A week ago last Thursday while I was in Toronto at the Aboriginal Constitutional Conference, the Hon. Member made an allegation that I was censoring material and interfering with the work of the Committee. After she made that allegation she called my office and asked for a copy of the resumés which were on our file. I am informed that my office immediately sent them to her. There is absolutely no basis of fact in her allegation and, I wish she would withdraw it.

ALLEGED REQUEST TO COMMISSION OFFICIAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Can the Minister confirm why, before I raised this question in committee, Mr. Michael Glynn, the Administrator of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, was instructed by his legislative assistant to send copies of the resumés, which at that time included the P.C. connections, not to the committee as was the original request, but to the office of Mr. Hnatyshyn? In the words of his assistant: "No resumé would be released without having it personally reviewed by the Minister." In the meantime, the P.C. connections were lost in the shuffle.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I do not accept that version of the facts. When the Hon. Member and another Hon. Member made an inquiry at my office, I am advised that the curricula vitae were sent directly to those Members. My office called the Commission to find out what material they had. They sent over copies which arrived after the other document had been sent to the Hon. Member.

ENERGY

PROJECTED LOSS OF JOBS IN ALBERTA ENERGY INDUSTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be well aware of how bad the situation in Alberta is and will know that last week in Alberta the Minister for Manpower released a report indicating that the Government of Alberta projects that 55,000 Albertans will lose their jobs in the next 12 months. The Minister of Employment and Immigration indicated that this was an alarmist figure. My question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is: Do you believe the Government of Alberta in its projections of unemployment in that province, or do you support your fellow Minister?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I don't think we should make a contest of analyzing the number of people who are experiencing economic problems personally, as a result of the international energy situation. The situation in Alberta is catastrophic, and it is the responsibility of the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta to do everything they can to improve the situation, and that is what we are doing.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR SMALL COMPANIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister called the situation catastrophic. Two weeks ago he turned down an invitation to intervene and provide support to small producers and small exploration companies in Alberta. With the new figures indicating that 55,000 people will be losing their jobs in that province in the next twelve months, is the Minister now prepared to intervene and provide the necessary support to small companies?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, a catastrophic situation demands a response, and not just any kind of response.

For several months, various associations in Alberta have been working with the provincial government, as has been the case everywhere else in Canada, to develop policies. Just because we refused to provide a solution to a general problem does not mean the Government is insensitive. In fact, we felt this particular solution was not appropriate for the people concerned, and that is why we are seeking better solutions.

PENSIONS

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—REVIEW OF PRIVATE PENSION PLANS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Auditor General's Report revealed that only some 40 private pension plans out of some 750 had been reviewed in the past 15 years by federal regulators. Does the Minister truly believe that that is a sufficient review? Does he have any specific plans for improving the review process of private pension plans?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as indicated last week, we felt this was an important recommendation of the Auditor General. We do not believe that there is an immediate problem. In fact it was found that it was necessary to review, as the Hon. Member pointed out, only 40 of some 750 pension funds. The Department is looking into the advisability of increasing the regulatory nature of its work and will be responding in due course to the useful recommendation of the Auditor General.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

INDEPENDENCE OF TRIBUNAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to return, with the Minister of Justice, to the subject raised by my colleague. He knows that the Canadian human rights tribunal often has to protect the rights of individuals against a Government. He also knows that this week the national Bank of Canada is challenging the independence of that tribunal and arguing that it is not independent on the grounds of the partisanship of some of its members. Is the Minister of Justice prepared to review these partisan appointments of individuals who have bragged about their credentials and loyalty to the Progressive Conservative Party, and appoint people who are truly independent, so that the commission will be able to stand up to scrutiny by the court?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of deference, I do not have to be lectured by the Liberal Party and the Hon. Member about partisanship and appointments. The reality is that it is a very important tribunal. No one takes it more seriously than I do. I want to ensure that the people are of the highest competence and quality. Indeed I have never seen any reference on any material which has come before me, in terms of the appointments for which I was responsible, in respect of political affiliation. Is the Hon. Member saying that people involved in politics should not be appointed? That is what I want to ask him—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think Hon. Members will know that when a question verges on the argumentative, often the response is much the same.

