canadian tobacco, from other countries.

9. Of the countries importing tobacco the United Kingdom alone imports about 200,000,000 pounds of raw leaf annually. The British tariff gives colonial leaf a preference of 25 per cent of the import duty or approximately 50 cents per pound; hence the British market alone offers enormous possibilities.

OFFICIAL MOTOR CARS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): I would remind the government that some time ago I put on the order paper two questions, one relating to railway cars used by the various departments, and the other relating to official motor cars. I have received an answer to the first question, but not to the second. I am very much interested in the kind of automobiles hon. gentlemen are using, and I hope the answer will be sent to me.

Hon. Mr. RINFRET: I will try to table the answer this afternoon.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY

TORONTO OFFICE BUILDING

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): May I ask the Minister of Railways when the Canadian National Railways will move into their new quarters at the corner of King and Yonge streets, Toronto?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways): Mr. Speaker, I am not informed exactly as to the situation, but my impression is that a move is being made.

CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE

NEW SHIPS FOR WEST INDIES SERVICE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria): Mr Speaker, I understand it is the intention of the government to make some additions to the Canadian Merchant Marine in order to look after the West Indies trade. I should like to know if the ships will be built in Canada, and, if so, whether an effort will be made to divide the work between shipyards on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, at the moment I do not think I can add anything to the statements made during the progress of the debate in that regard. I think my hon. friend will find a full discussion there.

CUSTOMS REGULATIONS

PORT OF TORONTO

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (East Toronto): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister what the government proposes to do in view of the statement on the 12th inst., of Chief Commissioner Brown to Collector of Customs Bertram at Toronto, that the collector should enforce the customs regulations, and thereby put the port of Toronto "out of business" in two weeks' time.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I shall have to take time to read the hon. gentleman's question in order to get the significance of it, Mr. Speaker

CANADIAN NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS—PROTECTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) to Hansard of Thursday, April 7. At page 2031 he is reported as saying:

> During the recess a thorough investigation will be made with a view to devising some scheme by which we can give greater protection to our newspapers and periodicals in competition with American publications.

Was the hon. minister correctly reported? If so, how far will he be prepared to go in that direction?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): My reference to protection was not in the sense that perhaps my hon. friend understands it. What I was referring to was the protection of our newspaper publishers and dealers against the influx of American newspapers and periodicals of a nature such as was discussed on that occasion—that is, detrimental to the morals of our youth.

NORTH WEST TERRITORIES ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 123 to amend the North West Territories Act.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

The House in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Miscellaneous—to provide for flat increases to the Civil Service, both inside and outside, $2,700,000.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): When this item was called last night I proceeded to give an explanation of the proposed salary revision but I acceded to the request of one hon. member opposite that I defer until to-day any statement that I wished to make, in order that it might be presented to a full House. The points I made last night were these. In revising the salaries of civil servants we had to consider three aspects of the question: first, the total sum of money to be expended; secondly, the classification of the civil service as it now exists; and thirdly, previous increases that might have been granted since 1924 to different classes of the service. I reminded the committee that in 1924 the bonus that had been granted to meet the high cost of living was removed in certain cases, reduced in others, or simply prolonged on a gradual scale towards disappearance. The proposal now before the committee is based on the principle of a flat increase to the different classes of the service in receipt of salaries up to $5,100. I explained last night that other projects were submitted to us. Either through correspondence or otherwise the suggestion came that we should grant increases rather to the lower classes among whom the need apparently was greatest. Others, on the contrary, suggested that the increases should go to men of special knowledge, technical men, whose services we could not very well dispense with. They thought that the increase should be a recognition of merit. However, the Civil Service Association, who appeared before us, took the stand that the flat increase would be the best thing and would give most satisfaction. As I observed last night, the tendency is very much the same as in unions of labour men, to have uniform wages irrespective of the quantity or quality of the work performed within given classes of the union.

The proposal is of a dual nature. First it raises the minimum and maximum in every class of the service by the sum of $120 except in the case of the lowest minimum, that is, the entrant class. That has not been touched. Our reason for not increasing the lowest minimum was that entrants to the service are not affected and we thought we should not touch that minimum. This increase is not only for the present year but is a permanent addition; so that every civil servant not only receives immediate consideration but has an increased maximum at which he may hope to arrive in the future. The other aspect of the increase is the improvement in civil service salaries by the sum mentioned. We thought that we should have to make some exceptions in this regard but I will not deal with them. They may, however, be summed up in three classes. First, no increase will be given to temporary employees, that is to say, the temporary class whose salary is the minimum of grade 1 and which has not been increased. We could not grant to any temporary employee a salary higher than the minimum of the class in which he happens to be classified. The spirit of the law recognizes these temporary employees merely as help engaged for one or two months, or perhaps four months, and they are really not in the service. They are temporary in the strictest sense of the word. I suggest that if some of the temporary clerks in that grade happen to have been in the service for a certain length of time the remedy would be rather to examine and consider whether they could not be blanketed in as permanent employees. According to the classification of the service as it is to-day, however, it was not found possible to increase that class until we had at the same time increased the minimum of grade 1, which it was not our intention to do.

Another class of exceptions to which the hon. member for Wetaskiwin referred is that group of civil servants who happen to be above the maximum of their class. That is a peculiar situation and I believe the committee will agree with me that it is an anomaly which should not be aggravated by this revision. When the classification was made in 1924-1925 a certain number of civil servants were classified in grade 3, the senior clerk grade. It happened that some of them were already earning a higher salary than the maximum of the class in which they were put, and even after raising the maximum of that class to-day the salary is not as high as these employees are getting. We thought it would be unwise, by granting an increase to these civil servants, to prolong and aggravate the anomaly that already exists in the service in relation to them. My view of the matter is this. If these civil servants perform a work that is well within the class to which they belong then they are already getting a higher salary than they are entitled to and they should not be increased. If on the other hand they are performing a work, or are capable of performing a work, of a higher grade than the one to which they belong, then the remedy is evidently at every opportunity to reclassify them and grant them promotion. The committee will agree with me that it would have been unwise to grant an increase to any civil servant who happened to be already earning more than the new maximum of the class to which he belonged.

Mr. BENNETT: About how many of these would there be?

Mr. RINFRET: Approximately 400. The main exception to this revision, with which all these telegrams, delegations and representations have dealt, is the case of the postal clerks, the railway mail clerks and others of that description.

Mr. BENNETT: Letter carriers.

Mr. RINFRET: Yes. I am taking no exception to what these organizations have done with regard to this revision, because I think it is very human even when granted some increase to ask for more. I repeat that on that ground I am not taking any exception to what has taken place, although I do think that in some cases the telegrams might have been phrased in a different way. I am in full sympathy with these men, and would not want to say one word which would lead them to believe to the contrary. But I want to remind the committee that in 1924, when the bonuses applying to these classes were removed as they were in the rest of the service, or reduced, adjustments were made with reference to these railway mail clerks, letter carriers, postal clerks and customs clerks, because although we did not hear from the latter class they are in the same position. In that year these classes were granted an increase of $180 to partially compensate for the loss of the bonus.

Mr. BENNETT: Did that apply to any other class?

Mr. RINFRET: No, and that is the point I want to make. This year, according to the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission and also of the Post Office Department, we propose to increase that amount by $60, to bring it up to a total of $240. These organizations have taken the ground that we should not take into consideration the $180 granted them in 1924, because that was a matter of adjustment, but I want to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that in no class of the service are we proposing to grant an increase in salary without giving consideration to any adjustments which have been made since 1924. It may be that these employees deserve more consideration than others, but there is one point which cannot be denied; they are getting that consideration by this revision of salary. If you take into consideration the adjustment made three years ago, they are getting twice as much as any other class in the civil service, and I want to make that very plain.

Mr. BENNETT: Have they not very much harder work?

Mr. RINFRET: I am not discussing whether this will fully meet their requirements, and I do not wish to create the impression that they do not deserve great consideration; I am only standing by this revision, in preparing which we had to consider the total amount that would be expended on adjustments which have already taken place. I say that the postal clerks, the railway mail clerks and the letter carriers will receive in the aggregate an increase double that which we are granting any other class of the service, and in any case where the increase of $120 is proposed, there will be deducted from that amount any partial consideration received by any class since 1924.

Mr. BENNETT: The actual increase in those classes would be $5 a month?

Mr. RINFRET: This year, but $20 a month since we began adjusting the salaries in 1924 or twice as much as any other class in the service will get. I cannot stress this point too much because it has been stated in some telegrams that the increase would only amount to $42, which I do not think is a fair statement at all. Last year these men were granted a special consideration of $18 which they would not have received this year, and therefore the amount added to their salaries is fully $60, because the $18 would not have been available anyway; it was the remnant of the bonus and would have disappeared. Again I take the stand that whatever consideration these men deserve and however hard their work, standing by this revision alone I claim that there is no class in the service getting more consideration than these very classes which complain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the minister allow me to see if I have this right, in regard to the case of the letter carriers? If my information is correct, in 1921 the salary and bonus of a letter carrier totalled $1,558, of which $1,260 was salary and $298 bonus. In June, 1924, when the revision took place, the figures became $1,440 salary and $18, the remnant of the bonus. The announcement made a few days ago that there was to be a flat increase of $120, which of course is $10 a month, gave the impression that railway mail clerks and letter carriers were to receive that amount, and I think the public generally were satisfied that that would be a reasonable increase under the circumstances, but the way the thing has worked out gives an actual increase to a letter carrier or mail clerk of only $42 per annum or, as the telegrams received by hon. members show, about 78 cents per week. Naturally this is a tremendous disappointment to those classes of civil servants, and I think the minister should reconsider the question of the flat increase of $10 per month which was originally proposed in this House, before we were aware of the limitations placed upon that proposal. I remember asking at the time if this proposed increase applied to letter carriers, and the intimation was that it did. Therefore we cannot wonder that that impression went forward from the statement made by the minister. In reality, however, the railway mail clerk or letter carrier receives only the somewhat insignificant increase of 78 cents per week, or $42 per year. I think, Mr. Chairman, that that amount is too small to offer these civil servants at present. All they ask is a flat increase of $10 per month, which would not involve any enormous sum of money, and which I think is justifiable under the circumstances. The whole increase could be paid out of the vote of half a million dollars which we passed last night for a building in Washington. I think these men are entitled to the consideration of this House and I hope the Secretary of State will reconsider this proposal in regard to that hard-worked class of officials, the railway mail clerks and letter carriers, and grant them the $10 per month increase which they imagined they were going to get when the announcement was first made.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister—

Mr. RINFRET: I have not finished my statement yet. When I made the announcement to the House I gave a list of the exceptions, and exception (d) referred to those classes which were increased by $180 per annum or more in the salary revision of 1924. I wish to point out to the leader of the opposition that they were so well aware of the fact that they were in that excepted class that wires were immediately received with reference to that paragraph. They may have expected $120, but they certainly could not expect it from the statement I made in the House.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The statement was misunderstood, I grant that.

Mr. RINFRET: This is only a technical point anyway. I was just going to say when my hon. friend got up that we could not consider separately the increase that was granted these classes this year. We had to consider the cumulative increases that have been granted since 1924; and I insist again that in any other class where an increase has been granted, this will have to be deducted from the $120 flat increase this year. So there is no discrimination at all in that respect, only to the extent that these special employees are getting twice as much through this revision as any other class in the service. May I point out, as I did in the case of the preceding class that there are other ways of improving the position of the men. Some may be reclassified, others may be promoted; there is no finality in adjustments of this kind. But as Secretary of State, having studied the problem very fully, unless special consideration is given to the class of work that these men perform, I am going to take the stand to-day, that it would not be fair to the rest of the service to grant an additional increase to this group and not grant it at the same time to civil servants at large, because under this revision these particular men are already getting more relatively than any other civil servant in the employ of the government.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister say what the maximum is?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes, $1,500.

Mr. VENIOT: That is under the classification they are getting more in proportion than any other class.

Mr. RINFRET: I believe that if the committee would only agree to this revision as it stands, and leave it to the Postmaster General —who I am sure is a generous hearted and well intentioned minister—he could be depended upon to look after the welfare of these men.

Mr. RYCKMAN: He would dismiss them all.

Mr. RINFRET: Their positions can be improved by reclassification, by promotion; it can be improved in many other ways than by disrupting, if I may use the word, the general equilibrium of the revision which has been adopted.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it intended to improve the status of the letter carriers later on?

Mr. RINFRET: We are to have a new class of senior letter carriers. My hon. friend has suggested that it would not need a very large amount to grant the official increase. Let me tell him it would mean for these classes only pretty nearly $700,000.

Mr. BENNETT: For the three classes?

Mr. RINFRET: For all these employees.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How many letter carriers have we in Canada?

Mr. RINFRET: About three thousand. I believe there are 11,000 affected by this revision.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But the letter carriers number about 3,000?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes.

Mr. LADNER: Is it not a fact that in some cases there is an actual decrease in salary? I have received complaints in which it is stated the revision constitutes a decrease?

Mr. RINFRET: Before I am through I may point out, perhaps, as the Minister of Finance did the other day, that there is another side to this question, and that is the taxpayers' side. We have had also representations, through members of parliament or otherwise, that we were going a long distance in increasing the salaries of the civil servants. I may tell the House that I have been a civil servant myself, and I doubt if there has ever been in the ministry one more fully in sympathy with the service than I am. I know the conditions of the service. I know its shortcomings and also some of the advantages—in the matter of security and otherwise. I will not insist on this point, but I can assure my hon. friend that we have given the fullest consideration to this matter, and everything that we propose to do is in the fullest sympathy with the service at large. I am only too grieved to find out that quite a large body of civil servants have not found satisfaction in this revision. I believe that is due to the fact that they have pondered too much over the flat increase that goes to the rest of the service, and have lost sight of the fact that an equivalent amount and more has been given to them already. I would suggest that we might all be animated by the same sentiment regarding this revision. I have said that some people have made representations to us that the amount of increase was very large. To those I would say that the amount is smaller, by one-half or more. than that requested by the civil servants themselves. In the revision decided upon we have about met them half way.

Mr. BENNETT: How many will be affected?

Mr. RINFRET: Altogether I believe 33,000, of whom 22,000 are in the civil service at large.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Will the fourth class, the "notwithstanding" class be included? That is the class who are being appointed because they are favourites of this or that minister or department "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act?"

Mr. RINFRET: I am glad to relieve my hon. friend's anxiety about that. The provision will include all civil servants in the service now, whether they have been appointed by the preceding government or have been appointed "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act." There are quite a number in both classes.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister tell us how many railway mail clerks there are in the employ of the government?

Mr. RINFRET: Seventeeen hundred.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): How does this adjustment fit in with the promise made to those postal employees who went on strike?

Mr. RINFRET: I understand the recommendation of the department at the time had reference to $240, and that is what we are meeting.

Mr. LADNER: I do not think the minister answered my question as to the classes where the employee thinks there has been a decrease in his salary and not an increase. The minister keeps speaking about the increase, but I would ask him what about these decreases?

Mr. RINFRET: There has been no decrease in the real sense of the word. The bonus was removed. Now I take it for granted that bonus was to meet special conditions and was a temporary consideration. The bonus was removed in 1924. I believe I can safely say that by this revision the civil servants are restored to the salaries they were getting plus the bonus, with a slight difference one way or the other. But I would point this out: That while the bonus was a temporary consideration they are now getting this as a salary assured to them, and the same applies to other positions to which they can look forward in the future.

Mr. LADNER: Was not the bonus intended to meet the situation of the depreciation in the purchasing power of the dollar.

Mr. BENNETT: The high cost of living.

Mr. LADNER: In other words the high cost of living. As compared with pre-war times the dollar had depreciated in its purchasing power and accordingly the bonus was granted to cover that situation.

Mr. RINFRET: I am not an economist but I fail to see the distinction between the high cost of living and the depreciation of the dollar.

Mr. LADNER: There is none.

Mr. RINFRET: I think it is the same thing. But when the bonus was removed—and of course I am not responsible for that—I understand that the view was taken that the cost of living had decreased.

Mr. HANSON: It has gone up again according to your own figures.

Mr. RINFRET: So have the salaries.

[Mr. Rinfret.]

Mr. LADNER: I have not been taking up much time and will not do so because the intention is to prorogue parliament to-day, but I think this is the crux of the whole situation. We have all had representations made to us by different organizations, and I want some information on the subject. As compared with conditions prior to the war, the purchasing power of the dollar to-day is much depreciated, and the purpose of the bonus was to cover that very point. That being the case, the increase given to these men could hardly be considered as an increase unless it at least equalled or exceeded the bonus. If you take away the bonus, which was intended to meet the depreciation in the purchasing power of the dollar, and then speak of an increase, you are really talking about a decrease. Has that feature been considered? Objections have been raised all over the country to the government's treatment of the so-called increase because the men affected complain that they are receiving relatively less than employees in other walks of life.

Mr. RINFRET: That is the very thing we had in mind. We have sought to adjust the situation in such a way that these increases would be subordinate to whatever treatment the bonus received in this or that class. I said, and I repeat, that by this revision of salary, the whole civil service will receive practically the same amount as they did with the aggregate of the bonus and salary of 1924. There might be a slight difference. The great advantage to the service is that this is now a salary accruing to them with the statutory increase and possibilities all through the service of reaching higher maxima. That should be appreciated.

Mr. LADNER: On the theory which the minister has been explaining where there has been an actual decrease instead of an increase, or an injustice, is there in the act any provision by which the minister by order in council can remedy that situation?

Mr. RINFRET: That could be done only by reclassification or promotion of those men.

Mr. GUTHRIE: To cut the matter short, would the minister consider this suggestion? There are 3,000 letter carriers and I understand there are 1,700 mail clerks, or, in round numbers, 4,700 of these employees. All they ask is that in addition to what they are being granted they get $60 a year. They are now getting an increase of $60 a year less the $18 of which we spoke, or a net increase of $42. If the government would consider giving them the aditional $60, that would involve a matter of only $282,000 per annum. The minister proposes an appropriation of $2,700,000. If he would increase that by $282,000, he would cover that very large class of employees who feel that they are not being fairly dealt with at present.

Mr. RINFRET: Why single them out? There you have discrimination, the very thing we want to avoid. The hon. member says: there are 3,000 letter carriers; give it to them. Why not give it to the railway mail clerks who are in the same division?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have added them.

Mr. RINFRET: That will mean 11,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I was informed that there were 3,000 letter carriers and 1,700 mail clerks.

Mr. RINFRET: There are postal clerks, customs clerks and many other classes in that group who have been given consideration already and who are getting $60 of a difference. I want to accept any suggestion in good grace, but we have tried hard to have an adjustment made that will prevent discrimination, and it is by giving special consideration to this or that class that discrimination will arise.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Did the minister not promise the men in 1924 to make good the $198 bonus? As a matter of fact they are getting a net increase of $60.

Mr. RINFRET: This year?

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I mean a net increase over the 1924 income.

Mr. RINFRET: That is right.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to support the plea of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie), not that I consider his proposal as being at all adequate to meet the situation, but because I regard it as being the least possible that can be done at the present time. I think it would receive the support of hon. members and also of the public generally throughout the country. The requests of the letter carriers receive greater endorsation from the general public than those of any other class. This is perhaps because the ordinary public comes into closer touch with them and understands the nature of their work, much of which in this country is arduous, but it is also because we believe that this particular class of civil servants has not received proportionately anything like the salary which they should receive, and that in making an increase as proposed we are in reality only attempting in a very small degree to catch up in the arrears that are due to them.

I venture to suggest that the apparent increases of which we have heard so much are often nullified by changes in the classification of the civil service. That has not been clearly brought out. The schedule of salaries in the civil service is so complicated that it is extremely difficult for us at this time to go into details, but it should be clearly recognized that very often any increases have been entirely nullified by changes in classification. Moreover, with regard to this special class for whom a plea has been made, a few years ago an adjustment was made giving them $60 a year more. As I understand the situation, that was in order to bring them up more nearly on a parity with the other classes of the civil service. In this case if they are to be given simply the other $60, this means really that that adjustment goes for nothing. I take it that others are not being discriminated against if this class receives the full $120 increase.

