HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SECOND SESSION—THIRTY-THIRD PARLIAMENT

35 Elizabeth II

VOLUME I, 1986

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE THIRTIETH DAY OF SEPTEMBER, 1986
TO THE TWENTIETH DAY OF NOVEMBER, 1986

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

Published under authority of the Speaker of the House of Commons by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Canadian Government Publishing Centre, Supply and Services Canada, Ottawa, Canada K1A 0S9.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, September 30, 1986

SECOND SESSION--THIRTY-THIRD PARLIAMENT

[English]

The Parliament, which had been prorogued on the twenty-eighth day of August, 1986, met this day at Ottawa for the election of a new Speaker.

The House met at three o'clock, the Speaker in the chair.

* * *

NOTICE OF RESIGNATION OF SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House will understand if I begin today by expressing my personal best wishes to Madam Killens and Mr. Rodriguez, welcoming them back on behalf of all of us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that I wrote to the Clerk of the House on September 5, 1986 declaring my intention to resign my position as Speaker of this House upon the election of my successor on October 1, 1986. Since the House by proclamation was reconvened at an earlier date, I wrote again to the Clerk of the House on September 25, 1986, altering the effective date of my resignation to September 30, 1986. I am now tabling copies of both letters.

[Translation]

For nearly two years I have had the very great privilege of being the Speaker of this House.

[English]

This is the most important institution in Canada and to occupy this chair is the highest honour a parliamentarian can ever receive. You must know, therefore, how deeply, deeply grateful I am to all of you for the experience of these last two years.

[Translation]

Like all my predecessors I am convinced that nothing else in the world will ever surpass such distinguished honour.

[English]

I must also express my heartfelt gratitude to the Officers of the House, to all our employees and, in particular, to the Clerk. Perhaps only a Speaker can know how truly well served we are.

[Translation]

We are about to live through a historical moment in the evolution of the speakership.

[English]

The House has asked the Government to give to the House complete authority over the selection of the Speaker, and the Government has agreed. Every Member here knows that greater authority carries with it greater responsibility. Sometime later today someone else will stand here. Whoever it is will receive from me and I am sure from every parliamentarian here, the complete support and understanding that our Speaker needs and deserves. To the new Speaker, congratulations, may God bless you and this House. To all of you—

[Translation]

—my most sincere thanks.

[English]

Thank you very, very much.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that Her Excellency the Governor General has seen fit to authorize this Chamber to proceed with the election of a Speaker.

* * *

[English]

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

HON. JOHN A. FRASER, MEMBER FOR THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF VANCOUVER SOUTH

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2, the House will now proceed to elect a Speaker. Order, please. It would be helpful today, please, if the Chair could have full attention.

In accordance with the Standing Orders, an alphabetical list of names of all Members who notified the Clerk in writing that they did not wish to have their names stand for candidacy, together with a list of names of those Members who are not eligible to be considered, has been placed on each Member's desk. For the benefit of Hon. Members, a list of names of those Members who are eligible to be considered for election to the office of Speaker, has also been placed on each Member's desk. These lists are also available at the Table.

[Translation]

I also point out that the alphabetical list of the names of Members eligible for the speakership has been posted in each voting booth.

[English]

There will be a list in each voting station as well. Since this is the first time we shall be electing a Speaker by secret ballot, this will be a new experience for all of us. The Table Officers will do everything they can to co-operate with Members and ensure that the election is conducted in a smooth and efficient manner.

I have a method of proceeding which I hope will accelerate the voting process which I will tell you about in a moment. At this time I must instruct the Clerk to unseal the ballots.

• (1510)

We are now prepared to begin the voting procedure.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On September 16, 1986, I notified the Clerk of the House that I did not wish my name to be included on the list of those eligible as candidates. Unfortunately, the Clerk takes the position that I should have personally signed the letter of notification, which is not in accordance with the Standing Orders. The rules merely require notification, something which I undertook in writing. Therefore I ask that my name be removed from Part B of the Schedule.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will know that under the rules his name is properly on the ballot and that it cannot be taken off at this time. However, the House has heard the Hon. Member's views on this matter.

I would like to remind Hon. Members that the rules require them to print the first and last names of their candidate on the ballot before casting it.

I ask Hon. Members who wish to cast ballots to pursue the following procedure. Hon. Members will leave their desks through the curtains and come to the Table through the entrances on either side of me appropriate to the side of the House on which they sit. The Clerk Assistant will issue to each Member a ballot. Having cast their ballots I ask Hon. Members to please clear the voting area.

The voting will now begin.

[Editor's Note: The list of eligible Members referred to above is as follows:]

Baker, George
Berger, David
Blenkarn, Don
Bradley, Bud
Clinch, Roger Comeau, Gerald
Cook, Chuck
Cooper, Albert
Copps, Sheila
Crosby, Howard (Halifax West)
Crouse, Lloyd
Danis, Marcel
Edwards, Jim
Fraser, John
Girard, Albert
Hamelin, Charles
Kindy, Alex
Layton, R.E.J.
Lewis, Douglas
Lopez, Ricardo
Mailly, Claudy
Malépart, Jean-Claude
McCrossan, Paul
McLean, Walter
Murta, Jack
Nielsen, Erik
Nowlan, Patrick
Nunziata, John
Paproski, Steven
Parry, John
Penner, Keith
Prud'homme, Marcel
Robichaud, Fernand
Stackhouse, Reg
Tardif, Alain (Richmond—Wolfe)
Tardif, Monique (Charlesbourg)
Thacker, Blaine
Toupin, Robert
Tremblay, Maurice (Lotbinière)

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

• (1530)

Mr. Speaker: If there are any Hon. Members who have not voted and wish to do so, will they please vote now? For anybody who has not voted and wants to vote, the voting booths will be closing shortly.

Order, please. All Members having voted I do now instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of the ballots.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: Before I suspend the sitting, which is what I am about to do, may I bring to the attention of Hon. Members that, when the counting of the ballots has been completed, the bells to call the Members back to the House will be sounded for not more than five minutes. Should another ballot be necessary, we will explain it at that time. The sitting is suspended to the ringing of the bells.

At 3.39 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 4.30 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that a second ballot will be necessary.

The names of those Members who can be considered on the second ballot are as follows:

Berger, David
Clinch, Roger
Cooper, Albert
Copps, Sheila
Danis, Marcel
Edwards, Jim
Fraser, John
Lewis, Douglas
Mailly, Claudy
Nielsen, Erik
Nowlan, Patrick
Paproski, Steven
Parry, John
Prud'homme, Marcel
Stackhouse, Reg
Thacker, Blaine

If any Hon. Member, whose name the Chair has just announced to the House, wishes to withdraw as a candidate on the second ballot, will he or she please rise in his or her place and state his or her reason therefor pursuant to Standing Order 2(5)(h)(ii).

The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, while withdrawing my name from the list, first I want to thank all Hon. Members who gave me their support.

[English]

However, I am persuaded at this point in time that no further interest of this House would be served by having my name remain on the ballot.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair advises the Clerk that Mr. Parry has withdrawn his name.

The Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The name of Mr. Nielsen has been left on the ballot in error. There has been a mistake somewhere along the line. Mr. Nielsen—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Ontario is raising something which is not a point of order. The ballot stands as it is.

The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to withdraw my name and support another Hon. Member who might better discharge the responsibilities of Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I instruct the Clerk to eliminate the name of Mr. Berger from the list.

The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think that I too will withdraw my name and, although I would like to perform the duties of Speaker as well as you have done, I think that others will be better qualified than I, particularly the candidates of our Party.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I instruct the Clerk to eliminate the name of Ms. Copps.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: There being no further withdrawals, I indicate to the House that the revised ballot is now being prepared. It will take a moment to do that, and it will then be placed in the booths. While the list is being prepared I will indicate to the House the names which will appear on it:

Clinch, Roger
Cooper, Albert
Danis, Marcel
Edwards, Jim
Fraser, John
Lewis, Douglas
Mailly, Claudy
Nielsen, Erik
Nowlan, Patrick
Paproski, Steven
Prud'homme, Marcel
Stackhouse, Reg
Thacker, Blaine

If Members of the House will bear with us, we will proceed as soon as we can.

• (1640)

Order, please. A revised list is now being placed in the voting stations. The Clerk will unseal the ballots. It will be the same process.

Order, please. While the Clerk is doing this, may I indicate to the House, if Hon. Members cannot see it, that the second list is of a different colour.

An Hon. Member: It's blue.

Mr. Speaker: Excuse me. I forgot to make sure that there were no red, no blue and no orange ballots. I should have done that.

The Clerk indicates that he is ready. The same procedure will be followed with the first and last names. Lists of names are now in the voting stations. Those Members who wish to cast their ballot on the second ballot may leave their desks and proceed in the same manner as they did on the first ballot.

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

• (1700)

Mr. Speaker: Order please. If there are any Hon. Members who have not voted and wish to do so, will they please now proceed to vote.

Are there any further votes?

I do now instruct the Clerk to count the ballots after I have cast mine.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The sitting is suspended again to the ringing of the bells. May I remind Hon. Members that this will, once more, be a five minute bell.

At 5.04 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 5.39 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that a third ballot will be necessary.

Election of Speaker

The names of those Members who can be considered on the third ballot are as follows:

Clinch, Roger	Nielsen, Erik
Cooper, Albert	Nowlan, Patrick
Danis, Marcel	Paproski, Steven
Edwards, Jim	Prud'homme, Marcel
Fraser, John	Stackhouse, Reg
Lewis, Douglas	Thacker, Blaine

• (1740)

If any Hon. Member, whose name the Chair has just announced to the House, wishes to withdraw as a candidate on the third ballot, will he or she please rise in his or her place and do so?

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my name from contention.

Mr. Speaker: The Clerk will be instructed to withdraw the name of Mr. Edwards from this ballot.

Are there are any other withdrawals? Accordingly, the revised list of eligible names is as follows:

Clinch, Roger	Nowlan, Patrick
Cooper, Albert	Paproski, Steven
Danis, Marcel	Prud'homme, Marcel
Fraser, John	Stackhouse, Reg
Lewis, Douglas	Thacker, Blaine
Nielsen, Erik

At this point the revised list for placing in the polling stations must now be prepared. That will again take two or three minutes. If the House will bear with us, I will announce as soon as possible the time to go to the next vote.

[Translation]

Order, please. For the benefit of Hon. Members, I wish to point out that the names of candidates for the third ballot will be posted in the voting booths.

[English]

At this time the Clerk will unseal the ballot papers. May I remind Hon. Members that, again, the ballot paper is a different colour and that the list of candidates should be now, or will be shortly, in the voting stations. The Clerk advises me that all arrangements have been made. Voting stations will now be opened. Voting may commence using the same procedure as before.

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

• (1800)

Mr. Speaker: If there are any Hon. Members who have not yet voted, would they please do so now?

Order, please. All Members having voted I do now instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of the ballots after I have cast mine.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: The sitting is once again suspended to the ringing of the bells which will again be a five-minute bell.

At 6.07 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 6.47 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my duty to inform the House that another ballot will be necessary.

The names of those Members who can be considered on the fourth ballot are as follows:

Clinch, Roger	Nielsen, Erik
Cooper, Albert	Paproski, Steven
Danis, Marcel	Prud'homme, Marcel
Fraser, John	Stackhouse, Reg
Lewis, Douglas	Thacker, Blaine

Again, it is my duty to ask whether any of those Members listed wish to withdraw as a candidate on the next ballot.

There being no withdrawals, the list remains the same.

The names of those Members who can be considered has been read out. An alphabetical list of those names, as before, will be prepared and will be placed in the polling booth as soon as possible.

• (1850)

The ballot box is sealed, voting will proceed in the same way as before, again with a different coloured ballot. Voting stations are now open.

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

• (1900)

Mr. Speaker: If there are any Hon. Members who have not voted and wish to do so, will they please vote now?

All Members having voted I do now instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of the ballots after I have cast my ballot.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: Order. The sitting is suspended until the call of the bells, which will ring for five minutes.

At 7.08 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 7.42 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that another ballot will be necessary. The names of those Members who can be considered on the next ballot are as follows:

Danis, Marcel
Fraser, John
Lewis, Douglas
Nielsen, Erik
Paproski, Steven
Prud'homme, Marcel
Stackhouse, Reg
Thacker, Blaine

Order, please. If any Hon. Member whose name has been announced wishes to withdraw his candidacy, he has the right to do so now by rising in his place to indicate that intention.

As there are no candidates who wish to withdraw, those who are eligible are those Members on the list that I have just read.

We will take a minute while the revised list is prepared and is put in the stations.

I do not need to explain the process again. The voting stations are now open.

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

• (2000)

Mr. Speaker: If there are any Hon. Members who have not voted and wish to do so, will they please vote now?

All Members having voted I do now instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of the ballots after I have cast my ballot.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: Order. The sitting is now suspended to the call of the bells which will again be a five-minute bell.

At 8.07 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 8.43 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that another ballot is necessary.

The names of those Members to be considered on the next ballot are as follows:

Danis, Marcel
Fraser, John
Lewis, Douglas
Nielsen, Erik
Paproski, Steven
Prud'homme, Marcel
Stackhouse, Reg

Any Hon. Member who wishes to advise the House of his desire to withdraw has the opportunity to do so now.

Order, please. Such being the case, we will proceed as before. The voting stations are open for the sixth ballot.

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

• (2100)

Mr. Speaker: If there are any Hon. Members who have not voted and who wish to do so, would they please vote now. I am about to close the ballot box.

All Members having voted I do now instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of the ballots after I have cast my ballot.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: The sitting is suspended to the ringing of the bells.

At 9.08 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 9.39 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that another ballot will be necessary.

The names of those Members who can be considered on the next ballot are as follows:

Danis, Marcel
Fraser, John
Lewis, Douglas
Paproski, Steven
Prud'homme, Marcel
Stackhouse, Reg

Do any of those Members whose names I have read wish to indicate their desire to withdraw? We will proceed then as before.

The ballots are ready. The colour is different. We will proceed as before. The voting stations for the seventh ballot are now open.

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

• (2200)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If any Hon. Members have not voted and wish to vote, please proceed to vote now. If there is anyone else to vote, vote now, please.

I do now instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of the ballots after I have cast my ballot.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: The sitting is suspended to the rining of the bell.

At 10.05 p.m., the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 10.35 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that another ballot will be necessary.

The names of those Members who will be considered on the next ballot are as follows:

Danis, Marcel
Fraser, John
Lewis, Douglas
Paproski, Steven
Prud'homme, Marcel

If any of those Members wish to withdraw, now is their opportunity to do so. We will therefore proceed to vote.

• (2250)

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

Mr. Speaker: If there are any hon. Members who have not voted and wish to do so, will they please vote now? This is the last time for calling on any hon. Members who wish to vote and have not done so.

Accordingly, all Members having voted, I do now instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of the ballots after I have cast my ballot.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: The House is suspended to the ringing of the bells.

At 11 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 11.27 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty to inform the House that another ballot will be necessary.

The names of those Members who can be considered on the next ballot are as follows:

Danis, Marcel
Fraser, John
Lewis, Douglas
Paproski, Steven

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not suppose there is any point in asking whether anyone wishes to withdraw. However, I am required by the rules to do so. Therefore, if there is any Member who wishes to withdraw, now is the time to so signify.

Order, please. We will proceed then as before.

The ballot box is now sealed. We will proceed with the ninth ballot.

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

• (2340)

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Any Members who have not yet voted should come and vote now if they wish to do so, please.

All Members having voted, I do now instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of the ballots after I have cast my ballot.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: The sitting is suspended to the ringing of the bells.

This will be a five minute bell.

At 11.49 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 12.10 a.m.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to advise the House that another ballot will be required. The Members eligible to be considered as candidates in alphabetical order are as follows:

Danis, Marcel
Fraser, John
Lewis, Douglas

• (0020)

I am required by the rules to ask if any of those Hon. Members whose names I have read to the House wish to indicate to the House his desire to withdraw. I suggest we proceed as before.

Order, please! The ballot box has been closed. The ballots are ready. We will proceed to the taking of the tenth ballot.

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

• (0040)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I encourage all Hon. Members who have not yet voted to cast their votes? Any Hon. Members who have not yet voted should vote now.

There being no further Hon. Members who are voting, I do now instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of the ballots.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: The sitting is suspended to the ringing of the bells.

At 12.42 a.m., the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 1.05 a.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty to inform the House that another ballot will be necessary. The names of those who will be considered on the next ballot are as follows:

Danis, Marcel
Fraser, John

Do either of the Hon. Members whose names I have just read wish to withdraw at this time? Accordingly we will proceed to the next ballot.

The box has been sealed. The ballots are ready. The eleventh ballot is now ready for voting.

Members were issued ballots, and marked their ballots in secret, at voting stations.

• (0120)

Mr. Speaker: May I ask that all Hon. Members who have not yet voted and who intend to do so, to please do so shortly.

Order, please. Before I instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of this ballot, since I suspect there will not be an opportunity later, whatever one thinks of the process, this has been a parliamentary day of enormous significance. Would you please join me in thanking the Clerk and his staff for what they have done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think it is also appropriate to point out that one of our Clerks is leaving us. The Province of Ontario has made an extraordinarily wise choice in their selection.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I would love to know what you are going to tell them about all of this.

I now instruct the Clerk to count the ballots once I have cast mine.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The sitting is suspended to the ringing of the bells.

At 1.30 a.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 1.48 a.m.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that John Fraser, Esquire, Member for the Electoral District of Vancouver South, has been duly elected Speaker of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It is now my privilege, honour and pleasure to invite the Hon. Member to take the Chair.

• (0200)

* * *

The Hon. John W. Bosley, having vacated the chair, and the Mace having been laid under the Table, conducted Mr. Fraser from his seat in the House to the chair.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members, let me begin by repeating most sincerely the first words traditionally uttered by a newly-elected Speaker: Hon. Members, I beg to return my humble acknowledgements to the House for the honour which you have been pleased to confer upon me by choosing me to be your Speaker.

[Translation]

Thank you for your confidence. On behalf of this House, I would also like to thank those Hon. Members who stood for election. Despite all that has been said of the difficulties and problems associated with the Chair, this election has shown that there are in our ranks very able Members who are ready to serve this House and this country.

[English]

Also, the House will allow me, I know, to express a special personal regard and thanks on behalf of all Hon. Members to our retiring Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: This has been a historic vote. For the first time, Members of the House of Commons have elected their Speaker by secret ballot. The process may have changed but one thing is still the same—the Speaker remains the servant of the House and receives his authority from the Hon. Members. The Speaker cannot serve the House without the good will and co-operation of all Members. This has always been a fact. Co-operation and good will will remain essential for all Members including members of the Cabinet and honourable leaders of opposition parties.

When I speak of good will and co-operation, I speak from my own experience. I sat in this House during 14 years as a private Member in the Opposition, as a Minister and as a Government backbencher. This experience will no doubt be useful in my new responsibilities as Speaker of this House.

[English]

The process for the choice of Speaker has changed. We hope that this reform means in a real way more participation by all Hon. Members of the House in the selection of the Speaker. As I say, the process of selection has changed but the necessity for the co-operation and good will of all Members remains.

I have been privileged to be a Member of this House for some years. Along with Hon. Members, I have witnessed this House at its best and sometimes at its worst. However, we are imperfect, at least at times, but the ideal must always be our objective and despite frustrations, sometimes anger and misunderstandings, we must together strive to do our best in the interests of this democratic institution which we cherish.

Hon. Members have been raised in the Canadian tradition of frankness and plain speaking and it is only natural that this tradition finds its expression in outspoken debate. This is not a Chamber for the timid. It is a place where strong opinion, strongly felt, should be heard, but it is also a place for clarity of thought, for tolerance of the views of others and for the most conscientious effort to act in the public interest even if that may not always accord with personal preference. This requires a forum in which each Hon. Member not only has the opportunity for full expression but also the responsibility to listen to the words of others. This demands a high degree of civility within a context of reasonable order. It requires respect for and adherence to the rules of the House, not because these rules have been imposed upon us but because we have agreed to conduct our proceedings by these rules. And it requires of your Speaker fairness, firmness and consistency and an understanding of the essential role of each Hon. Member to speak out on the matters of concern to our country. This demands the highest independence from pressure or bias recognizing as it does that your Speaker is the servant of this House.

It is appropriate to be reminded again of those historic words of the Speaker in 1642 when the King entered the House of Commons with an armed force and demanded that the Speaker reveal the whereabouts of some Members. The Speaker said: "May it please Your Majesty, I have neither eyes to see nor tongue to speak in this place, but as the House is pleased to direct me, whose servant I am".

[Translation]

I am your servant. I need your help in order to carry out my responsibilities. I promise to do everything I can to serve you well and I thank you for this privilege.

[English]

(And the Mace having been laid upon the Table:)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and I will take the liberty of saying a few words. We all hoped to say a few appropriate words tonight but, Mr. Speaker, we have had so little time to prepare.

Parliament, Mr. Speaker, has made history today, and you, Sir, are here as its principal witness.

• (0210)

Parliamentary reform has begun slowly to envelop this institution, making it and its Members stronger and more independent. In some measure all of us have failed Parliament these last few years. A democratic instrument requires respect to renew itself and to grow.

[Translation]

As a symbol of our democracy, you are entitled to preside over our debates which you have described as vigorous, Mr. Speaker, but in the spirit of tolerance and understanding which is essential if we do not want to distort all the basic rules of the game.

I congratulate you on your election and I offer you my loyal and respectful co-operation.

[English]

To guide our deliberations I am sure all Members will, with respect to you, Mr. Speaker, commit to begin again traditions of mutual respect and reasonable serenity, as best one can in a House of vigorous debate, in the interests of the House and in the interests of Canada.

Good luck, and may God bless you, Sir, and this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word about the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley).

[English]

I am happy to have this brief opportunity to express to all Members, on behalf of the Government, our appreciation of his courage and dignity and the good humour with which he discharged his onerous responsibilities. The role of Speaker is most vital in making Parliament work, and it was carried out by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) with rare dedication and energy.

May I say to the Member that in his letter to me he referred to the House being "in a crisis of our own making". You, sir, were right, and now we must make it right. You referred to your wish to effect parliamentary reform and to restore the spirit of respect by pressing ahead with the direct election of a Speaker. Throughout you have exhibited tolerance and understanding of the needs of this great institution, which all of us respect and appreciate.

[Translation]

Your loyalty to Parliament and its institutions, your acute sense of fairness and your conviction that the Speaker is above all the defender of the Members' rights and privileges will always be a source of inspiration for your successors. You have brought to this office, the most difficult of parliamentary responsibilities, a major element of courtesy and quickwittedness.

Today, Mr. Speaker, thanks to the Hon. Members, we are now going through a new stage in the reform of this noble institution in order to make it more sensitive to the wishes and expectations of the Hon. Members and of the people we represent.

[English]

To the Hon. Member for Don Valley West, and on behalf of all Hon. Members of the House, I take the liberty of extending the gratitude and good wishes of all Members of Parliament who know how difficult and how challenging is the Chair. We have not been easy; the last two years have not been easy.

May I, through you, Sir, as the new Speaker of the House, pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Don Valley West and say that we best renew the House by reviewing our own attitudes and by renewing our commitment to you, Sir, as the symbol of authority and respect, not only of the House, but of the values the House seeks to represent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what took us about 11 hours was a very worth-while experience indeed. For some of us it was an extremely difficult experience. It was the first time in my life that I ever voted for a Tory!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Not once but four times. May I begin, with Your Honour's indulgence, by thanking the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) for his devoted and unstinting service to the House of Commons. On the occasion preceding his resignation, I expressed my feelings to him. I also expressed what I thought about the circumstances surrounding that resignation, and I leave it there. However, I want to assure him that he carried our respect from this quarter of the House. We are very glad that he has decided to remain with us and to continue to make a contribution to the country and to the House as the Hon. Member for Don Valley West.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, it is my privilege to congratulate my neighbour, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, on being elected as first commoner. The people of Vancouver will be very proud. You, Sir, are held in enormous respect by the people of that city, of the lower mainland, and indeed of the entire province. There will be enormous goodwill flowing out to you upon your election as Speaker of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

I would also like to tell the Hon. Member for Verchères (Mr. Danis) that he keeps our respect as Deputy Speaker of the House. The struggle has been well fought and the result is above contestation. This has been a free vote expressed by all members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, you will allow me to express our affection for our friend the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). He proved himself very popular in the House and we congratulate him.

[English]

It has been an enormous tribute to you, Mr. Speaker, to be recognized by your peers in the House of Commons. We, elected by the people from every corner of our country, want to say that over the years you have earned the respect and affection of all Members of the House. It has been a remarkable personal comeback for you, and there must be a lot of deep emotion in your heart.

We were very encouraged by the excellent address which you gave us on assuming the chair. It gives us much confidence in your skill and the spirit in which you intend to preside over the House. I hope, Sir, you will have at least as long a term as it took to elect you!

We owe a good deal of thanks to Jim McGrath, the former Hon. Member for St. John's East, who reformed the rules. I do not think we can attribute the full scope of the procedure to Jim McGrath, because in his report he called for the name of each candidate in his or her order of standing to be announced after every vote. That would have shortened the proceedings. While we have had a very useful exercise here—and once launched upon that exercise some of us felt that we could not change it in mid-course—it would be useful for the House Leaders to assemble to see how we might in effect refine those rules.

• (0220)

[Translation]

This election of our Speaker in a free vote is an important step forward for our parliamentary democracy and all of us hope that it will also foster a greater decorum in this House. You have our trust to start with and I am confident that you will keep it. As you mentioned, Mr. Speaker, there will always be vigorous debate, very frank comments, direct questions and constructive criticism but we must demonstrate daily to Canadian men and women that we deserve their trust.

[English]

You know what we demand of you, Mr. Speaker. Perfection! We want fairness, independence, decisiveness, patience, common sense, good humour, upholding the traditions of the House, knowledge of the rules and an intuition for the changing mood and tone of the House as we move through our days.

From time to time you are going to have difficult moments. You have already mentioned that democracy can sometimes be rough. Question Period has received a lot of criticism and I noticed this travelling the country over the summer. I say on hotlines to the people that, yes, from time to time we can improve our behaviour here.

Looking over debates preceding Confederation, looking over the times of Macdonald and Laurier and the days when I first entered the House with Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Pearson, there were occasions when we were not too proud of ourselves. Now television has made it national theatre, but we have the freest Parliament in the world.

Every once in a while we will be a little excessive, lose our cool and put you to the test. But it is worth it. From time to time we will disagree with your decisions but you will always have our support from this corner of the House, that I can assure you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I wish you well, Sir. We are very proud of your election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I also have two confessions to make tonight. First, my father was a Conservative. And second, for the first time in my life I have voted for a Conservative and not only once but eleven times. It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that I did not say for which Conservative I did vote. I would also like to say sincerely that my colleagues and I intend to co-operate fully in the future. Please receive our congratulations and the assurance of our full co-operation in the House. We sincerely wish you well.

[English]

At the same time I want to add very briefly at this late hour a few words that have been said about the necessity of maintaining in this House a vigorous debate, the full and frank expression of ideas as you, Sir, have indicated are an integral part of this democratic Chamber. Like others I wish to add another point to this reiteration of the need for vigorous debate by saying that we too need to bring back to the Chamber a higher degree of civility than perhaps was demonstrated from time to time in the past two years. It will no doubt make your job easier, and ultimately make a greater contribution to the democratic process of this country which we all love so deeply if all of us on both sides of this House begin, Sir, with your new responsibilities by exercising greater responsibility ourselves.

I want now to say a couple of words to our friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley). There have been times when we on this side, as on the other side, have not always agreed with the rulings of the Hon. Member for Don Valley West when he was performing his important task as Speaker of this House. But I do say that none of my colleagues, and I am sure none of us on either side of the House, at any time had anything other than the fullest of respect for the principal commitment to the office of the Speaker of the House that the Hon. Member for Don Valley West demonstrated at all times.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to conclude by wishing the Hon. Member for Don Valley West well. It will be the last time in this kind of surrounding that we as partisan politicians can do that. He is about to rejoin the real world of politics and we will have other opinions no doubt to express. But tonight—at 2.30 in the morning—on behalf of everyone we wish him well in his future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Honourable Members—

[Translation]

—I would like to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for his very kind words—

[English]

—the Right Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), on behalf of his Party which he leads so well in this House.

I think I should first say thank you to the Prime Minister. It was the initiative and the support of the Prime Minister that made sure this new form in which we have engaged tonight took place. While supported by Members of all parts of the House and all Parties I think it is significant that under the direction of the Prime Minister this historic event took place, and took place yesterday and this morning, even if the retiring Speaker chose not to see the clock.

I would like to say also to the Right Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, not just as a neighbor but as a friend of long standing that I appreciate his kind comments. I know that the electors who have supported me in Vancouver South, some of whom have worked for me in Vancouver South and who live in the riding of the Right Hon. Member will endorse the very kind things that he had to say.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I also want to thank the Hon. Member for Oshawa for his comments, especially his revelation which indicates to me that there indeed has been reason these many years for the high regard in which I hold him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

OPENING OF SESSION

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Governor General's Secretary announcing that Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada would proceed to the Senate Chamber at three o'clock on Wednesday, October 1, 1986, for the purpose of formally opening the second session of the Thirty-Third Parliament.

Therefore, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at three o'clock p.m. at which time the House will proceed to the Senate where Her Excellency will open the second session of the Thirty-third Parliament.

The House adjourned at 2.30 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 1, 1986

The House met at 3 p.m.

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, Her Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned to the Commons Chamber:

* * *

• (1610)

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when this House did attend Her Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, Her Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of Parliament. To prevent mistakes I have obtained a copy which is as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, Honourable Members of the Senate,
Ladies and gentlemen, Members of the House of Commons:

It is with pleasure that I welcome you to the Second Session of the thirty-third Parliament of Canada and express to you, on behalf of all our fellow-Canadians, my appreciation and gratitude for the work which you do here. It is you, above all others, who make our Parliamentary system work, and you who are responsible for ensuring the smooth operation of an institution which is essential to the welfare of Canadians and the unimpeded enjoyment of our freedoms.

Expo '86 has been a focus of international attention that has brought pride and joy to millions of Canadians. The success of British Columbia's world exposition strikingly demonstrates the creative skills of our people.

I have had the honour of presenting my respects, and yours, to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth on the occasion of her sixtieth birthday. At this time I conveyed to her Canada's feelings of loyalty. The warm affection accorded their Royal Highnesses, the Prince and Princess of Wales—so evident during their visit to Expo '86—again reminds us of the vitality of the monarchy and its enduring contribution to Canadian life. I have also had the opportunity to be present at the marriage of Their Royal Highnesses, the Duke and Duchess of York, and to receive here the visit of Her Majesty the Queen Mother, who once again charmed us with her intelligence and her amazing vitality. You may rest assured that I have, on these memorable occasions, given renewed expression to the respect which we all feel.

Two years ago, my government received a national mandate—a mandate for reform. It was a mandate that summoned Canada to the tasks of national reconciliation, economic renewal, social justice, and to a constructive internationalism. Today, my Ministers believe these goals are within reach.

We live today in a world of increasing uncertainty and interdependence. We live in a world where unforeseen events, both at home and abroad, demand flexibility and adaptiveness.

Although my government will remain sensitive to changing circumstances, it is determined to pursue these national objectives in the confidence that their fulfillment will bring lasting benefit to all Canadians.

Canadian agriculture is a vital part of our national economy. Aware of the present difficulties, my government will work in close consultation with provincial governments and farm organizations to help alleviate personal hardship in our farm communities.

The Government has already taken special steps to lower farm input costs, improve stabilization programs, and help farmers in financial difficulty.

In the past, regrettably, agriculture has not been a priority in international trade negotiations. My government placed this issue on the agenda of the Economic Summit in Tokyo, and helped secure unanimous agreement to address subsidies in the new round of the Multilateral Trade Negotiations.

In meeting its commitment to Canadian agriculture, my government will spare no effort in seeking to protect the interests of Canada's farming community in the face of unfair pricing and subsidy practices conducted beyond our borders.

My government has acted to enhance the effective operation of Canada's energy industry, by negotiating the Western, the Atlantic, and the Nova Scotia accords and by taking other strong measures to support activity in a period of depressed world prices. Close cooperation with the producing provinces and the energy industry is a foremost objective of my Ministers as efforts continue to sustain Canada's energy prospects through this difficult period. These efforts are consistent with the true meaning and spirit of national unity.

Despite current difficulties, encouraging progress has been made towards renewing and strengthening the national economy. Unemployment is at its lowest level in over four years. Average incomes of Canadian families rose in real terms in 1985 for the first time in five years. The federal deficit has declined for the first time in six years. The prime rate is the lowest it has been in eight years. And government program spending has significantly declined for the first time in forty years. These economic indicators are encouraging.

Our efforts are meeting with encouraging success. The challenge now is to forge ahead. My government will do so by remaining true to the course set in the past two years. My government will continue its policy of prudent fiscal and financial management and will seek practical ways to encourage self-reliance and provide individual Canadians the incentive and opportunity to achieve greater security and well-being for themselves and for their families.

National Reconciliation

My government's commitment to national reconciliation invites all Canadians to participate fully and actively in the development of their country.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and the Constitution remain incomplete without the assent of Quebec. My Ministers have begun consultations with the provinces on this important subject. Should there appear reasonable prospects for agreement, formal negotiations will proceed in the expectation that Quebec will take its rightful place as a full partner in the Canadian Constitution.

The question of aboriginal rights is still on the constitutional agenda as a result of the Accord signed with the provinces in 1983. Pursuant to that agreement, a First Ministers Conference on aboriginal constitutional affairs will be convened. This will be the third and last such conference provided for in the 1983 Accord. In cooperation with the provinces, my government will exert every possible effort to bring these discussions to a successful conclusion.

Official bilingualism is an indispensable feature of our national character. Seventeen years after its enactment, Canada's Official Languages Act now needs to be revised. Appropriate legislation will be introduced in this Session to ensure, as well, that this Act conforms with the Canadian Charter of Rights.

My Ministers will propose amendments concerning the objectives and powers of the National Capital Commission. It is their intent to give greater expression and meaning to our national symbols.

Canada's National Parks represent a heritage of great importance to the present and future generations. My government will ask Parliament to approve major reforms to the National Parks Act for the first time since the original Act was passed, over five decades ago.

The preservation of historic properties is important to fostering a sense of history and national identity among Canadians. The government of Canada, as the largest owner of heritage sites and properties in the country, will assume a leadership role in their restoration and preservation.

Economic Renewal

Canada's program of economic renewal has as its goal the building of a national economy equipped to compete in an environment of intense global competition, changing markets, and new technologies. Economic renewal will be furthered by continued progress in restoring health to our public finances, by trade initiatives and by tax reform.

My government has committed itself to four principles in its quest to restore fiscal health to Canada. First, to reduce the growth in the national debt to less than the growth in the economy by the end of this decade. Second, to achieve continuing, sizeable, year-over-year reductions in the deficit. Third, to ensure substantial annual declines in the government's financial requirements. And fourth, to ensure that the greater part of this progress is secured through effective expenditure restraint.

Success in this quest will foster a climate of investor and consumer confidence that will continue to support lower inflation, lower interest rates, higher growth and more job opportunities for Canadians.

If Canada is to achieve an enduring economic recovery, government must also ensure that our country's interests are secured and enhanced in the international sphere.

Nearly one third of our economy depends on international markets. Our future is trade. That is why my government is seeking to open and secure new markets for Canada everywhere in the world. These efforts include bilateral talks with the United States and multilateral negotiations under the auspices of the GATT.

My government intends to improve Canada's status as a trading nation among our major partners. Particular emphasis will be placed upon trade with Japan and other Pacific Rim countries.

Trade promotion, however vigorous, cannot succeed if world markets important to Canadian exporters are threatened by increased protectionism.

Such pressures emphasize the importance of my government's pursuit of a mutually advantageous trade agreement with the United States. These talks are being accompanied by extensive consultations with the provinces, business and labour. Successful negotiations will strengthen both our economy and our capacity to reinforce our culture, our sovereignty, our commitment to regional development and the fundamental purposes of Canadian social policy.

Progress has already been made towards my government's objective of comprehensive tax reform. We have begun to restructure the corporate tax system. Equity in the personal income field has been enhanced through the introduction of the minimum tax. A refundable Sales Tax Credit has been introduced. Opportunities for tax avoidance have been curtailed.

In my government's further consideration of tax reform, fairness will be a guiding principle. The objectives of reform will be to lower tax rates and to reduce reliance upon personal income tax by improving the revenue balance between personal income and other taxes. A simpler and more comprehensible tax system would also be welcomed by all Canadians.

During this session, you will be asked to consider new initiatives to strengthen the competitiveness of the private sector.

To help remove obstacles to economic growth, my Ministers will continue to reduce the burden of paperwork and regulation, to advance the process of privatization of Crown Corporations, and to press for the removal of barriers to interprovincial trade.

My Ministers will introduce programs to promote small business and entrepreneurial values. Included will be measures to improve procurement procedures, to strengthen the unsolicited proposals program for small companies and entrepreneurs, to increase technology transfer from government laboratories, and to develop new initiatives to promote entrepreneurship among youth.

My government will again be placing before Parliament measures to give Canadians a more efficient, competitive and safe transport system by relieving the burden of unnecessary regulations on the transportation sector.

My government will propose a new regulatory framework for the financial services industry that will promote competition, efficiency, and international competitiveness, while strengthening consumer protection.

For many years, successive governments have sought to provide measures intended to promote regional development. Their efforts have not been as effective as hoped. Regional disparity remains an unacceptable reality of Canadian life. Our experience has shown that spending more money, by itself, has not solved the problem.

It is time to consider new approaches, to examine how our considerable and growing support for Canada's regions can be used more efficiently, more effectively and with greater sensitivity to local conditions and opportunities. In renewing their efforts to come to grips with this longstanding problem, my Ministers are convinced many positive proposals for new policy initiatives will come from those who live and work in the regions concerned.

Building on the human and natural resource strengths of the regions, a renewed cooperative effort will lead to a new development agenda. Special emphasis will be given to diversifying the economic base of Western Canada.

As a first step in achieving improved results from this sustained national approach, an Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be constituted to facilitate and coordinate all federal development initiatives in the area. This agency will make fuller use of the expertise available in the Atlantic region and invite the maximum participation of other governments and organizations in the area.

My government is concerned about the increasing concentration of corporations, particularly where takeovers serve to increase corporate size without creating new jobs or stimulating economic growth in Canada. Some aspects of this essentially non-productive activity will be examined and considered by Members of this House.

The importance of the fishing industry to Canada is fundamental. To provide increased safety for our fishermen and to protect their material investments, my government will place special emphasis on improving the management of small craft harbours in all fishing areas.

The forest sector is Canada's largest net export earner. My Ministers have substantially increased funding for forestry renewal. The government will continue to work in close partnership with the provinces, industry, and private woodlot owners to ensure that Canada's rich forest heritage continues as a vital source of wealth and jobs for future generations.

Measures will be introduced to strengthen Canada's cooperatives and to give recognition to their role in community development.

My government is deeply committed to supporting, with the provinces, a system of post-secondary education based on excellence and equality of opportunity. To help meet the challenges facing higher education, my government will propose a national forum on post-secondary education, to be held early next year.

My Ministers have begun to forge a partnership with the provinces, with the scientific and educational communities, and with business and labour in an effort to stimulate increased technological development in Canada. To assist and encourage cooperation between the universities and private sector in research and development, my government has announced an initiative that could provide a billion dollars in new funding for scientific research over the next five years.

My government will build upon this partnership by introducing a new four-point program to ensure that support for science, technology and education is more clearly focused in the national interest.

First, my government will appoint a National Advisory Board for Industrial Technology, chaired by the Prime Minister and composed of some of Canada's leading industrialists and scientists. This committee will assess national science and technology goals and policies, and their application to Canada's economy. Second, in full cooperation with the provinces, my government will seek to achieve high standards of excellence in education, technology development, and innovation. Third, it will introduce a new Federal Science and Technology Strategy, building on the initiatives undertaken to date. The strategy will introduce the necessary reforms within the federal administration to encourage Canada's international competitiveness. Fourth, my government will convene a National Conference on Technology and Innovation to assist Canada to define new technology goals.

My government's commitment to high technology as a motive force in Canada's economic growth will be expressed in legislation to establish a Canadian space agency. International cooperation in the peaceful use of space is essential to the development of key technologies. Working in cooperation with industry, universities and provinces, the new agency will help to ensure that the benefits of Canada's role in space will be shared by all Canadians.

Constructive Internationalism

The people of Canada maintain a deep interest in their country's role in the world. As Honourable Members of the Special Joint Committee of this Parliament know, Canadians seek a confident, constructive, active internationalism that reflects our hopes for the world as well as our own vital national interests.

From my own travels, and those of my Ministers, I can attest that other countries, large and small, look to Canada to play a vital role in the international community. Over the past year, I have travelled to Italy and the Vatican, while the Prime Minister has represented my government at the Commonwealth Conference, at the 40th Anniversary of the United Nations, the Francophone Summit, the Tokyo Summit, and in visits to France, Japan, China, South Korea, and the United States.

Our support for the multilateral institutions and agencies of which we are members remains the cornerstone of our foreign policy.

With Her Majesty the Queen as its head and unifying presence, the Commonwealth brings together countries of the North and South in support of common ideals and aspirations. The Commonwealth is central to Canada's efforts to promote, through concerted international action, a process of political dialogue in South Africa aimed at establishing representative government. My government will continue this effort, through the Commonwealth and the United Nations, until apartheid is abolished.

The world is aware how spontaneously the Canadian people rallied to the challenge of African famine and relief, demonstrating a concern and compassion so much a part of the national character. As Canadians, we will be called upon to respond to other challenges in the Third World. In reaffirming our commitments, it will be our purpose to find new partners in the ongoing efforts to pursue opportunities for increased development.

No task is more important to Canadians than preserving world peace and security. My government is encouraged by the prospects for renewed dialogue between the leaders of the United States and the Soviet Union. We share the hope of other nations of the world that progress towards these talks will be sustained and appreciable.

Arms control and disarmament are essential elements of Canadian policy. We are in the forefront of multilateral discussions concerning conventional arms control and confidence-building in Europe. In the nuclear field, both the verification of existing agreements and the conclusion of new accords are vital elements in Canada's efforts. As a further step towards these objectives, my government will host this month an international symposium that will explore means of improving verification techniques.

My government recognizes that security is the surest safeguard of liberty. Accordingly, my government has taken steps to modernize and renew the strength of our Armed Forces and increase our NATO contingent in Western Europe.

The Government asserts complete sovereignty over the Canadian Arctic and recognizes that sovereignty requires a vigorous national presence. My government has drawn straight baselines around the perimeter of the Arctic archipelago to preserve Canadian sovereignty over the land, sea, and ice of the Canadian Arctic. Canada will construct one of the most powerful icebreakers in the world to enhance our sovereign rights and to contribute to the development of the North.

Other measures have been taken or will be initiated to support this vital national purpose, including more research on polar conditions, defence training exercises in the Arctic, and the establishment of a National Park at Ellesmere Island.

Social Justice

A dynamic and changing society poses new challenges for social policy. Existing programs are not always wholly successful in meeting their objectives. They must be reviewed to ensure they are appropriate to today's circumstances and they must be strengthened where necessary. At the same time, new circumstances require the development of new programs.

My Ministers are well aware that social policy concerns are more satisfactorily met in a strong and growing economy that, in turn, requires steady progress in restoring fiscal health to our nation's finances. But fiscal responsibility is fully compatible with social responsibility.

My government will continue to enlist the support of all in pursuit of the common goal: a modern, tolerant, and caring nation in which its citizens are secure and prosperous.

Canadians would want their governments to give the highest priority in social policy to those who are in greatest need. As well, Canadians expect to enjoy the highest quality in health care and other social benefits that have become fundamental to our national quality of life.

My government is resolved to defend and strengthen the institution of the Canadian family.

Only now is our society beginning its effort to adjust to the evolving changes in family relationships and responsibilities, particularly concerning working parents. My government recognizes that adequate, quality child care must become available. Following the report of your committee, my government will initiate discussions with the provinces, business and labour with a view to implementing a concerted approach to child care.

As a national priority, we must continue to remove the barriers that have prevented women from participating freely and equitably in the mainstream of Canadian society. My government regards the recent significant increase in appointments of women to the highest levels of the public service and to federal boards and commissions as only a first step towards full equality. My Ministers hope and expect the private sector will regard this progress as an example to follow. In its desire to further the advancement of women in government, my Ministers will continue their efforts to correct inequitable wage rates in the public service.

My government will take effective action against child sexual abuse, violent forms of pornography involving women and children, child prostitution, and the grave and growing threat posed by the traffic in illegal drugs.

A national drug strategy and a comprehensive program dealing with impaired drivers will be brought forward to support the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse. My government will continue to provide domestic and international leadership in controlling drug abuse in amateur sport.

Reforms to the Criminal Code will be continued during this session of Parliament, reflecting the importance Canadians attach to such values as respect for the law and the protection of innocent citizens.

Measures will also be put before you designed to protect and assist victims of criminal violence. Further action will be proposed to assist in finding missing children.

Canadians are becoming increasingly aware of the suffering of battered women. This intolerable affront to human dignity and personal security compels my government's commitment to work with the provinces to implement on an urgent basis the most effective means and methods of action.

After a decade of debate, an historic agreement with the provinces has been reached that will improve benefits under the Canada Pension Plan, beginning on January 1, 1987. It will also put the plan on a sound financial footing for the future.

The federal Pension Benefits Standards Act, which sets standards that employer-sponsored pension plans must meet, has also been completely revised. The changes introduced will be of fundamental significance for wage earners, especially women in the labour force, and for the spouses of pension plan members.

The introduction of the new Canadian Jobs Strategy, which for the first time sets targets for women's participation, has helped women, particularly immigrant women, and the unemployed in their search for lasting and productive employment.

My government is encouraged by the decline in youth unemployment. However, much remains to be done. My Ministers are committed to federal-provincial and private sector cooperative action that will enhance job opportunities and encourage greater participation and involvement of young Canadians in productive and challenging initiatives.

Canadians recognize the courage and talent of our disabled citizens. Inspired by the example of Rick Hansen, we are made more aware of the potential for new directions and initiatives to aid the disabled.

My government will work with the provinces, the private sector and voluntary organizations to develop measures to ensure that Canadians have access to the literacy skills that are the prerequisites for participation in an advanced economy.

Ongoing improvements have also been made in assuring greater income security for the elderly. All widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 are now eligible to receive Spouses' Allowance Benefits. A new program of Older Worker Adjustment is also being negotiated with the provinces. The Government will introduce legislation to increase tax assistance for retirement savings through Registered Retirement Savings Plans. The object will be to make access to tax assistance fairer between employees and the self-employed, and to increase the flexibility of options for the use of Registered Retirement Savings Plan savings by senior citizens.

In a spirit of deep respect and appreciation, my government will continue to address the needs of Canada's veterans. The Veterans Independence Program will be broadened to allow a greater number of First World War veterans to qualify immediately for the benefits designed to enable them to remain independent in their own homes rather than be compelled to accept institutional care. New legislation will also be introduced to streamline the pension process to provide faster, more efficient service to veterans.

In acknowledging the tens of thousands of Canadians who serve their communities and country as volunteers, my Ministers will propose further support to encourage the growth of voluntarism in our society.

Canada's amateur athletes instill pride in our country and achieve excellence in international competition. My government renews its commitment to the increased participation of young Canadian men and women in a wide variety of athletic endeavours, including the 1988 Winter Olympics that Canada will host in Calgary.

It is imperative that Canada's multicultural and multiracial reality be integral to all facets of our national life to reflect the vital and distinctive nature of Canadian society.

To that end, my government will: encourage the entrepreneurial spirit that characterizes our many minority communities and that contributes so essentially to Canada's economic development; extend recognition to minority community organizations in our society and increase equitable participation in appointments to federal boards and agencies; and affirm that any existing remnants of institutional barriers that limit opportunities for visible minorities or other groups or individuals are dismantled.

My government will continue to assert a positive leadership role in opposing racism and discrimination, in whatever form. It will continue to resist injustices imposed upon any ethnic, religious, or racial group in the knowledge that to do otherwise would diminish this nation's profound commitment to universal tolerance and human dignity.

Honourable Members: you will be asked to consider amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act, which will represent further progress in the long march of this nation towards full equality.

My government will propose comprehensive legislation designed to simplify and improve Canada's refugee determination process. These reforms will produce a system which is both fair and effective. It will assist genuine refugees in need of protection and discourage abuse of Canada's humanitarian tradition.

My government recognizes fully the essential relationship between a healthy environment and the quality of Canadian life. A new Environmental Protection Act will be introduced to improve my government's capacity, in concert with the provinces, to deal effectively with pollution, focusing on toxic chemicals. You will also be asked to consider measures to improve water quality in Canada and to safeguard citizens from the hazards of chemicals in our society.

My government remains determined to pursue with the United States the rapid implementation of the recommendations of our Special Envoys with respect to acid rain.

Following the recommendations of an industry-labour-government task force, my government will propose legislation to establish a Workplace Hazardous Materials Information System.

My government has begun to renew our economy and society for the benefit of all Canadians. It has acted to strengthen our national sovereignty and to affirm our independence. But there remains much more to be done.

Each generation of Canadians has risen to the challenges of nation-building. Today's generation confronts its own challenges: we must act now to ensure that the ties which bind us together as Canadians remain strong, in our national cultural institutions, in our sense of community and in our pride as a nation.

Whether through railways in the last century, or broadcasting in this century, Canadians have responded to the task of building one nation across a massive continent. Throughout our history, Canadians have acquired credentials as peacekeepers, as entrepreneurs, as innovators.

Today the new challenge is to assert our interests in a world that is intimate, competitive, and driven by rapid technological change.

Your challenge, in this Parliament, is to apply those Canadian qualities with the same vision and the same commitment that created a nation from a wilderness. The new challenge is to open up new horizons for Canadians—those to be reached through knowledge and information.

In this new environment, we must ensure that all Canadians can pursue their own dreams and expand their own opportunities through greater use of information and knowledge about one another and the world beyond.

To begin debate on this fundamental challenge, my government will define its objectives and ways to achieve them.

It will be essential to ensure that the ideas and information which flow through a modern national communications system reflect the distinct cultural values of the Canadian people. For this reason, the government will act to strengthen the Canadian broadcasting system and renew our commitment to Canadian cultural values.

To a considerable degree, our sense of national purpose, our national identity, and our economic prosperity will depend on our capacity to respond to the opportunities which flow from this new information age.

Our dual linguistic heritage and unique history situate Canada within two great communities of nations, the Commonwealth and la Francophonie. Canada is thus positioned to reaffirm its role in the world by developing joint projects with member countries of these two vast families of nations, to share with them Canadian communications and information technologies while bringing to Canadians a greater diversity of ideas and cultural expressions.

By so doing, Canada will renew in innovative ways its commitment to an established institution, the Commonwealth, and contribute actively to the emergence of a new one, la Francophonie.

The great tasks to which you are committed in this Parliament are national in character. The important reforms you will have considered and adopted give to each the opportunity to make a valued, individual contribution to the legislative process.

Your deliberations must address the aspirations of all Canadians and reflect their pride and confidence in the enduring strengths of the political institutions they believe to be the guarantors of freedom and security, and the guardians of the nation's future.

My government shares the expectations of all Canadians that public office holders maintain the highest standards of conduct, especially in the area of conflict of interest. It will be considering proposals which reflect the essential considerations of fairness to the office holder and the protection of the public's interest.

Members of the House of Commons:

I think with pleasure of the determination you will display as you embark on the program of work prepared by my government, and of the good use you will make of your skill and experience. I shall follow your debates with interest. I am assured that this new session will mark a further stage in the growth and flowering of our life as a nation.

You will be asked to appropriate the funds required to carry on the services and expenditures authorized by Parliament.

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons:

You will be asked to consider legislation to advance the economic, social and international interests of Canadians.

In pursuit of these worthy objectives, may Divine Providence guide your efforts.

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move that the speech of Her Excellency the Governor General, delivered this day from the throne to the two Houses of Parliament, be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the House.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[English]

VACANCIES

ST. JOHN'S EAST—HON. JAMES A. MCGRATH, BY RESIGNATION

HAMILTON MOUNTAIN—IAN DEANS, BY RESIGNATION

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, the Hon. James A. McGrath, Esq., Member for the Electoral District of St. John's East, by resignation.

Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new Writ of Election for the said Electoral District.

Also, I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received from two Members notifying the Chief Electoral Officer, in accordance with chapter H-9 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, that the following vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, Ian Deans, Esq., Member for the Electoral District of Hamilton Mountain, by resignation.

Accordingly, a new Writ of Election has been issued.

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSIONERS

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister) presented the following message from Her Excellency the Governor General:

I have the honour to inform the House that the Hon. Don Mazankowski and the Hon. Robert de Cotret have been appointed by the Governor in Council as members of the Board of Internal Economy for the purposes and under the provisions of Chapter 39 of the Statutes of Canada, 1985, entitled: An Act to amend the House of Commons Act.

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That Mr. Marcel Danis, Member for the electoral district of Verchères, continue to perform the duties of Deputy Speaker of the House and Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski):

That Hon. Steven Paproski, Member for the Electoral District of Edmonton North, be appointed Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY CHAIRPERSON OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That Mrs. Andrée Champagne, Member for the electoral district of Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot, be appointed Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

● (1620)

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski):

That this House at its next sitting consider the business of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 3(1), this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

On motion of Mr. Mazankowksi, the House adjourned at 4.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 2, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSIONER

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that Nelson Riis, Esquire, Member for the Electoral District of Kamloops—Shuswap, has been appointed as a Member of the Board of Internal Economy for the purposes and under the provisions of Chapter 39 of the Statutes of Canada, 1985, entitled: An Act to amend the House of Commons Act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to lay upon the Table, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(1), Notices of Ways and Means Motions, and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(2) I ask, Mr. Speaker, that you designate an Order of the Day for the consideration of the Ways and Means Motions to amend the Income Tax Act pertaining to the pre-payment of the child tax credit and the Ways and Means Motions to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

* * *

[Translation]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government response to the last 214 petitions presented during the first session: 331-551, 331-553, 331-554, 331-557, 331-560, 331-562, 331-584, 331-588 to 331-593 inclusive, 331-603 to 331-611 inclusive, 331-614, 331-615, 331-619, 331-622, 331-624 to 331-640 inclusive, 331-642 to 331-706 inclusive, 331-709, 331-711 to 331-738 inclusive, 331-740 to 331-748 inclusive, and 331-750 to 331-817 inclusive.

* * *

[English]

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF NINTH REPORT OF THE CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House the Ninth Report, in both official languages, of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association prepared by the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King).

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions with the House Leaders of the other two Parties with respect to the proceedings for tomorrow and I think that you would find that there would be unanimous agreement to the following:

> That on Friday, October 3, 1986, the House shall continue to sit between 1 p.m. and 2 o'clock p.m. for the purpose of continuing the debate on the Address in Reply to Her Excellency's Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party certainly agree with this provision in the spirit of providing for more comprehensive and cohesive speeches from our three Leaders.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would confirm that there has been negotiations and we agree.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. It is the please of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Carried and so ordered.

• (1110)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MRS. MARY COLLINS AND SECONDED BY MR. ALBERT GIRARD

The House proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by Her Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I have the great honour to move the motion on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. First I should like to pay my deepest respects to Her Excellency the Governor General, the Right Hon. Jeanne Sauvé, and to congratulate you for having been elected Speaker of the House of Commons. All our fellow Canadians in British Columbia are particulaly honoured by the fact that you were chosen by your peers to assume this heavy responsibility. We are very proud indeed that you should be the first representative of our province to hold this prestigious position.

Over the coming months it will be your duty to ensure respect for the rules and traditions of this House. You will also be expected to make sure that Hon. Members so conduct the nation's business as to make Canadians proud of this institution. I know that all Members of my Party intend to give you their full support in the discharge of your duties, and I should hope that all Members of the House share this commitment.

[English]

Before I comment on the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, I should like to acknowledge my British Columbia roots. As a Canadian and as a native of British Columbia, this summer has filled me with a sense of pride and accomplishment, unequalled since 1967. This summer we threw a party called "Expo 86". The whole world came and is still coming in record numbers. We have showcased more than transportation and communications at Expo; we have showcased Canada, and the world loves it. In record numbers people of the world have concluded what we have known all along—this country is the best in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: Our people, our resources, our spirit, and our achievements are second to none. I am sure that all Hon. Members of the House join with me in saying to all involved in the Expo 86 success: "good job, well done, merci bien".

Today I am especially pleased and wish to acknowledge the honour extended to the residents of Capilano and of British Columbia by the invitation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to me to move the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The last time a British Columbia Member was so honoured was in 1896—90 years ago. At that time the Hon. Member for Nanaimo, Mr. McInnes, complained that while British Columbia contributed $2 million annually to the Dominion Treasury, on average the largest amount the province had ever received back to cover all public expenditures was $1.2 million. He said he hoped that the selection of a Member from British Columbia to open the Throne Speech debate was evidence that "at last we have a Government in power in this country that recognizes the importance of, and is prepared to pursue a policy of, generous treatment toward that great far West".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mrs. Collins: The more things change, the more they remain the same.

[English]

These comments parallel the message of the Speech from the Throne and my comments today in that we want to see all regions, all corners of the country, and all Canadians share in this nation's prosperity.

Canada will only be as strong as its most far-reaching parts. One of the greatest challenges of our Government is to ensure that it has in place policies and programs which will be fair and provide opportunities to all Canadians, whether they live in downtown Toronto or in far distant Tuktoyaktuk, whether their home is in Come-by-Chance, Newfoundland or in Ucluelet on Vancouver Island.

Almost two years ago, on November 5, 1984, the Government of Canada set forth in a Speech from the Throne a new agenda for our country. It was an agenda which called, very simply, for a new beginning. Just two months prior, Canadians, through the expression of their democratic rights, had overwhelmingly endorsed such an agenda. Canadians wanted a fresh start. They were tired of confrontation. They were scarred by recession. They were hurt by unemployment, high interest rates, and inflation. They knew fundamentally that there was nothing wrong with them or their country. What was needed was new management, different ideas and approaches, new solutions, and a new beginning.

In that speech the Government committed itself to a new beginning in four broad areas of our national life—economic renewal, national reconciliation, constructive internationalism, and social justice. In the two years since, progress has been made in all four areas, although much remains to be done. Yesterday Canadians heard that their Government is committed to finishing the job it started, to making good its pledge of a new beginning.

Today I want to talk about the fundamentals of our agenda, fundamentals which are essential to our vision of Canada as a modern, tolerant, caring nation whose citizens are secure and prosperous. Let me start with economic renewal. On November 5, 1984, we made it our No. 1 priority. Our objective that all Canadians can lead prosperous productive lives requires that they have the opportunity for employment. Over half a million people are working today who were not working two years ago, and more than 80 per cent of them are employed on a full-time basis. In British Columbia, 70,000 new jobs have been created since September, 1984. However, I know that these statistics are cold comfort for the man or woman, young or old, who seeks and yet cannot find a job.

While we are justly proud of the accomplishments of the past two years, we recognize that the job is not finished and that our attention must continue to focus on five essential components required to achieve economic renewal and to meet our objective. The first of these is management of Government itself. We are showing Canadians, for the first time in many years, that it is possible to manage Government effectively and efficiently and to bring government expenditures under control. In fact, last year total government program spending was down for the first time in 40 years. The deficit has declined for the first time in six years, primarily through reductions in expenditures. By 1990 the deficit will be $26.7 billion less than it would have been had the Government not acted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: I will use an analogy. We have taken a ship which was floundering out of control and, with a great deal of effort and some sacrifice, we have turned it around and set it on a course straight and true. However, having instituted these measures internally, what else needs to be done to stimulate growth and job creation in the country?

Our philosophy as a Government has been that our role should be primarily to encourage and make it worth while for individual Canadians to make investments and to create new businesses and jobs. Critical to the success of this approach are consistently low interest rates, which are now at their lowest level since 1978. This means that Canadians are now able to take the risk of borrowing money to make new investments. These low interest rates have also been a tremendous spur to the building industry. Instead of walking away from their homes, as so many Canadian families were forced to do only a few short years ago, Canadians are now building and buying homes at a near record pace. The payment which a Canadian family makes today on a $50,000 mortgage is $108 less per month than it would have been two years ago.

Twinned with low interest rates is the need to keep inflation under control. Inflation, if rampant, can rob Canadians of their buying power and adversely affect consumer demand. It also threatens the retirement savings of hundreds of thousands of our elderly citizens. Under this Government, inflation has been holding steady at about 4 per cent for the past two years, a rate not seen since 1971 and almost unimaginable a few short years ago.

• (1120)

In encouraging an environment for investment and expansion we have already and will continue to address a second issue, that of government regulation and its direct involvement in the market-place. We have determined that the Government no longer needs to own or operate companies which do not play an important public policy role and could be operated just as well by the private sector. We have already had success in selling de Havilland, Canadair and Canadian Arsenals. I know we will continue to examine other Crown corporations to see if, when and how they can be divested from government ownership.

Proliferating government regulation has frustrated individual Canadians and businesses. I am delighted that we will be bringing forward measures to get rid of unecessary red tape and paperwork. We will also be providing new regulatory frameworks for the transportation and financial service industries, frameworks which ensure required protection for the public, but promote competition, efficiency and international competitiveness.

The third component of economic renewal is the taxation system and, as indicated in the Throne Speech, we will be implementing significant tax reforms which will result in a simpler, fairer and less burdensome system. Nobody likes paying taxes and yet we all recognize they are here to stay. What I think most Canadians desire is that the system is fair and that it is fairly administered. I know that we are all looking to the details of the initiatives of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in this area, and particularly welcome his commitment to shift the tax burden away from personal income tax.

Fourth, while we are putting in place measures to expand the economy, we recognize there continue to be disparities within the country, disparities which I mentioned earlier. Here is where Government must play a role to assist those regions, those communities that are now enduring difficult times.

Special programs in Atlantic Canada, recent initiatives in the west for our farmers and our energy industry are evidence of this Government's commitment and capability to deal with these difficult issues.

I am happy to see, to assist in British Columbia's development, that special attention will be given to the diversification of its economic base.

Government procurement too can be a tool to promote regional equity. An example of this would be the awarding of the contract for the Polar 8 Icebreaker reaffirmed in the Speech from the Throne to the West Coast. Construction of this ship would provide a significant boost to the economy of British Columbia and would have a major beneficial impact on the West Coast shipbuilding industry, the shipyard workers and their families. I am sure no one will be surprised, here or in Capilano, by my continuing commitment to, and call for, such a decision by the Government.

The fifth component of economic renewal is trade enhancement. Canada started out as a nation based on trade. Furs and metals were among our first commodities traded. Now 34 per cent of British Columbia's gross domestic product is exported. We anticipate and see the need to increase Canada's external trade. We recognize as well that we must work with the provinces to remove interprovincial barriers to trade. The negotiation of a new trade agreement with the United States would ensure access of Canadian goods and services to our largest market. This is vital to Canada and particularly to British Columbia. Only with such an agreement in place can we hope to avoid the protectionist intrusions which we now face as exemplified by the softwood lumber issue.

At the same time I am pleased to see the Government is committed to supporting the new multilateral trade negotiations under the auspices of GATT and will, as well, focus on expanding our trade in the Pacific Rim. As I know from my own experience and involvment in that region, there are many opportunities awaiting us in the export of everything from our resources to our special skills in engineering and municipal infrastructure, health care and education services. Joint ventures, special licensing agreements and trading companies must be established if we wish to compete in the growing markets of Japan and Korea, China and the ASEAN countries. The public and private sectors need to work effectively together to pursue aggressively and take advantage of these opportunities.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, time does not allow me to detail all our accomplishments and our future plans with respect to the other three aspects of our agenda. Let me just say that national reconciliation is happening. I have talked to politicians and senior government officials in various parts of the country who have confirmed that the attitude and atmosphere of federal-provincial relations have changed dramatically in just two years from confrontation to co-operation. That is not to say that we all necessarily agree with one another, but at least now there are regular consultations and forums, including the annual First Ministers' Conference which will be held next in Vancouver this November.

I know that some of our Ministers are in touch regularly with their provincial counterparts as we try to work together as a team to unite this country and make it work.

We can be rightly proud of our role on the international front, and particularly proud of the reputation the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have established in their visits abroad and to international organizations. Many Members of Parliament have had the opportunity of taking part in these visits and are aware of the high regard Canada is held in the international sphere. Perhaps the most recent example is our participation in the GATT meetings in Uruguay two weeks ago where many other countries' delegations acknowledged the outstanding contribution of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Canadian delegation in helping to move the multilateral trade negotiations forward. Our role in supporting the Commonwealth and La Francophonie gives us a tremendous opportunity to have a positive influence with many nations around the world as we work toward the elimination of terrorism, reduction in nuclear arms and the pursuit of peace.

Finally, I would like to touch on some of the highlights of our accomplishments and initiatives in the field of social justice. Fairness and equity must be the hallmark of any social justice system. Over the past two years I have personally enjoyed working on the legislative initiatives undertaken by this Government on employment equity; amendments to the Criminal Code to deal harshly with drinking and driving; a new and more humane Divorce Act; proposals to deal with child sexual abuse and pornography and actions to assist in finding missing children. These measures have been heartily welcomed across the land and particularly by women who see them as part of the measures needed to achieve equality and justice and eliminate the vestiges of discrimination which still linger in some corners of our country.

An issue which has always been of concern to me as a politician, but particularly as a parent, is the kind of future we are creating for our children. Family life is changing in our society. These changes in many cases create additional stress for parents and children alike. I am pleased to see that the Throne Speech recognizes these changes and we will develop policies and programs to meet the needs of the evolving and varied nature of the Canadian family.

I have always believed that as a society we must emphasize to our young people the importance of accepting responsibility for themselves and their lives as well as to others and their country. I believe we need to send clear messages to young Canadians about their responsibilities but, as well, alert them to the dangers of alcohol and drug abuse and the havoc they can create both for themselves and for their families.

The federal Government must be a partner in the development of opportunities for young Canadians to help them meet the challenge of the future.

Although we do not know the exact nature of our future, I think we do know that in the future the pace of change will continue to accelerate, technological advances will dramatically affect the way in which we conduct our lives and the information explosion will reveal to us new frontiers. We as Canadians must be ready to face the challenges of that future society and we must prepare our children by giving them the skills, the confidence and the spirit to survive and to stand tall in their communities and the world.

Our achievements of the past two years, our plans as set forward in the Throne Speech for the next two years all support that common goal I referred to earlier: Canada as a modern, tolerant, caring nation whose citizens are secure and prosperous. We as politicians and we as a Government must have the wisdom and the understanding of the people of Canada to lead us toward that goal.

• (1130)

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Girard), that the following address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

[Translation]

To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both House of Parliament.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the eloquent speech of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) and I have some questions for her which I would like to present at this time. I would like some clarification—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would point out to the Hon. Member that under these circumstances it is unusual to make a comment or ask a question. Will the Hon. Member very quickly consider whether or not he wishes to proceed?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask my question in the spirit of the Standing Orders. Tradition has it that we do not ask questions or make statements on an occasion such as this since the Member offering the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne is normally a new Member. I would point out that the Hon. Member is now an experienced Member. I hope that she will entertain some questions at this point in time. If she is not prepared to do so, then I am prepared to resume my seat.

Mr. Speaker: What I wished to convey to the House and to the Hon. Member is that it has not been the practice at this stage in these proceedings to ask questions. In view of that, does the Hon. Member wish to reconsider his request?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I sense that the mood of the House is that my question at this point in time would not be appropriate. However, I remind Members of the House that this is a unique opportunity in that this was not a traditional type of Speech from the Throne. However, in the spirit of the request I will sit down and save my question for another time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I most graciously thank the Hon. Member for his consideration of the spirit of this place. I notice that other Hon. Members are indicating that they have made their views more pointedly plain to the Hon. Member than have I.

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Members of this House I would like to congratulate you, Sir, on your election to the Chair. To add to this historic event the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) revealed that he voted four times for Tories. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said that he voted 11 times for Tories. He also mentioned that his father had been a Tory. Thus, Mr. Speaker, we have already witnessed the wonderful and positive effect that you have on these two gentlemen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Girard: May your magic, Sir, be applied to all Members of this House throughout your tenure as Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Girard: Today, Mr. Speaker, a great honour has been bestowed on the federal riding of Restigouche. This is the first time a Member for this riding has been given the privilege of seconding the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, and I am deeply moved by this show of trust.

The Speech from the Throne demonstrates that the Progressive Conservative Government is fully aware of regional disparities and that it is ready to take whatever action is necessary to remedy the situation and improve the lot of the regions concerned.

Personally, the greatest honour I ever received was to be elected by the people of Restigouche in September 1984.

[English]

The Speech from the Throne that opened the first session of Parliament two years ago paid particular attention to the subject of national reconciliation. The premium that the Government has put on national reconciliation results from our very firm conviction that the problems Canada faces cannot be solved by the federal Government acting unilaterally.

In 1984, Canadians told us that they were tired of confrontation and fed up with bickering. They wanted their federal Government to consult with provincial governments, with business and with labour. They wanted a co-operative approach to problem solving, not declarations that co-operative federalism was dead.

• (1140)

[Translation]

As a Francophone and a Canadian, I am pleased with our Government's efforts to obtain Quebec's approval of the Canadian Constitution and to bring the Official Languages Act in line with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Mr. Speaker, my constituents support the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government in their efforts to make Quebec and French Canada essential partners in this new Canadian federation.

Mr. Speaker, the Government of which I am privileged to be a member has launched a number of impressive initiatives as part of its efforts to discuss the major economic issues of the day. While the previous Government was no longer successful in bringing together representatives of the provincial governments during federal-provincial conferences, the Progressive Conservative Government has been able to restore an atmosphere of cordiality and co-operation to the relations between the provinces and Ottawa.

Petty quarrels have given way to serious attempts at co-operation between the two most important levels of government, and as a result, a host of agreements will be signed.

Mr. Speaker, the present Government wishes to continue its efforts to stimulate economic recovery. In Canada, the bank rate is the lowest it has been since 1978.

Since we were elected, we have created over 600,000 jobs in Canada. The federal deficit was down for the first time in six years, and in 1985-86, the Government will have spent about $1.5 billion less than was forecast.

In Quebec as in the rest of Canada, the general economic situation has improved. A comprehensive agreement has been signed as well as a large number of subsidiary agreements which are expected to have a positive impact on mining, forestry and tourism.

My colleagues from La Belle Province appreciate this Government's efforts to help their economy recover from a difficult recessionary period. Various economic sectors in Quebec have benefitted from this Government's initiatives. After waiting several years, dairy producers have finally obtained a guarantee of long-term production. Major agreements have been signed with Quebec to develop francophone television.

In addition, the Canadian Government has signed an $89 million agreement with the SPAR Aerospace company.

The 9 per cent federal sales tax on fuel used by fishermen has been abolished. The previous Government had rejected the claims of expropriated land-owners in Mirabel, but our government has tried to negotiate and has now signed an agreement favourable to these people. This is another telling example of the commitment of our Government to give Quebec and French-Canadians a meaningful place in our Canadian federal system.

Mr. Speaker, as announced in the Speech from the Throne, our Government intends to further our economic renewal by continuing to restore fiscal health to Canada, by taking new trade initiatives and by going forward with the long awaited tax reform.

As far as social justice is concerned, the Government will pursue its objectives of attempting to meet the changing needs of Canadian families, improving the status of women, conserving our natural environment and promoting the full and active participation of all citizens. Because of its history, geography and growing interest in all matters related to international affairs, Canada has a unique opportunity to play a major role in world affairs. The Government is therefore committed to the pursuit of its efforts to advance human rights, preserve world peace while asserting our national sovereignty, and promote a stable and growing world economy.

[English]

The Throne Speech reiterates our Government's sincere commitment to economic renewal, social justice and national reconciliation. The best evidence of these three goals is embodied in the steps we have taken to treat the problems of regional disparity that exist in this country. For example, we in Atlantic Canada, particularly in Newfoundland, Cape Breton and northern New Brunswick, have not shared in the recovery that other parts of this great nation have experienced.

Recognizing this problem, special programs have been designed to bring these economically deprived areas back into the mainstream of a prosperous Canada. The Atlantic Enterprise Program guarantees up to a billion dollars in loans to the private sector in the Atlantic region. The Atlantic Enterprise Program will provide Atlantic Canada with a greater share of federal government purchases. This program will increase the level of government purchases in Atlantic Canada by 40 per cent over the next four years. It will certainly generate new investment and job opportunities for Maritimers and Newfoundlanders alike.

Our Government has taken on the responsibility of ensuring equitable regional distribution of national prosperity.

Enterprise Cape Breton is another fine example of the profound care this Government has for those areas where low growth and high unemployment have now been the norm for so long. Since these incentives were put into motion, more than $173 million has gone to support private companies that have invested in Cape Breton and full-time employment opportunities have been created for some 770 people.

The Northern Benefits Program is working to lessen the apparent disparities which exist for those who live in the North and isolated posts.

Another program that will have beneficial effects on those areas of Canada that face mass lay-offs, plant closures or chronic unemployment is the Community Futures Program, which is part of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. So far, 22 locations have been selected to participate in this $125 million program. This is a completely new approach and will ultimately result in the decision-making process being carried out at the local level where it counts the most. I am pleased to note that Restigouche has been selected for assistance under Community Futures.

These programs are but a few of the many which indicate that the Government is keenly aware of regional disparities. The Atlantic Accord recognized Newfoundland as a full and equal partner in the management of offshore oil resources. An energy accord was also signed with Nova Scotia. The Fisheries Improvement Loans Act has been extended to aid small independent fishermen, and an Atlantic regional council of representatives from various fishery organizations has been formed to advise the Minister on Atlantic fishery management policy. Federal-provincial agreements have been signed in such areas as aquaculture, fisheries research and co-operative management. Our Government has also signed important forestry sub-agreements with each of the Atlantic provinces.

The Government is pushing onward toward a better future for Atlantic Canada. The Speech from the Throne presents new initiatives in the Government's efforts to ensure that we in Atlantic Canada are protected and supported. The creation of an Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is good news. No longer will we have umpteen different programs being administered by umpteen different bureaucratic agencies. This totally new agency will facilitate and co-ordinate all federal development initiatives in the entire Atlantic region. As a result, our region will be supported more effectively and with greater sensitivity to local conditions and opportunities. This revised approach clearly recognizes that solutions cannot be arbitrarily imposed from Ottawa as they have been in the past.

The contribution of Atlantic Ministers and local entrepreneurs to policy and program development will be acknowledged and developed.

Our Government, led by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), set out in September, 1984 to accomplish some very serious challenges. We are now at the halfway point of our first term, and when I look at how far we have come in those two short years, I can stand in this House and say with honesty and pride that this is truly a Government that is promoting national reconciliation and unity. It is working hard to achieve a sustained economic recovery, it adheres to and actively promotes social justice, and it has gone far in maintaining the excellent regard held for Canada throughout the entire world. These were the four main targets outlined in the first Throne Speech. Today, we are closer to achieving these goals than we have ever been before.

The Speech from the Throne that we heard yesterday reconfirms our determination to pursue these national objectives with the confidence that they will result in a better Canada for us all.

I would be somewhat remiss if I failed to describe to this House one of the most beautiful parts of Canada, especially at this time of year, the northernmost riding in New Brunswick. Restigouche covers over 8,000 square kilometres and stretches along the Quebec border from St. Quentin to Beresford. The largest population centres are the City of Campbellton and the town of Dalhousie and our major industries include forestry, mining, tourism, fishing and small business. The Restigouche River, from which the riding derives its name, is known the world over for its great Atlantic salmon angling.

In preparing for this speech, I went to the library and looked up some old statistics on Restigouche. I discovered that the issues which pertain to my riding today were very much alive back then, too. High levels of unemployment have plagued northern New Brunswick for so long now that we think of it as a way of life. Many people in Restigouche have been conditioned over the years to expect no more than 10 weeks of work a year so that they can collect their UI benefits. We have no choice but to break this never-ending downward spiral if we are ever going to see new economic life for the north shore of New Brunswick. The most recent statistics show that north-eastern New Brunswick not only has the highest rate of unemployment in the province, it has the seventh highest of the 70 regions that make up Canada. Clearly, more has to be done for the good people of Restigouche, and more will be done by a Progressive Conservative Government.

[Translation]

The Cabinet now includes two Ministers from New Brunswick who are responsible for four portfolios: Forests and Mines, as well as Small Businesses and Tourism. These portfolios play an extremely important role in the economy of Restigouche. I am certain that these two Ministers will do everything in their power to meet the needs of my region, which was neglected for a long time in the past.

[English]

With the new incentives that are already on line and those mentioned in the Throne Speech, there is no reason why Restigouche cannot share in the prosperity that rightfully belongs there as well as anywhere in this great nation. We have all the basic components of a real success story for Restigouche. The necessary infrastructure is already in place just waiting to be used to full capacity. Transport Canada says that we have one of the best regionally operated airports in Canada located at Charlo in the centre of the constituency. At present, Canadian Pacific has a direct flight from Toronto with a short stop in Montreal six times a week and Air Bras d'Or connects Charlo to many other points throughout the Maritimes.

• (1150)

There are two excellent deep-water ports in Restigouche, one of which is open year-round. The ports of Dalhousie and Belledune are ready and able to handle increased cargo movement. In fact, over $4.1 million has just gone into the repairs of the port at Dalhousie.

The constituency is supported by a railroad with Campbellton as the centre of operations for the entire region. Ten years ago we had approximately 1,100 people working for CN out of Campbellton. Today, Mr. Speaker, we only have 340. This, needless to say, has not helped my region.

Along with the bountiful resources which exist in Restigouche we have human resources as well. With only 50 per cent of the work force employed, we have an abundance of people ready to work. The residents of Restigouche are proud and hard-working people. The largest export in northern New Brunswick has been its young people. Mr. Speaker, my constituents do not want to move to central Canada in search of jobs. They want an opportunity to earn a living in their own area. Most people in Restigouche simply want to earn an honest day's wage for an honest day's work. If any progress is going to be made in such an economically depressed area, drastic measures are required.

[Translation]

We immediately need at least 500 new jobs. This objective can be reached if we succeed in having a new industry locate in our region; otherwise, we would gladly accept the transfer of a Government service to Restigouche.

Moreover, I am convinced that the 1991 winter games should be awarded to the Restigouche county. Such a decision would create not only jobs for the next four years, but would also make my constituents proud to show all Canadians that we, in Northern New Brunswick, have done something for the greater welfare of our fellow citizens.

What we really need in Restigouche are entrepreneurs who want to invest and thrive in our area. Recently, with help from this Government, people in Kedgwick were encouraged to start a co-operative for manufacturing hardwood flooring. In view of the strong demand for that product, they did not hesitate to put all their energy behind the project. As a result of another federal grant, a small company in Petit-Rocher is now manufacturing leather gloves. I wish to extend my very warm congratulations to the owner of that industry for his initiative and perseverance. We would also need a special sectorial agreement that would provide companies with incentives to locate and develop in northeastern New Brunswick.

[English]

The Speech from the Throne has emphasized the Government's seriousness about solving inequities such as those which exist in areas such as northeastern New Brunswick. Over the coming weeks and months I am sure that new initiatives will be forthcoming as a result of this Throne Speech. They will certainly be welcome in such regions as Restigouche. The stage has already been set by the contents of this Throne Speech and by the consultation process which began with the Atlantic Conference in early September.

[Translation]

Finally, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to one of our former colleagues who chaired the parliamentary Committee responsible for evolving the new rules for electing the Speaker of this House. The Hon. James McGrath deserves the respect of all Members of the House, and we wish him every success as Lieutenant Governor of his Province.

I would also like to thank the Prime Minister and the Cabinet for their confidence, for it is indeed a privilege, as the Member for the constituency of Restigouche, to move the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The Prime Minister's choice once more has shown his awareness of the importance of northern New Brunswick and other rural areas of Canada in the eyes of the Canadian Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), that this debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11.00 o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 11.57 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 3, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

SHIPYARDS

REQUEST FOR MORE JOB CREATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Quebec shipyards are now going through a very serious crisis: 5,000 workers are in a predicament as a result of the inaction of this Conservative Government and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté).

I do hope that all Conservative Members of the House will bring pressure to bear on the Minister so that he will withdraw the mandate he had given Mr. Peter Paul Saunders to streamline shipbuilding operations; second, that he will award the Caribou II contract to the Lauzon shipyards; and third, that the Government will take immediate action with respect to the TRUMP program with a view to providing work for the maritime shipyards and creating jobs for the 5,000 workers who are anxious to have gainful employment in Quebec.

* * *

[English]

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

NEGOTIATION OF TEST BAN TREATY URGED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in August, 1985, the Soviet Union initiated a unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing and invited the United States to join it. Unfortunately the United States Government has not yet taken up this offer, despite resolutions supporting a test ban passed in the United States Congress.

The Soviet Union has twice extended the moratorium which will now last until January, 1987. It has also proposed a system of on-site inspection and verification. In this respect I hope our Foreign Minister had a chance to discuss these proposals with Mr. Shevardnadze yesterday.

Considering the Summit planned in Iceland for October 11, it is important that our Government make a public statement urging immediate negotiations on a comprehensive test ban treaty. To this end the Minister should prepare a resolution for this House, so that Parliament can declare itself on this important issue before the Icelandic Summit.

* * *

• (1105)

EMPLOYMENT

CALL FOR NEW PLANS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this week when American Motors distributed applications for 3,000 jobs which will be available next year, 43,000 people from Newfoundland to British Columbia lined up to apply. This proves that Canadians want to work, are ready and eager to work when they are offered jobs at good wages.

On the same day, Mr. Speaker, newpapers reported that hotel and restaurant associations complained that they could not get workers to fill their vacant jobs. This is not surprising since most of those jobs pay very little more than minimum wage which provides people with an income less than the poverty line.

Canadians are willing to work, but they are tired of the Government's program which has provided part-time jobs at low wages. They are calling on the Government to bring forth plans for real jobs, but those plans were conspicuously absent from the Throne Speech.

* * *

[Translation]

YOUTH

INNOVATION IN TOURISM

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Today, Mr. Speaker, we are proud of our Canadian students who took part in the Challenge '86 program.

When the 1986 Quebec tourism major awards ceremony took place last week, the Abitibi-Témiscamingue region paid tribute to its regional laureates in Amos, and first prize in the touristic innovation category was awarded to a Challenge 86 project sponsored by the Val-d'Or Chamber of Commerce in co-operation with Val-d'Or's Office du tourisme et des congrès.

During the past season the Office sponsored a program to welcome local and other tourists, held a special reception for the 10,000th visitor, and aired various radio broadcasts.

The participants, led by Yves Devost, include Joël Cotten, Hélène Frenette, Monique Gervais and Stéphanie Beauchamps; they will represent the region at the Quebec tourism awards provincial gala in Montreal on November 21.

Mr. Speaker, young Canadians are striving for excellence under the Challenge '86 program.

* * *

[English]

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN MILITARY EXERCISE IN NORWAY

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, it was a pleasure for me to travel to northern Norway last week to observe Operation Brave Lion. Operation Brave Lion was an exercise of our Canadian Air and Sea Transportable Brigade held in northern Norway, which saw over 5,000 Canadian troops and over 2,000 pieces of equipment transported across the Atlantic to combine forces with the Norwegian army.

This exercise illustrated to all of our NATO allies our ability to assemble and deploy equipment within the time frames outlined in our bilateral agreement with Norway. But it illustrated something further, Mr. Speaker. It showed the world the outstanding calibre of Canadian troops in a seven-week exercise held in frosty sub-zero conditions. This exercise was the largest single movement of Canadian troops and supplies to Europe since the Second World War.

Members of this House and, in fact, all Canadians should be justly proud.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

HAMILTON AIRPORT—SUGGEST REALLOCATION OF LANDING RIGHTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, only a few weeks ago we heard the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) saying that the Lester B. Pearson International Terminal 1 is in crisis. Then, lo and behold, only three days ago the same Minister proudly announced that he has agreed to allow another airline to land in Toronto at Lester B. Pearson International Airport, this at a time when a $50 million facility in the city of Hamilton is lying in waste with an average passenger load some days of only 40 to 100 people.

Will the Minister of Transport listen to the regional council, listen to the City of Hamilton, and designate TAP Air Portugal as an airline which comes to Hamilton? Will he make sure that any further international carriers given landing rights in southwestern Ontario are asked to land in the heart of the Golden Horseshoe, in the city of Hamilton? Otherwise any talk about fiscal responsibility by the Government is simply a farce.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

FUTURE OF HINTON, ALTA., PROJECT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on Monday a decision will be taken in an American boardroom which could have serious repercussions on the future economic development of the town of Hinton, Alberta. On the line is the projected modernization and expansion of the Champion Forest Products mill. Also on the line are many, many important jobs. At issue here is the CNR's non-competitive freight rate and a $350 million investment that will be lost if the Government does not act.

• (1110)

In spite of numerous representations both from the company and the Hinton Chamber of Commerce to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), as well as to the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), there has been no significant action taken on this dossier. We urge the Minister of Transport to take action this weekend in order to save what is an important development project for Alberta and for Canada.

* * *

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—PROPOSED ACQUISITION BY PROVINCE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Social Credit Government of British Columbia, about which you probably know something, has said it wants to take over Vancouver International Airport and establish a special enterprise zone around it. The new Premier of B.C. has indicated that he wants to abolish minimum wage legislation, and the former Industry Minister has said that he wants special enterprise zones in order to keep unions away from organizing workers.

This is a wingy and dangerous idea of the Social Credit Government. I call upon the federal Government clearly to dissociate itself from this wacky idea, or is this Government prepared to go ahead and let the Socreds take over the airports in B.C. and consent to wage-slave ghettos around them?

Women make only two-thirds of what men make. They constitute 75 per cent of Canada's poor. Special enterprise zones would result in below poverty line wages for women and will cause a further deterioration of women's standards of living.

This is the heart of the B.C. Government's economic strategy. It is in conflict with the free trade policy of the federal Government. There does not seem to have been any consultation. I think the federal Government should reject this idea, and it should say so now.

* * *

ENERGY

DIESEL RETAIL PRICE IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, oil companies are charging Canadians too much for diesel fuel. Before current prices fell, diesel sold for three cents to four cents per litre less than gasoline. Now prices are three cents to four cents more than gasoline in most of Canada.

There is an even more outrageous situation in Prince Edward Island. Consumers are paying 55 cents per litre for diesel at retail pumps while our neighbours in New Brunswick are only paying 36 cents per litre.

Oil companies have no reasonable explanation for this 19-cent per litre or 85-cent per gallon spread. Prince Edward Islanders and Canadians are being gouged. I call for the support of this House to pressure oil companies to drop diesel prices.

* * *

INVESTMENT CANADA

INCREASE IN FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, our country is presently benefiting from a sharp influx of capital from foreign investors. Recent figures show that $4.7 billion entered Canada in the first six months of this year. This is compared to the $5.5 billion invested in the whole of 1985, and the $2.6 billion invested in 1984. This is an unprecedented increase in just two years. A lasting change in attitude on the part of our Government is a major reason for this, together with the replacement of FIRA by Investment Canada.

Investment Canada has a mandate to encourage foreign investment and has done just that. It has reported an increase of 25 per cent in the number of applications by foreign investors in the agency's first year of operation.

Canada is fast developing a reputation for being a safe and attractive country for foreign investment with dramatic growth potential for the future. This is another dramatic example of what good Government can do.

S.O. 21

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYMENT OF DALTON CAMP

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Charlie McCarthy is alive and well and lives in Ottawa. The Government will spare no money to try to offer the best show in town.

We now have a ventriloquist and dummy act to be featured on a daily basis, with matinees on weekends. The new dummy act featuring ventriloquist Dalton Camp and Canada's favourite dummy will be performing for the Canadian people from now on. Of course, tickets are free for all Canadians who have already paid for the contract of these artists. Unfortunately, this act is coming soon to your home. Check your local listings for time and date. I am sure you will enjoy the dummy's empty rhetoric and his acute psychological need to embellish the truth.

* * *

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

AWARDING OF GRANT IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, an April 23 announcement of a federal grant of more than $40,000 to Sherwin Peterson, a Saskatchewan MLA and also legislative assistant to the Premier of Saskatchewan, prompted inquiries from some of my constituents about the method used for awarding these grants as they apply to fertilizer blending operations. I wrote about this matter to the then Acting Minister of DRIE who is now the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). He passed it on in July to the new Minister. I was told by the new Minister that answers to my questions on this matter would be forthcoming some three months ago. We have waited four and a half months, Mr. Speaker, and I am still wondering.

• (1115)

Can the Government assure me specifically that this grant had nothing to do with Mr. Peterson's position as a legislative assistant to the Premier or as a Member of the Legislature? If not, why was his application the only one, of more than a dozen such applications, to get approval?

* * *

[Translation]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

DIVERSE SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC INITIATIVES PROPOSED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my constituents and Canadians in general will welcome the various economic and social initiatives proposed by our Government in the recent throne speech. Considering the irreparable harm being done to our youth by drugs and alcohol, the people of Témiscamingue will be very pleased with our Government's intention to take effective measures against drug trafficking and to set up an action plan to deal with alcohol abuse. People in my riding will also certainly agree with my Government's plan to take effective action againt child sexual abuse, child prostitution and violent forms of pornography.

I can assure my constituents that their Member will be taking very active interest in these initiatives and that he will fight diligently against these scourges of our society.

ORAL QUESTIONS

[Translation]

TRADE

FREE TRADE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne, the Right Hon. Prime Minister made an about-face on free trade.

My question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. After heading off in the wrong direction, he doesn't know where he is going anymore. He has just abandoned the cornerstone of his policy. What is going to be left of his credibility?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no about-face at all. The dialogue on trade is now under way with the United States. I believe five major meetings have already taken place. We are now entering a new phase and recently Ambassador Reisman expressed confidence in the ultimate outcome. As far as we are concerned, the Canadian Government remains convinced this is an important and welcome initiative for Canada.

[English]

LUMBER EXPORTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister should never have allowed his Minister for International Trade to knuckle under to the Americans on lumber at the very time that the American tribunal was seized with the case. This morning the Americans are laughing at us because we conceded the case before it was decided. Why did the Prime Minister allow his Minister of International Trade to make such a naive offer to the Americans at this time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was no knuckling under at all by the Minister of International Trade. If my right hon. friend wants to call Mr. Shultz, he will find out that that was the case.

An approach was put together by the provinces and supported by the labour unions. The Minister of International Trade, also a British Columbian, took this position to Washington and a lobby group rejected it. The ultimate answer will come in due course. As Premier Vander Zalm and Jack Munro indicated yesterday, I think we are all satisfied that the result will be a good one for British Columbia and Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, unlike the Prime Minister, George Shultz may be my friend but he is not my boss.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AUTOMOBILE AND STEEL INDUSTRIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Now that the Prime Minister has knuckled under to the Americans on lumber, what is next, the Auto Pact or steel? Will he assure the hundreds of thousands of Canadian auto workers and steel workers that he will not cave in to American interests in the same way as he did at the expense of our lumber workers across the country?

• (1120)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say with respect to the Right Hon. Member that, if George Shultz is not the leader's boss, he had better check with Keith Davey.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The trade negotiations are being conducted vigorously and we believe very well by Simon Reisman and his excellent team.

On the political side, I think the ability of the Minister for International Trade and her representations are well known to my right hon. friend. I am sure he will be satisfied that Canada's case, be it Canada's brief in steel or any other industry, will be extremely well defended by the Minister for International Trade who, I think he will recognize, did an enormous amount as Minister of Energy to correct serious problems in the energy field. She will be doing extremely good work in this area as well.

CANADIAN LUMBER OFFER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Last Tuesday she made a final offer which she said the Americans could not refuse. The American industry has refused that offer. Now the British Columbia Premier and the Ministry of Forestry are saying that we must make another offer and have the negotiations continue.

What does the Canadian Government intend to do? Will it make another final offer, or will we return to the previous position and go before properly constituted trade tribunals to argue the merits of the case?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is fully aware that our case is continuing before the trade tribunal. He should be aware that that process has not resolved the problem in the past. This issue has been constantly before fact-finding committees, trade tribunals, other institutions and it has not resolved the problem.

We made our only offer to the Americans and, as expected, that offer has been rejected in part by the American producers. At the same time they have said that they wish further information. It is a package supplied by the four provinces concerned. Today our officials are meeting to find out exactly what concerns were identified by the U.S. producers who brought the action against us. We are willing to supply further information to the industry but we are not prepared to enter into negotiations on this issue before October 9.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would only say that the Hon. Minister has just compounded her initial confusion by saying that it was a final and only offer, but now we are back negotiating another final and only offer. What in God's name is she trying to do? Where is the trade strategy of the Government? Why are we going outside the general trade talks to negotiate these separate issues? When will the Minister establish a clear and cohesive approach to trade for this country?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is no confusion about the Canadian position. The Canadian position is aimed at saving thousands and thousands of jobs in our biggest industry. We are taking that position with the firm support of the provinces, the firm backing of the industry involved, and with the support of the labour union involved. This has been made clear to the Hon. Member.

CANADIAN PROPOSAL ON SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and also concerns the matter of jobs in the same sector. Not many months ago in Washington, with great fanfare the Canadian Government released hundreds of pounds of documentation allegedly proving beyond any reasonable doubt that our softwood lumber was going into the United States without any subsidy whatsoever. At that time the Secretary of State for External Affairs properly cautioned Canadians not to comment, not to discuss, not to change the proposal because it would undermine what was being argued before the tribunal. Is the Prime Minister aware that when the Minister for International Trade made her proposal on Tuesday of this week, it completely contradicted what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said should be done, and risked 25,000 Canadian jobs?

• (1125)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, what changed between the position in June and the position in September was the industry's position. In June the industry was prepared to maintain the position it had in 1983. In August and September it was not. It is worried about the job impact of possible tariffs against industries and their towns, as a lot of New Democratic Party Members know. So what has changed in the position between June and the position in August and September is that the industry, with the support of the union involved, asked us to try to seek an out of court settlement. That is what we are doing. It is not helpful for the NDP to be undermining jobs in British Columbia.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Minister that it is she who changed her position, who undermined her case that we were assured in this House not many months ago was completely irrefutable. She has now sent another signal to the tribunal which is considering the case that she no longer has confidence in the case put by the Government of Canada. She is undermining once again the case she should be putting.

IDAHO SENATOR'S STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I could provide a whole list of Americans who have said in the last 24 hours that the Government's case now lacks any credibility. Specifically I want to ask the Minister about this comment put forward by the Senator from Idaho who said:

> Their proposal is a de facto admission that they are engaged in unfair trade practices.

Does the Minister agree with that? If so, I ask her again why she is risking thousands of Canadian jobs?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): We are moving to save thousands of Canadian jobs, a lot of them in British Columbia. I make the point that the Hon. Member does not seem to understand, that when we won this case before it did not resolve the problem. We have had this case before us for about five or six years, creating a lot of uncertainty, a lot of harassment, affecting investment decisions and worrying a lot of people in Canada.

What we have done, with the support of the provinces, the industry, the labour union, and the U.S. administration, which is also trying to seek a pragmatic response to this problem, is to resolve the problem on a permanent basis and to protect this industry and these jobs from continual harassment.

[Translation]

DETERMINATION OF CULPABILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know exactly what the federal Government's policy is on this very important issue. The American senator said that the Government's decision on Thursday represented an admission of the Canadian Government's guilt. And now for my question.

Does the Minister agree with this view? Is the Government of Canada guilty, is our industry guilty, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may speak for the Senator from Idaho but I am speaking for the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: I can only repeat the point I have made in this House that the position—as I say, it is our only offer—which has been presented to the Americans has the support of the provinces involved, the industry involved and the union involved, and was taken forward to the American administration to see if it could persuade the lumber producers who brought this action not only to withdraw the action they have taken against us but to stop the harassment. That is the position that I think is the only reasonable, realistic, and pragmatic position that any Government can take when it is being asked to move on behalf of Canadians in an industry under attack.

* * *

• (1130)

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Wednesday's Speech from the Throne contained a number of platitudes about the Government's commitment to agriculture. However, to the amazement of Premier Devine, and almost everyone in western Canada, there was not one word about deficiency payments to our western farmers. Will the Minister stand in his place and make amends for this great omission by announcing a deficiency payment of at least $2 billion to western Canadian grain producers?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we need not make any apologies for the strong commitment given to the agricultural industry in the Speech from the Throne.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: I challenge the Hon. Member to seek the help and advice of the Library of Parliament. I am certain he will find that this is the first time in the history of Canada that the agricultural industry was mentioned first in a Throne Speech.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: Something which the Hon. Member cannot deny is the statement that, in terms of agriculture, "my Government will spare no effort".

That is a very firm commitment to the agricultural industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Agriculture spare no effort to ensure that the commitment is made known to the farmers? Will he tell us that he has failed in his battle with the Minister of Finance, that there is no money for farmers and, therefore, they will not receive the kind of commitment about which he has been telling us for the last ten months?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Government has spared no efforts since the day we were sworn into office. I ask the Hon. Member to check the record, and the facts will bear this out. The Government made 16 campaign commitments: we have fulfilled 15 of them. To date we have delivered some 320 achievements and commitments, transferring over $5 billion to the agricultural industry and, ladies and gentlemen—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: —and, Mr. Speaker, we have only just begun.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION CORRESPONDENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It would appear that CBC correspondent Michael McIvor was the target of a Daniloff-style set-up in Moscow. Will the Secretary of State tell the House whether he summoned the Russian Ambassador to his office to protest strongly this extraordinary and incredible action? Will he tell us whether or not he has instructed our ambassador to deliver a note of protest to the Kremlin?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, naturally we are deeply concerned about the reports relating to the CBC correspondent in Moscow, as I am sure are all Members of the House. This morning the Soviet Ambassador to Canada was called into the Department of External Affairs. Our deep concern about this matter was registered to him. We have asked for an immediate explanation. As soon as we have further details, naturally, I will make them available to the House and to the country.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, is the Secretary of State for External Affairs telling us that he himself has not spoken to the Russian Ambassador about this incident? Can he also tell the House whether steps are being taken to protect Canadian journalists in the Soviet Union against harassment of this type?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, excuse me, this is a rare difficulty I have in the House of Commons, as Hon. Members will know.

Mr. Axworthy: Being choked up?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): No, I am rarely choked up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I have not seen the Soviet Ambassador myself. I instructed officials to do that this morning because I thought it urgent that it be done immediately. I was not in a position to see him myself, and it was done urgently. My impression is that he was not informed or advised of the circumstances. He is seeking information which he will give to us. We will take every action that is necessary, including every precaution that is available to us, to protect not only the safety but, more important, the rights of Canadian journalists in the Soviet Union.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENT FOR FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister knows that due to low prices grain and corn producers throughout Canada are facing the most devastating year since the 1930s. Prairie Premiers have been calling for a deficiency payment for months. Can the Minister say when the Government will announce a deficiency payment?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Government is well aware of the economic problems facing the Canadian farmer. The Government has always stood by the Canadian farmer, and we intend to do so in the future.

SITUATION OF GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture talked about sparing no effort. What the farmers want to know is when the Government will spare over $1 billion for a deficiency payment.

Last month the Government was able to find over $1 billion for 25 of the largest oil companies in Canada. Why can the Government not find the money for a deficiency payment for 140,000 grain farmers who are facing not only the loss of their farms but the loss of their homes and their livelihoods? Prices in Canada are half what they are in the United States due to the deficiency payment system in place in that country.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure from where the Hon. Member obtains his information or his idea that we have denied the implementation of a deficiency payment. Before the House adjourned for the summer recess we said, in response to questions posed primarily by members of the New Democratic Party that, indeed, a deficiency payment was an option. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that ensuring fairness and equity when making some type of compensation payment is a very complicated and complex issue. If the Hon. Member understands the complications, then I am sure he will realize that it will not be dealt with fairly and equitably simply by means of a deficiency payment but, rather, that it might take a program made up of three or four parts.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN PORT-CARTIER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. This morning Canadians learned that the Prime Minister announced the building of the prison in Port-Cartier, which is in his riding, two weeks before the decision was approved by his colleagues in Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has said that this was a government decision, when will he admit that every Canadian knows that this was but a blatant pork-barrelling move to his riding undertaken following the direct involvement of himself and his office?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to answer my hon. colleague's question. As the Hon. Member clearly indicated, the announcement was made on June 18. It was an announcement of government policy. A policy decision which was fully consistent with over-all government policy, and fully consistent with the Correctional Services capital budget, had been taken. It came to Treasury Board for the required approval of detailed estimates of cost. That approval was granted on July 3 on a preliminary basis and it was given effective project approval on April 10, 1986, which is very normal in capital projects of this type.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister is saying is that the Government is prepared to spend $60 million of Canadian funds without it being authorized in advance by the Treasury Board. That is pretty shameful.

My supplementary question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fundamental question of credibility with regard to this issue is the Prime Minister prepared to appear before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and answer all questions, under oath, and bring with him all relevant documents concerning this important decision?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of hon. colleagues I would like to explain that the initial decision to build this penitentiary was given by Treasury Board on February 23, 1984, well before we were even in office.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where?

Mr. Broadbent: In what location?

Mr. de Cotret: Treasury Board Decision No. 791796—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for York-Scarborough.

* * *

BANKS AND BANKING

CONTINENTAL BANK—ACQUISITION BY LLOYDS BANK CANADA

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. It was announced yesterday that Lloyds Bank Canada would be acquiring the operations of the Continental Bank. Since the 10 per cent maximum foreign ownership limitation on Schedule A banks has no effect, because a foreign owned Schedule B bank is the purchaser, and since the Government has not yet published its comprehensive ownership position on financial institutions, will the Minister seek a commitment from Lloyds similar to that obtained from Imasco which consented, in advance, to obey any restrictions on ownership announced in the future?

• (1140)

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I know the House is as pleased as I am with the increasing health and stability of our financial system. Of course this deal is vivid illustration of the world-wide confidence which is held in the Canadian banking system. I think it is clear to all Members of the House that because of this deal customers and depositors will be well served. The international service which will be delivered will be second to none. In answer to the Hon. Member's question, we have a ceiling on how far Schedule B banks can grow, and that answers any particular concerns he may raise.

[Translation]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION CONCERNING PROJECT TO MOVE DRUMMOND II PENITENTIARY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister, and I would ask him not to hide behind his Ministers and to have the courage to stand up.

I would like the Prime Minister to tell me how he can justify the irresponsible decision he made—notwithstanding sound advice to the contrary and regardless of the additional expenditures involved—to switch the Drummond II penitentiary project to his own riding.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): As I had the opportunity to indicate in other circumstances, Mr. Speaker, it was a decision made by the Government of Canada, the duly elected Government. As other governments have done in other circumstances, this Government decided to build federal facilities in remote regions of the country, particularly those which are hard hit by very high unemployment. Therefore I consider that the decision of the Government of Canada, faced with the situation in Port-Cartier where the unemployment rate was about 37 or 38 per cent, if I am not mistaken, and where the community has sufferred great economic hardship, I consider that it was, in my view, a wise decision consistent with our traditions which dictate that Government decision take the regional economic expansion factor into consideration.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister is saying that the decision had to do with regional economic expansion. Does it mean that other penitentiaries will be built in Newfoundland? The Prime Minister is telling us that it was a Government decision. How can he reconcile his remarks with those of his Minister of nothing who stated that it had been his personal decision, that neither the Prime Minister nor the Government had anything to do with it, that he took full responsibility for it? Here is what I want to know from the Prime Minister: Can he stand up and justify his decision to waste another $15 million, plus $3 million more every year?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has already stated, this was a government decision. We always take into consideration, in making government decisions, socio-economic conditions and regional disparities throughout the country. This has been the practice of Governments since Confederation. It is the practice of this Government, and I know it will continue to be the practice and consideration of Governments for the next many years to come. We make no apologies for trying to relieve economic disparity in the country.

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN MANICOUAGAN RIDING

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The decision to build the prison in his riding is wrong, and he knows it. It cannot be justified. It makes no sense—no economic sense, no moral sense. Does the Prime Minister really expect Canadians to believe that he did not personally interfere in the decision to build the prison in his riding, contrary to all the Canadians who opposed the decision?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I find it hard to believe that they do not espouse the position of trying to relieve economic disparity. As far as I know, this was always the position of the former Government. If I may, I should like to quote the Hon. Member for York Centre, the then Solicitor General, when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in May, 1982, as reported in Volume 84 at page 48. In dealing with the siting of the Remous facility, he said:

> The site was chosen bearing in mind considerations of regional development, as well as considerations of corrections, but the funding will come from my Ministry. In fact, I think every Department of the Government of Canada ought to take account of regional disparity in dealing with its own priorities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT CONSTRUCTION BE HALTED

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Prime Minister knows that one does not build prisons in order to relieve economic disparities.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I would hope that he has the courage to stand up and answer.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member put his question, please?

Mr. Nunziata: In view of the fact that the Auditor General is reviewing the decision to build the prison in the Prime Minister's riding, I would ask him whether he is prepared to halt the construction of the prison at Port Cartier, pending the tabling of the report of the Auditor General in the House later this month.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as we have already advised, the Port Cartier prison plans are well advanced, and the grounds for advancing them are sound for socio-economic reasons. Again, if I may, I quote from the then Solicitor General when he appeared before the same committee on the same date wherein he said: "I think our basic sense of justice"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the House would want me to comment. Of course Ministers' responses are essential to the conduct of the business of the country and of the House. However, I would ask that Ministers refrain from giving too lengthy quotes from other sources.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Prior to making her final offer, her take it or leave it proposal, did the Minister not do her homework and obtain assurances from the American forest industry that it would be prepared to entertain this offer before actually putting 25,000 jobs at risk and undermining the Canadian case?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I asked the U.S. Secretary of Commerce to do his homework and ensure that U.S. lumber producers were willing to negotiate or to hear an offer, and that is what he did. After I met with him, he met with U.S. lumber producers and had a conversation in which five times they said they wanted to settle.

STATEMENTS MADE BY BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Would the Minister confirm that it was the first public utterances on the need to review stumpage fees of Premier Vander Zalm which led to the undermining of our case and thereby forced other groups to come onside and support the Minister in her eleventh hour attempt to rescue our bid before the Americans?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I realize that there is an ongoing election campaign in British Columbia, but I assure the Hon. Member that he is entirely wrong. Premier Vander Zalm and I have worked together from the very start in discussing the problems of the lumber industry and forestry industry in B.C. Premier Vander Zalm has moved in his own jurisdiction to deal with his own forest industry in a manner which is consistent with that adopted by the other provinces involved and by the Government of Canada.

Oral Questions

LABOUR RELATIONS

GRAIN HANDLERS' DISPUTE—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO END WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question concerning the Thunder Bay dispute is for the Minister of Labour who will know that prairie farmers already devastated by low international grain prices can ill afford to pay while the grain companies and the unions play. Will the Minister consider today giving the required notice of intention to bring forward legislation putting an end to a stand-off which has the potential to cost Canadian farmers millions and to undermine Canada's export reputation?

• (1150)

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is because of my colleagues' concern and the concern of all other colleagues in this House on the Thunder Bay situation that I appointed the best person in the land to go to Thunder Bay to get the parties together and mediate the issue. It would be premature for me, I think, to comment on that option at this point since there is progress.

* * *

FINANCE

TAX REFORM—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Speech from the Throne suggests a program of comprehensive tax reform. Will the Minister of Finance shortly be producing a White Paper outlining the Government's proposals for this comprehensive tax reform? If so, when will the paper be available and will the Government be expecting the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to conduct public hearings across the country to get public input to the reform?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the direct answer to the Hon. Member's question is that at some time during the course of this month I propose to make a speech on the question of tax reform to try to give some guidance to the country on the direction we want to go as a Government in tax reform. I hope this will generate a good deal of discussion and debate which will help in the course of the normal consultations that I have during the fall. Following that I will be preparing some specific proposals to put before the House.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, may I have a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: It is unusual, but in the spirit of generosity, which I hope will be noticed, I shall allow a supplementary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: May the spirit forever remain in the House, Mr. Speaker.

My supplementary question is for the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Was the mediator given a deadline to resolve the dispute?

Ms. Copps: Wrong question.

Mr. Speaker: My generosity has had to be brought abruptly to a close.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Member's supplementary question should have been addressed to another Minister.

* * *

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DECISION CONCERNING CN SHOPS IN MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

How can the Minister justify supporting a decision that puts 650 workers at the CN workshops in Moncton out of work, without having read the internal study on CN's repair facilities? How can he justify supporting this decision?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have made no decision in connection with the matter to which the Hon. Member refers. That was a painful business decision made by the Canadian National Railway Company which, in 1978, was directed by the then Liberal administration of this country that it had to get on its own. It was going to be relieved of certain debts at that time and from then on it had to operate to make a profit, break even, or generate its own cash resources itself.

The CN Railway Company has come to a decision based on the fact that it has certain heavy car shop facilities. Of the three facilities it has in Canada only one is needed in future, the one that is located in the west where most of the business now is. That decision was CN's. We are, and CN is, doing everything to ameliorate that decision in Moncton. We will continue to do that and to encourage the re-employment of as many people as possible of those who must be laid off.

[Translation]

PEOPLE OF THE ATLANTIC PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same Minister.

The Minister says that he does not support the decision, but his failure to act confirms that he does support the decision by CN. Does this decision to put 650 workers out of work reflect this Government's policy on regional development? Is that how this Government intends to treat people in Atlantic Canada, where at this time we feel we are being treated like Third World countries?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that I am simply continuing the policy set by the previous administration. There were many thousands—

Mr. Broadbent: You are supposed to change it.

Mr. Riis: We are supposed to have something different.

Mr. Crosbie: There were many thousands of CN employees laid off across the country during 1980 to 1984 at which time the then Government did not intervene, thousands of them in Atlantic Canada. This is a great pity.

If CN has to compete against U.S. railways and other modes of transportation and must make it on its own, that is the way it has to be. I cannot overrule the board of directors and management of CN in business decisions that they had to come to themselves. We will do, and we have done, everything we can to ensure that the workers affected are assisted. It is a pity at the present time there are some impediments in the way, but we are hoping they will be overcome.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN SALES—REQUEST FOR QUOTA ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Although we are some two months into the new crop year most prairie farmers have not been given any permission to deliver grain into the new crop year because there have been no quotas. Since quotas generally follow sales commitments, are we still making sales? Why are there no quotas?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I have to point out to the Hon. Member that yesterday we had extremely good news for Canadian farmers concerning sales. Our best customer saw fit to renew a five-year grain agreement that calls for a minimum of 25 million tonnes of grain over five years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: I should also point out that that is the minimum amount. Over the last five years the Soviet Union bought 36 million tonnes. That is certainly good news. The sale is worth somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1 billion a year, even at today's prices. Hopefully over time prices will improve so it will be a multibillion dollar deal.

I am well aware of the concern which the Hon. Member raises. We have been moving grain and some quotas will be announced very shortly.

SALES CLEARANCES INQUIRY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that there are really only two major grain buyers left in the world, Russia and Japan. My question is more specific. What has happened to our sales clearances and our clearances for the first two months of the crop year in comparison to previous years? Generally we have had quotas offered much sooner than this. This is a near record in not being able to deliver grain as far as the farmers are concerned. How are our clearances compared to previous years?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a former member of the Wheat Board Advisory Committee and I would have thought he would have had his facts together. The Canadian Wheat Board sold grain last year to something like 60 countries. When he says that we have only two customers, he insults Brazil, Japan, and all of the other customers—

Mr. Althouse: I said major customers.

Mr. Mayer: —that buy a tremendous amount of grain from us.

We are making sales. As evidence of that, at the end of the crop year last year we went into it with the lowest on-farm carry-over on record. The Canadian Wheat Board has been doing an extremely good job of marketing and with the support of this Government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Mayer: —it will continue to do a very good job.

* * *

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister is aware that the price spread between leaded and unleaded gasoline is substantially higher in Canada than it is in the United States. Will the Minister give the House his undertaking that he will ensure that this substantial difference is eliminated?

Point of Order—Mr. Mazankowski

• (1200)

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, because of differences in the tax structure of our two countries—I am referring both to the federal governments and to the provinces or states—plus the matter of marketing structures in the various regions, where outlets may be more or less numerous, plus the matter of how far people are from the refineries and the pipelines, so because of all these factors, the price of gas differs from region to region inside Canada and from one country to another on the North American continent, and I am referring to the United States and Canada.

* * *

RAILWAYS

LAY-OFFS AT CN MAINTENANCE SHOPS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I would like to remind him that in addition to the 650 maintenance employees at the CN workshops in Moncton who have been put out of work, there are 2,000 at the workshops at Pointe-Saint-Charles in Montreal whose jobs are at stake. I would also like to remind him that history tells us about a man called Pontius Pilate who decided to wash his hands—

Since the Minister claims that CN made this decision on its own, is he prepared to table here in the House CN's internal study on the maintenance of rolling stock?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is slow in exhibiting concern. Over 7,000 CN employees were laid off during the term of the last Liberal administation.

With respect to Pointe-Saint-Charles, there are no plans of which I know for any lay-offs there, though there may be temporary lay-offs from time to time. CN plans to utilize that facility and to continue utilizing it to do all the kinds of work that it can do with outside third parties. That is the plan for it, and CN has no reason to doubt that it will be a successful plan. There is no plan to close that facility, and CN and we will make every effort to ensure that it continues in full production in the coming years.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT STUDY BE TABLED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with the Minister's good intentions and his assurances that the workers at Pointe-Saint-Charles do not have to worry. However, I am going to ask him to answer my question, since he failed to do so.

Is the Minister prepared to table before all Canadians the study by CN on maintenance of railway cars and locomotives, so the Canadian public can see for itself whether there is any real justification for laying people off—in Moncton that is already the case, and it may happen in Pointe-Saint-Charles—because I am not entirely convinced by the assurances that I have just been given?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot table in the House confidential reports prepared by CN or any of our other Crown corporations in connection with their work, reports that their competitors would dearly love to see, including U.S. railways and others. The suggestion is jejune and juvenile.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

QUESTION PERIOD—ACCEPTABLE TENOR

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and I hope that you will find it consistent with the spirit of goodwill and generosity on which you had elaborated earlier, particularly within the spirit of the desire on the part of, I believe, all Members to set a new tone in the House of Commons consistent with the rules, traditions and practices of parliamentary procedure.

I simply want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the type of questions that were put by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault). They were, I believe, inconsistent with the standard rules of procedure as outlined in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Citation 359 which reads as follows:

> "(1) It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: That is fine. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the questions—

Ms. Copps: The answer must not be a lie.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, furthermore the question must be brief. Second, a supplementary question should need no preamble.

I merely draw these points to your attention, Sir, because I think it would be in our interest to try to conduct ourselves consistent with the rules of parliamentary practice as outlined in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Citation raised by the government House Leader refers only to guidelines which the Speaker who made out those guidlines decided to use in exercising his own discretion with respect to Question Period. If I am not mistaken, those guidelines were given some 20 years ago. Since that time, successive Speakers have recognized over and over again questions, of the very kind about which the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) complains, when they came from Conservative Members.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I say that it does not sit well in the mouth of the government House Leader now to raise these points when, through the questions of his own side, he and his colleagues have established this precedent.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of the goodwill which we all accord to you, that you recognize what has developed in past years through questions accepted by the Chair from Conservative Members and use that point of view in carrying out the discretion given to you by the House. To do otherwise at this point would certainly undermine the spirit of goodwill and co-operation which I think we all want to have from here on in.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I regret that this has taken place today. This is our first day back and a new Speaker is in the chair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: The government House Leader has a responsibility to act as an example and to set a tone. We have regular meetings of House Leaders. If he had some concerns to raise today, there is an appropriate forum in which to raise those concerns. This first day in the House with a new Speaker in the chair is certainly not the place.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, consistent with what has already been said and the reference made to the precedent, I think we all understand that those guidelines have been set down and we all try to follow them. We are talking about now, and I appreciate that the Chair admonished cabinet Ministers to keep their answers short; that is fair ball. However, I would particularly draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the second question put by the Leader of the NDP, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) which included two argumentative preambles, a reference to the Minister undermining Canada followed by a quotation from a U.S. Senator in a U.S. newspaper. Then the question was asked.

We are saying, Mr. Speaker, that this is within the spirit of reform and I am not being argumentative at all.

Mr. Riis: This is the new civility, I take it.

Mr. Murphy: Maybe we can have the PMO leak something.

Mr. Lewis: I can handle that too. This Question Period is for all Members of Parliament to hold the Government accountable. Short questions and short answers allow more Hon. Members to do so. More members of the Opposition can participate, as well as more members of the Government. I would ask you, Sir, to consider this representation when you make any sort of a ruling.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this is an important question. I would ask you to take note of the fact that in Parliament, adequate time must be given to opposition Parties to properly present their points of view. To make a suggestion such as this in a Parliament which has the greatest majority in favour of government Members is completely ridiculous. When those Hon. Members were on this side, in a Parliament which was much closer in numbers, they asked questions which were even further out of order and longer and did not respect the points made by the House Leader today. If there is to be a change, it should never be made in a Parliament in which opposition Parties have as few Members as they have today. I would like you to consider that in making a decision, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to thank Hon. Members for bringing their concerns to my attention, and I accept with a certain amount of satisfaction the expressions of goodwill that have been made during those representations. I will, of course, be having regular meetings with representatives of all Parties of the House and I will be making special efforts to meet with individuals, groups of individuals and private Members. I will take into careful account the representations that have been made here today. I welcome the comments and the suggestions, and we will gather together to discuss what seems to be differences in approach which are properly expressed, especially to your new Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1210)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce for first reading three separate Private Members Bills dealing with the subject of capital punishment. Each Bill addresses different aspects of this important matter. For instance, one Bill focuses on first-degree murder and treason, while another establishes capital punishment for acts commonly known as terrorism.

In addition, the most recent Bill which has just been drafted provides for execution by the method of lethal injection as opposed to hanging. Finally, all three Bills reflect the appropriate provisions of the Young Offenders Act.

I present these Bills on behalf of the 80 per cent of my constituents as well as the majority of Canadians who support the return of capital punishment for first-degree premeditated murder as a reasonable form of justice.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-201, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-202, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-203, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Young Offenders Act (capital punishment).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

RADIO ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REINSTATEMENT OF BILLS C-92, C-94, C-95 (C-5, C-6, C-7)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the other House Leaders with respect to the reinstatement of certain Bills. I think that you will find unanimous approval for the reinstatement of Bills C-92, C-94, and C-95 as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, the following Bills introduced in the First Session of the Thirty-third Parliament be reinstated forthwith in this Session as follows:

An Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act, be deemed to have been introduced, read the first time and ordered to be printed, read a second time, referred to and reported by a Legislative Committee with amendments, and ordered to stand on the Order Paper for consideration by the House at report stage on or after Tuesday, October 7, 1986 (Bill C-92);

An Act to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments, be deemed to have been introduced, read the first time and ordered to be printed, read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee (Bill C-94); and

An Act respecting the Archives of Canada and Records of government institutions of Canada and to amend the Copyright Act, be deemed to have been introduced, read the first time and ordered to be printed, read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee (Bill C-95);

And that the evidence adduced and documents received by any Legislative Committee of this House in the First Session of the Thirty-third Parliament in relation to these Bills be deemed to have been referred to a Legislative Committee in this present Session.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what a contrast between this motion and the previous remarks of the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski). With respect to this motion, there were consultations with his predecessor before the Hon. Member became the Government House Leader. We discussed it further with the Government House Leader when he assumed that position. There have been extensive discussions. This is quite a contrast, as I have said, with his unwarranted assertion with respect to the Question Period based on outmoded guidelines which were totally superseded by guidelines issues by the immediate predecessor of—

• (1220)

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the Hon. Member would want to address the particular matter that is before the Speaker. I can assure the Hon. Member that I got his point earlier.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): In any event, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, there have been consultations with respect to this motion. I must say that, after listening to the Government House Leader on his point of order, I was having second thoughts about the way we should deal with his motion if he happened to present it. However, in the spirit of good will and co-operation, we will give unanimous consent to the motion.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of co-operation and in an effort to facilitate the business of the House, we agree.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Thursday, October 2, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the Session.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, first, in keeping with the traditions of the House, may I congratulate the mover and seconder, the Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) and the Member for Restigouche (Mr. Girard), on their speeches in support of the Address yesterday. They were well delivered, full of verve and style, and I admired them even more because they had to defend a hopelessly empty document that is now before the House.

In rising to respond to the Speech from the Throne, first I would like to pay my respects to its author. Of course, we had expected a higher standard from Dalton Camp after reading his column for many years, first in the Toronto Sun, then in the Toronto Star. In those days we used to get it for 25 cents. Obviously Mr. Camp has had to surrender some of that style to the rigours of committee authorship. The rhetoric is attractive, the phrases are flowery. There is even a touch of humility here and there. It raises vagueness to an art form.

Of course, Canadians have one question to ask: was it really worth waiting one extra month for this document, this speech? I think citizens right across Canada will say no, it certainly was not worth the wait.

Nobody quarrels with the intent. There is a sentence, a phrase, and sometimes a paragraph for every group in the country, every interest and every region. But where is the plan? Where is the working agenda? There is nothing new.

It is a recycled speech from a recycled government that is two years old and already tired. The Government spent the last two years breaking its promises, and obviously, from this document, it will spend the next two years making new promises. It is an invitation to Canadian voters to embark on a second honeymoon when Canadians are already talking about a divorce. This explains why the Government had to call in the three puppeteers— Dalton Camp, Lowell Murray, and Norman Atkins—three powerful non-elected backroom boys who are now supposed to act as marriage counsellors to the Government and the Canadian people.

The Throne Speech is supposed to be the Government's new platform. We know what happened to the last one. The Conservatives tore it down so quickly and completely that there was only enough wood left to build a presidential style podium for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). That is the only thing that he really kept from the platform of two years ago.

If the message is not getting through to the Prime Minister from his pollsters, I hope he listens to the message given to him by the voters of Saint-Maurice and Pembina on Monday. When he and his advisers sit down and analyse the results of those by-elections they will see that that support was cut in half. I believe that reflects the view that in just two short years the Government has forced Canadians to grow weary of a Government that limps from scandal to scandal, a Government that is preoccupied with its own image and polls and is unable to present to the country a clear and consistent direction.

This new Throne Speech is based upon what the Prime Minister loves to term the four pillars: national reconciliation, economic renewal, social justice and constructive internationalism. The problem is that we have heard it all before. We heard it during the election campaign and we heard it in the first Throne Speech. Canadians are rightly asking why they should trust the Government now. They see words like "national reconciliation" coming from the same person who called strikers in Alberta separatists. They see words like "economic renewal" coming from the same Government which has dramatically cut its aid to the regions of the country and abandoned farmers, fishermen and miners. They see words like "social justice" coming from the same Government that has drastically cut social programs when it once called them a sacred trust. It tried to deindex the old age pension and succeeded in deindexing the family allowance. The Government shattered those commitments.

Canadians see words like "constructive internationalism" from the same people who now have gone into locked step with the current U.S. administration on almost every issue. The expression used to be that when the U.S. sneezes Canada catches cold. That has been given a whole new interpretation under this Government. It seems that when Ronald Reagan has a drug problem Canada gets an epidemic.

The Prime Minister should not wonder if Canadians are cynical about the latest attempt to sell them a new image.

We understand that part of the strategy is to keep the Prime Minister under control, to keep him out of the House. It is called damage control. The theory is that he will do less harm to his Government if he is out on the road doing "what he does best"—we are still waiting to see what that is—than he would be if he was in the House of Commons. Perhaps the events of the last two weeks will force the Prime Minister's advisers to reverse that strategy. Some observers have even come to the conclusion that he is running for my job as Leader of the Opposition. Why not? Everyone else is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): All I can say to the Prime Minister is that he is my favourite candidate and I am pulling for him to be the next Leader of the Opposition.

As much as I respect the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and wish him well in his new role, I was not encouraged by his intervention this morning to try to curtail your discretion, Mr. Speaker. We will vigorously resist any attempt to bridle this House on either side. We rely on your judgment because you are the collective decision of the House and we will stand with you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): However, the Government House Leader, who is also the Deputy Prime Minister, ought never to confuse those two roles. When he speaks as Deputy Prime Minister, we will listen. He is the Government representative, the chief operating officer, the Prime Minister calls him. When he is in the Chamber as House Leader he is trying to achieve a better reconciliation, a better tone and a better mood. He will have a great responsibility in setting that mood and I hope he will not forget that.

• (1230)

However, despite the new exaltation of his role, and he is entitled to relish it, he is not the Prime Minister. Canadians did not elect him to be Prime Minister and the office and responsibility of the Prime Minister cannot be delegated in this House or in the country. We are going to ensure that the Prime Minister is here to answer on behalf of the Government, despite the high sounding title of the Deputy Prime Minister. This House is the forum of the nation. It cannot be bypassed and we will see, to the best of our ability, that the Prime Minister remains accountable to this Chamber and, through the Chamber, to the people of Canada.

The Prime Minister said: "We do the big things well. We do some of the small things poorly". That is how the Prime Minister looks at his Government's record in mid-term. What were the small things? What were the big things? We happen to think that some of the small things, on which the Prime Minister admits failure, happen to count for a lot. We do not think they are that small.

We do not think, to begin with, that trust and integrity in government is that small. The Minister of National Defence is forced to resign in questionable circumstances. Is that small? The Hatfield affair, the administration of justice thrown into disrepute, is that small, Mr. Speaker?

The former Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is accused of violating the conflict of interest rules and is now under inquiry. Yet he was defended by the Prime Minister and the former Deputy Prime Minister for weeks in this House by way of stonewalling. Is that a small thing? The former Deputy Prime Minister himself admitted to this House that he tapped Liberal caucuses some years ago. Is that a small thing?

The bungling of two Ministers precipitated not one but two bankruptcies in our banking system costing the taxpayers over a billion dollars, and the repercussions are still being felt. The Continental Bank had to be bailed out yesterday because of a lack of confidence. That lack of confidence is still there. I do not call that small change, although the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) might.

The former Minister of the Environment resigned after spending thousands of tax dollars on a questionable trip to Europe. Is that a small thing? A Minister of Fisheries is forced to resign over a tuna scandal not, Sir, because you let the tuna go on the shelves but because you disagreed with the Prime Minister as to who took them off the shelves.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would hope that in debate, which must be vigorous and, of course, very far ranging, Hon. Members might leave the Speaker out of the midst of the controversy because, I must assure all Hon. Members, there are some things your Speaker would just as soon put behind him.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will take that point, Mr. Speaker, because the House decided two nights ago what it thought about that particular dispute, and decided firmly in your favour.

So much for the small things, so called. What about the big things such as the economy, trade, national reconciliation and tax reform?

Let us look at the economy. Where are we on the deficit? Deficit reduction was going to be a major thrust of this Government. In his last Budget the Minister of Finance projected that his big accomplishment would be to reduce the deficit this year to $29.5 billion. We told him that his projections were wrong. We told him that his assumptions on oil prices and interest rates were way off. I think most commentators in the country would recognize that, but the Minister did not admit it because the number was put there for political and cosmetic reasons, to keep big business happy and to get an initial approval on that particular Budget from big business. Now, just seven months later, the Minister has a new projection which is $2.5 billion higher and we are back up to $32 billion. How is that for targeting?

Despite massive intervention in foreign markets our dollar has dropped during the course of this Government from 77 cents U.S. to somewhere between 71 and 72 cents U.S.

The economic recovery has been uneven. It has centered mainly in urban Ontario and urban Quebec. Western Canada is in recession. Atlantic Canada has been cut adrift. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) says: "Don't complain. You are better off than Bangladesh". That is one of the most insensitive comments ever heard in this country, even from that Minister. All the people of Atlantic Canada want is equality of opportunity with the rest of Canada, not with the Third World.

In its Throne Speech, the Government is proposing an Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, adding more levels of bureaucracy when what Atlantic Canadians want, and what they need, is more jobs.

[Translation]

The Prime Minister likes to brag about the number of jobs he has created, but for thousands of Canadian men and women the sad truth is that there has been a net loss of almost 17,000 jobs since January this year, and those jobless Canadians wish the Prime Minister would stop uttering misleading statements about previous administrations and would implement policies and programs designed to guarantee they will be able to rejoin the labour force.

[English]

Let us look at another big thing, trade. Free trade with the United States was the major economic thrust of the Government. It has been botched and bungled right from the beginning in a very big way. Negotiations have been ill-timed, ill-managed and ill-prepared. Instead of quiet effective diplomacy in pursuit of concrete, clear objectives, the Government has set us on a hyped-up comprehensive bilateral treaty negotiation with the United States without any debate in this House of Commons and with inadequate consultation with our provinces.

It is now clear that the Prime Minister launched these talks in that cosmetic joint declaration with the President of the United States in Quebec City without understanding either the initiative or Canada. He is now trying to extricate himself by blaming the Americans, but Canadians are seeing the truth. They know that the Prime Minister did not know what he was doing when he began this whole affair. Now the words "'free trade'", those ringing words in the joint declaration, have become, to use the words of the Throne Speech "the pursuit of a mutually advantageous trade agreement with the United States". The Government is bailing out, Mr. Speaker. I thought we were going to stop bailing, and fix the boat. Was that not what Dalton said?

Where does that leave us? We are unlikely, in my view, to achieve an agreement with the United States which adequately protects Canadian interests. Equally, to walk away from these negotiations now may produce countervailing measures against us. Goodness knows, we are getting countervailing action unilaterally from the United States even during the course of the negiations. What has happened is that the Prime Minister has painted Canada into a corner. Let us take yesterday. Through the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) we knuckled under on the lumber issue. We admitted the American case on stumpage. We submitted the offer during the deliberations of the American tribunal which is going to decide in a few days. We conceded the case. We have now given the administrators south of the border the evidence to decide the way they want to decide. All I can say to the Prime Minister is, what a negotiator! He boasted in Saskatoon, when the new Minister received her portfolio: "Pat Carney has the ball now. Hold on to your hats". Despite that unhappy metaphor, the Minister fumbled on our two-yard line, that is what she did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1240)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I continue the metaphor. She must now understand what the words "level playing-field" really mean. So far as the Americans are concerned in their negotiations with our Government they can sense weakness. They can sense stumbling and lack of preparation. For the United States "level playing-field" has always meant better rules, a better referee and a better ball. Our Minister does not know how to play the game.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): A number of our major economic sectors are now experiencing difficulties which are not about to vanish. Most of them, such as agriculture, energy, mining and forestry, are based in Western Canada. Then there is the fishing industry on Canada's east and west coasts. Concerted efforts on the part of the two government levels and the private sector are a must if this country is to come to grips with the challenges facing these industries.

[English]

Regionally balanced economic growth matters to Canadians in a way that it does not matter to Americans. As I have said, they talk about a level playing-field. A level playing-field to Americans means no special regional incentives. To us it means the exact opposite. To us attacking regional inequality is part of a key role that any Canadian Government has to play.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to say this to the Prime Minister and to his colleagues. Free trade is not a substitute for a comprehensive national economic policy. I say it is about time for the Government to start to understand and recognize that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would now like to deal with another one of the big topics. I would like to talk about national reconciliation.

[Translation]

One of the major commitments made in the previous Speech from the Throne had to do with measures aimed at paving the way for Quebec to endorse the Canadian Constitution. The Government had then promised, and I use the words of the first throne speech, to "—work to create the conditions that will make possible the achievement of this essential accord". We were promised a new era of harmony in federal-provincial relations. But what are the intentions of the Prime Minister? What are his proposals in response to Mr. Bourassa's initiatives? Why is he shifting into reverse in this Speech from the Throne, and I repeat the words of the speech, by stating that "... should there appear reasonable prospects for agreement, formal negotiations will proceed ... "? In other words, Mr. Speaker, give us the answers and we will provide the questions. Is that leadership?

[English]

Another big commitment of the Government was in terms of tax reform. In 1984, in its first Speech from the Throne, the Government said the objective was to make the tax system simpler and fairer. The reality is that in two successive Budgets the Minister of Finance attacked lower and middle income groups and gave tax breaks to the rich. Those Budgets widened the gap between rich and poor and, moreover, encouraged a concentration of economic power. Those Budgets were sneaky and unfair. And in the Speech from the Throne which is before us the Government talked about concentration of economic power. Why did it not do something about it last spring when the competition legislation was before the House? I raised the issue fully in a one-hour speech before the House. I have talked about it inside and outside. Now, we finally have some recognition of it in the Speech from the Throne. I want to say again to the author of the speech: "Dalton, wherever you are, give me a split on the royalties before the day is over".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Under the present Government, individual tax rates have gone up while corporate rates have gone down. Fairness was not the overriding principle in the last two years. Why should Canadians really believe that the next two years will be any different?

[Translation]

We agree that our tax reforms must take into account those implemented by the Americans. However, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has not taken the same route. Where the Americans propose taxing capital gains, the Minister is making the rich in this country a present of $500,000. Where the Americans are reducing the tax rate, our Minister of Finance is imposing a surtax.

The Speech from the Throne does not even mention the transaction tax, which would constitute a massive tax on consumption and would replace the sales tax. This kind of tax is not only regressive, it is almost invisible. Canadians would pay this tax without knowing it.

What effect would the tax have on low-income Canadians? On small businesses? On the construction industry?

The promise to reduce the income tax rate is very attractive, but the Minister has a duty to inform Canadians about the deductions he will eliminate to replace the lost revenue. Will it be the basic personal exemption? The exemption for senior citizens? The exemption for dependent children? The registered retirement savings plan deduction?

Tax reform is a very attractive measure, but I would not want to see us fall into the trap of simplicity at the expense of justice.

[English]

The Prime Minister was also going to usher in a new era of pristine non-partisan appointments. Gone would be the days of political patronage. That was the shortest-lived promise on record. Some 20 minutes after he and his colleagues were sworn in the Tory patronage parade got underway, and it has been gathering speed ever since.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yet the Prime Minister wonders why he is now criticized for packing government boards, agencies and tribunals with his cronies and Tory friends. I can only tell him that he did not have to do it; he could have kept his word. He had an option.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): While I am at it I will give him another option. Please give up the presidential style. I do not believe Canadians want their Prime Minister to have all the superficial presidential symbols, the flying wedges of mounties with the earphones, the motorcades, the official seal on the podium, the Hercules aircraft to carry the video equipment, the self-promoting embassy publications, and now the personal valet and maid on all foreign trips.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It seems it would not do to have any wrinkles on the emperor's new clothes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Through you, Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister, if you cannot tie one of those black ties I will send you a clip-on one. The Prime Minister hopes now that his political valet, Dalton Camp, will do the same for his policies that his personal valet does for his shirts. He now has one to press them and another one to stuff them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I returned to public life for two reasons. The first was to help to rebuild a great national party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is coming along just fine.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The other reason was to lead. I am trying to respond to a feeling which I think will be shared by all Members of the House. I know that it is shared by most Canadians, after having spent another summer on the road. The feeling is that as a nation, somehow, despite all the benefits and the great heritage, we have not reached our potential as a nation. We have inherited the most bountiful heritage on the face of the globe in terms of land, water and resources. We have a sense of space, a spirit of the frontier, two languages, many cultures, a respect for the rule of law and a flourishing parliamentary democracy. We have seen bravery in four wars. I believe we live in the freest country in the world. Yet despite that we have not reached our potential. Our children feel it; they sense it. They feel that when they get out of school or college they will not do as well in life as we have done. They also feel that somehow we have let them down.

• (1250)

The Throne Speech proves that the Government has no agenda. I want to share some of my beliefs with the House and with the country. We must stand up for our country. We must reassert our patriotism and we must reassert our sovereignty. Some of us may wince when we see an American stand up in the morning and salute his flag or when we see an American stand with his hand over his heart when the national anthem is sung, but I think we need a little of that in this country. We need to stand up for Canada, to say that we are proud to be Canadians, and to assert that sovereignty. Nowhere should we assert that sovereignty more than in the current trade negotiations with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We must think smarter and work smarter. We must focus on education, training, retraining, and research. I am flattered that the Government has stolen the proposal which I made months ago for a conference on post-secondary education; it is a good idea. However, if it continues to cut funding at the rate it has been cutting it, there will not be anything to talk about. When those discussions come up with the provinces, we must negotiate national standards on post-secondary education with them. We must marshal a national campaign against illiteracy. I am pleased that the Government is at least giving lip service to a program which I mentioned months ago. But, where is the program?

We need a national apprenticeship program to train our young people on the job so that they will have skills for tomorrow. We need to redefine our unemployment insurance scheme so that we have room to train and retrain Canadian men and women who have been laid off their jobs because of technological advances. We must learn to encourage and to reward excellence.

[Translation]

Third, we must achieve true equality of opportunity in Canada. The last two federal budgets widened the gap between rich and poor instead of narrowing it. We must reform our tax system and make it fairer, simpler and more equitable. We must look at the concept of a guaranteed annual income, to help the neediest in this country live with dignity. We must also make every effort to end the welfare cycle. We must fight discrimination in every form. We must restore the liberal policy of regional equality to ensure that all Canadians are given the same opportunities, wherever they may live in this country.

[English]

We need equal pay for work of equal value. We need affirmative action for women. We need a national child care program, not just further studies, as the Throne Speech indicates. I say to Ministers opposite: why do you not just get going? We have studies coming out of our ears; let us have a little action.

If we read the Throne Speech carefully, we find that they are backing down on pensions for women. We also need to become more competitive as a nation, concentrating on research and development, but also providing more harmony in the workplace. We need joint labour-management goals in terms of quality of work, profit sharing, and equality on the job. We need a more competitive economy. Competition is the best fuel of excellence.

Finally, we need to restore confidence and trust in Government and in our public institutions. We need to restore faith in the integrity of those we as Canadians elect to transact the public business of the country. I want to say to the Government and to the Prime Minister that people's trust has to be earned, that people's confidence has to be gained, not by improved rhetoric or flowery phrases in a speech, but by what we in every corner of the House do.

The Prime Minister is now asking for a second chance to show Canadians that he can be trusted. We are skeptical because the Government has violated that trust so blatantly and so brutally for the past two years. We are skeptical because this is a Government which has shown itself incapable of rising above pettiness and manipulation to confront the real issues we in Canada face. We are skeptical because we do not believe it has the competence to run the country as it should be run. It is for all those reasons that I should like to present an amendment to the Speech from the Throne.

Canadians have no confidence in the Government. Canadians have no confidence in the Prime Minister. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), that the following be added to the Address:

> The House regrets, that at a time when 1,250,000 Canadians are looking for jobs; when the Canadian family farm is threatened; when the oil and gas industry is trying to hang on; when regional inequalities are being worsened by government inaction; when young people, elderly women and single mothers face extraordinary hardship; when average Canadians face huge tax increases while giant corporations get tax breaks; and when Canadians, from one end of the country to the other, are crying out for leadership and direction, the Government is trying to tackle the nation's problems with empty words and aimless rhetoric.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I find the amendment to be in order, and debate is now on the amendment. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I noted that my friend, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), had no substantial references in his speech to the plight, for example, of western farmers, but he had time to comment upon my clothes. The Leader of the Opposition made reference to the problems he was having with regard to the leadership of the Liberal Party. I just want to tell him that he can count on our unwavering support.

I want to commend you, Mr. Speaker, on your election. I could tell on that night when we all spent 10 hours or 11 hours here, that it would have a positive effect upon the mood of the House. As I was going around for one of the votes, I overheard a Conservative Member of Parliament say to another: "Do you spell Copps with a C or a K?" I think the Right Hon. Leader mentioned that he had the opportunity to vote for some Conservatives. Perhaps some Conservatives voted for others as well, and I think that was healthy.

• (1300)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons contains a quote that is particularly interesting, in fact there are several, but I am referring to the one that appears on page 11, in which Bill Blaikie, the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill, says the following:

> I think one of the reasons why a lot of people run for Parliament is that they feel they have something to say. I always thought that if I could just get to say these things in the House of Commons, that would be significant, it would matter . . . However, since I have come to Ottawa, everything I say is suspect, if it is listened to at all. So there is this incredible fustration. What ought to be the pinnacle of exchange of ideas is in fact the black hole in which nobody listens to anybody.

That was a statement by an Hon. Member from Manitoba, a cry from the heart that did not fall on deaf ears, and I had the privilege of designating a committee on parliamentary reform, chaired by the distinguished James McGrath, ably assisted by the Members for Papineau, Winnipeg—Birds Hill, Argenteuil—Papineau, Peace River, Prince Edwards—Hastings and Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Messrs. Ouellet, Blaikie, Mrs. Bourgault, Messrs. Cooper, Ellis and Friesen).

Mr. Speaker, I believe that even if there are times, and we had that experience the other night . . . personally, when I was listening to the Members, specially the backbenchers who were all present and who resisted every temptation to quietly leave the House at one or two o'clock in the morning or to cut the procedure short—the fact is Hon. Members were anxious to affirm their sovereignty over this House. It was the Members of this House who exercised their authority as Members by electing you, Mr. Speaker. To me it was a historic gesture and a wise reform that will serve Parliament and Canada well.

I was proud to be able to appoint this committee, and as Prime Minister, I endorsed all its recommendations. The new procedure whereby the Speaker is elected, the scrutiny of appointments by Governor in Council by the standing committees—here we have a major opportunity for the Opposition to question Government appointees. We have had appointments where the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) had the dignity, the great dignity to say that although perhaps partisan, the appointment was a very good one, in referring to Mrs. Windsor.

It was an opportunity to bring these people before the parliamentary committees, and to do so instead of making acrimonious statements in the House. We are using this new procedure to ask Canadian men and women to appear before the Members of this House.

I urge the Opposition and in fact all Members to make use of this instrument, which enhances the independence, powers, resources and responsibilities of the standing committees of the House. Private Members will have greater influence and independence as a result of these changes in the powers of committees and in the way private Members' Bills are dealt with, and also through opportunities for representations to the Board of Internal Economy.

This Government had made a commitment, in fact several . . . we are getting there, a basic commitment which may not be headline news, but it directly concerns the core and cornerstone of our democracy, namely the House of Commons, and as Prime Minister, I had the privilege of appointing this tripartite committee and endorsing each of its recommendations, and I think that perhaps not today, but in the years to come, when we look back . . . I think parliamentarians and Canadians will look at the McGrath Report and say: We had then a Prime Minister, a Government and a Parliament who were trying to improve our parliamentary system, and I think that is something to be proud of, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that two years ago we set objectives for national reconciliation, economic renewal, social justice and constructive internationalism. These are matters of great substance. If you are successful with regard to these, you conclude with a noble vision of Canada. It means you have done a job for Canadians. What could be more noble than those four principles that we set out? I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that in the minds of some it lacks the panache of a big society, a just society, a good society, a good deal, a fair deal or a big deal. But what this does is, it represents solid and substantial accomplishment for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: My Right Hon. friend is quite right when he says that we ought to take a look at the record. I agree with him. We have never said that the record would be perfect. We never campaigned on a platform of perfection. The Liberals had that market cornered. All we said was that we would work hard in a serious, sustained way to try to improve the lot of all Canadians.

National reconciliation deals with federal-provincial relations. What have we done? We have annualized First Ministers Meetings; we have quarterly meetings on trade with provincial participation. For the first time the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) arranged to have provincial representatives along with him in a federal delegation at the meetings of GATT in Uruguay.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As to historic ERDA agreements, over 100 have been signed. Four billion dollars has been put together in joint programs with federal and provincial governments; the Western, the Atlantic and the Nova Scotia Accords.

[Translation]

The final solution to the problem, the ultimate solution to the eternal problem of French-speaking people—and I come at the right time to say more about this—which problem has been disturbing Quebec and Canada for two decades because Quebec was told: You Quebec Francophones will heed only the guidelines laid down by Ottawa. We, the Government in Ottawa, will tell you what to do. As a result our relations with one of our mother countries, France, nearly broke up. The Government which I have the honour to lead with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and others found a formula not only to solve the eternal problem of French-speaking people but to do so with every consideration for Canadian unity, and so we attended the first summit of French-speaking people and the second will take place here in Canada, in Quebec City.

[English]

Federal-provincial relations are very important, Mr. Speaker. In my judgment they are the laboratory of a federal state within which great things can happen; economic progress, social progress? Nothing can happen when the well is poisoned. Anyone who stands up here and tells you he has all the answers has a real problem. Anyone who tells you that he can run this country by issuing directives from 24 Sussex Drive has a very poor understanding of Canada. It is tough. It is difficult. The easy way is to issue directives. The easy way is to say it is going to be Ottawa's way and that is it. The tough way is to take the time to listen, to take the time to meet, to understand the regions and to respect their points of view. It lacks the panache. It lacks the headlines of the brutality of saying you are going to do it my way. It takes patience, it takes respect and it takes skill. That is what we are doing because it works and it is good for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1310)

Mr. Mulroney: On his trading mission in Japan the other day, Premier Peterson of Ontario told prospective investors that we had created in Canada a new and positive working relationship. I want to tell Premier Peterson that I am grateful for his words and his support because that is important to building Canada. So, Mr. Speaker, we have made progress in the area of federal-provincial relations.

The next item we touched upon was economic renewal. These are facts. My right hon. friend can check them out if he disagrees with them. I think he would agree that today the bank rate is the lowest it has been in eight years. Interest rates are down significantly across the board from the prime rate to mortgage rates. Unemployment is at its lowest in five years. The deficit is down for the first time in six years. Program spending is down substantially for the first time in 40 years. Clearly, we are on track. Clearly we are going about it the right way. Perhaps it lacks some glamour and pizzazz but it is tough, hard, brutal work trying to put one's arms around government spending that was out of control, bringing it back—

Mr. Broadbent: Trying to put your arms around it?

Mr. Mulroney: I must say that when the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) admitted the other night that his father was a Conservative, I was tempted to put my arms around him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Now, Mr. Crosbie, is that legal?

Mr. Broadbent: You are supposed to ask Ray now.

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, contrary to what happened in other countries—and Canada ranks among the 24 leading industrial nations, those where the employment rate has been rising most rapidly—last year our economy grew at a rate which only Japan was able to surpass. I should think that this is a spectacular performance on the part of Canada. Our competitors are now beginning to realize that Canada is growing stronger still. I think that such a success does all Members of the House very proud.

[English]

I suppose that if one wants to get an idea of how we are doing, and if one does not want to listen to the Government or to the Opposition, then perhaps one should listen to our competitors, the people against whom we do business in a friendly way around the world. According to the 1986 report of the European Management Forum, Canada has moved in two years from eleventh to sixth place in improving our competitive position among the 24 leading industrialized nations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: When the assessment involves attitudes to Government, political stability and general wellbeing, Canada jumped from thirteenth place a year ago to seventh today. In categories examining such things as research and development, so vital to the welfare of our children and their future, the possibilities of regional expansion—

[Translation]

For instance, in certain regions of Quebec where research and development are so important, as is our commitment to universities through federal-provincial co-operation, people are wondering how our competitors who also focus on research, development and productivity can be in a position to appreciate what we are doing. So there you are.

[English]

In the category examining such things as research and development and adaptability to future requirements, the ranking of our abilities to innovate and look forward, Canada climbed to ninth place from fourteenth two years ago and that is solid accomplishment for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I do not know. Maybe I am wrong and maybe I will hear a less flattering impression from the Leader of the NDP, but who knows? He said he voted Conservative 11 times the other day. I was a little concerned because, as we found out in Pembina, with votes like that, with the NDP voting for us, when the Conservatives get a majority of 232, the NDP declare a moral victory and go home.

Mr. Riis: You lost 33,000.

Mr. Mulroney: I want to be careful.

Mr. Broadbent: Don't count on it. We will see you in two years there.

Mr. Mulroney: I do want to be careful.

Mr. Riis: Thirty-three thousand down the tube.

Mr. Mulroney: Was that someone from B.C.? Did I hear from a socialist from B.C.? I thought he would be out there helping the cause.

Mr. Riis: The way you helped in Pembina?

Mr. Mulroney: Where are they all, anyway, those NDP'ers? I think they are all knocking on doors out there in B.C. and, you know, that was a smart move. I think the boys need the help.

So this is how others see us and judge our performance, on vital, objective international standards. Clearly, as the OECD pointed out, and as the EMF pointed out, when we are judged according to international objective criteria, Canada is in a position of strength and is growing stronger.

Oh, yes, one thing about which some Hon. Members like to talk and regurgitate, with good reason, is the phrase: "jobs, jobs, jobs". We have created 560,000 of them since we came to office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And no less important is the fact that— and this gives one an indication of the fundamental differences between the approaches—85 per cent of that record number of jobs are full-time jobs whereas, of the small number of jobs created by our predecessors, only 19 per cent were full-time jobs. That is the fundamental difference between the Conservative and the Liberal approaches.

Also important and consistent with our commitment is that, of the jobs that have been created, 318,000 jobs went to women. That too is important.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I will not waste much time with regard to comments made by the Leader of the NDP or the Leader of the Opposition, but I would just point out to those who will hear criticisms of us today and will hear predictions of gloom and doom and catastrophe around the corner, just remember that when we brought in our Budgets and economic statements, the Leader of the NDP said that in terms of jobs, the net effect of the change in programs the Prime Minister promised would unquestionably be a net loss during the next fiscal year of between 50,000 and 100,000 jobs. Wrong again, Mr. Leader of the NDP. We created jobs.

The Leader of the Opposition indicated that we would lose 125,000 jobs as a result of the Budget of May, 1985. Not only have we not lost 150,000 jobs, not only have we not lost 50,000 or 75,000 jobs, we have created in excess of 550,000 new jobs for Canada and that, I think, is good news for all Members of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1320)

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: With respect to social policy, I am referring to the social policy for our fellow Canadians and the quality of life in this country, well of course we are going to maintain our social programs which all of us consider as vested rights, the fruit of a social consensus, they are an integral part of the very fabric of our society.

Our programs can be improved and adapted to meet new requirements, of course. The problem, if we want to be reasonable and serious, still lies in the fact that we must find the money to finance these programs. It is not easy. If we print money, it has a direct impact on the debt and on inflation. If we make cut-backs, then we create social problems. If we borrow, our young Canadians will be burdened with a heavier debt to repay. This is a complex and formidable dilemma for any Government.

We are trying to proceed by widening our economic base and creating more jobs, creating enough jobs so that the number of contributors will increase at the same rate as the number of beneficiaries.

For one thing I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that post-war Canadian men and women who have built Canada as we know it today are entitled to enjoy peace of mind, and financial security, and enjoy it they will.

We also raised the issue of women during our election campaign, and I think that the Speech from the Throne highlights a whole series of challenging possibilities to promote justice at long last with respect to the status of women.

We had also indicated that we would quite simply double an element of a wide-ranging program in favour of women, that during our first mandate we would double the percentage of jobs held by women on boards, agencies and federal councils, including as I said later the positions of deputy ministers in the upper echelons of the Public Service of Canada. I can tell you that our objective to double such numbers has almost been reached, and we will be doing even more in the course of our mandate. Considering our performance, you will see that we have already done better than our predecessors in two years and we are well on our way to setting records in this vital sector.

[English]

In the area of social justice we are all trying to build a society which is more tolerant and more caring. There is important news on this. We know that in Canada important news does not always make it to the front pages. However, last year the average income of Canadian families increased in real terms for the first time since 1980 and the incidence of low income among families declined for the first time since 1980. That is not a miracle, but it is solid progress.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We have tried as well to serve the men and women who have served our country so well—our veterans. I pay tribute to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) who does an outstanding job on their behalf.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Wait till you see him in this job in 10 or 15 years. He is getting better every day. Thanks to the Minister, pension applications are now being processed in half the time previously taken and the percentage of favourable decisions has doubled. Greater pension benefits are being extended to veterans and their spouses. Age limits for dependent children are being extended and educational assistance to eligible orphans has been increased. More generous financial arrangements for former prisoners of war have been made. The Aging Veterans Program has been expanded. An additional 18,000 veterans have become eligible for this program. May I say,

Mr. Speaker, that this is a tribute, not only to the Minister, but to his record of service to Canada in times of war as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: All widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 are now eligible to receive spouses allowance benefits. A program of older worker adjustment is being negotiated with the provinces. Those are a few items in regard to our commitment to social justice and a more caring society.

The fourth pillar, which is no less important given the value traditions of Canada, involved our commitment to constructive internationalism wherein we undertook to conduct Canadian foreign policy with respect for our valued traditions. The traditions of other Prime Ministers and other Secretaries of State for External Affairs who have served Canada have profiled the kind of nation that we are and we have tried to enhance that around the world.

For example, in the area of African relief in which the Secretary of State for External Affairs led in Canada and in the west with commitments that galvanized support—with the help of the media and others it is true, and I am honoured to say that—the response of Canada was tremendous. That is a salute and tribute to the leadership of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and that of Ambassador Lewis at the U.N. in the special U.N. session on Africa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We have strengthened our NATO contribution in Europe. We have accepted new peace-keeping responsibilities in the Sinai. We finally gained admission for Canada into the G-7 at Tokyo. Afterwards a famous Harvard professor observed in his Toronto Star column that "Canada won an important economic victory". He added that "establishing the G-7—may be the most constructive international economic development since Breton Woods in 1944". I want to thank Tom Axworthy for that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In the family it was always known that Tom was a man of discernment and judgment. Spend more time with the kid. It will do you good.

On the question of leadership on South Africa, from Nassau to London, Canada played a vigorous and constructive role. Canada picked up from the leadership provided by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. We have continued to wage a struggle against the evil of apartheid. We have waged a struggle on behalf of all Canadians against racism, against the concept that if you are black you are inferior. This is fundamentally unacceptable to Canada and to Canadians and we shall persevere.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Our position, as set out by the Secretary of State for External Affairs here and at the United Nations, in London, in Nassau and around the world, is that we will be persuasive, principled, and victorious. This country never has and never shall accept the notion that an evil, rooted in a political concept, gains any legitimacy with the passage of time. On the contrary, we take the view that non-white South Africans have been abused for decades. This abuse and this corruption of the word "democracy" must come to an end, and Canada stands with all those who want to bring it to an urgent end.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: We want to play a more important role in international affairs. As we did in my view concerning the Francophonie, after developing with the Governments of Quebec and New-Brunswick and others a formula for allowing that major French component of our Canadian personality to finally express itself on the occasion of the first Summit of the Francophonie. We want to play a larger role in international affairs, but a role that is realistic, related to this country's rank in the world. We want to strengthen our links with international bodies in which in my view we play a significant role—the Commonwealth of Nations, the United Nations, to pursue the fight against apartheid. And within the Francophonie, we want to go on exercising our vital French-speaking dimension—in NATO, to honour our defence commitments, and in the OECD and the Economic Summit, to behave as loyal partners and to win acceptance for freer trade.

[English]

In the U.N.'s first committee on arms control a resolution of the importance of verification of disarmament agreements was adopted for the first time ever. It was a Canadian resolution. This month Canada will host an international symposium on improving techniques for verification of nuclear tests. The meetings which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has held around the world, the meetings which I have been privileged to attend with President Reagan, NATO leaders and Secretary Gorbachev, have been committed to the proposition that the greatest goal of this Parliament and any parliament in any jurisidiction must be the procurement of a durable peace. Our children and the children of the world insist that parliamentarians come up with nothing less.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is a brief summary of the record of a lot of hard work and a lot of effort for two years. It is not perfect. The facts are there and the Canadian people will judge. They will make their value judgments on how hard we have worked, how well we have tried and if we have succeeded. That is what it is all about.

In the next two, two and a half, three, four, five or six years, we will continue our work. Some urgent matters attract our attention absolutely immediately. For example, the problems affecting Canadian agriculture. I believe that no Government in recent history has been as sensitive to the needs of Canadian agriculture. We know that our grain farmers have been hit with a double whammy—low international commodity prices and the unfair subsidies of other grain producing countries. The Government of Canada has doubled cash advances under the Advance Payments for Crops Act. We have amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act to allow for payments prior to spring seeding when farmers need it the most. We promised to cut farm fuel taxes and we did.

• (1330)

The Government knows that Canadian farmers expect Brian Mulroney and the Government of Canada to sell their grain and, by God, we are going to do it. That is why we were pleased to sign yesterday a five-year grain deal with the Soviet Union to sell 25 million tonnes of wheat and feed grains over the next five years. That is the answer to the problems of western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Canadian grain farmers are hurting through no fault of their own. We always said that Canada is a country that would respect and reward productivity. Our Canadian agricultural community, through the devotion and hard work of our farmers has grown to become one of the most productive elements of our society, and is now being penalized through no fault of its own. They are not being rewarded for their productivity, they are being penalized. They are being hurt but have done nothing wrong.

There is a trade war going on in agricultural subsidies which we are in the process of helping to resolve. While that is for the long term, farmers need help and action now. I am pleased to announce today that we will be working closely over the next month with Premier Devine and other provincial Governments to devise an effective financial assistance program to enhance the cash flow of Canadian grain farmers. Initial estimates of the assistance required are that it will amount to approximately $1 billion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The work of defining the dimensions of the problem has already started and will continue in the coming days and weeks. We will be working closely with provincial Governments and farm organizations to devise an appropriate assistance package.

Our Treasury is not deep or rich enough to compete with the subsidies being thrown at farmers in western Europe and the United States. That is exactly what is taking place. This point was made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in Tokyo, by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) in Cairns, Australia, and it is the point that we made in Vancouver and Edmonton the other day when we met with farm organizations. They know full well that this war will deplete both Treasuries and, if allowed to go unchecked, could devastate the notion of more liberalized trade around the world. This invidious way of undermining traditional markets and subsidizing farmers to produce something for which there is no market at a cost that no one can afford must stop. It is unacceptable. This is the problem that the Secretary of State is dealing with so effectively in the long term. We are operating on those two fronts and we will participate with others in bringing about an ultimate solution to this extremely complex and debilitating problem. In the short term, however, I am telling western farmers and farmers in general that they have made sacrifices, have done nothing wrong, and we will not allow them to pay the bill for a problem over which they have no control and which they did not create in the first place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We have also taken action in regard to western energy. In the last campaign we made some very specific commitments. I ask people to examine them objectively. We said that we would dismantle the National Energy Program, and we did. We said that we would remove the 25 per cent back-in, and we did. We said that we would abolish the PGRT, and we did. We said that we would defend western Canada's interest in energy, and we did. I am confident that because of this and the co-operation between the Government of Alberta, the Government of Canada, and the industry, it will come back and there will be a better and more promising day for energy in western Canada. Once again it will be the engine of growth that we know it can be.

We place great emphasis on family values and the institution of the family. The instruments that we have used range from legal reforms to tax measures designed to protect parents and children and provide income security. Our social policy agenda is to build on the system of social programs that have been developed in Canada.

[Translation]

Our Canadian family is the cornerstone of all decent social initiatives. The Canadian family will be defended in this Parliament by this Government, at all times and in all circumstances.

[English]

In a changing society, approaches to social issues must change along with it. With an increasing number of families in which both parents are working, it is only logical that we as parliamentarians must move on child care. With more threats to the fabric of our family life, it is the Government's duty to act in response. That is why we will be moving in this session against pornography, child abuse and drug abuse. I know that certain elegant eyebrows were raised when I referred to the drug problem as an epidemic. As the Edmonton police chief, Bob Lunney, stated, anyone who does not believe that there is a drug epidemic in his city "must be living on another planet".

I do not know what else to call it when we have a $10-billion-a-year illegal drug industry, when the total value of illegal drugs seized by Canada Customs in 1985 increased by 142 per cent over the previous year, when seizures of illegal drugs in the first six months of 1986 exceeded the total value for all of 1985 by some $90 million, when the cocaine conviction rate doubled between 1980 and 1984, and when dangerous new drugs like crack are becoming prevalent in the United States and are now readily available in Canada. I do not care what some fancy Dans think, I am telling you that drugs are a problem in the workplace, in the schoolyards and on the street corners, and it is time that Canada recognized the gravity of this problem.

We will move in a number of areas, including education and enforcement. We must reduce both the supply and the demand. All of us in public life must provide the leadership, from the community level to the national level.

We are also confronting social challenges, including day care, battered women, drug abuse, missing children, child sexual abuse and pornography. I was dismayed to hear the Leader of the New Democratic Party suggest that there was nothing new, nothing of importance in the Throne Speech when, in fact, I believe I heard some other commentator say that if the Government is able to follow through and find the money for a number of these programs, the Government has put its finger clearly on the most debilitating problems confronting Canadian society, the Canadian family and Canadian women. The commentator states: "Bravo, if you can do this or do part of it, you will have done a great deal for Canada".

[Translation]

But there is still much to be done, Mr. Speaker, in other areas such as small businesses and entrepreneurship, science and technology—and I think there are more practical references to that in the Speech from the Throne—competitivity, deficit reduction, tax reform, international trade strategies, the Canada-US trade initiative, and regional developement.

[English]

We talked about Arctic sovereignty and regional development. The Government of Canada, on behalf of the people of Canada, very simply asserts complete sovereignty over the Canadian Arctic and will take the appropriate measures to ensure that we can implement that. We recognize that it is not easy. We recognize it is an enormous area, that sovereignty requires a visible, national presence. Canada will begin by constructing one of the most powerful ice-breakers in the world to enhance our sovereign rights and to contribute to the development of the North.

• (1340)

Other measures include more research on polar conditions, defence training exercises in the Arctic and the establishment of a national park.

[Translation]

In the area of regional development, federal Governments have for too long applied their policies as they pleased. The result has been lengthy delays, undue waiting periods, a mountain of frustration and probably many good opportunities wasted.

[English]

One way in which we can do this is to improve upon the decision-making process. The best way we can do this is to give more responsibility and authority to our officials who are working and living, for example, in the Atlantic area. We happened on a situation which I am sure my friend, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), encountered when he was in the ministry. We put together a package with regard to the Atlantic Enterprise Fund a few months ago. A few weeks ago at Cabinet when I made my regular inquiry as to how it was going, how it was helping small business in the area, I was told—and these are the kinds of problems which have nothing to do with partisanship, but have to do with life—that a small businessman in Atlantic Canada who was seeking that kind of assistance to create jobs was told that he needed 14 signatures by 14 different levels of government before he could get the money to create a few jobs in Chatham, New Brunswick. That is what is killing regional development. We have to go to the regions and let the people in the regions begin to decide what is good for them.

What regional development has lacked, I think, is flexibility, accessibility and sufficient authority on the ground in the region to get the job done. To achieve that, our response in this area and elsewhere is the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. I know there have been other agencies. I know there have been other tries. There has been a lot of money thrown at the problem. We acknowledge without partisanship that it has not worked. If money solved the problem, there would be no one unemployed. If the other agencies worked, there would be prosperity in the Atlantic Provinces. If traditional formulas had any benefit whatsoever, everybody would be at work. We just listened to the Member of Parliament for Restigouche (Mr. Girard) who is from a riding where 20 per cent or 25 per cent of the people are out of work and have no hope.