Another matter in which we who come from the west are particularly interested is the bonus. There has been a special bonus for years on account of the higher cost of living in the west; that complicates the situation still further as regards the western men. But in the case of the war bonus I claim that it was given because of the increased cost of living and that increased cost of living is still a factor in the situation. Members of this House had their sessional indemnities increased at about the same time because of the increased cost of living, and we are not prepared to say that that sessional indemnity ought to be lowered. We recognize that the cost of living has been permanently increased or, if you like to put it the other way, that the purchasing power of the dollar has been lessened. This is an important consideration, especially in the case of the lower paid civil servants. I do not think the Secretary of State has answered the statements made by the letter carriers. I want to place on record this memorandum which has been handed to many of us:

Salary Revision, 1924, As Applied To Letter Carriers

1923, salary, $1,260; bonus, $297; total, $1,557.

1924, April 1, salary, $1,260; bonus, $198; tatol, $1,458; reduction, $99.

1924, July salary revision, salary, $1,440; bonus, $18; total, $1,458.

1924, Post Office Department's recommendation for letter carriers, salary, $1,560.

1927, salary proposed, salary, $1,500; reduction bonus, $18; increase "net", $42 or 81 cents per week.

I do not wonder that the civil servants, however loyal they may be to the service, hesitate to accept willingly an increase of only 81 cents per week. I do not think it is fair to them. To put the matter in the words of the Amalgamated Civil Servants of Canada, a western organization:

> We refer to the recent announcement on civil service salaries wherein it states "that a general increase in salaries to be effective April 1, 1927 on the following basis, $120 increase to all civil servants except junior clerks grade I and those who received an increase in salary of $180 in 1924, who are to receive an increase in salary of $60 per annum." We beg to say that no civil servant to our knowledge received an increase in remuneration of $180 in 1924. It is true that certain classes had $180 added to salary range, but the civil servants in those classes at the same time lost an equal or greater amount in pay by the abolition of the bonus.

If that statement is correct, a great deal of what the Secretary of State has said is not really relevant in this connection. I read on:

> Now we find that this reduction, or at the best equalization of pay, is called an $180 increase for the purpose of depriving civil servants affected of the full benefit of the new increase. This is camouflage of the worst kind, and certainly cannot be calculated to ensure that esprit de corps which is necessary for a good and efficient service.
>
> A few illustrations will suffice. A letter carrier at his maximum in 1920 received $1,656 per annum, in 1921 he was reduced to $1,458, in 1924 after the so-called $180 increase he still received $1,458 and under the new revision of 1927 will receive $1,500, an increase not of $60 but $42, which still leaves him with $156 per annum less than he received in 1920. Postal clerks in western Canada under the new revision will have a maximum salary only $60 greater than in pre-war days, despite his so-called $180 increase in 1924.
> It will be noted that while in the above illustrations we quote figures paid to postal employees, we wish particularly to emphasize the fact that the same is true in all other departments because the salaries in all departments are interrelated.

I do not want to delay the House, but I venture to assert that greater consideration is constantly being given to the more highly paid officials, and I would urge that we attempt to deal fairly with these lower paid men who have not the same opportunity of making their influence felt.

Reference was made to the vote for the new building at Washington. I voted last night in favour of it simply because it seemed to me that if we were going to keep up the standards that were proposed it was a good business proposition. Personally I do not agree with the idea of keeping up those standards. It seems to me that we can maintain our dignity in some other way than by lavish hospitality, or conforming to certain elaborate and extravagant standards. The purchase of the building seemed a good proposition, and that is the reason I voted for it. But surely it is also beneath the dignity of Canada to pay less than a decent wage to our employees. By the vote last night we decided to keep up the dignity of one Canadian by voting—

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. gentleman voted for it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, because as I said this House was of opinion that a certain style should be maintained, and the amendment itself made provision for an additional amount for the year in order to maintain that standard.

An hon. MEMBER: Too thin.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: And I said if we are going to maintain that standard it seems best to do it in a business-like way, as was suggested by the government. I am not discussing the vote of last night, except as an illustration. I say it was generally considered, admitted by both sides of the House, that the dignity of Canada should be maintained, and the amendment itself provided for maintaining it on that scale. To-day I urge that we ought to maintain our dignity by paying something like a reasonable amount to our employees. We are paying far below that which is being paid in the United States. Why should we not have as great a pride in paying high salaries as we have in spending a large sum of money for the purpose of standing well with the comparatively limited group of people who may visit the embassy and be impressed by the scale on which our offices are maintained in Washington? I would urge that the government should even at this stage give careful consideration to the representations that are being made by the rank and file of the people from one end of the country to the other, and revise the proposed salary scale. The men have been waiting a long time. Personally I think they have been waiting with a good deal of patience, and since the government is assured of general support in the House for any move of this character, I cannot see why they could not afford to be generous.

Mr. HANSON: If the department and the government cannot see their way to give this increase to the letter carriers as well as to the mail clerks, then I will confine my plea to the mail clerks. There are seventeen hundred of them. The $60 increase would amount to $102,000 a year. That is not a very large sum. The objections raised by the Secretary of State on behalf of the government, as I gather, are twofold. First he says there is the question of discrimination, and secondly, that you must pay regard to the standpoint of the taxpayer of the country. Those are the two main objections, I gather, to giving the increase to the railway mail service, apart from the further fact—I might call it No. 2—that they had some increase in 1924. I am not impressed with the two arguments advanced by the Secretary of State. As to the question of discrimination, there is no comparison between the hazards of the life of the railway mail clerk, and the life of an ordinary civil servant. Hon. members have only to reflect that every day these men are on duty on their run they are in danger. If my hon. friend will look up the statistics he will find that the average life of railway employees on the United States railways is only eleven years. I will leave it to the Minister of Labour if I am not correct. I am talking of engineers and of the operating staff. I need not say that the railway mail clerks are occupying as hazardous a position, we will say as the brakesmen, or engineers or locomotive firemen, but if my hon. friend will go to the Post Office Department he will learn that there is a very substantial percentage of accidental deaths due to the hazard of the occupation in Canada. One of the worst sights I ever saw in my life was an accident to a railway mail clerk at Palmer's Point, Dorchester, when a huge express train went over the embankment into the the slough, and the only man killed was the railway mail clerk. The engineer and the brakesman survived. The railway mail clerk was a resident of my own city. I knew him well, and because of the hazards and the risks that these men take I say there should be discrimination in their favour. They are not paid out of proportion to the risks involved in the course of their occupation. Neither am I impressed by the plea of protection to the pocket of the taxpayer, in view of the exhibition of prodigality we had last night in the expenditures provided for in the supplementary and main estimates as well as the other expenditures voted this year. It ill becomes the Secretary of State or any hon. member on the government benches to talk about protecting the taxpayer. I marvelled last night and said to myself: Where is the Minister of Finance, and why did we not have some word from him on behalf of the taxpayers of the country? We have had no word from him in that regard this session, I am sorry to say. I have the very highest respect for my hon. friend. I am sorry to have to admit that he has fallen down on the job. You will be doing less than justice if you do give this increase to the railway mail clerks; and you will be doing an injustice if you refuse it.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend is one of the whips of the opposition, and he says he marvels at the Finance minister for allowing votes to go through the House so rapidly. I sit here and marvel at my hon. friends opposite, one moment blowing hot, the next moment blowing cold—advocating extravagant expenditure throughout the country wherever they think it will catch the popular vote.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister stand up and say that the granting of the increase to the railway mail clerks of this country is extravagance? Let him answer.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): In this salary revision there appears to be one class that gets an increase of only $60, in some instances less. The minister explained that in 1924 when salary adjustments were made this class got an increase of about $180, and he now suggests that they are being treated in a better way than the rest of the service under this revision. Why was there any revision of the salaries of that class in 1924? If those men and women received an increase on that occasion while the rest of the civil service did not, were the latter discriminated against?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Then if on that occasion they were given something simply to bring them in line with the other civil servants, I ask are they not now being discriminated against? It seems to me that one or other condition must be true.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): You are perfectly right.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I would ask the minister to consider whether we would not be justified in giving a straight $120 increase all around. If at this moment he is not prepared to do that, I would ask him not to object to the desired increase if after investigation it is found that full justice may not have been done this class. I want to say a good word on behalf of these officials. I know their work, I believe they are entitled to full consideration, and I hope they will get it.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman, one of the great difficulties we encounter in dealing with the salaries of the railway mail clerks and mail carriers is that, in my opinion, they are not properly classified. Each set of employees are in a class by themselves. To give to the railway mail clerks and mail carriers the full increase which they claim they should now get, without giving consideration to the increase granted to them in 1924, would be a discrimination against all other classes in the service. But recognizing as I do the hazardous work of the railway mail clerks, and the arduous work of the mail carriers, my recommendation would be to readjust their classification and thus bring about such a change as would give them the justice that they are now seeking.

Mr. BENNETT: What does that mean?

Mr. VENIOT: I claim the railway mail clerk is not classified according to the work he is doing, and therefore is not receiving an adequate salary.

Mr. BENNETT: Can the minister state the minimum and maximum?

Mr. VENIOT: The salary starts at $1,080 and reaches $1,680. When this proposal goes through the maximum will be $1,800.

Mr. BENNETT: And mileage?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, I am coming to that. I do not point this out to depreciate the value of the work performed by the railway man, but besides this salary he gets one cent a mile for the run he makes.

Mr. BENNETT: What would be the total payment?

Mr. VENIOT: It depends on the mileage. The senior men are granted the best runs if they so desire.

Mr. BENNETT: Some runs are as high as six hundred miles.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: The average, I think, is about 250 miles.

Mr. VENIOT: It is pretty close to the mark. This must not be lost sight of. In order to get all the facts before the House, let me call attention to what is practically a part of the salary of the mail carrier; I refer to his uniform and boots, which are supplied to him by the department.

Mr. BENNETT: But he can wear them only when on duty.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. VENIOT: That is so. I think he is entitled to a new suit and a couple of pairs of boots every year. I feel there is no class of civil servants that should be better paid according to the work they do than railway mail clerks.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. VENIOT: They perform the most hazardous work in the whole service. Then we must not forget that the mail carrier is gathering and distributing mail six days a week in all kinds of weather. His work is also in a different class. There is where the trouble comes in. I am not blaming anybody for it; but I claim that had these two classes been properly classified they would not to-day be complaining, because their minimum and maximum would have brought them statutory increases which would have satisfied their demands. I understand that the Civil Service Commission cannot very well re-classify any branch unless they get a recommendation from the minister in charge. It is my intention to request the Civil Service Commission to make a re-classification or readjustment of these two classes, and so secure to them adequate recognition of their services.

Mr. BENNETT: The other day the Postmaster General made the statement of his own volition that he had seen fit to introduce legislation reducing the postage on papers by 33⅓ per cent. Last year we got $1,500,000 for carrying 45,000 tons of newspapers through the mail. We have now reduced the rate 33⅓ per cent with the result that we shall lose $500,000 in revenue which will go into the pockets of the rich publishers of the country. Nobody asked the minister to make that reduction and if he had retained the revenue we shall now lose he would be in a position to-day to give the mail clerks and letter carriers the $60 mentioned by the leader of the opposition. The letter carriers of the country carry 100 tons of newspapers per day.

Mr. VENIOT: No, they do not.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, the newspapers and magazines carried last year in Canada totalled 45,000 tons. Deducting one-third as the quantity delivered otherwise than by letter carriers, we have 30,000 tons carried by these men, or approximately 100 tons a day.

Mr. VENIOT: If my hon. friend's calculations were correct I would agree with this statement.

Mr. BENNETT: The Postmaster General will find that the letter carriers are carrying on their backs 100 tons of mail matter per day They are to receive about 78 cents a week increase in pay while the proprietors of the newspapers, without any solicitation on their part, are to get $500,000. We should keep that money and give it to the letter carriers and the railway mail clerks. That is one point I want to make. There is another suggestion I would offer the government, and that is with respect to railway mail clerks. I think the government should consider the advisability of carrying an insurance policy, covering the lives of these men, of from $3,000 to $5,000. Having regard to the fact that these employees work in the very front of the train, I think the state might well provide a system of insurance for them. I think these 4,700 men are being very badly used. Their danger has not been appreciated. The minister says frankly that he will do something to meet the situation and of that we are glad. I do think, however, that the money which is being given to the publishers of the country as a result of the reduction in the rate on newspapers might go to the letter carriers, who I repeat carry 100 tons of mail matter on their backs every day.

Mr. ROBINSON: I have received from the letter carriers of the border cities a statement showing that in 1924, until March 1, they were receiving $1,557 a year while from April 1, 1925, they received $1,440. In 1926, with a bonus of $18, they got $1,458. These letter carriers, owing to their arduous duties, seldom remain in the service the 35 years, or whatever happens to be the period of service that entitles them to superannuation. Having to climb stairs and hills with heavy mail matter on their backs, they succumb to the strain in a few years. In places like the border cities, where the cost of living is high and rentals are double what they are in cities like St. Thomas, Chatham and London, the letter carriers should receive a bonus. In St. Thomas, for a frame house of six rooms a rental of from twenty to thirty dollars a month is charged, and for the same house in the border cities it is anywhere from forty-five to sixty dollars a month. Having studied the condition of the letter carriers I am quite sympathetic towards them and I urge the minister to take this matter into his serious consideration and do something to help them to meet the cost of living.

Mr. TOLMIE: I want to endorse what the minister has said with regard to the necessity for a reclassification of these men. When may we expect it to be done?

Mr. VENIOT: That depends on the authority to whom we have to apply. I can assure my hon. friend that there is no man who has a greater sympathy than I for the employees of the civil service in all classes, but especially for those men who have to deliver letters and mail.

Mr. GEARY: I take for granted that the object of those in charge of the salary revision is to continue paying to the employees of the government at least a living wage. The living wage in 1924 was admitted to be $1,458; that is to say, the salary was only $1,260, and in order to bring that up to a living wage a certain bonus was added, of which I believe $99 was removed by some sort of revision. But what happened in 1924 when the revision took place? There was no change in the cost of living but the sum of $180, previously called bonus, was called salary; with the sequence to the man who received it that his superannuation percentage would be deducted from that amount, which had not been the case with the bonus. No one can say that between 1924 and 1927 there was any substantial decrease in the cost of living; rather, I think, the contrary has been the case. So if the department was alive to the fact that a man must get a living wage and that he must have some security in his labour, and implemented that understanding with a certain revision in 1924, it seems to me that the department must be bound to at least continue that salary and not call it a raise. It has not been admitted by the minister, but doubtless he will quite frankly state that the Post Office Department in 1924 recommended a salary of $1,560 for letter carriers. In some way this recommendation was tossed about between the department and the Civil Service Commission, and only this year we find the Civil Service Commission acting. I would like very much if the minister would tell us whether the recommendation now before us in regard to these classes is exactly as it was received from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. RINFRET: I may say that it is.

Mr. GEARY: Then, Mr. Chairman, may I recall to the minister that on June 15 of last year this question was very much alive; on that date I asked a question, which is to be found at page 4492 of Hansard, as follows:

> I wish to ask a question in reference to the report on the salaries of the civil servants. I understand that action has been deferred pending the appointment of the two other commissioners, there being only the chairman at the moment. There being no Civil Service Commission fully appointed, will the question of salaries have to remain in abeyance until the next session of parliament?

To this question the right hon. Prime Minister replied as follows:

> The matter need not necessarily remain in abeyance until the next session of parliament; I hope the commissioners will be appointed long before that time. I think I can say to my hon. friend that any delay that may be occasioned will not cause any loss to the civil servants in any particular.

I submit to the committee that at the least there has been the loss of the year's increase in pay. The Prime Minister must have been talking about delay, and he must have meant that the delay would not prejudice the matter because of the fact that any increase would be postponed from last year to some time in the future. That, I think, has not been taken into consideration, though the Prime Minister must admit what I have taken his words to convey; the service were greatly reassured as to the position in which they then found themselves as a result of what the Prime Minister said.

This amount of $1,560 amounts to practically 60 cents an hour for an eight-hour day, in the neighbourhood of $28.60 per week, as nearly as we can get it. The men who are digging ditches, or rolling barrels or doing other labouring work of the most ordinary kind for the city of Toronto, are getting exactly that wage to-day, with holidays thrown in and other considerations. The postal employees are men who have to possess certain qualifications exceeding those of the labourers I have mentioned; they have to pass an examination and they must be men of intelligence and education in order to carry out their duties efficiently. May I remind this committee that during the last few years there has been a great deal of important work added to the duties of the letter carriers; they sell stamps, collect c.o.d. orders. have to do with postal insurance, and other little jobs of that sort which carry some responsibility, in addition to their regular work. But, as I remember it, as a consequence of these additions to the duties of the postman there is no increase in his salary. The revision in 1924 was not an increase; it was simply a transfer of one part of his salary; instead of being labelled a bonus it was called a salary. That condition still exists and this salary was considered necessary in 1924, so I think we find ourselves clear on the point that there is no such general increase as that suggested by the Secretary of State.

My hon. friend has spoken of a matter in this connection which I think is of importance, and about which I asked a question last night. There is a loss on the carrying of newspapers, which I think has a direct bearing on the question under discussion. That loss is a direct charge, because there is no profit in that part of the postal business. The recent action of this House on reducing the postage on newspapers, has just been described as a direct bonus to the proprietors of certain newspapers, which I understand to be the larger ones because smaller ones have written me protesting against the reduction. I understand further that some of these newspapers canvass their district and give bonuses to obtain yearly subscriptions, and that in some cases you will find a newspaper offering a kewpie doll for a subscription. If that is the case, this government is assisting those newspapers by buying kewpie dolls for the purpose of increasing their circulations. That act has passed, but it has an effect on this question, because I think the government should say whether they are prepared to grant this request to the proprietors of newspapers, while they will not accede to the request of a working man who is not getting more than enough to maintain a decent standard of living. There is no use calling that $18 a bonus; it has become a permanent part of the letter carrier's salary, but that is now lost to him as against the $60 increase. There is not a general increase of $120, and it does seem to me that the minister has not made out a good case to support his statement that an increase of $240 has been made since 1924. I submit that a salary of $1,560 would be a reasonable salary for these men, and I would again remind the committee that in 1924 the department recommended that that salary be paid. So I do press very strongly the claims of these men to be treated adequately and fairly; it is not an extravagant amount, and it seems to me the people of this country would be well satisfied to see these men receive a wage commensurate with the cost of living and with the conditions under which men employed by this government should live.

Mr. EVANS: May I ask the Secretary of State if he would make a statement regarding the civil servants employed by the Soldier Settlement Board? Are they to remain in the temporary class, or will they be considered permanent, and is it intended that they should share in this increase and in the superannuation?

Mr. FORKE: I may say that that matter is at present being considered by the government.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I ask the Postmaster General one question? He has promised to deal with two classes in regard to which there is some dispute. There is a third class that deserve consideration. I refer to the postal clerks in cities, being those of large size down to the smaller ones. I think the officials of his own department admit that these employees should be in another class. I was in his department the other day, and the officials admitted that there ought to be something done in that regard. I would therefore ask the minister if, in undertaking a reclassification of mail clerks and letter carriers, he would carry out also a reclassification of the employees to whom I have alluded.

Mr. VENIOT: I would not undertake to make a reclassification. The statement I made was that I would look into the matter and see if a reclassification is justified. Before I make a promise of that kind, I should like to see whether I would be justified in doing it or not. However, I will look into the matter.

Mr. SPENCE (Parkdale): Much as I sympathize with the Secretary of State, I do not see any reason why, if he exercises good judgment, he cannot get out of the entanglement which seems to exist in connection with this matter. To my mind the course he should pursue is to use everybody alike. There never was a reclassification which was satisfactory to the civil service. I have never heard of such a one yet, certainly not in Toronto, and I have lived in that city for forty years. The reclassification in the present case is not satisfactory to the men. What they want is an increase of pay. Let us leave the cost of living out of the question; let us get away from the question of the bonus and the increase the men got in 1923. There seems to be a misunderstanding between the men and the government. The men claim that the $60 they are getting at this time is simply an adjustment. We have a splendid esprit de corps among the men in the different branches of the public service in the city of Toronto and why should we jeopardize its continuance. If dissatisfaction exists among any group of employees you cannot expect loyalty from them, and if you do not increase their salaries you will arouse a feeling of dissatisfaction. Personally, I think their salaries should be increased. I have no particular sympathy with a discussion of this kind, nor have I ever listened to representations by the letter carriers or mail clerks. I have received letters and telegrams on the matter but have never read them. However, I have been in business long enough to know that you must satisfy men before you can get loyal service from them. Our letter carriers and mail clerks in Toronto are good all round men. I am not talking for the sake of getting votes, nor with the idea of promoting any political object. But dissatisfaction has been so rife and calamity howling has been going on for months to such an extent that I think we ought to give these employees the increase in salary for which they ask. Then let the matter rest for another five years unless an increase in the cost of living necessitates action at an earlier date. We all know how efficiently the mail clerks perform their work. We all know how well the letter carriers discharge their onerous duties. I have seen letter carriers issuing from post offices so loaded down with mail matter that the burden was enough to kill two men let alone one. The letter carriers in Toronto are certainly not getting a fair wage for the work they are doing. In the business world there are a number of men who are paid more for doing less work. If business men treated their employees as the government does mail clerks and letter carriers, they would not get any loyalty at all. I think the best plan to adopt would be to give this increase of $120 and bring about the readjustment for which the men are asking. In order to put an end to the bickering and complaining I would say: Make it an increase of $120 all round and let it go at that.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Last week I read to the House a telegram which I had received from Branch No. 5 of the Federated Association of Letter Carriers of Quebec, who complained that they were suffering from discrimination in the matter of the $120 increase and asked for a reconsideration of their case. The hon. Secretary of State announced at the time that the claim of these men would receive consideration. I understand that the Postmaster General now states that he is willing to go into the matter again, that he is willing to meet representatives of the men and discuss their claims, and see if the classification cannot be changed. May I say that I would view with great pleasure any arrangement that would give satisfaction to these worthy employees of the Post Office Department.

Mr. PETTIT: I wish to endorse all that has been said on behalf of the letter carriers, and that remark applies also to the railway mail clerks. There are no more faithful officials in any branch of the civil service than the mail clerks and the letter carriers. They are mostly married men with families, and in my opinion they have been receiving far too little remuneration in the past for the splendid services they render to the public. The amount of increase now proposed is, I believe, not at all adequate; it should be substantially larger.

It strikes me that when we in this House vote large sums of money in connection with material things—votes which might be very much less in many instances—we ought not to be too niggardly when we come to deal with our fellow men. I say this while at the same time having due regard to the pockets of the taxpayers. I trust—and I urge the matter as strongly as I can—that the government may yet see its way substantially to increase the salaries paid to these public servants.

Mr. SPENCER: I just wish to refer for a moment to the second lot of exceptions that the minister mentioned, namely, those concerning the senior stenographers and clerks. I notice from a memo I have in my hand that in the reclassification of 1919 senior employees were classified as senior clerks with a minimum salary of $1,320 and a maximum of $1,680 In 1924 they were reclassified, and the trouble seems to be that some of those who had got to the maximum were put into grade 3 class instead of into grade 4. The result is that it leaves them in this peculiar position: As many of the clerks classified in 1919 as senior clerks were debarred in 1924 from the fourth grade, they were placed as grade 3 clerks, although at their maximum of $1,680, and in this way did not receive any assistance in 1924, being revised downward instead of upward. In 1927, they are advised they cannot receive the $120 increase as the maximum of their class is now $1,620, and as they stand at a maximum of $1,680, they are beyond their class, or in other words have reached a dead wall so far as promotion is concerned. It would therefore appear that these grade 3 clerks at a maximum of $1,680 should be placed in grade 4, or that in some way their standing should be bettered in order that they may receive the $120. I should like to ask the Secretary of State if it is possible to place those, who, I understand, number 400, in grade 4 and give them an opportunity of an increase?

Mr. RINFRET: I touched that very point in my explanation and perhaps the hon. member will be kind enough to refer to Hansard. I suggested that they should receive an improvement by promotion, but that it would be unwise to grant them an additional increase because they are already above the maxima of their classes.

Mr. SPENCER: How are they to get promoted if they are above their maxima?

Mr. BELL (St. John): I have telegrams from letter carriers in St. John, N.B., stating that under the plan now proposed the net increase which they will receive is $39. Will the minister kindly let me have his view as to that?

Mr. RINFRET: Similar telegrams were sent to every member and we have already discussed the matter very fully this morning. The Postmaster General has made the declaration that he will look into the matter again. Perhaps my hon. friend will now agree to let the item pass.

Mr. BELL (St. John): I was unfortunately out of the House this morning.

Item agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Immigration contingencies and general expenses, including grants to immigration and colonization societies associations, women's hostels, as may be authorized by the governor general in council, $1,300,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): My remarks will be of a more or less general character. I think it may be taken for granted that it is the practically unanimous opinion of the people of Canada who have given any thought to the matter at all that we want more population in this country, in order that the burden of our responsibilities may be spread over more shoulders and rest more lightly on each individual. But immigration is not merely a problem of numbers or a question of getting a number of people to come to Canada. It is as well a problem of the possibility and advisability of mixing old world and new world racial and cultural characteristics. It is a problem which has to do with the future of Canada and the part which Canada will play in the history of the world. It is very interesting to note that Canada's population in the last thirty years has followed almost figure for figure the population of the United States in the same period one hundred years ago. That is to say our population in 1900 was practically almost the same as that of the United States in 1800. Our population in 1910 was almost identical with the United States in 1810, and our population in 1921 almost exactly the same as that of the United States in 1820 if it had not been for the intervention of the war. In the last century the United States brought into that country from foreign lands over 36,000,000 immigrants.

Immigration to the United States reached its peak in 1907, the figures showing for that year 1,280,000 immigrants. For a period of ten years the immigration figures of the United States were between 800,000 and a little over a million. The war showed that in the United States—and I say this from the study I have given to the matter—they had a large percentage of population they could not depend upon in a national crisis; in other words, they found they had a considerable percentage of population which had not become Americanized. That fact was so thoroughly impressed on the United States during the war that it led them to adopt a quota system the basis of which was three per cent of the census of 1910; later the basis was the census of 1890 and the quota was two per cent. I will not give figures as to just what that meant in the way of reduction in the number of immigrants coming from certain parts of Europe into the United States. The quota system was adopted with the idea of lessening the immigration to the countries from the south and south eastern part of Europe, and giving such encouragement as they could to immigration from the northern part of Europe and the British Isles, from that part of Europe which in our immigration regulations is specified as area No. 1, so far as Europe is concerned. I would like to quote here from a statement made by President Coolidge to Congress on December 6, 1923, in regard to this matter. He emphasized the view that the United States should adopt a policy of numerical restriction based on a census prior to 1910. That was carried out on the two per cent quota of the census of 1890. I quote a paragraph from President Coolidge's message which I think we, as Canadians, would do well very carefully to consider in regard to our attitude towards immigration. President Coolidge said:

> America should be kept for Americans. For this purpose it is necessary to continue a policy of restricted immigration. It would be well to make such immigration of a selective nature with some inspection at the source, and based either on a prior census or upon the record of naturalization. Either method would insure the admission of those with the largest capacity and best intention of becoming citizens. I am convinced that our present economic and social conditions warrant a limitation of those to be admitted. We should find additional safety in a law requiring the immediate registration of all aliens. Those who do not want to be partakers of the American spirit ought not to settle in America.

That paragraph in the statement of President Coolidge might be paraphrased by inserting the word "Canadian" where "American" is used, and may with good judgment be accepted as the policy we in Canada should adopt. I believe we are rapidly nearing the time when we must, to a greater or less degree, accept that as the logical position for us to take in our immigration policy That is to say, that we should have in mind, not merely the getting of so many tens of thousands of people to come to Canada as immigrants, but we should also consider the possibility and the ease with which these immigrants can be Canadianized and converted into Canadian citizens, as we want them to be. I make that statement and I wish to justify it by showing in my estimation the plan we ought to follow. If Canada were to adopt the quota system on the three per cent basis, in proportion to our population, we would be taking in as immigrants each year from 15,000 to 20,000. That is in proportion to our population as compared with that of the United States, we would be taking in 15,000 to 20,000 each year. That is to say, if we accepted the United States position as sound, that the United States, with a population of 120,000,000, can only—and this is exactly what they say—Americanize a certain number of people from foreign countries within a year, and therefore they restrict their immigration to that figure, then in proportion to our population as compared with theirs, we would only be able to take in from fifteen to twenty thousand immigrants from continental Europe. Manifestly we cannot place this restriction in immigration, and no one would think of suggesting its being put into force.

But I want to submit a suggestion in regard to juvenile immigration. We are told in this report, and we have every reason to accept it as absolutely correct, that every year in the United Kingdom some five or six thousand boys and girls leave school without any job to go to. We are also told that we might reasonably expect to bring a large proportion of those boys and girls to this country under some plan of juvenile immigration. The report, in referring to a number of organizations engaged in immigration work, mentions the British Immigration Aid and Colonization Association, with headquarters at Montreal, as the only purely Canadian organization engaged in bringing boys to Canada. The organization has only been active since 1924. I might point out that of the 1,862 boys and girls brought to this country by the various agencies during the year ending March 31, 1926, 446 boys were handled by this organization. The next in the list was the Salvation Army, which brought out 464, of whom 379 were boys.

There is another point in this connection that I want to mention. On page 9 of the report reference is made to the number of applications received by the various organizations and the number of children sent out by them. I draw the attention of the minister to the fact that whereas the Salvation Army received 2,560 applications, it sent out 464 children; but the British Immigration Aid and Colonization Association received 479 applications and sent out 446 boys. Why is that? As a matter of fact I know because I had a great deal to do with this organization starting along this line of juvenile immigration. The reason is this, and I commend it to the attention of the minister. From the time that society started to operate it laid down the principle that not a boy—they do not bring any other than boys of teen age—should be placed on board vessel at Glasgow or Liverpool until he had a place to go to when he arrived in Canada. There was nothing haphazard about the association's plan at all. It has worked out surprisingly well. May I add that the plan inaugurated by this particular association so impressed Premier Ferguson that he has instituted a juvenile movement through the provincial farm at Guelph. I believe the premiers of the other provinces as well as the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railway are convinced that the juvenile movement is one of the very best that we can encourage to bring young immigrants to this country. I think it is the best, for two main reasons; many others could be given. First, we should encourage to the limit the bringing of boys of teen age from the old country because such boys, according to statistics, show a higher percentage of literacy than our native-born Canadians, and such ideas as they have learned in the mother country, of government and civil institutions are the same as ours. So there is no trouble whatever to Canadianize those boys. And they speak our language. The second reason is that probably all over the Dominion, certainly throughout Ontario and Quebec and the prairie provinces, thousands of our farmers are in need of help, and for lack of it their farms are not producing to anything like their full capacity; they cannot afford to hire a married man, and give him a wage sufficient to maintain himself and his family; and consequently they are very anxious indeed to get these boy immigrants. In a word, the movement works well from the standpoint of the farmers to get them much needed help, and from the standpoint of the boys to get them farm jobs. If there is anything like proper supervision of the boys after they go on the farms I believe that practically all of them will make good in the future as they have in the past.

As I said before, I think the Minister of Immigration has adopted rather a harsh attitude towards the Salvation Army. That organization has been bringing out the class of boys that the farmers of this country are asking for. I believe that every boy brought out by the army has cost it between $70 and $80 after taking into consideration the government grants, for the army authorities inform me that before bringing a boy to Canada they have to look after him for a period varying from six to twelve weeks. I do not regard it as a handicap to such boys to enter into an arrangement with the Salvation Army to pay back a certain amount of money to assist the army in continuing their work. I repeat, I do not agree with the policy which the minister is pursuing in regard to the Salvation Army. And we are not carrying out that policy all along the line. As I said before, immigrants from continental Europe are handed a certain amount of money by immigration agencies to enable them to prove that they are not entering the country as paupers. That money they have to pay back to the organization with, I believe, a considerable addition in the way of profit, and that money is turned over again to bring out more immigrants. If it is a handicap to the boy to have an arrangement with the Salvation Army to pay back $70 or $80, then logically it must be equally a handicap to the class of immigrants I have referred to to pay a large percentage of profit or a commission to the immigration organization that advances the money to enable them to comply with our regulations. Having regard to the work which has been done by the Salvation Army and similar organizations in bringing out boys to this country, and in view of the report of the inspectors as found at page 9, showing the percentage who are making progress, good, fair and poor, the character and behaviour of the boys, and so forth, I say that this line of immigration is one that commends itself strongly to me. The minister has admitted that there are operating in Canada and the United States some twenty-eight clerics of one denomination engaged, as he says, in the work of repatriation; that is to say, I suppose, they are engaged in trying to induce French Canadians who have gone to the United States to return to Canada. That is a commendable work, although I am doubtful whether these clerics devote all their time across the line to bringing French Canadians back into Canada. A good deal of their time, I think, is spent in inducing French Canadians to go from Quebec to the other provinces of this Dominion and plant colonies in other parts of the country; they are not merely engaged in getting French Canadians to return from the United States and re-settle in Canada. I put this to the minister in all fairness. He has seen fit—and I do not quarrel with this feature of his work—to appoint twenty-eight clerics of the Roman Catholic church to engage in immigration activities, while there are no Protestant ministers similarly engaged in Canada and the United States. These twenty-eight clergymen to whom I refer are under salary or under part salary and expenses, according to the minister's own report. Furthermore, there is in Great Britain only one cleric, of the same denomination, who is in receipt of a salary of $1,800 and $1,600 expenses. I do not think that anyone will quarrel with that salary; it is not exorbitant. And so far as Father MacDonnell is concerned, he has done efficient work in bringing Hebridians out to Canada. As I say, I have no fault to find with that. I want to point out to the minister, however, that there are twenty-eight clergymen of one denomination engaged in this work and no minister of any other denomination in either the United States or Canada. In immigration work in the old country there is only one cleric, of the same denomination as the twenty-eight, and no cleric of any other persuasion. Now having regard to these facts, and the further fact that there has been a disposition on the part of the department to deal generously, or at any rate not unfairly, with this particular denomination, I feel all the more strongly that the minister was wrong in imposing upon the Salvation Army such restrictions as he did. I do not say that his department is to be censured in regard to the twenty-eight or thirty clerics of one denomination about whom I have been speaking; but having shown that disposition towards that denomination the minister, it strikes me, might have been somewhat more generous and have given a little more latitude to the people of other denominations engaged in immigration work and who have proved in the past their ability to further immigration into Canada.

In a return tabled a few days ago I find that during the year ending December 31 last 135,984 persons came to Canada. In looking over the list I see that they represent fifty different nationalities in Europe. Forty-eight thousand of these immigrants were British while 20,000 came from the United States. I favour that kind of immigration for the reason I have already stated: such people are easily assimilated and Canadianized because their institutions and language are the same as ours. Their ideas of government also are practically identical with ours. I find that from area No. 1 in Europe, that is to say, Germany and Scandinavia, which have always been favoured, and properly so, in our immigration arrangements, there came about 19,000. That leaves about 47,000 or 48,000 from other countries. Now I do not say anything against these various nationalities, but in my judgment it would have been far better had those 48,000 people who came from various countries in Europe been brought from Great Britain and the United States. If we are going to build up this country with a population who will appreciate the part Canada is going to play in the progress of the world in the years to come we shall be forced to give some consideration, if not exactly to adopt a quota system such as is in force in the United States, at least to some selective immigration policy. We must deliberately select people from those parts of the world where the ideas of governments are similar to our own. People coming from those countries are easily assimilated here and they fall in line readily with our customs and our institutions. In other words it is incumbent upon us to devote our energies in the years to come to bringing into Canada immigrants from England and other countries in Europe where conditions are much the same as they are in Canada. Such people will the more readily work hand in hand with native born Canadians to build up this Dominion. After all, the responsibility for Canada's future rests on the shoulders of her native born sons. The first and primary responsibility is theirs, and it is an important one. If we want assistance from outside let us therefore select our immigrants from among people who will most easily coöperate with us in our endeavour to develop Canada along the lines of true progress.

Mr. MacLAREN: Will the minister state definitely what arrangements his department has made with the government of New Brunswick in reference to coöperative immigration measures?

Mr. FORKE: I do not think I can fully answer that question. The problem is threefold, but so far as the arrangement between the Department of Immigration and the government of New Brunswick is concerned it is settled.

Mr. MacLAREN: What arrangement has been made?

Mr. FORKE: There is an arangement with regard to the extension of what is known as the three thousand family scheme—that is, the bringing of families into New Brunswick. It is a three-way arrangement, to which the Overseas Land Settlement Board has already agreed; it is not quite completed, but is really an extension of the three thousand family scheme. I do not know whether the hon. member knows exactly how that operates; it is an arrangement between the province, which will provide the farm, the Imperial government which advances £300 to the immigrant, and the Department of Immigration which looks after them and places them on the farm. That is the scheme in the rough, but I cannot exactly define it for you; it is not completed so far as the Imperial government is concerned, but there is no doubt it will be carried through. We hope to place 200 families on farms in the maritime provinces this year.

Mr. MacLAREN: Has it any particular reference to boys and girls?

Mr. FORKE: Nova Scotia and the department have a boy scheme in conjunction; New Brunswick is carrying through its own boy scheme, receiving the same assistance all organizations receive in the way of free passages and the granting of $10 for every boy brought over.

I do not want to delay my own estimates, but while I am on my feet I would like to say that I thoroughly agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards). Perhaps I should have left this alone, but I have always felt Quebec to be in a little different position from the other provinces. The people are almost entirely of one race, and we spend very little money on immigration in that province. My hon. friend has stated the case fairly and fully; it is all out in the open, whether it be wise or not, and that is the reason why these people have been allowed a certain latitude not given others.

Mr. IRVINE: I would like to ask the minister if he does not think the industrial life of Canada is pretty well over-balanced now, and that as a matter of fact we have too many farmers as compared with the number of men employed in other industries? It would seem to me that the policy of the department is going to further over-balance our industrial life, because too many farmers will reduce the price of wheat just as too many labourers will bring down wages.

Mr. FORKE: I have considered that question and I find that when this Dominion was exporting 100,000,000 bushels of wheat we did not have as good a market as we now have when we export 400,000,000 bushels, so I am not very much afraid. The world has never had too much food in all the experience of humanity, so there is not much danger that we are going to produce more food than the people require.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like the minister to give a brief outline of the policy of the department. Since I have been in the House, this is the first time we have had a Minister of Immigration who was responsible for that department only; previously another minister has had charge of this department. Consequently I think the minister might give us a brief outline of the proposed activities of the department, which will possibly save a great deal of discussion later on.

Mr. BENNETT: Before the minister answers, there is a question I would like to bring up and which I am under obligation to ask him. In December last the divisional commissioner of the department wrote to a gentleman who was arranging to have his brother come to Canada, as follows:

> I beg to advise that the department has been unable to find a record of your admission to Canada in January, 1904, either at Montreal or at New York. However, the Department of the Secretary of State have advised that you became a naturalized citizen at Calgary on the 6th October, 1908, when you claimed to be a labourer by occupation, and a former national of Russia.
> Kindly consult with fellow passengers—
> Twenty-two years later.
> —in order to obtain correct information regarding your sailing and landing in Canada. Did you proceed from Montreal to New York, or vice versa?