[Translation]

But there is no hope in Northern New Brunswick. However, it is not because of a lack of officials. It is not because of the programs themselves, of the financing or of dishonesty, but rather because people do not understand that the best results will come from the regions themselves in co-operation with the provinces, the municipalities and the various other groups in our society, and no true federal Government would say:

[English]

You are going to do it our way. The federal Government is now going to say: "Let us devise a way together. You take the lead. We will create the atmosphere and co-operate with you to create jobs".

I know that one of the most daunting challenges we still face as a nation is the issue of trade. It is daunting for us and daunting for the Leader of the Official Opposition who has the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Forst Garry (Mr. Axworthy) as his trade critic. But it is important. Canada is a trading nation.

We export nearly 30 per cent of all we produce as compared with only 10 per cent for the U.S. and 15 per cent for Japan. We are the only major industrialized nation without secure access to an internal market of 100 million people. We are told we are going to lose our culture. That should be explained to Charles de Gaulle. Does one think that Charles de Gaulle

[Translation]

—the President of the Republic, the great defender of francophony and universal France—

[English]

—would have taken France into a common market, into a liberalized trading bloc, if he thought there was any doubt as to the defence of the French language and French traditions? I say it is nonsense. Canada's culture and dignity are strong enough to stand up in international trading blocs, create jobs at home and strengthen our culture and identity. We are not afraid to get out and try our best to compete with the best in the world. We know there is not a market big enough to provide the jobs we need.

The Government has managed to bring unemployment down since we have been here, but not enough. How are we going to do it? Trade is not a theory. Trade is not something that some professor goes on The Journal to talk about in abstract terms. Trade means jobs. Trade comes from investment, foreign and national investment. Trade enhances our productivity. It makes us more competitive. It strengthens us and gets us into new markets.

There is the diffusion of technology. It strengthens the cash flow of companies. There is a reinvestment factor which creates employment as well. Trade means jobs.

There is nothing exclusive about it. We are not talking about trade with the United States to the exclusion of trade around the world. On the contrary. The initiatives we have launched with Japan, with the Pacific Rim, with China, Korea and around the world, with the leadership, if I may say, provided by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the GATT, indicates we are on two tracks, international, multilateral initatives at the GATT, where we hope further to liberalize international trade and create opportunities, and a new deal with our largest trading partner, the most dynamic and richest market in the world on our doorstep. We say we can make a good deal for Canada which will bring benefits to Canada and provide new opportunities for growth and jobs for Canadian youth.

Let the timorous and the fearful fret. Let them say that Canada cannot compete internationally. Let them talk about the protectionism they want here. "Protect us", they say, "we are not big enough. Protect us against les méchants de l'extérieur. Give us the protection. Build tariff walls". This is for the weak and for those who care not about Canada. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are competitive. Canadians are courageous. Canadians are daring, and I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when the history of this day is written, it shall be recorded who the daring were, and the daring were those who had confidence in Canada and in themselves.

We are moving as well in the area of comprehensive tax reform. We want a system which is more equitable and comprehensible.

• (1350)

[Translation]

As regards the Constitution, we have begun preparation for a new round of discussions which could bring Quebec finally to sign our Constitution under completely acceptable conditions. We all agree that this is a serious gap in our national life and that the situation must be remedied. The Constitution is the supreme social contract of our nation; it is, in fact, the deal made by the Fathers of Confederation. We all have a responsibility, which I readily accept, to convince the Premiers to consider the claims of Quebec with understanding and flexibility.

We are not going, as I mentioned in my speech in Sept-Îles and as I have been saying continuously since then, to reopen everything, and the Quebec Premier is in complete agreement on this point. We must proceed with care and Senator Murray, federal Minister Murray, together with his counterpart Mr. Rémillard, is taking positive steps in this direction. Unless we feel there is a reasonable chance for all parties to carry out the negotiations to a successful conclusion, we will not reopen the constitutional debate. There is no doubt that Canada will have ultimately to find an acceptable formula for Quebec, for the Quebec of today. It is indeed a province with a difference. We have different roots, a different culture and the French language which is different... Thank goodness, it is a language which contributes to our Canadian identity.

All First Ministers who are now unavoidably involved in the constitutional game and negotiations should consider this new formula positively, with open-mindedness and generosity, because all Honourable Members would certainly agree that we have a strong, noble and even moral obligation to try and find a proper formula which would make it possible for Quebec to definitely return to the Canadian fold.

[English]

On behalf of all my colleagues in the Government and on behalf of our Party I say something that I suppose is obvious. We have never claimed in this Party or in this Government to have any monopoly on virtue or wisdom. I suppose that is clear. We came into office, as we said at the time, with our imperfections. We did not ask for a lifetime contract; and I suppose it is unlikely that we will receive one. However, we are striving day in and day out for a better Canada. We are the trustees of those things which our people hold dear, the aspirations of one generation for the next. Our Government's Speech from the Throne, like the legislation which the distinguished Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) will set out before the House, has but one goal, that is, to build a stronger, fairer, more united Canada to face the great challenges of the next century.

Our program for renewal is about change, about catching up for time lost, for rebuilding our economy, our regions, to boost competitiveness, productivity, technology and new market opportunities. The Government does not accept a second rate approach or a second rate Canada. Our record shows what we can do as Canadians—opening up the North, strengthening our regions, building our cities, and developing technology and communications for all Canadians.

Canada must continue to grow to be able to give comfort to those who need it. That is the nature of our citizenship. We do not turn people away; we give people help. Canada needs the kinds of new industries and new technologies which break the old patterns of regional disparities and social inequalities so that Atlantic Canada, northern Canada and western Canada have the same kinds of unrivalled economic possibilities that we now see in Ontario and other regions of the country. We are happy for that prosperity in central Canada.

I am concerned and convinced that we can do better by working together, management and workers, our scientists, our farmers, our forestry workers and our industries which are ready to meet the challenges which await us.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I indicated and I say so without hesitation that we are not the sole and quiet possessors of the truth. We know that we can count on the most formidable resources: Canadians themselves. Together with them, we will build a country which is stronger, more united and just, more daring in its ideals and more dedicated in its efforts to achieve them.

[English]

As we build the new wealth the country requires we shall expand the hopes and dreams of our citizens for a new Canada. I speak of the health care system that protects us when we are sick, of the pensions that help us when we are old, of the social system that supports us in times of difficulty, of equalization payments that ensure that in Canada a disadvantaged region is never a second class region, of a commitment to women who deserve a fair shake and to new Canadians who arrive at our shores and who deserve nothing less.

As we proceed into the next century we seek, as I am sure do all Members of the House, advances in health care technology which hold the promise of controlling disease and easing the pain and suffering which afflict so many here and around the world. We seek the ability to begin the process to feed a hungry world and begin the eradication of poverty and racism from this planet. We seek a world united in its approach to space exploration and development. In our Speech from the Throne we indicated Canada's desire and willingness to play an even more comprehensive role in the peaceful pursuit of space. We seek a better quality of life, a cleaner environment, a renaissance of the arts and the learning. We seek an end to arms escalation, and we seek the pursuit of a more durable peace.

We are embarking upon a national endeavour to try to prepare this nation for the new world of the 21st century. It is an undertaking no less important and no less grand than the carving of this nation out of the wilderness and the bonding of it by a narrow strip of steel, the bringing in of western Canada, the building of the heart of Canada. Like any great undertaking it will require sacrifice, steadfast resolve and a clarity of purpose from us all.

As a former Prime Minister and a distinguished Member of this House, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, enunciated over 30 years ago:

> We have but one love, Canada; one purpose, its greatness; one aim, unity of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Leaders of the three Parties and I think you would find agreement to provide, as we have in the past, sufficient time for the Leader of the New Democratic Party to complete his speech, notwithstanding the understanding with respect to the length of speeches.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is suggesting that the speech of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) be allowed to continue beyond the normal time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to observe at the outset that I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) quote very early on in his remarks favourable comments about the performance of the Government of Canada, all of which originated outside of Canada. He then went on to quote none other than Tom Axworthy of The Toronto Star. I wish to say to the Prime Minister that the last time I heard only foreign sources quoted about a favourable performance of the Government of Canada and then heard Tom Axworthy quoted it was by Pierre Elliott Trudeau when he spoke just before the 1979 election. I am not sure that the direction of his thought is the most constructive for the longevity of his Government. However, I now wish to get on to the serious matter before us, which is the debate on the Speech from the Throne which we heard here in Ottawa two days ago.

• (1400)

Canadians heard, as indeed they did again today, the words "national reconciliation", "social justice", and "economic renewal". The Prime Minister not only used those words again in the House today, but he said that they were laudable in terms of establishing goals for Canada. I should like to say in terms of my Party that we as well think they are quite laudable goals. And if we did a survey on all streets in Canada, the people of Canada would agree.

[Translation]

If we talk about this with Francophones in the Province of Quebec or with people in British Columbia, they will all agree with the Canadian Government's objectives.

[English]

However, if one wants to look beyond general phrases which men and women of good will in all Parties can accept, one must look at the substance of the detail which is intended to flesh out such laudable goals. If one looks at the Throne Speech for the substance of details which concerns the ordinary person in the land, one finds things lacking.

I will come back to some favourable things I want to say about the Government in terms of foreign affairs, reconciliation, and its attitude in discussions with the provinces. Indeed I say to the Prime Minister in this context that I am on record as admitting that I was wrong in the past in my forecast about job creation. I say right now that the Government has not been all bad. However, if one looks at what most concerns the average person in the land, man or woman, senior citizen or young person, if one looks at the details intended to flesh out those general goals in the Throne Speech, one will find them remarkably deficient.

Let us look at the question of jobs. We find no commitment on specific levels of job fulfilment or unemployment reduction. We find no job targets. That is indicative of what the Government is all about. The deficit targets were repeated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We find deficit reduction targets but no targets in terms of reducing unemployment levels.

Let us look at the question of income and taxation. Just a moment ago the Prime Minister boasted that in 1985, for the first time in a number of years, real incomes had actually risen. However, he forgot to mention that net disposable income went down. Why did it go down? It was because the Conservative Government imposed some $1,300 in taxes on the average Canadian, the worst increase by any Government in modern history. This is why disposable income went down.

Let us look at the issue of women's equality, which is profoundly important to Canadians of our generation. What they are most notably pressing for, apart from affirmative action programs with teeth upon which the Government reneged, is a specific commitment to child care—day care services. We did not get a commitment in the Throne Speech to the kinds of minimum spending for which men and women and groups across the country have called. Once again we got a commitment simply to talk further about the possibility of establishing child care.

I come now to the question of farmers, particularly grain producers. In his speech the Prime Minister said something about the idea of a deficiency payment. I want the farming people of Canada, particularly those of western Canada, to note with care what the Prime Minister said. Grain producers in this land, second to none in the world, are facing intense competition with an American Treasury which is subsidizing American farmers and with European Treasuries which have been bailing out European farmers. They wanted a deficiency payment. They wanted a commitment. What did they get from the Prime Minister today? Did they get a commitment of an additional $1 billion in funding from the federal Government to go into a deficiency payment? Not at all. If we listen to the words with care, we find that we got another commitment to talk about the need to provide financial assistance to grain producers in the neighbourhood of $1 billion. Again it raises all the questions about the credibility of the Government. Is it new money? Is it to be coming in the form of loans? Is it to be coming in the form of existing programs? Is it to be cost shared with the other prairie Governments? All these questions must be asked. If the Government wanted to deliver, as the Government of Canada ought to want to deliver in terms of the agricultural crisis, the Prime Minister ought to have risen to his feet and said: "Here is the money. It is new federal funds and farmers will get it", not that it will be talked about.

We can now expect—and I will be very blunt in this—all through the coming days in the election which is taking place in the Province of Saskatchewan that the Government of Canada will negotiate. That is what it will do. It will negotiate. It will talk about its package. Maybe we will have some new money; maybe we will not. Maybe it will be loans; maybe it will not. Then, after the election is over, we will find out the truth. The people of Canada found out the truth about the Government and about how many promises it has broken in the past two years, and the people of Saskatchewan will not be taken in by this.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is doing some heckling. I hope he returns to Saskatchewan on the weekend and explains what the Prime Minister has said. More concretely, I hope he goes back to Saskatchewan and says on behalf of the Government of Canada: "Here is the money, here is the cheque, made out by the federal Government". There should be no negotiations. He should say: "Here is the money"; that is what he should do.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will be there.

Mr. Broadbent: I will believe it when I see it. At this point I want to say, because I think it is appropriate in the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, something about what we in our Party understand the people of Canada really want from their Governments. It seems to me that it is not too complex. I think the people of Canada, not unlike democracies elsewhere in the world, want honesty. They do not want miracles. They do not want false expectations provided by Parties of the left, right, or centre. They want some straightforward talk and some straightforward promises. Then they want the Government to live up to them. Also I think the people of Canada want—and they share this aspiration with people of other democratic lands—access on the basis of equality to all the means which a rich land such as ours has at its disposal for them to develop their capacities and talents, for them to have a qualitatively rich life, and for them in their private pleasures or their co-operative endeavours to have a higher level of human existence.

I should like to refer to something which is key or fundamental to the notion of equality. Our young people, whether they be in Cape Breton or on Vancouver Island, in southern Ontario or anywhere else in the land, ought to believe that they have the same chance of fulfilling their aspirations as anyone else.

When we read a novel or a short story by Alice Munro, watch Wayne Gretzky, listen to Angela Hewitt, or see a new movie by Denys Arcand, we as Canadians are proud of the high level of creativity in our land. I have simply named four people in diverse fields who have achieved not only high Canadian standards but high standards in the world. Canadians are proud of such accomplishment. In this context I say particularly for those who have come of age since World War II, that what they expect is for all of us in this land to have equal opportunity to reach such high individual standards of performance. That is key.

Finally, I think what the people of Canada anywhere in our land want is fairness. They do not want a free trip. They do not want something for nothing. A distinct minority wants that, just as I think it is a distinct minority who is greedy. The average person simply wants fair treatment. He or she wants fair pay for a fair day's work. People want a fair chance to get ahead to be whatever, a good plumber, a good hockey player, a good violin player, a good novelist, whatever they can be on the basis of that broad and pretty understandable criterion of fairness. If we take these broad goals, Mr. Speaker—and I do not think they are nebulous because they are broad—I think that we should apply them to the Throne Speech. We should have a look at our nation and ask the question, where have we been going? Have we really made progress in the implementation of these kinds of values without miraculous expectations or have we been going in the opposite direction? I think that when you look in a hard way, without gloom and doom but without rose coloured glasses either, but look honestly at what has been happening, it is not encouraging of the notion of equality and the concept of fairness.

• (1410)

Let me digress just for a second. If you say that the real test of a government ought to be what it was while in the 19th century when democratic governments first came into being, what was talked about then was that the goal of a democratic government ought to be to maximize the wellbeing of what then was called the common man. We have made some improvements, thank God, since then. We no longer use the phrase "common man". We are more likely to say the average man, the average woman or the average family. Without doubt the goal of democracies has been to use power fairly. The appropriate goal has been to use political power not to preserve elites, not to extend special benefits for those who already have them, but to use political power to break up some of those unfair advantages, to change the law which gives an unfair distribution of power and income in society to make it possible for the ordinary person to realize himself or herself.

It is for this reason that one asks such basic questions of a Throne Speech. Is it more likely that a farmer is going to continue farming as a result of this? Is it more likely that a young couple starting out in this land of ours is going to be able to buy its own home? Is it more likely now than 10 years ago that the son or daughter of a cab driver is going to be able to afford to get to university? Is it more likely that the gap between the rich and the poor, not only between the rich and the poor but the growing gap between the rich and the average in Canada, is going to be reduced? I think that if you ask these questions, Mr. Speaker, in looking either at the performance of this Government over the past two years or at the specifics, more particularly the absence of specifics in the Throne Speech, I regret to say the answer to all of these questions is in the negative, that the cab driver's children are facing a situation totally different from that which existed when I graduated. They can hardly afford the fees to go to university. If they come out of university, not only are wages in the manufacturing sector 5 per cent lower now than they were a few years ago but it is almost impossible to get a job. Women, contrary to some of the mythology that a lot of well-meaning people believe, still have the lowest paid jobs. Regrettably, the tendency is getting worse not better. The gap, as I indicated a minute ago, has not been changed yet by this Government. It is not even committed to change in the Throne Speech. The gap between the rich and the average in the country, not to mention the gap between the rich and the poor, will widen and not narrow.

I say that any test of fairness about Government—what democratic government is all about, especially in this very rich land of ours—that comes up with this conclusion should cause a government to move quickly and profoundly in concrete detail to change this pattern. But the truth is that Canada is becoming not more fair but less fair. The truth is that this need not be the case. The truth is that we had better start going in the opposite direction, let me say to the Prime Minister.

I just want to spend a few minutes on each of these particulars, to minimize in this context, if you like, the rhetoric but to raise what I think are appropriate questions that ought to be raised at this point in our history, such as about jobs and wages, for example.

I have already indicated that the recent trends are not encouraging. Wages in manufacturing are going down not up in comparison with the past. Women continue to be overwhelmingly working in low paid jobs. But what about jobs in general, without making the distinction in some circumstances that we ought to be making between men and women, and we must always keep in mind the inequality that women are experiencing?

I always ask myself when I see this kind of Throne Speech or Budget brought down by Ministers of Finance in the past, as I have seen in previous Liberal Throne Speeches and Budgets, why is it that this nation of ours at the federal level can set targets for inflation reduction, but not for unemployment reduction? We had a six and five program on wages and we set targets for deficit reduction. I will be polite; I do not know what kind of preoccupation the Minister of Finance has. We can set targets for deficits and for inflation, but we cannot set targets for jobs. If we can set targets for inflation and for deficit reduction, it is time in Canada that we set targets for reductions in unemployment levels and live up to them. I say that now, Mr. Speaker, particularly in the national context.

My home is the Province of Ontario. I grew up here, but I think that I now have a pretty good feeling for my nation as a whole. I have been relatively pleased that in the Province of Ontario, at least there has been economic growth, which is encouraging. But I noticed that there were 45,000 men and women lined up the other day trying to get jobs at an auto plant. Forty-five thousand in a line up. This is the 1980s, not the 1930s. If that is Ontario, think of the rest of Canada in recent years.

Think of Atlantic Canada which for so many years has been neglected economically. I know it is not easy to change that reality and I will come back to that point in a minute. I am just saying that the reality in Atlantic Canada is very bad for job opportunities. What about British Columbia our most western and most beautiful province? British Columbia took it for granted that among the top three in this land it was economically well off. Persistently now B.C. unemployment levels are the same as in Newfoundland. B.C. has been going downwards economically, and persistently so.

What do we get from this Government, Mr. Speaker? We get a new agency for Atlantic Canada. I even forget the name of it. It is a new bureaucratic structure. I do not knock bureaucratic structures as such. Bureaucrats if they do a job, do a good job. What I am saying here is that we have the name of a new agency whose job will be to provide jobs or organize for jobs in Atlantic Canada, but we did not get a penny of money committed to it. We are saying to the people of Atlantic Canada: "Here is a new agency, but do not ask us for any direct input or financial wherewithal to make it possible for more young people in Atlantic Canada to get jobs".

This attitude has to stop. We cannot just allow one part of Canada to continue to grow solidly while the rest sort of drift off as a result of unfortunate incidents in international market forces. A Government that cares has to intervene and do something about this. I say to the Prime Minister to put his fantasy of free trade behind him and make regional job strategy the number one priority in Canada.

Then there is the issue of income distribution and taxation. Anyone is naive if he or she argues at some time that there will be a complete equality in incomes. In other circumstances, I would be prepared to offer a moral argument as to why in fact that is not even desirable. However, what no one on either side of the House would contest is that the gap between the rich and the poor ought to be narrowing.

• (1420)

Because the rich are getting richer, we see interesting market trends. On the one hand, there are shops exclusively designed for people whose family income is around the $100,000 range. There has been a great growth in gadgetry, in the clothing industry and in very expensive automobiles on the one hand, and on the other hand, stores for the poorest of markets are developing. There are new markets at both ends of the extreme. This is commercial development that reflects the increasing polarization in the distribution of income. That, Mr. Speaker, is not desirable.

I could put it in quantitative terms. Some 20 years ago, the bottom 40 per cent of Canadians in terms of income distribution had only 16 per cent of the income and the top 40 per cent at that time had 65 per cent of the income. Now, 20 years later when surely to God we ought to have been making progress on this, we find out that the middle-income family has dropped back somewhat in terms of its share of the income, the top or richest Canadians have increased their share by 3 per cent, and of course the poor have less. I add right away that while this trend was going on in the last half a dozen years, it has been exacerbated in the past two years. Since the Conservatives have come to power, rather than reversing this increasing inequality in Canada, things have gotten worse because of very specific policies introduced by the Conservatives. I say to the Prime Minister that instead of worsening the situation and giving increased benefits to upper-income Canadians, it is time we stopped this drift to a more unfair society and made fairness the fundamental goal of Canadian politics.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne, the Government said it wanted to improve the revenue balance between personal income and other taxes. If we look at the figures, Mr. Speaker, we see that the two conservative budgets this Government has already given us have put a heavy burden on the average family, as I said before.

The average family with two children, for instance, will experience a considerable drop in non-taxable income within the next five years. A family with an income of $40,000 will lose almost $4,000 as a result of the fiscal policy of the Conservatives. A low-income family will lose more than $2,000. And meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, the incomes of the rich are increasing. We have here a perfect example of Conservative justice: the rich get richer and the poor get poorer. Mr. Speaker, my party and I cannot accept this Government's version of reality.

Mr. Speaker, what do the words: "improving the revenue balance" mean? They are in the Speech from the Throne. They don't mean that the average family's taxes will be reduced. They mean that the family will pay more by way of indirect taxes. That is what is happening. The Conservative Government, according to the Speech from the Throne, intends to reduce personal income tax, but at the same time, it is quite clear that this Government intends to increase all other taxes for these same families. It isn't fair, Mr. Speaker, and it is not acceptable to our party.

[English]

If we leave the question of personal income tax aside, there is another important aspect of the equity of the tax system that Canada has ignored for so many years, and that is, corporate taxes. My Party has talked about this for the last couple of years and recently we have produced some documentation. Perhaps it is having some influence at least on the vocabulary of the Government, and perhaps because Ronald Reagan has started to do something along these lines in the United States, the Conservative Government just might be prepared to do something in terms of serious tax reform in this country.

In the last 20 years, corporations have been paying a smaller and smaller percentage of the income taxes coming to Ottawa and individuals have been paying more. Once again, if one looks at the effect of the two Budgets we have received from the Conservative Government, one will see that instead of reversing this trend, it has been exacerbated. For the first time in Canadian history, in just a couple of years with the present tax structure being in place, corporations will pay something like only 18 per cent of the tax burden while individual Canadians will have to pay some 82 per cent of it. That, Mr. Speaker, is not acceptable.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider the matter in this context. I say to my honourable Conservative and Liberal friends in the House that they should consider the implications of the document produced by two of my colleagues a week ago. This document was based on Statistics Canada information and showed the following: 79,000 profitable Canadian companies are paying no income tax. I emphasize that. If a company is not making a profit, no one objects to its not paying taxes. Of course not. However, men and women who will be following this debate and who pay their taxes are more than a little curious to discover that there are 79,000 profitable companies that are not paying any taxes. Beyond that, they will discover that 64 of these companies had profits in excess of $25 million and did not pay a penny in tax.

There are a whole number of such corporations. The Power Corporation had profits of $152 million. The Argus Corporation had profits of $52 million. It paid no taxes. The Royal Bank has done very well. Profits to the Royal Bank just a couple of years ago were $358 million and it did not pay any tax. Not only that but it actually threw another loophole into the tax system and received revenue from the federal Government. The Royal Bank did not do badly. However, I do not want to make a joke of this because it is not a joke. It is not a joke at all.

Poor people are paying, average people are paying, pensioners are paying, fishermen are paying and auto workers are paying taxes. A bank clerk who works at the Royal Bank pays more taxes than the Royal Bank itself. That has to change, Mr. Speaker.

Again there is no commitment. This is what I am addressing myself to. In the Throne Speech, all we got was a commitment to change the distribution of tax benefits for individuals. I have not the slightest doubt that we are moving toward a form of value-added tax in the business sector, a tax that will be passed on to individuals, so the net effect of tax changes in Canada will not be that the average Canadian is going to pay less but that the average Canadian will pay at least the same amount or more. We think it is time the Government said that the average family should be paying less taxes and the Government made sure that that happens.

I want now to turn to the issue of equality between the sexes. I am not going to rattle off a whole lot of very specific items that I think ought to have been in the Throne Speech. However, as I mentioned earlier, there is one item which has immense symbolic significance because of what it says about the future direction of the Government and the future direction of social policy, that is, the child care issue.

● (1430)

If one goes across this land and looks at families of varying income levels and looks at studies that have been done about how so many children in our land are being left with inadequate care while both parents work to bring home income, it becomes very clear that we need a national child care program with lots of flexibility to meet the varying needs of various families.

The Government has so often moved close to making a commitment but again has not done so in the Throne Speech. It has committed itself to continuing discussions about the possibility of establishing a day care or child care program. The people who have come together in a national association to advocate a child care program have advocated the most minimal kind of spending. They asked for $320 million as a commitment in principle to this by the Government. That works out to approximately $68 per child in Canada. It is time for the Government to stop talking about child care and start delivering the goods by making a commitment to that kind of spending.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadian men and women want the Government to be honest and equitable. That is clear. They want a government that will meet its commitments and not waste public funds. The Prime Minister promised as much during the election campaign two years ago. I agreed with him at the time. It was necessary to get rid of Liberal practices. And he promised as much two years ago. However, the Conservative Government continues to take action which casts doubts on its integrity in this matter.

The Government has decided to relocate the site of a prison from Drummondville to Port-Cartier, in the Prime Minister's riding. That was a bad decision, Mr. Speaker. This kind of practice must stop. Instead of eliminating wasteful spending and increasing the efficiency of the public service, such a decision results in needless expenditures and raises some doubt about the honesty of this Government. It means that the taxpayers' money will continue to be wasted. It will cost $16 million more. This decision goes against the advice and the work of the officials who have been involved in this matter for some time. It is completely unacceptable, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

I want to turn briefly to international affairs. I think I have been appropriately critical in terms of the domestic policy of the Government. However, in terms of international affairs the Government has done many constructive things. With regard to the Prime Minister's attitude toward South Africa, I have not the slightest doubt about the depth and sincerity of his conviction expressed once again here today and about how much he loathes the institution and practice of apartheid. I heard from sources other than the Conservative Party about his performance at the Commonwealth Leaders' Conference. I heard nothing but praise for the tough-minded in-fighting which our Prime Minister did at that meeting on behalf of the people of Canada. I want to thank the Prime Minister for that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In the same context, when the Prime Minister was recently in British Columbia I was there at the same time. I was not in the same room, but I saw a report of the speech which he gave on the situation in Central America. The sentiments, values and goals expressed in that speech about the position of the Government of Canada are the goals, principles, and attitudes which my Party and I am sure the people of Canada endorse as well. I will add one specification to that, however. It seems to me that it is very important to recognize the importance of the Contadora process as the Government has done. The Government has repeated that, and I am sure it is totally sincere. However, to put it bluntly, and I regret this profoundly, the Americans are breaking international law no less seriously than the Soviet Union did in Afghanistan.

In terms of the World Court decision, we must go further. In terms of our role in this hemisphere, we cannot stand back and watch a very small nation like Nicaragua brutally assaulted by the present American administration. Whatever one thinks about the priorities of Nicaragua, they are their priorities and they have a right to establish them. I am pleased to see that surveys in the United States show that most of the American people do not support that kind of activity by their own Government.

I make a special appeal to the Prime Minister, who has spoken well on this issue. Having given support to the Contadora process I now urge the Government to follow the lead of the Governments of France and Sweden and embrace in principle the Contadora Treaty, which is an important extension of supporting the process of Contadora. In so doing we will make it increasingly clear through public statements that what the United States is doing is offensive to the belief of Canadians with regard to the imposition of the will of superpowers on others as well as being offensive to the whole notion of international law.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I was pleased to hear the Prime Minister reassert today his concern about disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament. I share the view that Canadian politicians of our generation should be doing all we can in this world to leave behind us a world in which kids, wherever they may be living, do not have the threat of a nuclear holocaust hanging over them. Our generation of politicians, whether American, Russian, Swedish, Australian or whatever, have a deep obligation to rid this planet of nuclear weapons.

In this context I want to ask the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to consider most seriously the report made last June by the special joint House-Senate committee which urged the Government of Canada to support the moratorium on nuclear testing. That would be a concrete move fully consistent with what the Government has said in the past and fully consistent with the values the Prime Minister expressed in the House today. I urge the Government of Canada to take this other step forward so that one day our world will be without nuclear weapons.

• (1440)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by saying that, as all Canadians are well aware, ours is one of the greatest countries in the world. However, it is possible to make our country more equitable and it is our responsibility to do so. We know what should be done. Let us do it!

[English]

I would like to move the following amendment to the motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner):

That the amendment be amended by adding the following words:

"and specifically that this House condemns the Government for failing to indicate its intentions with respect to,

1. protecting the interests of Canadian workers in bilateral trade negotiations with the United States, particularly in the forest industry;

2. positive initiatives to encourage economic growth, improve employment prospects and provide for greater fairness for Canadians in those economically depressed areas of Canada; and

3. improving the accessibility of affordable day care for all Canadian working parents.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is Friday afternoon and you and I, as experienced Members of the House of Commons, are well aware of the tranquility of Friday afternoon in the House of Commons. A quotation which comes to mind is: "the tumult and the shouting dies, the captains and the kings depart".

I am very pleased to participate this early on Friday afternoon and want to compliment the mover and seconder of the reply to the Speech from the Throne. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) and the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Girard) indicated the very great depth of talent that the Government has in the House. I do not recall in many Speeches from the Throne ever hearing two of the calibre that we were pleased to hear yesterday.

I also want to compliment you, Mr. Speaker, on your electoral success of the other night. I believe that some provinces can hold provincial elections faster than we were able to proceed, but the results justify the length of time that was taken. I am sure that you assume your heavy duties with the best wishes of everyone in the House.

I am pleased to participate in this debate as our Government embarks on the second half of its term. It is a time when our policies are well into the implementation phase. The economic and social indicators are sending back positive signs, as well as identifying which matters need further adjustment.

The people of my riding of Victoria have sent me to Parliament five times over the last 14 years. I believe that this is because my interests and views coincide very closely to the needs and views of my constituents. A large number of people of Victoria are senior citizens—I believe about 22,500. Others are retired individuals, both civilian and military. Many of them are from other parts of western Canada.

The diversity of those in the working age group in Victoria always astonishes me. However, it reflects the basic fabric of Canadians everywhere. Much of my time and effort in Parliament has been directed toward ensuring that the social benefits of the retired population are enhanced to the extent possible and are safeguarded. I have been fortunate to have made some contributions in the areas of pensions and veterans' legislation through debate, through representation, and through a Private Members' Bill. Among my constituents, those who are retired as well as those who are still in the workforce, are many who are or have been involved in the military. I count myself in this group, having served in the Armed Forces for a considerable time. Consequently, I have always had a keen interest in our forces and in the Department of National Defence and the Government's priorities in this area, which I will expand upon later.

Every Member of Parliament must be concerned about the economic health of his or her riding and will therefore keep a watchful eye on any measures taken by the Government which affect the constituency's ability to create or sustain employment.

Victoria has had some difficult times since I have been a Member. The rate of growth of the area reflects this because, despite the benign climate, the finest in Canada, and the seaside location, the growth rate of Victoria's population in the past 15 years has been only 1.25 per cent compared with Canada's growth rate of around 14 per cent. Unemployment is very high in Victoria, at 13.3 per cent, which is above the provincial average, which is also far too high. The slow growth indicator signals a need for more employment opportunities in Victoria. I have given a high priority to assisting the riding in that respect.

One of the problems we are facing in the direction that our future growth should take is the choice of industries that we wish to have in a city such as Victoria. We are severely disadvantaged in attempting to have any heavy industry on an island on the West Coast. The freight rates for finished products from the East and the industrialized part of eastern Canada to the West Coast are much cheaper than the freight rate from western Canada to eastern Canada for the same products. This places us at a real disadvantage. Furthermore, the shipment of heavy goods to Vancouver and the subsequent shipment to Victoria by water vessels only increases our difficulties.

That leaves us with some industries that are well suited to Victoria. Tourism is probably our best asset at the present time. Educational institutions are gradually growing and developing in Victoria, and we are becoming known for the high quality of educational institutions in our city. High technology is another area on which we can concentrate because high technology generally does not require heavy equipment and expensive freight rates.

Finally, the provincial Government is located there and we seem to have a plethora of municipal Governments. There is a continuing debate as to whether or not we should consolidate them. We have many government workers there, and I was amazed at the size of the federal contribution to government workers in Victoria, particularly when one includes Esquimalt and the naval base. It makes for a substantial payroll, which is of considerable help in our province.

In the area of tourism, we were fortunate to receive a grant from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, which represented a keystone for our convention centre which, believe it or not, was first considered as a project in Victoria some 80 years ago. Eventually, everyone within a considerable distance of the site of that convention centre were able to agree that it should be built. This included four municipalities which gave up their rights to grants that were being allocated by the provincial Government as an offset for Vancouver getting Expo 86, which has been so successful. However, talking four municipal Governments into giving up grants for the benefit of one municipal Government indicates the depth of co-operation that existed. One incredible gentleman, Alderman Frank Carson, spearheaded it all with the co-operation of all the municipal councils and the provincial Government. The first of the earth has been turned and we expect to have the convention centre finished sometime in 1988. We feel certain that this will be a great help to our employment problems.

• (1450)

There has been a very co-operative attitude on the part of the federal Government, not only with respect to the convention centre but with respect to other incidents with which I am sure all Hon. Members are familiar. In Victoria the Victoria Machinery Depot, which has been in business for over 100 years, got caught in the draft when the research tax credit scam was on, and ended up being bought by someone who over-mortgaged it, with the resulting collapse of the company. Through the good offices of everyone we could co-opt but, most particularly, the then Minister of Transport, now the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), we were able to work out a deal whereby the employees took over the firm. Now the company has started up again and is on its way to its former greatness. We all wish it well.

I would like to speak about another project in the Victoria neighbourhood which is so ably represented by my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton). The graving dock, which is located at the Victoria naval yard in Esquimalt, has been there for decades and decades and is a great centre of employment. However, for some strange reason, in the last year it was decided that the Polish fishing fleet should have the servicing of its ships transferred to Vancouver where there would be less of a security risk. This facility's workload was dramatically decreased and studies by the Department of Public Works indicated the facility should be sold off or closed down with the resultant loss of several hundred jobs. Representations were made, and I am pleased to say the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) has said that it is not contemplated that the facility would be closed down in the foreseeable future. It is to stay open, and I hope some day that we will be able to rethink the question of whether it is dangerous for us to service the Polish fishing fleet that close to the Navy yard. Perhaps, then, we will once again service these customers whom we have already serviced for over nine years.

I would like to speak about our defence problems and achievements, as I see them. First, I would like to state that I am very pleased with the new Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) who was appointed this summer. I know him well. He has been a Member of this House the same length of time I have in spite of the considerable difference in age. He has a very fast brain and another characteristic, which is much rarer than a good brain around here, that is, he has a lot of common sense. I look forward to some very good years for the Department under this new Minister of National Defence.

I have been concerned that Canada's defence is all it could be with the resources available. We must always try to see that the resources for that Department are spent as efficiently as possible. The Department has suffered from money malnutrition for a very long time. In the 1970s, a number of factors led to the downgrading in priority of defence, and the result was a steady reduction in the number of Armed Forces personnel, severe deterioration of equipment and demoralization of personnel, both civilian and military. Real defence spending was also hampered by the ever-increasing inflation rates of the time. Constant questioning of these issues elicited little positive response from the various Ministers of Defence or from the then Prime Minister.

Major programs were delayed year after year as resources dwindled. Our Government, with a higher priority for defence, has done considerably better, although the available resources have not increased as anticipated due to financial constraints imposed by a deficit not of our making.

The Government has adjusted its previous commitment of 6 per cent real growth in the defence budget to a more realistic 2 per cent for the next few years. While this will no doubt create some hardship for realizing programs, I have confidence they will be implemented, if over a longer time frame. A review of the 1986-87 defence Main Estimates reveals that over 40 additional major capital projects have been identified since the previous year's Estimates. Yet, strangely enough, this did not include the one project which has received most public attention, namely, the low level air defence, or LLAD, as it is more commonly known. It would provide sorely needed weapons systems to protect air bases and deliver area air defence. At the present time, our bases overseas are vulnerable to attack, having only inadequate and ancient guns which are really left-overs from World War II. The LLAD program is a fine example of two aspects of defence policy which will benefit all Canadians, industrial benefits or offsets and high technology development.

With this program, along with the frigate program, Canada has acquired new industries which have created jobs all across Canada. A new system, the ADATS, Air Defence Antitank System, will be manufactured in Canada, which gives us an opportunity to supply this system to other countries which choose to purchase it for their own defence operations. If offsets are involved when procurement is done offshore, the companies involved must present a package of proposals which would ensure that an equivalent amount of money spent on the equipment will accrue to Canada by putting money back into Canada's economy through the manufacture of goods here, or the provision of other economic benefits.

The size and location of Canada adds many complexities to the formulation of defence policies. Besides our domestic defence priorities, including sovereignty protection, we are members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, NATO, and with the United States, we participate in North American aero-space defence, NORAD. At a time when many Canadians had ceased to consider that sovereignty over our own land, waters and air space was an issue, that sovereignty was brought into question by the use of the Arctic passage by the American ship Polar Sea in the summer of 1985. That incident brought to the fore the continuing need to ensure that our rights to this area of Canada remain firm and that further use of the passage would require prior consultation and approval of the Canadian Government.

The Department of National Defence has increased overflights of the Arctic, and we now have a firm commitment that we will build a powerful ice-breaker to patrol Arctic waters. It is not yet clear which Department will provide the resources for this costly ice-breaker or whether the Department of National Defence will task it adequately. However, the need for such a vessel is unquestioned. I would only add my plea on behalf of my province, together with a reminder of an earlier Government's promise in June of 1983, that an ice-breaker would be sent out for West Coast tendering only. The West Coast shipyards have not had an opportunity to participate in a major shipbuilding project emanating from government for many years. I hope this fact will be kept in mind when proposals for an ice-breaker are before the Cabinet for evaluation. The crisis in the shipbuilding industry is a real one but the country would be poorly served if all the expertise and economic benefits such an industry brings were to be concentrated in one area.

I would like to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano, for her splendid campaign to ensure that everyone in this Parliament understands that the West Coast needs and deserves the Polar 8 contract.

Since the election we have increased our troops in Europe. One of the first activities of the Government was to send 1,200 additional troops to Europe in compliance with an agreement made during the campaign. The CAST exercises have taken place. CAST, the Canadian Air Sea Transportable group, is scheduled to go to Norway if there is an emergency. I point out that this has been the subject of a great deal of puzzlement and worry on the part of serious strategists. They do not know whether we can deploy Canadian forces to Norway in a crisis, whether it would be possible or practical, or whether it might even be destabilizing. The practical aspects were certainly considered by former Defence Ministers. In an article in The Citizen in October, 1977, Jo Anne Gosselin, quoted the Hon. Barney Danson who said:

• (1500)

He did not want Canadian troops left in an exposed position that is not reinforcible or supportable.

She went on:

The time lapse involved in moving Canadians into position and ensuring their ongoing support was, in his estimation, neither satisfactorily defined nor militarily practical.

I feel that it is time that Canada admitted that there is a question here. I for one am glad that we now have the experience of this recent exercise, Brave Lion, to help in coming to the proper solution. It should have been undertaken ten years ago. We shall now want to examine the lessons learned. This examination should take place before the Standing Committee on National Defence as soon as possible.

There are four items about which the standing committee will want to inquire. The first is whether or not the commitment is viable. The second is whether in this real world there are any specific situations that would automatically require this commitment to be undertaken. Third, did the exercise indicate that Canada could reinforce and resupply the CAST force and the brigade at Lahr, Germany at the same time? Fourth, was there any indication that the movement of CAST to Norway in a crisis might of itself be destabilizing?

I can tell Hon. Members from personal knowledge that in 1979 there was a very uncertain situation obtaining in the world. The U.S.S.R. had moved into Afghanistan. Iran was in revolt and the Shah had fled. With few exceptions the Americans in Iran were being held hostage. Many people were wondering if, indeed, the U.S.S.R. might be moving down toward the warm water ports which it had envied for ever so long. Surely, in a crisis such as that it would think that that would have been the time to start talking about when we should move our CAST forces to Norway. The truth of the matter is that it took us all of ten seconds to determine that that would be the most destabilizing action that Canada could possibly take in a situation such as that. The rest of the world looks to Canada for sober and intelligent judgments, not to destabilizing situations.

I wish the Minister well. I look forward to seeing him, his colleagues and his senior officers in front of the standing committee as soon as possible. I must say that if anyone can carry out the CAST operation, Canadians can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, as always, I listened with great interest and attentiveness to the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). I have the greatest respect for him and for his knowledge, particularly with respect to defence matters. I have been aware for some time of his great experience and expertise regarding that time dating back to the Second World War. I was interested in his comments with respect to the area of defence and, in particular, two aspects of it.

The first aspect related to the Canadian commitment to NATO in Europe, both in continental Europe and in Norway. There has been a good deal of discussion of late concerning the possibility of a revision to our NATO commitment which would transfer those troops and the Air Force arm of them out of Europe altogether. I refer not just to those in the Norwegian commitment but to our whole commitment to NATO in terms of maintaining forces in Europe under NATO and to shift that, perhaps, in the direction to which the Hon. Member referred.

He referred to our Arctic and to our North and the maintenance of our own sovereignty and perhaps the defence of it in the Arctic and northern regions. The Hon. Member may want to leave this question with the standing committee. However, does he have any views which he would like to put forward this afternoon which might enlighten us with respect to changing our NATO commitment in such a way that we might shift our focus from Europe to our northern Arctic?

The second area in which I am interested has to do with the North and the Arctic. It deals with the recent suggestions of two recently retired generals of our forces that the location of the proposed northern warning system is wrong. They have said that, in fact, we should station the northern warning system bases farther north on the Arctic islands rather than along the continental shore of North America. They have said that in that way we would have an earlier warning. If enemy forces were intercepted in the North, they would be intercepted not over northern Canada but in the Arctic archipelago. Will the Hon. Member give us the value of his experience and views on these two matters?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, at one stage of the Hon. Member's remarks he asked whether or not the standing committee should take up this matter. That was very well put. However, I would like to comment on that point. One of the great things about the reform of Parliament is that under able leadership standing committees are able to decide for themselves what they will investigate and on what they will make reports. As soon as the appointment is official I will be in touch with the Chairman of that standing committee. I do not expect to have to go too far to find him.

The question with respect to whether we should have the Air Force and the Army both in Europe has been around for years. This is compounded by the CAST obligation to go to Norway and whether or not it will detract from our ability to reinforce our troops at Lahr. I think this matter should be the subject of an intensive study to determine just what are our options. We managed CAST. It drew its guidelines and went at the appointed time. However, it was peacetime. There was a year of warning. It could not be said officially whether anything took place until a certain date. However, the force did not have to be resupplied and reinforced. This raises the question of whether or not we will take our best trained troops and send them all overseas at the start, leaving no way to train the troops that will need to be trained. Some people may consider this a 40-year-old dogma with respect to training reinforcements. Some people may say that that day is over, and they may be right. However, we have two different scenarios to consider. The first is with respect to conventional war, and the other is with respect to nuclear war. Today, I have only considered conventional war.

As far as the retired generals are concerned, I know one of them quite well, General Beattie, who is a very thoughtful person. He has a very good record in terms of being the type of general to whom attention should be paid. He makes the simple point that if we were to mount the early warning line along the edge of the archipelago, we would be in a much better position. He does not emphasize the cost with respect to this proposal, which would be considerably higher than what was actually proposed. That is another subject on which I do not think people who just read newspapers should express too many opinions.

• (1510)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). As usual, I enjoyed his interesting and thoughtful presentation to the House. I appreciated many of the points which he made. However, I guess my two questions are directed to him more as a Member of Parliament from British Columbia. Like the rest of us, I am sure he shares in the many concerns of that province in terms of difficult economic times.

One point on which he did not elaborate very much in his Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne was the pending decision to construct the Polar 8 ice-breaker. I know his colleagues in his Party, like all of us from British Columbia, have been lobbying in whatever way possible to encourage the federal Government to consider the hard-pressed shipyards on the West Coast and therefore to give consideration to their bid in the issuance of this contract. I would like to ask the Hon. Member about his views on the chances of this contract being approved so that we will see the construction of at least the major part of the Polar 8 ice-breaker being done in West Coast shipyards.

Also, while he is on his feet, I wonder whether he could respond to something which I am sure concerns us all in terms of identifying and understanding the sequence of events. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) was required to make an offer to the United States forest industry in an effort to head off what appeared to be a pending decision which would go against Canada. My question to the Hon. Member would be: What precipitated this process and the calling of this eleventh hour meeting or this eleventh hour overture? From what I have read and from what I understand, it was the public musings of the Premier of British Columbia a few weeks ago, saying that it was time that we re-evaluated our stumpage fees in British Columbia. In my estimation this in a sense pushed the IWA and the forestry industry to have to agree with the Premier, which in turn led to the federal Government having to make this last minute overture. I would appreciate the Hon. Member's thoughtful views on that question as well.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I find the second question to be rather unusual, coming from my distinguished friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I should like to compliment him upon his new position in the NDP. I am sure that he will carry out his functions with an ability which we have become quite accustomed to expecting from him.

However, my understanding of the rules is that a question should be about my speech, not about the Speech from the Throne. I do not recall having become embroiled in the ongoing discussion of this matter between the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and people from the Hon. Member's Party. I recall that some two or three months ago, Mr. Munro, known in union circles on the West Coast, came out with the same idea about stumpage fees needing to be increased.

Turning to the Polar 8 about which I spoke, I am sure that we share the same hope that the work will come to the West Coast. If I might boast a bit, in answer to one of my questions in the House in 1983 about contracts for six frigates all going to the St. Lawrence Valley and the East Coast and nothing going to the West Coast, the then Minister of Supply and Services promised that the Polar 8 would be tendered on the West Coast only. I think that was one of the strongest arguments we had in favour of it. It is our turn and we deserve it.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my congratulations to the new Speaker. Certainly his election the other night was a unique occasion for all of us in the House. I compliment him on that achievement. His experience, know-how and goodwill were instrumental in his elevation to that position. I must say that all Hon. Members who participated, including the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House, played a very active role in choosing a new Speaker. I hope the House will operate very well under this system. Whenever the time comes to fine-tune the system, I am sure we will have a mechanism in place to reduce the 11 hours to something less.

As well, I should like to congratulate the mover and the seconder. Although the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) represents a B.C. riding now, she used to live in Sudbury in northern Ontario. She and the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Girard) made excellent speeches in the House of Commons.

The Throne Speech of Wednesday afternoon clearly lacks any indication of what the Government wants for the country. It seems to demonstrate the Government's focus on short-term political problems rather than contain any clear vision or direction for the country. This week we read in the newspapers that the Speech from the Throne was based upon polls. I suppose we can give Allan Gregg and Dalton Camp some of the credit for writing the Throne Speech. It seems that that is what is wrong with it. It covers all bases. It has a little bit for everybody but no specific commitments with regard to funding. At least it mentions a pot-pourri of items. It referred to the establishment of councils, national conferences, and consultation, without spelling out the exact action the Government wishes to take. Because it does not focus sharply upon those items, the Government really tends to lose credibility in the whole exercise. It does not have a specific plan of action.

In fact, the Speech from the Throne seems to change dramatically the Government's direction. We learned from its first Budget that the primary direction of the Government was toward the whole energy sector where hundreds of thousands of jobs would be created. A year ago last spring the then Minister of Energy was committed to this. Today, instead of seeing hundreds of thousands of jobs created in the energy sector, we see that sector being more devastated than it was in the early 1970s. That is not only the case in communities in Alberta and Saskatchewan. It is also evident in communities like Sault Ste. Marie where we see 800 people laid off from a tube mill. We see a brand new $370 million tube mill ready to go to work but with no work to do. As I said, the thrust of the first Budget seemed to be in that direction.

However, during the past year the whole emphasis has been upon free trade negotiations. The Government alleged that hundreds of thousands and millions of jobs would be created by putting together a free trade agreement with the United States. In fact, when we read the Speech from the Throne, that seems to be downplayed. Now they are talking about a mutually beneficial trade agreement with the United States. The whole concept of a massive free trade agreement with the United States seems to have been lost in the Speech from the Throne.

Let us look at proposed tax reforms. We on this side of the House welcome those tax reform proposals. We talked about fairness and a comprehensive tax system which were in sharp contrast to the initiatives in the first two Budgets. We saw regressive taxes imposed upon cosmetics, non-prescription drugs, fuel, and other items. Also we saw the deindexation of the income tax scale. If the Government is making a 180 degree turn in tax reform wherein it will shift the burden from low-income Canadians to big business, it will be a welcome turn of events. However, it will probably take a year or two to overcome the damage which has been done. Many studies I have read indicate that the average family will pay from $1,200 to $1,500 in additional taxes over a two-year to three-year period as a result of regressive tax moves in the first two Budgets.

• (1520)

I guess the other area I am very concerned about is the uneven economic development. Clearly many areas, such as northern Ontario, western Canada and Atlantic Canada have not benefited since 1983-84 from the economic recovery. This Throne Speech, although it talks about a new economic opportunities council in Atlantic Canada and talks about economic diversification in western Canada, clearly forgets and has nothing about northern Ontario. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we face very, very serious economic difficulties in northern Ontario.

Before I go into that, I want to talk briefly about agriculture. This Speech from the Throne contains four short paragraphs about agriculture, which is better than the previous Speech from the Throne which had only one word in one paragraph about agriculture. Unfortunately, it does not spell out any specific actions for agriculture. There is no commitment about a deficiency payment, for instance. There is a great deal of talk or background about what the Government is alleged to have done, actions which might have been taken, but there is no specific commitment. This is at a time when we are facing the lowest grain and corn prices and prices for many other agricultural commodities since the 1930s.

I was especially concerned today in Question Period when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) seemed to be skating around the whole question of deficiency payments. This idea of a deficiency payment at a time when Canadian grain prices are the lowest since the 1930s is something supported by all provincial Premiers in western Canada. It is supported by the pool elevators and by all farm groups. We have to satisfy ourselves with statements like: "The Government will spare no effort in seeking to protect the interest of farmers". The Minister of Agriculture skates around saying: "We have to negotiate this with farm groups and with provincial governments". Earlier this afternoon we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speak. He talked about funding of $1 billion for the hard pressed grain industry. He talked about negotiating funding with Premier Grant Devine of Saskatchewan. I hope this is not a total election ploy by talking about it in the House of Commons knowing that the topic will be carried into the hustings in Saskatchewan. Will it be negotiations on and on and on and after the election nothing happens?

It seems to me that the Prime Minister suffers from incredible lack of credibility. The vast majority of people simply do not believe him. If he really wants to be believed, he should have come out full and fair and proposed so many new dollars, stated whether the money is a loan or a grant, and said exactly what assistance is available from the federal Government. We know that he cannot commit the provincial Governments, but he can say what his Government is willing to put forward in the face of this tremendous crisis facing western Canada. We are very concerned with whether the Prime Minister is just eyewashing or giving us another smoke and mirrors show.

If we look back to the Government's performance up to 1986, the average Canadian, not a farmer, listening to the news and reading headlines would have understood that the Government had provided some $730 million in the February Budget. The average Canadian would have known a little later that the Prime Minister called a hurried press conference at the end of April and that another $350 million had been allotted to the hard pressed agricultural industry. But if you look behind those announcements, you will find that either there is nothing there or that the actual commitment by the Government is very small. I just hope that the kind of announcement the Prime Minister made today, the right to negotiate funding, is not as phoney as those in the Budget and in his press conference of April 30. If we look back at the Budget announcement of $730 million, there was no new money. It is just existing farm credit loans with some interest assistance to be provided under certain circumstances, but in the long run the farmer will get no subsidization of interest. Even in the short run, the total cost to the Government is in the order of $50 million or $65 million. That is the kind of canard that we worry about with the Prime Minister. We know that the Prime Minister's minions in the PMO know how to draft beautiful press releases which sound as if the farmers were getting something, but when you check into them you find that there is very little assistance there, if any.

I draw the attention of the House to the announcement of April 30 when the Prime Minister seemed to be giving several hundred millions of dollars to farmers when he announced that he was changing the range of the domestic price of wheat. He was not changing the domestic price of wheat, which would have provided additional funding by the consumers of Canada to farmers. He was changing the range. He made a big thing of it. It was going to involve several hundred millions of dollars. He did not actually change the domestic price of wheat. That money never went to the farmer.

The Prime Minister also announced at that time that he was going to remove the excise tax on farm fuel by 2 cents a litre. He actually said 5 cents a litre, but 3 cents had already been given. If you look closely you will find that a year ago now the Government put 2 cents a litre on gasoline effective September 1, 1985. That levy was kept on during the full harvest and during the spring when farmers had to fill their fuel tanks. Dramatically, the Prime Minister removed it around June 1. But during that period, September to June, he probably extracted $50 million or $60 million. What he should have done was not only take it off but take it off retroactively to September 1 and apologize for imposing it because the farmers could not afford that cost.

The third peg in the Prime Minister's announcement of April 30 was to freeze freight rates. That would save Canadian farmers $42 million. We checked that out with the senior grain transportation agency. We were told by its representatives that that was not freezing freight rates, just recalculating the volumes of grain to be shipped. Instead of shipping 32 million tonnes, only 28.5 million tonnes will be shipped, so no increase is necessary. This is the kind of phoney baloney we get from Mulroney which drives the agricultural sector wild. It drives the agriculture sector wild because not only does it get no benefit from it, the perception is left with Canadians that the Government actually did something. However, no actual cash ever comes to the farmer.

• (1530)

I just hope that there is some substance to the dramatic announcement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that he will get together with Grant Devine to provide some kind of funding to assist farmers who are in the most difficult financial position they have been in since the 1930s. It is simply not fair to the farmers to fool the rest of the country into believing that the farmers have been provided with some assistance when in fact they have not been at all.

I want to share with you, Mr. Speaker, an interesting experience I had this fall. I had the opportunity to visit Alberta after the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) had just spoken to a farm group there. The Deputy Prime Minister and I, as were you, were elected in the famous Class of 1968, and we are all good friends at a personal level. One of the farmers at this meeting said to me: "You know, I went there and listened to Don and he told me how much they had done for us and how great everything was and how we should all be happy, and all I could ask myself was, you know, if they have done so much and everything is so great, why do I feel so bad?" I think that is what many western farmers feel as they face perhaps the most uncertain future they have faced in many years.

We know that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced a $46-million program with the Department of Employment and Immigration designed to take farmers off the farm. He announced that there would be 9,000 farmers leaving the farm.

The Government has done very little to cope with the farm debt crisis. As I described it a few moments ago, the farm commodity based mortgage will cost the Government very little and could probably cost nothing in the end because interest rates rise as commodity prices rise.

The same thing applies to the current trade war. The Government does not give the impression that agriculture is a priority. There are too many things said, like the Government will spare no effort in seeking to protect the interests of Canada. What farmers want is for the Government to show its commitment. We cannnot have Canadian farmers receiving something less than $3 per bushel Canadian for wheat while American farmers are receiving something like $6 per bushel for their wheat and expect Canadian farmers to survive for very long.

The Prime Minister made a speech in Prince Albert on July 7, 1984, in which he said that the Conservative Government, if it was elected, would make Canada a super power in agriculture exports. Because Canadian farmers have been abandoned by the Government, they are today paying the full cost of simply surviving. The Government is not providing export subsidies in the way the U.S. Government does. The Government is not providing deficiency payments. It is fiddling around, talking about some kind of funding mechanism.

If the Government really wanted to have credibility with agriculture in western Canada—and in eastern Canada as well, because corn producers in southwestern Ontario are facing the same reductions in the value of their commodities as are the grain producers—it would move forward and these little exercises in publicity. It should really put its money where its mouth is. That is what we are waiting for the Government to do. Agriculture is a very important industry, and it deserves the complete support of all Canadians including the Government of Canada.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do this by way of comment rather than by way of a point of order because I know that the Hon. Member did not do it intentionally. I just want to draw to his attention that during the course of his speech he used the phrase: "phony boloney," and then followed with the Prime Minister's name rather than his position or riding. Once again, I say that I am doing this in the spirit of bringing it to his attention rather than trying to interrupt his speech. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, the reason we do not use each other's names is to depersonalize the debate and keep it on as high a level as possible. This is an explanation that I heard from the former Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, Mr. Ian Deans as he now is, and I think it makes sense. As I say, I am sure the comment was inadvertent, but if we could continue to refer to people by their positions or ridings it will raise the level of debate and the level of the speeches in this place.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to congratulate the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) for giving, as usual, an excellent speech in the House of Commons. He has blessed us with an excellent speech again today.

Is it not ironic that on this very day that we are discussing agriculture and such very important issue as the export of agriculture, to which the Hon. Member for Algoma referred so eloquently only moments ago, the Government has tabled in the House of Commons that awful piece of legislation—pardon the language, Mr. Speaker. I know that is probably parliamentary, but I apologize for it anyway. The legislation the Government has introduced to abolish the Crown corporation Canagrex is awful. Would my colleague not agree with me that the Government should not proceed with the cancellation of Canagrex, particularly now that the U.S. Farm Bill is in place, with other legislation from other countries attempting to promote the export of agricultural products? Would the Hon. Member not agree with me that we in Canada should do our share for exports, and that a corporation like Canagrex could have been an excellent instrument for doing so, had it been given a chance?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has raised a very important issue, the question of agricultural exports. Clearly we are in a state of siege with regard to agricultural exports. We are faced with massive the United States instruments for assisting agriculture commodity exports. It is trying to take away our grain markets in Egypt and Syria. The United States has even put forward assistance to exports to China and Russia. Of course, many of those grain exports for which the Government is not providing any kind of assistance or subsidy are being captured totally by the farmer himself who puts his grain in through the Wheat Board at a lower price.

The Hon. Member refers to Canagrex, an agency which would be especially good for smaller commodities, those commodities that do not enjoy the same massive exports as dairy products or grain through the Canadian Dairy Commission or the Canadian Wheat Board. I refer to smaller volume commodities such as livestock, lentils, honey and a host of others. The value would not only arise from seeking out prospective markets, but in assisting in the co-ordination of activities with provincial governments. Often trade commissions include members from two provincial governments which sell the same commodity. A commodity-producer group could benefit through a national agency such as Canagrex.

• (1540)

I certainly agree with the Hon. Member. I hope the Government will not move to destroy Canagrex, because I believe it has a vital role to play in agricultural commodity export, especially at this time when we face tremendous trade wars in respect of agriculture.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, does my colleague remember the election promises of 1984? The Conservatives made numerous promises. I think I brought to your attention before that they made 338 promises. One promise was to establish a system of agribonds. The Hon. Member will recall, as I do, that there was an all-Party agreement to have an agribond system. This was recommended to the Government, it was subsequently neglected in two Budgets, and I saw no reference to it in this latest Throne Speech. Does my colleague want to give us his opinion on whether the Government has broken this promise as well?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Government has broken a number of promises made in the 1984 election campaign. Promise number 11 was to expand agriculture research and development by providing greater assistance. The Estimates for the Department of Agriculture for this year show that the research budget has been reduced by $23 million. I think this is unconscionable because research will not provide a pay-back this year or next, year, but several years in the future.

The Tories promised to establish a national marketing board for tobacco, and that promise was broken. The Tories made a commitment to revise Section 31 of the Income Tax Act to reflect the principles of equity. The Government, of course, has not acted on that. Promise number 14 was to allocate the necessary funding to assist producers in refinancing their loans at current prevailing rates. The current rate of the Bank of Canada is around 9 per cent. If the Government implemented that promise it would save farmers a lot of interest.

With regard to the agribond program, the committee studied this and came up with a very workable program but, unfortunately, it was not reflected in either of the two Budgets we have had since then, or in the Speech from the Throne on Wednesday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by congratulating you on your appointment. We were very pleased to have you for the past two years. I hope to see you there for another two years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oostrom: May I also extend my heartiest congratulations to the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) who was elected Speaker three days ago. I did not at all mind spending 11 hours here to elect the Speaker. The patience of all of us augurs well for the future. The manner in which our newly elected Speaker has conducted himself over the past three days, the wisdom with which he has spoken and the collective confidence that he has in us and we have in him also augers well for the future.

[Translation]

I also noted the presence of the NDP Members in the House this afternoon during the speech of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Forty per cent of the NDP Members were here, but only 5 per cent of the Liberals. This gives me a good idea of which party provides the real opposition in this House.

[English]

I would like to compliment the mover and seconder, the Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) and the Member for Restigouche (Mr. Girard). They gave very eloquent and in-depth replies to the Throne Speech. My congratulations to both of them.

I represent the riding of Willowdale which is geographically located at the epicentre of Metropolitan Toronto. Willowdale is a very stable and hard-working community, the roots of which stretch back to the United Empire Loyalists. The community is now a multicultural mosaic and its people have become integral members of the community of Willowdale. I feel very honoured to represent them as their Member of Parliament because I am also part of that mosaic as I come from Holland. I am very proud to be their representative.

The constituents of my riding are very industrious, innovative and inventive. We need that spirit for the future of Canada. They are very proud to be members of the Willowdale community. Their pride is reflected in their residences, their strong community involvement and their ability to give of themselves unselfishly to many charitable causes.

Willowdale is the administrative and cultural centre of the City of North York and I am happy to say it is presently in the middle of an economic boom. The downtown core of the City of North York—the city with a heart, as our Mayor says—is beginning to rival that of Toronto in construction and economic activity. Willowdale, blessed with hard-working people and a favourable geographic location, is fast becoming the heart of Metropolitan Toronto.

Throughout the summer, as I have done in previous years, I went door-to-door in my riding asking my constituents what they thought of the Government and if there were any issues they felt should be addressed. I managed to visit personally over 6,000 households. The response by the people of Willowdale toward the Government and its policies was very positive. Although I got an earful on some issues, in general the response was very supportive.

The people of Willowdale were very impressed with the agenda put forth in our first Throne Speech. Our second Throne Speech will continue the Government's commitment to enacting legislation which will continue to benefit all Canadians. People remember the tough economic times they experienced prior to the 1984 election. They remember the high energy prices, the runaway inflation, the high interest rates, the high unemployment, the lack of economic direction, the massive deficit, and non-existent social justice.

In just two short years the Progressive Conservative Government has taken significant action toward rebuilding the Canadian economy. This is the best economic recovery that any western country has ever seen. Confidence has been restored and jobs have been created. Interest rates are down and the deficit is falling. Before September, 1984, 11.7 per cent of the workforce was unemployed. Today the rate is down two full percentage points to 9.9 per cent. This is the lowest level in four years. These are indeed big ticket items.

• (1550)

Let me illustrate. Between 1980 and 1984, only 404,000 jobs were created. The Progressive Conservative Government has created over 500,000 jobs in less than half the time. More significantly, more than 80 per cent of the jobs which were created by this Government have been full time jobs, as our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated this afternoon. This is concrete proof that the Government is keeping true to its pledge of providing employment to the Canadian people. This has been done at a time when our deficit has dropped by $4 billion while the deficit in the United States increased by $40 billion.

During the past two years I have had many calls from people in my riding representing restaurants, garages, small factories, offices and crating companies, crying for people to come and work for them. These jobs are not at minimum wage as the Leader of the New Democratic Party stated this afternoon, but some at double the rate of minimum wage. Jobs are being created because our policies have restored confidence in the Canadian economy.

Canada's inflation rate has been in the 4 per cent range for two years now, the most stable price environment since the 1960s. Again, our economic management has allowed the inflation rate to remain very stable. No longer is there double-digit inflation. This allows Canadians to maintain that purchasing power that they cherish and, therefore, contribute to the economy by purchasing more goods and services.

According to the Conference Board, consumer confidence is at its highest level in over 21 years and its second highest level on record in Canada.

As a result of renewed confidence and lower interest rates, housing starts have risen by some 40 per cent since September, 1984. This translates into 125,000 jobs in construction related industries alone. Today, mortgage rates are more than three percentage points lower than they were in September, 1984. The prime rate averaged just over 12 per cent in 1984, dropped to about 10.5 per cent in 1985, and today stands at 9.75 per cent. It is the lowest it has been in eight years. We can recall 1980 and 1981 when interest rates rocketed to over 20 per cent. How could Canadians afford to buy a home then? It is again possible to buy a home.

The facts speak for themselves. There is no real embellishment here because the facts I have quoted are real and are recognized, especially by other nations, if not at home. There is still more room for improvement. I believe that my Government can still do better. The economic direction of the Throne Speech will ensure that our election promises are fulfilled and that all our goals for a renewed vibrant economy are met and perhaps even exceeded.

Let me turn to the subject of taxes. It has been said that death and taxes will always be with us. I acknowledge, as do other Canadians, that our tax system is necessary in order to provide us with the wide range of social services that we enjoy. Through the years, the tax system has been allowed to become regressive and inefficient by previous Governments. The Throne Speech makes it clear that federal tax reform will be one of our top economic and social priorities.

An efficient and fair tax system will give Canadians more disposable income which will help to generate more beneficial economic activities. The principal objective of changes made so far has been to broaden the tax base in order to lower personal income taxes. We will also restore a healthy balance among the personal and corporate taxes and, specifically, reverse the trend which has resulted in greater reliance on personal income taxes. The Government will begin by making the tax system less complex and, wherever possible, structure the system so that the burdens are shared in an equitable manner. We are embarking on a comprehensive reform of our tax system, much the same as the American Government is now experiencing.

After our election we moved quickly in ensuring that no taxpayer would ever again have to pay taxes in dispute before an impartial hearing had been concluded. The declaration of taxpayers' rights was the first step in overhauling our tax system. It was a step that had been long overdue. It was the first time since our tax system became so complex that the individual was given preference.

The Throne Speech provides a refreshing attitude toward social issues. The Government has resolved to defend and strengthen the institution of the Canadian family. We recognize the importance of keeping the family unit strong. Families are the backbone of Canada. Cohesive families give Canada strength and character, which make problems easier to face and solve. We are moving rapidly to neutralize the destructive influences that drugs and pronography have on the family. The residents of Willowdale are very concerned over the proliferation of pornographic materials. They are concerned that pornography teaches sexual deviation, abnormal behaviour, and promotes violence toward women and children. I strongly believe that pornography is nothing more than vicious anti-women propaganda, the sole purpose of which is to degrade by making women nothing more than objects.

The Government is determined to take effective action against the serious and growing threat posed by the traffic of illegal drugs. Tough action is the only way to deal with this growing cancer of drug abuse which is destroying the lives of many Canadians. There should be no question of our resolve in this matter.

The Government moved quickly in the first session of Parliament to pass Bill C-18, which produced a considerable reduction in the number of instances of impaired driving, the leading cause of both fatal and non-fatal road accidents. The stiffer penalties have caused many people to think twice before getting behind the wheel after drinking. As a result, there were fewer road accidents during the 1985 Christmas season than at any other Christmas in many years. We demonstrated to all Canadians that we have the resolve to deal with tough social issues.

We will continue to reform the Criminal Code so that it accurately reflects the importance that Canadians attach to such as respect for the law and the protection of innocent citizens. I strongly believe, as do the overwhelming majority of the 6000 households in Willowdale that I personally canvassed this summer, that capital punishment is one item that should be brought forth and debated in the House. Protecting Canadians against all forms of criminal violence is a main priority of the Government.

We acted quickly when the Bill on mandatory supervision was stalled in the Senate and held a very rare summer sitting of the House to resolve the impasse. This shows our resolve and determination.

For too long, our immigration system has been abused. This was not the case when I came to Canada with my father, mother and 12 brothers and sisters. We patiently waited in line until our turn. While we may have wanted to proceed faster at times, it was impossible. Complex, ineffective legislation enacted in the mid-1970s has allowed our immigration system to become abused. We have been making major strides in correcting this situation. We have simplified and improved the present refugee determination system. Entry procedures will be streamlined and a case-by-case administrative review was begun in July in order to clear Immigration Canada's backlog of some 20,000 claims.

• (1600)

Our legislation has been firm and fair and still maintains our humanitarian reputation in immigration matters. Our Government has increased immigration for the first time since 1980-81. It had slowly dropped to about the 80,000 level but this year it has gone up to 115,000 and hopefully next year it will be increased to 130,000. I am also pleased that the Speech from the Throne made mention of the fact that we are going to make improvements to the illiteracy rate in Canada. Last week I met with the board and staff of the North York Library to discuss this very point. I am very pleased that that problem was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize the very strong leadership provided by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Under his direction, Canada is once again becoming a very strong economic power. No one can deny Canada's economic performance under his leadership. Our Prime Minister has brought harmony to federal-provincial relations, and his vision of a strong, prosperous and united Canada is being brought to fruition. I am proud to be a Progressive Conservative. I am proud to be led by Prime Minister Mulroney, and I am proud of the very deep and dignified speech he gave in this House this afternoon. He will be remembered as the Canadian leader who turned this country around, as a Prime Minister with the courage to lead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I think I should bring to the attention of Hon. Members that we will abide by that one rule of not using the names of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). They should be referred to as the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, and the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and then the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) for questions or comments.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your intervention in drawing to our attention the fact that we are not to refer to our colleagues by their names but by their constituencies or titles.

I appreciated with interest the comments made by my hon. friend. He mentioned the whole matter of the Government's commitment to tax reform. I want to ask the Hon. Member for his views on four items of importance in comprehensive tax reform. Would he give us his view on whether or not we should retain the $500,000 capital gains exemption? I do not think any other country in the world has this. Does he think that ought to be maintained? Second, I would like his personal views as to the fact that there are now in excess of 79,000 companies in Canada in a profitable position which paid no income tax at all. In fact, many of those companies have profits in the $100 million, $200 million, $300 million range, so we are not talking necessarily about small corporations at the moment but about some of the giants of Canada, some of which one can find listed in the top brackets of the large 500 corporations of Canada.

I would also like to have the Hon. Member's view of the fact that the tax revenue the federal Government now collects, has over the years shifted so that now virtually 82 per cent of all tax revenue is derived from personal taxes and only 18 per cent from corporate taxes. Just a few years ago this was in fact split 50-50. Now it is split 82-18. Fourth, I would like to know whether the Hon. Member is a supporter of the introduction of the business transfer tax or, as I call it, a fancy name for a value-added tax or a sophisticated sales tax?

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked my views on the capital gains tax. Naturally, the capital gains tax as well as other measures will certainly be under review at the time the review takes place. We have instituted the $500,000 capital gains exemption, and the result has been 600,000 new jobs created in Canada. I think that is quite a performance. I am not sure whether this tax will continue. If we can create another 600,000 jobs in the future, by all means it should be continued. I would rather have Canadians working and contributing than have the high unemployment rates we have experienced in the past.

The second point was with respect to loopholes. As the Hon. Member may remember, during the past two years we have closed a number of loopholes in our tax system. Perhaps we have not closed them all. We would welcome the Hon. Member bringing these to our attention, perhaps in the Committee on Finance or to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), so that we can close these loopholes because I do not believe anyone should be able to evade due taxes.

The third question put by the Hon. Member was with respect to the shift of more taxes on personal incomes which has taken place over the years. As was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, we would like to reverse that trend. I do not know whether it should be a 50-50 split. I am not that experienced in all matters of personal and corporate tax, but I think there will be a shift towards more corporate taxes.

Lastly, on the business of the transfer tax, there seems to be some success with this particular tax in Europe, and most of the industrialized nations have this particular tax. I do not believe we would go the same way as the European nations. I think, as usual, Canada will find a happy medium between the system we have today and the system currently in effect in the European Common Market.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear my colleague mention in his speech the possibility of bringing forth pornography legislation. He also mentioned pornography, and I would like to ask him about that in the form of a comment and a question. Pornography, of course, is a very subjective thing. One person's pornography is another person's titillation and another person's interesting reading. Is the Maclean's Magazine pornographic? Is Cosmopolitan pornographic? Is Playboy pornographic? Probably it is. Perhaps Hon. Members would agree that opposition press releases are pornographic if not downright obscene. Who is going to decide? I would ask my hon. colleague what pornography is. And who is going to decide how to enact it? It is such a subjective topic. Who is going to decide what pornography is in Canada?

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, I believe that we in this House can put our collective thoughts together and come up with something which would please all of the Canadian population. I would like to state that when I came to this country 34 years ago, the amount of pornography present now was just not there. I believe that the quality of life has gone down over that period of time. I would like to reverse that trend. I was happy to see 34 years ago that I had come to a country which understood that pornography would not be good for the young generation. We must have freedom, surely, to read and to view things we like. On the other hand, we must have a social responsibility. I find that the social responsibility which goes with the freedom we deserve has been lacking.

• (1610)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate in the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. This is the first time I have had the opportunity to lead off a debate following our Leader's intervention. I suspect that this is because of the procedure which was started in the Speech from the Throne. This time around it approached Canada's economy in alphabetical order. It first dealt with the subject of agriculture. My name begins with an A and I am the agriculture critic of my Party. I suppose I am the A for the New Democratic Party.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and government officials have been attempting to point out that agriculture achieved a new high priority in that it is the A, the first in the alphabetical statement of items which they felt like dealing with in the Speech from the Throne. They have pointed out that the amount of space devoted to agriculture is the largest in any Speech from the Throne given by this Government. Indeed, when one looks at the first Speech from the Throne of this Government one sees that it did not have too far to go. In that Speech from the Throne the word was mentioned in the middle of a sentence dealing with some other matters. So one can honestly say that less than one sentence was used on agriculture in that first Speech from the Throne.

In its second Speech from the Throne the Government uses four short paragraphs to deal with the subject. It is interesting to look carefully at what is stated in those four paragraphs. The first statement is a blanket one stating that agriculture is important to our nation. That disposes of the first mention of the word. I think that is something which everyone in Canada knows. It is nice to see it mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. However, I do not think it shows anything insightful in terms of the Government's commitment to agriculture.

Mr. Riis: Maybe it does for Tories.

Mr. Althouse: My colleague says that perhaps it is a change of heart for the Tories. I point out that for most of us it is not anything new.

The second paragraph in which the word "agriculture" is mentioned is a one-sentence paragraph which points out what the Government did in the last session. Thus it is past history.

The third paragraph dealing with the subject matter talks about the past, past history, back when the Liberals were in government. That paragraph spends some time knocking the Liberals. I suppose that Speeches from the Throne can be political statements, and they usually are. I guess that is fair game. However, it does not give us much insight with respect to the direction in which the Government is going in terms of agricultural policy.

I have now disposed with three paragraphs and I have not yet found out from the Government what it is proposing in this session. We then get to the meat of the matter in the fourth paragraph. The Government reports that it has put agriculture on the agenda for the upcoming multilateral trade negotiations, or that it at least moved to put it on the agenda. After dealing with the agenda it gets into what will be coming. I would like to quote from that paragraph of the Speech from the Throne which reads:

> In meeting its commitment to Canadian agriculture, my government will spare no effort in seeking to protect the interests of Canada's farming community in the face of unfair pricing and subsidy practices conducted beyond our borders.

There have been many questions asked and much pondering with respect to what that statement means. It was really not clarified in the speech made by the Prime Minister. He talked about having meetings with farm groups in the provinces to find out what sort of aid package could be given to agriculture. He made some rather vague reference to that accumulated package being something in the order of $1 billion. He did not say whether that was to be $1 billion of new money from the federal Government, whether it was to come from the provinces, or whether it was to come from a combination of provinces, farm groups and the federal Government. So we are still not much clearer than we were before, in spite of the fact that members of the Government from the Prairies created a big expectation that we would be hearing something about the almost $2 billion deficiency payment once the Speech from the Throne was delivered. I expect Members representing portions of rural Canada did the same thing. However, since I live in the Prairies I know what members of the Government were doing there. While Parliament was recessed nothing was done except getting ready for this statement. Expectations were high. I must be frank with Hon. Members, there is a great deal of disappointment in rural Canada because it is not known where the Government stands on this issue.

The Government made some strong statements in this Speech from the Throne concerning the subsidization of agricultural products. We are no longer clear whether it is carrying the criticism of other countries' subsidy programs to the point where it will start living up to the policy line it has been preaching abroad by refusing to extend subsidies to Canadian farmers. The Prime Minister has not made that clear. Nor has the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) been particularly helpful. I do not think he has been given any clues at all by his cabinet colleagues in this respect.

During the course of the Prime Minister's speech today I sent a note to the Minister of Agriculture in which I asked: "Does this mean that you have now $1 billion to put on the table in these talks with farmers' organizations and the provinces?" I have a good rapport with the Minister. He usually keeps me right up to date with respect to what he is doing and what he is able to do. He did not even look up and smile to indicate that he had received my note, although I saw him read it. He did not indicate that he had matters in hand. He did not even reply to my note. After the Prime Minister's speech I phoned the Minister's office and found that his officials were quite confused with respect to the so-called $1 billion statement that had come out of the Prime Minister's speech. They did not know anything about it. They had not had briefings in that respect. They had received no word about it. In fact, they knew absolutely nothing about it.

We know that provincial agricultural officials are meeting in Toronto today for the second time concerning this and other subjects. Those officials do not seem to have any knowledge of there being $1 billion on the table. The whole matter is very confusing. It is very well couched in fuzzy terms, which is something we expect from Speeches from the Throne. However, sometimes when we have explanations from the leader of the country we expect the fuzziness to clear up, particularly when it concerns an issue such as this, which is important to hundreds of thousands of farm families right across the nation.

One of the threads that runs through the speech is one that is usually found in any successful political statement given in Canada. I refer to the issue of regional disparity. I began my remarks dealing with agriculture since that is the first subject dealt with in the Speech from the Throne. I also began with it because it is one of my chief interests.

When talking about regional disparity I think that we must consider that agriculture, fisheries and forestry are areas of our economy which have been traditional bases and that they are now in trouble. They are sectors of the economy which have been having some difficulty. They have been lending to regional disparity, which has once again been showing itself in our land. When the Prime Minister spoke about my region of the country, western Canada, he said that he had steadfast faith that we can build that part of the country. I have always had faith that we can build that part of the country. My parents have always had faith that they could build that part of the country, as did my grandparents and a few of my great-grandparents. Many of them felt they had built that part of the country. They thought that they had pretty well completed it.

I received a phone call today from a gentleman who happens to live in my riding. He is dealing with this same problem. He thought that he had built up a rather successful farm. He is now middle-aged. He has served on a number of boards in his community, including the review boards put together by the Province of Saskatchewan to decide whether or not farmers should be allowed to face bankruptcy. He now finds himself in the position of having to go before a federal board to decide whether or not he has any future left in farming. This is a man who was using new, up to date technology. It is the kind of technology we would expect would keep one competitive on an export basis, but he is about to go down the tube. He bought his land, some 30 quarter sections or about 4,800 hectares, in the 1970s, just before valuation day. He told me that if he sells out or turns his assets over to the bank, under Saskatchewan law he would be able to take one vehicle and some household furniture. His vehicles are now quite old. If he is able to turn those assets into money and the bank is able to get its money, something like $1.5 million worth of assets will be turned over. The land part of those assets before 1970 had a relatively low price, and it will be valued for tax purposes at that original price. He has been told by his accountant that although he is entitled to receive a $500,000 tax free capital gains from his assets, he will still owe the Department of National Revenue something like $90,000 when it is all over and if he sells them for enough to pay off the bank. That is for a lifetime of work! This person has contributed 3.5 decades to growth in that part of the country. The message being sent out is that modern technology in his kind of expertise—and he is a very well trained agriculturalist—is no longer necessary. The marketplace will not sustain that kind of economy.

• (1620)

I think that has been the total problem with the energy and agricultural sectors of western Canada. They were almost too technically efficient to survive a downturn in the economy. I see the Prime Minister has decided to set up a bunch of new committees aimed at bringing us to the year 2000. There will be a national advisory board for industrial technology. There will be a federal science and technology strategy and a committee to advise on that. We will even have a Canadian space agency and an Atlantic Canada opportunities agency. Yet, here we are in western Canada sitting on some of the most up to date technology and watching it go down the tube because the market-place will not sustain that kind of technology any longer.

The technology which has been put into place is largely energy dependent, in agriculture at least. When I look at the energy sector, I think that could be said for its technology as well. We moved people off the farms to specialize in being machinists, welders, fertilizer and fuel manufacturers, and distributors; to provide us with research into chemicals and feeds; and to provide specialists to give us advice on how to use these products. We trained veterinarians and technicians to provide egg transplants for livestock so that we could use only top producing males and females. The foetuses were put into less productive cattle so that when they hit the ground they were top quality cattle. All of this required a lot of training.

The technology used for the production of crops and livestock requires a lot of energy and it requires a lot of energy to produce chemical fertilizers. The nitrogen portion of most fertilizers in western Canada comes from the natural gas industry. As well our chemicals come from the petroleum and gas industries.

Let us look at the agricultural technology which we in North America use and compare it with the technology being used elsewhere. We see some great variances in where priorities have been placed. With our high energy agriculture, we turn out a great deal of product per man. The man or woman on the farm, the so-called producers, can chalk up thousands and thousands of tonnes of produce for their efforts with their huge tractors and chemical fertilizers. Great amounts of energy are used by these huge machines. When we compare that kind of agriculture which appears to be producing surpluses with the kind of ongoing agriculture in Asia, we see a completely different approach. Such countries have concentrated upon looking for better cultivars, plants, seeds, better ways of combining those plants and seeds, and for creating a better environment with water and heat and by changing the soil. They put a lot of individual energy into agriculture; they expend a lot of human energy. When we take away the advantage we get from petroleum being put into agriculture and put it down to what is produced by individual farmers, we find that farmers in countries such as China and India are more efficient on a per person basis than we are. If we take away energy input, they are producing more product that we are. Because they have taken this approach, it is probably no surprise that India is now exporting wheat. China is self-sufficient and will be a competitor in wheat. In fact it has been exporting rice for years. Its first wheat imports from Canada were financed by rice exports to southeastern Asiatic countries.

I do not see any move in all the committees the Prime Minister will set up to expand the biotechnology to which we will have to adapt if in fact we are to become free traders in the sense of the recent free trade talks. We will have to find ways to make plants produce more without relying upon expensive energy. We will have to look at genetic improvements and at finding ways of using the earth, sun, and man's intellect to achieve that kind of production. The vision which the Prime Minister has given us of agriculture in expanding the country has missed that point entirely.

I see Mr. Speaker signalling that my time is coming to an end. As I said at the beginning of my speech, we seem to have heard an alphabetical kind of Speech from the Throne. If we revert to another area where the alphabet was used in our educational experience in school, I do not think I could give the Speech from the Throne an A; I think it is somewhere around an E.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in his speech the Hon. Member was very complimentary to the Government in that we put agriculture very high on the agenda of international meetings and that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took the time to go to Alberta to meet with farm groups. Also my colleague was very complimentary about the $5 billion wheat deal signed this week, and he made reference to the $1 billion assistance for farmers announced by the Prime Minister today. However, I am concerned that he suggested there was some confusion in the office of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). I wonder whether he would give us the name of the person to whom he talked who was so confused so that we can follow it up.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the name of the person. It was the Minister's assistant in his parliamentary office. The improvements which the Hon. Member cited are—

Mr. Lewis: Laudatory.

Mr. Althouse: They would be laudatory if they produced results. When the cheques are in the farmers' hands, perhaps they will begin to have an opportunity to produce results. I caution the House and the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) that simply moving to have agriculture put on the agenda at the multilateral talks is not a particular victory. The subject has been discussed at previous multilateral talks. The general disposition of most countries involved in GATT is not to attempt to do anything about subsidies for agriculture because it is too close to home.

• (1630)

As a legacy of World War II and the pre-war period a great many countries suffered physically, resulting in starvation through a lack of food. Most voters remembering those days are not willing to give up their right to produce as much food as they can within their own boundaries. They will consider subsidies to achieve that result. While the subject may be permitted to go on to the agenda, I do not hold any great hope that we will see coming out of those talks in the immediate future any addressing of the problem that subsidies raise for a country like ours depending on exports. I see the Europeans and even the Americans being anything but free traders as in the coming round.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask my hon. colleague whether he wishes the item taken off the agenda?

Mr. Althouse: I did not say that, Mr. Speaker. I simply raised a caution that having it there was not likely to produce any results in this round.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Humbolt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) indicate the importance of biotechnology in the agricultural field and that that is what we should be pursuing. I was rather alarmed though that he did not give the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recognition in the establishment of a special board on technology and industrial innovation which will do exactly what the Member is saying is absent from the Speech from the Throne.

In my view, perhaps the most important single item in the whole Throne Speech was the announcement that the Prime Minister now views science, technology and innovation as being the key to our future. Surely the Hon. Member for Humbult—Lake Centre would agree within the ambit of items dealt with by that board that biotechnology will be one of them.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, that is what I was attempting to get across in my speech. In that particular part of my speech I pointed out the four agencies to which my friend, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), has just referred. The technology we have been pursuing has essentially been an energy based technology. We have to wean ourselves from that kind of technology if agriculture is to meet the kind of competition which the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Prime Minister have been talking about when they go into ecstasies about free trade talks.

I would be more comfortable about these boards being established if I were not seeing research into that kind of technology being dropped through the last series of budget cuts.

There has been no decision to replace the Poultry Research Centre at Kentville, Nova Scotia which burned down, even though it has been gone for a couple of years. That institute did a great deal of technological research into biological functions. It is not clear at all whether the Department of Agriculture and the Government are intending to replace it and to keep it out in that very important region of Atlantic Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to take part in this debate on the Speech from the Throne of the second session of the 33rd Parliament. First of all I should like to congratulate the Speaker as well as all other Members who will have the privilege of occupying the Chair during this session. More particularly I want to commend all Hon. Members for the great wisdom they displayed when they selected the Speaker of the House in the course of the quite different election we had this week. I believe it was a very positive exercise, very different from what we had in the past. We may have experienced minor difficulties, for instance the fact that ballot counts took too much time, but still I think it is a good system which might be slightly improved but not radically changed. It was a very democratic exercise, and it was obviously good since we have chosen, in my view, a Speaker of outstanding quality, and I want to repeat the congratulatory remarks I made a moment earlier.

[English]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, in September, 1984, the citizens of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell elected me to represent them in the Parliament of our country. I have said it before and I will repeat it again, that the greatest honour any Canadian could have is to be here in this place representing his or her fellow citizens. The constituency that I represent is not far from Parliament Hill. At its closest point it is some 12 miles and at its farthest point probably some 80 to 85 miles.

[Translation]

It is a vast rural riding. The western part of the riding is home to a large number of public servants, the region of Orléans, while the rest of the riding is primarily rural, except for a few urban centres such as Hawkesbury, Alexandria, Vankleek Hill and Rockland.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that the people who live in the rural reaches of my riding have suffered a lot in recent years. This is particularly the case of smaller municipalities in the eastern part of the riding, especially those where textiles and other industries were major employers. They had a hard time during the recent economic recession.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the agricultural community has been particularly hard hit.

[English]

If agriculture has suffered, there have at least been some sectors of the agricultural economy that have survived better than others. Coming to mind, of course, is the area under supply management. It has had at least a degree of certainty of revenue in the past. It has done relatively well compared to other agricultural sectors. I would not want to leave this House to believe erroneously that all people under supply management in agriculture are doing well. That would not be true, but by and large it is better than other sectors of the agricultural industry.

One area of agriculture that has suffered tremendously is cattle and beef raising and the cash crop business. Many farmers in my constituency had great expectations of this Government. No doubt you will remember the commitments made, Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign because you and I had to listen to those partisan promises which the Conservatives made. They were promising everything to the farming sector. In my view, the Government has failed miserably in that regard.

• (1640)

Why do I say that, Mr. Speaker? It is not because I want to be overly partisan. You know me better than that, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I want to bring a few matters to your attention, matters that lead me to believe the way I do.

First, the free trade initiative of the Government is one area which I think will particularly affect the agricultural sector. People under supply and management feel very much threatened. They do not know what is going to happen. Frankly, knowing how the Government operates, it is pretty hard to know where one is going because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government is operating like a ship without a rudder.

Another issue of course that troubles the agricultural sector is the fact that the Government had made specific promises such as the promise to amend Section 31 of the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Riis: Have they done that?

Mr. Boudria: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), asks if they have done that. Well, no, as unbelievable as it may be, the Conservatives broke that promise as well.

Mr. Riis: They promised that two years ago.

Mr. Boudria: They promised that during the election campaign and they promised it again in the first Throne Speech and did not do a thing about it. Conservatives also promised a system of agri-bonds to finance farms but they did not deliver on that promise either.

Finally, Conservatives promised that they would be aggressive in assisting agricultural exports. That is where they have failed the most. First, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), on November 8, 1984, a day that we now affectionately call black Thursday, the day the Minister of Finance stood in the House to introduce his book of cut-backs and inflicted those cut-backs on the people of Canada, announced that Canagrex, the newly formed agricultural export organization of the Government, would be shut down, dead in the water just when it had started. Not long after, of course, Canada was subjected to what was in my view a very offensive piece of legislation put forward by the United States Senate known as the U.S. Farm Bill.

The U.S. Farm Bill places $70 billion worth of subsidies directly against our agricultural sector because the strategy of the U.S. Farm Bill is to subsidize U.S. agriculture so that it can go out on the world market and take away our customers and the customers of other countries. We must remember, of course, that this is being done right in the middle of negotiations for the so-called free trade or freer trade or liberalized trade, depending upon which day of the week the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talks about it. During this same period, the U.S. Government perpetrated this act against Canada.

If that was not bad enough, what is even worse is that Canada did nothing in the face of these circumstances to even try to convince the U.S. Government that it was wrong in what it was doing. I see that the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) is here. He, of course, is very well versed in agriculture and is a very experienced Parliamentarian. I believe he has studied the U.S. Farm Bill as have I.

We asked the Canadian Embassy in Washington what kind of lobby Canada made to the U.S. Congress in order that it would not pass the U.S. Farm Bill. Who was the lobbyist hired? What was spent? What was invested in that lobbying activity? If we can hire Michael Deaver for acid rain, surely we can do something to assist the farmers. However, no lobbyist was hired. No special initiatives were undertaken. What is most unfortunate, of course, is that that legislation passed and we are now feeling its ill effects.

I would also like to speak briefly about the pharmaceutical industry. I would only say that in June, the Government tried to introduce a Bill in the House designed to give away the store to the multinationals in the pharmaceutical industry. It was designed to give to the multinationals this so-called protection that they pretended they needed and to abandon the Canadian consumer. What I want to know as a Canadian and what my constituents want to know is where is the mention of that in the Throne Speech. Does the Government still intend to proceed, yes or no?

I think Canadians have a right to know what is the plan of the Government. Surely the Throne Speech is the general outline of what the Government intends to do. Does the Government still want to follow through with this? I would like to know because I would like to mount a lobby against it as would my colleagues and my constituents.

[Translation]

But the Government still refuses to commit itself. It does not say a thing. Here we have a document, several pages long, which Her Excellency read for nearly an hour, but unfortunately, a document that is empty, that is full of generalities and that has very few specific references, while the important issues, and we may be for or against, are not even mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to talk about regional development. As you know, the Government said in the other place, through the Speech from the Throne, that it intended to help regional development. Why should they make an issue of this? There should always be help for regional development. In fact, the previous Government was aware of this and had set up various programs.

And who cancelled the programs? You guessed it, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative Government did away with the good regional development programs—

Mr. Valcourt: Which ones?

Mr. Boudria: Which ones? Mr. Speaker, here we have a Minister of something or other on the other side who wants to know, this Minister of something or other wants to know, and I forget the name of his Department, he wants to know which programs—

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: For three days we have heard Hon. Members waxing enthusiastic about having a new approach in the House and about showing respect for this institution. I don't think it is the Minister of something or other but the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt). I think that if the Hon. Member has any respect for this House, especially since he himself worked here before he was a Member, he should show it.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope that the Hon. Member would call the Minister by his portfolio and we should have a little more decorum. I appreciate what the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has just said. I think Hon. Members will take heed and do the proper thing.

• (1650)

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comments and I intend to act on them, and I must say they are very wise, far wiser than those made by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the CIRB programs, in other words, the programs of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. At the request of the Minister, the Minister who asked me the question earlier, but who unfortunately is not in the House to hear what I have to say—the Minister was asking me which program was so good. For your information, the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board's program was beneficial to the Hawkesbury area in my riding, a disadvantaged area which needed this kind of help. The CIRB programs consisted of two stages. On the one hand, the textile industry received some help to modernize, to purchase new machinery, to become more competitive, and on the other, new industries were found for communities which were very dependent on the textile industry. As the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism asked earlier: How useful was this program? It created 250 jobs in my constituency and brought $5.9 million in investments to our region from various companies.

Such were the very beneficial results of this Liberal program which was abandoned by the Conservatives when they came to power. The textile industry still needs help, Mr. Speaker.

I was just looking at a document which I received from Mr. Michel Drouin of the Canadian Textile Institute last week in which he tells me that textile imports are still increasing.

For example, sweater imports increased by 30 per cent last year, suit imports by 28 per cent and dress imports by 32 per cent.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the textile industry is still in danger and this Government is not doing anything, it has abandoned all programs. However, suddenly, in the throne speech, it points out that something must indeed be done to promote regional development.

Why is it that the Government took two years to realize this fact when we all knew it from the start?

Even the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) should know that, Mr. Speaker. But obviously this Minister did not know since he had to ask.

[English]

There are two or three more issues I want to raise with you, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to talk about the crisis of confidence that the Government is suffering. It is not a crisis of confidence that this House is suffering and it is not a crisis of confidence that anybody else has. It is a crisis of confidence that, by and large, the Prime Minister has inflicted upon himself. That is the problem the Government is suffering from. It has tried every way to change the image of the Government and it is not working. Do you know why? It is because it is not the image that should be changed. It is the substance that needs to be changed. The Government is without substance. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to relay that message to the Prime Minister at the appropriate time.

Why has the Government suffered from this terrible crisis of confidence? It is difficult to say. Perhaps Professor Jean-Luc Pepin summarized it best in a recent issue of Maclean's magazine when he was asked whether the Prime Minister always said the truth. I will put it that way. He said that the Prime Minister suffers from an acute deficiency and need to embellish the truth. That is the way Professor Pepin put it at that time. That has been the biggest difficulty with this Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, many things have been said about other Prime Ministers in the past. Sometimes people agreed with the Prime Ministers, sometimes they did not. Still I think that in the past most people had faith in their Government and the Prime Minister, and they believed he acted in good faith.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I simply want to take a minute to quote the words of a Liberal of long ago. This is a very old quotation, but it is true. Here is how it goes:

"I am a Liberal. I am one of those who believe that always and everywhere in any human endeavour there are abuses to redress, new horizons to open, and new forces to develop". Those were the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. They were true in his days and they are still true today, Mr. Speaker. The work must continue. I would urge the Prime Minister to change his attitude towards Canadians so they may regain confidence in him and make this country more prosperous.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please, I beleive the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has a statement to make. I will recognize the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this with the House Leaders opposite. In connection with the business for Monday, I would like to advise the House that I may be seeking consent of the House to proceed with legislation concerning the maintenance of ports operations. I am sorry that I cannot be more definitive than that, but it is really contingent and dependent upon what might or might not transpire this weekend.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to hear the Hon. Minister making that point. We understand, however, that both sides are proceeding with discussions and negotiations in a positive and progressive way. We are optimistic that sufficient progress will be made in the next number of hours in order that a settlement can be reached and this notice will be simply that.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations and we agree. We hope that the Government House Leader will give us the benefit of advance notice on Monday morning so that we can get our critics ready and, if needed, the proper information so that we can proceed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I will, of course, accede to that request.

* * *

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Mary Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech at the opening of the session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 44) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 57).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are still questions and comments for the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I will recognize the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was most interested to hear the comments of the Hon. Member, particularly those that he directed toward the questions of credibility and consistency and the importance of those issues. I was struck by the fact that there was a good deal of inconsistency in the comments of the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member spoke about two particular issues which concerned him and his constituents. One had to do with the pharmaceutical industry and the other had to do with the textile industry.

On the one hand, in referring to the pharmaceutical industry, the Hon. Member stressed the fact that it was very important to protect consumers. He was not supportive at all of any measures which would help the pharmaceutical industry, that would increase research and development in the pharmaceutical industry, or that would create jobs in the pharmaceutical industry. Contrary to that, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the textile industry he indicated just the opposite. He said that in that particular case we should be looking to protect the industry, the jobs in it, and to try to ensure that the industry remains healthy regardless of what that does to consumers. By doing that he was, of course, stating by implication, if not expressly, that we should not be protecting consumers, that we should not be acting in their interests, that we should not be trying to allow them to buy textile products at the lowest and most reasonable price possible.

Which is it, Mr. Speaker? The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. If he expects other people to be consistent, should he not be consistent too? Who is he interested in protecting, industry or the consumers? Or is he interested in protecting industry on one hand and the consumers on the other hand regardless of consistency?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will not pretend to understand Tory logic. It is beyond most people. However, I do not feel it is inconsistent at all to want to protect consumers when they are gouged by the pharmaceutical industry. When an item which is worth $4 in Canada is worth $145 in the United States, I do not feel there is anything wrong with trying to protect the consumers.

With regard to the Canadian footwear and textile industry, the industry has shown all of us in this House that the price of Canadian goods has not climbed out of proportion with the price of imported goods at all. The Canadian footwear industry and the textile industry are both worth saving. No one has ever suggested that protecting those industries is against the consumer. If the Tory policy is such that you cannot protect the textile industry, let the Hon. Member say that to his colleagues from eastern Ontario, Quebec, and Winnipeg who are so dependent upon that industry. Let him say that loud and clear now in the House of Commons. I do not believe it is inconsistent to try to protect my constituents, whether they be consumers or workers in the textile industry.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until next Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 6, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am introducing for first reading a private Members' Bill which would give protection to all employees in the federal workplace, the House of Commons and all federal agencies, to all employees of airline companies, trains, and all carriers under federal jurisdiction and to the federal public which use services under federal jurisdiction, the House of Commons, the Senate and so forth to have a smoke-free workplace, and an objective standard has been incorporated into the Bill.

Finally, my Bill includes a measure to ban advertising and promotion of all kinds of cigarette products.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

HERITAGE RAILWAY STATION PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, this Bill was introduced in the last session of Parliament, it went to committee but did not come out of committee, one way or the other. This Bill will protect railway stations across the country that are considered of heritage value. It is high time that we had a Bill of this nature.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE AND YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-206, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Young Offenders Act.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, this Bill will reinstate capital punishment for those who deliberately plan and kill another human being.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

• (1110)

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-8, An Act to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the Foreign Insurance Companies Act and the Winding-up Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

LOAN COMPANIES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Loan Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Bank Act with respect to certain regulatory matters.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed Friday, October 3 consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the Session; and of the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 44) and the sub-amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 57).

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege, today, to take part in the debate on the Speech from the Throne as the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Nevertheless, it is, in my opinion an even greater privilege to rise in the House as the Member for Roberval, which is what I am first here in the House. I think my Quebec colleagues are well aware of my feelings of pride for the riding I represent, the riding of Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean, which to me is one of the most important elements of the Francophonie inside this country.

Now, for the first time in the history of this riding, it has a Member who is a Minister, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. And naturally, the riding of Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean wants to thank the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) for his particular concern for the regions of this country.

[English]

I wish to extend my congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, upon your election to the Chair of the House. That I, as a Quebecer, can rise in my place to congratulate a favourite son of British Columbia is a small but powerful reminder of the diversity and greatness of the country. I look forward to working with you, Sir, as we all strive to ensure that the House honourably and vigorously reflects this diversity and greatness.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne proposes a major challenge to this House and to Canada, that of building an increasingly vigorous economy and above all, a tolerant and caring society, a society where all Canadians will reap a progressively larger share of the benefits of this country's development. However, the dream of equitable distribution of wealth will never become a reality if we do not produce that wealth by involving all Canadians in the process, in other words, by meeting the challenge of providing employment.

[English]

The most consistent message of the Government has always been that a healthy economy creates employment. As a result of the economic course set by the Government, we have achieved truly remarkable results. According to the most recent economic survey carried out by the OECD, Canada has been remarkably successful in creating jobs. Employment growth last year was again the fastest in the whole OECD, being well over twice the OECD average. Just as important as the creation of jobs is the need to prepare Canadians for these jobs. I want to applaud vigorously the energy and commitment of my predecessor in forging a new approach to prepare Canadians for these emerging opportunities.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what we inherited was of little value. All we had was a set of empty and ineffective policies which did no more than make Canadians ripe for unemployment insurance, which failed to hold out any hope for stability or economic improvement and what is worse, totally unrelated to the real needs of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, we have made a concerted effort to restructure those policies, and we came up with the Canadian Job Strategy. Today, after only one year, 400,000 Canadians—Mr. Speaker, I repeat, for the information of my colleagues opposite—400,000 Canadians have been part of this remarkable success. Our approach is simple but fundamental, and it is to link training with the jobs and employment. All countries that have experienced significant development, whether in Asia, Europe or America, have understood this fact.

Here in Canada, the same holds true. That is why we have responded with six programs: Job Development, Job Entry, Skill Investment, and so forth. In fact, these programs link training with employment. And those are the realities of 1986, Mr. Speaker, and we are not alone in thinking this way. All Canadians are beginning to understand that this is what we must do to keep up with other countries.

• (1120)

[English]

Ten years ago, of course, it was widely believed that the labour market was stable. Long-term unemployment was rare, and short periods of unemployment were seen as the norm. They were usually associated with the ups and downs of the economy. Governments were not expected to be imaginative or to create new approaches. The recession of the early 1980s changed all of this. It forced us to confront the changing reality of the market-place. No longer could we sustain our faith in short-term job-creation projects and unemployment insurance as solutions. Unfortunately, the belief in this old approach to the problem has been a long time in dying.

[Translation]

I agree that unemployment insurance, and there are many good reasons for this, Mr. Speaker, must be maintained as a safety net for all Canadians, and I can assure you that will continue to be the case. However, only a growing and healthy economy and an employment policy that is based on co-operation with business will help us build a strong country, where these realities are understood.

[English]

The global economy is changing and this brings change to every Canadian home and factory, every store and office. It means that individual Canadians will be called upon to adapt and seize new opportunities throughout their lives. For some, the challenges are greater and this Government has responded and will continue to respond to assist first those with the greatest needs. Older workers, young people, women, the disabled, visible minorities and natives all have special needs and the Government is committed to removing obstacles to their full participation in the workforce.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy is designed to focus on individuals. We realize that the old ways are no longer adequate. A global, bureaucratic plan in Ottawa does not relate to the problems faced by an unemployed woman in Ontario, a laid off miner in Manitoba, or a Newfoundland fisherman. Canadians do not want the old make-work projects. They not only offered old solutions, they were wasteful and diminished the dignity and self-respect of the individual. Canadians deserve better.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Job Strategy offers much more. It offers the solutions of the eighties for the problems of the eighties. Practical training and job experience lead to permanent jobs. The strategy concentrates on what works across this country. It does not fall into the trap of short-term jobs, which are jobs in name only. And above all, it involves everyone: employers, workers, training institutions and all levels of government.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the figures are there. Canadians have responded enthusiastically. On average, over 80,000 people are trying daily to acquire the requisite skills to fill permanent jobs.

[English]

In Prince Edward Island, for example, a woman with nine children, who had worked as a labourer and was subsequently injured, began a training program in retail sales. She was hired by a local employer before her training period had ended. In Newfoundland, fishermen who were laid off by a fish processing plant were able to develop new products with assistance provided by the Canadian Jobs Strategy. As a result, they were not laid off.

There are thousands and thousands of examples across this country of Canadians who have successfully participated in the Canadian Jobs Strategy and who are now contributing their talents to the labour force.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, my work as Minister of Employment and Immigration is to take advantage of that momentum and to work towards progress with all my colleagues in this House. We do not claim to have the answers to all our problems. A great many remain unsolved, we do not wield a magic wand, but we can see that the outlook is more promising than it was two years ago. Time has come—and I hope the message will get through, Mr. Speaker—to stop seeing dark clouds on the horizon, especially in the employment sector.

There has been notable improvement over the past two years and statistics are there to prove it. But Canadians must change their mentality, and this can only come about if, in turn, individuals and the community accept this responsibility. The Government can lend support for such initiatives, but the future of the labour force depends on concerted action.

Quite obviously we are aware of regional realities. For example, I know that training does not come easy in some of the smaller villages in my own riding because the link between the economic reality and any business is not immediately apparent, and the community is poor, something which can be said about many ridings throughout the country.

[English]

For this reason I applaud the creation of an Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and I look forward to the participation of my Department in this important initiative. I look forward also to meeting my provincial colleagues to discuss the situation in areas like the Atlantic provinces, northern Ontario, northern Quebec and other regions. I will listen carefully to their suggestions, particularly those regarding the Canadian Jobs Strategy. One thing is certain. We must evaluate the problems of particular regions carefully and we must integrate our efforts into the local economy.

[Translation]

Basically, Mr. Speaker, this country reflects our differences and the course we Canadians are steering. We must keep in mind that Canada is a whole made up of various parts. Nothing in the employment strategy is engraved on stone. If current trends continue, we will have to acknowledge that Alberta and British Columbia are now experiencing hardships in terms of employment and to come directly to grips with their problems. Our provincial counterparts can count on our full support. Each community must strive to seek solutions to its own problems. Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize the point: each community, each region must make an effort to find its own solution to employment problems, and the Department of Employment and Immigration will be there to lend a hand.

[English]

As we in the House go forward with the business of the nation we must recognize that our first duty is to face reality. We must face the world as it is and, equally important, the way the world will be tomorrow. Only by looking ahead can we prepare the ground for the future.

[Translation]

Still, Mr. Speaker, we can also dream about tomorow, and I would even suggest we must do just that. This is the seed of hope in our future as a nation and we all know that the labour market will have changed substantially in ten years from now, at about the turn of the century. Are we really quite prepared to face this reality? Of course a number of Canadians will continue to think that tomorrow is yesterday and that the labour market owes us everything without anyone having to do his or her share. Some people will continue to believe in a static economy, powerless to compete and where governments always seem to come up with the right answers. Yet others will not accept the responsibility of taking an aggressive stance in the game of vested rights and compromises because, apparently, it is not up their alley.

• (1130)

[English]

I remain personally convinced that the majority of Canadians understand and support the need to develop new approaches to the world of work, where each has a responsibility to assume, where the collective efforts of Canadians are required in order to confront international competition, where we must sustain measured progress and maintain the momentum of a dynamic labour force.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if our different backgrounds is such a vast country do create misunderstandings now and then, I am firmly convinced that, being all Canadians, the world of tomorrow will reflect our affinities.

Mr. Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister how he can justify the fact that, under the Challenge '86 program, funds have been allocated to a few businesses such as La Ronde, in Montreal, while certain non-profit organizations have been harshly cut off and have been prevented from sending even a few children to the summer camp for handicapped children. Can he justify this conservative policy?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) will certainly understand that it would be extremely hard for me to give a reply to such a question this morning. She has quoted facts out of context and without any references and said that funds have been allocated to La Ronde but not to certain non-profit organizations. This is essentially a general assessment. The Hon. Member says that money has been given to some people, but not to others. As for me, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Challenge '86, as Challenge '85 before it, has been a great success. Whatever the Hon. Member may feel, and I am convinced that she is herself happy about it, we have been able to give young Canadians an opportunity to work during the summer, when they are generally available. I believe that Challenge '86 has been a good experience, especially as the young people involved were mostly associated with businesses which have to appreciate the abilities of young people in this country. Whether we are speaking about La Ronde or about non-profit organizations, many people have received help from this program. Generally speaking, I believe that people appreciate the Challenge '86 program.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Minister's speech and found it to be most informative. We always appreciate his attempts to keep Members informed of statistics on a weekly and monthly basis with regard to how the Department is performing in lowering unemployment. I would like to ask for one small point of clarification. Having looked at the unemployment figures for the last few months it seems to me that the unemployment figures for the last reported period were up slightly over the previous period. I think it was 9.3 or 9.5 per cent. In his Throne Speech address the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that unemployment is at its lowest level in five years. Is it correct that in a sense he was not quite accurate?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I think that was a global evaluation. The trend for the unemployment rate is not regular. It may be down for July and up for August. I think that generally the trend was positive. The rate of unemployment in the country is generally the lowest for the last five years. My understanding is that the reference in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) speech was in this sense.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, congratulations on your new position.

[Translation]

I would like to congragulate the new Minister for his excellent speech which reflects a philosophy that I wholeheartedly support.

[English]

What I heard the Minister saying is consistent with a report which a special parliamentary committee presented to this Chamber in the fall of 1981. That committee was chaired by members of the previous Government and it was completely ignored by their Cabinet. I heard the Minister saying that there will be an intensification of things which are already started, that there will indeed be an increase in local decision-making, that the Government views communities of the country as having local labour markets with local opportunities for development of jobs, that we are composed of communities with somewhat different educational backgrounds and that communities will be able to decide how best to spend federal money so that people who live in those communities can acquire the skills which will lead to placement in jobs within their home communities. Is it a fair summary to say that the over-all approach of the Government is local control of decision-making in order that local people can attain skills relevant to where they live and would like to work?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to re-emphasize what the Member said. Jobs Strategy would like essentially to deal with the employment problems we had until 1984. I know that my colleagues on the other side are aware that the old job programs were a failure. We need only look at the figures from 1984.

The issue of training must be joined with the issue of jobs. The people of Canada are becoming increasingly more aware that we cannot give a strong thrust to job-creation programs and employment if we do not join this with training. This is the concern we have in all six streams of job creation. Job development, job entry and so on must always be mixed with training for the benefit of the future of the country. Young people are getting training in our universities in order to get jobs in the future. Our older workers have to be moved out of the industries because they do not have the necessary skills to get further.

In my speech I committed myself, and I think I can say I committed the entire Government, to continuing to deal with the question of training. My colleague speaks about New Brunswick. I am deeply aware of the problems that we have in the Atlantic provinces. The Prime Minister made his speech on Friday. The Hon. Member said that we did not have specific programs but I think the Speech from the Throne is not the place to give specific programs. It is the place to give the philosophy of the Government. The Hon. Member should be very pleased because he did not see such things before 1984.

• (1140)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to congragulate the Minister on his appointment and say that we hope that we can continue to be able to work closely with him, as we did when he was Secretary of State.

He mentioned the fact that unemployment affects certain regions in Canada more than others. I would like to point out, for instance, that our capital, Ottawa, had an unemployment rate of 9.2 per cent last July. There are 7,000 more unemployed in the national capital than there were in 1984 when the Progressive Conservative Government came to power. Of these, 35 to 40 per cent are young people who are unable to find work. Moreover, 20 per cent of the families in Ottawa—Vanier are single parent families with dependent children, and most of these families, or 95 per cent, are headed by women.

I would like to know what the Minister can tell us about this. First, what can he tell my constituents, such as a woman with two children who has no job and who needs training and development programs. Can he give her some encouragement? Would he tell her today: Madam, this Government will see to it that programs are made available at Algonquin College or elsewhere to give you retraining and enable you to find work and earn a decent living?

As for young people, many of my constituents go to Ottawa University, Carleton University or Algonquin College. There are 21,000 students in my riding. What can you tell them about their careers? Can they expect this Government to be sensitive to their needs and to implement real job-creation and training programs which will give them an opportunity to earn a decent living?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister may give a very brief reply.

Mr. Bouchard: In my speech this morning, Mr. Speaker, I tried to address this concern. I think that the Ottawa region, for the very specific reasons you referred to, is faced with the same problem as a great many other regions in this country. This morning, I made every effort in my speech not to imply that we had found solutions to all problems, including those experienced by young people coming out of the university, not to mention those of women who are trying to return to the labour force and for whom it is a fundamental desire. However, as you know, the current situation is becoming increasingly more difficult. A reference was made to New Brunswick and Newfoundland, which does not lift the obligation to solve your problem, but first of all, we must try to help the areas where unemployment rates are as high as 15 or 20 per cent and which would be faced with a very difficult situation indeed if the Government failed to act quickly and effectively.

However, once again, it is a very great and considerable endeavour, but I do understand the issue which you are raising, because it is just as bad to be unemployed in Ottawa as it is to be out of work in St. John's, Newfoundland.

[English]

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by congratulating you on becoming the new Speaker of the House as a result of a democratic election process that we have not known in the House before. I am sure I speak for all of us when I say that we found it to be an extremely rewarding experience that your peers should make the decision as to who should be Speaker of the House. It was one of the most exciting and democratic proposals of the reform committee. While we all agree that a few small procedural changes must be made, the principle is one that I know each Member of the House cherishes.

Let me also say that I thought the speeches by the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply were very ably given. I particularly want to mention the speech of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) in moving the Address in Reply since in addition to being an extremely able person she is a British Columbian like you and I.

The Hon. Member for Capilano said that 70,000 new jobs had been created in British Columbia since September, 1984. However, she did not mention that thousands upon thousands of jobs have been lost in British Columbia since 1984, particularly in the forest industry. In light of the current situation, it would seem that thousands more jobs will be lost in our key basic industry of forestry. Also, she did not mention that of the 70,000 new jobs that were created, practically all of them are not highly productive jobs but minimum wage jobs in the service industry.

It is widely known that British Columbia has the lowest minimum wage in Canada at $3.65 an hour, and according to the Premier it will be even less or abolished altogether in some areas of work.

Therefore, I suggest that it is perhaps exercising a bit too much hyperbole to put such stress on the creation of new jobs because they are not in the productive part of the British Columbia economy or in the potentially productive part of the economy. They are certainly not in the key resource industry of our province, the forest industry.

In fact, neither the Throne Speech nor the Member for Capilano indicated very much at all about the forest industry, which was a bit of a surprise to the rest of us from British Columbia and other Members from provinces in which the forest industry is important. It is one of the key export industries of this country, but there was only a fleeting reference made to it by either the Hon. Member or the Speech from the Throne.

This is no doubt because both the federal Government and the provincial Government seem to be in a state of some chaos on the question of the industry. Many of us in the New Democratic Party have said many times in the past year or more that Canada and the United States should conduct negotiations on the forest industry, including our access to American markets and whether or not stumpage needs improvement. We have often said that the stumpage system needs improvement. We have not suggested, nor do we believe that it is an unfair subsidy. Indeed, the International Trade Commission did not believe it was an unfair subsidy in 1983. However, improvements certainly could be made to the stumpage system and we, as well as the IWA, have been arguing for some time that improvements could and should be made and that direct negotiation should be undertaken with the United States Government and the lumber industry in both countries. This was not done and suddenly we have seen a last minute flurry with a so-called offer to the United States directly relating to stumpage fees, which was inevitably turned down.

I suppose the problem facing the Government is that it was so hung up on free trade and the idea of everything going under a comprehensive trade negotiation—even though we are supposed to have had free trade in the lumber industry for 50 years and President Reagan indicated to Senator Packwood that he would resolve the softwood lumber issue for the American lumber producers—that neither the Canadian Government nor the British Columbia Government realized that they would be outsmarted and that they should have stopped talking about a comprehensive agreement and addressed the immediate issue. Of course, the immediate issue concerned negotiations in the lumber industry itself.

Little has been said about this and we are now in the midst of a very confusing scenario which may yet, and I believe will, lead to satisfactory negotiations. However, that certainly has not been the case up to now.

Another industry of great interest and concern in British Columbia, although not as major as the forest industry, is the shipbuilding industry, which we would like to see enhanced. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Capilano also mentioned that the Polar 8 icebreaker, promised in the Speech from the Throne, will hopefully be built on the West Coast. She suggested it would be desirable that the awarding of the contract be to a firm on the West Coast. That is a most estimable wish but, as the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) pointed out on Friday, the desirability of having the icebreaker built on the West Coast would have been enhanced enormously had invitations to tender been limited to firms on the West Coast.

• (1150)

Indeed, the Hon. Member for Victoria, who is here in the House today, asked in 1983, as he reminded us on Friday in the House of Commons, the then Minister of Supply and Services if the tender for the Polar 8 icebreaker would be limited to the West Coast and he was assured that it would be. However, this Government has not done that. Now we are in a situation where, lacking that kind of action, the Government is going to have to make the decision on political grounds such as, for example, where it is going to put a prison. That is extremely unfortunate.

There has been a lot of other shipbuilding in other parts of Canada, for instance in Saint John and on the St. Lawrence River, yet no attention is really being paid by the Government to the shipbuilding needs on the West Coast.

There were items in the Speech from the Throne which I and other Hon. Members, I know, were very encouraged to hear. The recommendations in relation to science, technology and post-secondary education were superficially, at least, encouraging. In the case of scientific research, $1 billion over five years in funding is promised. That is about the only specific in the Speech from the Throne. That was good to see, although, as we all know, practically all of that is catch-up since scientific research has been so under-funded. Also promised in the Speech from the Throne was a strategy for technology and a variety of other proposals. We will have to see whether or not these will be elaborated upon further in the weeks and months ahead. We can only hope so.

The Government promised that it would call a national forum on post-secondary education early next year to help meet the challenges facing higher education. Again, this is a desirable proposal, one which we have been making for some time. It would, of course, have been more seriously taken by us had we felt that the present Government has a serious commitment to post-secondary education. We find that its commitment is really not a particularly serious one, when as recently as June of this year it pressed through with Bill C-96 which, as we all recall, significantly reduced the rate of increase of federal support for post-secondary education. Nor has the Government made any response to a suggestion made by many people in the field of higher education that there should be a Minister of State for post-secondary education in the federal Government. That is something for which the New Democrats have been calling for some time. I speak of New Democrats in this connection, Mr. Speaker, because both federally and provincially we have been particularly strong proponents of accessibility to post-secondary education as well as fairness and equity, adequate funding, a better loan and grant system and all the other important matters relating to post-secondary education if we want a society where we have genuine equality of opportunity.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that we objected very strenuously in 1977 to the open-ended federal funding proposals which were passed at that time. That meant that provinces could spend the money on any matter they wished rather than spending it strictly on post-secondary education. Provinces have been very remiss in keeping up their full share of the costs of post-secondary education, particularly the Social Credit Government of British Columbia which has been extremely remiss. It has been cutting back very seriously on accessibility to higher education. I am curious to know what would happen, and I hope I never see it, if our current premier, who was a disastrous Minister of Education, should attend the national forum on challenges to higher education because, quite frankly, the current Premier of British Columbia, as became quite clear in a television newsclip the other night when he appeared at a meeting with students at the University of British Columbia, really has no interest or concern about the issue of equality and accessibilty in higher education. Nor, indeed, does his Minister of Education. I was shocked to read a day or two ago that: "B.C. Education Minister, Russell Fraser, says poorer people should examine their priorities and consider putting off post-secondary education if they are unable to afford it".

Post-secondary eduation is as significant for those of us in British Columbia as the forest and shipbuilding industries. We would like to see a full debate on this in the current provincial election. The New Democrats, as I said before, both federally and provincially, have creative programs for post-secondary education. Our British Columbia leader, Bob Skelly, outlined in detail our post-secondary education policies at the University of Victoria last week. It would be desirable, it seems to me, as it does to him, to have the current premier debate with him—and we have been urging this in our province—issues not only of forestry and other matters of job creation but also the accessibility of education to young people, and we still hope to see that happen.

The Speech from the Throne also addressed another subject in which many of us in this House have a great interest, that is, the equality of women in society. It is rather disappointing, however, that it is difficult to find in the Speech from the Throne any real, strong and genuine commitment to, for example, universal child care. It had some things to say about wage equity in the Public Service but there is nothing in the Speech from the Throne which address the problem of ghettoization of women in low paid jobs in the Public Service, nor anything about the problems of the part-time worker, most of whom are women, the impact of technological change on women, or the enormous problem of women in development in the Third World. I feel that the commitment of the Government to the equality of women at home and abroad is not a very deep one.

• (1200)

I was interested to note that in the listing of the Ministry as reported in last Wednesday's Hansard no one is listed as being responsible for the status of women. I thought that the Hon. Member for St. Paul's (Mrs. McDougall) had been given that responsibility—but apparently not. Beside her name in the list there is mentioned only her responsibility as Minister of State for Privatization. Indeed, if one looks at the alphabetical listing of Members set out in last Wednesday's Hansard one will see that beside the Minister's name there is no reference to her being Minister Responsible for the Status of Women as well as being the Minister responsible for privatization. So someone who did not know what was going on here, and I suppose from time to time that includes many Canadians, would not know that the Government had anyone responsible for the status of women. Perhaps that shows the Government's priorities. It is difficult to understand, particularly in view of the fact that two other Ministers with dual responsibilities, that is, Forestry and Mines on the one hand and Small Business and Tourism on the other, had both their responsibilities listed beside their names last Wednesday.

The Speech from the Throne made some mention of Canada's role in the world community. I might say that it provided an encouraging outlook and attitude to which my Leader referred last Friday during the Leaders' debate. I would like to enjoin upon the Government a few more steps other than those outlined in the Speech from the Throne and those set out in the contributions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) with respect to international affairs.

With respect to South Africa, for example, although the Government has been strong in its condemnation of apartheid in the work it has been doing with other Commonwealth countries, it has not yet responded to the resolution of the all-Party committee which met this summer. I refer to the committee which studied the matter of human rights and which, in effect, called for a complete legislated embargo on imports and exports of goods and services to and from South Africa. To my knowledge there has been no response to that unanimous recommendation of the committee—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but her time has expired. Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) obviously wants to wrap up her speech. I do not think there would be any objection to allowing her to wrap up her speech. Questions and comments could then follow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to wrap up her speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I gave the Hon. Member the five-minute signal, the three-minute signal and the one-minute signal. I hope that Hon. Members will watch the Chair in order that they will know when to wind up as we progress through the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, my warmest thanks to the House. I had lost track of the time.

The few minutes that I have left will not be long enough to cover the huge subject area of international affairs. However, I would like to say that there are other areas about which we would like to know the Government's position. For example, there is Namibia and the issue of aid to the front line states. We would like more detail concerning the Government's revised policy on the export of military and strategic goods, particularly in relation to Chile. Above all, we would like to know what the Government's position is with respect to arms control and disarmament. Many of us are distressed indeed that Canada has not yet placed at the top of its agenda urging the United States to join the Soviet Union in a moratorium on nuclear weapons testing. It was a pity that we abstained from the UN resolution of last December which called for the immediate cessation and prohibition of nuclear weapons testing. I say that because, on the one hand, we say we would like to see it, and yet, on the other, we abstain when a vote comes. It is somewhat like saying that a nuclear freeze is great, yet we vote against it at the United Nations.

We say from time to time that we cannot do much about nuclear testing since there is a problem of verification. That is the Reagan argument. However, virtually every seismographic expert outside the U.S. administration believes that test ban verification can now be assured. We would like to see the Government move in that area.

Finally, and because I know I am short of time, the one other area I will mention, and which I will debate at greater length on another occasion, is with respect to the failure of Canada to resist the resumption of Cruise missile testing. How can we begin again to allow air-launched Cruise missile testing when the United States, for whom this is being done, has said that it will violate the SALT II treaty by increasing its number of Cruise-missile-capable strategic bombers? This makes us complicit in breaching the SALT II treaty.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton).

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to the representations of the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). Early in her remarks she drew attention to the excellent speech made by our colleague from British Columbia, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). She suggested that the speech given by the Hon. Member for Capilano contained some rhetoric with which she had some difficulty. I must say that the speech I heard this morning is one which gives me some difficulty.

Unquestionably, the economic situation in British Columbia is difficult. British Columbia is also my home province. No area of activity in the province is in greater jeopardy at this time than is the lumber industry. Expressing concern about the job situation is clearly a marked and important step taken by the Government to overcome, in part, that difficulty. However, the Hon. Member indicated in her speech that somehow we should be taking a sectoral approach to the forestry problems in British Columbia, an approach which is in defiance of the American position. The Americans have said on a number of occasions that they look to comprehensive negotiations in respect of our trade difficulties. They have said that they are not interested in sectoral discussions. As a Government we have worked very hard to promote a co-ordinated approach to our forestry problems. The four main producing provinces and the federal Government have been working hard to deal with this issue. Is she saying that she is in support of that? Is she or her Party not in support of increased stumpage fees, something which at long last will perhaps put the necessary money into reforestation and silviculture? After all, stumpage rates are under provincial jurisdiction, they are not something over which we as a federal Government have any jurisdiction.

• (1210)

Clearly these are all moves designed to assist and promote the forest industry in British Columbia and to create the very jobs the Hon. Member has correctly said are needed. However, the views she presented this morning seemed to go contrary to known fact and the activities of the Government.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his questions. Indeed, the reforestation agreement is an important one. Compared with what was done in the past when the forest industry was basically ignored both by the companies themselves and by the Liberal Government, this is a step forward. It is just that because of this long neglect, so very much more is needed, and I am sure my hon. friend would agree.

The Hon. Member said that the Americans are not interested in a sectoral approach. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker. What the Americans are trying to do is pick off one sector after another. That is what they are doing and that is what they have been doing. That is what we must not let continue. It is like we are giving them the opening to pick sectors off. We have to get in there ahead of them. We have to know our own position on each sector without simply allowing the Americans to pick each of them off.

Finally, on the subject of stumpage fees, I said that for years we had wanted to have the entire stumpage system looked at. We think it has inherent deficiencies. One of those is fees. I think it is a pity that only the question of fees has been addressed, particularly since fees were not found to be a subsidy in the 1983 ruling of the ITC.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I am just a little bit confused. I am not sure what the Hon. Member is saying in terms of the NDP position. Is it the NDP position that we should condemn the agreement which may or may not be reached in these negotiations before we see it? That seems to be the position of the CLC. That position is that any kind of new trade arrangement with the United States which might be agreed to by negotiators on our behalf and on its behalf should be condemned and condemned outright before anyone has seen it.

It seems to me to be perfectly logical to hold our fire on whether or not to accept an agreement until we have seen what it says. Is the Hon. Member saying that we should condemn it because somehow, in her mind, she thinks the process is flawed and therefore a flawed process cannot produce a good result? Certainly in this Chamber we see many flawed processes. We see many bad results but we see many good results coming out of flawed processes. Is she condemning the process or is she condemning the potential agreement before we see it and before we have had a chance to vote on it in this Chamber?

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, we do have some doubts about what might come out, particularly because if the so-called free trade negotiations result in some kind of an agreement and the Americans continue to insist on having the power to countervail, I do not see that we will be very far ahead in the forest industry or any other industry. How can we wait to hear of the private negotiations on this so-called free trade deal? They are going on in private. We do not know what is going on. In the interim, the Americans are taking all these protectionist actions. The Hon. Member is asking me if I question the process. What I am questioning is his position which seems to be one of waiting until the negotiations are all finished. We cannot wait. We simply cannot wait.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that under the GATT the Auto Pact was an exception as a sectoral agreement. We were given a special exemption. I wonder if the Hon. Member thinks that the sectoral approach favoured by her Party is consistent with the GATT. A GATT official told me that he doubted very much that we would ever again be given an exemption for an Auto Pact agreement between Canada and the United States. I wonder if the Hon. Member really believes that it would be possible to get another sectoral agreement through the GATT while being consistent with GATT which, as she knows, would certainly not be possible.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I think the auto agreement is entirely different and the kinds of guarantees that were given under the auto agreement for the production of automobiles are entirely different from those in an agreement that would be negotiated in the forest industry. The agreement that is to be negotiated in the forest industry would presumbly be an agreement relating to market sharing and matters of that kind. I do not know that one would even ask for the kinds of built in guarantees that are in the automobile agreement as I understand the Auto Pact. I really do not think the question of a negotiated agreement would violate GATT. Indeed, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), the Hon. Member's own colleague, is already, in a sense, in negotiations. It is just a little late. Is she violating GATT?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the presentation made by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) but I am rather curious about the amount of time the NDP are giving in the House to the provincial election in British Columbia as compared to the time given to federal business. I listened carefully to what she had to say about the election in British Columbia. Being a Conservative from British Columbia, I can take a very detached viewpoint from the sidelines. I wonder if the Hon. Member would agree with me that putting Mr. Skelly up against Mr. Vander Zalm is about the worst mismatch we have seen since Buddy Baer fought Joe Louis for the championship.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Hon. Member asked that question. I think there are people in public life who occasionally choke up when they are faced with a gaggle of television cameras and a hustling, pushing horde of reporters. Maybe the Hon. Member does not do so, but some people do so occasionally. Bob Skelly did choke up twice, I believe, when faced with a horde of television cameras and pushing and shoving reporters. Frankly, I am surprised at the Hon. Member for thinking that that should be the gauge by which one judges a person's abilities.

We have heard what the Leader of the New Democratic Party in British Columbia has said in debate and today I have read press accounts on post-secondary education, the forest industry and the creation of jobs. Those can be compared with the absolute emptiness of the performance of the Social Credit Party. It is all style and no substance as the current premier has said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to say that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

[Translation]

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congragulate you for your election as Acting Speaker of the House of Commons; I wish also to congragulate the Speaker of the House of Commons (Mr. Fraser). Mr. Speaker, I feel it is important for an Hon. Member to congragulate in French the Hon. Members for Edmonton North and British Columbia.

[English]

I hope you understood that, Mr. Speaker.

I am also pleased to see the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) present in the House and to see them conferring. I hope they are talking about Goose Bay and the necessity for establishing a mechanism for monitoring control going to the Armed Forces, something which we all support but which needs to be done carefully and with the consent and involvement and information of the people of Goose Bay. I am very pleased to see them discussing that this morning.

I would like to address particularly the impact or lack of impact of the Throne Speech on the Atlantic provinces, and particularly on my own riding of Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador, a riding which I have had the honour to represent for the last 14 years. I have to say that I am very disappointed with the lack of attention given to the Atlantic provinces in the Throne Speech. I have rarely seen in 14 years a Throne Speech which has addressed so little the real problems of the Atlantic provinces.

• (1220)

We hear about the Atlantic Canada Opportunity Agency. That seems to me to be an admission that the billion dollar loan fund announced in the last speech for the Atlantic provinces has not been effective. We do not know what this agency will produce. We hope it will be some sort of new panacea, but, although we have tried a number of different mechanisms in the past, they do not seem to have worked.

I do not see any new policy coming, nor do I see the addressing of some of our problems. First, there is no mention at all of the development of hydro power. Yet this, I know, was an issue of great importance to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I asked him on April 19, 1985 in the House about the development of the hydro resources on the Ungava Peninsula in his riding and in mine involving the rivers that flow through Labrador and the rivers that begin in my riding and flow through his down to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in 1985:

> —I put forward a proposal which I thought would be fair to Newfoundland and Quebec, which would allow for the development of those rivers flowing into the St. Lawrence, particularly from Labrador west, which would provide unique benefits to Newfoundland and Labrador and to the lower St. Lawrence and eastern Quebec. In fact the project as we set it out would have cost about $25 billion in 1979 dollars and created thousands of jobs and opportunities for Labradorians and Quebecers.
>
> With regard to this specific point, I have met with Premier Levesque and I have met with Premier Peckford. I have offered the full services of my office and myself to see if we cannot find a tri-partite mechanism whereby the three Governments can proceed to the development of this enormous resource which will benefit both provinces and create thousands of new jobs.

That, Mr. Speaker, was in 1985. The water is still flowing to the sea. It is still flowing untapped, and meanwhile we are buying expensive oil. That hydro-development for Labrador and for Newfoundland is the single greatest opportunity for economic development and the creation of jobs that we have in our province today, Hibernia notwithstanding. It is the single greatest opportunity for the creation of jobs. Yet a resource which would be good not only for our province but for the Atlantic provinces and for the eastern seaboard of the United States is not mentioned and there is no policy of the Government of Canada toward that important alternate energy source.

I notice that farming had four paragraphs at the beginning of the speech with specific initiatives, and I congratulate the farming community on that. I am happy that the people in western Canada particularly, the farmers in Ontario, Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces will have something of value to look forward to. What, on the other hand, did the fishery get, Mr. Speaker? It got one line on page nine, and what does it say? In English it says that the Government is committed to improving the administration of Small Craft Harbours. That is it, the administration of Small Craft Harbours. There is, however, a difference in the French translation, which indicates there will be some sort of infusion of funds, that it will improve the funding of Small Craft Harbours. That is what it says in French but in English it says we will improve the administration of Small Craft Harbours. There is a difference between what the Throne Speech says in French and what it says in English. If the English is the original and is the policy the Government is following, it is a promise that will not be hard to keep because if funding of Small Craft Harbours is no better in the future than in the past then there will be no wharves and breakwaters to administer.

There was no mention of the very serious crisis in the inshore fishery, not just this year but in the future. Small boat fishermen, particularly on the northeast coast of Newfoundland and on the coast of Labrador, are worried about their future and what is going to happen to the inshore fishery. That problem was not mentioned or addressed in the Throne Speech.

There was no mention of the serious decline in ground fish stocks off the Atlantic Coast and what this means for the fishing industry, another serious problem. Is the Government committed to extending the 200 mile limit, for example, over the nose and tail of the Grand Bank to get better control of ground fish stocks? These are things we wanted to hear, what my people wanted to hear and did not.

What about oil, Mr. Speaker? Oil rigs have left the East Coast, and Hibernia is stalled. What did we find in the speech for solving this dilemma? Only that the Government has signed the Atlantic Accord, and that will take care of the situation. But that is not the case, Mr. Speaker. We have the Atlantic Accord, but Hibernia is not going and the oil rigs are leaving the East Coast. Let me quote what the President of the St. John's Board of Trade said as reported in the Evening Telegram for September 12, 1986. This is just to show you, Sir, that this is not simply an opposition voice crying in the dark. The Board of Trade President Geoff Tooton told the Kiwanis Club of Cabot:

—that Ottawa must come up with more incentives to keep exploration drilling alive.

The loan rig operation offshore Newfoundland right now is expected to stay around for only another 10 months. After that the term "offshore" may mean fishing only for some time.

Hard hit by the unforseen collapse of oil prices, oil companies and business leaders across the country are now asking Ottawa for help to save what is left from the deregulation experiment.

—there's a need for more incentives to keep up at least a minimum of offshore drilling, if only to help delineate already proven reserves.

It's time for the federal Government to reassess the situation in the frontier lands of Canada's energy industry and act decisively today.

There is no mention, Mr. Speaker, of how the Government wants to address this problem. What is needed is a made in Canada price or some financial incentive to the oil companies so they can start drilling again and Hibernia can get going. It must not be allowed to drift.

Like my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), I found some things of value in this Throne Speech. I think that congratulations are in order to the Government for mentioning a national forum on post-secondary education, and a forum on technology; the latter being something I have been urging for the last two years. It is an important issue in Canada. The Government of Canada must address it and it must not be left to the provinces. I was very pleased to see that the Government will call a national forum on post-secondary education. I think this Party can take some credit because our leader has been stressing post-secondary education in his speeches, not just since this Parliament began but before. At the present time we have a national Liberal task force on post-secondary education. However, I congratulate the Government for this. It is the first time that a Government has made mention of it in a Throne Speech and it is very welcome indeed.

I was also pleased to see the attack that is going to be made on illiteracy in Canada. There are economic pay-offs to solving the illiteracy problem. It is a situation that exists all across the country which must be dealt with, and dealt with soon.

I was also glad to see the reference to the Government's intention to improve water quality to bring in the Environmental Protection Act and to take other measures to improve water quality. I was pleased because the Exploits River Sytem in my riding, a very important river system, is in great danger at the moment. As some people will know, there is a very important paper mill on that river and there is effluent going into it. As well, there is salmon enhancement taking place. This river could become the greatest salmon river in North America, so it is important that we come to grips with these problems. We will be asking the Government to follow through, not only with its verbal commitments, but with its pocket-book, because we will need $22 million to solve the problems in the Exploits River system.

• (1230)

There were some good things in the Speech from the Throne, but I have to agree with the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) that there were things we wanted to see but did not see. For example, I wanted a firm commitment to the advancement of the equality of women in the workplace and in society. What did we get from the Government? The Government made the statement that it hoped the private sector would follow the example of the Government of Canada in advancing the equality of women. I do not think that is good enough. I think there must be more than that. There must be legislation, guidelines, and some use of the levers of the Government of Canada to ensure that the private sector indeed follows the example of the federal Government in advancing the cause of women. There was no commitment to day care, which is a growing issue in my riding and across the country.

On the question of youth, there will be more consultation with the provinces. That is not good enough. In my province close to 50 per cent of eligible young people are unemployed. That is a national tragedy. The Senate report just told us that young people are in danger of becoming a lost generation, yet the Government says it will have more consultation with the provinces. As I said, that is not good enough. It is a serious and real problem which needs the attention, help, and support of the Government of Canada.

There are some good things in the Speech from the Throne, but on the whole I found that it did not address, in a realistic way, the very real problems in the Atlantic provinces. I hope the Government of Canada is not taking the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) seriously and is not being guided by what he said. He suggested recently in the Atlantic provinces that we should possibly compare ourselves with the Third World when we talk about economic and social advancement.

The fact is that we in Atlantic Canada are Canadians. The only yardstick by which we can go is how we compare with other Canadians. When we look at our situation, we find there is still inequality and a need for the direct intervention of the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada cannot leave it to the private sector or to private enterprise to solve our problems. Historically we have been dependent upon the direct intervention of the Government of Canada. We do not like it, but it is a fact of life. Until such time as fundamental and structural problems can be solved, that has to be the case. I hope the Minister of Transport, having as he does a very responsible position as the regional Minister for Newfoundland, was speaking more out of frustration than anything else and speaking in a tone of levity for which he is well known. We are not at all prepared to accept that comparison with the Third World. We are Canadians. We expect help from the Government of Canada, and that help was not apparent in the Speech from the Throne.

I want to see more vision and direction as to how the problems in the east and in the rest of the country will be solved. Therefore, I cannot support the Throne Speech and I must associate myself with the amendment of our Party, particularly wherein it indicates the following:

—when the oil and gas industry is trying to hang on; when regional inequalities are being worsened by government inaction;—

I can only hope that after the Throne Speech the Government will look seriously at the very real problems in the oil industry, in the fishery, and in hydro development, in particular, to try to create some real jobs in the Atlantic area, particularly in Newfoundland and Labrador. I hope that following the Throne Speech there will be initiatives which may not have been enunciated in the Speech from the Throne but will be spelled out in legislation in the House of Commons by the Government, because the problems are very real and will not go away by themselves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. Since there are no questions or comments, on debate the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White).

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by congratulating Your Honour on your reappointment. I wish you well. You certainly have the confidence of the House.

I am very pleased to rise today to take part in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. It has been barely two years since the Government received a manadate of reform from Canadians. Since that time we have made major progress toward achieving the four goals spelled out in our first Speech from the Throne almost two years ago, namely, national reconciliation, constructive internationalism, social justice, and economic renewal. In particular, significant action has been taken to rebuild the Canadian economy, and I should like to mention a few items.

On September 4, 1984, for example, the rate on five-year mortgages was 14.25 per cent. Today that rate is 11.25 per cent. The rate on loans issued under the Small Businesses Loans Act is now 10.75 per cent, compared with 14 per cent on election day. Consumer confidence is at its highest level in 21 years, according to the Conference Board. Housing starts have risen by 40 per cent since September, 1984. Canada's inflation rate has been in the 4 per cent range now for two years, the most stable price environment we have seen in Canada since the late 1960s. The number of Canadians living below the poverty line declined by 300,000 last year, the first such decline since 1981. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) mentioned on Friday, it is not a miracle, but it is real progress.

The Government inherited a deficit of $38.3 billion. Last year that deficit fell to $34.5 billion. This year the deficit will be approximately $32.5 billion. It will be the first time in 16 years that the deficit has declined for two consecutive years.

Internationally we have also done very well. In the past two years Canada has moved from eleventh to sixth position in the world's 24 top competitive developed nations, and that is no minor accomplishment. It is clear Canada is in an international position of strength and growing stronger, led by the present Government.

What about our record of putting Canadians back to work? During the election campaign of 1984 a corner-stone of our message to Canadians was jobs, jobs, jobs. We believed that a P.C. Government could introduce policies to increase employment, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled an economic statement in late 1984 to begin that process. How have we done? In September, 1984, 11.7 per cent of the Canadian workforce was unemployed. Today the unemployment rate is down two full percentage points to 9.7 per cent. In that period over 560,000 Canadians found work; 318,000 of them were women and 85 per cent of the jobs were full-time jobs. I might add that all of this was despite opposition predictions that thousands of jobs would be lost. Certainly there is much more to be done, especially for our youth. It is equally clear that the Government offers Canadians the brightest future.

We are taking the initiative on international trade. As the Prime Minister said on Friday—and I think quite aptly—trade is not just a theory; trade means jobs for Canadians. Also technology, research, and development mean jobs for Canadians. The Throne Speech clearly states the commitment of the Government in these areas. It can then be applied to all industries, for the benefit of all Canadians. Canada has made great progress in economic renewal, and the Throne Speech sets out the agenda for future progress.

However, there is an industry in Canada which has not shared in the economic renewal and finds itself in very difficult times. I am speaking about Canadian agriculture. Representing as I do the rural riding of Dauphin—Swan River in west central Manitoba, the agricultural economy is of particular importance to my constituents and I. Why should Canadians be concerned at all with farming? Agriculture is much more than just an occupation; agriculture is a way of life. Canadian agriculture is dominated by the family farm. At the time of the 1981 census, 87 per cent of Canadian farms were operated by sole proprietors and 9.3 per cent were partnerships. Less than one half of 1 per cent were owned by corporations whose shares were not held by single families. Two-thirds of operators owned all the land they farmed. Including the processing, wholesaling, and retailing sectors, food and agriculture account for more than a quarter of all economic activity in Canada. Approximately 500,000 Canadians are directly employed in agriculture, and approximately 1.5 million people are employed directly or indirectly in agriculture and food. Last year agricultural exports generated $9 billion in foreign exchange. After subtracting imports of $6 billion, Canada had a positive agricultural trade balance of $3 billion. Agricultural exports last year were equal to an average of $28,000 per farm, and farm cash receipts in 1985 totalled $20 billion.

• (1240)

However, there is also bad news. On paper the average farmer had an equity of $416,945 in 1984. However, the paper value of a farm will not buy groceries, furniture or children's clothing. In that same year the average income from all sources for farmers was $15,596. This means that an average farmer could more than double his or her total income simply by selling the farm and investing the proceeds in long-term government bonds. Although people might be inclined to point their fingers at grain farmers when the price of bread goes up, the farmers' cash receipt from a 24-ounce loaf of bread is barely enough to make a sandwich.

At the end of 1984, farm debt totalled $21.6 billion. The annual number of farm bankruptcies rose from 125 in 1979 to 551 in 1984, an increase of 341 per cent. Last year the number of farm bankruptcies declined by 8 per cent to 508, but that is still far too high. Total farm equity fell from $100 billion in 1981 to 95.6 billion in 1984, a decline of more than $4 billion.

Significant gains have been made in agricultural productivity over the past several years. The high productivity of our agri-food system means that Canadians on average spend less than 16 per cent of their income on food, the second lowest percentage in the world. As you can see, agriculture is important to all Canadians, not just western Canadians and those involved in agriculture.

A western farmer told a reporter recently that he worked on the farm to feed 90 people and his wife works in town to feed him. I think that is a sad irony and an all too common tragedy which has forced many farmers and farm families off the farm, and Canada cannot afford to lose productive farmers.

The reason for all of this is a total upheaval in the international agricultural economy. In recent years world agricultural trade has been strongly influenced by debt repayment problems in developing countries. There have been protection policies, export incentives for surplus production, and increased production in many parts of the world. In fact, many of the countries we used to export to are now net exporters themselves. These factors have created tough competition for export markets and driven down world prices for many farm commodities. As a result, farm income from market sources is declining.

Prairie grain producers, who have been particularly hard hit by low commodity prices, have also suffered low crop yields due to drought, flooding and grasshopper infestation. Based on expectations of growing export markets and higher prices, many farmers borrowed to finance farm expansion and modernization in the 1970s. These heavily-indebted farmers were crippled by high interest rates in the early 1980s and many have subsequently been unable to meet their financing costs. Thus it is quite apparent that our prairie grain producers are innocent victims of an international trade war. This Government understands the situation. It has assisted and it intends to do much more.

What has been our record over the past two years in response to the needs of agriculture? Many of the initiatives I will mention are in direct response to the commitments we made during the 1984 election campaign. Since coming to office this Government has brought forward over 235 separate initiatives which will benefit Canadian agriculture at a cost of more than $5.1 billion. I want to mention a few important examples.

Through a system of rebates the Government has effectively removed all federal sales and excise taxes from diesel and gasoline farm fuels for an average annual saving of almost $200 million for our producers. In fact, the elimination of the fuel tax was announced by the Prime Minister on April 30 as part of his western initiative. The Prime Minister, by his actions then and now, has confirmed his personal commitment and that of his Government to agriculture.

When was the last time any Canadian saw a Prime Minister of Canada stand up and speak on behalf of Canada's farmers? I feel that our Prime Minister has his finger on the pulse of Canadian agriculture. In the past all we got, most of the time, was just the finger.

Legislation has been passed to set up farm debt review boards composed of people who have knowledge and experience in farming and financial matters. Farm families who have no choice but to give up farming because of financial difficulties can look to the Canadian Rural Transition Program for assistance. The program is worth over $46 million. Charges that this program will force families off the farm are totally ludicrous. Being self-employed, farmers have generally not been eligible for this type of federal assistance and this program is only one part of a total farm policy package as developed by Agriculture Canada and Employment and Immigration Canada after consultation with provincial Governments and farm organizations.

However, despite all that has been done, serious problems still exist. In the words of our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in a speech he gave on August 28: "I would be the first to admit that despite all of our initiatives problems in agriculture persist. At one time the measures we have taken would have been more than enough. Today there is a legitimate concern that more needs to be done."

At the root of the problem, as farmers and the rest of the agricultural community understand, is the European Economic Community common agricultural policy and, by way of response, the U.S. Farm Bill. This subsidy battle between them has resulted in unrealistically low world grain prices. As is so apparent, when the price of grain declines, so does the economy of western Canada. These prices bear no relation whatsoever to any kind of production cost figures.

The opposition Parties do not seem to be able to grasp a basic understanding of the problem. The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent), for example, talks about European and American farmers being protected by these subsidies. Anyone who knows anything about the agricultural economy knows that these subsidies are the cause of the problem and not a response to it. Without these huge subsidies, in a world of truly competitive agricultural trade, the farmers of Canada would prosper. They have proven in the past that they are among the most competitive in the world.

Let us put the subsidy picture into prospective for just a moment. According to Agriculture Canada calculations, in 1985, for every one dollar in Canadian funds which our Government spent to support wheat production, the U.S. spent $2.57, and the EEC almost $3. It is also estimated that for 1986-87, for every dollar Canada spends the EEC and the U.S. will spend nearly four times as much. Obviously Canada does not have the treasury to compete with the EEC and the U.S. The long-term solution is to end the unfair subsidization of the EEC and U.S. farmers.

The Canadian Government has taken a leading role in international talks on agriculture trade to help alleviate the problem. Prime Minister Mulroney, for example, made this matter Canada's top priority for discussion at the Tokyo Economic Summit. The debate took hold and every member nation recognized that the spiral of subsidy must be stopped, and only by acting together could it be stopped. External Affairs Minister Joe Clark and finance Minister Michael Wilson raised the matter when they met their counterparts at the OECD spring session in Paris. The OECD subsequently launched a study on subsidies and their effects. Former trade Minister Jim Kelleher raised the issue when he met with his colleagues in Seoul, Korea, earlier this year. There was wide agreement that the proper forum to deal with the problem was mulilateral trade negotiations under GATT. In Uruguay very recently our Government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I believe the Hon. Member is reading verbatim from a document. He should, when he mentions a Member, leave off the name. If it is the Right Hon. Prime Minister, that is fine. He does not have to say "Brian Mulroney". The same thing applies to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or any other Minister. He does not have to mention the name. I think we should start this session off with that kind of decorum, and I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member would remind himself of that when he is speaking. Thank you.

Mr. White: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was not reading verbatim in all my comments. I have been using some of the notes. However, I will take into account what you said and I appreciate the intervention.

The Government has taken other steps on the international scene. The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) was in Australia in August with other non-subsidizing exporting countries to seek solutions to the trade problems. We have also entered into important trade negotiations with our largest trading partner, the United States, in an attempt to secure a deal which will secure agricultural markets and, hopefully, open more up. The recent protectionist measures taken by the U.S. only serve to underline the urgent necessity to establish such a trade deal with the United States. Such a deal would ensure that Canada is no longer a victim of the American trade policies that are really aimed at other countries, particularly the European Economic Community. The second thing you can be sure of is that any deal which is signed by Canada with the United States concerning agricultural trade will be good for Canadians and, in the area of agriculture, good for Canadian farmers.

• (1250)

That is what the Government is doing for the future of Canadian agriculture. Most recently there have been two major announcements in keeping with our Throne Speech commitment to help alleviate personal hardship in our farm community. First, two or three days ago Canada signed a multi-billion dollar wheat sale to the Soviet Union which is very good news for wheat producers in Canada. It is a major sale that is great news for all of western Canada, not only the farmers. Second, on Friday the Prime Minister announced the development of an agricultural assistance program which could total more than $1 billion. Over the next month a package will be devised in consultation with the provinces. I believe it was urgent that the announcement was made during the debate on the Speech from the Throne in comments by the Prime Minister to give the producers in western Canada some indication of the assistance that will be coming their way.

As a final observation on the Speech from the Throne, I was also personally very pleased to see the Government's commitment to action against drug and alcohol abuse. The illegal drug trade is a $10 billion industry in Canada. I personally believe that we must also support programs to prevent and treat alcoholism. Alcoholism is a problem which overshadows all other drug abuse combined. I am pleased that it was mentioned in the Throne Speech.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Government has made significant progress in the past few years. The Throne Speech is a clear indication of a blueprint for further progress. I am proud to be a member of the government caucus and I am proud of the accomplishments the Government has made.

Canadians have every reason to greet the future with great confidence.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am a little confused because the body of the Member's speech dealt with the litany, indeed, the travesty of the situation currently facing Canadian farmers. Yet, the Member is defending the Government's record by saying that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a three or four paragraph reference to this in the Throne Speech. On the one hand the Member lauds the Government's bilateral talks. On the other hand I assume that he does not support supply management which is the position of the Canadian Wheat Board as it relates to the sale of wheat, not only in Canada but abroad. Could the Member specify what his position is on supply management?

Second, does he feel that it is an absolute coincidence that following a 5.30 a.m. call from Grant Devine the Prime Minister finally came onside last Friday, when it happens that there is going to be an election in Saskatchewan? There are those cynics among us who felt that the PGRT announcement in Alberta was linked to the Alberta election and those among us who feel that the announcement made by the Prime Minister with respect to the supposed $1 billion fund, the details of which have not yet been worked out, was more related to the Saskatchewan election than to the Throne Speech.

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question. I can see why she would be somewhat confused. The Canadian Wheat Board is not considered supply management. It has been very beneficial to the farmers, but it is definitely not supply management.

I am very pleased that the Member mentioned the accusation that the announcement on the farm aid package was in response to the Saskatchewan election. I believe that any help for western agriculture must involve the provinces, and Saskatchewan has been a leading proponent of support for agriculture. I compare that to the platitudes which have come from the Manitoba Government, with absolutely no help. The idea of help for farmers in Manitoba has been an indication that farmers there owe more money to the Government. That is the only thing which has been done. I am pleased that the Government of Saskatchewan has followed its words with action. Ontario has school tax relief for farm land which Manitoba could easily implement. We speak about Saskatchewan for good reason. It has done a great deal for the farmers of western Canada.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Member avoided my first question. Does he or does he not support supply management with respect to Canadian agricultural produce?

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I support organizations like the Canadian Wheat Board. I think it is too simplistic a view of Canadian agriculture to make a blunt statement that you support supply management. There is much more to it than that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I also listened very carefully to the Member's speech and I thank him for laying out some of the specific problems of the Canadian farm producer these days. I have three questions for the Member, all of which are related. He made reference to the agricultural assistance program which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) introduced the other day in his speech on the Address in Reply to the Throne Speech. This assistance program will consist of up to $1 billion. Is this the long awaited deficiency payment that the Government has been promising? Is this new money? In other words, will this $1 billion be in addition to the moneys already involved in a variety of agricultural support packages? Is this for western Canada or for all of Canada? Durum wheat growers in parts of Canada other than western Canada are also experiencing serious difficulties.

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for his question. As I mentioned in my presentation, the assistance package announced on Friday was important in that it was an indication to western farmers that help is on the way. It is also important to note that consultations will be had with the provinces. I believe that help for western agriculture must be a federal-provincial matter. With regard to it being a deficiency payment, that may be the wrong wording for it. I have been unable to find a consensus within the farm community of the best way to bring forward the assistance. I think it is far better to announce that the assistance is on the way, to bring confidence back into the farming community, then to sit down with the provinces and farm organizations in order to try to discover which is the best program for the benefit of western farmers.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity to commend my colleague, the Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White) on his very excellent presentation. He comes, as I do, from a constituency which is largely agricultural. From that perspective I certainly have great interest in his remarks. I was reminded very much of the Prince Albert declaration put forward by our Party in July of 1984 which laid out a framework for the future and gave some hope, for the first time in a generation, to western Canada. Coming from that Prince Albert declaration was the promise that the west would be brought back into Confederation. Over the past couple of years a great many initiatives have been undertaken by the Government in order to assist in bringing about the reunification of the country.

We are entering into a new era of co-operation rather than confrontation. The other day the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that farmers expect the Government to sell their grain and he said "By God, we are going to do it". Contrast that with the words of a previous Prime Minister who went out to western Canada and said to the farmers "Why should I sell your wheat?" I think that is the essence of the whole thing. It is a case of co-operation versus confrontation.

Could the Hon. Member expand on something for me? He mentioned very briefly that one of the major announcements of last week was a grain sale of enormous magnitude. He comes from a grain-growing constituency, as I do. I would appreciate if he would enlarge on the details of that and what it means for western Canada and the agricultural community.

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Swift Current—Maple Creek for his question. The grain deal announced last week was indeed a major deal. Grain markets are difficult enough to find these days and the grain deal in question is for a minimum of 25 million tonnes over the next five years. In the past the Soviets have shown that they are purchasing far in excess of that. We are talking about a sale in the magnitude of $5 billion plus.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

ADOPTION OF HONOUR SYSTEM

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, in last Wednesday's Throne Speech the Government promised to take effective action against the grave and growing threat posed by the traffic in illegal drugs. Last Friday, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) announced a new customs postal service which runs directly counter to the stated intentions of the Throne Speech.

The new customs postal service cuts 120 jobs and adopts a naive honour system which allows mail to be released prior to the payment of duties. Canadians want a customs system that does not impede legitimate corporate and personal importation. But Canadians also want a system that ensures prohibited goods will be ferreted out and duties owed will be paid.

The customs and excise union argued strenuously against the adoption of the new honour system. Their brief to the Legislative Committee on Bill C-59 stated that: "The message being transmitted to Canadians engaged in the importation of illegal substances and materials is that the Government, in the interest of "down-sizing government operations" will reduce your chance of getting caught".

The Government's war on illegal drugs has begun not with a bang but with a whimper.

TRADE

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, has Premier Vander Zalm of British Columbia and his Minister of Forests sabotaged the Canadian softwood case? In a few days the U.S. International Trade Commission will make a provisional ruling on whether Canadian stumpage fees actually amount to a subsidy. A few weeks ago Premier Vander Zalm and his Forest Minister publicly announced that B.C. stumpage fees might indeed be too low and that he, as Premier, would request a review of the province's stumpage rates.

Surely these public musings hurt the Canadian case and force the industry, workers, and provincial Governments to make an eleventh hour offer which only worsens the situation and places more than 25,000 Canadian jobs at risk. The federal Government admitted guilt, admitted a lack of confidence in the Canadian case, and as a result, the U.S. Senators accused Canada of unfair trading practices and of being caught with its hand in the cookie jar.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Vander Zalm's careless comments were made prior to the preliminary ruling and have sabotaged Canada's case.

* * *

"I AM A CANADIAN"

THE MEANING OF CITIZENSHIP

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in Canada I do not go much for English power, French power, Vietnam power, Chinese power, Spanish power, et cetera. Canada's population of native born Canadians is augmented by people from almost every country in the world and when immigrants become citizens of our country, the judge invariably says: "Now you are a Canadian", and they become a brother or sister to every other Canadian.

Canadians embrace many philosophies, religions and creeds; their skin is white, black, brown, red, almost every colour in the spectrum. They are individuals and not state clones. But when they travel abroad they travel as Canadians. When they speak, whether in the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, in the west or north, they speak as Canadians.

That is Canadian power. Yes, Canadian power.

[Translation]

The Canadian power!

[English]

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

CALL FOR REVIEW OF POLICIES

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, in 1982 when the previous Government changed the Farm Credit Corporation from a lending institution to assist young people get started in agriculture to a banking institution, now ranking fourteenth in Canada, little thought was given to the consequences. Their advisers must have thought interest rates would never come down. Today interest rates are too high, especially in view of world commodity prices.

High penalties are being charged when farmers want to pay off their mortgages early, and in my constituency there is over $500,000 in this category. Chartered banks are forgiving penalties. It would be unparliamentary to repeat what farmers think of the 6 per cent commodity based loan. I call upon the Government to review the Farm Credit Corporation's policies and bring them up to modern times.

* * *

• (1405)

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): With respect to the official languages, Mr. Speaker, the champions of the linguistic cause in this country have been disappointed to note the backward step taken by the Government in its Speech from the Throne.

In answer to a question I asked in the House April 15 last, the Prime Minister promised, and I quote: "—in the near future, the Government will—make—announcements with respect to—an action program to promote official languages". Yet nothing concrete has been done for two years. The 1986 Speech from the Throne is indeed a backward step, given the firm commitment made by the Government in 1984.

On October 19, 1985, at the "The Minorities: A time for Solutions" conference, the then Secretary of State, Mr. Bouchard, said: "The time for analysis is over; now is the time for solutions." We must therefore take action, Mr. Speaker, this is not the time to waver.

It has become imperative, first to give primacy to this legislation over all other federal statutes; second, to give teeth to this legislation, particularly Section 2, and make it clearly binding rather than merely declaratory; third, integrate the language of work into the Official Languages Act; and finally, give more power to the Commissioner of Official Languages so he can do his job.

[English]

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SERVICE CUTS IN PRINCE COUNTY, P.E.I.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, residents of my riding are being shortchanged by Canada Post. They were given little notice of postal changes which will have a negative impact on their postal service. Cut-backs will mean letters mailed on a rural route will sit for 24 hours before pick-up. The mail will arrive much later in the day and the local newspaper will reach some residents a full day after it is published. That is shabby treatment.

Does the Government not understand how important a prompt pick-up and delivery service is to rural residents and business operators? How many city residents would put up with such reduced postal services? Prince County is a depressed area. There are few jobs to be had. Why is the Government cutting federal services in an area which is already disadvantaged?

Prince County residents are not accepting these cuts quietly. They have organized. They have voiced their opposition. As a result, Canada Post has delayed the cut-backs for a month. But a delay is not enough. I demand that the Government reverse its decision and maintain full postal services for Prince County residents.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

PLEA FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS FOR FARMERS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, it is Saskatchewan's misfortune that in this hour of crisis, brought on in part by falling oil and grain prices, we have Conservative Governments in Ottawa and Regina. The ineptness and mismanagement of these two Governments are forcing Saskatchewan into bankruptcy. Take, for example, the issue of deficiency payments. It has been some time since the federal Government become aware that the U.S. Farm Bill would depress the international price of grain and that a deficiency payment would be essential if thousands of family farms are to be saved.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has not announced a deficiency payment. Instead, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) told reporters that the Government would do anything to win the Saskatchewan election for Grant Devine. To play politics with the livelihood of western Canadian farmers clearly demonstrates the contempt this Government, and that of Premier Devine, have for thousands of farm families. If a deficiency payment is going to be paid, get it into the hands of farmers now. Stop playing politics with the future of western Canada.

S.O. 21

REFUGEES

CALL FOR CHANGE IN DETERMINATION SYSTEM

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for Canadians to learn that our country will receive the 1986 Nansen Medal for protecting and helping refugees. However, Canadians are understandably frustrated with our system of refugee determination. Canadians can no longer tolerate a process which seems to reward greed instead of need. They cannot understand why our genuine desire to help becomes a mockery of justice. For the sake of legitimate refugees all over the world, and for the sake of our respected reputation as a nation that cares, we need to change our system of refugee determination.

I join with millions of Canadians in welcoming the announcement in the Speech from the Throne that action will be taken and I join in applauding the resolve of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) to prosecute those who break our immigration laws. Let us tell the world we care, but let us also tell the world that we are fair.

* * *

AIRPORTS

PROPOSED GROUND SERVICES FEE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the plan of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to impose a licence fee, really a tax, on ground handling and other service contractors at Transport Canada airports is, I am afraid, rather unfair and ill-considered.

• (1410)

Not only is a charge of 5 per cent of gross revenues excessive, but the proposed system is inequitable because it would apply to services provided by contractors but not to services provided by an airline for itself or for another airline. This tax seems to be deliberately designed to put contractors out of business. Therefore the Minister of Transport must reconsider this rather crude proposal.

* * *

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

BUTLER, PORTER, NANNY, MAID

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the questions before Canadians today are: When is a butler a porter and when is a porter a butler? Was the butler watching the luggage or was the butler watching the RCMP? Where was the maid, or was she a maid? When is a maid a maid? What is the difference between a butler and a maid? If the butler and the maid were on the trip, where was the nanny? What is a nanny?

This mystery is absolutely perplexing. The only person who knows the truth for sure is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). But then again does the Prime Minister know the truth or will we have to ask the butler? As far as I am concerned, the butler didn't do it.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

SUPPORT FOR INITIATIVES TO HELP BRITISH COLUMBIA ECONOMY

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Thank you Mr. Speaker, the regional disparities that currently exist throughout Canada can no longer be tolerated. The wealth of our great nation must be distributed evenly to the benefit of all Canadian people. As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as do all the Members of this House, the economy of Mission—Port Moody and that of British Columbia as a whole is almost entirely based on natural resources. As a result, external factors which are beyond our control greatly influence our ability to maintain a healthy and vibrant economy.

Today I would like to commend our Government for recognizing both the need to address the tragedy of regional inequity, the need to diversify the western economic base, and for making these a top priority in the recent Throne Speech. Mr. Speaker I know that my constituents, the people of Mission—Port Moody, are poised and ready to work in co-operation with the Government on positive initiatives such as these.

* * *

STATUS OF WOMEN

CRITICISM OF SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne was lacking in many areas, especially with regard to any real action toward promoting equality for women. Understandably, both the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and the Government's own Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women have expressed more than disappointment with the Government's reluctance to announce any concrete actions on the topics of child care and battered women. Another major concern of women is the lack of any mention at all in the Speech from the Throne with respect to improving the working conditions and benefits for part-time workers, most of whom are women. Indeed, 72 per cent of part-time workers are women.

The Wallace and the Abella Reports both recommended that the Government take action on prorated benefits for women in part-time positions. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women listed that as one of its five priorities.

The Government talks about social justice as a cornerstone for equality, yet it has refused to act in any way whatsoever to improve the law concerning part-time workers.

* * *

• (1415)

[Translation]

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

RICK HANSEN'S COURAGE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Last week, Mr. Speaker, the Province of New Brunswick and particularly the riding of Westmorland—Kent were honoured by a very famous Mr. Rick Hansen.

Indeed, I had the honour and pleasure of talking with Rick when I accompanied him on his journey from Port Elgin to Cap-Pelé.

Rick Hansen's courage is a source of inspiration for all those who meet him and wave to him along his way.

Needless to say Rick Hansen's cause deserves our support and I take this opportunity to convey his invitation to meet him and even accompany him when he goes through your community. He has invited you, be there.

* * *

RÉAL CAOUETTE

TRIBUTE TO A GREAT POLITICIAN

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): On September 26, in Rouyn—Noranda, Mr. Speaker, I dedicated on behalf of the Department of Public Works a federal building as a memorial to Mr. Réal Caouette.

Réal Caouette died on December 16, 1976, and I think the House should, on occasions, pay tribute to our great politicians who, like him, spent part of their lives in Canadian politics.

He was elected for the first time on September 16, 1946; he returned in force to the House on June 18, 1962, following his greatest victory, and he was to sit here until 1976. Réal Caouette was not only a great parliamentarian and the leader of a national Party, he was also and above all a man who dedicated his life to the welfare of his fellow citizens; he was a great Canadian, he loved his country passionately and he was very proud of his mother tongue.

Thanks to this ceremony which was held on September 26, Mr. Speaker, Réal Caouette will live forever in the memory of the people of my region whom he served and represented so very well here in this House.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS TO ASSIST FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, over the past two years the Government has amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act to permit timely interim payments, instituted an immediate lifetime capital gains tax exemption, doubled the advance payment for crops, enacted federal farm fuel rebates in excess of 30 cents per gallon, improved Canada-provincial crop insurance programs, put over $200 million into crop and livestock drought assistance, and negotiated the inclusion of agriculture into the GATT talks. These initiatives, coupled with those of the Government of Saskatchewan, have injected over $2 billion into the Saskatchewan economy alone.

Now there has been a commitment in the Throne Speech to work with Premier Devine and other provincial Governments and with farm organizations to devise an appropriate assistance package that will deliver an estimated $1 billion to enhance the cash flow of the Canadian grain farmer. Never before in our history have any two levels of government, working together, made such a response to Canadian agriculture.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF ASSISTANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister confirm that the announcement he made on behalf of western grain farmers during the course of his intervention in the Throne Speech debate last Friday was made only as a result of a 5.30 a.m. phone call from Premier Devine to two federal cabinet Ministers during which the Premier is quoted in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix as having said: "If I lose over this, it's going to be damned tough for Mulroney next time around"? Is that the reason why the Prime Minister made a last minute, undetailed effort on behalf of western grain producers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the initiative that was set forward followed a meeting of Agriculture Ministers in Victoria held on August 27, 1986, at which the Ministers supported the need to examine all options including deficiency payments which could be in excess of $1 billion to maintain the competitive position of Canadian producers in the immediate future. There was at the conference a clear, collective commitment to take action to support the agricultural sector and all the jobs it represents across Canada during this damaging trade war. That meeting was held on August 27. There were meetings subsequent to that, and the announcement I made on Friday was perfectly consistent with our objective of helping Canadian farmers.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister's announcement was also remarkably coincidental with the Saskatchewan election and that call from Premier Devine.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister explain what the Deputy Prime Minister meant when, outside his office, he said with respect to the Prime Minister's farm announcement: "Anything to win elections, you know"?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a cynical question deserves a cynical answer.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we have that on tape and so does every reporter in the gallery. If the Deputy Prime Minister wants to set himself up as an authority on cynicism, he has the award going away on this particular issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FEDERAL FUNDING INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances may I ask the Prime Minister a second supplementary question? When will he reveal the details of how much new federal money is involved, how much of the money is recycled from existing programs, and how much the hard pressed western provinces will have to contribute to any result?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the August meeting and subsequent meetings on the agricultural and finance levels in regard to the problem in western Canada in particular, I am happy to advise my right hon. friend that on Thursday or Friday of this week there will be a meeting of the Deputy Ministers of Agriculture to refine this matter further and produce the information required to help western farmers.

* * *

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Last Friday the Minister said the Canadian lumber concessionary package was: "... our only offer to the Americans," and in the same breath she went on to say: "... as expected, that only offer has been rejected." That begs the question, Mr. Speaker, why did the Minister make this damaging concession and undermine our case before the American tribunal one week before it makes a decision if, in her own words "as expected" they turned her down?

• (1420)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question in this House. I can say that I did expect the Americans to reject an offer in the hope that they could jack up the price. It has been made very clear to the Americans that there is only one offer on the table and there will be no other.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister digs a deeper hole for herself. Her logic is shot through with confusion.

Mr. McDermid: Question.

POSITION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Government of British Columbia stated on Friday that it regarded the final offer as the beginning of continuing negotiations. Will there be other final offers? Will Canada get down on its knees one more time for the expected response, as expected?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, I think, is inadvertently misleading the House because the Premier of British Columbia, who represents the Government of British Columbia, is totally supportive of the position taken by the Canadian Government.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and stems from his announcement on Friday that there would be some kind of overdue financial assistance for Canadian grain producers. Specifically, in terms of this announcement the Prime Minister used the figure of a billion dollars. Is the billion dollars to be new federal money? Is it to be in the form of a deficiency payment, and is this money for grain producers on the Prairies only?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the amount is pretty well that mentioned by the agricultural Ministers in their communiqué on August 27 to deal with the serious problem in western Canada.

The meeting to which I have just referred of Deputy Ministers of Agriculture on Thursday or Friday of this week is precisely to put together the data required to be able to respond with precision to my hon. friend.

SIZE OF FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that the meeting of the western Premiers last May, followed by the meeting in August attended by all provincial Governments, asked for a minimum of a billion dollars new funding from the federal Government alone. My question to the Prime Minister now concerns the amount of money coming from the federal Government, not necessarily the details about how it is to be spent which could be sorted out Thursday, but is this a billion dollars of new federal funds that will go to prairie producers or will it be spread across the country? Or, is it old money?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I already indicated to my hon. friend in a statement in the House on Friday that we would be meeting with the provinces in the shortest possible time to work out the best way of meeting these commitments that were raised, as I say, by the agricultural Ministers and have been the subject of discussion since. We will take whatever action to be helpful to the western farmers. They are going through, as I have indicated, through no fault of their own, a very difficult situation, and the Government of Canada, the Parliament of Canada, will help them out. The reason for the meeting on Thursday or Friday is to work out the modalities as to how best this can be done.

Mr. Broadbent: Working through the modalities of that answer takes some doing, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says he has answered the question. He has not told us if it is new money. He has not told us if it is going to prairie producers only. He has not answered the question at all.

Will the Prime Minister deal with those questions now because the producers all across Canada, and on the Prairies particularly, want to know where that money is coming from and how much. Since it took the Government 48 hours to make a decision that sent bankers a billion dollars, will he please make up his mind in no more than 48 hours about getting money to grain producers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will respond to some of the points that have been raised by my hon. friend. He knows that they are quite unfair observations. I will tell him this. He is asking whether it is new money or old money. It will be new money and good money in the pockets of the farmers.

• (1425)

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO ORIENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the oriental trip and the butler and the maid. In reference to the trip, the Prime Minister is quoted as having said over the weekend "I didn't take the butler, I didn't take anybody", while Mr. Lortie, one of his aides, and Mr. Doucet both said that there were in fact such people. Could the Prime Minister clear up the butler mystery? Which version is the closest to being the correct one? Will we have to ask Mr. Doucet, Mr. Lortie, or the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has put his question.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could assist the Hon. Member. I should like to advise him that what the Government does on prime ministerial travel is dictated in large measure by security requirements for our Prime Minister and his aides and for the people who meet with him. This is a fundamental requirement. What was done by the people referred to was pursuant to instructions and advice received from the security unit of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

BUTLER'S DUTIES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, that raises an interesting question. If the RCMP is paid to be watching the luggage and, according to Mr. Doucet, the butler is watching the RCMP, then who is watching the butler? Will we have to call the butler before the Bar of the House to find out?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only tell the Hon. Member, as the Solicitor General of the Government, that the RCMP, which is under my control, insists upon strict adherence to all security precautions and requirements on trips of an extensive nature that the Prime Minister takes.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Saskatchewan farmers are quite concerned. They want to know what type of future they are facing, and the types of answers which they are getting from the Prime Minister and the Government are just creating further confusion. My question requires a simple yes or no answer. Is this $1 billion of new federal money which will go to prairie grain producers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I think the only confusion is in the mind of the Hon. Member. He will know that the record of the Government is very substantial in terms of agriculture. We have met needs of agriculture before by reallocating resources. That has happened in the past and it will happen again in the future. The money which is being talked about will be additional money for agriculture within the fiscal framework. I hope that is simple enough that he can understand it.

FEDERAL FUNDING INQUIRY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the farmers of Saskatchewan will be making their decision on October 20, whether or not that is clear. Perhaps the Minister or the Prime Minister can help them. Is this $1 billion of new federal money which will be going to Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta grain producers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the same thing happened a year ago—and a lot of the benefits went to the Hon. Member's province—when the federal Government came forward with some $200 million to assist farmers faced with drought. It happened when we took off the gas tax on farm fuels. Some 30 cents per gallon have come off since the Government has been in office. As the Prime Minister said, it will be new money in the hands or pockets of Canadian farmers. They will realize, appreciate, and take that into consideration when they vote in the Saskatchewan election on October 20.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON AT PORT-CARTIER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the Port-Cartier prison. I would submit that the Prime Minister owes a duty to the House, and indeed to Canadians, to answer questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Prime Minister may or may not owe a duty to answer questions, but the Hon. Member will have to put his question.

Mr. Nunziata: I would like to put my question to the Prime Minister, not to the Solicitor General or to any other Minister. I would like to ask the Prime Minister very specifically whether he or any member of his staff intervened in the decision to relocate the prison from Drummondville to Port-Cartier. If so, what was the nature of the intervention?

• (1430)

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that the decision to locate the prison in Port-Cartier was a government decision. It was made by this Government to assist a depressed region of the Province of Quebec.

REPORTED MEETING ON ISSUE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister refuses to answer questions—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Nunziata: —I would like to put my supplementary to the Deputy Prime Minister. Can he confirm that there was a meeting in his office within the past two weeks to discuss the Port-Cartier prison issue, and is he prepared to table in this House all the documents there were considered at that meeting?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat the answer I have already given. The decision made was a government decision and it was designed to assist a depressed region of Quebec which has extremely high unemployment. We have no apologies to make for taking action of that kind.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SRI LANKAN HIGH COMMISSIONER

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This morning he was given six confidential sworn affidavits by Tamils of Canada indicting Brigadier General Tissa Weeratunga for the torture of Tamils in northern Sri Lanka in 1979. Given this serious new evidence presented to him today does the Minister not think it time to invoke the Vienna Convention and declare Brigadier General Weeratunga persona non grata?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just this morning I received the six affidavits in question and I will naturally look into them. Our inquiries so far on the first affidavit have not turned up any information to corroborate allegations against the High Commissioner. Our inquiries are, naturally, continuing.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said he would, if necessary, launch a full-scale investigation rather than the informal investigation he has hitherto conducted. Will he now at least launch a full-scale investigation given the serious new evidence presented to him today?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, we will look into the allegations contained in these affidavits to see what further action they merit. I understand the delicacy of this matter and we will proceed in that context. I intend to have discussions with the six persons who have filed the affidavits to see if there is any way which will protect their security and allow the information they have conveyed to me this morning to be made available to Sri Lankan authorities. As the Hon. Member and the House will know, it is only in Sri Lanka that the final legal authority to adjudicate these matters resides. I will, naturally, not take any action that would cause injury or damage to citizens of Canada.

* * *

[Translation]

PENITENTIARIES

REASONS FOR CHOOSING PORT-CARTIER AS LOCATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Last Friday, he replied that the decision to relocate the prison from Drummondville to Port-Cartier was made because the unemployment rate in the Port-Cartier area was about 37 or 38 per cent, which is the same answer he gave the press on Tuesday, September 17.

Could the Prime Minister tell me where he got those figures?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only advise the Hon. Member that indeed the unemployment rate is very high in Port-Cartier, as everyone knows. I think that is a very reasonable and valid ground for relocating the prison to that area, to assist in the development of that region.

[Translation]

PORT-CARTIER UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why the Solicitor General makes these statements when his own officials have told him the Prime Minister grossly exaggerated the statistics. I want to ask the Prime—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members may not understand but that is getting argumentative. I ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: My question is quite simple. What is the real unemployment rate in Port-Cartier? My question is directed to the Prime Minister. I hope he knows about these things, since it is his riding, I believe.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): This is the kind of question that should normally be submitted in writing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate I inherited as the Member for the riding of Manicouagan, after the 1984 election, and the fact that nothing was done about it, is a social tragedy, and we have decided to take steps to alleviate the problem.

* * *

[English]

FINANCE

TAX REFORM—NON PAYMENT OF TAXES BY CORPORATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the Throne Speech promise that fairness will be a guiding principle in the Government's proposals for tax reform. Does the Prime Minister consider it fair that, while Canadian farmers are hovering on the brink of bankruptcy, there are some 79,000 corporations in Canada which are profitable but which paid no income tax at all? What does the Government intend to do about the multibillion dollar loss of revenue entailed in that situation?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows we are now undertaking a major review of tax reform and questions of that sort, and the larger questions which affect corporate income tax will be part of that review.

TAX PAID BY ROYAL BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister or the Minister of State aware that one bank teller working in the Royal Bank on Sparks Street in Ottawa paid more income tax earlier this decade than her employer, the Royal Bank of Canada, with 1,500 branches and 98 billion dollars in assets today? How long does the Government intend to tolerate that kind of unfairness in our tax system?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the question of fairness and unfairness is part of this study of tax reform. It includes all questions such as deductions and tax levels, and our hope is to produce at the end lower marginal tax rates for all Canadians.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S DEFINITION OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. I met recently with members of the high-tech community in Ottawa and they expressed their concern that in an information bulletin recently issued by his Department the phrase "research and development" has been so narrowly defined that it could exclude legitimate research and development efforts from the tax credit provisions of the Act. Such disallowance could result in the loss of thousands of high-quality jobs.

Could the Minister indicate whether or not he or his officials have met with members of the high-tech community and, if so, whether they will continue to meet with them with a view to arriving at a fair, mutually advantageous, and workable definition of research and development?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question because it permits me to point out to the House that indeed that is exactly what has been occurring. I met with my colleague, the Minister of Science and Technology, this morning, and I want to reassure the House that the guidelines, which were formulated after intensive consultation, are not meant to be interpreted in a rigid or dogmatic fashion. They are meant, rather, to facilitate the eligibility for proper deduction for research and development purposes and they will not be interpreted in such a way as to be an obstacle to the scientific community or the research and development done in this country.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SRI LANKAN HIGH COMMISSIONER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am happy to hear that he has promised in the House today to meet specifically with each individual Tamil who has tabled an allegation. Can he explain to the House why, when this information was brought to the attention of his officials more than two weeks ago, there was absolutely no follow-up at that time?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member would not want to let her misstatement stand. I did not quite give the undertaking which she just attributed to me. If it becomes useful for me to meet personally with the six individuals concerned, naturally I will do that.

The Hon. Member knows that she is dealing here, in the question of agrément, with a very complex and delicate question of international practice. Other Members of the House have raised questions about this situation before. I have suggested to them, as I have suggested to her, that if they would like to be fully informed about the matter, I am quite prepared to arrange briefings for them and for her.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has suggested nothing of the kind to me. In fact, he has failed to answer two letters which I have written to him on this particular issue.

Given the fact that the Southeast Asia desk has already recommended against the arrival of Weeratunga in Canada, does he not think that it is at the very least necessary to clear the air and have this matter referred to an independent investigation by the human rights branch of the Department of External Affairs?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it may be that my letter of response to the Hon. Member has not yet reached her office or has not yet reached her eyes. If she says that is the case, I will accept that.

I remain of the view that it would be useful for the Hon. Member to be informed of all the circumstances before she raises this question and pursues it in the House or recommends a course of action that may prove very destructive, not only to Canada but also to international practices respecting agrément.

* * *

PATENTS

AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION GOVERNING DRUG MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Over the weekend the Deputy Prime Minister indicated that the Government was reconsidering its proposed amendments to the Patent Act insofar as generic drugs were concerned. Will the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House that the Government has listened to the thousands of Canadians who signed petitions over the summer months and that it does not now intend to proceed with those amendments?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the television program Question Period the Deputy Prime Minister stated: "The Bill is still being refined". That remains the position.

REQUEST THAT AMENDING LEGISLATION NOT PROCEED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Government has admitted that those amendments are in conjunction with the proposed discussions on a free trade deal with the United States. Will the Minister, or the whole Government for that matter, stand up in the House today and admit that it is shameful to be using the deep concern and anxiety that is felt by many thousands of Canadians across the country about what—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order! Perhaps the Hon. Member could help this House and let us know just exactly what the question is.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly, what I and many thousands of Canadians across the country want to know is whether or not the Government will assure them that it will not proceed with the amendments to the Patent Act insofar as generic drugs are concerned.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the anxiety the Hon. Member talks about is being initiated by himself and the rest of his Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: Shame.

Mr. Andre: In fact any impartial examination of the legislation would show that there will be absolutely no increase in drug prices as a result of this legislation.

Mr. Young: Six hundred and fifty million dollars.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We are going to hold you to that.

Mr. Andre: I know the Hon. Member would not like to leave the misinformation before the House that this is tied to the free trade talks which are going on.

Mr. Young: The Prime Minister said it.

Mr. Andre: In fact, in 1983 the previous Government announced the change to the Patent Act. That was long before any trade talks were undertaken. We need to do this for the benefit of Canadian research and development so that Canadian scientists can have that research and development in this high-tech biotechnology area here in Canada, and that is why we are proceeding.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF MANNER IN WHICH GOVERNMENT FISCAL AND TAX POLICIES ANNOUNCED

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State (Finance). In recent weeks, the Minister of Finance made two major public statements, one in Washington about tax reform and the other in Toronto on the state of our public finances. My question is as follows:

Could the Minister inform the House whether in future, the Minister of Finance intends to announce the Government's economic and fiscal policies outside the House, and whether this is part of the new presidential style adopted by the Prime Minister?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise of the question, I have to answer no.

[Translation]

TAX ON COMMERCIAL TRANSACTIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): If the Minister of State (Finance) rejects the presidential approach taken by the Prime Minister, could he inform the House when the Minister of Finance intends to provide as many details to the House on the commercial transactions tax as he gave in Washington on September 5 of this year?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, those details will be presented to this House very shortly.

* * *

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—COMPOSITION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The United States Government, claiming "national security reasons", has refused to let U.S. branch plants of Canadian companies like Northern Telecom sit on their advisory committees for trade talks. In view of this, why has Canada appointed at least 15 representatives of U.S. subsidiaries here to our trade advisory committees?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have appointed representatives to our trade committees because we want to ensure the broadest possible consultation with all sectors of Canadian industry, Canadian provinces, and Canadians generally on the issues before the negotiators to ensure a free trade agreement which meets the concerns of all Canadians.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister in fact approve of this double standard which is hurting our subsidiaries in the United States and creating an unfairness between the two countries with respect to branch plants in both? Does she approve of that double standard?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I and the Government approve of the process of consultation on a national issue which affects all Canadians.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE TO GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Finance) and is with respect to the Government decision to assist Canadian farmers financially in order partially to—and I think we should note "partially"—offset EEC and U.S. export subsidies. What effect will this assistance have on the existing fiscal framework?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to reiterate what the Prime Minister and the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board have said. The Government has reallocated priorities before for drought assistance and livestock assistance and it is doing it again for this particular problem. It will be a reallocation within the given fiscal framework.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, with reference to Atlantic Canada the Speech from the Throne said "regional disparity is completely unacceptable". Yet the Minister of Transport said as recently as today on the radio in Newfoundland, reiterating his statement of a month ago, that Atlantic Canadians should not always compare themselves with the rest of Canada but should compare themselves with Bangladesh and Sri Lanka.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Order! The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does he think that Atlantic Canadians are going to believe that the Government is concerned about regional disparity when the Minister of Transport is asking Atlantic Canadians to think about Bangladesh and compare themselves with Sri Lanka?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received an important communication in regard to the question raised by my hon. friend. I received a telex which says: "You are to be commended for an approach which reflects our experience that the regional development efforts of Governments succeed to the extent they build upon the entrepreneurial insights and energies of the private sector in its relationship to the resource base", signed the Hon. Joseph Ghiz, Premier of Prince Edward Island.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will get to the supplementary question. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion says there is no new money for regional development. My supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. What is the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency going to do, a loaves and fishes act?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Premier Ghiz points out the following: "Your commitment to an Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency in the Speech from the Throne based on maximum participation of other Governments and organizations in the area holds promise for the people of our region". That is what it plans to do, Mr. Speaker. It is an instrument designed to meet the needs of the regions in intimate consultation with the Premier of Prince Edward Island and other Atlantic Premiers, based on the notion that the people in those regions can best design programs to help create employment for themselves. The federal Government is a partner in the economic development of Atlantic Canada. I think that meets with the approval of everyone, including my hon. friend.

* * *

• (1450)

PORNOGRAPHY

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. People in this country are concerned about the rise of child abuse and violent pornography. As well, people want to see other hard core pornography controlled. Will he assure the House that we will soon see legislation covering all aspects of pornography and child abuse?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question by the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls who has had a very leading role in terms of pursuing this area of concern which I believe is shared by all Members of the House. The Speech from the Throne underlined the priority which these initiatives take in the view of the Government. I propose to come forward with legislation at an early date. I know it will have the support of all Members of the House because we want to deal with these important areas of concern to all Canadians.

[Translation]

SHIPYARDS

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Since the Throne Speech does not suggest any strategy for regional economic development, will the Minister indicate a definite commitment to maintain in operation the three Quebec shipyards, without redirecting them towards other production areas?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the shipbuilding industry in Canada is presently experiencing difficulties, as is the case in several of our trading partners. The Governement is very concerned about this situation. Of course, we are closely following the negotiations and discussions, but we think that a restructuring is necessary and should come from the industry itself. We are therefore open to all recommendations or proposals.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF FINAL REPORT OF CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE ON FUTURE OF MONTREAL

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Concerning the economic development of Montreal East, will the Minister do its utmost to make public the final report of the advisory committee on the future of Montreal?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Bord): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the report of the advisory committee on the economic development of Montreal is made available to the cabinet committee, it will be made public.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It arises from the answers given by the Minister of State for Finance, who said there would be just an allocation of existing programs to western grain producers, and the Minister of State for the Wheat Board who said it would be done within the existing framework. How can the Prime Minister insist that there will be new money if the existing framework will be maintained? He knows that, if there is new money, that framework must be rearranged. He is in direct contradiction to the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of State in charge of the Wheat Board.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think my right hon. friend listened to the answer. The response that I gave was that the farmers were suffering and, indeed, the money that would go to the farmers would be new money in their pockets. What we are concerned about here—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: There are smiles on the other side but this concerns putting money in the hands of the farmers who are hurting. We will devise a program that will put more money into the pockets of Canadian farmers. That is what it is all about.

SOURCE OF FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Prime Minister on the same subject. He has now said that the farmers will get new money in their pockets from the federal Government. Will he assure us that this will not be as a result of directing money that was already scheduled for other farming programs? Is it a reallocation from other agricultural programs, or is it entirely new money going from the federal Government into the pockets of grain producers so that they will not pay for this in some other way? Is it new money for the farmers, not taken from other agricultural programs? Will he tell us when they will get the cheques?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not a reallocation of existing aricultural programs. When a farmer gets a cheque that he did not have before the farmer will say "That is new money".

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

HIRING OF POLICY ADVISER TO CABINET

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it deals with Dalton Camp, a long-time Tory pundit, who now is a policy adviser to the Cabinet. Will the Prime Minister give us the undertaking that he will table in the House the job description under which Mr. Camp was hired? Second, does he not believe that by naming Mr. Camp he has indeed made a very partisan nomination and—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member to ask the question, as he has, or even ask the second part of the question. But I would ask the Hon. Member not to get into an argumentative exchange.

Mr. Gauthier: The question is simple.

An Hon. Member: Ask it.

Mr. Gauthier: To a bunch of simple people like you. Does the Prime Minister not believe that by naming Dalton Camp he has politicized the Public Service of Canada in a partisan manner? That is the question.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that if my hon. friend asks Michael Kirby, he would say no.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT APPOINTMENT OF DALTON CAMP BE REVIEWED BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Concerning Dalton Camp, I feel, Mr. Prime Minister, that you have politicized in a partisan fashion a major issue, namely, the civil servants' political activity. This whole issue of politicizing the Public Service could cause tremendous problems. Will you give your word that this appointment will be reviewed by a parliamentary committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The preamble is too long.

* * *

[English]

VIA RAIL

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport for the first time, in his first time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You only have four minutes, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: In light of the rail passenger action force report which was made available to the public by Transport 2000 and which makes several serious allegations about the management of VIA Rail as well as several serious recommendations, will the Minister state what action he has been taking on the recommendations of that task force and what is being done about the orders for new railway cars?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if it takes me as long to answer, we will be here until tomorrow evening. I want to thank the hon. gentleman for his question. He is a well known transport critic.

The matter of VIA Rail is now under consideration by the Government in all aspects that have not yet been dealt with. Many of these aspects have been dealt with by my predecessor who, as the hon. gentleman knows, put rail passenger transportation legislation before the House. It will be reintroduced with some changes and improvements, hopefully later this fall. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I have the interests of VIA Rail and the rail passengers very much at heart and I will act as quickly as I can. Matters will be coming before the House before Christmas.

ORDER FOR NEW PASSENGER CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, what the heck happened to the order for new rail passenger cars which his predecessor announced twice this year and four other predecessors announced annually? What happened to that order for 130 new rail passenger cars?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope to have the privilege of announcing the same matter myself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

• (1500)

[Translation]

RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT STUDY BE TABLED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): As it happens, Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the farcical Minister of Transport.

Last week, when I asked him to table the CN internal study to justify shifting railway car and locomotive maintenance work from the Pointe-Saint-Charles shops to some other place in Canada, the Minister replied that my question was jejune and juvenile. May I give him a further opportunity to shed more light on the reasons which prompt the Government to undertake such serious changes, or does he expect the 2,000 workers whose jobs are at stake to take such juvenile answers for facts?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the position is that this is not a decision taken by the Government. The Government has appointed a board of directors for Canadian National, and also top flight management. Its responsibility, laid down for it first in 1978, is to operate the railway without any financial assistance from the Government of Canada. In doing that, it conducted an internal study in 1985 of its repair shop requirements. As a result of that study, CN decided, as you know, Mr. Speaker, to close the Moncton shops and concentrate all heavy repairs of CN equipment at the Transcona shops in Winnipeg and turn the Pointe-Saint-Charles shops in Montreal into a contract facility. That is its decision. That is what it is in the process of doing.

There are a number of reasons, but one of the basic reasons is that over, I believe, 67 per cent of all the business of CN today is done in the West. That is why Transcona will be the principal place for heavy repairs to CN equipment. I have not read the report myself but I have been thoroughly briefed on the report.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE INFORMATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, this answer is a slight improvement over what I heard last week. Still I should like to ask the Minister—after all he did approve the CN decision, as did the Minister of State (Transport), since both of them said they were not prepared to intervene—whether at least he would table in the House the information which will enable Members here to judge whether or not CN officials made a sound decision. If the Minister is not prepared to do that, I have another suggestion, namely set up a meeting between him and the Pointe-Saint-Charles workers just so he might answer them directly.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the way in which the hon. gentleman could be most helpful to the employees of Pointe-Saint-Charles is to assist and back CN in its efforts to ensure that contract work is obtained for the Pointe-Saint-Charles shops, which is what it is determined to do. It now gets the work from VIA. It is launching a marketing effort to go after business from the United States and the Hon. Member's support, I am sure, would be very helpful to it in that task which will ensure that employment continues for everyone who now works there.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech at the opening of the session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 44) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 57).

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to take part in the debate on the Speech from the Throne to discuss certain of the initiatives this Government has undertaken in international affairs in the first two years of our mandate and some of the challenges which lie ahead. One of the reforms of this Government was precisely to open up debate on foreign policy in Canada. On nine separate occasions in our first two years, my colleagues and I have taken advantage of ministerial statements in Parliament to allow this Parliament to discuss international questions. In the four years previous, our predecesssors did not once make use of that instrument. We established for the first time in history a means for a joint committee of this House and the other place to invite individual Canadians to express their hopes and views about what we should be doing in the world. The rules of Parliament do not oblige me to respond formally to the report which ensued, but in the spirit of our parliamentary democracy I intend to table a full response within the next few weeks.

We believe that one of the great untapped resources of Canadian foreign policy is the interest, expertise and concern of individual Canadians who want to help to build a better world. This is an international country. Just look at this House. You yourself, Sir, as Speaker, were born in Yokohama. One of your Deputies was born just outside of Crakow. One in seven of our citizens has family roots in Eastern Europe. The origins of fully one third Canadians are neither French nor Anglo-Saxon. We come here from everywhere and we are thereby connected by a strong and human bond to perspectives and opportunities which more limited nations cannot enjoy.

The personal tradition of Canadians has been to reach out to the world. One can see it in our missionaries, our merchants and the small army of Canadian aid and development workers. One sees it in our businesses which build schools, dams and highways, extending technology on every continent. One sees it in our soldiers fighting for freedom in war, working for peace now.

Personally, I and my colleague, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), will never forget the generosity of the Canadian response to the crisis of the boat people who were cast adrift to die on the China Seas. That direct involvement in the world is as much a part of the Canadian character as our cultural diversity, our bilingualism and our history of triumph over hard geography. That is a tradition on which this Government is determined to build. We began with the extraordinary Canadian response to famine in Africa. The Government mobilized quickly and I believe effectively, but the people of Canada led the response. So it was on a smaller scale that Canadian individuals responded so quickly and so well to natural and political crises in Mexico, Haiti, Colombia and the Philippines. As their Minister, I salute the public servants who go extra miles and work extra hours when crises arise abroad. In their names, I want to also thank the thousands of individual Canadians who follow their generous international instincts when these crises occur.

We are taking other steps to mobilize this Canadian vocation for constructive internationalism. As one example, a group of six members of the Canadian Young Presidents Organization will depart for Manila on November 14 where they will work with officials of the Philippines to devise and identify programs and opportunities that will let the world's private sector help President Aquino consolidate the great reforms she has begun. We are also, of course, helping the Philippines in all the traditional ways. However, the real need now is the kind of economic performance that will win international investor confidence. Canadians can help reach that goal, so we, Sir, are sending some of the very best.

We are also breaking new ground in the use we make of official trips. In Beijing, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) opened the meeting of the Canada-China Trade Council adding immense authority to the idea of economic co-operation between our two countries.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadian investors did not traditionally accompany my predecessors on their trips. They do on mine. Together, we have opened up opportunities for sales, investment, joint enterprises and technology transferts from India to Uruguay, from Pakistan to Cairo, from Thailand to Tokyo and to the Pampas of Argentina and all over the world.

Last month, I had the honour of leading the Canadian delegation to the GATT ministers meeting. Some excellent federal officials were on our team, but there were also leaders from the business and financial world, as well as provincial ministers from all parts of Canada.

We are in this together. Our Government intends to exercise its leadership so as to make the best possible use of the exceptional talents available in the public and private sector and thus advance the interests of Canada.

[English]

My colleague, the Minister for International Relations (Mrs. Landry) will be speaking later in this debate. I intend as well to seek an early occasion to report to Parliament and to seek the views of other Parties on the most important issue on the world's agenda now, the control of arms and of weapons. We are all encouraged that President Reagan and Secretary Gorbachev will hold a preliminary meeting at Reykjavic on October 11 and October 12. We hope that will lead to agreements later. The superpowers are at centre stage and must be given every encouragement and opportunity to make progress, but there are also important areas for which Canada must continue to show initiative and leadership, in chemical weapons and verification technology, to name only two.

• (1510)

In passing, today in Ottawa there opened an historic meeting looking at verification technology. This is one of the rare occasions on which Soviet representatives will be present with representatives from the West to take a look at this important matter. It is not without significance that that meeting is taking place here in Canada. I look forward to discussing these questions more fully in a statement in the House next month.

In the remainder of my time in this debate today there are four particular matters to which I wish to refer. They are the reform of the United Nations; greater attention to the potential of the Commonwealth and la francophonie; the fight against agricultural subsidy; and the question of human rights, particularly in South Africa. Canada is a strong and consistent friend and supporter of the United Nations. Although our population is only the thirtieth largest in the world we rank fourth in the size of our financial contributions to the UN system. We intend to continue that active and outspoken support.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is precisely to strengthen the UN that we urge reform. The Secretary General has before him recommendations from 18 experts who can begin the administrative reform which, in our judgment, is essential to the survival of the United Nations. That report is a package, carefully constructed; it should not be unravelled. It should be implemented both as proof that the UN is serious about reform and as a big first step toward change.

Ambassador Lewis, and others, are working to reach agreement on the even more central challenge of establishing effective budgetary and planning mechanisms. They work and speak with the full support of the Government and, I believe, the full support of this House and the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The UN is the most important of our international institutions because it can draw together the whole world. Other more regional organizations are playing an increasing and encouraging role in establishing co-operation among neighbours. Canada is particularly impressed by the success of ASEAN in the Pacific and of the increasingly effective work of SADCC in Southern Africa. SADCC's unity and purpose will be strongly tested in the months ahead. Canada is happy to provide approximately $100 million to the SADCC countries to help them build the infrastructure that will enable them to assert their independence of South Africa. We are encouraged by the initiative in Dhaka last year to establish the South Asian Association for Regional Operation.

However, if there have been encouraging developments in regional organizations around the world two of these groups have particular significance for Canada. One is the Commonwealth and the other la francophonie. Canada is both a western country and a developed economy. But among that company we are virtually unique in our reputation. Our only association with colonialism is that we were once a colony. Our interest in development and our respect for different systems are known to be genuine. Those are considerable assets, assets which should be applied, not simply prized.

This Government has acted deliberately to give more prominence to the Commonwealth as an institution uniquely able to cut across the lines that have come to divide countries. At Nassau, and in their historic meeting this August in London, the Prime Minister and his colleague Prime Ministers were able to make of the Commonwealth the one institution able to act with credibility in seeking an agreed non-violent solution to South Africa. The Eminent Persons Group was rebuffed by Pretoria, but their conduct moved the institution of the Commonwealth out of the shadows of nostalgia and into relief as an agency of real potential in this post-colonial world.

[Translation]

The Francophonie has the same potential. The two organizations are different because the colonial powers were different originally, and the same applies to the member states. In a way, the Francophonie summit is a direct result of the national reconciliation policies adopted by the present Canadian Government.

I am not exaggerating when I say it is largely thanks to this Government that the first summit came into existence. It had been discussed for years, and no one had been able to organize one, partly because Ottawa and Quebec were unable to agree on the participation of that province. We changed all that.

The Prime Minister has announced that the second francophone summit will be held in Quebec City next September. It will be a major event in Canada next year. More than 30 heads of state and heads of government will come to the Old Capital to discuss politics and economics, development and co-operation. During those few days in September, Quebec and Canada will be the focus of the francophone world.

[English]

I want to mention agriculture, not just because it is important but because our success in agricultural trade demonstrates that, even in this highly complex world, determined initiatives can pay off. The largest single threat to Canadian farms is the growth, in the United States and in Europe, of agricultural subsidies which we cannot match. Once, the efficiency of farmers determined success in international agricultural trade. Now, success is determined by the size of the subsidies. Canada has the most efficient farmers in the world; we do not have the biggest treasury. So we have to move the rules back toward a balance that gives our farmers a chance. The Prime Minister began that process when he raised the issue of agricultural subsidy at the Tokyo Summit, the first time agriculture has been discussed in that forum.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have followed the initiative of the Prime Minister vigourously through meetings in Vancouver, in Thailand, at Cairns in Australia, and finally in Uruguay at the GATT. In Punta del Este I said, "The GATT has had the bad habit of putting agriculture to one side." That bad habit has now been changed. Subsidies and agriculture will be a priority consideration in the new GATT round, and for that Canada can take a great deal of credit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The promotion of human rights is fundamental to our policy. The Prime Minister was forthright in his statements on human rights during his Asian tour. I have spoken out repeatedly on human rights both here and abroad. We have also taken concrete actions to back up our words.

Last month, we changed our export controls policy to ban the export of military equipment to countries whose governments have a persistent record of violating the human rights of their citizens. On June 12, I reported to the House on the Government's reaction to the report of the Eminent Persons Group of the Commonwealth. In August, the Prime Minister and six other Commonwealth leaders met in London to examine that report and to recommend future actions. All agreed that the authorities in Pretoria had shown no inclination to end apartheid. Six of the countries, including Canada, agreed to put in place a series of 11 measures aimed at inducing the South African Government to reconsider its position.

The United Kingdom agreed separately to implement two national measures and another measure with its European Community partners.

The six of us recommended certain actions and commended our list of measures to the rest of the Commonwealth and to the wider international community, particularly those countries with significant economic relations with South Africa. We have been in touch with those countries directly, the Prime Minister and I, and others. We are pleased that the United States, the European Community and Japan have all announced measures to increase pressure on Pretoria.

At home we are implementing the London program. Some measures, such as the cancellation of the double taxation agreements and the removal of Government assistance to trade and investment, were already in place. In co-operation with the business community we have invoked a ban on new investment and the cessation of bank loans. I have issued notices to importers under the Export and Import Permits Act to prohibit the importing of agricultural products, uranium, coal, iron and steel from South Africa. Implementation of the remaining measures is virtually complete and will be fully effective in the coming weeks. As the House will know I asked that the South Africa Tourist Office close its doors in Canada, and that is being done.

Regarding wheat, Canada is not selling wheat now to South Africa. We have instructed the Wheat Board that there should be no sales to South Africa to take advantage of actions taken by other countries.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are considering the other measures that Canada will take. We profoundly hope that the growing weight of world opinion will cause the regime in South Africa to move out of isolation, to move away from violence, to move against apartheid. We believe the process of consistent, steady pressure offers the best prospect of ending an offensive system while protecting the immense economic potential of Southern Africa. Canada intends to continue our leadership against apartheid.

Constructive internationalism is Canada's response to our independence. It recognizes the legitimate interests of other countries but never loses sight of the Canadian national interest. It is the projection abroad of our own national enterprise of compromise and consensus building. It expresses confidence in our ability to promote the best of what Canada has to offer. It weds realism and idealism. We think it accurately reflects the wishes of ordinary Canadians right across the country.

• (1520)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, may I say that we all appreciated very much that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) entered the Throne Speech debate. Obviously he could not cover every single issue, but since he did cover our actions vis-à-vis apartheid in South Africa, perhaps he could give us an indication of what further assistance Canada might give the front line states which of course will be very damaged by the absence of grain imports from the United States if South Africa refuses to accept grain imports, since most of those imports went to the front line states. Is further action going to be taken to assist the neighbouring states? Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs recommend any furhter policies that Canada might pursue with respect to South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia?

I will not ask any further questions in order to give other Hon. Members time. But, while I am on my feet, I would like to say that the Minister could not to any extent today touch on arms control and disarmament. He said earlier today that he would be responding to the joint committee's report. I would draw his attention particularly to page 54 of the report in which the Special Joint Committee said that it thinks the Government should encourage the U.S. Government to undertake a moratorium similar to the Soviet Union's on nuclear testing for a period long enough to determine whether agreement could be reached on a comprehensive test ban, and I would ask him to respond to it. Will he give us the assurance that that kind of encouragement will be given to the United States both privately and publicly in view of the fact that virtually all seismographic experts except those in the U.S. administration say that such a test ban is now verifiable?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief in replying to those questions. The first question deals with the situation of exposure in which countries in front line states find themselves and how we might be able to help. One of the very effective organizations that has been developed in southern Africa is the organization known as SADCC which is comprised of members of the front line states. This year, we are already contributing something in the neighbourhood of $100 million to SADCC and we intend to increase those contributions.

There were discussions at the Commonwealth heads of Government meeting in London as to the steps that might be taken in the event that the reaction of the South African Government was of a kind that caused particular hardship and disruption in the front line states. While no firm agreement was reached at that time because it was thought that there was a need to have a better idea of what precisely those problems would be, the Prime Minister of Canada volunteered that Canada would be prepared to be active in providing direct financial support to those front line states, although he said that he would prefer it if we were able to act in concert with other countries of the Commonwealth, thinking naturally of Australia and others. We are having active discussions now as to how that can most effectively proceed. That action, were it to be taken, would be in addition to the aid that is now directed toward SADCC.

I should just make one thing more precise. There have been questions raised as to whether or not Canada would be prepared to offer some kind of military support. We would not. In London in early August I had the opportunity to speak at some length with representatives of the African National Congress. I told them that I thought it was essential that they continue to seek peaceful means to bring an end to apartheid, and I indicated that that is very profoundly Canada's desire and would guide actions that we might take with regard to the situation in southern Africa.

With regard to the moratorium, I really should not get ahead of myself in responding to the report of the Joint Committee. I will make an exception in this particular case with respect to the proposal on the moratorium. I do not have the exact language of the recommendation in front of me.

Our view, as we begin the week in which Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Reagan will meet in Iceland, is that the real test in these agreements is to find something to which both sides can comfortably agree. That is not likely to happen in the case of a moratorium so we believe the encouragement that Canada must give is to the United States to continue along the path that was signalled by the President in a speech made to the United Nations two weeks ago today indicating a willingness to now ratify treaties that some months ago the United States was not prepared to ratify. We think that that step-by-step movement toward an end to testing is more likely to be practically effective and, frankly, our interest now, as it has always been, is in seeking measures that will have practical effect.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, in his comments, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) referred, of course, to the very strong action that our Government has taken with respect to imposing sanctions on South Africa. There are at least 20 different countries to which Canada has decided not to deport refugees who arrive in Canada because they also have indicated extreme examples of violations of human rights. Many Canadians are asking themselves, as well as me, why the Government does not impose sanctions on those other countries which are also violating human rights. I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if the Government will consider imposing sanctions on those countries, and if it has rejected that idea, why?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, that is an important and legitimate question and one asked frequently across the country. Let me express both a personal view and a government policy, that sanctions rarely work. We are resorting to sanctions in the case of South Africa because we think there is no other instrument that will be effective in causing the regime in South Africa to move away from apartheid.

I have some experience with sanctions, as Hon. Members of the House of Commons may remember, from 1979. Our experience in 1979 was that those sanctions did not in fact have the effect upon the Soviet Union that the Government and, indeed, other Governments implementing them thought would be the case. I will not elaborate by giving more instances of this, but that is generally the case with sanctions. We think that they are generally an ineffective instrument. We believe that in the case of South Africa, nothing else will work and something must work.

If one would ask what distinguishes South Africa from other regimes that conduct practices intolerable and unacceptable to Canadians, I would say there are two things that distinguish South Africa. One, it purports to be a democratic country, as we do, in the way most other countries practising those kinds of violations of human rights do not. Second, it is the only regime in the world that has racial discrimination written into its constitution. Apartheid has that constitutional sanction, and we believe that when South Africa is prepared to incorporate in its law such an offensive principle and is so unprepared to respond to reason in changing it, then we have to resort to actions such as sanctions.

One last word on this. I believe that it might have been possible for people to say that other ways had not been tried adequately before the activities and the report of the Eminent Persons Group. I think any fair observer of events in the world would know that the Eminent Persons, including Archbishop Ted Scott of Canada and others who were drawn together in that work over a long period of time, went to see literally everyone who was interested and effective in that process, came up with reasonable proposals and were not only rebuffed but were rebuffed under circumstances of violence. I think that if a group like that is going to fail, then we must resort to other measures. In this case, the only measures that we think will work are sanctions, and we believe that they have to be applied step by step, gradually increasing the pressure. As I said in my remarks, we are pleased to see that there has recently been movement in the United States, movement in the European community and, importantly, movement in Japan to maintain that pressure which we think and hope will finally lead South Africa to put apartheid behind.

• (1530)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) on a question or a comment.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question regarding the making of sanctions more effective. As he knows the front line states have to rely on South Africa to bring in their imports and send out their exports. Is Canada, alone or in concert with other countries, going to do more about upgrading ports and railway lines to the Indian Ocean shores of west Africa so that South Africa can be bypassed by the front line states and not be held up to ransom by South Africa?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly prepared to consider that. Other countries are. We have some projects, some capacity and some expertise that could apply in those circumstances. The best way to proceed we think would be to get the judgment of the front line states themselves as to the areas in which help might be most effective, having regard, among other things, to time frames that are involved and having regard also to the limitations unhappily attached to budgets of Canada or other countries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I would like to recognize the next speaker, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate on the Speech from the Throne. Before starting my remarks, may I say how pleased I am to see Your Honour back in the Chair. It is certainly a statement of the affirmation of respect in which all Members of the House hold Your Honour in that very important position. As well I should like, particularly as a British Columbia Member of Parliament, to congratulate the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) upon his election, after a very trying ordeal, to the position of Speaker of the House of Commons. I know that all of us felt honoured by this election.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I also want to congragulate the Hon. Member for Verchères (Mr. Danis) on his appointment to the position of Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons. He has done a very good job and all the Members of this House congragulate him.

[English]

The tradition of the Speech from the Throne is that it provides the Government with an opportunity to set out a new sense of vision, a new sense of direction and a new sense of hope for Canadians. As we in this House are summoned to the other place to have the Speech from the Throne read to us, we look for signs that the Government has been responding to the hopes and aspirations of Canadians as expressed to them over the past couple of years.

I listened with care to the remarks of the Governor General as she read the Speech from the Throne. Unfortunately, that concern and those hopes have not been listened to by this Government. Canadians were looking for a change in direction. Canadians were looking for a new sense of fairness and integrity. Most important, they wanted a sense that the Government recognized their priorities for job creation in tackling the very serious economic crisis facing the country. That was not to be. Canadians were looking for a new direction and for a change. One need look no further than the results of the recent by-elections, the by-election in your own province, Mr. Speaker, the Province of Alberta, in the constituency of Pembina.

[Translation]

—and the results of the by-election in Quebec where the constituents of Saint-Maurice sent a very clear message to the Conservative Government. They said: We, Quebecers, want some change; we want the jobs promised by the Prime Minister two years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I personally canvassed door to door with our candidate Claude Rompré in Quebec. I heard the views of the Quebecers and it was very obvious that they are not at all happy with the policies of the Progressive Conservative Government and that they want some change.

If the people in Saint-Maurice and throughout Quebec heard the throne speech, they were certainly very disappointed because it does not promise any change. It promises the same direction and reflects the same lack of respect for priorities and for people not only in Quebec, but throughout Canada.

[English]

I want to say a word about the process of the Speech from the Throne as we all traipse down to the other place, stand there and listen in awe in the plush surroundings of the Senate Chamber with its collection of hacks, flacks, bagmen and cronies of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), which surely constitutes an embarrassment in a democratic society. Some of us ask ourselves if it is not about time to abolish the institution, abolish the Senate and put an end to the charade of these appointees of Prime Ministers making decisions that vitally affect the lives of ordinary Canadian men and women.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Down with the Senate!

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, as my friend from Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is saying: Down with the Senate! The time has come to abolish the Senate.

[English]

This Government will be judged and is being judged on its record, on jobs, on fairness and on integrity. On each of those criteria, however, the Government has failed.

I want to take a moment to remind this House and to remind Canadians of the remarks of the Prime Minister to the people of Alberta, and through them to the people of Canada, when he spoke recently during the by-election in Pembina. The Prime Minister said:

> There have been difficult times in this country. This is not one of them. This is a piece of cake.

When the Prime Minister of Canada tells Canadians that this is a piece of cake, that life is easy, there are no problems for the people of Canada, he is insulting the intelligence of ordinary Canadian men and women. They know better. The farmers in Pembina and the farmers in the province—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure that, with his reputation, the Member who is speaking would not want to mislead the House on the impact of those remarks. I was at the meeting. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was not talking about Canada. He was talking about the conduct of the meeting itself. I am sure if the Member had been there—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate. It is not a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Get up and make your own speech.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member from Calgary will have an opportunity to participate in this debate. I have the words of the Prime Minister in front of me.

Mr. Hawkes: It is a newspaper report.

Mr. Robinson: I am just going to repeat the words of the Prime Minister. I think Canadians have a right to know what the Prime Minister said.

An Hon. Member: You are dishonest.

Mr. Robinson: The Conservatives do not want to listen, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malone: We were there.

Mr. McDermid: You weren't there. You were at your hairdresser's.

Mr. Robinson: The Conservatives are embarrassed by their own Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. I think these words speak for themselves. The Prime Minister said this:

> There have been difficult times in this country. This is not one of them. This is a piece of cake.

What kind of statement is "This is a piece of cake" to the people of Canada?

Mr. Thacker: It was the meeting that was a piece of cake.

Mr. Robinson: Or, Mr. Speaker, we have the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who went to the other side of the country to Atlantic Canada where people are suffering from record levels of unemployment. He did not say that this is a piece of cake. No, he said: "This isn't Bangladesh. They have got it a lot worse in Bangladesh. Be grateful for your conditions". The Minister of Transport says: "Be grateful because you are not as poor as the people of Bangladesh". The Minister of Transport insulted the people of Atlantic Canada with that kind of remark, just as the Prime Minister insulted the people of Alberta by saying that this was a piece of cake. Canadians will not accept that kind of nonsense. We know better.

• (1540)

In the Province of British Columbia today we have a Premier who says the same thing. He says that everything is fantastic and that this is a piece of cake. The people of British Columbia know better. They know that what we want in the Province of British Columbia is action—action on unemployment, action on cut-backs in health care, and action on cut-backs in education.

Let us look at education for a minute. We have a federal Government which is cutting back on transfer payments to the province and cutting back on education. Also we in British Columbia have a Minister who has the audacity to suggest that poor people should think twice before going on to pursue post-secondary education. Yesterday the Social Credit Minister responsible for post-secondary education suggested that poor people should examine their priorities and consider putting off post-secondary education if they are unable to afford it. What kind of approach is that from Bill Vander Zalm, Rus Fraser, and their Social Credit colleagues to accessibility to post-secondary education in the Province of British Columbia? What he is saying to the poor is to forget it, that if they cannot afford a decent education, they should not bother applying to college or university. We in the New Democratic Party who have fought for years and decades for universal access to quality education will not accept that approach. We believe that there must be a change, and I am confident that there will be a change in the Province of British Columbia after October 22.

We are looking as well—and I am speaking now from the perspective of a Member of Parliament from British Columbia—at the whole question of fairness and equity for women. We are looking at the whole question of pay equity and legislation, enforceable legislation which will ensure that women are not treated as second-class citizens in the workforce. Recently we saw legislation on employment equity tabled in the House which left a great deal to be desired. It was toothless legislation with no enforcement mechanisms whatsoever.

As well, we see in the Province of British Columbia a Social Credit Government working hand in glove with the Mulroney Conservatives—

Mr. Malone: Order.

Mr. Robinson: —saying that they do not believe in pay equity or in fairness for women. Once again the people of British Columbia will be passing judgment on that kind of Neanderthal approach to equality for women on October 22.

One of the most important industries in the country—and it is by far the most important industry in the Province of British Columbia—is the forestry industry. We have seen a succession of promises made and broken by the federal Government. We are awaiting effective action in the forestry sector. We know that our forests are being destroyed and that there is not adequate reforestation. We call upon the Government to put money into effective reforestation programs. Instead, we have more studies and no action. I am proud of the fact that in the Province of British Columbia Bob Skelly, the Leader of the provincial New Democratic Party, has said that we would work with a federal Government which takes its responsibilities seriously in this important area, and that we would create thousands upon thousands of jobs in the forestry sector through effective reforestation schemes. That is the kind of approach to job creation which we as New Democrats support and in which we believe.

There are those people who ask where we will get the money from for these job creation programs. I will tell the House where we will get the money from. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) clearly documented the fact that thousands and thousands of corporations in Canada are not paying one penny in income tax despite the fact that they are making very great profits on a year to year basis. It is about time that we got serious about tax reform and recognized that the corporate sector should be paying its fair share of taxes. That is one source of funds which the Government could use to create jobs. Another source is the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. Whom does this benefit? It directly benefits those who are the wealthiest, those who are the most affluent in society. Of course that creates no jobs at all for the people of British Columbia or for the people of Canada.

Another area in which there should be changes is the whole area of waste in government advertising. For example, we have seen in the Province of British Columbia some $20 million being spent by Bill Vander Zalm and the Socreds on blatant political advertising at the expense of British Columbia taxpayers. Instead of taking taxpayers' money and spending it in that kind of arbitrary way to promote re-election, we suggest that the money should be taken and put into effective job-creation programs.

One example of that is the youth job guarantee program which has been suggested by my provincial colleagues in British Columbia and by Bob Skelly, the Leader of my Party. As well, it has been actively supported by the outstanding team of NDP candidates in British Columbia, people like Joan Sawicki in Burnaby—Willingdon, Ron Johnson in Burnaby—Edmonds, and Barry Jones in Burnaby North. They are talking about working on priorities to create jobs and about a youth job guarantee program. The suggestion is that we are failing our young people in the country by not allowing them to have any hope, by not providing any optimism, and by not providing any sense of vision for the future. The youth job guarantee program says that when one reaches 17 years or 18 years of age, one will have the option of being able to pursue post-secondary education, of having a job, or of being able to go into some sort of training to help find a job. It is that kind of guarantee which will help to create hope and a sense of confidence in our young people in British Columbia and throughout the land. It is that kind of inspired leadership by my provincial colleagues which I am hoping will lead to real job creation in the Province of British Columbia.

In my capacity as justice critic for the federal New Democratic Party, I want to touch for a moment—and I know that time is limited—on a number of issues on which we will be looking for action in the upcoming session of Parliament. We hope the Government will take effective action to deal with the very serious concerns of Canadians, particularly those in the Maritimes who recognize the inequities in Canada's current laws on abortion. In both the Province of Prince Edward Island and the Province of Newfoundland there are no facilities whatsoever for women who seek access to safe therapeutic abortions. Surely that kind of situation represents a denial of equality to women and must be changed.

We are also looking for effective action on changes to the Canadian Human Rights Act. The Government has promised that changes will be made. We hope that these changes to strengthen the protections accorded minorities in Canada and to look at the whole area of systemic discrimination will be made in the very near future.

We must look at the crisis facing the Canadian prison system. We in Canada imprison far too many people for far too long. Our prisons are over-crowded. We see double bunking in many cases and we see the spectacle of prisons being built in the country as job-creation projects far from the families of prisoners and far from qualified professional staff. Once again that is unacceptable.

• (1550)

The Prime Minister has spoken of his war on drugs and the drug epidemic in Canada. All Canadians share in the concern over the abuse of drugs in our society. However, I suggest that we have to look very seriously at the abuse not only of illegal drugs but of perhaps the most destructive drug of all, that being alcohol. How many of our families have not been touched by alcoholism? We know, for example, that alcohol has caused tremendous waste and human suffering. Some 66 per cent of fatal accidents in Canada are alcohol-related. Over half the suicides among young people involve alcohol. A great proportion of accidents in the home are alcohol-related. I could go on and on about the destructiveness of alcohol, so when the Prime Minister talks about a war on drugs, let us ensure that he is prepared to take action with respect to the abuse of alcohol as well.

Let us also hope that he looks very seriously at the archaic laws dealing with marijuana. Under these laws today our young people can still go to jail or receive a criminal record for possession. Changes to those laws are long overdue.

There are a number of other concerns. We have the matter of sexual abuse of young people. Our freedom of information and privacy legislation remains far too weak. The Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General is studying this legislation and we hope the Government will move to strengthen it significantly.

Dealing with pornography, we hope the Government does not come back with the kind of repressive, sledge-hammer legislation which totally fails to distinguish between erotica and violent, degrading pornography. I think the Government may have gotten the message, but it is important that it not yield to the forces of reaction, the dinosaurs in the Tory back benches, who insist that the previous Bill be brought back intact. We will await with interest the government response in this area.

You are signalling, Mr. Speaker, that my time is just about up with respect to this response to the Speech from the Throne. I just want once again to indicate how important we in British Columbia view the next two years to be. The Government was given an overwhelming mandate, not just by the people of Canada but also by the people of British Columbia, and so far the Government has blown it. It has not responded to the concerns of the people of British Columbia about job creation, or fairness and integrity in Government. We in the NDP intend to continue fighting on behalf of the concerns of ordinary Canadians, ordinary British Columbians, together with our colleagues at the provincial level, people such as Bob Skelly of the provincial NDP. We hope that together there will be real changes, both federally and provincially.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the Hon. Member ended his remarks with the issue of integrity. He and I arrived in this House at the same time. He has built a formidable and positive reputation, for the most part. However, making unsubstantiated allegations in this Chamber in the past has caused him, on at least one occasion, some difficulty. He has made the allegation that the Prime Minister of this country, in the Pembina by-election in the City of Edmonton, said that handling the problems of this country was a piece of cake.

I was there, Mr. Speaker. There was a very small group of people in attendance whose sole purpose was to disrupt the meeting and make sure that democracy and freedom of speech were denied. From the beginning of the meeting, every time someone tried to get to a microphone, that small group of people chanted "bullshit! bullshit!", as loudly as they could.

Mr. Cassidy: Order!

Mr. Hawkes: That is what they did. The Prime Minister of this country, when it came to be his turn at the mike, said to that audience that there were indeed real problems in this country, difficult problems for Canadians, but handling a rowdy bunch whose sole purpose in a meeting was to chant "bullshit" and attempt to interrupt democracy was not a difficult problem, that it indeed was a piece of cake.

Mr. Keeper: Distortion.

Mr. Hawkes: I simply ask the Hon. Member: Was he at the meeting? Has he listened to a tape? Does he have the evidence—and he should remember his own history—that the Prime Minister said what the Hon. Member said he said in the context in which he used it? If he does not have that evidence, will he attempt to seek it out? If he finds it is not available, will he quit misusing the statements of the Prime Minister of this country in that way?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, at the meeting in question in Pembina there were a significant number of unemployed workers from Gainers, men and women who have been out of work for a number of months, people who were fighting for their economic survival. Their employer, Gainers, is attempting to smash their union and their way of life. Those people attended at the airport where the Prime Minister appeared, hoping to be able to speak with him there. He dodged out the back door and refused to meet with them.

Following that, those same workers from Gainers showed up at the meeting in Pembina. Yes, they used strong words. They are frustrated, they are angry, they are desperate about their future and the future of their children. The response from the Prime Minister to those working men and women from Gainers was to accuse them of being separatists. That was a shameful response, an inexcusable response. He then went to the Province of Quebec.

[Translation]

—and in Quebec, he suggested that the NDP in Alberta had provoked these people and shouted the words which the Hon. Member repeated in this House. This is quite false and irresponsible.

[English]

The words of the Prime Minister speak for themselves. He was not saying that he had been in difficult meetings before. He was not saying he had taken flak before. What he said was this: "There have been difficult times in this country. This is not one of them. This is a piece of cake."

Those words surely speak for themselves.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Yes, they do.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I was also there that night. I would remind the Hon. Member that the Prime Minister met with Mr. Werlin after the meeting. Members of our caucus met yesterday with Mr. Werlin and other members of the Canadian Labour Congress and the Alberta Federation of Labour, and I think they were very grateful for that meeting. I think we had a very productive meeting.

I listened with interest to the Hon. Member talk about the Throne Speech and the British Columbia election campaign. Would he tell us where he stands personally on the issue of hard core pornography? Does he, for example, think there is a causal link between hard core pornography and crimes against women and children? Where does he stand on the issue of heroin and other hard drug abuse in his province, bearing in mind that when I lived there it was the fifth or sixth largest industry in the province? Can he enlighten us with respect to both of those issues?

Mr. Robinson: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that I do not have more time to respond to the concerns of my hon. friend. One of the real concerns we have in British Columbia is the fact that the Government of that province has cut back dramatically on treatment programs for those caught up in that vicious and painful cycle of heroin addiction and other drug abuse. Instead of cutting back on the treatment programs, they should be expanding funding for those programs. Instead of making it more difficult for the individuals who are trying to end their addiction to heroin through the use of methadone, they should be expanding the opportunity for those people to break that cycle. I am very pleased that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), has given me this opportunity to point out that the Social Credit Government in the Province of British Columbia has cut back dramatically on funding for alcohol and drug abuse in the Province of British Columbia.

• (1600)

With regard to the first question raised by my hon. colleague, certainly we in the New Democratic Party support the proposed changes to the hate literature provisions of the Criminal Code which would include sex as a prohibited ground of discrimination in those sections. So much of this multimillion dollar industry is, in effect, institutionalized discrimination against women. That is why the inclusion of the word "sex" in the provisions is something that we welcome, something which has been called for by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member, who is the justice critic for the New Democratic Party, advise us on two items? First, is it the policy of the New Democratic Party that the Criminal Code should make no reference to abortion and that abortion should, therefore, be available on demand? Second, is it the policy of the New Democratic Party that the possession of marijuana or its derivatives should not be an offence?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, it was my former colleague, Grace MacInnis, who stated that the decision as to whether or not a woman would have an abortion is a decision which should be made by that woman in consultation with her doctor. That has been a longstanding policy of this Party and it remains the position of the federal New Democratic Party. Certainly we believe that those provisions of the Criminal Code which are not in accord with that fundamental principle should in fact be changed.

With respect to the question about marijuana, we believe that the current provisions of the Narcotic Control Act are indeed in need of fundamental change. It is wrong that hundreds of thousands of Canadians should be subjected to a criminal record and, in a number of instances, to lengthy terms of imprisonment for simple possession of marijuana. Yes, Mr. Speaker, those laws should indeed be changed. At the same time we believe it is fundamentally important that there be education with regard to the effects of drugs in our society.

Once again I call upon the Government to recognize its responsibility, not only to wage war on drugs but to take preventive action by educating Canadians on the effects of a wide range of drugs including marijuana, alcohol, Valium, Librium and many other drugs in our society.

• (1610)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has expired. The Hon. Member for Jonquière.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to take part in this debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Before proceeding I should like to extend my most sincere congratulations to the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) on his election as Speaker of the House of Commons. I wish him well in the discharge of this onerous responsibility and I want to express my full respect and confidence.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I would now like to tell my distinguished House colleagues and all Canadians, especially the people of my riding of Jonquière whom I humbly represent, about the various points which drew my attention during the Speech from the Throne delivered by Her Excellency the Governor General, the Right Hon. Jeanne Sauvé. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the people of Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean were honoured to play hosts to Her Excellency the Governor General on the occasion of her short stay in our region last week. She is an extraordinary lady to whom I pay my respect. During her visit in our region she expressed particular concern about the way ordinary people look upon politicians. She stated that in many cases people do not think kindly of men and women in politics, yet the only aspiration of these men and women is their will and desire to serve.

The remark is very relevant and the Governor General is indeed an eloquent representative to convey such a message to Canadian men and women with respect to the world of politics.

In response to the various issues raised in the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, allow me to quote an article published in last Thursday's La Presse and signed by editorial writer Michel Roy:

A fresh start

he wrote.

The Speech from the Throne opening the second session of the Mulroney Government highlights both continuity and change.

Continuity, because again it features the major themes advocated by the same Government in its 1984 legislative program, namely national reconciliation and economic renewal;

Change, because Mr. Mulroney and his colleagues focus on a perspective they had neglected two years earlier: the social policies which mean so much to Canadians.

Considering the balance he was able to give to his speech, balance between economic and social priorities as well as national and international issues, the Prime Minister proves that he has a clearer view of the expectations of Canadians. The shift towards social matters and the large number of concrete measures announced in the speech, from tax reform to day care centres, reflect a new realism.

The legislative program is full of possibilities.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, what are these new policies the Government intends to advocate during the second session? A radical change has to be our firm intention to give special consideration to new social measures.

The new policy on daycare centres, to be implemented following the tabling of a report by the committee responsible for studying needs in this area, is one example of our resolve to be progressive in terms of family policy.

Improvements in pension plans, an adjustment program for older workers, measures to promote volunteer work, the Government's firm resolve to take effective measures against child sexual abuse, violent forms of pornography involving women and children, child prostitution, and the grave and growing threat posed by the trafficking in illegal drugs, will all be on the legislative agenda in the months to come. These, and many other social policies such as those relating to the intolerable affront to human dignity suffered by battered women, compel the Government's commitment to work with the provinces to implement the most effective means and methods of action in response to the concerns of the Canadian people.

Other important issues were raised in the Speech from the Throne, announcing the Government's firm intentions of developing new policies and injecting additional funds for promoting research and setting up a national advisory board for industrial technology and improving the quality of post-secondary education, with a view to achieving excellence and providing equal opportunity. Similarly, active internationalism and increasing trade remain an absolute priority.

The Opposition may be fond of showering criticism on the free trade talks, but if we fail to conclude bilateral agreements on the various activity sectors in our respective economies, Canada's economy is in grave danger of being partially paralyzed. And all because of the increasing number of protectionist measures now being put before the U.S. Congress. The trend is growing and may result in the loss of many jobs. Mr. Speaker, the answer is clear: negotiate. Justice and good faith still have their place, and I believe that between friendly countries, agreement is always possible.

Canada's exports to the United States are worth more than $94 billion, while U.S. exports to our country are worth about $75 billion annually. The stakes are high, since millions of jobs depend on the outcome, and every time the Americans impose new protectionist measures, men and women stand to lose their jobs. The Opposition has taken a very negative stand, but I remain convinced that the talks offer a better perspective than doing nothing or just letting things happen.

Further, Mr. Speaker, an agreement inviting Quebec to take the honourable route towards becoming an active partner in the Canadian Constitution remains one of our major objectives and we hope this agreement will be ratified as soon as possible.

And what about the trend towards adjusting our policies and programs in terms of specific regional needs? This desire to take into account the differences and specific needs of all of our regions should not be just a case of Government priorities and policies. It should also be the objective of our major businesses and our Crown corporations, which should adapt their expansion and investment policies to regional differences and disparities.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention one example, the position taken by Bell Canada which this summer, through its director general, announced to the people of Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean that the company intended to allow for the regional entity in its policies for the development of regional services, instead of considering various aspects such as the community of interests and distance or contiguity, and that it would consider local conditions in every region. In fact, a region consists of municipalities, and when we talk about developing regional services as opposed to inter city services, we must try to increase the cohesiveness of the towns within the region. And Bell Canada's President himself did recognize that principle, that is the importance of regional association, and Bell has agreed in the Saguenay area to have a pilot study conducted for the purpose indeed of finally regrouping all communities in the Saguenay MRC. This will be a first, Mr. Speaker, and I am very happy with Bell's new outlook. I also urge the CRTC, when the time comes, to change the parameters so that from now on, when talking about developing regional service, the actuel needs of the population be addressed and the regions be taken into account.

Mr. Speaker, other major changes were announced, including tax reform. A first measure already has become law, imposing a minimum tax. Accordingly, 79,000 more Canadians will be paying taxes, people who until now have succeeded in paying none, availing themselves of all kinds of tax deductions. These loopholes have now been plugged by our Government. And soon the tax reform will simplify our tax returns and lead to lower income tax for many Canadian men and women, a highly desirable goal, Mr. Speaker.

All in all, this is a promising Throne Speech, the key elements of which will be introduced over the coming weeks and months as so many pieces of legislation.

At the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I quoted from a columnist, Mr. Michel Roy, who referred both to changes and to continuity in the Throne Speech of this our thirty-third Parliament. Continuity refers to what has been started. And if I may, I would like to remind Hon. Members of the numerous achievements of this Government and the progress made in terms of economic performance.

Much too often, Mr. Speaker, we are criticized and even taken to task, I would say. The nit-picking is so well schemed that people lose perspective. But our record is impressive. I could mention national reconciliation recalling that the provinces seldom had such good relations with the Canadian Government. What a change from the arrogance and contempt that prevailed for years!

Our Government has also reached a number of sectorial agreements with the provinces, for instance sectorial agreements on transportation, and my own region, Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean, will be benefitting, to the tune of $25 million provided by the Quebec Government and the Canadian Government, actually towards a project in our area, the Alma-La Baie expressway. Those $25 million will not be enough, but a major hurdle has been passed with that agreement entered upon by our two Governments.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to speak about the Canadian Jobs Strategy, which emphasizes training and co-operation with the private sector and programs to create permanent jobs with a training element. Among the employment development programs, let me mention Challenge '86, under which students can find a summer job in their own field of study to help them to innovate and acquire new qualifications, and so on. Several billions of dollars have been invested in these job creation programs in the last two years.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, our strategy is bearing fruit since the unemployment rate has gone down from 11.7 per cent to under 10 per cent in two years to reach 9.7 per cent last August. We are creating nearly four times as many jobs in a month as the previous Government. Our Government is creating nearly 25,000 new jobs each month.

As for the interest rates, they have also gone down under 10 per cent, and the inflation rate has decreased and is still at about 4 per cent. These are all good economic results and we shall go on as we have begun.

According to the OECD, Canada will have the highest employment increase this year among major industrialized country and the second best rate among the 25 member countries of the OECD. As for the economic performance in my own region and in my constituency of Jonquière, it is also positive. For instance, there is the pulp and paper company Abitibi Price, in which $150 million have been invested to modernize facilities and produce a new type of fine paper. This is encouraging and shows confidence in the economic future of our region and our country. Three plants, Cascades, Abitibi Price and Alcan, employ nearly 8,000 people or 19 per cent of the labour force in the Jonquière constituency, which greatly depends on a vigorous market for aluminum and for pulp and paper.

It is easy to see that economic recovery is essential for the welfare of our regions and that our policies must take regional disparities and differences into account. We need to have a complementary approach to diversify the economy of each region in the country, and the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean region is no exception to the rule.

At this point, I would like to point to SOCCRENP, a business sponsorship corporation set up recently, thanks to the co-operation of big business and small-and medium-sized businesses in our region and the two levels of government. The corporation's goal is to stimulate the creation of new businesses in the region. Last week, the first business created with the help of SOCCRENP was launched, under the name Spectube. The business is in fact concerned with aluminum processing.

It is very encouraging to see the business world taking the initiative. I think we can expect a great deal from this kind of corporation, whose objective is also to create businesses and thus create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other priorities in the riding of Jonquière, and as the Member for this riding, I am working very hard to deal with them. Some examples are relocating the post office in Jonquière or relocating the employment centre. It has been several months, Mr. Speaker, that I started working on this file, and I don't intend to drop it, because all this is very important to my riding, since it is a matter of improving services for my constituents.

A second important issue is the rationalization of railway transportation in the Upper Saguenay, which will mean removing certain tracks which are no longer being used in the Jonquière area. This is another important matter on which I am working very hard. Today, negotiations are going on between Canadian National, VIA Rail and Roberval-Saguenay to reach an agreement, and I expect to make some major progress very shortly.

In any case, I am prepared to use all my energy and effort in the defence of the interests of the people of the riding of Jonquière and to promote its economic development.

Mr. Speaker, I have every confidence in this Government which has clearly shown its desire to listen to the regions and do everything it can to distribute economic wealth more equitably in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, first and foremost I should like to thank and congratulate all those who have already taken part in this debate, particularly the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I should also like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, for your commendable effort during the election which lasted until two o'clock in the morning.

• (1620)

[English]

We had an extra month, Mr. Speaker, to kind of get back to reality. I think a lot of us in the House of Commons, both on the government side and the opposition side, realize that we sometimes get caught up in the politics of Parliament Hill and forget what the people back in the ridings are saying. In this particular instance, we had the benefit of one extra month because the Government was going to go back to the people, back to the drawing board, back to the grass roots and find out what the people were really saying about the first two years of the greatest mandate in the history of Canada. In fact, this month would have been well spent had we seen a specific response in the Speech from the Throne to some of the concerns being expressed by Canadians. Forgive me, Mr. Speaker, if I am a little cynical, but it was almost like déja vu. When I was in the Ontario Legislature I used to read the recorded ruminations of people like Norm Atkins. He used to write beautiful speeches for the Premier of Ontario who was very successful at being all things to all people in all parts of Ontario. It was almost "Campkaesque", the fine imprint of the Dalton Camps of this world, that we could see written all over that Speech from the Throne. We have a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who is responding to women's issues, to drug abuse, to alchoholism, to the economy, to the unemployment problem. He is going to be all things to all people. Frankly, I think we should congratulate him, except for one fatal flaw. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) knows I would bring in the one fatal flaw.

Mr. Boudria: It is your duty.

Mr. Blenkarn: You always try to find fault.

Ms. Copps: The Achilles' heel is that the Prime Minister has told us in the course of his Speech from the Throne that we are going to see more of the same. He has said he intends to continue his Government's policy of fiscal responsibility.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Does that have anything to do with butlers?

Ms. Copps: Can you believe, Mr. Speaker, that the same Prime Minister who is promising the continuation of fiscal responsibility, in the course of his government responsibilities as the Prime Minister of this country sees a prison moved at his whim because he thinks he is going to receive more votes in his own home riding? Without receiving consultation from the Government, the Prime Minister intervened in an unfair fashion. I was out in Pembina, and I heard from people in the oil industry who were hurting. They asked where the Prime Minister was, when was the Prime Minister bringing in the removal of the PGRT? It took a by-election to bring that about. At the same time, when it came to moving a prison into his own riding, without the advice of anyone in the penal institution, against the advice of his own fiscal advisers, because it is going into his own riding and will be his own pork-barrelling, bang, he does it just like that, just as he said in Fortune Magazine.

Mr. Blenkarn: What does that have to do with pork-barrelling?

Ms. Copps: Someone asks what it has to do with pork-barrelling. Well, it seems to me that when one introduces a move of a prison simply to satisfy the issue of unemployment, that issue is being attacked in a completely wrong fashion. It was a wrong-headed decision. It was a political decision and it was a partisan decision made by the Prime Minister specifically because he wanted to pad his own constituency. That is the same Prime Minister who talks about fiscal responsibilty. I remember back in the great City of Hamilton when the now Prime Minister gave an interview to CHCH television. He lambasted, he blasted the former Prime Minister, Pierre Trudeau, because Mr. Trudeau had a nanny for his children who was on the public payroll. He said: "Never will I, Martin Brian Mulroney, have a nanny on the public payroll".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member has been here for a couple of years and she knows that she should not be using the name of any individual in this House but referring to him or her only by his or her constituency or title. If the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) would please maintain a little decorum, I would appreciate it greatly. I know we all would.

Ms. Copps: That was a direct quote from the royal "we". However, I accept your admonition and in future I will try to adhere. The Hon. Prime Minister said he never would have a nanny on the public payroll. A few weeks later, he gets elected and the first thing he does is to run out and hire a nanny at the taxpayers' expense. But she is not really a nanny. She is a staff person who interfaces with the children on a habitual basis. I will be able to speak shortly from first-hand experience, and I would love to have a staff person who interfaces with the children on a habitual basis. Let us call a nanny a nanny. Let us call a butler a butler. Let us call a maid a maid. I think my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), made a moot point when he suggested that he did not realize the Prime Minister's underwear had become an issue of national security. The Prime Minister said he absolutely had to have a valet and a maid on his trip to the Far East for security reasons, even though he had an RCMP officer, among others, who was there simply to watch the bags and to make sure there was in fact no security breach. It now becomes part of public policy that the maid and the valet have to follow the Prime Minister around.

In the last session, when it was revealed that the taxpayers of Canada paid for a Hercules for a film crew to travel around and catch every last precious moment of the fleeting mandate of this Prime Minister, the pay-off for that came from the taxpayers, and the Prime Minister again cited reasons of security. It seems to me again that while he talks about budgets and cut-backs, the Prime Minister intends to continue the practice he began increased his own office staff by some 54 per cent when he was first elected. We hear rumours and press reports that now it is not enough for each of the Ministers to have a chauffeur. There are now certain Ministers in the Government—and its back-benchers will want to hear this—who want their assistants to have chauffeurs. It is not enough that their chief politicos have a salary increase which is far higher than the average Canadian would have received, but certain of their assistants believe they should have chauffeur-driven limousines to carry them about.

Mr. Blenkarn: It sounds like a good story.

Ms. Copps: It sounds like a great story and you will probably find out about it in the very near future.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is easy to say that in the House. You cannot be sued in the House.

Ms. Copps: I will repeat it outside the House. I do not think I will be sued if I say it outside the House. I am telling the truth. If the Hon. Member for Mississauga South would like to pursue it outside the House, I would be most happy to comply.

I think it is important that the government back-benchers be aware that this is the same Government which is preaching fiscal restraint. It is the same Government which said in the Speech from the Throne that it wants to introduce new measures of fiscal responsibility. There is an election going on in Saskatchewan. What has the Government done with respect to wheat subsidies? We have heard nothing specific in the Speech from the Throne. There was nothing definitive. It takes a 5.30 a.m. phone call by the Premier of Saskatchewan who on bended knees said: "Please help me out, because if you do not, you will not be able to count on us in the next election". It is the height of cynicism for the Prime Minister to announce the withdrawal of the PGRT only because of a by-election. It is the height of cynicism for the Prime Minister to announce wheat payments which will come from existing funds. He is merely shuffling the deck. That is the height of cynicism.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, referring to the files which I have been asked to study as Party critic, we discovered among other things that older workers are hardest hit by the unemployment climate in Canada. We know that, even since the end of the recession, the number of unemployed workers over 50 has doubled, which means that these people do not find work, all they find is despair.

We remember quite well that about a year ago, in the month of February when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled his famous Budget, he promised he would replace the LAB program, the Labour Adjustment Benefits program.

They cancelled that program and promised that as early as August 1986 we would have a new program specifically designed for unemployed older workers.

• (1630)

[English]

He proposed that he would introduce a new program for older workers by August of 1986. We now see that he is re-announcing the same program for older workers.

[Translation]

This is exactly the same program which was promised in February when they dropped the Liberal program for older workers which had been in existence before.

How can people believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who is telling us in his Speech from the Throne that he will give us the very same policies we have had for two years? Mr.

Speaker, we already know that the polls reveal that Canadians are wary of the Prime Minister's word, they do not believe him anymore because he tricked them too often, saying one thing to some people and something else to others.

[English]

The public is sceptical, with good reason. If we look to the area of housing, which is another area within my responsibilities as critic, there is not a single mention in the Speech from the Throne with respect to the plight of the thousands of Canadian homeless who will be facing a very cold winter. What we have seen again is the divestment—

[Translation]

The Government is shirking its responsibilities towards the provinces because the federal Government does not want to provide the housing services such as had been promised by the former Liberal administration.

For example, if we look at British Columbia—

[English]

We know that the Government in British Columbia is not committed to social housing. In fact, I was shocked to hear the words of the Minister responsible for education in British Columbia who said that he felt that maybe poor people should rethink sending their families to college or university.

I would like to take a few moments to tell the House why my family and I became Liberals. My father was one of six boys raised by a widow in northern Ontario back in the mid-1920s. At that time my grandmother was struggling as a court stenographer to raise her six children. She was anxious to send one of them to school, but she did not have the money to pay for the examination which had to be taken to follow up on post-secondary education. She wrote to the Minister responsible for education in the Province of Ontario at that time and said: "I am a widow with six sons. I would like to send at least one of them, who wants to be a veterinarian, to school so that he can achieve his goal". The Conservative Minister at the time wrote my grandmother and said: "Madam, in your circumstances I think it is highly outrageous that you should even consider sending any of your sons to a post-secondary institution". My grandmother became an ardent Liberal from that day forward. She believed that any Government, including the Socred Government of British Columbia or the Conservative Government then in Ontario, which would say to poor people that you cannot afford education and that there should not be universal accessibility to it, should not get her vote. I think this political philosophy is a hallmark of what we are seeing here in Ottawa.

With respect to housing, I received a letter today, and I think other Members will be receiving ones in the same vein. They should be aware of the new housing policies of the Government which targets the so-called core needy. The letter I received was from Dora Hilton who lives in Whitby, Ontario. She received a rent increase of 50 per cent in 1985 and another rent increase of 50 per cent in 1986. She is a senior citizen who, in just two years, has had her rent increased by 100 per cent. Her rent is now almost $500 a month. The people in her building are extremely upset, but this is the dilemma they face. They have no place to go. Through its sad omission of any reference to housing in the Speech from the Throne the Government has shown it is abandoning a national strategy for housing. It is content to leave the question of housing up to the provinces. I am sure we will have a chance to say more about this subject in the future. However, I draw the matter to the attention of Hon. Members because I think there is a national crisis in terms of housing. Anyone who lives in a major urban centre will be aware of the crisis. Frankly, they will be shocked, as am I, that the Government has made no reference to it in the Speech from the Throne.

As the only opposition Member in the area of Hamilton, the lone voice of Opposition now that the former Member for Hamilton Mountain has departed—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I am only 10 miles away.

Ms. Copps: He is not from Hamilton, Mr. Speaker. Close, but no banana. He is from Brantford, the home of Wayne Gretzky. We cannot lay claim to Wayne Gretzky. Thus the Hon. Member cannot lay claim to being a Hamiltonian.

There are certain issues currently taking place in the Hamilton area which bear national scrutiny. One deals with the Hamilton airport.

Terminal 1 at the Toronto Airport is in a state of absolute crisis. Most Members have probably been through Terminal 1, and I ask Hon. Members whether or not they agree that Terminal 1 is a disaster area. Terminal 1 is a joke. It is an insult to any person arriving on an international flight who is en route to the southwestern Ontario area. I agree that we need to do something about the overcrowding problem. At the same time, only a few kilometers away in the City of Hamilton there is a beautiful $50 million facility which is lying waste. It was cited by the Auditor General as being one example of our not receiving value for our dollar. It just does not have the necessary passenger loads.

Before the daily trips to Vancouver last summer the total number of passengers travelling through the Hamilton airport was 40. At the same time we were seeing an overload of 4 million passengers only a few kilometers away in the City of Toronto. The then Minister of Transport attended an emergency meeting at the time. He very kindly agreed to receive our Mayor and our Regional Chairman who laid out the problem to him. He was sympathetic, as only he can be. Heaven knows, at times he can be sympathetic and at times he can need our sympathy. We are never quite sure which it is. Nonetheless, he was sympathetic. He said that he would do something about the problem. Only a few days later he issued a press release in which he said that he was proud to announce that he was giving permission to another airline to land at Terminal 1 in the City of Toronto. That airline is TAP of Portugal.

It seems to me that if there is one facility which is lying waste and another which is completely crowded to capacity, then this is an unimaginable situation for anyone who has experienced it on Sunday, Monday or Tuesday night. Why did the Minister of Transport not say to TAP that we would be very happy to see it land in southwestern Ontario but that it will have to be at Hamilton and not Toronto? There are many people living in the vicinity of the Hamilton area. We are the hub of the golden horseshoe and not that far from Toronto. It would certainly be easy to set up a shuttle service between the two airports, thus permitting people who want to fly beyond the southwestern Ontario area to proceed to their connections. However, there is a Minister who really revealed his true colours when he went to Atlantic Canada and told Atlantic Canadians that they should stop complaining because they have it better than those in Bangladesh or Sri Lanka. He said the same thing when he came to Hamilton. He said he would deal with our concerns and try to assist the airport, but within the short space of a few days he agreed to let another airline into Toronto while this particular airport is being neglected.

• (1640)

There is one reason for this, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I could give some positive advice to the Prime Minister. Those in Hamilton need a cabinet Minister from the Hamilton area. The Minister who is currently designated as the Minister for Hamilton is the Hon. Member from Oakville. His designation escapes me because he comes to Hamilton so seldom that no one even knows who he is. I am sure that if I were to ask 10 people at Jackson Square who the Minister responsible for Hamilton is, they would not know that it is the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek). I suppose that is the only association he has with Hamilton. We do have a good football team and shortly we will have an NHL franchise.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we need a cabinet Minister from Hamilton.

An Hon. Member: What about you?

Ms. Copps: I would volunteer but I am on the wrong side of the House. My services are available as a consultant, but unfortunately I am on the wrong side of the House.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): No, the other side.

Ms. Copps: The other side, that's right.

When decisions are to be made about transport and airports, if we had a cabinet Minister from Hamilton we would hear a Hamilton voice. Right now Hamilton is voiceless. It is without representation in Cabinet and we are getting the short end of the stick. To be blunt, we are getting the bone job. The only way to remedy that is to get a cabinet Minister from Hamilton who will fight for us. I will have more to say on this in the coming weeks.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Montreal, the Leader of the Hon. Member's Party, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), was quoted as saying that only the Liberals have the courage to address squarely issues such as the Constitution, free trade, environment and energy. I know that the Hon. Member is a leading spokesperson for her Party and a firm and strong supporter of her Leader. I wonder if she would be kind enough to tell us definitively of her Party's policies with respect to the Constitution, trade negotiations with the United States, the environment and energy. And while she is at it, perhaps she could tell us of her Party's position with respect to the deficit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I do not know what the first part of the question put by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) meant in regard to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). However, I will let it go this time. I would hope that the Hon. Member would keep it in the context of what the Hon. Member has just finished saying.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, of course, with the unanimous consent of the House to extend my discussion period, I would be very happy to answer all those questions. However, the point made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was a very valid and positive point. In the context of multilateral discussions, the Liberal Party has been the only Party that consistently, from the beginning, has said that we should not be putting all our eggs into the bilateral basket. If we spent the kind of money that we are currently spending on sending Simon Reisman to Washington with his team and keeping Mr. Reisman and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) singing from the same hymn book on other things, we would be a lot better off in terms of international trade.

With respect to the Constitution, there has been an extremely positive resolution from the Quebec caucus as well as the Quebec wing of the federal Party, a resolution which will be debated at length at the policy convention which will be held in November. That particular position has been enunciated with some modification by our Leader in an extremely informative article——in the newspaper Le Devoir which I would be very pleased to send you. I think that the Liberal policy on the Constitution is the only clear policy, the only policy which endorses the concept that Quebec has indeed certain different characteristics. Having worked in Quebec, I can say that I unreservedly support the statements made by Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) in the newspaper Le Devoir, and I look forward to a very interesting debate during our convention in November.

[Translation]

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), who has good relationships with the Liberal Peterson Government of Ontario, would not agree that the major problem with the Hamilton airport is that it is nearly as hard to find and nearly as hard to get to as Mirabel and that there is no decent highway to that airport. There could be, with a two or three-mile road connected to the 403, a first-class access to the airport. Since there is no such access, it is virtually impossible for anyone to find that airport and it takes a great while to get there.

Would the Hon. Member use her best influence with the Peterson Government to make the airport more accessible? After all, highway transportation is a provincial responsibility. The federal Government has put its money up for the terminal. Surely to goodness it is time the province did something about the highway.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I live in Hamilton's east end and I can tell the Hon. Member that I probably know the road system a little better than he does. I can be at the Hamilton airport, barring a few speeding tickets, within about 15 minutes coming from the far east end of Hamilton. Those Hon. Members who are familiar with the airport will know that it is located in the far southwest end. Transportation is not the problem. Designation is the problem.

When it comes to transportation, the Hon. Member will realize that the new Liberal Government in Ontario, which will obviously be elected with a majority representation in Ontario very soon, has only been in power for a little more than a year. It will have been in power for two years by next June. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, that Government was handed such a mess when it came to the transportation system of Ontario that while it is trying its darndest, it is finding it tough. The Government will continue to try its darndest but such a mess was left behind that it will take a little longer than a year and a half to fix up the situation.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I know that you would not want me to let this occasion go by without congratulating the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) for making what is obviously the finest speech we have heard today if not for a long time in the House of Commons. I see that the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) agrees and his wisdom tells me that I am correct.

I would like to ask my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, about the footwear and textile industries. I have noted, of course, that in the Throne Speech, the Government did not address either of those two issues. These issues are very important to the constituency of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East as they are to mine, particularly in the face of the devastating Tory policies which have caused the loss of so many jobs in the footwear industry in Alexandria which is in my riding, areas in the riding of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and other areas of the Niagara Peninsula which do not have the good fortune of being represented by as good an Hon. Member as the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us, on behalf of those other ridings that do not have the benefit at this time of someone who speaks forcefully in the House of Commons, how many jobs have been lost in the footwear industry as a result of the devastating Tory policy that was passed in the House of Commons a year ago. Perhaps she could tell us as well how many jobs are left in the footwear industry as a result of those unfortunate Conservative policies.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of participating in a footwear task force which travelled through southwestern Ontario. As you may know, Mr. Speaker, I am the lone Liberal MP located between Toronto and Windsor so my interest in these matters spreads beyond the City of Hamilton. Obviously I have to find out what is happening in Cambridge, Kitchener, Mississauga and other areas most directly affected by the footwear cut-backs. I think the most difficult situation is that being faced by a number of workers who have been laid off. There have been plant closings in Oakville, in the Halton region, in Cambridge, in the City of London as well as in the City of Hamilton. The Government made a lot of promises about having new programs for modification to get the workers, primarily older workers, back into the workforce. Unfortunately, not only have hundreds of jobs disappeared, but no displacement programs have been put in place. That is why I referred in my speech to the absolutely uncaring attitude of the Government that cancelled a program dealing with older workers and employees of the footwear industry, namely, the LAB Program. Those workers could have been covered under the previous Liberal program if there had been a closing or if there had been significant lay-offs. That program was cancelled following a promise by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that we would have another older worker's program in place by August, 1986. The program is still on the drawing boards and we now see the Minister of Finance blaming the provinces for not participating. That obviously has to be a first priority. I will be holding the Government to account on the lack of its fulfilment of its promise to older workers.

• (1650)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer).

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, first, allow me to extend my sincere congratulations to you on your re-appointment as Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. I am confident that I speak for all Members of the House when I say that Parliament will be well served by your acknowledged experience and ability.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Witer: I would also like to extend my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) on his historic election as Speaker of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Witer: Today I have been given the opportunity to speak on the Throne Speech, a task I undertake with conviction and confidence. The Throne Speech is not a detailed plan of action, it is a statement of intent. Therefore, a true assessment of the impact of a Throne Speech can only be determined by an examination of the Government's record following the speech.

On November 4, 1984, the Governor General presented the first Throne Speech of this Government setting a theme of national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice. In the 23 months following that speech, much has already been accomplished toward those goals, even as we recognize the long road ahead, if we are to achieve the lofty aims that we have set for ourselves. That is why I am especially pleased to see that last week's Throne Speech did not forget the promises we made, but renewed our commitment to achieving their fulfilment.

One of the important commitments made in both speeches was the achievement of economic equality for women. In order to allow women the opportunity to attain their full economic potential, we must ensure that women have equal access to employment and opportunities to advance to the most senior levels of management. The adoption of the employment equity principle outlined in the Abella Report is a prime example of the Government's commitment to full equality for women. We have acted to ensure that Crown corporations, federally regulated businesses and private companies which have contracted to do business with the Government give women better job opportunities. In just two years the Government has increased the percentage of women appointed to federal boards and commissions to over 25 per cent from the previous Government's record of 15 per cent. Our Government has made good on its commitment to improving economic opportunities for women in Canada. The facts speak for themselves. Since September, 1984 unemployment among women has fallen by 90,000, a record on which this Government is seeking to build.

The future of young Canadians is being addressed as well. We have dedicated ourselves to working with the provinces and the private sector to enhance job opportunities for our young people. We are committed to encourage initiative and the entrepreneurial spirit among the youth. A few months ago I received a letter from a young student who was interested in pursuing a career in scientific research. He requested my advice on the likelihood of career opportunities in his chosen field. Looking to the Throne Speech, I answer him with a resounding yes. There is a future for those seeking a career in the scientific or high-tech fields. We have committed ourselves to expanding opportunities for the future. Once again, the figures confirm our commitment to Canadian youth. The record shows that since September, 1984, unemployment among youth has fallen by 109,000. We are backing up our promises with action.

Parkdale—High Park is an urban riding with a population of approximately 92,000. While the unemployment rate in our constituency runs at about 4.7 per cent, we do not consider ourselves to be free of difficulties. We have worked hard to achieve that rate, and the response to my householder questionnaire indicates that unemployment is one of the single most important concerns of my constituents.

There is no doubt that we have benefited from programs such as the Canadian Jobs Strategy and Challenge 86 which have contributed to our relatively low unemployment rate. Since 1985, the Government has allocated $900 million over and above the resources already available for training and employment programs to implement the Canadian Jobs Strategy. During the past two years, the total number of unemployed has dropped by 215,000, with the unemployment rate dropping a full 2 percentage points from 11.7 per cent in September, 1984, to 9.7 per cent in August, 1986. The Government recognizes that those percentage points translate into real people who face very serious hardship in providing for the needs of their families. Whether the rate of unemployment is 9.7 or 4.7, Canadians deserve and demand the right to provide for their needs with dignity. Percentage points are insignificant to someone who does not have a job.

In the 23 months since our election we have created 563,000 jobs, 80 per cent of which are full time. The OECD forecasts that Canada will have the largest rate of employment growth of any major industrialized nation this year. That is the record of our Government, the record on which this Throne Speech promises to build.

The Government has recognized in this Throne Speech and, indeed, in the previous one, that Canada does not exist in a vacuum. We cannot hope to create the economic opportunities we seek for Canada without looking to our trading partners. That is why we have undertaken negotiations with the United States to open up opportunities for freer trade between our two nations. We are determined to open up trade opportunities not only in the United States but with Japan and other Pacific Rim countries.

Our efforts to attract investment to Canada as a source of jobs has not gone unrewarded. In the automotive sector alone since 1985, Hyundai, Toyota, Honda and General Motors have all announced plans to build plants in Canada. We are committed to building on these success stories by continuing to encourage investment and development in Canada.

• (1700)

Our involvement in the international community brings with it responsibility and opportunity. The Throne Speech underscores our efforts to take an active role in world affairs. In 1988, leaders of the seven major industrialized nations will meet in Canada for the annual economic summit. Our admission to the Group of Seven has given Canada a unique opportunity to take a leading role in world economic affairs.

[Translation]

With Quebec and New Brunswick, we set the stage for the very first francophone summit, and now Canada will host the second summit in 1987.

[English]

Also in 1987, we will be hosting the Commonwealth Conference in Vancouver. Canada has played a major role in the Commonwealth over the years. Our membership has provided us with an important tool for exerting our influence in world affairs. Our efforts to abolish apartheid in South Africa is an example of the leading role Canada has taken within the Commonwealth.

Canada has an obligation to the international community to expose the gross violations of basic human rights in all countries including the Soviet Union where freedom of movement, freedom of speech, and freedom of religious belief are restricted and denied and where families have been cruelly separated by the refusal of passports for those seeking to join relatives in the West. Canada has been in the forefront of the fight to maintain basic human rights for all.

The measures which the Government has taken against South Africa; the pressure which has been exerted by the Canadian Government on the Soviet Union in order to free dissidents such as Shcharansky, Orlov, Danylo Shumuk, Oksana Meshko, Viktoras Petkus and others; and the representations made during the recent visit of the Soviet Foreign Minister have all had as their aim the restoration of human rights to those who have been denied them. We have spoken out for those who cannot speak for themselves.

Our participation in the United Nations is central to Canadian foreign policy and has allowed us to press our position on such issues as verifiable arms reductions and human rights violations to an even larger international audience. My trip last year to the United Nations General Assembly in New York afforded me the chance to study the institution more closely. I am pleased to note Canada's renewed commitment to the UN. Through the UN, Canada has taken a leading position in pushing for verification of existing arms control agreements and for the negotiation of new accords. Verification is not an obstacle but is an essential component of any solution to disarmament issues. Our renewed commitment to the UN will allow us to continue efforts to strengthen the UN's capacity, to investigate allegations of non-compliance, and to expand UN involvement in the formation and execution of verification provisions.

My constituency of Parkdale—High Park has a vibrant and vocal ethnocultural community. Recent statistics show that some 60 per cent of my constituents have an ethnocultural heritage. Canada's commitment to a multicultural mosaic has provided this country with a rich and unique character and has made an invaluable contribution to Canadian society.

The Government has initiated a number of key accomplishments in the field of multiculturalism. One of the highlights was the first ever federal-provincial-territorial conference on multiculturalism which was convened in 1985. The conference was an unqualified success, and the Government has since gone on to establish the House of Commons Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

My constituents have expressed concern over Canada's refugee policy. I am pleased that their concerns have been addressed in the Throne Speech. The reforms as outlined in the Throne Speech will produce a system which is both fair and effective. It will assist genuine refugees in need of protection and discourage abuse of Canada's humanitarian tradition. It was the promise of freedom and justice which brought all of us to Canada. It is the fulfilment of that promise which makes us proud to be Canadians.

In order to fulfil that promise of freedom and justice, the Throne Speech addressed many important issues in the area of social justice. We have undertaken to remove barriers which have prevented women from participating freely and equitably in the mainstream of Canadian society. We have resolved to take effective action against child abuse, pornography, child prostitution, and the growing threat of illegal drug traffic. The Throne Speech has addressed the major concerns of my constituents. It has addressed the concerns of the region and of all Canadians.

Members of Parliament cannot limit their concerns and interests to issues which only affect those residing within the arbitrarily drawn electoral boundaries. Our responsibility lies in representing the people of our province and of our country. It is incumbent upon all of us to discuss issues and to make decisions which are good for Canada. Therefore, I will take a few moments to address the Government's commitment in the field of agriculture.

As a Member of Parliament from Ontario, I recognize the importance of the promises made in the Throne Speech. While my colleagues will recognize the singularly unique expertise of a Member of Parliament from an urban riding commenting upon agricultural policy, I can assure the House of my sincerity. Ontario is Canada's leading agricultural province with a gross production of over $5 billion, which amounts to over a quarter of the output of Canadian agriculture. Ontario is also the leading food manufacturing province in Canada with 10 per cent of our manufacturing labour force employed in processing agricultural commodities.

My constituents are aware of the problems which have developed in Canadian agriculture over the years, as many of them are employed in the numerous food processing facilities located in the Toronto area. I take particular pride in the Government's accomplishment in respect of the agricultural sector. The Throne Speech has made the strongest commitment to agriculture which has ever been made in a Throne Speech. Many of the problems which exist have been created by subsidies and preferential treatment being given to some commodities in the international market-place. We have pledged to protect Canadian farmers in the face of unfair practices conducted beyond our borders.

We were instrumental in having agriculture placed on the agenda of the Tokyo Economic Summit and helped to secure unamimous agreement on addressing subsidies in the new round of multilateral trade negotiations.

The Rural Transition Program has addressed the needs of those farmers who, through circumstance or choice, have decided to seek other occupations by providing counselling, training, and financial assistance during that transition period. We are providing farmers with the real substantial assistance they need to survive difficult times.

The Government's record is there for all to see. The question which begs to be asked is: Are Canadians better off today than they were two years ago? The record shows that the answer is a loud, unequivocal yes. Much still remains to be done, and I am confident that the objectives and directions set out in the Throne Speech, together with the commitment and dedication to accomplish them, will provide a better and brighter tomorrow for all Canadians.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member quite rightly referred to a number of the accomplishments of the Government since it took office in September, 1984. In particular he referred to the appointments which have been made in respect of women. He compared the appointments made by the present Government with the appointments made by the past Government. He indicated that the past Government had appointed women to about 15 per cent of the available positions, whereas in two years the present Government has appointed 25 per cent.

• (1710)

I noted as well that he spoke about the multicultural aspect of his riding. I know he is most concerned about multicultural appointments. He is as well aware as I and other Members of the House are of the fact that about 30 per cent of the total population of this country come from non-Anglophone or Francophone backgrounds. I wonder if he could tell us whether he has any information concerning the appointment of people from the non-Anglophone or Francophone communities made by this present Government compared with those made by the former Government.

Mr. Witer: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question. The latest information we have is slightly outdated, being three months old, but as of June the appointments to the various boards and commissions made by this Government from third language group candidates is 13.6 per cent. That is an increase in total numbers of 50 per cent over those made by the previous Government. We are going in the right direction but we have a long way to go to get to that 33 per cent.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating my hon. friend from Parkdale—High Park (M. Witer) on his speech and especially that part of it that was in French. I think he deserves to be congratulated on the effort he made, and I say: Keep up the good work. In his speech, he mentioned that in his riding, the unemployment rate was one half the national average.

In New Brunswick, the unemployment rate is 15 per cent. Did I understand correctly that he said that in either case, the same effort should be made, that we should not do more for New Brunswick, where the rate is 15 per cent and in his riding where the rate is below 5 per cent? Did I understand correctly?

[English]

Mr. Witer: Mr. Speaker, it is precisely because of the inequities which exist in this country that this Government made a very special effort for Atlantic Canada. May I also bring to the attention of my hon. friend that the unemployment rate of 4.7 per cent in my riding has occurred since the coming to power of the Conservative Government. Since 1984, investment in this country has increased by something like $11 billion. Demand for building permits in the Metropolitan Toronto area has increased by something like 52 per cent. We simply do not have enough bricklayers, electricians and plumbers to fill the demand. We are grateful for the low unemployment rate we have but we can do better. We are also grateful for the economic conditions created by the policies of this Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

How is it that we in New Brunswick did not see the development and everything you just described which happened in your riding? Has the Government forgotten Canada's remote areas and doesn't it have a regional development policy, in which case that explains why the unemployment rate has remained unacceptably high in our area?

[English]

Mr. Witer: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree with me that the objective of this Government is to have full and complete employment. It has happened in the Toronto area, not because of Government intervention but because of free market forces. We are well aware that those market forces may not create the needed jobs in all regions of Canada and that is why we redirect government assistance and programs precisely to those areas that need the assistance. I would be very happy to compare the assistance that goes to Atlantic Canada with that which may go to the Metropolitan Toronto area. I think the Hon. Member will find there is no comparison. His area would be significantly higher in the government programs and funds it receives than those in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have just heard the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) say that, on the one hand, his Government, since it was elected, is responsible for the reduction in unemployment. In the same breath he says it has nothing to do with the Government, it is market forces. I wonder if he can clarify that contradiction.

Mr. Witer: If the Hon. Member had been listening she would have heard me clearly state that the Government has created a positive economic environment in order for those free market forces to work. I attribute that positive attitude, and the desire of the private sector to invest, to the confidence which they place in this Government.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member has a pressing interest in agricultural matters since he referred to them in his speech. I wonder if he could tell us whether he supports supply management in agriculture.

Mr. Malone: No, he does not.

Mr. Witer: A simple no will suffice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any further questions? Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, it is of particular interest to me to participate again in a debate on the Speech from the Throne. As you and all Members in this House are aware, the Speech from the Throne is an opportunity for the Government to lay out to this House and the Canadian people its intentions and its broad vision of the future of this country. It is an opportunity for the Government to explain to the House and the Canadian people what it intends to do in a general sense in the upcoming session. I think all Canadians were somewhat disappointed with this document. I do not think we expected detailed programs to be enunciated in the Speech from the Throne, but I think we did expect a new direction, a new vision to be enunciated in the document.

Certainly the politically wise, meaning the newspaper columnists and people who follow politics actively, speculated that the Speech from the Throne would offer the Government a new opportunity to set forth new directions. It was noted that the Government's popularity in the polls has been declining on a steady basis and that it would use this opportunity to attempt to rally the troops and present a new vision. We did not get much of a vision at all. It was as though a pair of glasses had been put on by the Government and they were full of mist, grease and grime, and some very muddied notions were presented in the speech.

Let us first deal with the question of agriculture. I think commentators in the media have done special pieces outlining the deep crisis which exists in Canadian agriculture today. Various studies have confirmed this. A special committee of this House dealing with agriculture has held extensive hearings as well. We have known for some time that the U.S. Farm Bill would have dramatic effects on the price of grains on the world markets. That is nothing new, Mr. Speaker, the warning has been issued for some time. Thousands of Canadian farm families stand on the brink of bankruptcy. One of the backbones of this nation is in danger. You would have expected that the Party which has enjoyed long support from western Canada and western farmers would have come to the aid of the farmers in western Canada. You would have expected the Speech from the Throne to have laid out in no uncertain terms that the Government would not allow western Canadian agriculture to slide into bankruptcy.

• (1720)

After all, the Premier of our province, Mr. Grant Devine, a Conservative, assured the voters in Saskatchewan time and again that he has an agreement with the feds. He was telling us to wait till the Speech from the Throne. In fact, Mr. Devine took an afternoon off from his campaigning to sit in front of the television set to hear of all the goodies the federal Government was going to supply to the western farmers. What a disappointed Mr. Devine we had that day!

According to the Star Phoenix Mr. Devine got on the phone to official cabinet Ministers in Ottawa. He was overheard by a reporter to say over the phone that heads will roll unless the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) delivers on his promises. It was obvious that Mr. Devine was indeed disappointed and that the Speech from the Throne did not deliver on the promises that were made.

Mr. Benjamin: Would you believe desperate?

Mr. de Jong: Yes, Mr. Speaker, indeed Mr. Devine was desperate. You will remember that earlier this year Mr. Devine said that $5 billion was needed to ensure that western Canadian agriculture would remain viable. After some meetings of the Premier it is now down to "at least a billion, we need at least a billion right now". The Speech from the Throne did not make that quite clear. The Tories, who are polling every day, sent a message back the day after the Speech from the Throne saying that they were going to be wiped out in Saskatchewan unless something more substantial was said. On Friday afternoon we heard the Prime Minister make a vague reference to some aid package of up to $1 billion. He did not quite spell it out for us.

If the Government had been really sincere in its commitment it would have thought out this proposal. At least we are talking about big bucks, over $1 billion. The Prime Minister would have had something substantial to announce. He would have had some details. After all, the farmers in my constituency are existing with a tremendous amount of insecurity about their future. They do not need federal politicians to jerk them around. They want some definite answers. Their livelihood is at stake. They do not want to be pawns in some political game that the Tories are playing between Ottawa and Regina. It is serious, Mr. Speaker, it is their livelihood. It is not something to smirk about or to jerk them around with as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) did when he said, "Well, anything to win an election", grin, grin. And then afterwards he said, "Oh, no, I didn't mean it. I'm sorry, we're really sincere". We do not need the grins that we are seeing on the government benches today. It is serious. There are young farm families on the verge of bankruptcy and unless there is a real commitment by the Government they will go under. There are thousands of these farm families across the Prairies that are on the verge of bankruptcy. These farm families have supported the Tories election after election. These farmers felt that the former Liberal Governments had totally betrayed them and ignored them, and they had. However, lo and behold, this bunch today is exactly the same as the Liberals were before. The farmers have become pawns in the political games the Governments are playing.

The Government did not have any trouble bailing out the banks. Over one weekend a group of bankers came together, stated their problem and got an easy solution. Over the weekend a quick decision led to more than $1 billion in federal moneys going to bail out the banks. A handful of individuals and a handful of institutions were bailed out with no problem at all. However, thousands of farm families are being twisted and turned around by the Government and its colleagues in Regina.

So much for the promise of deficiency payments and this $1 billion which we are trying to get a fix on. Is it new money? Where is it going to come from? Is it going to be for farmers across Canada or just for the few western provinces? We are trying desperately to get some details so the folks back home will know what is coming in order that they can start planning the future. We are getting all these evasive answers. We are told that it will require more studies and more meetings. For heaven's sake, Mr. Speaker, there have been meetings after meetings after meetings until they are coming out of their ears.

Western farmers need, want, and demand some answers, not more meetings, not more poppycock, not more committees, proposals, suggestions or studies. They want action, Mr. Speaker. The three western pools have called for a minimum of $2 billion if the viability of western Canadian agriculture is going to be restored.

I do not think the Government has the backbone to make that commitment to those farm families. It is willing to make commitments to the banks. It is willing to make commitments to the corporate sector in the country. It is willing to give the corporate sector all sorts of tax write-offs and easy loopholes. It is willing to lose billions of dollars in tax breaks. Two regressive tax measures, the $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption and the significantly increased before-tax contributions allowed for the registered retirement pension plans are estimated to shift about $2 billion in tax burdens away from the well-off and onto the federal deficit. The Government is quite willing to do that, Mr. Speaker. It was a snap decision. To help the thousands of farm families that are desperate back home more studies and more meetings are required. The farm families have become pawns in the political games that the folks opposite are playing.

What more can we expect from Tory Governments? I will tell you a few things about the Tory Government back home in Saskatchewan. They were respectful businessmen. They were going to set things straight. They were going to bring business acumen to the Saskatchewan economy. They said that if they were elected they would bring all sorts of new developments to Saskatchewan and get Saskatchewan going. They certainly got Saskatchewan going, Mr. Speaker—downhill.

Mr. Benjamin: Down the drain.

Mr. de Jong: In fact, in today's Globe and Mail we see that Saskatchewan is losing people at the fastest rate in this country with the exception of another great Tory bastion, British Columbia. It is losing more people because of a faltering economy. That Tory Government came in when there was over $1.5 billion in surpluses which the people of Saskatchewan had put away for a rainy day. That province had consistently run surpluses in its budget year after year as a result of prudent management of the public revenues and resources. Now, after four and some years of Tory rule, it has a deficit of over $2.5 billion. They are the folks who always talk about deficit and fiscal responsibility. What they have done to the Treasury in Saskatchewan is shameful. Even the Liberals, during the Thatcher years, were not as brazen in how they dispensed the public purse and mismanaged the economy.

• (1730)

The Tories ruined the economy of that province to the point that we are in debt to the tune of $2.5 billion. Those Members think it is funny. Listen to them laugh, Mr. Speaker. It is a great joke to them, but it is a debt that the kids in Saskatchewan will have to pay for several generations to come as a result of the stupidity and mismanagement by the Tories in Saskatchewan. They are the Tories who knew all about business and knew how to run a provincial Government.

I suggest that it is hard to run a provincial Government seriously if one does not first believe in government. Under the Blakeney and Tommy Douglas Governments in Saskatchewan there was a group of people who believed that running a government required responsibility and professionalism. We went out and hired professionals, and the Saskatchewan civil service was one of the best in this country. It was difficult to attract professional people to a place like Saskatchewan, which was a small rural province that did not have a large population. Certainly, there was not much excitement and action there, unless one created a challenge. We created a challenge and acquired some of the best civil servants anywhere in North America.

The Tories do not believe in government and think that a second-hand car dealer can run the show. They came in and destroyed that civil service.

Mr. Blenkarn: Who is a second-hand car dealer?

Mr. de Jong: When the Tories went after the public service in Saskatchewan, it was one of the saddest moments in Saskatchewan's political history. When they fired all those people, not only did they go on a witch-hunt that affected Deputy Ministers and heads of Departments, they went down to the level of clerks.

When I visit households in Saskatchewan I meet people who tell me; "Mr. de Jong, we will support the New Democratic candidate but unfortunately we cannot put up a sign because my daughter happens to be a clerk in the town corporation". They are afraid. People in Saskatchewan are afraid to express their political points of view because there is a vindictive, hateful Government that will stoop to the lowest of the low. It has stepped outside of the normal bounds of human decency to a degree that is hard to imagine. Those Members laugh.

Let me cite just one incident. One of the Members of the Legislature from my district, who used to be the Attorney General and is now the provincial treasurer, printed in one of his householders a year after he was elected the name of some 20 civil servants whom the Tories had fired and which jobs they had taken. That degree of witch-hunting of the individual in an attempt to destroy his or her life and professional career shows their pettiness and hatefulness. Those Hon. Members laugh and think it is a great joke. It is a crying shame and on October 20 the people of Saskatchewan will deliver a message that will be heard. It will be heard in this Parliament because it means an end to the type of witch-hunt, vindictiveness and hatefulness for which the Tories are known today.

What a difference from the Conservatives of the John Diefenbaker era! When we consider the new bunch from the right, the imports of the ideology from the U.S., the hate and venom with which they express their hate is abhorrent and foreign to this country. That is why that group will also be turfed out in the next election.

We in Saskatchewan believe that Tory Governments are something like Halley's comet, they come once in a lifetime. That is enough for us.

The Speech from the Throne also contained the promise of tax reform by the Government. A fairer taxation system is what the rhetoric is all about. Yet, let us consider the record of the Budgets that have been introduced so far by the Government. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has in fact accelerated the trend toward unfairness. Direct taxes on persons are forecast to increase from $38 billion to $66 billion between 1984 and 1990, while, over the same period, taxes on corporations will merely rise from $12 billion to $16.6 billion. By 1990, individuals will shoulder 80 per cent of Canada's tax burden, while corporations will only pay 20 per cent. Currently, people contribute 75 per cent and 25 per cent.

The Government has promised tax reform. We are holding our breath because we are waiting for the type of tax reform the Government talks about. It is a tax reform that will mean a greater tax burden on working Canadians and greater tax breaks for the rich whom that Party represents.

We have seen a two-tier society growing in this country, with a greater number of people living in poverty while smaller groups of people are becoming richer.

Today, the top 20 per cent of Canadian families take 43.3 per cent of all income, while the bottom 20 per cent take 3.6 per cent of all income. The unfairness in our society is accelerating and, rather than reversing that trend, the Government has accelerated it with its taxation policies and programs. That is why there is no doubt in my mind that on October 20 the people of Saskatchewan will have had enough of their Tory Government, and when this Government dares to face the electorate it will also be finished.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Today during Question Period, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) quoted at length from a telex sent to him by Premier Ghiz of Prince Edward Island. We on this side of the House assumed that if a request were to be made to the Prime Minister for the document it would be made readily available. However, I just learned that a request for the document from a reporter working with Canadian Press has been refused by the Prime Minister's Office.

I can certainly refer to the necessary citations, but I want to raise a question of privilege and indicate that it is contrary to the well established precedents of the House and privileges of Members for the Prime Minister to refuse to make a document available when he quoted from it in the way that he did in Question Period.

I would like you to rule, Mr. Speaker. I make this request with utmost respect, that the Prime Minister be called upon to table in the House as soon as possible the telex from which he quoted, purported to be from Premier Ghiz of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, I submit that the matter should be raised under Questions of Privilege, which should come up as listed on the Order Paper tomorrow.

• (1740)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what has been brought up by Hon. Members and the Hon. House Leader. I will advise the Speaker. We will look at the "blues" and give a ruling tomorrow.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I presume the comments made on the point of order are not part of the 10 minutes allotted to my colleague. I would like the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) to clarify perhaps a situation which is very confusing to me. Today during Question Period we heard variously from the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board and from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with respect to the situation of prairie farmers. The Prime Minister kept on talking about how new money was going to be put into the pockets of western farmers who are in a very difficult situation. However, despite his comments in this House on Friday, he would not be precise and it is clear the Government does not have a plan. I wonder whether my colleague can perhaps elucidate the meaning of those comments? Are prairie farmers going to receive money for deficiency payments? Will it be new money? Is this simply a political piece of opportunism on the part of the Government which is concerned about its Conservative colleagues in the Province of Saskatchewan? Is there a genuine desire on the government side to ensure that the desperate plight of prairie farmers is met? Or is their problem in terms of being left almost totally exposed on the world market to competition from the EEC and the United States just going to be ignored by the Government?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to thank my colleague for that question. My interpretation of what has been happening is that the Government has no clear idea or program worked through to deliver deficiency payments on the level which is needed by western grain producers.

There was no mention at all in any of the answers that this program will be a deficiency payment program. There was no clear indication that this money will be new money but, rather, it seemed to me to be reshuffled money. There is no indication it is to be zeroed in just on western Canadian farmers. My sense is that the planners, the bureaucrats and some of the larger farmers, the tight groups represented in this Conservative Party, believe that the family farm is a dead entity and should be allowed to die and just fade away, and this is an opportunity for getting rid of some 20,000 or 30,000 farm families in Saskatchewan.

I genuinely believe that some of the thinking behind the Tory inaction emanates from the notion they have that family farming in Canada is not a viable operation and, therefore, we should allow them quietly to die away.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to put a couple of questions to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). I am mildly confused by some of the rhetoric I heard from him. I confess to not having heard all of it, but I heard enough to pique my curiosity. I believe I heard the Hon. Member going on at great length about what he called the "mismanagement" of the provincial Government in Saskatchewan, how it had ruined the economy, how it had gone into debt, and so on. At the same time it appears that here in Ottawa it is all right for the Hon. Member and his colleagues to call at every opportunity for massive government borrowings in order to assist every area of the economy. Of course, that would have the inevitable effect of raising the deficit and bringing about the kind of irresponsibility the Hon. Member ascribes to the Government of Saskatchewan.

I am curious as to how the Hon. Member can expect to have it both ways. It seems to me he fails to recognize the fact that the Saskatchewan economy is based mainly on agriculture and somewhat on energy. He ignores the fact that both oil prices and grain prices are at historically low levels owing to world prices and to conditions outside of Saskatchewan, conditions over which we have very little control. The Hon. Member knows very well that these historically low prices are not the fault of the Government of Saskatchewan or, indeed, the fault of anyone inside this country. Therefore, I am curious as to how he can gloss over these things and ascribe all sorts of misery and mismanagement to the Government of Saskatchewan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I will give the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) a minute to answer the question before I call it 5.45 p.m.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the reason we have the deficit, which we have been trying to explain over and over again, and the reason the Tories managed to run a $2.5 billion deficit in Saskatchewan in less than five years—the fastest growing deficit in North America brought about by the Tory Party in Saskatchewan—is that it gave the tax breaks to the rich and to the oil companies which is costing the Treasury of Saskatchewan hundreds of millions of dollars.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 62(3), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment to the amendment. The question is on the amendment to the amendment. Mr. Broadbent, seconded by Mr. Riis, moved:

That the amendment be amended by adding the following words:

"and specifically, that this House condemns your Government for failing to indicate its intentions with respect to,

1. protecting the interests of Canadian workers in bilateral trade negotiations with the United States, particularly in the forest industry;

2. positive initiatives to encourage economic growth, improve employment prospects, and provide for greater fairness for Canadians in those economically depressed areas of Canada; and

3. improving the accessibility of affordable daycare for all Canadian working parents."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

The Address—Mr. de Jong

(Division No. 1)

YEAS

Members

Angus
Benjamin
Blackburn
(Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Broadbent
Cassidy
Copps
de Corneille
de Jong
Epp
(Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray
(Windsor West)
Guilbault
(Saint-Jacques)
Hopkins
Jewett
Keeper
Langdon
McDonald
(Broadview—Greenwood)
Murphy
Nicholson
(Trinity)
Orlikow
Parry
Riis
Robichaud
Robinson
Rossi
Turner
(Vancouver Quadra)
Young—30

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Bernier
Blackburn
(Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bourgault
Brightwell
Brisco
Browes
Cadieux
Cardiff
Carney
Charest
Clark
(Yellowhead)
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Comeau
Cooper
Corbett
Côté
(Lac-Saint-Jean)
Crofton
Crombie
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Crosby
(Halifax West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Desjardins
Domm
Dorin
Duplessis
Ellis
Epp
(Provencher)
Fennell
Ferland
Forrestall
Gass
Gervais
Girard
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-dela-Madeleine)
Grisé
Guilbault
(Drummond)
Hamelin
Hardey
Hawkes
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Howie
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Jourdenais
Kelleher
Kempling
Kilgour
King
Ladouceur
Landry
Lanthier
La Salle
Lawrence
Layton
Lesick
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
Malone
Mantha
Marin
Masse
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCain
McCuish
McDermid
McDougall
(St. Paul's)
McInnes
McKinnon
McMillan
Minaker
Mitges
Mulroney
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
O'Neil
Oostrom
Porter
Price
Ravis
Redway
Reid
Ricard
St. Germain
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger
(Wetaskiwin)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Scowen
Shields
Siddon
Stewart
Suluk
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Tupper
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Warner
Weiner
White
Wilson
(Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Winegard
Witer—121

• (1810)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

It being after six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.12 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 7, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

LOCAL MEASURED TELEPHONE CHARGES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a large number of Burnaby residents expressing their concern that the telephone pricing scheme known as local measured service, charging for each local call, would significantly increase telephone costs and they call upon Parliament to direct the CRTC to deny telephone companies, such as B.C. Tel, the right to local measured service.

VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTERS—COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition that has been properly endorsed. It is from a group of Canadian volunteer firefighters, most of whom are from my riding of Kent. They humbly pray that there be a commemorative postal stamp designed to honour the many volunteer professional firefighters who have protected property over the years and often rescued Canadians.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-207, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Gun Control).

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to extend the present law relating to firearms acquisition certificates to the ownership, possession and use of firearms and to change the name "Firearms Acquisition Certificate" to "Firearms Possession Certificate".

Stronger and more effective gun control legislation is essential to help reduce the level of violence involving guns, especially handguns, in our society.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-208, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Abortion).

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to recognize that the fundamental decision to terminate a pregnancy belongs to the woman concerned in consultation with her physician.

I would note that today marks the opening of Dr. Henry Morgentaler's Supreme Court challenge to Canada's abortion laws. Let us hope—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A brief explanation of the Bill is appropriate but I am sure the Hon. Member will understand that it should not go beyond that.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, to conclude my explanation of the Bill, I would suggest if in fact politicians do not recognize the injustice of the current abortion laws, let us hope the courts will do so and strike them down.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am not the seconder of this Bill.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the House. There seems to be a little confusion, but we will have it sorted out. The Chair understands that this Bill is being seconded by Mr. Riis. Is that the wish of the Hon. Member for Burnaby?

Mr. Robinson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nunziata: No.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

• (1110)

SMOKING CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-209, an Act to control smoking in public buildings and facilities.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is really a measure aimed at improving the indoor environment, and is also aimed at introducing the doctrine of reasonable accommodation. This is the same Bill that I introduced in the first session, but it has been improved through further work and I am happy to bring it before the House now.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I seek some direction from the Chair. A few moments ago the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) introduced a Bill in the House concerning abortion. As I understand it, unanimous consent is required in order to have the Bill printed. At the time you asked for consent I shouted out "No, Sir". I simply ask the Chair whether I am correct in my assumption that unanimous consent is necessary?

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention but I must advise the House that unanimous consent is not required.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Monday, October 6, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the Session and of the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 44).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to start by congratulating you on your election to the high post you now hold in this House. I personally want to wish you the best of success in this most difficult position and assure you that I and my colleagues will do our best to co-operate with you in bringing more order, more discipline and better decorum to this House. I want to repeat, though, some of the things I said briefly the other day and I would like you to keep them in mind, as I know you will as a fair-minded person.

In allocating time in this House we must always keep in mind the rights of the Opposition and the need for opposition points of view to be properly expressed. One cannot always make judgments based on the distribution of Members in the House, the fact that there are 211 Conservatives and only 40 Liberals and 30 members of the NDP. One must remember as well that although that is the distribution because of our system of election, in the election itself the Conservatives got a little under 50 per cent of the total vote and the opposition Parties got the rest.

However, the important point is that if we are going to have a proper discussion involving opposing points of view in Parliament, one must make sure that the opposition Parties, although they are small in number, have an ample opportunity to put before you as fully as possible views which are opposed to the Government.

In this respect I would ask you to keep in mind the way things were done under Speakers Sauvé, Jerome and Lamoureux. If you look at the record, the opposition Members, even with majority Governments, were given ample opportunity to put their views before this House.

We have before us now a Speech from the Throne which has the same sweet words as the Speech from the Throne of 1984, in fact the same sweet words that we read in the Conservative campaign material during the 1984 election. However, of what value were those sweet words in the form of action and decisions? What happened as a result of more than 300 promises written in such a fine fashion in the Conservative campaign documents? The answer is, virtually nothing. The Government is very good with high-sounding words, image politics, photo opportunities and motherhood rhetoric, but its performance in translating that into action is dismal and its credibility is strained.

I could go even further by suggesting that this Government is even more guilty in that it often cynically makes promises and raises expectations on which it knows it cannot deliver, and perhaps has no intention of delivering. If we look at the Speech from the Throne in 1984 and the promises of the 1984 election, that is one conclusion we could come to.

However, the Canadian public is catching on to this type of image politics. We have a Gallup poll taken in September and reported on October 6 in which the newspaper headline is: "Tories' Record Rated Poorly by Majority, Gallup poll Says". Some 51 per cent of Canadians disapprove of the record of the Progressive Conservatives according to this Gallup poll, and only 26 per cent approve. That should send a message one would think it would send a message—to the Conservatives that form is not enough. What is required is substance, commitment and action.

The Government can say over and over again that it stands for this type of motherhood or that type of apple pie, but when it comes down to presenting Bills in the House, when it comes down to voting on issues, when it comes down to putting teeth in the measures placed before us, that is another thing altogether. The credibility gap is growing, and growing each day.

I counted in the Speech from the Throne we have before us today some 57 promises, more or less commitments to do things. Some of them are very specific. For example, the construction of an ice-breaker for the North is very specific, although there is no timetable for construction and no amount of money is put forward. In any case, it is a specific promise and we will be watching it. However, we also have among those 57 promises some which are extremely vague. For example, I refer to page nine of the Speech where the Government says:

—in full co-operation with the provinces, my Government will seek to achieve high standards of excellence in education, technology development, and innovation.

Who could disagree with that? It is a goal we are all interested in. However, the Government says nothing about how it is going to do it. Is it going to introduce legislation, draw up budgets, or plan meetings for such and such a date? No, it simply makes that commitment. That, I submit to you, is part of the Government's image politics, it is rhetoric without substance.

• (1120)

We know what happened to the 338 promises made by the Conservatives in the 1984 election campaign. Most have been postponed or ignored. Very few of them have been implemented or passed by this House.

On page 2 of this hollow document, the Speech from the Throne, it says:

Two years ago, my government—

Meaning this Conservative Government.

—received a national mandate—a mandate for reform. It was a mandate that summoned Canada to the tasks of national reconciliation, economic renewal, social justice, and to a constructive internationalism. Today, my Ministers believe these goals are within reach.

That statement is so unbelievable it is almost laughable. Does the Conservative Government in fact believe that social justice is within reach? I will give further examples of the gap between what it says and what it does. It says that social justice is almost within reach, yet it cut back the moneys available for employment programs and training. The Government tried to deindex the Old Age Pension but finally backtracked because of the massive opposition in the country. In effect, the Government cut back on the indexation of family allowances. It also cut back on the rate of increases for education and health care in the provinces through the EPF programs.

We are beginning to see the results of that all over the country. In my own city of Montreal hospital beds and radiology departments are being closed and people are not getting the medical care they need. At the universities and community colleges fees are being increased. Young people cannot go to university because it is becoming too expensive. All of this is happening under a Government which says that it was given a mandate to achieve social justice and that this is almost within reach.

The same Government cut back Katimavik, a very good program to help young people adapt to the modern world in which we live. This Government raised taxes for the middle and lower-income groups in the country while giving an exemption of $500,000 for capital gains. The Government compensated bank creditors who had credits over $60,000 when we had two bank failures.

The Government that did those things said in the Speech from the Throne that it has almost fulfilled the mandate it was given in 1984 to achieve social justice. That is so unbelievable it is almost laughable. As a matter of fact, as the Governor General was reading the Speech I wrote beside that comment in the Speech "Ho, ho, ho". That is the only reaction one can have to such a claim.

Another example of that type of rhetoric with regard to social justice is seen on page 12 of the Speech. The Governor General, on behalf of the Government, said:

My Government will continue to enlist the support of all in pursuit of the common goal: a modern, tolerant, and caring nation in which its citizens are secure and prosperous.

Now, isn't that a fine statement. Who would disagree with that fine statement? The same Government that said it wants a caring nation cuts unemployment insurance benefits for the thousands and thousands of people in the country who have severance pay or early retirement pensions and are still looking for work. They may be in their 50s and have children in university and college. The Government has slashed unemployment insurance benefits for them. As a matter of fact, members of the Conservative caucus stood up and said that they opposed this, but they refused to vote against those cuts on an opposition motion of the NDP.

The statements in this speech about a caring nation and the achievements of social justice are nothing more than hollow rhetoric. I think the Canadian public is beginning to understand this because through polls they are beginning to tell the Government what they think about it and its record.

I would now like to discuss the Government's claim with respect to jobs. During the election campaign one of the Government's big promises was "jobs, jobs, jobs". Again yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) boasted about the great number of jobs which he has created. Of course, he did not say too much about the quality of those jobs, the level of pay, or the fact that many of them are temporary or part-time. He did not refer to the unemployment rate of 9.7 per cent. The Government is very crafty. It keeps comparing today's unemployment record with the record of the Liberals in the pit of the recession of 1982 and 1983. There were rates of unemployment in the 12 to 13 per cent range all over the world at that time. Britain, with a Conservative Government, still has approximately 12 per cent unemployment.

The point is that that is a ridiculous comparison. If we are coming out of the recession as the Government claims, why do we still have an unemployment rate of 9.7 per cent? The rate of unemployment in 1981, the year before the recession, was 7.5 per cent. Why does the Government not compare the present rate with that 7.5 per cent which was achieved under a Liberal Government? Why does the Government not refer to the fact that during the Trudeau and Pearson years from 1965 to 1980 the rate of unemployment was 5.6 per cent? As a matter of fact, in my first year in Parliament in 1965 the rate in the middle of the summer was 2.9 per cent.

These are goals to strive for but the Government is trying to mislead Canadians by comparing the 9.7 per cent unemployment rate, which is nothing to brag about, with the 10, 11, and 12 per cent rates of the pit of the recession in 1982 and 1983. The Government cannot even bring the rate down to 7.5 per cent as it was in 1981 immediately prior to the recession.

Of course, the reason the Government is not doing that is that it has no real commitment to a program to create jobs and help the unemployed. That was made clear in the speech given yesterday by the Minister of Employment and Immigration in which he more or less said that the Government leaves it up to the regions, the private sector and individuals to take care of themselves. That is a real Tory philosophy and one that they may want to defend. However, it is not what they promised in the last election and it is not the type of policy which has been traditional in Canada where there has always been a good partnership between the state, the private sector and unions on job creation.

Twice since World War II Liberal Governments have made a commitment to full employment. That commitment was made under Louis St. Laurent in 1949 and full employment was achieved for three consecutive years. The commitment was made again under Mr. Pearson in 1963 and full employment was achieved for three to four years. It can be done again but the Government does not have the political will to do it. That is the way it seems, because the Government is abdicating its responsibility for the unemployed and saying that is better left to the private sector and others. The private sector has a role to play but it must be assisted by the Government in a very meaningful and effective way.

The Government did not mention many of the other problems before us with respect to jobs. The Government's own Department of Employment and Immigration published a report in August of 1985 entitled "Older Workers, An Imminent Crisis in the Labour Market". Those are not our words, Mr. Speaker, those are the words of a report published by the Canadian Employment and Immigration Advisory Council. This report with respect to older workers that was submitted to the former Minister said there was an imminent crisis in the labour market with respect to these workers. It made several recommendations for improvement and, according to my count, the Government has promised to do something about one of the recommendations in the report but has not done so yet.

• (1130)

Another employment issue that the Government did not mention in the Speech from the Throne and which the Minister of Employment and Immigration did not mention yesterday was that despite a slight lowering in the unemployment rate, down from over 10 per cent to 9.6 per cent or 9.7 per cent, the number of those unemployed for more than a year has doubled since the end of the recession in 1984 and has quadrupled since 1981. There are four times as many people unemployed for more than a year in 1986 than in 1981, but that problem was not mentioned either.

Therefore, we have the matter of older workers, long-term unemployment and the trend to part-time unemployment. In his speech the other day, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that the great majority of jobs being created under the Conservative Government are full-time jobs. Again, he is comparing that record with the years of the recession under the former Liberal Government, which is a bit dishonest. If we go back to the time of the former Liberal Government, starting at approximately 1980 or even before, there has been a growing trend to more and more part-time jobs. That trend continued upward and it is no solace to those people who are forced into part-time jobs for the Prime Minister to say that there is a smaller percentage of part-time jobs in 1986 than there was in the pit of recession in 1983 or 1982. All economists will certify that the long-range trend is upward. It is a fact of life about which nothing is being done.

The problem with part-time jobs is that very often they are minimum wage jobs in which the people are non-unionized and have no access to pensions or other employee benefits. While some people want those part-time jobs, there is an increasing number of people who want full-time jobs but cannot get them and take part-time work because it is all they can get. I suggest that it is no solution to slough off the problem.

Let me deal with a few other matters in the Speech from the Throne, such as the whole question of national reconciliation. The Government talks of the Charter of Rights and the fact that it would like to have Quebec assent to the Constitution, but it does not deal with any detailed matters. For example, it does not mention the desirability of removing the notwithstanding, or non obstante clause, in the Charter of Rights which was really imposed on the Government and Parliament because the parliamentary special committee on the Constitution did not agree to have a notwithstanding clause in the Charter of Rights. In order to arrive at an agreement in the final negotiations, the provinces imposed that clause on the Government. Our Party has taken the position that we should work toward the removal of that notwithstanding clause.

There are very few specifics with respect to language rights and education. The Government indicated in the Speech from the Throne that it will introduce legislation to deal with language rights, but what is needed is further amendment to the Constitution with respect to language rights because the current provisions are inadequate. As a member of the joint committee of the House and Senate on language rights, I can tell you that many of those groups who came before us suggested amendments, including removing the words "where numbers warrant" with respect to minority language education, and other refinements.

We will wait to see what the legislation says with respect to language rights, but legislation is not enough. We need further initiative by the Government with respect to constitutional amendments. It is only in the Constitution that one can be assured that one's rights are protected and that those rights will not be amended away by a future Parliament or future government.

Another issue that I am deeply concerned about and which is only touched on lightly in the Speech from the Throne is the matter of aboriginal rights. The Government says that it looks forward to the next constitutional conference on aboriginal rights. However, it does not say much more than that. It simply says: "In co-operation with the provinces, my Government will exert every possible effort to bring these discussions to a successful conclusion". That is essentially all it has to say about aboriginal rights. There is not one word in the Speech from the Throne with respect to the Coolican report on native land claims. That is a very important report from a commission that was established by the Government. It has made no positive statement on that report and it remains in limbo. I must say that from the feedback I am getting, that report and the issues contained in it are the ones that are of greatest concern to aboriginal groups in this country.

At the constitutional meeting on self-government and aboriginal rights which is scheduled for next year, the Government must take note of the fact that the National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations, George Erasmus, has stated that he does not intend to attend further planning meetings for this constitutional conference unless the attitude of the Government changes. Again, the Government gives no indication in the Speech from the Throne that it will change its view with respect to the entrenchment of these native rights. It was reported that after the conference in Newfoundland, George Erasmus, the National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations, stated that: "The constitutional process is going nowhere and until it is going somewhere we do not intend on participating. We will not give any credence to that process." The Government must deal with that but we have heard nothing so far with respect to these important issues.

Let me move on to the other so-called main plank in the Conservative agenda, which is economic renewal. Just two years ago the cry of the Conservative Government with respect to economic matters and economic growth was the development of a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States. The Conservatives described it as a comprehensive free trade agreement and the Americans described it in the same way. However, in the Speech from the Throne, as reported at page 12 of Hansard of October 1, the Government states:

> Such pressures emphasize the importance of my government's pursuit of a mutually advantageous trade agreement with the United States.

What a backtracking operation. While no one in this country is opposed to a mutually advantageous trade agreement with the United States, that is completely different from a comprehensive trade agreement. Again, it is all part of the Conservative image politics and rhetoric rather than policies.

In addition to this new wording to describe what the Government is doing with the United States, we also see in the speech an emphasis not only on bilateral trade with the United States but on multilateral trade. When one puts that all together, it almost sounds like what the Liberal Party proposed in response to the Government's comprehensive free trade proposals two years ago. We said that we wanted to pursue a more advantageous trade arrangement with the United States, but we thought that it should be done in the context of multilateral trade agreements. This is again rhetoric with no substance.

• (1140)

The Government was going to give us a whole program on tax reform but it spent two years piling taxes on the middle and lower-income groups, giving $500,000 exemptions to those with capital gains and bailing out the higher creditors with respect to the banks.

I see my time is just about up. One could go on for a long time tearing the Speech apart and I would be quite willing to do so. But in conclusion let me say that we delayed Parliament for one month to hear the Speech from the Throne, and I really believe the postponement happened so that we could have no Question Period before the two by-elections, the one which took place in St. Maurice and the one which took place in Edmonton. After waiting one month we hear a Speech from the Throne which—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Order! I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

For questions and comments, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: My colleague indicated in his closing remarks that the Government decided in early September to prorogue Parliament for the stated purpose of preparing a Speech from the Throne. Now we have the benefit of the Speech from the Throne, which took some 30 days or 40 days to prepare. Presumably the Government was thinking about this particular Speech from the Throne throughout the summer. I would like to ask my friend and colleague whether in his view the Conservative Government of Canada has produced for Canadians, and for Hon. Members of this House, the vision of Canada for which Canadians are looking? The critics of this particular Speech from the Throne are numerous. One of the main criticisms is that the Speech from the Throne is lacking in a definitive vision for Canadians. I would like my colleague to comment on that major criticism.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne with its 57 promises is very much like the Conservative election campaign material in 1984 with its 331 promises. The Conservative Party promises almost anything to any group—not all of them but darn near all of them. As a result it does not have any comprehensive goal or direction. As I said, there are many high sounding promises in the Speech from the Throne with which no one could disagree. They are like motherhood and apple pie. But the Government has certainly not convinced Canadians that it is serious. The Canadian population heard those same high sounding phrases and promises in the Speech from the Throne in 1984. They heard them in the election campaign of 1984. Yet very little was done about them. Although the Speech from the Throne is in some respects a high-sounding sweet-worded document, it contains very little credibility. Some Canadians are very cynical about the promises of the Government. They want to be shown. They are from Missouri in spirit, even if they are not from Missouri in physical fact.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne does make reference to proposed amendments to the Criminal Code. The Hon. Member in his speech talked about the whole question of social justice. One of the amendments which I believe to be a very important amendment to the Criminal Code, indeed, so important that I introduced a Private Member's Bill on the subject today, is with respect to the Criminal Code provisions relating to abortion. As the Hon. Member knows, today in the Provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island there is no access whatsoever to women for safe therapeutic abortions. I would like to ask the Hon. Member what his Party's position is with respect to the current provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with abortion? Does his Party support repeal of those provisions, allowing this very important decision to be made by a woman in consultation with her doctor as recommended by the Canadian Medical Association and many others?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne there are some provisions relating to amendments to the Criminal Code. They refer to child sexual abuse, pornography, child prostitution and so on, but they do not mention abortion.

Mr. Robinson: What is your position?

Mr. Allmand: What we have here is more or less a re-enactment of the Bill introduced in the last session which was not passed or completed. I expect we will see that Bill again.

With respect to abortion, the position of my Party has been that the law as it stands, a situation which came about after a lot of debate and many views expressed on the subject, should not be touched at the present time. That is the position of my Party. I consider this to be a sort of free vote situation. I personally believe that the present law is not adequate, but I see many failures in it. In my own province, despite the law, juries acquitted Dr. Morgentaler on two occasions. In addition, there is no consensus on the present law in the country, it is very difficult to enforce and is causing a lot of difficulties.

I know the Hon. Member brought in a Bill this morning, but I have not had a chance to look at it. This is a complex and very emotional issue and, while I do not support the present law personally, I would like to see it re-examined, perhaps by a committee of this House. I was on the committee that did a very intensive study of this issue in 1966 or 1967 which finally resulted in a Bill that did come to the House. It was a compromise Bill, we admit. I do not think, without reading the Hon. Member's Bill, I can stand up now and say that I agree with it, but I do agree that changes should be made to the present abortion legislation which should be the subject of an intensive study by this House.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Hon. Member. He has referred to the promises made with respect to previous legislation affecting the Criminal Code. One of the most controversial Bills introduced was the Bill introduced by the previous Minister of Justice dealing with the question of pornography. The Hon. Member's colleague recently issued a position paper suggesting that he did not agree with the Fraser Commission's recommendation that the so-called third tier of pornography, that is, explicit erotica, should not be the subject of criminal sanctions. What is the Hon. Member's position with respect to this question of Criminal Code sanctions against explicit portrayal of sexual activity which does not involve either violence, degradation or children?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has an advantage over me. He is the official critic for his Party in justice matters. I am the critic for employment matters. I am afraid that I am not as much up-to-date on the very specific parts of the proposed amendment to which he refers. I am extremely interested because I was involved with the committee on Justice but I cannot remember the details of the Bill and I do not want to answer the Hon. Member's question at the present time without making a proper study of that amendment.

• (1150)

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to my hon. friend. There is a paragraph in the Speech from the Throne that deals with official languages and bilinguism, and it reads as follows:

"Appropriate legislation will be introduced in this Session to ensure, as well, that this Act conforms with the Canadian Charter of Rights."

I know my hon. friend as a diligent member of the Committee on Official Languages, an area in which he and I have taken a special interest.

Yesterday, the Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism (Mr. Crombie), in response to questions by the press finally announced, at least as reported by the Montreal La Presse:

"I will likely be working very hard on that aspect," the Secretary of State said yesterday, and he intends to table legislation before Christmas.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member, considering his involvement in these issues, and the fact that since 1969 at least, he has taken a special interest in official languages, has been a member of the committee, has a special interest in the language-of-work issue and how Quebec Anglophones are represented at the Public Service level, and also has demonstrated his interest in the issue of the primacy of the Act over all statutes, and feels that Section 2 of the Act must be given teeth to make it executory and not just declaratory, I would like to ask him: Is he confident that between now and Christmas, the Government can—has he himself been approached officially for input in this major review of the Official Languages Act involving possible amendments by the Government?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that the last Speech from the Throne contained promises similar to those made in the 1984 election campaign.

Now this year's Speech from the Throne contains promises that the Government will table a Bill or rather amendments to the Official Languages Act.

So I think that we may have a Bill or rather an amendment in this respect, but whether it will be really acceptable and provide a solution to our problems is another matter altogether. For instance, we know that in many other areas, action was always short of his promises.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The period provided for question and comments has now expired.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp).

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to participate in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Before I begin my remarks may I take this opportunity to congratulate you on your election to the high office to which you have been elected in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You, Mr. Speaker, along with a number of us came into the House in the same year. We have gone through some of the same issues over those years. We have seen your dedication not only to your province and to your country but also to issues that touch the individual lives of Canadians, some of which I will be addressing today. I wish you well and God speed.

Many commentators have suggested that only now in the latter half of this mandate has social justice emerged as a theme for the Government. At the same time they suggest that many of the commitments made in the Speech from the Throne are repetitions of earlier promises. The commentators, and I would suggest the Opposition, cannot have it both ways. The facts are these.

First, social justice has been a priority of the Government from day one. We take a back seat to no one when it comes to a concern for the well-being of our people and of Canada's social fabric.

Second, we made a number of commitments two years ago in the social policy field. Today, the record shows that those commitments have been honoured. I checked the previous Speech from the Throne myself and my checking bears out these points.

Third, social justice is not something that can be delivered as a service. It is a quality and a characteristic of our society which must be achieved over time and not by Governments alone. The standard against which performance should be measured is progress. Every session of Parliament in which any of us in this House have sat has embraced the goal of greater social justice. What is different is that this Government faced the reality of unprecedented and severe fiscal constraint. The mark of our commitment to a better society is seen in the social progress that has been made, in spite of such financial pressures.

Fourth, social justice cannot be achieved in isolation from economic renewal or national reconciliation. These terms have been greeted with some cynicism. Does it really matter whether we call support for farmers or help for Canadians living in Atlantic Canada or the Province of Quebec a "social initiative" or an "economic measure"? They are people who need help for a particular problem, people with families, members of the community. To the extent that we can help, justice, whether economic or social, requires that we do so.

I would like to briefly illustrate these facts. On September 24 Statistics Canada reported that in 1985, for the first time since 1980, the average income of Canadian families rose. The same report also told us, again for the first time since 1980, that there was also a decline in the number of Canadians living in low-income households. Furthermore, for the first time since 1981 the lowest income fifth of Canadian families increased their share of total family income after three consecutive years of receiving a smaller share of a then shrinking pie.

Many people questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he said "jobs, jobs, jobs". There is a close relationship between economic renewal, more jobs, and the lower incidence of the number of Canadians living below the poverty line. That is why I say that the record should not only be judged, but it verifies what the Prime Minister has said and what the policies of the Government have been.

In short, 1985 was a year in which the standard of living of the average Canadian family rose. The poorest Canadian households not only shared in the over-all improvement but actually began to reduce the gap between their living standards and those of the average Canadian family. I believe that the Prime Minister can legitimately claim some credit on behalf of the Government for that progress. It is what it is—it is progress.

We made policy decisions to provide a fiscal and monetary environment under which real growth exceeded expectations in 1985. It was only exceeded by one country, namely, Japan. That was an investment in the Canadian people. What is pleasing to me is that Canadians realized the dividends by responding to that environment. If any additional credit should be given, that is, primary credit, it should be given to Canadians who understood, appreciated and developed their own plans within the environment outlined by the Prime Minister for the country. We fully accept that no Government can take full credit for these trends. By the same token, our critics cannot indicate that the Government is totally responsible when the trends are in the opposite direction. We are encouraged by these figures. We commend the efforts of individuals and businesses across the country who have made them happen.

Time permits me only to briefly review for the record a few of the Government's priorities for the next session. I apologize to Hon. Members for that. Therefore I will not cover the whole social policy area. I look back briefly only because the principles of social policy that we have followed are borne out in the initiatives that have been carried out in this place and across the country.

We believe that social justice demands that the greatest help should go to those in greatest need. We believe that social justice demands that government policy should be an investment in people, in order to enable them to plan and achieve their own goals. We believe that social justice involves more than the benefits that people receive through the state. The majority of public issues emerge from people's private troubles, and the solutions are not always or even primarily financial. Fostering a social environment of caring, respect for the law, freedom for individuals, preserving the values of family and community, tolerance for others, and balancing rights and responsibilities involves every part of our population. We obviously believe Government to be a player, but not the only one.

I would like to bear out in practical terms these principles. The principle that the greatest help should go to those in greatest need is reflected in two measures that have already been announced in this Parliament. One was the extension of the spouse's allowance which benefited approximately 50,000 of the poorest Canadians, most of them women. The refundable sales tax credit has been welcomed by social groups as timely and innovative. Low-income families will be the beneficiaries of this new measure, as well as of changes the Government has made to the child tax credit in terms of higher benefits and advance payments.

• (1200)

We do not intend to stop dealing with the issue of fairness, however, just because we have made progress. The process of tax reform is intended to achieve greater fairness than that which exists today in the tax system, and any reform will take into account those provisions of the tax transfer system relating to social benefits. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has spoken to this issue and I need not comment further except to emphasize that when the Government puts forward plans for tax reform, it is social justice as well as economic renewal for which we are striving.

The second principle, that social justice seeks to help people by investing in them, is reflected in the process that has been made on pension reform. For a decade, Governments have debated changes to the Canada Pension Plan and the rules governing private pension plans. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have reached an important milestone in these changes that deal with early retirement, disability benefits, part-time employee participation and credit splitting to name some of the changes that have been brought in.

On behalf of the Government, I am pleased to reiterate that on January 1, 1987, these major changes will come into effect in Canada and many Canadians are already phoning our offices, not only to endorse the changes but to thank the Government and the Prime Minister for the leadership that was taken. It comes down to national reconciliation. It was only possible to do this with provinces, some of which have different political philosophies than us, but all which know that national reconciliation as led by the Prime Minister is good for Canada, and good for the people. That is why we got an agreement on the Canada Pension Plan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Pension reform is important because it represents an opportunity for people to invest in their own futures. We want people to take greater responsibility for their retirement because their futures are at stake and because people should be not limited in retirement to enjoying only that which can be provided through the state. What is interesting is that the Canadian people believe that too. It is not only us who are saying it. When talking to ordinary Canadians, the same thing applies.

The same principle applies in the area of child care. When the Martin Task Force reports to the House on child care, and when the Government responds to that report, we will be judged in part on how well we have invested in the future of our children and their parents.

I know members of the Opposition did not expect the child care package to be mentioned in the Throne Speech because they had a certain fixation about what they thought the Government was all about. I want to tell them that the Prime Minister made a commitment in the debate held during the 1984 election campaign that, if elected Prime Minister, he would collectively, with the provinces, with parent groups and with child care advocacy groups put forward a task force, not to debate once again if there should be child care but how best we could implement it, how best may we help families and how best we may help women who are in the paid workforce. He tied it together as well with pension reform, making a total package. I am proud to be serving with a Prime Minister who fulfils his commitments and promises.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Just today, the Prime Minister and Mila launched Family Week. Why? Because we—I hear NDP'ers chuckling.

Mr. Riis: There are 51 other weeks for families as well, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Shame, shame. That is just the point I was going to get to. He said that it is not only one week but 52 weeks. Would Hon. Members not want to support, and should Hon. Members not support a Prime Minister and a Government that has put forward positive models of success? I wish Hon. Members would support that.

Mr. Riis: Tell that to the family farm out in your own province, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Now that I have their attention, perhaps we may continue. We have talked about pension reform. We have talked about the need for child care. I have said very clearly to the House today that the Prime Minister will be carrying forward this agenda item at the First Ministers' Conference in November, and we look for support, not only from the provinces and from various groups but, we would hope, from both Opposition Parties which have made this point an issue as well.

The other point I wish to address today is that social policy concerns a number of problems that deprive so many Canadians of a secure and happy life. These are the problems of family violence, child abuse, pornography and juvenile prostitution. I realize, and I am sure other Hon. Members as well realize, that we cannot and do not believe we can resolve or remove, through the Government only, drug abuse as a social evil. However, we have especially sought to emphasize prevention and to help people pick up the pieces when prevention has not worked.

The Government has moved strongly in the area of child sexual abuse and pornography legislation which will be brought back into the House and will include legislation dealing with juvenile prostitution. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will have more to say about that. These programs and their success will be achieved only as we look at lives that are put back together and as potential abuse is prevented.

In the remainder of my time, I wish to address the issue of drug abuse, a continuation of our desire to improve the quality of life in the nation's communities and in our families.

The Prime Minister referred earlier this fall to the Government's intention to develop a national drug strategy. I and my colleagues, the Attorney General, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) as well as the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) have all been working since the spring to develop a comprehensive approach to the problem of drug abuse. Our concern about drugs is not recent. Hon. Members of the House know of my own campaign in the areas of tobacco and alcohol abuse. These too are drugs and their abuse costs Canada millions of dollars in health care and a price that cannot be calculated in personal and family tragedy.

I would suggest that we are winning in the war against inappropriate advertising particularly targeted to youth of tobacco and alcohol and there is an unparalleled awareness of the dangers of smoking and the abuse of alcohol. We are making good progress, but the problem of illicit drugs is more profound because of the international networks, the hidden character of drug marketing and the enormous risks of drug dependency which include medical emergencies and, of course, death.

We do not believe that the problem of drug abuse is uniformly reflected across the country. Any Hon. Member of the House who has visited our communities knows that that is the case. What is important is that the Government is determined to attack this urgent problem and we will do so methodically and in keeping with the Canadian way of responding to social needs. It is the Canadian way to deal with a problem like this by emphasizing public education and awareness, rehabilitation of the victims of drug abuse and primary prevention of the demand as well as to rely on law enforcement and legislative measures to curtail supply.

We do not see the victim of drug abuse as having no responsibility for having used or misused drugs. We are aware, however, of the pressures that often lead people down that slippery slope to drug dependency, and once they have begun that slide they have for practical purposes become victims. If we cannot be completely effective in primary prevention, we must emphasize rehabilitation of victims.

Action must be taken on several fronts. First, there must be federal leadership in bringing together the efforts of the provinces and communities in reducing the demand for drugs.

Second, there must be increased efforts to stop the production and distribution of illicit drugs. Reduction measures will include public awareness, education, research and hopefully a variety of provincial acitivities.

I am placing drug abuse on the agenda of two federal-provincial conferences to be held later this fall with Health Ministers and Social Services Ministers in order to explore with them areas in which our Governments can work together through our schools, parent-teacher associations, neighbourhood and community groups, provincial addictions agencies and business organizations, just to mention a few.

The Government will introduce changes to legislation dealing with illicit drugs, notably to the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act, to consolidate and modernize the legislation underpinning enforcement efforts. Some of these changes will enable us to respond more swiftly to rapid changes in the drug market. This will give us a basis for dealing more effectively, for example, with the problem of so-called designer drugs including angel dust and MEM.

Third, there must be involvement in international efforts to combat drug abuse, just as the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport did in Dublin last week, and we commend him for his efforts. It is clear that the drug problem is an international one. I will be asking my fellow health Ministers in the Commonwealth to address the issue of drug abuse at our meeting in Nassau next week. Canada will increase its funding for the United Nations fund on drug abuse, and Canada intends to accede to the convention of psychotropic substances of 1971. This action will be welcomed in the international community, as well as our active participation in the UN 1987 world ministerial conference on drug abuse and illicit trafficking.

• (1210)

The effects of drug abuse can be devastating for families, and young people in particular, as can an inappropriate response which sets one generation against another or blames the wrong people for the problem or fails to take into account our unique national fabric.

I said that our Government's performance in the social policy field reflects our views that economic growth and social justice are mutually reinforcing, and that success must be measured in terms of progress, not perfection. However, the Government does not wish to take the credit for social progress, because we have tried to make it clear that our vision of social justice involves all partners in society. We are confident that our social agenda is on track. It is in tune with Canadian traditions and Canadian values. We intend to proceed with it, and I thank the House for its time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister is recognized as an honest man. I credit him with that reputation, but because of it I ask him if he feels that the following statement in the Speech from the Throne is a truly honest one. It reads:

> Two years ago, my Government received a national mandate—a mandate for reform. It was a mandate that summoned Canada to the tasks of national reconciliation, economic renewal, social justice, and to a constructive internationalism. Today, my Ministers believe these goals are within reach.

Can the Minister honestly say that the goal of social justice is within reach in this country? I give him that improvements have been made; improvements have been made under his Government and improvements have been made under our previous Governments. However, to me that statement is so far out of line that it is unbelievable. I do not see how a Government and he, as a Minister of that Government, can say that the goal of social justice is within reach. What is his reaction to that statement in the Speech from the Throne?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for acknowledging that progress has been made. In my speech I used the word "progress". I am one who believes very sincerely that perfection in a human state will not be achieved. However, I believe that as humans with a responsibility in the House we must move forward in the areas of social progress, some of which I mentioned today, some of which I did not mention today but support, and others that maybe the Hon. Member feels are more important than the ones I stressed.

The Prime Minister put forward four points to Canadians in the 1984 election campaign. If we look at each one of those points—what the Prime Minister put forward and what Canadians adopted and accepted by giving him a mandate to lead the country—we can honestly say that good progress has been made. We can argue about degree, but let us at least accept one thing. On the four principles put forward by the Prime Minister, Canadians today have seen legitimate progress when they compare the record of September, 1984 with the period of the Throne Speech in 1986.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister about some of the past policies, since he said that the Government would be judged by how much it has done for children. I think that is a very valid criterion to use because we all know that children are the future of society and of the country. I am somewhat concerned about the philosophy which he always espouses, that the Conservative Government is really concerned with children and families that are in greatest need. If they are really concerned about children, it seems to me that they should be concerned about all children and all families in Canada.

The particular policies which were reflected in the family benefits reforms took away the indexing of family allowances and reduced that program for all children and all families. I think it was really a reflection of how little value is put on the importance of all children and on the cost of social programs for which all taxpayers in Canada have to pay.

I think of another example. While there was some slight increase in the child tax credit, the eligibility for that credit was reduced, so that average families, and in fact very marginal families do not receive any child tax credit. Would the Minister reconsider those two policies? Does he plan to reindex the family allowance? Would he consider increasing the eligibility for child tax credit?

I should also like to include in my question that I agree with the Minister that we are all very much concerned that there be action as quickly as possible on the whole matter of child care. I would hope that he would endorse our position, and I think the position of the committee, that we allow for federal initiatives and that we do not have to await the approval of the provinces.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's first point dealt with the partial deindexation of family allowances. She did not place, for instance, as much emphasis on the changes to the child tax credit. There has been a fundamental difference between her position and my position on that point, and that has not changed. I say to her that as a Government we removed in part the full indexation of the family allowance and increased—and I would suggest that it was not insignificantly—the child tax credit.

Ms. Mitchell: Only for the poor.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): As I said, it was not insignificant. At least that is my interpretation. If we look at the social value of the child tax credit, I think my point remains. Additionally, we are moving forward the payment of the child tax credit so that parents will receive two payments in a given calendar year. In fact, they will receive a payment in the November-December period. That in itself is an advantage and has been endorsed.

I should like to make a third point—and I do not think the Hon. Member can deprecate it—that the best benefit for all children is a better employment picture. I do not think we should lose sight of that. If we want to look at a balanced view, I think we should look at that point additionally.

Also the Hon. Member referred to the child care task force of which she has been a member. I commend her and the other Hon. Members for the many hours they spent on their report. Obviously it would be important for me as Minister to keep my counsel until I have received the counsel of the task force before endorsing any position.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, it is very encouraging to hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) give an overview appraisal of social justice and the importance of it to the Government, particularly when he referred to matters like spousal benefits, family benefits, and pension improvements for veterans. They should be put into the context of a Party with a social conscience and a Government to which social justice is a very important dimension. It is in that context particularly that I was happy to hear the Minister address the national crisis of drug addiction.

I should like to ask a specific question which has to do, at least in my view, with getting at the very root of the problem. The RCMP has estimated that the profits annually in the country from the drug trade are $10 billion, that is, ten thousand million dollars annually in Canada. Could the Minister outline any further steps which the Government is prepared to take, not only to regulate in the way he outlined, which I support, but to get at that profit that is certainly a big part of the cause of the drug crisis in the country?

• (1220)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member uses a figure that I can only affirm; by all the estimates we have received the profits are in the billions. That is on the financial side. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has announced publicly that he will be bringing in amendments to the Criminal Code, which is another part of the drug strategy that we have, relating to profits from crime. I will not outline it any further. I believe that that is within the mandate of the Minister of Justice and he should be doing that. I hope it will commend itself to all Members of the House.

There is one point, Mr. Speaker, if you just give me a moment, that is important for me to stress. I have been, as a Member of this House, not discouraged but disappointed; disappointed not because of criticism the Government might receive on issues, for instance, of a drug strategy. That is legitimate, I understand that and I have been here long enough to know that. But I have been disappointed that on the one hand our newspapers and electronic media, day in and day out, are full of the tragedies of alcohol abuse, drug abuse and the effect that abuse is having on families in our communities. On the other hand, I have been disappointed that when the Prime Minister or any of us in this House, from both sides, bring forward programs which relate to those issues they are criticized or judged only as a political response. I have more respect for Members of this House. We have our differences. We know that. But there are certain fundamentals and certain assessments in society on which we agree; specifically, when all of us leave this place we hope that through our initiatives, whether legislation, committee work or whatever, society will be better for it. I am convinced that whether it is pornography, alcohol abuse, tobacco abuse or, drug abuse, Canadians agree with parliamentarians who want to improve the state of the average Canadian, that the abuse in these areas can be reduced and that we can put forward positive models to Canadian youth rather than the cynicism I so often see.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to ask further questions of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). I know the Minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to tell the Hon. Member, to the Chair's knowledge unanimous consent has not been given.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which concerns another point of order. I believe you gave the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) the floor, and I can accept that. I would remind the Chair that the motion before the House concerns the amendment moved by my leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), and that the question is to be put on this motion tomorrow afternoon. I might also remind the Chair that yesterday, the Liberal Party had only two speakers, the New Democrats, three and the Government, five. Today, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to give some Liberal Members the floor so that we too can comment on the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have duly noted the representations made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to call to your intention that the intent of the reform with respect to the question and answer period was that, in this case, Members on the government side would only be recognized when there were no Members from Parties other than the speaker rising to be recognized. What happened just a few moments ago, Sir, is that you recognized a Member of the Party of the person who had been speaking when there were two or three Members from Parties not of the Party of the speaker rising to seek the floor. I just wanted to bring that to your attention.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Without wanting to get into a debate on this matter, and I have discussed that point with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), it is my view that during the question and comment period the priority should be given to Members of a Party other than that of the speaker, but the priority is not to the point of exclusivity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can understand very well the position of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill. That is why in this particular case, after the Hon. Minister had finished his speech, I did choose a Member of the Official Opposition first, a Member of the New Democratic Party second and a Member of the government side third. However, I would be willing to discuss this matter further with the Hon. Member and, of course, with the Speaker.

On debate, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by congratulating Mr. Speaker on his election to the office of Magistrate of this House. I also want to add my congratulations to the Deputy Speaker and to the two assistant Speakers who occupy the Chair from time to time. I believe that all four of you will treat us well and fairly and will serve this House in the interests of the Members of this House.

I want to begin by first commenting on a situation that is presently confronting the people of this country, particularly the people of western Canada. It concerns the lock-out of the longshoremen in Vancouver Harbour. I want to say that I have no intention of getting into the details of the dispute, other than to say that it essentially is about the handling of containers. When a container contains products destined to two or more shippers somebody has to unpack them and repack them, according to the shippers and the destinations. That is what the dispute is about, and it is something that needs to be resolved between the employers and the union. I will not discuss that any further.

I want to say that a major part of the operations of the Vancouver port can be, should be and must remain in operation. These operations have nothing to do with containers and containerization. People in the three Prairie provinces are extremely concerned about the complete shutdown overnight of grain movement to Vancouver, a situation which did not even happen on grain movement to Thunder Bay just a few weeks ago—at least some grain moved. But in this instance there is a complete shutdown. As a result, thousands of employees on the railroads and in other aspects of the industry have been laid off.

What has to be brought to the attention of this House is that I, in my examination of grain terminals in Vancouver or anywhere else, have yet to see a container and the handling of bulk commodities like grain having anything to do with the dispute. The essential part of the dispute is between the longshoremen and the employers about container handling. Similarly with lumber, I have seen lumber being loaded and unloaded, and all other kinds of lumber products, and I have yet to see that they have anything to do with a container. This operation has nothing to do with the essential part of the dispute going on at the moment.

• (1230)

As a Member of this place from Saskatchewan, the whole western half of which moves grain to Vancouver and Prince Rupert, I call upon the grain companies and the union to immediately open the grain terminals and move the grain. As far as I am concerned there is no excuse whatsoever for the grain elevators in Vancouver to be closed down. I understand from news reports today that the union has offered to keep moving the grain but not the containers. Mr. Garcia, the union president, said they are prepared to work the grain, but if the employer closes the doors they cannot get at the work. So there is no excuse whatsoever for the grain elevators in Vancouver to be shut down. It has nothing to do with the current dispute.