Here is a gentleman who came to western Canada; he married an English woman and they now have two children, one a promising student in high school and the other working in the community. This poor man looked upon this letter as a sort of terrorist reign of Russia, and he thought when he saw these departmental officers going around inquiring about him that he was under conditions again which he had left Russia to escape. I think the minister will realize this is carrying the matter to an extreme, and I do hope he will take some steps to see that that is stopped in Canada. A man who has been a Canadian citizen for eighteen years, who is married and has a family, is being pursued and harassed and cannot quite understand why. Cannot something be done by the minister to stop iniquities of this kind?

There is another matter of which I would like to speak, and that is this permit business, by which men are held up to the tune of $100 or $150 to secure permits. This is a public scandal; it existed before the minister came into office, however, and I do not want him to think I am blaming him for this practice. It should stop, however, and if the minister coming into the department fresh, with the power he has with the men of his group, will merely say that this thing will stop, he will be doing a public service and will prevent this country from becoming a by-word in foreign countries whose nationals are compelled to pay this sum for a permit to enter the country. The regulations should be clear and impartial; they should be applied to one as to another; there should be no favouritism shown Jones which may not be shown Brown and everyone knows that is exactly opposite the present practice. Let him stop that practice and he will have done a great service in maintaining the reputation of Canada abroad and at home. If he will do that, and will deal with this other matter by giving instructions that men should not be so harassed, after having been Canadian citizens for eighteen years, because they want to bring some relative into the country, he will be doing another great service. I do not want to take up too much time of the House but I was under obligation to a great many people to take up this question, and I have done my duty as well and as briefly as I could.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, there is no department of government with the administration of which I am in less agreement than with that of the Department of Immigration. I had intended during this session to move that a committee of the House consider the whole matter of immigration, from the passing of the orders in council governing immigration, down to the administration of that department, but inasmuch as the session is short, and also since we have a new minister, after consulting with a number of members of the House it was agreed that it would be well to allow the new minister to have at least one year in which to investigate his department and to bring down a satisfactory explanation of the future policy of that department. I believe that next session a considerable number of members of this House will expect such a statement from the Minister of Immigration.

Mr. NEILL: I rise to endorse to a large extent the request of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), only I wish to define certain things which I would like the minister to emphasize. Together with the hon. member for Acadia I would like a definite statement placed on Hansard for the information of the country; I have tried to get it privately, but have not succeeded. I would like to know what are the various assisted policies of the Department of Immigration. I am not concerned with those schemes which require or desire that immigrants should come here at their own charges. I am primarily concerned with the different schemes by which the public money is expended in helping people to come to this country, and I think it would be perfectly proper that this vote should not pass until a definite statement has been placed before the committee so that we may know what the policy of the department is. Beginning with the scheme for bringing out boys, we are entitled to know what is paid in connection with the scheme, who has the handling of these boys, and so on. A long statement is not needed, but only a brief summary of the cost and method in each case.

Then we come to coöperative societies like the Salvation Army. Next we have the scheme by which farm labourers are assisted to come out, and they are helped in some way that is somewhat shadowy. I find now that there is a subsidiary scheme, so to speak, by which the farm labourers are divided into two classes—the experienced farm labourer and the inexperienced farm labourer. I should like to get particularly what constitutes an "inexperienced farm labourer", because if he is not just simply a common, ordinary labourer, I do not know what he is. If he has not had any experience of working on a farm, how can he be classified in connection with farm work? That is some sort of subterfuge adopted in order to bring practically unskilled labour into this country. Then there is the statement by which apparently the government lends itself—and yet we are told that it incurs no responsibility—to the scheme by which the railway companies advertise that they will bring out men and guarantee them employment in this country. Yet when an advertisement of that character is produced in this House and the matter is put up to the department, the department denies all responsibility. Now I want to know, and I think the House wants to know, what the scheme is in connection with railway companies, what their obligations are, and whether the department or this government does not at the same time incur some direct or indirect responsibility.

Then we have the scheme alluded to a few minutes ago, the empire settlement scheme, and the "three thousand" scheme, whatever that may be. Perhaps they are the same, I do not know. Next there is the scheme of which I have come across traces, so to speak, here and there, and that is for loans to pay passages. I think it is some private company in Britain which finances that. If that is not the case what responsibility do we take in that connection? I have outlined all these schemes and I am sure it would be of interest to this House and to the country—and I say that in no spirit of criticism at all—to learn just what we are lending ourselves to. We are spending over $3,000,000 in this work, and I again repeat that we want to know what is involved in connection with them.

Whilst I am on my feet, and in order to save time perhaps later on, I want to say a few words on behalf of what I might call the labour section of British Columbia, if I may presume to speak for organized labour to some small extent. At any rate I know what their ideas are, and I am familiar with some of their organizations. Here is a short letter which I took out of a Vancouver paper just recently, and which I think voices a certain point of view that is very largely entertained in that city. It reads as follows:

> Sir,—I wish to draw your attention to the labor situation in the city. There are several thousand men looking for employment, men who have been in this province for years.

And remember this is dated in April when spring work is well in hand. The letter goes on to say:

> Men have been told at the employment office that the jobs are being reserved for the newcomers, and a good many late arrivals from Europe have been placed, although the city has been full of men all winter and has enough men around to do all the work that is likely to be undertaken for a few years.
>
> Just the other day twenty-five immigrants were sent up to Ocean Falls. They did not even get a chance to see the city as they were just out.
> This country does not require immigrants at present. It wants capital; labor will follow.

I think that is a temperate and moderate expression of the views of organized labour in British Columbia. Moreover, I think it is true that there are large bodies of unemployed men right in Vancouver to-day. I think the relief expense for a fortnight in March ran to something like $3,000. Of course we shall receive again the stereotyped reply "Oh, these are men who will not work." It is so easy to stifle our conscience by suggesting that these men will not work. But let me recite one or two things. I have here a copy of a labour paper published in Vancouver, the Labour Statesman, and I find in it cases of men who cannot be called professional loafers. These are all within a few months:

> Detective Jock Milne arrested a man for stealing $5. On investigation, he found that the man's wife and two children, aged ten years and sixteen months, had been living in semi-starvation, a small piece of bread being the only food in the house.

Policemen and detectives are not generally softhearted but this man was led to give to this starving family a goose he had just won in a Christmas raffle. Here is another case:

> Then on December 4th 1926, —— ——, Vancouver, committed suicide, by taking strychnine. He left a sick wife and five young children and a note saying he was despondent through being out of work.

Here is another case:

> On December 8th, —— ——, of Esquimalt, slashed his throat in four places. "Let me alone", he said to the police, "I cannot find work so I might as well die. I am fed up."

And next this case

> On December 6th, —— —— a Victoria man, unable to support his wife and four children, threw a stone through the window of Mitchell and Duncan, fashionable jewellers in Victoria, and calmly sat down awaiting arrest. He claimed he was desperate.

Another case is that of a man who stated that he was married, with six children, a wife, Canadian-born, and only a few cents between them and starvation. I could go on and give half a dozen more cases but I will not do so. I only read them to show that these men are typical of a certain class. If they were professional bums they would have gone to a relief agency and demanded and got relief. These are men who took their situation, and that of their wives and children, so desperately to heart that they decided to end it in another way. These men cannot be accused of being professional loafers. It only bears out the statement announced in the papers of the same date that there is a large body of unemployed men in Vancouver to-day. Now I do not object to immigrants coming to this country, I welcome them. But what the labour people say is this: We hear a great deal about protection. Protection of what? Protection of industry. The plea is put up from time to time "Do not let manufactured products from foreign countries, or even from Great Britain, come in here without imposing a protective duty in order to encourage Canadian manufactures." But when it comes down to labour which is the only asset of the worker, the working man might at least be protected from the labour of foreign countries in the matter of the only asset that he has. But is he protected? He is not. On the contrary his competitor is subsidized. He himself came here at his own charge; he saved and scraped enough money to come to this country. His competitor is a man newly out from the old country, or from southern Europe, who has got to take a lower wage, in the latter case because of his inability to understand our language. That man is subsidized to come here, subsidized at our expense and at the expense of the working man with whom he is going to compete. That is what organized labour in British Columbia objects to; it objects that its competitor should be subsidized. Let these men come to Canada if they want to, but let them come at their own expense. But organized labour objects to an organized system of government assistance to bring in unskilled labour to compete with the already overladen surplus that is in Canada to-day. I have gone somewhat off my subject, but I would join again with the hon. member for Acadia in asking for a definite statement of the policies of the government and a brief explanation of the various schemes by which labour is brought to this country.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister is a little backward in giving the explanation to which the House is entitled.

Mr. FORKE: I rise with no other intention.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I know, but you were sitting there very quiet.

Mr. FORKE: I am getting old and stiff and it takes me some time to get up. But I should like to reply to what the hon. member for West Calgary said about permits. I wish the stopping of permits were as easy and plain as he seems to think it is. We have the Immigration Act, the regulations and the orders in council which lay down the law exactly in the matter of the admission of immigrants into the Dominion, but unfortunately there is a clause which permits the minister to override all these rules and regulations and orders in council. If this was only a matter of business, it might be easily got over, but elements of compassion enter into the circumstances so that a man is often compelled, simply on compassionate grounds, to issue permits.

Mr. BENNETT: Send the permit direct to the person.

Mr. FORKE: I can assure the committee that I would like to do so. Since I came into the department my heart has been sore many a time over the question of issuing permits because I could see how much suffering and grief was caused to persons anxious to get permits when I could not conscientiously see my way clear to issue them. I have no sympathy whatever for people who use these permits in order to make money, and if I can stop this practice it will be stopped. Unfortunately, however, people who have a reasonable right to expect to get a permit do not go directly to the department but to some lawyer or a member of parliament or someone else. I am not making any accusation against anyone, but the way in which this is carried on, I do not know whether someone is getting $50 or not on account of managing to get these permits. I will endeavour to stop this practice and I will issue permits only when I feel that they ought to be issued. I am sure that since I have come into the Department of Immigration there has been no increase in the number of permits issued.

Mr. GARDINER: What circumstances make it necessary to issue permits at all?

Mr. FORKE: Under present regulations only those engaged in certain occupations can come into Canada from Europe. They must be farmers, farm workers, or domestic servants. For instance, supposing a Jewish family, because they are perhaps better able than many others to assist friends on the other side, want to bring out a relative. A permit is required for this, and it seems to be a reasonable thing to issue that permit because the family on this side may be well off and the relatives on the other side may be in destitute circumstances. It takes a pretty hard-hearted man in a case of that kind to refuse to issue a permit, and similar cases come up all the time. Perhaps someone may be in perfect health but have some physical defect such as wanting an arm, or something of that kind. Under the regulations he cannot come into this country without a permit, and we have to come to a decision whether or not we shall issue a permit allowing a person with a physical defect of that kind to enter this country.

I have been asked to give a statement of the policy of the Immigration department in regard to immigration. I would be delighted to do so if I had a properly prepared statement so that I could give the committee all the information in as concise a manner as possible. But I had no expectation that I would be called upon this afternoon to make any such lengthy explanation, and I am afraid if I entered into any detailed account of the different activities of the department it would take me perhaps two hours to cover the ground. I will therefore as shortly as I can endeavour to give a resumé of the different activities of my department.

With regard to European countries, I might say a word about the railway agreements of which we hear a great deal. We have an agreement between the department and the two big railway companies whereby they are allowed to recruit in certain countries in Europe a certain number of immigrants of the farmer type.

Mr. SPENCER: Why only the farmer type?

Mr. FORKE: It was thought that was the type of people whom we could most readily assimilate, and as a matter of fact we have more demand for farm labourers than for almost any other class of immigrants. That has been my experience, and whether that policy is right or wrong, it is the present policy of the department. Mention has been made of experienced and partly experienced farm labourers. Naturally people brought up on a farm are of a type that can make good farm labourers, but we all know quite a large percentage of them drift into other employment.

We sometimes speak rather slightingly of foreign-born immigration, but this country would take a long time to develop if we had not foreign-born immigrants. If you go around and see who is doing the heavy, nasty work, work in the lumber camps, in the sewers, the hard physical work that is perhaps not to be desired by our own people, you will find that it is being carried on by foreigners. They are not to be despised; many of them are honest people, willing to do the hard physical labour that our own people will not undertake, and we can always assimilate a certain number of foreign-born people. I agree with the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) that we should be careful that they are not allowed to come into this country in too great numbers so that the British-born element will not be almost absorbed by a foreign population. The railway companies undertake not to bring in immigrants from foreign countries unless they are farmers, farm labourers, or domestic servants. They also undertake by solemn agreement that when they bring them to this country they will place them in occupations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What guarantee have we that the railway companies will live up to that agreement?

[Mr. Forke.]

Mr. FORKE: The guarantee that we can stop them if they do not live up to it, and the written word of the presidents of the two railway companies.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If instances should arise where men are out of work or are not suitable, what steps can be taken by municipalities to ensure that this procedure shall be promptly stopped?

Mr. FORKE: If the railways do not place those immigrants, the department has already undertaken to see that they get work. Speakers have referred to instances of unemployment and so on, but except in isolated cases, such conditions have existed in this country for a long time. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) was citing individual cases a little while ago, but it will be found that in any country under the sun there will always be people who will be in circumstances of that kind.

Mr. NEILL: I cited two thousand in Vancouver alone.

Mr. FORKE: I have already received many inquiries from the prairie provinces as to the supply of labour for this summer, because a tremendous amount of work is going to be carried on. I am up against this proposition all the time and any minister of immigration will find himself in the same position. One class of people will say: Bring in plenty of immigrants. Another class seem suspicious of almost every immigrant that sets foot in this country. Some people say: We want only British-born people in this country. Others will say: Get the man with the sheepskin coat because he is the only one who will stay on the farm. The result is that you cannot count on the advice which you receive and you must trust to your own judgment to do the best possible under the circumstances. I am not afraid of any man, who comes to this country in good physical health, not getting plenty of work to do if he is willing to undertake it.

I might say a few words in regard to the three thousand family scheme, as it is commonly known. This is an agreement entered into between the overseas land settlement board and the Department of Immigration whereby the Dominion government undertakes to provide the farms. We have been using farms abandoned under the soldier settlement scheme. That is to say, the Immigration department selects a suitable family on the other side, and undertakes to see that that family receives the assisted passage. We take them to the farm that has been allotted to them; we give them the after care, and then the Imperial government lends the settler £300 or $1,500, with which to buy stock and implements. This money is spent under the supervision of the Soldier Settlement Board, so that the new settler shall not be taken advantage of in the way of paying too much for his stock and implements.

Mr. NEILL: Who pays the passage money?

Mr. FORKE: The immigrant pays £2, the Department of Immigration pays £3.10 and the Imperial government pays £7.10, and the transportation companies get a rebate for the passage. Children under seventeen years of age coming out with families are allowed to come in free for settlement and the cost is borne fifty-fifty by the Imperial government and the Canadian government.

Mr. LUCAS: Do I understand the immigrant gets his passage on top of the £300 from the Imperial government?

Mr. FORKE: The £300 is loaned on a twenty-five year payment plan.

Mr. LUCAS: Does the immigrant get his passage extra?

Mr. FORKE: Yes, it is extra. A very common complaint I get through the mail from people in Canada is, "Why do you not do as much for our own Canadian people as you are doing for people on the other side?" Well, what are we doing? We are giving extra care and attending to the immigrant, and he is getting a farm without a payment down, but the Imperial government is risking $1,500 to start with, and all our risk is letting him have a farm without a payment down.

Mr. GARDINER: Do you think you are taking a less risk with him than you are with a Canadian?

Mr. FORKE: You must remember that the British government is putting up the actual cash.

Mr. GARDINER: You have no security on the stock?

Mr. FORKE: Yes, we have all the security there is.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that on behalf of the British government?

Mr. FORKE: No, we pay fifty-fifty with the British government. We cannot lose the land, and all the risk is on the stock and implements. The Imperial government will risk half if the Dominon government will risk the other half. The reason we can carry out the scheme is that the British government is putting up the £300. I do not think any government would turn down an offer of that kind, getting a family on the land with $1,500 to start with.

Mr. GARDINER: Would you give the same opportunity to a Canadian who has his own stock and equipment? Would you provide him with the land and let him go on the land without any payment?

Mr. FORKE: My experience in western Canada is that if you can get a likely man with stock and equipment to go on the land, it is a good proposition.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The minister admits that a Canadian cannot secure the land for a term of twenty-five years?

Mr. FORKE: The conditions are not the same. We are working on some scheme by which we can help our Canadian boys who would like to start farming. I hope I shall be able to arrange a scheme of that kind to help young men who want to go farming who have the right ideas, so that they may get some assistance.

Mr. GARDINER: Was this policy entered into before you came into the department?

Mr. FORKE: The three thousand family scheme was in operation before I came. We are using every endeavour to encourage boy immigration. We are willing to enter into negotiations with any of the provinces with regard to bringing boys out here, having them trained and put in a position to go on the farm or into some occupation. I think I might lay this memorandum before the House and probably save time—

Mr. GARDINER: Put it on Hansard.

Mr. FORKE: Very well. This memorandum gives an account of the system and tells about the assistance given to the different organizations. It reads:

Passage Assistance

The empire settlement agreement provides passage assistance for,—

(a) Farmers and their families.
(b) Single farm workers.
(c) Domestic servants.

We formerly loaned the regular transportation rate. Last year we got the rate reduced and secured a further reduction this year. The rate is reduced by contributions from the British government, the Canadian government and a rebate by the transportation companies.

This brings the cost to the migrant down to a very low rate. The transportation companies give a rebate of £4 on the ocean fare. The Canadian government makes a cash contribution of £3.10 on the ocean fare. The British government contributes in cash the equivalent of these two, or £7.10. All the above go to the reduction of the ocean fare.

The British government makes a further contribution towards passage, both ocean and rail. This is on a sliding scale dependent on where the immigrant settles in Canada. Against this additional contribution by the British government we undertake aftercare to the same amount. The average cost of aftercare is estimated at from £5 to £6.

The children belonging to agricultural families get free passage if under seventeen years of age. The cost is shared on a fifty-fifty basis by the Canadian and British governments. There is a special ocean rate of about £11 given to these children.

The adult migrant is supposed to pay his own way though loans are still made for heads of families and to a limited extent to domestics. The migrant now pays just £2 for ocean passage and a very low inland rate. The migrant's rate from any British port to Toronto is £3.10 and to Winnipeg £4.10.

Juveniles such as those coming under the Salvation Army, Barnardo's, Vimy Ridge and the British Immigration Association's schemes, are given free passage. A fixed grant of $80.00 per boy or girl, between 14 and 17, is given to the emigrating agency. One-half of this is paid by the British government and the other half by ourselves. If the children come to points east of Manitoba (where nearly all the children have for years been placed) the grant more than covers the cost of passage.

Juveniles are of two classes, (a) those coming through the ordinary established agencies like Barnardo's, etc., such children being wards of the society both in the British Isles and in Canada. The other class is the boys from private homes and these boys are being brought by the Ontario government, the British Immigration Association of Montreal and others, in coöperation with ourselves. All juveniles given the passage grant of $80.00 must be between 14 and 17 years of age. Our contribution to Vimy Ridge and the British Immigration and Colonization Association of Montreal and others as they come into the scheme, is on the basis of $10.00 per boy. We say, for example, to a province, that if they will undertake to handle 500 boys per annum and make a contribution of $5,000 towards the work, we will contribute $5,000 and secure $10,000 (the equivalent of the two Canadian contributions). All these contributions go to the upkeep of the reception and training farm. The $10,000 is from the British government. For all boys going west of Winnipeg or points west the allowance is now $100.

If I had known hon. members had so little information about this matter I would have prepared a statement outlining the whole immigration policy and placed it before the House, because I feel certain that if the members of the House understood all the activities of the department and generally knew what we were doing, they would realize that we were making an honest attempt to carry through a sound immigration policy. I may say as a practical immigrant who has lived here forty-five years that there are not many phases of immigration and settlement of which I have not had practical experience, and I am only too anxious to do all I can, not only to assist immigrants but to see that they are properly settled and placed in positions where they can do well for themselves. I realize that the colonization end of the Immigration department is really the important end of the whole business.

In reference to getting British immigrants, I often hear the question, "Why do you not go to the same trouble in getting British immigrants that you go to in obtaining immigrants from the continent?" That is altogether wrong. We spend a great deal of money in endeavouring to get British immigrants. We spend no money on the continent. We give assisted passages to the British immigrants. I think if the transportation companies, instead of giving assisted passages, could see their way to reduce the fares very considerably and require everyone to pay his own fare, it might be better. No one who is British-born has any difficulty in getting to Canada; if he is healthy and physically fit the door stands open to him no matter what part of the empire he lives in. With the European countries the situation is different. It is beside the mark to say that we are not using every endeavour to get British immigrants, because the door is wide open.

Mr. WHITE (London): There is no discrimination in the case of British immigrants?

Mr. FORKE: No.

Mr. DICKIE: Has the government in view any action, in concurrence with the British government or otherwise, in regard to placing these British immigrants in British Columbia?

Mr. FORKE: The conditions are open to all parts of the Dominion; we are willing to enter into an arrangement with any of the provinces.

Mr. DICKIE: Has anything been done with regard to British Columbia?

Mr. FORKE: We have placed many immigrants in British Columbia.

Mr. DICKIE: I would like to place on Hansard a memorandum with regard to these immigrant boys. This is taken from Lord Clarendon's official report, following his personal inspection last year of British family settlement, during which he motored over 6,000 miles and personally visited nearly 200 of the British families on their farms. He says:

> We have no hesitation in saying that the British family settlement scheme has thus far proved a conspicuous success, and promises to become the most successful effort in colonization undertaken by any government in modern times. . . . In this report we described the origin and functions of the Soldier Settlement Board, now the land settlement branch of the Department of Immigration and Colonization at Ottawa, and have endeavoured to show how this admirable organization handled the settlement of Canadian soldiers and is now handling the settlement of British families.

Then I read from an article by Lady Clarendon, as follows:

> We have returned home with the greatest admiration for the personnel of the land settlement board, their unfailing kindness to settlers, their broad views, their patience and patriotism. If Canada, and above all a government department, can produce men such as these, then all is very well with our fellow countrymen who are giving themselves to Canada.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I offered a few criticisms of the minister's department. In all fairness to him may I offer two or three suggestions? He has said, and quite properly, that the door is wide open for immigrants from the British Isles. We want them here. Why do we not get them? The reason certainly is not lack of surplus population in the old country. We do not get them in large numbers because our system is haphazard. For instance, there is no assurance that immigrants will get work on their arrival here. I am glad to find that the provinces are showing an increasing disposition to coöperate with the federal department, and I am going to offer a suggestion that I think can be adopted at no cost. Take a county in Ontario with, say, sixteen municipalities, each of them represented by a reeve and council; the reeve of each township represents his municipality in the county council. Now, I suggest that we make use of all this municipal machinery to secure information of how many farmers want boys or married men on their farms; this information could be conveyed to the county council through the reeves of the various townships; the county council in turn would communicate the information to the provincial authorities, who in turn would communicate with the Department of Immigration. In that way you would have complete coöperation and the latest available information of the requirements of every municipality in regard to farm help.

Suppose you get an inquiry from an immigrant; he wants to go to Ontario. You ask him where in Ontario; he answers, Hamilton. You ask him why he wants to go to Hamilton; he tells you that he has a cousin or a brother there. Very well, that is a good idea, let him go there. This plan has been put in operation in dealing with boy immigrants and has proved to be an absolute success. Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Ontario, through their respective governments, have issued booklets giving information of the number of vacant farms, their location and price. That is valuable data to start with, and surely you can systematize the work in coöperation with the municipalities throughout the Dominion in placing immigrants in the rural districts.

Mr. SPENCER: I have a good deal of sympathy with the views expressed by the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards). He covered a few of the points that I intended to take up. I would ask the minister: Why should not Canadians in the central and eastern provinces who want to go to western Canada to take up what the Immigration department seems to put so much stress on, agriculture, have the advantage of the same low passenger rates as are given to immigrants?

Mr. FORKE: That is a matter for the railway companies. Besides, every province would strongly object to the department encouraging its people to move to a sister province.

Mr. SPENCER: I have heard a good deal of criticism because the man in eastern Canada is not put on a parity with the man from outside. A tremendous effort is being made to bring in people who are supposed to go on the land. I notice by the report that 50,000 of the immigrants that came in last year did not take up farming; which proves that the policy is a failure as we have always claimed it would be. I think it is a mistake to try to force people to go into any particular calling. Another point I would bring to the attention of the minister has to do with the railways. It is to the interest of the railway companies to bring in anybody from anywhere who will turn the sod and grow produce, and thus increase freight traffic, for naturally the railways are interested only in so far as they can increase their traffic. I know that people who have been brought into western Canada by the railways have taken up agriculture in certain districts, and have had great difficulty in making both ends meet. Therefore I think the department should keep in pretty close touch with the railways with regard to how many immigrants are being brought out and where they are being placed. The department is interested not only in getting immigrants but in looking after their welfare afterwards; but the railway's interest is simply to bring the people out and get increased freight traffic.

Mr. GARDINER: With respect to the agreement that the department has with Great Britain to settle families in this country, while it is quite true that he may have inherited this policy—

Mr. FORKE: The land settlement scheme will come after this estimate is disposed of.

Mr. GARDINER: But this covers immigration; I will deal with the land settlement scheme later. When we look at it from the viewpoint of the Canadian I do not envy the minister his inheritance. While it may be all right after you have satisfied the demand of those of the Canadian people who wish to go on the land to enter into such an agreement with Great Britain, in my judgment there are some circumstances underlying that agreement which call for discussion.

The department has taken 3,000 abandoned soldier farms for the purpose of settling them with British immigrants. I want to point out to the minister that we have in western Canada to-day returned men who have their equipment and who are anxious to secure land through the soldier settlement scheme. But they are turned down, the reason being given that these lands are reserved for British immigrants. That policy is not fair to Canadians generally and more particularly is it unfair to the returned men. We owe a duty to our returned soldiers and we shall not have lived up to it so long as one returned man who is in a position to go on the land finds it impossible to secure land from the department. I would suggest to the minister that he review the whole situation. It is quite possible that he has gone so far as to be unable to draw back, but that is no reason why he should not make provision for the needs of Canadians themselves and especially of Canadian returned men. I am satisfied from experience that there are thousands of Canadians well qualified to settle on the land, men of experience who have their own equipment and who can settle without cost to the government, provided the land is given them on the same terms as it is granted to British immigrants. I make this suggestion to the minister, realizing the problem he has to solve, and I hope he will look into the matter with a view to meeting the situation.

[Mr. Spencer.]

Mr. SPENCER: I have a newspaper clipping which states that during the year 1927 more than 6,000 Hungarians will come into Canada. Is that statement true?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know anything whatever about it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I want to associate myself in one regard with the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington and that is with reference to the assimilability of certain immigrants. The Canadian Pacific Railway under this iniquitous permit system has brought into Canada in one year a total of 21,000 immigrants, 7,000 of whom were Mennonites who were unassimilable. There is no one who knows better than the Minister of Immigration himself the defects of that type of people. In my constituency they are spreading their holdings into the best wheat farming districts. They are good pay, as the vernacular has it, and they will go into a district and buy land from the private settler, and the moment they do so community life begins to lag. They take no interest in the welfare of the district and will not take part in any of our organization meetings.

Mr. BENNETT: You cannot blame them for not coming to your meetings.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Nor will they attend Conservative meetings. They do not engage in any community work. As soon as they settle in a district there becomes evident a falling off in these activities. It has been contended that after one or two generations, these people become used to our customs and are almost wholly Canadian. I deny that. The experience in Manitoba where the Mennonites first settled is altogether to the contrary. In the course of time one or two or three individuals may break away from the group. These men having developed some individuality of their own resent the shackling influences of the organization to which they belong and, throwing them off, they become effective citizens. But the majority stay right where they are in the little colony group. They do not exercise the franchise nor do they share in any respect in the responsibilities of citizenship. They are not citizens and they do not become Canadians.

Mr. NEILL: Do they become naturalized?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If they are forced to, but many of them do not bother their heads about it. The bulk of them are unwilling to become Canadians. Now I have no objection to these people on the ground of their religion, for I am absolutely tolerant of all forms of belief. I am not worried about that. I do say however that the minister is not justified in issuing permits to the Canadian Pacific Railway to bring in large numbers of unassimilable people.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How many of them have moved away?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): A small section, not a material number. In my own province their colonies have been steadily growing. They are spreading out and their holdings this year are larger than they have been within my memory.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understood that many thousands had moved to Mexico, taking with them some $7,000,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Some of them went away, but I do not remember the exact number. The minister would be well advised to give this matter his serious consideration. Mr. Coats, a man for whom I have the deepest admiration and respect, a few years ago wrote an article for the Polak Institution of the United States, the most advanced scientific research organization on the North American continent. The article appeared under the title Immigration Programme of Canada, and in it Mr. Coats pointed out clearly as no other writer on the subject has done, that the reason for the tremendous influx of settlers into Canada in the early years of the century was to be found in the enormous expansion of credit and in the existence of free lands.

Mr. BENNETT: And railway construction.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Exactly. There has been in recent years no such expansion of credit. I admit that this year there is an indication that credit is loosening up, and the minister may find it not so difficult to place men satisfactorily as the department has done in the past. A reference to the figures of the Immigration department will convince one of the insanity of a vast immigration scheme until we have learned how to keep at home the people we already have. I have a return from the Bureau of Statistics covering recent years. The facts regarding the more distant past are already on Hansard but it will be interesting to look at the figures more recently available. In 1924 we brought to Canada 124,450 immigrants. Our natural increase was 91,398. In 1925 we brought 84,907 and our natural increase was 88,384. By natural increase is meant the net of those who live over those who die. In 1926 the figures for the eleven months from January to November are 130,569 while the natural increase is estimated at 89,000. So that in three years we brought in 339,926 immigrants, and the natural increase amounted to 268,782. At the end of 1923 the total population of Canada was 9,150,940. Add to that the immigration for three years of 339,926 and the natural increase of 268,782 and you have a grand total, showing what we should have had if we kept our immigrants and our natural increase, of 9,759,648. But the census bureau reports an actual population of 9,390,300, and we therefore must find out what happened to 369,348 people. While our total immigration was 339,926, the actual statistics prove that we lost a number equivalent to all we brought in and 29,422 in addition.

There is a story I would like to tell which some hon. members may have heard before. Many years ago in the medical profession there was a method of testing the sanity of a person whose mental balance was questioned. If a policeman arrested a man on the street and suspected him of being in an unsafe condition, he would be taken to the police station and a local medical man called in. The medical officer would take this poor chap into the yard at the back of the station and show him a wooden barrel which had a lot of little holes punched around the bottom, and he would tell the man to take a pail and fill up the barrel from a tub of water in the yard. If the man kept walking patiently to and fro from the barrel to the tub with pailfuls of water, without paying attention to the fact that the water was running out, he would be put away where he would be safe; if he protested against this labour he was adjudged sane, and released. If that proof of sanity were applied to the policy of the Department of Immigration, undoubtedly the judgment would be that the policy in the past has been an insane one, because we are not learning how to keep our people in the country; we do not seem to be able to keep either the immigrants or the natural increase here. Under these conditions may I point out just one fact at the moment. There is not to my knowledge, and I challenge the minister to indicate where there is, one single industry in Canada suffering from lack of labour, nor is there a locality suffering from the same thing; as a matter of fact, the contrary is the case. As the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) indicated, the cities on the Pacific coast, the cities of eastern Canada and even those of the prairie provinces are today carrying large numbers of unemployed, and have been doing so for some time. Only yesterday a man came to my house here in Ottawa and asked for work, any kind of work I could give him; he said, "All I want is work," and he was a decent, clean looking fellow. He wanted a job doing anything, cleaning up the yard, cleaning up the basement or anything at all. He said, "I have walked from Rideau street this morning asking for a job from house to house, and I could not get it." An hon. member has said that sort of thing happens in Hamilton every day, and I have no doubt that is the case. Then we have another example taken from the Toronto Evening Telegram dated April 13, 1927:

Hungarians Seek Work
Factories are Besieged

Found conditions in west not what was expected—foreigners drift eastward in search of work.

Oshawa, April 13.—Disgruntled at finding their dreams—

I submit that should not be called a dream, Mr. Chairman; these men were pledged a proper job before they came here, and the position was deliberately misrepresented to them either by the agents of this administration or of the steamship companies, or possibly both.

—of steady employment in the western provinces shattered, hundreds of Hungarians have arrived here in the past few months searching for work in factories or as labourers.

We heard a moment ago that only agricultural help was being brought to Canada, and the absurdity of that position is demonstrated a hundred times a year.

So acute has the situation become that an official request will be made to the Department of Immigration at Ottawa to take some action to remedy the condition.

I have in my hand a telegram which I received just the other day and which I have already placed on Hansard in connection with another debate, but as it affects the problem of immigration I would call it again to the attention of the minister:

Immigrants arriving Drumheller promised work coal mines quite number here now without funds and charge on community. Please advise government unless they can provide work through Ontario market to have immigrants directed elsewhere. Our own unemployment problem with mines closed too serious to countenance further immigration here.

This is signed by the Drumheller Board of Trade, the members of which I happen to know, and I want to assure hon. members that on that board there is not a single working miner. It is composed of the industrialists of the town, the operators who own the mines, the business and professional men and others. These men are of the class the administration and opposition would call responsible citizens, and they have signed this telegram pleading with the administration not to send any more immigrants there, especially those promised work, as they cannot take care of the unemployment existing in that district at the moment. I cannot understand the policy of the administration. I do not know why it is being carried on in this way, and as a matter of fact I find it difficult to analyse it at all. They allege that they are bringing to this country only domestic help, experienced farmers and their families and men willing to go on farms as inexperienced farm help. Under the deliberate policy of misrepresentation, the administration is permitting to come into this country men who are not agriculturists at all, who do not go on the land but who drift into the cities.

Now let us turn to another phase of the question. Why should only agricultural help be brought to Canada? Why should that particular restrictive policy be adopted? I would like to ask hon. members of this House who are lawyers what they would think of an immigration policy not only which would propose to bring lawyers here and only lawyers, to enter into competition with them, but which would assist the passage of those lawyers from other lands and, having brought them to Canada, would then proceed to assist them with loans in order that they might the more readily compete with the lawyers of the country. The same policy might be applied to every retail business man, every professional man and to every person in what we call the middle class condition in Canada. Apply it in that way, and you get a truer reflection of the present discriminatory policy of the administration. The minister chuckles and laughs at the suggestion; I presume that is it, or else his deputy has told him a joke. It may be nervousness, but I doubt it; I hardly think he could be nervous because he likes this discussion. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that a policy so grossly unfair to agriculture in this country is not countenanced by the farmers and is not supported by them, and in spite of the allegations of the Toronto Telegram, the Toronto Globe and other eastern newspapers, let me say that every organized group of farmers in Canada have protested time and again against this policy. And what is the reply? The reply is a continuation of the policy, that is all, with, shall I say, an accretion of injustice. In former days it was just a case of bringing these men in if they had money to the amount of $25, or something like that. But now we are not satisfied with that policy. We are going to assist colony settlement. We are going to buy the land, build the house, break so much land, and supply these men with stock, such as a cow, a couple of pigs and so on, so that they can start farming. That is part of the policy that is aided and abetted by the present administration. I do not know that it is of any use for me to continue a discussion of this kind.

Mr. VALLANCE: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just a moment until I get through this sentence. I have protested in every way and appealed to the administration not to destroy the effective force overseas engaged in checking the mental and physical qualities of intending immigrants. I have protested against the continued pouring out of the money of the taxpayers of this country on various policies of immigration, against spending three millions a year for three years with the result that all we can show is a net loss of 29,422, a loss equivalent to all the immigrants we have brought in. Such a policy as that should be no longer countenanced by this country. Until either the economic condition of Canada is altered by wise and effective legislation, until some change takes place in the whole social and economic structure of Canada the administration is no longer justified in spending money in bringing to this country men who may in rare instances succeed but who in the majority of instances will only add to the load of taxation which rests on the shoulders of the farmers of this country, and which the Minister of Finance has made all the greater by his income tax reductions. Now I am willing to answer my hon. friend's question.

Mr. VALLANCE: Do you believe that the placing, we will say, of an agriculturist with a family of five on a farm warrants us in placing an industrialist in some urban centre in eatern Canada? Does not the one take care of the other?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes.

Mr. VALLANCE: Well then you and I agree.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not sure that we do.

Mr. VALLANCE: We do in this respect.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman will be able to make his speech when I get through. If he has a question to put I will answer him; but I do not want him to make a speech at this particular moment. Let me say to the minister that I have in my hand a publication entitled "Canada's Population Problem" issued by a self-appointed immigration expert of the department known as Charles W. Peterson. Mr. Peterson is the publisher of the Farm and Ranch Review and Western Dairyman. This publication is heavily subsidized by the Canadian Pacific Railway, in fact Mr. Peterson voices largely the propaganda of that company. On page 10 of the pamphlet mentioned we find the following remarks:

> The home market now absorbs 837 million dollars' worth of agricultural products as against our export market of 600 millions. The annual per capita consumption of farm products in Canada is thus $87.50. The western farmer, producing almost entirely for export, receives little benefit from our present home consumption of farm products, but with our population doubled the domestic market would look up as a very important factor in his sales.

So far very nice:

At present—

Mr. Peterson alleges very truly:

> —he is at the mercy of overseas countries, which are now striving with every nerve, and with more or less success, to promote decreased agricultural imports. At any moment he may be virtually closed out by tariff walls, as happened to his animal products in the United States market.

So far so good, but now Mr. Peterson proceeds to contradict himself in the very next paragraph. He says:

> Our farmers, particularly those of the west, are often apprehensive of the effect of largely augmented agricultural production on market prices. The increasing population of Europe and the development of trade in agricultural products with the teeming millions of oriental countries, coupled with the rising home demands of many of the present exporting countries, will amply counterbalance any enhanced Canadian production of basic foodstuffs. So we need not apparently concern ourselves overmuch about the question of not finding a ready market for any volume of Canadian staple agricultural products we are apt to raise.

In one paragraph he warns you not to fear the possibility of an over production, and in the previous paragraph he warns you very seriously that there is a grave danger that the policy of foreign countries will cut down your export market. That is the kind of contradiction you find in the arguments of people who look at this immigration problem in a superficial manner; and I may say there is no one so completely superficial in discussing the immigration problem of Canada as the same gentleman, Mr. C. W. Peterson, publisher of The Farm and Ranch Review and Western Dairyman unless it be the departmental officials. That is all I wish to say at the moment on this question. I wish to protest vigorously against the continued expenditure of the public money on a forced immigration policy. I would not stop people coming here who are physically fit, men and women who are willing to take their chance with the rest; let them come by all means. But keep an effective force for the purpose of carefully checking the health and fitness of these people who propose to come. Do not put too many obstacles in the way of their coming here if they want to come, but do not continue to spend money on deliberately false propaganda that misleads and deceives the unfortunate immigrant and causes him to suffer after he comes to this country.