I suggest the same thing applies to most if not all of the movement of lumber out of Vancouver Harbour. Little if any of that product is moved by container. There is no reason whatsoever why everyone else involved in the production of grain and lumber should be victimized by a dispute which has nothing to do with them. Therefore I have to say that the elevator companies, and this includes my friends in the co-operative elevator system, the Prairie Pool and the UGG, that they must open their terminals immediately and move the grain.

As I understand it, of the 3,700 longshoremen in the union, not more than a handful, probably about 20, are required to handle ships loading grain. I doubt if there would be more than 40 or 50 required for the handling of lumber. Therefore, the lock-out should be for what the lock-out is about, namely, the handling of containers and their contents. That is what the lock-out should be confined to.

Thank goodness the Government finally got the the two sides together in Thunder Bay. Mr. Kelly banged a few heads together and made them keep sitting until they reached an agreement. I see the former Minister of Labour sitting across the way. I am beginning to wish he was still in that portfolio. I did not think I would ever say that. However, I wish he still was the Minister so he would load Mr. Kelly on the next plane to Vancouver where he could bang a few heads together, make them sit up all night until their bladders are full and finally reach an agreement.

I also want to say something about another area of concern. I am particularly distressed about what occurred during Question Period yesterday concerning the issue of deficiency payments. If there was ever an issue which is not political in its principle, it is that issue. All the political parties, all the farm organizations, all the elevator companies agree that there must be a deficiency payment so grain producers can remain reasonably competitive and viable in the face of what is being done to them by the U.S. and the EEC. It is not a political issue, it is something on which all sides agree. I submit the payment should be at least $2 a bushel starting with number one red spring and prorated amongst other grains. The money is sent to the Canadian Wheat Board which then raises initial prices to the producer by that amount. That is the way it should be done and that is the way it is done. That applies to all grains under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, wheat, oats and barley. If the Government is willing to include flax, rye, canola and other specialty crops, they will get no argument from us. However, the major part of our export market is wheat, oats and barley.

That is what has to happen but what do we get? Yesterday, in response to my Leader asking whether assistance for grain producers was going to be new money or old money, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said:

> It will be new money and good money in the pockets of the farmers.

A few minutes later the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), in response to a question from my colleague from Regina East, said:

> The money which is being talked about will be additional money for agriculture within the fiscal framework.

A few minutes after that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), in response to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker), said:

> It will be a reallocation within the given fiscal framework.

What the devil will it be? Will it be new money? Will it just be within the fiscal framework? Will it be a reallocation of funds only within the Department of Agriculture, or does that include other Departments? The Government does not know what the hell it wants to do. Does it mean the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act is wiped out? Do funds from that program go towards the deficiency payment? Surely that is self-defeating. Does it mean that other agricultural programs will be reduced or cancelled in order to provide a deficiency payment? Surely that is self-defeating. We need to know in the next day or two.

Since the issue of deficiency payments is not political, it can have nothing to do with an election in Saskatchewan or anywhere else. However, what is political is whether the Government is deliberately playing fast and loose with the concerns of grain producers in western Canada, indeed, the concerns of agricultural producers all over Canada, for the sake of playing some simple political game. We need to know whether the $1 billion is for all agricultural producers across the country, because an excellent case can be made for corn producers and other agricultural producers in Ontario and Quebec. A case can be made for agricultural producers in the Atlantic provinces and the interior of British Columbia. What does it cover? Who does it cover? We cannot find out.

• (1240)

Agricultural producers in the country resent being treated as though they were a bunch of ignoramuses who can be hoodwinked, fooled and handled with the utmost of cynicism. Therefore the Government must say today, and I hope it will at two o'clock, or tomorrow at the latest, what it will be, who it will be for, when it is going to happen and where and how it will get the money. I have a suggestion. Cancel half a dozen of those fighter planes, which we do not need and do not use very much anyway, and we will have the money. In any case, the Government is all over the lot on this issue and it is about time it made up its mind on what it wants to do, on how, when, and where and for whom it is being done.

I want to mention another item. I wish the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) were here. I wish him well in his new portfolio. Frankly, I do not think it is something he really wanted or is really interested in. I do not think it is something he gives a darn about. He was placed in the wrong slot. I support him in keeping the Newfoundland railway. However, if he is going to keep it, he had better do something with it. A large capital investment is required to make something out of the Newfoundland railway in order that it can serve that province properly and become viable. That will require rebuilding the road-bed, standard gauge track, straightening curves and a host of other things. If those are not done, it cannot succeed. It is designed to fail.

That brings me to the other item I want to mention, namely, the situation regarding VIA Rail. We could not get a copy of the Rail Passenger Action Force report regarding VIA Rail. Last week the consumer organization, Transport 2000, made public a copy of that task force report. When I read that in conjunction with what is called "The Last Spike" or "The Last Straw" namely, the Progressive Conservative Party task force report on rail passenger service, I begin to think it was not the Conservative Party that got elected to the Government.

Almost none of the recommendations of the Rail Passenger Action Force or the task force report of the Progressive Conservative Party on rail passenger service have been implemented and the Government has been in power for two years. All of the ills which the former Minister of Transport, the Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), and myself have been pointing out repeatedly every year since 1976 are still there.

No self-respecting businessman or self-respecting Government would start up a business operated with old, worn out, written-off equipment. If you were to ask a bank manager for a start-up loan for such a business he would laugh you out of the store. That is exactly what happened to VIA Rail in 1976. It got stuck for $80 million for old equipment owned by CN and CP.

The Rail Passenger Action Force was chaired by Dr. Hugh Horner; you could hardly call him a raving socialist. That task force could not understand why the taxpayers of Canada who already owned that CNR equipment had to pay for it a second time. They say the same thing about station facilities and other facilities. They could not understand why the people of Canada had to pay a second time for something they already owned. If that is the sound business practice of which the Conservatives talk, no wonder the country is going to hell in a handbasket. For two years the Government has failed to put a stop to that nonsense. The Government should be requiring Canadian National and Canadian Pacific to refund the money that the taxpayers paid for the second time for that equipment and for station facilities.

The only alternative to re-equiping VIA Rail, as recommended by the action task force, is to close down the entire system outside the Quebec-Windsor corridor. We still do not have the new locomotives on stream. The orders for the new railway cars have not yet been placed in spite of announcements annually since 1976 of the purchase of new railway passenger cars. All the Minister could say in response to me yesterday was that he hoped to have a chance to make an announcement like his predecessors. That is not good enough. It remains designed to fail. If the Government wants to have, as it says it does, a rail passenger system worthy of the name, it will have to put some money where its mouth is and it will have to make something of it so that people will use it.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the opportunity to comment and ask questions on many parts of the Hon. Member's speech, but I particularly want to focus on those comments the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) made early in his address which are of concern to anyone whose constituency reflects the prairie grain industry. In particular, I share the concern he has about the grain handling capacity at our ports. I will ask only three questions in order that I do not take more than my share of the time.

Does the Hon. Member subscribe to the view that there ought to be some third party liability in conjunction with labour union strikes? Would he favour a system of declaring the movement of grain, bearing in mind its importance to our national economy, an essential service? Does he subscribe to the view that in the areas where there are farmer-owned co-ops the farmers should be able to handle the grain during strike periods and be their own handlers? I would find it helpful if the Hon. Member could respond to those three questions.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the hon. gentleman is talking about when he talks of third party liability. I just do not know what he wants to know. I would be happy if he would elaborate on that question. I do not understand the purport of his question with regard to grain movement.

• (1250)

The Hon. Member asked about the movement of grain being an essential service. The same thing can be said about a host of other goods and services in Canada such as railroads, the post office and airlines, or lumber and forest products. All are services to the public and the nation, and are essential services. However, one must allow the collective bargaining process to proceed. When it breaks down and fails then it is the responsibility of the Government of the day and all political parties to come to a conclusion as to whether or not it requires government and parliamentary intervention. That intervention should always be used only as a last resort.

We cannot simply pick out the movement of grain as an essential service because one can make up a list as long as one's arm about what are essential services. If that principle is applied in law, then the collective bargaining process is negated, along with the rights of employers and employees in most if not all of the workforce in Canada that works under a collective agreement. It would apply to all municipal, provincial and federal employees. Where would it stop? What is considered an essential service?

I can understand taking such action in a war situation, but otherwise it seems to me that each case must be judged on its own merits. If the collective bargaining process completely breaks down and all resources of the Government have been exhausted, of course, any responsible Government of any political party will have to move in and declare that sector an essential service for the good and welfare of Canada. However, this cannot be done ahead of time.

As far as farmers handling their own grain is concerned, first I want to say to my hon. friend that they have enough trouble handling their own grain on their own farms. They are having enough trouble harvesting it. I have read news reports of farmers from Alberta who wanted to go to Thunder Bay and operate the grain terminal. I found that strange, because hardly a bushel of Alberta grain goes to Thunder Bay anyway. I thought it was just posturing of the dumbest kind. Furthermore, of all my good farmer friends, who are my friends, I do not know of one who knows what to do or how to work in a grain terminal in Thunder Bay, Vancouver or anywhere else. It is a dirty job and requires different capabilities than what it takes to take off the crop and put it in the granary.

Again, it seems to me that the problem is that the farmer-owned grain companies need to be told by the farmers themselves how they want their own facilities operated. The farmers need to retake control of their own elevator companies.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised that the Hon. Member for Regina West would say that the farmers do not know how to handle grain.

Mr. Benjamin: I did not say that.

Mr. Malone: Read Hansard tomorrow.

With respect to the bargaining process, the Hon. Member said that it must work, but that when the problem is serious enough a government of any political stripe must act. Bearing in mind the serious potential on the West Coast, is that time now, and do we have the Hon. Member's support that it is time to act vis-à-vis the West Coast situation?

Mr. Benjamin: No, I certainly do not believe that the time is now. If the hon. gentleman was listening to my speech he would know that all the grain could still be moving through Vancouver. There is no excuse whatever from either side of the dispute for it not to be moving. Similarly, most if not all the lumber could be moving because it has nothing to do with the current dispute. That is why I said that grain producers in Alberta and the western half of Saskatchewan are being victimized by the employers' association in Vancouver Harbour. It is time for the Government of Canada to call upon the elevator companies to open their doors and tell the longshoremen to get in there and handle the ships.

There are several more steps yet to be taken yet in the dispute, including mediation and conciliation. As I said, Mr. Kelly should not be brought back to Ottawa but sent on to Vancouver from Thunder Bay so he can knock some heads together in Vancouver Harbour.

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, first of all—

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt the Hon. Member, because I think it is entirely proper she should have the floor, but I would like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that Citations 301 and 302 in Beauchesne are very clear on the matter of alternating government and opposition speakers. Once again, I would remind you that yesterday, we did not have the number of speakers we would have wished. We had only two, while the Government had five. And today, when we are discussing a motion to amend the main motion, an amendment moved by my leader, I think we should not be put in a position where we are unable to speak to that motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I quite understand the objections raised by the Hon. Member. However, where the Hon. Member refers to the principle of alternating, I think that up to now we have upheld that principle. However, I remember what the Hon. Member said earlier about what happened yesterday, and I am bearing that in mind.

Debate. The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis).

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate you on the way you have performed your duties as Deputy Speaker in the past, and I wish you every success in the continuation of those duties.

I would like to avail myself of the privilege of making my speech at three o'clock, since we have hardly 30 seconds left.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

JEWISH NEW YEAR

CALL FOR RELEASE OF SOVIET REFUSNIKS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, Jews throughout the world are ushering in their calendar year 5747 with the prayer of hope that this new year may bring with it greater political will by all world leaders to negotiate toward peace, toward a sense of personal security, and toward political stability for all mankind.

There is a phrase in our Rosh Hashanah liturgy which says "All men will come together in unison to respond whole heartily to divine will". This truly is the universal wish of all people, for peace on earth, goodwill to all.

A first step in that direction would be the release of Soviet refusniks, particularly those who are suffering from terminal cancer, to allow them the dignity of dying with their loved ones at their side. We insist that the Soviet Union honour its signature on the Helsinki Accords, that it act in a humanitarian way and let them leave. Otherwise such oppression diminishes the Soviet Union as a nation in the eyes of all Canadians. May we see progress toward these goals in the coming year. I take this opportunity to wish all my co-religionists a healthy new year, "Le Shana Tova Tikatayvou".

* * *

NATIONAL PARKS

ELLESMERE ISLAND—ACCESS COSTS

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, last month the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) officially opened Canada's newest national park on Ellesmere Island. I would like to take this opportunity to advise Canadians of the costs involved in visiting their new park. The return airfare between Montreal and Resolute Bay in the High Arctic is $1,600. The charter rate from Resolute Bay to Ellesmere Island is in the neighbourhood of $1,750 per person. Add another $500 for meals and accommodation and the travelling expenses alone come to an astounding total of $3,250. If you include other costs such as outfitting and pocket-money, the total easily comes to $4,000.

A private outfitter in Resolute Bay told me that the majority of travellers are European, Japanese, and American, with Canadians making up only 10 per cent. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, who in his right mind will travel to the park when one can go around the world with that kind of money? I think it is high time for the Government to look into making remote areas accessible and affordable to our citizens.

* * *

MUSEUMS

NATIONAL MUSEUM OF NATURAL SCIENCES—FUND RAISING FUNCTION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the Progressive Conservative women's caucus is holding an event at the National Museum of Natural Sciences. The proceeds from this event are to go to the museum trust fund and certainly since our museums are under-funded, any additional funds will be welcome. However, a few questions must be raised. Why should public servants, paid by the taxpayers' hard-earned money, be diverted from their normal duties to organize an event for a political party, however worthy otherwise the event may be? Why should exhibits be moved and the normal work of the museum be disrupted for an event sponsored by a political Party? Why should money raised by the museum on time paid for by the public, on premises paid for by the public, be diverted into a special fund which does not go through the normal budgeting procedures and which is not scrutinized by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture?

I ask the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) to put partisan advantage aside and clean up these improper practices.

* * *

[Translation]

NEW BEAUCE

CELEBRATION OF 250TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): In 1736, Mr. Speaker, France's King Louis XV ratified the granting of three seigneuries located along Quebec's Chaudière River. They were called Nouvelle-Beauce.

This year, nothing will be spared to celebrate this 250th anniversary in the Beauce region. It will be an opportunity for all Beauce residents to proclaim their identity and their Canadianism, and to demonstrate their dynamism in the economic, social and cultural sectors.

If only because of their typical accent and their independence, the people of Beauce have left their mark in the history of Quebec. The Beauce region was the first territory which the French colonized along the shores of the St. Lawrence River.

For a long time during the 20th century the Beauce region was the symbol of a catholic and rural community, faithful to Quebec traditions. Still, the spirit of initiative and the entrepreneurship of Beauce residents were epoch-making, and the region is still the hub of small- and medium-sized businesses in Quebec.

Happy 250th anniversary to all Beauce residents!

* * *

• (1405)

[English]

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—RELEASE OF DR. YURI ORLOV

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this past Sunday Dr. and Mrs. Yuri Orlov were allowed to leave the Soviet Union for New York under the terms of the so-called Danilof deal.

Dr. Orlov is a distinguished high energy physicist who has suffered persecution, imprisonment, and harsh internal exile for his efforts to expose human rights violations in the Soviet Union. He founded the Helsinki Watch Group in 1976, for which he was arrested in 1977 and charged with treason against the Soviet state.

Since his arrest thousands of people around the world have worked for his freedom and that of his wife, Irina. Nowhere has this effort been more intensive than in Canada where hundreds of academics and others have worked to secure Orlov's release from the Soviet Union.

I want to bring this long and successful effort to the attention of the House, and of all Canadians, as we celebrate their first few days in the West. I congratulate those, including colleagues in this House, who worked long and diligently to put pressure on the Soviet Government regarding this subject. I particularly wish to note the efforts of the Canadian Committee of Scholars and Scientists and its secretary, Professor Israel Halperin, of the University of Toronto.

* * *

NARCOTICS

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION AGAINST DRUG ABUSE

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is correct in moving now to wage a campaign against the spreading use of narcotics by Canadians. Even though seizure of illegal drugs was valued at $335 million by June of 1986—$100 million more than the total in 1985—the traffic goes on. The volume of drugs being consumed by Canadians is going up, taking a tragic toll in wasted lives, broken families, and spreading crime. For more than two decades Canadian young people have grown up in a climate of tolerance, even the promotion of drug use. Consuming drugs has now become acceptable among successful professionals.

To change this attitude the Government must enlist the help of all leaders of society, including artists and entertainers. When we infuse in our culture a truly persuasive bias against drug use, only then can enforcement of laws against narcotic trafficking have much hope of success.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

HAZARDS POSED BY SUNKEN SOVIET NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the sinking of a Soviet nuclear-powered, nuclear-armed submarine once again points out the contempt for the future and for questions of inter generational morality that is involved in the commitment to nuclear energy and nuclear weapons characteristic of both East and West.

An American general is quoted as saying that we do not have to worry about the fuel inside the sub's reactors because it is encased in a heavy metal that will "likely"—and I draw attention to the word "likely"—deteriorate only over thousands of years. Even if this were true, how would we feel if huge doses of lethal poisons had been needlessly scattered and stored throughout the world by ancient civilizations in order to meet short-term economic and military goals, and these poisons were only now being released into the environment? Would we not question the morality of such civilizations? Indeed.

So we should question the morality of our own generation and civilization for putting at risk the natural environment and the human health of future generations, all this in the name of a so-called cheap energy that is actually more subsidized than any other energy option and which will only be viable for several decades in any event, and in the name of a nuclear deterrence strategy that can only end in global disaster. Let us have the courage to step off the nuclear treadmill—

Mr. Speaker: Sixty seconds, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

ASSISTANCE FOR WESTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, western Canadians can be pleased with the Government's continuing commitment to our region in the Speech from the Throne and in the Prime Minister's response to it.

Unprecedented emphasis on agriculture and international negotiations, domestic measures in co-operation with provincial Governments and farm organizations and the development of an effective $1 billion financial assistance program to enhance the cash flow of Canadian grain farmers are welcome news.

In energy, besides important measures already taken, there is a promise for co-operation with producing provinces and industry to sustain Canada's energy prospects.

• (1410)

There is renewed emphasis on trade with Pacific Rim countries. Special emphasis will be given to diversifying the economic base of western Canada, for this provides the key to sustained and lasting economic growth, insulating us from the volatility of world commodity markets which now plagues us.

The Government has committed itself to preserving our traditional industries while making fundamental changes that will result in stability as well as prosperity, things in which all western Canadians and, indeed, all Canadians can share.

S.O. 21

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CALL FOR RESOLUTION SEEKING NUCLEAR TEST BAN TREATY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, on September 17 I wrote to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) urging him to make a clear statement calling upon the United States to halt its nuclear testing immediately to match the Soviet moratorium and asking the leaders of the United States and the Soviet Union to begin negotiating a comprehensive test ban without delay. This weekend Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Reagan will be meeting in Iceland. I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs to seize the opportunity presented by this meeting and to provide the people of Canada with a means of sending a clear message to those two leaders through the Parliament of Canada.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs to introduce a resolution in the House forthwith exhorting the super powers to initiate concrete steps this weekend in Iceland, steps that will lead to a comprehensive test ban treaty in the near future. Canada's voice is respected. Surely there is no better occasion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

* * *

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SUPPORT FOR PROGRAM OUTLINED IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise as a member of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology to commend the Government on the emphasis placed in the Throne Speech on science and technology and especially on the establishment of a National Advisory Board for Industrial Technology to be chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Research and development are fundamental components of the Government's plans for economic and social development.

Working with provincial Governments, universities, and the scientific and industrial communities, the Government has set in motion a program which will lead Canada into the next century. Many have predicted that gloom and doom would be the result of technological innovation and automation. In fact, as an Economic Council of Canada study recently noted, exactly the opposite is the case. Innovation produces competitive companies, and the markets of competitive companies expand and their sales grow, generating economic prosperity for all Canadians.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

UNIVERSAL CHILD CARE SYSTEM ADVOCATED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, dramatic changes have occurred in Canadian families over the past decade, changes which require new government initiatives. Over 60 per cent of women are in the workforce. They need affordable child care. Over 11 per cent of families are headed by single parents, many with very low incomes. They need incomes which are above the poverty line and opportunities to get out of the welfare trap. Ninety per cent of our children are cared for in unlicensed situations or care for themselves. We must have an accessible, universal child care system.

The federal Government should celebrate Family Week with deeds, not just with words. I call on the Government to recognize all families by reindexing the family allowance and extending the child tax credit to assist average families with the cost of raising children. I thank all parents for the contributions they are making to the future of Canada.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON MAKE-WORK PROJECTS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my shock and disappointment at the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) who stated his intention not to implement any make-work projects this winter. Make-work projects are not a solution by themselves but they serve a useful and important role by providing much needed income to the many regions of the country that are not fortunate enough to be a part of the boom economy of central Canada.

I am not alone in urging the Minister of Employment and Immigration to take this action. People from many towns in eastern Nova Scotia have written to the Minister asking that immediate action be taken to deal with this serious human problem. The Minister has chosen to turn his back on this plea for assistance.

This Minister is no better than his predecessor. I had hoped for a more caring and compassionate Minister who would see that blindly following the Canadian Jobs Strategy has caused untold hardship to thousands of Canadians. All Canadians have been cheated, not only by this Minister but by the previous Minister.

• (1415)

THE LATE RABBI ABRAHAM FEINBERG

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, last Sunday Rabbi Abraham Feinberg of Holy Blossom Temple, Canada's largest Reform Jewish Congregation, passed away at the age of 87.

For 33 years Rabbi Feinberg was a determined man who championed any cause which affected the disadvantaged of our society. He was a natural leader who led the fight for world peace from Canada. He fought hard for the elimination of poverty, for an effective and constructive role for the aged, and for racial harmony. Rabbi Feinberg was the social conscience of our society, and Canada was truly fortunate to have had this outstanding individual make very significant contributions to our society.

To all individuals who will be paying their respects at tomorrow's memorial service honouring this great man at Holy Blossom Temple, I wish to add Canada's.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

PORT OF VANCOUVER LOCK-OUT—EFFECT ON GRAIN PRODUCERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It relates to the crisis affecting western grain producers. Of course the latest threat is the lock-out in the Port of Vancouver. The Government should have been able to anticipate this situation for months. Of course the union has been in a legal position to strike for the last two weeks. Why is it that the Government has been so inactive to this date, failing to anticipate an additional major crisis affecting our grain producers?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, within hours of a negotiated settlement or tentative settlement in Thunder Bay, we were faced with a lock-out situation at the Vancouver and Prince Rupert ports, mainly over the container clause. Today we sent a telex to the authorities of the ports to ask them to let the grain be transported, particularly because it does not concern the container clause and also because of the willingness of the longshoremen to transport grain.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHERE GOVERNMENT WILL FIND FUNDS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, again concerning the crisis in the grain industry, I should like once more to direct a question to the Prime Minister with respect to payments to grain producers.

What does the Prime Minister intend to do to find the funds required for these payments? Increase the deficit, slash other farm programs, or reduce social programs?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the program to which I referred on Friday will be financed within the fiscal framework in the same way that we financed such new initiatives as the fuel tax rebate, drought assistance, and commodity-based loans, for example, assistance to sugar-beet farmers. I would point out that we have been able to respond to these needs in the past at the same time that we have been able to maintain our spending targets. The program about which we have been talking will put a billion dollars of increased cash flow into the hands of Canadian farmers beyond that which they are now receiving.

SOURCE AND DELIVERY OF FUNDING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if there is an additional cash flow to farmers, it either comes at the expense of the deficit of the Minister of Finance, or from a reallocation of other programs already dedicated to farmers, or at the expense of some other program. Where is the new money coming from, and when will western farmers receive that money?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already indicated that we are meeting on Thursday and that we hope to have further meetings with the leaders of the agricultural organizations beyond that. This is new money in the hands of farmers, and I know my right hon. friend will not oppose that.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

PRIVATE SECTOR JOB CREATION—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday in his speech to the House the Minister suggested that the private sector, the provinces, and individuals should have the principal responsibility for job training and job creation in Canada. In abdicating his federal responsibility in this respect, was the Minister forecasting further cut-backs in the federal employment budget, which has already been cut by $300 million since 1984? Is that what he is suggesting?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East had been here yesterday to listen to the whole speech. I said that, as Government, we must share the load with the private sector, with the various interest groups, I did not say that they would be on their own to develop programs, with the support of the Government. And the results speak for themselves. I am referring to the results of the employment strategy, and I must commend my colleague for putting up the kind of sound structure about which you had been dreaming for years.

• (1420)

[English]

TRAINING OF WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I read his entire speech this morning. While I was not here yesterday, I read it several times and he did say: "Practical training and job experience lead to permanent jobs". Was the Minister really serious when he made that kind of statement? Does he not realize that there are thousands of workers in Canada who are trained, who have had experience but still cannot find jobs? Doesn't he realize—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member please put his question.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, can my hon. colleague tell me that without training these workers would be working today?

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister also on the matter of assistance to Canada's hard-pressed grain farmers. The Government did indicate in response to a question from me yesterday that the money would not be coming from existing agricultural programs. I would like to clarify two other potential sources. Will the Prime Minister give assurances that the funds for spending to aid our grain producers will not come from cutbacks in other federal programs nor will the provinces, already hard-pressed, be asked to contribute?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the funds will be into the hands of the farmers who need the help. I know my hon. friend will support what we are trying to do. They will not come from existing agricultural programs but from within the framework.

SOURCE OF FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Prime Minister had for lunch, but we are not getting very far today. I acknowledged that the Prime Minister said yesterday that it would not come from agricultural programs. We are asking for assurances that the funds will not come from existing federal programs, social programs, other programs, housing programs, and we are asking for assurances that the Government of Canada with all its resources will not be asking the provinces to pay.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I get the impression that my hon. friend is doing everything he can to prevent a Government from helping farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: It is going to cause trouble.

Mr. Mulroney: Why throw all these road-blocks at a Government that is trying to help farmers? What we are saying is that we intend to meet on Thursday and again next week. We are devising a program that will be within the fiscal framework which will not diminish existing agricultural help to farmers, and we are seeking a method to put additional funds in the hands of the farmers. I would hope that my hon. friend will stand up and support a Government that is supporting farmers.

REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF CORPORATE TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not answer the Leader of the Opposition nor has he answered me today or yesterday on funds from other sources or from the provinces.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): One more try, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: I will try a third question, Mr. Speaker. Considering that his friend, Ronald Reagan, has increased corporation taxes by $120 billion in the United States and that we have 79,000 profitable companies that are not paying a cent in tax, will the Government of Canada, instead of cutbacks in other areas and instead of going to the provinces, bring in a reasonable corporate tax to get a minimum of $3 billion in additional revenue and use that money to aid Canadian farmers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if he waits until the Budget maybe he is right.

• (1425)

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

PRIME MINISTER'S TRAVEL ENTOURAGE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and concerns butlers and maids.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Yesterday the Minister said that the presence of Miss Narcisco, the maid, was required on the Oriental trip because of security requirements on a trip of an extensive nature. In view of the fact that Department of National Defence records indicate that the same person travelled to Quebec City for the Shamrock Summit, can the Minister tell us if he considers Quebec City to be a foreign destination and a very heavy security risk? Or, would he admit that a butler is a butler and a maid is a maid?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: And a squalid nuisance is a squalid nuisance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member has put his question and I hope that all Hon. Members will let the Minister to which it is directed respond.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We can hardly wait, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): I think, Mr. Speaker, given the world we unfortunately have to cope with today, that no reasonable person would want us to in any way deny all the necessary security arrangements for the head of our state, the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He is not the head of state.

BUTLER'S DUTIES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he put an end to the mystery of the butler and, the maid? Will he tell us who done it? We want to know. No ifs, ands or butlers.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You are looking after the baggage, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I wonder if I might try to lift the Liberal Party above trivia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: That is their Leader's task.

Mr. Crosbie: That is one heck of a job.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): During the trip in question agreement was reached to have Canada become part of the G-7, which had never been done under a Liberal Government. During the trip in question a process was started that resulted in having agriculture considered under GATT, which has never been done before. During the trip in question the Prime Minister took the opportunity to express directly to Korean authorities our concerns about human rights in that country. Those matters might not be important to the Liberal Party and their experts in trivia, but they are important to the people and the future of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MALAYSIAN MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wish to draw the attention of Members to the presence in our gallery of His Excellency Dato Rais Yatim, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Malaysia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FINANCE

NON-PAYMENT OF CORPORATE INCOME TAX

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Can the Minister confirm that in 1983 there were 79,000 corporations in Canada which had a total profit of more than $13 billion but paid no corporate income tax? Will he also confirm that if these companies had been taxed at the average rate for corporations they would have yielded some $3 billion—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member must know that questions which require a detailed response of that kind are not appropriate for Question Period. Perhaps the Hon. Member can put his question again.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister agree that if corporations that were not taxed had paid tax three years ago, they would have provided $3 billion in revenue which could have been used to help farmers in western Canada today?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would have to make some inquiries in order to ascertain the accuracy of the allegations in the question. After I do that I would be very happy to respond.

DEPARTMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister could explain why, when this information, which is based on statistics from StatsCan, was made available to his Department two weeks ago, his Department did not go immediately to look at this source of revenue which could be helping farmers in western Canada who are suffering today?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat today what I said yesterday. Tax reform is a major objective of this Government. Consultations and work towards that are beginning now and will continue over the next few months. We will take into consideration findings of that sort.

* * *

[Translation]

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF FIGURES MENTIONED BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Today, Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Prime Minister again to justify the 38 per cent unemployment rate he gave for Port-Cartier. The Prime Minister was probably exaggerating once again and probably included the sick, pensioners and pregnant women as part of the unemployed population. My question to the Prime Minister is as follows: Could—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I think it is very important to realize that if you have a question, it should be put directly. An argument about statistics is not an appropriate subject for oral Question Period.

Mr. Lapierre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but when a sentence starts with the words "Est-ce—", that means it is a question. Could the Prime Minister inform the House why he has misled the House and Canadians? May I ask him why he doesn't correct this bad habit of exaggerating?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Shefford wants statistics. He will have them. What the people of Manicouagan have heard today is that 38 per cent of the people of a riding, who in 1984 received part of their income from unemployment insurance are not people—

Mr. Lapierre: Answer the question!

Mr. Bouchard: I let you ask your question—let me answer it. I am trying to understand the Hon. Member's logic. Thirty-eight per cent of the population of a riding, plus people on welfare, or the labour force, if you prefer, plus people receiving welfare, plus people who are no longer seeking employment, isn't that enough to want to take care of what your hon. colleague called regional disparity? Even in the riding of the Prime Minister of Canada, we have to take care of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF WORKS UNDERTAKEN IN PORT-CARTIER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration doesn't know what he is talking about, because the statistics the Prime Minister used were not the unemployment statistics. However, Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Solicitor General. I would like to ask him why and at what cost the work at Port-Cartier has been speeded up so that it will be completed by September 1988.

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have said on many occasions.

Mr. Nunziata: Quit stonewalling.

Mr. Kelleher: The decision to move to Port-Cartier was a government decision. It was made to alleviate the economic disparity which persisted in that area. I am quite sure that the Hon. Member would have no objections to such a laudable objective of the Government.

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN PORT-CARTIER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question, too, is on the location of the Port-Cartier prison in the Prime Minister's riding. If in fact the rationale for the location of this prison was the high rate of unemployment in that particular constituency, can the Solicitor General explain why the prison was not located in Rimouski which had a higher rate of unemployment, in Chicoutimi which had a higher rate of unemployment, or in Gaspé which had a higher rate of unemployment? Why this particular goody to the Prime Minister's constituency when other ridings in Quebecc had much higher levels of unemployment?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Of course, Mr. Speaker, when the Government . . . I am trying to see the logic of the New Democratic Party. You want us to help regions that need help. In the riding of Manicouagan, we are dealing with an employment situation known to everybody in Quebec. Everybody knows the North Shore is one of the worst off areas in terms of jobs. And Members opposite are to blame. So what else can we do? We are helping the people on the North Shore, and later we will help the people in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean area.

INQUIRY WHY PRIME MINISTER CHOSE HIS RIDING AS LOCATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, everybody in Quebec knows full well that the Prime Minister made a gift to his riding when at the same time... Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the people of Quebec why he chose his own riding when there are so many others where the unemploymnent rate is much too high? Why?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when any riding experiences high unemployment and economic hardships, why should we forget it, because it happens to be the riding of the Prime Minister? I am asking the question to Members of the Opposition.

* * *

[English]

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

PENALTIES CHARGED ON EARLY MORTGAGE PAYBACKS

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. What steps are being taken to change the policy of the Farm Credit Corporation with regard to penalties on early mortgage pay-backs?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question and his ongoing interest in the financial difficulties which Canadian farmers face. It is our assessment that indeed chartered banks continue to charge a penalty for early payment. The Farm Credit Corporation does have a policy, however, which will eliminate such a penalty under certain circumstances. If the Hon. Member wishes to bring specific cases to my attention I would be happy to inquire whether the cases he has in mind would qualify.

* * *

[Translation]

DAY CARE

PROVISION OF SERVICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for the status of women. In her absence, I direct it to the Prime Minister. During the election campaign two years ago the Conservative Party singled out day-care services as a priority. The Speech from the Throne makes reference to launching discussions between the Governments of the various provinces, the private sector and the unions. Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister tell us when these endless discussions will stop and when his Government will take action concerning day-care services? What kind of concrete action does he intend to take and when?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government has turned to concrete action.

Mr. Broadbent: Just turned to concrete.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): During the election campaign the Prime Minister made two commitments on child care. One was a task force, not on whether but on how to best implement it. The Hon. Member has been sitting on this task force. We expect that report at approximately the end of November.

Second, in this Throne Speech the Prime Minister has clearly indicated that he is now moving from that commitment to the next commitment of implementation. The Hon. Member surely recognizes that there are a number of partners in the relationship for the provision of child care. We hope she will support the Prime Minister and the Government on the actions that have been taken.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER NEW FUNDS WILL BE ALLOCATED TO DAY-CARE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know—if such services are indeed a priority and we are about to enter the second phase—whether the Government is prepared to guarantee that new funds will be set aside for day-care services in the next Budget instead of simply redistributing the money already earmarked for social programs. Are you prepared to allocate new funds to day-care services?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will not relate to the next Budget, that is not my mandate. I will say, as I said in my speech earlier today, that possibly the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party did not expect this strong positive action to come so soon. It is coming. The Hon. Member should start supporting the very things to which she gave lip service and to which the Prime Minister is giving action.

* * *

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF POLAR 8 ICEBREAKER

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. How soon does the Minister expect to award the contract for construction of a Polar 8 ice-breaker which his predecessor was hoping to announce last spring?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure all Members of the House know, the Government is committed to proceeding with the Polar 8 icebreaker. A contract for that purpose will be awarded and announced as soon as the contract is ready, the contractee is ready and the contractor is ready.

TIMING OF CONTRACT ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, how many more times does the Minister expect the Conservative Government to be able to make this announcement without having awarded the contract?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the time comes for me to make the announcement I hope the hon. gentleman will be as pleased with the announcement as I will be pleased.

* * *

[Translation]

PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS

EASTMAN COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to all my colleagues.

I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

During the Liberal Party public hearings on pharmaceutical patents, most witnesses stated that the Eastman Commission recommendations were an acceptable compromise.

Now that the Minister is revising his Bill, can he assure us that the Government will bring the legislation in line with the Eastman Commission recommendations?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me personally welcome the Hon. Member back and say that she has made an amazing recovery and we are all very pleased.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: What I indicated yesterday is what the Deputy Prime Minister indicated. There will be some refinements to the legislation but they will not be major changes. We are convinced that the package basically provides far more benefits to Canadians than costs. When one makes a change where the benefits outweigh the costs by a considerable margin, then it is a worth-while thing to do.

[Translation]

PRICE OF NEW DRUGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the same Minister.

In answer to a question yesterday the Minister indicated that there will be absolutely no increase in drug prices.

My question relates to new drugs. Can the Minister assure us that there will be no price increase for new drugs?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how to talk about increases in drugs that are not yet discovered. Increases over what? However, the legislation provides for a drug price review board which will be chaired by Doctor Eastman to ensure that the prices of any drugs not yet discovered—but hopefully including some discovered in Canada to benefit the health of Canadians—will be reasonable. That is the purpose of the drug price review board. We feel confident that the mechanisms we will have in place will guarantee that.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. His speech in the House yesterday was disappointing to people in Atlantic Canada. Since the Government has come to power, the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for August in Atlantic Canada went from 13 per cent to 15.9 per cent. What new measures is the Government willing to introduce to help the people in that region?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne, we announced the creation of a special agency for the Atlantic provinces. Naturally, the Department of Employment and Immigration will be working very closely with this agency. I said yesterday in my speech, as I said in the regions, and especially in the Atlantic provinces, that after a year of implementing the job strategy, we now intended to consider, while maintaining the basic principles of the strategy, how certain adjustments could be made, especially for the Atlantic region, so that we could provide special assistance for these provinces, as was pointed out by the Prime Minister recently.

That is what we intend to do, but I wish the Hon. Member would understand that after only one year of implementing the job strategy, it makes sense to maintain the strategy before we look at its impact and make the necessary adjustments.

[English]

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in that one year the unemployment rate has gone up in Atlantic Canada. Will there be new money going into Atlantic Canada to reduce unemployment? Will there be new money going into the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, or is it money that already exists and goes to that region? Is it new money?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, looking for new money seems to be very popular with the New Democratic Party Members today.

What I am saying is that the Government, and that is the question—yes, Mr. Leader, you asked and we are going to answer. You are asking whether the Government is going to do anything special for the Atlantic provinces. You may be anxious to bring the unemployment rate down, but we have already started, and I can give you the figures after the Question Period. Our goal is to keep up the good work.

* * *

[English]

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

MAINTENANCE CONTRACT FOR CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. It concerns the engineering and maintenance support contract for the CF-18. Will the Minister tell the House what other considerations, other than price and the capacity for technical competence, are being evaluated by the Government in the awarding of this very important contract in the various regions of the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the House that the matter is still being considered by Treasury Board. The issue is a very complex one, and of course we intend to take into account all the factors involved. As soon as the study is completed, a decision will be made which we will be delighted to announce.

[English]

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RECEIVED FROM PREMIER OF NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I hoped that the Minister would have outlined the various considerations that Cabinet will be considering. However, in the spirit of openness and civility that the Government wishes to demonstrate, will she table in the House for the benefit of all Members, correspondence and records of telephone calls that she has received from the Premier of Nova Scotia with regard to IMP Group Ltd.?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that whatever that decision may be, its focus must be on Canada's industrial interests as a whole. Failure to focus on those interests would be an affront to the electorate of this country.

* * *

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SEWAGE TREATMENT FACILITIES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Given the rhetoric in the Throne Speech about water quality in Canada, why, in his recent meeting with provincial Environment Ministers, was the Minister unwilling to make a commitment on behalf of the Government to spend—I am sorry to use the phrase again—"new money" on upgrading sewage treatment facilities across Canada? Incidentally, this is something which is badly needed in the Atlantic provinces and which, if done by the Government, would increase employment in those areas? Why the lack of commitment to take that very necessary step?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members will realize that when they put a perfectly good question there is no particular need to repeat it.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the Hon. Member's question is false. It is not true that I resisted overtures from my colleagues to have the federal Government assist the provinces and, through the provinces, the municipalities with municipal infrastructure. In fact the federal Government is up to its eyebrows in such support. Last year in Ontario, for example, I signed an agreement with Jim Bradley, Minister of the Environment in that province, for a $65 million subvention from the federal Treasury for municipal infrastructure support in the Great Lakes region alone. There are agreements with other provinces amounting to tens of millions of dollars. The federal Government is totally committed to helping the provinces and the municipalities in that and other ways.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that you liked the question. I do not want to ask the Minister of the Environment about what he has already done, but whether or not the Government is ever going to give the kind of massive commitment that will be needed to upgrade the sewage treatment facilities in Canada. Why was there no commitment to spend that kind of money which the Minister knows is greatly needed?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I really am puzzled because at the meeting of the Council of Environmental and Resource Ministers we agreed that all the jurisdictions involved, including the federal Government, the provinces and municipalities, would have to link arms to lick this problem. In fact the federal Government has spent millions of dollars in the past, is doing so now, and will continue to do so.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

CROWN CORPORATIONS' MANDATORY RETIREMENT POLICY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Canadians are encouraged by the Government's intention to abolish mandatory retirement. However, one of my constituents who is approaching the age of 65 was recently informed by his employer, the CBC, that the corporation's mandatory retirement policy is still very much in effect. Given the Government's support to end mandatory retirement, when can Canadians expect legislation on this issue, and will it apply to Crown corporations?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the mandatory retirement policy which is embodied in the Public Service superannuation regulations applies to government Departments, corporations and agencies subject to the Public Service Superannuation Act. These regulations were repealed as of July of this year. However, the Crown corporations continue to be subject to the Canadian Human Rights Act which refers to the normal age of retirement.

• (1450)

As Hon. Members will know, there has been a response to Equality for All, and we are committed an early introduction of amendments to the Act—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure Ministers would want to respond briefly and to the point.

* * *

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

TEST BAN TREATY—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION IN PARLIAMENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the meeting this coming weekend between General Secretary Gorbachev and President Reagan, would the Secretary of State bring a resolution to the House for adoption by unanimous consent of all Parties exhorting the superpowers to take concrete steps at this meeting in Iceland leading to a comprehensive test ban treaty?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I respect the spirit in which that suggestion is offered and I hope the Hon. Member will also respect the spirit of the response. I think what is of interest to us all is to encourage the two superpowers gathered there to come to an agreement on issues where they can find agreement. I do not think it would be much help to us, or to other countries, to offer advice which might be seen as gratuitous to the two superpowers as they meet.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of any issue which affects all of the world and mankind more than a comprehensive test ban treaty. I had assumed this was the policy of the Government. It seems to me the opportunity is available now to speak with a clear voice to both superpowers and the best way to do that is through a resolution of this House. Would the Secretary of State not agree?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would agree that there is always an opportunity to speak. What is unique about the meeting in Iceland, and the meeting we hope will follow, is that there will be action forthcoming. What is clear about the state of the world now is that the action the world needs is action which can be taken by those two superpowers meeting together.

We should be doing everything we can to encourage a constructive result of that meeting. Lecturing from afar will not necessarily add to a constructive result.

* * *

CANADA POST CORPORATION

NORWOOD POST OFFICE—MEETINGS ON OFFICE CLOSURE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Post Office in Winnipeg is holding a series of meetings regarding the closure of the Norwood Post Office. In these meetings the Post Office has separated seniors, ordinary citizens, and business people. It has closed a meeting except to a handful of residents by invitation only. Will the Minister intervene to open this meeting to any resident affected by the closure of this post office, and to open the meetings to the press as is appropriate in a democracy?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to remind the Hon. Member that this was a corporate decision.

We have been informed that the customers involved have indeed been consulted and that a decision will be announced in due time.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister consider that discussions with 60 of the 4,000 residents involved constitutes real consultation? When he entered public life, did he not assume responsibility for effective consultation?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that we have been asked to reduce the postal deficit and that the Minister of Finance has instructed us to try to do so by 1987-88. Such decisions must therefore be made by the Canada Post Corporation and we do not intend to interfere.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

JOB-CREATION CAPACITY

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister has been quoted as saying that energy is not a job-creation sector. Does this mean that his Department has dropped the objective of energy as an engine for growth?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the development of the energy sector is a reality in every country. First of all, energy is the basis of a country's industry and can also become an export. The energy sector is therefore a tool for job creation in a country, but it is not an objective of the Department of Manpower and Immigration that the energy sector be used to create jobs.

* * *

RAILWAYS

CN SHOPS AT POINT ST. CHARLES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Transport), and that is because his senior Minister has refused outright to intervene in this matter and persuade CN not to transfer activities—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Although his senior Minister refuses to do so, is the Minister of State (Transport) prepared to intervene in this matter with CN to prevent the worst from happening at Point St. Charles?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. colleague very accurately described this week what the circumstances are at CN in Montreal. The company has made a number of corporate decisions which I think were justified. It said its locomotives were in better shape than ever before and needed fewer repairs. That is why the corporation has closed down a number of plants or repair shops. On the other hand, CN has announced that it is seeking contracts elsewhere, in the United States, to improve, not worsen, the situation in Montreal. Do not forget that over 100,000 jobs have been created in Montreal by the private sector, and CN can do the same.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I may conclude, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister will not intervene either. I wonder why a Minister, the Minister of State (Transport) is so reluctant to rise in the House and defend people in his province who are being threatened by the actions of a Crown corporation. That I cannot understand, but perhaps the Minister would care to explain.

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Liberal Member is dramatizing the issue, as there have yet to be any lay-offs in Montreal. A statement was made by someone, not with the CN, who said that something might be happening, but CN's response was positive and with regard to the creation of new enterprises and new forms of management to preserve jobs and improve the job situation in Montreal.

* * *

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REINSTATEMENT OF PERSONS TO STATUS RANK

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It refers to the intolerable delays which native people are experiencing in being reinstated under Bill C-31. Would the Minister tell us what progress has been made since May in reducing the predicted waiting time of three to four years for these people to get reinstated?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, the waiting period has been reduced. There were original estimates of some 65,000 or 68,000 applications for reinstatement to status. The reinstatement to status is something the Department and the Indian people take as being very important.

There has been up to this point some 12,000 people returned to status. We hope to be able to continue that. However, it is an important matter and sometimes there is research necessary which is very important with respect to a return to status.

REINSTATEMENT PROCESS—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL RESOURCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, since in the first year of reinstatement only one in five applicants have been reinstated, would the Minister advise the House what additional resources he is prepared to grant both to his Department and to the native organizations which are doing so much of the groundwork so that the reinstatement process can be speeded up?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, there is a process for creating band membership. There is money to flow to those bands once they have established a membership code to allow them to continue to monitor and maintain that membership. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Department, my officials and myself are doing everything we can to ensure the return of those people to accurate status and that there is nothing which would jeopardize the original status.

* * *

• (1500)

LABOUR RELATIONS

WEST COAST PORTS LOCK-OUT

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. I am pleased the Minister has acted on behalf of prairie farmers. However, will he tell us how soon he will give direction to the Port Authority and the unions to act on behalf of Commissioner Larson's recommendations? The port is shut down, which is a very valuable tool to the economy of western Canada and to all of Canada.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, considering the requests I have just made today, I will at least wait until I receive an answer, and act accordingly.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

DETAILS REGARDING INCOMPLETE ANSWER

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct an answer I gave earlier to the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre). Regarding the 38 per cent figure referring to persons who at some time during the year 1984 drew unemployment insurance, this of course applies to Port-Cartier only. And it supports what I was telling the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), namely that it is quite considerable. So the 38 per cent does not apply to the whole riding of Manicouagan but only to the town of Port-Cartier.

* * *

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, yesterday during the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne the House Leader for the Official Opposition raised a question of privilege. I would like to submit that his question of privilege fails on three brief grounds.

First, the point was raised well after Question Period in the middle of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, some two hours later. Second, the telex was raised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in response to a question from the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and not the House Leader. Third, the question of privilege was raised as a result of a reporter allegedly being refused a copy of the telex by the Prime Minister's Office and not a Member of Parliament.

The Prime Minister was reluctant as a matter of courtesy to release the telex without permission from the sender with respect to the entire message. However, immediately the matter was raised by the reporter, inquiries were made. I understand that this morning discussions were finalized between the Prime Minister's Office and the office of the Premier of Prince Edward Island. We are pleased at this time to table the said telex on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Speaker: I think all Members of the House would join with me in congratulating Members for having resolved this question of privilege, as it started out, and which I think probably was a point of order, in the very civilized way in which it has been resolved.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the Session; and of the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 44).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When the House took recess at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) had the floor.

[English]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, please permit me to congratulate you on your recent election as Speaker of the House of Commons and to wish you good luck in your new function. Many responsibilities are given to you, but I am certain that you will respond to them with much dignity and reassurance. Personally, I assure you of my entire co-operation.

• (1510)

[Translation]

It is with great pleasure that I rise in the House this afternoon to make a few comments on the Speech from the Throne opening the second session of the 33rd Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I rejoice at the course which this Government intends to steer during the coming months. As Michel Roy wrote in Le Devoir of October 2: "It is a good speech. It spells both continuity and change." Continuity, because the major themes already featured in the 1984 legislative program remain a priority: national reconciliation and economic renewal; change and something new, because from here on in more emphasis will be put on social policies.

Now that economic recovery is definitely under way and considering that economic conditions are constantly improving, this Government, with its usual sense of fairness, is now endeavouring within its means to further improve on the existing social system, to the benefit of each and every Canadian man and woman.

The proposals in the Throne Speech reflect the realistic concern for justice shared by the Cabinet. Economic conditions now make it possible to address social measures, and this is what we are doing inasmuch as we can.

Mr. Speaker, when I decided to run for election in the riding of Louis-Hébert well over two years ago, my idea was to promote in particular four goals that were of special concern to me.

The first was to have Quebec sign the constitutional agreement and resume its rightful place in Canada, and to see that its rights are respected. The Mulroney Government had promised to work with all Canadians towards national reconciliation.

Within two years, tremendous progress has been made. The Francophonie Summit, which I had the opportunity of attending, is indisputable proof that this Government has succeeded in launching open and frank discussions. Before our Conservative Government, this summit which was so important to the French-speaking world never could have been held because federal Liberals would not agree with their Quebec counterparts to determine Quebec's participation. Thanks to the efforts made by our Prime Minister and the Cabinet, that first summit was organized and it met with tremendous success. Moreover, we are already planning the second one to be held in Quebec City in September, 1987. The practical results of such co-operation are a subject of no little pride to me as a Member from the Province of Quebec and the Quebec City area.

In that same line of thought, we see in the Throne Speech that this Government is committed to holding constitutional negotiations with Quebec, and that the consultations that have already begun are of utmost importance in the expectation that Quebec will take its rightful place as a full partner in the Canadian federation.

I am therefore highly confident, because past deeds speak for the future. Based on the improved relationship developed over these last two years, I feel certain the forthcoming months will be most promising.

I want now to tell every man and woman in Quebec that I will continue working arduously on that important matter. To me this has been and still is a high priority, and I want to spare neither time nor energy to ensure that our two levels of Government come to an agreement.

My second objective was to work toward helping Canada, as an industrialized nation, take on a leadership role on the world scene. To achieve this, it was necessary to ensure that the elected Government would bring the Canadian economy back on track, promote the expansion of modern and competitive industries, and make technological progress the engine of this modernization. This would be an essential component.

After two years in Government, our record is quite impressive.

Our government has created some 563,000 jobs in Canada since September 1984, a record that no other government has been able to achieve in the past two decades. As a matter of fact, jobs are created at a faster rate in Canada than in any other OECD country.

The unemployment level is lower than it has ever been over the past four years, interests rates are substantially down and the rise in consumer prices has also been held in check.

These results clearly demonstrate that we have kept our promises. Last Wednesday, however, our Government has indicated its firm commitment to promote even more strongly the economic recovery by continuing to stabilize our public finances, taking new trade initiatives and carrying out a reform of the tax system.

My third objective, which has always been and continues to be very important to me, was to ensure a promising future for our young people by creating new jobs. That is why I see in the pursuit of a free trade agreement with the United States a major challenge for Canada. The important negotiations in which we are involved now will make it possible for Canadian corporations to enter a market twelve times bigger than our own, making it necessay for them to become more competitive, again by updating and developing new technologies. We are living in an era of internationalization, where our own future well-being will depend very largely upon international trade. That is why our Government is trying to find new and secure markets for our exports and carrying out bilateral negotiations with the United States. As a member of the committee on Canada's international relations which held public hearings throughout Canada, I can assure you that Canadians share our government's view that successful negotiations would guarantee future generations of Canadians a promising economic future.

Finally, my fourth objective was to make it possible for women to play a more significant role in our society. Because we represent 52 per cent of the Canadian population, it is quite normal to see to it that our interest is adequately promoted.

Our Government is quite sensitive about the advancement of women in our society; that is why in implementing the new Canadian Jobs Strategy, we will set up for the first time objectives focussing on the participation of women, greatly helping them to find a long-term and productive job.

The Throne Speech has revealed the high priority which the Government is placing on the elimination of obstacles impeding the full and free participation of women in our national life. We are happy with the significant increase we have witnessed these past few years in the number of women appointed to the highest levels of the Public Service and to various Federal boards and commissions. However, this is only a first step towards full equality. I would urge the private sector to follow this example, and we need the co-operation of the private sector to guarantee the success of our endeavour.

Adopting the employment equity principle, as outlined in the Abella Report, is entirely in line with the Government's commitment to full equality for women. The measures announced to ensure that Crown corporations, federally-regulated businesses and contractors providing goods and services to the federal Government give women and visible minorities better employment opportunities have already been adopted by the House of Commons.

Personally, I am one of those who firmly believe women must be encouraged to set their sights increasingly on decision-making and executive positions, and not only in the traditional sectors but also in the sectors of the future.

As you probably know, I am very interested in the high technology industry. During the last election campaign, I was anxious to see carried out one of the most important projects in my riding, namely the creation of a National Optical Institute at Sainte-Foy. So I was of course very proud to have the privilege of taking part, with the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of Quebec, in the official announcement made on June 5, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, the institute will provide for the creation in Canada of many new and permanent jobs and for stable economic development, both at the local, provincial, national and international levels and it is further proof of the national reconciliation that has taken place.

I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, that women should obtain jobs in high technology sectors, and I think that this major project is a unique opportunity for them to find employment in these sectors. This project will also be a way to promote and encourage co-operation between governments, universities and the private sector in the field of research and development. This goes to show that our Government is aware of the increasing importance of developing science and technology in Canada and that it will spare no pains to promote its expansion.

Mr. Speaker, as the Member for a riding where the technology sector is a very important one, this announcement was very welcomed indeed. As a woman, as a former teacher and as a wife and mother, I am very glad to note that our Government has emphasized the need to eliminate obstacles to a full and free participation of women in our national life and to promote social justice and the family unit. As I often point out, I firmly believe that the family unit is the basis of our society. For me, family life is an essential aspect of the normal development of any individual and any society.

As stated in the Throne Speech, the Mulroney Government is resolved to defend and strenghten the institution of the Canadian family.

We in this House may have a special understanding of the importance of family life. I am certain that we have all realized at one time or another how difficult it is to reconcile the exigencies of a heavy workload with the desire to be with our families. We all know the importance of the support, the encouragement and the understanding we receive from our family if we are to do our job in this place.

In addition, we all understand how important it is to improve the quality of our time with our family, whatever its quantity. For most Canadians, the family is a place where there is a climate of love and trust and where each member can achieve a balance between his personal needs, the requirements of his social position and the pressures put on him by the need to get an education or to earn a living.

We ask a lot of our family unit and it asks a lot of us in return since we are responsible for ensuring its success and survival. When something threatens the family unit, there can be tragic consequences for its members. In our efforts to strengthen and support the family, we must not idealize the family unit or view it so narrowly as to exclude the experience of many Canadians. It is true that most Canadian families are what some would call traditional families. There is no doubt in my mind that when both parents participate as much as necessary and whenever possible they do the most to promote the development of their children.

However, Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that there are many single parents in our country who work hard to provide a positive family environment for their children. These men and women must meet special challenges, including what still remains of the stereotypes they represent for people with outdated attitudes. In addition, we must also recognize the role of the women and men who have the love and understanding needed to act as step-parents.

Our society has produced many variations of the traditional family unit and entertaining a narrow view of the legitimacy and viability of these new families will not change the fact that they exist.

Of course, the family is not living in a state of perpetual harmony. The various pressures which it is exposed to both from outside and inside can potentially ruin the ability of even the best parents and that of their children to adapt. But now that the public has become aware of the problems resulting from the various types of violence against children, women and old age people, increased efforts are being made to prevent and eradicate this violence and understand its causes and consequences. I believe that in the difficult times we are living, we could do a lot by giving families and their members the necessary means to tap their own resources as groups and individuals.

Mr. Speaker, it is in that perspective and taking into account the fact that our society is only beginning to adjust to the new dynamics of family relationships and responsibilities, due especially to the increased number of families where both parents are working, that the Government, once the committee on child care has tabled its reports, will propose to Canadian men and women steps to make available adequate child care services.

In order to put together the best possible proposals to meet the needs of our community, discussions will be initiated with the provinces, the business communities and the unions to implement a concerted approach to child care.

As a wife of 27 years and as a mother of two children, I am delighted with this excellent initiative, because I am aware of the impediments which an active professional life can create to a rewarding family life.

Therefore, I recognize the value of the initiatives entered upon and I will wholeheartedly support any step aimed at making it easier for women to enter the labour market by providing them with the peace of mind of knowing their children are safe and well cared for.

I must also refer to the statements concerning effective action against child sexual abuse, violent forms of pornography involving women and children, child prostitution, and the serious and growing threat posed by the traffic in illegal drugs. As a former teacher, Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned about the use of drugs by young people, having been confronted with dramatic situations in which young people would lose control of themselves and even become violent. This is why I will support any measure put forward by this Government to stop that scourge. The future of our society is at stake. The Government has already indicated it is firmly committed to taking efficient measures against the serious threat of hard drugs. To that end, we will propose a national strategy for fighting against drugs, and our Government will continue to work in this country and abroad to stop the use of drugs by amateur athletes. These men and women often serve as examples for other young people who look up to them, and often envy their success. This is why we must be especially alert in that area. Certainly all Canadian parents will welcome those initiatives. Thus we will build tomorrow's society.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, may I say without reservation that I am very proud of the proposals contained in the Throne Speech. Those policies are a true reflection of the realistic sense of fairness and justice that is guiding the Mulroney Government. That is sound administration. The dawn of this new session is quite promising, because every Canadian man and woman are assured that the Government will spare no effort to follow up on the work already started, forge ahead on the initiatives already introduced, and introduce new ones. It is a privilege to be part of this Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments? The Hon. Member for Verdun—Saint-Paul (Mr. Chartrand).

Mr. Chartrand: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis), in order to add to her statements. She referred to high technology in Canada. The time has come in my view to realize how important it is for any civilized country, any progressive country to have very advanced technology, to increase its research and development effort, because employment will be so much better for our young people if that effort is made, if technology advances. This is what this Government has been doing since the beginning of its mandate—we have been trying to give the maximum for people to carry on the research needed, to improve on the quality of all Canadian products.

• (1520)

In the area of jobs, it is a fact that this Government has produced jobs at all levels over these last two years. Creating jobs can only lead to one thing: the unemployment rate goes down throughout Canada, people are happy because they can work, they can feel useful and indeed prove to their family and all their fellow citizens that they are doing something for their country, that they are making a worthy contribution. Who is the real winner in all this? If people have steady jobs, make money and are prosperous, if technology is progressing, if new products come on the market, I think that invariably the consumer stands to gain, as the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert pointed out. He or she will benefit from everything Canadians and the Government of the day have to offer.

The other major issue which she underscored is the reform of the Canadian tax system. Precious few former administrations had the nerve to acknowledge that our tax system is due for a thorough overhaul. Our Government had this in mind and came to grips with the matter so that the reform will soon take place. I would suggest that the Hon. Member displayed sound judgment when she said that the tax system reform is one of the highlights of the Speech from the Throne.

And then, I am greatly concerned about young Canadians. The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert was quite right when she told the House that work is what young people are seeking now, they want to be able to work, they want to be able to study, but do so to make a success of their lives; they want something to do so they will feel useful to their fellow Canadians. What we have been giving them in the past two years is experience, practical experience which will lead to satisfactory and gainful employment, they will be able to work and feel useful in the future. There again the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert proudly pointed out that the Speech from the Throne will pave the way for more new jobs and better training for youths.

She also paid particular attention to free trade. Free trade means very long and hard negotiations, but the only people who really stand to gain anything are Canadians because we have a huge market in the United States and we must corner it, something which no previous Government, particularly the last one, tried to do. On the contrary, they were always fighting against the American Government.

With respect to foreign trade, the world at large is aware of the quality of our work and of our products. Therefore, as the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert put it, there is every reason to produce even more and export all our products, for this will create more jobs for Canadians.

Another significant issue about which she spoke at length is the role of women in our system, a very important role. As she so aptly put it, once again our Government has given women employment equity. Women will always be very sensible persons, with plenty to say not only from the back benches but from the forefront, of every society, of every Government.

There is one thing all of us are a little jealous of, and I mean the National Optical Institute which was set up in her constituency. I want to commend her for securing the National Optical Institute. This is something to be proud of. All Members in my view can be jealous of that achievement because again it points to this Government's commitment to research and technology.

Turning now to the matter of drugs, this is one of the most important subjects in the Throne Speech. It is highly important in my view that our Government should spare no effort in controlling drug abuse in Canada. This is just about the most nefarious thing for our youth, that propensity to drugs, the propensity to evasion. I therefore feel she was absolutely right in stating that the use of drugs is something that should be assailed, and this Government will do it. And I am certain we will succeed.

Finally, I want to say that I am very pleased with the speech made by the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert, and I congratulate her for it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) have a comment?

Mrs. Duplessis: I greatly appreciate the comments made by my colleague. In his remarks, I think he left out the most important subject, that is national reconciliation, the successful discussions we will be having with Quebec so it can take its rightful place as a full partner in the Canadian federation and sign the constitutional agreement.

[English]

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some remarks about the Throne Speech. First I should like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your appointment to the position of Deputy Speaker. As well, I should like to congratulate the Speaker on his election last week. We on this side of the House certainly wish you and the Speaker well in your deliberations over the next two years. We as members of the Opposition are convinced that, given the co-operation of Hon. Members on all sides of the House, we can in fact make this place work a little better. We have had some difficulties in the past, but I sense a genuine willingness to make this place work and to try to co-operate with all Hon. Members.

Having said that, I should now like to turn to the Speech from the Throne, a document that was introduced to the nation last week with considerable fanfare. It seems that the bottom line is that the Speech from the Throne is simply an exercise in rhetoric. It is a lot of high-falutin phrases and promises. Given the track record of the Government, Canadians are asking themselves whether in fact the Government will deliver on the 57-odd promises contained in the Speech from the Throne. As you know, the Government decided it needed an extra month to allow Mr. Dalton Camp the opportunity to review the public opinion polls and to draft a Throne Speech that would set a new course for the Government. Given the fact that the Government needed an extra month, Canadians expected from this Throne Speech a vision for Canada, some indication from the Government where it wanted to take the country, some definitive action. Instead, what Canadians were given was simply a Throne Speech that for all intents and purposes was similar, if not identical, to the one delivered two years ago. It was a warmed-over Throne Speech. It was recycled with some consideration given to the public opinion polls.

• (1530)

Canadians no longer trust the Government. It is obvious from the public opinion polls that Canadians have lost trust in the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and in the Government. They made some 330 odd promises during the election campaign in 1984, and upon taking office the Government started breaking the promises one after the other.

The Prime Minister still has the audacity to speak about the Liberal record of Government of the last 16, 18 or 20 years. The Prime Minister and the Conservative Government now have a record of their own, and Canadians know what that record is all about.

To refresh the memories of Hon. Members opposite, I would like to tell them what the Conservative record of government consists of. It consists of bank failures, tuna scandals, ministerial resignations such as you have never seen before and broken promises. I do not want to waste any time being specific about the Conservative record of government, but it was clear that what was needed for this Government was major surgery. It brought in the doctor and the nurses. Dalton Camp, Atkins et al were brought in at public expense as civil servants to give advice to the Government of Canada on how it could get itself out of a very serious mess. Parliament was prorogued because the Government was adrift, wallowing in a quagmire of scandal after scandal after scandal. The plug was pulled on that session of Parliament to give the Government a fresh start. That the Government should prorogue the House would suggest a recognition that something was wrong and that the Tories wanted to embark upon a new honeymoon, if you will.

While it may have been possible for the Prime Minister and the Conservative Party to hoodwink the people of Canada in the election campaign of 1984, no longer do Canadians trust the Government.

The Government in its Throne Speech talks about social justice. A Member of the government Party earlier this day made a statement that the Conservative Party is a Party with a social conscience. Really, who are the Conservatives trying to kid? There is a whole section in the Throne Speech entitled Social Justice. It is Part 4 of the Throne Speech. I challenge the Prime Minister opposite and Members of the governing Party to provide for the Opposition and for Canadians a definition of social justice and why the Conservatives think that their Party is the Party with social justice. I went to the dictionary, Mr. Speaker, and I went through some of the political material that has been written over the years to try to get an understanding of what is meant by social justice. What does the Government mean when it speaks of social justice? In order to get an understanding of what the Conservative definition of social justice is, it is important to look at the Conservative track record of Government. Let us analyse it for a moment and see what the Conservatives mean by social justice.

The Conservatives speak about deindexing senior citizens' pensions. Yes, that is a Conservative definition of social justice. If one truly believes in social justice, one does not try to deindex senior citizens' pensions. That is not just, it is not equitable and it is not fair. It was only after many weeks of national debate that the Government recognized it was unjust and it backtracked on that particular proposal. For the Government to start talking about social justice would lead one to question its credibility seriously.

Social justice, according to Mulroney—

Mr. Malone: Order.

Mr. Nunziata: —means de-indexing family allowances, which the Conservatives did. Is that fair, is it just and is it equitable? Of course it is not when you have hundreds of thousands of single parents in Canada having difficulty making ends meet and the Government decides to take money away from them. That is not social justice. Is it social justice when the Conservative Party of Canada decides to take money away from families and those in need in the same Budget in which it gives a $125,000 cash bonanza to the wealthy in society? That is what the Conservatives tried to do and did. Yet they have the nerve today in the Throne Speech to talk about social justice. It is not social justice. It is not economic justice. Canadians can see through the facade. If this Conservative Government thinks it can hoodwink the people of Canada on yet another occasion, let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, Conservatives have another thing coming because Canadians no longer trust them. The Conservatives have frittered away the mandate given to them two short years ago.

Mr. Berger: Two long years ago.

Mr. Nunziata: Two long years ago, as my friend and colleague points out. What is left of the mandate given to the Conservative Party is but bodies in the House of Commons. The Conservative Government no longer has the mandate that it received two years ago.

We have been sitting in Parliament in this session for but a few days. We have found that the Government intends to carry on with its old ways. We know that Mr. Camp et al are trying to convince the boss, the Prime Minister, not to come to the House of Commons any more, to stay separate and apart, at arm's length with the House of Commons, because they fully recognize that when the Prime Minister speaks the Conservative Party is in trouble. They have looked at the public opinion polls and told him to stay away from the House. We have been told that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) fully intends to run the nation's business on behalf of the Government of Canada. The Deputy Prime Minister was not elected by the people of Canada to carry on the functions of Prime Minister. The Prime Minister was elected for that, and he has a duty to Canadians to come to the House of Commons and be accountable for the Government and answer questions put to him during Question Period.

• (1540)

Mr. Malone: He has been here every day.

Mr. Nunziata: What we have found over the last several days is that the Prime Minister has sat on his hands. When questions are put to him, he has refused to answer. One would have thought that, given the Sinclair Stevens scandal and the attempt to stonewall on that issue, the Government might have learned a lesson. That lesson is that it is incumbent upon the Government of the day to be forthright and provide answers to Opposition questions put in this House.

Another issue which is causing the Prime Minister and the Government some embarrassment is that of the prison which will be constructed in the Prime Minister's riding. As you know, that particular maximum security institution was scheduled to be built in Drummondville. That location was chosen on the basis that it met certain criteria and on the basis that the new institution would complement the existing institution in Drummondville. That is why the original institution was built where it was, in comtemplation of a second phase. However, the Prime Minister decides he has to help the people of Baie Comeau, Port-Cartier, and Manicouagan, the people of his riding, because he made a lot of promises during the election campaign and he has to deliver. So what does he do? He calls the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) and tells them to move the prison to his riding. As if they had not already had enough, he wanted a $60 million prison built in his riding.

What is the cost to Canadians of this decision to help out the Prime Minister? We know it will cost $15.8 million more in construction costs. That is a colossal waste of taxpayers' money. That is not the end of it. It will also cost an additional $3 million a year in operating costs. Where is this Government's sense of economic justice and fairness? To satisfy the Prime Minister, the taxpayers of Canada are being forced to pay an additional $15.8 million in construction costs and an additional $3.3 million every year in maintenance costs. The Auditor General is examining that decision and he will be submitting a report to Parliament on October 21. There is no question that he will be severely criticizing the Government for that decision.

Mr. Malone: How do you know?

Mr. Nunziata: Simple logic tells you, my friend, that if you move a prison in order to satisfy the Prime Minister's wishes at an additional cost of $15.8 million, the Auditor General is going to be highly critical of that decision.

That again leads me to question the credibility of this Government. It seems to be concerned about the deficit. We on this side of the House recognize that it is important to be fiscally responsible.

Mr. Malone: When did you think of that?

Mr. Nunziata: Yet the Government is prepared to fritter away $15.8 million initially and $3 million annually because of the Prime Minister. Yet does he have the nerve to stand up in the House and answer questions? No, he does not. He does not have the courage or the backbone to stand up and try to defend that decision.

Mr. Malone: I rise on a point of order. First, to suggest that any Member of this House lacks courage is unparliamentary and Beauchesne's will show that to be the case. Second, any review of Hansard for the past week will show that the Prime Minister has answered questions every day. The Hon. Member says he answered no questions. That kind of misrepresentation ought not to be allowed to stand in Hansard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not consider the points raised by the Hon. Member to be points of order.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, all I can say to the Hon. Member is res ipsa loquitur. I will stack my credibility and integrity against the Prime Minister's any day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Any day, my friend.

Mr. Malone: What a mouldy bottom of the stack you would make.

Mr. Nunziata: The Prime Minister also indicated in this House, and I know he did not intend—

Mr. Malone: You do not deserve to be here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We have been doing well for the past week. Let us continue, please.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I know Members opposite are getting a little bit—

Mr. Malone: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Nunziata: Indeed, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). They are getting a little bit touchy, but when one starts striking at the truth, the reaction we get is obvious.

Mr. Malone: You could not spell "truth" if we gave you the five letters.

Mr. Nunziata: All I can say is res ipsa loquitur.

The Prime Minister said to this House on Friday that there was a 37 per cent unemployment rate in Port-Cartier. I know he did not intentionally mislead Hon. Members. I know it was a mistake. The unemployment rate in Port-Cartier is not 37 per cent or 38 per cent as the Prime Minister said in this House and elsewhere as the reason for justifying the decision to relocate the prison. The unemployment rate, if he should check the record, is 15.8 per cent. He was either being innocently naive or deliberately dishonest, but I am not going to suggest he was deliberately dishonest because it would not be appropriate to do so.

You are indicating that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I would be prepared to answer any questions from my hon. friends and colleagues opposite. The Speech from the Throne leaves something to be desired. As you know, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) has moved an amendment to the Throne Speech indicating non-confidence in the Government of Canada. All I can say is that while we may not have the numbers in here to succeed on that particular amendment, I am convinced we have the numbers in the country to defeat this Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) on a question or comment.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech the Government indicated its desire and intention to rid this nation of pornography, particularly hard core and violent pornography. I just want to ask the Hon. Member, given his speech today, if he would indicate to the House whether we have his support in our efforts to eradicate that serious problem in this country?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that the Official Opposition fully supports effective legislation to deal with the problems of pornography in Canada. In fact, on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, I responded to the legislation introduced to the nation before the summer. I indicated then, and I will indicate again, that we in the Liberal Party believe there is no penalty harsh enough for those who would sexually abuse children. There is no penalty severe enough to deal with those who would resort to pornography, violence and degradation. We fully intend to support any legislation brought forward which will combat the problem of pornography in Canada. We are committed to that goal.

• (1550)

The Government said in its Throne Speech that it is committed to stopping the importation of pornography into Canada and that it is declaring war on pornography and drugs. However, let us examine what it has done over the last number of months which will make it much easier to import pornography and drugs into Canada. The Government has adopted a new honour system within the Post Office. Parcels coming into Canada no longer have to be picked up by the addressee. The Post Office now delivers the parcel and subsequently invoices the individual for the duty. We all know that that will make it much easier for smugglers to bring more illicit drugs and pornography into Canada. The Government also cut 120 custom inspectors. If the Government is serious about the control of pornography and illicit drugs, it should increase the number of customs inspectors. The Government should rescind its decision on a new postal honour system which will make it easier to import narcotics into the country.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) with respect to the decision of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to move the proposed prison at Drummondville, Quebec, to Port-Cartier in his own constituency. Many of us in the House share a sense of concern at this waste of taxpayers' money, both in terms of capital cost and of annual operating costs. There is as well, Mr. Speaker, the question of the remote location of this prison. It is far away from the families of prisoners and from the support services which are so necessary.

I think the Hon. Member for York South—Weston will want to look a little further back in history than to the Port Cartier decision. Canadians remember very clearly that a Liberal Government made exactly the same decision with respect to the prison at Renous in the Province of New Brunswick. Another prison was to be built adjacent to Dorchester penitentiary but because of blatant political patronage on the part of the then Liberal Member for Miramichi, who is no longer in the House, at substantial additional cost to the taxpayers of Canada the Atlantic institution was being constructed at Renous. Lo and behold, that prison as well was far away from the necessary support services and involved substantial additional costs.

The Hon. Member for York South—Weston is quite right to say that the Auditor General is examining the decision with respect to the prison at Port-Cartier. I suspect that the Auditor General will also have a thing or two to say about the waste of taxpayers' money involved in constructing the Atlantic institution at Renous, New Brunswick, for blatant political reasons as well.

Let us cut the hypocrisy of the Liberal Party on the issue of the location of prisons. They did the same thing when they were in power as the Conservative Government is doing today. That is why it is time for a real change in this country to an NDP Government to end these phoney arguments.

Mr. Nunziata: You have to hand it to the NDP, Mr. Speaker, they like to dream. We recognize the criticism which was leveled at our administration when we were in office. We did something about it. We commissioned an inquiry into the issue of the location of prisons in Canada. I know the Hon. Member is extremely familiar with the Carson Report. It was tabled in this House on November 30, 1984. That commission recommended that correctional institutions in Canada be located based on correctional considerations rather than on a need in the Prime Minister's riding or on political patronage. The Government has failed to respond to the recommendations of the Carson Report. It has also failed to respond to the report of the Nielsen task force which recommended a moratorium on all prison construction.

We recognize that Canada has one of the highest incarceration rates in the western world. The goal is to reduce the prison population in Canada. Of course, we must keep those who present a danger to society incarcerated, but we must try to reduce the prison population because of the extraordinary costs involved in constructing prisons and keeping inmates incarcerated. It costs $40,000 a year to keep an individual in jail and in excess of $70,000 to build an additional prison cell.

We on this side of the House adopt the recommendation of the Carson Report and that of the Nielsen task force report. We believe that there should be a moratorium on all future prison construction and that we should direct our efforts toward finding ways of decreasing the prison population in Canada.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I was interested to hear the member of the Liberal Party from Toronto speak so strongly against regional development initiatives. This confirms the long-held suspicion that Atlantic Canadians had about the Liberal Government which was in Ottawa for the last two decades. The Liberals do not want to spend any money to bring about regional economic development. The Hon. Member cited the figure of $15 million and suggested that such a cost should not be paid for regional development initiatives.

The Member spoke about the isolation of the inmates and the lack of support services. Is he not aware that the people of northern Quebec must leave their homes and their support systems to find employment? Atlantic Canadians have done this for decades as well.

This position is, of course, supported by the New Democratic Party, which perhaps best explains why we have not been successful in the last two decades in solving the regional economic development problems of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member has given me the opportunity to remark further upon the issue of the Port-Cartier prison. As I indicated in my original remarks, the unemployment rate in the Port-Cartier region is 15.8 per cent. I am not for a moment suggesting that I support the placing of prisons based on regional economic disparity. However, if you want to locate a prison using that consideration, surely you would not place it in Port-Cartier where the unemployment rate is 15.8 per cent, but rather in Cape Breton where the unemployment rate is 25 or 30 per cent. I am surprised that the Hon. Member has not stood up for Atlantic Canada in order to receive more funding for his part of the country in view of the extraordinarily high rate of unemployment there.

In closing I would like to point out that if the location of this maximum security institution was based on correctional considerations we would note that there is no double-bunking in the Province of Quebec. However, in the Atlantic region, in Ontario, in the prairie provinces, and in the Pacific region there is considerable double-bunking. Therefore, if you want to build a prison based on need, you would not build it in Quebec.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in the House today, particularly following the address by the Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). I think there are some things the people of Canada would like to hear about social justice, particularly the women of Canada whom I intend to address.

This is my first statement in the House since I was named Minister responsible for the Status of Women. I want to make it quite clear how delighted I am to be carrying issues forward on behalf of Canadian women, the issues and the people I have been closest to and have cared about the most all my life.

• (1600)

Before turning to the details of the Throne Speech, let me remind Hon. Members that this month marks the fifty-seventh anniversary of the Persons Case, the famous court decision which granted the status of a person to women and thus made them eligible for appointment to the other place. In 1979, the Persons Awards were established and these awards recognize outstanding contributions toward advancing the status of women in Canada.

I am proud to inform the House that this year's recipients of Persons Awards have just been named. They are Elizabeth Carr of Don Mills, the Hon. Muriel Fergusson of Fredericton, Denyse Rochon of Montreal, Berenice Sisler of Winnipeg, and Helen Yeo of Charlottetown.

Today's women are now officially persons and we, in our day and age, cannot imagine it otherwise. However, there are still many areas where it is difficult for women to be fully accepted as we would like them to be, as persons throughout our society. Our Government is committed to ensuring that across every spectrum women are indeed persons with equal rights and equal opportunities.

The view of the Government, as confirmed in the Speech from the Throne, is that issues of concern to women are an integral part of all our objectives; national reconciliation, economic renewal, social justice and constructive internationalism. Whether we are talking about science and technology or about regional development, our Government is committed to ensuring that women are equal beneficiaries of and participants in government programs and initiatives. The particular priorities outlined in the Speech from the Throne as well as those already under way are child care, immigrant women, pornography, and wife battering.

I am very proud to say that last week's Throne Speech represents another step forward in our Government's comprehensive package of initiatives for women. There is no simple definition of women's issues. They are variously described now as social issues, family issues, societal issues, and social justice issues. However, let us always remember that the issues we are talking about were put on the agenda many years ago and put on that agenda by women. They were not well addressed by former Governments. We recognize, of course, that the complexity of these concerns requires a variety of responses, a variety of solutions. We have worked hard to ensure that issues of particular concern to women are part of our cabinet discussions and that we seek women's views in our economic policy development at every stage.

We put a high priority on removing the barriers that have prevented women from participating freely and equitably in the mainstream of Canadian life. We came into office with a plan to meet that priority, and two years ago we announced that plan in our first Speech from the Throne. Since then we have built a solid record of achievements, and now we are moving forward again. We are using those achievements as a base to continue our efforts to address women's inequality.

Let me name just a few areas where we have already made some substantial progress. In the first Speech from the Throne, our Government made a commitment to pension reform. Since then, we have moved quickly toward the goal of ensuring a more secure retirement income for all Canadians, but especially for women who are hardest hit by poverty as they grow older. In my last portfolio as Minister of State for Finance I worked very closely with my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to put an end to 10 long years of debate on pensions and to forge an historic pension agreement with the provinces. As a result, beginning in January, 1987, Canadians will receive improved benefits under the Canada Pension Plan, including mandatory credit splitting on marriage breakdown. We have made other pension changes to ensure earlier vesting, portability and better pensions for women in employer sponsored pension plans.

In another area, we will give first priority in this new session to legislation authorizing prepayment in November of the 1986 child tax credit. We have pressed forward as well with our ongoing commitment to women in the labour market where they have often lacked opportunity to work and contribute at full capacity. Our employment equity legislation has been designed to counter the long years of women's underemployment and to give women a chance to capitalize on their abilities. Through employment equity, we have taken an important first step in ensuring that companies under federal jurisdiction meet the challenge and reap the benefits of being equal opportunity employers.

We have also amended the Indian Act to remove its discriminatory references to native women, and passed legislation to facilitate the enforcement of support payments. In keeping with our earlier commitments, we brought forward women's concerns at all national discussion tables and will continue this when First Ministers meet next month in Vancouver.

• (1610)

[Translation]

Our Government is proud of that progress. But we know there is still much to do. It is clear that problems faced by women cannot be solved overnight, but we have acted faster and more sensibly than the previous Governments, and we will continue to do so.

The last decade has witnessed deep changes in labour market structures in this country. The massive influx of women in the labour force, especially mothers of young children, has changed our economic and family life. Women still shoulder the heaviest part of the burden of family responsibilities.

In our first Throne Speech, we committed ourselves to giving women equal access to the labour market. True to that commitment, we have established a parliamentary committee on child care. We have made sure that the committee has everything it needs to complete its work and we are impatiently looking forward to the tabling of its report next month. The report will be our plan of action in the field of day care. The recommendations of the parliamentary committee will guide us in our discussions with women's associations, the provinces, business circles and labour unions.

The Speech from the Throne has reaffirmed the conviction of this Government that time has come indeed to have women participate fully in all stages of the decision-making process. We were committed to increasing the number of women appointed to various federal councils, boards and agencies, and we have gone a long way towards that goal. Already, more than 25 per cent of our discretionary appointments involved women. We have also intensified our efforts to increase the number of women in the upper echelons of the public service. Right now, 381 women are among senior management in the Public Service. When we came into office there were only three women at the deputy minister level; we now have seven, including some who were appointed more than once over the past two years. As deputy ministers, all these women hold key positions. My own Deputy Minister for privatization is Mrs. Janet Smith. Our Government is determined to set an example for the private sector of a fair and equitable administration.

And now, Mr. Speaker, allow me to emphasize the determination of our Government to give women more ready access to better employment opportunities. For too long now the labour market has taken advantage of the fact that women are underpaid. We must help them leave the traditional job ghettos and secure jobs which are fully consistent with their experience, their education and their aspirations.

[English]

We are determined to ensure that women receive fair compensation for their work. Within the next few weeks the Canadian Human Rights Commission will be publishing additional guidelines to facilitate compliance by employers to implement the legislation requiring equal pay for work of equal value in federally-regulated industries. My colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), is working very closely with Public Service unions to fully implement this legislation within the federal Public Service.

[Translation]

When we came to power two years ago, we quickly realized that federal employment programs did not meet the needs of Canadian women. We immediately undertook a complete review of these programs and replaced them with a new training and employment strategy known as the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

The positive effects of this initiative are now starting to be felt. For the first time, the federal employment strategy includes employment equity measures such as targets for women's participation. These targets have helped women and unemployed people find lasting and productive employment.

Over the next two years, we will continue to monitor the effectiveness of our programs, to make sure that Canadian women fully avail themselves of these training possibilities.

While dealing with training, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention that I met this morning here in Ottawa my provincial and territorial counterparts. We discussed ways by which the two levels of Government could co-operate to improve training programs available to women. The results of our discussions will be submitted to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the provincial premiers to be examined next month at the next First Ministers' Conference.

[English]

My Government fully intends to tap and build on the economic strengths of women. In recent years we have seen a large number of women launch small businesses of their own. We are taking steps to encourage further and nurture the entrepreneurial spirit which has been shown not just by men but by the women of Canada. We intend to simplify regulations, improve procurement procedures and strengthen the Unsolicited Proposals Program for small countries and entrepreneurs.

I have spoken at some length about the measures we intend to take to address women's economic inequality. However, I want to stress that our commitment to women includes social justice, and that is equally firm. As the Speech from the Throne stated, we are dedicated to the pursuit of one goal, that of a modern, tolerant and caring nation in which its citizens are secure and prosperous. To this end we intend to bring before the House some important legislative initiatives to support and strengthen the institution of the Canadian family, among them the introduction of measures to end violent and degrading forms of pornography involving women and men, legislation to take effective action against child sexual abuse. We intend to address the problem of child prostitution and initiatives against the traffic in illicit drugs, which will help to improve the quality of life for Canadian families, for Canadian parents and, in particular, for Canadian young people.

[Translation]

Over the past several months, our Government has been working to develop a national strategy to completely wipe out the drug abuse problem in our society. As my colleague has already indicated, the problem of drugs, especially the illegal ones, has been aggravated by the existence of an international distribution network, contributing to a growing social crisis.

Our Government recognizes that this problem is not limited to the illegal drugs, but results also from the abuse of various chemical substances and medication. Unfortunately, this abuse problem is widespread and affects much too many Canadian men and women throughout this country. Accordingly, the Government will devote a lot of time and energy to solving this urgent problem. We will put the emphasis on public awareness and education generally and the rehabilitation of drug abuse victims.

[English]

A great many social justice issues affecting women require joint federal-provincial action. We have worked very hard to establish a good working relationship with the provinces. Federal, provincial and territorial working groups have been set up to facilitate joint action in the areas of child care and wife battering. We intend to continue and enhance these relationships to take effective action in other areas of mutual concern. One pressing area which I will be discussing with my provincial colleagues concerns the needs of immigrant and visible minority women. I am looking forward to taking part in a national conference to be held in Winnipeg in November to address these concerns of immigrant and visible minority women which are special among the needs of women as a whole.

We also intend to work closely with the provinces to provide assistance to the victims of crime, and I firmly believe there must be a stronger sense of the special needs of women as victims of crime, as well as support for police programs to prevent crimes against women. Clearly, this will be a full and productive session of Parliament and, as Minister responsible for the Status of Women, I intend to ensure that women continue to make progress. I will do my utmost in that direction. I seek the support of all Hon. Members of the House in achieving that goal. After all, women make up half of our population. That is common knowledge. At the same time, our Government recognizes that half the talent in Canada, therefore, also rests with women. We as a Government, and as a country, intend to assemble this talent and provide opportunities for its meaningful expression in the home, the workplace and at all of the tables in our Government in dealing with our future because we know that as a country we need that talent. We need its creative expressions and we will be the poorer if we do not use it.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I welcomed the words of our Minister as she expressed her concerns for women. I listened with a great deal of interest. I sincerely hope the agenda which she laid out will be realized, and the sooner the better.

If I may correct just one point, the Minister said that women make up 50 per cent, or half the population. It is a miniscule point, but we are 52 per cent. As a majority, therefore, I sometimes wonder if we have forgotten that we have a majority of talent which needs to be used in the most constructive way.

There were a number of issues my colleague referred to in the House. I am curious to know how she would respond to those particular issues. She talked about social justice, about a modern and tolerant nation, and a society which would be built with the best interests of this partnership in mind. I think that is a fine goal. However, if that is the Minister's goal, and I think it probably is, I would like to see some amendment of attitude and a different kind of attitude and thought with respect to issues which do impact upon women. For example, I would like to see the kind of mentality which would suggest that the deindexing of the Old Age Security would indicate a lack of appreciation of the fact that the majority of people over 65 years, and particularly those over 75 years, are women. The obscenity of our generation and our society is the poverty in which women live today, particularly older women. It is really key that this issue be addressed, especially in terms of the deindexation of the old age pension, which was tried and, fortunately, did not succeed, and in terms of the deindexation of the family allowance and the cut-back with respect to the child tax credit. The measures primarily affected middle-income families. They had a definite impact on that level of our society, and it is of great concern. The Minister talked about putting these social justice issues on the parliamentary agenda.

• (1620)

I would refer the Minister to another piece of legislation which her Government brought forward, namely, Bill C-62, the Bill dealing with employment equity. I hoped it would have teeth in it in order that it could actually promote the role of women, native people, immigrants and the handicapped so that they could obtain justice and equity. Unfortunately, all the right words are there but the Government has taken no concrete action. When legislation has no teeth in it, nothing remains but hollow promises. I hope the Minister will watch this area over the next year and bring forward the type of amendments that will put the needed teeth into it, especially in terms of punishing people for not acting as opposed to not filing a report.

I would now like to deal with the child care program. I see across the way one of my colleagues who sat on the committee which prepared the Equality for All Report. The committee travelled across the country at great cost to Canadians. It was an important undertaking. We heard about the basic building blocks to allowing women, in particular immigrants and native women and families, the partners in society, the right to equal access and equal opportunity. That right comes with child care, regardless of the type. Quality affordable care enables these women to enter the market-place. It is well known that a family today needs two incomes to meet the family budget. Our task force looked at the subject, as did the Cooke task force. It has been under consideration since Senator Florence Bird chaired the Royal Commission on the Status of Women which was set up in 1968. Since that time it has been a major plank in the discussion, and one about which we are still talking. I know that we each build on the strength of the other, but since the release of the last task force report, the time has come to promise at least some new dollars, not recycled ones, for the area of child care.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. Will the Minister please reply.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for the hopefulness that she expressed concerning my role in the Government. I can assure her that it is well placed—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: I was about to go on to say that it is well placed because I know I have the support of my cabinet colleagues for the measures we wish to undertake, and the support of the Prime Minister.

In dealing with the Hon. Member's last point first, let me say that the Government and I regard child care as a major priority. It is an issue which has been around for a long time in my life, even before the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. It was a silent issue for many years. I agree with the Hon. Member when she says that it should be a priority of the Government. It was very much a forward looking part of the Speech from the Throne. I would be disappointed if the Hon. Member expected the Government to move ahead of the parliamentary task force which, as I understand, is doing some extraordinarily good work in this area. I am looking forward very much to seeing what will be contained in the report. I think it will round out the examination which can be carried out at our level. It is something on which the Government is fully committed to move forward. I agree with the Hon. Member that there is no point in having equal pay for work of equal value if one cannot get out the door. There is no point in having good training programs if one cannot get out the door. This is an issue which we fully intend to look into.

The Hon. Member raised the issue of employment equity and of there not being any teeth in the program. We are somewhat ahead of the Hon. Member in that we are monitoring the progress of the program, and we will continue to do so. I am proud to say that this approach is working. Things are happening. Putting teeth into legislation without allowing people a chance to respond is inappropriate. The Hon. Member knows as well as I do that once something is put into legislation it is difficult to remove it. The Government's hope is that by the time the Hon. Member and I are older and looking back on our political careers this type of action will not be necessary. At that time Canadians will take it for granted that women are equal participants because of the things we are doing today, things which are being done by this Government.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister on her appointment as Minister responsible for the Status of Women. It is obviously a key portfolio. I have two brief questions for the Minister.

The Minister referred to the Government's commitment with respect to pornography legislation. Specifically, she referred to the Government's intention to move forward in terms of violent and degrading pornography. Does this mean that the Government will not proceed with the other element in the Bill of the former Minister of Justice which dealt with what has been called explicit erotic pornography involving adults in which there is no violence and no degradation but consensual adult activity? Is it the intent of the Government to move away from the repressive proposals in the Bill put forward by the former Minister of Justice?

My second question is in respect of another area of glaring inequality affecting women. I refer to the current abortion laws in Canada, laws which effectively deny women in the Provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, as well as many women in other parts of the country, access to safe therapeutic abortions. Instead of being coached by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) perhaps she could address these two important concerns of Canadian women.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, with regard to pornography, as the Hon. Member knows, and I thank him for raising this issue, it has been the subject of fairly lively public debate. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has said publicly that he is reviewing this issue. I know for a fact that he is undertaking such a review. He has said that he will be looking at some of the questions concerning the area of definitions.

I would also like to tell the Hon. Member that when one enters into this type of issue, no matter where the line is drawn someone will say that we have gone too far and someone else will say that we have not gone far enough. I caution the Hon. Member by saying to him that when the Minister of Justice comes back, after having reviewed the issue, this debate will go on no matter where that line is drawn. I think that the point which is important to the women of Canada is that we are committed to doing something about violent and degrading pornography.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: With respect to the Hon. Member's second issue, once again, it is an important one for Canadian women. As the Hon. Member knows, the issue is presently before the courts. It is a matter which I will be watching with great interest, as I know he will be, and all Members of the House will be. However, until it is dealt with I would prefer not to comment on the issue.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister how she will move in her own caucus to assure the promotion of women when, in the Public Service, we have seen a nomination which is a very politicizing one for women since Maureen O'Neil left this particular sector. CBC had two nominations open and the Government named two men to the positions. If we want to move women into these sectors based on credibility and confidence, and when sex stereotyping in the media is such a serious issue, then the CBC board could do with some women on it.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is not suggesting that all those Liberals who were appointed for years and years were incompetent.

Mr. Forrestall: You cannot have it both ways.

Mrs. McDougall: The new co-ordinator of the Status of Women is one of the most highly regarded activists in the women's movement in this country. I am proud that Kay Stanley is reporting to me. With respect to appointments in the Public Service, I can read to the Hon. Member the list of deputy ministers, all of whom are highly qualified. I refer to Margaret Catley-Carlson, Treasury Board; Huguette Labelle at the Public Service Commission; Maureen Law at National Health and Welfare; Jennifer McQueen at the Department of Labour; Geneviève Sainte-Marie at Environment Canada; and Georgina Wyman at the Department of Supply and Services. I think this is a record of which we can be very proud. I think we can be equally proud of the other appointments of women we have made. I look at the boards and commissions of the Government and the women who have been appointed to them. First of all, the percentage has increased—

• (1630)

Mrs. Finestone: Just because they drive cars on an Air Canada board?

Mrs. McDougall: The Director of Air Canada was the mayor of a major Canadian municipality and a highly qualified woman. The percentage of women appointed through Governor in Council appointments has increased from under 18 per cent under the previous Government to 25 per cent today. I am sure the Hon. Member would agree that we are, therefore, doing a good job at some of these appointments.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in my seat in the House of Commons with a very, very heavy heart. I, like many, many Canadians, feel betrayed. I am saddened by the actions of a Government which has, in a sense, turned its back on the people of Canada.

Over the summer while Members of Parliament were in their own home constituencies, we were telling our constituents that we were awaiting a new Throne Speech from the Government. As a matter of fact, the Government asked us to take an extra month to enable it to prepare a thoughtful Throne Speech that would indicate a new direction for Canada. The people of Canada were anxiously awaiting this Throne Speech because they really believed and hoped that the Government would show a new direction for the country to take and would be taking Canada on a new course. They hoped the Government would be establishing a new and clear direction for our future.

The people of Canada were hoping that there would for the first time be a new vision of what one of the richest countries on the face of the earth could accomplish in the next weeks, months and years ahead. However, when the Governor General read the Speech from the Throne, that was not there. It really only provided for the status quo continuing in the future. There was no direction, no clear idea of where the country was going.

As a Canadian, and particularly as a western Canadian from the interior of British Columbia, I was looking to see if there was something in the Throne Speech that would indicate a commitment to providing assistance to the hard-pressed mining and exploration industries. There was nothing like that there. I was looking for some indication that the Government had intended to take seriously the plight facing the forest industry of Canada. There was nothing in the Throne Speech for the forest industry. There was nothing in it to assist the tourist sector and the farmers and hard-pressed cattle ranchers of western Canada. There was nothing in it of particular interest to the small business sector or to small manufacturers, particularly those in the regions struggling during these very difficult economic times.

It was a real disappointment, Mr. Speaker. That can be added on to months and months of disappointments. I suppose we were hoping for a Government that cared, that had integrity and that would be honest with the people of Canada.

I remember hearing the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) time and time again say that we are going to have to change this system of patronage. In the famous debates of 1984, he went on at some length about patronage. Have things changed? They have changed. They have gotten worse. Now we find that the Prime Minister is appointing well-known, high profile Canadian Tories like Dalton Camp to the Privy Council Office, not a political office but a government office.

Then the Prime Minister said that the kind of pork-barreling to which we have grown accustomed under the Liberals would have to change. We have seen unbelievable levels of pork-barreling in Canada of late. The most obvious example that has received much consideration recently is the intervention on the part of the Prime Minister to move a prison into his own constituency, a constituency in Quebec that has already received tens of millions of dollars worth of federal support. I would ask my friends opposite, particularly those from the regions of Canada, have their constituencies received tens of millions of dollars worth of federal Government support? No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case, but the Prime Minister's constituency has.

We have seen the arts of patronage and pork-barreling taken to a new level. I remember the Prime Minister of Canada pointing to the former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, and saying that the kind of political office that he had created by surrounding himself with 60 political hacks would have to change. No longer would that be appropriate under a new Conservative Government. He was right. It was not appropriate. The present Prime Minister has doubled his staff and now has 120 political hacks surrounding him.

When we consider the kinds of changes the new Government has brought in, we find that it has essentially worsened the situation that we came to know under the previous Liberal administration. I as a British Columbian am particularly concerned with the lack of action shown in the Throne Speech.

British Columbians have been hardest hit by an uncaring Government. British Columbians have had their lives set back many, many decades as a result of the programs of the provincial Government. Something happened just the other day, hard on the heels of an already very harmful step taken by the federal Government which, through Bill C-96, significantly cut back on post-secondary education. Millions and millions of dollars that traditionally would have gone to the provinces to help train young people were cut back. Provinces like British Columbia will, in the next five years, have cuts from transfers for post-secondary education in excess of $60 million.

What was the reaction to that on the part of the Minister responsible for post-secondary education under the Vander Zalm Government in British Columbia? The Minister, Russ Fraser, said, as reported in the Vancouver Province of Sunday, October 5:

> Poor people should go to school only if they can afford it—
>
> —Russ Fraser, the minister responsible for post-secondary education, says it may be time people changed their priorities.
>
> "Maybe they should put off their education if they can't afford it,"—

This is from an individual from the Province of British Columbia who has been given responsibility for post-secondary education. He is saying that if one is not from a relatively wealthy family and cannot afford education, then one should forget it for now. This is occurring in one of the richest parts of one of the richest countries in the world. The Minister of post-secondary education is telling us that we are going to have an elitist system and that only people from relatively wealthy families will now be able to benefit from post-secondary educational opportunities.

Mr. Robinson: He's a Tory.

Mr. Riis: He is a Conservative. I would like to tell my friends opposite that if they do not change their minds and start bringing in programs that will help compensate for the regressive legislation in the Province of British Columbia which is being brought in by the Social Credit Government, they ought to heed the advice of one of their former colleagues, Mr. John Reynolds. Mr. John Reynolds sat in this House for some time. He recently ran for the leadership of the Social Credit Party in British Columbia. He was not successful, but he did say that the Prime Minister understands only one thing, polls, and that the federal Government takes 12 per cent from British Columbia and gives only 3 to 4 per cent back in terms of federal procurement. "The Prime Minister said he would change", said Mr. Reynolds, "but he let us down and he ignored British Columbia". He said that nothing has changed from the previous Liberal administration and if the Tories don't change their programs, there will not be a single Tory Member of Parliament elected from the Province of British Columbia.

I think John Reynolds was right. Unless the policies of this Government change in favour of the regions of Canada and in favour of all Canadians, there will be no Conservatives elected from these parts of the country.

Mr. Malone: Reynolds for Leader of the NDP.

Mr. Riis: I hear sniping from the benches opposite. Unfortunately, the Minister who spoke recently has just left. I was going to remind her of the kind of morality that her Government presumably brings to Canada.

• (1640)

Not long ago in a speech in the City of Toronto the Minister was quoted in a major metropolitan newspaper as saying "There's one underlying motive in business shared by all—it's greed". She also said: "There's nothing wrong with that. We support it wherever it happens". That was the then Minister of State for Finance saying that the Conservatives supported greed whenever they could and wherever it occurred, that that was the motivating force in the country. I want to dissociate myself and my Party from that position; we do not believe that greed is a motivating force or that it ought to be supported wherever and whenever it happens.

We have many concerns when it comes to the practices of the Government. We notice that today increasing numbers of Canadians find it very difficult to pursue post-secondary educational plans, whether it be in a vocational school, a technical school, an institute, a college, or a university. This is especially so in the Province of British Columbia where the provincial Government has seen fit to cut back on grants to students, making it an almost exclusive responsibility of the federal Government's loan program. It is not uncommon for young people to be graduating from our post-secondary institutions with $25,000 to $30,000 of debt and being unable to find employment in the areas for which they were trained.

I find it rather odd that Governments which say that they cannot afford to maintain support for post-secondary education, such as the present federal Government or the Government of British Columbia which says that it must cut back on post-secondary education, can find substantial amounts of money for selected groups. I remind my friends and colleagues that it was only over a weekend that the Government was able to commit itself to $1 billion of taxpayers' money to assist a number of uninsured depositors and to help bail out two Canadian banks. Who were those depositors? There was a number of small depositors; there is no question that we ought to have assisted them. However, should we have assisted the Bank of America, Citibank, Wells Fargo Bank, the Bank of New York, and the Bank of Japan? They were large international banks which had millions and millions on deposit. In some cases they had in excess of $25 million on deposit. Should we have used taxpayers' money to support and bail out those depositors? I think not. If a Government can find $1 billion over a weekend to assist such depositors, surely to goodness that same Government should be able to support young people in post-secondary educational institutions to develop their talents and expertise.

As a Member of Parliament from British Columbia I am particularly concerned about the actions of our Premier of late. Canada had a case before the International Trade Commission, before the Department of Commerce, in response to a countervail threat which would in fact result in the loss of somewhere between 25,000 and 30,000 jobs in the Canadian forest industry. The Premier of British Columbia decided to indulge in some public musings. He and his Minister responsible for forests went around the province saying that perhaps our stumpage rates were too low, that perhaps we were subsidizing our industry, and that perhaps we should carry out a review. That forced the federal Government, the industry, the unions, and the provinces involved in this countervail threat to make an eleventh hour proposal to try to rescue this sabotage effort by the Premier of British Columbia. The American forest companies have responded with a no, now that the Canadians have essentially admitted to unfair trade practices. One American Senator said that Canada had been caught with its hand in the cookie jar. They have now got us, in that essentially the Government of Canada, at the encouragement of and in response to the initiative taken by the Premier of British Columbia, was forced to concede that we were guilty before the verdict had been delivered.

It is of concern to us all when we consider to what extent this is a fair and caring Government. What kind of Government would introduce legislation, as the present Government plans to do, which would result in additional drug costs to Canadians of up to $650 million per year by 1995? The Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association tells us that if the patent law legislation is brought forward and passed, the people of Canada will be paying hundreds of millions of dollars more for their drugs each year. That will place a very heavy burden not only upon our various health institutions across the country but particularly upon elderly Canadians. Again that is something a fair, caring, and concerned Government would not be introducing, to say nothing of the unemployment insurance changes which were brought in where people who had paid into the insurance for years and years were unable to take advantage of it as a result of legislation. It is a bit like purchasing fire insurance on one's home and not being able to collect it if the home burns down. In the spirit of fairness that provision should have been deleted, certainly removed retroactively.

On a daily basis we hear of our farming sector being in grave difficulty. I know from speaking to the people who produce food in my own constituency that they are under extreme pressure. However, one of the major programs brought in by the Government does not provide assistance, support, or long-term low interest money. It provides money for people to get out of farming. In other words, the Government wants the number of family farms to be reduced. It wants people to get out of farming. Essentially, if we continue as we are today, the agricultural sector of Canada will be left to the large corporate sector, and we will have agri-business in place at the expense of the family farm.

What about the promise of the Polar 8 ice-breaker contract to British Columbia? We could argue about it, but the previous Minister said that an announcement was coming shortly. The previous Minister of Transport indicated that tenders would be restricted to West Coast shipyards. We waited for weeks and weeks, months and months, and as late as today the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) still had nothing to say about keeping that government commitment of many months ago to the people of British Columbia.

What about real support for reforestation, silviculture, fisheries enhancement, or for the development of urban infrastructure? Today we heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) say that they wanted to assist in real job development in Canada. There is no better way for the Government of Canada to invest in the future of Canada and to provide serious long-term training opportunities than to invest money in reforestation projects, in fisheries enhancement projects, in urban infrastructure developments across the country, and in assistance to West Coast shipyards through the contract for the Polar 8 ice-breaker. These are the kinds of initiatives which the Government could take at this point. They would not be make-work programs. They would not be spending money; they would be investing money in the future of Canada. Rather than having hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are dependent upon UIC or welfare, they could be gainfully employed in long-term jobs and could contribute to the future of Canada.

We have urged the Government on a daily basis to take that kind of approach, yet all we see are cuts and cuts. The Minister of Employment also said that the regions would have to fend for themselves. The Throne Speech indicated a concern about unemployment in the regions of the country and that another bureaucratic structure would be created in Atlantic Canada. There was no money, no support, no financial endorsement; just the creation of another system of bureaucracy. That will not result in economic development, new economic opportunities, and consequently long-term jobs.

The people of Canada wanted to see some action and some commitment. For years and years under the previous Liberal administration we saw very little in terms of any direction for Canada. People were sick and tired of the floundering around. They wanted more than a Throne Speech which tried to cover all political bases to allow the Prime Minister, members of the Cabinet and members of the Government to go out and say: "We are concerned about you. We are interested in your region, your particular part of Canada". Rather than try to cover all political bases, the Government ought to have identified three or four critical areas so that the people of Canada would perceive a clear direction unfolding. We did not see that. The Government says that it cannot afford it. We can afford it in part through a reform of the tax system. We have found out that 79,000 corporations were profitable over the last number of years and did not pay a single cent in income tax in some years.

• (1650)

We see the unfairness of the tax system evolve. Rather than 50/50 per cent from the corporate and the personal side of the tax system, it is now 82/18 per cent, with 82 of the tax revenues coming from individuals, not corporations. We see the bias in favour of the large corporations at the expense of the small manufacturers. We see the bias in our tax system, the bias toward large corporate central Canada at the expense of the regions of Canada. That is the kind of unfairness that Governments have built into the system over the years. The people of Canada wanted to see that change.

As a result of consultations with people like Howard McDermid, Kenna Cartwright, Peter Ralston and Gordon Priestman and many, many others in my constituency, ideas, programs and thoughtful policies were suggested which would create the much needed jobs, provide a fairer form of Government and a fair set of opportunities for Canadians, particularly British Columbians. Those are the things we ought to have. When the people of Canada elected a Tory Government to run the country, they did not mean ruin the country. Basically what we are seeing today is a continual deterioration of the hopes and aspirations of Canadian families and individuals.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bring back Ian Deans.

Mr. Riis: It is time that we had a change of government focus, a new initiative and a real direction for our country. I do not think there is an individual in this House who would not say they were fortunate to live in the best country of the world and the most prosperous. All it requires is the will to get on so that all Canadians can benefit in its valuable and rich resources.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I am always amazed that members of the New Democratic and Liberal Parties can give these scathing speeches and then wind up saying that Canada is the best nation in the world. Obviously, everything cannot be done wrong while still having the best country in the world.

Would the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), after having asked us in our Speech from the Throne if we could have focused on only three or four critical areas, give us his commitment, if at some future date there are only three or four focused directions of a Government, that NDP Members will not rise and say we should have done more, that other things should have been in the Speech and list what should be covered? Is it the Member's view that three or four is the right number and that he will never again rise in his place, if that is done, and say: "Gee, you ought to be talking about some other issues that are not there"?

Mr. Nunziata: You are being absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. Malone: Would the Hon. Member give that commitment so the people will know how much he is committed to the words that he says?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have had lots of questions put to me in this House. This is a very interesting question, which is all I can say, interesting in that I can think right off the cuff of four or five things that the Conservatives would likely have as critical planks in their platform that I could never support. I could imagine a whole number of points that I could not support. I believe it is time that the Government provided us, through a Throne Speech, a Budget or whatever, with a mechanism with a very clear direction that will launch Canada into a new era of economic prosperity, fairness, justice and honesty for all, and if that were the case, then you bet, Mr. Speaker, I would support it. But to support a number of the policies that I know the Hon. Member holds very dear to his heart, I could not bring myself to do that.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the very thoughtful remarks of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I know he was back home in his constituency in Kamloops touring the riding this past weekend at a very critical time in the history of British Columbia, consulting with people like Howard McDermid, Kenna Cartwright and Peter Ralston. Would my colleague elaborate a little bit on what some of the major concerns were of the people in his community as he travelled around the community, particularly focusing on the failures of the Government of British Columbia to address those concerns at this critical time in B.C. history?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to respond to the thoughtful question put forward by my colleague. When speaking with these individuals, including a fine, upstanding contributing citizen such as Gordon Priestman, I found that their concerns primarily are that the provincial Government, in co-operation at times with the federal Government, has failed to address some of the serious problems facing the people of central British Columbia. I am thinking of access to educational and training opportunities. The biases that are built into the system make it very difficult if not actually prohibit many, many people from average income or less than average income families to pursue educational and training opportunities. Then there is the lack of commitment to assist the agricultural sector, the small struggling farmer or rancher. There is simply nothing there to give them the courage and support to go on. One could easily add to that the small business and small manufacturer who has to compete with the giants in a very unjust and unfair system.

Perhaps the greatest concern is the concern that these individuals hold about the lack of support for the long-term development of our forest resource. It is the forest resource in central British Columbia that holds the long-term promise, the long-term economic and job-creation hope. Yet provincial and federal Governments have for too long let us down in maintaining that resource so that we could be guaranteed a sustained yield of production.

Serious cuts have been incurred by the Social Credit Government which have cut back on services people require. I know that this is a very general attempt at a response to my hon. friend, but in economic and social matters a great deal should be done and must be done by a Government that puts people first, not corporations first.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for his comments this afternoon. Over the last two years I have grown to admire the Hon. Member. It is of some regret to me that he is not a member of our caucus. Perhaps the future might bring us together as colleagues in the same Liberal caucus.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap is also a neighbour of sorts. I am originally from Revelstoke. Kamloops is not far from the good Town of Revelstoke. I just want to bring to the attention of the House that that part of the country seems to produce good parliamentarians.

Mr. Robinson: But mistakes are made every now and then.

Mr. Nunziata: I want to ask the Hon. Member about the so-called four pillars in the Throne Speech. The speech itself is based on what the Prime Minister loves to term the four pillars: national reconciliation, economic renewal, social justice and constructive internationalism. I know that the Hon. Member agrees with me when I say that we have heard it all before. I would like the Hon. Member to give me and this House a western perspective with respect to the pillar known as national reconciliation. As he knows, not long ago a Conservative Premier started talking about western separatism. I would like the Hon. Member to comment about that particular pillar and whether he believes, from his perspective in western Canada, that there has been national reconciliation over the last two years.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have two things to say in response to my thoughtful friend. One is that just the other day the Prime Minister was visiting western Canada. When a number of Gainers employees who are struggling for their very economic existence were attempting to make a point with the Prime Minister, he called them separatists. That did not go down well in western Canada. I think that the view reflected by the Prime Minister in terms of his unthoughtful nature was best reflected in statements uttered by the Premier of British Columbia and the Premier of Alberta over the last few weeks that in a sense the present Conservative Government has abandoned western Canada. In terms of any national coming together of east and west, I am afraid that the policies of the present Government have widened that gulf. So now the feelings of alienation, in fact even "separatism" as expressed by our Prime Minister, have crept back into the vocabulary of many western Canadians.

• (1700)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Energy—Price of gasoline; the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens)—Pharmaceutical Products—Recommendation of the Eastman Commission—government position. (b) Price of new drugs—government position; and the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—Penitentiaries—Reasons for locating prison in Manicouagan. (b) Reasons of Prime Minister for choosing his own riding.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the Session; and of the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 44).

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech contains some very good news for New Brunswick and Atlantic Canada. For the first time in a very long while the special needs of Atlantic Canada are being recognized in the Speech from the Throne, and for this I am extremely grateful.

The Speech calls for positive proposals for new policy initiatives from those who live and work in the region, and in my remarks today I intend to respond to that call. Whether my proposals or others are implemented is not important. What is important is that a giant stride forward has been taken in meeting the challenge of regional disparity and in doing something about it.

The Speech points to the establishment of an Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The agency will be constituted to facilitate and co-ordinate federal development initiatives. It is designed to make use of the expertise available in the Atlantic region and it will invite the maximum participation of other Governments and organizations. It will be an important development instrument.

At the present time, the economy of the Atlantic provinces appears to be going through a "crisis of confidence". This crisis is both economic and psychological. It has become clear that a substantial stimulus from offshore oil and gas—if it comes at all—will be delayed into the next century. Employment in many traditional industrial activities is declining. In addition, because of severe financial constraints, the rate of growth of federal transfer payments—in recent years, the major determinant of the region's rate of economic growth—is scheduled to decline.

These factors have, of course, their adverse psychological effects on an economy suffering from high levels of unemployment and a heavy burden of taxation. These psychological effects depress both consumer spending and investment spending and help promote a business climate where the emergence of many young, vigorous entrepreneurs is most unlikely.

It is thus imperative that the Government of Canada undertake a new initiative to expand and diversify the economic base of the Atlantic region. This new initiative by the federal Government must be strong and determined and, by its nature, must be seen to be strong and determined. It, too, must have its economic and psychological effects, but they must be growth-promoting and confidence-building.

Since the creation of the Atlantic Development Board in 1962, substantial amounts of money have been spent by the Government of Canada to encourage economic development in the Atlantic provinces. Very little of this money, however, has gone to the private sector to encourage directly the expansion of employment in manufacturing. Most federal funds have gone to provincial Governments to expand the infrastructure or the social overhead capital of the region. Any survey of federal spending for regional economic development in the Atlantic provinces over the past two decades will reveal that direct incentives to industry have been relatively small, indeed, so small as to be most unlikely to have any significant impact on the process of economic development.

The fact is that there has never been a determined and realistic effort by the Government of Canada to expand and diversify the industrial base of New Brunswick and the other Atlantic provinces. Industrial incentives, in aggregate, have been relatively weak, weak in relation to those available in central Canada and, perhaps more important, the will in Ottawa to promote industrial change in Atlantic Canada has been extremely weak. Citizens of New Brunswick and other Atlantic provinces contrast the enormous efforts and expenditures made by the federal Government to expand the automobile and aircraft industries of central Canada with the puny and perfunctory efforts at industrial development east of the Quebec-New Brunswick border.

Industrial development can only succeed if there are strong incentives for industry and if there is the will in Ottawa to assist in using these incentives to promote economic change. Regional industrial development must become an important and pervasive objective of all the key economic Departments of the federal Government. In the past, industrial development in the Atlantic region has only been of peripheral interest.

The situation can be perceived by considering the two major federal industrial initiatives of recent years: automobiles and aircraft. Both have been very expensive for the federal Government and both have failed to provide any direct benefits for the Province of New Brunswick. Indeed, there has been no attempt to utilize these industrial initiatives to promote economic development in New Brunswick. The people of New Brunswick may accept that most direct benefits of indusrial initiatives by the federal Government will go to central Canada. They find it very difficult to accept that all direct benefits will always go to central Canada. In the future, major industrial initiatives by the Government of Canada must have an Atlantic dimension. This means that an attempt must be made to direct at least some of the benefits of such initiatives east of the New Brunswick-Quebec border.

In the situation where directing activities into the Atlantic region requires additional incentives for the private sector, this should be done as long as the over-all benefits exceed the over-all costs. If benefits to the Atlantic provinces do not meet this criteria, the federal Minister concerned should be required to make a statement as to why this is the case.

It is proposed that a new federal policy to expand the industrial base of the Atlantic provinces should include the following provisions:

First, that in future all major industrial development initiatives of the Government of Canada must have an Atlantic dimension on the basis that I have stated. This means that Crown corporations, such as the Canada Development Corporation, in their industrial-promoting activities, must observe the provision of the Atlantic dimension. It, of course, means that DRIE, in its ongoing activities such as its encouragement of automotive parts manufacturers, would always meet the requirements of the Atlantic dimension.

Second, that a tax incentive be offered to manufacturing, including processing, companies establishing new, expanded or modernized facilities in the Atlantic provinces which would permit them to write off the full capital cost of such facilities against their corporate income tax payable from all corporate activity. This provision to be in effect for an initial period of 10 years.

Third, that a wage subsidy of 30 per cent in respect of persons employed by such firms be authorized for the first three years of operation, to offset the higher costs involved until such workers are trained.

I have some supporting arguments for an Atlantic dimension.

First, given the very high levels of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, it is most unlikely that Canada will ever achieve anything approaching full employment without a very substantial expansion of the industrial base of the region. Theories of market adjustment are interesting, but they ignore the effects of social justice legislation on labour mobility.

Second, at the present time, annual federal expenditures in the Atlantic provinces exceed annual federal revenues from the Atlantic provinces by roughly $9 billion. This is estimated at half the structural deficit of the Government of Canada. Given present national policies, the outlook for the private sector of the Atlantic economy is to remain very weak and for federal expenditures in the region to remain far above federal revenues from the region. More rapid economic development in the region can make a substantial contribution towards reducing the federal Government's structural deficit.

• (1710)

Third, the acceptance of the concept of the Atlantic dimension can lead to important demonstration effects in the Atlantic provinces. Demonstration effects are an important concept in development economics. They result when new industrial projects get under way and prove to be successful. This demonstrates that industrial projects can be successful and encourages other entrepreneurs to get projects under way in the region or area.

Fourth, successful industrial projects deriving from federal initiatives will also demonstrate that the federal Government really is interested in the economic wellbeing of the Atlantic provinces. This, of course, promotes national unity. At present many citizens of the Atlantic provinces believe that the federal interest in industrial development stops at the Quebec-New Brunswick border.

Fifth, studies have shown that many corporations in central Canada, when planning expansion, never consider locating in the Atlantic region. The Atlantic dimension policy would greatly increase the consideration given to industrial expansion in the region.

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not mention that I represent one of Canada's most historic ridings. In my constituency is located the City of Fredericton, seat of government for the Province of New Brunswick and home for the University of New Brunswick and St. Thomas University. Both have distinguished alumni sitting in this House.

Now under construction in Fredericton is a multimillion dollar forestry complex involving the Government of Canada, my home province, the University of New Brunswick and the other maritime Governments. When completed, this complex will open a vital window on research for the forest industry, the primary producer and employer in the region. I want to recognize the tremendous leadership which Canada's Minister of State (Forestry and Mines) (Mr. Merrithew) has given and continues to give to this vital project.

While forestry is well represented in my constituency, so too is agriculture, and I am very pleased with the emphasis placed on agriculture's indispensable role in our national economy. Fredericton is the home of the Dominion Agriculture Research Station, which is of tremendous assistance to the agricultural industry in New Brunswick and the region.

Canadian Forces Base Gagetown, which is the largest Army training area in the British Commonwealth, is also located in York—Sunbury. In addition to providing good training facilities for Canada's Armed Forces and those of other Commonwealth countries and NATO, it is a principal employer of skilled and semi-skilled persons in central New Brunswick.

Many members of the Armed Forces retire in York—Sunbury and, because of their circumstances, seek later employment to support their families. The pension-UI regulation which was referred to the Forget Commission for study and report caused a great hardship for many people who were between jobs and in this category. I met with those hard-pressed retirees and took their representations to officials in Government and to the Forget Commission. I am looking forward with great anticipation to the Forget Report which I hope will relieve all of us of our agony by dealing fairly and justly with all of those former military personnel who so ably served their country. I hope that Mr. Forget and the Minister will do everything in their power to bring forward constructive and remedial measures as soon as is humanly possible.

York—Sunbury is the home of Process Technology Ltd., the St. Anne-Nackawic Pulp and Paper Co. Ltd., the Research and Productivity Council, and the Hartt Boot and Shoe Co. Ltd., all of which produce world-class products.

During the life of the last Government I was successful in introducing two resolutions to deal with the child battery syndrome and inter-family violence. Both these resolutions resulted in studies being held by a standing committee of the House with recommendations coming forward and many of them being acted upon. A later motion to consider challenges facing the institution of the family and the erosion of traditional resource supports was not successful. It is, therefore, gratifying to me to see our new Government pick up those threads in the Throne Speech and move forward in this very vital area.

The dedication of the Government to effective action against child sexual abuse, violent forms of pornography involving women and children, child prostitution and a serious and growing threat posed by the traffic in illegal drugs is a highly commendable move. This move will be strongly supported by my constituents and, I believe, by all Canadians.

Finally, I do not think that too much can ever be done for our war veterans. The Veterans Independence Program will be broadened and new legislation will be introduced to streamline the pension process to provide faster and more efficient service to veterans. Our veterans are richly deserving of the improvements which are mentioned in the Throne Speech. I would be remiss in my duties if I did not indicate to the Minister that as I visit the excellent veterans' hospital in Fredericton and talk with veterans I hear high praise for his performance.

The Throne Speech is a broad statement of the potential that can build a solid foundation for future growth in Canada while at the same time strengthening our moral fabric and disadvantaged regions. Its proposals are a giant step forward down a necessary road that must be travelled.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with interest to the Member's description of his own riding and the needs of the Atlantic provinces for industrial development. We all appreciate these needs. It is not only in Atlantic Canada that there are needs for investment to occur and for Government to do all it can to ensure that development will occur, but certainly Atlantic Canada is one such area. I am sure the Member shares with me the concern about how little his Government is going to do about those needs. The Atlantic Provinces Opportunity Council, as the Throne Speech suggests, seems, on the face of it, to be little more than an opportunity for people in the Maritimes to ensure that they are not passed over with regard to contracts and other possibilities which might exist within the federal Government. It does not sound like an elaborate effort to ensure that the development needs of Atlantic Canada are met.

I would like to add a second thought and a question to those observations. I was struck, too, by the Member's concern with regard to the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Forget Commission Report which we are expecting shortly. He hopes that the Government will deal properly with the needs of military and other personnel who are forced to retire early and who expected, in the past, to be able to use unemployment insurance moneys as well as their pensions to make the very difficult transition to civilian life. I am sure he would have some very caustic observations about the hypocrisy which certain Ministers demonstrated in writing letters of protest to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) about this change while, at the same time, being part of a Cabinet which presumably authorized those changes in the unemployment insurance system which so cruelly cut off these servants of the Canadian people.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments and for the expression of his perception. His perception of a possible role of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is, of course, premature until the definition of the agency is known to us, its functions defined and its policies fleshed out.

I choose to be more optimistic. I see the agency as being a facilitator of providing an opportunity for input from the region into the policy-making function, assisting in the implementation and attempting to focus the attention of all Departments of the Government and, indeed, of all Governments, on the problem of regional disparities by advocating a development dimension for every Department of Government and focusing attention of all Departments of Government.

• (1720)

We have seen only too often in the past good national policies that inflicted adversely on the Atlantic region. For example, while tight money is sometimes needed in the national interest, it means in the maritime provinces that policies of restraint become policies of austerity. We are the first hit, the hardest hit, and the last to recover from them. I am hoping that this new voice will help us to adjust and adapt to these policies and be a better focus for the resources of the nation on the problem of regional disparity.

Until the Forget Report is known to us, I think the best role we can play is to attempt, as I have, to influence a positive and constructive decision so that when it comes it will be something that hopefully all parties can support for to the benefit of all Canadians, particularly those whom the Hon. Member has mentioned, those who retire early and are probably in very great need of it. I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention.

Mr. Vankoughnet: Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) on his very informative and constructive presentation. Does he believe that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency proposed in the Throne Speech is consistent with the new incentive suggested by him as a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I see the agency as a supplement to the existing provisions. In my speech I attempted to define what I think would be a good centre-piece for an effective regional development policy. Most certainly there are other components to it. I think that along with the system of grants and guaranteed loans, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Program in the Department of Supply and Services, a measure of this nature would also form part of the policy. In my opinion, the heart of it would be the proposals I have already made to the House, and I see the agency as being a facilitator of working with people in the area to resolve their own problems and bring forward recommendations which can be input into policies. I see the agency as facilitating the delivery of those policies fairly, efficiently and far more effectively than has been the case in the past.

These are the things I would like to see the agency do, and I welcome the opportunity to express my views in this regard so that as it is being developed and fleshed out, hopefully some of my thoughts on this matter will be reflected in it.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to refer to the point of order made this morning by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) when he brought to the attention of the Chair that in accordance to the rule, which is relatively new, that there is a ten-minute question and comment period after a speech, attention should first be given to questions by members of a Party other than that of the Member who gave a speech. This is a new session and I would ask the Chair to give particular attention to this. My colleague was about to ask a question and, while I have no objection to members of the same Party asking questions, because the same would apply to us and others, that was the intention of that particular rule.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I agree entirely with what the Hon. Member has just said. He referred to the particular case where a member of the New Democratic Party and a member of the Conservative Party got up at the same time after the Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) completed his speech. I did not see the Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) get up. He got up the second time. That is why that Hon. Member was recognized. Now I will recognize the Member for Laurier on a question or comment. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) is right.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest that Process Technologies is located in the Hon. Member's constituency. I hope to visit that company shortly because up to now I have only had the opportunity to talk on the telephone once with its President, who I believe is George Jenkins, a member of the National Research Council. Has the Hon. Member been speaking to Mr. Jenkins lately and could he tell us what Mr. Jenkins feels about the $60 million cut in the Industrial Research Assistance Program of the National Research Council? Could he state today whether he is willing to make representations, if he has not done so already, to members of Cabinet to have the funding restored to that very worthy program?

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken to Mr. Jenkins lately and no, I do not have those representations. I will be going to the riding this weekend and I will call Mr. Jenkins and ask him his views and share them with the Hon. Member.

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, it is well known that my hon. colleague, the Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie), has a very good track record and has done some very valuable work in the field of family violence. What does he believe is the ultimate answer, if he has one, for a solution to this very important social problem?

Mr. Howie: I thank my colleague for that very formidable question. I wish I had an answer to the question of family violence. I believe that we should search for the answer through research and should accelerate the research in that regard. While moving on that front, we should continue to develop an escape route for battered spouses and children. I am rather pleased to see the Government moving very well in that direction, with more transition houses coming on-line.

I am pleased to see the social agencies across Canada doing some excellent work in that field. I am pleased to see the police receiving instruction in this field and becoming more active in it and that secondary housing is being made available for people who find themselves in that very distressing situation.

Some research which has been done at the University of British Columbia leads me to believe that inter-family violence may be an attitude that is learned and therefore can be unlearned through therapy sessions. Some success has taken place in this field of research, and frankly I am very encouraged by it. I feel that ultimately we will discover that the answer is in the field of education, but I do not mean education in the traditional sense where we transmit facts, exclusive of the experience that creates them, to people in a classroom situation. I refer to a much broader concept of education in the home environment, in the play environment and in the school environment.

I suspect that a broad educational approach to it in the long run may provide us with an answer. I hope that answer is acceptable to the Hon. Member and helps explain my position on it.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. First, is the period for questions and comments for the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) over?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, it is.

Mr. Malone: I have two questions on which I seek direction from the Chair. Basically, I am wondering if the House would accept the view that when there are points of order such as that raised by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), we allow the question period for the Member who has spoken to be completed before raising it?

I seek more specific guidance from the Chair with respect to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). He raised a subject about which I saw no mention in the Throne Speech nor heard any reference to in the speech by the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury. I do not believe that when a Member addresses the House of Commons he can be questioned on any subject. It is my understanding that the question is restricted to the subject matter in the Speech from the Throne or the Hon. Member's speech. I seek your clarification because I believe it is important as this House proceeds under the new rules that it be known to all Members.

• (1730)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: To answer the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), let me say that my understanding would be that a question asked during a question and comment period would have to relate to something in the Hon. Member's speech.

Mr. Malone: Thank you very much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, when I was preparing my remarks for this debate, I was looking for something suitably inspirational to say to start off with, given the new spirit which prevails in the House—

Mr. Allmand: Another Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Berger: That is exactly what I was going to say. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) stole my punch line. I did not read the Speech from the Throne, but I want you to know also, Mr. Speaker, that I did not read Keith Davey's book, either. I went back and looked at a book I read a number of years ago. It is an autobiography by the late Justice of the United States Supreme Court, William O. Douglas. Mr. Justice Douglas grew up in the State of Washington in a rather remote area. His father was a preacher, as I understand it, and he would go around to the outlying communities for Sunday morning services. The first time he turned up in a small community by the name of Dot, which I gather was appropriately named because there were hardly any inhabitants then and I gather today there are very few as well. The first time he showed up at church there was only one person in the audience. He waited a while and then he began the service with a hymn and a prayer. He then said to the lone parishioner: "What do you think? Should I continue or should I wait a week until the word of my arrival gets around?" The lone parishioner stood up and said: "Well, Rev. Douglas, I am only a cowboy, not a preacher, but if I had 40 horses to feed, a load of hay, but could only find one horse, I don't think I would let that horse go hungry". So Rev. Douglas proceeded to deliver a sermon which lasted over an hour.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Berger: I can see some of the Hon. Members concur. After the speech on his way out, the Rev. asked the cowboy how it went and the cowboy said: "Well, Rev. Douglas, I am only a cowboy but if I had 40 horses and a load of hay, and I could only find one horse, I would not have given him the whole load". Well, Mr. Speaker, we got the whole load in the Speech from the Throne last week.

The challenge for Canada, as I see it, and for the Canadian economy, has always been to increase the manufacturing or processing of goods in Canada, to create jobs in Canada and to reduce the exports of unprocessed raw materials Canadians, going back a century, have always tried to diversify our economy. We face the same challenge today. Our resource sector is declining and there is an inevitable move away from resources. There are a number of reasons for this. First, developing countries have increased the supply of resources such as coal, pulpwood, copper, nickel and iron ore. Second, this new supply of resources from developing countries has coincided with the slowdown in global growth. Third, there has been increased competition from what are known as new industrial materials. Copper is being replaced by fibre optics, and steel is being replaced by plastics and light metals such aluminium. The average man on the street knows that tennis rackets today are made out of graphite. The Macdonald Commission published figures which demonstrated that between 1964 and 1984 Canadian exports of food, mainly wheat, and crude and fabricated materials, dropped from 84 per cent of Canada's exports to 56 per cent.

Recently, the chairman of the Department of Food Sciences of a university in Western Canada asked me: "By the year 2000, will Canada export any wheat?" He provided his own answer. He said: "I doubt it". I would refer Hon. Members to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on September 20 which asks a rather startling question: "Should Canada quit farming?" I am not from western Canada but we have a lot of agriculture in Quebec. I am from an urban area, but I am sure that Hon. Members from rural areas would admit that this is a rather provocative and startling question. The article begins by saying:

> Canada prides itself on being the bread-basket of the world, but the reality is something else.
>
> Rank Canadian farmers with their international brethren, and they fall into place well down the line. France grows more wheat than Canada, and the value of farm products from both California and Iowa is greater than that for all of Canada. Even China and India, using little more than hand labour and Iron Age tools, outclass Canada when it comes to growing wheat.

I do not think I have to remind Hon. Members that the Government last month offered farmers nearly $50 million to go out of business. Anyone who has followed the trade talks—although the talks are being conducted behind closed doors—I think would agree that if there is any conclusion that can be drawn from those talks to date it is that it is going to be tougher to export our national resources and agricultural products. We are seeing, with the dispute over the export of cedar shakes and shingles, that either through voluntary restraint or through increased stumpage or increased duties, the United States wants us to reduce our exports of lumber products. The only solution for Canada, the only way to maintain the high standard of living we have been accustomed to, is to use our knowledge and skills to better develop new products than the competition. This does not mean to say that we abandon our resource of our agricultural sectors, nor our textiles and clothing. On the contrary. We can build on our strength in these areas to develop new products.

This is not just theory. I recently spent a week or 10 days visiting a number of firms which have participated in the National Research Council's Industrial Research Assistance Program, the program I referred to in my question to the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie). I visited a Toronto research company which has helped a number of firms in the agricultural and food industries use technology to develop new products for both domestic and international markets. For example, there is a company in the egg processing industry in Winnipeg which breaks one-half million eggs a day. It has developed a technology which removes water from the eggs and it exports powdered egg whites to Japan. The company also extracts an enzyme from the eggs which is also exported to Japan. That particular company is the largest producer of this enzyme in the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I also visited some plants in Saint-Valérien and Drummondville where new equipment has been developed for the lumber industry, not to mention snow blowers to be used on highways and on airport runways. I visited a company in Quebec City which has improved on existing products and has developed new ones thanks again to that industrial research program. The company is building industrial washers for hospitals and restaurants. In Montreal, I visited a company which has developed a new product to test jet motors for the Pratt & Whitney Company, a minimum investment by the Government of some $70,000 which has allowed the company to make sales worth $1.5 million this year.

• (1740)

[English]

I trust that these few examples demonstrate that we can build on our strength to diversify our economy. However, what is the record of the Conservative Government in research and development? First, I suggest that one has to go back to the promises made prior to the last election campaign and during that election campaign. We all remember the Prime Minister's best selling book—among Conservatives—entitled Where I Stand. The Prime Minister wrote the following in 1983:

> The starting line for me is the technological dimension. Either we go into the game and become important players in this major league or we become a nation that will, during its entire lifetime, play in the Junior B circuit.
>
> Research and development, and the resulting innovations, are the lifeblood of a successful economy and country.

He also urged that Canada's research and development efforts be exempted from government restraint programs. Instead, he called for a doubling of research and development spending by both the public and private sectors.

Since the election, rather than increased spending on R and D, as promised, we have seen cuts in almost all areas of government scientific support. The Science Council had its $5 million budget cut by one-half. In 1984, the National Research Council had $70 million cut from its budget of $500 million. The granting councils which provide funds for university research and research training had their budgets frozen. In June, we learned that the National Research Council's Industrial Research Assistance Program, to which I have been referring, was cut by $60 million over five years. This represents close to 20 per cent of its budget. As a consequence of these cuts Canada's research and development effort fell in the first part of 1986, for the first time in 15 years, with the exception of 1983.

[Translation]

The scientific community is frustrated and disappointed. They had put so much hope in this Government. It is possible, Mr. Speaker, that those who support increased expenditures for research and development have failed to convince decision-makers that research is of the utmost importance for the economic future of the country. It is also possible, Mr. Speaker, that the average Canadian finds it difficult to see any relation between research and his own job. The same could be said of the Prime Minister. He does not see any relation between his election commitments and the preservation of his own job. Well, I will try today to explain that relation.

During my visits, I met with many businessmen and I will tell you now about some of their comments. I particularly remember a conversation with a businessman from Quebec City, a founding member of the Groupement québecois d'entreprises. This organization is made up of some 500 small- and medium-sized businesses whose turnover varies between $2.5 and $3 million and which have an average staff of 50 employees. During the last five years the group has made a substantial effort to increase its members' awareness of the importance of research and development.

I am told that initially, members of the group thought research was something for big companies. It was necessary to explain to members that for them, development was more likely to mean adapting existing technology to their products or their manufacturing processes.

I was also told, Mr. Speaker, that the typical entrepreneur is the guy who has a patent on his invention. It may not be perfect, it may not be high technology, but it is new, and the main thing is that it makes a profit. Often, however, the entrepreneur meets with obstacles. He has to deal with a problem in terms of product quality or the manufacturing process. For instance, he may have a welding problem, but the typical entrepreneur doesn't know about material resistance. He doesn't know about welding and he doesn't know how to solve his problem. He doesn't have the technical know-how.

Mr. Speaker, that is where the IRAP program comes in. The program makes it possible for entrepreneurs to consult experts, post-graduate students who come to the company to work on a specific problem for three or four months, to try and find the answer. Someone told me that IRAP is a small program that gives experts a chance to focus on a particular detail.

Mr. Speaker, the results are incredible. Companies that were not moving four or five years ago have developed new products which today are responsible for the majority of their sales. Often, experts or academics hired for this three-or four-month period have become research directors for the same companies. Today, they are leading a research team of four or five or more. That same Quebec businessman also said that IRAP and another program sponsored by the Government of Quebec have helped the entrepreneur to approach academics. At first, the entrepreneur thinks that the university is going to upset his business and he is afraid of the academic. It is necessary to overcome this mistrust and the entrepreneur must be encouraged to work on development. IRAP has often been successfully in doing so.

From the information I have seen, a number of companies would not be in existence today without research and the program sponsored by IRAP. Most new products did not exist four or five years ago.

Another point, all company directors I met were asked the following question: "Would you have done this research without the support of IRAP?" And the answer was unanimous: No. Why? Well, because these small businesses often lack the financial resources, and besides, the program gave them the kind of credibility that allowed them to seek financing elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, it is against this background that we should evaluate the new promises made in the Speech from the Throne. I must say it is encouraging to see the priority given to research, on paper. However, encouragement on paper doesn't pay for research on the factory floor. That takes money. Holding consultations, creating committees is all very well, but it all leads to nothing tangible.

I would like to quote one of the conclusions of the National Conference on Technology held in Winnipeg earlier this year. Everyone at the conference agreed that the Government should spend more on research.

Mr. Speaker, the Government keeps telling us that the existing budget must not be exceeded. However, I suggest that the cut-backs should be made elsewhere and that research and development funds should be increased.

I recognize that certain decisions are hard to make, but such is the mandate that the Conservative Government has received from the Canadian people. I now say to the Government Members: If you are not ready to make the necessary difficult decisions today, we shall do so in your place in two years.

I shall close by saying that in view of all that I and the Conservative Government have learned about IRAP, in view of my own visits to these businesses and in view of the Nielsen and the Wright report which both praise this program, I ask the Government to show its good faith by reconsidering the decision to withdraw $60 million from the IRAP program. These funds should be reallocated or else the budget of this program, which is vital for the future of Canadian small businesses, should be increased.

• (1750)

[English]

Mr. Malone: First, Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment to say to the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) that I always appreciate the work that he does in preparing for his speeches and particularly the tone in which he delivers them. I think it is healthy for all of us in the House to bear his example in mind.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member of something. He tells us that France is producing wheat at levels much in excess of that of the Canadian prairies. He should bear in mind that therein lies one of the major problems we have with Canadian agriculture today. One must keep in perspective the fact that 70 per cent of a French farmer's take-home pay comes directly from that nation's Treasury. It is not the agricultural efficiency that is at question, it is rather the competition between international treasuries that is the problem.

The truth is that there is no place in the world, with the exception of the places in the United States where corn is raised, where agriculture is produced as efficiently as it is on the Canadian Prairies. With that in mind, may I ask the Hon. Member if he might consider that perhaps the most important avenue the people of Canada can take is the use of whatever sources are available to stop the trade war between the European Economic Community and the United States? Clearly it is, at least in my view, the central and single most damaging thing to agriculture in Canada today. I would appreciate the Hon. Member's response.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comment and I agree with him. I do not have any doubt that Canadian farmers are among the most efficient in the world or are perhaps the most efficient in the world in the limited areas in which we can devote ourselves to agriculture. However, I think the Hon. Member will recognize along with me that it is only a small part of Canada's land that is amenable to agriculture.

Yes, we have to take initiatives in the area of trade, and yes, it is extremely important to try to put an end to this trade war. The only thing I have to say about that, though, is that trade wars and subsidies of Governments of various kinds will probably continue in one manner or another. They will always find a different manner to get around various established trade rules. However, if one looks again at the general trend over the course of the past 20 years, it has been that agricultural sales have accounted for and are accounting for a smaller part of our export sales. My argument is that we have to be one step ahead of the game. We have to apply technology to our products in order to sell products about which other people have perhaps not thought yet.

I do not have to remind the Hon. Member that canola is one of the great success stories of Canadian agricultural research. If we could have a couple more success stories like that, then perhaps we would be able to withstand the trade wars, the bad weather and all of the other things that are sent to make our lives difficult.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question to ask. The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) referred in his speech to a number of concerns that he had regarding the status of research and development through to production in Canada. I know that he spent a great deal of time researching this topic.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on the statements made by the present Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) on many occasions to the effect that in fact the Government has not cut in the areas of scientific research. There seems to be a contradiction here. The Minister says that there have been no cuts, and yet one continues to read in so many sources that there appear to be not only cuts but serious reductions in the support the present Government is giving to research and development, and particularly to R and D through to production.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He does not have to believe me. He can look at independent sources. If he were to read articles which have appeared recently in The Financial Post or the words of any number of commentators, he would see that there have been substantial cuts in federal support for research and development since the Government was elected. As I pointed out in my remarks, this runs contrary to the undertakings made by the Conservative Party and by the then Leader of the Conservative Party prior to the last election.

As I mentioned in my remarks, in 1983 the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated that if there was any area that should be exempt from restraint programs, it should be research and development. Indeed, the comment that I hear on my travels and while visiting companies is that when times are tough, one must invest in research.

The president of a company located in St. Valérien told me that in 1981 and 1982, at the height of the recession, he was investing in research and was developing new products. Because of that, his company is in good health today, but some of his competitors who did not have the same foresight and did not make the same kind of investments at that time have gone out of business.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate my colleague on a very well thought out and excellent presentation. What does he feel the impact of these cuts in research and development will be on our youth and on jobs, jobs, jobs for the future?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, again I can give some graphic examples of young people with masters degrees and doctoral degrees who have found employment in the private sector in the past few years thanks to the Industrial Research and Assistance Program. Without that kind of funding, these kinds of people are basically high and dry and on their way to the United States.

• (1800)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENERGY—PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, over the past summer I spent most of my time talking with my constituents. Of course I talked with them in my office, on their own doorsteps, and at various community meetings. As Your Honour can imagine, there was a variety of subjects which were concerning them over the course of the summer. I am sure you will not find it a surprise that they talked with me about the Post Office, the question of capital punishment, the Tamil refugees, and even about building penitentiaries in the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Despite all those things, if there was one over-all recurring problem about which they spoke with me most, it was the whole question of gasoline prices. My constituents understand, as do all other Canadians, that the price of a barrel of oil has fallen very substantially over the past few months. Of course they understand that that is creating hardships for Canadians in the oil producing parts of the country. As well they understand that they probably must share some of the burden in order to help Canadians, who are suffering as a result, over the hurdle. They understand all that, but they do not understand, with the price of a barrel of oil falling and with the fact that other Canadians are out of work because of falling oil prices, why that is not reflected more in the price they pay for gasoline at the pumps.

Particularly they do not understand why there is such a difference between the price of gasoline in the United States and here in Canada. They do not understand why when they go to the United States they pay something like 69 cents American per gallon, or in Canadian terms 20 cents Canadian per litre, and when they return to Toronto they pay something like 36 cents Canadian per litre, or if they come here to Ottawa they pay more like 41 cents Canadian per litre.

I tried to explain to them that the difference probably was reflected mainly in taxes, taxes which provincial and federal Governments imposed in order to improve our lot in life and to improve our wonderful social security system which of course

Americans do not have. That very well may be the case, they say, but why is it that there is such a wide spread in prices between leaded and unleaded gasoline in Canada as opposed to the United States? They pointed out to me that in Canada the price spread between leaded and unleaded gasoline is something like three cents to four cents Canadian per litre, while in the United States it is something like two cents American per gallon or, in Canadian terms, one-half cent Canadian per litre. This means that the price spread is something like 5.5 times greater in Canada than it is in the United States, notwithstanding the fact that the Parliamentary Secretary is shaking his head.

At the same time they pointed out to me that in a recent article in The Financial Post, Imperial Oil or Esso indicated that it only costs one-half cent Canadian per litre more to produce unleaded gasoline than it does to produce leaded gasoline.

I answered them by saying that it was the taxes and the social security system which we have in Canada. They came right back at me and said: "Okay, but why is it that in West Germany unleaded gasoline costs two cents per litre less than leaded gasoline, even though it costs more to produce unleaded gasoline than it does to produce leaded gasoline?" The fact is, they say, that the taxes in West Germany make a heck of a lot more sense than the taxes on gasoline in this country. In fact this country is encouraging people to buy leaded gas instead of unleaded gas. Of course that is creating more acid rain and more pollution. I did not have a wonderful answer to that, so I came back to Ottawa and in our first Question Period I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) that question. After I heard his answer, I was just as confused as my constituents.

• (1805)

I am here today to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether he can give me a better explanation so that I will feel more at ease and my constituents will not feel that they are being ripped off.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) who always represents his constituents very well here in the House of Commons. His concern for consumers is legend. I appreciate him drawing this matter to the attention of the House of Commons.

I think the Hon. Member will find that since there has been a dramatic drop in the price of a barrel of oil that the corresponding drop in the price of a litre of gasoline has corresponded to that drop. Also, this summer we experienced gas wars in our particular area of Ontario. These wars are going on in the West at the present and this has to do with marketing. Generally speaking, the price of a litre of gasoline has dropped from 52 cents a litre for regular leaded gasoline to 35 cents to 41 cents a litre for regular leaded gasoline, depending on the market.

First, I want to emphasize that the Government does not set gasoline prices. They are dictated by the market-place. We are seeing that in this country with the various markets and the competition that we have. I just mentioned the prices which vary from day to day and week to week. It is very confusing when the consumer sees prices going up and down. But that is the market-place at work. It is the same as your shirt, your suit or a tie being on sale. Competition is at work in the market-place. It is healthy and it helps the consumer.

Yes, there is a price differential in a litre of gas comparable to a litre of gas in the U.S. Forty per cent is made up of taxes and the other 60 per cent is market differential. There is no question about that and that explains the price differential.

With regard to the Member's question, namely the difference between leaded and unleaded gasoline prices, I am going to use figures for July because they are the latest average figures we have for both Canada and the United States on a comparable basis. The average price differential in July between leaded and unleaded gasoline was approximately 1.9 cents per litre higher in Canada than in the United States. At that time the average Canadian price of gasoline, in Canadian cents per litre so we do not have to do any conversions, was 41.5 cents for regular leaded—this is all Canada average—and 45.4 cents for regular unleaded, a 3.9 cent a litre differential. The corresponding prices in the United States were 29.8 cents and 31.8 cents a litre, a 2 cent a litre differential. Those are the facts, not the figures mentioned by the Member earlier.

• (1810)

It is interesting to note that the Canadian average is influenced by the higher unleaded gasoline volumes sold in Quebec where the leaded/unleaded differential is the largest in the country, which throws the average out quite a bit. Of the differential, four-tenths of 1 cent is accredited to taxes. The rest is the higher octane component which is more expensive to put into the gasoline. The Hon. Member mentioned a figure of one of the oil companies. I cannot substantiate that. Notwithstanding these products-costs differences, it is the market, not the Government, which ultimately sets the prices of both grades.

[Translation]

PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS A) RECOMMENDATION OF THE EASTMAN COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT POSITION B) PRICE OF NEW DRUGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, if I take the floor this evening it is because the answer of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to my question concerning drug patents is vague, incomplete and open to interpretation.

When I raised the matter I wanted to know whether the Minister was considering the possibility of bringing his Bill in line with the recommendations contained in the Eastman Commission report.

The Minister said no. But, Mr. Speaker, the Minister is right to suggest that it was the Liberal Party which raised the possibility of amending the drug patents legislation. That is why we appointed the Eastman Commission. To us in the Liberal Party, the recommendations contained in the commission report seemed reasonable, and for several reasons. First, it was an independent inquiry and, as such, less subject to possible pressures from various interest groups. Second, the commission made recommendations which took into consideration the needs of all those involved in this industry, including consumers, innovating companies, generic companies, the scientific community as well as the provinces.

The Minister replied that he had considered the pros and cons of his solution. He came to the conclusion that the advantages of the proposition made last June are more numerous and significant than the existing advantage, which is control over declining drug prices.

So, Mr. Speaker, I find it necessary to go back in time and remind the Minister that price control is not the main purpose of the 1969 amendments. High drug prices in Canada before 1969 were nothing more than a symptom of an overly concentrated drug industry. This fact was amply demonstrated in three reports published before 1969. I will merely mention the report of the House of Commons Restrictrive Trade Practices Committee and the Harley report. Both reports dealt with the manufacturing and marketing of pharmaceuticals. They showed that the drug industry has made excessive profits and has imposed unreasonable costs to Canadian consumers.

What we have here is an industry which before 1969 had no hesitation making huge profits on the backs of Canadians. That industry asked the Government for changes, and those changes were studied by an independent committee. The latter recommended that steps be taken to maintain a balance between the various interests involved. Despite all those democratic efforts, the Minister has succeeded in giving all of the pie to the drug industry, claiming that the benefits of that policy are better than the recommendations of an independent committee.

As you will agree, Mr. Speaker, this is quite amazing.

The 1969 amendments were aimed at fostering greater competition in a monopolistic industry. There is every indication that we succeeded. We developed a situation where we have lower prices, greater choice in drug prices, and, above all, we set up the makings of a Canadian pharmaceutical industry, in the form of generic drug companies, without endangering the profitability of the general drug industry in the opinion of the Eastman Committee.

Today the Minister answered that the benefits of such drastic changes are better than the current situation, better than the Eastman report recommendations. The burden of proof rests on his shoulders. The Minister went further when addressing my second question. He would not say whether the prices of new drugs would be higher. He said: higher compared with what? Compared with prices paid now, Mr. Speaker. More specifically, compared with those paid between 1969 and 1986. The Minister seems to rely on the good will of innovative companies. Also he seems to believe that price increases are not likely. He went on saying that he would set up a review board for drug prices. Which means that the Minister expects increases in the prices of drugs; otherwise, he would not have felt necessary to set up a watch-dog organization to monitor prices.

For that matter, during the public hearing held by the Liberal Party on September 23 last, the Consumers' Association of Canada advised us of its experience with price control boards such as the one proposed by the Minister.

In its opinion, price control boards make it possible for corporations to get away with huge profits at the expense of consumers. It is nothing but a legal front to justify high prices. The Consumers' Association of Canada told us that these monitoring boards are outright failures and that it is not much encouraged by the prospect of a new one.

To conclude, I repeat that the burden of proof remains with the Minister. If he should persist in not addressing the issues we are raising in good faith, he will give rise to a great many suspicions concerning these initiatives. The Minister should and must demonstrate the so-called great benefits which Canada would have got from his proposal. He should demand from the companies a copy of all feasibility studies or, better still, any concrete plan which would cause us to say: Yes, the Bill makes sense. In fact, we would appreciate any study in this area by the innovating companies, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and of course the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. You will understand that I am acting and speaking as an ordinary citizen when I ask you to show and explain the basis for your decision, Mr. Minister. The people are very wary of Governments these days. We must all do our share to try and improve this image. I hope the Minister is prepared to do his share, since otherwise, the Government's proposal will look like a conspiracy against the people of this country.

• (1815)

[English]

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question raised, we will first be proposing measures to exploit the significant potential of the pharmaceutical sector, turning it into what we would consider to be a world-class, highly innovative industry characterized by strong growth in investment, employment, research and development and manufacturing activity. Second, and perhaps equally as important, we propose to ensure that Canadians will continue to benefit from reasonable drug prices.

These are our objectives. To reach them, the Government has built upon the recommendations of the Eastman Commission which concluded that our patent policy was in need of rebalancing in a manner that will provide strong incentives for new investment and growth in the industry while safeguarding the interests of consumers. The prices of drugs already on the market will not be affected one bit by our policy proposals. It is also important to keep in mind that the benefit of generic drug competition will continue.

Remember that currently only 7 per cent of prescription drug sales are subject to generic competition. Canadians have no way of knowing if they are paying a fair price for the remaining 93 per cent of drugs on pharmacy shelves. The Drug Prices Review Board will have a mandate to review all prescription drug prices. The Board will be assessing drug prices in relation to factors such as the Consumer Price Index, the actual production costs of the drug and the price of similar drugs in other countries.

I would also like to draw Members' attention to a major provision of the proposed policy which requires a thorough review of this policy after a four-year period. If it is evident that the policy is not working or that the industry has not met its commitments, the Government will change the policy.

The innovative sector of the industry has made a firm commitment to increase its ratio of R and D to sales to a level of 8 per cent by 1990 and 10 per cent by 1995, which is double the existing level of less than 5 per cent. These undertakings translate into an additional investment in R and D activity of $1.4 billion over the next 10 years. In 1995, R and D outlays will exceed $600 million per year. Some 30 per cent of these expenditures will flow to Canadian universities, hospitals and research establishments.

In the process, we forecast that 3,000 scientific and research-related jobs will be directly created—opportunities that are badly needed for our university graduates. The manufacturing provisions are likely to generate additional new jobs in the chemical manufacturing sector. The added protection afforded pharmaceutical discoveries will not only foster growth in R and D, but should also translate into a greater volume of manufacturing and export activity in the Canadian drug industry. This, in turn, should have a highly beneficial impact on a closely-related field, medical research, where Canadians are at the leading edge, worldwide, in many specialties.

[Translation]

PENITENTIARIES—REASONS OF PRIME MINISTER FOR CHOOSING HIS OWN RIDING

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to congratulate you on your appointment as Deputy Speaker, and I am sure you will perform your duties with your customary distinction and style.

Mr. Speaker, today I put a question to the Prime Minister about the Conservative Government's decision to build a new penitentiary at Port-Cartier in the Prime Minister's riding. The Prime Minister tried to justify this decision by implying that the unemployment rate in his riding is very high.

Earlier today, Mr. Speaker, I gave some figures on the unemployment rate in many other ridings in the Province of Quebec and I asked the Prime Minister to explain to the House and to Quebecers why he did not build this penitentiary elsewhere if indeed the real reason was the high unemployment rate in his riding.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, in April 1985 when the Government decided to build the penitentiary in the Prime Minister's riding, the unemployment rate in Port-Cartier was 13 per cent. Much too high, of course, but then the unemployment rate was 22 per cent in Rimouski, 15.6 per cent in Chicoutimi, and 19.6 per cent in Gaspé.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that it was not because the unemployment rate was very high that the penitentiary was to be built in the riding of the Prime Minister. On the contrary, it was simply a gift made to the voters in the Prime Minister's riding. Well, Mr. Speaker, it was a gift which is costing a lot of money to Canadian taxpayers—at least $16 million more in capital expenditures and at least $3 million a year to operate the penitentiary. Not to mention, Mr. Speaker, the question of the remoteness of families and correctional service professionals from this penitentiary in Port-Cartier. This is why all agencies related to correctional services unanimously censure the Conservative Government for making this decision.

Mr. Speaker, it was not a coincidence that the penitentiary is to be located in the Prime Minister's riding, some 400 kilometres from the major urban centre of Quebec City.

• (1820)

[English]

I would note that the announcement of the prison at Port-Cartier was in fact made on June 18, which was over two weeks before Treasury Board approved this decision. That is no coincidence. As every Member of the House knows, the reality is that this was blatant political pork-barrelling by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to look after his own riding. It is one thing if that does not cost any extra money, but as I pointed out, what the Prime Minister is doing is looking after his own constituents on the North Shore of Quebec at the very considerable expense of Canadian taxpayers.

Not only that, he is locating a prison in an isolated area of Quebec in which services are lacking and in which the possibility of family reunification—that important and fundamental link between the families and friends of prisoners—is totally lacking. That has been condemned as well.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret)—

[Translation]

Mr. de Cotret implied that the decision had been made in February 1984. However, Mr. Speaker, the facts do not confirm this. In February 1984 a Liberal Government was in office and it had decided to build the penitentiary in Drummondville, not in Port-Cartier. Apparently, the President of the Treasury Board made a mistake to protect the Prime Minister.

[English]

But Canadians know better. Canadians are asking themselves if it is really necessary to build another maximum security prison in this country at all. Is it really a priority at this time to spend some $70 million to build a new maximum security prison? I suggest that it is rather obscene to have this battle between one region and another as to who is going to have the prison in their particular region. We do not construct prisons in this country as regional economic development projects. We build prisons if there is a demonstrated need and we build them where they are correctionally sound. This particular project falls down on both counts.

• (1825)

The Liberals did the same thing in building a prison in Renous, the Atlantic institution in the Province of New Brunswick. They said they were building it for economic development reasons and, of course, it was political patronage by the Liberals as well. It is time we placed a moratorium on the construction of new prisons in this country. It is certainly time that we re-examine the fundamental philosophy underlying the correctional system. We imprison too many people and in many cases sentences are too long. In this particular case, not only was the construction of the prison wrong, but the abuse of the Prime Minister's Office, for his own personal political gain at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada, is shocking and shameful.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, and it has been stated in the House at various times over the past few days, this Government is committed to addressing the problem of regional disparity. Upon taking office in September, 1984, our Government ordered a freeze on major capital expenditures in order to determine which projects could best address the problem of regional disparity and to decide which projects should proceed.

The Correctional Services of Canada required additional beds for maximum and protective custody inmates. The Government decided rather than build another penitentiary beside Drummond in Drummondville, that in the interests of regional development another site in a regionally depressed area should be chosen.

As the Hon. Member knows, parts of northern Quebec suffer from very high rates of unemployment. The Government chose to locate the required facility in Port-Cartier due to its high level of unemployment and to stimulate the local economy. The Government offers no apology for assisting the region.

It is estimated that the institution will directly employ 223 persons and it is expected to create an additional 200 jobs in the area. Many of these new jobs will go to local people and plans are well under way to accommodate this. The Port-Cartier facility will meet the need as identified by the Correctional Services of Canada for protective custody in Quebec. The need was identified and the Government, in the interests of regional development, chose a site where a prison could be built to achieve both CSC's requirement and relieve regional disparity. Just because Canadians happen to live in a Prime Minister's constituency, does the Hon. Member believe they should not be given the same consideration as other people across Canada?

In summary, the reasons for building the institution in Port-Cartier, Quebec, are relatively straightforward. First, there was a need for a protective custody penitentiary in the Province of Quebec; second, as Port-Cartier suffered from a very high rate of unemployment, it was felt that the penitentiary should be built in Port-Cartier to address the problems of regional disparity.

The Government has absolutely no apology to make for the decision to use the construction of a major facility as a measure to relieve regional disparity. That is the reason the Government made the decision and that is why this Government stands firmly behind its decision and its policy to assist depressed areas of our country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 8, 1986

The House met at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

PUBLIC WORKS

DELAY IN SALE OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE FALCONBRIDGE

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I call on the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to break the bureaucratic log-jam concerning the sale of Canadian Forces Base Falconbridge. A submission to Treasury Board was made on July 18 concerning alternate uses for the Base. The submission has the full support of the Sudbury community, as well as Public Works Canada, the Department of National Defence and, I am told, the Prime Minister's Office. The only result achieved to date has been mounting frustration. Is this simply another indication of the Government's lack of commitment to regional development? I certainly hope not.

I ask the Minister of Public Works to meet on an urgent basis with the President of the Treasury Board to resolve this matter speedily which, I reiterate, has the complete backing of the Sudbury community, and which appears to be delayed solely by bureaucratic bungling.

* * *

• (1405)

ECCLESIASTICAL AFFAIRS

PRIMATE OF POLAND'S VISIT TO CANADA

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, we are honoured today by the arrival in Canada of his Eminence Cardinal Jozef Glemp, Primate of Poland, who begins a 10-day pastoral visit to this country. The Cardinal's home country of Poland has a population of some 35 million, over 90 per cent of which is Catholic.

His visit will be of inspiration to our many Polish-Canadian Catholics and provides a sharp contrast to the obstacles faced by over 2 million Poles presently living in the Soviet Union. In the hearts of those Poles the Cardinal enjoys a special affection. As Canadians we enjoy the freedom to worship. Catholics living in the U.S.S.R. must face harassment and even imprisonment should they dare to practise their beliefs openly.

I call upon my colleagues to join with me in welcoming the Cardinal to our shores and to wish him success in his efforts to provide Polish Catholics with inspiration and encouragement in the face of great adversity.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF DISSIDENTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the release of Soviet dissident Yuri Orlov as an aftermath of the Daniloff affair has been welcomed as a step toward helping thousands who wish to emigrate from the Soviet Union. At the same time we are reminded of the extreme difficulties facing many of the other dissidents and the extraordinary measures that have been required to be taken by families and friends in the Soviet Union and support groups around the world, including Canada, to help them.

Many of Orlov's friends are still imprisoned in that country because they are members of persecuted Soviet human rights groups such as the Helsinki Accords Watch Committees. There are Russian, Ukrainian, and Armenian Watch Committees.

To give real meaning to the Helsinki Accords, I and other Members of this House call on the Government of the Soviet Union to respect the human rights of Yuri Orlov's friends, including Anatoly Marchenko, Antoly Kryagin, Josip Begin, Andrei Sakharov and many others by allowing them to leave the Soviet Union now.

* * *

ABORTION

STATISTICS CANADA—DECISION TO STOP KEEPING RECORDS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that Statistics Canada will no longer be keeping a record of the number of abortions in Canada each year. Surely officials of Statistics Canada cannot be serious when they suggest this information is not relevant.

If this information was not relevant, why was it being kept? Even as I speak lawyers are arguing the abortion issue before the Supreme Court of Canada just down the street. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians on both sides of the abortion debate make use of this information. Surely that is more Canadians than the group who want to know how many water taps there are in Canada.

It is difficult not to conclude that officials of StatsCan are revealing a bias against informed debate on the abortion issue. This decision must be reversed.

* * *

[Translation]

PATENT ACT

GOVERNMENT POSITION—PHARMACEUTICALS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have every reason to believe that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) is about to bury the drug patents legislation in an omnibus Bill which will include copyrights.

This strategy can have only one purpose, namely make Canadians swallow the Government's propositions on drug patents by diluting them in the urgent and essential reform of copyrights.

Mr. Speaker, it is unconceivable that the Minister would even consider equating the health of Canadians with the copyrights on a cookbook or a chainsaw.

It was a Liberal Government which, in 1969, made the drug industry more competitive by lowering drug prices, with the result that Canadians now pay less to remain healthy.

I hope the Minister will steer clear of an omnibus Bill designed to make Canadians swallow this pill.

I also hope the Minister will display enough courage to revise his legislation and bring it into line with the Eastman Commission recommendations. I can assure him that Canadian men and women will be ever grateful.

Stay healthy, Mr. Minister!

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

REASONS FOR FUND-RAISING CAMPAIGNS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, before September 4, 1984, the Liberal Government forgot to hand out one patronage favour— one that should have gone to Mrs. Campagnolo.

As reported in today's Globe and Mail, she is calling upon Liberal fund raisers to collect $75,000, an amount that would practically wipe out 30 to 40 per cent of the total tax savings those Liberals would be enjoying by making political contributions. How arrogant, how indecent!

This summer, the Liberal Party came up with a novelty of dubious taste by offering their donors to refund contributions on request, in the event donors were dissatisfied by December, 1986.

The most revealing survey is that the Liberal Party cannot even raise funds anymore. Canadian taxpayers will not pay for Mrs. Campagnolo's mortgage.

* * *

• (1410)

[English]

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

RIDLEY TERMINALS, B. C.—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have turned over to the Auditor General and the Commercial Crime Squad of the RCMP details of the financial affairs of the Ridley Terminals at Prince Rupert and Federal Commerce and Navigation.

Today I call on the Government of Canada to assist in this matter by immediately referring all books and documents related to this matter to the Auditor General and the RCMP.

A deal struck by the Liberals and continued by the Conservatives stands to rip off the taxpayers of Canada and the project for close to $1 billion. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is aware of the scandal and should demonstrate the leadership for which he is known, by revealing all federal documentation and protecting the taxpayers and the Ridley operation from further abuse.

* * *

DISASTERS

STORM DAMAGE CAUSED BY GREAT LAKES HIGH WATER LEVELS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, high winds combined with high water levels on the Great Lakes Monday caused thousands of dollars of damage to a hotel in my constituency of Sarnia—Lambton. Forty-six rooms were awash with up to five inches of water. Strong northwest winds were up again yesterday, compounding the problem.