Mr. VALLANCE: With reference to the question I asked the hon. member for Bow River, I believe it is correct that for every agriculturist with a family that you can place on a farm in any country, you can place in the urban centres an industrialist. As far as the British Isles are concerned, I believe, as the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) said the other day, talking to a gathering of ladies in the Chateau Laurier, that the development of Canada is in the north country. I believe that the greatest development for some considerable period will be that of the agricultural possibilities of the north country, and I believe that the conditions there are such that the British immigrants will not come in and take advantage of them. There is no use in sidestepping that fact. The conditions in the north are such that he will not take advantage of them. So I contend, and I have argued with the Minister of Immigration, that the individual we want in there—and with this I think most of us from western Canada will agree, is the man with the sheepskin coat. And for every one of them that you put into the north country, you can place a British immigrant in the urban centres, if he wishes to go there. So far as British immigration is concerned, I do not see any good use of bringing these people here, if we only intend to place them in the north country to engage in development work. I was much amused at the illustration given by the hon. member for Bow River about an individual emptying water into a barrel. The only trouble there was that the wrong material was being put into the barrel. It could not contain water, but it might have contained something else. I believe that he proved that the immigrant we were bringing in was the wrong type of immigrant because he would not stay. What we want is the chap who will stay.

Mr. BROWN: It is certainly not my desire to delay the passing of these estimates, but I cannot allow the remarks made by the hon. member for Bow River to go unchallenged. I am not going to deal with all the subject matter of his speech but I wish to speak particularly of the special class to whom he referred, and that is the Mennonites. Now it so happens that in my constituency I have nearly all, if not all, of the Mennonites in Manitoba—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have three separate colonies in mine.

Mr. BROWN: —and as evidence that they are intelligent people, I may mention that the oftener I run the more Mennonite votes I get. If there is any better proof of their intelligence than that, I do not know where it can be found. The hon. member's statements are entirely too sweeping. There is a class of Mennonites, who, as he says, do not seem willing to assimilate and who have held themselves aloof. Many of those people who refuse to conform to our school laws have migrated to Mexico, but the statement that the Mennonites will not and do not make good settlers is absolutely without foundation. I could take hon. members into Mennonite colonies in southern Manitoba and show them some of the most progressive farmers and the finest type of people in that part of the country. I had the privilege last fall, after the election, of being invited to a school teachers' convention that was conducted almost entirely by Mennonites. It was purely a Mennonite community, and a group of young men school teachers were there who are the hope of Canada. They had ideals of the very highest. Therefore, when these sweeping statements are made, I must protest.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it not true that I stated that in the evolutionary process we throw off individuals of the type that the hon. member has just mentioned, but the colony settlement to which I referred still exists?

Mr. BROWN: These people still live in their colonies, and the fact that they have lived there by themselves since the early seventies has in some measure prevented them from assimilating with the rest of the people of Canada and taking part in their citizenship. But the point which I wish to emphasize is that that condition of things is rapidly passing away. What the hon. member says is only partly true. Among these people we have some of the finest people in Manitoba to-day. I think I owe it to my constituents to make that statement.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In what year did these Mennonites move away?

Mr. BROWN: They moved away largely three or four years ago.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is that not since the hon. member became member for that district?

Mr. BROWN: They were moving away just at that time. They were the least intelligent ones who moved away.

Mr. SPENCER: Why did they move away?

Mr. BROWN: They were what we call the "Old Colony" Mennonites who refused to conform to the school laws of Manitoba and for conscience sake—and I think they were very much mistaken—they migrated to Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall this item carry? Carried.

Mr. GARDINER: Who said that this item was carried? It has not even been discussed.

The CHAIRMAN: I did.

Mr. GARDINER: I wish to protest against this method of conducting business. We were discussing the immigration estimates and while that discussion was going on, no one heard you call this item. In fact you are not entitled to pass these items as long as the discussion is going on.

The CHAIRMAN: I certainly called vote No. 288, and I gave the amount.

Mr. GARDINER: I suggest that we have a reasonable pause between the carrying of one item and the calling of the next one.

The CHAIRMAN: I am sure my hon. friend will realize that it is now five o'clock and we have passed only two items to-day, so that there must have been a pause somewhere.

Mr. GARDINER: Are we going to discuss item 288?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. KELLNER: In connection with the activities undertaken by the department in the way of providing ready-made farms, for instance drilling wells, breaking land and constructing buildings, is that provided for by calling for tenders, or how are the contracts let?

Mr. FORKE: By tender.

Mr. KELLNER: On the Saddle lake reserve how much breaking has been contracted for, and at what price per acre?

Mr. FORKE: Forty acres and 51 units. That will be forty times fifty-one. The price is roughly $5.50 per acre, the land to be disced once.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the government come to any conclusion regarding taxes on soldier settlement lands now owned by the board? This is a very important matter in connection with western Canada.

Mr. FORKE: Some little time ago a delegation from the three prairie provinces representing the municipal unions met a committee of the government and entered into negotiations. I think we came to an amicable settlement whereby from now on there will be no further dispute in regard to the taxes on soldier settlement land.

Mr. GARDINER: The Soldier Settlement board have under their control certain lands which are leased. What is the policy with regard to those lands that are leased to private persons?

Mr. FORKE: The rental has always gone first to pay the taxes.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister means that a portion of the rent received by the Soldier Settlement board is used to pay taxes on the land.

Mr. FORKE: I know since I have come into the department I have received thanks for the amount of money the municipalities have been paid in connection with taxes on leased lands.

Mr. GARDINER: The reason I ask the question is because I have received com-municipalities from many municipalities which claim that no taxes are paid on those leased lands, to the detriment of the school districts and the municipalities themselves. Is there any reason why there should be a different policy in one district from that in another?

Mr. FORKE: From now on the matter will be looked into.

Mr. WARD: Is it the intention of the Soldier Settlement Board or the government to pay taxes on soldier settlement land that has reverted to the crown? Is it the intention to reimburse the municipalities in any way for the loss of those taxes?

Mr. FORKE: In connection with lands that have been abandoned, the department has always paid all taxes up to the time that the settler abandoned the land. The department has recognized the fact that it has to pay those taxes in any case and perhaps it will be better for the municipalities to see that they are paid every year up to date, because it is realized that so long as the man is on the land we shall have to pay the taxes anyway. We have just dealt with cases where lands have been rented. As regards lands that have reverted to the crown and are yet unsettled, the policy of the department is to sell those lands as rapidly as possible. The representatives of the municipalities were so well satisfied with the arrangement we made with regard to future taxes on those lands that they were not pressing that point very much if we undertook as a matter of policy to dispose of those lands as rapidly as we could. Unfortunately some of these lands in Manitoba are not very good. I have not discussed the matter so far, but my private opinion would be that I would be quite willing to hand over some of these lands and let the municipalities have them for the taxes.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that land of no agricultural value? I understand the department has two thousand farms of that nature. Has the department any policy in the matter?

Mr. FORKE: We discussed that matter with the delegates of the municipalities, and although we did not formulate any policy, perhaps in the near future we shall have a thorough survey made of all lands in possession of the crown, and those that we do not think are fit for agricultural purposes, I think I may safely say, will be handed over to the municipalities if they are willing to take them.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: From time to time certain contracts to returned soldiers are cancelled. No doubt many of these contracts have had to be cancelled because of the fact that in the first instance the cost of the land was too high. In view of the fact that the revaluation bill has passed both houses of parliament, would the minister take into consideration the possibility of delaying any cancellation of contract until such time as there is a possibility of having a revaluation of these lands merely to give these men some chance of staying on the land, rather than turning them off the land at this time?

Mr. FORKE: I will read the instructions sent to the general supervisor, as follows:

> The general situation and the board's instructions are exactly as I gave them in my wire, that foreclosure is not to be adopted where there is any possible hope of most generous revaluation rehabilitating a man, but where his position is utterly hopeless then, of course, we do not see how we should, in the interests of the man himself, forego taking action that is essential.

Mr. GARDINER: It might be all right if that were determined by the proper officer, but you have in the employment of this board men who probably do not understand the conditions as fairly as they might understand them. I suggest therefore that instead of leaving it wholly and solely to the recommendation of the supervisor or the district superintendent, for the time being and until we see see what revaluation will do for these men, cancellation of contract should be discontinued, so long as the soldier is willing to stay on the land.

Mr. PARENT: My hon. friend might have said all that when the budget was on.

Mr. GARDINER: I did not take up that subject, and if I wish to make any remarks now I will do so. If we are given a fair opportunity for discussion we will put the estimates through. I suggest that under the circumstances, taking into consideration what these men have passed through and the possibility of giving them some redress through revaluation, you adopt the policy which will give the best possible consideration to the men.

I spoke this afternoon about the situation in this regard. I have had communications from returned men who have been accepted by the board as being entitled to farms when they qualify. I do not know how many of these men still require farms, but there are some. In view of the agreement entered into between this government and the British government, the matter is exercising the minds of the returned men, because these 3,000 farms are allocated to other men and they cannot find farms for themselves. Let me suggest that all the returned men should be satisfied, so far as their demands for farms are concerned, before consideration is given to others. Can we be sure that these returned men, who still ask for farms and are entitled to them, will be given consideration and their wants supplied first?

Mr. FORKE: I might say my hon. friend's wishes will be met as far as possible. Of course, they have delayed a long time. If they had taken action two years ago they would have been in a different position. The farms were vacant and some of the lands have been sold for taxes. Something had to be done. The three thousand-family scheme has been criticized and we thought better to place men on the farms which were not occupied. I think the returned soldiers have been leniently dealt with on the whole. On the resale of these lands we find in some cases, the department is getting better prices for the abandoned farms than the soldiers paid for them.

Mr. GARDINER: I can quite understand that where the conditions are improving. In some cases the returned man has held on because of price conditions, and I commend him for his judgment, but that does not solve the problem. I hope the minister will give full consideration to the demands of these men so that they will be satisfied.

Mr. COOTE: I desire to say a word or two about the services around the House of Commons at the time of prorogation. I think that we might have the services of some of the messengers after the House prorogues. Sometimes after prorogation the messenger service is required and it is cut out.

Mr. SPEAKER: In compliance with the request of hon. members on both sides, I may inform the House that I have consented to the continuance of a limited messenger service for a short time following prorogation.

Mr. WARD: Will we have the services of a few stenographers for a short time?

Mr. SPEAKER: I have also considered that matter and have recommended that for two or three days after the session members shall be able to secure the services of stenographers and that they shall also have access to blue books and parliamentary documents.

Mr. WARD: I have heard that the Post Office Department has been instructed not to carry our files, books and other matter that we wish to send home by mail, but that they would have to be parcelled together and sent by express.

An hon. MEMBER: Too bad.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is a matter for the Post Office Department, and I think the minister who has charge of that department will yield to my request when I ask him to permit members to send these documents by mail.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to have details of the appointment of D. Barbes, J. W. Gibson and the others mentioned in this item.

Mr. SPEAKER: When the Civil Service Commission reorganized all the departments and reclassified the employees it dealt somewhat summarily with the staff of the House of Commons and the Senate. Let me say that so far the Senate has refused to fully recognize the authority of the Civil Service Commission. A certain number of the employees of this House are classified by the Civil Service Commission, and I may say that at the present time there is a strong agitation amongst the officials for a reorganization and reclassification. With a view to carrying this into effect I have had two meetings of the Board of Internal Economy, and as a result the Civil Service Commission will be asked to recast the organization and classification of our branch of the legislature.

I am very glad the hon. gentleman has asked this question. All the employees mentioned in the vote have been in the service of the House of Commons for many years. The classification in their individual cases not having been made, I took from the Board of Internal Economy authority to bring the matter before the Treasury Board. I may say that between the Department of Justice and the Civil Service Commission there seems to be a difference of opinion as regards those of our employees who for a number of years have, nominally, been temporary, but actually have been permanent, for they are in the permanent service of this House. I may say, without giving names, that the members of the commission have agreed that the only way to settle this question was to bring forward those cases for the ratification of parliament.

Now, I should like the committee to remember that, without claiming we are above all laws, there are ancient and well-established privileges appertaining to parliament. Before his death the late Sir John Bourinot—who, as hon. members know, is frequently quoted in this parliament and in the other parliaments of the empire as an authority on parliamentary procedure—in a memorandum which I have before me claimed that the parliament of Canada in regard to its internal economy, the appointment of its employees and servants, is above all commissions. I do not say that I am quite ready, especially now that we have a Civil Service Commission, to pass over that commission; but if I am not trespassing on the time of the committee I should like to read a few extracts from this memorandum. It has been printed, and I intend to have it circulated to apprise members of parliament of the ancient and well-established privileges which appertain to this great inquest of the nation. Says Sir John Bourinot:

The House, it has been well said, "has always asserted the right to provide for the constitution of its own body, the right to regulate its own proceedings and the right to enforce its privileges, etc."

Further, he says:

The control and management of the officers of the Houses are as completely within the privileges of the Houses as necessary to the conservation of dignity and the efficient conduct of public business, by a legislative body, as "any regulation of its own proceedings within its own walls."

Again, he says:

When it was deemed advisable to apply the Superannuation Act to the officers and servants, no attempt was made to apply it to the Senate and House of Commons by an order in council, or by any arbitrary exercise of the royal prerogative, but a clause was added to include in express and definite terms "the permanent officers and servants of the Senate and House of Commons and the permanent officers of the Library of Parliament," and these words were added in express recognition of the powers, privileges and immunities of the Commons:

I would draw the attention of hon. gentlemen to these words:

"Saving all rights and privileges of either House in respect to the appointment or removal of the officers and servants."

Sir John Bourinot continues:

No general statute or order in council can override the privileges, immunities and powers of the Commons in this particular. As the prerogatives of the crown can only be given away or delegated to others by the consent of the crown, stated in express terms, so the rights, privileges and immunities of the two branches of the legislature cannot be taken away by implication or by the vague terms of any statute, but only by the express words of the law as in the case of the enactments previously cited, or by the express resolution of the Houses, as in the case of the Audit Act, the general terms of which might be considered by some applicable to the two houses of parliament, but were only made so in fact by resolutions passed separately in the Senate and Commons, which enabled the officers of those houses to act thereupon.

Further, he says:

The houses being the judges of their own privileges, and having the sole regulation of their own procedure and proceedings, it is for them alone to control those instruments which are necessary for the effectiveness and accuracy of those proceedings. If the clerks and officers who are subject to these regulations, and necessary for the efficient conduct of the public business of the House, are subject at any moment to the inquiry and examination by persons commissioned only by the executive authority, and not duly authorized by the Houses themselves for that express object, the officers and servants of the houses cannot act with freedom, fidelity and obedience to their legal masters.

Let me say once more that I do not wish in any way to ignore the Civil Service Commission. In fact, if I wanted to be reminiscent I might say that in the old days I was one of its staunchest supporters, and I am still. But there are privileges and powers appertaining to parliament which must not be ignored.

Now, in the present instance there is no quarrel between the Civil Service Commission and the House of Commons. The names set out in this item are the names of old and faithful officers of the House of Commons who have served for many years and have given thorough satisfaction.

Mr. BENNETT: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it not correct that the first name on that list is the wife of a gentleman who occupies a position in the Public Works department? The effect of this will be to make her the first permanent married woman to be engaged in the service since the Civil Service Act was passed, and this is being done in violation of section 36 of the statute.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am glad the hon. member has brought the matter to the notice of the House. There is absolutely nothing to hide so far as this appointment is concerned. It is true that Mrs. Barbes is married, but she has been seventeen years in the service of the House. Before her marriage she was employed in the House of Commons and in July last she was approached by Senator L'Esperance who promised her permanency if she would become the secretary of a gentleman who is highly trusted by my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Bennett). I will send him a letter I have received in this connection. There is a precedent also. The late assistant secretary to the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen was Mrs. Helmer. She was paid by the House of Commons although her husband also had a government position. Afterwards she became secretary to Sir Henry Drayton.

Mr. BENNETT: But this is the first appointment of the kind which is being made permanent, and it is done in violation of section 36 of the act.

Mr. SPEAKER: I appeal to the sense of justice of the committee whether I should deprive a faithful servant, who has been seventeen years in the service of the House and who has given excellent satisfaction in every respect, of the pension to which she would be entitled had she been unmarried. I do submit that such an action would be hardly fair to Mrs. Barbes, and may I point out moreover that if this item passes she will receive less as permanent than she did as a temporary employee. I am therefore simply carrying out a promise made to this lady by the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen in the month of July last after dissolution, through Senator L'Esperance.

Mr. BENNETT: I would vote against it equally if he did it.

Mr. SPEAKER: If Mrs. Barbes had left the service of the Speaker for the Prime Minister's office she would have been made permanent. In a sense I am merely implementing that promise. Even though it may appear to be contrary to the letter of the law, I appeal to my hon. friend, who is a parliamentarian and a constitutional authority, whether it is not a fact that we have powers and privileges over and above the provisions of the Civil Service Act. I would not for a moment ignore the Civil Service Commission, but I submit that there are special cases such as this which must be faced and disposed of and I have considered the present case on its merits and have dealt with it honourably.

Mr. BENNETT: The Speaker of this House has properly indicated that the House of Commons has great privileges, and it must be remembered that these privilegs belong to the House and not to His Honour. That is point No. 1. In the second place, let us remember that the government in this instance is not charged with responsibility. Under our parliamentary institutions the government in this case is merely the medium for intimating to the House what ought to be done. These estimates could not come before the House as such unless some member of the government submitted them, and the Speaker is the medium between the House and the government, just as a minister who submits his estimates is the instrument of the House to enable those estimates to be brought in for consideration. We as law-makers should not be law-breakers. As those who framed the civil service law of the country we should not be the first to break it. Our right to ignore the act is undoubted, but the exercise of that power is injurious to the people of this country in more ways than one. In the first place the present proposal creates the possibility of two pensions in one family. It gives a salary of between $5,000 and $6,000 to a husband and wife, and this the parliament of Canada, both the House of Commons and the Senate, has declared by section 36 of the Civil Service Act, to be illegal. I submit therefore that we should not at this time, in view of the present commitments of the public treasury, create a precedent such as this with full knowledge of the step we are taking. I suggest to His Honour the Speaker that he would be well advised to withdraw this item from the estimates. This would be the wisest course in the interests of Canada as a whole, as well as in the interests of the administration of law throughout the country.

There is another aspect of the question which I may briefly comment upon. These names seem to have been selected with singular lack of discrimination. I do not believe the House of Commons would make such a selection. We go down into the office to receive our cheques in payment of our sessional indemnity and to make our declaration. What do we find? The office is overstaffed and one gentleman who has very little to do sits in a chair while another man who has been there many years is not considered at all. I do not believe that reflects the mind of the House. When the Speaker acts as the medium of communication between the House and its servants, he assumes a position of judicial responsibility and in the selection of the appointees he should have regard to the general feeling of the House taken as a whole. I do not believe the Prime Minister would consider that justice was being done by the selection of one or two of these officials to the exclusion of others who, to the certain knowledge of the oldest members of the House, have greater claims. This is a disagreeable thing to stand up and speak about; yet in the very nature of things we must see to it that the House of Commons shall not become an instrument of injustice to its servants. The Speaker may err in his selections, because we have striking evidence over his own signature of his strong partisanship in the removal of thirty-four postmasters in Gaspe. Men in high, responsible positions may sometimes become partisans and it is because of that fact that I rise now, as my last act at this session, to protest against this injustice which is being done deserving public servants through discrimination. I ask the House, regardless of politics, to assert our ancient authority—which is ours and not the Speaker's—and to determine that we who have made the laws will not break them. That is all I intend to say regarding this matter.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Regarding the case of Mrs. Barbes, I desire to read to the committee the following letter:

OTTAWA, April 14, 1927.

Honourable RODOLPHE LEMIEUX,
Speaker, House of Commons,
Ottawa.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER:

I do solemnly declare that the Sunday following dissolution of parliament, last July, I was offered the position of French secretary to the Rt. Honourable Arthur Meighen, then Prime Minister of Canada, with the promise that I would be made permanent.

Yours truly,

(Signed) D. BARBES,
Secretary to the Speaker.

I repeat, I am only carrying out the promise of the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen to this lady through Senator L'Esperance, who offered her the position. There is no party bias in any of these appointments; I might say that one of the names mentioned is that of a very prominent Conservative family, but I did not hesitate, because I thought he should get that promotion. I have consulted the Board of Internal Economy and this is not done, as the hon. gentleman has said, upon the whim of the Speaker; so why exaggerate in that fashion? The Speaker comes before his masters, first the Board of Internal Economy, then the Treasury Board and finally the House of Commons, and if the House says no the Speaker will have to obey. I do not assert any undue authority; the Treasury Board has passed on this item, but it is the privilege of this House to say no, and in that case I have nothing further to say.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am sure that in this matter His Honour the Speaker has acted, as he has just said, not only with the best of intentions but in what he regarded as a chivalrous manner. I confess, however, that I agree with my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Bennett) when he says that we are in no way bound to recognize any promises or pledges made by Mr. Meighen when he came into office, and which he himself found it impossible to carry out. I think in this matter the House should assert its rights and I hope His Honour the Speaker will be able to see his way to withdraw these names, at least for the present.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the Minister of Finance will move that this item be dropped I will make no objection.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Do I understand that all these names are included?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes, the whole item.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then I have a word to say, Mr. Chairman, on the principle involved rather than with regard to any one particular case, as I am not familiar with any of them. I would like to say in passing that I do not think the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) was quite fair in his reference to a married woman receiving a salary and being entitled to a pension, because if I understand it correctly there is a large number of married women in the service at present, and unless there is a general rule laid down to exclude all married women it does not seem to me that that particular criticism applies in this case.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is where the husband is also in the service.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am informed that there is a large number whose husbands are also in the service.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Can my hon. friend give specific cases? There is no chance in the world of appointing a married woman under existing conditions.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have been credibly informed that is the case, if so the Speaker was well within his rights in bringing forward this name. That is not what I object to; it is that in this way we are undermining the principles underlying the Civil Service Commission. The Speaker said that parliament was above all commissions and I think we may take that for granted, but surely that does not settle the matter. I remember that a year ago we had a case of alleged corrupt election practices. The ground then taken was that while undoubtedly parliament historically had the right to deal with such a matter, in the course of years there had developed courts specially clothed with jurisdiction to deal with them, so parliament having delegated its responsibilities to the courts, we should leave the courts to take care of such matters. I suggest that there is a very close analogy between that situation and the one facing us to-day. We have gradually developed the Civil Service Commission, and parliament has divested itself of a certain amount of authority for that particular purpose. Now I submit that if we are going to work on that principle we should not permit constant exceptions of this kind to be made. It may be all very well to say that the Speaker has acted with the best intentions, of course he has. It is all very well to say that he acted in a chivalrous manner; of course he has, but we cannot deal with matters of this kind merely according to good intentions nor on the basis of chivalry. There must be something more definite. The Speaker stated that there were certain promises made by some individual; surely we cannot proceed on that basis. I urge that we go even further than has been suggested by the Prime Minister and withdraw all the names included in the item in order to permit these appointments to be made as they should be made by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. ROBB: I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Dunning, that in item 452 all the words after "hereby appointed" down to and including "or amendments thereto" be struck out, and that the item be reduced by $13,560.

Item agreed to.

Mr. EVANS: Before this vote is passed I would like to direct a question or two to the Speaker of this House. I would like to know if the position of leader of the opposition is a constitutional appointment, and by what right the leader of the Conservative party or of the Liberal party becomes the leader of the opposition, entitled to receive an added salary. Under what parliamentary rule does he get that right? Seeing that there will now be three parties perhaps more evenly balanced in the future than they are to-day, I think some definite rule should be made with regard to this matter. Less than two years ago the present official opposition was a smaller party than the third group in this House. I would like to know by what rule and right this is done?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I would like the hon. gentleman to tell me if the group over there considers itself in opposition to the government?

Mr. SPEAKER: In answer to the hon. gentleman, if he will look at the House of Commons Act, Chapter 69, 10-11 George V, he will see the following under section 39:

> To the member occupying the recognized position of leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, there shall be payable in addition to his sessional allowance an annual allowance of ten thousand dollars.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to ask His Honour the Speaker—

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Before the hon. gentleman speaks, may I ask the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) for an answer to my question?

Mr. GARDINER: In view of the statute, which His Honour the Speaker has just read, may I ask why it is necessary for this item of $424.59 to appear in the supplementary estimates as salary to Mr. Meighen as leader of the official opposition?

Mr. SPEAKER: This item, as I understand it, was submitted to the Minister of Finance and not to myself. I know that after the election there was some little talk about the balance of salary due to Mr. Meighen. No application was made by Mr. Meighen but it was reported that I should give orders that he be paid as leader of the opposition from the date of his resignation as Prime Minister. Therefore he was paid from the day of his resignation as Prime Minister up to the day of the swearing in of the new minister. The new leader of the opposition was selected in the month of November, I think.

Mr. CAHAN: On October 11th.

Mr. SPEAKER: Very well, October 11th. I was ready to pay the right hon. gentleman, but Colonel Cameron, who is accountant of the House of Commons, pointed out to me first of all that no application had been received from Mr. Meighen. In the next place he referred me to the statute which I have just quoted. I was familiar with it, of course, because I was in the House when the act was passed. Under that statute the allowance is only paid to the member occupying the recognized position of leader of the opposition in the House of Commons. The main estimates provide for what I could not legally pay. What is provided for here is the balance which is claimed from the day Mr. Meighen resigned as Prime Minister until the day when the hon. gentleman who now occupies the position of leader of the opposition was elected by his party. It is a very small amount. The request was made, I understand, to the Minister of Finance, and this amount was placed, and properly placed, where it is in the estimates. That is all I know about the matter.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Did I understand you to say, Mr. Speaker, that the right hon. gentleman had made application for this money?

Mr. SPEAKER: He never made any application to me.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. ROBB: I think it is fair to the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen to say that when the Prime Minister learned in October that he had not been paid for a period while he was leader of the opposition, provision was made to pay him, and a cheque was sent to Mr. Meighen. Then on the 2nd April last, Mr. Meighen wrote directing attention to the fact that he had not been paid for that period from the date of the election until October 11th. We calculated the period from September 26th to October 11th, when my hon. friend (Mr. Guthrie) was made leader, and an amount of $434.59 was put in the estimates to clean the matter up.

Mr. BROWN: Is it in accordance with the statute that a man who was not a member of the House of Commons should be paid as leader of the opposition?

Mr. ROBB: I have not gone into that phase of the matter.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it to be understood that this is in the nature of a compassionate allowance? Surely that is not the position we are going to place the late Prime Minister of this country in.

Mr. ROBB: I should like to make it clear that the government is not putting Mr. Meighen in that position. It was Mr. Meighen who directed our attention to the fact that he was entitled to that amount of money, and we are submitting the item to the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps I should say that this is another case, in which I think the Commons itself will have to assert its own right and authority. After the general elections when Mr. Meighen retired from office though still continuing in the position of leader of the opposition I was informed by an hon. member of this House that Mr. Meighen had been refused the use of a frank, that he had been told that his secretaries could not receive any payment, and that his own salary as leader of the opposition had been cut off. It was represented to me that in Mr. Meighen's mind I was responsible for that very summary procedure. I confess I was very surprised when I discovered that Mr. Meighen had been treated in this manner and I communicated with His Honour the Speaker requesting that Mr. Meighen should be given the rights and privileges to which I thought he was entitled. I received word from His Honour the Speaker that Mr. Meighen could not legally be paid any amount on account of the statute governing the situation. I recognized that the situation was a difficult and complicated one, and I personally spoke to Mr. Meighen about it. Mr. Meighen expressed some surprise at what had occurred and seemed to feel that the government that had just taken office was not acting towards him in a manner that in the circumstances was justified. I told him that what had occurred was contrary to anything in my own mind, and that if his own frank was not recognized he could use my frank; that if payment could not be made for his secretaries I was prepared to provide a secretary for him from my own office or arrange to have his own secretary paid; that if he did not receive his salary as leader of the opposition, I would ask parliament to vote the amount if the statute or some existing regulation did not permit the Speaker to pay it. My impression at the time was that the salary was voted to the leader of the opposition, whether still a member of parliament or not and Mr. Meighen was still leader of the opposition. He was not a member of parliament and I presume that not being a member of parliament technically and in fact legally, as we have just heard, he would not have been entitled to his salary as leader of the opposition for this period. But he filled the position and did the work of leader of the opposition until he resigned the leadership of his party and my hon. friend opposite was elected to the position of leader of the opposition. Under the circumstances I think it is only right that this House should allow Mr. Meighen that proportion of the salary of leader of the opposition that would have gone to him if he had been a member of the House, seeing that he was performing at that time the duties of leader of the opposition.

Mr. GARDINER: I appreciate very much the explanation the Prime Minister has given. but I would call his attention to the unfortunate fact that this is the second time we have had to have in the estimates such a sum for the leader of the official opposition, and unfortunately the present vote applies to Mr. Meighen. I appreciate the circumstances and I have no objection to the amount named in the estimate, but I do think it is placing the former leader of the opposition in a very humiliating position to have these amounts placed in the estimates and have such explanations given on these two occasions. I would therefore suggest to the Prime Minister that during the recess he take into consideration the desirability of revising that part of the statute so as to prevent repetition of such a thing as we have witnessed on the two occasions alluded to. One more question with regard to this item. I understand that in the House of Commons Act provision is made for the salary of the Deputy Speaker. Now I notice in the supplementary an item of $1,193 to provide for the salary of the Deputy Speaker from December 14, 1926, to March 31, 1927, inclusive. Would the Speaker be good enough to explain why this amount appears in these estimates?

Mr. SPEAKER: It is the balance due to the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough who occupied the position of Deputy Speaker in the last parliament. As Deputy Speaker he was entitled to $4,000 a year, and this is to provide for the payment of the balance of his salary.

Mr. GARDINER: And is he entitled to his salary when he is not even a member of the House?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes. I consulted the Department of Justice on that point and received an opinion from them. I brought the matter before the Board of Internal Economy, and it was decided that his salary should be paid for the balance of the year based on that opinion of the Department of Justice.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to bring up one point in connection with this question of an official opposition. The Prime Minister referred to the frank being used. At the last election, campaign literature was coming into my constituency under frank in support of candidates of the older parties. In my own constituency I had no opposition from the Liberal party, but literature was coming in under the frank of the right hon. gentleman who is now Prime Minister and who, I presume, was then leader of the official opposition. When there are several groups in this House, it is manifestly unfair that during election time the local candidates of the older parties should be supported by literature sent in under the frank of the government or the official opposition. This is not in harmony with the principle of fair play. I should like to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the need that some arrangement should be made with regard to the franking privilege whereby, if it is granted to one party in the House, it should be granted to all sections of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: After consultation with the Postmaster General, I am pleased to inform hon. members that they may use the franking privilege eight days after prorogation.

Mr. ROBB: As it is now approaching six o'clock, if the House has no desire to discuss in detail any of the other items, may I suggest that the Chairman call the items and we can pass them?

Item agreed to.

To hereby provide for payment to Mrs. Beatrice Williams, widow of late penitentiary guard John Williams, Mrs. Violet L. Jenkin, widow of late penitentiary guard M. E. Jenkin and Mrs. Jean Laird Farrell, widow of late penitentiary guard R. E. Farrell, of an allowance of $600 a year each and so in proportion for any part of a year, to commence from the 1st April 1927 and continue thenceforth during their natural lives, respectively, such allowance to be paid monthly out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, $1,800.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I object to items being put through without our knowing what they are. What is this item?

The CHAIRMAN: $1,800 for a pension.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No objection.

Item agreed to.

To hereby provide, notwithstanding anything contained in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or any other act or law, for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to Robinson Russell Farrow, of an annuity at the rate of $5,646.40, to commence from August 7, 1926, and to continue thereafter at the above rate during his lifetime, $9,319.57.

Mr. KENNEDY: Will the minister who is responsible for this item kindly tell us just why it is presented to the committee? We know that last year Mr. Farrow was one of the officials who lost their positions because of irregularities in the customs department. Under the circumstances I want to know the justification for putting him back on a pension.

Mr. ROBB: We will let the item stand until we send for the Minister of Customs.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I would ask the hon. member whether or not his committee recommended last year that this same gentleman be given a pension?

Mr. KENNEDY: Certainly not.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member has a very short memory.

Mr. PRICE: Under the heading of "Pensions" I desire to call the attention of the committee to a death which occurred in Kent county, New Brunswick, on October 20, 1926. On that date Mr. Agapit LeBlanc, a fishery guardian, was murdered off the coast of Kent county in the discharge of his duties. I would like to know from the minister what has been done with regard to provision for his widow. A number of names have been mentioned in connection with pensions, and as this is a really deserving case and one which has had the attention of the department, I should like an assurance that this widow will be provided for.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. ROBB: I can assure the hon. member that I shall have the case carefully looked into, and if the act provides, his request will certainly be carried out.

Item stands.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is nearly six o'clock, but I gather that it is the unanimous wish of the House that we continue and that the Speaker should not look at the clock until we have made further progress.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

To provide for salaries and expenses of the Advisers engaged in tariff inquiry. Payments may be made notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or regulations thereunder, $60,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In connection with the tariff inquiry I should like to point out, as I did earlier in the session, that the work of the tariff board might be made more effective if more publicity were given to the evidence brought before the board and to its findings. The fact is that those who apply for changes in the tariff present a memorandum and that memorandum is given to the members, or an opportunity is given to the members to see it, but as a rule that is or has been up to the present time the memorandum of those who are applying for increases in the tariff. Hence we have an opportunity of reading all the arguments in favour of an increase in tariff, but we are not given an opportunity of reading arguments presented in opposition to such an increase. I happened to attend one or two sessions of the board and I found that some valuable evidence was coming in. An abstract of that was being taken, but it was not printed and it is not available to the public. Further, as I understand the matter, since the board is merely a fact-finding body and does not make definite recommendations, there is no reason why the report as presented to the Minister of Finance ought not to be made available to the public. Therefore in view of the importance of the whole field of investgiation we might very well request that there be published the evidence together with the findings of the commission, and that such report should be made available to members of this House and to the general public. I would ask if that is not possible.

Mr. ROBB: That has been brought to our attention from time to time. Frequently we hear in this House, but still more frequently in the country, that if Hansard were abolished altogether the business of the House would be conducted more expeditiously. What my hon. friend is asking for is really another Hansard, and its establishment involves more than the expense of the reporters. It involves the translation and the printing and the compilation of a lot of books that will be filed away in the garret or the cellar of the Finance Department, as for instance the report of the tariff inquiry conducted by one of my predecessors, Sir Henry Drayton, never to be read by anybody. Only recently we have had a request for certain evidence given in connection with an inquiry in regard to woollen goods, which is not yet completed. I thought we might meet the wishes of those who asked for this evidence by having typewritten copies made. I find that these will cost $25 each. I have now an inquiry as to how much it will cost to print the evidence. I see no objection, in fact I see every reason why the public should have information if it is asked for from time to time; but I should not like to build up a machine that will add very much to the cost of the tariff board without serving any good purpose. I can assure my hon. friend that if he desires to get any special information I have no objection to its being furnished.

Mr. WHITE (London): Why is this item increased 50 per cent over last year?

Mr. ROBB: The increase is for the additional employees required to look after the business. Last year the tariff board only got started; but now it is in operation, it has daily meetings, and it requires a staff to assemble and take care of information with respect to the cases under consideration. If we carry out the wishes of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), the vote next year will be increased considerably more than 50 per cent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It might end in a saving to the general public.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, $10,000.

Mr. COOTE: Two years ago the government practically promised to increase this grant, but I see it is still left at the same amount.

Mr. ROBB: If my hon. friend will look at the next page he will find there is a small increase.

Mr. COOTE: I am very glad to hear it.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—amount required to provide for grants to be made to the provinces of:
Nova Scotia, $875,000
New Brunswick, $600,000
Prince Edward Island, $125,000
pending consideration of provincial subsidies.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this intended as a yearly subsidy?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No. I direct my hon. friend's attention to the wording of the item. It is the intention of the government to have a conference this fall between the Dominion and the provinces to consider the question of provincial subsidies. This is merely an interim grant for this year.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): As a member from Prince Edward Island, Mr. Chairman, I would be very ungrateful indeed if I did not show my appreciation of this vote. I do not wish to take much of the time of the House at this late stage. I merely want to express my gratitude not only to the Prime Minister and to every member of the cabinet but also to our friends on the other side.

Item agreed to.

Soldiers' Civil Re-estalishment—operating expense and working capital, $250,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What does that mean?

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): This covers administration services, general and medical, cash advances, travelling expenses, Red Cross shops, telegrams, postage, stationery and so on.

Item agreed to.

Sheltered employment, burial of destitute, transportation of the blind, $175,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to criticize this vote censoriously. When I was last in Calgary, while sitting in the Canadian Legion office with the secretary he received a message that a returned soldier had died. Owing to unfortunate circumstances he had not been able to save enough to provide for his funeral expenses. A gentleman not connected with the Canadian Legion told me that he has a fund called the Last Post fund, but had not enough money to bury the returned soldier and had to send somebody out on the streets to beg for it. It is a disgrace to Canada that we cannot bury our returned soldiers in cases where at the time of their death they had not any money which could be used to cover funeral expenses. I suggest to the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment that he increase this vote, so that when a returned soldier in indigent circumstances dies we will have enough money to bury him. We are voting $250,000 for Ottawa and still we have not enough money to bury our returned soldiers. All the soldiers ask is that the government furnish a little stone slab so that the soldier can be buried decently with the rest of the veterans, and I propose that the minister increase this vote by $50,000 in order to provide for cases such as the one I have referred to.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We are either going to have order or the Speaker will call it six o'clock—one or the other. In regard to this particular matter the government cannot plead that it has not been advised of the situation. A year ago I personally spoke to the Prime Minister about it and wrote him a letter pleading with him to increase the vote in this regard. The Prime Minister expressed sympathy, but had some difficulty in meeting my request. The estimate this year is the same as last year, and it is not enough to meet the requirements of the province from which I come. I do not know what the position is in other provinces, but I have had letters from the honourary president of the Last Post fund of my province protesting pitifully in regard to the situation there. Man after man is buried in the potter's field on account of the lack of a decent sense of responsibility on the part of the government in regard to this particular matter. Before the item passes I ask that the Prime Minister give us his views on the situation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have not the letter my hon. friend refers to, but I am entirely in sympathy with any provision to carry out in an adequate way what is proposed in this vote, and if the amount is not sufficient for the purpose I would ask my colleague to place an amount in a subsequent estimate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

[Mr. Adshead.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The Last Post fund is subscribed to by those interested in the burial of soldiers who died in such circumstances that no provision had been made for their burial by themselves or by their friends. The government has supported that fund by giving a grant. There is a general secretary in Montreal who administers the fund. An amount of $10,000 has been voted each year, and the burials have been made under that organization. It is true I had reports made this year asking for a further increase of ten, twelve or fifteen thousand dollars. The question I had to consider was whether we wished to continue an organization outside the department and grant to them a certain sum each year. If we are to increase that sum, then the government probably had better assume the whole cost and expenditure. That is a matter I have to consider, and of course that would involve a large expenditure. Under the rules the government had to bury all soldiers on their staff or under treatment, and pensioners who were under treatment. We have not gone beyond that, except in the grant to the Last Post fund which provides for a class who are indigent and have not the means to provide for burial.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Where there are soldiers of that description, will the minister guarantee that they should be buried without charge?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, we do guarantee.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): What is the question?

Mr. ADSHEAD: In the case of the returned soldier who dies and there is not enough money in the Last Post fund to bury him, will the government undertake to supply the funds to bury him?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It would be impossible. We have not the money in the vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may say on behalf of the government that if any cases such as my hon. friend refers to are brought to the attention of the government we will certainly see to it that an appropriate burial is arranged.

Mr. GARDINER: We appreciate what the Prime Minister has said, but that is not enough. We want in the estimates a certain sum of money which may be utilized for that purpose when required. I suggest that the minister increase the vote or otherwise make provision for such contingency before the House rises.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If this amount is not sufficient, I will undertake on behalf of the government to say that we will ask parliament for a supplementary vote when we next assemble.