I am aware that the causes of the Great Lakes high water levels have been a natural phenomenon and I commend the actions of the Government in looking for possible solutions. The International Joint Commission is once again studying the possibility of implementing Plan 25N which could, over time, reduce water levels in Lake Erie. This would in turn reduce high water levels in Lake Huron. I urge the Government to ensure that the IJC study on 25N be completed as soon as possible. It is absolutely essential that all possible avenues be explored, but we must move quickly on those which have already been studied. Immediate action and continued co-operation between Canada and the United States and the Province of Ontario could assist in the prevention of future disasters.

* * *

FISHERIES

FISHERIES PRODUCTS INTERNATIONAL—POSSIBLE CONSEQUENCES OF SHARE OFFERING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is preparing to offer a $140 million share offering of Fishery Products International through a Toronto investment house. This is a share offering on a company that has received over $270 million in a public infusion of cash over the last number of years.

The people of Newfoundland, the workers in the fish plants and, indeed, the fishermen in the Province of Newfoundland, want to know why the Government is selling off this company at only 50 cents on the dollar. They want assurances that were given to be kept, that the jobs in the fish plants affected by this company will remain open despite the share offering. The Government of Canada should come clean before any sale is completed.

* * *

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY ON TIMBER STUMPAGE FEES

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, on Monday in the House the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) took our Government and the Premier of British Columbia to task for publicly announcing that B. C. stumpage fees on timber might be too low. He said that these public musings hurt the Canadian position in the countervailing duty case.

It would be nice if the NDP got their act together on this issue. That same day in the House, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) said, as reported at page 82 of Hansard:

> Many of us in the New Democratic Party have said many times in the past year or more that Canada and the United States should conduct negotiations on the forest industry, including—whether or not stumpage fees need improvement.

As well, on September 9 in British Columbia, NDP provincial leader Bob Skelly said: "There's a lot wrong with B. C.'s stumpage system, and the review is a good idea". He went on to say: "There are serious problems with the stumpage". Clearly, as far as the NDP is concerned, it is all right to discuss stumpage fees publicly as long as you are not a Progressive Conservative Minister of Trade, or a Social Credit Premier.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—INCARCERATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS LEADERS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, last year Canada restored financial aid to El Salvador on the grounds that President Napoleon Duarte would protect human rights. This year Duarte has proved Canada wrong. Four months ago Duarte's Government seized eight human rights leaders, tortured them, publicly accused them of belonging to the rebels, and to this day holds them incommunicado without charges, without court appearance, without means of defence.

Duarte's Government has also broadcast accusations that the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches give money to the rebels, an accusation which endangers the lives of church leaders. Canadians and Americans seeking to visit El Salvador, which is aided by our Government, to witness the massacre and bombing of civilian peasants and the selective terror against human rights leaders, have been harassed, sometimes jailed or even denied visas.

It is high time that Canada stop giving money to Duarte's regime and condemn the police and military terror of the Government of El Salvador.

* * *

• (1415)

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN ABSTENTION FROM ICAO VOTE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, on the one hand the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) tells the House again and again that he is extremely concerned about the issue of apartheid. On the other hand, when Canada has a chance to take a stand, as was made possible yesterday with the International Civil Aviation Organization vote, again we abstained.

Not only did we abstain on the International Civil Aviation vote which would have cut off all air links with South Africa, but at the same time the Canadian Government, through Crown corporations like Canadian National, has aided and abetted the apartheid cause by accepting a South Africa delegation to an international science conference in British Columbia.

It seems to me if Canada is truly concerned about the issue of apartheid, it had better start putting its votes where its talk is and stop the rhetoric here in the House of Commons. It should make sure that Canada gets off the abstentions and gets on the record on issues like air travel back and forth between Canada, the United States and South Africa. At the moment the answer from the Government is more rhetoric and no action.

* * *

LABOUR RELATIONS

VANCOUVER PORT LOCK-OUT—EFFECT ON SASKATCHEWAN ECONOMY

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the lock-out announced yesterday of the longshoremen by the B.C. Maritime Employers' Association in the Port of Vancouver will have many devastating effects on the four western provinces. I am particularly concerned about grain farmers and potash producers in Saskatchewan. For example, the Saskatchewan potash industry will suffer immensely. There are seven Saskatchewan companies which mine potash, with sales through Vancouver totalling about three million tonnes per year.

Saskatchewan is a bulk supplier of grain and potash to world markets and should not be involved in this container dispute. Steps must be taken to regain the use of these facilities in Vancouver and Prince Rupert. I certainly commend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) for his planned action taken in Thunder Bay and I hope similar action will be used here.

Longshoremen must come to terms with this dilemma and reinstitute operations in order to minimize the damage to western farmers and potash miners. This act of manipulation, the strangling of our resources, must come to an end. Yesterday would be none too soon.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the Prime Minister will be here at 2.30. I would like to wait.

* * *

TRADE

THREAT OF UNITED STATES TAX ON CANADIAN EXPORTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question was to be directed to the Minister for International Trade but in her absence perhaps I can direct it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the decision which is being taken today by the House of Representatives and the Senate in the United States on a money Bill which will include a new customs tax on all imports which, if passed today, will add up to half a billion dollars of additional costs on for all Canadian exports going to the United States.

Why does the Government of Canada not make the strongest of all possible representations against the inclusion of that measure in this particular money Bill?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we did make the strongest representations possible to us. As the Hon. Member will know, there is in the United States now a climate not only of protectionism but of insularity which leads to measures of that kind in the economic sphere. We have done what we can. We believe it is a most regrettable move.

REQUEST FOR PRESIDENTIAL VETO

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister if he would not agree that this particular move by the U.S. Congress is a direct contradiction of the agreement which was arrived at the Quebec Summit between the Prime Minister and President Reagan, plus the contravention of many international trade rules. Under that circumstance, would the Government consider putting on notice that we will be requesting the President of the United States to veto that Bill if it is passed because it includes a major contravention of that agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not purport to instruct the President of the United States as to the exercise of his power of veto. However, we have made very clear our regret at this particular measure which is under consideration now in the U.S. Congress.

* * *

[Translation]

RAILWAYS

INTENTION OF CN AND CP—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is the Minister aware that Canadian National and Canadian Pacific intend to abandon half of their railway network in Canada and that CN wants to abandon about 1,650 kilometers of railway tracks in Quebec? Does the Government intend to turn down these applications which will deprive towns such as Sorel, Granby, Victoriaville and Val d'Or of all railway services?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am aware, as everyone in this House is aware, that all of the railways in Canada wish to abandon the lines on which they claim they cannot make a profit and on which they incur only losses. So there is nothing new in the story that is in the newspaper today, absolutely nothing new.

The Hon. Member should know that the two railways, CN and CP, will have to observe the law of this country and that they can abandon no lines, whether they be branch lines or main lines, without applying to the Canadian Transport Commission and without passing certain public interest tests, as well as economic tests and others. Neither CN nor CP will receive any assistance from me or the Government in abandoning any lines except with the strictest proof that passes the strictest surveillance of the CTC. Of that Hon. Members can be assured.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT RAILWAYS' PROPOSALS BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the CN and the CP are talking about cutting one-half of their rail lines across the country. Does the Minister realize what the impact would be of a further abandonment of 50 per cent of the railway lines in western Canada? Will he ensure that the proposals of the railway companies are made public immediately so that they can be judged by the people of western Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the stories today have not to do with western Canada, they have to do with eastern Canada. No matter what part of Canada, east, west, north or south, both CN and CP will observe the laws of the country. Under the provisions of the legislation, they will continue to accommodate all traffic offered to them. They can scheme and plot and have a wish list in their head offices, or in any office in the country, but we will see that they pay the strictest attention to the convenience and necessity of the Canadian public.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Last Friday the Prime Minister seemed to announce a $1 billion assistance program for grain farmers as a result of a desperation phone call made by Premier Devine. I have been talking to a number of farmers who want to know how much of this money will go to the western region, how much will go to the eastern region and how much will go to Atlantic Canada. Will the money be a deficiency payment or will it be a repayable loan? Can the Minister make that clear?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that in talking to farm leaders and people who are knowledgeable of the conditions in Canadian agriculture today they do not possess the same confusion as expressed by the Hon. Member. We have been very clear with our intentions from the beginning. The Prime Minister announced a $1 billion federal program. Surely that means national in scope. He also indicated that it would be within the fiscal framework. The third important, clear message that was forthcoming from the Prime Minister was the fact that no existing agricultural program will be cut.

ALLOCATION OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister answer my question? How much money is going to each region of the country? Will it be in the form of a straight deficiency payment or will it be a loan that has to be repaid by farmers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, naturally, it is premature for me to announce the details—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member should know, if he has been watching the problems in Canadian agriculture, that the discussions on this very problem began when the Prime Minister placed agriculture on the agenda at the last federal-provincial Ministers meeting in November. Since that time I have met with my provincial counterparts on numerous occasions, the last being the regularly scheduled federal-provincial Agriculture Ministers conference in Victoria. Most of the time was spent on this specific problem.

Because of the Prime Minister's continuing interest, and concern about the well-being of the agricultural industry, he indicated in the Speech from the Throne and in his remarks in the House of Commons that he has challenged us, me as federal Minister and my provincial counterparts, to expedite the process. That is exactly what we are doing.

• (1425)

WESTERN GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister has now made it clear that the $1 billion is to be spread to all areas across Canada. A number of western grain producers have been asking specifically how much of the $1 billion will be targeted specifically to the western prairie area.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, again I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. As the Prime Minister indicated yesterday, I have convened a meeting of Deputy Ministers for tomorrow. This Government has not been acting unilaterally. We have been seeking the advice and co-operation of our provincial counterparts.

Tomorrow we will meet with the Deputy Ministers across Canada. We will ask them again to expedite their calculations and we will seek their advice on what, from their point of view, would be the best method of distribution, bearing in mind fairness and equity of distribution.

AMOUNT OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to guarantee, that as a result of the negotiations that will take place in the next number of days, the amount of money contributed by the federal Government will be adequate to meet the demands of western grain producers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, for the interest of all Members of the House let me indicate that, in keeping with our traditions and with the request of the Prime Minister, next week we will be convening a meeting of farm leaders. This will be the third or fouth meeting that we have had. We will be asking them from their commodity point of view what would be the best method of distribution bearing in mind fairness and equity.

All calculations have not yet been done. In fact, if the Hon. member could indicate to me, with 50 per cent of the harvest still out in Alberta and more of it still out in other provinces, that he could guarantee good weather for the next four weeks, then—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENTAL ADMINISTRATION—REQUEST FOR REFORM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This week's revelations about maladministration in the Manitoba region of the Department of Indian Affairs are not new. What steps does the Minister plan to take to deal with the pressing need for major administrative reform within his Department and the continuing pattern of broken promises made to the Indian people? The Minister knows well that an RCMP inquiry would not deal with matters of that kind.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the concern expressed by the Hon. Member. I want to assure him that starting with my predecessor, the special audit that was asked for by some southern Bands in Manitoba, the Departmental response to that audit which I am sure the Hon. Member has seen, and the steps outlined to deal with those specific allegations made by some of the Bands in Manitoba are appropriate steps.

The other thing the Hon. Member should know is that there was a public allegation that the RCMP should investigate. That allegation was made by a former employee of the Department. This morning I communicated with the Deputy Commissioner of the RCM Police and asked that he initiate an investigation into the Manitoba region.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, on June 11 the former Minister said in the House that he would take steps to determine whether the problems in Manitoba exist in other regions across the country. We in the House all know that they probably do, but from the Government there has been only silence. Does the Minister not think that it is time now for a full and complete independent inquiry into all aspects of administration of the Department of Indian Affairs?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that the administration of the Department has been under ongoing change and that there have been changes made in the administration within the Department in the last 18 months. The Hon. Member also knows full well as a member of the Standing Committee of the House that that Standing Committee is the master of its own fate. If it wishes to initiate that kind of action, I suggest that he and other committee members consider that.

* * *

• (1430)

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister, if I may. In explaining his $1 billion promise to Premier Devine, the Prime Minister on four separate occasions on Monday referred to the commitment made to western farmers, as reported in Hansard. Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture said that that money was to be spread right across the farming community of the country. We all know that farmers everywhere are in trouble, but the commitment was made to prairie grain producers who believed that they were promised $1 billion. Will the Prime Minister hold to that promise or not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that we would be working closely right from the beginning with Premier Devine and other provincial Governments to devise—and I think the words were—"an effective financial assistance program to enhance the cash flow of Canadian grain farmers".

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will let Hansard speak for itself in Monday's edition. Western farmers are not going to be fooled, and they will hold the Prime Minister to account on this particular promise. Was the $1 billion promise made to Premier Devine, and was it not originally destined for western farmers within the vocabulary used by the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend refers to Hansard. In Hansard for October 3, 1986, I say:

> I am pleased to announce today that we will be working closely over the next month with Premier Devine and other provincial Governments to devise an effective financial assistance program to enhance the cash flow of Canadian grain farmers.

That is what it is all about—to put money into the pockets of Canadian grain farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RECEIPT OF ASSISTANCE BY FARMERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will let the record on Friday and on Monday, as reported in Hansard, speak for itself. May I ask the Prime Minister a final supplementary question? In his speech on Friday he said that the money would be available within a month. Then he talked about weeks and days. Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture said that he doubted the money would be available to farmers before Christmas. When can the farmers expect to get their money?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, let me correct a misstatement by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I think he said that I indicated on Friday that money would be available within the next month. I do not think I said that. If you look at the same statement, I said:

> I am pleased to announce today that we will be working closely over the next month with Premier Devine ... to devise an effective financial assistance program to enhance the cash flow of Canadian grain farmers.

That is in train. There is a meeting scheduled for tomorrow, followed by one next week with agricultural producers. The object of the exercise is to help Canadian grain producers. I would think that my right hon. friend would stand up, for once, and say: "Bravo, you are doing a good job for farmers. We are going to support you".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESUMPTION OF GRAIN EXPORTS THROUGH WESTERN PORTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It also concerns the unhappy situation of our grain producers. As the Prime Minister knows, there is a lock-out on the West Coast. In that particular circumstance the longshoremen have offered to co-operate and ship the grain. The Government has sent a cable asking management to co-operate and have that grain shipped. Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether management now has extended the hand of co-operation so that the grain will be shipped out of the West Coast?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of this matter and the work we have been doing on it, I will defer to the Minister of Labour for a precise response.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Yes, we have had a response, Mr. Speaker. I guess the best way to put it would be to read the response. It is very short. It is addressed to me and reads:

> In response to your telex dated October 6, 1986—

And I understand there is a mistake; it should be October 7, 1986.

—we wish to advise as follows:

> In the national interest the B.C. Maritime Employers Association is prepared to resume and continue normal operations forthwith in all ports for a period of 30 days during which time it will be expected that the parties will address and attempt to resolve all issues in dispute.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cadieux: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read the full message—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Order!

Mr. Cadieux: Thank you. It continues:

> If, at the end of the 30 day period a collective agreement has not been concluded we would anticipate that the Government would take appropriate action to bring this dispute to a conclusion.

It is signed by Mr. Cunningham and Mr. Wilds who are the Chairman and the President of the Association.

ASSISTANCE FOR PRAIRIE GRAIN PRODUCERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. As I did publicly this morning, I congratulate the Minister on the initiative. We are hopeful that there will be a positive outcome.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Still dealing with grain farmers, I should like to go back to the Prime Minister on the question of the $1 billion assistance. Now that it has been confirmed that the $1 billion will go to a variety of producers across the country—

Mr. de Cotret: Grain producers.

Mr. Broadbent: —and that the grain producers in the Prairies had expected, in terms of meeting their needs, more than $1 billion, will the Prime Minister confirm that the grain producers on the Prairies are to get significantly less than the $1 billion which many of them were expecting?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is not the case, nor is it the case that was set out in the joint communique from the federal-provincial Agricultural Ministers conference on August 27, 1986, in which they spoke on behalf of grain producers in Canada. We have, in my statement on Friday in the House and subsequent thereto, been dealing with the problem of Canadian grain producers, which of course involves an awful lot of people on the Prairies, all of whom involved in this will be receiving help.

AMOUNT OF ASSISTANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I honestly think the Prime Minister misunderstood my question. I was asking him specifically about the amount which will be going to prairie grain producers. In light of what has come from the Minister of Agriculture today, that the $1 billion will be spread right across the country to grain producers, this will mean that the prairie element will get much less than the $1 billion it had anticipated because it will only get a share. Will the Prime Minister confirm that grain producers on the Prairies will get much less than the $1 biliion they were anticipating?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that. The reason for the meetings beginning tomorrow with the provinces and the meetings scheduled next week with the leaders of the agricultural organizations is precisely to deal with these questions—to devise a fair plan to come to the assistance of those Canadian grain producers who need help. I think that is what the Government is trying to do. I know that is what all fair-minded provinces are trying to do, and I hope I can count on the support of the Leader of the NDP in our initiatives.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN MANICOUAGAN RIDING

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to my friend, the Right Hon. Prime Minister and—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: —it concerns the prison in his riding. The Citizens National Advisory Committee of the Correctional Services of Canada has now joined dozens of other groups which have universally condemned the decision to build a $68 million prison in the Prime Minister's riding. In view of his promise to consult with Canadians, is he prepared to meet with this particular national organization, to listen to its views, and to justify his obscene decision?

• (1440)

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have advised this House on many occasions, the decision to move the prison was based on economic reasons. We want to alleviate economic disparity. Frankly, I am surprised that the Hon. Member takes that position when the former Solicitor General approved of moving prisons to alleviate economic disparity.

AWARDING OF CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, there comes a time when the stonewalling has to stop. We need some answers on this issue.

Will the Minister of Public Works confirm that 12 bids were received for the construction of the main building and that the contract was awarded to the company Les Enterprise de Bon Conseil, and will he advise whether or not that company was the lowest bidder?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of question of which I would have thought the Hon. Member would give me notice. I deal with hundreds, indeed thousands of contracts every year. I will be glad to respond to the Hon. Member in the ordinary way.

* * *

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS—TAX INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This Parliament and your Government are on record that we are not subsidizing softwood lumber exports to the U.S. Would you explain why the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All Hon. Members know that the appropriate way to put a question is through the Chair. I know the Hon. Member will want to do that.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, you can be sure of that.

Will the Prime Minister explain why the Minister of Finance drafted a softwood lumber export tax and what its terms of application are going to be?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can only assume that the Hon. Member is dreaming.

USE OF POSSIBLE TAX REVENUE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we know the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been dreaming for some time about softwood lumber, but I would like to put my supplementary to the Prime Minister.

Since there is going to be a ruling by the U.S. international trade organization on Friday regarding a softwood lumber countervailing duty, will the Prime Minister assure this House that, should the export tax be put in place, those dollars will be returned to the forest sector for job retraining, market diversification, and reforestation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is speaking of a tax which he has invented, and he is now asking us to comment on its implementation. We do not propose to implement his inventions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

PENITENTIARIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW PENITENTIARY—CHOICE OF MANICOUAGAN

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister, and I hope he is not going to hide behind the Solicitor General's screen. Mr. Speaker, my question is as follows: the National Advisory Committee of Correctional Services of Canada has just unanimously condemned the Prime Minister's decision to move the penitentiary to his riding. The Council of Bishops is asking him to reconsider. A number of national organizations are saying he should abandon this crazy scheme. My question to the Prime Minister is: Would it take a recommendation from the Pope to stop this scheme?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I regret to advise that I was unable to hear the last part of the question. I am sorry.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RENOUNCE ITS DECISION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, not only did he not hear the last part of my question, he has not answered any of our questions since the beginning of the week. This is what I want to ask the Solicitor General, since the National Advisory Committee of Correctional Services of Canada is recommending against building the penitentiary at Port-Cartier. He knows that a dozen national organizations have asked him to keep the Prime Minister from carrying out this scheme. What I want to ask the Solicitor General is: What will it take for him to stop this scheme?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have explained to this House on many, many occasions, the move was made for good and valid economic reasons. When a move is made for good and valid economic reasons, as espoused by the former Government of which he was a Member, I can see no reason why we should change our decision at this time.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NEWFOUNDLAND MINISTER OF FISHERIES

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw the attention of Members to the presence in our gallery of the Hon. Tom Rideout, Minister of Fisheries of Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

PENITENTIARIES

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the Solicitor General why he seems to think only he and the Prime Minister are right on this matter, although nobody else in Canada seems to agree. If he has any support, could he perhaps inform the House where that support is coming from?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have said on many occasions, it was a government decision. That implies the support of this Cabinet and members of this Government. In addition to that, I can assure the Hon. Member that, if he does not feel that way, we certainly have the support of the people in Port-Cartier who are very pleased to receive the employment which will result from this prison.

* * *

[Translation]

RAILWAYS

STOPPAGE OF TRAFFIC

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Transport. On October 2, 1986, Mr. J. Léo Richer of the Canadian National in Quebec sent a memorandum to Chapais and Senneterre saying the following: "All maintenance of the Chapais subdivision between Miles 72 and 172 will stop as of the first day of 1987 . . . consequently, no traffic must take this route". My question is as follows, Mr. Speaker.

Is it possible that, in 1986, the Canadian National is telling its employees not to work and that there will be no traffic in Abitibi between Senneterre and Chapais in 1987? I ask for an immediate investigation on this confidential memorandum from Mr. Richer.

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Transport): Mr. Speaker, I noted the particulars of this memorandum earlier. Obviously, certain questions will have to be asked. As indicated by the Minister of Transport a while ago, the CN must follow the rules just like any other railway company, and if it wants to abandon a line, it must make an application to the Canadian Transport Commission and obey the law. This will be done in the case of Chapais.

* * *

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF PROGRAMS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of the Auditor's investigation which substantiated the allegations of departmental mismanagement, and documents released yesterday documenting short payment of signed contribution agreements, will the Minister confirm that the no cut-back commitments made by his predecessor and the Prime Minister have been broken, despite the best efforts of his officials to deny this?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would have expected more from my hon. colleague with his knowledge of the Department of Indian Affairs. I can confirm to him that the increase in expenditures last year was over 6 per cent. The increase this year, after I have authority from Parliament, will be well over 7 per cent through supplements. Therefore, I hope the Hon. Member understands that both the commitment of the Prime Minister and my predecessor that there would not be any cuts has been more than maintained. There have been increases. In the last 10 years there has been a 322 per cent increase in expenditures on programs for Indian people.

BAND FUNDING INQUIRY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the question was specific, the answer of course totally general. Therefore I would like to ask the Minister how he views the retention of funding from the Swan River Band, the Roseau River Band and the Keeseekoowenin Band? If not cut-backs, what are they?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I can only reconfirm to the Hon. Member that I know of no signed contracts or signed commitments which have been breached. None have been brought to my attention. With his knowledge of the Department of Indian Affairs, the Hon. Member knows there are needs far greater than the ability of any Government to fill. There are needs not only in Indian Affairs, there are needs in Health and Welfare, Transport, and every other Department of this Government. We could all spend more money. However, I can assure the Hon. Member, as the Prime Minister and my predecessor have. As an example, in Manitoba last year the bureaucratic payroll was reduced by $1 but the Supplementary Estimates increased by $8 for programs for Indian people.

* * *

• (1450)

APARTHEID

PRESENCE OF SOUTH AFRICAN OFFICIAL DELEGATION AT CANADIAN RAILWAY CONFERENCE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is with regard to the sanctions imposed against South Africa. Could the Secretary of State explain why there is an official delegation from South Africa in Vancouver at the present time and, second, why Canada abstained from voting for a resolution of ICAO banning air links to South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I certainly can, Mr. Speaker, and I will be as brief as possible. There is a meeting called a Heavy Haul Railway Conference. Planning for it began three years ago as part of Expo 86. South Africa is a participant in that conference as were CN and Transport Canada. The decision came to me as to whether CN should withdraw. The withdrawal of CN would have meant the cancellation of that conference which was an integral part of Expo 86. I decided that CN should not withdraw but that Transport Canada should. Transport Canada has withdrawn. CN and Transport Canada have both indicated that neither will take part in the successor conference in Swaziland next year unless there is a change in the policies of South Africa.

With regard to ICAO, the House will be very well acquainted with the policy of the Government of Canada not to allow politicization to interfere with the work of specialized agencies of the United Nations. That is the approach that we have taken in supporting and seeking to reform UNESCO. The resolution of ICAO was, in effect, an attempt to politicize that specialized agency. Canada decided to abstain in light of our respect for the integrity of specialized agencies. We have already acted to ban air links to South Africa. We believe that our example speaks to the world.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, that is the very point. The Government has acted to ban air links to South Africa and this abstention sends a message to the world that in fact Canada is not supporting a banning of air links to South Africa. I think that should be clarified by an official statement from his Department.

Second, with respect to the presence of the South African delegation, do I take it that the Secretary of State for External Affairs agrees that this is in breach of the Commonwealth Accord signed by the Prime Minister at Nassau?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will answer the second question first. This conference was convened and organized before the Nassau Declaration. The withdrawal of CN would have cancelled the conference. I acknowledge that it could be argued that this is technically a breach of the Nassau conference. That is a consideration which I took into account when I judged whether it was in the interests of Canada to cause that conference to be cancelled. I took the other decision that it was better to act as we had acted and to make it clear that, unless there was a change in South African policy, there would be no participation in the conference in Swaziland.

With regard to the position of Canada in the face of the policy of apartheid, we have just been joined in the House by the Hon. President of the Congo, the President of the Organization of African Unity, who spoke today for the continent of Africa and expressed the appreciation of that continent and those people for the leadership that has been given against apartheid by the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF THE PRESIDENT OF CONGO

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would like to draw the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery today of his Excellency Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso, President of the People's Republic of the Congo and current President of the Organization of African Unity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

ABORTION

STATISTICS CANADA—DECISION TO STOP KEEPING RECORDS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Statistics Canada has declared that it will cease compiling and publishing statistics on therapeutic abortions in Canada, which would make it impossible to monitor the number of abortions committed each year. What action does the Minister contemplate to offset this decision by Statistics Canada which serves no other purpose than further to deliberately ignore the continuing problem of abortion in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, this program did not give an accurate and valid representation of therapeutic abortions in Canada. This is why my predecessor decided that it should be suspended.

I am now re-evaluating this program with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Naturally, as a woman and as a member of a Government concerned with social issues, I shall make the decisions necessary to provide the services we wish to make available to the public.

* * *

[English]

APARTHEID

PRESENCE OF SOUTH AFRICAN REPRESENTATIVES AT CANADIAN CONFERENCE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has now admitted that there was at least a technical breach of the Nassau Accord signed by the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister not recognize that the presence of the South African corporation representing the racist and murderous Government of South Africa is not just a breach of the Nassau Accord but is an affront to all Canadians who want to voice their outrage at the system of apartheid? Will the Prime Minister not tell this company to stay home and ask CN not to participate in this conference?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe that question has been answered. I have indicated that it is a technical breach. I regret that happened. The choice that had to be faced was whether we would cause the cancellation of the conference which was an integral part of Expo 86, an activity of very real significance to British Columbia and Canada. I took the decision. I think there will be few in this House, few in the country, or few in the international community who will doubt my commitment or the commitment of the Government to the fight against apartheid.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, that decision makes a mockery of the Prime Minister's signature on the Nassau Accord.

[Translation]

REASON FOR CANADA NOT JOINING WITH OTHER MEMBERS OF ICAO IN THE DENOUNCEMENT OF AIR LINKS WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister.

Yesterday before the ICAO assembly Canada missed an opportunity to issue a message denouncing international air links with South Africa.

Mr. Speaker, why did Canada fail to join with the Congo and other AUO member countries and support this resolution which is essential if the South African Government is to get the message loud and clear?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just answered this question and, like the Hon. Member from British Columbia, I too strongly support bilingualism. Still I hardly think it is necessary to repeat questions and answers in both official languages.

I also have a lot of respect for the United Nations system and the Hon. Member knows as well as I do how imperative it is that we protect United Nations institutions against the impact of politicization. This is precisely what Canada is doing by trying to reform UNESCO. For this reason, yesterday in Montreal we decided to maintain Canada's position concerning the South African airlines and thus demonstrate this country's respect for United Nations institutions.

* * *

SHIPYARDS

POSSIBILITY OF KEEPING OPEN THE THREE NAVAL SECTIONS OF SHIPYARDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion being absent, Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It deals with the crisis in the Quebec shipyards.

The Prime Minister will certainly recall that his Government had given Mr. Peter Paul Saunders a mandate to rationalize the shipbuilding industry. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has indicated that he would have to reduce by half the number of shipyards in Canada. We learned yesterday that Marine Industries was to buy shipyards in Quebec City and Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister assure these concerned workers today that the naval sections of these three shipyards will remain open and that these people will be protected?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, we can indeed confirm that there has been an agreement in principle between Marine Industries and Versatile concerning the acquisition of shipyards in the Province of Quebec. This agreement has been reached. The Government will do everything it can through its current programs to encourage the acquisitions of these facilities.

The Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is going on a fishing expedition, even if I am convinced that he is anxious to see that happen. This Government will work together with the Province of Quebec and the private industry in the interests of Quebecers to restructure the Quebec shipbuilding industry.

STEPS TO BE TAKEN TO KEEP THREE SECTIONS OF THE NAVAL INDUSTRY IN QUEBEC OPEN

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): If he thought he was going to scare a Quebecer, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you that he would not even frighten a toothpick.

What these workers and I want to know, is whether the Minister can promise now that the three sections in the Quebec shipbuilding industry will remain open. Yes or no? That is what we want to know. No Brian-like fuss, please!

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the Canadian Government will do everything in its power to help the private industry and the Quebec Government restructure the Quebec shipbuilding industry.

• (1500)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF FOURTH REPORT OF CANADA-EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House in both official languages the fourth report of the Canadian Section of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association.

* * *

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-210, an Act to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I am introducing the first reading of a Private Members' Bill which would serve to exclude any personal liability of the members of the Blue Water Bridge Authority in the event of a tragedy caused by an act of terrorism or by the wilfull wrongdoing of any person. The Blue Water Bridge is a jointly-owned international bridge which links Sarnia, Ontario and Port Huron, Michigan. The Commissioners of the Blue Water Bridge Authority are hard working and dedicated individuals who give unselfishly of their time. This serious concern with respect to their personal liability, in circumstances beyond their control, is one which I fear could, in time, serve to lower the calibre of our commissioners. The amendment reads as follows—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-211, an Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to revoke the monopoly of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, thereby restoring to Canadians the freedom to engage in the trading of fish and to allow fishermen the opportunity to get maximum returns for their effort.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-212, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act (sexual orientation).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to implement the repeated recommendations of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and the unanimous all-Party parliamentary committee on equality rights to prohibit discrimination within federal jurisdiction on the basis of sexual orientation. At the present time, gays and lesbians are not protected from such discrimination.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As Hon. Members know, a brief explanation is appropriate. I think it ought not go beyond that.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-213, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (gun control).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to reintroduce this Bill, which I have previously had before the House. I am sure it is the kind of Bill you would like to support, Mr. Speaker. We heard a great deal from the Government when it was in opposition—

Mr. Speaker: Order. What the Speaker would like to support does not matter. Would the Hon. Member be very short.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is a good Bill and the kind of thing we need in rural Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-214, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: I believe the Bill is rather self-explanatory. This is something that Canadians from coast to coast are very interested in seeing and one of the real things that this Parliament could do in helping to bring about a more peaceful planet.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

NUCLEAR LIABILITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-215, an Act to amend the Nuclear Liability Act (limitation).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the intention of this Bill is to increase the period of time within which suits and other actions can be brought by Canadians in relation to any kind of nuclear accident or medical problem that could result from exposure to any kind of nuclear materials. I think it is something that the House would like to pass.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

• (1510)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 7, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the Session; and of the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p.44)

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we are living in very exciting times, times of critical significance to the future of Canada. These are times of unprecedented change pressed relentlessly upon us by the advancement of science and the application of technology. These are also times of unprecedented opportunity for our country, for all Canadians. But, like most opportunities, these times are accompanied by risk and challenge.

I cannot begin to tell you, Mr. Speaker, how proud I am today to rise in this Chamber and speak in support of a Speech from the Throne which, for the first time in our country's history, has placed science and technology in such a prominent place of Government operations and in the political agenda.

Some say that we are at the dawning of a new age. Certainly, I can assure you, Sir, an entirely new economic order is in the making. The new order means changing roles for the private sector, for scientists and for our citizens. It means changes for the federal Government.

In the new international order, science and technology are interacting with the nation's economy, with international trade, within our workplace and our homes, in new and profound ways. This interaction is causing changes which we take for granted as they appear day by day but which, over the next 25 to 30 years, will accumulate to produce changes in our socio-economic condition as profound as those we have experienced over the last 200 years of the so-called Industrial Revolution.

Let us be under no illusions. Canada has no place guaranteed in this new order, no seat reserved. We will improve employment prospects in Canada. We will improve our standard of living and the prestige we have earned throughout the world only if we work hard, make the right choices at each crossroad, adopt new attitudes and work together in a united effort. Canadians are coming to understand that our ability to use research and development effectively, without delay, has a determining impact on the number of jobs open to us, on Canada's access to international markets, and on the competitiveness of Canadian industries and Canadian products. We can see new possibilities open to us in realizing national goals with the use of science and technology to protect and conserve our environment, to develop a new workplace in which men and women can play equal and important roles, to bridge distances, something which has always been so important to us, and to unite our vast and diverse land.

In the first part of our mandate, the Government has set the nation on a new course. In following that course, in regard to science and technology, we are forging new partnerships with the provinces, with the scientific and engineering community, with business and with labour. The new course joins all sectors in seeking high standards of excellence in education, technology, development and industrial innovation. The new course seeks to mobilize our combined energies toward achieving a new national purpose. We have taken that course, not as a convenient strategy and not even because it happens to coincide with our political philosophy, but because it is a clear necessity and most urgent.

The task which confronts Canada in restructuring our economy, rethinking our attitudes and refitting our industries is so immense that no single sector, not even the federal Government with all the powerful instruments at its disposal, can do it alone. It requires the thoughtful action of us all, first-grade teachers, farmers, fishermen, executives, loggers and high school students. That is why it was essential for us to have taken the time to reach a consensus, to survey and to assemble our nation-wide energies.

Both my predecessor and I have set a grueling pace for ourselves to meet with Canadians in all parts of our country. There have been several meetings with federal-provincial Ministers with respect to science and technology since our election two years ago. Earlier this year I held a series of round-table meetings with industrial leaders, union leaders and scientists across Canada. Last June in Winnipeg my provincial counterpart and I invited hundreds of leaders from labour, industry, universities and concerned organizations to a National Forum on Science and Technology. We asked the Science Council of Canada to chair this forum. Our dialogue moved us forward to our objective of achieving a new national consensus on policies for science.

Those who attended now realize that they have been heard by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Government because they see their recommendations reflected in the Speech from the Throne. They will recognize their suggestions in our plans for the months ahead. The consensus they have formed is forcefully expressed; it is urgent that all Canadian sectors take co-ordinated action without delay, that the federal Government is called upon to exercise decisive leadership, to unite every sector of our society so that Canada's full potential can be released.

The provincial and federal Governments must work together to forge a co-ordinated national policy. Science and technology must move to the centre of Government decision-making.

The consensus which has emerged also identified four critical issues which must be immediately addressed. The first has to do with creating a culture in Canada which appreciates and instils pride and celebrates Canada's scientists and innovators; which promotes a strong awareness of the importance to Canada today, and in the decades ahead, of astute application of science and technology; which utilizes the talents of Canadian women in science careers so that Canadian schoolgirls will know they too can succeed in technological careers and that their country needs their help in a technological age.

There is consensus that co-operative actions are needed to develop and mobilize Canada's greatest natural resource, our peoples' intellectual abilities and especially our scientific and engineering talent. We must expand the capacity of our universities to respond to new demands for basic research, and the training of researchers for exploration of new disciplines and the development of new skills.

There is a national consensus that we must urgently develop and use new strategic or, as they are now being called, "enabling" technologies which underpin our industrial capabilities. Canada, like all industrial countries, is undergoing a major transition from the technogies which have served us so well this far, technology we have had in place following the Second World War, to a new array of technologies which will be the basis for the creation of future growth and wealth; such as microelectronics, advanced information processing, advanced industrial materials and biotechnology, to name just a few. These technologies are the basis, and perhaps the cause, of the technological revolution. Our abilities with respect to these technologies will determine our economic fate.

Lastly, there was consensus that Governments should use the full scope of their instruments to advance research and development. Our regulatory framework, our tax laws and the incentives within them, our patent laws and similar instruments need to be re-examined to see how they can be targeted to encourage innovation and all aspects of scientific and technological activity. Engaging in dialogue and consultation and reaching consensus is an important prerequisite to taking important action. But talking and listening alone is no substitute for such action.

• (1520)

We have not hesitated to move ahead swiftly and decisively in areas involving federal jurisdiction. I would like to review some of the things that we have done. A number of science agreements were signed with the provinces to enhance industrial competitiveness and to use technology to reduce regional disparities. We moved ahead on a new funding policy which will provide resources to the granting councils in a predictable and consistent manner. We are also providing additional funds through these granting councils to help us forge linkages between universities and the private sector through a matching arrangement which will deliver $1 billion of new funds for research and development over a five-year period.

I say this with confidence because early indications show that this move, coupled with the tax incentives that are associated with it, will unleash an enthusiastic response. I am confident that the goal will be met and, indeed, that it will be exceeded, and that we will bring together our full potential to train highly-qualified personnel while at the same focusing on research in those areas which pose the greatest challenge and the greatest opportunity for Canada's future.

In May of this year a new comprehensive space plan was announced. An extensive internal review is reaching completion on the entire federal science and technology framework so that all federal resources dedicated to science can be focused on new national priorities in a consistent manner. This is the first time that such an inventory has been put together. I anticipate that the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology, which was established during the last session of Parliament, will play an important part in evaluating the results of that review and of how the federal Government can spend much smarter and more effectively the $4.2 billion that we presently spend on science and technology and related activity.

Recently, we announced funding support to aid the innovative activities of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research which networks together the best and brightest of our scientists and engineers across Canada in a new type of a fellowship program dedicated to excellence. A similar institute was formed in British Columbia with federal support.

Building on the national consensus and on the initiatives which we took in the first session of this Parliament, we are now ready to take new actions on the agenda for the next two years, which was set out in the Speech from the Throne. The Speech from the Throne clearly indicates that the Government recognizes the threat that we will face and the bitter price that we will pay if we do nothing.

The Speech from the Throne announced the opening of a major effort to carve out a significant place for science and technology in the culture of Canada. In the past, lack of leadership and lack of prestige caused many Canadian students and the brightest of our scientists to turn to careers in other countries rather than to the careers of tomorrow in Canada. Science lacked the visibility and the prominence that would cause educators and the media to give it the attention it merits as a determining factor in our future. One of our principal priorities is to establish a new environment which gives value and appreciation to scientific achievement applied to improving our well-being and to resolving long-standing problems.

For the first time Canadians have a Prime Minister who is demonstrating this by meeting, on a regular basis and in a formal way, with Canada's most eminent scientists, engineers, and leaders from business, industry and labour. He will personally chair this new board or council. It will assess our national goals and policies regarding science and technology and their application to improve Canada's competitiveness and maintain prosperity. Its members will give the Prime Minister and Canada the benefit of their judgment, their wisdom and their experience.

We also announced that the Government will introduce a new federal science and technology strategy to support our policies and our mandate and to build on initiatives which are already under way. It is to be expected that new realities mean new strategies. Just as industry is having to restructure and adopt new attitudes to the reality of the new age, Government also has to re-examine and rationalize its activities and its policies which are leading the nation across a new frontier.

Many federal activities and programs have served this country well in bringing us this far along the way. However, resources are too scarce these days, too hard won, to be wasted. No part of the federal machine can expect to survive if it does not adjust to new priorities and do its share to meet new needs. All activities must be examined to determine if they can be performed with better results in universities, for instance in the area of basic and curiosity-type research, or contracted out to private scientific enterprises outside of Government.

One immediate example of Government reorganization in the face of new realities was announced in the Speech from the Throne. Legislation will be introduced to establish a Canadian space agency. Such an agency is needed in Canada if we are to be able to contribute the talent and ingenuity of its people to the peaceful use of space, to develop space technologies for applications to human problems.

The Prime Minister has asked me to reorganize our current efforts and to focus key space activities under a single agency which can operate with day-to-day autonomy while at the same time being held accountable to Government and to Parliament. I anticipate that personnel would be transferred from existing programs to staff the new centralized agency. The new agency will be accountable to the Government and to Parliament through the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The structure and the organization of the agency will reflect a broad, co-operative approach. The structure must be able to secure the active involvement of the private sector and our universities and institutes. Our policy will be to emphasize contracting out research and development so as to tap the expertise in all regions of Canada, especially the expertise that resides with small enterprise.

As well, I see a meaningful mechanism which will fully engage Canada's private sector capacity in advising the agency. I am beginning consultations with my colleagues immediately with a view to bringing this legislation—setting up the agency—before the House as soon as possible. The agency will have a double responsibility. It will, of course, first and foremost be responsible for the over-all quality of Canada's international contributions to space science and technology, including existing arrangements we presently have with Japan, the European community and, of course, the American space agency. It will also oversee Canada's domestic objectives related to space. These domestic responsibilities are very important because we see space development as one of the principal forces behind Canada's economic growth.

Robotics developed for use in space will have applications at the bottom of our mines and on the floor of our oceans. The applications of remote sensing and satellite communication technologies will help Canadians to bridge vast distances, making remote communities and remote resources more accessible. Space technologies will enable us to improve the custodianship of our natural resources, to enhance our environment, to strengthen our resource industries and the 350 cities and towns across Canada which depend upon them, places such as Prince George, Tumble Ridge and Mackenzie in my riding, Chicoutimi and other places throughout the country which depend on one or the other of our important resource industries for their life-blood.

This means the new agency will have a mandate to diffuse space technolgy into the private sector so that this knowledge can be put to work throughout Canadian industry. The money which we will spend on space must and will be used to keep Canada competitive.

The Speech from the Throne announced two major initiatives as part of our continuing efforts for broad national consultation and building consensus.

• (1530)

First, we are proposing a national forum on post-secondary education to strengthen our partnership with the provinces so that the Canadian system can produce the highly qualified personnel which Canada needs to keep us on the crest of this competitive wave and to promote Canada's well-being. Second, building on the success of the National Forum in Winnipeg, we will hold another National Conference on technology and innovation broadening the access to this conference so that more Canadians can participate. I expect to consult soon with the various sectors on how best to organize this process.

We are totally dedicated to these tasks. The initiatives we have proposed will put science and technology to work to support our objectives, especially to build a national capacity to compete strongly in international markets and thereby keep Canadians employed. As was said in the Throne Speech, to a considerable degree our sense of national purpose, our national identity and our economic prosperity will depend on our capacity to respond, and respond we will. I believe all Parties are in agreement that we must take long-range action. That is why we have made our plans for a federal science and technology policy with an eye on the next generation and the next century, not with an eye on the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his remarks. As I said yesterday in my speech, I find the emphasis placed on science and technology in the Speech from the Throne to be encouraging. However, as I pointed out yesterday, it is not with encouragement that one can pay for research on the shop floor or in a laboratory.

I would like to direct the Minister's attention to the question of funding. He mentioned the consensus that came out of the Winnipeg conference. One that he did not mention was, I gather, the first specific consensus that was pointed out by the Chairman of the Science Council, Dr. Stuart Smith, in the remarks he made on the conclusion of the conference. Dr. Smith said there was agreement that more money is required for research and that while not unanimous, there was a general agreement that both basic and strategic research need more money, that it has to come from Government and that it should be based on excellence and on people.

Again, I would ask the Minister today when the Government will respond to this need to put more money into research and provide the mechanisms for this to be done. I would point out that with respect to the granting councils, while people have come to accept and are enthusiastic about the proposals for matching funds, the message that pretty well everyone is giving is that the Government should provide an annual increase in the budgets of the councils to allow them to keep up to inflation, that they should not have to maintain their base budgets, and protect them from inflation through the matching formula. Will the Government respond to that request that has been made by many submissions?

I would also ask the Minister to respond to the many letters he has received, as have the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and other members of the Cabinet, about the cut in IRAP. If the Minister had a chance to hear the remarks I made yesterday, he will know that I spent a week or 10 days visiting a number of firms that have participated in IRAP in the past. As I said yesterday, these are companies which only four or five years ago did no research and development, but with the assistance of IRAP have developed new products which today account for the greater part of their sales. I heard time and time again that these companies would not be in business today if it were not for IRAP.

I have copies of letters that have been sent to the Minister and to the Prime Minister requesting restoration of the $60 million cut in the IRAP budget. I would ask the Minister if he could respond to those requests.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me an opportunity to respond to my hon. friend. I would like to thank him very much for the very positive speech he made yesterday. He too attended the Winnipeg conference and experienced the same feeling of urgency and the same spirit of co-operation that we experienced there.

It is true that previous Governments looked at nothing else but funding levels or money as an indication of how well we are doing in science and technology. The federal Government presently spends roughly $4.2 billion per year. Several Departments are duplicating work. My first task was to reorganize the activities of Government and to spend much smarter.

We have increased very, very significantly the national effort, but we have chosen to identify priority areas and we have chosen to channel the efforts of the federal Government in a way that would lever private-sector contributions and provincial Government contributions. It is for that reason that we are so anxious to put in place a number of R and D sub-agreements with the provinces. For instance, there is an agreement with the Province of Quebec in which science and technology is seen as such a high priority that $100 million will be spent on it over five years.

As the Hon. Member will know, we have also made the necessary changes to the Income Tax Act. In the past, the Hon. Member's Government, well intentioned as it was but looking at money alone, caused a haemorrhage of $1 billion or $2 billion through the scientific tax credit scheme, a scheme which created all kinds of innovative tax accounting but did nothing in terms of industrial innovation. We have now issued new guidelines which will permit us to use the Income Tax Act as a very potent instrument to lever private sector activity through tax expenditures.

The Hon. Member spoke of matching funding for universities. For the first time we have announced an A-base for the funding council. The previous Government used a small A-base and then used a sort of ad hoc program with Supplementary Estimates designed to put in $10 million here and $15 million there and no one could plan their activities. We have now introduced for the first time a zero-based or A-based funding which permits scientists and universities to plan ahead for five years. As I have said to the Hon. Member, this new program which is again designed to lever private sector funding will produce $1 billion over a five-year period. That is significant new funding for universities. As well, he talked about the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister but I would like to allow at least one more question in the 10-minute question and comment period. I would like to give the floor to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and perhaps the Minister could conclude.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that when the Conservative Party was in Opposition, it criticized the failure of the Canadian Government to fund adequately scientific research. Conservative Members promised that a Conservative Government would see that 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product would be allocated to scientific research and development.

The Government talks about new agencies and new committees. Is there any evidence yet that the private sector which in the past was so remiss in investing in research and development is doing better now?

• (1540)

I should also like to ask him whether the National Research Council, the Medical Research Council, the Social Sciences and Humanities Council, and NSERC will be getting more money from the Government this year than they got last year. What is the Government doing to ensure that the five-year plans brought forward by these agencies will be implemented, or do they have to wait until the private sector hopefully does in the next few years what it has not done in previous years? What assurances do we have that we will move anywhere near the 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product allocated to scientific research and development in the next few years?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member listened very attentively when I was speaking. I thought I had answered those questions.

It is fine to dump on the private sector. It is quite true that the private sector is not doing its share and has not traditionally spent as much in relation to the Gross National Product on R and D and science-related activities. However, one can perhaps blame Government in part for that because it has not shown leadership and given the right incentives. The reason I am so confident that there will be significant new moneys for the funding councils even in this current year is because the private sector is responding enthusiastically to our invitation and to the leadership which I have already shown in the first year of my mandate, pointing out that we are prepared to come to the party with them. Indeed, what an investment it is for the private sector; for 50 cents it can lever a $2 investment in R and D. We are opening the dingy labs of our in-house research institute. We are transferring ideas and people to the private sector to lever that kind of initiative.

With regard to a target, where we ought to be in terms of the Gross National Product, I chose to ask the Science Council to help me establish realistic funding targets by examining each sector of our industry and by comparing what they are doing in terms of science and technology with what their competitors are doing in other parts of the world. We will establish realistic targets.

I have indicated clearly, as has the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) through the message in the Speech from the Throne, that we are determined to stay on the leading edge and that we are determined to stay among the leading countries of the world, as we prepare ourselves for this new age and take ourselves into the 21st Century. That is a firm commitment. Whatever it will take in terms of federal effort, in co-operation with all other stakeholders in this important field, will be forthcoming.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to congratulate our new Speaker on his election to the position of Speaker of the House of Commons. Second, I should like to congratulate you, Sir, on your reappointment as Deputy Speaker and to congratulate the other Speakers who were reappointed or appointed for the first time. Also I should like to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Although I did not agree with everything they said in their speeches, I still congratulate them for defending what some of us on this side of the House have already said was virtually indefensible.

In my remarks today I will address only one portion of the Speech from the Throne. I know that the Government would like to discuss its so-called four pillars. It now wants them to be known as the four pillars that care, or the four pillars with a caring face. However, the four pillars as set out in the Throne Speech are so vague that they obscure the Government's true record. One cannot see the policies for the pillars. One has to read between the lines or peer between the pillars themselves to get a true picture of how the country is being governed.

Let us concentrate on just one pillar—constructive internationalism. To be fair, there have been some successes in this regard. For example, the Government has sensed the revulsion which Canadians feel toward apartheid and used that consensus to promote the use of sanctions among western democracies. However, if we examine the Government's record in peace and security, the story is quite different. One page of the Throne Speech tells us:

> No task is more important to Canadians than preserving peace and security.

That is the kind of simplistic statement which brought so much scorn on the Government's Grey Paper on Canada's foreign policy. Decima Research must have collaborated with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on that page at least.

However, if this desire for peace and security is so obvious, what has the Government done to meet the expectations of Canadians? The answer is, precious little. Just look at the ringing declarations which follow. The Government is "encouraged" that the superpowers are talking again. It "shares the hope" that there will be progress on arms control.

However, what has the Government done to promote disarmament? When the Soviet Foreign Minister was here, did the Government press the Soviets to move from a unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing to direct negotiations on a comprehensive test ban? Did the Government offer its seismic array in the Northwest Territories as part of a world-wide network to enforce such a treaty? Only yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs declined even to join in a unanimous resolution of the House in support of a comprehensive test ban.

When the White House announced that SALT II was dead, did the Government tell President Reagan that Canada would no longer test the Cruise missile which will breach SALT II's limits? When Canada had a chance to support the ABM Treaty by reinserting a clause in the NORAD agreement which precluded our taking part in ballistic missile defences, did the Government seize that opportunity? No, Mr. Speaker, the Government did not. The Government's pillar of peace and security crumbled when Mr. Reagan was involved.

Nowhere was this more obvious than in the Government's response to the American invitation to take part in star wars. The Government could not bring itself to say no to a dangerous escalation of the arms race. Instead, it wavered and supported private participation as long as the Government's hands looked clean in public.

Even when provoked by the Polar Sea incident, the Government failed to stand up for Canadian interests. The paragraph devoted to Arctic sovereignty is nothing but brave talk. The Government drew straight baselines around the Arctic Archipelago, but straight baselines are not a picket fence which will keep out American ice-breakers or Soviet submarines.

The truth is that the Government has done precious little in the Arctic to assert our sovereignty and acknowledges this fact in the Throne Speech. It is forced to talk about its past promises on sovereignty in the future tense. It must be galling for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to hear his unfulfilled promises hung out to dry in the Throne Speech.

Once again the Government proclaims that it will build an ice-breaker. This promise has been around long enough to demonstrate the Government's lack of resolve. Instead of uniting the country in asserting our sovereignty, it has divided us. The Cabinet is squabbling over who should pay for it. The starving shipbuilding industry is fighting over who should get the contract to build it. It is pitting East Coast shipbuilders against West Coast shipbuilders. I do not even know what the ice-breaker is supposed to do when it hits those icy waters; neither does the Department of National Defence. That is why it does not want to foot the bill to build the Polar 8 ice-breaker.

Of course it is not really surprising that the Department of National Defence is dragging its heels. It does not like to hear about new expensive commitments from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A case in point is the exercises announced for the eastern Arctic in the Secretary's sovereignty statement. It turns out that the military did not know about any such exercises when the Secretary made his pledge. Eventually, a diving ship and a supply vessel were sent north to save face. Now the Government is once again pledging "training exercises in the Arctic".

By and large the Government's commitment to sovereignty is the same as its record on disarmament—all talk and no action. This is quite in contrast to the Department of National Defence where we have seen some real movement. The Hon. Member for Cumberland—Colchester (Mr. Coates) moved out and the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) moved in. Then he made room for the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) who in turn passed the reins to the new Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) when the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) appeared.

• (1550)

All this movement has made for a curious situation. The Government has failed to keep its promise made in the previous Throne Speech to re-examine Canada's defence policy. I understand that no Minister wants to get into a policy discussion until he understands the subject matter, but the delays are becoming ridiculous and embarrassing.

In preparing this speech I discovered in my files a letter written to the first Minister of National Defence of this Government asking that he refer his Green Paper to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence early in 1985. We are rapidly approaching 1987, we no longer have the same Minister of National Defence, the Government no longer speaks of a Green Paper, and there is no longer a standing committee for both external affairs and national defence in combination.

While we have been waiting for the policy paper, the Department of National Defence has been busily entrenching our existing national defence commitments. I now doubt that the Government could afford to substantially alter any of the roles of the Armed Forces. This Conservative Government's actions have locked it into the philosophy of the Liberal Government's 1971 White Paper.

In the previous Throne Speech the Government recognized that the strategic context had changed considerably since the 1970s. I would go further than that. I would say that our present defence policies have their origin in the 1940s. The Government, in other words, is preparing us to fight World War II all over again in its strategic architecture.

Look at our commitments in Europe, for example. We have promised to send the CAST Brigade to reinforce Norway if that country faced invasion. The Government has just completed Exercise Brave Lion to practise this operation. Some 5,500 soldiers and 15,000 tonnes of equipment were shipped across the Atlantic. The Government has not put a price tag on this operation but the figure of $100 million has been bandied about in the media. How could the Government ever reconsider the CAST commitment after spending $100 million, or even half that amount, on a dry run? Could it ever explain such an about-face to the Norwegians, especially after leaving some equipment behind until our forces return? The Government is effectively committed to Norway because it must justify the expense and portray Exercise Brave Lion as a great success.

Let us now look at Canada's other commitments to Europe. Could the Government re-evaluate our commitment in Germany, that is to the NATO central flank? I doubt it very much. It has already entrenched our positions there with its earlier measures. The Government sent an additional 1,200 men to Germany in the first months of being in office to show that Canada was, to use their words, pulling its weight. It would be very difficult to redeploy those men despite the fact that basing them in Europe is extremely expensive. In fact, our commitment to the European central flank, which every expert acknowledges is more political than military, is costing Canadians $100 million a year.

The Government is also spending millions of dollars to equip the forces for their present role in Europe. For example, the Government announced just last spring that it would buy a new low-level air defence system to protect our forces and their bases in Europe. The cost of this system alone is $1 billion. The Government does not even expect delivery until 1991. How could it seriously question the role of the Armed Forces in Europe, as many experts are now doing, having allocated $1 billion for equipment to be used there in the next decade? Neither could the Government consider changing its air commitment to the central front. It declared that role "sacred" by equipping our three squadrons in Germany with the CF-18 before the new fighters were fully deployed in Canada for national defence purposes.

The Government has committed us to Norway and Germany by its actions but our forces are unable to handle both roles. Our chief of defence staff was recently quoted as saying: "If we had to do everything simultaneously—no, I think we're stretched too thin. That must be acknowledged." The Government has not acknowledged that fact. Instead, it has been busy stretching our forces even further with a new peace-keeping role in the Sinai Peninsula. This is another open-ended commitment that costs $5.5 million per year.

We would all agree that peace-keeping is laudable and Canada receives world recognition for its contributions in this area. However, we are already firmly entrenched in Cyprus and on the Golan Heights and there are no signs of early settlement to any of these conflicts. The Government must recognize that peace-keeping ties up personnel and resources, and adjust its other commitments to allow for that.

At sea the Government is also committed to some very expensive long-term programs that will determine the character of our Navy and dictate its future role. No one would argue that our Navy is in desperate need of new equipment, but again the Government is acting before considering the future role of Maritime Command. The TRIBAL Class Update and Modernization Program, sometimes referred to as TRUMP, will spend $1.2 billion to ensure that our destroyers will be able to provide air defence as traditional convoy escorts. The Government has also announced a program to replace the Sea-King helicopter. Some say this program will end up costing $2 billion by the time the new helicopters are flying. Again, Canada is committed to an anti-submarine warfare role well into the 1990s and beyond. Our own submarines need replacing. The Government announced a program to size up new candidates for another large puchase. No one has yet even ventured a guess on the eventual final price for those new submarines.

There have been other major expenditures but I think my point has been made. The Government has effectively precluded any meaningful debate on the future role of Canada's Armed Forces by taking actions which will dictate their posture for at least another decade. This, I think, is very, very important.

This Government came to power some two years ago first of all promising a Green Paper in which there would be national input from coast to coast, from experts, from academics, from ex-military professionals, and from ordinary Canadians. That has now gone by the board. I do not know on how many occasions this Government has promised a White Paper, a blueprint, a framework, an architecture for Canada's national defence, to plan and to pursue and effectively put into operation a policy designed not just for the 1980s but presumably for the 1990s. We are not going to get either, although the present Minister indicates there will probably be a White Paper some time this winter or early spring.

It is no wonder that the Throne Speech made no mention at all of a plan to review Canada's defence policy. I know the new Minister has committed himself to bringing a policy paper forward some time in 1987, but you will forgive me for saying that I have heard that before and I will believe it when I see it.

If the new Minister is really interested in a full and open debate, I have a suggestion for him. He might want to issue an early Green Paper for public discussion. In other words, go back to the original intention of the Government in 1984. That way he would not have to espouse the policies which are the legacy of his many predecessors, and I am not just talking about his predecessors in this Government but his predecessors in former Liberal Governments. Neither would he have to defend the intricacies of a comprehensive new policy. He can learn from the ensuing debate at the same time as he benefits from full public consultation. It would certainly be a refreshing change and it would fulfil the original commitment of the Government which was for a Green Paper, not a White Paper, as I mentioned a moment ago. In conclusion, that would show that the Government does indeed recognize how strongly Canadians feel about peace and security by giving Canadians the opportunity to tell the Government what kind of defence policy they want.

• (1600)

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments with respect to the seismic array that happens to be located in my constituency close to the City of Yellowknife. This array is very useful for the detection of underground nuclear explosions and for earthquakes. This station has been upgraded to make the instrumentation more sensitive and we anticipate that it will play an even more important role for the reasons that the Hon. Member suggests.

I have two questions for the NDP defence critic. The New Democratic Party appears to be split on the question of the Polar 8 icebreaker to which the Hon. Member referred earlier. I would like to know whether his Party is officially in support of the acquisition by Canada of a Polar 8 icebreaker. Perhaps we can have a definitive statement on that.

The second question also seems to make the NDP squirm a little bit. Have they yet come to a conclusion, in the determination of their Party policy, as to whether Canada should withdraw from NATO? I understand that was their position a little while ago. Have they now an official position with respect to NATO?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). With regard to the Polar 8 icebreaker, as defence critic I can only say that I think it is a terribly expensive flagpole. Even if it comes in at half a billion dollars, the Polar 8 icebreaker will be of little use to the Department of National Defence, as it has already indicated to the Standing Committee on National Defence.

Speaking as the defence critic, I am opposed to it as a defence mechanism—if I can use that expression—for defending the Arctic. It may have other purposes. No one has yet proven to me that there is heavy traffic going through the Northwest Passage which would require a Polar 8 icebreaker on an ongoing basis to literally break the way for commercial shipping. I personally have not made up my mind on that part of it yet. I do not know whether it has a commercial value. I only hope that if it is built the funding will not be taken out of DND.

I am also very glad that the Member asked me, as defence critic, the question about the NATO situation. The important thing in a national defence policy is to have an effective national defence. We must consider the geography of defence today. If we cut back on the number of commitments and concentrated on arctic sovereignty, on northern passage surveillance and tracking with an upgraded north Atlantic surveillance fleet for surface and below surface, and a Pacific surveillance fleet, and brought them into the 1990s, whether or not we were in NATO would be only academic. If there is a conventional attack on the West we would automatically be a component of the Western defence.

As the Member for Western Arctic knows, a shining example exists in western Europe today. A major military democratic country, not under a socialist government but under the right wing Conservative Government of the late Charles de Gaulle, withdrew France from the integrated military command of NATO. That did not in any way diminish the military defensive capability of that Western alliance.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a comment. It is very obvious from those replies that the NDP is still squirming on both of those issues. There was no answer to either of the questions that I raised.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, if the Member for Western Arctic would like a lesson on national defence, I would be only too happy to oblige in my office anytime he has the time.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, in my maiden speech in the House of Commons as Minister of State for Youth, perhaps I may be allowed, first of all, to congratulate you on your appointment to the prestigious position of the Deputy Speaker of this House. I also would like to ask you to transmit a message that to me is very important, considering the importance of the Speaker's chair. It is a message of congratulations to the new Speaker (Mr. Fraser) of this House, wishing him the very best of luck.

Mr. Speaker, today, I would like to talk about the specific challenges, opportunities and problems the current situation presents for young Canadian men and women. These challenges go beyond those encountered on the labour market. Rapid technological change has necessarily had a major impact on education and of course on our society.

Mr. Speaker, this new era is the result of global changes that are occurring faster than ever before. The labour market, in fact our whole culture, is going through a period of transition comparable to the Industrial Revolution. We are part of an international community that is both more competitive and more interdependent than in the past. The oil crisis of the 70s made this abundantly clear.

Change is the order of the day. Markets rise and fall at an unprecedented rate, and the demand for various skills is constantly changing and shifting.

There is no quick and easy way to deal with this reality, whether we are speaking globally or internationally. However, as a nation and as a Government, we have no right to ignore these facts, and we must adopt the approaches and strategies that will help us to manage change where possible and to avoid being alienated by change.

To deny these new realities, Mr. Speaker, would be nothing less than disastrous, not only for Canadians but especially for our Canadian youth.

The Government must act as a catalyst, helping to define what the challenges are and where our collective responsibilities lie, and helping people understand what kind of opportunities the future holds in store. Some of the possibilities were referred to earlier by my colleague, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle); a new culture based on the continuing acquisition of knowledge, as my colleague mentioned, opens up almost unlimited opportunities for society in general and for the Canadian labour market in particular.

The impact of technology on the labour market is one of the main concerns of young Canadians. Our ability to integrate new skills and to create jobs commensurate with those skills is a reflection of our country's success to adjust to this rapidly changing environment, where competition is becoming increasingly fierce.

If young people do not get adequate training, if they are not provided with the means to adapt themselves, they will simply not be in a position to preserve Canada's prosperity and secure our economic future. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recognizes it is urgent to integrate our young people properly into the labour force and, in that respect, Mr. Speaker, this Government's decision to link up the youth component to the Department responsible for employment matters is significant.

This new reality must also allow for participation by visible minorities, natives and the handicapped, who are an integral part of the gainfully employed population.

I am committed to doing everything humanly possible to promote the interests of those groups, feeling as I do that there can be no genuine economic, social and cultural progress without the full participation of all Canadian men and women.

New technologies in changing markets and the need for more advanced skills are the current challenges which our young people, who will be part of our labour force, should be able to take up. The training of that new, more flexible manpower endowed with more specialized knowledge, will require the co-operation of the young people themselves, the teachers, the labour unions, the private sector and all levels of Government.

● (1610)

The new technological era also entails other changes, new ways of defining work, a different view of hierarchy in the workplace, a new way of managing work and leisure hours. Actually what we are talking about is a new lifestyle, whence the need for autonomy and innovation.

In the light of those changes, we are reviewing certain programs. In consultation with the provinces, the labour unions and the business world, we will review such things as the apprenticeship training program, which to a large extent is funded by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. That review will take place over the next six months, with a view to determining the best possible avenues for getting labour and the training sector closer together.

We are also looking at measures to fight against illiteracy in Canada. In the same spirit, we are considering action to encourage young people to remain in school as long as possible, and measures to prevent drug abuse and help young offenders.

To promote access to employment, we are constantly improving our occupational counselling and employment information programs and we are developing new training tools for occupational counsellors. In this regard, we are looking at the co-operation mechanisms between the Employment and Immigration Commission and the provincial Departments of Education. Similarly, the National Conference on Secondary Education announced by the Prime Minister for the beginning of 1987 and the proposed National Advisory Board for Industrial Technology will help to define the concepts, to develop the new mechanisms and to determine the levels of co-operation required for a better management of changes in these sectors.

Mr. Speaker, major progress was made in this direction a little over a year ago when the Canadian Jobs Strategy was implemented. This strategy represents a basic change in the federal policy as concerns training and job creation, especially for young people who, I should point out in passing, are the main users of these programs as a whole.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I shall be looking, with the representatives of the provinces, the leaders in our society and young people, at ways to answer one basic question: What kind of direction do our young people need, not only to move successfully from the academic world into the active world, but also to become the nucleus of a labour force of international standing? The performance of Canada on the international scene is closely dependent on the answer to that question. In the short term, however, we must maintain our efforts in order to solve the unemployment problem among young Canadians, although the demographic process itself should progressively reduce the relative importance of this problem with which all industrialized nations are faced. In the present context, the ultimate irony is that we may face a manpower shortage in the years to come.

Statistics concerning unemployment among young people in all industrialized nations clearly indicate that everywhere governments must step up their effort with a view to integrate young people into the labour force during this transition period. In the United Kingdom, the unemployment rate among young people is nearly 22 per cent. In France, it exceeds 25 per cent, while in Italy and Spain, it exceeds 35 per cent and 43 per cent respectively.

In Canada, the unemployment situation among young people is not as serious as elsewhere, and it is improving. It went from nearly 19 per cent down to less than 15 per cent over the past 18 months. The cynicism and despair expressed by some of our youth are not as acute as elsewhere and, while travelling throughout this country, I have noted clear signs of increasing assurance and optimism among our young men and women who are aware that this country belongs to them and who are determined to develop it fully. The situation is not as critical as it is elsewhere, but as was indicated in the Throne Speech, much remains to be done. The distribution of jobs at the national level is very uneven: youth unemployment varies from around 10 per cent, its lowest level, in the Toronto area and goes on to exceed 30 per cent in Newfoundland. For native young people, the situation is even worse.

The Government has a duty to identify policies and clarify objectives in order to deal with these problems. Alone, however, it cannot provide easy answers. All sectors have a role to play in helping Canadians adjust to a changing job world, and in its role as national coordinator, the Government must ensure that the measures being taken by various sectors complement each other.

This Government's job strategy reflects the realization that solving the problem of youth unemployment does not depend on how many jobs are created but also on the type of jobs, real jobs that are career-oriented, for which real training is provided. The job strategy makes it possible to take into account both the technological changes taking place on the labour market and the priorities of each participant. The strategy emphasizes autonomy and innovation, two factors that are now indispensable to economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, the job strategy has no connection with any of the so-called band-aid solutions that may have been proposed before.

Taking its cue from this approach, the federal Challenge '86 program, aimed at creating summer jobs for young people, has set long-term objectives. With the support of local businesses and community organizations, Challenge '86 has helped create 90,000 jobs, which in most cases are related to the goals and aspirations of our young people.

The strategy's other programs, which run 12 months a year, are also based on these principles. The Job Entry Program features on-the-job training and practical work experience which are a solid basis for young Canadians to begin new careers. Then there is the Innovations Program to help those who have creative ideas and projects which propose fresh and innovating solutions to the labour market problems and create openings for technological applications.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne stresses the importance of finding new ways to instil the spirit of entrepreneurship in the minds of young people. We have already begun to work on this and will soon be in a position to unveil a major initiative in this field.

New trends are beginning to appear, such as team work and a growing awareness of the importance of quality and flexibility. Unless they can readily adapt to the changing situation and make the best of it, neither young people nor the various labour market interests can ever look forward to a productive future. Only a positive and flexible attitude coupled with long-term planning can foster prosperity among individuals and organizations.

Given the scope of the challenge facing us, it is only through a concerted national effort that we will succeed in fully integrating young people into the economic activities of this country and into society as a whole. For my part, besides defending the cause of young people in Cabinet and encouraging them to take full advantage of all services and programs offered by the federal Government, I will also strongly support all measures likely to give youths more opportunities to become active participants.

The Advisory Counsil on Youth will make mechanism such as the Canadian Youth Foundation easier to be directly involved in the quest for solutions to their employment problems and other questions which concern us all.

The era of new technology offers young Canadians more opportunities for training, employment and personal development than any other previous period in history. All of us will have to use our minds and creativity to benefit socially and economically from these opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, we are living during an exalting period of transition, at a crucial time when we can experiment with new methods and discover new concepts, values and options to pave the way for a new society where all Canadians will be at home. If all of us, young people, educators, employer organization and union leaders, community leaders and elected representatives, are determined to get the most out of these opportunities, we shall prepare a great future for young Canadians and the nation, as a whole.

Finally, I am convinced that, like the previous generations, this one in 1986 will be able to overcome the obstacles it has inherited from others. Our basic message to young Canadians is that they must remember that Canada is still a country to be built and that they will build it for themselves and in their own image.

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, some months ago the Government cancelled the Katimavik program. At that time it indicated there would be a program put forward to replace the Katimavik program. In the past, the Minister and I have discussed possibilities for such a new program and the possibility, perhaps, of combining some form of youth program with the type of objectives of Katimavik, with perhaps some form of voluntary service which would involve not only a military training program but a job and a skill training program as well. I wonder if the Minister and his Department have progressed in their thinking to a stage where the Minister is ready to unveil a new program of this sort? If so, could he tell us what form it might take and when we might expect an announcement in that regard?

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I am glad my colleague asked the question about Katimavik which illustrates, I think, in a very real way, some of the problems faced by our youth today and some of the problems faced by the Government. The Government never said that Katimavik was a bad program. Therefore, Katimavik not being a bad program, the rationale for not pursuing it was the fact that it did not address the specific problems which youth encounter today in 1986. It was a program which was created in another context. That is one reason the Government did not choose to persue it. More generally, the decision was made in the context of the whole Canadian Job Strategy. I do not care how we cut it, the whole accent must be on training and retraining if we are going to be able to build a country and face international competition. That is what Canada must be about. For the Government to turn its back on that reality would be irresponsible. It would not be facing up to our responsibility towards the young people of Canada.

Since I have been in this office we have had the opportunity to review almost everything being done. We have not taken anything for granted. We especially acknowledge the multidimensional problems which face Canadian youth today. In that sense, what we would most like to do is address the different problems and try to offer the most options possible. Entrepreneurship is one dimension and it is mentioned specifically in the Speech from the Throne. Post-secondary education is also part of it. We must look carefully at drug abuse, which is a problem of youth.

There are multidimensional problems we really must address as a Government but we will not find one global solution in one program. That is very obvious. The ordinary Canadian on the street knows that. Reasonable Canadians know that it is pretentious on the part of Governments to say to the country: "I have the solution". It just does not exist. We are not excluding anything. We are still working very hard on the problem. We started with the first objectives of the Speech from the Throne, which is to make sure that every government Department concerned with youth does its job. We are satisfied with that at this point. The Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) has said we are going to look at illiteracy—

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that when a Conservative is speaking, you let other Conservatives add to his arguments. However, when the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) rose—I understand that you are impartial, but I think that it would be only fair to let—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I do not find that to be a point of order. I call them as I see them and I saw the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Rossi: He got up, too, but you did not recognize him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): He did? Well, he will be recognized next. I do not wish to argue with the Hon. Member—

Mr. Rossi: I don't want to argue but we want to be recognized in time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will be recognized when I am ready to recognize him.

Mr. Rossi: I believe, Sir, you should recognize the Opposition, too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am on my feet. Order, please. The Hon. Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest).

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I was about to rise on a point of order and say that, in view of the representations made by my friend for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), I shall be happy to hear a question from the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). I have been anticipating a question for a long time. I shall therefore conclude my reply and invite the Hon. Member to ask his question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to tell the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) he is entering into his term of office on the wrong foot. When he referred to foreign countries, the OECD, he deliberately failed to state that Canada unfortunately ranked eighth with the dramatic level of youth unemployment.

I would like to ask the Minister whether this is the kind of record he is pleased with for our young people. Is this what he is so proud of? I would like to ask the Minister about his statement to the Canadian media, in which he blamed our young people, and I am quoting from the Canadian media: "It is time for our young to get interested in something other than peace, disarmament and the environment, in which they may find themselves ghettoized", he said.

Is it the new Minister's function to become some kind of a dictator in youth matters, and tell the young: You shall not get involved with environment matters. You will have no right to get involved with peace matters. Contrary to the former Minister, whose portfolio met with a sad end, will the Minister be there to help the young, to support them and to make sure that there will be meaningful jobs and a decent future for them?

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, one of the first things rookie lawyers are told—and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) should listen, because this will be of interest to him—is never to give a witness an opportunity to explain. That is the kind of courtesy you extended to me, and I thank you for it.

Concerning that statement to the Canadian media, Mr. Speaker, I had a chance the next day to be on a radio program, in which I said specifically: "The statement was incomplete. Incomplete in the sense that it said—"

Some Hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Charest: I have no control over what newspapers print, Mr. Speaker, but the person who conducted the interview will confirm that. The statement was this, which will certainly be of interest to my colleague the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie: "Young people need not be dictated by anybody the major issues in which they should be interested." And I draw this from my own personal experience. When I entered politics, some people were adamant: "You should deal with environment or peace issues, because these are matters young people are concerned about." Well, it is not true. I want to say to my colleague the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie that young people are interested in all major issues, and my message to them is that the choice is their own. Neither you nor anybody else should tell them what issues they should be interested in. If it is peace or disarmament, well, it is their choice. If it is employment, it is their choice too. Because it is their choice, I want them to know that they can get involved in any debate, because they have the basic right to do so.

As far as your second question is concerned, comparing Canada with other members of the OECD places us in a world context, because Canada competes in a world context. But the Throne Speech, if you took the time to read it, clearly indicates that the unemployment rate among young Canadians is unacceptable. The fact remains that if you want to be objective and try to forget for an instant or even a split second your partisan bias, you will recognize that the unemployment rate among young Canadians is down, that we must stress training and retraining, something which your own Government failed to do, for all sorts of reasons which I do not know, and I do not want to pass judgement, but it is something which our Government has elected to do.

Show us, then, how the Federal Liberal Party in Quebec is addressing the real issues of the future. How? What do you offer our youth, beside rising every day in the House and saying no to all new proposals and innovations suggested by this Government?

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to explore one particular area which the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) has touched upon. It is an area in which I trust he can have some effect on the policy of the Government over the next months.

The Government has difficulty meeting the needs of Canadians as a result of constrained finances that are made available in various areas. Surely that is true with regard to the Canadian Jobs Strategy. I think it also true with respect to the summer employment programs for students and young people. With that in mind, I would like to ask the Minister to involve himself with the development of the Challenge '87 program. I ask him to do so forthwith to ensure that the requirements for the program are known at an early point, that application forms will be made available and that funding will be adequate to needs. If he does this, we will not have to face the type of situations that I experienced last spring. At that time there was not enough money in my riding. The money that was there had to be spread very thinly over the various communities. The Land of Nipigon Chamber of Commerce comes to mind immediately in terms of information services which it hoped would be provided through Challenge '86. It was not possible to provide for that.

At Lakehead University there were faculty members concerned about providing some very challenging opportunities for youth. The lateness of the application deadlines and the length of time required to process them made it difficult for Challenge '86 to be the type of program that it should have been.

I ask the Minister to respond briefly to my concerns. I encourage him even more to ensure that the funding is adequate and that the needs of young people will be more fully met by this program.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, I would like to thank him for acknowledging the fact that the program does work well. If we refer specifically to what could be bureaucratic difficulties, which are normal, I point to the fact that that is just part of implementing new programs. If we want to try new measures and programs in this country by bringing in new solutions, we all have to accept the fact that the first time around it is always difficult. We will work things out. The Hon. Member brings this to my attention today, and I am glad that he does. We will be looking at the report which will eventually come in on the subject.

With respect to the funding for Challenge '87, whether it will happen or not, as I have said from the beginning, this Minister will not take anything for granted. We will look at Challenge '86. We will look at what happened within the program itself, see how it has fared. Then we will take the appropriate decisions once that time comes. I hope to be able to give good news to the House in that vein.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. First of all, I would like to congratulate you on your appointment as Acting Speaker, but I am probably the only one in this House who will condemn what happened the other night, the hypocrisy of it all, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would have us believe he revolutionized Parliament and that the Speakers were democratically elected. If that were true, my colleague Marcel Prud'homme would be one of the Speakers of this House, and we would not have had a demoted former Minister appointed as Assistant Deputy Speaker, Mr. Speaker.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, today I would like to compare the present Speech from the Throne to the Speech from the Throne we had in 1984. Mr. Speaker, I wish the House would look at the words in the 1986 speech regarding social justice and the same words that appear in the 1984 speech.

Mr. Speaker, as far as the writing is concerned, there are plenty of people in Canada who write well and who can write a nice story, but, Mr. Speaker, what is there in terms of tangible content? They say that the past is our guarantee for the future, but look at what happened to social justice under this Conservative Government and this Prime Minister, after what they said in the Speech from the Throne, look at the reality and at the reasons why we are now starting a new session.

About social justice and the elderly, Mr. Speaker, just a while ago, the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) scolded me for rising in the House to criticize the Government, Mr. Speaker. But I was proud to rise in support of the elderly, to save their Old Age Security pension cheques, while the Minister of State for Youth was busy protecting his own little portfolio.

Mr. Speaker, everyone will recall what the Prime Minister said during the election campaign. Everyone remembers what the Minister of social injustice and the Prime Minister said here in the House, and the Speech from the Throne and the blue Book on consultation and the nation-wide betrayal of our senior citizens. The first time senior citizens were betrayed and deceived by this Government was when family allowances were de-indexed. And the second time, Mr. Speaker, again in the Speech from the Throne, senior citizens were discriminated against, those between the ages of 60 and 64, with respect to the spouse's allowance. Once again, Mr. Speaker, all elderly Canadians—mostly women—in every single riding from sea to sea have heard this Government deliberately refuse to declare them eligible under the Old Age Security pension program simply because they had to separate, because they preferred to remain single, or because they were forced to seek a divorce. Mr. Speaker, this Government, including the Prime Minister and his social injustice Cabinet colleague, deliberately perpetuate such inequity, and now they are trying to make elderly Canadians believe that the 1986 Speech from the Throne is even better than the one we got in 1984. Mr. Speaker, we need look no further than what happened to the early retirees who expected to get their unemployment benefits in 1985 and 1986. Again thousands of Canadian men and women were penalized, they were deceived by this Government with regard to benefit cut-backs, with the result that some of them lost as much as $10,000. More phoney promises and more phoney commitments from this Government, Mr. Speaker. The 1984 Speech from the Throne was long on rhetoric, as is the 1986 Speech from the Throne. They said the same thing about the New Horizons Program, Mr. Speaker: When it comes to elderly Canadians, we will never do anything to harm them. Well, Mr. Speaker, behind their backs the Prime Minister and his Government did slash the benefits of elderly Canadians. During the first two years of this Government, not a single Conservative Member or Minister had the courage to rise in defence of our senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, we should also recall the commitments made by the Prime Minister in the 1984 Speech from the Throne, particularly with respect to Canadian families, the cornerstone of our society, he said. The Prime Minister is never at a loss for words, they flow like money which is no problem when he wants to take his butler along on his world-wide trips. So what happened to Canadian families, Mr. Speaker? In 1984 the Prime Minister promised that the House would look after Canadian families, but he ended up de-indexing family allowances while at the same time introducing legislation to rescue Western Canada millionnaires from a bank failure. So much for the intellectual integrity of this Government and this Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, and today in 1986 they would have us believe that people will swallow this piece of trash. Mr. Speaker, the child tax credit changes have victimized, middle-income families.

Mr. Speaker, senior citizens were deceived by this Government in 1984, and the Members opposite are now trying to make us believe . . . Look at what has been written. There are no concrete results. Families were deceived in 1984, Mr. Speaker.

What about young Canadians, Mr. Speaker? As a consolation prize, after two years of inaction, the Minister has been demoted.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I have just heard a term which, although perhaps not unparliamentary, is totally inappropriate under the circumstances, namely "a piece of trash", which was used to describe the Throne Speech read by the Governor General of Canada, and I believe that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) should withdraw this vulgar and inappropriate term.

An Hon. Member: Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): One moment, please.

• (1640)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to say that I did not hear any word that was unparliamentary and I feel that it is not a point of order. Is the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) rising on a point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: On the same point of order. Mr. Speaker, how can this Hon. Member, who was not even in the House, rise on a point of order about a word which he may not even have heard, because he hastened to ask his colleague the Hon. Member for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) whether he had said that word. The Hon. Member rose on a point of order, although he was not even in the House.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not find that that is really a point of order either. I find that that is debate, and if the Hon. Member wishes to rise on debate, that is fine. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) has just clearly demonstrated parliamentary hypocrisy. My friend, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) was right: he was not here, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to continue my remarks. I was dealing—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, let me say that I do not think we should reflect on whether a person was in the Chamber or was not in the Chamber. There are television monitors outside in both lobbies and naturally Members of Parliament have the opportunity of viewing what is going on in the Chamber whether or not they are behind the curtain. That is beside the point. What I am saying now is that I do not want to have Hon. Members reflect on the attendance of persons whether in or out of the House.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Mr. Speaker, I am not reflecting on his attendance. It is the idea that he had to ask his colleague from Beauharnois whether he said it or not. That is different.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think we should get on with debate. Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have another point of order?

Mr. Blais: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: It is another point of order, Mr. Speaker. He used again the word "hypocrisy" concerning another Hon. Member. I feel this expression is totally unacceptable and out of order.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will look at the "blues" tomorrow and if I find that unparliamentary language was used, I will rule accordingly.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I hope the minutes used by the Hon. Member will not be deducted from my time.

Mr. Speaker, I will resume my remarks—and you may rest assured that I am here to tell the truth. Even if this should displease my colleague from Bellechasse, I will continue telling the truth about his performance.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to compare the 1984 Throne Speech with the last one. What was the outcome for senior citizens? As I say, the Old Age Security pensions was de-indexed, discrimination was introduced in the spouse allowance regime and against those who are single, separated or divorced, and cuts were made in unemployment insurance benefits for early retirees. Suddenly, in the middle of the road, the Government has decided to make those unilateral cuts, without telling the people involved. Even Conservative Members often told people they were right. Mr. Speaker, those people were penalized. There were cuts in the New Horizons Program and the refusal of all home care projects for senior citizens. I appreciate the response of the Conservative Members who would rather have us refrain from telling the truth, and try to hide the fact that the people clearly were deceived in the 1984 speech. This is why people have reason to question the statements made by the Government, by the Prime Minister in the 1986 Throne Speech, considering the absence of any concrete proposals.

The same thing goes with respect to the family, and as I said, Canadian families were hit with the de-indexing of family allowances. Let us not forget that last year, Canadians lost $55 million with the de-indexing of family allowances.

The House will recall that changes in the child tax credit have had a major impact on middle- and low-income families. The House will also recall that in the Budget, the Government decided to divide Canadian families into two categories. Families with an income of less than $15,000 receive the child tax credit and will be entitled to an advance pre-payment, while families with an income of $24,000 will be entitled to the full amount of the child tax credit but not to the advance pre-payment.

Mr. Speaker, considering that the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) is back in the House, that there was nothing in the 1984 Speech from the Throne and that nothing has been done for youth and that in 1986, once again, all we have is words, words, words—

Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Minister of State for Youth took back what he said. However, if the Minister means that the Canadian Press reporter misled the people of Canada, he may have to suffer the consequences, because I am going to meet the reporter to tell her what the Minister of State for Youth said about his statement that it was high time youth got interested in something else besides peace, disarmament and the environment, which might well become a ghetto for them, as he said.

Mr. Speaker, of course the Minister of State for Youth was surprised a while ago when he heard that on unemployment statistics, Canada rated eighth among the OECD countries, while he was trying to prove that Canada was not last. If that is all he is going to do—

Mr. Speaker, we were able to hear the speech of the Hon. Minister of State for Youth, but there was absolutely no announcement in his speech that he would be cutting the official ribbon as his predecessor used to do.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister has received a political appointment in the field of communication. It will be the same for him as for his predecessor, who once sent a letter saying: It is useful politically, and so on.

We all recall what happened. It was one of the many scandals involving the Conservative Government. The Minister of State for Youth is now telling us that there will be programs other than Katimavik. How long have they been waiting, Mr. Speaker?

There is also the question of training, Mr. Speaker. We know that funds have been reduced by half in the job development sector. Yet, the Minister would have us believe—

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian population has been misled for two years and the Conservative Members think that this is going to continue. For my part, I say to those who are watching us that that time is over. The public has had enough, whether we are speaking about families or young people.

Let us now look at the situation in Quebec. The facts are obvious. Nothing has been solved in eastern Montreal. The Conservatives have failed completely. We all remember the French power announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Quebec City. It has been a disaster. What about the shipyards? A total failure. What about the Desbiens pulp and paper plant? It has been a total failure, but thank God for the Liberal Government in Quebec. What about Gulf? Thank God for the Liberal Government in Quebec for saving part of the refinery. Otherwise, it has been a disaster. Indeed, a former Conservative Member criticized the Minister of Energy and Mines.

Mr. Speaker, I still have five minutes, the five minutes taken up by the Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, the aerospace industry is also a disaster.

Mr. Speaker, I have visited the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean region. Let me talk about the potato producers. This is a clear case of injustice. Maritime potato producers in the Maritimes have the same problems as producers in Quebec. Yet, potato producers in the Maritimes receive compensation, but not those in Quebec.

Yet, the Minister of State for Youth and all the other Ministers from Quebec, the so-called French power, look at all this and are quite satisfied. They have their jobs and their limousines; they cut ribbons occasionnally and appear a couple of times on television. They are very happy. As for the Minister, he can get his hair curled, and this is French power!

In the meantime a serious problem comes up in Western Canada, and there fly $1 billion. Banks go bankrupt in Western Canada, and we have another billion dollars, Mr. Speaker. Western producers have problems, we give them money. Oil companies have problems, we give them money. But for the Province of Quebec, nothing. The International Banking Centre is but a promise, Mr. Speaker, because since the election nothing has come out, zilch! No, nothing has come to Quebec since this Tory Government was elected, Mr. Speaker.

Neither in the area of equilization nor in rail transportation. The Bombardier Corporation—they would have us believe—Bombardier was the highest bidder for Canadair, but they will be dragging a red herring and award the F-18 maintenance contract to somebody else. Lo and behold they say! You were allowed to buy Canadair. You had your chance, but, Mr. Speaker. Bombardier was the highest bidder. Quebecers will not be had that way. Come now. Enough of that nonsense.

• (1650)

Mr. Speaker, it is time to wake up across the aisle. I appreciate they were disappointed with some Ministers, they fired them, and tried new ones. But those "57" will have to wake up, Mr. Speaker, they will have to drive something.

I think the Saint-Maurice election was a lesson for them. People in Saint-Maurice did not sell out to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the bunch of Conservatives who were handing out millions. The New Democratic Party gave them a hotfoot, Mr. Speaker, what a lesson! People in Quebec no longer accept this, they were deceived for two and a half years and they say: "Enough is enough!".

The Minister of State for Youth would like to know what we could do, what proposals we could put forward to help them. In the first place, there should be money behind the Job Development Program to train young people—let them double the amount of funding. We will see whether he has any backbone. We will see whether he is proficient or just another "official ribbon cutter" with $40,000 more in salary than the others and a limousine. Someone to parade and put his chin forward and cut ribbons. Let us see if he can have that funding doubled.

In Quebec, we had $76 million for the Job Development Program. The Montreal area had $22 million. This year, for the whole Province of Quebec, there is a mere $22 million, and $9 million for the Montreal area. The Minister earlier tried acrobatics to make Quebecers believe he is looking after the young. The young my foot! The Minister does nothing. He had a salary increase. The only young person who had a pay increase in Canada is the Minister, Mr. Speaker. The others will get nothing. The only one who is provided with a private chauffeur, there he is. Other young people are still in need, Mr. Speaker. But that will not do. What young people want are jobs.

And he talks about training them. Some of them have diplomas right up to here. They want jobs, they want to work. Double the funding for the Challenge '87 program, stop your cheap manoeuvrings with those 24 weeks, those 30 last weeks to give training jobs every two years. Stop tampering with all those things. Everything you touched has gone sour. And make sure you offer programs. Trust the industry. Do not put up criteria and hurdles, trust community groups. Give them money and they will carry on projects. Do not try to get involved with that and indulge in patronage. For two years you reeked with scandals so you should keep away.

And what about social issues? Why did the Government not propose that a debate be held, as suggested by our Liberal leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), on a guaranteed annual income? Why did the Government not announce in the Throne Speech that it would set up a committee of the House or a joint committee of both Houses to consider how with the same budgetary envelope we could have 15 to 20 social programs to serve all Canadians?

We have social programs for senior citizens, some for our families and others for Canadians generally, some under the guise of tax shelters, grants, cheques or child tax credit based on age and another tax credit for the family. Why has the Government not endorsed the proposal made by the Leader of the Official Opposition? Why did the Government refuse to consider the development of a policy aimed at older people, a policy based on the needs of each of those groups? In the first place, with respect to health care or the so-called extended care centres. Secondly, community or low-rent housing which appeal to people, co-operatives or non-profit organizations, where older citizens in good health can live under the same roof to carry on group activities and enjoy some degree of security. There should also be a grant formula for housing and another one for home care.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Government has all the necessary tools, but it should do away with the Tory philosophy of taking money away from older Canadians to give it to the rich, and find out how, with the same budgetary envelope, care provided to older people can be improved.

The same applies to our families and to young Canadians. And it would be the same thing in the area of industrial assistance. I should like to pay tribute to the NDP members who have issued a document which clearly shows that the more affluent Canadian corporations have managed quite legally not to pay a cent in income tax and that some individuals earning $100,000 in Canada have been allowed to claim the child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this speech of 1986 which would clearly indicate a real improvement in the living conditions of Canadian men and women. But I am much more concerned when I consider what was written in 1984, for I, like the Canadian people generally, had faith in this Prime Minister in 1984.

About the consultation mentioned in the party platform, all groups were saying: Well, we should show some trust; these people must be honest. You can see the results, Mr. Speaker. I understand that PC Members do not like me to say that, but it is the truth. Have we been sent here to tell the truth or not? Is it true that the PC Government, contrary to what it had said, has cut back the Old Age Security Pensions? It is true. Is it true that it has cut back family allowances at the level of indexation? It is true. Nobody can say that it is not true, for it did indeed make these cuts. Is it true that it has deceived workers on early retirements in the Province of Quebec and the rest of Canada concerning unemployment insurance benefits? It is true, and nobody can deny that. Is it true that after having deceived the people, it made cuts in the New Horizon program? It is true, it did indeed cut back, and nobody can say that it did not, Mr. Speaker.

Is it true that it changed the child tax credit for middle income taxpayers, so that people earning between $22,000 and $25,000 can no longer claim this credit? It is true, Mr. Speaker. It is written here in so many words. Nobody can say that the Government had not promised that it would not do it. Its election platform was deceiving. Has the Government rolled back the indexation of family allowances in order to reduce the deficit? Nobody can say that it has not. It's true, and the Minister admitted it after saying he would not do it.

Mr. Speaker, if Conservative Members are ashamed, just like the Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) who is trying to stop us from speaking out, let them repent openly. If they cannot do so in the House, they should rise in their caucus and say to their Prime Minister: Listen, Mr. Prime Minister, we have been elected. We are honest people. We want intellectual honesty and openness to continue. Can anybody say that it is not true that the Prime Minister treats himself to caviar when travelling or that he brings along his butler? Nobody can deny it, for it is true. It is written in so many words, Mr. Speaker.

Nobody can say that the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and his wife have not obtained interest free loans, for it is true, Mr. Speaker. Is it true that some Ministers have been forced to resign? Again, it is true, Mr. Speaker. There is no one in the House who can deny that.

• (1700)

It is not too late, Mr. Speaker; the Government still has some opportunities left. The Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) has the opportunity to do a better job than his predecessor who has been fired.

So the minister is given this opportunity. All members of the House must rise above petty politics to support him in his efforts to put pressure on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who is aware of only one class of citizens, and have him allocate funds to the Minister of State for Youth. Let him allow to the Challenge '87 program twice as much funds as last year. Money should be earmarked immediately for the Job Development Program. The prime minister was able to find money for those who had millions of dollars, who had deposits of more than $60,000 in western banks. He was able to find $1 billion. Let him find one more billion to help the young people of Canada. And if the minister succeeds in that undertaking, I will be the first to rise and say: "Well done!" If he is willing to take up the challenge, I will support and help him. But if the minister tries to lull almost everyone with words such as those of his little speech, as "Donalda" attempted to do, he will be sent back to do a television show.

I now conclude my speech, Mr. Speaker. My time is up. If the Minister of State for Youth is willing to fight for the young people of Canada, he will have my support, but if he does nothing for them, he will hear from me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

Questions and comments. The Hon. Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest).

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly and then put a few specific questions to my colleague. First of all, he referred to the election of our Speaker (Mr. Fraser) and I would like to know—But first, I should point out that, today, the Hon. Member was as good as ever. He was passionate, vibrant and also spoke in a loud voice.

However, you must remember one thing, and I am sure that those who are listening know what I mean, because they are reasonable people. How can you rise and talk for 20 minutes and dismiss absolutely everything as negative? Nothing positive in two whole years? It was a passionate and interesting speech, granted, but those who are watching us, at home, must be wondering: Something is wrong here, it does not make sense. This is not 1940. People are smarter than that. This is not 1800. They are listening and they are watching us, and distinctions must be made.

He talked about the Quebec Liberal Party which he admires a great deal, and we also have a lot of respect for that Party. I do not know whether he is going to give us his views on the so-called "boubou macoutes" operation. He did not mention it yet. However, associations he claims he supports were not exactly in favour. He respects the Quebec Minister of Agriculture and we share that respect. Will he talk to the Minister about the fact that they have cut school milk two days out of five? That they are taking milk away from children? Knowing how close he his to children, I am sure he is already planning a trip to Quebec City to demonstrate on the Hill and demand an immediate stop to this. We are going to watch him on that. If he wants our co-operation, I guess he will ask for it, and we will see whether we can help.

But there is more than that, and concerning the election of our Speaker for whom we in any case have the full respect he deserves, I do not know whether he would tell us—I hope he is not leaving—I do not know whether he will tell us, we will see whether he will answer the question because we are curious to know—whether he stayed here right until the Speaker was elected, because I imagine the absent are always in the wrong. The same rule applies to everybody, perhaps not in his case he will tell us, but being such a staunch supporter of democracy he will tell us whether he was here for the election of the Speaker, for how many ballots and the final vote, whether he came to vote as he wanted to do to get the results he was hoping for.

The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) will simply have to set the record straight for us because we on this side are getting somewhat contradictory messages from the other side. I took part in a television interview with my colleague from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and your own colleague from the riding of Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) who said that, as far as he is concerned, the Speech from the Throne is a good one. You used a word—I am not sure whether it is against the rules or not, but never mind—unless I am mistaken you used the word "a piece of trash". It sounds like a very strong word to me. Yet your colleague from your own Party said that it was a good speech. Help us understand what you and your Party are saying, because we on this side and other Canadians are not too sure what you mean.

One last word to the Hon. Member. We admire your eloquence, your imposing style and everything else, even though the approach is quite negative, but finally, Mr. Speaker, perhaps his name ought to be added to the list of would-be leaders of the Quebec federal Liberal Party, that is the latest trend—

An Hon. Member: Another one.

Mr. Charest: —another one, and if that does not work out he can always launch himself into a new career as a professional wrestler, I think it would be just about right for him.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, as you may have noticed, no one was very impressed by the Minister. I have the impression he is going to get back to the Speaker's chair pretty soon, since he didn't have a clue when we were discussing the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Rossi: He will never learn!

Mr. Malépart: As far as being negative is concerned, if the Minister would stop running around in his limousine and talking to his chauffeur, as if that were the only important thing in life, and if he would look at the latest polls: sixty per cent of the people disagree with your Government, only about 20 per cent agree and 30 per cent are undecided . . . So I have the impression, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister . . . I am not surprised he doesn't want to wait for an answer, considering how this makes him look.

Furthermore, regarding the Speech from the Throne, what I said was that anybody could write a nice story, and I was comparing the 1986 and 1984 Speeches from the Throne, and talking about how Canadians had been betrayed by the 1984 Speech. Is the Minister prepared to say it is not true that in 1984 his Government promised social justice and then went on to cut indexation of Old Age Security benefits? Is he prepared to say that isn't true? Can he say that? He isn't afraid to lie?

Mr. Speaker, about de-indexation of family allowances: Is the Minister going to say that is false? I hope he doesn't have the Prime Minister's disease. You know, people don't trust the Prime Minister's word, and I just hope it isn't contagious in their party, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rossi: He doesn't have the answer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am having some trouble hearing your speech. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has the floor. Please continue.

Mr. Malépart: As far as the election of the Speaker is concerned, I must say that I am not a lawyer like the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), who has bragged about it. That is a special class of people. You are one yourself, Mr. Speaker. As for me, I am a simple citizen like the majority of Canadians and I thank you for letting me give a more complete answer about the election of the Speaker. As I understand it, if the comments of the Prime Minister about parliamentary reform were true, sincere and honest, as Deputy Speaker of the House, your replacement should have been Marcel Prud'homme or Mr. Lewis, who were also candidates, and not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) not to involve candidates to the Chair in his speech. I ask him to conclude.

Mr. Charest: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Honourable Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) on a point of order.

Mr. Charest: I would like to say in a few words that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has yet to answer our question. We will see whether he does or not. We are waiting. Perhaps we will use that as a yardstick to measure his honesty.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask— I now recognize the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, but I would ask him to be brief if possible because I believe another Member would like to ask a question within the allotted ten-minute period.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I have answered. I asked the Minister, and I am still waiting for his answer: Am I wrong to say that his Government has reduced Old Age Security pension indexing? So he answered: Is it false—

Mr. Charest: Answer the question!

Mr. Blais: Answer the question!

Mr. Rossi: You do not like that, hey?

Mr. Malépart: Oh! Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I feel compelled to say, whether my terms are parliamentary or not, that Conservative Members like to verge on lying.

Mr. Rossi: Old Age Security pensions? You do not like that. You did not answer the question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Cassidy) for a question or comment.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, following the speeches of both previous speakers, I would simply like to comment briefly on the speech of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) because he is a member of the Liberal Party. He is quite right in criticizing the government, but he forgets that his own Government was in power for many years and could have done anything that was required to develop the economy of Québec.

In Montreal, the regional economic problems have long been ignored by the municipal government. But one wonders why it is that no member of Parliament, no minister coming from the Montréal region ever was able to come up with an economic development plan for Montreal, that not one of them ever reacted. Four oil refineries were shut down in that area, for instance.

The honourable member just mentioned the need to get started with a guaranteed annual income. It is a good suggestion. But let me put this question to the honourable member: When his Party was in power for almost 20 years, before the last election, why did the Liberals not go ahead with that reform instead of just starting to call for some change in our social fabric, in our social policy, now that they are in the opposition? They are in effect calling for something that his Party was not willing to deliver when they were in power.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I will gladly reply to the NDP Member. His question clearly indicates that the NDP has never understood and will never understand Quebecers. It clearly shows that it would not cost the Prime Minister much to find a job for him like he did for the former Member.

Why did the Liberal Party . . . If it did get the message, Mr. Speaker, why did the Government . . . ? Because the guaranteed annual income is not something than can be implemented overnight. One must make sure that it will improve the quality of life for Canadians, that there will be no additional costs. How to reorganize that? If the NDP Member—

Mr. Cassidy: You had enough time to do it.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, we did improve the conditions of living, medicare—Mr. Speaker, I believe that we have been honest enough to make changes. That is why we have been in power and for that same reason we shall come to power again. We shall not forever be in the opposition and we shall not accept menial tasks of that nature to say farewell. Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude by answering that question, on guaranteed annual income, on a policy for senior citizens: I believe that social programs have been upgraded over the years. This cannot be done in a radical fashion. Surely, we could adopt a simplistic NDP-style solution. I have former Parti Québécois acquaintances who did just that and were thrown out rather quickly by the electorate. The idea is to find the best way to go about it. What is important is not the type of annual income but what it boils down to in terms of dollar amounts and services provided to people. This is why I am pleased that the Liberal Party has progressed with regard to social programs for the elderly and families. The time has now come to consider that and perhaps to conclude eventually that providing a guaranteed annual income is not necessarily in the best interest of those who need assistance, contrarily to NDP ideology, which is basically biased.

• (1710)

[English]

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I want to commence by extending to the Speaker, his deputies and the new process my best wishes. I wish you and yours well.

I rise today to express a concern for rural Canada, not only for the food producers and other persons who live from the resources of the land but also for the towns, villages and hamlets which dot the country. The census of 1891 reported that 82 per cent of Canadians lived in rural areas. Today 4 per cent of Canadians live on farms and an additional 16 per cent live in rural non-farm situations.

I assert that the pattern of our population settlement is now reason for legitimate concern. Fifty-seven per cent of Canada's population is held within the 23 largest cities. Seventy-nine point five per cent of the Canadian population is within the 23 largest cities and 148 smaller cities. It is clear that that is where the political power is also harboured. As a result it is, by degree, more difficult to get the proper focus of attention that we need for the aspirations of rural Canada. The 9,500 towns and villages, along with the primary producers in agriculture, fishing, mining and forestry, have to knock harder and longer to get attention at the door of society's decision-makers. Simply put, while the hinterlands provide the lion's share of the nation's wealth, the cities harvest the benefit.

Today there are more Members of Parliament representing the urban settlements in and around the Cities of Montreal and Toronto than representing the three prairie provinces and the two northern territories. The three largest cities in Canada, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, collectively have more voting power in Parliament than has 85 per cent of Canada's land area. The voting power is such that it is its own concern.

There is a need for Canadian society to refocus on the potential of our hinterland and to diversify our population settlement patterns. It is my view that there is a bias which arises in urban citizens against the country cousins, albeit unintended and certainly without malice. Nevertheless, there is therein a real damage.

I want to set forward a few examples. The first one is relatively harmless and perhaps borders on trivia. I am going to talk about the urban weather reporter. After six weeks of drought in the rural communities, this pesky little fellow, armed with pointer and weather map, appears on our television screens and announces that there is good news, that it will be hot and dry for the weekend. This kind of announcement is received in rural communities as an insult. It irritates rural people who are dependent upon the weather in a way in which urban communities can hardly imagine.

Who among us can justly claim that Canada Post is acting with justice and fair-mindedness when it provides free door-to-door postal service in urban areas but forces rural people to rent metal mail boxes? Most rural people would never expect door-to-door delivery, but they remain perplexed by the fact that they are charged while urban citizens have a free ride on the public purse.

There is the question of what makes the Post Office remain and what makes it disappear. Canada Post is presently shooting off small rural post offices like clay pigeons. It matters not that rural citizens may have to travel 100 or more miles on a return trip to obtain their mail. It matters not how busy a farmer or rancher is in the sprawling country of southern Alberta. The only consideration of Canada Post is the number of people per mile and whether or not the local post office makes money.

It does not matter that the petroleum and agricultural resources near Big Stone, Alberta, earns Governments $60 million annually. If the local post office loses $5,000 per year, Canada Post will close it down. Moreover, it does not bat an eyelash at free door-to-door delivery in urban communities. The fact that it costs millions of dollars annually to provide the door-to-door service in urban areas is unpersuasive. It is those far away post offices in rural Canada upon which Canada Post pins its hopes for a balanced budget. That is a pattern that may work but it is a pattern which is flooded with shame and insensitivity.

I would like to give the telephone company as another example. This corporate giant is under the jurisdiction of provincial Governments, yet the same sociological forces are exerted. If you are in urban Canada, you can have a private telephone in your home for $8, $9 or $10 a month. For the same price in many parts of rural Canada you can deal on a $130,000 harvest combine while three of your neighbours listen in. We are in the computer age and farmers need private phone lines to access data banks for their computers on accounting, market information, nutritional requirements and veterinary services.

I would now like to talk about the bias that exists in police service. I had occasion to phone the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at Camrose, Alberta, on a Saturday this summer. My call was intercepted and transferred to Red Deer. When I told that to a colleague of mine in the House of Commons, he gave me a better example than my own. At 4 a.m. a man was caught beating his wife. A phone call was made to the police for help. The operator transferred the call to Kamloops, British Columbia, more than 100 miles away from the incident. The officer who received the phone call said that someone from the local detachment would attend at nine o'clock in the morning, some five hours later.

I do not raise this point to bring issue with whether the R.C.M.P. should have different working hours or whether they should have time off on the weekends. I think their present hours are fine and we all recognize they should have time off on the weekends. However, I do emphasize that rural people accept a level of police protection which urban people would never tolerate. If police protection is not continuous, it is not secure.

I want to talk a bit about labour disputes, which are usually an urban phenomenon, and their impact on rural Canada. Most people, from following recent strikes in Thunder Bay and Vancouver, know that the labour workers are seeking more money. Many people would not even argue about whether they ought to receive more, but many of them do not recognize that when the workers and grain handlers get more money, the farmers get less. The situation is literally that the farmers receive international price, less cost. In other words, the administration, handling, shipping and transportation costs are all deducted.

• (1720)

We have a situation in our agricultural communities in Canada today where our farmers have had a decreased income every year for five years and this year have had a 20 per cent decrease over the previous year. It is within that scenario that the urban worker rises up to say that he wants more even though it means that the agricultural producers who provided the jobs in the first place must accept less so the labourers can have more. It is another example which underscores the fact that there is a sociological phenomenon that favours urban Canadians over rural Canadians.

I am proud that my Government announced in the Speech from the Throne that there will be more focus on day care. Urban Canada is crying out for more day care, more space and services and the commitment of more money. There is no day care in rural Canada in spite of the fact that in my Province of Alberta, 41 per cent of farmers or farmers and their spouses work off the farm. The farm environment is more dangerous for young children, with chemicals, machinery and animals. Yet world conditions and economic pressures on farmers mean that some 53 per cent of farmers, on a national average, now have off-farm work. However, there is still no day care. I am pleased with the initiative and I hope that those who design the actual legislation and initiative will remember that rural Canada also needs day care along with our urban cousin.

Let me give one final example—the pricing of farm chemicals—and I will move on to solutions that I believe will be helpful. Banvel and Dycleer are two chemicals. Banvel is used by farmers and Dycleer is used by municipal Governments. Dycleer is exactly the same chemical as Banvel, yet it sells for $20 a unit cheaper. It is illegal to use it for agricultural purposes. The company argues that this is because of its packaging and selling. Yet there are people in the farm aerial spray business who buy even more of the chemical than the municipalities, yet have to pay more for no other reason than that they are classified as agricultural operations. That type of focus should not continue.

Let me ask rhetorically: Is Canada better off if Toronto and Montreal become as large as New York? Are we better off if Vancouver and Halifax become the Chicagos and Detroits of Canada? Are there no limits to growth? Is not the hinterland something we should focus on for increased vitality?

I believe, because of my past experience in the Province of Alberta, that it is possible to refocus on our hinterland and create a new vitality in it.

In the mid-1970s the Alberta Government decentralized and gave a sense of fresh air to many of those communities that were struggling. For instance, when Water Resources was moved to the community of Vegreville and the Alberta Development Corporation moved its headquarters from Edmonton to Camrose, it brought a new breath of fresh air and vitality to those communities. The community of Rimbey is a town of 600 in the riding of the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). It now has the provincial offices of the provincial parks programs and it is much more able to sustain itself. Yet there are parts of east central Alberta and west central Saskatchewan that are dying and crying out for the attention that goes to urban Canada, to start moving toward a rural focus, closer to the people who are served.

I could go on much longer and give many examples to show the kind of discrimination that takes place, but I want to talk about some solutions that we might offer.

First, I believe we should have a decentralized Government wherever possible. The Farm Credit Corporation, for example, could move to Honna, Alberta, an area that is losing its population because it depended on being a railway centre. Now that that industry is fading away, it needs some injection of a resource that will give it a new sense of vitality.

I ask, partly tongue in check, if there would be anything wrong with moving the national headquarters of Canada Post to Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland? It seems to me that that is a very logical place to put the headquarters of Canada Post. It might be appropriate in terms of rural reconstruction and having the citizens of Canada recognize that we finally put the Post Office in its right location.

Perhaps the Animal Health Division of the Department of Agriculture could go to Innisfail, Alberta. Could the plant science branch not go to a rural community in Saskatchewan? Why must all these operations be harboured in Ottawa? If we were to move some of the operations of the federal Government from Ottawa, into the hinterland that is so important and needed for the continued growth of our country, we could have greater and more vital communities. We should do more with the industrial infrastructure and, wherever possible, use incentives to move it so that the major developments do not always take place in Montreal, Toronto, London, Hamilton or Vancouver but in little communities like—

Mr. Siddon: Craigmyle.

Mr. Malone: —Craigmyle, Alberta, a perfect example. I know the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) recognizes that he is speaking about a region of Canada that has a decreasing population.

It is important that I point out that according to the old Canada Works Program, communities with low unemployment rates would only get $100,000 for the area. The logic used by Statistics Canada was that areas with a low unemployment rate did not need any more money to improve the unemployment situation in the area. However, this logic did not take into account that many of those rural communities exported their unemployed, as boys and girls growing up on the farm in the Prairies did not stay unless they could take over the farm. They would go to the city where they would be listed on the city's unemployment roll, when unemployed.

A few years ago I attended the opening of a factory at Bashaw. I had the pleasure of seeing 30 young people, dressed in white cloaks and caps, working in that new cheese factory. I asked each of them where they were from and what they would be doing if they were not working in that factory. Each person told me that they would be in Red Deer, Calgary or Edmonton. Young people give us low unemployment statistics because they move away, but if industry is brought into those rural communities they will stay home. We must change the trend.

Finally, while it would be easy to blame previous Governments for this diminishing population in rural Canada, I do not want to do that because I believe that this trend existed for logical reasons. I believe there were natural efficiencies that made us move to urban areas to fulfil our goals, but today is different and we live in an age of the computer and high tech communication. It is interesting to note, for instance, that on Galiano Island and other islands off the coast of British Columbia there are major executives of large corporations who basically run those corporations from their homes. Because of technology today we have the capacity to revitalize. It is a new phenomenon that we can do what we could not have done 10 years ago.

• (1730)

I see my time is up. I have other solutions to which I wanted to refer, but perhaps someone will ask me about an elected Senate and on that note, I will sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 5.30 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 62(4), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment. The question is on the amendment. Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), seconded by Mr. Gray (Windsor West), moved:

That the following be added to the Address:

"The House regrets, that at a time when 1,250,000 Canadians are looking for jobs; when the Canadian family farm is threatened; when the oil and gas industry is trying to hang on; when regional inequalities are being worsened by government inaction; when young people, elderly women and single mothers face extraordinary hardship; when average Canadians face huge tax increases while giant corporations get tax breaks; and when Canadians, from one end of the country to the other, are crying out for leadership and direction, the Government is trying to tackle the nation's problems with empty words and aimless rhetoric".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 2)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Axworthy
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Cassidy
Copps
de Corneille
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Finestone
Foster
Frith
Fulton
Gagliano
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Heap
Henderson
Hopkins
Hovdebo
Isabelle
Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount)
Kaplan
Keeper
Killens
Langdon
MacLellan
Malépart
Marchi
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nunziata
Orlikow
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Riis
Robichaud
Robinson
Rossi
Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe)
Tobin
Turner (Vancouver Quadra)
Young—50

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bernier
Bertrand
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Browes
Cadieux
Clark (Yellowhead)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Coates
Collins
Comeau
Cook
Cooper
Cossitt
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Crofton
Crouse
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dorin
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Ellis

Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Gagnon
Gervais
Gray
(Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Guilbault
(Drummond)
Gurbin
Hardey
Harvey
Hawkes
Hees
Horner
Howie
Hudon
James
Jardine
Jepson
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
La Salle
Lawrence
Layton
Leblanc
Lesick
Lewis
Mailly
Malone
Martin
Masse
Mayer
McCrossan
McDermid
McKenzie
McKinnon
Minaker
Moore
Mulroney
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
Oostrom
Peterson
Plamondon
Plourde
Porter
Price
Ravis
Redway
Reimer
Ricard
St. Germain
St-Julien
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger
(Wetaskiwin)
Scott
(Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields
Siddon
Stevens
Suluk
Tardif
(Charlesbourg)
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Tremblay
(Lotbinière)
Vézina
Warner
White
Winegard
Wise—108

• (1800)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

It being six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 9, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

ELECTIONS CANADA

TABLING OF 1986 REPORT OF CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour of laying on the Table of the House the 1986 Report of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada.

[English]

May I remind Hon. Members that pursuant to Standing Order 67(4) this report is deemed permanently referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

* * *

FISHERIES

TABLING OF POLICY ON MANAGEMENT OF FISH HABITAT

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 67(2) I wish to table, in both official languages, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans policy for the management of fish habitat.

* * *

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF NINTH REPORT OF CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101 I have the honour to present to the House the ninth report, in both official languages, of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association. This report on a meeting concerning public information of the North Atlantic Alliance was prepared by the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King).

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-216, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce for first reading a Bill to amend the Criminal Code concerning abortion. The purpose of this Bill is to address what I believe is the primary question concerning abortion—are we or are we not dealing with a human life. The essence of this Bill is that it removes the word "health" and would permit an abortion only on the grounds of self-defence in those rare instances when a mother's life is deemed to be in danger.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

On the Order: Introduction of Bills

October 2, 1986—The Minister of State (Finance)—Bill intituled: "An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act".

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[Editor's Note: For Speaker's ruling on above, see p. 246.]

• (1110)

THE OFFICIAL DESIGNATION OF NOVA SCOTIA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-217, an Act respecting the official designation of "Nova Scotia".

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to use proper language for proper nouns, in both official languages.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ESTABLISHMENT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been the usual discussions and consultations with the House Leaders of the other Parties, having regard to the establishment of the Striking Committee under the provisions of Standing Order 93, for the appointment of Members to the Legislative Committees. As well, there have been discussions with respect to the reinstatement of the work of three special or subcommittees; the Special Committee on Child Care, the Subcommittee on the Handicapped and the Special Committee on Acid Rain.

I think you will find unanimous agreement for the following motion with respect to the establishment of the Striking Committee:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, the composition of the Striking Committee of the House of Commons be amended by substituting the names of Messrs. Murphy, Mazankowski and Mrs. Bourgault for Messrs. Deans, Hnatyshyn and McGrath, respectively.

Motion agreed to.

REINSTATEMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON ACID RAIN

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Further to discussions with respect to the reinstatement of the Special Committee on Acid Rain, I think you will find that the following motion would be in order:

That a Special Committee of the House of Commons, consisting of Messrs. Blaikie, Caccia, Corbett, Darling, Desjardins, Ferland, and Gurbin, be appointed to act as a Special Committee on Acid Rain;

That the Committee be empowered to hold hearings to review all aspects of acid rain;

That the evidence adduced by the Special Committee on Acid Rain in the First Session of the present Parliament be deemed to have been referred to the Committee;

That the Committee have all the powers provided to Standing Committees pursuant to Standing Order 96(1) and that the provisions of Standing Order 98 and sections 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of Standing Order 94 be suspended, unless otherwise agreed to by this Committee; and

That the Committee have the power to adjourn from place to place in Canada and the United States, and the power to retain staff, subject to budgetary approval by the Board of Internal Economy.

Motion agreed to.

REINSTATEMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON CHILD CARE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the proposal to reinstate the Special Committee on Child Care, discussions have taken place and I think you will find that the following motion would receive unanimous consent:

That a Special Committee of the House of Commons, consisting of the following members, be appointed to act as a Parliamentary Task Force on Child Care: Belsher, Duguay, Martin (Lincoln), Mitchell, Nicholson (Niagara Falls), and Pépin; to report on the future of child care in Canada in the context of the changing needs of the Canadian family in today's society with particular reference to the following:

(1) the requirements of children for care in parental or non-parental arrangements and the preferences of parents in this regard;

(2) the role of the federal Government in child care in light of the shared responsibility for child care among parents, the private sector, the voluntary sector, and Governments; and

(3) alternatives for future action by the federal Government:

the alternatives proposed should take into account factors such as:

(A) the special circumstances of various families, including but not limited to such factors as marital status of parents, economic circumstances of families, and location, cultural background and disability of parent(s) or child; and

(B) the financial implications for the Government of any initiatives which may be proposed including tax measures or other fiscal arrangements;

That the evidence adduced by the Special Committee on Child Care in the First Session of the present Parliament be deemed to have been referred to the Special Committee hereby appointed;

That the Special Committee, in carrying out its review, shall have all the powers given to Standing Committees by Standing Order 96(1);

That the portion of the budget of the Special Committee on Child Care not expended during the First Session of the present Parliament be deemed to constitute the entire budget of the Special Committee hereby appointed, unless a supplementary budget is approved by the Board of Internal Economy;

That the Special Committee be authorized to repay, from its budget, expenditures undertaken by the Committees and Private Legislation Branch between September 3, 1986, and October 22, 1986, in order to expedite the study of the Special Committee's mandate;

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when an interim or final report of the Special Committee is completed, the Special Committee shall report its findings by depositing its report with the Clerk of the House, which report shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the Table; and

That the Special Committee shall report no later than Wednesday, November 26, 1986.

Motion agreed to.

REINSTATEMENT OF SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, similarly, I think you will find that the following motion would receive unanimous consent:

● (1120)

That a Subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture consisting of the following Members, be appointed to examine annual reports of the Minister responsible for the Status of Disabled Persons: Boyer, de Corneille, Halliday, Joncas, Young; to report and make recommendations to the House on such reports and on questions referred to it by the House;

That the Subcommittee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary;

That the Subcommittee have the power to adjourn from place to place inside Canada provided that the locations to be visited, as well as the estimated expenses for such travel, shall be determined in advance and submitted to the Board of Internal Economy for approval;

That the Subcommittee be empowered to report directly to the House;

That the Subcommittee have all of the powers of a Standing Committee of the House, pursuant to Standing Order 96(1);

That changes in membership be made only pursuant to Standing Order 94(3)(b);

That the portion of the budget of the Subcommittee on the Disabled and Handicaped of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture not expended during the First Session of the present Parliament be deemed to constitute the entire budget of the Subcommittee hereby appointed, unless a supplementary budget is approved by the Board of Internal Economy;

That the Subcommittee be authorized to repay from its budget expenditures undertaken by the Committees and Private Legislation Directorate between September 3, 1986, and October 22, 1986, in order to expedite the study of the Special Committee's mandate.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX ACT

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with respect to a Ways and Means motion standing under Government Orders, Ways and Means motion No. 3, having regard to consideration of Ways and Means to amend the Income Tax Act. In more layman's terms, it has to do with the child tax credit.

There have been discussions with the Opposition House Leaders and I think you will find it agreeable to have that placed before the House at this time.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act, laid upon the Table on Thursday, October 2, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Ways and Means

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Wednesday, October 8, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the Session.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I respectfully submit that on grounds of equity, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) should be the next Hon. Member to have the floor. There have been 15 Progressive Conservative Members speaking so far in this Address debate, nine Liberals and eight New Democrats. Bearing in mind that the Liberals have some 38 per cent more members than the New Democratic Party, I submit that the Hon. Member for Papineau should be the the one to catch your eye.

Therefore, I respectfully move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

That the Hon. Member for Papineau now be heard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed, please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Gray, Windsor West) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 3)

YEAS

Members

Allmand	de Corneille	Frith
Axworthy	Dingwall	Gagliano
Berger	Finestone	Garneau
Copps	Foster	Gauthier

Gray (Windsor West)
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Henderson
Hopkins
Isabelle
Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount)
Kaplan
Killens
Malépart
Marchi
Nicholson (Trinity)
Penner
Pépin
Robichaud
Rossi
Tobin
Turner (Vancouver Quadra)—29

NAYS

Members

Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bernier
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Bouchard
Bourgault
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Cassidy
Clifford
Clinch
Comeau
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Côté (Langelier)
Crombie
Daubney
Della Noce
Desjardins
Desrosiers
Dorin
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Fennell
Ferland
Fontaine
Forrestall
Fraleigh
Fretz
Fulton
Gagnon
Gravel
Halliday
Hardey
Hawkes
Heap
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Hovdebo
Howie
James
Jepson
Jourdenais
Keeper
Kempling
Kindy
La Salle
Leblanc
Lesick
Lewis
Malone
Martin
Mazankowski
McCuish
McKenzie
McKinnon
Mitchell
Mitges
Murphy
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Nowlan
Nystrom
Parry
Pennock
Peterson
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Ricard
Riis
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Sparrow
Taylor
Thacker
Towers
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Vézina
Warner
Weiner
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Young—87

● (1200)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. I recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate you and particularly commend the fact that for the first time in our history we have a Speaker of the House of Commons who is genuinely the choice of all Members and not simply the choice of the Government of the day. I believe we all have a responsibility to try to restore the sense of purpose and decorum of this Chamber. I for one share that sense of responsibility. I believe we can restore decorum in this Chamber without harming Parliament's ability to make the Government accountable and to ensure that the differences of the three Parties are put forward.

I have to say that I regret the kind of tactics we have just seen in the House which are incomprehensible to average Canadians, but if average Canadians could understand on what we have wasted half an hour of the House's time, they would find those tactics juvenile, infantile and demeaning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: I want to begin by saying a word to my constituents in Ottawa Centre and to all of the other federal employees who are affected by the Government's restraints on their political rights. This summer, the Charter case on political rights, which I launched in 1984, finally reached the Federal Court. Mr. Justice Walsh's decision opened the door a bit wider to political acitivity by federal employees, but in his decision Mr. Justice Walsh refused to strike down the relevant sections of the Public Service Employment Act. I have, therefore, gone to the Federal Court of Appeal in conjunction with my co-plaintiffs from the Public Service Alliance. We hope to win our points there, but I deeply regret that there was no mention of this issue in the Throne Speech. It is time the Government got this issue out of the courts and into Parliament by bringing forward legislation which we can debate and put into law as the Conservatives promised before the 1984 election.

I remain committed to winning political rights for public servants. I want to warn the Government that its record will be on the line if it does not act on its promise to provide political rights before the 1988 election.

There are two other local issues on which I would like to comment briefly, Mr. Speaker. I am extremely disturbed at the cuts announced today in the budget for the National Research Council. I have today written to all members of the board of the National Research Council urging them to do everything possible to stop those cuts, including resigning en masse if necessary. It is intolerable that the Government's decision to have a space agency and to have the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) head a committee on industrial research should be used to undermine the National Research Council at a time when everybody in Canada acknowledges the need for this country to take leadership in research and development rather than gutting the five institutions and the work that is now being done.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, since you are now in office as Speaker, that I am disturbed. I hope you will make representations privately to the Government over its delays in proclaiming Bill C-45 in order to give bargaining rights to House of Commons employees. The employees feel that the delay is being put into place in order to give the Commons administration time to shake things up in a way that will be favourable to management and will disregard the rights of employees. I hope that you take that very seriously, Sir, and get Bill C-45 proclaimed as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with the progress made by the New Democratic Party in Quebec, and I want to thank all Quebecers who have joined our ranks in increasing numbers over the past two years. Recent polls indicate that nearly one third of the population of Quebec would support the New Democratic Party in the event of a federal election and that Ed Broadbent is as popular in Quebec, as the leader of his party, as the Prime Minister. Although we have yet to win federal seats in Quebec, the NDP is ahead of the Conservatives in Quebec, and we intend to stay ahead. The strong increase in votes for the NDP in the by-election in Saint-Maurice, hardly a promising riding for the NDP, shows the extent to which Quebecers know and support us. Is this a temporary phenomenon, arising from a case of disenchantment with the two old parties? I would say no, Mr. Speaker, because for two years, the NDP has been far more visible on the Quebec federal scene. In the House of Commons, we are asking more and more questions about matters of concern to the people of Quebec, ranging from shipyards, and the textile industry to the industrial future of Montreal East and de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions.

Since January, we have made about 50 trips in the various regions of Quebec to meet voters, militant party members, community groups, labour organizations, farmers, women's groups, and business associations. Mr. Speaker, we intend to keep up the good work. Our commitment to Quebec will continue beyond the next election, because the New Democratic Party represents and wants to represent the middle class and ordinary people, not just from British Columbia or Newfoundland or Ontario but from all over Canada, including Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, when travelling through Quebec and Ontario, I am increasingly struck by the differences between the various regions of our country. More and more, we seem to be living in two Canadas, no longer the two solitudes of the English and French, but the two solid solitudes of rich and poor. In the urban areas of Southern Ontario, economic growth has brought unemployment down to less than 6 per cent. Not perfect, but not depression statistics either. In the rest of the country, however, there has been very little change. In Quebec, the unemployment rate has remained at 11.5 per cent. In some regions, it exceeds 20 per cent. In the private sector, according to the Conservatives, the growth rate in Southern Ontario is coming along very nicely. However, even the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) admits that the private sector has little to offer in his region, Lac-Saint-Jean.

• (1210)

[English]

One month ago my Leader appointed me finance critic for the NDP here in Parliament. It is an honour and a challenge for me to take on this new responsibility because economic management is central to every other issue in Government today. As I was just saying en francais, we are increasingly coming to a situation where we have two Canadas, one rich and one poor. That is an intolerable situation which I, as one spokesman for my Party, and my Party as a whole, are committed to bringing to an end.

Over the summer Canadians made it clear that they question the Conservative Government over its lack of integrity and lack of fairness. They were looking for a fresh start in the Throne Speech but they did not get it. The Speech reminded me of what I used to hear in the Ontario Legislature in the 1970s when Dalton Camp and Senator Norman Atkins were advising Premier Davis.

While I welcome the announcement that there will be new conflict of interest legislation as a result of the problems of the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I am disappointed that there is no other recognition in the Throne Speech that Canadians want action on what the Prime Minister and his colleagues dismiss as the small things which have troubled his Government. It is not a small thing to waste millions of dollars to give our Prime Minister the trappings of a U.S. President. The pork-barrelling that went on to move a prison from Drummondville to Manicouagan, the politicization of the top civil service which is inherent in the appointment of Dalton Camp as a senior deputy minister, the revision of events which seem to go on whenever the Prime Minister talks to the press, all these things define the style of the present Government and are major factors in its collapse in the polls.

When you look at the big things which the Government claims have been going right, you also begin to wonder about the Conservative's credibility. The number one priority for most Canadians is secure employment. Yet one and a quarter million Canadians are still officially out of work and hundreds of thousands more would be seeking work if jobs were available. We have had no growth in jobs since January of 1986, almost a whole year. Unemployment is worse in the Atlantic provinces today than it was before the 1984 election. While unemployment is as low as 5 per cent in certain parts of southern Ontario like the City of London, it is close to 10 per cent here in Ottawa in the area I represent. It is 12 per cent in many parts of Quebec, higher than that in British Columbia, and running at over 21 per cent in Newfoundland. To all intents and purposes we now have two economies in Canada, one that is starting to thrive in southern Ontario and a vast area from St. John's to Victoria which is dangerously close to depression.

John Diefenbaker cried out for one Canada, but his Conservative successors in 1986 are rapidly creating two Canadas, one for the rich and one for the poor. Last year family income in southern Ontario averaged $41,765, which is some 40 per cent more than the average family income in Newfoundland. The response of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to that kind of disparity is to say that people in the Atlantic provinces should be glad they do not live in Bangladesh. This is not a Third World country. I would have thought that, as the regional Minister from Newfoundland, the Minister would be talking about how he and his Government can create living conditions in Newfoundland comparable to those in Ontario rather than telling people they can eat cake.

In Canada today one million families live below the poverty line. Only 3.6 per cent of total income goes to the bottom 20 per cent of our population. People at the top of the heap, the top one-fifth of income earners, take 43.3 per cent of all income. Yet what does the Throne Speech do about that situation? What does it say about the problems within our midst? One searches in vain to even find the word "poverty" mentioned in the speech.

Wealthy Canadians in the corporate sector keep urging the Government to bring down the budgetary deficit. Last year the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) went to Bay Street to talk to those wealthy Canadians. He told them that even though he had miscalculated figures for the current fiscal year, he intends to stay the course and continue deficit reduction as his top priority. It is about time he realized that the view from Etobicoke and Bay Street is not the view of the average Canadian. The Government needs to respond to the needs of the average Canadian, not just those who are well off in the areas where he hangs out in southern Ontario. On behalf of millions of Canadians threatened with unemployment and job insecurity I want to know why the Government could not have used the Throne Speech to point to the unacceptably high unemployment rate of 9.7 per cent across Canada and set targets for systematically bringing that rate down rather than just setting targets for deficit reduction.

It is the same thing when you talk about taxes. In the last two years the Government increased taxes of ordinary Canadian families by $1,300 per year. At the same time it cut tax rates for corporations and the rich. Last month we released figures which show that every year some 80,000 profitable Canadian corporations, almost one-third of the total, with income in the $12 billion range, paid no corporate income tax. In some years a teller at the Royal Bank on Sparks Street in my constituency paid more income tax all by herself than her employer had to pay on assets which today total $98 billion across Canada. Is that fair? It is another sign of what I mean when I say that we now have two Canadas, one rich and one poor.

Canadians were looking for a clear sense of direction in the Throne Speech, not just the mushy generalities they got. I would like to outline what I and my Party see as priorities which should be put in place and will be put in place when the NDP forms the next Government of Canada.

The first priority should be to put jobs first and not the deficit. When the Minister of Finance announced an upward revision of the deficit, he assured his former colleagues on Bay Street that the program for deficit reduction remains in place. He has yet to give the people on Main Street his targets for reducing unemployment, and in my view he has his priorities wrong. No single move will do more to cut government costs and boost tax revenues than putting Canadians back to work. In other words, if we put jobs at the top of the priority list, that will help with the deficit picture as well. However, the way it is happening right now, we can see that the preoccupation of the Government with the deficit is reducing disposable income, reducing Canadians' willingness to buy goods and services, and is serving as a drag on the economy and making it impossible to create new jobs.

The experience of Manitoba's NDP Government when they came back to power five years ago, the experience of the NDP Government in the Yukon which halved the rate of unemployment in its first year of office, show that a Government can set meaningful targets for reducing unemployment and can achieve them. We should be doing that here in Canada.

We should also be committed to being fair to every region and every Canadian in every part of our country. The emergence of two Canadas has got to come to an end. The idea that the prospects for someone from Cape Breton are dismal, whereas his counterpart living in southern Ontario, in Toronto, Hamilton or London, will have rosier prospects is surely intolerable and we should now bring a sense of hope and promise to people in all corners of Canada. Faced with this challenge the response of the Government has been to do nothing except tell the regions that they are going to have to pull themselves up by their own bootstraps.

[Translation]

Eighteen months ago, Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party's employment task force travelled throughout Canada seeking solutions to our unemployment problems. Our report was an endorsement of the initiative shown in various regions, the contribution of small- and medium-sized businesses, and the urgency of decentralizing programs and being flexible.

Apparently the Government has agreed to some of our recommendations, but this will prove to be a worthless exercise if no money is available to fund a new approach to regional development. The two Canadas will continue to exist but the gap between them will simply grow ever wider.

• (1220)

[English]

Without a commitment to equality and justice as well as decentralization and flexibility the disparities will continue, particularly if the Government continues to see its main role as allowing the private sector to make southern Ontario rich while the rest of Canada slips back into depression status.

The third issue is that of fair taxes. The Finance Department's own polls show that the vast majority of Canadians believe that the tax system is unfair. There is an emerging and growing concern about our tax system. It has become so bad and so ineffective that even the corporate sector is saying that something must be done. However, the corporate sector's solutions are becoming the Government's solutions and they are not the solutions for ordinary Canadians.

The Throne Speech says that personal income taxes will be decreased. We would welcome that, Mr. Speaker, but we know what the Finance Minister has in mind. He wants to bring in a businesss transfer tax which will be a new form of tax on consumption that will be paid by ordinary Canadians. It will replace and broaden the existing manufacturers sales tax. No matter what you call it, this is not a tax on business but rather on individuals.

It became clear from our tax probe over the course of the last year that the present system is unfair, inefficient and unaccountable, particularly when it comes to the billions of dollars of concessions given to corporations. President Reagan and the Republicans in the United States Congress put forward a tax reform which raises corporate taxation in that country by $120 billion while reducing personal tax rates. We could have that kind of fair tax reform in Canada as well.

We need a commitment for a real war on poverty to wipe it out of Canada before the end of the century. We need a commitment for action rather than just studies and speeches to stop the needless concentration of the businesss sector which has put so much of the wealth of the country in the hands of a handful of irresponsible corporate families.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we need a firm commitment concerning the economic equality of women in this country; more than sheer rhetoric, more than toothless legislation which will do precious little to improve the condition of working women, we need a commitment supported by Canadian legislation so that women in this country will indeed achieve real equality.

[English]

I believe that we need to talk about genuine economic democracy. It is time that we abandoned 19th century ways of organizing the workplace and conducting relations between management or employers and employees. When I talk to working people I ask them whether their employers tell them what is going on, whether they know the situation of their enterprise, firm or government Department. I ask whether they are given responsibility, whether decisions are shared in their workplace. Overwhelmingly the response is no. We are moving into the 21st century, yet businesses in Canada are still being run as though this was the 19th century.

We are in a very difficult competitive situation, not only with our friends in the United States, but with Japan, Taiwan, Korea and every other country. We have to act now to involve the abilities, the brainpower, the ingenuity and the commitment of every Canadian in that competitive battle to keep standards of living high in this country, to achieve the other priorities that I have talked about and to ensure that we have democracy, and not only in our social and political lives. By curbing the power of big business and the concentration of power we give power back to the men and women who make Canada great. That commitment in economic democracy is extremely important.

I would like to conclude by saying that there is an opportunity for another amendment to the Throne Speech. A number of themes that I have put forward are shared with me by my Party. That is why I wish to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), that the following be added to the address:

That this House regrets that the Government has failed to provide leadership on major issues of social justice affecting average Canadians including the need for action to provide greater protection for battered women, a commitment to legislate pro-rated benefits for part-time workers, the majority of whom are women, a refusal to establish and work towards lower unemployment targets for Canadians, and the failure to pursue a serious tax reform that would eliminate the unfairness, the complexity and unaccountability of the present system.

I ask all Hon. Members to support me in adding this amendment to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne which represents priorities which we feel cannot be shoved aside until 1988 or 1990 but must be addressed now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will reserve for a few moments my decision as to the acceptability of the amendment. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) for questions or comments.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a few of the points that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) brought up. He knows that Throne Speeches are always thematic in nature. They cannot be entirely specific. I hope he realizes that. I am very proud of the very progressive statements contained in the Throne Speech. I would like to recount a few things that have occurred which I think will be at variance with several things the Hon. Member said.

Tax reform is long overdue in this country. The Government is going to tackle some of the specific issues the Member spoke of with regard to fairness. I hope we can reduce the tax brackets. I know that we can wipe out some of the inequalities which have occurred. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has already taken great strides in that. However that is not something that we could be very specific about in the Throne Speech.

Great strides are needed in this direction, but this is not simple. I am not sure what the exact strategy will be. It may occur in two phases. However, there is a very strong commitment on this side of the House to deliver for average Canadians. There will be a shift in the burden of taxation away from individuals and toward corporations. Major steps have already been taken to shut down some of the loopholes.

With regard to new regulatory reforms for the financial institutions, the Member has served as an alternate on the Finance Committee and knows that a very comprehensive review has already been done by the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee. I am sure that in the near future we will see some most progressive reforms in that area.

Corporate concentration is a topic on which I have spoken on a number of occasions. I share some of the Hon. Member's concerns, but I do not share his pessimism with regard to what the Government will do. The Member knows that not many months ago we brought in a new competition law which had been waiting for decades to be introduced. There is a tribunal now in place that would take care of excessive decisions that would limit competition in the market-place.

• (1230)

I give the Hon. Member some credit and share his view that we will need to go further as a Government because there are some 32 families in this country who control an enormous amount of wealth and we need a structure in place so that it is not abused.

Let me touch on a few of the social issues on which the Government is proceeding. For instance, with the exploitation of young children and women, pornography is a grave concern to many people in the country. That issue will be solved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but we have already taken more than three minutes of the ten-minute period for questions and comments. I would like to allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to reply. Other Members also wish to put questions.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member because I look forward to working with him since I am becoming a full member of the Finance Committee. I believe that we can work together and I hope that he will provide some leadership and drag his Government into the 21st century, since I am not sure that all of its members want to go into it.

One of the issues that I believe he should address is that when the Government talks about tax reform it forgets to mention that in the last two years the Conservatives have raised the tax by $1,300 on average Canadian families while, at the same time, reducing tax rates on corporations and giving enormous tax windfalls to very wealthy people with capital gains. If we are going to talk about tax reform, we must start by rolling back the mistakes of the last two years and put in place a tax reform that will genuinely get a fair share of tax revenues from the corporate sector. I am not convinced that the Government wants to do anything more than simply iron out inequities in taxation between corporations without ensuring that they pay a much greater and fairer share of the total tax burden.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a short comment and then ask the Hon. Member three questions. First, he was very critical of the Government's dealing with unemployment. However, he failed to point out that when the Government, in the two Budget Speeches and economic statements that have been made so far, outlined the proposal it would make to deal with the economy, the Leader of his Party stood in his place and indicated that those proposals and that type of approach would devastate the economy and put more people out of work rather than more people back to work. As the Hon. Member knows, it has had just the reverse effect. In fact, interest rates have fallen, inflation has fallen, and unemployment has fallen. I believe that the Hon. Member should be standing in his place and applauding the Government's approach, rather than criticizing it.

However, my question relates to the aspect of tax reform to which the Hon. Member has referred. I know that the Hon. Member's Party in its NDP Tax Probe 86, has been looking very seriously at the whole situation of federal sales tax and corporate taxes. I have been most interested to read the reports from the NDP tax probe so far. However, I have yet to see what the NDP proposes specifically with respect to corporate taxes and the elimination of corporate tax expenditures. The New Democratic Party has sometimes called these tax rip-offs, but the Finance Department calls them tax expenditures. I suspect that the NDP wants to keep some but I am not sure whether there are specific ones they want to keep and some that they would eliminate. I would like to know what specific ones the NDP would like to eliminate.

Second, is the NDP proposing in its tax reform proposals, tax reform that would have a neutral tax impact effect so that personal income taxes might go down and corporate taxes would go up, or would there only be a rise in corporate taxes?

Finally, if the New Democratic Party is proposing some sort of neutral tax impact or a reduction in personal income taxes, how does it propose to raise the money to pay for all the increased expenditures which the Hon. Member proposes in his speech?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's questions are certainly valid. I am delighted to hear that the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) is an avid reader of the various reports of Tax Probe 86. I promise to send him a copy of the next report which will come out shortly. In fact, by the end of the year or early in 1987, we will have consulted further and will have more feedback in terms of our findings so far. At that point we intend to come to conclusions in terms of some of the questions the Hon. Member raises.

For example, in our most recent report on corporation tax, we indicated that there is a solid case for certain tax concessions, or tax expenditures, to small and medium-sized businesses. Currently they are paying a net rate which is higher than that of big businesses, rather than the other way around. That, to us, seems to be a perverse situation, particularly when so much job creation has come from small and medium-sized businesses.

The Hon. Member certainly reports my Leader accurately and, as so often has happened, I think my Leader may have been a prophet before his time by a few months. Since January, 1986, there has been no further job creation in the Canadian economy. The 500,000 jobs that the Government talks about were in 1984 and 1985. The trend has not continued. I certainly do not find a rate of unemployment of 9.7 per cent acceptable. Perhaps the Government finds that acceptable.

I suspect that most of the improvement that we saw in approximately the first year under the Government was a result of growth that had spilled over from the American economy. Now that that economy has turned the other way, there is no buoyancy from the Government. In fact, the taxes which have been levied on ordinary Canadians are having the effect of depressing the economy. Therefore, when we spoke of hundreds of thousands of jobs that would be affected, they are the jobs that should have been created by a dynamic economy in 1986. They are the jobs which would have put teenagers in Chicoutimi and Newfoundland back to work and would have given women opportunities to re-enter the labour force in Vancouver. However, those people do not have those opportunities because of the drag on the economy by the Government's tax policies.

The Hon. Member asks whether or not tax reform should be neutral. I am surprised to hear him suggest that the Government may even slip away from its commitment in the Throne Speech to reduce the rates of personal income tax. He is suggesting that that is a wrong move. I beleive that personal income taxes for many working Canadians are too high. In order to have a fair tax system we must bring those tax rates down at the same time that we increase the share that is taken by the corporate sector. We should not try to bootleg another personal tax by calling it a business transfer tax.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Canada Post (Mr. Côté).

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to take part in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I am all the more pleased to do so that the Speech from the Throne advocates a number of initiatives which have become essential to most Canadians, particularly those who have to deal with business circles, be they owners, investors or working men and women.

Mr. Speaker, like my hon. colleagues, Canadians are quite aware that our country is now experiencing unstable economic conditions to which it must constantly seek to adapt.

Ours is an industrial and trading nation. We depend on trade, be it to develop our raw materials or to maintain the economic strength of our industries and our service sector. Canadians are first-rate managers, innovators and traders. Our labour force is skilled and very productive and, more important still, our competitiveness is second to none in practically all economic sectors, despite our own limited domestic markets.

Most international experts agree that we do have such qualities. In his speech last Friday the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) referred to the European Management Forum. What are those experts telling us? They are telling us that Canada's competitiveness has improved to such an extent over the last two years that, on the basis of their own classification, Canada climbed from 11th to 6th among the major industrial nations. Not a bad performance compared with that of our competitors. If we persevere, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that we can do even better. However, we have to face three major challenges.

First, as a trading nation, we must have full access to the international markets and capital necessary for our economic growth. Our welfare depends on it. In addition, as a greatly industrialized country, we must continue to be productive and competitive internationally. We must keep up with the latest technology and use all our creativity and ingenuity to adapt to the evolution of the world economy. The economic future of our country requires us to do so.

Finally, as a nation made up of different geographic and cultural elements and based on the principles of equity and solidarity, we must try to achieve a balanced growth in all regions of the country. This is necessary for the integrity of our Confederation.

• (1240)

[English]

You, Mr. Speaker, and all Hon. Members know that economic renewal has been this Government's first priority. We have achieved real and substantial progress since September, 1984, but do not take my word for it. Let me quote as follows from the annual report of The Canadian Manufacturers' Association as it commented on the economic accomplishment of this administration:

> The restrictions of FIRA, reflecting a narrow and destructive nationalism, were removed and Investment Canada is now working aggressively to encourage investment here . . . The previous acrimony in federal-provincial relations has given way to a more positive nation-building approach to our problems.
>
> The past year saw continued progress in restoring fiscal sanity in federal Government finances . . .
>
> A competition Bill was . . . introduced which . . . contains explicit recognition of international competition while at the same time providing . . . protection against abuse of dominant position . . .
>
> Major tax changes aimed at greater neutrality . . . were also introduced.

This is a most impressive record, one that is certainly the envy of some of my hon. friends who used to sit on this side of the House. Naturally, Mr. Laurent Thibault, the President of The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, gives his Members credit for assisting in these accomplishments. I most certainly concur, and I am sure all Hon. Members would agree with me that all Canadians should take credit for this record, as well as for continued low inflation, lower interest rates and lower unemployment.

Obviously, as Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion I am particularly concerned with reconciling the imperatives of industrial competitiveness with balanced economic opportunities across Canada. My Department is dedicated to the development of Canadian industry, especially in the manufacturing and service sectors, and to building on the opportunities for development that exist across Canada. We intend to achieve these objectives in co-operation with the private sector and with the provincial Governments.

As Minister responsible for Investment Canada I am also concerned that Canada obtain a growing share of international investment because we need this investment to increase employment in all parts of the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, one of the crucial contributing causes to slow development is often a lack of capital, and in this regard, I would like to remind the House that the first Bill we introduced in this place was the one which created Investment Canada. This agency, for which I have the honour to be responsible, immediately proved itself to be a major tool in promoting both Canadian and foreign investments in this country.

Thus, the Government was able to ensure the free inflow of the capital required to develop the many resources of our country and see that they are used for the economic renewal of all our regions. As you know, a major part of the Speech from the Throne deals with this issue of industrial and regional development. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss this subject further. Regional development remains one of our main priorities. Economic and social conditions have obviously improved throughout Canada in the last two years. Economic renewal continues and our social policy is already having noticeable results. However, as a Government committed to eliminate regional disparities, we must unfortunately recognize that, in spite of decades of efforts and billions of dollars, there are still gross employment and income inequities in certain regions. The Government therefore intends to make a renewed and firm commitment that each region in the country must achieve its full potential.

As mentioned by the Prime Minister in the Throne Speech, the Government intends to reassess a number of programs related to regional development. We are convinced that this evaluation should be made with three very clear and specific principles in mind.

First, we believe that regional development must come from the potential and the people of each region. Experience has shown that, with appropriate assistance, Canadians have the will, the determination and the ability to stimulate the development of their regional economies.

Second, our economic development programs and the administration and provision of our services to businesses must be much more decentralized than they are now.

Third, our decision-making and benefit-paying mechanisms should be much more efficient, faster and more sensitive to the users' interests.

A review of our regional development programs will continue in co-operation with provincial governments. As Hon. Members in this House are aware, consultations will resume at the highest level on October 17 in Charlottetown, when the Prime Minister meets with the Premiers of the Atlantic Provinces.

Mr. Speaker, much has already been done through the federal-provincial committee of Ministers in charge of Regional Economic Development. I would like to indicate that the committee already has met six times since February 1985. A committee of officials will be submitting a report to us later this year, and its recommendations should help us implement our commitment to prevent wasting even one single dollar in that vital effort for Canada.

[English]

As you know from the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be established without undue delay, bearing in mind the need to consult with provincial Governments and the region's business and community leaders. The mandate and organization of the agency will reflect the three principles I have already described, that is, development based on human resources and opportunities in the Atlantic Provinces, with decentralized decision-making and better delivery.

I emphasize that these principles will guide our efforts, not only in Atlantic Canada but in all parts of Canada as well, particularly in western Canada where special emphasis will be given to diversifying the region's economic base. This will clearly confirm the Government's commitment to balanced economic growth in every part of this beautiful country. Just as Canada cannot afford to neglect the important contribution all regions make to the national good, neither can we afford to have half our population performing at less than its full potential.

• (1250)

Women, in particular, suffer from the inequities built into our society. They are doubly disadvantaged if economic difficulties in their region adversely affect their employment potential and the quality of their family lives.

As this Government seeks to address regional disparity, women will undoubtedly provide important guidance about the right approaches and the much needed policy initiatives. It is my hope that they will enjoy more and better employment and personal opportunities as their communities are revitalized. Women will be part of the new partnership formed between the federal Government and Canada's regions. It is my belief that they will share equally in the prosperity and the stability that will be the result.

However, this is only one side of the equation. We are vitally committed to enhancing the development of industry everywhere in Canada. With this in mind, we intend to re-examine our main industrial support program, the Industrial Regional Development Program, or IRDP.

This program was introduced by the previous Government to meet a multiplicity of objectives, perhaps too many objectives. The complexity of the program and the differential treatment of some areas has meant, among other things, that the Government has not been able to support a number of quality projects, particularly in western Canada. We intend to look very closely at the effectiveness of the existing tier system that determines the level of support that can be provided to projects in various regions.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the course of that review of the RIDP, we will also consider the various possible ways of responding to one of the basic concerns of this Government, that is productivity.

The search for productivity is essential to allow and ensure the development of new manufacturing processes and also to make possible the marketing of new goods and services. In our view, invention and technology transfer must go hand in hand.

History shows the best borrowers or adapters of technology often are those already involved in research and development. We must therefore have a much more balanced approach. We cannot do everything ourselves, but we can neither be content with borrowing technology from others.

The private sector all across Canada has show leadership in the area of innovation and technology. Northern Telecom, for instance, has been marketing Canadian communication technology throughout the world for a number of years.

[English]

Alcan is the largest and probably one of the most efficient aluminium producers in the world based on its past research efforts. It is now becoming a world leader in the development of new materials. Such companies as National Sea Products, Fishery Products International and Canada Packers are using innovation and new technologies to diversify and improve their products and productivity.

In addition, there are hundreds of new companies across Canada, such as Process Technology in New Brunswick, Ogivar Inc. in Quebec, Diffracto in Windsor, SED in Saskatchewan, to name only a few, that are achieving remarkable results in international high technolgy.

For Canada, continued research and development and the ability to import technologies, to apply and build upon them and to market the results will be key elements of an improved competitive position. We require investment capital and linkages with world industry to accomplish this objective.

Our Government established Investment Canada as a national focal point to encourage the essential investment and creative partnerships necessary to this critical priority.

[Translation]

For instance, last year the Agency was involved with the Province of Alberta and the Independent Petroleum Association in a series of investment promotion seminars throughout Europe and the United States.

More recently, officials from Investment Canada also joined with representatives of the Ontario Government in a trip to Japan.

Moreover, Investment Canada is also involved on behalf of the Canadian Government in a number of other activities, such as consulting with national and international trade groups and also international promotion missions.

That work must go on, Mr. Speaker, and this Government's commitment to encourage investment in all its forms is vitally important.

[English]

During the coming year, Investment Canada will focus on contributing to the improvement of our technological infrastructure to promote and attract technology-bearing investment in Canada; working with Canadian business to promote a more global orientation; and seeking new forms of investments, such as strategic alliances among Canadian and international firms.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government is determined to review and update, if necessary, its regional and industrial development support programs to make sure that all parts of the country are treated equitably and that the Canadian industry continues to improve its international competitiveness.

However, the funds allocated to regional and industrial development are nothing but a few drops in the ocean of the Canadian economy. Our programs, therefore, have to be very selective, which means that investments generally should be made without any State intervention.

That is why we want the private sector to become the engine of our economic growth. In fact, the Government has made every effort to lift obstacles by encouraging deregulation and creating a climate favourable to business endeavours.

[English]

The business sector needs a Government that will provide a productive and competitive environment, that will provide support as required and that will stay the course in the development process. We are that Government, and we have that commitment. We can develop as partners.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is now ready to make a ruling on the amendment proposed by Mr. Cassidy and seconded by Mr. Riis. The Chair finds the amendment to be in order.

Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Minister? The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question to ask of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté). It was indicated in the press this morning that in New Brunswick, the province in which a number of support agreements have been signed with the business sector, the Government there has been making a great many decisions in terms of this support for business based on political criteria as opposed to economic, industrial and business criteria. Does the Minister have some comment to make on these reports?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Langelier): As I mentioned in my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I think that since September, 1984, my Government has not only indicated its desire to address the issue of regional development through several concrete initiatives, but we have signed many so-called ERDAs or Economic Regional Development Agreements with most provinces, respecting several areas of activities. We have also signed with the provinces several memoranda of understanding based on regional economic development.

However, our commitment does not stop there. As a matter of fact, we want to further this commitment, and announcements to that effect will be made over the next few weeks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! I must regretfully interrupt the Minister.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.
[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. At the request of the Official Opposition, the introduction of a new Member will take place after Statements pursuant to Standing Order 21. I would hope that the House would agree that, under the circumstances, there should be the full 15 minutes for Statements by Members, followed by the full Question Period with the interruption, of course, for the introduction of the new Member.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

LIBERAL PARTY

RESULTS OF GALLUP POLL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): This is a great day, Mr. Speaker, because this morning's newspapers reported on a Gallup poll clearly showing that the Progressive Conservative Government is in a free fall and the Liberal Party on the rise.

It is also a great day because, in a few minutes, Hon. Members will be extending a warm welcome to the successful candidate in the Saint-Maurice election, our colleague Mr. Grondin. Mr. Speaker, I should think that the Progressive Conservative Government and the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are getting a very clear message: Canadians generally and Quebecers in particular can hardly wait to turf the Conservative gang right out.

• (1405)

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENTAL ADMINISTRATION IN MANITOBA

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, this week's resignation of the Director of Finance in the Manitoba region of the Department of Indian Affairs has lifted the lid a little higher on the unholy administrative mess which exists in that Department.

Let it be known by all Hon. Members that in many areas—education, child welfare, and local government—the Indian people of Manitoba have led the way in self-government. However, at every turn they are frustrated by a Department which will not let go and wants to continue controlling, dominating, and monitoring them. Even more serious, funds appropriated by Parliament for Indian people do not get to them in the way in which we in the House intend.

An inefficient, maladministered Department soaks up a huge portion of these funds and directs them at will, in open defiance of Parliament and of the Minister himself. It is our task as Members of Parliament to reveal these facts and to demand a new relationship between the Government of Canada and the Indian people of the country.

* * *

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

ELECTION CAMPAIGN VOLUNTEERS—PROHIBITION ON ACCESS TO MILITARY BASES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, it is a shame that the new Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) is continuing his Government's policy of making Armed Forces personnel and their families into second-class citizens. In this case, volunteers in provincial election campaigns are being forbidden to set foot on military bases. This is ridiculous.

People living on bases are affected by provincial government actions. They have the right to elect a provincial Government of their choice. They should be allowed to receive information so that they can make an informed, intelligent choice on election day.

No one is urging the Armed Forces to take part in some sinister plot. Political Parties are merely urging people on military bases to exercise their basic constitutional right to make a choice in a democratic election. Even the former Associate Minister of National Defence could not justify keeping candidates off military bases. He admitted: "It's hard to come up with a reason why you wouldn't allow that on military bases in this day and age".

SHIPBUILDING

SITUATION OF INDUSTRY—CALL FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a matter of utmost urgency concerning the state of crisis which exists in the shipbuilding industry. Since the Conservative Government was elected, every meaningful federal assistance program to the industry has been curtailed. Essentially the former Minister of Transport said "Don't expect us to help you", and thousands of shipyard workers across the country have been thrown out of work.

This kind of government inaction is simply unacceptable to Canadians. The Government, especially the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté), must take immediate action to assist the Canadian shipbuilding industry. The Ministers should take every step to encourage domestic demand for shipping capacity and to see to it that this demand is met by Canadian shipyards, not by subsidized yards in other countries.

For too long the Government has said that this is a worldwide problem which cannot be solved, and then washed its hands. Canadians expect their Government to take positive action in the face of adversity, not simply to run away and hide. Canadians feel that it is high time that the Government and the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion live up to their responsibilities—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

* * *

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION OF FIRST CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARIAN OF UKRAINIAN ORIGIN

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I attended the sixtieth anniversary celebration of the election of Michael Luchkovich to the House of Commons, the first Canadian parliamentarian of Ukrainian origin. Throughout his nine years of service in the House of Commons he demonstrated that no problem was too great, that a fair and just solution could always be found. He was highly respected by all Members and made an indelible and most favourable impression on the Government of the day.

He was a well-tempered statesman, a man of courage. Without his translations of Ukrainian literature into English, especially of Ukrainian pioneer life in western Canada, we Canadians would be missing an integral part of our national history.

As we note this special anniversary, we should recall Michael Luchkovich's firm commitment that "true patriotism . . . includes persistence and frugality even under trying circumstances".

* * *

CANADA POST CORPORATION

NORWOOD GROVE POST OFFICE

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that Canada Post is currently re-evaluating its previously announced closure of the Norwood Grove post office in order to seek a better alternative.

On June 12 and again on July 10 of this year, I was assured by the Corporation that no such closing was being contemplated. At the exact same time managers were negotiating with the union the changes necessary to effect the closing. The last two evenings the corporation has met with a few selected constituents in a "by invitation" only meeting to consult. Although we appreciate this consultation, Mr. Speaker, my constituents and I would be more impressed with truly public consultation.

• (1410)

Canadians deserve good postal service at a reasonable cost, not slick PR, shoddy management and intractable collective agreements.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the service to my Norwood electors must be maintained.

* * *

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENT'S RELATIONS WITH INDIAN PEOPLE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, for years the Indian people of Canada have been telling us that they have been mistreated by the Indian Affairs Department. For years people in Parliament were skeptical about what Indian people were telling Canadians. However, the recent revelations by the Department in Winnipeg which follow the Curry audit indicates that what the Indian people have been telling us is true.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) has indicated that he is willing to have an R.C.M.P. investigation into whether or not Indian Affairs was acting in a legal manner. That, surely, is not the right answer, Mr. Speaker. What is missing at the present time is the relationship of trust which historically has been between the federal Government and the Indian people. That has been utterly destroyed by the various departmental officials over the last number of years and by the inaction of various Ministers of Indian Affairs. What we need is a completely independent check into all the actions and decision-making processes of Indian Affairs and, if that is not done, the trust will never be re-established.

* * *

[Translation]

THE LATE FRANÇOISE GAUDET-SMET

COMMEMORATIVE STAMP ISSUE ADVOCATED

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Last September 4, Mr. Speaker, the people of the riding of Lotbinière and all other Quebecers were saddened to hear of the death of Mrs. Françoise Gaudet-Smet, an outstanding Quebecer. Mrs. Gaudet-Smet was a pioneer in her field, an irreplaceable personality whose authenticity, warmth, colourful verve and boundless hospitality will remain forever present in our minds. Mr. Speaker, many of her friends were amazed at her vitality and working energy, but especially at her ever probing mind full of ideas and projects.

This is why I would urge the Minister responsible for Canada Post to issue a commemorative stamp in her honour. To support this request, Mr. Speaker, suffice it to mention that Mrs. Gaudet-Smet was awarded the Order of Canada, the Order of Quebec, the Bene Merenti Medal, the Gold Medal of the Governor General, the Literary Prize of the Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste, and the Ordre de la fidélité française.

* * *

[English]

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE-CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the new Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Crombie) has a number of important priorities which he must urgently address. Near the top of that agenda is the issue of Japanese-Canadian redress. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) committed himself and his Government to two essential ingredients: establishing a negotiating process and conducting these talks with and through the National Association of Japanese Canadians. Unfortunately the two former Ministers failed to honour either of these two crucial promises and thus sowed the seeds of mistrust and non-confidence within the Japanese-Canadian community.

Today that same community, Canadians, and this Parliament remain hopeful that the third Minister to tackle this issue in two years will honour the previous commitments and initiate meaningful discussions within a well defined and ongoing structure as soon as possible.

It is high time that the Conservative Government ends the delay and the rhetoric and resolves this matter with the dignity that it rightfully deserves.

* * *

ENERGY

JOB CREATION POTENTIAL OF PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, in March of this year I reported to the House that 650,000 Canadians from coast to coast were dependent upon Canada's petroleum industry for their livelihood. Today that figure has dropped to 600,000 with a further anticipated loss of 20,000 jobs. That represents 70,000 people. These are the sad consequences of the present crisis in the industry brought about by the drastic drop in world crude prices.

It is important to know that of every dollar spent by the petroleum industry for machinery and equipment, 42 cents is spent in Ontario, 29 cents in Alberta, 13 cents in Quebec, and the remaining 16 cents in other regions of Canada. This is the contribution that a healthy industry can make for the benefit of all Canada. Two jobs in Canada's petroleum industry create three jobs in other parts of Canada, primarily Ontario and Quebec. The energy industry is job creative.

* * *

• (1415)

IMMIGRATION

ISSUANCE OF MINISTERIAL PERMITS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, today's Globe and Mail reports that the Conservative caucus committee has written to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) urging that ministerial permits for potential immigrants already in Canada be issued only by the Minister's office "rather than allowing politically non-aligned bureaucrats free rein with 90 per cent of them". What an outrageous demand. What a perversion of justice towards refugees and relatives of Canadians deserving humane treatment. Thousands of refugees and others are awaiting processing of their applications and deserve Minister's permits. To deny permits to some because they might not vote Tory would be shameful.

I regret that the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer), my colleague on the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, is named in this story as chairman. I call upon him to return to this House and either assure us that he had no part whatever in the proposal reported today by The Globe and Mail, or else announce his resignation from that committee.

THE CONSTITUTION

CALL FOR INCLUSION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, this is Private Property Week in Canada. The right to own property is part of the Canadian heritage. Many people came to this country because they wanted to own land, own a home, or own a farm. Why then is it the only fundamental freedom not protected in the Canadian Constitution?

You know what? In 1981, for 48 hours, it was in our Charter of Rights, but during the weekend the Liberals caved into demands of the NDP and took it out, to the shame of both the Liberals and the NDP. Of course, nationalization will be more difficult when the right to own property is enshrined in the Constitution, but only the communists and the socialists are interested in nationalization anyway.

The Canadian Real Estate Association, the Canadian Bar Association, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, along with most Canadians, want to see the right to own property placed in our Constitution. So let's get to it and put it in.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

CONDITIONS IN ATLANTIC CANADA—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, this summer Atlantic Canadians found out just how well their interests are being represented in the federal Cabinet. The senior Minister from the region said Atlantic Canadians should stop griping about unemployment and consider instead the plight of those living in Haiti or Bangladesh. Our standards are too high, he said, if we use southern Ontario as our yardstick.

I have never heard such marlarkey. What nonsense! The Minister's comments are a kick in the teeth to struggling Atlantic Canadians. They are proof of the Government's lack of concern for those living in the Atlantic region, the unemployed, the fishemen, and the farmers. We do not need to be reminded that we are a thousand times better off and luckier than those living in Haiti or Bangladesh. We need Ministers committed to regional development, Ministers who will make a difference. It is now quite clear that Atlantic Canadians will have to wait for a change in Government before the issue of regional disparity is given serious attention.

S.O. 21

EMPLOYMENT

CANADIAN RURAL TRANSITION PROGRAM—RETRAINING OPPORTUNITIES FOR FARMERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Rural Transition Program is being welcomed by those members of the farm community who understand its purpose. In some constituencies as many as 70 people have applied for the program. No one wants to see farmers leave their way of life but many are faced with a difficult decision and need financial assistance to be able to make choices about their future. Until now, farmers have been denied the relocation and retraining opportunities available to the non-farm community.

An urbanite who loses his or her job can go on unemployment insurance, take a training course through Manpower, or get a student loan and return to school. Until now farmers were not eligible for any of these programs. That was an injustice, and I am pleased to see that this federal Government has addressed this inequity at long last. The program gives many farmers facing severe financial difficulty the opportunity to make choices about their future, an opportunity they have long deserved.

* * *

ABORTION

CALL FOR RESUMPTION OF RECORD KEEPING BY STATISTICS CANADA

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, first it was cancellation of the census, and now an attempt by Statistics Canada to eliminate abortion statistics. StatsCan has once again been the victim of a savage and vicious attack by the Tory Government. Regardless of what side of the abortion issue one sits on, one thing is definite: it is a complex, controversial and important issue for many Canadians. It is, therefore, imperative that StatsCan reinstate immediately the compiling of figures on the number of therapeutic abortions performed at hospitals across the country. This cost saving measure is worth only $160,000 and four person years will be saved.

Once again we see that the Government's priorities are very mixed up. If the Government is looking to reduce spending, it could save a lot of money by cutting back on the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) travelling extravagances, like the maid, the butler, the podium, the video equipment, the back-up plane, and so on and so forth. It would also be a much smarter move.

• (1420)

PORNOGRAPHY

CALL FOR REINTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on an issue of moral importance for a great number of my constituents. For many Canadians this matter is an indicator of the quality of Canadian life today. By addressing ourselves to this subject this House has the opportunity to make a positive and lasting contribution to the fabric of society.

The subject to which I refer is pornography. During the last session the Government took praiseworthy action in introducing Bill C-114. This was important in tackling the twin evils of child sexual abuse and violent pornography. Since this legislation died on the Order Paper there has been vigorous support from a true cross-section of individuals and groups who want to see Bill C-114 revived. City councils, church groups, educators, families, and social welfare groups are all concerned.

The Government must act quickly to introduce tough legislation which remains true to the principles of Bill C-114. The spread of degrading, harmful and offensive pornography—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

* * *

[Translation]

THE ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne we heard on October 1st is a brilliant example of the Conservative Government's failure to fulfil its election promises.

The Prime Minister postponed opening the new session for a month, to give his new Ministers time to make their contributions to the Speech from the Thone. And now we have the same platitudes they gave us in November 1984, when they served us a rehash of their election promises. The conclusion is that the Cabinet shuffle in July was useless. Nothing has changed.

The Government is announcing a tax reform that will reduce both personal income taxes and the deficit. Is he going to increase consumer taxes?

The last two budgets gave the Government a net increase in revenue of $5 billion from income taxes alone for the year 1986-87. However, despite this substantial increase, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) admits he has been unabled to control the deficit, which will be $2.5 billion more than forecast.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are fed up with the terrible way this country is being run.

* * *

NEW MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Chief Electoral Officer the certificate of the election and return of Mr. Gilles Grondin, Member for the electoral district of Saint-Maurice.

* * *

NEW MEMBER INTRODUCED

Mr. Gilles Grondin, Member for the electoral district of Saint-Maurice, introduced by the Right Hon. John N. Turner and Mr. Raymond Garneau.

• (1425)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister for International Trade is reported to have told American journalists: "Free trade talks with the United States would be imperilled if Canada loses the lumber dispute with the United States". Is it now the official policy of the Government of Canada that Simon Reisman, the Government's negotiator, will be ordered to suspend free trade talks with the United States following an unfavourable decision by the American Government with regard to softwood lumber?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman should be aware that the Prime Minister is meeting with a Japanese trade and investment mission. Since Japan is such an important customer of British Columbia, and jobs in his own riding depend on our trade with Japan, I am sure that he would welcome that initiative of the Prime Minister.

In response to the Right Hon. Member's question, I told the American journalists that if Canada lost a countervail case that we won in 1983, and Canadian jobs were threatened, Canadians would be angry. I said that if that unfortunate event happened, support for the free trade talks would be eroded. I think that is a very common sense approach and a realistic one. It is the reason why Secretary of Commerce Baldrige and I tried to reach some sort of a solution before the preliminary determination came down. That was a decision which, of course, has the support of the industry, the provinces, and the union involved.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I can remember when the Minister and the Prime Minister were saying that the lumber dispute had nothing to do with the free trade talks. Obviously she has modified her position.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DELAY ANNOUNCED BY UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Did Mr. Baldrige, the U.S. Secretary of Commerce, postpone the decision for a week because of representations by the Canadian Government? Could he explain to the House why the American Administration is always more open with the Canadian public than the Canadian Government?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the delay in the decision on the softwood lumber case was made by the United States Secretary of Commerce. I suggest that any questions about why he did so should be directed to him. It was not at our request.

CANADIAN OFFER TO UNITED STATES ON SOFTWOOD LUMBER ISSUE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I directed a very simple question to the Deputy Prime Minister and, through him, to the Minister, about whether the Secretary of Commerce delayed his decision at the request of the Canadian Government. It was a perfectly simple question and she did not reply.

Some Hon. Members: She did so.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will ask her another question. After having presented her final offer last week, is the Canadian Government still negotiating with the United States on yet another offer? Will she clarify that position for the House and the Canadian people?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions asked by the Right Hon. Member is no.

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Yesterday outside the House he indicated that the $1 billion of assistance to western farmers would be in the form of loan guarantees. Does this mean that the Government is asking farmers to take loans which would have to be repaid, rather than a deficiency payment as is being provided by the United States Government to its farmers? How do loan guarantees help farmers who are already over their heads in debt?

• (1430)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am a little amazed at the attempt by my colleagues opposite to confuse the issue day after day. I ask them simply to refer to the official record of Hansard and it will stand on its own.

I had the opportunity earlier today, although not extensively, to review some of the press coverage of the exchanges which took place between myself and Hon. Members both in the House and outside it. I just want to reiterate the fact that what we have said inside the House and outside the House is exactly the same. It is a federal billion dollar package—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order! I am sorry, but the Minister's reply is too long. The Hon. Member for Algoma.

[English]

DELIVERY OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister will not say what the details of the aid program are and how it is going to be paid, can he simply make clear to farmers, who are facing their bankers with a damaged crop, when the funds are going to be made available to them? Surely the Minister can stop stonewalling and make clear exactly when the funds are going to be made available?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I would want to reject the term "stonewalling" to describe what I have said from day one and what I said earlier this morning when my colleague, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, and myself met with the Deputy Ministers across Canada at the Sir John Carling Building. Naturally, they are seeking some advice and, indeed, the purpose of the meeting is for us to seek their advice as well.

The fact is that at the moment no option should be ruled out.

Some Hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Wise: When it comes to loan guarantees—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the Hon. Minister will know that there is an appropriate time within which to make a response. I think both sides of the House have been exercising some diligence in trying to keep the questions to the point and keeping the responses to the point as well. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

DEFICIENCY PAYMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I just came back from talking to hundreds of western grain farmers—

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The first time this year.

Mr. Nystrom: What the grain farmers want to know is how much of the federal Government's farm aid program will be for western grain farmers in terms of a deficiency payment? And will the Minister stop spreading the story that there is $1 billion for the West and tell us how much we are going to get?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes some reference to spreading rumours and stories and tries to confuse the issue. It does not come from this side. It comes from that side. There is certainly no question about that.

Mr. Orlikow: Answer the question.

Mr. Murphy: Give us the answer.

Mr. Wise: The matter of loan guarantee, in fact, was brought to my attention by the Minister of Agriculture and Food from Ontario. However, we have said from day one this is a $1 billion federal program. Naturally, it would be national in scope.

Mr. Orlikow: How much for the West?

Mr. Wise: I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to stand in his place, given two similar situations—one produces grain in Saskatchewan, and one produces grain in Ontario or Quebec—and deny us the time and opportunity to consult with our provincial counterparts—

Mr. Orlikow: How much for the West?

Mr. Wise: —the time and the opportunity to consult with farm leaders so that we can together, not unilaterally, develop a program that is fair and equitable across the country.

ASSISTANCE FOR WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): The Minister is worse than Mr. Whelan, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nystrom: I want to know how much of that federal farm aid program is going to be there for western grain farmers? How much will western grain farmers be getting? Answer the question and answer it now.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, some reference was made to my predecessor and, of course, he had some difficulties because the former Government only paid lip service to the agricultural industry. We put our money where our mouth is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: How much money, John?

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member hollers across the aisle. I have no problem with hearing. I want to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the Hon. Member to complete his questions and I would ask the Hon. Minister to respond to them as best he can.

Mr. Riis: He is.

Mr. Nystrom: I will try again, Mr. Speaker.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture can tell us why he did not organize a meeting with his provincial counterparts sooner in order to let western Canada know how much there would be in a deficiency payment. Why did he wait until a 5.30 a.m. telephone call from a desperate Grant Devine before he started to do something?

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): I have consulted with my provincial counterparts across the country. In fact I did so with my colleague from Ontario just a couple of days ago.

Mr. Blaikie: Why so early in the morning?

Mr. Wise: I could not tell the last time I had a telephone conversation with the Premier, and the Minister of Agriculture, incidentally, from the Province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Orlikow: How much money for the West?

Mr. Wise: What we are attempting to do is to find the answer to the question the Hon. Member poses and that is exactly what we intend to do. That is exactly why we are meeting with the Deputy Ministers today. That is exactly why we are meeting next week with farm leaders.

[Translation]

PENITENTIARIES

INQUIRY WHETHER MEETING WAS PLANNED WITH VARIOUS PUBLIC SERVANTS INVOLVED WITH PORT-CARTIER PROJECT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I would like to ask him whether on or about September 29, he called a meeting with the various officials involved in the Port-Cartier matter to sort out the contradictory statements made by the Prime Minister and the various Ministers involved.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question at the present time. I will take a look and advise the Hon. Member.

An Hon. Member: You weren't listening.

Mr. Mazankowski: Oh, yes, I was listening.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I am sure the Deputy Prime Minister's memory is good enough for him to recall whether he invited seven or eight people to his office to discuss the Port-Cartier issue. I am not asking for the date and the time, I am asking whether it is true he had to call a meeting to sort out all the problems the Prime Minister has been causing by trying to "rearrange" the truth.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to what problem the Hon. Member is referring. I have a lot of meetings in my office. A lot of people come in. I would even invite the Hon. Member to drop in and see me whenever he feels so inclined.

* * *

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

FEDERAL COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION COMPANY'S INVESTMENT IN PRINCE RUPERT PROJECT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Four years ago the Trudeau Government signed a deal with Federal Commerce & Navigation in Montreal, allowing it to turn Prince Rupert coal into Montreal gold. Will the Deputy Prime Minister immediately appoint the Auditor General and the commercial crime squad of the RCMP to investigate how and why a $23 million loan for coal can be turned into $1 billion tax free for that Montreal consortium?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is somewhat confused. This is a little complicated, but in 1981 the then Liberal administration entered into a contract with FedNav regarding the Ridley Island coal terminal. They were each to put in $23 million in equity. One side has a call option, that is the Canada Ports Corporation, which it can exercise at any time. The other side, FedNav, has a put option which it can exercise in 1991. The $1 billion figure is purely a figment of the multiplication tables of the hon. gentleman.

There are a whole series of "ifs" before $1 billion would have to be paid if the Government wished to exercise its call option. That would be in the year 2001, if the Government then wanted to exercise it, and only a Liberal Government would ever think of exercising such an option, and they won't be there even in 2001.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My supplementary question is again directed to the Deputy Prime Minister because I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister, who knows about this deal, why he will not put up $40 million now to save the Canadian taxpayers $950 million? Why will you not do it? Is there some kind of secret political slush fund?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. All Hon. Members know that other Hon. Members in the Chamber must be addressed through the Chair. I would hope that I would not have to bring this to the attention of the Hon. Member for Skeena again, who knows the rules as well as any of us in this House.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman from Skeena has said he is neither an accountant nor a detective, and that is certainly obvious.

• (1440)

Mr. Fulton: At least I'm not a crook.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Says who?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom the hon. gentleman is referring as a crook, but I would like to have him explicate those remarks and explain to whom he is referring.

To get back to my explanation—

Mr. Gauthier: Your explication!

Mr. Crosbie: This is complicated, Mr. Speaker, and Members opposite may not be able to understand it. If the Government exercised its call option this year, it would cost around $49 million in present dollars. If it waits to see whether FedNav wants to exercise its put option in 1991, it would cost us $30 million in 1986 dollars, or around $50 million in 1991 dollars. Therefore it is doubtful that it is to our benefit at the moment to exercise the call option.

I can explain all this perfectly—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —when I have time, before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport, or I can do it now if hon. gentlemen want it done now, because I have all the answers, believe me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

BANKS AND BANKING

CONTINENTAL BANK TAKEOVER

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns the Government's approval last week of the takeover of a Canadian bank, the Continental Bank, by a foreign owned bank. Up until July 31 of this year the Bank of Canada had advanced nearly $2.4 billion to the Continental Bank. Will the Minister tell the House whether or not approval of this foreign takeover was conditional on the new owners repaying all of this money before the closing date at the end of this month?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the exact contents of those deals can be located in the offer to the shareholders, which will be sent out very shortly, if it has not already been sent out.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What is the answer? You're the Minister.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF OWNERSHIP LEGISLATION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, that is no answer.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): My supplementary question is for the same Minister. Since the Government has again made a precedent setting decision without the benefit of an ownership policy on financial institutions, will the Minister tell the House when he will end two years of indecision and come forward with legislation before he is further overtaken by events?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to answer that supplementary question. The Government is committed to the reform of financial institutions and to doing it as soon as possible, hopefully in the next few months. We will restore and enhance the integrity of the Canadian financial system. We already have the best in the world. We are going to make it stronger. The House will know exactly how we will be doing it in the next few months.

* * *

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SOFTWOOD LUMBER ISSUE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. U.S. officials say meetings are under way on softwood lumber. The Canadian embassy denies this, while the Minister's office reports discussions but not negotiations. Will the Minister clarify these contradictions and tell us what discussions are going on, or is Canada secretly surrendering yet more in this dispute?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the Hon. Member checks his facts he will find that the U.S. officials did not say such meetings were taking place, but that the The Toronto Star said such meetings were taking place.

Yesterday the Hon. Member's Party invented a tax which does not exist; today the Hon. Member is inventing meetings which did not take place.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister intend to make a fetish of secrecy? Or is she prepared to be straightforward with the Canadian people and explain what is taking place? Are the Americans simply talking to themselves? Is this what is supposed to be taking place?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, rather than indulge in a fetish of secrecy I have been practising the merits of truth. I have told the House repeatedly that we have a proposal on the table and that any discussions which have taken place in the past have been about the proposal that has been put on the table. It was put on the table by the federal Government with the support of the provinces, the union involved and the industry. Any discussions which have taken place have been about the proposal on the table. There are no new proposals. I have said that time and time again. There are no new proposals on the table.

PENSIONS

HOMEMAKERS' PENSION PROGRAM INQUIRY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. No mention whatsoever was made in the Speech from the Throne about homemakers' pensions. Will the Minister give his undertaking to the House that homemakers' pensions will be introduced during this term of the present session of Parliament?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the Prime Minister recently indicated again that the matter of homemakers' pensions is one of the issues that he as Prime Minister would like to bring forward in this session of Parliament.

When the changes were brought about to the Canada Pension Plan, which will come into effect on January 1, 1987, and on which I am pleased to say we have provincial co-operation, the provinces felt that there should be more study on this issue. Thus, one year was set aside for a study. The first meetings took place in July of this year. I think the studies are going forward well. The commitment as made by the Prime Minister in the last few days remains that of the Government.

* * *

[Translation]

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

OPPORTUNITY TO INCREASE FUNDS FOR RESEARCH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Since July hundreds of small- and medium-sized businesses in Quebec and in the rest of Canada have been unable to proceed with their development projects as a result of the $60 million cut-back in the National Research Council industrial research assistance program. Does the Minister think that the flowery promises in the Speech from the Throne are a worthwhile substitute for jobs in research and production, or for export sales lost as a result of these cut-backs? Does he think that promises are as valuable as gainful employment?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Hon. Member has consistently predicted and claimed that there is a $60 million cut to the IRAP, and I have consistently maintained that there will not be any cuts to that program. It would not matter how often the Minister repeats his assertion, it will not make it true.

Ms. Copps: That's right.

Mr. Axworthy: We agree with that.

Mr. Penner: Would you like to rephrase that?

APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister would read his mail or meet with the businesses that have been affected by this cut, which is something I did over the course of the summer. He would learn that research and production jobs are being lost at this minute because of this cut.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Berger: Does the Minister know that the National Research Council has approved projects in principle but cannot proceed with them because of a shortage of funds?

Mr. Rossi: He doesn't know anything.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member received the only promotion that he will ever receive in this House from me in my earlier reply.

Mr. Ouellet: We thought you were talking about yourself.

Mr. Oberle: The Hon. Member's information is false. It is true that the NRC is undertaking a review of its programs and activities, as are all Departments of Government, in line with the new priorities identified by the Government.

Mr. Berger: Are you against jobs?

Mr. Oberle: It is true that the IRAP was looked at as a potential source for additional funds. I have asked the NRC to align its programs with the priorities of the Government, as has been its practice in the past. I was told at a meeting that I had with some members of the executive committee as late as yesterday that it would not be necessary to cut the IRAP.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL'S BUDGET

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Science and Technology. Today we learned that the National Research Council is facing another cut in its budget of $26 million, which is in addition to the $70 million cut of some time ago. The Council has estimated that it will have to cut its scientific staff complement by 10 per cent. How does the Minister square those kinds of decisions with the statement made by the Prime Minister that both the public and private sectors have to double their efforts in scientific research and development?

• (1450)

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, again it is a hypothetical question. The NRC is reviewing a number of its programs to make sure that the programs that will remain will be consistent with the Government's priorities.

Mr. Berger: What are your priorities? You don't know what they are.

Mr. Oberle: Space is a major strategic tool, as we have already announced. Industrial innovation is a top priority with the Government. There are no cuts to the NRC. In fact, because new ideas, programs and tasks were assigned to the NRC, including the space program, the industrial technology centre program, the biotechnology centre program in Montreal—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NUMBER OF COUNCIL'S EMPLOYEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, there are now 3,100 people employed at the NRC. Can the Minister assure us that a year from now there will still be 3,100 people working at the NRC? If not, how many will be working at the NRC a year from now?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the NRC is probably about 800 people short. I can assure the Hon. Member that the NRC will in the future as it has in the past be one of the most critical and important instruments for taking our country into the 21st century and that it will make its contributions to this task as it has in the past.

* * *

ENERGY

JOBS CREATED BY ENERGY INDUSTRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. The Minister is now saying that energy is not a job-creation sector. This is in direct contradiction to his predecessor who said that energy would be an engine of growth creating between 100,000 and 300,000 jobs. Does this mean that the Minister is now abandoning the energy industry, throwing another 70,000 people out of work to go along with the 40,000 who have already lost their jobs in the energy sector?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, although the question was long, the answer is simple: I never made such claims.

[English]

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR ENERGY SECTOR

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Alberta has said that he expects financial assistance from the federal Government before the end of October. Will the Minister state whether this assistance will be provided for the energy sector now, or is the Minister going to ignore the problem completely?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I expect to meet with the Alberta Minister of Energy sometime next week or early the week after. I will be very glad to discuss these questions with him.

* * *

[English]

FINANCE

NON PAYMENT OF TAXES BY CORPORATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Finance elaborate on the Government's Throne Speech promises of fairness in the tax system? For the past week we have been asking questions about the 79,000 profitable Canadian corporations which paid no taxes in 1983 despite making $13 billion in profits. Has the Minister taken the trouble to look into this situation? Does it persist? Can the Minister tell the House how much revenue the Government is losing because these corporations are profitable but do not pay taxes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member, in the course of the last couple of months, has been looking at the various changes that we have made to the tax system over the past two years. These changes have been directed at the very concern he has expressed. I appreciate his implicit support for all the good things that we have been doing in that direction.

As the Hon. Member knows, we have announced that we want to accelerate the actions we have been taking on tax reform. One of the key elements of this will be increased fairness in the tax system. Another will be to bring about a tax system which is simpler than the one we have today. I am delighted that the Hon. Member has taken an interest in this and I look forward to his ongoing support.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Minister that I will continue to take an interest in this particular area, but perhaps he could respond to my question. Does the situation of some 80,000 corporations being profitable every year but not paying taxes persist? Will the Minister undertake to return to the House this month with specific figures telling us how much revenue we are losing because the Government will not collect taxes from those companies which make profits?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did address the Hon. Member's question in my first answer. We have been aware of this problem that was left by the previous Government but we have not just talked about it, we have acted upon it. We have acted upon it by changing the carve-out legislation, by changing the scientific research tax credit legislation and by changing the limited partnership legislation. A number of things have been done, but as I have indicated before, further work has to be done. I have never denied that. Further work must be done, but we are getting on with that and the Hon. Member will be hearing from me shortly on it.

* * *

HEALTH

SAFETY OF GREAT LAKES DRINKING WATER

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who probably read the same articles I read yesterday indicating that the water of the Great Lakes is polluted by some 800 chemicals, only 50 of which are subject to safety guidelines. What further research does the Minister propose to undertake on this source of drinking water for millions of people on both sides of the border so as to improve upon the classification, which is now simply stated as being generally safe?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made reference to a study which was funded by the Ontario Environmental Ministry and the Department of National Health and Welfare. He has analysed it correctly in that drinking water is generally safe. It is true as well that with the present research and the ability to trace various toxic chemicals, a number of—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh! Too long.

* * *

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. For seven years, the Parliamentary Committee on Official Languages has been strongly recommending that the Act be amended. In the Speech from the Throne, the Government made a commitment to bring the Act into compliance with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Can the Secretary of State assure the House that a bill to this effect will be tabled in the coming weeks?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member and the House that assurance. I have met with the FFHQ, with the Alliance Quebec and with the Commissioner of Official Languages this morning, as well as with others. We expect that that Bill will be coming in due course. We will do it as quickly as we can but as well as we can.

CONTENT OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in addition to ensuring that the Act conforms to the Charter of Rights, I wonder if the Minister could give us the assurance that the work of the committee regarding, for example, the supremacy of the law, the working language of the Public Service, and also the power of the Commissioner, would be part and parcel of that law and that we will modify the law.

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that he will not be disappointed. All of those topics are part of the discussions we are having on an ongoing basis with the groups I have already mentioned.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

ELDORADO NUCLEAR—LOCATION OF WASTE DISPOSAL SITE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Eldorado Nuclear. The Minister will be aware of the concern about Eldorado's intention to locate a nuclear waste disposal site at one of two locations, either Wesleyville or Tyrone. Does the Minister intend to instruct Eldorado to shelve its proposals and go back to the drawing board, in keeping with the Prime Minister's campaign pledge that a dump site would not be located in these areas?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, naturally that particular issue has been a matter of some concern to me. I have been reviewing that dossier since my appointment and since I have had responsibility for that particular issue.

I can tell the Hon. Member that I have had a great many discussions on the issue with many people, and particularly with the Hon. Member for Durham—Northumberland who has given me a number of suggestions. In that regard I might mention that I will be visiting that particular area tomorrow and we will wait to see what happens at that time.

MINISTER'S DECISION—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT IN PARLIAMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, given the interest in the proposal, I wonder why the Minister insists on keeping his decision from Members of the House of Commons and why he does not announce in the House of Commons his decision with respect to that issue rather than waiting until tomorrow.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention, of course, to discuss the issues first with the people who are most vitally concerned. Then at that time I will make a decision.

* * *

• (1500)

IMMIGRATION

ISSUANCE OF MINISTERIAL PERMITS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns a report submitted to the Prime Minister by the Toronto Conservative Caucus which promotes a scandalous strategy to exploit politically Canada's immigrant community. I quote from it because it is very important. It says that "the political potential of ministerial permits is obviously being allowed to fall by the wayside" and that "it should be handled exclusively by the Minister, rather than allowing politically non-aligned bureaucrats free rein". Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with the recommendation to turn the ministerial permit, which is used judiciously and compassionately, into a partisan tool to aid the Conservative Party of Canada?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the report, but I have never seen it, and I have never read it. The Immigration Act gives the Minister the discretion to act on humanitarian grounds, that is, family reunification, refugee settlement, or in the national interest, or on compassionate grounds. The sheer volume of ministerial permits precludes them from being issued by the Minister's office. In 1985 almost 15,000 permits were issued inside and outside of Canada. I can tell the Hon. Member that those figures are reported to Parliament each year.

Mr. Marchi: The Minister has completely refused to exercise any moral judgment or moral leadership.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member put his question?

DEPARTMENTAL ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is aware of the report, will he completely reject this advice and assure Canadians and the House that in the future the Immigration Department will not be undermined or abused by such political motives from Toronto Conservative Members of Parliament?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I said clearly that I have never seen it and that I have never read it.

Mr. Marchi: Are you rejecting it, then?

Mr. Weiner: We act only on humanitarian and compassionate grounds. We have concern for the individuals, the people. There are frustrations with the Act. There are constraints. The Act has not been amended in 10 years. We have a quality of service which has been defined as less than acceptable. We intend to do things about those frustrations. We have changing conditions in a changing world, and our concern is for the people. We have a moral obligation—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

OBSERVANCE OF AGREEMENTS WITH INDIAN BANDS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Given that documents now made public show, contrary to his assertion yesterday, that the Department's signed agreements with Indian Bands have in fact been broken, and broken systematically and deliberately, what steps will he take to ensure that that does not happen again?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there is an ongoing concern going back—

Mr. Orlikow: No action.

Mr. McKnight: I would have thought that someone on that side would like an answer to a very serious and important question. There is ongoing concern. As I said yesterday, I am not aware and I have not been aware of signed agreements which have been broken by the Department. If the Hon. Member has those agreements, I would ask him to bring them forward. The Hon. Member should also understand, with his experience with the Department of Indian Affairs, that going back through several Auditors General there is a concern about the management of the Department. My predecessor had taken steps to make changes, and I assure the Hon. Member that I will continue to take steps to change the management of that Department.

MAINTENANCE OF SCHOOLS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I assure him that I will supply the documents I have seen. In view of the major deficiency in the school maintenance account—education, operations, and maintenance—which has been identified relative to his Department's own measured standards, what action will the Minister take to make up that deficiency so that in fact the schools do not fall down before their time?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the operation and maintenance dollars which are provided for the maintenance of schools are provided equally across the country within the ability of the Department to meet identified needs. It would be very comforting if all needs of all Canadians in all instances could be met. It is far beyond the scope of the Canadian taxpayer to provide for all needs of all Canadians in all circumstances.

* * *

INCOME TAX

BRITISH COLUMBIA FILM INDUSTRY—WITHHOLDING OF WAGE TAXES

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. As the Minister is aware, the motion picture industry in British Columbia is quite upset by the recent implementation of tax measures requiring the withholding of taxes on wages and per diems of non-resident actors and support staff. One major film project has already been cancelled, and there are fears that these measures could damage the burgeoning film industry in B.C. Could the Minister advise the House what steps he is taking to deal with this issue so that British Columbia can continue to attract foreign film projects which provide substantial employment and benefits to its economy?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from my colleague who has taken a keen interest in this important subject. As she knows, in an attempt to promote and encourage a viable film industry for the country, I have instructed officials to meet with representatives of the industry. Meetings have already taken place, as they will in other parts of the country. We hope that guidelines can be developed to encourage and facilitate matters, as indeed they have been in respect of R and D guidelines. The issue of withholding and other important matters will be discussed and hopefully ironed out.

* * *

PORTS

STATUS OF PORT OF SAINT-JOHN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I seek clarification with regard to his announcement granting local ports corporation status to the Port of Saint John. Could the Minister inform the House whether or not the board of directors of Canada Ports Corporation has officially petitioned him and whether or not an Order in Council has already been approved? If so, would he table both the petition and the Order in Council today?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check on those matters, but certainly the Canada Ports Corporation has requested that the Port of Saint John become a port corporation under the authority of the Act. I am glad to say that the Hon. Member for the district, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines, made that announcement in Saint John several days ago. It was due to his efforts and work, the time that he put into this, and the ingenious solutions that he found, that we were able to come to that solution.

DEBT OWED BY PORT AUTHORITY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, to the knowledgeable and informed Minister of Transport, I direct my supplementary question. As the Minister will know, pursuant to the Canada Ports Corporation Act the matter of financial self-sufficiency is a major issue. Could he tell the House whether or not the $30 million which is owed by the Port of Saint John has been written off by the Government of Canada in order for it to live up to the provisions of the Act?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have worked out a debt restructuring scheme, as I recall it, for the Port of Saint John, which certainly puts it in a position to meet all the requirements of the Act. I do not believe, however, that we have written off the large amount about which the Hon. Member spoke, but we have arranged a rescheduling. I will have to get him further details and give them to him.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

ISSUANCE OF REFUGEE PERMITS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. Regarding the 6,500 permits reportedly issued last year mostly by officials, will the Minister tell the House the breakdown of that figure, that is, how many were refugee claimants, how many had—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the Hon. Member put his question, please?

Mr. Heap: I am asking if the Minister would give the House the breakdown of that figure, that is, how many were refugee claimants—because I have given him notice of this—how many had—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that if a detailed answer is requested in a question, there is a proper form to place that within the system. I wonder if the Hon. Member, in order to complete his question, would ask a question which is acceptable to the House.

Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the point I would like to bring out—and I would ask the Minister whether he would agree—is that the great majority, the huge majority of the permits issued were issued according to law, according to standards which the officials are required to implement, not according to discretionary judgment by the Minister.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we do not have a breakdown. We have the sections of the Act under which admissions have been accepted. I would like to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend, and I will be able to provide that kind of statistic to him, so that all Members of Parliament will be able to monitor those who are granted permission under either refugee settlements, family unification, national interest, or whatever other category—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville.

* * *

• (1510)

FOOD AND DRUGS

IRRADIATED FOOD REGULATIONS

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is consideration being given to amending the food and drug regulations to classify irradiated foods as a process rather than an additive, and would this mean that further testing and labelling of such foods would no longer be required? Can the Minister assure the House that Canadians will have all information available to them to make an informed choice as to whether or not they wish to consume such foods?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, irradiation is used now in a number of jurisdictions. It is used in Canada, and research has taken place over at least three decades in Canada. As well, the World Health Organization as a UN agency back in 1981 also declared that irradiated food was entirely safe.

* * *

EXCISE TAX ACT

RULING DECLARING PROCEEDINGS NULL AND VOID

Mr. Speaker: Earlier this morning under Routine Proceedings, a Government Bill to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act was introduced and given first reading. As this Bill is based on a Ways and Means motion which Hon. Members who were watching the procedure this morning might notice has not yet been concurred in by this House, I regret to have to advise that this morning's proceedings in relation to the Bill are null and void and the Bill will remain on the Order Paper for reintroduction.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a Question of Privilege of which I have given you notice. It concerns the use by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) of the word crook while questions were being answered this afternoon in connection with matters in Prince Rupert. I submit that it is unparliamentary to use the word crook. In any event, apart from the use of the word crook, which your predecessors have ruled to be unparliamentary on previous occasions, Sir, the word was used in such a way that none of us can be sure who the crook is supposed to be. The inference might be that I am the crook. If that is the case, I would like it removed from the record. I would like the Hon. Member to explain whom he is calling a crook. If he is calling me a crook, I would like him to repeat it outside the House where appropriate action can be taken—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —to uncrook the crookedness. Is the Member perhaps referring to a predecessor of mine? Is it the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) who is a crook or is it a Minister of Transport of recent years of 1981—perhaps the hon. gentleman opposite? Who is the crook in this case? In any event, Mr. Speaker, let all those who are prepared to be called crooks arise—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: There is only one standing up, you.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Could this matter be cleared up, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, as you know I had already sent you notice of my intention to withdraw the reference. Since the Minister has taken a moment, I think I might also point out exactly what happened.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: I have withdrawn it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

WAYS AND MEANS

NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Correct me if I am wrong at this point in the proceedings but pursuant to Standing Order 84(1) I wish to lay upon the Table in both official languages copies of a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know Hon. Members will realize that the intervention of the Minister is completely in order.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this being Thursday, I want to ask the customary question of the Government House Leader as to what business he proposes to place before the House for the coming week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to respond to the Hon. Member. Today we will continue with the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. On Friday, we will continue with the Throne Speech debate, which will be the sixth appointed day. Monday, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, and as other Hon. Members are aware, is Thanksgiving Day. Therefore, the House will not sit.

Inasmuch as an amendment was moved today, that will necessitate a change in the order of business for Tuesday. I regret to advise my hon. friend that I am not in a position at this time to indicate precisely what orders I may be bringing forth on Tuesday. I will, however, give him some ideas. It could be Bill C-5, Bill C-8, and Bill C-9, but I will confirm that tomorrow morning. It will be my intention on Wednesday to continue with the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the Session; and amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 227.)

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock p.m., there were eight minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté).

[Translation]

I am now going to recognize those who wish to continue the period for questions and comments.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté). I will not prolong the question and answer period because I am anxiously awaiting the comment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) in response to the Throne Speech. Perhaps the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion will permit one quick question. In the press today there were reports that the provincial Government of New Brunswick was using the federal Government business assistance programs in a sense to make decisions on support for business based on political criteria as opposed to economic, business or industrial criteria. These allegations are very serious, particularly because it was in a sense confirmed in the same press releases that that had been taking place in that province. It is very serious because we are anxious that the federal programs in place to support business receive the maximum impact in job creation and economic development. I would appreciate it if the Minister would reply to a serious question in what appears to be some political manoeuvering in the placement of federal Government and provincial Government support for business.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I did look into this matter, or at least part of it, this morning, and I mentioned the intention of the Government to do everything in its power to eliminate regional disparities. In this context, we have taken special initiatives to try to promote more intense and more serious consultations with the regions and to express the essence of our concerns even though the role of the regions themselves must be intensified.

The Hon. Member made particular reference to a program which comes under the jurisdiction of the province of New Brunswick. I can assure him that I share fully his concerns in this regard. I shall have an opportunity however to examine the situation much more closely in coming days.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to rise and put a question to the Minister, but twice my colleague has raised a question that has remained unanswered by the Minister.

My question will be very brief. He said he intended to look into the matter and consider it in the light of the new situation. Does that mean he admits the New Brunswick Government is taking advantage of the program to exert undue influence and make improper use of public funds? Will the Minister recognize in this House that the New Brunswick Government is in fact mismanaging the funds made available to it?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Definitely not, Mr. Speaker. I think my answer to the question is to the opposite effect. I simply want to express a concern, and an interest in the point raised by my colleague, and also, before giving a final answer to the question, to inquire exactly what the situation is and respond accordingly. I have no intention whatsoever of admitting the Hon. Member's claims or allegations on that matter.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, does that mean that if the Minister is not ready to condemn the partisan politics of the Tory Government in New Brunswick, he approves of what is going on in New Brunswick and colludes with those provincial authorities who make improper use of public funds?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): In no way, Mr. Speaker. My purpose is neither to condemn nor to admit that situation. I have simply shown a concern for looking more closely at the matter and responding accordingly.

I repeat once more, Mr. Speaker, that we have shown in a very practical way, since September 1984, our intention to make a special effort in the area of regional development. That commitment has been renewed in the last Throne Speech, and more specifically, we have been promoting economic renewal in Atlantic Canada.

Therefore, it is incumbent upon me I consider all viewpoints, rather than react too rashly to the situation.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in the Hon. Minister's remarks. His responsibility and that of his Department being primarily to address problems of regional disparity, I would like to inquire whether he has some new policy initiatives which he might be taking in this area. I ask him that bearing in mind that we have tried things like tax incentives but recent studies seem to indicate they do not really work. We have tried grants and loans to businesses in different disadvantaged parts of the country but they do not seem to have done the trick either. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) suggested that perhaps we should be shifting government Departments to other regions of the country. He suggested that the Farm Credit Corporation might go to one of the smaller communities in his riding. We tried shifting the Department of Veterans Affairs to Charlottetown, and that has some drawbacks, it seems to me.

Mr. McMillan: Careful!

Mr. Redway: I wonder if the Minister might tell us what he has in mind in the way of new initiatives which will perhaps address this problem in a meaningful and effective way.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think we are mainly trying to increase the efficiency of our tools and of our programs in the Atlantic region and we have done it quite openly. Indeed, our approach is especially based on a federal effort which should be better directed and adjusted to the needs of that area.

We think it is essential to bring those activities into line at all levels of government and to obtain a greater support or impetus from the private sector in order to get maximum results and as I said earlier to iron out those regional disparities.

In accordance with our commitment, Mr. Speaker, we will continue to promote the spirit of independence and entrepreneurship of the people in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Has the Minister completed his remarks? The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question from my colleague. According to the report to which he referred, the government of New Brunswick has chosen three ridings now represented by Liberal Members which it believes it could win at the next general election for a special investment of funds coming from the Minister's department. Does he consider that this is the proper way to choose ridings to be granted government funds, thus helping the Conservative Government at the next provincial election?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think I will repeat the same arguments which I directed to my colleagues opposite and merely say that we have set up programs to iron out those regional disparities. I do not intend to confirm or deny the allegations made today. I have merely said that I was looking closely at the situation and would promptly respond.

Mr. Kaplan: Indeed, the Minister's answer—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted for questions and comments has now expired.

The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate you on your election to the Chair and wish you every success and satisfaction in the exercice of your very important duties. I shall also, if I may, congratulate the three Hon. Members who will assist you in your work, and especially your two principal assistants who will continue to perform those duties and tasks they performed so admirably during the first session of this Parliament.

As is customary, I also wish to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the motion for the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne and the seconder of that motion. Now that I have congratulated six Conservative Members, which for me is a great deal, I would like to express an opinion I think is shared by Canadians in general, namely that in this Speech from the Throne, the Progressive Conservative Government has been a great disappointment. After all, when the Government decided to prorogue and delay resumption of parliamentary business for one month, we could have expected something new. We thought the Government would take this opportunity to make a fresh start and come in with new ideas and new ways of doing things. Above all, Canadians were expecting some leadership from this Government. Unfortunately, Canadians who were counting on seeing some original ideas in the Speech from the Throne and some new and concrete solutions to the real problems Canada is facing today, all these people were terribly disappointed, because this Speech from the Throne is the very essence of platitude. We have been presented with a document that lacks any imagination whatsoever. It reflects the image of a Government that has exhausted its energy after barely two years in power.

This Government is already forced to rehash the promises made during the last election campaign and in its first Speech from the Throne. In this respect, the remarks of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) were enlightening indeed. We would have expected this new Minister to unveil—as tradition would have it when a Minister takes the floor in the throne speech debate—a slew of fresh propositions from his department. No such luck. In fact the Minister failed to announce anything new and nobody would have been any worse off had he simply skipped his speech altogether. In my opinion, the silence of the Minister about the secret dealings between his department, certain officials, certain political figures and the representatives of the shipyards is of great concern to the shipyard workers.

I do not understand how the Minister, who is well aware of the situation, coming as he does from the Quebec area where a major shipyard is facing a financial crisis, did not take this opportunity today in his remarks to enlighten us, to indicate whether it is true that his predecessor had asked the naval authorities to close down a number of shipyards; whether it is true that his Government is presently negotiating with the owners of various shipyards in Canada for the purpose of restructuring them, to convince a number of naval concerns to shut down their operation, because the reality now is this: under the Liberal Government, all shipyards in Canada had orders to fill. Since this Conservative Government came to power, all shipyards have been forced to lay off employees. It is clearly because of this Conservative Government's failure to act that the Vickers shipyard in Montreal is seriously jeopardized.

And now we are told that the people in Sorel and Lauzon will have to get together to rationalize their operations and probably elect to close either one of these shipyards. Well, the this situation, which I find regrettable, because in Quebec we want, not only one shipyard but three of them obtain their fair share of Canadian Government contracts, because there are quite competent specialized workers both in Sorel and Lauzon as well as in Montreal, people who have done this type of work for many years and want to continue to earn a decent living.

I am somewhat disappointed that the Government apparently wants to keep quiet about these two major priorities which it has submitted to the population, claiming that the huge federal deficit, a national disgrace according to these ladies and gentlemen of the Conservative Party, would come down. Well, what is happening, really? The deficit is not coming down. If I may, I should like to quote from an article published in the Ottawa Citizen:

• (1530)

[English]

Some of my colleagues are not too happy that I want to refer to some remarks made in a newspaper recently. When we speak in the House of Commons people could say that we are partisan and obviously do not convey the true perspective. I would like to quote from an article in The Ottawa Citizen which is indeed absolutely non-partisan and objective. Mr. McGillivray said the following:

> Michael Wilson won't be glad to hear this but he has just become Canada's all-time King of Deficits.

Mr. McDermid: Who wrote that?

Mr. Ouellet: Don McGillivray, a veteran journalist for Southam News who has long experience and cannot be accused of partisan politics. His article continues:

> As finance minister, he has added more to the national debt than any of his predecessors.
>
> On Sept. 17, Wilson will have been in charge of Canada's finances for two years. And has already presided over budget deficits totalling $65 billion.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that this Government, after asking Canadians to support its plan to clean up our public finances and reduce the deficit, has done the exact opposite. And it is abundantly clear that the first prize for deficits in this country goes to the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

This Government got elected by promising jobs, jobs, jobs. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that during the election campaign, the present Prime Minister said: We have only three priorities: jobs, jobs, jobs.

[English]

Again the Government has failed in its objective. Again it is clear that the Government is trying to portray a situation which is not accurate.

I would like to quote from an article written in the Toronto Star by David Crane, a writer on political and economic affairs. He said:

> The latest unemployment figures suggest that luck has run out for Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and his cabinet colleagues. They can no longer count on continued recovery from the 1981-82 recession to fulfil their campaign promises of "jobs, jobs, jobs".
>
> Now they will have to come up with new approaches of their own if further progress is to be made in the fight against unemployment.

• (1540)

[Translation]

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Government, which promised to find jobs for Canadians, is today faced with a situation where more than one million Canadian workers are jobless. It is a fact that this Government, which promised to find jobs for the people of this country, has failed to live up to the expectations of Canadians, and that across this country, there are still far too many men and women, and especially young men and women, who are out of work. And the platitudes in a Speech from the Throne that has failed to announce any concrete measures for creating jobs in Canada are certainly not going to solve the problem. Acutally, the new Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) unwittingly gave a clear indication of the bleak realities Canadians have to contend with, in his answer to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), who was upset that the Prime Minister gave orders to have a penitentiary, that would normally have been built in the riding of Drummond built in his own riding, at an additional cost to the Canadian taxpayer of several million dollars.

In fact, early this week, my hon. friend from Shefford put his question to the Member who normally should have answered the question, but the Minister of Employment and Immigration rose instead and said the following: We must realize that 38 per cent of the people in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding receive part of their income from unemployment insurance or are on welfare.

So the Minister of Employment and Immigration agrees with what we have been saying for many months, which is that many people are not included in the unemployment statistics, since the figure for the Prime Minister's riding is about 15 per cent.

So what is being used as an excuse for the Prime Minister's decision to have the penitentiary built in his riding is the fact that 38 per cent of the people in that riding are receiving some form of government aid or are no longer considered as being on the labour market because they have ceased to report to the manpower centres to look for work, probably because they are convinced there are no jobs available anyway.

This situation, as reflected in the 38 per cent figure, probably reflects the true state of our Canadian economy. Not 10 per cent or 11 per cent of Canadians are in difficulty and qualify as being unemployed, but 35 per cent or 38 or 40 per cent of Canadians are in difficulty, are unemployed or are convinced that they won't be able to find employment. The Conservative Government promised them jobs and now, two years later, they are living in poverty, and they are so depressed they are not even looking for work because no jobs are available.

Mr. Speaker, the situation is shocking and intolerable, and the fact that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is wasting his time trying to justify an intolerably partisan decision on the part of the Prime Minister is certainly not to his credit.

I have to say that the Minister of Employment and Immigration probably felt that he had to rush to the defence of his Prime Minister, but by doing so he revealed the real condition of the Canadian economy.

Roughly 10 per cent of Canadians are unemployed, another 10 per cent are on social welfare, and yet another 10 per cent or more have completely given up looking for employment because they are convinced there are no jobs available.

Well, the fancy rhetoric of the Prime Minister is no longer good enough. People want action now and expect this Government to come up with concrete and specific programs to spur the economy.

I would suggest that the most tragic mistake of this Government has been to imagine that it had to start from scratch in every field. Here is a telling example: the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who found the VIA Rail file on his desk. The previous Government had launched a five-year action plan to set the Crown corporation VIA Rail back on the right track, according to a well-balanced and rational process. Well now, instead of accepting this action plan under which, first, certain underused and non-profitable lines would have been dropped, second, adequate rolling stock would have been bought and, third, the administration would have been revamped, this Government, this new Minister threw everything overboard and went back to square one so that now, two years later, VIA Rail has not progressed one inch. It does not even have a single locomotive nor a single new railway car to give better service to the traveling public.

That is an example of a Government which is unable to make decisions. It appointed a committee chaired by Mr. Horner to review the whole question. The report was handed to the Minister of Transport six months ago and the Government has not done anything about it yet. In other words, ever since the Conservatives were elected to office we got nothing but more studies and more consultations, and this Government has yet to make one significant and specific decision.

I conclude my remarks by saying that this Throne Speech is the most disappointing thing we have seen in a long time. Unfortunately, Canadians have a Government that is marking time, that takes one step forward and two steps backwards, that does not know how to manage public affairs, that does not know how to administer the affairs of the state. Earlier in its mandate, we could accept inexperienced Ministers making blunders, but two years later, the Government can no longer hide behind the screen of political inexperience. This Government must have the courage to take the important decisions that are needed to solve the problem of unemployment in Canada. We need only look at the Throne Speech to see that, unfortunately, this Government does not have that political courage, and I am not surprised to see that showing how much Canadians are disappointed with this Government.

I am very much heartened by the appearance in this House today of our new colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) who is joining all those who will go on fighting this inefficient Government and the inappropriate decisions it is taking on behalf of the Canadian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon).

Mr. Plamondon: Mr. Speaker, I was suprised by some of the remarks of the Hon. Member, particularly about the shipbuilding industry. I think he has no idea what he is talking about because in recent days it has been announced in all newspapers and on TV that a Quebec consortium will be created soon to meet the needs of workers and the shipbuilding industry in Quebec.

We need only recall the policy advocated by the Liberal Party in recent years, a policy which led to the crisis we went through. It was referred to as "the policy to share the patronage pie". For example, if tenders were called for six icebreakers and say in the last case Marine Industries bid $48 million, an Ontario company $54 million, and a Western Canada company $60-odd million, they would say: "Well, two in Sorel, two in Ontario, and two in Western Canada", regardless of the lowest bidder. They were just trying to keep all Canadian shipyards in business for a while without coming to grips with the real issue, which is the fact that we have too many shipyards and too few orders on the books. Had they let the market forces come into play the shipbuilding industry would have rationalized itself by now through open competition. Of course nobody will come right out and say that the previous administration failed to do just that.

We have given a vote of confidence to a few Quebecers who will set up a consortium for the three Quebec shipyards, the kind of initiative the former Government could not have taken, busy as it was stirring the constitutional stew. They could not have accepted a consortium led by Marine Industries, which was a provincial Crown corporation. This would have helped the PQ Government, so it was out of the question because they were itching for a fight on constitutional issues. They were in no hurry to solve the problem of the shipbuilding industry. Their only way out was to appoint yet another inquiry commission in May 1984, so we got one more report on the shipyards. But we have taken action. Perhaps the Speech from the Throne does not say so in so many words, but when we talk about the economic views of the Government we refer to all sectors, including the shipbuilding industry. At long last the matter is about to be settled after years of needless fights and neglect on the part of the previous Government.

Versatile Vickers which was the property of Quebec and closely connected with the Federal Liberal Party, was the lucky one when Dome Petroleum, another friend of the Party, muffed it in Quebec; the Quebec yard had been used to make a financial deal, instead of developing a true naval industry, as was the case for instance at the Tracy yards.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, as you are motioning to me. If in the naval industry, there is today a Quebec consortium—as a matter of fact, a major press conference will be held tomorrow to confirm it—a joint venture of the Quebec and Ottawa Governments which will make it possible for the naval industry to be more aggressive, not only on world markets, by to develop new technology, for instance in the case of drilling platforms

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must regretfully interrupt the Hon. Member, for his time has expired.

The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has the floor.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) for giving me an opportunity to clarify my views. What is happening now is that the Quebec Government is doing something which should have been done by the Canadian Government. Marine Industries would probably be the one in a position to purchase the two other shipyards, because it prospered under the previous Government. Otherwise, it would not have been strong enough to have such an operation today.

The Hon. Member for Richelieu should wait and see what will happen. If the maritime division disappears in Sorel, I shall go and tell his constituents that their representative has let them down. The fact is that the Sorel shipyard always prospered under a Liberal Government, but now, no one knows whether it will go on or not. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if the Sorel shipyard closes, the Hon. Member will suffer the political consequences.

• (1550)

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, as I sat quietly in my seat listening to the Hon. Member, I became more and more alarmed, particularly when he started to speak of his concern about the manner in which the Government is managing the business of the country and, particularly, the manner in which the Government is managing the economy. They were comments from an Hon. Member who was a Minister in the former Government. He was telling you and I, Mr. Speaker, and everyone in the House, about incompetence in managing the affairs and the economy of the country. I could not believe my ears as I listened to the Hon. Member. This is from a man who was a key Member of the former Government which created conditions in this country where we had inflation in excess of 12 per cent; interest rates in excess of 20 per cent; record setting bankruptcies, and unemployment in excess of 13 per cent. This is a man who says that the present Government is having some problems in managing the country? I find that incredible.

The present leader of this man's Party rose in the House after the economic statement, and after the present Government's Budgets, and said these policies were a disaster and they would create more and more unemployment and, in fact, they would create something like 75,000 or 100,000 more unemployed people. Instead, as the Hon. Member is well aware, there has been a complete reversal of the situation he and his Government created. Inflation is down; unemployment is down; bankruptcies are down; interest rates are down and there have been over a half million new jobs created in the last two years. I would think the Hon. Member should be on his feet applauding the Government.

That is not to say the Government believes all the problems are solved, by any manner or means. The Hon. Member knows from the Speech from the Throne that the Government pointed out quite clearly its concern and intentions to continue to pursue very vigorously methods to improve the economy, the economic situation and to get more people back to work. However, the Hon. Member should applaud the Government for this approach rather than being critical, particularly when the Hon. Member was a member of a Government which did such an astronomically terrible job in running the economic affairs of this country.

As I looked over at the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, I thought I detected a little red reflection from his face. I thought perhaps it was from his tie or from his flower, but after awhile I became convinced that he was almost as embarrassed as I was as he made those comments. I would like to ask him if he was as embarrassed as I was—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the current Government received an overwhelming mandate from the population to change a difficult situation through which Canadians have lived; a recession. No one is changing the figures that existed at the time. They were there and, indeed, the public voted for a change of government and a change of direction. What we have two years later is a worse situation without the recession.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense. What an unfounded statement.

Mr. Ouellet: It is quite clear that inflation is now going up. It is quite clear that since the beginning of 1986 there has not been a single job created in Canada. Statistics Canada said:

[Translation]

—that in January there were 11,632,000 jobs, and today, there are 11,615,000 jobs, which means 17,000 jobs were lost since the beginning of this year. The present Government has increased this country's deficit, it has failed to create a single job in 1986, and inflation has started to rise substantially, penalizing Canadians on fixed incomes, and I am thinking specifically of our pensioners. There is certainly nothing to be proud of here, and I think the Hon. Member who is anxious to ask me some questions and who would like to resuscitate the last election is badly mistaken, because the people of this country gave the Conservatives a chance, and now they are sorry they did, and they are anxious to see this Government finish its term as soon as possible.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria)—Government Expenditures—Prime Minister's travel entourage; the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry)—Indian Affairs—Funding of Programs; and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Supply and Services—Maintenance contract for F-18 fighter aircraft. (b) Request for tabling of correspondence received from Premier of Nova Scotia.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the Session; and the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 227).

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, just over one week ago Her Excellency the Governor General outlined the Government's agenda for action over the next two years. That agenda is designed to achieve four goals; national reconciliation, continuing economic renewal, enhanced social justice and a constructive participation in global affairs. These goals are linked and are mutually reinforcing.

National reconciliation, giving Canadians a national sense of purpose, is an essential precondition to economic renewal since we can hardly compete abroad if we do not co-operate at home. Economic renewal can increase our ability to make social progress. It will give us the means to finance desirable social and cultural programs and to enhance our quality of life. If we can achieve the goal of becoming a more united, prosperous and progressive society, then we will be better able to take up our international responsibilities and play a constructive role in the global community.

• (1600)

As all Members know, trade will play a vital role in achieving these goals, just as it has done over the entire history of our Confederation. Our trade policy is based on an assessment of current realities and historic change. Moreover, it is based upon the need to seize opportunities and to advance the national interest.

Canadian trade policy must reflect a basic fact of Canadian economic life—our small population. A small domestic market means that secure access to foreign markets is critical. In Canada, trade means jobs. Some 27 per cent of our GNP is directly related to exports. One in three Canadian jobs depends, in some form, upon trade. Unlike countries with large domestic markets, such as the U.S., Japan or Brazil, our industries require markets larger than our own to achieve efficient economies of scale and specialization. Our companies need access to those markets to justify investment in modern plants and equipment and expensive research and development.

However, secure access to foreign markets is important for more than just export-oriented companies. It is also important for Canadian consumers and our retail business sector. If our companies are not internationally competitive, they will not be competitive at home. That would mean higher costs to Canadian consumers and less disposable income for consumer and business spending. And that means fewer jobs and less economic activity in our country. These are the basic facts of Canadian economic life, and they cannot be wished away. It is for these reasons that from the time of the Great Depression successive Governments have sought trade liberalization through international negotiations.

The expansion of the world trading system has brought great benefits to Canada. Our exporting ability has given us a standard of living that is the envy of most countries of the world. It has provided us with the wealth to develop accessible health care, affordable education, equalization policies, income security programs and national cultural institutions—all the institutions and values which really define the Canadian way of life.

Pragmatism and realism have led us to initiate a two-track trade policy made up of bilateral one-on-one negotiations with the United States, by far our most important customer, reinforced by multilateral negotiations under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. I would like to review some of the realities behind this two-track approach.

In the 40 years since the formation of the GATT, the international trading system has changed. Four events stand out. First, there was the formation of the European Economic Community and many other small regional trading blocks, such as the ASEAN block, the Australia-New Zealand pact and the European Free Trade Association. Second, there was the dramatic rise of Japan as a major economic power. Third, there was the emergence of certain newly industrialized nations such as South Korea and Brazil. The fourth event was the proliferation of independent nation states resulting from post-war decolonization.

These events have changed the international environment. In today's world there are many more competitors producing the goods that we produce. Moreover, the emergence of regional trading arrangements means that some of our traditional markets are not as open to us as they once were. In short, competition in world markets is increasing. A Canadian trade policy that seeks to safeguard our interests must reflect these realities.

These fundamental changes in the world economy have been reflected in the GATT. The GATT has evolved from a small club of like-minded countries into a much more complex group of countries having vastly different competitive strengths and trading interests. This has led to more complicated and lengthy multilateral trade negotiations. For instance, the last round, the Tokyo Round, lasted from 1973 to 1979.

Canada is a uniquely important player in this coalition of countries. We are a bridge between the less-developed countries and the economic super-powers. Our interests are allied with other resource-based producers. This was demonstrated by the pivotal role that Canada played by putting agriculture on the agenda of the GATT negotiations at Punta del Este, Uruguay. At the same time we have common interests with the largest trading nations. We are a member of the Quadrilateral, the informal group of the largest traders in the world, along with the United States, Japan and the European Community. We met at Sintra, Portugual just prior to the GATT in Uruguay. We played an active role in co-ordinating our positions for the GATT negotiations. So there should be no doubts that we are an important member of the multilateral trading community. There should be no mistaking this Government's commitment to the GATT. We are an active, dynamic and leading player in the GATT. We are absolutely committed to the General Agreement and to the Uruguay Round.

However, in reaffirming our commitment to the GATT we must realize that it alone cannot protect all our interests. The vast majority of our exports go to one national market, that is, the U.S. market, which now takes 78 per cent of all our exports. So we are engaged in bilateral negotiations with the United States for only one reason—it is in Canada's interest to do so.

What do we seek to achieve? We want to redefine the rules that presently govern trade between our two countries. We want to secure and to enhance our access to U.S. markets. We want to lock those rules and that security of access into the form of a long-term binding treaty between both countries.

Let me first discuss secure access. There is a thicket of trade laws in the U.S. at the disposal of any interest group that wants to bring an action against Canada. Since 1980, well over 500 complaints have been brought forward in the U.S. These cases have become increasingly complex and have spawned an unprecedented number of appeals. The proliferation of trade complaints in the past five years has caused grave concern to Canada. These cases complicate investment decisions, because to be successful Canadian producers need security of access to foreign markets.

If the rules keep changing, then that security is jeopardized and diminished. However, what is equally important is a disturbing reluctance in the U.S. to accept the verdict when U.S. interests do not win a case. We see that in the softwood lumber case. We won the case in 1983. We then faced a number of legislative initiatives seeking in one way or other to limit our exports to the U.S. We then faced a fact-finding investigation and yet another countervail action this year. Now, the threat is that if the U.S. industry does not get what it wants there will be the likelihood of more Congressional action. This is why we seek new rules. We seek a better shield against the forces of protectionism. The existing rules may be law, but their enforcement does not always lead to justice. We want more certainty. We want a more confident environment for investors and producers in Canada. This, in turn, will generate jobs and economic growth.

What about enhanced access? One example is our industries' ability to sell goods to the U.S. state and federal Governments. For example, the "Buy American" requirement prohibits the use of foreign steel in projects funded under certain acts. This closes an important part of the U.S. market to our producers. We want better access to these markets so that our world-class technology in areas such as telecommunications and electrical generating equipment can compete on an equal footing with U.S. producers.

There are many other trade actions taken by the U.S. which irritate us. I am reminded of the Prime Minister's words that we are best friends, America and Canada, and that we are each other's biggest trading partners, but at times it is difficult to be friendly with your best friend. I could also mention, for instance, potash, uranium, the wheat subsidy war and other U.S. support practices.

However, we are not walking away. Rather, we are seeking through negotiations a better framework for trade between us.

• (1610)

The U.S. administration, for its part, has indicated that it sees important benefits for its country. Canada is the largest market for U.S. exports and it is one of the few markets in which U.S. exports are increasing. Canada is the largest recipient of direct U.S. investment and millions of cross-border transactions link our two national economies.

The U.S., of course, has its concerns and we are willing to listen to them. We will adjust for them where we are able to do so. That is the process of negotiation. Any trade treaty clearly must be beneficial to both partners.

Some who oppose this initiative say we are undermining the GATT by advancing our interest on a bilateral basis. That is simply wrong. A bilateral agreement is consistent with GATT rules. Moreover, our bilateral talks with the U.S. are not only consistent with the GATT but could serve as multilateral models. We are well aware that Canada-U.S. agreements in such areas as procurement and services could be models for multilateral action. We are negotiating with this in mind.

So those are some of the realities that have prompted us to embark upon this two-track approach. They make a compelling case for our two-track policy. The critics who are here today have a responsibility to address these same realities and to tell Canadians how their policies meet the needs of Canadians today. I suspect they will not be able to because their policies are not based on fact or supported by past experience and their policies do not meet the needs of Canada in today's world.

I recognize that much of this criticism has been directed at the hearts of Canadians, not their heads. Canadians have been warned of the traumatic adjustments that will flow from an arrangement and they have been warned that our cultural sovereignty is at stake. Those are two false accusations, so let me take a minute to address these two fears.

First, regarding the trauma of change, let us just put this in perspective. Canada has been reducing its trade barriers step by step since the beginning of GATT in 1947. Canadians have not only survived this process but have prospered under it. If Canadians have prospered through seven rounds of trade liberalization, why would the next step be any different?

Second, there is the issue of cultural sovereignty. I would like to remind the House that there were two important events in the life of Canada which took place in the late 1940s. One was the creation of the GATT, the start of the trade liberalization process that has continued to this day. The other was the Massey Royal Commission on the National Development of the Arts, Letters and Sciences, the start of a cultural development process that has also continued to this day. These two processes went hand in hand because it was the prosperity created by trade liberalization that allowed us to create all those institutions and programs which helped to define us as Canadians today.

Just as trade liberalization continues, the challenge to build a national identity continues today. We in the Government recognize that and we have said very clearly to our negotiators that this Government's ability to protect and enhance Canadian culture is non-negotiable. We want a country whose people can communicate with one another through the arts and the popular media. The essence which makes us Canadian cannot and will not be compromised.

Before I close my remarks, let me make a final point, Mr. Speaker. So far, I have talked about our two-track trade policy. Let me note another element of our over-all trade strategy, the need to seek new export opportunities. I view the promotion of Canadian exports as being a key element of my portfolio. Essential as it may be, it is not enough to negotiate changes in the rules governing trade. We must continue to seek new markets for our goods and services. As was stated in the Speech from the Throne, particular emphasis will be placed upon trade with Japan and other Pacific Rim countries. I will be addressing this theme again in the coming months.

So, Mr. Speaker, we know precisely what we are doing. We are well prepared and we are convinced that our strategy is the best way to advance our national interest. We are actively consulting with the provinces. Indeed, our response to the softwood lumber case is a prime example of federal-provincial co-operation in a trade matter.

We have the advice of a wide array of private-sector experts and as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has consistently said, if our negotiations do not result in a better deal for Canada, there will be no deal. However, I believe it is our responsibility to try. We believe that trade problems over the past few years in such sectors as lumber, fish, pork and steel prove that existing trade rules must be improved.

We cannot improve the situation by simply turning our backs and walking away. We have the choice of negotiating to advance our interests or we can run away and let others unilaterally set the rules for us. We chose to negotiate, not because it is popular, not because it is easy, but because it is in the national interest of Canada and of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to offer my congratulations to the Minister on being appointed to her new position. It is not possible to do so in Question Period and I am pleased to do so now.

I would, however, note that yet again the Government, through the words of the Minister, has relied on insults with respect to her critics. She has suggested that they have no answers. I suggest that she might wish to listen, as we listened to her speech today, when we speak later next week. She will hear of the course we would be following in place of the course that is now being followed.

I would also note that I saw certain inaccuracies in the speech which has just been made, particularly with respect to GATT. As someone who attended the GATT meetings, I would have to say that there was a great deal of uneasiness and opposition expressed by European and Japanese delegates and GATT officials to the bilateral course which we were taking up with the United States. If the Minister is not aware of that, she should talk with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who led the delegation, or with the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) who was there as well and could, I assume, report the same thing.

I have some questions which I would like to put very briefly, recognizing that it is not possible to have a full-scale debate at this stage. I might say that I look forward to the full-scale debate which was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he first announced the initiative that is being taken toward the United States. This is a full-scale debate which has yet to be put before the House.

I have three questions. First, if we are concerned with such things as access to the United States, "Buy American" and a whole host of questions of restrictive protectionism within the United States, why do we not follow the route of GATT now that the GATT talks are under way after Punta del Este and carry these discussions with the United States forward with the strong support of allies who are equally concerned with each of these points which the Minister has considered in her speech? The Japanese, for instance, would be such strong allies.

• (1620)

Second, will we finally have the mandate of Mr. Reisman made public to the House now that he has finished his first round of discussions and the Premiers have been filled in?

Third, if I may, could I please plead with the Minister to make a change in her approach and the approach of her predecessor and to take the Canadian people into the confidence of the Government in respect of precisely what is the mandate of Mr. Reisman in these talks, instead of carrying forward this cloak and dagger diplomacy which is out of place between two modern democracies?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, to address the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member, I looked again at my speaking notes. I cannot see any reference to these insults which the Hon. Member identified. I believe the only comment I made about the critics was to say that they have the responsibility to address these same realities and to tell Canadians how their policies will meet the needs of Canadians today. If asking the opposition Parties, and particularly the NDP, to put forward their policies is an insult, it speaks to the nature of the policies, not to the opportunity provided by the Government to produce them.

In answer to the specific questions raised by the Hon. Member, when he talks about the need to take allies into our discussions with the U.S., he does not seem to understand that we have a unique relationship with the U.S. It takes 78 per cent of our exports and, in turn, we are the United States, biggest customer. One province alone, Ontario, sells as much to the U.S. as does Japan. There is little to be gained by taking outside of GATT some sort of regional bloc, which he seems to be suggesting, composed of Europe, Japan, and the U.S. We are talking about GATT and we are talking about a bilateral arrangement. I also want to assure him that I thought he might have understood, or maybe he would have learned at Punta del Este that under Section 24 of the GATT these bilateral arrangements are allowed. That is why there is a European Community. That is why there is a European Free Trade Association.

I do not understand how he could indicate that Europeans were concerned about a bilateral arrangement between Canada and the U.S. when they are members of the very same kind of regional trading arrangement that allows them access to 265 million people. We, with our 26 million people, are the only industrialized country in the world that does not have secure access to a market of at least 100 million people. I think they were concerned about protectionism at the GATT; everyone is concerned about the rising tide of protectionism. However, I would suggest that the support Canada gave other countries in their objectives in the GATT will alleviate their fears.

Also, the Hon. Member asked about Simon Reisman's mandate and about taking Canadians into confidence in the negotiations. I have certainly tried to be as open as I can about the negotiations. However, I do not understand how one can negotiate a treaty at a table in full public view. I do not know whether he is suggesting bringing in the television cameras or putting them on a stage to negotiate. I have always found that the best way to negotiate is to do it behind closed doors with some privacy. The Hon. Member can be assured that the results of the negotiations and all reports on the negotiations are reported directly to me, and through me to the Cabinet and to the Prime Minister. I look forward, in the next few weeks, to speaking continually on this subject as I travel throughout Canada.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that if there is one thing that concerns Canadians about the trade negotiations with the United States, it is the ultimate impact those negotiations will have on their own individual personal lives and their own individual personal circumstances. It has been said that as a result of these negotiations there will be some winners and there will be some losers. I guess it is that aspect which really and truly concerns Canadians; whether those individuals will be the losers in the whole process.

It has been suggested from time to time that the Government should try to help those people who might end up in some way as losers with a program and a policy that would ease the adjustment process from the position in which they are now to what they might be in the future. Does the Government have such a policy waiting in the wings and, if so, what is it?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for his question. First let me reassure him that the history of the reductions in tariff barriers, for instance, that has occurred in the 50 years since the great depression certainly has shown that there are more winners than losers in trade liberalization. We are infinitely better off in 1986 than we were when the process started. I think I can reassure him generally on that point.

On his specific point about whether the Government is addressing this, yes, both countries in the trade negotiations are addressing the need to have a long-term agreement—and we are talking about from now into the next century—to phase in any changes, to have the relevant adjustment programs for those who are affected, and to have training programs for those who are affected to take advantage of the jobs that will be created. Those points are being addressed in the negotiations.

I think if the Hon. Member reflects on the training programs the Government has brought in and upon the kind of help the Government has given to industries in the area that he represents and in his province in general, he will recognize that we have a good precedent on which to stake our faith.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I will resist the temptation to try to respond to the comments of the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) because there are several other things I had the intention of addressing today. Debate about a major initiative of the Government is very useful, and I hope there will be more opportunities for it to happen. My intention today is to speak, first, as the spokesperson of my Party for the environment and, second, as a western Canadian who is concerned about the problems affecting that region of Canada.

In respect of the Speech from the Throne, when it comes to environmental issues, the Throne Speech is significant for what is not in it rather than for what is in it. In the Throne Speech we have the promise of a new Environmental Protection Act. That is to be welcomed. We hope that we will soon see that legislation. Presuming that it is quality legislation—and I know that a great deal of consultation has gone into it already—we will certainly be prepared to be as co-operative as we can when the legislation comes forward, of course always depending upon the fact that there are no surprises in it of which we are not aware at this time. We will be looking forward to playing a constructively critical role in that respect.

There was also acceptable rhetoric about water quality in the Throne Speech. However, I was disappointed that very shortly after the presentation of the Throne Speech, at a meeting of Ministers of the Environment, the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) was not able to make new commitments to federal involvement in the much needed upgrading of our sewage treatment facilities across the country. I am told that some 53 per cent of sewage still goes into the environment completely untreated. That should be regarded as a national disgrace and should not be something which is subject to the usual kind of bureaucratic tinkering, as to whether we will have a few more dollars here or a few more dollars there. It is one of the least complicated environmental problems we face. It is less complicated than knowing what to do about invisible toxins in the Niagara River, for instance. It is something we know what to do about and something we could be doing. I fail to understand why the Government could not make a major announcement in that area. It would have been particularly helpful in areas suffering from high unemployment such as Quebec and Atlantic Canada where this kind of upgrading is most needed.

I said that the Throne Speech in respect of the environment was significant in what was left out. What was left out was a commitment to live up to the Progressive Conservative Party's campaign promise for a full inquiry into the nuclear industry. This is a promise of the Conservative Party which goes back to 1979. It is a promise that looked like it was going to be acted upon by the Conservative Government in 1979, but we all know that that Government did not have a chance to act on it. But the Conservatives have now been in office for two years. I have been after them to live up to the promise, a promise repeated in the election of 1984. Even after Chernobyl and the international meetings in Vienna, which the former Minister of Energy said would have to transpire before the Government would make its decision about an inquiry, we see no commitment to such an inquiry in the Throne Speech.

• (1630)

Unfortunately we do have a statement from the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), not a statement made in this House, not a statement made in the Throne Speech, not a statement made to the Canadian people, not a statement even made in Canada, but a statement made by the Minister of Energy to the international meeting in Vienna. His official news release says "The Minister reaffirmed Canada's commitment to nuclear energy. Let Canada's position be clear. We are determined to use nuclear energy". That is the position taken by the new Minister of Energy in Vienna. If that is the position of the Government, why not make it absolutely clear here at home in the House of Commons to the Canadian people that that promise of the Progressive Conservative Party to initiate a full scale inquiry into the nuclear industry in Canada has been abandoned.

Other things which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said at that conference which I find interesting concerned food irradiation which, as we know, is at least a matter of some controversy, but not in the mind of the Minister of Energy. He said "food irradiation, for example, has become indispensable to human progress". Indispensable to human progress, Mr. Speaker. I cannot accuse the new Minister of Energy of being ambiguous about his views on nuclear energy.

I ask the Government to be more forthcoming about what official government positions are with respect to questions like food irradiation, though we had a pretty clear indication of what the Government policy will be today from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) when he answered a question from the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt). As far as he was concerned he was willing to accept the verdict that food irradiation was completely safe.

The view of the Government in this respect is what I call completely technocratic. It is willing to accept uncritically the prevailing confidence in that kind of technological expertise. The Tories' former ability to think critically about these kinds of technologies, displayed in 1979, has gone by the boards completely, either for internal reasons or, like so many governments before it, because of deference to the expertise in various departments. Whatever the case may be, Mr. Speaker, we have a position where that promise has been abandoned.

The Minister of Energy also said in Vienna when he was speaking about public concern and the need to alleviate public concern about the nuclear industry, "Acceptance must be based on understanding and not on propaganda." That is a good statement, but I say to the Minister of Energy, if he is interested in understanding; that if Canadian nuclear policy cannot be based on propaganda, it cannot be based on secrecy either. It cannot be based on a refusal to make major announcements and major statements of policy about the nuclear industry in the House of Commons. Understanding cannot be created when Ministers of Energy responsible for that industry refuse to create opportunities for meaningful debate, and everything happens behind closed doors.

As many of you will know, our response to this continuing unwillingness of the Conservative Party to live up to its promises has been to do what we can to give Canadians an opportunity to say what they think about Canada's involvement in the nuclear option. That is why the New Democratic Party announced in July that we New Democrats will be having our own inquiry and that we will be going across the country talking to people about what they think about Canada's involvement in the nuclear option.

There was mention of acid rain in the Throne Speech and Canada's continuing—I forget the exact rhetoric—determination to do something about acid rain or something like that. I am glad to see it at least got a mention, but I continue to hold my view that the position of Canada with respect to acid rain, at least in its international sense, in its trans-boundary sense with the United States, continues to be one of shameful acquiescence to the agenda of the Reagan administration. In fact, the Reagan administration has succeeded beyond its wildest dreams because it has now set the acid rain agenda for the next five years, which reaches beyond the presidency of Ronald Reagan. For the next five years all that we can hope to see with respect to progress, at least initiated by the administration, unless Congress is able to do something, is spending on research into clean coal technologies, and we have no guarantee that that will happen in any significant way, and even if it does happen that it will lead to an actual reduction in emissions.

I see that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is here. Perhaps he will have an opportunity later to tell us why—I think this might have been a mistake—the question of another trans-boundary question, that of the Niagara River pollution, was left out of the Throne Speech. That may have sent the wrong kind of signal to our American friends; not being right up there alongside acid rain as a major environmental issue with respect to Canada—U.S. relations. I find it very regrettable that that was not there alongside acid rain. I hope the Minister will take the first opportunity to indicate that that oversight should not be misinterpreted by the United States to mean any diminishing of Canada's intention to get a meaningful settlement with respect to that issue.

I want to speak now as a western Canadian about what I think is a very significant political transition happening, particularly on the prairies. It has to do with what I think to be a series of broken promises made to western Canadians over the years by the Progressive Conservative Party, promises which were believed by a majority of western Canadians and promises which led western Canadians to vote for many Conservative Members of Parliament into office over the years, and particularly during the last election. I think that the Progressive Conservative Party has seriously let down western Canada. I want to give a few examples, important examples of why that is the case.

The first one that springs to my mind, perhaps because I come from a rail town like Transcona, is the question of VIA Rail. This has been raised a number of times in the House since we have returned after the summer. Still, after two years of this Government in office we do not have the new transcontinental equipment ordered. How long does it take to get up the resolve and the competency to order the equipment that everyone and his dog knows is needed if there is to be a serious possibility of a revitalized passenger rail system in this country?

• (1640)

I do not think anyone could argue the fact that the Government has seriously botched the future of Via Rail. This spring we saw the disgrace of legislation brought forward to put cost recovery targets on the transcontinental routes of Via Rail. The legislation would require Via Rail to meet those targets in two years. The Government knew full well that with the new equipment not even ordered it was absolutely impossible for Via Rail to meet those cost recovery targets. The only way it could meet them is with new equipment and there is no possibility of having that new equipment by the time the deadlines in the legislation come into effect. I hope we will see some change in those deadlines when the legislation comes before the House. However, the facts remains that we still have not ordered that equipment. I hope that very soon the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) will be able to announce the real purchasing of that equipment, not just announce its intention one more time. When the Minister said half-jokingly the other day that he hoped he would get to announce that new equipment just as so many of his predecessors had, I said under my breath that I hoped he would be the last Minister to make that announcement, because I hope the next time the announcement is made it means some action will be forthcoming.

The other day we heard of the desire on the part of CN and CP to abandon literally tens of thousands of miles of rail lines. The Minister of Transport got up and said, rest assured, CN and CP would have to work within the law. What law? The law this Government intends to change? The law this Government intends to change in order to give CN and CP more freedom to do whatever they want? The Minister referred to the Canadian Transport Commission. We have every reason to believe that after the new National Transportation Act is passed there will not be anything like the CTC we have known up until this day. CN and CP, partly as a result of that new legislation and deregulation, will be able to do anything they want as long as they can show it is necessary to their being what they call competitive.

I say to all western Canadians who may have sincerely thought over the years that they had real, genuine allies over there, that they do not. They cannot have real allies in a Party which has committed itself first of all, not to western Canada but to the ideology of the market-place. In the final analysis, if the market-place dictates the extinction of western Canada, or the extinction of the family farm, or the extinction of whatever the market-place dictates is next up for obsolescence, you cannot really have allies among people whose first commitment is to that kind of ideology.

Let me speak for a minute about the family farm. The one thing that should shake up a lot of people in this country, particularly people of a small "c" conservative bent, if you will—people who think that the family farm represents an enduring kind of institution, a cultural value structure which is to be regarded as one of the high points of Canadian life—it is that if the family farm is vulnerable, if it can be dispensed with, if it can be sacrificed on the altar of the international market-place and of so-called competition, then everything else is vulnerable. No one is safe.

What kind of response to that have we from this Government? We have a transition program to help farmers off the land. Why? Because farming is no longer regarded as a vocation by governments, it is regarded strictly as a business. No more talk about relationships with the land. The land is just something to be pumped and milked with fertilizers and pesticides and everything else you can get your hands on to get the highest possible yield to make the biggest possible buck. The problem, of course, is that even doing that, under the current international economic system the farmers cannot make enough money to survive.

Instead of coming down hard on the international system and on the banks and others who are doing this to our farmers, we see a look of regret on the face of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and others that this has happened. They say they are going to do what they can within the existing fiscal framework, but they are not going to take on the forces which are destroying the family farm in western Canada. The family farm is not just being destroyed, the very ecological basis on which our agricultural sector is based is being destroyed. I refer to the report by the Senate on soil erosion and other evidence which has been piling up over the years, that the way we have allowed our agricultural sector to develop is a recipe for disaster. The chickens are starting to come home to roost on that particular way of farming and the farmers, in my view, should be the last to be victimized by the consequences, instead of the first, which is the case right now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is widely known in this House and beyond as a fair and reasonable person whose sincerity is matched only by his eloquence on environmental matters. He asked why the Throne Speech did not specifically mention pollution in the Niagara River as a priority alongside the resolution of the acid rain question in negotiations with the Americans. I presume he is familiar with this paragraph in the Throne Speech which I will quote only briefly:

> My government recognizes fully the essential relationship between a healthy environment and the quality of Canadian life. A new Environmental Protection Act will be introduced to improve my government's capacity, in concert with the provinces, to deal effectively with pollution, focusing on toxic chemicals. You will also be asked to consider measures to improve water quality in Canada and to safeguard citizens from the hazards of chemicals in our society.

So there will be two main thrusts, among others: the Environmental Protection Act, and measures to deal specifically with water quality.

Would the Hon. Member not agree that, while obviously pollution in the Niagara River is terribly important and must be dealt with, pollution in the St. Clair River must also be dealt with, as must pollution in the St. Lawrence River? Would it not make an awful lot more sense for the Government to do as it did, highlight the general problem of toxic chemicals and water quality, and place such questions as pollution in the Niagara River in the broader context rather than mention them in isolation? In that way pollution would be dealt with wherever it is found, in the Niagara River, the St. Clair River, the St. Lawrence River or other rivers that could be mentioned. In fact, it would have been entirely inappropriate for the Government to single out the Niagara River—even though it does place a high priority on it—because of the need for a more comprehensive approach.

• (1650)

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is working from the disadvantage of not having come in at the beginning of my speech. If he will check Hansard he will see that I did acknowledge the very paragraphs that he mentioned with regard to the bringing in of a new Environmental Protection Act and the statement with respect to water quality.

My point about the Niagara River was that if you are going to mention trans-boundary environmental issues in terms of Canada-U.S. relations, it may be a mistake to mention acid rain and not the Niagara River. It is not that I am holding the Niagara River pollution up as a domestic problem to the exclusion of all others. I was simply saying that I was worried that leaving it out of the Throne Speech, when mentioning trans-boundary environmental problems, might have sent a wrong signal to the American side about the extent to which we still hold this as a top priority. If you check the "blues" you will see that I acknowledged the other things which were in the Throne Speech.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, during his remarks my colleague referred to the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) went to a conference in Vienna and made a statement on nuclear energy. The Member will know that it is the job of Ministers to travel around the world, participate in these conferences and make statements as to government policy.

I do not think the Member would want to leave an inaccurate impression on the record. I want to emphasize to him and to the House that the Government's position is that as many ministerial statements as possible should be made in the House of Commons. In the first session of the Thirty-second Parliament there were 591 days and 28 ministerial statements were made. In the Thirty-third Parliament, which is when we took office, there were 304 sitting days and 83 ministerial statements. In other words, there were three times as many ministerial statements made in the House of Commons in one-half the time.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would be the first to acknowledge, as I have on previous occasions, that the Government has taken much more advantage of the opportunity to make ministerial statements. However, before the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) gets too self-righteous about it, I will remind him that a change in the procedure with respect to ministerial statements has made it much more convenient for the Government to make such statements.

I am not saying that the Government is lacking in sincerity with regard to trying to involve the House more in matters of public debate. I think there is a genuine willingness there. However, I also think it would have been more complete if the Member had acknowledged that it is much easier and less risky in terms of using up government time to use the instrument of ministerial statements than it used to be. Previously when ministerial statements were made the time taken would come off government time in the House. We now have an arrangement whereby the sitting is extended beyond the normal time of adjournment to make up for the time used by ministerial statements. That is something to be reminded of.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member make reference to the agricultural industry in the country. I share his view of the problems that Canadian agriculture faces, which problems are faced by agricultural producers in all major food-producing countries around the world. I cannot remain seated and listen to the Hon. Member say that the Government has done virtually nothing for Canadian agriculture. I invite him to check the record.

He will note that through legislation and the fulfillment of campaign commitments the Government has done more in the last 24 months than any other Government has done in a normal four-year period in office. If he will check the record he will see that we have fulfilled 317 commitments and spent $5.6 billion. Just last week we committed ourselves to the largest single aid package ever delivered by any Government to the Canadian agricultural industry. We have 24 months to go. The Government has been conscious and supportive of the agricultural industry in the country as has no other Government. We remain committed and will do whatever possible, given our rather limited financial capabilities.

The Member should recognize the leadership role taken on behalf of Canadian agriculture by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) the Minister of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). They made great progress on behalf of this industry at the summit and, more recently and specifically, leading up to the multilateral trade negotiations. I draw particular attention to the meeting held recently in Uruguay.

I do not think you can mislead Canadian farmers, because they are pretty sharp people. But it would be irresponsible to suggest that we have the financial resources in this country to take on Washington or the EEC. However, we will continue to play a leadership role in the international forum to bring about a new round of multilateral trade negotiations. We will do what we can within our financial capacity to maintain a strong and viable agricultural industry in the country.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, my claim was not about the unlimited financial resources of the Canadian Government, although I find it strange that arguments about limited financial resources spring much more quickly to the mind of the Government when it comes to western Canada and farmers than when it comes to banks or industrial assistance for projects in southern Ontario.

It is not only a question of directing financial resources, it is also a question of political will. In this case it is a question of political will for Canada to work together with others who may be of the same view against those forces of the market-place that are putting Canadian farmers in the position in which they now find themselves. Some of those forces are international and I do not expect the Government to overcome them in a day. However, some of those forces are domestic. My claim about the current Government is that it does not have the philosophical capacity, if you will, to set itself against the forces which are inevitably eating away at western Canadian agriculture as we have known it.

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate you on your reappointment as Deputy Speaker. I extend to you and your colleagues in the chair my best wishes for the coming session of this Parliament.

I would also like to congratulate the new Member for Pembina and welcome him here this afternoon. It is good to see you, Sir, and I hope to see you down here soon.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Warner: I would also like to thank the constituents of Stormont—Dundas. I have enjoyed representing them in this House during the last two years and I look forward to continuing to be their representative here in the future. It is a great honour and one which I appreciate very much. All of you in Stormont—Dundas have my utmost respect. Stormont—Dundas is a riding in eastern Ontario less than an hour's drive from Cornwall and Montreal. Tourism is one of our most important industries and we have several very attractive features in our area. I want to briefly mention a number of them.

• (1700)

The St. Lawrence Seaway goes through my riding with a lock at Iroquois in the western part, in Dundas County. Close by in Iroquois is Carmen House, one of the oldest dwellings in the area, built around 1825. Also close by in Dundas is Dundela, the home of the McIntosh apple which has become world renowned. East of Morrisburg is auto Wonderland, and Prehistoric World on Upper Canada Road. There is also Upper Canada Village, a reconstructed pioneer village that many of us have visited several times. Further east toward Ingleside is a wildlife sanctuary which at this time of year has thousands of Canada geese and is truly an outstanding place to visit for any photographer or family.

In Cornwall, there is Rossi Glass, United Counties Museum, the R. H. Sanders generating station, Inverarden Regency Cottage Museum, a building that was built in 1816. There is the Charlottenburgh waterfowl sanctuary toward the eastern part of my riding near Lancaster, the Nor'westers Loyalist Museum in Williamstown, and the St. Raphael's church ruins in the heart of a Scottish community which is celebrating its bicentennial this year.

We are also quite fortunate in having several agricultural fairs around the riding. In June there is the Maxville Fair, in July there is the Avonmore Fair and in August there is Williamstown, South Mountain, Chesterville, while in September there is Newington. As well as these outstanding agricultural fairs there is the world famous Glengarry Highland Games on the first Saturday of August each year.

There are approximately 1,900 farms in my community, 43 per cent of which are dairy operations, 26 per cent beef cattle, and 12 per cent which cultivate small grains. When our nation's shoppers spend over $500 million per week in purchasing Canadian food products, we know the importance of our agricultural sector, not only for Stormont—Dundas but for all of Canada.

The Government's Speech from the Throne emphasizes Canada's commitment to agriculture and the role it plays in our national economy. As our Minister has recently outlined, we are aware of the present difficulties and we are definitely committed to work toward solving many of these problems, with the assistance and co-operation of provincial Governments and farm organizations, to help alleviate the hardship that many of our farm communties have been experiencing. The Throne Speech makes it clear, in making its commitment to Canadian agriculture, that the Government will spare no effort in seeking to protect the interests of Canada's farming community in the face of unfair competiton outside the country.

In co-operation with the provinces, we have recently committed $1 billion of assistance to our grain farmers in Canada. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) stated a few minutes ago, since coming to office the Government has brought forward over 300 separate initiatives totalling more than $5 billion which will benefit Canadian agriculture. The Government has effectively removed all sales tax and excise tax from all diesel and gasoline farm fuels, through a system of rebates. To date, some $100 million in low-interest loans has been approved under the new Commodity Based Loan Program. The Government has worked for lower interest rates, saving farmers millions of dollars in interest. We now have farm credit loans with the lowest rates since 1979.

Canada now has a national Red Meat Stabilization Program. The federal Government's commitment of $1.5 billion over a five-year period to its new dairy policy will provide the dairy industry with a stability it has not enjoyed since 1980. The 1985 Budget provided farmers with an immediate $500,000 capital gains exemption, effectively eliminating capital gains on the sale of most farms.

An essential part of our economic renewal program is tax reform. The capital gains initiative was one of the beginning steps of this tax reform. Federal tax reform is a top economic and social priority of the Progressive Conservative Government. A principal objective of the changes made so far has been to broaden the tax base and lower tax rates. We must restore a healthier balance among the personal, corporate and sales taxes, and specifically reverse the trend which has resulted in a greater reliance on personal income tax. The Government's further consideration of tax reform will have fairness as one of its guiding principles.

The Government is determined to move forward in a careful and co-ordinated way to ensure that the tax system is made less complex wherever possible. In developing our options for reform, we must also ensure that our tax system provides a strong and positive framework for economic growth and the expansion of job opportunities for all Canadians.

The Government has been examining broader options for the more complex reform of the federal tax system, including a business transfer tax which would possibly replace the federal sales tax. At the present time, there are several inequities in the federal sales tax and this area needs our immediate attention.

Since the Budget in February, the pace of comprehensive tax reform in the United States has escalated and they will soon be bringing in new tax measures which will have to spur us on in our tax reform program. Canadians must remain competitive with our American counterparts.

The Speech from the Throne noted the Government's concern about increasing concentration of corporate ownership, particularly where take-overs serve to increase corporate size without creating new jobs or stimulating economic growth in Canada. Tax reform will most likely deal with this concern.

[Translation]

Since we came to power, we have introduced important measures aimed at regenerating the Canadian economy. These measures have helped to restore confidence, create jobs, bring down interest rates and reduce the deficit. In September 1984, 11.7 per cent of the labour force was out of work. Today, the unemployment rate is down to 9.7 per cent.

[English]

Economic renewal has not been even across Canada. Certain parts of Ontario have experienced a tremendous boom, especially in the Toronto area where the housing boom has been quite astounding. Our programs will have to consider those other parts of our country that have been less fortunate.

Presenting statistics on unemployment has caused problems and, at times, controversy. The official unemployment rate in certain areas does not reflect the jobless rate. I represent one of those areas. The official rate of unemployment in Stormont—Dundas is approximately 8 per cent or 9 per cent, but no one in my area takes this figure very seriously because they know that it reflects the unemployment figures for all of eastern Ontario, including Ottawa. It also, does not take into consideration such factors as participation rate or those who are on welfare and available for work.

• (1710)

Yesterday in the House there was some controversy about the jobless rate in Manicouagan. I am sure that when the people in Manicouagan speak of a jobless rate, they understand it is closer to 37 per cent than it is to the official 15.8 per cent. They are living there. They know they do not have jobs. It is not 15.8 per cent because that does not consider the participation rate, the people who are employable and on welfare—

Mr. Hovdebo: There are thousands of others.

Mr. Warner: As the Hon. Member says, there are thousands of others who are unemployed and we are certainly concerned about them.

Mr. Hovdebo: In other places.

Mr. Warner: I do not believe that official rates in other areas accurately reflect the seriousness of the problem in those areas. I think it would be much better if Hon. Members could refer to a jobless rate which may be somewhat more accurate.

In the Cornwall area, we have been quite successsful in creating jobs for many of the unemployed people. Some of the companies which have located there and have expanded in the last couple of years, and continue to expand, are Almico Plastics, Astro Printing Service, C-Tech, C-E Vidaplate Inc., Can Lyte, Canadian Furniture Lighting Corp., Cornwall Machine and Welding Ltd., Cowall Inc., Cummins Recon, Denol Burr Inc., Dynamic Closures Ltd., Mr. Klaus Hartmann and his new company Chromolit, Helko Systems Furniture, Transcontinental Printing, Iroquois Chemical, Julius Resnick, Karl Gutmann, Karnuck Marble, Kershaw Manufacturing, Kohler Ltd., Malani Textile Mills, Valco Furniture, Robert Mitchell, Robert Windows, Twistex, Rol Manufacturing, Walteck and the list goes on. There are many other small companies that have taken on new employees over the last couple of years. Altogether these people have created, and are in the process of creating, over 1,000 new jobs in our area. That trend will continue because of the positive tone of the Speech from the Throne. We are quite pleased with the progress of job creation in Stormont—Dundas and the resultant strengthening of the economy. We know there is more to be done, but we are on the right track. We know that social policy concerns are more satisfacatorily met in a strong and growing economy, and that fiscal responsibility is fully compatible with social responsibility.

The Government is resolved to defend and strengthen the Canadian family which is the foundation of Canadian society. In many families in Stormont—Dundas, as in the rest of the country, both parents are now working. Adequate quality child care must be available. We look forward to receiving the Martin Committee Report on Child Care which will most likely be followed by discussions with the provinces, business and labour. I look forward to a co-operative approach from all the Parties in solving this difficult problem.

The Government is determined to take effective action against child sexual abuse, violent forms of pornography involving women and children, child prostitution and the serious and growing threat posed by the traffic in illegal drugs. Current indications are that Canadians now have a $10 billion a year drug problem. That is equivalent to $400 for every man, woman and child in Canada. This situation is intolerable and poses a serious threat to our society. All levels of Government and all Canadians must be concerned with this problem.

I would like to congratulate the law enforcement officers operating in Stormont—Dundas and Glengarry for their efforts in thwarting drug trafficking. Special congratulations go to the City of Cornwall police and their Chief, Claude Shaver, and Deputy Police Chief, Denis O'Neill, for their recent efforts.

The Government recognizes the essential relationship between a healthy environment and the quality of life. An industry-labour-Government task force will be preparing recommendations concerning the workplace environment. Following its recommendations, the Government will propose legislation to establish a workplace hazardous materials information system. Our environment is fragile and its protection requires the assistance of all Canadians.

[Translation]

The Government wants to adapt social measures to the real needs of the people. Canada's future is its young people, and the Speech from the Throne is emphatic about increasing opportunities for this important group in our population.

The Government is happy about the drop in youth unemployment, from 18.4 per cent on election day to 15 per cent today. However, much remains to be done.

[English]

The Government will be seeking the co-operation of the provinces and the private sector to enhance job opportunities and to encourage the participation and involvement of young Canadians in productive and challenging initiatives. The Government will be working with the provinces, the private sector and voluntary organizations to develop measures to ensure that all Canadians have access to the literacy skills which are the prerequisites for participation in a developed economy. Our local problem with illiteracy was recently brought to my attention by journalist Huguette Burroughs, whose concern I sincerely appreciate.

Today Canadian youth have benefited from numerous Government initiatives including the Canadian Jobs Strategy and Challenge '86. In 1985 the Student Employment Centre in Stormont—Dundas placed 1,200 student. That was a new record for student placement in our riding. In 1986 the Student Employment Centre placed 1,400 students. Other jobs were created throughout our riding at a most successful rate.

The Government Speech from the Throne recognizes the importance of Canada's multicultural and multiracial communities. The reality of Canada today calls for all facets of our national life to reflect the vital and distinctive nature of Canadian society. Increased immigration levels, particularly among business immigrants, will have a positive effect on Canada's well being. These people will not only help to create jobs for themselves but for other unemployed Canadians as well. Although many of our ethnic communities are relatively small, their contribution to our society is very substantial.

I am very proud to have been involved in the formation of our annual Multicultural Festival. Sultan Jessa, a former citizen of the year in Cornwall, will be chairing the fifth annual festival to be held in Cornwall on June 28, 1987. At least 12 ethnic communities will be represented by performances, displays, food and beverages. The festival provided the foundation for Worldfest/Festimonde. In its third edition next year, Chairman Denis Carr expects several outstanding performing groups from around the world. They will be in Cornwall from June 26 to Canada Day, July 1. Worldfest/Festimonde is destined to be one of Canada's outstanding multicultural events and it certainly will have the encouragement of our Government.

The Speech from the Throne acknowledged the tens of thousands of Canadians who serve their communities and their country as volunteers. Further support was pledged to encourage the growth of volunteerism in our society. Our Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) recently announced his approval of grants totalling $3.3 million for several national voluntary organizations to assist them in the cost of operating their national offices and carrying out national activities during the upcoming year. These organizations include Big Brothers of Canada, Boys and Girls Clubs of Canada, CNIB, Family Service Canada, YMCA. YWCA and many others. A 1983 study estimated that the value of volunteer time in Canada was worth $2 billion. Altogether, charitable contributions and volunteer time would be worth in excess of $5 billion today. The volunteers in our community are very valuable and will continue to have our support. I continue to ask all the people in my area to help me with my work: municipal politicians, provincial politicians and our successful contingent.

• (1720)

The Speech from the Throne is just a bench-mark in our progress. We look forward to a much better community in the time to come.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's speech on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to ask him two questions.

In his speech he took time to mention the multicultural and immigrant community in his riding. He mentioned the attributes that these people give to life in his community and, in fact, what they have brought to the country. I would first like to ask the Hon. Member what his thoughts are with respect to the infamous report written by some of his colleagues in Toronto with respect to using—and I use that word deliberately and in the negative sense—those very immigrant communities and ethnocultural organizations to the political benefit of the Conservative Party of Canada. How does that fit into the statements he has just made?

With respect to entrepreneurial immigrants, I would like to know what his thoughts are with respect to the following. The Conservative Party has doubled the quota for business immigrants. That is something which is key and integral to the immigration program. It is something which my Party supports. However, we support it only if it forms one part of the over-all immigration program. What is happening in posts around the world is that because of the doubling of the immigration quota for business applicants, resources and personnel are being shifted away from other operations of the immigration program to satisfy these quotas which have been targetted by the Government. Hong Kong produces one-half of the total number of business immigrants who come into Canada. Because there are not additional resources in place to handle these numbers, individuals are being removed from the family class and family assistance class in order to satisfy the business class quotas. Is the Hon. Member in favour of this practice? Would he like to see a cost recovery program put in place in terms of business immigrants who are willing and able to pay an additional $125 visa charge for services rendered? I ask this with the proviso that it does not negatively affect the chances of a family wishing to immigrate, since personnel are being shifted in order to meet the immigration quotas for business applicants.

I am interested to hear what the Hon. Member has to say with respect to the Toronto report. I would also like to hear what he has to say with respect to the whole philosophy of business applicants and how that situation negatively affects the delays in terms of family class immigrants, something on which the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration took great pains to submit a report to the Minister in June.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Hon. Member's first question, I am not familiar with the report to which he refers. In my riding I do not actively participate in any sort of scheme of the type mentioned by the Hon. Member. As I mentioned in my speech, the ethnic community in my riding is fairly small and formed of outstanding citizens. Many of them are professionals, and most of them are quite active in volunteer efforts. They are very prominent in many ways outside their own professions and businesses.

With respect to the Hon. Member's other remark, I support the entrepreneur class immigrant. This encourages foreign investors to come into the country. The Hon. Member mentioned a doubling of the figure from 2,000 to 4,000. I believe we could consider an even higher target. The Hon. Member also mentioned the complications with respect to Hong Kong. Hong Kong has the potential to supply several times the maximum number of entrepreneurs, and there will probably be considerable pressure placed on the rest of the world in the next two or three years to try to absorb some of these immigrants.

A cost recovery program is something which I think can be considered. At the moment I really do not know what the Minister or his Department is considering. However, this type of immigrant has the financial ability to pay for any costs incurred. Most likely they would be quite willing to pay those costs.

At the present time there are some unscrupulous operators of various kinds, such as business consultants or travel agents, who charge a fee to assist a person coming into Canada. These people being assisted are paying fees, some as high as $12,000, for a service which is of absolutely no use. At the present time the service is provided free by the Government.

I think the Hon. Member's suggestion should be relayed to the Minister and his Department for further consideration. It merits further consideration.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I am rising to make a comment with respect to the Hon. Member's intervention. Perhaps I can give him some advice, or even possibly assign him some homework, since I am a former school teacher. The Hon. Member mentioned the fact that a correctional institution was moved to a certain area because there was a need in the area to which it was being moved. I refer to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) constituency where he says there is a great deal of unemployment. The following is my homework assignment to the Hon. Member. I suggest he take a look across the river from the Prime Minister's constituency. If he does, I think he will find a constituency whose unemployment level is considerably higher than that of the Prime Minister's constituency. Just because the Government says so does not mean it is true. The question of the move needs to be looked at thoroughly. Just because the Government says that that is the reason for its move, that does not mean it is correct.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, in my presentation I made no reference to the institution. I spoke only of the way that joblessness is presented. I was speaking only of statistics which have been discussed in the House. I suggest to the Hon. Member that if he were to ask someone in Manicouagan whether or not there is a high or low unemployment rate in that riding he would be told that it is high. I make the same point with regard to my own constituency. I have heard numbers bounced around with respect to unemployment in my riding. The figure of 8 per cent has been mentioned. Anyone who lives in my riding knows that the figure is not 8 per cent.

Yesterday, a member of the Opposition suggested that the rate of unemployment in Manicouagan is 15.8 per cent. I challenge that Hon. Member to discuss that figure with someone who lives in Manicouagan. That might be good homework for the Hon. Member who brought up the statistic.

I know that statistics with respect to unemployment are awkward. However, when someone suggests a figure which is on the low side, it is totally unfair and does not present an accurate picture of what the people in that area are suffering.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne generally provides the Government with an occasion to take stock, to report on the progress of the past and to set the course for the future. Of course, a Speech from the Throne is not expected to give minute details or even a budget. However, it does afford the Government an opportunity to set forth its vision and course for future direction.

• (1730)

The Prime Minister's assessment of what his Government has achieved does not seem to find support in fact. Except for some of the major urban areas of the Golden Horseshoe, and possibly Ottawa and Montreal as well, the rest of the country is hardly thriving the way it should in a period of what might be called recovery, world-wide recovery after a devastating world-wide recession. If we analyse area by area the record of Tory promises and Tory fulfilments, I suggest we are even less impressed.

As a Liberal Member of Parliament my job has been to monitor the responsibilities and acitivities of the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Crombie), and I do this for the Official Opposition. The confusion and failure of the Tory Government, its incompetence and lack of concern for this vast area, is shown by the fact that in two years I have seen two Secretaries of State come and go, and a third one has been served up for inevitable embarrassment and humiliation because his Government fails to put its money where its mouth has been. The Cabinet of which he is a part has financially savaged the areas under the Secretary of State and betrayed its promises. Not only have we seen two Secretaries of State go by in two years, but Deputy Ministers of the Department of the Secretary of State have also passed through the revolving door. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has served up a third Deputy Minister as well.

All those involved in the areas for which the Secretary of State is responsible cannot help but suffer from the fact that we are now on our third Minister and our third Deputy Minister in two years. This is a federal Government portfolio that relates to some very heavy responsibilities. To name just a few, it relates to the 52,000 charitable organizations in the voluntary sector, to the Department of Citizenship, to the one in every eight Canadians who is disabled or handicapped, to the realms of human rights and official languages and to the more than one million students, professors and administrators in our universities and colleges. I have named only a few of the areas for which the Secretary of State is responsible, the portfolio in which there has been a revolving door. Today I want to focus on just one of those areas, that of post-secondary education.

[Translation]

It is now two years since the Conservative Government came to power. If we look at what the Government has done, we see that post-secondary education in Canada is going through a serious crisis. The measures taken by the Government in the education sector are alarming, to say the least. However, the worst part is that these measures give the impression that this Government has no intention of acting on its responsibilities to young Canadians.

[English]

On the one hand, the Government acknowledges that we must do all we can to enable Canada to become more competitive and productive in order to survive economically and culturally. It even takes steps through so-called free trade negotiations to propel us at great speed into that very competition. Then on the other hand, at the very same time as it is thrusting us so rapidly into world competition, the Government is disarming our country for such a battle for national survival by allowing our educational system to drift into a state of demoralization, decay and despair, and is speeding up that process by deliberately setting priorities which retard research and the quest for excellence. It is as simple as that.

This is not a wilful act on the part of the Government to sell out Canada so that we end up as servants of foreign economic masters by cutting back on research and education, any more than in the name of economy and fiscal restraint during the Great Depression, Britain's Neville Chamberlain wilfully intended to sell out Britain to her enemies by cutting back on her military growth. Of course he did not do it intentionally. He was just looking after the deficit. However, just as the Battle of Britain was nearly lost, we shall lose the battle for Canadian economic and cultural survival unless this process and our priorities are fully reversed and unless the present laissez-faire approach is replaced by real leadership.

[Translation]

This overview of the measures taken by the Progressive Conservative Government may seem excessively negative and partisan. However, if we remember the promises this Government made and the measures it took subsequently, it is obvious that it has deliberately abandoned post-secondary education. If anyone remembers the promises made by the Progressive Conservatives during the 1984 election campaign, it must be the leaders of the Canadian Association of University Teachers. Responding to questions by CAUT, the Progressive Conservative Party made a commitment to maintain the formula set down in the 1977 accord for calculating transfer payments to the provinces for post-secondary education.

Furthermore, CAUT leaders remember clearly that the Progressive Conservatives made a solemn promise to double the federal Government's assistance for research.

[English]

No one could therefore be more disappointed and dismayed than the members of the Canadian Association of University Teachers to witness the course of events of the last two years.

The passage of Bill C-96 capping growth of Established Programs Financing transfer payments to the provinces at a level of 5 per cent, barely inflation, and bringing this into effect for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, not only broke the election promises made by Conservative Members to maintain the funding formula but broke the existing pending federal-provincial agreement before the funding formula expired. It was not only a breach of promise, it was even a breach of contract.

The planning of post-secondary education must, by nature, be long term, and anyone who is familiar with the administration of a university or a college knows that long-term planning must be used. The embarrassments caused by such a breach of promise both to the provinces and to the educational institutions are understandably acute. The assault on Canadian post-secondary education was further exacerbated by federal decisions in other vital areas.

Spokesmen on behalf of the Canadian Association of University Teachers, such as Dr. Arnold Naimark, have pointed out that the latest financing decisions made by the present Government condemn research granting councils to ending up with less money in real terms in the future than at the present. Planning ahead will be less predictable as uncertainty is introduced by matching grant formulae. Instead of the percentage of the GNP for research growing to 2.5 per cent, all evidence points to a freeze at 1.3 per cent. Again, those are more broken promises.

Other reinforcing evidence proving that this constitutes the real policy of the Government is seen in its decisions to freeze the level of the student loans, to cut back on training seats in community colleges by 40 per cent, to close many campus employment offices and to cut the budget of the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) to purely ceremonial levels. It is small wonder that this has caused a cry of alarm.

[Translation]

The Government doesn't know where it's going with its policies. It is not as though the recession were a perfect mystery. Alarm bells were sounded in report after report. The Johnson Report, the Macdonald Commission and reports from many of the provinces confirmed the seriousness of the problem.

• (1740)

[English]

Attention has been called to the diminishing level of funds spent per student, the deterioration of physical plants to serve them, the retardation of research, and the declining morale of faculty, administrators, and students alike. Representatives of all these groups have repeatedly witnessed these facts in speeches, in articles, and in testimony before committees of the House and of the Senate. The Canadian Association of University Teachers has been at the forefront of such representations.

One of the most dramatic efforts to arouse public concern was courageously voiced by the Chief Justice of Canada, the Right Hon. Brian Dickson, on May 30, 1986. Quotations from his speech are a succinct summary and eloquently articulate the matter. The Chief Justice quoted remarks made by Dr. Andrew MacKay, President of Dalhousie University, someone who we would all concede has some knowledge of the problems facing universities in the land. I should like to quote from Dr. MacKay who in turn was quoted by the Chief Justice:

> Fiscal restraints have brought student-faculty ratios perilously high at many of our institutions. They have made it nearly impossible for us to bring in bright new minds to teach our students and undertake research. Our libraries are suffering for want of appropriate acquisitions. Most of our scientific, technical and computing equipment for teaching is obsolete.
>
> Our physical plant is generally in desperate need of repair. And many of us have found it necessary to turn away students we would previously have admitted to our core programs in the arts and sciences because we can no longer do work of satisfactory quality except by limiting numbers.

Then, expressing his own views, Chief Justice Brian Dickson continued:

> Let me speak first to governments, provincial and federal. Please do not choke off the funding of universities. Canada must have good universities with outstanding teachers and world-class research facilities. Second-class funding of universities will inevitably lead to second-class teachers, second-class students and, ultimately, a second-class nation.
>
> It has been said by many people that education is too important to be left to educators. That may be true. But it is also true that education is too important to be left to Ministers of Finance. Universities desperately require funds to perform their great mission in democratic societies. Governments spend billions of dollars every year on all manner of projects, many worth while, others not so worth while. In my opinion, money spent on minds will never be money misspent.

As the Liberal critic of the Secretary of State, I have repeatedly brought such representations to the floor of the House of Commons during Question Period. I have also spoken on them at length in speeches I made on May 5, May 6, May 8, June 10, and June 16. My colleagues have also spoken vigorously, so there cannot be doubt in anyone's mind about the Government's awareness of the problems associated with Bill C-96. However, the Conservative administration was determined to pass the Bill without modification. We see that by its repeated use of closure; that demonstrates it only too clearly.

[Translation]

The Government has only two arguments to explain why it failed to fulfil its promises and to justify its criminal negligence vis-à-vis the future of education in Canada. It can recall the need for bringing down the deficit, and it can also maintain that in any case, funds transferred to the provinces never reach the rightful recipient—in this case, educational institutions.

[English]

In the case of the former argument, the Conservatives cannot claim that when they made their promises and commitments to the electorate they did not know about the annual national deficit and the national debt. In the course of the election campaign they repeatedly cited these statistics to condemn what they called Liberal mismanagement of national spending. At the same time they promised better things for both educational EPF transfers and research. Furthermore, the issue is surely one of priorities.

Through their spokesmen the provinces have expressed dismay. Many feel that the unilateral federal action taken in Bill C-96 transfers the deficit from the federal Government to the provinces and, in the case of poorer provinces, to the poor who will inevitably suffer. It also reinforces the thesis that the Government places a low priority on post-secondary education and research. However, if the future of Canada's economy and culture is linked to education and research, infrastructure, and standards which are now deteriorating—and I believe it is and every thinking person knows it is—then federal government policy in this area is surely subject to question if not downright condemnation.

The second excuse, which the Government could put forward for its low priority on education and research, but is afraid to mention except in whispers, is that federal funds do not always reach their intended destinations, namely, education, because the provinces do not always pass them on. That argument, however, would only affect federal government policy on EPF transfers and does not explain the Government's failure to provide moneys for research, student loans, et cetera. Morever, in the case of EPF tranfers, the Conservative Government has simply abdicated any kind of creative approach to dealing with the question. It has walked away from suggestions from the royal commission, from the proposals of the Johnson report, and from those submitted earlier by CAUT. It has done nothing to deal with what is clearly a growing national crisis that threatens not only the future of countless individuals but our potential and capacity to survive as a viable nation.

[Translation]

Criticism comes easily, but action is what really counts. This is why the Leader of the Opposition has set up a national task force on post-secondary education, of which I am chairman. The task force has begun its work and will report its findings to the Leader of the Opposition, to the caucus, and to the Party before the Liberal Party national convention scheduled for late November this year. On the basis of briefs submitted from every region of the country I will be in a position to recommend options taking into consideration the crisis to be resolved, and other options which will make it possible for Canada to begin the 21st century with all the necessary assets to survive.

[English]

Condemnation is not enough. Leadership is required. For this reason the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has initiated a national task force on post-secondary education. We must not lose sight of the fact that students represent the ultimate reason for which education exists. That is why I say a laissez-faire approach will not protect the disadvantaged.

• (1750)

I would like to close my remarks with words spoken by the Leader of the Opposition at the Atlantic Policy Conference in June, 1986:

> I am going to initiate a review of post-secondary education funding to improve standards once again in co-operation and in negotiation with the provinces to ensure that we have minimum standards right across the country in terms of mobility, accessibility, research and student aid. These are going to have to happen. It is a national problem and it needs a solution with a national perspective.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, we have just had a wonderful example of what happens to members of a political Party when they move from the government side to the Opposition side of this Chamber. Every year for years when the Liberals were the Government representations were made to the Government by the Association of Canadian Universities, by the Canadian Association of University Teachers, and by the provincial Governments, pointing out that when it came to one of the subjects on which the Hon. Member spent some time, scientific research and development, that if you took all the countries belonging to the OECD, and Japan, only Italy spent a smaller percentage of its gross national product on scientific research and development. Every year Members of the Opposition, both Conservative and New Democrat, joined in that criticism and appealed to the Liberal Government to do better. Nothing happened, and Canada still remains at the bottom of the totem pole.

The Member talked about support for post-secondary education. I remind the Member that it was the Liberal Government that ended the fifty-fifty cost-sharing of post-secondary education with the six and five program. It put a cap on what the federal Government would contribute. It was the federal Government which ended the fifty-fifty cost-sharing, fifty-fifty for the have provinces and substantially more than fifty-fifty for the have-not provinces, which brought in the Established Programs Financing Act. Members of my Party, myself included, warned the Liberal Government that, not only would this cut-back on the federal Government's contribution in theory but in fact, the provinces would no longer be required to use that money, which came in a lump sum for post-secondary education and health programs on that, but could use it to build roads if that was politically advantageous to them, and is exactly what some of the provinces did.

All these complaints and appeals were ignored by the Liberal Government. Now the Liberal Party is in opposition. Now we hear all the speeches. Now we get the quotations from the briefs presented by the scientific organizations and by the university organizations. What assurances do we, the people of Canada have—I hope it never happens if we have another Liberal Government—that it will live up to the kinds of speeches and promises which the Hon. Member has made tonight when the Liberals did not do it in all the years they were in power before?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, it does get a little tiring sometimes to hear the constant litany of NDP whining and complaining.

An Hon. Member: Look at the record.

Mr. de Corneille: It really does seem difficult to have to listen to it constantly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Corneille: Take for example a number of points which the Hon. Member brought up, all of which are important.

An Hon. Member: All are true.

Mr. de Corneille: First, let us take the changeover from the system of payments which was 50 per cent from the federal Government for post-secondary education matched by 50 per cent from the provinces. If he were to tell the whole story and try to understand what the federal Government was doing at that time, it was trying to respond to the province's complaints that post-secondary education was a matter, under the Constitution, within the sole jurisdiction of the provinces to administer. Second, the Government was trying to argue that by putting it on a fifty-fifty basis, the rich provinces could put up 50 cents for every 50 cents the federal Government put up. But when you have a situation where a poor province is involved, a poor province cannot put up that 50 cents per dollar. If you have a province that has a smaller budget and less industry, such as some of our provinces and I will not name specific ones, it is unable to put up much money at all for post-secondary education. Sure the federal Government could match it, but it would be a small amount. Whereas, if you have a province that is well off, like Quebec or Ontario, it would be able to put up large amounts of money which the federal Government would then match. That was what was wrong with the matching system. It was not fair to the poor provinces. It was not fair to the young people in the poor provinces. That was the reason arguments were made for changing from a system which was a 50 cent match, fifty-fifty, to a system with a formula that was supposed to help us bring, through block payments and through transfer payments, a much fairer presentation sharing of funds to the various provinces and, therefore, to the poor people in the poor provinces. That was the nefarious reason for trying to bring about that change.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I would like to allow a second question.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, when I listen to the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) who claims to be the education expert of the Liberal Government, of the Liberal Party, I am inclined to say—

An Hon. Member: Of the future Government!

Mr. Fontaine: —of yesterday's Government, of the Government which saddled the country with a $240-billion debt, I am inclined to say that this expert should consider the matter of education from a constitutional angle, if only because it falls within provincial jurisdiction.

I am quite aware that the Constitution is not the rallying point of his Party, that it is hopelessly divided, that his Party is on the verge of breaking up because of the constitutional issue.

The spokesman for that Party should acknowledge the fact that education comes under provincial jurisdiction.

The Hon. Member also says that we must contribute to the education program in certain provinces, but for our part, we would rather not burden our students with a debt which will haunt them and their descendants all their lives.

This is what the previous Government never understood, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since we have one minute left I feel that the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) should have the last word.

[Translation]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to continue because I did not understand his question. He has not asked a question yet.

An Hon. Member: There is nothing new in that. He had nothing to say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) for a very brief question to which there can be a very brief reply.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) if he really understands the Constitution and the essence of Canada. If so, he will stop talking about education as he has just done. First, we have to understand the legal and official framework in which we operate. Then, when you speak of something, you will refer to a comprehensive agreement. You should first put some order in your own Party and understand the essence of the Canadian Constitution.

Speak about it to your few Members, and it will help you at your next convention.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) care to conclude?

[Translation]

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not aware of the history of education in Canada because there have often been transfer payments and funds allocated to education, during and after the war for veterans, and always since then. I believe that post-secondary education is a matter that must be of concern to the Federal Government.

• (1800)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES—PRIME MINISTER'S TRAVEL ENTOURAGE. (B) BUTLER'S DUTIES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, twice this week we have had a most serious controversy raised in the House. The issues involve the butler and maid of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). However, the Prime Minister chooses not to call these people a butler and a maid. They are nobodies as far as he is concerned. As a matter of fact, he gave an interview in which Canadian Press quotes him as saying: "I didn't take a butler, I didn't take anybody." If I was the Prime Minister's butler I would be insulted because, like at Speedy Muffler, the gentleman is a somebody, in my view. However, that is not really the point.

The point is, of course, that the Prime Minister needs the utmost in security around him. He needs people who are really qualified to make sure that the place is top-notch, security wise. So we have this James Bond butler working for the Prime Minister. He is not really a butler but a butler in disguise. We are told that he is in fact a combination stunt man, James Bond and butler all rolled into one. He should have that, because our Prime Minister deserves the best. If you do not believe me, just have a look and see what he has. Surely you will believe it then.

The Prime Minister used an L-1011 to go to Asia when a previous Prime Minister made do with a plane half that size. The Prime Minister travels on Parliament Hill with five cars. Not one car like you or I, not driving a Chevette like I do, but five cars, one of them a Cadillac. The front of the Parliament Buildings looks like a used car lot because of the attitude of the Prime Minister. Perhaps Gary Lautens said it best:

> It is a well known fact, if you watch James Bond movies, that foreign agents will resort to anything to hit their target. One of their favourite weapons is Exploding Underwear.
>
> The way it works is simple. A head of state gets up in the morning and, if he has no valet to check his personal clothing, slips right into a of pair exploding underpants without a second thought.
>
> Pow! There go the Jockeys, et cetera, up in a puff of smoke. Especially the et ceteras.

We would not want that to happen to our Prime Minister. That is why we have such qualified people to work for him as butlers. Remember, the Prime Minister said he was not a butler, he was a nobody.

We have qualified butlers to assist the Prime Minister in his task of leading the world. Yes indeed, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) told the House of Commons that during the trip in question an agreement was reached to have Canada become part of the G-7, which had never been done before. Would you believe it? This was achieved because of the butler. Perhaps because of the maid as well, I do not want to be partisan. Far be it from me to be partisan on such an issue. The Prime Minister deserves the best and he has the best, courtesy of the Canadian people.

The issue facing the Prime Minister today is not whether or not he took a butler with him on a trip. I think it is extravagant but if he thinks it is all right, let him do it and he can justify it to the Canadian people later. What I do object to is the fact that we cannot get consistent answers out of the Government.

Mr. Marchi: You mean the truth?

Mr. Boudria: I do not know, perhaps. We hear a statement from the Prime Minister which is contradicted by his Chief of Staff, who is contradicted by the Department of External Affairs, who is further contradicted by two cabinet Ministers on the floor of this House. Contradictory statements made simultaneously about an issue can only mean one thing, that at least some of them are, shall we say, inaccurate. Perhaps Professor Jean-Luc Pépin at the University of Ottawa said it best when he said that the Prime Minister had an acute need to embellish the truth.

• (1805)

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in answering the Hon. Member, I hope that my calibre of response will be better than his calibre of questioning. I wish to impress upon him that security protection is granted by the Canadian Government to specific categories of individuals. The RCMP has the lead role in co-ordinating this protection. Approximately 250 person years are dedicated to VIP security duty with additional members detailed as required.

The RCMP has advised successive Prime Ministers that security must extend beyond the physical security of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his family to also include security of information and sensitive conversations, whether with close personal staff or with other officials, be they domestic or foreign. These security considerations become even more important when the Prime Minister travels abroad representing Canada.

The RCMP security office works hand-in-hand with foreign and domestic security officials as well as personnel in the Prime Minister's office to ensure that transportation, accommodation, meeting sites, documents and communications are secured. The RCMP also stresses the importance of having close personal and domestic staff with appropriate security clearances to ensure that all of the other security measures put in place by the RCMP are not compromised. The RCMP can ensure security of personnel and information only if all persons are properly security cleared. When the Prime Minister is discussing matters of sensitivity, we do not want hotel personnel wandering in and out serving tea and cookies.

As the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) stated in the House on October 6:

—what the Government does on Prime Ministerial travel is dictated in large measure by security requirements for our Prime Minister and his aides and for the people who meet with him. This is a fundamental requirement."

No reasonable person today should deny the need to provide security for heads of state and heads of government. We are constantly reminded by the RCMP, and rightly so, of the need to provide a high level of security at all times while the Prime Minister is on extended travel. This includes having trained and secure support staff who form an integral part of the overall security arrangements.

What would Members opposite say, what would Canadians think, if sensitive information concerning Canada's economic interest or national security, to give two examples, became common knowledge because we did not take the precautions advised by the RCMP protective security experts? We should all know the answer to that, Mr. Speaker. It is clear that in making arrangements for travel abroad for the Prime Minister, the Government has taken the best advice of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and acted accordingly.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—FUNDING OF PROGRAMS. (B) BAND FUNDING INQUIRY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to express my dissatisfaction with the answer given to me by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) yesterday in the House. Before doing so, I would like to offer my apologies to the Minister. I did say that I would get some documents to him, but I did not get them to him in adequate time for him to fully absorb the contents and import of them. I hope that over the next few days he will allow himself the time to study those documents because I am sure his eyes will be opened by them.

In his answer yesterday the Minister stated that there had not been cut-backs to funding in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He also stated that to his knowledge no signed agreement or contract had been broken. I believe that the documents which I have delivered to the Minister will convince him that the contrary is so. These documents show that contribution agreements signed on behalf of the Government of Canada were indeed broken, specifically in the instance of bands in the Manitoba region which received less than the funds to which they were entitled under the contribution agreement.

• (1810)

These funds were not delivered. They were not undelivered by a matter of inadvertence, they remained undelivered by a deliberate decision of officials of his Ministry. Any agreement, be it between individuals, or between Governments, or between different levels of Governments, contains clauses which allow for its revision and review. I believe that the opportunty has always existed under contribution arrangements for representatives of the Department to go back to bands and state the difficulties they are in and state the reasons why they would like to see funding not delivered or delivered in another fiscal year.

Almost as offensive as the breaking of agreements in this instance is the way in which those agreements were breached. It appears from my discussions with chiefs of Manitoba bands, and a former official of the Department in Manitoba, that there was not only no consultation with the bands which were affected and whose treasuries were substantially impaired by these withholding of funds, they were not even informed of the fact that the funds had been retained from them.

The impact of these actions holds the most serious consequences for the relationship of the Government, and the Minister, now that he is in that position, with the bands of this country. The whole basis of the relationship of Government with the indigenous people of this country is one of trust. It is even enshrined in the law of the land, that there is a trust toward the indigenous people of Canada from the Government and through the Ministry of Indian Affairs.

The result of these actions was that the trust has been very substantially eroded, perhaps beyond the point where the Government can re-establish it. The results at the band level were serious. A million dollars was clawed back in the last fiscal year from the operation and maintenance budget of the Education Department in Manitoba. A million dollars was: "Frozen to your mandatory deficit". The ultimate fate of that million dollars was to be returned to headquarters.

Even worse, there was a $4 million shortfall of which only 18 per cent has been funded in the Budget for education, operation and maintenance. Of course, that is mostly for the maintenance and repair of schools. That shortfall was because of the headquarter's doubts about the validity of the Capital Asset Inventory System valuation of the assets of the schools that were being maintained. Those doubts were subsequently resolved, but only 18 per cent of the shortfall has been granted to the region.

The Ward Mallette Report documented a misuse of the Payable at Year End procedure, which records obligations owing by the Department at the end of the fiscal year. I regret to inform the Minister that that malpractice is continuing on a scale that can only be described as high, wide and handsome.

The documents that I have submitted to the Minister show the shocking distortions of fiscal responsibility which occur when these actions are taken. They talk in such terms as early recapitalization of assets, which frankly means if you do not maintain something it will have to be replaced much sooner.

Finally, the Minister made a spurious comparison in the House yesterday—I am sure unknowingly—when he compared the budget of 1975-1976 to the budget of 1985-1986. It was an apples and oranges comparison because there were services in 1975-1976 that were being delivered direct from headquarters, such as education, joint schools capital and child welfare which, now in 1985-1986, are delivered through the region.

I return to the point that the basis of this whole question is trust. The Minister must advise the House and the country what can now be done to re-establish trust in his Department.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, let me say to my colleague that I appreciate receiving the documents that were delivered by his assistant, although the time was brief for me to look at them. I can tell my colleague that I will be replying to him either in a written form or verbally, after I have had an opportunity to look at those documents. I would say to anyone who has further documentation that I hope they put it forward. I hope it is put into the public realm, either to the Hon. Member or to myself so it can be reviewed.

• (1815)

In the brief time I have, I want to assure the Hon. Member. He has a knowledge of the way our Department works and the way it is funded through 11 different categories of funding. The way that funding has to be handled, we have the ability to adjust within those funding areas, but sometimes there is no ability to adjust.

As the Hon. Member knows, in the Province of Manitoba last year some $2.5 million was returned to Treasury. At the same time there were Supplementary Estimates which went forward for $23.7 million. That is a ratio of $1 to $8. Every dollar which was returned to the Treasury of Canada was replaced with $8. That is the part of the Supplementary Estimates which goes forward across Canada. In Canada a total of some $50 million was returned to the Treasury of Canada. However, at the same time Supplementary Estimates went forward for $140 million plus. In reality, therefore, there was a net gain of some $92 million for Indian programs, for Indian people.

One concern expressed by the Hon. Member in the letter I received today regarded the child welfare agreement and the extension of that existing agreement in the Province of Manitoba. I can assure him that the commitment made by my predecessor that the extension will be funded will be kept. The Hon. Member is accurate. The funds have not been allocated by Cabinet, but I can assure the Hon. Member that the commitment made by my predecessor for the extension of the child welfare agreement in Manitoba will be kept.

I would like to relate to the Hon. Member, to the House and to those in the gallery that the difficulty of allocating funds is apparent from a conversation I had this morning with the chief of a southern tribal council and some of his advisers who asked if it was possible to move money from welfare to economic development. I said I did not know whether it was possible within my authority. However, the argument made sense. It is much better to use those welfare dollars to provide economic development if the same beneficiaries are going to be working rather than receiving welfare. So while there is criticism and concern about allocation within the Department of Indian Affairs, there is an ongoing pressure from Indian people and Indian governments to make that allocation where it will be effective.

I hope the Hon. Member can wait for my reply to the documents which he provided to me. I can assure him it will be forthcoming in very little time.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—MAINTENANCE CONTRACT FOR F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT. (B) REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RECEIVED FROM PREMIER OF NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise with regard to a question I posed to the Minister of Supply and Services on October 7, 1986. It concerned the awarding of a maintenance contract for the CF-18 fighter aircraft. The substance of my remarks has to do with the principles of fairness and equity for the poorer regions of the country.

I have to say with great sincerity that I was somewhat surprised, if not taken back, by the lack of response given to me at that time by the Minister responsible for Supply and Services. I would have thought that because of the importance of this particular contract, and the potential economic benefits which it could bestow upon a region and upon a people, she would have known of all the considerations being evaluated by her, her Department, and indeed, the entire Cabinet.

• (1820)

There are a number of companies which are bidding for this particular contract. They are western, Quebec and Atlantic consortiums. I thought that the Minister for a very important department, that is, the Department of Supply and Services, would have stood in her place and spelled out the criteria which would be used by the Government of Canada.

We have to put things in perspective when we look at the wording of the contract, since there is much confusion. There is a perception in the country that the Government has already decided, not on the basis of price and the potential of capacity for technical competence, but based on a political promise to a particular Premier of the country.

Let us now consider the contract which Bombardier of Montreal entered into when it purchased the Crown-owned Canadair. Included in that contract to purchase is a clause referring to a royalty payment to the Government of Canada upon the awarding of the CF-18 contract to Canadair. The royalty represents approximately 1 per cent of the total contract price. The federal Government agreed to this clause even though potential buyers were advised that the award was not to be considered a component of the Canadair sale. Upon signing, the Government committed itself to this agreement. This is inconsistent with the procedure of the Department of Supply and Services and can be viewed by some as an inducement.

Then there is talk about the bid being submitted from Atlantic Canada. The Minister, but more particularly her colleagues from Nova Scotia, have been extremely silent with respect to the inducements and previous decisions they had taken in the months prior.

Atlantic Canada was set adrift in November of 1984 as a result of the financial statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Because of the outcry from Atlantic Canadians, First Ministers, members of the Opposition, as well as members of the Tory caucus, a decision was reached by the Government, as announced by the Minister's predecessor in February of 1986, which talked about the procurement of goods and services by the Government of Canada. Is this to be considered in the awarding of this contract?

The Government then said that it wanted to increase significantly—to the tune of $600 million over five years—the goods and services going into Atlantic Canada in order to enable businesses in that region of the country to gain some advantage. This is a clear and unequivocal opportunity to live up to the commitment of some months ago. However, all of a sudden the Government is very silent. It does not want to say anything. Ministers from Halifax and Central Nova have become sick. They cannot speak any longer about a program which they introduced with great fanfare. Nor does the Minister make reference to it in response to the question I asked. Perhaps today we will receive a different answer.

The Premier of Nova Scotia who extolled the virtues of this new-found policy of procurement has been silent. It is not something which has been legislated like it ought to have been. When I asked the Minister in a spirit of openness with respect to what those representations were and whether or not she would table them, I again received silence.

A reasonable person such as you, Mr. Speaker, would conclude that someone is hiding something here. One is left to conclude that there is something under the table when no reference is made to previous policies which have been announced, when Ministers who would normally speak up for their regions are extremely silent and when a provincial Premier is as silent as a mouse. I find the whole bidding procedure with regard to this particular contract to be very questionable.

• (1825)

I hope the Minister will avail herself of the opportunity to address this situation and to give an undertaking that all regions of the country, including Atlantic Canada, will have an equal and fair opportunity to bid for government contracts. We will not suffer prejudice because we come from a slow-growth area. I hope the Minister can provide that undertaking not only to me as an Atlantic Member of Parliament but to Canadians who live in that part of Canada and who subscribe to a Canadian Constitution that speaks directly about equality of opportunity.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—Richmond East (Mr. Dingwall) for giving me an opportunity to raise this important question once again, an issue on which, as I said recently, emotions have been running high.

Mr. Speaker, exactly what is covered by this contract? It means that the technical and engineering maintenance of CF-18 fighters used by our armed forces can now be done in this country. Until now, this service was provided by the MacDonnell-Douglas Corporation of St. Louis, in the United States. From the outset, it was intended that this maintenance service would eventually be done in Canada.

At the request of the Department of National Defence, my Department started the process of repatriating this service. The first step was to inform 16 Canadian companies in the aerospace industry of what we intended to do. As always in this kind of situation, a number of groups or consortiums were formed. These groups, which are known to the public, are the consortia formed around IMP of Halifax, Bristol of Winnipeg and Canadair of Montreal.

The groups prepared and presented proposals which were then subject to careful scrutiny. However, I hardly think the Hon. Member expects me to reveal the results of this assessment this evening.

According to our regulations, it was then up to the Minister of Supply and Services to transmit the results of the assessment and his conclusions to Treasury Board. And that is what I have done, Mr. Speaker. And, as was mentioned several times, the entire matter is now being examined by Treasury Board, in preparation for a meeting of Treasury Board Ministers who will have to make a decision.

Recently, the Hon. Member asked me what the criteria would be for their decision.

Mr. Speaker, a great many factors are involved. There is the technical assessment, price, offsets in terms of jobs, technology transfers and, finally, economic impact.

Mr. Speaker, the decision is a very difficult one. As Ministers, it is our responsibility to analyse all relevant factors to the best of our ability and to make a decision in terms of what we consider to be Canada's national interest. That is what we will do.

Mr. Speaker, I have one last comment to make. As you know, and as this House and all Canadian men and women know, the issue of which consortium will get the contract has become a very emotional one, and I deplore that. Neither emotions nor partisan considerations will determine who will get the contract. What will determine the outcome will be a rational assessment by Ministers representing all Canadian regions. Unlike our predecessors, we belong to a truly national, not a regional party.

Mr. Speaker, the balances existing within our Government strengthen my conviction that our decision, whatever it may be, will be in the best interests of this country.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted.

[Translation]

Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 10, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CURTAILMENT OF COMPUTER PROJECT TO AID THE DISABLED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Government was anxious to cast its recent Throne Speech in phrases of compassion. It tried to present a more caring image to the Canadian people and wanted to do with words what it has so far failed to do with action.

I point specifically to the Government's decision to curtail dramatically funding to the Neil Squire Foundation in Vancouver, under the National Research Council's Industrial Research Assistance Program.

This organization is dedicated to the research and development of technical equipment for severely physically disabled people. One of its projects, called Computer Comfort, is the only program of its kind in British Columbia that addresses the isolation of seriously disabled adults. With only minor modifications to home computers, the disabled can perform tasks and engage in activities that would otherwise be impossible for them.

Indeed, the program has been praised by patients, hospitals, and therapists alike. I call upon the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) to reconsider this unhappy decision and recognize the vast potential of our physically challenged Canadians.

* * *

FORESTRY

INVITATION TO VISIT CHILLIWACK RIVER FORESTS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, permit me to invite all Canadians to a self-guided tour of the forests along the Chilliwack River in my riding of Fraser Valley East. On the 14-stop route, one can experience the methods that man has been using to help Mother Nature perpetuate one of our most valuable renewable resources, our forests, and to increase its commercial production.

• (1105)

Beginning at the Elk-Thurston Trail, travelling through unmanaged forests, pausing at stations that show why we must manage our forests and harvest them properly, we have the opportunity to see our forests in action. Also included in this delightful tour is a fish hatchery and a tree nursery. There really is more to our forests than trees! This is a good example of how co-operation between the Chilliwack Chamber of Commerce and the B.C. Forest Service can give us a new perspective on the value to be found in silviculture. Come on out to Chilliwack and see for yourself.

* * *

TRADE

CANADA—UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the United States International Trade Commission comes down in six days with a countervail duty against Canadian softwood. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) made a once only offer to raise stumpage rates to the Americans. They said it was insulting and turned it down flat. Within hours the "once only" offer was undone by the Minister of Forests for British Columbia, Mr. Kempf, who said it was just an opening offer.

The Americans then revealed that the negotiations have been continuing. The Minister for International Trade denies that. The Department of Finance right here in Ottawa has drafted an export tax on softwood lumber destined for the United States. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) denies that.

The position of the Canadian Government and the forest industry until recently has been that we are innocent now, just as we were in 1983 when the ITC found us innocent. The problem is that these eleventh hour pleadings have played Canada's largest industry into the hands of U.S. protectionists. There will be a countervail, likely large, thanks to the confusion created by Mr. Vander Zalm, his Minister of Forests, and the Minister for International Trade.

S.O. 21

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

EFFECT OF DECISION ON ONTARIO FRUITLAND

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I refer to an application by CFGM Radio to the CRTC approved October 2. Only after the public announcement was made did the town of Lincoln discover the fact that 80 acres of good fruitland are to be taken out of production and that eight radio antennas are to intrude on its quality of life.

The CRTC has advised me that public notices are not required in the area of installation but only in the area of service, in this case over 40 miles across Lake Ontario. Local municipalities have no jurisdiction over this policy which was established by the previous Government. It is a policy which is heavy handed and appears to ignore the concerns of local citizens.

I have asked the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) to review this policy and specifically this application, and allow those citizens most affected by the ruling to have a rightful and proper hearing.

* * *

NUCLEAR ENERGY

ELDORADO NUCLEAR—LOCATION OF WASTE DISPOSAL SITE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): In August, 1984, the then Leader of the Opposition, now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), promised the residents of Hope Township, Ontario, that a Tory Government: "will work most actively toward the safe, acceptable and permanent storage arrangement" for low-level nuclear wastes produced by Eldorado Resources. He also said: "All such waste should be removed from major population areas and kept well away from any major water resource such as Lake Ontario".

On June 23, 1986, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) appointed a special panel to review publicly Eldorado Resource's disposal plans. But the Government did not honour the commitment of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) because it is considering two sites very close to Lake Ontario despite the opposition of the people he reassured in 1984.

Residents of Hope Township want the Prime Minister to instruct the special panel and Eldorado Resources to find the best possible site for the disposal of nuclear wastes away from populated areas and major water resources as he promised in 1984—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FINDINGS OF NEWFOUNDLAND ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the recent findings of the Newfoundland Royal Commission on Unemployment that: "unemployment insurance has crippled the work ethic", and "encourages people to cheat the system", were not unanticipated and are largely self-evident. It used to be that Canadians from outside the Atlantic Provinces viewed with amusement and condescension the games being played in the East, but now the malaise is spreading nation-wide. "Pogey" is becoming a way of life for Canadians.

Hopefully the delayed report of the Forget Commission will recommend a return to insurance rather than welfare principles, an end to abuse and disincentives to work, and the restoration of sound financing for the system.

* * *

• (1110)

FINANCE

NONPAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY CAMPEAU CORPORATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, concerning the need for a fair, equitable and just tax system, I wish to announce today our first presentation of the Great Untaxed Corporation Award. Today's super corporate achiever is Campeau Corporation which has been granted, by successive Liberal and Conservative Governments, the right to pay no corporate income tax since 1978 on profits totalling $126 million.

Had the tax system been fair and equitable, and had Campeau Corporation been required to pay even a 25 per cent tax rate on its profits, average Canadian taxpayers would have paid $31 million less in tax because of this one company alone. On behalf of all Canadian taxpayers, New Democratic Members of Parliament will continue to present this Great Untaxed Corporation Award on a regular basis as a means of highlighting the Government's need for immediate and serious comprehensive tax reform.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES DAIRY CATTLE—BRUCELLOSIS HAZARD

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, because of government subsidies in the United States, American dairy farmers are being encouraged to slaughter or export cattle. The natural destination for export is Canada.

Canada is a brucellosis-free zone. If farmers in Ontario or Quebec export cattle to the United States, they are not given credit for such freedom. Americans demand we export cows only after herds have had negative test results and individual cows have been tested.

However, the U.S.A. is not free of brucellosis. We are allowing cattle to enter Canada with only one test. From my knowledge of veterinary medicine I consider this a distinct threat to the brucellosis-free zone in Canada. I call upon the Government to amend our approach with regard to the importation of American dairy cattle.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEED FOR INCREASED FULL-TIME EMPLOYMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, quick-fix measures will not help unemployed Canadians. Statistics today do not tell the whole story. Increases in employment were concentrated solely among part-time workers. Figures for part-time workers jumped by 57,000 while full-time employment in Canada decreased by 17,000. As well, employment among young people fell by 23,000. Employment of women also fell by a very large number.

A study by Statistics Canada in 1985 showed that 30 per cent of those people who were working part-time wanted full-time work. What we see from the Government with respect to unemployment is part-time solutions to a full-time problem. Regional disparities still exist. Gender disparities exist. Disparities among young and old-age workers who cannot find jobs still exist.

Unemployment is still a very serious problem and the Government should not hide behind today's statistical picture.

* * *

TERRORISM

ICAO RESOLUTION DECLARING AIRPORT TERRORISM AN INTERNATIONAL CRIME

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday the International Civil Aviation Organization unanimously passed a Canadian resolution labelling terrorist attacks on airports an international crime. This resolution requires countries to arrest and prosecute terrorists suspected of attacking airports anywhere in the world, regardless of where they are arrested. Suspected terrorists would be sent to other signatory countries, even if no extradition treaty exists.

Once law these measures will ensure that terrorists are brought to justice for their hideous crimes. This is another positive step forward in the fight against international terrorism. Earlier this year our Government took effective action to upgrade our counter-terrorism program by creating a permanent special emergency response team.

Wednesday's vote was a victory for civilized nations and law-abiding citizens. Canadians can take pride in the fact that we are in the forefront of the international fight against terrorism.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

SUBSIDIZATION OF FOREIGN FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the Government has decided to abandon the growing of grain in Canada. For one year the Government has known about the collapse of world grain prices and the effects of the U.S. Farm Bill and the BICEP program.

Last Christmas U.S. farmers were given protection against that reduction in price. European farmers are given a continued price which they know they will receive even before they seed. Just last summer Australian farmers were given protection which will give them secure prices. Banks were given a security within two days.

Only last week, for reasons that are somewhat suspect, the Government started calling panic meetings to establish some type of assistance for farmers. In the process—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION—THRONE SPEECH ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Government continues to place a high priority on environmental issues, the most recent evidence of which was our commitment to the environment in the Speech from the Throne. The Government recognizes the relation between a healthy environment and the quality of Canadian life.

• (1115)

The agreement with the provinces on acid rain is the first major breakthrough in that area since Confederation. However, toxic pollutants in the Niagara River continue to be one of the most serious problems that we face. Therefore, the proposed environmental protection Act focusing on the problem of toxic chemicals will be welcomed by my constituents in Niagara Falls, and indeed by all Canadians.

Let us work together to clean up Canada and to convince our neighbours to the south that more must be done to protect our ecological system. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) recognizes this and I congratulate him for it. All of us who care about the quality of life must make environmental issues a priority. I am pleased that this has been recognized in the Speech from the Throne.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

PENITENTIARIES

INQUIRY WHETHER CONSTRUCTION OF DRUMMONDVILLE II WILL BE STOPPED

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

We now know, on the basis of some confidential documents from the Solicitor General's office, that the Prime Minister was directly and personally responsible for the decision to move the Drummond II prison to Port-Cartier, in his riding.

Now the Prime Minister knows that everyone is opposed to this plan, and now that he realizes it makes no sense at all, I want to ask him—and I know he is trying to pass the buck to the Solicitor General—whether he is going to let reason prevail and put an immediate stop to all work on this project, which in the final instance would never work, since none of the requirements from the correctional point of view have been met.

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that, since he was kind enough to give me a copy of the notes in his possession, I find them to be nothing more than copies of briefing notes, and every Minister receives copious copies of briefing notes before Question Period. This is a normal thing.

The one thing I would like to say quite emphatically is that when this matter arose I checked very thoroughly with the officials in my Ministry and I was advised by them that there is no record in my Ministry of any interference or pressure by the Prime Minister or any member of his staff in this matter.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF CHOICE OF LOCATION FOR PRISON

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Solicitor General would read through his notes again and recall certain events and then tell me there was no outside intervention when his officials were given a choice between three locations, namely, Sept-Îles, Port-Cartier or Baie-Comeau.

Would the Solicitor General go so far as to say his own officials suggested these three locations for a prison that would then be miles away from nowhere?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat once again for the Hon. Member and other Members of the House what I have been saying all along. This was a government decision that was made for good and valid economic reasons to help against regional disparity in that particular area.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. For a month now the Government has been denying that the Prime Minister had any personal involvement in the decision to switch the location of the prison from Drummondville to Port-Cartier. The briefing note to the Solicitor General says under the heading "The Trust Issue": "Certainly the Prime Minister as head of this Government was involved in the decision". Does the Prime Minister still hold to his view that he had no personal involvement in the decision to move the prison?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am a Member of Parliament and I am a member of the Government. To that extent, as everyone has indicated, it was a government decision.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the documentation completely supports that answer.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE MEMBERS' COMMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Government's own Prison Advisory Committee, Sister Virginia Turner—no relation—of the Sisters of Charity in Halifax said that every taxpayer should be upset by this decision, and the committee's Quebec representative said that society really has no right to act like this. Does the Prime Minister agree with these comments from his own advisory commission?

• (1120)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would agree with these comments from the Liberals of the riding of Manicouagan.

[Translation]

And I quote: "The Liberals of Manicouagan will offer the Liberal Leader, John Turner, their very qualified support, as a result of declarations made by the Leader of that Party on the subject of the Port-Cartier penitentiary."

Marc Brouillette will tell him about how disappointed the Manicouagan Liberals were after hearing their leader make statements right and left about the penitentiary for Port-Cartier, against the interests of the people of Manicouagan. I quote: "The Liberal Member, Mr. Turner, missed the boat in this affair because of poor advice." Of course he got his advice from the Hon. Member from Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

DISTANCE AND EXPENSE FACED BY FAMILIES OF INMATES VISITING PORT-CARTIER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Does the Prime Minister realize that relatives of inmates who live in Montreal will have to spend $210 and travel two days by bus to visit inmates at the new Port-Cartier penitentiary?

Doesn't the Prime Minister realize that the inmates' families are not guilty and therefore should not be penalized just so he can make some political capital?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal leader and the Liberal Party are ganging up against the people of the North Shore. The Hon. Member is raising the issue of the relatives of inmates. And that is a problem that is dealt with by the Solicitor General regularly, with compassion.

But since you raised the visiting issue, I will talk about the unemployment problem on the North Shore, where we have brave, honest people who were battered by the Liberal recession and to whom the Conservative Government is offering assistance, in an attempt to alleviate the human suffering that exists on the North Shore. Let me tell you: Don't visit the outlying regions of Quebec, unless you want to suffer the consequences of your intransigent and ruthless attitude in the House.

* * *

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—MINISTER'S BRIEFING NOTES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I have in my hands confidential briefing notes from the meeting of the Minister for International Trade with selected journalists last month, in which for the first time a clear outline is given of government objectives in the free trade talks with the United States. Why has the Prime Minister's Government practised this manipulation of the press? Why is it necessary that the Canadian people hear of these detailed objectives for the first time in this backhanded and unacceptable way?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised an issue. I have in my hand the very same briefing notes which I was going to send to him in Question Period, saying "Here are the notes prepared for my media briefing on GATT and U.S. trade if you find them useful". I am really pleased to find that he has found them a clear statement and that they are useful. I will send him this copy as soon as I can.

Mr. Langdon: As usual the Minister cannot resist playing with the truth. What she has suggested is a press release dealing with GATT, and these are briefings dealing with bilateral negotiations.

AGRICULTURAL ISSUES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Government has claimed that it will protect farming, other farm marketing boards and other restrictions, throughout these negotiations. Why is it a Canadian objective, not an American objective according to these documents, to address agricultural trade restrictions, to deal with them, to try to reduce them and thereby threaten hard pressed farmers even more—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (1125)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the Hon. Member's concern. As I say, this note says:

> "Steven. Here are the speech notes prepared for my media briefing on GATT and U.S. trade if you find them useful".

I have said in my note to him that they include the speech notes on the progress of the U.S. talks. He has them. I do not see why he is carrying this issue further.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I carry the question further because the objectives listed here totally contradict what the Government has been telling us for the past year.

An Hon. Member: What nonsense.

Mr. Langdon: It is absolutely true.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a last supplementary question. Given that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said that getting a neutral mechanism to control countervail is at the heart of these talks, why does this document talk only about better disciplines on the use of such measures? Why the back-off—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has put his question.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): I must say I am bemused at how to answer the question, Mr. Speaker. I had thought that the documents the Member has are the ones I developed for the speech notes. This makes very clear that we need a treaty to deal with contingency protection to shield us from the kind of harassment that we are facing on the softwood lumber issue. I have said that publicly. I have said that in this House, and I said it as recently as yesterday.

UNITED STATES DECISION ON SOFTWOOD LUMBER IMPORTS—EFFECT ON TRADE TALKS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister of International Trade. I will only comment that whatever briefing notes she has are probably already out of date the way this Government works.

In the comments the Minister made in the House yesterday she said that the general trade talks would be imperilled by an unfavourable decision by the United States on the lumber matter. This is a fundamental change from previous government positions which were that the lumber and general trade talks were not linked. Now they are directly linked. Is the Government considering as a result of this linkage a withdrawal from the general trade talks if the United States reports next week an unfavourable decision on the softwood lumber matter?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker.

NEW YORK TIMES REPORT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would further ask the Minister about the other exclusive interview she has now given to another American newspaper, this time The New York Times. She said the Government is not only planning retaliation but is studying ways to impose taxes that would exactly equal an American tariff. Can the Minister tell us in that interview did she indicate to that journalist the fact that the Government is studying a tax that would exactly equal the American tariff, and has the Government had any discussion whatsoever with the provinces, unions, and industry concerning such a measure?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have not got the copy of the article which the Hon. Member has. I can tell him that the only time I have spoken to a New York Times reporter was in the same general briefing of the U.S. media. At that time I said, contrary to what he has stated, that an export tax was ruled out by the Government as a means of dealing with this issue because, when we looked at all of the options, and we have looked at all of the options on how to deal with this issue, we found that there were constitutional concerns raised by the provinces and it was a very difficult procedure to undertake. I have said publicly, and I believe the Minister of Finance has said publicly, that that option has been ruled out at this time.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Yesterday we had a meeting of provincial Deputy Ministers with the Deputy Ministers and officials to discuss the federal Government's farm aid project. In order to clear up the confusion, can the Minister tell us how much money there will be for western grain farmers? Second, what form will the payment be? Will it be an acreage payment, a loan, or something based on marketing? Finally, when will the farmers be getting cash in their pockets? Will it happen before Christmas?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's improved attitude from yesterday. I have not had an opportunity to have a full update or a full briefing on the meeting of Deputy Ministers yesterday, although I indicate again that the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and I spent considerable time there. I understand the meeting went well and, as expected, a variety and a number of options were put forth on the table for serious consideration to be given by the Deputy Ministers. Naturally that is what we expected to happen.

• (1130)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, maybe the Minister should spend more than 30 or 40 minutes at a meeting.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister confirm that a federal-provincial task force chaired by Saskatchewan suggests a diversion option which is similar to Otto Lang's old operation LIFT, in other words, a scheme to pay farmers to take land out of production? Is he saying to this House that he is now giving up on prairie grain farming?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we would have liked to have spent a longer period of time meeting with the Deputy Ministers but we had to leave that meeting in order to meet with the representatives of the prairie pools.

The fact is that this is the largest aid package ever delivered by any Government in the history of the country to Canadian farmers.

Mr. Nystrom: Answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: It is our intention, and we will not be distracted from it, to work with the provinces and farm leaders to get this program right. It must be fair and equitable. If it is going to take an extra 10 days or two weeks to do it, we will take the time.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

SIZE OF BUDGET AND STAFF

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Science and Technology. Yesterday in the House the Minister stated: "There are no cuts to the National Research Council", yet this morning the President of the National Research Council stated that indeed there are cuts. Who is telling the truth? Are there cuts as the President of the NRC says, or are there no cuts as he said yesterday in this House?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, previously the Hon. Member predicted that there would be massive cuts to the IRAP. Now he is saying that there will be massive cuts to the staff of the NRC. Dr. Kerwin, the President of the NRC, says that speculation that the Council will have to lay off 10 per cent of its staff or close an entire department is alarmist. He said that he believes the lay-offs can be avoided. He says that jobs will have to be shifted but it is hoped that scientists can be reassigned. That is what Dr. Kerwin is saying.

[Translation]

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the credibility of the Minister is on the line. I urge him to answer my question. Either there are no cuts, as he claims, or there are, as the President of the National Research Council stated. Who is telling the truth?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I just quoted the President of the National Research Council who said that these jobs will be reassigned within the National Research Council. Perhaps it would be helpful if the Hon. Member would check with his source inside the National Research Council, who has perhaps not realized that Canada is under new management.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN PRODUCTION—DIVERSION OPTION INQUIRY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He did not answer the question of my colleague from Yorkton—Melville. Is the diversion option, which is similar to Otto Lang's LIFT program, being considered as one of the methods to get money to farmers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered this question yesterday. My message to the Deputy Ministers during our discussions with them was that at the present we should not rule out any option. The only talk that I have heard about a diversion program is from the Leader of the NDP in Saskatchewan.

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the task force made that LIFT program one of the possible options. Is the Government considering a loans program or cash advance programs? Are these also options which the Government is considering? Is it considering methods other than the cash-in-hand which farmers are expecting?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to watch the shifting positions of the Members opposite. Last week it had to be a deficiency payment which had to be delivered yesterday.

Mr. Hovdebo: We want to know whether you are—

Mr. Wise: If the Hon. Member had listened to the answer to his first question, he would have had the answer to his supplementary question, that is that, as far as we are concerned, at the present time no option should be ruled out.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SITUATION OF MANITOBA INDIAN BANDS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Indian chiefs of southern Manitoba have said that the RCMP investigation into his Department will do nothing to help resolve the urgent needs which exist in their communities among their bands. The chiefs claim that they have been forced into a debt situation because of maladministration in the Manitoba region of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

How does the Minister expect these bands to carry out the responsibilities for local services which have been given to them if they have been forced into a debt situation by the Minister's own officials?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member expresses concern which is shared by everyone in the management of the Department with regard to the dollars which the Department controls. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that 64 per cent of the dollars spent in the Province of Manitoba are administered and spent by Indian governments. Twenty-four per cent is spent by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and 12 per cent is spent by the province. Therefore, there is more than one manager of those dollars. I have explained that I will have my officials discuss debt retirement separately with every band in Canada. The Hon. Member also knows that not every band in Manitoba is in debt and not every band in Canada is in debt.

Oral Questions

FUNDING OF BANDS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, southern chiefs maintain that their indebtedness is due directly to the incompetence and blundering of the regional officials in Manitoba. That is the claim that they have made. The Minister has not denied it. I want to know what will be done forthwith so that the moneys to which those bands were entitled will be received by them in order that they can carry out those essential local services.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is concerned and I share that concern. However, with regard to dollars being withheld, to date no one has been able to show that dollars were withheld. Yesterday in the House a question was asked about a cut of $40,000. In fact it was not a cut of $40,000. On that specific project, which was managed by the band involved, there was an increase from $50,000 to $73,000, an increase of $23,000.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

TASK FORCE REPORT ON USE OF WESTERN COAL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The cost benefit analysis completed by the task force looking into the feasibility of using western coal in central Canada found that there was indeed a net benefit to the Canadian environment and the Canadian economy in terms of major job creation. When can we expect a comment and commitment from the Government to proceed formally with the recommendations of that task force in order to create the much needed jobs in western Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the opportunity to raise this issue in the House. I share his enthusiasm for a very worthy project. The Government is taking this under serious consideration.

TIMING OF DECISION ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Government has now had the recommendations of that very important task force for an adequate time in which to make a decision. The Minister knows how important this matter is for western Canadians and indeed for all of Canada. Can he not be a bit more precise about a specific time by which we can expect a decision and announcement by the Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the report was released in August. We have been condemned by Members across the way for acting in haste on certain initiatives. We would not want to be accused of that again. Suffice it to say there are a number of Departments involved in this initiative and I want to assure the Hon. Member that we will take this report very seriously because it is good for Ontario, good for western Canada, indeed good for all of Canada. Above all, it would stimulate the economy and generate a lot of jobs.

* * *

• (1140)

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. As stated earlier today, Canadians everywhere support the new initiative by the Government as set out in the Speech from the Throne in its fight against toxic chemicals. Given that the eight U.S. States which border on the Great Lakes signed an agreement a few months ago called the Great Lakes Toxic Substances Control Agreement, and given the support of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec for that agreement, what impact will this new initiative have on the leachate of toxic chemicals into the Niagara River?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will perhaps know, the new Environmental Protection Act, which was heralded in the Throne Speech, will consolidate environmental authority at the federal level, make it more effective, and in particular increase sanctions against polluters through fines and jail sentences. The Act does not nor can it have authority in the U.S. However, we intend to pursue very vigorously with the Americans, through the 1978 Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, our environmental objectives of a trans-boundary nature. We will be insisting in particular that, in the revision of the agreement next year, the virtual elimination of toxic chemicals into the Great Lakes be the central focus.

* * *

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO BRITISH COLUMBIA MINISTER

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Last week the British Columbia Minister of Education made the obscene statement that young people should "re-examine their priorities and consider putting off their post-secondary education if they are unable to afford it." Is the Prime Minister going to allow that advice to go unchallenged?

If not, will he now do something to help the disabled, the disadvantaged, and the poor so they can afford post-secondary education in British Columbia and other provinces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the specific statement but as set out it is one that would not find much favour on this side of the House. That is evidenced by the actions of the Government so far regarding the disabled, disadvantaged, and the underprivileged, and evidenced by the restatement of some of those fundamental principles in the Throne Speech. Investment in the youth of our country is a great obligation on any Government, on any people, and the protection of people afflicted with disabilities is no less a noble cause, and this Government is committed to that.

FUNDING OF STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that his Government has frozen the amount of money available to students through the Student Loan Program. In light of his remarks and in light of the plight of poorer people, will he restore the necessary funds to the Canada Student Loan Program and student grants so that our educational system is available to all Canadians in British Columbia, indeed in every province, so we can make sure it is not just for those who come from well-off families?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Government's intention is evidenced by the tremendous increase of some $25 billion directed to these areas over the next five years. I think that indicates the extent to which we are very much concerned and ready to invest in the future.

* * *

FAMILY VIOLENCE

PLIGHT OF BATTERED WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. He referred to the suffering of battered women in the Throne Speech. Unfortunately, we still have a nation of wife-beaters and very few resources for battered women. Will he confirm that his Government will give real leadership to provide funding for transition houses to assist and protect battered women and their children?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as we pointed out in the Throne Speech, the issue of wife-battering is a social tragedy and must be dealt with. The Government of Canada shall provide the leadership required to deal with this extremely sad and unacceptable state of affairs.

VANCOUVER TRANSITION HOUSES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear a positive response for the funding of transition houses. The situation in B.C. is particularly urgent with only 65 transition house beds for over 5,000 battered women in the Vancouver area. Will he urge his Ministers, or perhaps do it personally, to put strong pressure on the Premier of B.C. to reopen the Vancouver transition houses and fund services for battered women?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I think my hon. friend is aware of the social leadership provided by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in this and other areas. He will be holding meetings in British Columbia and elsewhere with a view to advancing this very important initiative in order to come to the aid of battered women in Canada.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN FARMERS—LIFT PROGRAM INQUIRY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Having lived through the disastrous LIFT program which the Liberals imposed on western Canada some years ago, I became alarmed when I heard the NDP calling for a similar type of program. Surely the Government is not thinking of a LIFT program, is it?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question because it is our $1 billion, it is our program. It is fine if the NDP and the Liberals want to give up on Canadian farmers, but this Government is going to continue to develop programs and supply financial support to Canadian agriculture to keep farmers on the land and farming.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the Throne Speech the Government said it was considering new conflict of interest rules. On April 30, 1986, the Prime Minister said in a press conference that the existing rules were as tough as any in the western world and it was his job to enforce them. In view of that, can he tell us, if they were so great, why do we need new ones and what difference is it going to make when the Prime Minister has been unable or unwilling to enforce the existing rules?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as was indicated in the Speech from the Throne, these guidelines will be reviewed. I guess we were attracted to some extent by the contravention of conflict of interest guidelines by so many Liberals in the provincial Legislature so that we took our cue from there.

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF PUNITIVE MEASURES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the issue here is the credibility of this Government. It is certainly not a joke. If the Prime Minister is unwilling to answer, will the Deputy Prime Minister give us his assurances that the new rules will include punitive measures so that we do not again see what we have seen so often in the past from this Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I would think that the Hon. Member would want the conflict of interest guidelines broad enough so that they would take into consideration not only cabinet Ministers and Parliamentary Secretaries but, indeed, Members of Parliament. When we want to talk about credibility, I will stake my credibility up against the Hon. Member's any day of the week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

TAX CREDIT GUIDELINES

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. On Monday in this House I urged the Minister of National Revenue to consult with high technology industry leaders on their concerns about the research and development tax credit guidelines. Have those consultations taken place and, if so, has an improved definition of research and development been arrived at and agreed upon?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his interest and his constructive suggestions in bringing this matter to a resolution. The Income Tax Act being such a potent instrument in stimulating industrial research and innovation in the private sector, it was important that the private sector agree with the guidelines we have developed. I am pleased to say that there is universal acceptance resulting from the consultations which the Minister of National Revenue has carried on.

AIRPORTS

TROUT LAKE AND JEAN MARIE RIVER AIRPORTS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can he explain why his Department refused to lengthen the Trout Lake airstrip and install lights at the Jean Marie River Airport as requested by the Dene National Assembly? Is it because all the money has already been spent in his Department for pork-barrelling operations in the ridings of the Prime Minister and the Minister of State for Transport?

• (1150)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately we only have a certain amount of money in the Department of Transport to look after hundreds of airports across the country. Therefore, there is never as much as we would like. I might say that there has been a great deal spent at the airport in Hamilton and I am glad the hon. lady finds it to be humorous.

Ms. Copps: Not by your Government.

Mr. Crosbie: If I had notice of the hon. gentleman's particular question, I would have been able to check that, which I will do. With respect to the Prime Minister's district, he represents a huge area which I think is 160,000 square miles. He is the largest Member in the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —in terms of space, if not of importance. That district requires airports because there are many isolated communities in the district and I certainly intend to see that it gets every chance in the future.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

DENE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY'S REQUEST

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's reply. Indeed, I hope he will look at the request of the Dene National Assembly. I appreciate that he is having difficulty getting enough money to meet the needs. Perhaps he could cut the $3 million provided for the airport at St. Jean-sur-Richelieu and give it to the Dene Nation because apparently the one at St. Jean-sur-Richelieu has not been approved by the Minister of the Environment in Quebec, despite the claims by Members of Parliament.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if we were not forced to pay $27 billion in interest this year for past extravagances and wastefulness of the hon. gentleman and his Government, we would have money to do all of these things and many things more.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

LABOUR RELATIONS

LOCK-OUT AT PORT OF QUEBEC—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. The Quebec City port dispute has become critical as a result of today's lock-out, a dispute which has been dragging on for over a month. What is the Minister prepared to do to re-open this port?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec City port dispute has been dragging on for some time. The lock-out was imposed on September 15. The union sought a ruling from the Canadian Labour Relations Board as to whether the lock-out was legal, and this was confirmed in a decision rendered this week.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to know whether the Minister is prepared to take the initiative, as he did in British Columbia and at the Lakehead, particularly since the maritime employers will allow the unloading of a DND ship today? Why not open the whole port?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): The union has also applied to the Canadian Labour Relations Board, but no decision has been made yet. The union wants to know whether it can negotiate as a whole with the parties. Of course we will have to abide by the ruling, but in the meantime two mediators have been appointed and they are available to help the parties solve their problem if indeed the parties give us an indication that they are interested in doing that.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES DAIRY CATTLE—BRUCELLOSIS HAZARD

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. American dairy cattle coming from brucellosis-infected areas can enter Canada with only one negative blood test. Our brucellosis-free zone is endangered by this policy. Why do we allow this dangerous condition to continue, and when will the Americans recognize our brucellosis-free zone?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. It should be noted that the U.S. Department of Agriculture does in fact recognize Canada to be a brucellosis-free area, with the exception of the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec which were the last ones to be declared brucellosis free. The Hon. Member should also know that in order for U.S. cattle to be imported into Canada they are required to meet our Canadian standards. I have been advised—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond.

* * *

AIR CANADA

SERVICE TO YARMOUTH, N. S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns Air Canada's stated intention to terminate DC-9 flights into Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. Does the Minister not realize that, without this particular flight, air freight bound for export will be curtailed, thereby jeopardizing many jobs in Yarmouth and the surrounding communities? Will the Minister require Air Canada to terminate its request to the CTC in order that this entire matter can be reviewed?

Mr. Robichaud: No, he doesn't give a damn anyway.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's colleague is setting a very high standard for cynicism. However, I will ignore it in the spirit of turning the other cheek. I have been at the dentist for three and a half hours this morning and I have been turning every cheek I can think of.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the Hon. Minister has gone far enough. Perhaps he could get on with his response.

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to Air Canada and Yarmouth, Air Canada will not be abandoning the Yarmouth route unless completely satisfactory service with respect to both passengers and cargo is in place at the time it no longer wishes to serve the route from Yarmouth. It will only be permitted to cease serving it if an adequate and satisfactory service from other air carriers is in place before that happens.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister that transportation is an integral link in terms of economic development. The proposal by Air Canada is to have Air Nova assume that particular flight. The air freight capacity of Air Nova is 300 cubic feet, while the DC-9 is 1,200 cubic feet. I ask the Minister on behalf of the Board of Trade, the municipalities, workers and business people in Yarmouth and surrounding areas if he will not ask Air Canada to recall its request to the CTC and review the matter before any action is taken?

Point of Order—Mr. Fulton

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is very late in his representation because the Member who represents Yarmouth has been making these representations to me for weeks now, with a great deal of success.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF MANITOBA INDIAN BANDS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Among the documents he has received in the last while was a document which was sent to the Regional Director General in Manitoba on August 22, 1986. In this document which was later approved by the same Regional Director, a number of contribution agreements were down-sized. We have been told that these agreements were down-sized without the signed agreement of the various bands concerned. Will the Minister confirm that there has been absolutely no changes made to down-size contribution agreements without the signed agreement of those bands? Will he make that unilateral declaration?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have asked on several occasions in the last week for documents from anyone who has documentation that would show that signed obligations on behalf of the Department were not being met. I make that request again to the Hon. Member. However, let me repeat that he will find in the documents circulated yesterday—which were not complete—that where there was an accusation that there had been cuts, there had indeed been an increase of $23,000 on a particular capital project. If the Hon. Member has documentation that shows that signed agreements have not been met by the Department, I would ask him to bring them forward.