Item agreed to.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital—Canadian Pacific Railway—original construction, $71.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is this original construction grant to the Canadian Pacific railway, $71?

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend has sat in the House a number of years when similar items have been passed. This is to provide for the payment to John Murray for Lot 6, Block 6, D.L. 201, Port Moody, B.C., of an amount of $35.75 and interest at 5 per cent since 1908. Property was expropriated in 1885 in connection with the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway. The owner was unable to prove title at that time, and the lot has never been paid for by the government. The title of John Murray to property was established in 1908, but this was not brought to the attention of the department until 1919. Subsequent investigations substantiate Mr. John Murray's right to claim compensation, and it is now considered necessary that the money be voted by specific appropriation. Mr. Murray has agreed to accept $35.75 and interest since 1908 in settlement for the property.

Item agreed to.

Canals—Welland ship canal—to provide for payment to P. Lyall and Sons Contruction Co. of compensation on account of washing rock excavated during 1926, from section No. 4—not anticipated at time tenders were called for, $38,823.

Mr. PETTIT: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. DUNNING: A large portion of the rock to be moved was dirty, intermixed with clay. Inasmuch as the contract called for the contractor to take out the rock of another section of the canal to be used in connection with cement work, it was necessary to provide for the washing of the dirty rock. My hon. friend is familiar with the situation in that regard. The amount here has reference to the rock taken out and washed during 1926. There will be a further quantity of approximately 100,000 cubic yards in 1927.

Mr. PETTIT: Where is the work being done?

Mr. DUNNING: The rock which is washed is excavated from section 4 before being crushed for concrete for sections 1, 2, 3 and 4.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers, Quebec, $1,135,643.05.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not suppose there is the slightest use in a lone voice being raised in protest against the present method of passing estimates. I have no knowledge whatever of the merits of these items, and I do not know what the object is in spending these enormous sums of money. However, I do not wish to delay or obstruct in any way the obvious and deliberate intention of both parties to get done.

Mr. DUNNING: Your own included.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Again I protest most vigorously against the passing of these estimates without proper consideration.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We are sent here presumably to scrutinize the estimates but we have no opportunity of doing so. Some of us are anxious to get home but we owe a duty to the people and if we allow the estimates to go through now in this manner it ought to be on the distinct understanding that early next session the estimates will be submitted to the proper committee for close scrutiny in detail. The deputy ministers could then be examined. The present method of rushing the estimates through is a farce and the public is beginning to realize it. We can no longer be mere rubber stamps to O.K. these estimates. I suggest that the government should give us an undertaking that next session the estimates will be submitted early to an appropriate committee.

Mr. CANNON: Any member who wishes to do so is always at liberty to ask the public accounts committee to investigate any expenditure.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Solicitor General is pleasingly ironical. He knows that such a process of examination is like closing the door of the barn after the horse is stolen. I have never heard such a childish proposal coming from a minister.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member's own party agreed to it. Why this hypocrisy?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was one of those who objected to rushing the estimates through.

I have just overheard the minister's remark accusing us of hypocrisy. I was never consulted in the matter and I would ask the Minister of Railways to take back that insinuation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I take the same position.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is beneath the dignity of a minister to make that statement and equally beneath the dignity of this House to let it go without protest.

Mr. DUNNING: I said that the other parties had agreed to it and I asked, why this hypocrisy. If my remarks did not apply to the hon. gentleman I do not know why he needs to take offence. I did not mention him.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Only two members have protested, the hon. member (Mr. Woodsworth) and myself, and neither of us was consulted. The remarks of the minister were obviously directed to the two of us and in so far as they were I ask that they be withdrawn. It is an impertinence unequalled in this House to declare that any member is guilty of hypocrisy.

Mr. POULIOT: I was not consulted either.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just wait a moment; I have the floor. I ask the Minister of Railways to withdraw the reference to hypocrisy so far as I am concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall withdraw nothing; I made no reference to any member of this House as an individual. I asked, "Why this hypocrisy;" I intend to stick to it, and it is not out of order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then I would ask the committee to rise and report progress, as it is now six o'clock.

Mr. ELLIOTT: May I just say a word?

The CHAIRMAN: No, I must put the motion.

Motion negatived.

Mr. ELLIOTT: May I just say a word by way of explanation to my hon. friend?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I interrupt the hon. gentleman?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it not customary that a request to continue after six o'clock must be unanimous?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I think the House is master of its own deliberations. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, let me say to my hon. friend that the estimates we are now passing are almost all revotes of items which were in the supplementary estimates of last year, and which we were unable to spend. If there are any particular items on which my hon. friends would like any information I shall be pleased to give it, but they are all for dredging and repairs to wharves and so on, work deemed to be absolutely essential, and unfortunately we were not able to do nearly as much as the engineers reported to be necessary.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Now, Mr. Chairman, may I have some answer to the question which I put before, as to whether when these supplementaries are passed we may have some assurance that next year the estimates will be referred to an appropriate committee early in the session?

Mr. MACKENNZIE KING: If my hon. friend moves that any estimates now being passed should go before a committee at the next session, the House will have the right to pass upon that motion and the government will be only too glad to abide by the decision of the House.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Just before we pass that item, there was such a din and uproar in the House that I did not have an opportunity to say what I desired. I notice an item in which I am particularly interested, and concerning which I have made very strong representations not only to the present Minister of Public Works but to his predecessor. This item provides for very urgent harbour improvements at Port Hood in my constituency, and is for $16,500. I am not criticizing the minister at all, in fact I commend him for making this appropriation. I desire to impress upon him, however, the urgency of this work and wish to ask if it is the intention of his department to commence work during the early summer, because the fishermen of this community for a distance of some ten miles along the sea coast, are deprived of any safe harbour and have been so deprived for a number of years. They have made representations through their representatives in parliament that this work be done, and this item will fill a long felt want.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In answer to my hon. friend I would say that nearly all these items were voted in the supplementaries last year, but because we were working under governor general's warrants we could not proceed with them. Of this vote $1,196,000 was included in the supplementary estimates, and $1,268,000 in the main estimates of last year. All this work is most urgent, since only that urgent work is being done, and the instructions from the department are to carry it out at the greatest possible speed, because much of it is work which should have been done last year.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Then I take it that the work will be commenced this summer?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, it is the intention that everything in this list will be commenced this summer.

Mr. GEARY: I would like to ask the minister to carry his figures one step further and tell us how much of these estimates are new and find themselves placed here for the first time. They should be taken up separately, item by item, because it is no way to pass estimates en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to be shut off in that way. I have asked a question of the Minister of Public Works, and I would like an answer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I might say that the total of these items voted last year in the main estimates is $1,268,000, and the total amount voted in the supplementaries last year is $1,196,335. That means that we have approximately $2,500,000 of last year's estimates included this year.

Mr. GEARY: But I want to know how much of this vote is new?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The difference, including the legation and improvements in Ottawa, will be nearly $2,000,000.

Mr. KAISER: May I ask the minister if the vote of $5,000 for Oshawa is a revote or a new vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is a new vote.

Mr. KAISER: It is no doubt more than we deserve, but I want to point out that twenty-six years ago the Liberals started to build us a harbour; and I understand it will take twenty-one years more, or in all fifty years to build a little pier.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—Saskatchewan and Alberta, $36,000.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to draw to the attention of hon. members of this House, who are always telling us how much Canada has done for the west, the difference between the size of this vote and the amounts voted for the other provinces.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—British Columbia, $259,000.

Mr. DICKIE: I wish to say a few words in connection with this item. I do not wish to strike a discordant note at this stage of the session, but I am quite prepared to speak, if necessary, on the life history of the teredo and the barnacle, the injurious effects of which the minister knows. I have just one little matter to bring up for consideration. In the little town of Port Washington it has been recommended by Mr. Ford, the District Engineer, that $3,500 be expended in the construction of a wharf or in the repair of the existing wharf. I know that amount is justified, and I do not like to see these people penalized because they may have made a mistake in the way they voted in the last election. I would like to have an assurance that this money will be expended, otherwise I will be compelled to talk for about two hours and a half on the life history of the teredo from the time it emerged from the primordial ooze down to the present.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know my hon. friend does not intend to be unfair, but if I am correct, all these votes are in ridings which did not vote perhaps as wisely as they might have voted in the last election. In regard to the matter my hon. friend speaks of we have a certain general vote to take care of wharves and harbours. He mentions an item of $3,500. That is a fairly large amount to be taken out of the general vote but if it is possible I would be glad to have the work done provided it is more urgent than anything else which needs attention.

Mr. BRADY: I do not intend to keep the minister more than one minute, but I feel that it is my imperative duty to draw the attention of the minister to the state of the Prince Rupert fishing fleet.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think that is what my hon. friend spoke to me about before. I have it in mind.

Mr. BRADY: I have only one request to make and it is this—that by a happy, I will call it fortuitous, amendment, vote 452 was rescinded by the House half an hour ago and it totals $13,560. Now if the minister would only transfer that $13,560 to the task of caring for the floats at Prince Rupert, where there are 300 fishing boats worth over a million dollars, I would be indeed gratified in the interests of the fishing fleet. I ask the minister now if he will be so kind as to get the Prime Minister to do that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend knows my views on this subject, because he cannot be charged with any neglect of this harbour or any of the other harbours in his section of British Columbia. There is a general vote provided and it cannot all go to my hon. friend nor to any other hon. member, but I may say to him that it will be utilized to the very best possible advantage.

Mr. BRADY: I would point out to the minister that there are 300 vessels at Prince Rupert, and it is of the greatest importance that provision be made for their safety. I therefore ask that the vote in question be transferred for the float in question to help to protect their craft.

Item agreed to.

To hereby provide, notwithstanding anything contained in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, or any other act or law, for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to Robinson Russell Farrow, of an annuity at the rate of $5,646.40, to commence from August 7th, 1926, and to continue thereafter at the above rate during his lifetime, $9,319.57.

Mr. EULER: In the report of the parliamentary committee appointed last year to inquire into the Customs department a recommendation was made providing for the retirement of certain officials of that department. Among them was the then Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise. That report did not contemplate dismissal so that the official should lose his retiring allowance, but duirng the course of the debate a member of the House moved an amendment that the official be dismissed with the result that his retiring allowance would be lost to him. I have no particular criticism to make of that amendment except to say that I believe we did something less than justice to the deputy minister at that time. The House I need not say was in a state of considerable excitement and I am inclined to believe—in fact, I do believe—that the report of the committee was perhaps a better considered report than the opinion expressed by the House on that memorable evening. The gentleman for whom an allowance is proposed to be made under this item served in the department ever since he was a boy—to be exact, for a period of forty-five years. During the last five years he was in office he made application for superannuation but his retirement was not permitted although he could have left the government service during any one of those five years and received an allowance.

Mr. CAHAN: Had he been paying into the superannuation fund?

Mr. EULER: He had been making payments for many years into the superannuation fund, and it seems to me that it is merely a matter of justice that we should restore to him now the rights he would have had if the report of the committee had been accepted.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is this the full amount that Mr. Farrow would have received had he retired?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY: The point I wish to make is that by this vote we are establishing the fact that a member of the civil service of Canada may allow his department to get into a state such as this department was found to be in last year by the Customs inquiry committee. Section 6 of the report of that committee reads as follows:

The evidence submitted to the committee leads to the general conclusion that for a long time the Department of Customs and Excise had been slowly degenerating in efficiency and that the process was greatly accelerated in the last few years.

And yet in spite of that expression of opinion we extend to this former official the same kind of treatment as if his department had been run in the most efficient manner. Under the circumstances I wish to protest against the passage of this item. There surely should be some distinction drawn between an official who manages his department honestly and efficiently and one who does not.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): In the report of the Customs inquiry committee last year, at page 3062, I find the following:

Mr. Kennedy moved: That the following clause be added to the report, viz:—

That the name of R. R. Farrow, deputy minister of Customs and Excise, be included in the list of those officers who have been delinquent in their duties, and whose services it is recommended should be dispensed with.

For that motion Messrs. Doucet and Kennedy voted. Those who voted against were Messrs. Bell (Hamilton), Bennett, Donaghy, Goodison, St. Père, and Stevens. I hope the hon. gentleman is proud of the company he was in on that occasion.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not think the reflections of the hon. gentleman will help this matter very much, and so I will pass them over. But when a civil servant has been in the employ of this country up to a stage where he is entitled to an allowance if no misdemeanour has occurred, if a misdemeanour occurs on his part, I think he should be allowed, having paid into the pension fund during the time of his entire employment, to retire with an allowance equal to that which he would have received at the time he was entitled to retire before the misdemeanour occurred.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As one who moved in this House last year a resolution along this line, I feel that I ought to say a word. I moved that resolution after consultation with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) who on that committee represented more or less the independent members. It was because of his report of the revelations in the committee that some of us felt that this matter could not be passed over, and so I moved the resolution. The resolution was rejected, but this clause in it was afterwards included in another motion, and passed by the House. It read:

> And also in clause 13 to add the name of R. R. Farrow, Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise, to the list of those who are recommended that their services be dispensed with.

That resolution was passed by this House. This vote is being proposed a year later over the head of a resolution passed by the last parliament. That in itself is a serious situation. Further than that, some of us who felt that we had to take some position to discipline, shall I say, those who are responsible for conditions in the Customs department, made it clear that we did not want to be hard on any of those men. The under officials were summarily dismissed. The deputy minister, according to the recommendations of the committee, remained eligible for full pension. I urged at that time that a certain amount of clemency should be exercised, and that recommendations should be brought in to provide that the men who were dismissed should receive some consideration; that they should not be turned, as it were, on the street. Again I suggest that it is a serious matter, if, after a man has been shown to have been to no small extent responsible for a number of years for the condition in the department, he should then receive no punishment whatever, but rather should be permitted to enjoy his full pension just as if he had been an honourable and efficient servant to the end. I cannot but remember that there are to-day men who are spending years in our gaols and penitentiaries on account of small thefts, slight irregularities in their conduct, and yet to-day we propose not merely to refuse to punish this man in any way, but to retire him on full pension. I feel that unless we are going to rise to that point where we are willing to remit all penalties and treat the poorest in our land in this generous fashion, some of us can not let this vote pass without a decided protest. It was not pleasant for me to take this position. Although I have not known Mr. Farrow personally I understand he was for many years a respected official, and he has already suffered much. But I feel the impression must not be permitted to go throughout the country that a man who is highly placed is to be given one type of treatment while the poorer or subordinate offender is discriminated against.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): As one who served on that committee I quite concur, as a matter of generality, in the stand that was taken by the hon. member for Peace River. It is only fair to say that he was consistent in that stand, but it should also be stated that, before the report of the committee was brought in, the case of this particular official was given earnest consideration for a matter of two or three days, and the majority report of the committee was reached only after the most careful consideration of his case. Having regard to all that then came before the committee and all that we have heard that has occurred in connection with the matter, I can only say as a member of that committee that I endorse every word which the Minister of Customs has just stated to the House.

Mr. KENNEDY: I want to reply to the statement made by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Young) who referred to the company which I was keeping last year. Let me tell him that I am as proud of the company I kept last year on the customs committee as the company I kept this year on the railway committee, and that is not saying anything against either of them. I wish simply to protest and to put myself on record as holding the view that, by this appropriation, we are not dealing fairly with officials in the civil service who maintain their record clean and efficient to the end. I know, because of the feeling of the House, it is of no use moving a motion to reduce this item or to strike it out; but notwithstanding that, a principle is involved, and I want to go on record as saying that the action that is being taken is wrong.

Mr. SPENCER: I want to support the hon. member for Peace River in his contention.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions reported.

CONCURRENCE

The House proceeded to consider certain resolutions reported from committee of supply.

Resolutions concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. ROBB moved:

Resolved that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1928, the sum of $234,934,632.06 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported and concurred in. Mr. Robb thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 340, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1928.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second time.

Mr. ROBB moved:

That the said bill be now read a third time.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That all the words after "that" in the motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor, namely:

The bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions to the said committee that it have power to reduce vote No. 467 schedule C, by the sum of $475,000.

This matter was discussed when a similar motion was made in the committee last night. I do not need to repeat what was then said; I simply wish to have the opinion of the House taken in regard to it.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am prepared to follow the example of my hon. friend, and to say, I do not think it is necessary to add anything to what was said last night, and I hope the House will vote on this amendment as emphatically as it did in the committee.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Guthrie) which was negatived on the following division:

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1928.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

In His Majesty's name, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

After which the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the first session of the sixteenth parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I desire to express my appreciation of the expedition with which you have discharged your duties in a Session marked by much important legislation. The revision by the House of Commons of its rules should serve to expedite the transaction of public business at future Sessions.

Important government measures which passed the House of Commons during the last Parliament, but which failed to become law have now been passed by both Houses, and have received the Royal Assent. They include provision, in coöperation with the provinces, for a system of long term mortgage loans for farmers and for old age pensions. Amendments have been made to the Canada Grain Act, affecting the grain growing interests, and equally important amending legislation has been enacted affecting live stock interests.

The increasingly satisfactory showing of the Canadian National Railways' net earnings affords concrete evidence of our expanding trade and commerce. The extension of the Canadian National railway system by another comprehensive program of branch line construction, will make possible the rapid development of communities hitherto lacking railway facilities. Further substantial provision has also been made for work on the Hudson Bay route. The Agreement concerning the Grand Trunk Pacific Debenture Issue has been approved.

The expansion of our trade, which is rapidly penetrating the diversified markets of the world, is further reflected in the increasing importation of raw material for the use of our manufacturers and a corresponding increase in our exportation of manufactured goods. Our exports of food products continue satisfactory. Supplementing the work of the Empire Marketing Board, provision has been made to assist in a substantial manner the marketing of Canadian produce in Great Britain. Arrangements are also nearing completion for the improved steamship service to the British West Indies.

The favourable consideration given the recommendations of the Royal Commission appointed to examine and report upon conditions in the Maritime Provinces, has been received with general approval throughout the Dominion. The substantial money grants made to these provinces, the reduction to be effected in their freight rates, the encouragement given the production of domestic fuel from coal mined in Canada, the provision for a Deputy Minister of Fisheries, and for Harbour Commissions at Halifax and St. John, together with other administrative measures contemplated in accordance with the recommendations of the Commission, will, it is confidently expected, materially assist in furthering the economic prosperity of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and in advancing the welfare and unity of the whole Dominion.

The protection of the public revenues has been enhanced by the heavier penalties provided for violation of the Customs and Excise laws and by the consolidation of the Customs, Excise and Income Tax branches of the public service into one Department of the Government to be known as the Department of National Revenue.

Additional protection for the public has been afforded by the amendments made to the laws respecting insurance, loan and trust companies.

Amendments of importance to ex-soldiers have been made to the Pension Act, extending the period for filing pension claims, and making provision for a second appeal in case of newly discovered evidence.

The position of the Civil Service of Canada has been improved with respect alike to salaries and superannuation.

To aid in the celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of Confederation, a National Committee has been incorporated. Its efforts have been directed to securing, in coöperation with the provinces, a worthy commemoration of this important stage in our national development. Especially appropriate is the constitution at this time of a Federal District Commission with enlarged jurisdiction and powers in respect of the permanent beautification of the Capital of our Dominion.

Members of the House of Commons:

It is gratifying to know that you have been able to effect further substantial relief from taxation. I thank you for the provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The Minister Plenipotentiary accredited by His Majesty to represent the Dominion of Canada in the United States has presented his credentials and has entered upon his duties. The President of the United States has appointed the former United States Ambassador to Belgium as Minister Plenipotentiary in Canada; the new Minister will shortly take up his duties at Ottawa. This exchange of representatives will undoubtedly help to maintain and develop the existing good relations between the two countries.

The prosperity which Canada so happily enjoys at the present time gives every indication of continuing in increasing measure. For this, and many other blessings upon our land, I join with you in heartfelt thanks to Divine Providence.

This concluded the first session of the sixteenth parliament.