Mr. Murphy: The Minister has this documentation already. I am certainly willing to give it to him again.

REQUEST THAT REGIONAL ADMINISTRATION BE PLACED IN TRUSTEESHIP

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, given that a number of bands have said that they have not agreed to these agreements, and that a former senior official has said that this is happening, will the Minister put the Regional Department into trusteeship to make sure that there is some guarantee that the Indians in Manitoba are being treated fairly?

• (1200)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my concern for the management of the dollars which flow to Indian people is as great as the Hon. Member's, I can assure him. I can also assure him that my predecessor had taken steps to reorganize the management of his Department. I will continue to take steps to organize the management of the Department. I am very concerned about the Manitoba region. However, the Hon. Member knows that there has been a new RDG put in place in that region, that there have been changes and there will be continuing changes in the management of the Department for which I am responsible.

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON AT PORT-CARTIER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In the documents produced this morning there is a suggested answer for the Solicitor General prepared presumably by his officials: "Neither the Prime Minister, nor any person on his staff intervened in this matter". In writing which could well be his, there is a note: "I can't say this. I can only say no record re Solicitor General". Does that mean that the Solicitor General of the country cannot categorically say: "Neither the Prime Minister nor any person on his staff intervened in this matter"? Can he not say that to the House?

Mr. Mazankowski: He just did.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thought I was quite clear in my earlier answer. I pointed out quite clearly, when this matter arose I went to the officials in my Ministry and asked them. They advised me that there was no record in the Ministry of any interference by the Prime Minister or any member of his staff in this matter.

The Hon. Member must remember that I was not the Solicitor General at the time. Therefore, all I can do is go to the members of my staff and that is what they told me; there is nothing.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that I have received notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Skeena. I would point out that in the opinion of the Chair it is not a question of privilege but more properly a point of order. I will hear the Hon. Member for Skeena.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED IMPUGNMENT OF INTEGRITY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, yesterday during Question Period I put a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). Part of his answer is found on page 239 of Hansard, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman from Skeena has said he is neither an accountant nor a detective, and that is certainly obvious.

I then said: "At least I'm not a crook". Following that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said: "Says who?" As you will know, Mr. Speaker, following Question Period yesterday the Minister of Transport raised a question of privilege and I withdrew my remarks to make it clear on the record, and in this House, that I in no way intended that comment to reflect on him or any other Hon. Member of the House.

I am sure the Minister of Justice on the same grounds would want to remove his remark: "Says who?" because it is clear that that remark has the same kind of implications towards me which the Minister of Transport felt might have been directed at him. And I have already received a note from the Minister of Justice so I will leave it at that.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in honest truth I do not recall saying the words. However, I had already indicated to the Hon. Member that it was my intention to stand at this time and categorically withdraw any imputation. I would not say it, I do not think it, and I am sorry if there was any offence caused.

* * *

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED IMPUGNMENT OF INTEGRITY

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, during the course of Question Period, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) made some very unfortunate comments which I hope the Chair will take under advisement. These are comments which offend Citation 326(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. The Hon. Member in Question Period made reference to comments I had made in the House and quoted comments made outside of the House by the President of the National Research Council, Dr. Kerwin, and asked who was telling the truth, thus clearly implying that either myself or Dr. Kerwin had been lying.

Citation 326(2) of Beauchesne is quite explicit:

> Words may not be used hypothetically or conditionally, if they are plainly intended to convey a direct imputation.

I have been scrupulously careful to make certain no false information is conveyed to the House and to ensure that nothing is said in the House which would cause injury to the morale of this fine institution. Because of my high respect and regard for the integrity and competence of the President of the National Research Council, Dr. Kerwin, I would hope that the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) would reflect on his comments and would have the grace to withdraw them.

Mr. Speaker: I heard the Hon. Member. The Chair was very conscious of the comments which were made. Perhaps upon hearing other representations it will become clear that the comment was made in the search for accuracy and facts. Perhaps it was not meant to impute the personal honour or integrity of any particular person. But I would be interested to hear comment.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the citation referred to by the Hon. Member reads:

> Words may not be used hypothetically or conditionally, if they are plainly intended to convey a direct imputation. Putting a hypothetical case is not the way to evade what would be in itself disorderly.

Nowhere in the Citation does it say that an Hon. Member cannot ask questions for the purpose of inviting a Minister to clear up a contradiction or, as you yourself said, Mr. Speaker, to ask the Minister to whom the question is directed to deal with a matter of accuracy or clarification.

Questions in the exact language used by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), in my recollection, have been used or asked many times in the House without such a question being ruled as offending any of the precedents of this House. Therefore, I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, to use your own words, that the Hon. Member for Laurier was simply seeking responses with respect to accuracy and with respect to dealing with what seemed to be an obvious contradiction.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, for months, I suppose, I have been speaking for a good number of people across the country with whom I have been in touch. Many Canadians have been concerned about getting a clear statement of Government policy as it relates to the National Research Council and the Government's science policy. I certainly did not impute any motive to the Minister. I was, as you suggested, Sir, seeking clarification.

All I can say, if I have been misled, is there are certainly reputable newspapers in this country which have—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the Chair is in a position to comment. I think it is quite clear from what has been said by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) that clearly no imputation of the honour and integrity of any particular person was intended. I thank the Hon. Members for making that clear.

I would remind all Hon. Members, however, that this is an example of what can develop if great care is not taken in the words which are used. I would hope the Minister would be satisfied with the outcome of this intervention and the comments of the Chair.

• (1210)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to House business. Is the Government House Leader prepared to provide further information with respect to the business of the House for next week? In particular, can he tell us when he will be offering to us an Opposition Day?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, in light of developments that transpired earlier in the day I was not able to give a firm commitment. It would be my intention to call Item No. 5, the consideration of report stage of Bill C-5, an Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act.

If we are able to complete that business, then it would be my intention to move on to the matter dealing with the Income Tax Act in respect of the child tax credit. This would be followed by the resumption of debate on the Speech from the Throne. It is my intention at this time to continue with the debate on the Speech from the Throne until its conclusion.

I will certainly take notice of my hon. friend's suggestion with respect to an early Opposition Day. We will try to arrange that at the earliest possible opportunity.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED IMPUGNMENT OF MEMBER'S INTEGRITY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from today's Question Period. It is something upon which I seek your guidance.

In response to a question from the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) who asked a general question about the issue of the credibility of the Government, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) made a comment about the individual integrity of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. I believe that is in violation of the Standing Orders. I seek your guidance with respect to impugning the integrity of an individual Member.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will take a look at what I said. I am prepared to examine it. However, as I recall it the question of credibility was raised by the Hon. Member. I responded in the spirit in which he raised it.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am seeking your guidance. I believe if you have a chance to review the "blues" you will note that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell referred specifically to the credibility of the Government. In his response the Deputy Prime Minister referred to the integrity of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. That is, indeed, in violation of the Standing Orders.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I believe that if the Hon. Member were to go back and check the "blues" she would find that I at no time used the word "integrity". If I did, then I would be prepared to withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will review the "blues". There will be an appropriate time to raise this matter on Tuesday, which is our next sitting day after today. It might help if the Hon. Member who raised the issue and the Minister had a short talk about the facts. In any event, there will be an opportunity to deal with it on Tuesday.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF EXTRACTS OF MINUTES OF MEETINGS OF COMMISSIONERS OF INTERNAL ECONOMY

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 120(1) I have the honour to lay upon the Table extracts from minutes of meetings of the Commissioners of Internal Economy for the period November 22, 1984, to June 26, 1985, and extracts of the minutes of meetings of the Board of Internal Economy for the period October 2, 1985, to June 18, 1986.

* * *

[Translation]

STRIKING COMMITTEE

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table the first report of the striking committee.

With leave of the House, I intend to move for concurrence in this report later this day.

[Editor's Note: For above report see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

PETITIONS

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF CN SHOPS—MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present some petitions about the situation at the CN workshops in Moncton. These petitions come from residents of Dieppe, Petitcodiac, Moncton, Riverglade, Scoudouc, Salisbury and Grande-Digue.

[English]

The petitioners humbly pray that this honourable House be pleased to instruct the Government to postpone a decision to close the CN Shops until the workers have had an opportunity to appear before the Transport Committee of the House of Commons.

REQUEST TO END LOW-LEVEL FLIGHT TRAINING—GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents of Canada who object to the low-level flight training of NATO pilots at Goose Bay because it disrupts the local traditional life and is an aggressive war-fighting technique. They call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will end the low-level flight training there and cease negotiating to have a NATO base established there for that purpose.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED IMPUGNMENT OF MEMBER'S INTEGRITY—CORRECTION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I raised a point of order earlier arising from today's Question Period. I would like to correct my earlier statement on the record.

In my earlier statement I suggested that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) accused the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) of a question of integrity. Indeed, it was a question of credibility and not a question of integrity. I would like the record to show that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DECORUM IN THE HOUSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, since we are into the matter of decorum in the House, and since there has been some discussion on it, I would like to remind all Hon. Members, and in particular the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), that when a Member crosses the floor from one side to the other the normal practice is to defer to the Speaker in the passage back and forth. I think that perhaps the Hon. Member forgot to do that. However, I am sure she would like to be reminded of it.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I did bow, perhaps not at the right angle, but I definitely bowed.

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure all Hon. Members that I saw the Hon. Member bow.

[Translation]

AN ACT DECLARING THE NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION AS THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

DECLARATORY MEASURE

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-218, an Act declaring the National Capital Region as the Seat of Government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have leave to introduce this Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, this first Bill deals with our National Capital. It declares the National Capital Region as the seat of government of Canada. It changes the name given to our capital in the 19th century. From now on, the capital should be known under the names of Ottawa and the Outaouais. The Bill also asks that the territory of the region extend on both shores of the Ottawa River in Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Does it please the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I have two Bills. The second amends the National Capital Act. I would also like this Bill to receive first reading.

* * *

NATIONAL CAPITAL ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-219, an Act to amend the National Capital Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mrs. Mailly: This second Bill also relates to the National Capital of our country. It would amend the National Capital Act so that the municipality of Gatineau would have one commissioner, which would raise to three the number of Outaouais representatives, including one from Hull and the other for another Outaouais municipality.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read for the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

• (1220)

[English]

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-220, an Act to amend the Patent Act, generic farm chemicals.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to introduce a Bill to amend the Patent Act regarding generic farm chemicals. This would in fact reduce the monopoly that farm chemical companies now have from a 17-year patent to a four-year patent. This would open up competition for ordinary Canadians to produce chemicals such as Roundup which are now produced by Monsanto at great expense to the farmers. It is patterned on the generic pharmaceutical Bill which was passed in Canada many, many years ago and which gave great benefit to the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to present a Bill on parity pricing for farm products. The purpose of the Bill is to provide farmers with a guarantee for the products they produce that will be based on the cost of production and a decent profit for the work they are putting into producing food for Canada and the rest of the world.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CANADA-ALASKA BOUNDARY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-222, an Act respecting the international boundary between Canada and the State of Alaska.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to put this Bill before the House once again. It almost made it through to a vote during the last Session.

My concern in reintroducing this Bill is that the Government of Canada seems to be drifting toward a negotiation with the United States on this sovereign boundary between Canada and the State of Alaska and only a vote in the House endorsing into law our boundary at 54-40 will set the stage for fair discussions on our offshore boundaries.

I am pleased to bring the Bill forward again. It is endorsed by many Canadians and is supported by the 1825 Sino-British Treaty, the 1867 treaty following the purchase of the State of Alaska by the United States and by the Hay-Herbert Treaty of 1903 plus a number of cabinet orders and Orders in Council proposing that this boundary be our sovereign boundary. A vote by this House would entrench that for all time to come.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know from the Chair whether the date of the draw usually held at the beginning of a session will be chosen within a few days. Could the House be informed? Could Hon. Members know when the Chair will proceed with the draw concerning Private Members' Bills and motions—Members . . . Liberal Members, at least, are interested and often ask me when the draw will take place. I wonder whether a date has been set.

Mr. Speaker: I believe it will take place on October 21.

• (1230)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Thursday, October 9, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the Session; and of the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p.227).

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I consider it an honour to participate in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. It is a pleasure for me as Minister of the Environment, especially because, for the first time since 1973 the Throne Speech not only mentions but, indeed, stresses environmental concerns. In fact, it deals with every facet of my mandate as Minister, from the built heritage to national parks, to environmental protection, through to water policy.

Representing as it does the agenda of the Government in this new session of Parliament, the Throne Speech makes clear that we continue as a Government to be totally committed to protecting the environment and, in particular, to ensuring that Environment Canada has the resources and the clear mandate required to play its vital role.

In the Throne Speech the Government has highlighted a central thought, one well understood by Canadians but I think too long ignored by Governments, that a healthy environment is essential to a sound economy; it is the sine qua non. Economic objectives and environmental goals are more than compatible. They are two sides of the same coin.

The past year has been for me a lesson in how myths take root and flourish, often without the benefit of even a seed of truth. No myth has been stronger and more groundless than that surrounding the Department of the Environment. If the naysayers and doom merchants in the opposition Parties were given credence, one would believe that the Government had slashed the Department's budget and diminished its clout. As if that nightmarish view were not enough, they say that the Government has a secret agenda to dismantle Environment Canada altogether, distributing its programs and funds among different federal Departments or delegating them to the provinces. Apparently more interested in fantasy than in facts, the opposition Parties have woven the supposed evidence from whole cloth. I will leave the fantasy to the Opposition and deal only with the facts.

First, Environment Canada is alive and well and living everywhere in the country. Indeed, instead of slashing the budget of Environment Canada, the Government has in fact increased it. The budget in the current fiscal year of 1986-87 is $745,349,000, an increase of $18,385,000 over last year. Where are the public servants supposedly slaughtered by the evil Tories on the high altar of budgetary restraint? They, too, are alive and well and working hard and effectively at Environment Canada. In fact, Environment Canada was one of only three Departments in the entire Government of Canada which was enlarged last year.

If the Government is wringing Environment Canada's neck like that of a chicken, I can only quote the immortal words of Sir Winston Churchill, uttered in this very Parliament of Canada almost a half century ago—"some chicken, some neck!"

In any event, those who mourn Environment Canada's alleged demise not only reach the wrong conclusion; they ask the wrong question. The question is not whether Environment Canada is bigger or smaller than it was before. Rather, the question is: In any over-all downsizing of the Government of Canada, is Environment Canada gaining or losing ground? Is it being singled out, as the Opposition would suggest, for particularly harsh treatment while the Government moves to control runaway deficits which are now forcing it to spend one tax dollar in three just to pay the interest on previous borrowings? The emphatic answer is no. Environment Canada is more than holding its own, though to be sure—and I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will take particular note of this point—at the end of the Government's current mandate Environment Canada will have contributed its fair share of dollars and personnel to the Government's over-all restraint program, which I support 100 per cent.

Nonetheless, the relative size of my Department will remain the same, and it may well get bigger. Thanks to management reforms, especially in the Conservation and Protection Services and in the regional offices, Environment Canada will be stronger than it has ever been since it was formed in 1971.

Since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) honoured me by appointing me Minister of the Environment a year ago, the Department and I, with the full co-operation of other Departments and other Ministers, have worked hard to put together a strong package of reforms, including new laws heralded in the Throne Speech itself. Such reforms do not just happen by pushing a button or pulling a lever or some other instrument in a legislative sausage mill. They require planning; they require consultation with affected federal Departments, provincial Governments, industry, labour, and environmental groups; they require lobbying for support within a complex government system; and they require time.

I am amazed by the number of otherwise informed people, including ones across the aisle in the opposition Parties, who, following my appointment expected every manner of environmental problem to be resolved overnight. Yet, many of those problems have bedevilled successive Governments for a generation—from Niagara River pollution, to acid rain, to stalemates on establishing important national parks like South Moresby. I certainly appreciate the sincere impatience of environmentalists as the system appears immoveable on burning issues which require urgent action. Being an environmentalist myself, I share their impatience.

However, progress is being made. By this time next year, the current Government will have accomplished more on a broad range of environmental issues than has ever been accomplished by a federal Government during any previous period. The corner-stone of that record will be the new Environmental Protection Act. For the first time much of the legislative authority of the Environment Minister will be consolidated under one Act, making it easier to integrate his mandate with that of other federal Ministers who share environmental powers. Equally important, a framework will be built within which federal laws can be better integrated with provincial ones. At present, environmental law in Canada involves a crazy quilt of some 22 federal Departments and agencies, 57 different federal statutes, and, yes, even 97 different provincial Acts.

In such a morass the only person who gains is the polluter. The citizen and even Government itself have been at a loss to make sense of the myriad of laws and regulations which are generally so weak they constitute a licence to pollute or are so Draconian they cannot be applied.

The new Environmntal Protection Act is designed to set such matters right. The Act will provide a clear statement of citizens' rights to a healthy environment. It will greatly strengthen sanctions against polluters. It will allow for the better management of toxic chemicals through their full life cycle, from research and development, to production, to marketing and use, through to disposal as waste. It will incorporate a compliance and enforcement regime devised to ensure that the country has more than just a good law on the books. It will have a good law in the courts, in the police stations, and, yes, even in the jails of the country.

The work on this landmark legislation has had the full co-operation of my cabinet colleagues, reflecting the high priority other federal Departments and Ministers attach to environmental protection.

• (1240)

A great deal of work, Sir, has also been done on the National Parks amendments highlighted in the Throne Speech. Not since the Act was passed more than half a century ago, in 1930, has it been reformed in any major fashion. The Government believes strongly that major changes are now overdue, reflecting the increased importance Canadians attach to the natural environment. Urban sprawl needs to be stopped in parks town sites. Heritage values need to be protected in the face of transportation and utility corridor development. Wilderness areas need to be defended against insidious encroachments by commerce. The hand of the state needs to come down heavily on well organized, well financed poachers who are robbing our parks of their very life systems and all of us of our wildlife heritage. The Parks amendments will be ready for first reading in Parliament soon, and I urge the Opposition to give them expeditious passage. Among the amendments, of course, will be one that establishes Canada's thirty-second national park, Ellesmere Island. Three weeks ago, Tagak Curley, Minister of Economic Development and Tourism for the Government of the Northwest Territories, joined me in a signing ceremony on Ellesmere Island itself, the very rooftop of Canada. The park, as you will know, is richly populated by muskoxen, Arctic hare, wolves, caribou and seals, all living among majestic mountain ranges, fiords and glaciers. Canadians have every right to be proud that Ellesmere Island— soon to be part of the country's national park system—exists and that it is ours.

The Government is not content with establishing a park only at Ellesmere Island. We all owe it to our children and to Canadians yet unborn to do even more to complete the total national park system. This past year, enormous progress has been made in establishing a national park in the celebrated South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Until now, money owed by the federal Government to the Government of British Columbia for Pacific Rim National Park has been the biggest single obstacle to that process. A few days ago, British Columbia environment Minister Austin Pelton and I were able to resolve all remaining financial and boundary issues relating to Pacific Rim. As a result, we have been able to agree to complete negotiations on South Moresby by the end of next year.

Similarly, Ontario's Natural Resources Minister Vince Kerrio and I have reached agreement on all major issues concerning the establishment of a national park in the Bruce Peninsula, a major site that includes rugged bluffs, picturesque nature trails, deer in large supply and birds and flora in great diversity. Just as the Ellesmere Island National Park Reserve asserts Canadian sovereignty in a part of our country under challenge, South Moresby and the Bruce affirm the commitment of this Government, and the commitment also of other Canadians, to preserving our natural heritage.

The same commitment must be made by Canadians to our built heritage, those cultural properties that express our identity as a people and enrich our national life. As the responsible Minister under a 1982 Cabinet decision, I intend to present to my colleagues, in co-operation with all relevant departments, the most far-reaching set of built heritage preservation proposals ever considered by the Government of Canada. Those are but some of my department's and this Government's plans for the environment in the coming months. I am proud of the agenda.

While the past year has largely been devoted to putting that agenda in place, Environment Canada has been active across a broad spectrum. The Department hosted the North American visit of the World Commission on Environment and Development, the so-called Brundtland Commission, headed by the Prime Minister of Norway. We co-sponsored the International World Conservation Strategy Conference. We produced the $1.5 billion bilateral North American Waterfowl Management Plan. We reached agreement with the United States on the need to reduce toxic chemical loadings in the Niagara River. We are going to work even further to push that program to its logical conclusion so that we will have targets and schedules. We undertook with Ontario a major investigation of contamination in the St. Clair River and reached agreement with Nova Scotia to clean up the worst toxic chemicals disposal sight in eastern Canada, the Sydney Tar Ponds. The Department signed water quality monitoring agreements with Ontario, British Columbia and Newfoundland. We held discussions with the United States, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, on acid rain; and together, in a spirit of neighbourliness, co-operation and international harmony, the president's go-ahead was obtained on work toward a bilateral accord on trans-boundary pollution. There will soon be tough new emission standards for cars and light trucks and new emission standards for heavy duty vehicles. The elimination of lead from gasoline by the end of 1992 will be achieved. My Department published the first ever State of the Environment Report and alerted Canadians to the dangers of misfueling and of tampering with pollution control devices through a massive advertising and public information campaign. Research, information and programs were strengthened concerning weather forecasting, water levels and water quality, wildlife management, environmental contaminants, maintenance of park trails and a host of other activities too numerous to mention in a relatively short speech. The record over the past year, indeed over the past two years, is impressive, Mr. Speaker. What has happened, though, is merely prologue.

Let no one doubt the commitment of this Government to protecting the environment. Here, after all, for the first time in Canadian history is a Government headed by a Prime Minister who has made an environmental issue, acid rain abatement, a top agenda item in two successive summits and one more to come with the President of the United States. The Prime Minister has pledged to continue this work until acid rain is no longer a bilateral issue by virtue of it being resolved by the two countries.

I began by saying that I would leave the myths and the fantasies to others and deal only with the facts. I am proud, Sir, that the facts speak for themselves.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), I would ask, has he reached a point in his role as Minister in this very important portfolio whereby he and his Government have understood the important economic, central and top priority role that his Department has to play in present circumstances?. Unfortunately, the Minister spent a lot of time chasing shadows and shadow boxing, accusing the Opposition of all sorts of negative statements which, if they exist, can only be traced to the activities of the Minister or of his Government. For instance, the Minister spent a lot of time on negative forecasts by the Opposition on the future of the Department. I have to remind the Minister that it was his own former Deputy Prime Minister who ordered a report which studied the present and future role of the Department of the Environment. That led to all sorts of speculation until that report was published, and even afterward. It is absurd for the Minister to blame the Opposition for action which was initiated by the former Deputy Prime Minister. These speculations and rumours were fed by the Government until we requested a tabling of the report in mid-June. That report was finally made public in mid-August.

• (1250)

In his speech the Minister elaborated on funds and budgets. He has a selective memory on that. He did not say one word about the actions of his predecessor and the cuts inflicted by her on the Department of the Environment. Those cuts are not fully restored even now.

I hope that once the Minister gets rid of the rhetoric and embellishments of which he is so capable he will come to grips with his important responsibility, to utilize his Department as a major instrument for the economic well-being of Canada in the long term. The Minister has not yet addressed this item. I urge him to address it rather than dealing with inconsequential items here and there. The Minister must come to grips with the major and very important environmental function within the economy of the country. We will be satisfied with his speeches in this House at that time and not before.

Will the Minister indicate something which is very unclear in the Speech from the Throne, namely, when the amendments to the National Parks Act will be tabled? These amendments have been ready since the spring of 1984.

Second, when will the Minister move on gasoline taxation in order to bring about desirable pricing policies whereby unleaded gasoline will cost less than leaded for the benefit of agriculture, forestry and structures which are negatively impacted upon by the emissions from the combustion of leaded gasoline?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who is the critic on the environment for the Official Opposition, has essentially raised three points. The first has to do with a report commissioned by the Deputy Ministerial Task Force on Program Review. That was one report among two or three done on the Department of the Environment, not to mention many other reports on other Departments but having an impact on the Department of the Environment. Twenty major studies were performed by the task force within the entire federal Government. When the former Deputy Prime Minister tabled most of those reports in the House of Commons, he noted that, together, they weighed approximately 35 pounds and covered every nook and cranny of the federal Government.

I say that to remind the Hon. Member for Davenport that those are only reports. The one on the environment to which he has taken greatest offence is one of several on the environment. There are conflicts in many of them. They are not government policy and are not even necessarily options that the Government is considering. They are recommendations by private sector individuals and public employees concerning options which they hope the Government will consider.

Having said that, the Government's answer to the report to which he has made particular reference is in the Throne Speech. There were references in the Throne Speech to the Environmental Protection Act, to major amendments to the National Parks Act and to a commitment to come forth soon with a water policy for the federal Government and for the country as a whole. Those initiatives, individually and collectively, should put a lie to the speculation and rumours of the doomsters and naysayers against this Department.

Second, the Hon. Member asked about amendments to the National Parks Act. Contrary to what he said, these were not ready in the spring of 1984 and were not ready even in the spring of 1985. They went to the Department of Justice for drafting this past summer. The drafting is now completed, the printing is in process and the translation is well underway. I hope to be able to introduce the amendments in Parliament for first reading within weeks.

On the issue of leaded and unleaded gasoline, I am working hand in glove with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) who is in the House today. He is proving to be not only a great Minister of Energy, but also a great environmental Minister of Energy. I am also working with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), and other Ministers on that issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and then the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) for very short questions or comments in order that the Minister can reply.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, in view of your admonition I will cut to the minimum the comments which I wanted to make.

There is a tremendous sense of urgency across the country, and it is particularly strong in my part of the country, with regard to issues like the Detroit incinerator, the flooding which is taking place in Lake St. Clair and Lake Erie, the continued inability to identify the source of the infamous St. Clair blob of last year, the tremendous dioxin ingestion which seems to be taking place in the Great Lakes Basin and, of course, acid rain.

I do not question the Minister with a sense of strong criticism or denigration of his efforts because I think he has been a breath of fresh air after the previous Minister. However, is the Minister not prepared to stand up and admit that he is not satisfied with the attempts to reclaim our environment for people? If he is honest he will say that he is not satisfied. Therefore, how does he envision that we can push ahead with much more urgency to achieve some of the goals that are so crucial to all the people of the country?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I will answer very briefly because I think I have only about 60 seconds. Of course, I am not satisfied. I am not satisfied with the record of all governments or the record of Canada and Canadians. We have to do more and we will do more. We are going to bring in an Environmental Protection Act which will be the most progressive in the western hemisphere. It is going to be backed up with a compliance and enforcement schedule to demonstrate to Canadians that the Government means business when it takes on polluters in all their forms.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will not see the clock. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to some of those asked during Question Period dealing with brucellosis.

Canada has been declared a brucellosis-free country, yet the Minister of the Environment knows that brucellosis, as well tuberculosis, is endemic in his herd of buffalo in Wood Buffalo National Park. It would be a danger for domestic cattle if that disease spreads. Could the Minister outline his plans to deal with this persistent and very important problem?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is right. This is a severe and very persistent problem. My Department has instructed its top scientists to remain on top of the issue and recommend a course of action. We think that before very long we will be able to announce it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1.01 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr Speaker, I am very pleased to have a chance to speak in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I want to deal with a subject which was reflected in the Throne Speech, the subject of tax reform. Although the speech did not give any details, it spoke about improvement of the economy and the general health of the country. What it neglected to deal with directly, although it did so implicitly, was the growing gap between rich and poor, the growing gap between the rich and the majority. This concerns me as it concerns the majority of the residents of my riding. In that, of course, Spadina riding is not essentially different from other ridings.

In Spadina we have a great many old houses. Some are well-maintained by the hard work of those living in them, and some are falling down because they are owned by absentee landlords. In either case, the people in those houses usually have low incomes. There are some with little better incomes who live in very tiny apartments called bachelorettes. There are a few who live quite comfortably in quite pleasant houses. We also have a great many, several thousand in fact, small businesses, and some of them come and go. In other words, some of the bankruptcy statistics are real human events in the small business world in Spadina. Then we have some very rich and powerful corporations represented in their head offices in the business core of downtown Toronto. Therefore I regret that the Speech from the Throne, while it touched on many aspects of the economy, skipped over the growing gap between the few rich and the many who are not so rich, the many who constitute the majority, whether they be called middle income or poor.

This gap was not invented or created primarily by the present Government. It has been growing for several decades at least. However, this Government has done nothing to reduce the gap. It has even done some things to increase it. This is particularly so when it talks about tax reform, as the Throne Speech does, without giving any specifics. We do not know whether to expect taxation which will redistribute money from the poor to the rich, as is the current pattern, or a reversal to begin to redistribute some of that money from the rich to the poor.

The general result of this policy of redistributing money from the poor to the rich shows up in many ways in our country. For example, the general income level, measured in real dollars, has dropped 3 1/2 per cent in the last five years. This affects the overall figure, but it particularly affects families headed by women. In 1981, 12 per cent of all Canadian families were living in poverty. This increased to 14 1/2 per cent by 1984. Although it has dropped to 13.1 per cent in 1985, my guess is the figure for 1986 will be heading the wrong way again. Single parent female headed families had a poverty rate of 52.8 per cent in 1981, and it is now 60.2 per cent. It is worth noting that the number of children living in poverty has jumped in four years from 16 per cent in 1981 to 20 per cent in 1985. This same pattern also affects young people. Some 42 per cent of young unattached individuals between 15 and 24 years of age were living in poverty conditions in 1980, and it is now almost 48 per cent. I could of course quote individual examples, as could anyone on the other side.

The Government advertised job opportunities for young people, but they have to be between 18 and 24 years of age and be able to put several thousand dollars into a project. In Toronto we know where to find 18-year olds who can ante up several thousand dollars. They are in Rosedale, not Spadina. They are in the north end of Rosedale, not in Cabbagetown or Regent Park. In other words, this is another form of subsidy for the rich or the children of the rich. It does not do very much for the great majority of young people in Spadina, or the rest of Canada.

One of the biggest expenses a person has is for housing. We used to have a standard measure of 25 per cent of income being spent for housing. That is much higher than people in many other countries expect to pay. However, it is now much lower than most people are forced to pay in Canada. It goes to 30 per cent or 35 per cent, often by government regulation through CMHC, and 40 per cent, 50 per cent or 60 per cent in fact in the private market.

In 1985 an average house in Toronto cost $110,000 and average family income was $41,500. With mortgage rates of 13 1/2 per cent, they would need $10,000 a year more in order to buy a house. The fact is that incomes are going down in one way or another for a great many people. There has been a decline in real wages for about the last nine years. That is, the buying power of the weekly wage packet or the monthly salary has declined. There has been a decline in jobs in the better paid fields such as manufacturing and construction. They are often replaced by jobs with much lower wages in such fields as community services, business and personal services. There is a shortening of the hours of work, not usually by choice or with compensation. That is to say, in 1981 the average hours worked were 32 in services but dropped to 27.3 in 1986. If we use constant 1981 dollars, the buying power of the average hourly wage in the service industry has dropped from $7.32 an hour in 1981 to $6.78 an hour in 1986. In manufacturing, reckoning the same way, an hour's work that would have bought $9.15 worth in 1981 will now buy only the equivalent of $8.92. It is lower than it was five years ago.

• (1410)

Wage rates generally are down, again if one reckons them against buying power. In 1981, the hourly wage rate was $11.86 in the better paying jobs. Now it has dropped to $8.92. That is on the wage side. That is what has happened to people who are primarily engaged in private employment. That is what happens to their earings before taxes, but the Government, along with its predecessor, has also been shifting the tax burden away from those who have more money to purchase to those who have less. We can go back only to 1981 when the then Government reduced the marginal tax rate for people who were earning the higher incomes and saved them a total of $1 billion or $2 billion a year. Of course, it transferred that burden to people earning lower incomes.

In 1982, family benefits and other social benefits were deindexed down to 6 per cent and 5 per cent when the inflation rate was running at twice that. At the same time, the Government renewed tax breaks for investors so that they could invest money and have it protected against inflation.

We jump to 1984, during part of which the present Government took over, and we find that a regressive sales tax, against which the Government preached when in opposition, was adopted as soon as it became Government. That is a tax primarily on the poor and middle-income people.

The next year the Government gave the $500,000 capital gains gift to the wealthiest people, people who earn $70,000 or $80,000 or more a year. Again, the Government increased the sales tax. In 1986, a 5 per cent surtax on upper-income Canadians was replaced by a 3 per cent surtax on all Canadians and another 1 per cent increase in the sales tax.

We have no word in the Throne Speech that any of those injustices will be undone. There is no word that the buying power of the vast majority of Canadians will be in any way restored by reversing those unjust tax changes. Therefore, considering what is not in the Throne Speech, it looks as though we will get more of the same. What we have now is a situation in which a family at the poverty level has lost about $435 per year. When a family at the higher level of $100,000 a year loses $400, that is 0.4 per cent of the income. However, for a family that receives only a couple of thousand dollars a year to live on, it is very serious to lose $400 in this kind of regressive taxation.

The fact is that over the last 35 years, the share of income tax paid by individuals has trebled and the share of income tax paid by corporations has, accordingly, been cut in third. To put it another way, the situation now is that by 1988, when the present legislative tax changes are completed, sales and excise tax increases will have yielded more revenue to the federal Government than the revenue coming from personal and corporate tax increases combined. That is called a policy of soaking the poor.

This has been the unbroken pattern of the Government's policy. There is no hint in the Throne Speech that there will be any change, which is very unfortunate. The fact is that not only are rich individuals being let off without paying taxes, as many thousands are, others who pay taxes sometimes pay less than middle-income people. It is also a fact that there are very large corporations paying no tax at all. The Argus Corporation, in 1985, made $51.7 million profit but paid no tax. Power Corporation paid no tax on $152 million. In 1983 there were 27 non-financial corporations with profits of more than $25 million, each of which paid no tax at all. There were 37 financial corporations that year making $25 million or more each in profit and paying no tax at all.

Some of the very largest corporations in Canada get away with paying no tax in some years. During the last five years, at one time or another, General Motors, Chrysler, Shell, Hudson's Bay, Nova and TransCanada PipeLines Limited all made profits but paid no tax.

We have some of these big corporations in Spadina. Women from Spadine go and clean their offices in the night. Immigrant women leave their children in the evening for five hours to go and clean the offices, usually for the legal minimum wage or perhaps ten cents over that wage. Within a few minutes walk of some of the very richest corporations in Canada, including Cominco, Bell Canada Enterprises, Noranda, Inco, F. W. Woolworth, Mobil Oil, and Canadian General Electric, women living in very poor houses get bottom wages for cleaning the offices of these companies, many of which pay little or no tax, while the women who clean their offices have to subsidize them by their taxes. Perhaps their daughters subsidize them by working in the garment industry on Spadina Avenue.

While this is not mentioned in the Throne Speech, perhaps the intention is to study this question. I would like to see these corporations report to us with a breakdown, year by year, of their tax breaks, according to programs, the amount, geographic location, how much the federal Government has kicked into those companies through tax breaks, how much the Departments and agencies of the federal Government have provided in financial assistance or in the form of grants and contributions and loans in the last 15 years, since this give-away program to the corporate welfare bums was initiated under the Liberal Government. In the case of loans, we would like to know what were the terms of the loans and whether they were repaid or simply quietly forgiven after a couple of years.

If the Government is serious about tax reform and has any real compassion about the four million to six million people living in poverty, according to our statistics, and others who are living close to poverty, it will examine the give-aways to these large corporations and restore income tax on the wealthy individuals of this country. It will restore an effective corporation tax from which corporations cannot be excused because of loopholes, as well as lower taxation on the working people of this country, most of whom do not have the means of finding these loopholes and using them, and the unemployed who are often required to pay tax to subsidize the very companies that dump them on the pogey line.

• (1420)

We heard this morning some very scornful comments about how reliance on pogey—unemployment insurance benefits—is spreading to the west. I think it would be much more to the point to ask where all the money goes which is generated in the west, whether it be from oil, grain, or the railway industry.

Where does all that money go? Why does it not stay in the west?

We should also be asking, where does the money go which is generated in Canada as a whole? We would find that $10 billion or more goes annually to the United States which leaves Canadians $10 billion poorer and some Americans $10 billion richer. When the Government talks about free trade, I hope it will examine those figures and bring them to the attention of the public as well.

The Speech from the Throne was a great disapointment because it did not address the need of the great majority of the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

[Translation]

Debate. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer you my sincere congratulations on your election and wish you the very best. We all appreciate our new Speaker's experience, his fairness and I would even add his reputation as a francophile, and we know that these qualities will serve him well during the proceedings in this Chamber. He has our support and our full co-operation.

The Government of which I am privileged to be a Member has set itself the following priorities: social justice, economic renewal, national reconciliation and constructive internationalism, all of which are in perfect harmony with the aspirations of Canadian society.

The Speech from the Throne read by Her Excellency the Governor General is an accurate reflection of the needs, plans and hopes of our society. I will explain subsequently how it also reflects the specific expectations of Quebec.

The wording of the Government's priorities reminded me of a comment taken from a work by the French historian Edgar Quinet, entitled La Révolution, and I quote:

> Any philosophy that is limited to the intricacies of economic policy is doomed to fail when faced with the important business of human values.

The Government's plan of action reflects this view which, while considering the demands of the economy, goes on to situate them within the sphere of justice, reconciliation and constructive internationalism. The interdependence between economics and the "grandes affaires humaines", to speak with Quinet, is a concept that is very real to us. We cannot deny the importance of economic factors in connection with culture any more than we can ignore the human dimension in the economy's development.

Mr. Speaker, before I go on to discuss the energy issue, I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those Canadian men and women who were asked and generously agreed to act as chairperson or sit as members on the several task forces I had the privilege of setting up as Minister of Communications.

I also wish to thank members of the support teams and those who made a contribution with their presentations. I must say it was a pleasure to receive their excellent reports. Canada's cultural policies must become part of the dynamics of our society. Let us give our creative and performing artists the recognition of a mature and enlightened nation. For too long, these witnesses of our human condition have been relegated to the fringe of society, while they are in fact its very core.

Let us give our cultural industries the place they deserve. As the link between producer and consumer, they are the instruments that transmit to the world the best we have to offer.

The status of the artist, broadcasting, film, the Arts Centre, museums, financing the arts, these are some of the themes and institutions that attracted our attention. The State has a duty to look and listen and review its policies. That is what this Government is doing and will continue to do for the greater benefit of our national identity.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have risen in the House as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I see this portfolio as a challenge and as having a vast potential. To a country, energy is the lifeblood of its industry, the means of its mobility and the basis of its well-being. It is therefore a fundamental part of our lives.

The great French author François René de Chateaubriand gave us the following thought in Book IX of his Mémoires d'outre-tombe: "In politics, the result is almost never what we expected."

Who could have predicted the dramatic drop in oil prices, one of the major events of the past year? The price collapse has had a drastic impact on oil and gas exploration throughout the industrialized world, and it has forced us to take a second look at the situation and redefine our priorities. It also demanded action on the part of the Government. And we did act to provide a new stimulus for exploration and research. We had already refunded to the companies the taxes imposed by the National Energy Program, but as a result of the accelerating price drop, we had to reduce the tax burden even further, by cutting the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, which was withdrawn altogether last month.

• (1430)

The abolition of the PGRT will give the industry a twofold stimulus. From now on, it will be in a position to increase the capital it needs to finance projects, and key energy projects will become more attractive for investors. Two days ago, Chevron announced a major exploration program at Fort Hope in the Northwest Territories, and mentioned that the abolition of the PGRT was one of its reasons for doing so.

Since, in the long term, it is in the interests of both producers and consumers for the Government to take a market-oriented approach, we also intend to meet our commitment to deregulate the natural gas industry, despite the problems created in this respect by the drop in oil prices. As the November 1 target date draws closer, I will see to it that we take a truly consistent approach bearing in mind the fact that producers must have ready access to bigger markets, while guaranteeing competitive Canadian prices and adequate supplies for the foreseeable future.

In a series of measures—the Western Accord, the Atlantic Accord, the agreement on gas, the abolition of the PGRT, and our approach to such major projects as Husky's in Lloydminster—we always looked upon the development of our energy resources as a means to unite the country. Among other things, we acknowledge the vital role of the provinces in the implementation of coherent energy policies.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I might point out in passing that the World Energy Conference ends today in Cannes, France. Earlier this morning, on behalf of Canada and all Canadians, I had the pleasure of extending an invitation to all participants to come to Montreal in 1989 to continue their discussions. More than 3,000 delegates from the world over will then meet to debate world energy issues.

Mr. Speaker, Canada must also be able to benefit from its plentiful mineral resources to sustain its growth. In this respect I have a particular interest in our asbestos industry. The human cost of the sharp decline in this sector over the past decade is unacceptable to this Government. The labour force dropped from 8,000 to 3,000. Five thousand workers lost their jobs, practically all of them in a region located within my riding. Mr. Speaker, I have seen the heartbreaks and sufferings caused by this crisis.

The Government of Canada gives priority to the asbestos issue because, like most countries and international organizations, it believes that the use of asbestos fibres is not only safe but desirable if adequate controls are in place. The European Economic Community shares our views. International Labour Organization officials endorsed this position a little over three years ago despite the fact that they were fully aware that asbestos workers are undoubtedly those who suffered most from the lack of adequate safety standards.

We have made strong representations on the international scene since September 1984, particularly to the American Environmental Protection Agency.

After my recent trip to Washington, Mr. Speaker, the EPA finally gave up under pressure and agreed to review the figures on which its recommendation to ban asbestos was based, figures which I described as being vague, incomplete and contradictory. I have now every reason to hope that the asbestos issue will not end on a sour note.

The asbestos issue, which is so significant for my own constituency, naturally brings me to speak about Quebec. I pointed out in my introduction how much the themes of the inaugural speech seem to correspond to the needs of modern Quebec. Let me explain.

Throughout the years, Quebec has developed, as was its prerogative, one of the best, if not the best social security system in America. Therefore, when the Government of Canada makes, as it has done, a commitment to improve the system for which it is financially and administratively responsible, Quebecers can only approve. When we state that established rights will be maintained, we are assuring Quebecers and all Canadians that we are pursuing our objective of equity. However, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said, this equity must essentially rely on our collective production of wealth. It is impossible to distribute continuously what we are not producing. In this perspective, the action of the Government has two major thrusts: to slow down the deficit and, at the same time, to stimulate the growth of our collective wealth. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention an important figure.

Since the general election of September 1984, 25 months ago, 120,000 jobs have been created in Quebec alone, for an average of over 4,800 new jobs a month.

The significance of these figures stands out even more if we make a comparison. In the 55-month period before the election, the Liberal Government had created only 41,000 jobs in Quebec. In other words, since 1984, the actions of this Progressive Conservative Government have created three times as many jobs in half the time.

I have no intention to gloat, Mr. Speaker. The Progressive Conservative Government knows better than anyone that there remains a lot to be done in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada.

We are also aware that the time is past when Governments thought they could solve everything by imposing their own will. The Prime Minister described the statement of this Government as a speech of continuity, and he is right. The Government wants to continue and will continue to stimulate the economy by allowing creativity and initiative to find its expression throughout Canada.

There is in Quebec a new generation just as creative as the previous one, but it has other ways to express itself. It is a generation of business women, entrepreneurs, administrators and intellectuals who are developing new relationships between industry and the academic world. This generation has only one message: Let us express our creativity, our taste for invention and our business sense, and we shall give Quebec the economic vitality it was about to lose. This generation does not want to go backward, but forward. It does not want to rehash social or linguistic facts, but to express another kind of vitality. It has said to the State: Thank you very much, we will operate in French, we will preserve our social security schemes, however we are prepared also to assume our responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I like to think that one of the first political initiatives of this generation was to end the Liberal era in 1984 and elect a young government which can understand its needs for expression and appreciate its competence.

I wish to pay tribute to the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada; born in Quebec, he is the perfect model of this generation which has achieved maturity, is eager for justice, proud of its mother tongue and open to the world. Quebec is part and parcel of the future of Canada. About to deal with the essential topic of reconciliation between Canada and Quebec, I should like to quote again the Prime Minister who stated in this House exactly one week ago: "Federal-provincial relations are very important. In my judgment, they are the laboratory of a federal state within which great things can happen. Anyone who tells you that he can run this country by issuing directives from 24 Sussex Drive has a very poor understanding of Canada. The easy way is to issue directives. The tough way is to listen to and understand the regions and to respect their point of view." Mr. Speaker, these words are those of a true statesman. They express a lesson of history, namely, that conflicts can only be resolved through confrontation or through co-operation. Between Canada and Quebec, the years before 1984 were those of confrontation. I will not go over that history again, but we all know it, and I was personally involved in it. I will note however that many political careers here in Ottawa have been built on the exploitation of confrontation.

Ever since the Progressive Conservative Party came to power, the Quebec-Canada constitutional issue has progressed more rapidly than over the previous 15 years. That is because this government has chosen the way of co-operation. It is a difficult way which does not foster enthusiasm easily, but it is the only way. Quebecers indeed expressed their will to remain in Canada during the 1980 referendum, but not at any cost. That is what the Liberal Party of Canada has failed to understand. Quebecers will not let anybody impose on them what they refuse. They are proud of their roots. The generation which has come to power and to which I referred a while ago is a generation of serene, lucid men and women who will negotiate hard. It is a generation which rejects the state as a provider of goods, but accepts it as the guardian of liberties; a generation which will not allow the Canadian and Quebec governments to settle this issue in any other way than "honourably and enthusiastically", to quote Brian Mulroney.

The ways of co-operation are not the ways of abandonment but those of intelligence. Quebecers are too politically astute not to recognize a Government that at last accepts their major contribution to the Canadian federation, a Government that supports their international presence because it believes, and rightly so, that Quebec's contribution enhances Canada's status, while Canada's status benefits Quebec.

Quebec will become a signatory to the Canadian Constitution. In 1984, Quebecers rejected a Liberal Government that held them in contempt, but today, they see themselves reflected in a Progressive Conservative Party where their unique strength is represented and their energy, their special characteristics and their expectations are held in high regard. That is what they expect from the Government of Canada and the Prime Minister of Canada and that is what the Government and the Prime Minister are committed to give.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there will be a new chapter in the history of Canada. After negotiating the Constitution under the Conservative Macdonald-Cartier Government, Quebec was excluded under the Liberals and will now be able to return, its head held high, under Brian Mulroney's Conservative administration.

• (1440)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? If there are no questions or comments, debate.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, when the Speech from the Throne was being read by Her Excellency, the Governor General of Canada, I was absent from Ottawa attending the annual meeting of the Parliamentarians of the Commonwealth, a meeting which this year was held in London, England. That meeting was officially opened by Queen Elizabeth II, who is the head of the Commonwealth, and by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher whose Government was hosting this year's conference. I wish to advise the House that two of the heaviest items on the agenda at the conference were, first, the continuing, distressing and disturbing question of apartheid in South Africa and, second, the future of the Commonwealth itself.

At the conference, there was an air of confidence that the racist regime in South Africa would eventually collapse. It was also felt that those Governments that had introduced strong economic sanctions were Governments that were helping to bring about the collapse of that white supremacy regime much faster than would otherwise be the case. It was felt that what has happened in southern Rhodesia, which is now the new nation of Zimbabwe and now has a high degree of racial harmony, will in fact also be the pattern in South Africa in time.

Of course, the United Kingdom was somewhat embarrassed by its position on sanctions. Baroness Young made a noble attempt to explain to delegates from all across the Commonwealth that the U.K. position could be justified, but in fact her speech was rather poorly received. It was necessary for no less a personage than the Foreign Minister of the United Kingdom, Sir Geoffrey Howe, to come to the conference to indicate that there was no question at all about the United Kingdom's commitment to the Commonwealth and about the United Kingdom's desire to see apartheid end in South Africa, but that it could not agree with other Commonwealth leaders including Canada that sanctions would be effective.

In speaking at that conference, I was proud to say that Canada's position was unequivocal and strong. Many other delegates from across the Commonwealth praised the leadership of Canada and, as one delegate among the many, that gave me reason for pride in my own country.

I notice that the Speech from the Throne reinforces the commitment of Canada to the Commonwealth and to the ending of apartheid in South Africa. I will quote from the Speech from the Throne because I think it is important to all Canadians:

> The Commonwealth is central to Canada's efforts to promote, through concerted international action, a process of political dialogue in South Africa aimed at establishing representative government.

It is, I think, almost impossible for reasonable men and women to understand how one could make any sort of a justifiable argument for preventing a majority of the people in a given nation-state from having their say at the ballot box and from being represented in a free Parliament.

Returning to Ottawa after attending this very exhilarating and useful conference, I examined for myself and read very carefully the Speech from the Throne. As Hon. Members might expect, I looked particularly for pertinent references dealing with such questions as aboriginal rights, a new comprehensive native claims policy, Indian self-government and constitutional and political development in northern Canada.

I recognize as do all Hon. Members that not every single thing can be mentioned in a Speech from the Throne. Simply because something is omitted does not necessarily mean that there will be an absence of action. Nevertheless, I think the one single reference to aboriginal rights and the upcoming First Ministers' Conference on that subject scheduled for the spring of 1987 did seem to me to be just a little on the slim side for such a major issue in Canadian public policy.

I have to say that the one reference to aboriginal rights that was made in the Speech from the Throne was undoubtedly an important reference. There is no question about that at all. However, unless I am guilty of a misinterpretation, its phrasing seemed to me to carry with it a certain weariness and a certain frustration with the process of defining and entrenching aboriginal rights in the Constitution of Canada.

The Speech from the Throne mentioned that the question of aboriginal rights is still on the constitutional agenda. It then went on to say that the federal Government will exert every possible effort to bring these discussions to a successful conclusion, but there are the provinces with which to contend. The Speech from the Throne seems to imply that this reality will make life very difficult, indeed.

I have the distinct impression that with respect to its commitment to Indian self-government, to aboriginal rights and to the settlement of native claims, the Government is moving down market. I do hope I am wrong. If I am, I will be the first to admit it and to rejoice in the fact that I am wrong, but I do feel that these issues are sliding down on the scale of national priorities.

The Leader of the Government in the other place has said that we must plan for success, but he made repeated references to the cost of the effects of failure. My fear is that there is a mind-set developing toward the inevitable failure of this next crucial First Ministers' Conference scheduled for the spring of next year.

When I read what was written in the Speech from the Throne, I contrasted that with the election promise made by the Government in 1984. At that time, government Members said that they were going to continue to search for an accord on self-government issues. I found that promise to be strong and unequivocal. Even the Throne Speech of 1984 was stronger in its language. It talked about the need to honour the commitment to Canada's aboriginal peoples contained in the Constitution Act of 1982, and said that for these people, as for all Canadians, the high expectations that attended the act of patriation must not be disappointed. There is a continuing search; high expectations must not be disappointed. Those were things said in the past. The current Speech from the Throne indicates that the question is still on the agenda. There seems to be a kind of weariness about it all. Although some politicians, officials, or Premiers of the provinces may be weary with the topic, it will not go away. It is either this Government or its successor which will have to face up to the reality that there must be a resolution. The resolution must be just, be historically based, and satisfy the expectations which are abounding in the country.

• (1450)

I have not been in the House of Commons all that long, but the issue of Indian self-government and aboriginal rights, in the time you, Sir, and I have been Members of the House of Commons, has moved from a position where it was regarded as being something radical and remote, to a position where it was considered to be ridiculous for a while, and now to a position where it is relevant and a reality.

I should like to spend a few minutes talking about high expectations. Exactly what are the high expectations of Canada's indigenous people? For what will they be looking at the First Ministers Conference which we believe is scheduled for sometime during the month of April, 1987? Let us be very clear. They are looking for an acknowledgement, a right which they believe to be an inherent and unsurrendered right. They are looking to have that right recognized and protected in the Constitution of Canada. There is a very big difference—and it should not escape any of us—between having a right protected and recognized in the Constitution and merely enshrining a principle. I am not opposed to enshrining principles, but if we want reality to flow from constitutional amendment, it must be more than the enshrining of a principle; it must be the recognition and protection of a right which, I repeat, was never surrendered and is inherent.

Beyond that, the discussions at the First Ministers' Conference in the spring of next year must be serious, practical, and detailed in certain specific respects. For example, we cannot any longer avoid facing up to the necessity of an expanded land base for the indigenous people of Canada. I do not want to spend time giving a history lesson to the House of Commons, but it is terribly incongruous that the original inhabitants of the land, those who occupied and used the land in the north, west, east and centre, constitute only 2 per cent of Canada's population today. That 2 per cent of the population has a certain degree of control over only one-quarter of 1 per cent of the land in Canada. I say only "a certain degree of control" because we know that Indian lands are administered under the authority of the Indian Act and that the Department of Indian Affairs has a great deal to say about how that land is used.

Also we must talk about resources at the upcoming First Ministers' Conference. When the country was explored and then settled, the indigenous people of Canada were the people who controlled wildlife resources and the fishery. It was their livelihood and it gave their lives meaning. Today we have court cases and disputes about control and jurisdiction over wildlife resources and the fishery. Surely Canada is mature enough, and surely there are those people in the country who can provide leadership, so that we can arrange some kind of co-management agreements which will work, and quit engaging in terrible confrontations such as the one we saw in the Province of British Columbia when the federal Department of Fisheries engaged in hand-to-hand combat with native people over the fishery. I felt ashamed to see that on television. We cannot blame the fisheries officers; they are simply carrying out orders based upon a policy made by the central Government. We must talk about those matters and resolve the question of wildlife and fishery resources.

In respect of other resources, there must be a facing up to the reality that the revenues which flow from resource development must be shared in one way or another with the original peoples of Canada. Finally, we must be very practical, serious, and detailed about the legal and financial relationships between the Government of Canada and the native people.

I do not want to repeat the Manitoba situation again because there have been questions about it in the House, but it resulted from an unsatisfactory financial regime between the Government of Canada and the Indian people in that province who were given the responsibility of providing local services.

We require what was contained in the report of the special committee on Indian self-government—nothing other than a new, fresh, workable relationship between the central Government, of which we are a part in one way or another, and the Indian people of Canada, the indigenous people of Canada, the original inhabitants of the country. Surely to goodness we can accomplish that. I think the rest of the world is watching carefully to see whether we can provide leadership in this area. The opportunities are present. If we fail at the next First Ministers Conference, it will be to the lasting shame of our great country.

Let me say that the present policy of Indian self-government devised by the Department of Indian Affairs is totally unacceptable. It is too slow, and it is too restrictive. I should like to refer to the national management plan in respect of self-government to the year 1990. It indicates that from the adoption of the federal Government's present self-government policy to April 1, 1988, a minimum of five Indian bands and Inuit communities are expected to be under the self-government regime. Can we imagine anything moving as slowly as that? If we talk with the Sechelt people of British Columbia, who just yesterday finally had their self-government Bill proclaimed, they will say that that is the pace at which we are moving. What is even more disturbing from the management plan is that up to 1990 we expect a minimum of 20 Indian bands and Inuit communities to be under the self-government regime. At that pace, the Department of Indian Affairs will be with us another 100 years. That is exactly what some of us anticipated when the Department of Indian Affairs embraced the policy of self-government and said that it would make the policy work. It is going to make it work on its terms. It is going to guarantee its own longevity. It is going to be around for a very long time and the pace is going to be as slow as all of that.

• (1500)

The aboriginal peoples of this country are becoming impatient. They want decisive action. Let no one misunderstand what they are seeking to do. In advocating self-government they are not seeking to separate from the rest of us. There is no question of that at all. They are seeking to join Confederation, to become working partners with the rest of us so we can have effective government at all levels. No matter how it is worked out, what the indigenous people of Canada are seeking is to have more control over their own affairs.

In the closing minutes, if I have enough time, permit me perhaps to quote two of the leading spokesmen in the indigenous community who can speak with far more authority on this than I could ever hope to. Dorothy Wabisca, Vice-President of the Native Council of Canada, says:

> Self-government includes the right to have a meaningful say in our day-to-day lives.

What could be more reasonable than that? Who among us in this House of Commons would want to have every aspect of our lives rigidly controlled by an Act of Parliament? We would be the first to be screaming for emancipation. Yet the indigenous people of Canada live under an authoritarian Act of this House called the Indian Act. It is an intolerable situation. I turn to another leading spokesman, Mr. Georges Erasmus, National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations, who says:

> What we are after is power where it is possible and in as many cases as is logical and reasonable for the First Nations to control their own lives without influence.

I think that says it all, Mr. Speaker. I intend in the course of this session to introduce a resolution which will support what will take place at the First Ministers' Conference. I will be asking all Hon. Members to support that resolution not only by making good speeches but by standing in their places and, when you call the vote, Sir, saying yea and not nay.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I was interested to hear from the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) about the Commonwealth Conference which he attended. I share his pride and agree with the position that Canada has taken regarding apartheid. I would like to ask him about the situation here at home. I know he is interested in native children as well as in native communities. I know that he will share some of the concerns that we have had in the Special Committee on Child Care. We heard from many representatives of the native community about not having services for native children. Native people want control of child welfare in their communities and they want services to help promote their culture. Children are extremely important to them. They are the future of their communities.

Is the Hon. Member aware of some of the funding problems? I just found out about this situation in British Columbia. There are many many reserves on Vancouver Island, in the northern part of British Columbia and I think the Yukon as well, and only about $45,000 is allocated for community funds. That is the only budget to cover anything on reserves having to do with families, and none of it, I understand, is for child care programs. At the same time the federal Government has been down-sizing the DIA staff and that means some pretty substantial salary moneys going back into the pot, I assume, which money, in my view, should be going to community services under the control of native groups. Does the Hon. Member have any comment to make about that issue and what should be done about it?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I would like to respond to that very relevant question. At the beginning let me say that I regret that I cannot directly give an answer to British Columbia. What is happening in one province is probably the same as in the other regions of the country with respect to Indian Affairs policy.

The best example on child welfare I can give the Hon. Member is in the Province of Manitoba where a tripartite agreement was arranged between the Government of Manitoba, the federal Government and the Indian leaders of the province. The first agreement was to run for five years. It is just now subject to negotiation and signing for another period of time. The idea was that when the Indian people of Manitoba assumed responsibility for child welfare there was to be a comparable level of service to that provided by the provincial administration.

In Manitoba, the child welfare programs now under the authority of the Indian people of Manitoba have worked extremely well. The goals they set for themselves have been met. They are satisfied with assuming this responsibility. The Province of Manitoba continues to set high standards for child care. The Indian people of Manitoba who have this responsibility find they cannot live up to the provincial standards because the Government here in Ottawa will not provide a comparable level of funding. We have created two situations. We have created two nations. This is where the theme of broken promises is repeated again, again and again. Although the Minister refuses to accept the fact so far that broken promises and broken agreements are the theme right across the country, I think the Assembly of First Nations, the Cree people in the James Bay area of northern Quebec and many other indigenous groups are gathering information which will convince the new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) that this is the pattern and it is a pattern that has to be broken very quickly.

Mr. Nickerson: Canadian parliamentarians, I am sure, were well represented by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) at the CPA conference in Great Britain. I for one, and I am sure most other Members here today, were pleased with the report that he gave us of that meeting. I have a couple of comments to which I would hope the Hon. Member can reply.

First, dealing with his report saying that Commonwealth members were trying to engineer the collapse of the Government of South Africa, I would hope that he is not a victim of Marxist theory according to which you have to bring a government down, get to a state of anarchy and then kind of build up from there. There are great dangers involved with that revolutionary approach, not the least of which is a possible bloodbath. I would hope that what might be achieved is a smooth transition from a racially restricted Government to one that embraces equal opportunity for members of all races.

This brings me to my second point. I have the honour to represent a constituency where about half the population is of aboriginal decsent and the other half consists of Canadians of descent from all over the world including a fair proportion of recent immigrants. We, meaning the people of the west and Northwest Territories, for 20 years or so gave a great deal of thought and devoted a lot of energy to what might be the best system of government. We, collectively after that hard work and thought, have come up with the proposition that we should not have racially restricted Governments. It should be one person, one vote regardless of the race and everybody can work together for the Government and for the betterment of all people. That is what we want, which seems to go a little bit against what the Hon. Member was saying.

Would the Hon. Member be so kind as to reconcile on the one hand his abhorrence, which I share, with racially restricted Government in South Africa and, on the other hand, his advocacy of what appear to be racially restricted Governments in Canada? We talk about Indian self-government, Government by people of one race, and the establishment of what could well amount to homelands. How can he reconcile those two?

• (1510)

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, that question can be answered very quickly. First, the Member asks about the South African regime. He asks whether we do not want a smooth transition. Certainly we want a smooth transition. All that is necessary is for the present Government in South Africa to pass a Bill which would extend the franchise to all people who live within the boundaries of that nation. All that is necessary is to give the vote to the people.

The Member wants to draw a very spurious analogy between that situation and the advocacy of self-government for Indian people in Canada. If he will take the time to read what no less a knowledgeable person than the Hon. Mr. Berger has written, he will realize that the definition of apartheid is to refuse access. In the advocacy of self-government to give Indian people control over the matters that affect their day to day lives there is no restriction of any kind to access to the greater society, be it the vote, be it running for public office or any sort of restriction of even the most minute form. To draw a spurious relationship is quite unworthy of the Hon. Member. I know that he knows much better and is just trying to bait me a little bit. I do not mind that at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Montmorency—Orléans (Mrs. Blouin).

[Translation]

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to congratulate our new Speaker on being elected to the Chair of this House, and also the Deputy Speaker and Acting Speakers, and assure them of my co-operation.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege for me to rise in the House today in response to the Speech from the Throne. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the entire population of the riding of Montmorency—Orléans takes pride in the opportunity I am given today.

Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, start my speech with a brief description of my riding and an outline of its history. Subsequently, I intend to comment on the themes of social justice contained in the Speech from the Throne. Northeast of Quebec City, Montmorency—Orléans covers an area of nearly 2,969 square kilometers. Its south side borders on the St. Lawrence River, while its northern limits go as far as the Parc des Laurentides. To the east, it has always entertained harmonious relations with its neighbour, the riding of Charlevoix.

Seventy per cent of the riding's 90,000 people live in the urban area of Beauport. As the economic focus of the riding, Beauport has many small- and medium-sized businesses, mainly in the services sector.

Agriculture is an integral part of life in this riding. Most arable land is found on the Île d'Orléans and along the Beaupré shore. The farmers in Montmorency—Orléans are knowledgeable and skilled, proud of their often ancestral properties, while they have no hesitation in using the latest technology to upgrade their production capacity in various agricultural sectors.

Mr. Speaker, Montmorency—Orléans is also a part of our history. With Quebec City, this region can claim to have been the womb of French culture in North America. More recently, the town of Sainte-Anne-de-Beaupré became a famous stop on Pope Jean Paul II's historic pilgrimage on Canadian soil.

Already famous for its pilgrimages, the region also has a wild life reserve, a genuine sanctuary for white geese, whose fame has reached beyond our borders.

As an area that attracts tourism, the riding includes among its many attractions Montmorency Falls, the highest falls in Quebec, and Mont Sainte-Anne, a ski resort of international calibre.

Mr. Speaker, I could not describe this region without evoking the rural charms of the Île d'Orléans. It has been described by poet Félix Leclerc as 40 miles of tranquility, and for farmers of the Côte de Beaupré, its reflection in the St. Lawrence still remains the best of barometers.

Mr. Speaker, the residents of my constituency are warm people, full of originality and aware of the historic and cultural significance of their region.

In the Throne Speech, the Government squarely states its will to improve the quality of life for all Canadians. This Government confirmed its determination to achieve this social objective by stating its desire to make of this country, and I quote: . . . a modern, tolerant and caring nation in which its citizens are secure and prosperous.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian families are not immune to the upheavals and reassessments which typify this period in history. Family members are facing new commitments and, in many cases, a new sharing of parental responsibilities.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, it is imperative to take concrete action to promote the development of the family unit. As far as the family is concerned, the Government must also become the catalyst for a change in attitudes. In family-related matters, the Government recognizes the obvious expertise of the various groups interested in these issues and listens carefully to all their suggestions. Our Government is responsive to the needs of the Canadian family and will continue to work for its development.

At a time when some people are vainly attempting to discredit our efforts and question our will to honour our commitments, it is my conviction, Mr. Speaker, that we are on the right track.

The Government, in its efforts to maintain the quality of life for our senior citizens, has announced that low-income widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 will now receive a larger part of the spouse allowance, at whatever age their spouse may have deceased. It is important to note here that mostly women will benefit from this.

It is along those lines, with that sense of social responsibility that the Government intends to maintain its support to senior citizens. In that respect, let me recall the changes proposed to the Canada Pension Plan, a package of various improvements including benefit eligibility at 60, higher disability benefits, the extension of the survivor's pension in case of remarriage, and new rules for sharing credits and pensions between spouses.

Who among senior citizens does not benefit from the New Horizons Program? This is a program that enables them to carry on community-oriented projects which they have themselves designed and managed. This Government has not forgotten that those people are the very foundation of our society.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention to the House a subject which understandably is of a particular concern to me, the status of women.

When they come to Parliament, women of course are entering a place that has been largely permeated with exclusively masculine values. But today, they help change the rules of the game. Men and women understand that diversity is a source of enrichment for Parliament and a sure factor of true democracy.

This Government has shown how serious its commitments were with respect to the economic and social development of women. The labour market now includes 347,000 more women than in September 1984, while the unemployment rate has declined by 2.4 points.

Let me stress here, Mr. Speaker, some achievements directly linked with the subject at hand. Better job and training opportunities; employment equity in jobs under federal jurisdiction; a new divorce act; improved pensions for women; increase in women appointments, and the forthcoming publication, next November, of the report on child care by a parliamentary task force.

Over the past two years, Mr. Speaker, the status of women has greatly improved, but much remains to be done. Aware of their difficulties, concerns and rights, I will watch very closely how the issues of particular interest to them will progress.

We must assume a great social responsibility towards the emergence of the various social realities among women. Mr. Speaker, we will pursue with determination the objectives which we have set up in order to guarantee women a decent future.

I was delighted to read in the Speech of the Throne, that the Government intends to intensify its fight against the harmful effects of pornography, a major factor which contributes to violence against women and children.

When a free society wishes to assess itself, it is brought naturally to wonder how its citizens should behave and what limits there should be to their free expression. There are no easy answers to these two questions, but only in trying to delineate the elements of a possible answer can we possibly define our freedoms and responsibilities.

Again, Mr. Speaker, our Government has a major role to play. With the assistance of the various people concerned, it is necessary, even imperative, to convince Canadians to tackle the roots of this problem and to remedy the situation.

The same applies to violence against women; even though it is not new, this problem concerns all of us and its solution depends upon our collective efforts. It is a complex issue which necessitates co-operation and understanding in the steps to come. But we simply cannot afford to wait much longer to find solutions to this problem which, in a modern society such as ours, is troubling, not to say embarrassing.

Since our election, Mr. Speaker, we spared no time and energy to improve the condition of our young people. Our efforts have been rewarded and we have made remarkable progress in the past two years. From 18.4 per cent on election day, the youth unemployment rate has now dropped to 15 per cent. The number of jobs for young people has increased considerably during the same period. Lastly, the programs launched by this Government to promote student employment have led to a sharp increase in the number of summer jobs for students.

Much remains to be done, Mr. Speaker, and this is why the Speech from the Throne advocates better opportunities for young Canadian men and women. As indicated in the Speech from the Throne, the Government is firmly resolved to pave the way for closer co-operation between the federal administration, the provinces and the private sector to improve employment opportunities for young people so they will take a more active part in productive and challenging endeavours.

The Speech from the Throne also highlights our commitment to promote small business and private initiative, especially through new projects designed to instill a genuine spirit of entrepreneurship in young Canadians.

The quality of post-secondary education also ranks high on the agenda of the Government. To help meet the challenges facing higher education, the Government will propose a national forum on post-secondary education, to be held early next year.

During the first session our Government introduced Bill C-18 which was given third reading by the House. Since this Criminal Code amendment became law, there has been a sharp decline in cases of impaired driving which, as we know, is the main cause of highway accidents. Penalties are much stiffer and many drivers think twice before getting behind the wheel. The 1985 Christmas highway toll was the lowest in many years.

In the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, the Government is again committed to support the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse. The Government has indicated its firm intention to implement strong measures against the serious threat of widespread trafficking in hard drugs. To prevent drug and alcohol abuse, the Government will propose a national strategy to fight against drugs, and a comprehensive action program to reduce impaired driving. The Government will continue to campaign in Canada and elsewhere to put a stop to the use of drugs by amateur athletes.

On the international level, the major supplier countries keep producing large quantities of drugs. On the national level, there is no indication that drugs are less available. The overall value of drugs seized by Customs Canada exceeds $244 million, a 142 per cent increase over the estimated value for 1984. Total drug seizures made by Customs Canada increased 10 per cent over the previous year.

It must be noted that drug seizures by Canadian Customs over the first six months of 1986 are higher than those recorded during the whole of 1985. At the end of June 1986, the value of drug seizures totalled $334.6 million, some $100 million more than the total for 1985. The report on drug seizures for 1985 shows an increase in the number of cocaine and heroin seizures and also in the quantity of those drugs that were intercepted, but heroin accounts for the major part of the increase. I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that no one can remain indifferent in the face of those figures. I am therefore convinced the measures the Government will be proposing to control hard drug abuse will meet with unanimous approval.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have had an opportunity to comment on some aspects of the Throne Speech that deal more specially with social justice. That Speech assures the Canadian people of our constant commitment to improve their well-being. Under the guidance and leadership of this Progressive Conservative Government, our country will experience physical, moral, intellectual and cultural growth. Many are the fields of interest in which Canadian men and women can come forward with new ideas to strenghten our development, in an atmosphere of peace and serenity. That progress, Mr. Speaker, is further evidence of the qualities of our Canadian people and their firm intention to participate fully in the development and strenghtening of the nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions, comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak about the Speech from the Throne. We have had this particular majority Government for two years and it is now, to some extent, taking on the appearance of its predecessor. Members opposite, while they may have the majority of seats in this House, should remember that only 50 per cent of the people voted for them and a good portion of that vote has crumbled away. The arrogance of the majority is showing through more and more. The Government needs to remember that the essence of democracy is the consent of the governed. If you do not have that consent, your mandate is tentative. After two years, I suggest that the mandate of this Government is tentative only. It no longer has a majority of the voters supporting it.

Given the need to do something about that crumbling mandate, the Government brought forward the Speech from the Throne. It was, I suppose, an attempt by the Government to put a new mask on an old face. The Speech from the Throne was supposed to be the manifestation of that new face which it hoped the people of the country would recognize. Unfortunately, its mask is a little thin and in the short time since prorogation and the Speech from the Throne, it appears that the old face is increasingly showing through. Ordinary Canadians recognize the old face of the Government as that of a government which concerns itself particularly with the protection of the privileged in every way possible.

When we consider the past two-year record of the Government, we think of patronage appointments, support of corporate power in the banks and of industrial giants, attacks on the universality of our social structure, bail-outs of industrial and financial institutions. It has been a Government that gave the edge to the privileged while the underprivileged were expected to make their own way.

It is very interesting to note that even in its attempt to show a new face in the Speech from the Throne, many of the items that were brought forward in this Speech from the Throne can be directly related to the 1984 Speech from the Throne.

• (1530)

Let me give a few examples, of which there are many. In 1984 the Government suggested that it needed to defend and strengthen the Canadian family. In the two years since it took office it slashed the family allowance and made a strong attempt to change pensions. It has consistently attacked universality. The Government has done many things to weaken the family structure, but in the current Speech from the Throne it stated that the Canadian family is the cornerstone which the Government will support and strengthen. The Throne Speech indicates it will go on strengthening the Canadian family, yet for two years the Government attempted to weaken it.

In the 1984 Speech from the Throne, the Government said it would make the tax system simpler and fairer. Direct taxes have trebled since then and the income tax structure has been made much more complex in the last two years with the addition of more loopholes for the privileged so that they may make more money and pay less taxes. In 1986, the Government again claims that it will make the tax system simpler and more comprehensive.

In the 1984 Speech from the Throne, the Government said that accessible and affordable child care was needed. It did nothing except to establish Study No. 3, which was supposed to make recommendations about what the Government should do in this particular area. In its 1986 Speech from the Throne, the Government said that adequate quality must be made available in child care.

In 1984, the Government said in its Speech from the Throne that legislation to control pornography will be brought forward. While the Government introduced such legislation, it was almost a bust and created a great deal of concern. In its 1986 Speech from the Throne, the Government suggests that it will take effective action, and let us hope that it does.

In 1984, the Government stated that the Constitution would be incomplete without Quebec. In its 1986 Speech from the Throne, the Government stated it would do its utmost to make Quebec a full partner in the Constitution.

I believe these examples suggest that the Government's old face has not been entirely covered and shows through even in the wording in the Speech from the Throne.

Furthermore, the Speech from the Throne illustrates the Government's propensity to conduct studies. For instance, it will study agriculture at the economic summit and GATT talks. It will conduct a national forum on education, an advisory board and strategy board on scientific research, as well as a space agency. If a Government does not want to take action, the best way to guarantee that there is no action is to send these matters to another committee for another study. In this way the Government will not have to take action in these areas for the next two years.

The Government did not mention the question of agriculture in 1984, yet, in 1986, it was the first item in the Speech from the Throne. I congratulate the Government for that because we must not neglect agriculture. However, this first item in the Government's Throne Speech shows the thinness of the mask over the Government's old face. While agriculture should hold a position of great importance in our economy, it is facing the most problems at this time. The agricultural sector provides our country with approximately 50 per cent of our foreign exchange, yet it has the most need for quick action. It became quite obvious to the House, Canadians, farmers and people in many other countries that as a result of the United States Farm Bill, the farm economy in Canada, particularly in grain production, would be in trouble because that Bill would push the prices down. The farm groups knew this and came to us saying that something should be done.

Not only were we in the Opposition aware of these problems, the Government knew of them as well. On March 21, after the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) visit to President Reagan, he stated in response to my question that they recognized there was a problem with the Farm Bill. Incidentally, that Bill was passed on December 27, 1985, and there was no doubt since then that we were going to have problems with the price of grain across Canada. The Minister stated at that time that they recognized the problems and would give it the highest priority. That was eight months ago. The Prime Minister's response to my question was in March, also several months ago.

• (1540)

I think the farm community has the right to ask why no action has been taken. Why was there not a plan in place? Why do they yet not know what is going to be done to assist them to survive? The United States Government had in place in the passing of the Farm Bill a structure which gave the farmers of the United States more than $6 Canadian a bushel for wheat. They knew last December that when they planted grain this spring they would get that amount for their grain in the fall. We knew when we planted our grain this spring we were likely to receive $2.50 or $3 Canadian a bushel, half of the guaranteed U.S. price.

The farmers of Europe, who in the last few years, are producing a considerable amount of grain, wheat, canola or rapeseed, as it is called, before they plant their crop, they know what they are going to receive for it. I recognize that some of the problems of overproduction in Europe are directly related to that policy, but we should be able to learn from that policy and put in place some kind of structure in Canada which would allow the farmers to survive, still be productive and contribute to the economy.

The farmers should be asking, as they are, why was a plan not in place? Compare that with the weekend decision to bail out the bank which was in trouble. On Friday night the bank was in trouble. The announcement was made on Tuesday afternoon that the Government would provide for the two banks what amounted in the end to over $1 billion. Compare that also to the action taken by previous Governments as well as this Government for large corporations such as Massey-Ferguson and the Chrysler Corporation for loan guarantees. Not only did the U.S. Farm Bill guarantee that we are going to receive a very low price for our grain but almost at the same time the U.S. put in place the BISEP Program which subsidized the export of U.S. grain.

We can argue the pros and cons of why it was done. The suggestion is that it was done to save the markets the U.S. felt it was losing in various parts of the world to the European community. That is probably so, but it did happen to the extent that a ton of wheat, which costs approximately $200 to produce in Canada, was being delivered to countries such as Egypt and Algeria for approximately $100 Canadian. In other words, to work in that market, we would have had to sell the grain at half the cost of production. That is a problem which the Government had to face. I appreciate the effort made by the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board in trying to get the rest of the wheat producers of the world, the U.S. and the European Common Market, to recognize the fallacy of their policy. I have assisted wherever possible to get the word out that something needs to be done about the syndrome of subsidies to farm grains.

In the end, what was important was some kind of action which would make it possible for the farmers to survive. Right at the moment in western Canada—and I cannot speak for the rest of the country, but I think it is not that far different—approximately 25 per cent of the farmers who raise grain and depend on the sale of grain for their incomes are in a position where, at the price which is presently being paid for grain, they will not survive another year. Take away 25 per cent of the farmers and you make a big hole in the farm community and the effective rural economy of the Prairies.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in the Speech from the Throne, and after the Speech, suggested they were going to take certain action. I suggest their action is too little and too late. The suggested amount of $1 billion is less than would be necessary to bring the price of wheat and barley in the prairie provinces only up to the lowest price paid in the United States, or up to the cost of production. It is not even enough to do that. The amount being suggested of $1 billion is to be divided by the graingrowers right across Canada. And that is right. The $1 billion, or whatever the Government decides is going to be given, should be divided on the basis of all those people producing grains and affected by the reduction in the price. But it is, as I said, too little and too late.

Members of the farm community in the United States and in Europe have had the comfort of knowing that what they produced was going to bring back at least the cost of production. The farmers in Canada, in all provinces, have not had that comfort. The comfort which has been extended to them, which was that we will pay for their transition in getting out of farming, has been of much less comfort than could have been expected.

Therefore, I suggest that the Speech from the Throne, contained a lot of nice words, a lot of words which should make us think we are going in the right direction, but those words are a mask which covers the face of a Government which does not yet recognize that all the people are its responsibility, that the farmers who are suffering now, the underprivileged, should also be part of it. The attempt to show a more caring face is not really coming through. The old mask of the Party for the privileged is showing more often than it should.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) for his excellent speech. I have had the pleasure of working on the Committee on Agriculture with the Hon. Member and he is obviously very knowledgeable about these topics. I just wanted to make a brief comment and ask the Hon. Member to respond. It has to do with the U.S. Farm Bill.

Together with other Hon. Members of the House I had the opportunity to go to Washington earlier this year in order to have a three-day briefing on the U.S. Farm Bill. Quite apart from the fact that it is a disastrous piece of legislation in terms of what it will do to Canadian agriculture, $70 billion U.S. in subsidies, which is $100 billion Canadian, is aimed directly at competing against our agricultural commodities. When we came out of our briefings in Washington we had meetings with our Embassy people. I asked our Embassy people the following questions. What kind of lobby did we put together to ensure that this type of legislation would not pass? What attempts did we make in order to have the legislation amended which, in turn, would reduce the serious effects that it would cause Canadian agriculture? More specifically, I asked whom we had hired to lobby on our behalf.

• (1550)

As all Hon. Members know, we hired Mr. Deaver to lobby on acid rain, despite the fact that he was apparently a controversial individual. However, he did an effective lobbying job, or at least he was seen as being effective. I was told that we did not hire anyone to perform a lobbying function and that, in fact, whatever lobbying was done was done by a few staff members at our Washington Embassy. That was the response to what I consider to be one of the most offensive pieces of legislation to Canadian agriculture passed by any country on the face of the globe. We did not even retaliate or attempt to influence the legislation other than by having one or two people at our Embassy make a few phone calls, or whatever else they did.

Will the Hon. Member respond to my comments? As far as I can see, this issue is an important and fundamental one. Perhaps if we had made a better effort we could have had some impact with respect to lessening the bad side-effects of the legislation.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and for his comment. I think that he has answered his own question in that we know what was done and what was not done in order to have some effect on the legislation.

The Hon. Member pointed out one of the factors which not only we in Canada but those in the world community dependent on trade need to consider. I refer to the ideology which allowed, suggested, or even pushed the U.S. Congress to pass such legislation even when it knew it would have some effect on the economies of the world, not only the Canadian economy but the economies of many other countries. I refer to countries such as Zambia, for instance, which was affected by the Farm Bill. Zambia can no longer sell the peanuts which it produces. Peanuts are also being dumped on the world market at lower prices. The legislation affects the Third World as well as countries such as Canada.

It is absolutely necessary to change the ideology of trade. It is no longer any good to do what must be done at the expense of whoever happens to be in the road. That is the philosophy on which the Farm Bill was constructed. Unfortunately, such a move affects not only us Canadians but most primary producers in the world.

Mr. Brightwell: Mr. Speaker, I always listen closely to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). I noted a variety of subjects that he discussed today. I took particular note of his statement with regard to agriculture. He said that French farmers knew, when they planted their crops, what they would receive. He said the same with respect to American farmers. I suggest to the Hon. Member that perhaps in Canada farmers know what they will receive when they plant their crops. We have agriculture stabilization legislation which allows for a payment of some 90 per cent of the five-year average price for crops. Thus, I believe Canadian farmers know what they will receive for their crops.

I also wish to bring up another point. I believe the Hon. Member is sitting too close to members of the Official Opposition. He is becoming affected by their rhetoric, especially that of the Hon. Member for Montréal—Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart) and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) who both take off on flights of fancy every once in a while.

The Hon. Member said that we bailed out the banks. Of course we did not bail out the banks; we bailed out the investors. The Hon. Member said that pornography legislation is of great concern. There was a bit of a play on words in his remarks. He said that the pornography legislation was a bust.

The Hon. Member discussed the area of the family allowance. He said that we have not allowed the family allowance to grow as fast as the rate of inflation. With such a low rate of inflation I do not know how he can go so far as to say that we slashed the family allowance. Those are my comments.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I will deal first with the subject of the family allowance since that was the Hon. Member's last point. I know what the Government did to the family allowance. I know that the payments did not go down, and I accept that. However, they are now less than they would have been if the Government had allowed the law which was in place to stay in place. What is the difference if the price of bread goes up and a person dependent on the family allowance to buy food for the family does not receive an increase in his or her family allowance? There is no difference between the family allowance not being increased and buying bread that costs more. I am suggesting that what the Government did is the same as cutting the family allowance. The rhetoric that is used to defend the move is just that. It is rhetoric that affects poor families in the same way as if their family allowances had been cut.

As far as agriculture is concerned, we need a global policy on agriculture. The Government seems incapable of looking at agriculture as a whole. Stabilization policies are the taking over of problems that do not solve the problems concerning farm economies.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would feel more comfortable with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) if he had mentioned the child tax credit and its delivery to the poorest sector of the Canadian economy when he talked about family allowance. The two matters are tied together. I am comfortable with our Government's attempts to provide money to those who need it most in our society, particularly when we spend so much on the interest payments on debt which was run up by the previous Government supported by the New Democratic Party back in 1972-73. They created the problem and we are doing our best to solve it as quickly as we can. We would appreciate a little support in that regard.

Can the Hon. Member tell us how many embassies and consulates we have in the United States? Can he tell us how many Canadians are working on behalf of Canadian agriculture in those embassies and consulates? Is it 100, 200, or 300? I would not want the Hon. Member to leave the impression with the House that we are not putting some resources into our relationship with the Americans in terms of agriculture.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member does not expect me to be able to answer such a detailed question. However, I want to make the point that the child tax credit was taken up as a result of the direct taxes levied at almost the same time. In effect, it was given with one hand and taken away with the other before it could be used to feed those who need it.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted on behalf of my constituents of Nepean—Carleton to rise in the Chamber this afternoon and to share with you and with my colleagues in the House of Commons some of my concerns and remarks regarding the Speech from the Throne.

If we look back to 1984 when we as a Government delivered our first Speech from the Throne, we find that we had four cornerstones at that time. They were economic renewal, national reconciliation, social justice and constructive internationalism. I think the Government now recognizes, as do most Canadians, that those goals are within our reach. If we as a Government can achieve those goals in the course of our mandate, then we will have done well by Canadians and by our great country. When reading the Speech from the Throne, one always asks oneself, perhaps selfishly at first, how the material in the Speech impacts upon one's constituents. Then, of course, one asks oneself how it impacts upon Canadians.

• (1600)

As I read the Speech from the Throne, and particularly those aspects that relate to environmental protection, programs for veterans, programs that will affect the Canadian family and child care, elevating the importance of volunteerism, establishing our sovereignty in the Arctic, enhancing the National Capital Commission, placing new emphasis on research and on science and technology, placing new emphasis on our post-secondary processes of education and research, and moving through the world with peace and justice as priorities, I found a great deal for my constituents.

You have been in this House for some time, Mr. Speaker. Two of my predecessors, the late Hon. Walter Baker and the Hon. Mr. Bell were colleagues of yours. They served the House with grace, strength and sincerity and with productivity. Prior to them, there were other great parliamentarians representing my riding, including George Drew, the Hon. R. L. Borden and, before him, of course, Sir John A. Macdonald. Over the years since Confederation, my constituency has been very well served in this House. I am proud to be a part of that tradition and a part of the present Government so that I may carry on with enhancing my community and enhancing Canada in some small way.

Going back to the time of Macdonald, the part of Carleton County which includes Nepean—Carleton was then totally an agricultural community. In the days since, it has progressed from an agricultural and bedroom community to a dynamic mixture of rural and urban. Now the riding contains some 135,000 people but, more important, there are about 36,000 people who work in that constituency. There are about 1,900 small companies at work in the riding, the largest of them being that tandem of Bell Northern and Northern Telecom. Those two companies employ between them nearly 5,000 people.

Within the framework of the small business community, there is, in addition to the figures I already mentioned, about 3,200 farm units, about 1,000 of which are operated by full-time farmers. These farms have a gross annual income of about $27 million. Of the farming community, those who are in the dairy industry are prospering. However, those who are involved in the cash crop business, the grain farmers like those in western Canada to whom my colleague who spoke previously referred, are experiencing all of the same difficulties as those across Canada. I very much welcome those initiatives in the Speech from the Throne that comment upon stabilizing and broadening markets for agricultural products for Canadian farmers. It will impact on my community in a dramatic way.

About 11 out of the 50 largest employers in metropolitan Ottawa are now located in Nepean—Carleton. More surprisingly, of all of the companies, organizations and businesses in metropolitan Ottawa with sales of over $25 million annually, at least one-third are situated in Nepean—Carleton, a community that only a few years ago was an agricultural community or an agricultural and bedroom community.

The community of Nepean—Carleton has grown and prospered over the years. It has prospered because it has had good municipal Government. It has prospered because of the role played by volunteers in that community. It has prospered because of the strong school boards that have been set up both in the public and separate school systems. It has prospered because of its programs for seniors and because of the foresight we had in the area of recreation. That blend of recreational facilities, good Government, good libraries and good homes, all of those things that make the community a comfortable, convenient and enjoyable place to live, have all come together. I am proud to be part of a Government that is working toward enhancing all of the good things that are there in the business world and elsewhere.

One of the areas on which the Throne Speech touched was the National Capital Commission, an organization that has been with us now for many years. That organization is dramatically important to metropolitan Ottawa and to the nation. I have now had the privilege of residing in the greater Ottawa area for 27 years, and as I have watched this community grow, many of the good things that have happened in metropolitan Ottawa over the last years have happened because of the National Capital Commission. I am thinking of the parkways, our remarkable expanses of open land, our green belt, the great festivals we have throughout the year such as Winterlude and the Festival of Spring and the joyous occasions that take place here on what was once Dominion Day and is now Canada Day. All of those have been orchestrated by the National Capital Commission. Those are things that we see in our everyday lives, but there is much that the NCC does that goes unseen including the provision of hard services, roads and other things like that.

Of course, the National Capital Commission is charged with enhancing our national monuments and with having a national presence in this our capital city. In balance, it has done its job well. The National Capital Commission needs to be supported by all of us so that our nation's capital will grow stronger and so that Canadians will become prouder of their capital and will want to come here for holidays, for educational experiences and to see their national heritage. As parliamentarians, we have a responsibility to see that that comes about.

For those of us who live here, who have our homes here and who work and play here, the National Capital Commission touches on our daily lives in a dramatic way.

One of the things I have recognized in recent months, working closely with members of the National Capital Commission, is that within the Commission's mandate is the development of the so-called green belt that mantles the metropolitan community, so the National Capital Commission needs a much stronger policy, a much more refreshing approach to how the farmland in the green belt is developed and enhanced. At the same time, I am concerned that a mechanism has to be found to allow the National Capital Commission to be more accountable to the concerns of the local community.

I hope that we all might give this some thought as we address those principles contained in the Speech from the Throne, principles that will enhance the National Capital Commission and will make it one of our important instruments for the future.

On Wednesday, we heard the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) address this Chamber on the actions of the Government over the past two years in the area of research, science and technology. It is a remarkable record, when we stop to think about it. The Government introduced a five-year plan for granting councils. It brought forward support in a unique way for organizations like the Institute of Advanced Studies. It has put into place the Technology Centres Program, a program of which few Canadians are aware, that is starting to pay remarkable dividends for Canada. It introduced our Space Station Program, and it is working with a great deal of enthusiasm to continue our satellite program with the M. Sat and Radarsat program. After all those achievements, the Government included some additional items in the Speech from the Throne. Foremost in all of this was the indication that the Government intended to establish a National Advisory Board for Industrial Technology and industrial technology transfers.

• (1610)

I trust that my colleagues, as well as all Canadians, recognize the impact of that decision. It means that a group of informed Canadians will be brought together as an advisory board. They will be the best minds available in Canada from industry, education, the private sector, and Government. This group will work together, and the meetings will be chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). For the first time in Canada's parliamentary history, decision and policy-making relative to the significant areas of research and innovation is being brought forward to the Prime Minister's Office, a most significant place in our decision and policy-making role.

Also the Speech from the Throne indicated that Canada and MOSST would be bringing forward a new policy for enhancing science and technology in Canada, especially enhancing strategic technologies. The Minister indicated that he would be bringing forth that strategy to the House within the next four months to five months. We await that strategy with great expectations.

At the same time—and I think it was welcomed by everyone—there was a recognition in the Speech from the Throne of the importance of our secondary and post-secondary school educational programs. We cannot take that approach too seriously. As we look at Canada and at the challenge which lies ahead of us, we will not be able to face those challenges without skilled, trained, and innovative people. Regardless of what we do in the policy sector, if those human resources are not available over the next 10 years to 15 years to compete in an innovative world, we will never succeed. It is important to recognize that this area was highlighted in the Speech from the Throne. We as parliamentarians should welcome it.

I am confident that everyone in this room has given considerable thought to what Canada and North America will be like in the last 10 years of this century and the beginning of the next. Historically this great nation of Canada was built upon our forest products, the products of our oceans, agricultural products, and mineral products.

Those industries have created a great deal of wealth for us. However, as we look to the future, we realize that these industries are all facing difficulties with greater competition in world markets and more productivity in other parts of the world. We will have to work to enhance them. As we think about the Canada of tomorrow, we realize that those industries are important and will always be important to us. They will provide great sources of livelihood and income. We will have to grow in a different area if we are to compete with European countries, the United States, countries such as Brazil and those in the Pacific Rim in the years ahead.

We will probably not be great manufacturers. We will not be prepared to accept the standard of living which other countries might accept to allow them to be great manufacturers of products. We will have to build our future upon a knowledge-intensive society. If that becomes our goal or our requirement, the great institutions which we must strengthen are our universities and colleges in our educational system.

The Speech from the Throne sets the framework for the Canada of tomorrow, and I am delighted that it does.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? Since there are no questions or comments, I recognize the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) on debate.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the remaining time this afternoon, I will try to condense a few thoughts flowing from my reaction to reading the Speech from the Throne which set out a sense of direction for the Government of the day.

If we look at the Speech from the Throne wherein it deals with the environment, we find a few paragraphs at the end of the document which contain an assortment of thoughts related to a piece of legislation, an initiative in relation to parks, but nothing comprehensive or all pervasive as the public was expecting from the Government of Canada.

What is happening here is that the Government is dealing with the environment, through the Speech from the Throne, as if it were another activity to which attention must be paid in the same manner as it pays attention to other governmental activities, not with the overriding urgency and comprehensive approach required if we are to protect our waters, air, soil, and our major resources such as our forests and fisheries in such a manner that future generations will be able to benefit.

I will explain what I mean. As a result of the experiences we have witnessed from the impact of acid rain on buildings and other structures and on our fisheries and forests, from dumpsites along the Niagara River which have leeched chemical substances into Lake Ontario, and from industrial activities along the St. Clair River on the Canadian side, we are rapidly reaching a point where we must conclude that inevitably the long-term economic interest of our nation coincides with environmental goals.

In other words, we do not have a choice between the economy on the one hand and the environment on the other. We cannot say that we will be able to do certain environmental things when the economy permits, but we must conclude that our natural resources and other basic resources such as air and water need protection because of economic considerations, not because of idealistic or perhaps sometimes romantic notions. The economic underpinning of this and future generations of Canadian industrialists and entrepreneurs depends upon the way we manage our basic resources today.

I should like to give an example. A couple of weeks ago we read on the front page of one of our national newspapers an article which indicated that our maple forests in the Province of Quebec are suffering from an increased percentage of damage. From year to year, according to the measurements which have been taken, this damage is increasing to the point where sugar-maple tree growers are seeking millions of dollars in compensation from the Government of Canada for the damage they are experiencing because they are downwind of sulphur emissions in the air from non-ferrous smelters in Quebec. Here is classic example of an economy being damaged downwind by industrial activity upwind and resulting from lack of environmental concern over the years.

• (1620)

If that experience were not enough, Mr. Speaker, we need only look across the Altantic to the immense economic damage imposed on some European economies, particularly in the forest industry where there have been discoveries over the last five years of progressive damage, of lack of growth year by year and of trees dying over the years because of acid precipitation. In Europe the problem is doubled. It is caused in part by air emissions from the burning of fossil fuels and from non-smelter activities and by car emissions. Our situation may differ in degree, but nevertheless we are gradually observing the same symptoms and beginning to measure the same damage in economic terms as the Europeans are at the present time. Therefore, we see not only an inter-relationship, a link between environmental and economic issues, but we begin to discover that actually the economy functions within the environment and the two cannot be seen as separate entities.

I will illustrate this with another example. What the people living along the Niagara River and the people living along the St. Clair River are experiencing is the result of economic activities in preceding decades which have resulted in damage being caused to those water resources, surface water in this case. For example, along the Niagara you cannot drink the water. Canadians living in Niagara-on-the-Lake have to depend on water pumped in from Welland. People living in cities and communities along the St. Clair River are also beginning to depend on water being pumped in from Lake Huron. Here we see serious damage to an economic base that depends on water as a result of industrial activities. The clear conclusion that inevitably one has to make is that if we are not very careful in our conceptual way of organizing our thinking, we are in for some deep trouble in the long term because we will fail to see that the protection of the environment is actually the same as the protection of the economy. The "E" beginning the word environment equals the "E" beginning the word economy. The two in the long term are indistinguishable, but in the short term we seem to think that they are separate. I am putting it this way to warn Members about the potential danger that we will face unless we rectify our thinking in this respect.

Coming back to the Speech from the Throne and to what I mentioned a moment ago, I regret very much that the Government of Canada has not in this document given the environment the top priority that it requires for the reasons I have just outlined, namely, linked to the fact that when we talk about the environment we are really talking about the economy of the nation. The environment has to become the top item on the agenda of any modern Government that wants to protect its economy in the medium and in the long term if not in the short term.

In more detail, when looking at the Speech from the Throne there was one item some of us here had been looking for and which you have heard about several times on different occasions. I am speaking of a measure whereby we would see a change in the taxes applied on the price of gasoline at the pump. You have heard me, Mr. Speaker, urging the Government at the time of the last Budget to ensure that the price of unleaded gasoline, which for several reasons is environmentally friendly and less damaging to human health, is made less expensive than leaded gasoline. Yet this matter is not being tackled by the Government in this Speech from the Throne. If you go to the pump, you have all the incentives possible to misfuel because leaded gasoline is still less expensive, and becoming more so, than unleaded gasoline. While this may seem to be a measure of small impact on the environment, there is conclusive evidence to indicate that a switch to unleaded gasoline on the part of motorists, the trucking industry and any type of vehicle on our streets and highways is extremely important to reduce the impact of the NOx gases emitted by cars when they use leaded gasoline. Burning leaded gasoline adds to the acid rain problem, which in the long term affects the acidity of the soil and affects our waters. It also has an eroding and a damaging effect on crops, buildings, structures and on the capacity of our forests to maintain the optimum pH level which has been in existence for centuries and which is presently being seriously affected.

The question of changing our fiscal systems in order to modify the price of gasoline at the pump and give unleaded gasoline the lower price to make it more attractive to the customer is a matter of great urgency with which this Government has to deal. It is very regrettable and most unfortunate that in this document the Government has not indicated any vision or sense of direction as to what it wants to do. May I call it 4.30 p.m., Mr. Speaker?

• (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 4.30 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 62(4), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment. The question is on the amendment. Mr. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre), seconded by Mr. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap), moved:

That the following be added to the Address:

"This House regrets that the Government has failed to provide leadership on major issues of social justice affecting average Canadians including the need for action to provide greater protection for battered women, a commitment to legislate pro-rated benefits for part-time workers, the majority of whom are women, a refusal to establish and work towards lower unemployment targets for Canadians, and the failure to pursue a serious tax reform that would eliminate the unfairness, the complexity and the unaccountability of the present system".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred until six o'clock p.m., Tuesday, October 14, 1986.

It being 4.30 o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Tuesday, October 14, 1986, at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

I wish each and every one of you a very happy Thanksgiving.

The House adjourned at 4.32 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 14, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-223, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act (primacy of the Act).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to introduce this legislation once again. I have done so a number of times before, but this time I am very optimistic, because the Government has made a commitment to review the Act. As the House is aware, the purpose of this Bill is to affirm the primacy of bilingualism, as defined in Section 2 of the Official Languages Act, over any other Acts and regulations of Parliament and the Government of Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA PETROLEUM RESOURCES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-5, An Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act, as reported (with amendments) from a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Speaker: There are 19 report stage motions on today's Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-5, an Act to regulate the interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act.

Motions Nos. 1 and 2 will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 1 will also apply to Motion No. 2. Motions Nos. 3, 4, 14 and 15, all deal with the land claims of aboriginal peoples and therefore will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

Motion No. 3A, in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), seeks to introduce a new concept, namely, that pending negotiations on aboriginal claims would be a reason to prohibit the commencement of or continuing of any work or activity by an interest owner. This was not contemplated by the Bill as read a second time. It is beyond the scope of the Bill. I refer the Hon. Member to Citation 773(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. I must therefore rule the motion out of order.

• (1110)

Motions Nos. 5, 5A and 5B seek to introduce into the Bill a new requirement. Before a licence or before any work or activity on any frontier lands could commence, a benefits plan would have to be concluded with the affected aboriginal groups in accordance with their land claims agreement. Again, this would introduce a new concept which was not contemplated by the Bill as read a second time. For the same reason as with Motion No. 3A I must also rule Motions Nos. 5, 5A and 5B out of order.

Motions Nos. 6 and 7 will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 6 will be applied to Motion No. 7.

Motion No. 7A will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 8 seeks to set aside moneys paid in royalties for aboriginal peoples in settlement or part settlement of outstanding land claims. This is a new concept which offends the Royal Recommendation in that it relaxes the conditions set out therein. As noted in Citation 773(7) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, an amendment is out of order "... if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications as expressed in the Royal Recommendation." Therefore, I must rule this motion out of order.

Motions Nos. 9, 10 and 11 will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 12 and 13 will be debated and voted on separately.

As I said, Motions Nos. 14 and 15 have been grouped with Motions Nos. 3 and 4.

The Chair will now proceed to propose Motions Nos. 1 and 2—

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is the first time I have risen in the House, with the exception of another occasion when I rose to make a statement, when you were in the Chair. May I offer my congratulations to you, Sir. We share a common border, 49th Street in Vancouver. I am the MP for one side and Your Honour is the MP for the other. I wish to extend to you my congratulations.

I accept your ruling, of course, Mr. Speaker. However, I wonder if you had a chance to refer to Section 35 of the Constitution Act which states in part:

> 35. (1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed.
>
> (2) In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.
>
> (3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

The amendments proposed to the Bill were an attempt to give native people whose land claims are guaranteed in the Constitution and who are now in negotiation with the federal Government a say in the matter. They are now seeing their land being given away from underneath their feet. They are giving away interest in these lands to oil companies. That is what the legislation before us does.

I wonder if Your Honour has had a chance to look at that proposition. What we were trying to do by introducing these amendments was to give native people some say with respect to their lands, something to which they are entitled under the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has raised a matter of great concern in our country. I know that all Hon. Members in the House realize that there is a very interesting potential debate on the matter raised by the Hon. Member. Without commenting at all on how that debate should be conducted or concluded, I must remind Hon. Members, and especially the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), that the Chair must rule on points of order with respect to the Bill in question. I am sure the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway wishes that the Bill in its original form took into account some of the matters he has brought to the attention of the House this morning and which he will bring to our attention later this morning. However, the Chair is in the position of having to look at the wording and the substance of the Bill as it is. Under those circumstances I felt compelled to rule as I have ruled.

I know that the Hon. Member will have a chance to express his concerns with respect to the amendments he will be debating. I ask all Hon. Members to consider the reason behind the ruling which the Chair has given.

As Hon. Members know, it is not the function of the Chair to put the Constitution Act into legislation which appears before the Chamber.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to clarify one point with you. It has been the practice of the Speaker in the past to present notes on rulings to us prior to the reading of the ruling. This was done so that if any Member wanted to debate a question he could do so. This would allow the Speaker to take into account the points debated by Hon. Members.

If I read you clearly this morning, Your Honour is now telling us that once you have ruled, as you have done this morning, no further debate can be entertained. I would ask the Chair to be more flexible in this regard in terms of future Bills. For example, if there are debatable points with respect to future Bills which are put at report stage then I ask the Chair that we be allowed to put these points to you before you rule as to the acceptability, or not, of the so-called motions.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. I advise the House that motions in amendment were being received during the last sitting day and the first opportunity the Chair has had to consider the proposed ruling which has been made was this morning. At approximately 10.30 this morning I instructed the Clerk to circulate the notes of my ruling to Hon. Members. I regret that if for some reason or other the Hon. Member did not receive a copy of my notes. He should have received a copy of them. I will ensure that this does not happen again.

It has been the practice of the Speaker to make rulings such as the one I have made. If there is some particular point about which the Hon. Member feels strongly, and if he asks that he or some other Member be granted leave to raise some points with respect to it in terms of something the Chair may have overlooked, then arrangements can be made to hear such arguments later on today. Unless there is some very serious reason to raise such arguments, I ask Hon. Members to co-operate this morning.

I want to make it very clear that the point raised by the Hon. Member is a good one. I hope that in most cases the Chair will be able to give notice in more time than was possible today. If the Hon. Member did not receive a copy of the notes, then I ask that he speak with the Table Officers to find out what went wrong and ensure that it does not happen again.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a separate point of order. I have had a chance to read your ruling very quickly and look through the sections of it. I think the groupings are set out quite fairly. The first section of your ruling states that Motions Nos. 1 and 2 will be grouped for debate and that a vote on Motion No. 1 will also apply to Motion No. 2. I think there is a problem there. I ask that Your Honour perhaps reserve on this area or give us leave to raise our concerns later as the debate progresses with respect to the first motion. I think you might find, Mr. Speaker, that they should not be grouped together for a vote.

• (1120)

The Government might be prepared to accept Motion No. 1, and I will make my reasons for that clear during debate. In any case, Motion No. 1 is a far less drastic amendment than Motion No. 2. Motion No. 1 simply adds words like "for greater certainty" and brings it into line with the wording in the Sechelt Act which we passed not too long ago. Motion No. 2 is quite drastic in the sense that it excludes all lands that are the subject of land claims negotiations. That goes quite a long way.

I am rising now to identify that point. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could listen to my remarks.

Mr. McDermid: I am listening with great intensity.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention and I have listened very carefully to it. I invite the Parliamentary Secretary to comment at this time if he so chooses.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I gather that the Hon. Member was up on a point of order. I have no objection to splitting that vote if that is what he desires. We are here to cooperate with the Opposition and to get this Bill through. If he would like to split the vote on Motions Nos. 1 and 2, that is entirely up to him. I can tell him now that we will oppose both his amendments.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with my exact point. We are now debating whether or not Motions Nos. 1 and 2 should be grouped for debate. We are debating certain things which I believe we should have debated before you ruled, Mr. Speaker. In other words, we should have had copies of this beforehand, but we just got them when you walked in here.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. Perhaps we can return to this in a few minutes. I would ask that Hon. Members consult together. Of course, if there is consent to split the vote, the Chair is the servant of the House.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 4 to 8 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"3. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act abrogates or derogates from any aboriginal title, right, claim or interest that pertains to the, or any of the, aboriginal people of Canada."

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 3 by adding immediately after line 8 at page 4 the following:

"(2) All lands subject to unsettled aborignal claims, which have been accepted for negotiation by the federal government, are excluded from the application of this Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, before I begin, I would like to make my position clear on the last point I raised. It seems to me that your ruling is fair, Mr. Speaker, except for that constitutional point that I raised. On a quick reading of the ruling, it seems to me that the groupings are all right. I agree that Motions Nos. 1 and 2 should be grouped together for debate, as we are doing now. However, I think there probably should be separate votes on them. Perhaps at some point when listening to the debate you could make that decision, Mr. Speaker.

Regarding Motion No. 1, let me explain how this process works; You know how it works, Mr. Speaker, but it is good to summarize it.

We are on report stage of a Bill that will in fact set up a new regime for licensing oil companies to explore in the Canada Lands. The Canada Lands are the lands on the frontier and are lands over which the Canadian Government and not the provinces has power. These lands are located in the northern territories of Canada and include the Beaufort Sea where there is lots of oil and gas, and the high Arctic where there has been exploration for gas. Perhaps in my lifetime—if not, in the lifetime of other Canadians—we will be able to use that gas. Of course, the Bill also covers the offshore, both off the coast of British Columbia and the coasts of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.

The Government has decided that the provinces should have control over the offshore, and is bringing in a separate Bill which we will discuss later that will deal with that issue. Therefore, this Bill deals with oil and gas licences for the offshore and the northern frontiers.

People ask if this is really important. The energy committee found out that between 1980 and 1987, the Government will have spent $7.2 billion or $7.3 billion on Petroleum Incentive Program grants for the oil companies. That is one of the reasons the Government has a big deficit. It has given $7.3 billion to oil companies to explore the frontiers; that was part of the National Energy Program. Therefore, this matter is very important. The Government will be ending these grants but it will bring in tax incentives to get companies exploring in the future. Canadians should, therefore, pay particular attention to this. Even though this is an energy Bill and deals with exploration in the frontiers, it in fact affects things like social programs and whether or not we can afford to have daycare in Canada.

People say that it does not matter right now because nothing is happening anyway. The price of oil is $15 per barrel, and until it gets back up to $30 per barrel nothing will happen. In the 1990s, the price of oil will rise again. That is what all the experts seem to be telling us. This then becomes very important for the future.

This Bill is very important for the future of Canada because Canada is a northern country. Canada has the greatest resources known to mankind. Canada has all these resources and at some point we will develop them on the frontiers. We have already spent over $7 billion in only seven years dealing with these resources.

We have another problem. Who lives in the North? People think it is simply a vast, barren land. The great poet, Frank Scott, called it a land waiting for things to happen. In fact, people do live there. Those people are called the Inuit. We used to call them the Eskimo people. The Inuvialuit people of the Arctic as well as Indians, Dene and Métis people live in the western Arctic. The North is their homeland. For us it is a frontier but for them it is a homeland. This is what these amendments are all about and this is the whole point the Government has missed.

The Government sees the North as a frontier that we can control completely and has excluded the native people who live there. How would you feel, Mr. Speaker, if your backyard were being carved up, mineral rights were being given to oil companies to drill and explore, all for the national interest, but they did not give you any say over what was going to happen at all? That is the way we ought to look at this. This is the backyard, the homeland, of the native people of Canada and the Government is bringing in this Bill which completely ignores the native people.

• (1130)

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was sent a letter dated October 10, 1986—and I have a copy of it—signed by Donat Milortuk, President of the Nunavut Land Claims organization. It refers to the Tungavik Federation of Nunavut, which represents more than 17,000 Inuit of Nunavut, the central and eastern Arctic of Canada. In part the letter refers to Bill C-5 and says:

> This Bill prejudices our land claim negotiations.

The country agreed to a new Constitution in 1982. Section 35 of the Constitution, the supreme document of the country, indicated that the existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada were recognized and affirmed. "Aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit, and Métis people. For greater certainty, subsection (1) treaty rights include rights which now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

I should like to summarize what we did with this Act. It is like a cake. At the foundation of the cake was the native people or the aboriginal people of Canada. Then we built on to the cake to include the English-speaking and French-speaking people, and then we added multiculturalism and the new people. That is an over-simplification, but it is a good overview of Canada. Each part of the cake is important, particularly its base, the native people.

The letter continues as follows:

> —we protest in the strongest possible terms the enactment of any federal statute which facilitates the alienation of our land and resources from under our feet.

The alienation of their land refers to giving away their land, giving an interest to oil companies. That is what the Bill is about—giving drilling interest drilling permits, development permits, and so on to oil companies. The letter referred to the alienation of their land and resources from under their feet. There is an inconsistency here. The Canadian Government recognized in the Constitution of Canada the rights of native people. There are ongoing negotiations to try to settle land claims. Why do we want to settle those land claims? It is for many reasons, but one reason, from my own southern Canadian point of view, is that it is a unique way to get native people, who have been left behind in many ways in the development of the country, involved in the development of their own resources and their own lands. Perhaps this is the last chance we have in Canada.

I often think, when we stand in the House and elsewhere in the country and criticize South Africa, that we should look at the way we treat our native people. We must find a way to change that. One way—and it seems to me that it is the best way—would be to deal with the native people on the basis of settling land claims negotiations.

I had the honour of being an employee of the Berger Commission on the Mackenzie valley pipeline as counsel for the Commission, along with Ian Scott, my friend who is now the Attorney General of Ontario. We had a chance to travel for three years in the Arctic. This provided us with an opportunity to see these lands and to see these people. We heard from them firsthand. They told us what it meant to have control over their future and their lands. They stated this far more eloquently than we in the House of Commons could ever say it.

I know I must address the two motions specifically, so let me return to them. I provided this information as a background so that the House would understand from where we are coming with the amendments. In Motion No. 1 we used the simple phrase "for greater certainty". The Government will say that it recognizes that nothing in the Act takes away from their land claims. In the first amendment we are asking: Why not add "for greater certainty"? Referring again to the same letter, it continues:

> We insist that the Bill be amended to provide that lands subject to land claim negotiations be withdrawn from disposition. This could be accomplished by amending Section 3—

The letter continues:

> We believe the words "for greater certainty" must be included in Section 3(1), if this clause is to achieve its intended purpose. This Act cannot abrogate or derogate from our aboriginal rights as protected by Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982. However, given the possible uncertainties surrounding the interpretation of Section 35 it seems prudent to keep a non-derogation clause which is enacted for the purpose of certainty. This wording would also be consistent with the Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government Act—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I should advise the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members that under the rules each Member is limited to 10 minutes of debate. I do not want the Hon. Member to be unable to make his point in respect of the second amendment, and I advise him that there is a minute remaining.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to conclude my remarks in a minute. I might ask the House for an extra minute to put my two points.

I was referring to the letter wherein it indicated that that wording was consistent with the Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government Act. It continues:

—and Section 117(2) of this Bill which deals with the constitutionally entrenched rights of the Inuvialuit. If you are not willing to withdraw all lands subject to aboriginal title from disposition under this Bill we urge, that at a bare minimum, you make provision for withdrawal on a case by case basis.

All we are asking in the first amendment is to bring it in line with the Sechelt formula. There may be a clash between the legislation and the Constitution, and we want to make clear that the Constitution is primary. Oil companies want certainty. Why not the native people? I do not think anyone objected to this particular amendment in the committee hearings; the oil companies did not object to it. I think the Government can accept the first amendment.

The second amendment goes a little further because it comes at the problem from a different angle in fact.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired. He indicated that he might ask for consent to continue for a very brief period of time to finish his remarks. Is there such consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you. I have made my point on the first amendment. I think the Government can expect it. It is consistent with another Act, and it does not go that far.

I admit, however, that the second amendment goes further. In part it reads:

All lands subject to unsettled aboriginal claims, which have been accepted for negotiation by the federal Government, are excluded from the application of this Act.

In fact it indicates that if they are negotiating with the aboriginal peoples, they cannot turn around and alienate or give away part of their land from under their feet. It is not good enough for the Government to say that it is just giving an oil company a drilling permit, because that is dealing with the land in a very important way.

I draw the Government's attention to that point. I hope it has a copy of the letter which was written on October 10 and sent to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada. Those are my points on the first two motions.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak in support of the amendments of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Something very relevant or very important is at stake here, that is, the attitude of the Government of Canada toward our native people.

It has been stated that we have the right to interfere with or intervene in the land claims question and, as the native people themselves have indicated, to take it out from under their feet. It is important that everyone in Canada support the discussions of the land claims question. Everyone should be interested in resolving the question. We cannot arbitrarily state the position of these lands until we know exactly for what the lands will be used.

How can we say that these lands will be removed from the negotiations and given away for other purposes? How are we going to expect the native peoples to believe the Government of Canada is negotiating this question in good faith?

• (1140)

The very Bill we have before us this morning is at the present time an exercise in futility. The policies of the Government have completely stripped any relevancy in today's world away from this Bill. With Bill C-5 having been completely nullified by the policies of the Government I do not think that we should go one step further and act so arbitrarily concerning our native people.

The recent decisions in Beaufort, in the north, where the major oil companies have stopped exploration and activity, mean that the fragile economy of the Northwest Territories and, to some extent, the Yukon as well, will be severely jeopardized and may essentially collapse in the northern part of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

We have, particularly with respect to the younger generation, encouraged the native people to become involved in the oil and gas industry, in the exploration and in what we stated emphatically would be development following on the heels very quickly of exploration. But we have snatched away the incentives for the companies and the companies in direct retaliation have closed down.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am enjoying the comments of my friend, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), but I do not believe he is talking about the amendments to the Bill. His speech sounds more like a third reading speech. Could he discuss the issue at hand?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Parliamentary Secretary, what I am saying is directly linked to the condition of the native peoples and the economy in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. What we are doing is adding to this downturn in the economy by relegating the native people to an uncertain position concerning their own lands. This is not something that most Canadians would want done. We have received letters, testimony and a lot of arguments from the native groups, as my friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway has stated. We have recently received copies of correspondence recently dated October 10 from the Tungavik Federation of Nunavut complaining about exactly what I have been saying, namely, the uncertainty that the Bill will cause in the land claims question and the losses that could be incurred by the native peoples.

I would ask that the amendments put forward by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway be supported, so that we can at least give the native people the assurance they are looking for concerning Clause 3, their land and the land claims question in the northern part of the country.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has made something of a career both before he became a Member of Parliament and since that time telling the people of the Northwest Territories what is good for them. My career is dependent upon being told by them what is good for them. I do not represent a riding in the south where I could have all these airy-fairy ideas of what goes on in northern Canada. I am directly responsible to the people who elect me. Therefore, I have to present to this House their point of view which, of course, also coincides with that of my own.

The intent of the amendment we have before us would be to preclude all oil and gas activity in the entire Yukon territory, in nearly all of the Northwest Territories and probably in considerable parts of the offshore. When I go to towns and villages in my constituency I am told by people who live there that what they want to see is not less oil and gas activity but more. They want the opportunities that go with the oil and gas business. They want the business opportunities. They want the opportunities to work in the oil patch and make good money because you do make good money in the oil patch, Mr. Speaker. You make a lot more money working on a drill rig than what you do choking rabbits for a living, for instance. People want the opportunity to become involved in the oil and gas business, to become oil men and oil women in their own right. This is what they are telling me and this is what I am telling the House of Commons.

I am completely in opposition to the proposed amendment. I do not want to see the oil and gas industry die in the northern parts of Canada. To the contrary, I and my constituents want to see it thrive and prosper. That is why I am supporting the Bill presented by the Government of Canada.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the presentations of my friends, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). We spent a considerable amount of time on this Bill, as you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, in committee in the spring. We had excellent representations from many groups on the Bill including our native peoples. I do not feel the way the Hon. Member does that the aboriginal peoples are not protected in this Bill.

First, I think it would be proper to explain that this Bill is framework legislation to deal with frontier exploration, exploration on what is known as Canadian Lands, whether they be north of 60, offshore British Columbia, Newfoundland or Nova Scotia—no matter what. Stemming from this legislation would be specific Acts covering the Atlantic Accord: our agreement with Newfoundland and the offshore exploration; the now agreed Nova Scotia Accord which will also have its own life and legislation introduced in this House sometime in the not too distant future, hopefully; very possibly a Northern Accord which would cover lands north of 60 and a British Columbia Accord possibly some day to deal with exploration off that coast as well.

This Bill was amended by the Government, I might add, to assure that our aboriginal peoples were protected. I will refer to Clause 3 which reads:

> Nothing in this Act shall be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any existing aboriginal or treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada—

It specifically says:

> —under Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

The amendment introduced by my hon. friend gives this Bill a life of its own. I do not think it is intended to do that, being framework legislation. The aboriginal people get their title from The Constitution. That is their protection. The aboriginal peoples have said that.

Mr. Waddell: What is the matter with greater certainty then?

Mr. McDermid: The amendment as introduced by the Hon. Member does not really do that. We think the government amendment which was accepted by the committee and is now being introduced as part of the report stage with which we are now dealing is perfectly well drafted. It protects the rights of the aboriginal peoples of this country by specifically referring to our Constitution Act, 1982. I think that is very important.

• (1150)

I do not believe that the second amendment introduced by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway does any favours for the aboriginal peoples. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys talked about the dire straits of the economy of the north. If this second amendment is accepted it would stop all exploration in the north until the land claims are settled. I honestly do not believe that this is what our aboriginal peoples want.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) said it far more eloquently than I can because he represents people from that area and talks to them frequently. He is their Member of Parliament and he expressed it very well when he said that they want jobs and activity in the north. They do not want that activity in the north to stop for the land claims process.

It will become apparent as we debate other clauses that the interests of the aboriginal people in the north are very well protected in this Bill.

The Hon. Member mentioned the Sechelt agreement that was signed and passed by the Government. That was a land claim agreement in which all the clauses were negotiated, which is the whole purpose of the land claims process. Some of these land claims set certain precedents and obviously they will be used in negotiations. However, I do not believe that this legislation should dictate to the parties of the land claims what they should or can negotiate.

We believe that the aboriginal peoples are very well protected by this Bill and we will not support either of these amendments introduced by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendments put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). While Bill C-5 will have a major impact on the aboriginal peoples of the north, it does not give them adequate protection. I was interested in listening to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. I recall when he was the Indian Affairs critic for his Party when it was in opposition. He said that the aboriginal peoples have nothing to fear from a Conservative Government.

Mr. McDermid: That is right.

Mr. Manly: I do not think that is quite the case because this legislation is absolutely inadequate.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) said he did not want to listen to a lot of airy-fairy arguments, that he wanted to listen to people who are there. Let me refer to some of the testimony presented to the committee. I will read from the Parliamentary Library's summary of that testimony. The Dene Métis said:

> The Bill should include a general provision calling for equitable and authoritative participation of aboriginal groups in resource management institutions.

It goes on to say:

> In order to facilitate discussions respecting a "northern accord", the Bill should specifically recognize the rights of the Dene/Métis separate from the rights of the NWT.

The Tungavik Federation of Nunavut said:

> Clause 3 is inadequate when disposition of land and resource use rights under Bill C-92—

The present Bill C-5:

> —and earlier legislation is coupled with the federal position at the claims table that the rights of third parties must be protected. Clause 3 should be amended and all lands subject to the TFN comprehensive claim should be withdrawn from disposition under the Bill.

They go on to state:

> Clause 3 should make it clear that the constitutional rights of the Inuit and other aboriginal peoples are not affected by Bill C-92.

That is the present Bill C-5.

The Canadian Petroleum Association pointed out that the:

> CPA has no position on native land claims other than the belief that they should be resolved to promote certainty as to who owns the land. Operators need to know under what jurisdiction and rules the lands are held and whom to deal with.

There was a great deal of struggle to get any recognition of aboriginal claims in the Constitution. That struggle was without the help of the Conservative Party which was then in opposition. Finally, there was a minimal recognition of the rights of aboriginal peoples in our Constitution, but that struggle is not yet over because aboriginal peoples are still trying, through constitutional conferences, to define what those rights are. They are still working through the land claims process to establish what their rights are in specific areas of Canada that are under claim.

While this struggle to define their rights under law continues, the fact is that their rights are being undermined by the process of development and exploitation of their resources. We can see this taking place in a number of ways. In British Columbia, for example, we can see it very obviously in the way that certain traditional areas of aboriginal peoples are being logged. These areas include Lyell Island, Meares Island to Stein River. We can see it in the threat in British Columbia to aboriginal offshore rights when there is the prospect of offshore drilling.

We certainly see it in the Northwest Territories and Yukon where the Government is proceeding to hand over huge areas to the oil companies while the aboriginal peoples are not really being protected. Perhaps, as the Hon. Member for Western Arctic says, there is a valuable trade-off, but he will certainly admit that exploration and development will impact very severely upon their traditional economies and their traditional lifestyles.

While there may be a worth-while trade-off, certainly the people who are most involved in that should have the major say as to whether or not that trade-off will take place. They should also have a say in the terms and conditions that will be involved in any trade-off that involves a major shift from their traditional economy and traditional lifestyle to one that is based on exploration and development of other resources. That is the purpose of these two amendments. They seek to protect their right to be involved in that kind of decision-making.

I urge Hon. Members opposite to reconsider the position taken by the Parliamentary Secretary. I believe these amendments should be supported. The first general amendment is more specific than the clause in the Bill. It recognizes any aboriginal title, right, claim or interest that pertains to any aboriginal people of Canada. I believe we need that type of specific commitment. The second amendment is even more specific in that it withdraws from the application of the Act those areas that are under claim. I think this will encourage a speedy resolution of claims which is a goal that I believe all Canadians say they support. I think we should do everything we can as a House of Commons to encourage that, and I urge Members to support these motions introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on Bill C-5 and the two amendments introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), I want to address my remarks particularly to the Parliamentary Secretary. He will know that according to Clause 3 of the Bill nothing in the Bill shall be construed as to abrogate or derogate from any existing aboriginal or treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. As a Member of Parliament from British Columbia, I am concerned about the term "existing treaty rights" because most of the Indian bands living in British Columbia do not live under any treaty right, since the treaties that we have come to recognize in other parts of Canada simply do not exist in the Province of British Columbia, with the exception of some areas in the Peace River country.

• (1200)

There is a serious concern in British Columbia in that, while we have no existing treaty rights in the sense of agreements signed by the aboriginal people of Canada and others, this clause of the Bill says that nothing shall be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any existing treaty rights. The critical point is that there are no recognized and understood treaty rights in British Columbia. That is part of the problem that native people face in that part of Canada, and this will offer them little security. I do hope someone from the government benches will rise in response to my point that this will cause particular concern to people in the western part of Canada.

One thing which the motions moved by my colleague from Vancouver—Kingsway attempt to do is to bring some certainty to the matter of land claims in the frontier areas. Whether one is the representative of an oil company or of an aboriginal community, certainty is absolutely critical in order to plan for the future. If you are going to lay out short-term and long-term goals for your company or your community or your people, it is imperative that there be some recognition of the ownership of those lands. That is what makes the whole matter of land claims a top priority for so many people, particularly those concerned with activities in Canada's frontier. My colleague has attempted to bring that certainty to the Bill by requesting in Motion No. 2 that all lands subject to unsettled aboriginal claims, which have been accepted for negotiation by the federal Government, be excluded from the application of this Act.

To me this is the acid test of whether or not the Government is serious about land claims settlement. If it is, if it plans to resolve this matter, then this motion should cause no problem at all. However, if the real intent is to prolong the process of land claims settlement, if the Government is not committed to a rapid resolution of this question, then of course I can see why the Government would have serious concern about the implications of Motion No. 2.

I represent a part of British Columbia where a number of Indian bands have land claims before the Government. I recognize that the provincial Government, as it is presently constituted, has indicated time and time again that it has no interest in negotiating Indian land claims settlement. In fact, it does not even recognize that there is such a thing as aboriginal claims, at least as reflected by a number of members of the provincial Cabinet. It is therefore not surprising that Indian bands in those parts of Canada affected, particularly in central British Columbia, really believe the Government is not serious about the settlement of these claims.

In conclusion, I ask the Parliamentary Secretary or one of his colleagues to respond to my concern that in British Columbia there are no treaties—

Mr. McDermid: This Bill does not apply to British Columbia.

Mr. Manly: Sure it does.

Mr. Riis: The implications of this Bill, according to the words of the Hon. Member at the outset—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure that the Hon. Member will put his comments through the Chair, and the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will respond in the same way.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point. I will conclude by simply saying that at the outset of our presentation today, the Parliamentary Secretary indicated that what we are doing today has implications for Canada's offshore, and of course many of the claims involve offshore development. This is a major concern of ours. Just to be consistent, if the Parliamentary Secretary is saying that this is indicative of how the Government plans to deal with this issue, we feel it is critical that we all understand there are parts of Canada where aboriginal rights and treaty rights have not yet been clearly defined.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I have considered the comments of Hon. Members and I think there is a disposition in the House which would, under the circumstances, move me to have separate votes on these two motions.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea?

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay?

An Hon. Member: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingway (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea?

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay?

An Hon. Member: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

For the information of Hon. Members, Motions Nos. 3, 4, 14 and 15 will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 10 by adding immediately after line 45 at page 5 the following:

"(3) In every resource use permit or licence issued by the Minister in areas subject to an unsettled aboriginal claim or right, there shall be inserted a condition or caveat that the area in question is subject to an aboriginal claim and may ultimately be owned by the aboriginal people in fee simple, including the sub-surface."

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-5, be amended in clause 14 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 7 the following:

"(3) In the formulation of bid criteria, the Minister shall be obliged to consult with representatives of affected aboriginal groups and local communities."

Motion No. 14

That Bill C-5, be amended in clause 117

(a) by striking out line 22 at page 65 and substituting the following therefor:

"117(1) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), for".

(b) by adding immediately after line 33 at page 65 the following:

"(3) Prior to the settlement of aboriginal claims in affected areas, the Crown share shall be retained North of 60½ in any interest granted or entered into."

Motion No. 15

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 121 by striking out lines 27 to 31 at page 69 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) The Minister shall require that any benefits plan submitted pursuant to subsection (2) include provisions to ensure that aboriginal people and disadvantaged individuals or groups have priority access to training and employment."

He said: Mr. Speaker, briefly what I am trying to do in these amendments is to give the native people some say in what is going to happen once these licences are issued. The Government apparently does not agree with me. I say to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) that I accept that he listens to his constituents, but we have had evidence from groups purporting to represent native people in the North who are taking different positions. I would invite him to support the positions taken by those groups before our committee.

• (1210)

Motion No. 3 says that once the Minister has issued a permit to drill, explore and so on, "there shall be inserted a condition or caveat"—a caveat is a lawyer's term, it is a big warning. A red light goes on when you see a caveat—"that the area in question is subject to an aboriginal claim and may ultimately be owned by the aboriginal people in fee simple, including the sub-surface."

That is the nub of the matter, Mr. Speaker. We have been saying that you cannot negotiate with the native people on the one hand and then give their rights away on the other by giving the oil companies these permits. We are suggesting that the Government at least be up front about this. When the Government is giving permits or leases to oil companies it should be explicit about what could happen. A court could very well rule later that the lands which were given to the oil companies under this section of the Act were not the property of the Government of Canada to give. The Government of Canada could be liable for a lot of money if it gave away something it did not have the right to give away.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to the position of the Canadian Petroleum Association. That is the voice of big oil. It told the committee that it has no position on native land claims other than the belief that they should be resolved to promote certainty as to who owns the land. It said that operators need to know under what jurisdiction and rules the lands are held and with whom to deal. This is perfectly reasonable. This is one of the few occasions on which I agree with the Canadian Petroleum Association.

Mr. McDermid: The voice of big oil. You had better be careful.

Mr. Waddell: My friend says that I had better be careful. I will lose my reputation. Through this amendment we are telling the Government to be honest and tell companies that although they are getting a permit they had better be careful because the lands may be subject to aboriginal land claims in the future.

In Motion No. 4 we suggest that when the Minister formulates the criteria for the bids which the companies will make for the leases under this Act he be obliged to consult with the aboriginal groups in the local communities. Is this not a reasonable amendment? Is there not any room for giving here? The Government purports to want to help the native people. My colleague, the Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) pointed out that when the Parliamentary Secretary was on this side of the House and was the critic for Indian Affairs he said that a Tory government would consider native people. Is this another broken promise? The then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said at committee that local groups would be consulted. That was another Tory promise. I take the former Minister at his word, but why not write it in the Bill if you are going to do it? It seems to me that this is a grace clause. All the Government need do is consult. It need not accept what native peoples say. That puts it up front.

I am sure that the Member for Western Arctic would say that we should get northerners involved in the development of the north rather than continuing to allow southerners to tell the north what to do. He was giving me a hard time for that before. I can turn that around on the Government. I hope he will support my amendment if it comes to a vote.

Motion No. 4 reads:

In the formulation of bid criteria, the Minister shall be obliged to consult with representatives of affected aboriginal groups and local communities.

The members of the committee were prepared to accept this. Conservative Members understand the principle that local people should be consulted, whether on the Nova Scotia offshore or on the Arctic. Conservative backbenchers can adopt and relate to that principle. I invite them to vote for this motion.

Motion No. 14 is grouped for debate with Motion No. 15. The old system had a Crown share. The Crown could get 25 per cent of the action. It could back in at 25 per cent once the well was developed. In response to pressure from George Shultz and the Government of the United States the Canadian Government caved in and got rid of the Crown share. The Americans did not like it because the big American oil companies did not want to give 25 per cent of the action, even though it is our oil, our land, and our money that was being spent through grants to help them develop it. They did not like the notion of having to give a Crown share. They called it retroactive, back-in and confiscation of property. Some day the Canadian people will wake up and toss the Government out because it does not respect Canadian sovereignty and independence. This was one part of the National Energy Program which should have been kept.

Motion No. 14 says that we should retain the Crown share north of 60° and use it for the aboriginal claims settlement. If we get rid of that we have lost one of the means through which we could settle native claims. One possibility would be to give the aborigines the back-in. The Government purports to want to settle the claims, so why give away this possibility?

I think I have summarized my position on these motions, Mr. Speaker. They are all perfectly reasonable motions, some even more reasonable than others. I expect that the Government could accept one, possibly two, and hopefully all four of these motions.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the four amendments which were proposed by the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Motion No. 3 reads in part as follows:

—there shall be inserted a condition or caveat that the area in question is subject to an aboriginal claim and may ultimately be owned by the aboriginal people in fee simple, including the sub-surface.

This relates to the motions which were debated earlier. This could be very important in clarifying the situation. There has been no format or procedure set forth which would indicate what the situation will be when reserves which are earmarked for development run into lands which have been designated for aboriginal claims. It would be beneficial to put forward a position of the Government.

It is quite reasonable that the Government agree with Motion No. 4 which reads:

In the formulation of bid criteria, the Minister shall be obliged to consult with representatives of affected aboriginal groups and local communities.

The Member for Vancouver—Kingsway stated correctly that the former Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said that Indian groups and communities would be consulted. If they are going to be consulted, what is wrong with including that in the legislation? It is not unreasonable to expect that the people directly affected by this Act should be consulted. I think that is only common decency. If we are going to act in the best interests of the people involved, why would they not consult with them?

Motion No. 14 reads in part as follows:

Prior to the settlement of aboriginal claims in affected areas the Crown share shall be retained North of 60½ in any interest granted or entered into.

• (1220)

I know what the Hon. Member is attempting to achieve but the situation as it now stands is equally bad in all parts of Canada where frontier development was taking place. That not only relates to the Beaufort but to the offshore and the East Coast as well. What has happened with all this exploration and no development is that these communities, these areas of our country which incurred a great deal of expense in anticipation and hope that these deposits of oil and gas would mean financial success and security to at least some capacity have now been disappointed and are left without any kind of compensation.

I think the problem is that the Government has taken away an equity provision from all the areas in the frontier. It has stated there is going to be a certain revenue sharing formula but there cannot be any revenue sharing if the Government is not determined in its position to have development take place. Until there is development there will not be any development sharing and the equity position is not there. All we have is the hope that some day something is going to happen. If the Government is to stay in power, which it will not, there would not be anything happening, certainly not until well after the turn of the century.

Motion No. 15 reads:

The Minister shall require that any benefits plan submitted pursuant to subsection (2) include provisions to ensure that aboriginal people and disadvantaged individuals or groups have priority access to training and employment.

I think it is safe to say that in the high Arctic this now applies to everyone because, as I mentioned earlier, the fragile economy which was there has been severely disrupted. We are going to have a great many native people unemployed, as well as other people. I think we will see quite a few people leaving the area, which in itself will have a detrimental effect on the economy. Those who stay will be severely handicapped, particularly the young who we as a Government encouraged away from the traditional lifestyles of hunting, fishing and other occupations. We encouraged them to get involved in the oil and gas industry. We have now left them without any hope to further their employment in the area in which they made such a promising start.

I think this amendment is not only fair, it has been requested by the Inuvik region. In a report to the Executive Council on the impacts of the oil industry slowdown on the local economy were suggested measures to improve the economic climate in the near term. It is suggested that further training take place very quickly because we have to do something with these people. It is fine to go in with economic promises and then pull out when the economic climate is not as great as it once was, but we have to look at the human element. We have affected people's lives; we have affected the economy and the lifestyle in this area, and we cannot as a Government and as Members of Parliament simply walk away and say: "Too bad the world price of oil and gas is not what it once was. Tough luck. Maybe this will come together later on". In the meantime we have shattered the dreams of these people, and in many cases we have broken up a great many families in the affected regions. I think the Government has to do something to deal with this question.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I find it somewhat amazing that the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—the Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) would support Motion No. 15 which, to me, flies right against the Charter of Rights that his Party, and he as a Member, were so strongly pushing to entrench into Canadian history.

This is a section which takes a group of people and says they are special, but not geographically. If he said the northern people were special, including everyone, as we are contemplating doing with the Newfoundland Accord, I could understand it, but when one just takes a group of people, it flies in the face of the Charter. I do not understand it. It is against the Charter. Yet the Hon. Member, who is a supporter of the Charter, says he likes this motion.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to comment on these four motions. I am particularly inspired by the comments of the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon). I had feared the Conservative majority might well be opposed to these resolutions, and the comments made by the Hon. Member tend to confirm that.

Let me say immediately, since that comment will be still ringing in the minds of those of us in the Chamber and others watching in other places, that the argument the Hon. Member has made misses one vital point. The fact that we target various groups in Canadian society as a means of dealing with their social inequities and the disparities they have experienced in times past, is in no way in contradiction of the Charter. What the Hon. Member's comment underscores is that the Government is opposed to these several resolutions, at least, that is what I fear.

I want to say something about each of them briefly. Since my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver —Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), has made good arguments for each of them, I would like to underscore them in a more general sense and deal specifically with the points of each one. I want to do that by recognizing that the Government has served up to us in the last weeks celebrations of individualism, the importance of initiative being exercised by people wherever they may be. Surely, these resolutions are designed to ensure that just that kind of local initiative will be recognized and protected by Government. Surely, what is necessary is to ensure that the Government of Canada does not once more allow outsiders to come in, in the form of one or other of the petroleum companies, to do what they will on northern or offshore lands without any regard for the aboriginal rights which have not yet been settled.

Surely, this would be one more expression of the kind of imperialism we have seen too much of in Canadian history. It is one more assertion by the Canadian Government on behalf of swash bucklers, whether individuals or corporations, who will do what they will without any regard to local rights.

We must write into the Bill an assurance that their activities are subject to legal action. They may well find their discoveries under challenge. They will have to share, or they may find themselves actually losing these rights and losing the lands on which they have carried out exploration because they may turn out to belong, as the motion says, in fee simple, to the aboriginal peoples. Surely, a Government which has regard for the rights of aboriginal peoples, which wants to ensure they have something in the way of resources to develop their local initiative, would want to include this motion in the Bill as a protection for them.

The second motion provides for the development of a benefit plan. Surely, this is only to ensure that those companies which come in do not carry out their activities, their exploration, their drilling and development work, without any regard for the people who live in the area. This is what we so very often find in our times. We have corporate interests at work and the individuals and the communities affected so profoundly by what the corporations do have very little in the way of legal resources to protect themselves against the corporations. If Members of the Government really support the principles which they so easily espouse on political platforms, in Speeches from the Throne, in debate here in the House of Commons and in after-dinner speeches, then surely they would want to include this measure in the Bill to ensure that benefit plans become part of the development. This would ensure that the communities would receive benefits and that local initiatives would be recognized and rewarded in the development.

• (1230)

With respect to Motions Nos. 14 and 15, surely we must have further attempts to ensure that communities, aboriginal peoples, and for that matter disadvantaged individuals or groups in other parts of Canada, will have a basis in the legislation to ensure that they will have benefits. To talk about local initiatives and to say that we must look to the people in the regions to save themselves because Ottawa does not have the resources and then refuse to include in the legislation a provision to give these people the resources and the legal rights which they need and which the Government should be providing, surely indicates the completely empty rhetoric of the Conservative Government. It is fine to talk about individualism. However, when Members say yea to these resolutions and then vote them down later when we stand in our places to indicate whether we are for or against, then surely the Canadian people will measure the rhetoric of the Government. It is at these times that the people of Canada must decide that these Conservatives do not actually believe in individualism and regional development, but that they want to give it all away to the oil companies.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply to some of the claims made by members of the New Democratic Party. First, I cannot object to their theme with respect to opportunities for aboriginal peoples and so on in terms of their participation in land claims. However, I must point out that the Bill before us is an energy Bill. It is not a Bill dealing with aboriginal peoples. I would also like to point out that it is framework legislation. It is legislation which covers all Canada Lands for exploration.

To put into law the requirements which the NDP would have us put into law prejudges what is taking place in terms of the land claim negotiations. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) stood in his place and made wild and exaggerated claims that the Conservative Party of Canada is not interested in aboriginal peoples. That is utter nonsense and he knows it. The Hon. Member did not participate in any of the hearings with respect to this Bill when it was before the Legislative Committee. He did not attend one meeting of the committee. He showed no interest whatsoever. All of a sudden he stands in his place today and talks about these measures. If the Hon. Members wants to talk about action then let him talk about the Sechelt agreement signed by the Government and passed into legislation. That agreement shows our interest in aboriginal peoples.

The Government is interested in aboriginal peoples. It has maintained its contact with them in a meaningful way and it will continue to do so. What Members opposite are asking us to do is prejudge what will happen with respect to the land claims. If the Hon. Member were to take the time—and I am sure he has not—to read the Sechelt agreement and what is included in it, or read the COPE agreement, then perhaps he would have some idea of what this is all about. However, with the greatest of respect to the Hon. Member, he is all wet when he claims that the Progressive Conservative Party is not interested in aboriginal peoples. That is utter nonsense.

I wish to thank Hon. Members today for remembering that I was the spokesman for Indian Affairs and Northern Development when my Party was in opposition. I said at that time, and I stand by it today, that the aboriginal peoples of Canada have nothing to fear from a Progressive Conservative Government. The proof is in the action that we have taken to date and which we will continue to take.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon), made a very important point. He pointed out that this is framework legislation and that the Constitution will not allow us to single out individual people in framework-type legislation. Hon. Members talked about the Atlantic Accord. The Atlantic Accord is a specific Accord for a specific area. There is a preference clause in the Accord with respect to the peoples of Newfoundland, whether they be aboriginal peoples or not.

What is proposed by Members opposite is contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There is nothing in the legislation before us—and I want to make this very clear—to prevent the very items that the Hon. Member is trying to introduce today from being introduced in land claim settlements.

Because of the size of our country there are different situations which arise in different areas. That is a given. I think even the Hon. Member opposite will agree with that statement. So to put these specific requirements into framework legislation, which is energy legislation, is something we oppose for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the comments made by the Hon. Member who just resumed his seat. He cast some aspersions on the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) when he said that if he was interested he would have attended the committee hearings. In order to be fair to all Members we must recognize that under the reform of Parliament the committees of the House are smaller. It is not possible for all Members who are interested, regardless of their Party, to be at all committee meetings. In this particular case the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) attended the committee meetings. He represented our caucus. He brings forward today those concerns which we are debating at this particular time in the House. The amendments we are debating are amendments which have been put forward by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I am pleased to see the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon getting up to express his concerns.

With respect to the substance of what the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) just said, I think it is important that we specifically recognize within this legislation the rights and concerns of native people. Last week in the House during Question Period much of our time was used in discussing information that was made public with regard to what is happening in the Manitoba region of the Department of Indian Affairs. It has come to the attention of the public that things are not all well within Indian Affairs, especially in the Manitoba region. There is a real question out there whether or not the Department has been acting in the best interests of the native people. It is because of this very concern and because of what we heard last week that the proposed amendments are felt necessary. Native people do not feel that their best interests are always represented by governments, regardless of political stripe. Quite often those people who have a special trust relationship with native people, that is, Government, Ministers and government departments, have other concerns. One of those concerns could be to have quick energy development. That is something which will take place when there is successful exploration. Companies involved will want to act quickly. One area in which they can move quickly, if they can get the Government to move in its decision-making process, is with regard to native concerns. In other words native people may be formally consulted but the actual consultations are mere lip-service as opposed to dealing with the legitimate concerns.

The series of amendments put forward by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway are necessary. I think native people throughout Canada would be concerned if the Government refused to allow these amendments to be incorporated into the legislation. Again, I point to the incidents of last week. I point to the audit carried out with regard to the Department of Indian Affairs in Manitoba. I think there is a legitimate concern. The best way those concerns can be met is if amendments are passed in the House of Commons. Indeed, that is what the House should be doing with regard to government legislation.

• (1240)

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I will not take more than a couple of minutes of your time. I wanted to make some comments with respect to that which was said by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). He is quite right in pointing out the dependence on industrial activity that has occurred in the North. It does not take long for people to become dependent on changes.

Those who live in areas that are dependent on the resource industries get used to the boom and bust situation. It sometimes worries me that whatever a Government tries to do, it ends up making the peaks higher and the troughs lower. This certainly was the case with PIP grants. There was going to be a lot of activity any way on account of high oil prices. We put on top of that the PIP grant system which made that peak even higher than it would otherwise have been; consequently the trough is now a little deeper.

The Hon. Member talked about a presentation that had been made by the Regional Department of the Territorial Government on the situation in the delta. That was a very good report. I had the opportunity to read it and to speak with the people who drafted it. They made some very good recommendations. The federal Government has also started to act in that regard. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has appointed a special committee with a rather high-faluting title, the Action Force on Arctic Initiatives. I sometimes wish it had not been so named. Perhaps it gives people the idea that we are going to be able to do a little more than we will actually be able to do.

This committee comprised of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) as the Chairman, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) and the two Members of Parliament for the Northwest Territories has already embarked on some of those things to which the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys has referred.

We are making some moves with respect to training. The facilities of CFS Inuvik, the military base that had to be closed down on account of obsolescence, have been made available for a training college. We are beginning to work on the training aspects of it.

I will not belabour all the other things that are happening. The Hon. Member can rest assured that his remarks have not fallen upon completely stony ground.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 3 negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 14 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 14 negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 15 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 15 negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would just like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members that Motions Nos. 6 and 7 will be grouped for debate and a vote on Motion No. 6 will be applied to Motion No. 7.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 50 by striking out lines 25 to 29 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"Resources for the purposes of this section shall purchase the share in accordance with subsection (2) at a price equal to the amount referred to in paragraph 49(3)(a)."

Motion No. 7.

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 50 by striking out lines 30 to 34 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Where the agent of Her Majesty referred to in subsection (1) acts to purchase the share, it shall do so within 60 days after the closing date for the submission of tenders specified in the invitation to tender."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I might add that it is a pleasure to see you in the chair as the Deputy Speaker continuing your good work.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Hon. Members are giving me a rough time. I am not being paternalistic or anything, Mr. Speaker. I always look to you for guidance.

These motions deal with a more complicated area of the Bill. Clause 50(1) reads:

Where a share offered for sale by public tender pursuant to subsection 49(1)—

Clause 49(1) indicates that the Government can offer a share for tender in order to bring it up to the Canadian-ownership rate that is required under a complicated procedure in this Bill. Clause 50(1) goes on:

Where a share offered for sale by public tender pursuant to subsection 49(1) is not purchased at the sale, a company or other body corporate that is an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada and is designated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for the purposes of this section has the option to purchase the share in accordance with subsection (2) at a price equal to the amount referred to in paragraph 49(3)(a).

My amendment indicates that for the purposes of this subclause, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) shall—not have an option but shall—purchase the share in accordance with subclause 2 at a price equal to the amount referred to in Paragraph 49(3)(a). It makes it obligatory for the agent of the Government, probably Petro-Canada as the government oil company, to bring the Canadian ownership up to 50 per cent if the public sector does not do it. This removes discretionary power from the Minister.

You accept, Mr. Speaker, that we do not trust the Tories on this. They pretend that they are for Canadian ownership and for Canadian companies, but we know where their real loyalty lies. We know that they cannot get down south of the border with their pals quick enough. We also know that they are prepared to sell out Canadian resources to international interests at the drop of a hat. This is why we want to make it obligatory, make it a requirement that they "shall", with no options. Of course the options will only be in effect for a couple of years, until the next election, at which point we will not have to worry about the Conservatives selling out our resources to international oil companies. We know that the Conservatives are in bed with the international oil companies. It is obvious from every energy Bill they have brought down. They dismantled the entire energy program, part of which at least tried—and I give the Liberals credit for it—to Canadianize one of the most important industries in Canada. They made some mistakes, but they tried. This Government cannot fall over itself fast enough to help its American friends in fact gobble up our resources. I think of the name of the movie "Back to the Future". They want to get back there to the good old days so that they can give away more resources to foreigners. After the next election when there is an NDP minority or majority Government, we will come back to the House and clean this up. By offering this amendment I thought I would make it somewhat easier for the Government. It is something the Government could accept.

• (1250)

I wonder what the Government uses Petro-Canada for. I cannot figure out any method in its madness. It has made Petro-Canada buy a lot of gas stations. Petro-Canada has expanded its number of gas stations under the Conservatives; that is a fact.

Mr. McDermid: We didn't make them do it.

Mr. Waddell: I hear the Parliamentary Secretary. Surely he is not telling me that that decision was taken without the approval of the Government. Petro-Canada has gone out and bought more gas stations, but what is its role as Conservatives see it? I suppose if oil prices were high they would simply give it away to their dollar a year men, the people in Brascan and the Bronfman family. They want to privatize all Canadian assets and give them at cheap prices to these people who have insider knowledge or were friends with Sinc Stevens. That is the way they are operating in terms of privatization.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would hope the Hon. Member would take note that Hon. Members should be referred to by their constituencies and not by their names in this Chamber.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member from York North or whatever the company is called. What is it?

Some Hon. Members: York Centre.

Mr. Waddell: York Centre is the name of the company.

Mr. McDermid: Take yourself out of the gutter, Ian.

Mr. Waddell: Look who is talking about gutters. The way they are dealing with the Canadian assets is a shame. They are privatizing them for their friends in corporate business in Toronto. It is shameful.

My point was, will they do the same for Petro-Canada? Well, not now because oil prices are too low, but when they go up they might change their minds.

In part, Motion No. 7 reads:

> Where the agent of Her Majesty referred to in subsection (1) acts to purchase the share, it shall do so within 60 days after the closing date for the submission of tenders specified in the invitation to tender.

This amendment tidies things up. In other words, the Crown oil company or the Crown corporation must buy the shares within 60 days.

To summarize, the purpose of these two amendments is to stop the Government from privatizing any of these shares and from taking up the slack, if it is not taken up by Canadian companies.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the motions which I have the honour of seconding. The debate, through the interjections of the Parliamentary Secretary, focused very nicely upon another aspect of the matter. Minutes ago we were concerned about ensuring the rights of aboriginal people and local communities. Now we are concerned that our publicly owned oil company will be encouraged by legislation to take a part in ensuring the Canadianization of energy exploitation. That strikes me as being a rather important thing to do at a time when press reports suggest that the operations of Petro-Canada are being carried out without any clear mandate from the Government.

When my good friend indicates some wonderment over the acquisition of service stations by Petro-Canada in the last while, one can of course recognize that to be in the oil business substantially increases the cash flow of Petro-Canada. We must ensure that the cash flow is used for Canadian petroleum development, and in particular to ensure that the benefits from the development will be available to Canadians. Surely they are very important results.

I support enthusiastically the two motions of my colleague. I trust there will be a change of feeling or attitude on the part of the Government, and that it will support these motions.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker, but I think the last few comments should not go unchallenged.

There is nothing in the Bill which prevents Petro-Canada from taking any kind of interest in any one of the exploration agreements, production agreements, or whatever. There is nothing to prevent Petro-Canada from participating. Second, the Bill has a 50 per cent Canadian ownership requirement.

NDP Members define Canadian ownership and ask who as a Canadian should own it. They say that it should not be a large Canadian company, that it should be a small Canadian company or that it should be an individual on the street. By the way, the individual on the street may own a few shares in the Canadian company which may own it. They keep changing the definition of "ownership" in their own minds and confusing the public. Once a company has more than 100 employees, the NDP considers the company to be a big bad brute. NDP Members indicate that they cannot participate, that they are a big company and therefore nasty and should not be involved in the oil industry or in some other industry. That is nonsense, and the Hon. Member knows it. Canadians are not gullible. They do not buy that kind of stuff.

I will reiterate. Under this Bill Petro-Canada has every opportunity to participate in the exploration and production ends of things. There is nothing to prevent Petro-Canada from participating whatsoever, and there is a 50 per cent Canadian ownership requirement in the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it. I declare the motion lost, which means that Motion No. 7 is also lost.

Motions Nos. 6 and 7 negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—CLAIM TO PROVINCIAL STATUS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, last August a Bill was passed by the Federal Parliament of India granting to the territory of Mizoram full state status. For 25 years the people of Mizoram had been fighting a constitutional battle for their rightful place in the Indian Federation. They have been successful.

For 25 years the people of the Northwest Territories have been fighting their constitutional battle for their rightful place in the Canadian Federation. Despite considerable gains, they have not yet been completely successful.

We must never forget that there are, even today, north of 60, Canadians who are denied full democratic rights. They do not yet enjoy provincial status. The sooner the Parliament of Canada follows the lead of the Parliament of India in this matter, the better it will be.

* * *

[Translation]

SAINT-MAURICE RIDING

NEW MEMBER'S PRIORITIES

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to thank the Government for the opportunities I had during this campaign to make a contribution and receive the support of others, and point out that my priorities will, of course, be the unemployment situation in my riding and the youth problem and training for young people, and I will do everything I can to do something about our social security programs which are also a major problem in my riding.

* * *

[English]

IMMIGRATION

HEAD TAX PAID BY CHINESE IMMIGRANTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in 1983 as a result of raising past injustices against Chinese Canadians in Parliament, I received 1,100 copies of Chinese head tax receipts, 436 from elderly survivors who paid this tax. The Chinese head tax, followed by the Exclusion Act, applied only to Chinese immigrants. This was racist, discriminatory legislation which remains a disgraceful blot on Canada's history and reputation.

Chinese laborers worked to repay the $500 head tax over many years; the Government meanwhile netted $20 million in profits. Liberals acknowledged this injustice but refused to act. The Conservatives have not fulfilled their election promises to the Chinese Canadian National Council.

I call on all Members of Parliament to acknowledge past injustices against our fellow Chinese Canadians in an all-Party resolution which advocates remedial action. This issue concerns justice, not money. It is fundamental to a multicultural Canada.

* * *

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT FORGET COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS BE MODIFIED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on the weekend, we saw in The Globe and Mail how some members of the Forget Commission were violently opposed to the recommendations that are to be made to the Government in the weeks and months to come.

Mr. Speaker, I think Hon. Members will agree that paying people $1,000 a day to find out whether other people who are getting $160 a week are not getting too much is totally unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members of this House to help pressure the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to call Commissioner Forget and tell him that recommendations like these are unacceptable and to draft some better ones.

* * *

[English]

IMMIGRATION

FAMILY REUNIFICATION—CALL FOR STREAMLINING OF APPLICATIONS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, ever since the first settlers came to Canada over 300 years ago, the family unit has formed a building block of our culture and society. Nothing is more essential to the well-being of a nation than strong family ties. Our immigration policy reflects this conviction by making family reunification the cornerstone of Canadian immigration law. Bringing to Canada those who already have family roots in our country provides a stable environment for the immigrant and a positive boost for the community.

Unfortunately, current family class immigration has become fraught with delays, confusion, and complexity. I therefore urge the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) to adopt the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration and streamline the family class process. This will not only ensure that mothers, fathers, sisters and brothers are more quickly reunited, but it will also help us offer a home to those immigrants who already have a family stake in our country. Let us continue to put families first in our immigration policy.

* * *

[Translation]

THE ELDERLY

HOUSING PAVILION IN BARRAUTE

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the people of Abitibi are proud of the new senior citizens' home in Barraute. Since 1964, proposals have been made for this project to the Government of Canada, but the proposals were always turned down, particularly when the riding was held by Liberal Member René Gingras. Thanks to our efforts since 1984 and those of the Barraute committee, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Val-d'Or, the DDE in Noranda with a key project, and the municipalities of Barraute, Barraute Piedmont and the outlying areas, the project was finally realized.

The project is a fine example of what people and the Conservative Government can accomplish when they work together to solve problems of common concern, in this case the lack of decent housing for senior citizens who need financial assistance.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government of Canada, I wish those who will make this project their home a pleasant and worry-free future.

* * *

• (1405)

[English]

FINANCE

NON PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY UNION GAS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the need in Canada for a tax system that is fair, just, and equitable, I wish to present today our second great untaxed corporation award. Today's winner is Union Gas which has been granted, by successive Liberal and Conservative Governments, the legal right to pay no corporate income tax on profits that in the two years 1980 and 1981 totalled $52.7 million.

Had the tax system been fair and equitable, and had Union Gas been required to pay even a 25 per cent tax rate on its profits in 1980-81, revenue accruing to the federal Government would have amounted to $13.2 million. Had Union Gas been required to pay taxes on its profits, average Canadian taxpayers may have had less personal income and sales tax to pay in 1986. Today's great untaxed corporation award winner is a reminder from New Democrat Members of Parliament to the Conservative Government of the pressing need for serious and comprehensive tax reform.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF SEVERANCE PAY AS INCOME

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise on behalf of almost 1,000 employees at Miracle Mart, some of whom are located in the city of Hamilton, who have been laid off. As a result of the Government's regressive decision last year, they are unable to collect any unemployment insurance because they are receiving severance pay.

You will recall that we have raised this issue a number of times in the House and we were told: "Wait for the Forget Commission". After hearing press reports on the weekend, I am afraid that we do not want to wait for the Forget Commission because there will be many other Canadians who will be left out in the cold, as have these hundreds of Canadians.

In the case of Hamilton, the average number of years of service of these women and men at Miracle Mart was 19 years. They will leave their jobs without being able to collect a penny of unemployment insurance. We believe that is absolutely wrong and we will continue to fight it in the House and in the constituencies.

* * *

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN ECONOMY'S RESILIENCE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, despite historically low grain and oil prices, resulting from unfair foreign competition, the Saskatchewan economy is showing remarkable resilience.

Retail sales are up 6 per cent, housing starts are up 13 per cent, and building permits are up by 43 per cent. The prime interest rate, at 9.75 per cent, is the lowest in eight and one-half years. Five-year mortgage rates are down by three and one-quarter points since September, 1984.

In fact the Government of Saskatchewan has guaranteed home mortgages at 9.5 per cent for the next ten years. Inflation is under 4 per cent, the most stable price environment since 1971. Fourteen thousand new jobs have been created over the past two years. The unemployment rate, at 7.5 per cent, is down a full point over the past two years.

Now the new Saskatchewan Home Improvement Plan is generating jobs at a rate of 154 each day. The Conference Board of Canada forecasts a 6 per cent increase in personal income this year. It is proof positive that the Saskatchewan economy is being well managed.

* * *

[Translation]

SOCIAL SECURITY

UNIVERSALITY OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, it seems the federal Liberals from Quebec keep changing their minds. In the summer of 1985, Quebec Liberals were telling the world they would never challenge the universality of social programs in Canada. The same Liberals, with the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) and his leader foremost in the fray, accused my Government of hypocrisy because it was trying to improve the administration of our social programs.

Mr. Speaker, on the weekend, the Quebec Liberal Party's future, its young Liberals, passed a resolution aimed at putting an end to the principle of universality of social programs. Those same young Liberals who support their leader forget that last summer he said in the House of Commons that the Liberals would never discuss changes to the administration of social programs in Canada. But who are we to believe in the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker? The youth wing, which has always been the party's pride and joy, or the Liberal Caucus in Ottawa? In any case, Canadians will have to wait a long time before the Liberals make it clear to everyone what exactly their social policy is.

* * *

• (1410)

[English]

NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

TRIBUTE TO ELIE WIESEL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege this afternoon to join my colleagues in applauding the selection of Elie Wiesel as the recipient of the 1986 Nobel Peace Prize. Born in Romania in 1928, Wiesel witnessed and experienced the full horror of the Nazi holocaust in eastern Europe. Deported at the age of 16 to the concentration camps, he was the only member of his entire family to survive. Over the past 40 years he has used his memories of the holocaust as the basis for a series of publications that both mourn the suffering and tragedy, and exalt the joys of Jewish life and teaching. His works now enjoy world-wide acclaim and popularity.

Outspoken, passionate and committed, a symbol of hope and perseverance, Elie Wiesel has used books, poems, essays and lectures to convert his memories into a crusade against apathy toward suffering, and into defiance against the oblivion of millions of individuals. His vivid and personal accounts of the atrocities of the holocaust and his tireless struggle to ensure that the deaths of six million Jews are never forgotten are crucial to our shared hope that similar barbarism against the rights and dignity of man will never be repeated.

In recognition of this noble struggle, Elie Wiesel is a deserving recipient of this year's highest award for peace.

* * *

EXPO 86

PRIDE IN JOB WELL DONE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last night the curtain came down on Expo 86. After two previous world fairs had flopped in the U.S., and in spite of many dire predictions, the Vancouver world's fair, Expo 86, proved to be a fantastic success. It put an enormously favourable spotlight on British Columbia and Canada. More than that, it generated tremendous enthusiasm and overwhelming crowds. It was by far the most popular world's fair ever held. To top it all off, it even made money. Today, as we pause and look back, Canadians everywhere say: "Well done, British Columbians, our hats are off to you."

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF DANYLO SHUMUK

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a plea for the release of Danylo Shumuk, unjustly imprisoned for many years in the Soviet Union. Mr. Shumuk has been subjected to hard physical labour, an inadequate diet, and the threatening atmosphere of a Soviet labour camp. He suffers simply because he was convicted of having written a manuscript of his memoirs. Now his health is deteriorating rapidly. He suffers from stomach ulcers, a heart condition, and circulatory problems. His paralyzed right arm is also a concern, especially since he may soon not be able to write. Correspondence with relatives in Canada is nearly all he has left.

In 1981 there was unanimous consent of this House to a proposal to urge the Soviet Union to release Mr. Shumuk. Let us once again make a concerted effort to reunite Mr. Shumuk with his relatives here in Canada. If he is not freed, he will not receive the health care he needs and could die far away from friends and family. We must make another appeal to the Soviets to avert a human tragedy.

* * *

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FORGET COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Government will soon get the Forget Commission report on unemployment insurance.

According to the articles published in The Globe and Mail, the report recommandations spell catastrophy for Atlantic Canada. The Globe and Mail indicates that the report will recommend the abolition of the unemployment insurance program for fishermen, along with several other measures under which workers in the poorer regions of the country will be hardest hit.

Seasonal workers, who most need this program, would be directly affected, not to mention the fact that most of them would get reduced benefits.

If this Government believes it has a role to play in the elimination of regional disparities, it must indicate forthwith that such recommendations will not be considered and will simply be rejected.

* * *

• (1415)

[English]

EXPO 86

TRIBUTE TO ALL PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday marked the closing day of a very successful world's fair, Expo 86 in Vancouver. Over 22 million people from around the world visited the now famous site between May and October. The federal Government and the British Columbia Government combined their efforts to host Expo 86. The provinces and territories and countries from around the world, coupled with many Canadian corporations, shared in the experience. Success was the result of people from every province of Canada, all the States of America and countries around the world, coming to enjoy Man in Motion.

Expo 86 truly became a people place. Two individuals who deserve special recognition are Canada's official host, Patrick

Reid, the Commissioner General, and a B.C. businessman named Jimmy Pattison, Expo 86 Chairman and President. For one summer Expo 86 transformed Vancouver, which is celebrating its one hundredth anniversary, into a cosmopolitan crossroads. To the thousands of volunteers, sponsors, and participants we say a hearty thank you for your hard work and hospitality. A job well done!

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY OF DAIL ÉIREANN PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in our gallery of members of the Public Accounts Committee of the Dail, Ireland, led by their Chairman, Mr. Denis Foley.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

DISARMAMENT

ICELANDIC SUMMIT—COMMENT BY FORMER UNITED STATES NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Paul Warnke, the chief U.S. negotiator of the 1977 SALT talks, was on The Journal last night commenting on the summit in Iceland. He said:

> I think that the only chance of progress is if there is somebody who has both the wisdom and the guts to stand up and say to the President of the United States: "You're giving away a chance for genuine progress toward nuclear stability and you are pursuing pie in the sky".

Will the Prime Minister tell us whether he agrees with that statement? Does he have the wisdom and the guts to send that message to the President on behalf of the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the comments made by Mr. Warnke who operated in this area on behalf of another administration. I would be inclined to endorse the view expressed by Lord Carrington when he said that we agree that possibilities for significant progress had emerged in a number of areas. He underlined the importance of following these up energetically in the appropriate negotiating fora.

In the morning after an important meeting such as that I think that one must quite properly look at the matter constructively and see if there is a possibility of building bridges in the future. I think that possibility exists, and Canada will do all it can to be helpful in that process as the parties return to Geneva.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER SHARES VIEWS OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Warnke is not the only person to point out, in his comments and elsewhere, that the gap between Messrs. Gorbachev and Reagan still exists and has even widened as a result of the failure of the preliminary Summit.

I would like to know where the Prime Minister finds the basis for his optimism and whether he agrees with the comments made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs this morning.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentions a gap that has widened and a failed meeting at the Summit. I am inclined to recognize that a serious problem exists, but also that there is the potential for future progress. Meeting under ideal conditions, both parties discussed a very complex and delicate problem, leaving in place mechanisms for sustained and continuing negotiations in the future. I have every reason to expect that the Geneva talks will proceed in an effective and productive fashion, and that ultimately, Mr. Gorbachev will go to the United States, as agreed, to conclude the talks.

STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—DISARMAMENT POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, we in the Opposition consider the Star Wars Program favoured by the President of the United States to be entirely incompatible with a disarmament policy.

Does the Minister agree with us now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I have said before, on behalf of the Government, that although this Canadian Government will not agree to take part in the government-to-government development of this policy and in the research involved, I think, as NATO Secretary General Lord Carrington mentioned, that in the circumstances and considering the activities being deployed by the other side, it was a prudent gesture on the part of the United States and the Alliance to undertake research in this field.

We share that view.

• (1420)

[English]

UNITED STATES POSITION ON STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the Prime Minister. The historic progress which he and the Secretary of State for External Affairs talk about includes a statement which says we must build upon the consensus that was reached. But we know the stumbling block to any further progress is the willingness to negotiate the Star Wars or SDI Program. In Canada's strong support for the continuation of negotiations, will the Prime Minister be communicating directly with our allies in the United States and urging them to reconsider their position and put the Star Wars SDI Program back on the agenda for Geneva so we can eliminate that stumbling block and reach an historic agreement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think one can look at the events of the weekend with some optimism or some degree of pessimism. For our part, I think that is positive. I think there is reason to be modestly hopeful. I think the elements are in place for an ongoing civilized dialogue at Geneva and, hopefully, which will result in Mr. Gorbachev's coming to the United States as agreed upon. There are stumbling blocks on both sides. That is what negotiations are all about, sitting down with open minds knowing the objections on both sides and trying to effect an honourable compromise.

The important thing which came out of the meetings, I believe, was the indications of the parameters of understanding. They are there, and hopefully people of goodwill will achieve them.

REQUEST JOINT PARLIAMENTARY RESOLUTION BE DRAFTED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, no one would disagree with the Prime Minister's comments or hopes, but what we are asking about is the specific initiative the Canadian Government, indeed, the Canadian Parliament, could take on behalf of all concerned Canadians. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to join with the opposition Parties in drafting a joint parliamentary resolution which would urge continuation of negotiations but also urge that the question of SDI or Star Wars be put on the agenda and that both superpowers attempt to negotiate an agreement which will limit the testing of that program in space?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why we would pass a resolution putting the question on the agenda when it clearly is on the agenda and it was on the agenda all weekend.

Mr. Kaplan: What about Gorbachev?

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member wonders about Mr. Gorbachev. Mr. Gorbachev, I think, made his point well known, as did President Reagan. The fact that agreement was not reached at this first meeting does not mean that agreements will not be reached in the future. I think we ought to look at this constructively and see the atmosphere in which events transpired, the hope for the future, and resolve to encourage President Reagan and Secretary Gorbachev to go to Geneva with a view to resolving these differences.

I do not look at it in the spirit of pessimism. I think there is modest reason to be hopeful about the future and Canada's every commitment will be to be helpful in that area.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FORGET COMMISSION REPORT INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. He will recall that frequently throughout the Speech from the Throne the Government committed itself to the notion of fairness. I have figures which will appear in the soon-to-be released Forget Report which indicate that this commission plans to take $620 million out of Atlantic Canada, $930 million out of Quebec, and $430 million out of British Columbia. These are three regions of Canada which are already the worst affected by high levels of unemployment. Is this the Government's idea of fairness? And if not, will the Prime Minister give us assurances that this recommendation, coming from the Forget Commission, will not be accepted by the Government of Canada?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must tell my hon. friend that he apparently has access to information that I as Prime Minister have not received. I can tell my hon. friend that our only involvement was mentioned at the time of the Budget Speech on May 23 by the Minister of Finance when he said in this regard:

> I am also announcing that the government will soon launch a major review of the unemployment insurance program. Our objective is to improve and simplify the unemployment insurance system to make it fairer and to ensure that it promotes flexible adjustment in the labour market. I want to emphasize that we are not undertaking this review with an objective of reducing federal contributions to the unemployed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it may be the case that I have figures that the Prime Minister does not have; but when he looks at the report he will find those figures.

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since it was the Prime Minister's Government that appointed this commission and since it is his Government to which the commission will make its recommendations, will the Prime Minister make it clear that when it comes to these three areas the worst hit by unemployment his Government will not administer a further smack in the face, which is what it amounts to, to the poorest regions by taking hundreds of millions of dollars out? Will he assure us that the $3 billion recommended for cuts across Canada will not be acted upon by the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on a report that I have not seen. I can only tell my hon. friend that our position is the one set out by the Minister of Finance when he said that he wanted to emphasize that we are not undertaking this review with an objective of reducing federal contributions to the unemployed. We have appointed an impartial group of people to analyse the problem. I will wait for their report and make determinations when we have received it.

[Translation]

FORGET COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for this work.

The Forget Commission is also recommending that severance pay and pensions be included in calculating unemployment insurance.

Will the Minister state clearly that the Government cannot accept this recommendation?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party has a bad habit of taking part of a report as it appears in the press, treating it as though it had been received by the Government and asking questions about it.

The Forget Report will be tabled between now and November 30. At that time, all Members in and outside the House will have a chance to comment, and we will subsequently formulate our position. That is all. There is no Forget Report dated October 14, 1986.

[English]

PAYMENT OF BENEFITS IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. During a visit to St. John's, Newfoundland, with his Cabinet the Prime Minister acknowledged that the economy of Atlantic Canada is seriously ill. According to comments made by three members of the Forget Commission yesterday and today, they want to cure the problem by killing the patient. Some $727 million in UIC payments—three-quarters of $1 billion—will be cut from the region if the recommendations of the Forget Commission are accepted by the Government. Will the Prime Minister give his assurance today that the Government will not keep his recent financial commitments by cutting $3 billion in UIC payments from the Atlantic region?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will understand, as I indicated to the Leader of the NDP, that I cannot, nor would he want me to, comment on a report that is unavailable to Members of the House and which I have not seen.

In regard to Atlantic Canada, I did indeed express the view in St. John's, and the regret of all Members of the House, that previous government policies over the past 15 years had failed dramatically to bring equality of opportunity to the people of Atlantic Canada. I am going down to Charlottetown on Thursday to put in place with the Premiers a new mechanism that we hope will bring about a greater degree of equality of opportunity for people in Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, ask the Prime Minister a civil question, you get a petty, partisan answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REGIONAL DISPARITY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister this question. What area of the world will the "Minister for Regional Economic Third World Comparisons", the Hon. Member for St. John's West, ask the people of Atlantic Canada to look to if three-quarters—

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. The Hon. Member knows full well that he should put the question to a Minister and name the Minister. Would the Hon. Member put his question again, please?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, let me put the question to the Prime Minister. To what region of Canada will the Government recommend that Atlantic Canadians look when the Prime Minister will not stand today to say he will not allow $3 billion to be cut from UIC in that region? Does the Prime Minister plan to build a prison in every port of call in Atlantic Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know how offended my hon. friend is by partisan references so I want to be very, very careful in that regard. I expressed what I am sure is the concern of all Members of the House of Commons when I indicated that our concern is that the relative prosperity that we are in the process of achieving is not fairly shared across Canada. That is a concern of Government and a concern of all Members of the House. We are working toward achieving a greater degree of equality.

I know my hon. friend will be pleased to learn, for example, that, when we came to office, the unemployment rate in Newfoundland was at 23.8 per cent and it has been reduced by 3.2 per cent already. While that is unacceptable, it indicates some degree of progress.

DISARMAMENT

ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILE TREATY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and relates to the meeting held in Reykjavik on the weekend. How does the Government intend to support the ABM Treaty now that President Reagan has made clear his intention to test and deploy ABM systems outside the laboratory within 10 years?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to try to anticipate what may or may not happen in the next 10 years but our treaty is clear and the position of the Government of Canada with regard to ABM is clear. We have conveyed that to all Parties. There has been no change in our position.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, it is now clear from the weekend conference that the United States intends to violate the ABM Treaty. Exactly a year ago, Secretary of State Shultz stated at the North Atlantic Assembly meeting in San Francisco that the United States would adhere to a strict or restrictive interpretation of ABM. Would the Prime Minister not agree now that George Shultz lied to us a year ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to rephrase his question.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I will put it in the way we would say it in our own Chamber. Would the Prime Minister not agree that the Secretary of State for the United States misled the North Atlantic Assembly so that we would pass a pro-SDI resolution at that very important meeting of parliamentarians of NATO countries?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that George Shultz needs me to defend his honour. It is well known and well accepted both here and around the world.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FORGET COMMISSION'S FORTHCOMING RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is one thing to correct abuses in the unemployment insurance program but it is another thing to gut a program completely which has served unemployed Canadians well for many, many years. Would the Prime Minister make a commitment today that he will implement no cuts recommended by the Forget Commission until the Standing Committee of the House has had an opportunity to examine fully any report put forward by the Forget Commission and is able to put forward alternative proposals to support the unemployed in their time of need?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, how many times do I have to repeat to the Hon. Member that there are no cutbacks in the Forget Report because there is no Forget Report? We are going to wait until November 30, and then we will talk about the Forget Report.

[English]

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of consternation out there now. No matter what the Forget Commission says, can the Government not make a commitment today that that report will be sent to the Standing Committee of the House for a complete examination by all Parties in the House before any cuts are implemented? Can the Minister make that commitment today?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): A year ago, this Government set up a bona fide commission that would report to the Government, and whether the Hon. Member likes it or not, we are going to wait for the Commission's recommendations before taking any kind of action.

[English]

BENEFITS PAID TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. Fishermen and their families from coast to coast know that the concept of annualization, if applied to them, will force them onto the welfare rolls and will push their communities into a deepening cycle of poverty. Could the Minister reassure these people that there will not be cuts to the unemployment insurance program, cuts that will either decrease their eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits or decrease the benefits they will receive?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, earlier, the Prime Minister referred to the statement in the Budget. Do I have to repeat it once more?

[English]

He said that he wants to emphasize that we are not undertaking this review with an objective of reducing federal contributions to the unemployed. I think that is very clear.

CALCULATION OF PENSIONS AS INCOME

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will get a more positive answer to this question. Close to 60,000 pensioners who are not yet ready to retire are already suffering because of present regulations that deduct their pension income or severance pay from unemployment insurance payments. Will the Minister rescind those unjust regulations both retroactively and permanently?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member what is more positive for the unemployed than for us to say that they will be fully supported by the Government? What could be more positive than to tell these people that we will be supportive of the unemployed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw Hon. Members' attention to the presence in the gallery today of a parliamentary delegation from the United Kingdom led by Mr. Anthony Nelson, Member of Parliament. The delegates are visiting Canada as guests of the Canadian Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

GUN CONTROL—AMENDMENT OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Last spring the Minister's predecessor indicated in the House that he was presently reviewing gun control legislation particularly as it refers to handguns. Could the Minister advise the House if he is now prepared to introduce amendments to the Criminal Code and, if so, when those amendments will be introduced?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, indeed there is a review taking place pursuant to commitments made by my predecessor. The principles of that review will be the enhancement of public protection as well as the removal of the burden of some requirements with respect to legitimate gun owners. I hope to have the recommendations in my hand very shortly and that undoubtedly will lead to legislation.

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FORGET COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—DEMAND THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Now, no more hiding their heads in the sand! Two members of the Forget Commission revealed part of the Commission's recommendations. Now, this is what I want to ask the Minister: Quite honestly, can the Minister get on the telephone, call the Commission members and tell them that recommendations of this kind are unacceptable to Canadians? They are being paid $1,000 a day: let them make recommendations that are fair to Canadians. Are you or are you not able to tell them so?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can speak in the same tone of voice as the Hon. Member, but I shall refrain. I think he ought to know that when a Government gives a commission a mandate, the least it can do is let the commission submit its report. And one thing is certain: this side of the House, has a perfectly unanimous position on this question, which is more than can be said for the other side, considering what we saw on the weekend in Montreal with the young Liberals.

FUTURE OF EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, earlier, the Minister was asking what more he could do to ensure . . . There are 34,000 people in Canada, 34,000 early retirees whose unemployment insurance benefits have been unfairly cut off. Can the Minister rise in the House and tell these people: You are going to be entitled to your benefits, and it will be retroactive? Can you do that or do you have to wait for the other guys?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Once again, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of my hon. friend, we are going to make certain decisions with respect to the pensioners you referred to. We said we were going to do that within . . . and so far, there is no reason why I should do so before the Forget Report is tabled. In any case, this is all part of the same process we have been telling you about for the past year.

* * *

• (1440)

[English]

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The people of Saskatchewan, particularly farmers, continue to be very confused about the Government's so-called $1 billion farm aid program. Is the Minister prepared to announce whether any decisions have been made concerning the form of assistance and its allocation? If he is not prepared to do so today, when will he be prepared to make some announcements?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is only one reason the people of western Canada and indeed the grain farmers of Canada are somewhat confused, that is, the continuing effort on the other side of the House to distort and to add confusion. There is no question about that at all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: We indicated in the House—the Prime Minister and I have responded to questions—that the Government is determined to put $1 billion into the hands of Canadian farmers.

Mr. Keeper: When?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that answer will not satisfy Saskatchewan farmers. They want some answers now because they need those answers now.

ANNOUNCEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the Premier of Saskatchewan announced to the people of that province that some $450 million would be going to Saskatchewan farmers. The next day Deputy Ministers from Ontario, Manitoba, and Alberta denied it. Could the Minister tell us today whether the Premier is confusing the voters and farmers of Saskatchewan, or is it that he or anyone else, including the Government, does not know what the $1 billion farm aid program is all about?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday we met with the Deputy Ministers. This Thursday we will meet with farm leaders. At that time we will have the benefit of the advice and suggestions of the Deputy Ministers and indeed of farm leaders. I indicated last week that if it takes a week or two weeks for us to make it fair and equitable, that if we have to take a little longer to do it right, we are going to take that time.

SITUATION OF FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture as well. He talked about confusion. Obviously the confusion is between the Premier of Saskatchewan and the Minister of Agriculture across the way. On Friday the Premier of Saskatchewan announced clearly that a $457 million cash deficiency payment would be provided. At the same time the Minister's office here was saying that no decision had been reached—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the Hon. Member put his question, please?

Mr. Foster: Who are the farmers supposed to believe—a desperate Premier in Saskatchewan who is trying to get re-elected, or a Minister of Agriculture who is trying to provide a deficiency payment with no money?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I had some difficulty following the logic and the reasoning in the Hon. Member's question. The fact is that farmers with whom I spoke across the country are not confused. They recognize that the Government was with them from the day it was sworn in. We have been with them consistently each and every day, with some 317 initiatives delivering well over $5.6 billion. Indeed, over and above that, there will be a new program of $1 billion—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Is it the Government's plan to negotiate cynically through the Saskatchewan election by leading people to believe that there will be a cash deficiency payment and, after the election is over, to announce that it is only a loan guarantee, loans which have to be repaid by farmers who are already over their heads in debt? Is that the plan of the Minister?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the only thing I can say to the Hon. Member is: Just watch us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: Just watch us.

Some Hon. Members: We are!

Mr. Wise: I invite the Hon. Member to check the record. When we make commitments, we deliver on those commitments, and we are going to deliver on this one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

LOW INCOME FAMILIES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that he does not care about poverty and will leave it to the private sector to create jobs. Does the Minister of Finance agree with this philosophy, since in British Columbia average family incomes went down from $30,000 to $26,000 over five years and family poverty increased by 85 per cent under this kind of philosophy? Does he advocate private sector jobs at $3.65 per hour minimum wages as a means of alleviating poverty?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the Hon. Member that Statistics Canada has recently released some figures indicating that, for the first time since 1980, there was a decline in the number of Canadians living in households with incomes below the low income threshold, and that the number of Canadians living in low income households fell by 298,000. It is still too high, but it is good progress. It is the first time since 1980 that it was reversed.

Ms. Mitchell: Those statistics must have been taken from Toronto, because in British Columbia Statistics Canada indicates that incomes went down from $30,000 to $26,000 over—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the Hon. Member to put her question.

REQUEST FOR COMMUNITY JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As an anti-poverty measure, will the Minister introduce aggressive community job-creation programs in low income communities—child care, women's programs, and programs for our youth and the elderly—to extend services and help promote self-help?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, our jobs strategy includes a whole series of initiatives, including one which will become increasingly important in coming weeks, namely the community development program. We shall be announcing in the near future a number of communities which will benefit under this program, especially in British Columbia, but also in other provinces. This will enable us to act directly with these communities to alleviate the unemployment problem in these regions.

* * *

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LUBICON LAKE INDIAN BAND—LAND CLAIM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who is also a distinguished Member from Alberta. As the Minister knows, ever since last February the Minister of Indian Affairs has had in his hands the report of the Hon. E. Davie Fulton on the aboriginal claim of the Lubicon Lake Indian people. Could the Minister explain to the House why the Government is offering the Lubicon people less than one half the quantity of land which the Hon. E. Davie Fulton said was a reasonable basis for a just settlement for these people in northern Alberta?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that this is a very complex issue. The Minister is seized with the issue at the present time. I should simply like to inform him that he will probably be in the House tomorrow. I ask him to defer his question until the Minister is here in that he is much more fully briefed on the matter than I am.

FULTON COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Deputy Prime Minister that it is a complex question, but he knows that this is becoming a matter of considerable international embarrassment to Canada. Will he assure the House that the Government will move quickly to make a fair and just settlement with the Lubicon people and that the recommendations of no less a person than the Hon. E. Davie Fulton will be taken into full and complete consideration?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without totally accepting the premise of the question, I would simply say to the Hon. Member that I will take that as a representation, inform the Hon. Minister, and hope that he will respond fully, to the satisfaction of the Hon. Member, when he returns to the House.

* * *

• (1450)

[Translation]

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR HOME MAIL DELIVERY AT LAUNAY IN ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

Since September 30, 1986, the customers of the Launay rural route in Abitibi must collect their mail at the Launay-Station post office, several miles from their home. The Canada Post Corporation has said that this decision is due to its will to provide profitable postal services.

Mr. Speaker, my question is this: Has the Canada Post Corporation considered the hardships such a decision will cause to the senior citizens and the handicapped of this outlying region as they will have to travel several miles during the long Abitibi winter?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to remind the Hon. Member that the Canada Post Corporation must manage its funds as efficiently as possible and that it must constantly review its delivery services to achieve a balance between the services provided at best cost. This means that certain corporate decisions such as the one mentioned by the Hon. Member have to be made.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Both the Prime Minister and Minister have just assured us that the Government had no intention of reducing federal contributions to the unemployed when the Forget Commission was set up.

Is the Government maintaining this intention towards the unemployed, and does this mean that the Government will not impose any cutbacks in unemployment insurance benefits for people suffering from unemployment in this country?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Its premise being entirely wrong, Mr. Speaker, how could I answer this question adequately.

The Prime Minister has stated and I have repeated later on that the statement by the Minister of Finance would take into account the whole of the unemployed. This seems to me to be quite clear. That obviously includes those you have referred to.

But, again, we are referring to the statement made by the Minister of Finance.

INQUIRY WHETHER MAJOR CUTBACKS WILL BE MADE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that the Forget Report is recommending a $930 million cutback in unemployment insurance benefits for the province of Quebec alone?

Is the Minister telling us now that the Government may compensate through a number of jobs creating schemes, while effectively making major cutbacks in unemployment insurance benefits, as proposed by the Forget Commission?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member to wait until the Forget Commission has tabled its report.

[English]

MULTICULTURALISM

FUNDING OF TORONTO ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the deplorable report which was presented to him from his Toronto Conservative caucus. In reviewing the funding for multicultural organizations, the report recommends that:

> There should be nothing arbitrary about funding cuts or increases: Liberal funding patterns should be disposed of, and a politically intelligent PC pattern take their place.

This is an insult to the very integrity as well as the allegation—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member no doubt has views as to what it is, but the Hon. Member's obligation is to put a question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, quite simply would the Prime Minister explain what a politically intelligent PC pattern of funding means? Which groups will be cut off financially because they fail to advance the cause of the Conservative Party of Canada?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer the question. With respect to politically intelligent policies, I would ask the Hon. Member to wait until I come forward with them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crombie: Second, concerning the other part of the Member's question, that is an insult to the people he chooses to defend.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has regrettably failed to rise in his place.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. Members know that Ministers have a discretion, including the Prime Minister, whether to answer a question or whether another Minister will do so. Will the Hon. Member put his question?

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Rather than taking it as a joke, will he do the courageous and logical thing—

Mr. Blaikie: Cut him off.

Mr. Marchi: —to dissociate himself and reject publicly this sleazy report so that Canadians can be assured that the policies of multiculturalism and, indeed, immigration are above the political manoeuvres of the Conservative Party of Canada?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the responsibility for recommending policies affecting multiculturalism are mine. I can assure the Hon. Member that I will carry out those responsibilities as I have always done.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Hon. Member ought not to use this forum for the kind of slander he just offered.

* * *

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

FUNDING OF SPACE RESEARCH

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Science and Technology concerning the National Research Council funds to be used to finance Canadian participation in research for the United States SDI project. Can the Minister confirm that the study done by the Canadian Institute of Advanced Studies which recommended participation in the project assumed that new research money would be spent and not money taken from existing NRC programs?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's premise is wrong. The Government is not actively involved with any aspect of the SDI project in the United States.

The Canadian space program is a civilian program which included the participation of 13 European countries, Japan and the United States.

USE OF COUNCIL'S FUNDS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister confirm that the NRC funds for space research will not be used by NRC personnel but will simply be passed on to large aerospace companies, such as Spar Aerospace, that will get the contracts and the employment? How, without this money, can the Minister say there will be no job cuts at the NRC?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the space program sees an increasing role for the National Research Council. The NRC presently does about 38 per cent of space related activities, namely, the Space Science Program, the Astronauts Program and the Space User Development Program. The Government envisages the role of the NRC to increase significantly over the years of the announcement that we made in May of a more comprehensive space program.

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. He will know that the grain producers are pleased with the billion dollar promise—

Ms. Copps: Question.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): —but want to have some hand in the system of delivery. Is the Minister prepared to listen not only to the provinces involved but also to the farm community in determining a pay-out which is fair and equitable to all concerned?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing interest in the problems of Canadian farmers. As he will know by discussions that he, I and others have had, and also from responses to questions in the House, we are actively consulting with the provinces. We will be consulting specifically with farm leaders. We are receiving advice throughout the whole farm community, from all regions of the country—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

* * *

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

SIZE OF BUDGET—EFFECT ON PROGRAMS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Science and Technology. The budget of the National Research Council has been cut since November, 1984, by $130 million or close to 30 per cent. Will the Minister advise the House which programs the NRC has been forced to slash at its board meeting today as a result of the latest decisions of the Government, to comply with its most recent cuts?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the information which the Hon. Member wishes to introduce in debate here is again not based on fact. There has not been a 30 per cent reduction in NRC funding. It is true that the executive board of the NRC is meeting today and will make an announcement as to the rationalization program that is going on within the NRC consistent with the priority the Government has announced in the Throne Speech.

Mr. Axworthy: That is new, rationalization.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said it is not based on fact. I invite him to take a look at the Government's own estimates. Why has the Government asked the National Research Council to take on new activities while imposing new cuts and giving no new moneys for the additional activities? Which programs will be cut as a result of this decision? Which universities and which businesses are being left high and dry by the actions of the Government?

• (1500)

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is correct that the NRC will be assigned new responsibilities in connection with the space program, that will result in an increase in the NRC's budget of $226 million over a five-year period and $800 million over a 15-year period.

* * *

CUSTOMS TARIFF

EFFECT OF TARIFF ON BOOK PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I hope that my question will be answered by the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance. Now that the report of the Canadian Book Publishers' Council documenting the very negative effect of the book tariff is available, is the Prime Minister prepared to announce that the tariff will be removed?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would also want to mention the commitment of the Government to the Canadian book publishing industry which can be shown by the fact that earlier this year some $13 million was committed to the book publishing industry. Over a five-year period that would total some $65 million. That is a major increase.

The Hon. Member will also know that the book tariff was imposed in June of this year by the Minister of Finance and the Government in retaliation for certain unwarranted actions that were taken by the United States. Those measures will be considered in due course by the Minister of Finance.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO NEW PAGES

Mr. Speaker: I know that Hon. Members would want me to note that we are into the Second Session of this Parliament. I wish to draw the attention of the House to the presence of the Pages who have been appointed to assist us in the months to come.

I think all Members would agree that our Page program has been a great success and that the young people appointed have consistently shown themselves to be worthy representatives of our Canadian youth of whom we have reason to be proud.

[Translation]

I am convinced that our new recruits will benefit as much as their predecessors from their stay with us and I hope that this experience will be for them a source of satisfaction and enrichment. I am sure all Hon. Members will want to joint with me to wish them every success.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL—APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Standing Order 103 reads as follows:

A Minister of the Crown shall lay upon the Table a certified copy of an Order in Council, stating that a certain individual has been appointed to a certain non-judicial post, not later than five sitting days after the Order in Council is published in the Canada Gazette.

On September 20 the Government published in the Canada Gazette the appointments of one Norman Spector to Federal-Provincial Relations and one Bruce Howe to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. To my knowledge the Government has not yet tabled those appointments as it is required to do under Standing Order 103, which are then referred to a committee.

I want to point this out to the House in order to give the Government a chance to remedy its way.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter and report back to the Hon. Member.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege that originated from my question in the House earlier this afternoon. The response from the Hon. Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Crombie) was that: "He", referring to myself: "should ought not to use this forum for the kind of slander he has just offered".

Beauchesne, at page 105, states:

Since 1958, it has been ruled unparliamentary to use the following expressions:

It goes on to note at page 110 that the word "slanderous" and slanderous accusations were deemed unparliamentary by the then Speaker on August 8, 1960, at page 7777 of Hansard.

Therefore, I ask the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, through you, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw that allegation because it is unfitting that he should label me for repeating a direct quote which originates from a leaked document from his colleagues. It certainly does not start this session of Parliament with the civility about which his leader has preached.

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I clearly meant to use the word in a non-legal way. I was not aware that it was unparliamentary. Now that it has been brought to my attention, I have much respect for this institution and therefore withdraw the word.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA PETROLEUM RESOURCES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-5, an Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act, as reported (with amendments) from a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys) moved:

Motion No. 7A:

That Bill C-5, be amended by deleting Clause 53.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we in this Party recommend that Clause 53 be removed altogether because it is completely contrary to what the Government says it is trying to do with respect to the Canadianization of the oil and gas industry in this country.

It says that Clauses 45 through 52 do not apply in respect of any production licence that may be issued in relation to a commercial discovery area to which the drilling of the first well that indicated the discovery commenced before March 5, 1982. The fact is that most of the oil and gas finds in the frontier were actually a result of drilling that commenced prior to March 5, 1982. This means that for any drilling that took place before March 5, 1982 and from which oil and gas has been discovered as a result of that drilling, the Government and the country is not obliged to require 50 per cent Canadian participation in the production. At the same time, the Government has been bragging that it increased the Canadianization of the oil and gas industry from 42 per cent to 47 per cent in the first year that it was in office.

Now we are seeing exactly what the Government is doing. It has used the purchase of Gulf Canada by Olympia and York, and the sale of Gulf Canada's downstream assets to Petro-Canada in central and western Canada as a smokescreen for its real intention, which is to make it clear that it does not care who owns the oil and gas reserves in this country. The Government wants to turn the clock as far back as the 1960s and 1950s when the oil patch was dominated by foreign ownership. That is why we want Clause 53 deleted from the Bill. We believe that it is our duty to future Canadians to ensure that our resources stay in Canadian hands.

Clause 53 gives the Government an escape hatch because, while it appears to be protecting Canadian ownership, Clause 53 denounces those clauses which protect Canadians. The Government is saying that it simply wants to get these reserves off its hands. It does not matter whether the owner is Canadian.

Clause 53 is a clandestine attempt to imply that the Government is interested in Canadianization, saying that 50 per cent of all production must be through Canadian ownership. Yet at the end of the clause on Canadianization it says that it does not apply to any commercial discovery area on which the drilling of the first well that indicated the discovery commenced before March 5, 1982.

• (1510)

Let us look at that. What does it mean? From information gained from core samples and the determination of the terrain under the ocean you can determine whether there are reserves of oil and gas. That is why oil companies drill in certain areas as opposed to others. The core samples indicate whether there is oil and gas in a given area. You do not have to actually strike large pockets of oil and gas to get that indication. You can have the indication in many ways.

We are opening up a tremendous loophole so the oil and gas companies can back away from putting 50 per cent of the ownership of the discovery in Canadian hands. Even if this Government is dedicated to Canadianization, which I am convinced it is not, there is going to be a battle from the time of the initial discovery until the resource is exhausted because the companies concerned are not going to release the portion of the discovery that the Government would like us to believe they are going to have to release to Canadianization. The Government is not interested in Canadianization because this clause removes any thrust towards Canadianization that the Act may have.

Not only do we not have ownership of our oil and gas reserves, we are once again discouraging Canadian companies from participating in their own energy industry. We are telling Canadian companies that they are small, they do not have the big bucks and they cannot participate. We want the major companies to do it because it is not as complicated. We just let them go ahead, take whatever they want, they can leave the country with as much profit as they want, without Canadian participation and without federal government regulation to make sure that the Canadian public benefits from its own oil and gas industry.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member with a great deal of interest. Obviously the Liberals have changed their energy policy yet again. Even their infamous National Energy Program did not grandfather the resource to before March, 1982. Yet now the Liberals are calling for retroactivity in the energy industry. I thought they learned their lesson. They alienated the west and the energy industry by retroactivity, and now my friend from Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) has instituted a new Liberal energy policy. I want that marked down in the books today. There is a new Liberal energy policy. They want retroactivity to go beyond 1982. We are opposed to that.

I should not go any further than that, but I might point out to the Hon. Member that before 1982 all oil companies under the Canada Oil and Gas Land regulations were subject to Canadian ownership regulations. Who brought those in? They have been in existence since 1960 and were brought in by the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker. The Conservative Government of that time was talking about Canadian ownership. That Government brought in those regulations and they are still in effect for pre-1982 discoveries. Even the Liberal Government respected that when it brought in the NEP. That was one of the few things it did respect in the energy sector. I am surprised, and I am sure those people out west will be very, very surprised, to see the Liberals talking not only about back-ins and confiscation, but now wanting to go back before 1982 and do some more confiscating. Well, we say nay to such nonsense.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned John George Diefenbaker. The poor man would be spinning in his grave if he knew what the Conservatives have done to Canadianization. He was a great spokesman for Canada and Canadianization. He had to make some difficult decisions in order to stand up for Canada. Yet look at the modern Conservative Party. They just folded the National Energy Program and in this Bill they are getting rid of the back-in provisions. They are in fact caving in to pressure from Uncle Sam. I am surprised that the statute of John George Diefenbaker in front of this building is not spinning while I say this. I think the Parliamentary Secretary is on shaky ground when he evokes the memory of the former Hon. Member for Prince Albert.

He was also on shaky ground earlier when he said to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that this Act does not apply to British Columbia. I did not quite understand that because frontier lands are defined as land belonging to Her Majesty in right of Canada, and refers to Yukon, the Northwest Territories, and those submarine areas not within a province and adjacent to the coast of Canada.

Mr. McDermid: Not within a province.

Mr. Waddell: Is that the policy of the Government, that British Columbia gets everything out there?

Mr. McDermid: Not within a province.

Mr. Waddell: I would like to get that on the record. Does that mean—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Is the Hon. Member addressing the Chair? If he wishes an answer, I wish he would go through the Chair; he might then get an answer.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am going through the Chair. I hope at some point later in the debate the Hon. Member will clarify his remarks. I find that to be an absolutely extraordinary statement.

In any case, I want to support my friend from Cape Breton—The Sydneys on this particular provision.

Mr. McDermid: Read it again.

Mr. Waddell: I want to re-emphasize the fact that this is not an energy policy. This is a regime for future drilling if it ever comes about. Not only that, it is a regime to once again sell out. It is like turning the clock back to an old regime in which we gave Canadian resources to foreigners. I call it back to the future. We allowed ourselves to be exploited in the worst possible sense of the term. In my view we did not even deserve to be thought of as much of a country because we did not have the guts to control and develop our own resources. In his remarks my friend from Cape Breton was hinting at this line of argument as well. I will have more to say on other amendments.

• (1520)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I also listened carefully to the interventions of the Parliamentary Secretary on Clause 53 in Part V of the Bill with regard to Canadian ownership. In his intervention he did not take into account that four years have gone by since 1982 and that the situation which has emerged warrants the intervention of my colleague requesting that Clause 53, which is virtually the main pillar of Part V, be struck out.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Nonsense.

Mr. Caccia: The Parliamentary Secretary says "nonsense". The fact that we want to ensure 50 per cent ownership of Canadian oil and gas can be described more charitably than as "nonsense". This is of public and national interest. In the light of what developed in the last four years I would like to draw to his attention the fact that this clause has merit, regardless of what was debated in 1982. We now have a different set of circumstances and are, more than ever, anxious to establish Canadian ownership of our oil and gas resources.

Without Clause 53, Part V loses its muscle and thrust. This is the engine of the entire Canadian ownership theme. My colleague's motion requests that Clause 53 be deleted in order to give some muscle and impact to the section of the Bill entitled Canadian Ownership.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary can look to the past to find some strength for his counterargument. Today the Government of Canada must develop its policy for 1986. Our major concern and preoccupation must be to ensure the largest possible degree of Canadian ownership of our oil and gas resources in the north. The effect of not removing Clause 53 will be to virtually emasculate Part V of the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 7A standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Therefore, we will go on. Motions Nos. 9, 10, and 11 will be grouped for debate and voted upon separately.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 76 by striking out lines 3 to 20 at page 35 and substituting the following therefor:

"76.(1) There shall be established in the accounts of Canada an account under the responsibility of the Minister of the Environment, to be known as the Environmental Studies Research Fund."

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 78 by striking out lines 39 to 43 at page 36 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) Members of the Board are to be selected for appointment by the Minister of the Environment from the public service of Canada or of any province or from among persons nominated by interest owners or the aboriginal people or local people resident in or abutting frontier lands."

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-5, be amended by deleting Clause 82.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome my colleague, the new Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin). The former Member for Saint-Maurice was at a time Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and perhaps some day he himself will be too.

Mr. Speaker, I also look forward to seeing new NDP Members for Quebec after the next election.

[English]

I knew that would wake them up, Mr. Speaker. That woke them up.

[Translation]

—namely, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse).

[English]

Motions Nos. 9, 10, and 11 include some environmental matters. We would not have all these amendments today if the Ministry of Energy, and specifically the Parliamentary Secretary to that Ministry, were more flexible. I believe that the Ministry could have accommodated some of the requests for a better system. This is a terrible system. Clause 76 sets up two funds, one being a research fund and a subaccount under the administrative responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It also sets up an account and sub account under the administration of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight).

There is a turf fight in the civil service between the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Energy, Mines and Resources to control things in the north. This is an environmental matter. Why not give it to the Ministry of the Environment? Why do we not exercise some common sense here? This lacks common sense. My amendment would set up one fund.

[Translation]

I hope the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) can listen to what is being said concerning that sentence in the legislation.

[English]

My amendment would set up one fund under the administration of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). When the Minister appoints people he would be required to consider people from the area affected. The Conservative Members on the legislative committee wanted that but the Parliamentary Secretary and the Government would not go for it. That could have been done. It is not a big thing, but it is symbolically important that the Minister will appoint advisers from the south. Again, the north will be colonized and treated in the same way as we used to treat Quebec. The Minister of Energy should consider that.

I will read from the letter from the Tungavik Federation of Nunavut on this matter. It reads as follows:

We are also concerned with the proposed membership of the Environmental Studies Management Board which is given authority to determine environmental and social research priorities. Membership on this board is to be restricted to people from "the public service of Canada or of any province or from among persons nominated by interest owners," or, if the Minister chooses, one member of the public. This does not recognize the contribution aboriginal peoples could make to the Board.

• (1530)

Notice, Mr. Speaker, that company owners and interest owners can get in there but not the aboriginal peoples who only happen to live in the area, at least in the north. The letter continues:

It is particularly insensitive to exclude aboriginal peoples from the board, for hydrocarbon exploration is occurring in their homelands over which they assert aboriginal title. Current administrative arrangements for the Environmental Studies Revolving Fund treat Inuit as the objects of reasearch when instead, we should be involved in determining research needs and priorities, and setting research goals.

The Eskimo or Inuit people are always the object of the research. They are never part of determining research needs and priorities and setting research goals. This can only be done if Inuit are members of the management board.

Can you believe it, Mr. Speaker? How do we explain to the Soviets and Norwegians that our Inuit are just asking to be part of a board which determines studies about their areas and we say, no way? We want it in the Act. I continue quoting:

Consequently we urge that Section 78(3) should be amended to read as follows:

"Members of the Board are to be selected for appointment by the Minister of the Environment from the Public Service of Canada or any coastal province or from among persons nominated by interest owners or the aboriginal peoples of Canada resident in or abutting frontier lands."

Bill C-5 perpetuates a conflict of interest, because the Minister responsible for promoting and regulating northern development is also responsible for research to protect the natural and social environments north of 60. The Environmental Studies Revolving Fund and Management Board should be co-ordinated by the Department of Environment rather than the federal agency most directly involved in regulating industry.

There are conflicts all over the north. I hope that one of the former Ministers of the Environment will rise and speak on this issue. Indian Affairs and Northern Development are sometimes in conflict. It is sometimes an impossible position in which to put a Minister. In this case, it is the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources which is giving out the licenses and, let us face it, it is really concerned with the oil and gas industry. That is its number one producer of energy. That Department is always going to be concerned with that industry.

The simple amendments try to get northerners, easterners and westerners involved in studies. The bureaucrats in Ottawa resist this. They want it to be decided by their people. We say the Department of the Environment—since it has to do with the environment and the other Departments have conflicts—should be involved. In my time in the north I found they want to keep the Department of the Environment out of the north because it is too cozy with DIAND which reluctantly had to share with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. That is reflected in Clause 76. It is a typical Ottawa bureaucratic saw-off; two funds, two sub-accounts. The Department of Indian Affairs and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resoures have carved it up and are determined not to let the Department of the Environment or any local person be involved in determining studies which affect the locals. I know it is difficult because the Bill is so big, but if the back-benchers could actually read it, I think they would agree with our position on it.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my support to these motions. I think the aboriginal peoples, in fact the peoples abutting all of the frontier lands, should have some input with respect to the activity going on on the frontier in oil and gas.

The Government will say that there is input, there are ways of stating their feelings, how they feel that this matter should be going. However, we had testimony from witnesses when considering what was then Bill C-92, which is now Bill C-5, at committee. We were told by the groups who live in the areas where the activity in oil and gas is taking place that they were not consulted, that they expressed their opinions and gave advice only to have it completely ignored. They said they were not really called upon in an advisory capacity and what was done might have been in the interests of the oil and gas indistry, at least in the short term, but it certainly was not in the interests of the people, or the area in which the oil and gas was being examined. This is particularly harmful in the fragile environment of our Canadian north. I think every avenue must be taken to guard the environment and to listen to the people who have lived in these areas for generations. I think the Department of the Environment is the Department which is best able to do that.

To say we do not want another government Department there, that it is only going to muddy the waters, is wrong. We can be told that the Department of the Environment is there in an advisory capacity and in other ways, but that does not satisfy me that the Department is there in the front lines and is inputting as it should. Once an environmental accident occurs, we may never be able to repair the damage, particularly in the Canadian north.

We were dealing with Motion No. 11 which relates to the deletion of Clause 82. I am, as I was before when we were in committee, concerned about what it is really going to do. I am not concerned to the point that I am adamant about deleting the clause but I do feel that if the Government is going to maintain that clause and it is going to remain in the Bill, if the Bill should be passed, then we should have some regulations and further explanations and safeguards as to the administrator of this fund because it is a very important fund. It will be quite significant. I would like to think that the Government is concerned about protecting the interests.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my hon. colleagues. I suppose there is nowhere more than in the north that we are aware of the need for industry to coexist with its environment. I do not think there is any question about it and we support that. The Environmental Studies Research Fund is a continuing fund. It has been in existence for some time and has worked very well with the Ministry of the Environment. It has had a very major impact. In fact members of that Department have sat on the committee as well as those from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

We are maintaining what has gone on before as well as, we believe, improving it. We must remember that the objective research is into the social and physical environments and it is oil and gas specific. Inasmuch as the oil and gas industry are funded, we feel that the Ministers of EMR and DIAND should retain responsibility in close consultation with the Department of the Environment, and they have been. It has proceeded extremely well.

For my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), to say we did not listen to suggestions regarding representation on the committee and we did not do anything about it, is very unfair. The Hon. Member knows full well that after representation was made and after a discussion took place in committee the Government brought forward an amendment. It is found on page 37 of the Bill. That clause states, in part, that notwithstanding subsections (2) and (4), each Minister may appoint from the public one member to the board. That is a provision which the Grits did not have in their Bill. The Hon. Member must also admit that it was not included in the original Bill. Only after representation was made by the aboriginal peoples, by the Hon. Member and by others, did the Government bring forward this amendment.

• (1540)

I think the Hon. Member would like to be fair in his representations. This is something which may not have gone as far as he would have liked, or as far as others would have liked. However, an amendment to allow members of the public to sit on this environmental studies board was proposed.

Again, it is a divided area because of the responsibility of the two ministries. I will not enter into debate with respect to the pros and cons of that. That is a fact of life at the present time. Therefore, there are two accounts. If it is an environmental study which pertains exclusively to the north, north of 60° under the responsibility of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, then the money will be drawn from its fund. If in fact it concerns lands which are controlled under the purview of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, then the money is drawn from that fund. If in fact it is a study which pertains to the over-all energy situation which would affect frontier lands under the jurisdiction of both ministries, then there will be an appropriate draw from both funds.

I do not want to get into a debate on whether the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or whether the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources should be responsible for all frontier lands. That is why this is set up in this manner. This is why we feel we have assured representation from the general public.

I get a kick out of the Hon. Member when he talks about people in the north and the fact that we are always appointing people from the south to represent them. Earlier in the House today he admitted that he, along with his Liberal friend Ian Scott, the present Attorney General of Ontario, were the solicitors of record on the Berger Commission which was doing all the work in the north.

Mr. Waddell: That is something we learned.

Mr. McDermid: They obviously thought that legal expertise was better from the south than it was from the north. The Hon. Member accepted that and probably made his family fortune in doing that work.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of observations in this very interesting debate. First, I would like to congratulate the Parliamentary Secretary for his thoughtful analysis. He is quite right when he says that there is a new proposed clause in the Bill whereby one member would be appointed to the board at the discretion of each Minister and that one person could be drawn from among the local people, as recommended by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Inevitably, the following question comes to mind. Why restrict the number in such a way? Why not leave it to the Minister to make appointments according to any number that may be suitable according to the skill and talent available at any given time? The idea put forward by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway and by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) that we should open up the doors to permit the consideration of local people certainly commands a great deal of attention. They also suggest that this approach should not be limited to one person alone.

The other point put forward quite eloquently and touched upon by the Parliamentary Secretary was with respect to the merits of having one fund rather than dividing it along jurisdictional lines, which at times are very fuzzy and difficult to sort out in a logical manner. Whatever touches upon the environment and upon social considerations is so comprehensive that it cannot really be allocated to two specific Departments alone. The idea that the fund be one fund has a great deal of merit. I support the interventions made by both the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys and by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway that this merger be brought about. When one looks at the impact of the oil and gas industry on the north—and as the Parliamentary Secretary reminded us we are talking specifically about the oil and gas industry—one realizes that there are fairly far-reaching environmental as well as social consequences.

While we debate this Bill we can read about the consequences of the withdrawal of the oil and gas industry from places such as Tuktoyaktuk and other locations in the north. When there is such an economic impact affecting a fragile region of the country, its appearance as well as its disappearance bring about some profound and, at times, disastrous consequences. In the present situation the withdrawal of the oil rigs and the multinational companies operating in the north is causing enormous economic hardships. Economies of the north that were not accustomed to this type of injection of funds and sudden increases in incomes all of a sudden find themselves left with very little. Rather than leaving the carrying out of research on the environment and social matters in the north to the discretion of two separate Departments I think greater protection of the people of the north could be achieved if this matter were to be given to one Minister and one Department. In this case I must recognize that evidently the Department of the Environment and the Minister of the Environment of the day would have the leading role to play in preventing negative environmental consequences in the first place. At the same time this would avoid social stress and damage in the wake of the withdrawal of this industry as is happening right now. This withdrawal is leaving behind a number of families which are now wondering what their economic future might be in light of the present trend of withdrawal.

Therefore I welcome the inclusion of Part VII. In itself it is basically a good idea. It could be improved upon. I urge the Parliamentary Secretary to make representations to his Minister along the lines of those made by my colleagues this afternoon.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the comments made by the three opposition spokesmen. However, they seem to be forgetting a couple of points. First and foremost, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development only has impact on part of the frontier lands. It has no impact on offshore Nova Scotia or Newfoundland. I refer to offshore developments on Sable Island and in Hibernia. There should obviously be some distinction between the mandates of the Department of Indian Affairs and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Second, I should point out that the studies go beyond what is normally strictly environmental. They deal with people and the impact of development on those people. That is why it does not belong in the Department of the Environment but with these two Ministers.

• (1550)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 9 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 10 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 11 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 11 (Mr. Waddell) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next motions, Motions Nos. 12 and 13, will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North) moved:

Motion No. 12.

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 85 by striking out lines 24 and 25 at page 43 and substituting the following therefor:

"summary of its".

He said: Mr. Speaker, Clause 85 currently reads that any time an interest is being disposed of, a copy of the arrangement should be sent to the Minister. That means that any time a company wants to farm in land or farm out land, the entire agreement must be sent to Ottawa.

What do we mean by farming in and farming out? Normally, oil companies obtain mineral rights and they lower their risk by taking a smaller percentage in a number of tracts rather than a big percentage in one tract. The chances of finding commerical hydrocarbons, be it oil or gas, are much better if the oil company has an interest in 10 tracts than if it has an interest in just one. Consequently, as part of the normal process, leases are traded, interests are traded and farm ins and farm outs are given. This means that a work commitment is undertaken by one party so it acquires an interest.

As it now stands in the frontier areas, because of the depressed price of oil, there are not many contracts, so this causes no problem. However, let us look at the future. In the first half of 1986, world-wide production of oil has increased by 4.1 per cent or 2.1 million barrels. That is one-third more than Canada produces. Most of this added production came out of OPEC. When OPEC decides that it will raise the price again, we will have to meet our supply problems by going to the frontier lands. We will have to go to the Beaufort, the Hibernia and the Venture. Activity will pick up.

Currently, maybe only one contract per week is negotiated. By the end of the decade, that might be up to one per day. By the mid-1990s, it might be 10 per day. Pretty soon, the way the Bill currently reads, 10 contracts, each in excess of 100 pages, will land on a desk in Ottawa every day and someone will have to look at them and understand them. Pretty soon there will be a big Department trying to understand these complex relationships. Pretty soon there will be a warehouse to store all these things.

What I am proposing is very simple. Let the oil companies send a summary of the contract to Ottawa. We will know what is going on. A one-page summary can indicate that Company A will acquire an interest in Company B's acreage if it does such and such. This means less bureaucracy and less of a storage problem. I would point out that in other jurisdictions like Alberta, a summary is not even required, let alone the full contract. That is the thrust of this motion.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Are we debating Motions Nos. 12 and 13 together?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, separately.

Mr. McDermid: We are debating them separately?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, we are debating them separately. The proposal was that Motions Nos. 12 and 13 be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government has taken a look at the amendment introduced by my friend, the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon). He has a very good point. The myriad of agreements that do take place in the energy industry could be mountainous and, no doubt, voluminous. However, having said that, I feel very strongly that there should be a provision in the Bill to permit the Minister, if he has questions about the summary which cannot be answered within it and he requires further information, to obtain the information he requires.

Although not directly accepting the amendment as proposed, the Government would be interested in accepting an amendment to the amendment which would do as I have suggested. It would require industry to send in summaries of agreements but would give the Minister permission to obtain further information if so required. We would be prepared to entertain that amendment to the amendment.

• (1600)

Mr. Waddell: I would like to speak to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow).

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move the following amendment to the amendment, and I am sure that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) would second it. It reads:

That the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Calgary North be amended by striking out line 26 at page 43 of Clause 85 of Bill C-5 and substituting the following:

"terms and conditions or, on the request of the Minister, a copy of the agreement or arrangement".

Therefore Clause 85, starting at line 26 on page 43 would read:

arrangement to the Minister, together with a summary of its terms and conditions or, on the request of the Minister, a copy of the agreement or arrangement.

This reverses the onus. Only a summary would be required by an interest holder when a transfer, assignment, or another disposition takes place, unless the Minister physically requested a copy of the agreement or arrangement. I think the Hon. Member for Calgary North would agree that this would reduce the paperwork, and I think it would receive his support.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): At this point I will recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and look at the amendment to see if it is in order.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to it while you are doing that. It is a perfect example of how the Conservatives approached this Bill. Every point the industries asked for, the industries got; every point the native people asked for, the native people were turned down. Every time environmentalists ask for something, they are turned down. We can look at the record. This is a perfect example. Now there is a bit too much paperwork for the companies. For the native people, it is their land and their lives, and look what the Conservatives do. They are disgusting. They deserve to be tossed out. We will oppose this amendment and vote against it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since this is an amendment to the Bill, in order to get around all the paperwork, I would appreciate it if the House would allow the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) to withdraw the amendment the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) and substitute the amendment of the Hon. Member for Calgary South. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Gagnon: Agreeable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So agreed.

Motion No. 12 (Mr. Gagnon) withdrawn.

Mrs. Sparrow: On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I will put the amendment by the Hon. Member for Calgary North first.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North) moved:

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 85 by striking out line 26 at page 43 and substituting the following therefor:

"terms and conditions or, on the request of the Minister, a copy of the agreement or arrangement".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Therefore, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 112 by striking out lines 1 to 5 at page 63.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should not have become emotional about the last matter, but it really is striking. I just cannot believe how the Government could be so insensitive to the people who live in the north. It is astounding.

My Motion No. 13 attempts to amend subclause 112(3) at page 63 of the Bill. Presently the subclause reads:

All rights of Petro-Canada to acquire further interests or shares in interests as a result of the operation of Section 33, 120 or 121 of the Canada Oil and Gas Land Regulations are abrogated as of March 5, 1982.

One of the most important points of the Bill is that it abolishes the Crown share, the 25 per cent back-in provision which gave the Government of Canada, the people of Canada, the right to acquire an interest in petroleum finds that proved commercially viable, in recognition of the burden assumed by Canadian taxpayers in the promotion of exploration and development of Canadian frontier resources. This burden remains because the Conservatives are to eliminate PIP grants and bring in a tax credit policy.

In committee we found that from 1980 to 1987 something like $7.1 billion was advanced in terms of PIP grants. I know money was also taxed from the industry, but the fact is that $7.1 billion was advanced for frontier exploration. The former Minister of Energy, the Hon. Marc Lalonde, appeared before a previous energy committee. I should like to paraphrase what he said at the time. He said that another $4 billion or $5 billion was in fact advanced to the energy industry by tax advantages, the famous super depletion allowances, and so on, in the period between 1960 and 1980. We are looking at somewhere in the neighbourhood of $10 billion to $12 billion which went to the energy industry to drill in the frontiers of Canada.

Of course the irony is that, just as that policy was proving to be a little successful, in the sense of a good well in the Beaufort Sea, in the offshore of Newfoundland, in the Grand Bank, and in the Venture field in Nova Scotia, the whole thing is now collapsing with the low price of world oil. It was a tremendous investment.

The large multinational oil companies represented by the Canadian Petroleum Association and by the Government of the United States, the two lobby groups representing them, harped, lobbied, threatened, and cajoled the Government to Canada to remove this 25 per cent back-in. The matter went to the highest levels. The President of the United States at the Shamrock Summit in Quebec City pressed the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). We had the Government of the United States and the Canadian Petroleum Association, especially the Canadian Petroleum Association, writing the Conservatives' energy policy when the Conservative Party was in opposition. If one looks at the briefs of the Canadian Petroleum Association to the Senate Committee on Energy and, to some extent, to the House of Commons Committee on Energy, that can be seen. Literally, word for word the Conservative policy is taken out of the briefs of the Canadian Petroleum Association in 1983 to the Senate Committee on Energy. These same words reappear in the Conservative Prince Albert declaration. The main point was to get rid of this horrible confiscatory, retroactive back-in provision. This horrible back-in meant that for all this money the Canadian people spent, Petro-Canada, the Canadian Government's oil company, would get 25 per cent of the action. Compare that situation to the situation in Norway where the regime is much stricter. But according to the multinational oil companies this was terrible. They felt it was stealing, despite the fact that we advanced a great part of the money through direct grants or tax advantages to those companies, many of which do not pay any income tax, and despite the fact that the resources belong to Canada, thank you. They belong to the Canadian people not to Shell, Mobil or Exxon. Some day, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people will wake up.

• (1610)

I remember the recent history of Quebec. I see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) in the House. The Quebec people woke up in the early 1960s. They realized they were being exploited by the English and that they had to do something. They had to become maître chez nous, and take some control over their society. They modernized their society, and as a result there were lots of changes in Quebec. We got some incredible politicians, the Trudeaus, the Lalondes and maybe the Masses. Who knows? We will see. It is ironic I think—

[Translation]

It is ironic that we should have a Minister from Quebec, and that his first energy bill in this House should be a proposal that would grant the big American oil companies everything they are asking for.

[English]

I wish I could speak a little better French but it seems to me ironic that we are caving in to the demands of the Americans and the large oil companies. I think that when the history of Canada is written after we are all gone it will show that the National Energy Program was a great thrust in trying to take control of our own resources. This clause is one of the greatest sell-outs and it will go down in history that this little obscure clause in this big Bill states that:

> All rights of Petro-Canada to acquire further interests, or shares in interests as a result of the operation of Section 33, 120 or 121 of the Canada Oil and Gas Land Regulations are abrogated as of March 5, 1982.

In other words the back-in is gone, Petro-Canada has been excluded, and the Government has caved in to the interests of the Canadian Petroleum Association and to our great friend but also the great elephant that can sometimes cause us some trouble, namely, the United States of America. I think this is tragic, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I proposed this amendment.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that was a typical speech from a socialist. I understand where it has come from and where the mind-set is. I might point out to the Hon. Member that this clause has been around since 1982. It is nothing new. It is just a reaffirmation of the old Bills. For the Hon. Member to try to paint a picture that this is something new, different and marvellous is wrong. It is just a clause that has been in the Bill since 1982 and we are just reaffirming what was there.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I listened with utter amazement to my good friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who said that the previous motion came from the oil industry. It was not recommended by the Canadian Petroleum Association. It was not recommended by the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada. The hon. gentleman was present at the committee hearings when those organizations made their presentations.

Let me point out that I moved the motion to deter the growth of bureaucracy. It is obvious from the comments of the Member for Vancouver Kingsway that he likes bureaucracy, that he likes a big, bloated, expensive bureaucracy. The people of Canada do not want that. They do not want to pay for any more follies of the socialists.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gagnon: To come back to the current situation. If you look at the fiscal year which ended March 31, 1986, the PGRT revenue was $1.5 billion greater than the PIP expenditures. In other words, the oil industry paid $1.5 billion more than it got back in PIP grants. Yet the Member stood up and said "Oh, it is a big giveaway". Maybe he should say it is a big rip-off of the oil industry and the people of western Canada.

Let me quote from Doig's Digest for June 1986. Concerning the PIP program, Mr. Doig said:

> In the last five years, finding costs of frontier reserves have increased four-fold—PIP grants account for $6 billion—$240 per Canadian—or 70 per cent of the expenditures. The normal checks and balances fell by the wayside . . . But the pre and post NEP costs are out of line. Two-thirds of the frontier reserves found in this period have been found in the first 15 years while two-thirds of the expenditures have been made in the last five years.

What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? It means that the socialists went through all that money. They grabbed it from the western Canadian economy and wasted it. It was an atrocious situation.

What the Member wants to do is to make it retroactive to steal from someone. It is like having a world series game and in the third inning, instead of having nine players, we would have 12. Is that the way to play the game? I say no. That is not fair. This provision has to go and that is what we are doing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 13 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to taking up the deferred divisions at the report stage of the Bill now before the House.

Call in the Members.

• (1650)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: The first vote will be on Motion No. 1. Mr. Waddell moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 4 to 8 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"3. For greater certainty, nothing in this Act abrogates or derogates from any aboriginal title, right, claim or interest that pertains to the, or any of the, aboriginal people of Canada."

The House divided on Motion No. 1 (Mr. Waddell), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 4)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Axworthy
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Broadbent
Caccia
Copps
de Corneille
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Gagliano
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Heap
Henderson
Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount)
Kaplan
Keeper
Killens
Langdon
MacLellan
Malépart
Manly
Marchi
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nunziata
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Riis
Robichaud
Rossi
Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe)
Tobin
Waddell—45

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Belsher
Bernier
Binns
Bissonnette
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bouchard
Bourgault
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff
Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot)
Champagne (Champlain)
Charest
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Comeau
Cooper
Cossitt
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Côté (Langelier)
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dick
Domm
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Fennell
Ferland
Fretz
Gagnon
Girard
Greenaway
Guilbault (Drummond)
Halliday
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Harvey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Holtmann
Horner
Howie
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kempling
Kilgour
Landry
Layton
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay
Malone
Mantha
Marin
Martin
Masse
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCrossan
McDermid
McKenzie
McKinnon
McMillan
Merrithew
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Mulroney
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Oostrom
Paproski
Plourde
Porter
Price
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Ricard
St-Julien
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Sparrow
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tupper
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Weiner
White
Winegard
Wise
Witer—122

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, considering that there are seven more votes to go, I wonder if I would not find support from all Hon. Members to consider the vote on Motion 1 to be the same as for Motions Nos. 2, 4, 9, 10 and 13?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I was not here for the first vote. I would like to be included on the government side for the votes on those motions.

Mr. Speaker: The vote is in the negative.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I was not here for the first vote. May I be included in the balance of the votes as you deem it to be recorded?

Mr. Speaker: The vote is in the negative. I will therefore declare that Motions Nos. 2, 4, 9, 10 and 13 will be lost on the same division. Mr. Waddell moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 3 by adding immediately after line 8 at page 4 the following:

"All lands subject to unsettled aboriginal claims, which have been accepted for negotiation by the federal government, are excluded from the application of this Act."

The House divided on Motion No. 2 (Mr. Waddell), which was negatived on the following division.

(Division No. 5)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Axworthy
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Broadbent
Caccia
Copps
de Corneille
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Gagliano
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Heap
Henderson
Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount)
Kaplan
Keeper
Killens
Langdon
MacLellan
Malépart
Manly
Marchi
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nunziata
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Riis
Robichaud
Rossi
Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe)
Tobin
Waddell—45

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Belsher
Bernier
Binns
Bissonnette
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bouchard
Bourgault
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff
Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot)
Champagne (Champlain)
Charest
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Comeau
Cooper
Cossitt
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Côté (Langelier)
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dick
Domm
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Fennell
Ferland
Forrestall
Fretz
Gagnon
Girard
Greenaway
Guilbault (Drummond)
Halliday
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Harvey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Holtmann
Horner
Howie
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kempling
Kilgour
Landry
Layton
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay
Malone
Mantha
Marin
Martin
Masse
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCrossan
McDermid
McKenzie
McKinnon
McMillan
Merrithew
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Mulroney
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Oostrom
Paproski
Plourde
Porter
Price
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Ricard
St-Julien
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields
Siddon
Sparrow
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tupper
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Weiner
White
Winegard
Wise
Witer—124

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 14 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 7 the following:

" (3) In the formulation of bid criteria, the Minister shall be obliged to consult with representatives of affected aboriginal groups and local communities."

The House divided on Motion No. 4 (Mr. Waddell), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 6)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Axworthy
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Broadbent
Caccia
Copps
de Corneille
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Gagliano
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Heap
Henderson
Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount)
Kaplan
Keeper
Killens
Langdon
MacLellan
Malépart
Manly
Marchi
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nunziata
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Riis
Robichaud
Rossi
Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe)
Tobin
Waddell—45

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Belsher
Bernier
Binns
Bissonnette
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bouchard
Bourgault
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff

Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot)
Champagne (Champlain)
Charest
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Comeau
Cooper
Cossitt
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Côté (Langelier)
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dick
Domm
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Fennell
Ferland
Forrestall
Fretz
Gagnon
Girard
Greenaway
Guilbault (Drummond)
Halliday
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Harvey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Holtmann
Horner
Howie
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kempling
Kilgour
Landry
Layton
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay
Malone
Mantha
Marin
Martin
Masse
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCrossan
McDermid
McKenzie
McKinnon
McMillan
Merrithew
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Mulroney
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Oostrom
Paproski
Plourde
Porter
Price
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Ricard
St-Julien
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields
Siddon
Sparrow
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tupper
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Weiner
White
Winegard
Wise
Witer—124

Mr. Speaker: The next vote will be on Motion No. 7A. Mr. MacLellan moved:

Motion No. 7A

That Bill C-5, be amended by deleting Clause 53.

The House divided on Motion No. 7A (Mr. MacLellan), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 7)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Axworthy
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Broadbent
Caccia
Copps
de Corneille
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Gagliano
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Heap
Henderson
Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount)
Kaplan
Keeper
Killens
Langdon
MacLellan
Malépart
Manly
Marchi
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nunziata
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Riis
Robichaud
Rossi
Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe)
Tobin
Waddell—45

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Belsher
Bernier
Binns
Bissonnette
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bouchard
Bourgault
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff
Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot)
Champagne (Champlain)
Charest
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Comeau
Cooper
Cossitt
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Côté (Langelier)
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dick
Domm
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Fennell
Ferland
Forrestall
Fretz
Gagnon
Girard
Greenaway
Guilbault (Drummond)
Halliday
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Harvey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Holtmann
Horner
Howie
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kempling
Kilgour
Landry
Layton
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay
Malone
Mantha
Marin
Martin
Masse
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCrossan
McDermid
McKenzie
McKinnon
McMillan
Merrithew
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Mulroney
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Oostrom
Plourde
Porter
Price
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Ricard
St-Julien
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields
Siddon
Sparrow
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tupper
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Weiner
White
Winegard
Wise
Witer—123

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 76 by striking out lines 3 to 20 at page 35 and substituting the following therefor:

"76(1) There shall be established in the accounts of Canada an account under the responsibility of the Minister of the Environment, to be known as the Environmental Studies Research Fund."

The House divided on Motion No. 9 (Mr. Waddell), which was negatived on the following division:

Canada Petroleum Resources Act

(Division No. 8)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Axworthy
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Broadbent
Caccia
Copps
de Corneille
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Gagliano
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Heap
Henderson
Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount)
Kaplan
Keeper
Killens
Langdon
MacLellan
Malépart
Manly
Marchi
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nunziata
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Riis
Robichaud
Rossi
Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe)
Tobin
Waddell—45

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Belsher
Bernier
Binns
Bissonnette
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bouchard
Bourgault
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff
Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot)
Champagne (Champlain)
Charest
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Comeau
Cooper
Cossitt
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Côté (Langelier)
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dick
Domm
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Fennell
Ferland
Forrestall
Fretz
Gagnon
Girard
Greenaway
Guilbault (Drummond)
Halliday
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Harvey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Holtmann
Horner
Howie
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kempling
Kilgour
Landry
Layton
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay
Malone
Mantha
Marin
Martin
Masse
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCrossan
McDermid
McKenzie
McKinnon
McMillan
Merrithew
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Mulroney
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Oostrom
Paproski
Plourde
Porter
Price
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Ricard
St-Julien
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields
Siddon
Sparrow
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tupper
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Weiner
White
Winegard
Wise
Witer—124

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 78 by striking out lines 39 to 43 at page 36 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) Members of the Board are to be selected for appointment by the Minister of the Environment from the public service of Canada or of any province or from among persons nominated by interest owners or the aboriginal people or local people resident in or abutting frontier lands."

The House divided on Motion No. 10 (Mr. Waddell), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 9)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Axworthy
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Broadbent
Caccia
Copps
de Corneille
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Gagliano
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Heap
Henderson
Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount)
Kaplan
Keeper
Killens
Langdon
MacLellan
Malépart
Manly
Marchi
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nunziata
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Riis
Robichaud
Rossi
Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe)
Tobin
Waddell—45

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Belsher
Bernier
Binns
Bissonnette
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bouchard
Bourgault
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff
Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot)
Champagne (Champlain)
Charest
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Comeau
Cooper
Cossitt
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Côté (Langelier)
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dick
Domm
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Fennell
Ferland
Forrestall
Fretz
Gagnon
Girard
Greenaway
Guilbault (Drummond)
Halliday
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Harvey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Holtmann
Horner
Howie
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kempling
Kilgour

Landry
Layton
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay
Malone
Mantha
Marin
Martin
Masse
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCrossan
McDermid
McKenzie
McKinnon
McMillan
Merrithew
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Mulroney
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Oostrom
Paproski
Plourde
Porter
Price
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Ricard
St-Julien
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields
Siddon
Sparrow
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tupper
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Weiner
White
Winegard
Wise
Witer—124

● (1700)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The next vote is as follows. Mr. Gagnon moved:

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 85 by striking out line 26 at page 43 and substituting the following therefor:

"terms and conditions or, on the request of the Minister, a copy of the agreement or arrangement".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Gagnon), which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 10)

YEAS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Belsher
Bernier
Binns
Bissonnette
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bouchard
Bourgault
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff
Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot)
Champagne (Champlain)
Charest
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Comeau
Cooper
Cossitt
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Côté (Langelier)
Crofton
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dick
Domm
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Fennell
Ferland
Forrestall
Fretz
Gagnon
Girard
Greenaway
Guilbault (Drummond)
Halliday
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Harvey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Holtmann
Horner
Howie
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kempling
Kilgour
Landry
Layton
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay
Malone
Mantha
Marin
Martin
Masse
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCrossan
McDermid
McKenzie
McKinnon
McMillan
Merrithew
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Mulroney
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Oostrom
Plourde
Porter
Price
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Ricard
St-Julien
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields
Siddon
Sparrow
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tupper
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Weiner
White
Winegard
Wise
Witer—123

NAYS

Members

Althouse
Axworthy
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Broadbent
Copps
de Corneille
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Gagliano
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Heap
Henderson
Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount)
Kaplan
Keeper
Killens
Langdon
MacLellan
Malépart
Manly
Marchi
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nunziata
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Riis
Robichaud
Rossi
Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe)
Tobin
Waddell—44

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-5, be amended in Clause 112 by striking out lines 1 to 5 at page 63.

The House divided on Motion No. 13 (Mr. Waddell), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 11)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Axworthy
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Broadbent
Caccia
Copps
de Corneille
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Foster
Gagliano
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)
Heap
Henderson
Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount)
Kaplan
Keeper
Killens
Langdon
MacLellan
Malépart
Manly
Marchi
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nunziata
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Riis
Robichaud
Rossi
Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe)
Tobin
Waddell—45

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Belsher
Bernier
Binns
Bissonnette
Blackburn
(Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bouchard
Bourgault
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff
Champagne
(Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot)
Champagne
(Champlain)
Charest
Clark
(Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Comeau
Cooper
Cossitt
Côté
(Lac-Saint-Jean)
Côté
(Langelier)
Crofton
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Crouse
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dick
Domm
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Fennell
Ferland
Forrestall
Fretz
Gagnon
Girard
Greenaway
Guilbault
(Drummond)
Halliday
Hamelin
Hamilton
Hardey
Harvey
Hawkes
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Holtmann
Horner
Howie
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson
(Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kempling
Kilgour
Landry
Layton
Lewis
MacDonald
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacDougall
(Timiskaming)
MacKay
Malone
Mantha
Marin
Martin
Masse
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCrossan
McDermid
McKenzie
McKinnon
McMillan
Merrithew
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Mulroney
Nicholson
(Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Oberle
O'Neil
Oostrom
Paproski
Plourde
Porter
Price
Redway
Reid
Reimer
Ricard
St-Julien
Schellenberg
(Nanaimo—Alberni)
Schellenberger
(Wetaskiwin)
Scott
(Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields
Siddon
Sparrow
Stewart
Taylor
Towers
Tupper
Valcourt
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
Weiner
White
Winegard
Wise
Witer—124

• (1710)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion negatived.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-5, an Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act, as amended, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have this opportunity to introduce the third reading of Bill C-5, the Canada Petroleum Resources Act.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. I know all Hon. Members will want to hear the Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: The spirit of this legislation marks a clear break with the philosophy of the National Energy Program introduced by the previous Government. Its fair and straightforward regulations covering the exploration and development of petroleum resources in Canada's frontier lands have come to replace a discriminatory and arbitrary system.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. Would Hon. Members take their seats or vacate the Chamber and carry on discussions elsewhere? The Minister has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, this legislation will be well received by the industry, the coastal provinces and the territories because it will put into place a system that not only recognizes the rights of owners and promoters where resources are concerned but also frees the development of frontier lands from cumbersome and useless administrative impediments.

For a little over two years, the Canadian Government has been proceeding with broad consultations with the industry and with the territorial and provincial governments. These consultations have brought concrete results. We now have two systems for joint management with the provinces, one involving Newfoundland and the other Nova Scotia. Furthermore, the Western Accord, the signing of the Agreement on Natural Gas Markets and Prices and the abolition of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax have been a clear indication to the industry that we are counting on its entrepreneurial spirit to explore and develop our oil and gas resources.

It is common knowledge that both the costs and risks involved in the exploration of oil and gas resources in Canada's North and our offshore regions are far greater than in our other regions.

These considerations are reflected in the Bill before the House today, which establishes fair and straightforward regulations to promote the development of petroleum resources in our frontier lands.

The Canada Oil and Gas Act will be replaced by a new legislation stressing both the rights and the obligations of Canadians, the real owners of these resources, as well as those of the industry which develops them.

Under the new law, the discretionary power of the Minister will be reduced. For instance, until now he could select who would be granted exploration rights. Henceforth the granting of exploration rights will be subject to a system of calls for competitive bids and only one criterion will apply: the best bid will be accepted.

Mr. Speaker, you will see as well that the Bill provides for the State to play a much less important role in oil and gas projects. We have repealed the back-in provisions which gave the Government the right to expropriate commercial oil reserves.

Petro-Canada will no longer be given preferential treatment. However the new legislation maintains the right of Canadians to become owners of 50 per cent of projects in remote regions.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the development of resources on our frontier lands is a costly and risky project. By changing the structure of the royalty payment system, Bill C-5 encourages the industry to meet this challenge.

With respect to the resources, our royalty system will guarantee a fair distribution of revenues among owners and developers. It will enable the industry to yield decent profits on its frontier land investments before Governments, the owners of the resources, get their share of royalties. The profit-based system, which eliminates the discriminatory practices of past years, has received the general support of the industry. It will contribute to create the incentives required for a renewal of activities.

Now that we have reached third reading of Bill C-5, I would like the House to recognize the significant contribution of the Legislative Committee to this Bill. Its thorough examination has resulted in useful and constructive amendments to the Bill.

One of these amendments provides that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs (Mr. McKnight) will each appoint from the public one member to the Environmental Studies Management Board. The board, which is made up of representatives of the Government and the industry, manages the Environmental Studies Research Fund, the purpose of which is to finance technical research on the sociological and physical environment in frontier areas.

Other amendments extend the rights of property owners to do exploration and development work in areas of significant discoveries, and increase the rights of production permit holders to continue their exploring on producing lands.

The entire process has hinged on consultation. We have been sensitive to the concerns raised by all parties, especially representatives of the native people.

Other representations were made concerning the information which corporations eager to develop resources in frontier lands must provide the Government. In this regard, we have no intention to impose a heavy administrative burden on our entrepreneurs; what we want is for the state to have the information it needs to assume its responsibilities under this legislation.

On behalf of the House, Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Committee for its contribution in the study of this Bill.

During the session, the House will also deal with the Atlantic Accord Implementation Act, and we will introduce shortly a Bill dealing with the implementation of the Canada-Nova Scotia Accord which has just been signed. These legislations will make up the next two stages of our policy to ensure the joint administration of our gaz and oil resources in frontier regions together with regional Governments, which have asked, rightfully so, to have their say about oil and gaz activities in their regions.

Mr. Speaker, the Canada Petroleum Resources Act will serve as the corner stone for the development of oil resources in our frontier regions. The proposed legislation deserves the unanimous support of the House.

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, this Bill has been on the Order Paper for a considerable period of time. It seems that the Government has not deemed it fair or fit to make changes or do something to stimulate the energy sector offshore in eastern Canada and in the Beaufort Sea area. It is very sad that the Government has sat and watched the price of oil and gas plummet and has stuck with its pathetic effort in Bill C-5 without any regard for what is happening to the industry.

We covered a great deal in report stage. We referred to the situation in the Beaufort Sea. Activity in the energy sector in the northern part of the country has pretty well come to a halt. The unemployment which this will create will be devastating to the high Arctic and to other areas in the Northwest Territories and Yukon. There will be a great deal of unemployment. The fragile economy of the area will be dealt an irreparable blow. The young people who were encouraged by the previous Government and by this Government to partake in the energy sector will now be unemployed, young people who do not have experience in the traditional occupations carried out in the high Arctic.

There has been a tremendous loss of activity in Atlantic Canada. This time last year there were many rigs operating offshore in eastern Canada, whereas there are now only two. These two rigs which are operating off the coast of Newfoundland may be halting their activities very soon.

As far as Nova Scotia is concerned, there is one Mobil Oil rig operating off its coast. We expect an announcement very shortly concerning Mobil's future. I am afraid that it will join the other oil companies and cease operations off the coast of Nova Scotia. It is tragic. Less than a year ago 11 rigs were operating off the coast of Nova Scotia and now there is only one. Thousands of people have lost their jobs. Offshore service industries have ceased to function.

While there is a downturn in the activities of these industries, they have also found that the Government has kicked them from the blind side by reducing incentives from the National Research Council which would allow them to diversify, to open up markets in other areas, and would provide them with some financial assistance to market their products from the East Coast.

Thanks to the Government's policy, this Bill is really an exercise in futility. Relatively speaking, there is no activity in the offshore. The rigs are being stacked up in Halifax Harbour or taken to other locations. Exploration in the Beaufort has come to a crashing halt.

When the Government cancelled the Petroleum Incentives Program it said that exploration would not suffer and that energy was an engine of economic growth which would create 100,000 to 300,000 jobs. Now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) says the energy sector is not a job-creation sector. That is for sure, because 40,000 people have already lost their jobs and there is a danger of another 70,000 people throughout the country losing their jobs. It does not have to be like that. Low world oil prices have caused major problems for the industry, but this Government's short-sightedness has wreaked havoc in the energy sector.

The General Manager of Shell Canada, Lorne Kingwall, told businessmen in Halifax earlier this month just what was needed to get the offshore going again. He said:

> What we need is not just a better price for one day, but a long-term view that gives us confidence we could support a relatively expensive project, which the offshore is.

What did the Government decide to do in response to this? Absolutely nothing. All those rigs are now saying farewell to Nova Scotia and to Newfoundland as they pull out of the Beaufort Sea. The Government says that that is too bad, that the private sector knows what is best and should dictate activities in the offshore and in other frontier areas, and that we should let our energy reserves sit and wait for a better price. Who cares about the energy future? This Government certainly does not.

The country is moving toward an increased reliance upon imported crude oil. Because many smaller Canadian companies are not getting the help they need from the Government during these tough economic times, foreign takeovers, mergers, and bankruptcies are shaping our energy sector and will be shaping it even more so in the future. Once again we will have an energy industry which is mostly owned and controlled by foreigners. This is happening despite the lofty words of the former Minister of Energy last spring when she said:

> If we do not conserve our oil and gas resources . . . and if we do not find and develop new supplies . . . we'll end up back where we were in the 1970s. OPEC will dictate price and supply to us.

That is exactly right. However, what is the Government doing about it? It is leaving us open to the fluctuations and manipulations of OPEC once again. It is failing to provide enough incentive to keep exploration activities going in the frontier and the offshore. It is completely abandoning the goal of Canadianization and leaving our smaller Canadian companies in a very vulnerable position—one where Canadians will no longer own or control our resources. Lawrence Murphy, a partner in the planning resource group of Toronto predicts, since the integrated multinational corporations have stronger balance sheets and are in a better position to wait out the slump in oil prices:

• (1730)

> —that the outcome of this situation will be increased concentration of the petroleum industry . . . in this country—and most likely, a rise in the proportion of the industry that is owned and controlled by non-residents.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we are right back where we were at the beginning. We have turned the clocks back and we are putting ourselves into the same position we were in years and years ago before we realized the importance of our energy sector, not only to the country but to Canadians individually. We are moving back despite what the former Minister of Energy said last spring.

The Government was elected to bring Canada forward not to set us back as it has been doing. It is time the Government looked beyond the end of its nose, or at least beyond the next election and did something to help the energy sector. The problem cannot be ignored any longer. Canadians of today and tomorrow deserve better treatment. The Government will realize this by the time the next election comes around—of course by that time it will be too late for the Government—but let us hope that it is not too late for the energy sector.

The Parliamentary Secretary was very nonplussed and hyperactive this afternoon complaining that the deletion of Clause 53 would put us in a position of dictating to the energy sector, of taking away, of pulling the rug out from under it economically in a participation sense. Canadianization is right now approximately 50 per cent in the offshore and the Beaufort. There is not a great deal of difference. We are concerned in this Party that we do not lose what we already have principally in the offshore and the frontier. We are concerned that this participation that we have not be rolled back in the interests of soothing the large multinational oil companies. There is nothing wrong with multinational oil companies participating in the activity in the frontier, nothing at all. Basically they have been good corporate citizens. They are in the business of making the maximum profit they can. That is not the interests necessarily of furthering exploration and development in the frontier at this time, not without a sign from the Government that something needs to be done not only to create activity economically but to do something to protect and develop our security of supply in Canada.

There is an opportunity now to do something not only to maintain the economic structures on the East Coast of Canada and in the north but to develop an energy program which the Government does not at this time have. It is a case of drift. Every speech the Conservatives make refer back to the Atlantic Accord, the Western Accord and now there is the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement which gave a $200 million slush fund to Nova Scotia. The Province of Nova Scotia is using it any which way it darn well wants. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, it gave $25 million to Nova Scotia resources. It is just a bad joke on the poeple of Nova Scotia. It is certainly not an indication that the federal Government wants the activity in the oil and gas sector to continue and strengthen. This is a very sad commentary at a time of high unemployment and of financial difficulty in many areas of Canada. We are concerned about the deficit and where this country is going economically under this Government. What is happening? We are concerned about the downturn in our natural resources and sales. What are we doing about it? We are sabotaging perhaps the natural resources sector that can be most beneficial not only now but in the future. We will lose very valuable time. We will jettison completely the Government's own stated policy of security of supply. I think that is very unfortunate for the country economically and for Canadians individually.

I regret that the Bill is going through. I oppose it. I oppose the idea, the theory, the lack of consideration and the lack of feeling behind the Bill which the Government has shown or not shown as the case may be. I think it is unfortunate. I think a great deal more could be done at this important time to generate activity on the frontier. We are losing an opportunity both for Canadianization of our industry and development of security of supply that we may not get in a great many years.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on third reading of this Bill. I will try to keep my comments fairly short because I spoke on second reading, and I refer Members to that speech. I tried in that speech to deal with the history and the analysis of the 25 per cent Crown back-in with which this Bill ends. I tried to deal with the back-in from the point of view that it was not confiscatory but based on logic and that the Government was making a mistake getting rid of it. The arguments presented were flawed. The Government has been lobbied by the large oil companies, and it bought their story hook, line and sinker. I want to say a few words—

[Translation]

—the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), the new Minister, the Quebec Minister. I have already come to realize that he is quite clever and, I think, very honest.

[English]

He made a couple of points. I want to deal with them. First, he said that the Bill brought in fair and clear regulations to replace discriminatory and arbitrary ones. Yes and no, Mr. Speaker. The Bill itself within the context of what it is trying to do does try to be fair and clear. I agree with the oil industry in that it is entitled to a fair and clear regime from the Government under which it operates.

In return for my agreeing with that principle, I hope some day that the Government will agree publicly with the principle that I espouse. Never forget that resources belong to the Canadian people. They are our resources and not the resources of the oil companies. They are our resources collectively, generally. That is the point from where we have to start. The Government spent through the National Energy Program over $7 billion in petroleum incentive grants in its new regime. I was here, as were many other Members, when Bill C-48, the Canada Oil and Gas Act, was passed. We had 18 months of debate on that Bill. A mistake was made, and I wish the Conservatives would acknowledge that the NDP did oppose the notion of the PIP grants. We thought the program would be wasteful, and it was incredibly wasteful. You cannot blame companies when loads of money was being dished out. They took it. Second, it shifted the exploration from the western sedimentary basin of Alberta, Saskatchewan and parts of British Columbia to the frontier, to the north, the Beaufort Sea and the offshore. That hurt the western economy.

There was an argument, and I can understand the argument, for some of that because the federal Government is responsible for guaranteeing Canada's energy security. You have to have an energy policy in Canada. It was to find out what was in the frontier. It was also motivated by the fact that former Prime Minister Trudeau considered that he, being the head of the Government of Canada, had power and jurisdiction. Premier Lougheed, the Prime Minister's rival, only had jurisdiction over the Province of Alberta. Mr. Trudeau changed the game so that most of the money went to the frontier that he controlled rather than the areas that Premier Lougheed controlled. I simply want to point out that the New Democratic Party opposed that aspect of the National Energy Program, and it was Premier Lougheed and Prime Minister Trudeau who raised the glass of champagne and made the deal. However, it seems rather ironic that it is all blamed on the New Democratic Party.

• (1740)

The Minister stated that this Bill involved a consultative process with the industry. While that is true, I suggest that there was no full consultative process with the native groups. This was evident in the hearings.

The Minister congratulated members of the legislative committee, including the Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon), who took part vigorously in those hearings. However, I must say that I had to filibuster in the committee in order to have it actually call witnesses and spend some time on the Bill. The Government is not entirely blameless because it wanted to rush the legislation through. It was only as a result of a couple of people, including the chairman of the committee, that we were finally able to hear some witnesses.

If the Government had listened to the native witnesses it would have realized that there is a flaw in the Bill. The Bill attempts to deal with the oil companies and give them permits which will take effect in the 1990s when we will undoubtedly need frontier oil again. At the same time, however, it is forgetting that it is also negotiating with the native people on land claims. In fact, the Government is ignoring land claims as if in wilful blindness.

Earlier today I read into the record a letter that I received from the Tungavik Federation of Nunavut, representing 17,000 Inuit people of central and eastern Arctic. They state in the letter:

This Bill prejudices our land claim negotiations.

They go on to state:

—we protest in the strongest possible terms the enactment of any federal statute which facilitates the alienation of our land and resources from under our feet.

It is nonsense for the Government to say that energy is not significant and is separate from land claims. Energy is very important to the north. Our Constitution provides that the Government negotiate land claims with the native people. However, at the same time, the Government is giving away various interest and rights in the subsoil to the oil companies. I believe that this conflict reflects a flaw in the Bill.

The Minister said that he wants to rely on the entrepreneurial spirit of the companies to develop the resources. We all want to see the entrepreneurial spirit of Canadian business used. However, the Government is playing in a very big league with Exxon, Mobil and Shell, which makes it very difficult for small Canadian companies to move into the frontiers. That is why we need Petro-Canada. It has enough clout to compete with those big companies in the offshore. Even larger Canadian companies like Husky and Bow Valley will find it difficult to move into the frontier without some government incentive. That is why they have closed their exploration operations and nothing is happening on the East Coast.

Indeed, some of the smaller Canadian companies are in danger of being swallowed up by the large foreign companies. The progress we have made toward Canadianization could easily be reversed in the next few years. I believe that the federal Government and some of the spokespeople for the industry have put themselves into an ideological straitjacket. While the New Democrats have often been accused of being ideologues, the federal Government and some in the industry are ideologues in the sense that they believe in a free market in world oil that is primarily controlled by OPEC. When the world price begins to fall through the floor, they are not in favour of a stabilization program. Yet, if the price of oil begins to rise to $50 or $60 a barrel, is it reasonable to believe that the Government of Canada will not put a ceiling on the price of oil? That is what it will do, just like the Liberals did with the National Energy Program. Why are they denying themselves the protection of a floor price, or stabilization price, when the price of oil goes through the floor?

The Government said that it accepted an amendment to the Bill. The amendment was that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) or the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) could choose a member of the public to be on an environmental advisory panel, rather than having only civil servants. Big deal!

It is significant to note that an amendment proposed by a Conservative Member from Calgary to make paper work easier for the oil companies was accepted by the Government. We proposed an amendment that would have department environmentalists involved in the north. That amendment was rejected. We proposed an amendment that would give native people a better say and would develop some programs for the advancement and training of native people. That was rejected, in spite of the fact that they live there. It is a clear example of the priorities of the Government. It is a Government by and for the big oil companies whom they represent. Indeed, the big oil companies wrote the policy of the Government.

Mr. Reimer: Rubbish!

Mr. Waddell: Look at the words "engine of economic growth; 300,000 jobs". Those words come from the 1983 presentation of the Canadian Petroleum Association. This Bill will also represent a time in our history when the Government chose to cave in to American pressure and get rid of the back-in provisions which would give Petro-Canada 25 per cent of production, even though the Canadian Government, through the taxpayers, has put in over $7.3 billion in grants in the last seven years. We have been pushed around by the Americans, and the Government has caved in. While it is necessary to have a good relationship with the Americans since they are our friends and neighbours, we must stand up and be independent. I suggest that the Conservatives will pay a price in the next election because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is too close to his buddy down south.

In conclusion, let me expand on something said by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), the Liberal energy critic. Canada does not have an energy policy. The Government is adrift, with no energy policy, and is in fact relying on buying offshore oil and letting our industry go.

The Conservatives are forgetting about their old policy that energy was an engine of economic growth which created many jobs. As the Hon. Member pointed out, 40,000 jobs have been lost in Alberta and, after the deregulation of natural gas, there will be up to 70,000 jobs lost.

I am not suggesting that it is possible to wave a magic wand and develop an energy program to put those people back to work, but I suggest that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should very carefully consider developing a new energy policy that is based upon the notion of maintaining our industry at a level where it can be more easily revved up in the future. I think most Members of the House would agree with the general parameters of such a policy. What will happen is that the price of energy will shoot up again and we will not be in a position to start up again in the Venture field, Hibernia, the Beaufort or the tar sands and we will put our energy security into doubt.

• (1750)

I suggest that the Government bring in a new energy policy. We in the NDP will assist in any way we can. I see the Hon. Member laughing. I would remind him that the Opposition in Alberta is the NDP.

Mr. Nunziata: Not by much.

Mr. Waddell: I would think we want to work together on this. We are going to have some disagreements but if the Member thinks about it, we need a new energy policy and we need a way of dealing with the tar sands and the price of oil from the tar sands. We have to find some way of keeping the Beaufort going at a minimal level. We have to talk about a stabilization program in Alberta for the small oil companies so that they are not swallowed up. We could go further and talk about banking some oil and gas.

Technically, the Bill is well written for what it tries to do. However, it is flawed in the sense that it does not deal with the native problem. The Government is trying to put aside that problem in that it is trying to negotiate land claims on the one side and it is giving away all these interests on the other. If there is a court decision or settlement, this could return to haunt the Government. The Bill is also flawed in the sense that it is going to mean the end of private Canadian oil companies in the offshore. We are going to see only the bigger international or American companies there. While they may be straightforward and honest people, their interests are not necessarily the interests of the Canadian public. This Bill unnecessarily cuts the government oil company, Petro-Canada, out of an advantage in the frontier which is really needed. That, too, will return to haunt us and at some point it is going to have to be changed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes left to us I would like to debate on third reading, if I might.

We have been involved with this Bill, originally C-92 and now C-5 in this new session, for some time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There is a question and comment period. I noticed the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was rising to ask a question. Does he wish to ask a question? He does. Then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for a question or comment.

Mr. Waddell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon Member is of course entitled to ask me a question. From our point of view, we would be disposed to wrap up the Bill tonight if that is possible and if it is fair to the Parliamentary Secretary whom I would like to hear speak.

Mr. Gauthier: Speaking on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding, following certain consultations, that we would proceed to third reading of this Bill tonight. I was just asking a question because I could see there was time left before six o'clock. If the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary insists on speaking for the next five minutes, I do not see any difficulty so long as he sits down before six o'clock so we can pass the Bill.

Mr. McDermid: I find that interesting coming from my Liberal friend across the way. I was just about to say, when I was so rudely interrupted, that a great deal of work—

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has a question or comment, therefore I must recognize him.

Mr. Nunziata: I seek clarification. As I understand it, this is the time to ask questions or make comments on the speech by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Is that correct?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, that is correct. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston has the floor for questions or comments.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in putting my question to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway I would like to apologize to the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) for exercising my right as a Member of Parliament to put the question. If he thinks that this is rudely interrupting, I would like to apologize.

I have had the opportunity over the last number of weeks to travel to different parts of Canada and I have been somewhat concerned about the different prices of gasoline we see in different parts of the country. Over the weekend I was in Halifax and the price of leaded gasoline is around 45 cents or 46 cents a litre. Upon my return to Toronto I found that the price of gasoline—

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We are debating third reading of a frontier exploration Bill and I have difficulty in understanding how the price of gasoline at the pump has anything to do with Bill C-5.

Mr. Nunziata: If the Hon. Member knows his stuff, as I am sure he does, he will know that in order to sell gas at the pump you have to find it somewhere.

Mr. Riis: That is pretty complicated.

Mr. Nunziata: It seems to me that this Bill speaks to the finding of gas and oil in Canada. I therefore submit that questions relating to the price of gasoline are essential and relevant to the debate.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway has become an expert in the field of energy prices in Canada second only to my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), my Party's critic. I question whether it is fair that a motorist or businessman in Halifax pays 10 cents or 11 cents more per litre of gasoline than his or her equivalent in Toronto. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if this Bill will in any way eliminate the inequities which exist in the price of gasoline in Canada?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, the Bill will not change the inequities. The Hon. Member should understand that the Conservatives deregulated the price of gasoline in order to have competition, but there is no real competition in the wholesale and retail price of gasoline. Four companies, including Petro-Canada, control the market and have been keeping the price up because they are surviving and making a little money. The poor oil companies in Alberta, the little Canadian oil companies who do not have retail markets like this, are suffering and will be gobbled up by these big fellows who are making all that money in Halifax.

I am glad the Hon. Member brought this up because, as I said in my speech, this is a country in search of a new energy policy. However, we are simply not getting it. This document addresses itself to what the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys, who is very familiar with this subject, has called a bit of a fantasy. There is nothing happening in the frontier, but this is the kind of Bill we are getting and the Government is ignoring the real problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is as follows: Mr. Masse, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moves that Bill C-5, an Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act, be now read the third time and do pass.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

* * *

• (1800)

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Friday, October 10, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening ofthe Session; and of the amendment of Mr. Cassidy (p. 227).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment. Mr. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre), seconded by Mr. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved:

That the following be added to the address:

"This House regrets that the Government has failed to provide leadership on major issues of social justice affecting average Canadians including the need for action to provide greater protection for battered women, a commitment to legislate pro-rated benefits for part-time workers, the majority of whom are women, a refusal to establish and work towards lower unemployment targets for Canadians, and the failure to pursue a serious tax reform that would eliminate the unfairness, the complexity and the unaccountability of the present system".

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Cassidy), which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 12)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Axworthy
Berger
Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie
Boudria
Broadbent
Caccia
Cassidy
Copps
de Jong
Dingwall
Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)
Finestone
Foster
Gagliano
Garneau
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grondin
Heap
Henderson
Kaplan
Keeper
Killens
Langdon
Lapierre
MacLellan
Malépart
Manly
McCurdy
McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood)
Mitchell
Murphy
Nicholson (Trinity)
Nunziata
Orlikow
Parry
Penner
Pépin
Riis
Robichaud
Rossi
Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe)
Waddell—45

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Belsher
Bernier
Bertrand
Binns
Bissonnette
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blais
Blenkarn
Bouchard
Bourgault
Bradley
Brightwell
Brisco
Cadieux
Caldwell
Cardiff
Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot)
Champagne (Champlain)
Charest
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Clinch
Comeau
Cooper
Cossitt
Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Côté (Langelier)
Crofton
Crombie
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crouse
Dantzer
Darling
Daubney
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Desrosiers
Domm
Duguay
Duplessis
Edwards
Ellis
Fennell
Ferland
Fretz
Gagnon
Gérin
Girard
Greenaway
Grisé
Guilbault (Drummond)
Halliday
Hamelin
Hardey
Harvey
Hawkes
Hees
Hicks
Hnatyshyn
Hockin
Holtmann
Howie
James
Jardine
Jelinek
Jepson
Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception)
Joncas
Kelleher
Kempling
Kilgour
Landry
La Salle
Layton
Lewis
MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay
Malone
Mantha
Marin
Martin
Mayer
Mazankowski
McCrossan
McDermid
McKinnon
Minaker
Mitges
Moore
Mulroney
Nicholson (Niagara Falls)
Nickerson
Nowlan
Oberle
O'Neil

Oostrom	Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)	Warner
Pennock	Shields	Weiner
Pietz	Siddon	White
Plourde	Sparrow	Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek)
Porter	Stevens	Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Price	Stewart	Winegard
Ravis	Taylor	Wise
Redway	Towers	Witer—134
Reid	Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Reimer	Tupper
Ricard	Valcourt
St-Julien	Vankoughnet
Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni)	Vézina
Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin)	Vincent

• (1820)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

It being 6.25 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 15, 1986

The House met at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NOT INTERVENE TO REVERSE CRTC DECISION ORDERING REIMBURSEMENT TO BELL CANADA SUBSCRIBERS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, Canadians were glad to hear about the CRTC ruling granting a refund to Bell Canada subscribers. According to the ruling, subscribers will be entitled to a credit amounting to about two months' service charges and long distance rates will be rolled back by roughly 20 per cent. The CRTC also ordered Bell Canada to provide telephone service to customers with hearing impairment in Quebec and Ontario.

This hard-earned victory is due to the 300-odd interest groups from all walks of life which appeared as witnesses during last summer's public hearings.

On behalf of Canadian consumers, I urge the Government not to intervene to reverse the CRTC decision.

* * *

[English]

NOBEL CHEMISTRY PRIZE

AWARD WON BY PROFESSOR JOHN POLANYI, UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise in the House this afternoon and share with you and through you with Members of the House of Commons and, in fact, all Canadians, the news that John Polanyi, Professor of Chemistry at the University of Toronto, has been awarded a Nobel Prize in chemistry jointly with two Americans.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tupper: Professor Polanyi was born in Berlin, educated at the University of Manchester, and came to Canada as a National Research Council post-doctoral fellow in the mid-1950s and worked there with Dr. Stacie. In 1957 he joined the University of Toronto and since then he has progressed rapidly in the scientific community to be recognized as an international leader. Much of his work since he joined the University of Toronto has been financed through NSERC and at present he is the largest grant holder of that institution, a landmark for Canadian science.

* * *

• (1405)

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

DECISION REQUIRING BELL CANADA TO MAKE REFUNDS TO SUBSCRIBERS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, consumer power and complicated hearings have paid off. Yesterday the CRTC announced a decision requiring Bell Canada to refund $200 million to telephone subscribers in Ontario and Quebec as a result of excessive revenues Bell had obtained. In addition, Bell has been directed to reduce rates for long distance calling by 20 per cent effective January 1.

This is welcome news indeed and marks the first time the CRTC has been as tough as this in any decision. I applaud the CRTC as well in its direction to Bell to provide a message relay service for the hearing impaired that will operate 24 hours a day. People with hearing handicaps have been lobbying for this for 10 years.

A monopoly such as Bell has an obligation to provide services at a reasonable cost. It is the job of the CRTC to see that returns are reasonable and that consumers are well served. The decision of the CRTC yesterday shows that the system can work.

* * *

[Translation]

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF SAINTE-ODILE PARISH—PARTICIPATION OF VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Last October 10, 11 and 12, Mr. Speaker, the parish of Sainte-Odile in my constituency of Quebec East celebrated its 25th anniversary. I should like to tell Members of the House how proud I was about the results of the dedicated work done by a group of volunteers whose selflessness and co-operation ensured the outstanding success of these festivities to highlight the 25 rewarding years of Sainte-Odile parish.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I was able to see for myself that volunteer work is a virtue in itself and that men and women who are active in this field create around them an atmosphere of vitality and an unmistakable sense of gratitude. The unqualified success of the Sainte-Odile parish 25th anniversary celebrations attests to the rewarding fall-out of volunteer work. Again I commend Sainte-Odile parishioners for their active participation and dynamism. Our community is richer thanks to these people.

Bravo and congratulations for remarkable work and noteworthy activities, Mr. Speaker!

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, Montrealers and as a matter of fact all Canadians are rightly concerned about disclosures made in La Presse this morning to the effect that the Government has manipulated bids for the contract concerning the maintenance of the Canadian Armed Forces CF-18 fighters.

This morning the Survival Committee for Canadair stated that two months after the call for tenders in January 1986, the Department of National Defence was ready to accept an unsolicited proposal made by Bristol Aerospace including a 13 per cent price reduction from its first bid. Why has the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) accepted a second proposal from the Bristol group? To what extent were those dealings legal? How can such a bid be reduced by 13 per cent within a period of a mere two months, Mr. Speaker? The Government has to shed some light on that mysterious way of administering tenders for the contract with respect to the maintenance of the CF-18. Otherwise this Government will seriously jeopardize its credibility.

* * *

[English]

TOURISM

INVITATION TO ATTEND FESTIVAL OF LIGHTS AT NIAGARA FALLS

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, there is no faster growing industry in Canada than that of tourism. It is predicted that by the turn of the century tourism will be the largest industry in Canada. Therefore I think it is prudent for all levels of government to do everything possible to promote tourism.

When promoting this industry, everyone should keep in mind that, year in and year out, the single largest tourist attraction in this hemisphere is Niagara Falls. Visiting the Niagara Peninsula are approximately 14 million people per year and they are not there just to see the Falls. The Shaw Festival, the Welland Canal, Fort George and the Niagara scenic parks are just a few of the attractions that keep people coming to Niagara. Now that Expo has just closed, it is time for everyone to come on home to Niagara Falls. They will be just in time for the Festival of Lights.

* * *

• (1410)

FINANCE

NONPAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY TRANSCANADA PIPELINES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in view of the need for a fair, just, and equitable tax system for all Canadians, I wish to announce today's winner of the great untaxed corporation award. It is TransCanada PipeLines, which was, through successive Liberal and Conservative tax measures, granted the right to pay no taxes in both 1980 and 1981 on profits totalling $256.6 million.

Had the tax system been fair and equitable, and had TransCanada PipeLines been required to pay even a 25 per cent tax rate on its profits, average Canadians would have paid $64.2 million less in tax because of this one company alone.

This award is a reminder to the Government that there is a serious and immediate need for comprehensive tax reform.

* * *

[Translation]

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

NEW IMPORT POLICY

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, recently the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion announced the Government's new policy on textile and clothing imports. This means the multifibre agreement under the GATT is renewed, and this Conservative Government intends to renegotiate and extend bilateral restrictive arrangements with more than 25 countries exporting low-cost clothing. Thanks to this new step, there will be a more moderate rate of growth of imports consistent with the domestic market. Those are two vital industries, employing as they do more than 20 per cent of Quebec's manufacturing manpower.

Further, the new policy includes a customs duty return program aimed at increasing the competitivity of our shirt manufacturers, and the strengthening of border checks by laboratory analysis of the fibre contents of imported goods, as well as the review of the regulations dealing with the indication of the country of origin.

Those measures will ensure that a viable level of textile and clothing production is maintained in Canada and in my constituency, where the industry employs more than 5,000 workers.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

FARM DEBT REVIEW BOARDS—DELAY IN HEARING APPLICATIONS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the farm debt crisis is getting worse every day with thousands of farmers across Canada facing the loss of their farms. In Ontario over 900 farmers are two to three years behind on their FCC loan payments.

Last June, in two sittings of the House, we passed the legislation creating Farm Debt Review Boards. Still, the Farm Debt Review Boards are not functioning in Ontario. Only three of the ten member board have been appointed so far. Over 100 farmers have applied for help from the board, yet not a single case has been heard.

Last Friday the Ontario Federation of Agriculture sent an urgent telegram to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) urging action by the Government, and cautioning the Government that farmers' patience is running out and they are becoming increasingly angry.

I call on the Government to take action and get these boards operating immediately. The Government must change its ways and give the farm debt crisis the urgent priority it deserves.

* * *

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

EARLY PAYMENT OF CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, about 725,000 Canadian families, or 1.3 million children, will benefit from an early payment of the child tax credit this November, 1986. This credit introduced by this Government will provide timely assistance to Canadian families, and will reduce the need for tax refund discounting.

The prepayment, which is $300 per child, is an amount equal to approximately two-thirds of the full credit. The remaining amount, if any, will be paid after the 1986 tax return is filed in early 1987. The prepayment will automatically be made available to eligible claimants who had a family income of less than $15,000 in 1985. Other recipients will receive their credit in the spring, as has been the case in the past. Furthermore, no applications for the prepayment will be required. This measure complements the $70 increase in the tax credit this year, and the measures to control the money that may be taken by tax rebate discounters.

By providing, for the first time, an early payment of the child tax credit, the Government is clearly demonstrating its concern for the needs of middle and low-income families in Canada.

* * *

NOBEL CHEMISTRY PRIZE

AWARD WON BY PROFESSOR JOHN POLANYI, UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate, on behalf of all Canadians, Dr. John C. Polanyi of the University of Toronto, who today has been awarded the Nobel Prize for chemistry for his work on the dynamics of chemical elementary processes.

Dr. Polanyi is the second Nobel Prize winner in chemistry in Canada, and follows the prize awarded to Dr. Gerhard Herzberg of Ottawa. Both men have had associations with the federal National Research Council, Dr. Polanyi as a post-doctoral fellow and Dr. Herzberg in a life-long career there.

In congratulating these men on their achievements, we must also reflect on the Black Wednesday that struck the NRC today in the budget cuts which eliminated 200 jobs, wiped out programs, and cut back the Herzberg Institute of Astrophysics.

Can we not better honour the persons who have brought recognition to Canada by strengthening our commitment to basic research instead of thoughtlessly disbanding the hard work of many talented scientists?

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

IMPORTANCE OF INSTALLATIONS AT VAL-D'OR

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, of all airports in the Abitibi-Témiscamingue, James Bay and Northern Quebec areas, the regional airport in Val-d'Or is the most important in terms of services and traffic volume. Its importance is long-standing. It is located within the transcontinental flight corridor and the international air corridor through the North Pole.

Mr. Speaker, over these last ten years, the Val-d'Or Chamber of Commerce, the City of Val-d'Or, the Corporation de développement industriel et commercial de Val-d'Or and the MRC de la Vallée de l'or have all made representations, both individually and jointly.

Through the efforts of this Conservative Government since 1984, that $9.5 billion project will be completed in 1987. The competent assistance of Reynald Imbeault and Daniel Bleau from Transport Canada has been a great help. The project is an excellent example of what the people of Abitibi and their MP can accomplish when working together at solving problems of common interest and seeing through a project of such significance in Abitibi-Témiscamingue.

* * *

• (1415)

[English]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

NEED FOR FEDERAL REGULATORY REFORM

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the recent takeover of the Continental Bank by foreign-owned Lloyds Bank was another signal to Canadians that the Government has not yet made good on its promise to enact comprehensive regulatory reform for the financial services industry.

The Speech from the Throne in 1984 contained a promise to follow through on the reform process begun under the previous Liberal Government. However, since then trust companies have failed, banks have closed their doors, and major financial institutions have come under the control of a non-financial institution. Studies and reports have proliferated. Provincial Governments are pursuing their own reform agendas, but our federal regulatory environment is virtually unchanged and the Speech from the Throne merely reiterated a two year old promise.

The Government is fast running out of time and options. Unless it replaces promises with action now, it will continue to be overtaken by events.

* * *

NEW MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Chief Electoral Officer a certificate of the election and return of Mr. Walter Van De Walle, for the electoral district of Pembina.

NEW MEMBER INTRODUCED

Walter Van De Walle, Member for the electoral district of Pembina, introduced by the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney and the Hon. Don Mazankowski.

Mr. Speaker: I think there would be a disposition in the House to extend the Oral Question Period. Accordingly, we will now commence the Oral Question Period.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FORGET COMMISSION—CONTENTS OF FORTHCOMING REPORT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday in Question Period both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration denied Government knowledge of the contents of the Forget Commission report. The Prime Minister said:

—our only involvement was mentioned at the time of the Budget Speech on May 23—

• (1420)

After 24 hours' consideration is the Prime Minister prepared to inform the House today that, contrary to yesterday's statement both his office and senior members of his Cabinet have been briefed on the contents of the Forget Commission Report, including those recommendations that were made public yesterday?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said yesterday: aside from the information apparently released in some minority reports that were reproduced in the press, there has never been any disclosure of information whatsoever at that level. And I am not sure I know what the Hon. Member is referring to.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the Minister's desire to say nothing is a luxury the country cannot afford. The Minister and the Prime Minister know that the Forget Commission has been very careful to keep the Minister and the Cabinet informed of its recommendations. Why has the Government, by its silence, lent its support to a program that will reduce UIC by $3 billion; would cut fishermen's benefits entirely, Mr. Speaker; would cancel federal short term job-creation projects, and would seek to increase the welfare burden already been borne by provincial Governments? Why is the Government by its silence allowing that program to go forward?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yesterday, I said I thought it was a shame to make such allegations and exploit people's insecurity. There never was an information or briefing session at the Prime Minister's Office or anywhere else regarding the Forget Report. This is a complete fabrication, and it is one more example of a situation being exploited to make Canadian workers insecure.

[English]

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister digs himself in much deeper than he can possibly imagine. Let me ask the Minister directly will he not acknowlege that even as we speak in this House senior officials of his Department at his instruction are today preparing a detailed government response to a report that both he and the Prime Minister claimed this date they have not seen?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot ask for a paper on a report I have yet to receive. I do not have a single document in my possession. I repeat before this House: I do not have a single document referring to the Forget Report in my possession.

MINISTER'S ROLE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday, he and the Prime Minister said that they had not been informed of the recommendations in the Forget Commission's report. Could the Minister confirm to the House today that a meeting was held with Mr. Forget in the middle of August, and second, that he has ordered two officials of his department to prepare the reply to the report, and third, that last August in St. John's, Newfoundland, the Minister informed Cabinet Members at a meeting of the Priorities and Planning Committee of Cabinet?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did meet Mr. Forget. As a new Minister, I have met many other people as well, and I fail to see why I should not meet Mr. Forget, when I meet other people for the Department. But as far as putting up with the Hon. Member's fantastic fabrications, that is something else again!

RESPONSE TO FORGET REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, first of all, will the Minister deny that Mr. Forget informed him of his intentions, and second, will the Minister confirm that Messrs. Wyman and Carin have been ordered by the Minister to prepare the reply to the Forget Report's recommendations, yes or no?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said yesterday and again today: I do not have a copy of the Forget Report. I cannot ask people to reply to or deal with a document I do not have. I cannot ask people to comment on a text that isn't there. Again, I repeat before this House: I do not possess a copy or any contents of the Forget Report. I cannot ask my officials to comment on the report because I don't have it.

[English]

PAYMENTS IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on the same subject matter. The Minister has just referred to anxieties of people and suggested that the Opposition has raised problems of anxiety for people in Canada. My question is directly related to that. A news report which appeared yesterday suggested some $3 billion was going to be cut from payments going to unemployment insurance recipients. I checked that and obtained precise figures from the report, not from the newspaper, which suggested, for example, that $620 million would be cut in Atlantic Canada alone. Will the Prime Minister allay the anxiety of Atlantic Canadians and say that $620 million will not be cut from payments to UIC recipients in Atlantic Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we gave an answer yesterday and we are going to repeat exactly the same thing today.

The Hon. Member referred to certain reports; once more, the Minister of Finance said the following in his speech:

• (1425)

[English]

I want to emphasize that we are not undertaking the review with an objective of reducing federal contributions to the unemployed.

Wherever they are coming from, the Atlantic provinces, the central provinces or the western provinces, we will not reduce the contributions to the unemployed.

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister.

Yesterday, he used the term "contributions". My question is this: Can the Minister assure the House that the Government has no intention of reducing the contributions to those who now receive unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is going into the details of reports which no one has and of recommendations which I have not seen myself. I cannot comment on something which is not there. It will be there on November 30 and we shall make our comments at that time.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: It is the Minister who is leaving feelings of anxiety.

LEVEL OF PAY-OUTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister who will be visiting Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick in the next couple of days. Will he relieve the anxiety of Canadians in those provinces at least by assuring them that there will be no reduction in the level of unemployment insurance pay-outs? Will he give them that assurance without qualification? That would remove the anxiety of people in that part of Canada.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that appears to be essentially the same question which has been asked before. Not having received a copy of the report, not being privy to the information quoted with such certainty by my hon. friend, I can only point to the firm statement made by the Minister of Finance in April when he said: "I want to emphasize that we are not undertaking this review with an objective of reducing federal contributions to the unemployed." I think that is pretty clear. In light of that, my hon. friend, being a reasonable man, would want us to wait for the Royal Commission report before beginning any debate or dialogue on alleged portions thereof.

ALLEGED BRIEFING OF CABINET COMMITTEE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and I would like to give him the chance to tell the truth to this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that all Hon. Members know that Hon. Members of this House are expected to tell the truth. Comments which lead to the suggestion that that is not so do not help us at all. I ask the Hon. Member to put her question.

Ms. Copps: The Prime Minister did not respond to the question by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe. The Prime Minister said yesterday that "Our only involvement was mentioned at the time of the Budget Speech". Does the Prime Minister deny that there was a briefing of the Priorities and Planning Committee of Cabinet on this very issue, the sum and substance of the Forget Report, when he chaired that meeting in Newfoundland?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat once again what I said earlier. I can neither receive nor give any briefing on something which I do not have. I said yesterday and I am repeating today that I have received no copy of the Forget report as there will be no such report until November 30. You may have copies of minority reports, but I do not.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot give any briefing on something which does not exist.

• (1430)

[English]

FORMULATION OF RESPONSE TO REPORT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Does the Minister deny that Mr. Ken Wyman, the Assistant Deputy Minister in his Department, has been appointed to chair a committee which is presently formulating the response to the Forget Commission, which response is as a result of briefings in which the Minister, other Ministers of the Cabinet and officials in his Department were involved?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is pure speculation.

[English]

PAY-OUTS IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is a follow-up on the question asked of the Prime Minister by my Leader. The Prime Minister is going to Atlantic Canada this week. Will he confirm to the people of that region that the level of pay-outs to Atlantic Canada will not be reduced by the Government as a result of the Forget Commission?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Will there be any reductions following the Forget report? First, we are going to wait and see what recommendations the Forget Commission makes in its report under its terms of reference. This commission was asked to assess our unemployment insurance system. Our Government had enough courage to face this problem. The Members on the other side had always refused to undertake any study or to create any commission to look at unemployment insurance. This Government has done so. We shall wait for the recommendations, and we shall then see what should be done. However, we must first receive those recommendations.

[English]

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, regardless of what the final recommendations are, is the Government willing to make a commitment to Atlantic Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: Regardless of what the final recommendations are, is the Government willing to guarantee the people of Atlantic Canada, where there are high unemployment rates, that there will be no reduction in the level of payments to that section of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I may not have as much experience in this House as the Hon. Member, but I do know one thing, and that is that, normally, before commenting on any commission report, we have to wait for the report to be tabled. Then is the time to make the appropriate comments.

* * *

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENTAL ADMINISTRATION IN MANITOBA REGION—ROAD PROJECT COSTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Revelations continue to come forward about the mess in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the Manitoba region. What swift and decisive action is going to be taken with this Department, responsible for a road project on an Indian reserve in Manitoba, which should have cost no more than $300,000 and ended up costing considerably more than $1 million?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that last week the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development announced that there was an RCMP investigation into various allegations which had been circulating with respect to the operations of the Manitoba regional office. Further to that, I am advised that discussions have taken place with the President of the Treasury Board with a view to undertaking a complete and comprehensive review of all financial operations of the Department's regional office in Manitoba.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I want to know why the Government is moving so slowly in dealing with gross inefficiencies in this Department when the Prime Minister himself knows, as do I, that many Indian communities in the country live in abject poverty.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member, who is a fair-minded individual, would want to reconsider that comment. Indeed, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development moved very quickly in terms of initiating an RCMP investigation. He is moving very quickly with regard to the comprehensive review of the financial operations which he is now undertaking.

* * *

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION—COMMITTEE'S REVIEW

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, on June 26, 1985, the then Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion received a letter from Texas lawyers indicating that the Government of Canada could be sued for millions of dollars for suspect deals made by de Havilland. Internal departmental memos show this same knowledge. Why was this information, which was so important to its deliberations, kept secret from the Regional Development Committee reviewing the de Havilland sale in 1986?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, no information was kept secret regarding this transaction. I wish simply to remind my hon. friend that we made sure, when we disposed of the de Havilland Corporation, first, to keep the technology in Canada, second, to assure job security for Canadians, and third, to maintain an aerospace industry in Canada. That is what really matters to Canadians.

[English]

PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Government made certain that it kept contingent liabilities of over $140 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please! The Hon. Member has indicated that he wishes to ask a supplementary question. I ask the Hon. Member to put the question.

Mr. Langdon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With this six months' prior notice to the Department of the information which I have indicated, why did the Department not bring that information forward to the inquiry by the Regional Development Committee? Does the Minister not feel at this stage that he has to give—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Langdon: —this House an apology for that dereliction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! It seems to the Chair that that is almost exactly the same question as the one the Member already asked. I invite the Hon. Member to reconsider and put a question which is not just a repeat of the first question.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your admonition, but if the Minister refuses to answer—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for York Centre.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORPORATION'S UNDISCLOSED LIABILITIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister and is about the undisclosed liabilities which have landed on the backs of the taxpayers of Canada rather than being the responsibility of Boeing, the purchaser. Does the Minister know of any other debts? What is the total of such liabilities that may now be owing by the taxpayers of Canada on contracts made by de Havilland before the takeover?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I should be embarrassed to raise this question if I were the Hon. Member opposite. De Havilland had cost Canadian taxpayers over $1.2 billion, on top of some $1.6 million in future commitments. We have made sure to reduce the liabilities of the Government of Canada, again for the sake of maintaining job security and an aerospace industry in Canada. That is what a Government that takes its destiny into its own hands is all about.

[English]

AMOUNT OF LIABILITIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this policy of stonewalling must be considered unacceptable. Why can the Minister not answer a straightforward question about undisclosed liabilities? Does he know about them now, and what are they?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Again, Mr. Speaker, no information concerning this issue was withheld in any manner whatsoever. It was fully provided by the Minister in January, 1986, when he appeared before the Committee of the House which was looking into this transaction.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. When the Conservatives were on the opposition side of this House they promised the people of Canada that if they formed the Government they would move rapidly to allocate 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product to scientific research and development. Today we learned from the head of the NRC that in the last two years its staff complement has been cut by 400 and that he was announcing today a further cut of 200 in the next couple of years. Why has the Government reneged on the promise it made before the election?

• (1440)

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member fails to recognize that while the National Research Council is perhaps the most important instrument in research and development which the Government has, it is not the only instrument. The Government is spending hundreds of millions of dollars in industrial assistance grants, through agreements with the provinces, and through tax expenditures. We are well on the road to achieving the targets that we set.

PERCENTAGE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT ALLOCATED FOR SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that Dr. Polanyi who received the Nobel prize today has criticized the former Government and, I am sure, will criticize this Government for its failure. Presently we are at 1.3 per cent of GNP. The head of the NRC said today that we have to wait until the deficit has been substantially reduced before the Government moves to attain the goals it promised. If so, what percentage of GNP for scientific research will we see before the Government moves?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is a new phenomenon that a Government would not rely entirely on spending targets but would identify targets that would serve the country well in terms of the research that needs to be done and the priorities which must be pursued. Perhaps I could take this opportunity on behalf of all of us here to congratulate Dr. Polanyi and point out to the House that Dr. Polanyi is indeed a recipient of some of the Government's—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laurier.

* * *

[Translation]

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—ABOLITION OF 200 POSITIONS IN APRIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. We learned this morning that the National Research Council will have to cut 200 positions by next April. Again, this Government which does not give a damn about consequences is eroding our national competence in the field of research and development. My question is this: What is the rationale behind the Government's decision to slash programs that are essential for job creation, as well as the health and survival of the Canadian industry?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I thought perhaps the Hon. Member was rising because he wanted to apologize for the misinformation he has spread in the House over the last couple of months—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the Minister to answer the question as best he can.

Mr. Oberle: As the Hon. Member's prediction that the IRAP grant would be cut by $60 million proved to be absolutely false this morning, so will he have to come to grips with the reality that there will be no lay-offs at the NRC. The 200 persons who will be affected by the reorganization will find placement in new assignments and new priorities that the NRC has identified, together with the Government.

Mr. Berger: The NRC has had to cut 200 positions to save face for that Minister.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, if the Government's purpose is to support the development of technology and jobs, why has it cut the budget of the NRC by 30 per cent in the past two years? Why has it frozen the funding for the granting councils and why has it cut practically every other manner in which the Government supports research and development?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member gets very emotional. It is true that the NRC, like the Government and other government agencies, is rationalizing its operations in light of new priorities. The net result of the reorganization in the NRC over the next few years will be an increase not only in person-years but a significant increase in the budget allocations as well.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

USE OF LOW SULPHUR COAL

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Bearing in mind the Government's interest in environmental protection, improvement for the western economy, and the enhancement of Canada's balance of payments, what action is the Minister undertaking to encourage the use of low sulphur coal in the industrial heartland of Canada?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of a major federal-provincial task force report released on August 20, 1986, which said in effect that it did not make sense for the Government of Canada and the country as a whole to be encouraging the importation of high sulphur content coal from the United States when low sulphur content coal is available from western Canada with all the attendant environmental and economic advantages in displacing the American coal. Unfortunately, I cannot just press a button and redress the imbalance, but to the extent that the federal Government can do anything about the problem, we are acting on it.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR PRAIRIE FARMERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Given the continuing uncertainty about the Government's announcement of aid to Prairie farmers, will the Minister give a guarantee to Prairie farmers that they will know how much they will get from the Government, in what form they will be receiving it, and when they will be receiving it, before the Saskatchewan election next Monday?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have been giving Canadian grain farmers guarantees since the Throne Speech. We have every intention of making good on that guarantee. The fact is that a billion dollars will be placed in the hands of Canadian farmers.

REQUEST THAT DETAILS BE PROVIDED TO SASKATCHEWAN PEOPLE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, given that this program arises out of the needs of Conservatives in Saskatchewan in the first place, will the Minister guarantee that the people of Saskatchewan will know the details I have asked for before next Monday, so they can make a judgment about whether Premier Devine was levelling with them?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, whether or not this program was prompted because we have one or two provincial election campaigns going on in the country, is simply beside the point. Had it been an essential factor, we probably would have acted unilaterally and probably would have been in a position to do so. However, the fact is that we did not act unilaterally. We consulted the provinces. Give me an opportunity to speak with the farm leaders tomorrow and we will be in a far better position to apply the program correctly, fairly, and equitably across the country.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

DECISION ORDERING REFUND TO BELL CANADA SUBSCRIBERS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, after a six-month open and democratic review of Bell Canada's profits, including 302 public interventions from interested parties, the CRTC ruled yesterday that Bell Canada subscribers are entitled to a refund for telephone overcharges. My question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Will she assure telephone users that she will not deprive them of this overdue refund by overturning the CRTC decision, and that she will not take with one hand what the CRTC in all fairness has justly given with the other?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. I believe that the CRTC decision will be welcomed by all subscribers of Bell Canada services. I may say that the Commission found that because of the improved economic climate in this country since the Government took office—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: —because of lower interest rates, because of productivity gains, and because of increased employment—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

BELL CANADA PROFITS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Minister acknowledges that Bell Canada is a profitable, well managed corporation. It is a public monopoly subject to CRTC regulation. I hope she will agree that profits of that nature—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask that the Hon. Member put her question.

Mrs. Finestone: Will she agree that profits of that nature should be returned to subscribers and should not fatten the pockets of the shareholders of Bell Canada Enterprises?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to read the report of the Commission. It said that $206 million in excess revenues had come into Bell Canada and recommended that $20 be reimbursed to each residential customer and $60 to each small business. Certainly this is very good news today as far as people who use Bell Canada services are concerned.

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member wants Ministers to answer in a full way. However, I would ask Ministers to refrain from quoting or referring in extensive detail to the reports that form the subject matter of questions. Perhaps the Hon. Minister could shorten the answer.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear the Consumers Association of Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Yes or no!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for London East.

* * *

BANKRUPTCIES

SUPPLIERS' RIGHT TO REPOSSESS GOODS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Many suppliers are the real victims in too many bankruptcies. With respect to the Government's upcoming legislation on bankruptcy, can the Minister assure the House that suppliers will enjoy the same benefits that suppliers in Quebec now enjoy, namely, that they will be able to repossess goods they ship to a debtor 30 days before the appointment of a receiver?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite correct. This is a problem area under active examination by the Government prior to our making recommendations to Parliament for amendments to the Act. We are looking at the Quebec experience. We are hearing representations from the small business sector for which the Hon. Member is speaking in this instance. Hopefully, we will be able to bring forward recommendations for changes in the Bankruptcy Act in the near future.

* * *

DISARMAMENT

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENSE INITIATIVE— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On January 23, 1986, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said in the House:

> Our stance toward SDI research is rooted in the need to conform strictly with the provisions of the ABM treaty.

Will the Government reconsider its support for Star Wars now that President Reagan has turned down an arms control deal precisely because it required strict compliance for 10 years with Article V of the ABM treaty?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no change in the position of the Government as set out by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What he has said and what we have said since then is consistent with the position that he established. If I may say so, it is consistent with views held by previous Governments.

RESEARCH UNDERTAKEN BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in view of that answer will the Prime Minister tell President Reagan that Canada will not support Star Wars research outside the laboratory because it violates Article V of the ABM treaty which states, and I quote, "Each Party undertakes not to develop, test, or deploy ABM systems or components—"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because of research being carried out by the Soviet Union in similar areas, we have indicated that research into this area is prudent. However, such research must be consistent with the provisions of the ABM treaty.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Will you tell the President that?

Mr. Mulroney: The President of the United States was so advised by the Government of Canada as recently as last week.

Mr. Caccia: How?

Mr. Mulroney: He is aware of our position and our ongoing interest and concern in this area.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE FOR SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Last Friday the Premier of Saskatchewan told Saskatchewan farmers that they would receive some $457 million as a cash deficiency payment from the Government of Canada. Will the Minister stand in his place today and confirm that commitment by the Premier of Saskatchewan? Or is this loan guarantee just a carrot held out to the farmers of Saskatchewan until after the election after which they will be told the thruth?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, just let me say that this is not a loan guarantee—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask Hon. Members when they put their questions not to impugn the integrity or the truthfulness of other Members in the Chamber. I am sure that the Hon. Member did not mean to do that. I ask Hon. Members to realize that when some words are used it is incumbent upon the Chair to rise. I ask the Hon. Minister to answer the question.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I thought that my answer would certainly clarify the Hon. Member's concern that this is the largest single aid package ever delivered to Canadian farmers in the history of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT BEFORE PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a supplementary question. Will the Minister of Agriculture tell us, yes or no, whether there will be $457 million for Saskatchewan? Will it be a deficiency payment? Finally, will it be announced before the election in Saskatchewan? Yes or no to the above. It is quite simple.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it may be very simple from the viewpoint of the Hon. Member who leads me to believe that he does not have a complete understanding of the nature of Canada. There is no question about that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: If we were selecting simplistic solutions, then perhaps I could answer the question with a yes or a no.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

CREATION OF NATIONAL MARKETING BOARD FOR INCUBATED EGGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): For the past four years, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Association of Hatching Egg Producers has been seeking its official recognition as a national marketing board for hatching eggs from the Minister of Agriculture to whom I am directing my question. That dossier had been submitted to the Cabinet's sub-committee on International Trade. In view of the need for egg producers to have this problem settled urgently, does the Minister intend to provide good and positive news on this issue in the near future?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my colleague obviously knows that it is not proper for me to indicate at what stage a piece of legislation or a question is before Cabinet. However, let me indicate to the Hon. Member that it has been the position of this Party since 1976, is the position of this Party today, and will remain its position, that the producers themselves will determine what system of marketing best suits their own needs.

Oral Questions

CO-OPERATIVES

TASK FORCE REPORT—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for co-operatives. A year ago today in the middle of another Co-operative Development Week I asked the Minister when the Government planned to respond to the report of the National Task Force on Co-operative Development. I repeat the question today. When does the Government plan to release its response to A Co-operative Development Strategy for Canada?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Government is in the final stages of preparing that response. I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It gives me a chance to pay tribute to all those people who belong to co-operatives since this is Co-operative Week. Co-operatives are a very significant sector of the economy. They have had a good year. I thank the Hon. Member for giving me a chance to put my remarks on the record today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR CO-OPERATIVES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, given the promise in the Speech from the Throne for measures to assist co-operatives, does the Government plan to create an agency that could foster co-operatives in the same way that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has encouraged and financed co-operative housing?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that for me to answer his question would be to prejudge what in fact the Government will finally do.

I can assure the Hon. Member that we will be working with the co-operatives to see that they have as many opportunities as possible to be a part of government programs. Additionally, when programs are being developed we will ensure that co-operatives have as much chance as other sectors of the economy to have input into policies as they are developed. That will be our aim and, hopefully, it is what we will achieve when we announce how we will deal with the task force report.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT OF PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The Minister has stated on several occasions that the federal Government supports a fixed crossing between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick provided, of course, that it is economically feasible and environmentally sound. The Minister is aware that there are three proposals by private companies for such a crossing. Will the Minister tell the House today if the Government intends to carry out an environmental impact study on those three proposals? If so, will the study will be carried out by a reputable and independent private company?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I should correct one small part of the premise of the Hon. Member's question. The federal Government has not taken a position on the principle of a fixed crossing. However, it has received three unsolicited private sector proposals for the building of such a fixed crossing, all of them contemplating private sector financing. We will soon have to come to grips with those unsolicited proposals in connection with which, I can assure the Hon. Member, and through him Islanders themselves, every relevant environmental impact assessment will be conducted. Islanders themselves will be consulted on all aspects of the matter.

• (1500)

EFFECT ON NORTHUMBERLAND FERRY SERVICE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister will be aware that there was some concern on the part of residents from eastern Prince Edward Island that, if there is a fixed crossing to the province, it will affect the Northumberland ferry service. I wonder if the Minister could allay those concerns and indicate that, if there is a crossing from PEI to New Brunswick, the Government will continue to provide support to the Northumberland ferry system between Wood Island, PEI, and Caribou, Nova Scotia.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question is entirely speculative and hypothetical because there has been no decision to adopt any one of the three proposals that have been made, unsolicited, as the Minister of the Environment said. Those who use the Northumberland ferry system have nothing to worry about. If any decision is ever made that might have any reference to that service, I can assure the hon. gentleman that those people would be the first to be consulted.

* * *

DISARMAMENT

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since the United States has announced that it will be deploying more air-launched Cruise missiles in 1986 than is permitted under the SALT II treaty, will the Government of Canada tell the United States that, in compliance with the SALT II treaty, Canada can no longer test the Cruise missile, the very means the United States will use to violate SALT II?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have often called upon the parties to observe requirements of SALT II. Imperfect though it may be, it represents an important area of general agreement and all countries would hope that both sides would respect it.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, given that the United States has announced that it will violate the treaty and will use the very instrument it has asked us to test, will the Government, in accordance with what the Prime Minister has just now said, point out to the United States that we cannot and will not test the Cruise missile so long as the United States intends to violate SALT II?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously I do not share my hon. friend's interpretation of what may or may not transpire. That is not our reading of the intent.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

USE OF LOW SULPHUR COAL

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment. When may we expect a decision on the use of Canadian low sulphur coal in Canada?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Mines, the Minister of Transport and myself are trying to formulate a decision or response to the task force report which was released on August 20, 1986. I hope that we will be able to make some sort of preliminary decision on the whole question of displacing American high sulphur content coal with low sulphur content coal from western Canada before very long, perhaps before the end of the year.

* * *

ENERGY

GAS EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a single question to direct to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Energy. Perhaps he might be aware that some American companies—

An Hon. Member: There he is.

Mr. Waddell: Sorry, he moved. I will direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Is the Minister aware that some American companies have refused to take volumes of gas they are supposed to have taken through the pre-build of the Alaska Highway Pipeline and is he prepared to take up with the American Government the seriousness of this situation considering that the American Government, in order that the previous Canadian Government would approve the pre-build, almost guaranteed that those gas volumes would be taken by American companies?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the issues raised by the Hon. Member; we are monitoring the situation and, in due course, should any action be required, we will certainly act.

* * *

[English]

PATENT ACT

EFFECT OF AMENDMENTS ON DRUG PRICES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In answer to a previous question I asked the Minister, he indicated that he did not believe Canadian consumers would be charged any more money for the cost of drugs as a result of amendments to the Patent Act. Could the Minister then advise the House whether or not—

An Hon. Member: He's not here.

Mr. Young: He was here a minute ago. I must have scared him off.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

* * *

[Translation]

INSURANCE

INCREASE IN PREMIUMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): According to Statistics Canada, Mr. Speaker, the profits in the insurance industry have increased 142 per cent over the past six months because of the increase in liability insurance premiums.

My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is he going to assume his responsibility and make public immediately the findings of the investigation requested last January by the Official Opposition?

Tabling of Documents

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question and report it to the Minister.

INSURANCE COMPANIES' PROFITS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, then I direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree that last fall's liability insurance crisis was little more than a $1-billion sham generating windfall profits and that it was therefore a conspiracy?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course I do not agree with the premise of the Hon. Member's question. However, I will take both questions as a representation and will have the Minister report back to the Hon. Member.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE TO NINTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 67(2), I have the honour to present, in both official languages, copies of the Government response to the Ninth Report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Emloyment and Immigration on family reunification.

* * *

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 67(2), I wish to table in both official languages the annual report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

* * *

INCOME TAX ACT

TABLING OF TECHNICAL NOTES

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I have the honour to lay upon the Table in both official languages the technical notes pertaining to Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act which initiates pre-payment of the child tax credit. These notes are intended to assist Members of Parliament, taxpayers and their professional advisers.

* * *

LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

NINTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—FAMILY REUNIFICATION

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to present to the House and to the Canadian public the Government's response to the Ninth Report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration on family reunification.

At the suggestion of the Government, the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration examined ways to speed up processing of family class applications. I would like to commend the excellent work done by the committee and particularly the collective effort that has been shown by Members of Parliament from all three Parties under the distinguished leadership of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). The members participated in well over 100 committee meetings. Three full weeks were taken up in visiting immigration centres in Canada and posts abroad, as well as holding meetings with both immigration officers and potential and recent immigrants. The members received a clear feeling and understanding of those areas where the quality of service had not been acceptable.

I would like to reflect particularly on the quality of the report. The committee has provided me with a series of recommendations on how to provide service that is quicker, more courteous, fairer and, especially, more humane. I believe that a new era has begun for sponsors and for their relatives. Emphasis has been placed on improved training for immigration officers and an attempt is being made to provide services in the language of a client's choice. The Government understands the frustrations that have been felt by those who have participated in our immigration process. With our response, we are prepared to do something about those frustrations. Recommendations 5 to 10, which involve the creation of new categories of assisted family members, are perhaps the most exciting and far-reaching recommendations.

• (1510)

Unfortunately, because the House of Commons rules require a response within 120 days, there has not been sufficient time to consult with the provinces and the private sector organizations, which is necessary before developing the details of a major change of this kind. Those discussions have begun, and hopefully they can be brought to a successful conclusion. Most of the other recommendations have either been previously implemented, or are in the process of being implemented.

[Translation]

Through its response, the Government will be providing improved service in Canada for sponsors of immigrants belonging to the family group. From now on, it will be easier to complete a sponsorship application form because the people concerned will be encouraged to complete those forms themselves. The waiting period for an interview for sponsorship purposes will be greatly reduced. Moreover, a better service will be made available to immigrants abroad following a more efficient control of records as well as improved medical procedures.

If the time allows it, early in the New Year, I hope the Committee will be anxious to review the progress made as a result of our response.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am pleased to have the opportunity so early in my term of office to table in this House a paper indicating not only the commitment of this Governement to improve the quality of life but also the result of a fruitful dialogue between members of all parties in this House.

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, as the critic for my Party on immigration matters, and as a member of the Standing Committee, I am pleased to respond to the Minister. Let me say at the outset that I commend the Minister for at least having the detailed analysis on a recommendation by recommendation basis. That is certainly something that lacked such detail under his predecessor. However, I do not think that the ambitious remarks noted by the Minister will be translated into the affirmative responses to the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration.

It should be well noted that the stimulus for the committee report came from that most frustrating aspect of immigration practices and regulations in this country, as articulated by Members from all sides of the House, namely that Canadians were unsuccessfully able to sponsor their relatives, or if they were, there were great delays in the system, in some cases as long as two, three, and even four years. We have individual cases that go undocumented and unresponded to by our immigration officials abroad for up to periods of one year. Therefore, the question before the committee was how do we enable the system to facilitate the requests generated from Canadians here in Canada for the successful application of their relatives and loved ones throughout the world?

On the basis of the three corner-stones of the recommendations, the Minister has failed to adopt those recommendations as outlined by the committee.

First, the recommendations of the committee said basically that if we are to speed up the system in relation to family assistance applications there has to be a reallocation and a redesign of the classifications into priorities. The first priority is spouses and dependants; the second is parents with dependants, siblings and non-dependent children, as well as people who wish to adopt children who have been left homeless and without parents. Therefore, we gave a priority listing that would ensure that the immigration officials processed applications on a priority by priority basis relating to those classifications. I regret that the Minister has not chosen to embrace that recommendation.

As well, we suggested that points should be increased to those immigrants who have family members in Canada. We said basically in our report that if we are to take seriously the fact that an immigrant, or potential immigrant, has family in Canada, then we should elevate that consideration to the same points level as education, or having a job. Let us admit that having family members in Canada counts culturally, socially, and financially, and that such a person coming to Canada can expect support financially, culturally, and socially. Therefore, the Canadian state would not have to provide those services. The Minister, once again, did not accept our recommendation of giving additional points to those people.

The second recommendation was to shift resources throughout the world in relation to demand, and how that is being triggered in this country. That is to say, there are more demands being placed on the system in India and Hong Kong today than there are in Great Britain, yet there are more resources in the more traditional parts of the world. The Minister and the Government know that you control the flow of immigrants and the number of applications by the number of resources provided.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to close off his remarks as quickly as possible.

Mr. Marchi: My last remark under the third corner-stone is, since the family class is the most important aspect of the immigration program, as articulated by the report, we do not think it should be undermined by any other segment of the program. Unfortunately, that is happening. A good example is the entrepreneurial program, where immigration officials abroad in Hong Kong and the Philippines, which I visited, are shifting personnel away from family class processing to meet the entrepreneur—

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member has made his points. I am sure the three corner-stones were noted by all Members in the House.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Minister on his timely report, his timely response to the committee's report—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Heap: And if the Liberals would shut up, I have a few more points to make.

Although it is a timely report, and although he covers a good deal of ground in a very encouraging way, there are four serious gaps in his report. Some of them have alrerady been touched upon. I want to point out that in his failure to give any support to the idea of improving family reunification immigration, as suggested in recommendations 5 to 10, the Minister suggests that the new point system will allow for perhaps half of what might be asked for by the relatives. He does not say that exactly, but that is what he implies. The facts are the opposite, and the Minister should know that between 1982 and 1985 both family class and assisted class immigration declined. In 1986, if we project from the first half of the year, it will have declined more disastrously than in the years before. The new point system is a failure from the point of view of family reunification.

Secondly, Minister suggests that there might be some meetings between the Health and Welfare officials and Immigration officials, and the committee. In fact, that is only an extension of the stonewalling that Health and Welfare did for six months, from January to June. While we were studying the report that Parliament asked us to study, Health and Welfare refused, even at the request of the Chairman, to allow us access to the manual which provides the rules under which Health and Welfare have increasingly over the last few years rejected family members and assisted relatives. In fact, the Government itself in the spring in its report towards equality, page 28, tells the public that that manual is available on request. That is false. The manual was not available to the committee during that six months of study. The promise of consultation carries no conviction whatever on the part of those of us who have experience.

On the matter of the posts abroad, it is patently obvious that what the Minister says in reply to Recommendation 48 is not in accordance with the facts. The resources are not distributed according to the volume of applications, successful or unsuccessful. The refusal of the bureaucrats to budge from the positions they have adopted in the past several generations is the main hindrance to family reunification at present.

• (1520)

Finally, on the matter of the entrepreneurs, it is a fact, as was pointed out and reported by my colleague months ago to the committee, to the benefit of the Minister and his predecessor, that staff has been transferred. Notwithstanding all the remarks the Minister makes about priorities being observed according to statute, staff has been transferred away from family reunification. It is a fact that entrepreneurial applications take several times as much staff time as family applications do normally. He can pick one example here and one example there to match them off, but he knows that he is twisting the story by hair-splitting and by doing that. In fact entrepreneurs by definition, having hundreds of thousands of dollars and being business people, are accustomed to paying for the service they get, such as for a visa, while families, being mostly poor, cannot. The Minister has obscured that fact—

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

[Translation]

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF FOURTH REPORT OF THE ASSOCIATION OF FRENCH LANGUAGE PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 101, I have the honour to introduce the Fourth Report of the International Association of French-speaking Parliamentarians in both officials languages.

* * *

PETITIONS

PROPOSED CLOSURE OF POSTAL STATION—NORWOOD GROVE

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition signed by some 5 000 residents of my constituency who oppose Canada Post's decision to close down the Norwood Grove Station.

[English]

My constituents wish to express concern that the actions of Canada Post will substantially lower the quality and efficiency of postal service in the Norwood area.

CLOSING OF CN SHOPS IN MONCTON AND SALE TO CGE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 120 residents of the Province of New Brunswick who are concerned about the closing of the CN Rail shops in Moncton and their sale to General Electric.

They call upon the House to postpone the decision to close the shops until the workers have had an opportunity to appear before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport.

* * *

CANADA SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-224, an Act to protect and enhance the quality of drinking water in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, this Bill would provide opportunities for public involvement in the making of regulations to set maximum permissible levels for contaminants and other substances in drinking water. These regulations would apply to both public and private water systems.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STANDING AND STANDING JOINT COMMITTEES—MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the other House Leaders concerning a special order of the House to set up the memberships of the various Standing and Standing Joint Committees. If Your Honour would seek unanimous consent of the House, I think the following motion would be agreeable:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of the House, the Standing Committees and Standing Joint Committees shall be composed of the following Members:

The list of Members is rather long. There is a detailed list of the membership of each committee. I have given the other two House Leaders copies of the membership. If it is agreeable, I would ask that the motion be printed in Votes and Proceedings as if it had been read.

As well it would be necessary to put the following motion:

And that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House in the formation of the aforementioned Standing Joint Committees and that the Members to serve on each of the said Committees on the part of this House will be as contained in this Order;

And within 10 sitting days following the adoption of this Order the Clerk of the House shall convene a meeting of each Standing Committee whose memberships are contained in this Order.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion to the effect that the list be considered as having been read. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For list referred to above see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DISARMAMENT

U.S. STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask you to seek unanimous consent of the House so that I might move the following motion:

That this House endorses the Government's support of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, emphasizes the relevance of Article V of that Treaty to the failure of the superpowers to reach an agreement at Reykjavik, and urges the Government to appeal directly to President Reagan to abandon his plan to test and develop SDI technology in space since such action would be in complete violation of Article V.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the proposition of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). Is it the pleasure of the House to give unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in relation to the motion of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). The Government did not see fit to approve the motion. I wonder whether the Government House Leader would consider having a discussion among all three Parties to see if there is acceptable wording for a joint resolution of the House relating to the matter of the arms control discussions to be held in Geneva and the question of SDI testing.

If we sat down and worked out something, I am sure the full impact of a resolution from the House would have major influence upon the outcome of the discussions in that it would represent the Canadian point of view from all sides and all spectrums of the country.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is not in Ottawa at the present time. I think he will be returning today or tomorrow, and I think I can say that he will be responding to the larger issue in the course of the next few days. That may enlighten the Hon. Member and the proposer of the motion.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I ask, Mr. Speaker, that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, the sitting will be extended by 13 minutes this day.

• (1530)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in the House today and move the second reading of this Bill. It is an honour for me to be able to speak to this Bill, which is the first piece of legislation resulting from the February budget to come before this House for consideration. The House knows that other legislation will be with us very shortly, but the subject matter of this Bill is especially urgent and important, and it is very appropriate that it should come first.

Very briefly, the provisions of this Bill will enable us to proceed with an interim payment of a portion of the child tax credit to eligible Canadians with incomes below $15,000. I know that this Bill's provisions will be widely supported. I hope that its undoubted beneficial effects for more than 700,000 Canadian families with low incomes will ensure rapid passage.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, when this measure was announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in February, he stated his desire that this payment should be made by the end of November, before Christmas. For that to happen it is important that this legislation not be unduly delayed. It is in the interests of those Canadians who will be receiving the interim payments as well to proceed expeditiously.

The purpose of this measure is clear I think to all Members of the House. As the Minister of Finance pointed out in February, those who now receive the whole child tax credit need help most urgently as they move into the winter season, rather than in March or April when they would normally receive the proceeds of the credit. Too often when this payment is needed it comes too late. This most important Bill guarantees this prepayment and gets it to those most in need at a time when they most need it, which is before Christmas when expenses are high.

I want to make a second point as well. As a Government, we are concerned about the degree to which the poor suffer when they resort to the services of tax discounters. The provisions of Bill C-11 should significantly reduce the number of people forced to use the services of discounters because the needs of their children will not wait until the spring. I remember, Mr. Speaker, serving on the parliamentary committee that looked into tax discounting. Bill C-11 goes a long way to meeting the concerns raised in that committee, and it complements recent legislation which restricts the amount which can be charged by tax discounters. With this piece of legislation we are ensuring that families receive the full value of the benefit to which they are entitled, and the Government will be certain that the benefit is going to those for whom it is designed.

The heart of this legislation is in Clause 4 which adds a new Section 164.1 to the Income Tax Act. What does this clause do? This clause provides for prepayment of a portion of the child tax credit to families who qualified for it in taxation years beginning in 1986. For this year the amount has been set at $300 per eligible child. For example, a low income family with three children will receive $900 for the eligible children and a low income family with four children will receive $1,200, within months, directly from the Government of Canada under this Bill.

The basis for the prepayment that will be used is the tax return filed for the previous taxation year, and it is therefore possible that circumstances may have changed. Application is not necessary. The basis for prepayment is the tax return filed for the previous year. Clause 4 also sets out the arrangements by which, if the advance is more than the actual entitlement, which could happen occasionally, the excess will be recovered.

As a result of passage of this legislation, almost three-quarters of a million families with incomes below $15,000 will receive significant help. They are for the most part those who will be entitled to the full tax credit. They will receive the rest of the money to which they are entitled when they file their tax returns in the usual way.

What is particularly significant, and which I think all Members of the House will recognize, is that this payment is automatic. The payment does not require red tape and applications. No application will be necessary for those who are entitled, although all those who do receive it will have to file tax returns for the 1986 taxation year.

There is one important further change in this legislation. Until now, if a child eligible for the tax credit dies in a year, the tax filer has not been entitled to the credit for that year. I remember this item being discussed in some detail in the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare, and important testimony was heard in that regard. This provision is being changed so that a family will be entitled to receive the credit. In short, if a child eligible for the tax credit dies in a year, the family will be entitled to receive the credit.

I said at the outset of my remarks that I was happy to have this chance to speak about this most welcome Bill. In the recent Speech from the Throne the Government reaffirmed its concerns for those most in need. This measure is aimed pre-eminently at people most in need. It will get funds to them quickly when they need them the most.

In the Throne Speech, the Government also pointed out that our changing society means that existing programs are always needing to be reviewed to ensure that they continue to be appropriate. This legislation is designed to improve the delivery of benefits to those entitled to them without increasing expenditures. In these times of difficult fiscal challenges for the Government of Canada, it is important that we find ways to deliver benefits to those entitled without increasing expenditures, and this Bill makes clear that this is a principle on which we intend to act. It is a creative principle, a principle long overdue, and I am very proud it is part of Bill C-11.

I want to commend this measure to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all Members of this House. By bringing this measure forward early in the session, what the Government is doing is demonstrating in the clearest possible way its urgent concern for those in need.

This measure is like previous measures presented by the Government which have also been aimed to meet the needs of those in our society who are the most in need. I think, for example, of the assistance to pensioners and to veterans which we provided very early in our mandate; and I think of the enrichment of this very tax credit, the child tax credit itself, which we carried out last year.

• (1540)

All this is by way of introduction to the discussion on this Bill. I trust all Members will respond to our initiative and grant this legislation speedy passage. It aims to do what must be done to get funds to those needy families with children when they most need it, and to do so as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it should not take the House too long to adopt the Bill under consideration today, since it is strictly an administrative measure.

After hearing the Minister's speech, however, I wonder if the Opposition, instead of co-operating and expediting the adoption of this Bill, does not have a duty to make all the speeches it can to cut this Bill down to its true size.

Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat surprised that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), who today is presenting and defending a Bill in the House for the very first time, made use of the few minutes at his disposal to make certain claims that are not factual.

When the Minister of State for Finance says this is a Bill aimed at helping the needy, the impression is given that this is an entirely new measure and that for the first time in Canada's history, low-income families will be receiving a child tax credit. He added, however—fortunately he had the wisdom to do so—that this measure involved no additional expenditures for the Government. If there is no annual expense for the Government, why the long speech and the attempts to make people think this was a new measure? Basically, the facts are quite simple: Bill C-11 is an administrative measure enabling payments that would otherwise have been made in March to be made in November. However, when the month of March comes around for these needy families, they will not receive the payments they would have received without this Bill, since they will have received them now.

So practically nothing has changed, except that people who are entitled to the child tax credit may be able to spend the money on their Christmas presents. Considering the date on which the payments will be made and the financial situation of these families—the cheque will be made at the end of November—I wonder to what extent this will prevent the situation we had with tax discounters, since income tax returns are filed around the end of January or February, and I get the impression that by that time, the $300 will have been long gone.

Mr. Speaker, this is nothing more than a housekeeping measure which does not entail additional public expenditures, and as such it does not improve the child tax credit legislation enacted by the previous Liberal Government.

However what must be emphasized is that this Bill faithfully mirrors the Conservative approach—half-baked measures, ambiguous situations, unexplainable differences in the various levels. As we know—indeed the Minister of Finance himself made it quite clear when he opted for partial family allowances de-indexation, when he decided to lower the maximum income level at which a family becomes eligible for the child tax credit, in other words measures which fly in the face of the legislation endorsed by the House a number of years ago under a Liberal administration— the maximum amount is $23,500, the level at which the child tax credit begins to decrease.

Assuming that the Government wants to help low-income families, I wonder why the amount was set at $15,000. Why did they not lay their cards on the table and, in keeping with the provisions of the existing statute, use this administrative measure to give the child tax credit to any family eigible for the full amount? No, Sir, they would rather split hairs and set it at $15,000. Considering the number of children it may have, I wonder if a family with a $16,000 annual income might not need more than another one whose annual earnings total $15,000.

This is therefore a half measure. It seems to me that the Government should have gone all the way if it truly wanted to help needy families by sending them a few months earlier the amount that they would have received anyway. Why was it not possible to go as high as the cutoff point of $23,500? Mr. Speaker, I want to warn the Minister immediately that we shall be proposing an amendment in Committee of the Whole to provide for that possibility because a family with four children and an income of $23,500 is certainly as needy as a family with one child and an income of $15,000. I do not see why, if we are changing the Act, we could not provide the full benefit for all families entitled to the full amount of the child tax credit which means families with an income of $23,500, not $15,000.

My second point is why try to divide entitlements when matters could have been so simple? We know that the child tax credit can reach $454. If the Government wants to be generous, as the Minister states, why not give the full amount, why only $300? Why not pay the full amount immediately, which would avoid the need for a second cheque in the many cases where the recipients pay no taxes? Administratively, the Government could have saved some money.

My third point is something which I find rather surprising. Under this Bill, the recipients of this advance payment, since that is what it is, would not have to complete any application form. It is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who will decide proprio motu to send $300 to family X, Y, or Z. And in case of an overpayment, an interest on this overpayment will be charged.

A family earning $24,000 a year is not necessarily affluent, especially if it has several children. These people who will have received a cheque from the Government without filling out a form would be asked not only to reimburse the amount, which would be understandable, but also to pay interests on it. And not only would they be asked to pay interests on it, but they would even be asked to pay interests from the date the cheque was mailed. The explanatory notes which we have received say so in so many words, while everywhere else in the Income Tax Act, the interest is payable from April 30 in the case of an overpayment or a shortfall.

Therefore, everywhere else in the Income Tax Act, interests start to accrue from the very last day the taxpayer must submit his income tax return. There will be an exception in this case, because it says that it is from the date, say November 15, that the interest will accrue. Again, I wonder why the Government is so stingy in a measure which it has introduced as a cost free gesture of generosity.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister, either in his remarks or comments before tomorrow—because I do not think this Bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole or a legislative Committee before tomorrow or next week—could reconsider this issue which appears to me to be somewhat ridiculous, in the light of the rest of the income tax legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has decided to introduce a Bill concerning the tax credit reimbursement. It has announced that it intends to introduce another legislation dealing with the sales tax. I imagine also that a number of measures will be introduced as a result of the Budget speech. This piecemeal approach is really the trade mark of this Government.

At a time when the idea of a tax reform was thrown at us, at a time when the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) was telling us it was a very important measure that would cost nothing to the taxpayers and nothing to the Government because they are trading four quarters for a dollar bill, we are paying for it in November or December instead of February or March, at a time when the Minister is trying to take advantage of those measures when he himself states they cost nothing, which means they are not that significant to the beneficiaries, I am wondering whether the time has not come for the Government to look at the situation, to take a step back, to stop bringing in piecemeal measures, piecemeal legislation, and have a look at the overall package. How can they dissociate tax reform, as it is being loudly announced, from the social impact of income tax measures? Will that be a measure with effects that will last but six months? Will all that be changed by the announced tax reform? No one knows. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance are rather reluctant to inform taxpayers, both those who pay income tax and those who are receiving refundable credits, about the intention of this Government. We are going through a period of uncertainty and the business community is wondering what is going to happen in terms of the tax refund.

It is being said in some quarters that the tax burden of corporations will be increased, while that of individuals could be lowered. What about the exemptions? Will the Minister be changing basic exemptions for dependent children? What will be the departure or continuity as between tax changes and the child tax credit? Mr. Speaker, those are all extremely serious questions in my view, not only for those Canadian taxpayers who must pay tax, but also for those who have to make investment decisions.

Those who went through the tax reform in the early 1970s, after the Carter Report and the White Paper tabled by the then Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), will recall how much the delay in bringing forth legislation inconvenienced many investors. A number of projects had to be shelved for as long as the details of that tax reform were not known. I ask the Government, now that we are considering this legislation to amend the Income Tax Act, that we soon be given an outline of at least its tax reform, in order that Canadian taxpayers can know what to expect over the coming years and how to plan their fiscal situation, both those who pay a high level of income tax and those who will receive an early refund of the child tax credit by virtue of Bill C-11. Because low-income families who hear the Minister of Finance suggest that exemptions will be cut can rightly wonder, in view of the measures implemented by this Government in the last two budgets, what their personal status will be. Will the child tax credit survive the tax reform? Will the exemptions for dependent children continue to be included in the tax reform or is this part of the enlargement of the tax base aimed at reducing marginal tax rates?

Mr. Speaker, I believe these questions should be asked during consideration of this Bill, and most important, that they should be answered. At the time of the last Budget, we were told there would be a White Paper on the business transfer tax. After being told that this would be tabled in April, then in May, then in June, then during the summer, then finally in July, we learned that there will be no White Paper, but a tax reform. On several occasions, the Minister of Finance has indicated that he would soon be making a statement, but this is October 15, the House has been sitting for several weeks, and we have heard nothing yet. It is important for families and for those who have investment projects that this House and all Canadians know as quickly as possible which basic exemptions the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) plans on eliminating to reach his goal of lowering the tax rates. This is of special concern for families with children and I think that this Government and the Minister of Finance should clarify the situation quickly so that everyone will know where they stand.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now conclude by saying simply that we shall support this administrative Bill which adds nothing to the benefits already provided to families in the form of child tax credits, but only allows for pre-payment of an amount which would have been paid in any case. I invite the Minister to reflect on the points I have raised, namely the limit of $15,000 instead of $23,500, $15,000 being the cutoff point for this administrative measure. I also ask him to reflect on why the amount is $300 instead of $454, which is the child tax credit families are entitled to receive, and I would also like him to review the matter of the interests. I believe that these are important matters and we shall have amendments to move on these points when we consider this Bill at the clause by clause stage.

• (1550)

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, which will provide $300 as a prepayment of the child tax credit to eligible families. We are pleased to support this prepayment measure. However, I caution the Government that it is extremely important that Canadians, and particularly low-income Canadians, know that this is not a new measure. Due to the way in which things were presented earlier it would be easy for the Government to mislead poor people into thinking that this is an extra $300. They would find it very easy to spend that money, particularly in this pre-Christmas period.

I am not convinced that this method of prepayment will solve the problem of the tax discounters, for which it was originally intended. I will return to this a little later. The advance will be paid in November and the remaining $154 will be paid following the income tax submissions next spring.

In the time that I have I would like first to review the recent changes, not only in the child tax credit but also in the family benefit package. We have spent a lot of time on this in the last year. I will refer particularly to our goals and recommendations, as well as to the actual measures which were introduced by the Government. Since family benefits are a part of family policy generally in Canada, I would also like to look at the issue of a comprehensive family policy in Canada, which we do not have at this time but which is very much needed. The approach of very minor changes in family benefits shows how inadequate the present Government is at considering, in a comprehensive way, the needs of families in Canada.

The position of my Party with regard to family benefits was put forward when we discussed this at some length in the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare, which was supposedly to reform family benefits. What we actually did was review the family benefits and allow the Government to make changes afterwards, many of which I believe were negative. We believe that the pillar of social policy in Canada for families is the universal, fully indexed family allowance. We have said over and over again that this should not be tampered with, as was done by the Conservative Government. The Conservative Government cut back on the indexation of family allowance last year by 3 per cent. I will refer to some of the long-term impacts this will have on family benefits generally as the years go by.

We believe that the fully indexed family allowance should be paid for by all taxpayers in the country, whether or not they have children of their own. After all, it is the next generation which will look after us in our old age and which will contribute to the leadership and future of Canada. Children belong to all of us, not only to their parents, and the cost of their upbringing is the responsibility of all of us, to some degree. A major plank in New Democratic Party social policy is that we must have a universal family allowance which should always increase, not decrease as has been the policy adopted by the Government.

• (1600)

The family allowance cheque goes to the main parenting person, usually the mother. This has been very important over the years, as we have often heard in earlier debates. Higher income families also receive family allowance, indeed even bank presidents if they have children. This is the way it should be if it is a universal program. However, we believe that a more progressive tax system than we have now should accompany that to tax those higher income people at a higher rate. We opposed a specific surtax on family allowance because we felt this would penalize families with children when, as I said earlier, all of us should be contributing toward a universal family allowance.

We have seen much evidence that the Conservatives would like to do away with universality altogether. They have received much pressure from their friends in the business community but, fortunately, having experienced the attitude of Canadians regarding the universal old age pension, they knew that Canadians would object to any more serious tampering with the family allowance. Rather than eliminating or cutting back on a universal program as a benefit, the Government began eroding the family allowance by reducing the indexation. It thought that it was being fairly clever politically by keeping 1 per cent indexation and reducing it by 3 per cent. However, let me point out again to my colleagues, as I have in the past, that research shows that in 20 years the real value of the family allowance to families will be reduced considerably. In 20 years it will be down to $18 per month from the $31.27 that it is today.

Let us consider the child tax exemption, which is another family benefit that is regressive. We advocated complete elimination of the regressive child tax exemption because it favours wealthier taxpayers who have children and does nothing for low-income families. The Conservatives did not say much about this measure. We proposed that the increased tax revenues which would be regained by the federal treasury should be used to increase the child tax credit and retain full indexation on the child tax credit and the family allowance. It was our view that the child tax credit was a much better program to assist families in a progressive way.

We proposed an increase in the child tax credit of 80 per cent, with full indexation. While we realize that this is a rather generous change, we believe that with the high cost of living for families and the importance of families in today's society in which parents must struggle, it is far more important to contribute money toward the care of children and the cost of raising them than putting it into subsidizing banks or other programs that we believe are not as deserving.

We would have increased the child tax credit to 80 per cent and fully indexed it, which would have been of great help, not only to low-income families, which seems to be the only group the Conservatives consider when talking about social programs, but of help to average families, including the working poor and ordinary families who are trying to find money to pay a mortgage.

We also advocated major tax reforms. The Hon. Member from the Liberal Party who just spoke asked why the Government is not telling us about possible tax reform. We have been talking about tax reform for many years, and we are just as critical of the Liberal Government as we are of the Conservative Government for introducing regressive tax measures. One particular Liberal measure took place in 1982 with the change in the marginal tax rate for upper-income Canadians. This occurred in the MacEachen Budget, as some of us who were here in the House will recall.

We have stated that simply returning to the pre-1982 marginal tax rate for upper-income Canadians would have brought in $1.7 billion to the treasury and would have paid for many improvements to family benefits as well as child care and other important social programs.

According to the Conservatives, the child tax exemption was reduced and will continue to be quietly reduced by 50 per cent over several years. It will be reduced to the equivalent of the family allowance that is less valuable now because of deindexation. The fact is that the Conservatives retained this regressive tax measure because they did not have the courage to eliminate it altogether in the face of their friends in higher income brackets. If they had eliminated the child tax exemption it would have put more money into the family benefit package for low and average-income families.

I might also mention that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) proposed this change and took 50 per cent of the money back from the child tax exemption, he did not mention anything about putting this into improved family benefits. Furthermore, he did not mention anything about the windfall that this change would give to the federal and provincial Governments. While this should have gone to enrich family benefits, of course, the Conservatives cut back on the indexation of the family allowance and child tax credit.

The Conservatives have a different attitude toward the child tax credit than the New Democratic Party. They believe that this is a measure which should only be targetted to those in greatest need. Those families in greatest need are generally very poor, with welfare rates of income far below the poverty line. The eligibility for the child tax credit does not really do much at all for the working poor and does absolutely nothing for average families who are also struggling to find money to pay their mortgages and raise their children.

The Conservatives lowered the income level for receiving the child tax credit. While they rave about having increased the child tax credit, they rarely tell Canadians that they lowered the eligibility from the $26,000 income range to the $23,500 level. This will decrease each year because the Government has also deindexed the child tax credit. According to some of the research we have obtained, only families earning some $13,800—a low income indeed—will be eligible for the child tax credit in 20 years. Again, this makes a mockery of a sincere commitment to even the poorest of Canada's children.

The increase brought forward by the Government is really a token increase when one considers some of the provisions in the last two Budgets. The Government increased the child tax credit by $70, to $454 in 1986. It will give $300 of this as an advance payment next month as a result of this Bill. While the child tax credit increase to $524 by 1988 is a step in the right direction, to some degree, when we consider the other provisions in those two budgets it really does very little for the other losses incurred by low-income families.

I am sure my colleagues will recall when families, particularly low-income families, were penalized by the 3 per cent increase in sales tax in the first Budget and the 1 per cent increase in the following Budget. The increase in the child tax credit has pretty well been taken up by the extra costs which families must pay for consumer goods.

• (1610)

Having listened to us at great lengths complaining on behalf of the consumers of Canada, in particular lower and middle income families, in its second Budget the Government made some changes. It introduced a refundable sales tax credit. This is the type of concept with which we agree. We believe tax credits are more progressive than income tax deductions because they can be extended to all low income families. It is ironic that a token gesture in financial terms will barely cover the 1 per cent increase in the sales tax levied in the last Budget, let alone cover the previous 3 per cent sales tax increase which hurt poor families in terms of the child tax credit.

The Government responds in this Bill to requests by low income groups, poverty groups and, in particular, the National Anti-Poverty Organization, who have asked for protection for low income families from tax discounters. They asked for protection from the usury low income group's experience because they cannot afford to wait for the receipt of their child tax credits. They are desperate for money and they know that this is one source of income for major expenses which they have. Thus they go to tax discounters and pay a large rate to exercise this privilege. This is something for which the National Anti-Poverty Organization has asked, and the Bill before us is one attempt to deal with it.

I do not dispute the fact that many families will be pleased to receive this $300 before Christmas, provided they know that they will not receive a similar amount next spring. The NAPO asked on behalf of poor people that this sum of money be retained in a lump sum. It is hard for those of us who have credit and who can order things from department stores on credit to understand how difficult it is for people with no credit rating at all. People with low incomes and those on welfare, those who do not have enough money to buy food and who are lining up at food banks, simply do not have any large amounts of money, or even medium-sized amounts of money, with which to buy a baby carriage, for example, or a new fridge or stove when they are needed. The tax credit is probably the only sum of money for which they can hope that will help with these large expenditures. That is one item which has not been responded to in this Bill. The Bill does not provide for the lump sum payment which NAPO requested.

I suspect that the recipients of this sum will have the money this year and will not have to go to tax discounters. However, what will happen next fall when people know that this is the new system and that this is how it works? It seems to me poor families will still need advances. They will still go to tax discounters where they will be victimized once again as a result of usurious interest rates. What is really needed is legislated changes brought forward by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) which will effectively prohibit these practices. I ask that the Government consider bringing in legislation to prohibit tax rebates with respect to the child tax credit. It is interesting to note that this is the only social program that provides money for kids, who seem to be unprotected as far as tax discounting is concerned.

As I said earlier, members of my Party will not unduly hold up this Bill. We do not want to hold up any moneys which will go to low income families. However, there are several members of my Party who wish to speak to this issue.

I point out that the patchwork approach to family benefits, particularly with regard to recent changes in the child tax credit—this band-aid approach to family policy—is retrogressive indeed. There is no way that these measures should have been referred to as reforms. That is what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) likes to call them. In my view these are deliberate policies to undermine the universal family allowance while increasing in only a token way the child tax credit. I think there is a fair amount of evidence to substantiate this point of view.