INTEGRITY OF COMMISSION MEMBERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not recognize how particularly vulnerable are commissions such as this one and how important it is that the integrity of the members be patently clear, so that they will not be struck down by courts and the administrative procedures will survive?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think that question is a good one. As we now sit here in the House, the Department and my officials are consulting widely on amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act respecting the operations of the commission. There are defects in its operations, as we all know and as was pointed out by us in opposition. I am prepared to receive representations and will continue to consult to ensure that we have the best Human Rights Commission in the world.

TRADE

EXEMPTIONS SECURED BY COMPANIES FROM UNITED STATES COUNTERVAIL DUTY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines. I am sure the Minister is aware that some lumber producing companies have been given exemptions from the 15 per cent preliminary countervail duty imposed 10 days ago. Could the Minister indicate why no efforts were made at the federal level to advise Canadian companies of their possible exemption from the 15 per cent countervail?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the trade rules are well known by most companies. It was widely covered in the media. It has been talked about widely by myself and by other members of the Cabinet. Many companies applied and many were given exemptions.

NOTIFICATION OF COMPANIES ELIGIBLE FOR EXEMPTIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. As I am sure she is aware, the Government provided to U.S. authorities a list of companies certified by the Government of Canada as eligible for those exemptions. Would she explain to the House why, at the same time as she was advising American authorities she did not notify companies in Canada, so that all eligible companies could have obtained the exemption?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the responsibility for informing the members of the forestry industry was assumed by the Council of Forest Industries which speaks for the entire forest industry. In that way those companies would have learned about it. A lot of companies did seek and get exemptions, which showed that the process was working.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

ESTEY COMMISSION REPORT—ACCOUNTING AND AUDITING GUIDELINES

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In his report last Friday, Judge Estey found that from 1982 or 1983 the managements of the CCB and Northland Bank took steps which overstated both the assets and the income of the banks with the unconditional approval of the banks' auditors. He also found that bank auditing and accounting guidelines were clearly inadequate. Will the Minister take steps to establish immediately an advisory committee of bankers, representatives of the accounting and auditing professions, and representatives of the Inspector General, to establish new, effective accounting and auditing guidelines as recommended by Judge Estey, so that the public of Canada can again place confidence in the financial statements of our banks?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Justice Estey made very clear that the Canadian banking system was sound and that Canadians should have confidence in it. With regard to the specific question of the Hon. Member, Mr. Justice Estey has made quite an interesting proposal. There have been some informal discussions along the lines which Mr. Justice Estey pointed out. It is a proposal into which we are looking more carefully. Hopefully we will be able to respond to it specifically in due course.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DETROIT INCINERATOR PROJECT—NEED FOR ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION EQUIPMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. I understand that tomorrow he will meet with Lee Thomas, head of the United States Environmental Protection Agency. Will he undertake now, when he meets with Mr. Thomas, to press that official to take every possible step open to the American federal Government to ensure that the Detroit incinerator is not built without the necessary environmental protection equipment, in order not to put at risk the health and safety of people in the city of Windsor and in many other parts of southwestern Ontario?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member that assurance. I will be meeting with Mr. Thomas all day tomorrow. I have a list of about seven bilateral questions with which I will be dealing. The Detroit incinerator matter is the No. 1 question on that relatively short agenda. Mr. Thomas and I do not disagree on the environmental dimensions of the question. In fact we see eye to eye. The EPA was set back in the courts on procedural rather than on substantive grounds. The Ontario Government, the federal Government, and the U.S. Government are planning a full court press to do the very thing for which the Hon. Member has called.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. If Canada and the United States see eye to eye on this matter, will he agree to obtain the consent of the United States for a reference of the matter to the International Joint Commission on a specific basis, which is not the case at present? Will he also join with the Province of Ontario in going to the United States courts in a new action to seek an injunction against the City of Detroit to prevent the incinerator from being built without the necessary air pollution equipment?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think it is because Canada and the United States agree on the environmentalism of the issue that it would be inappropriate to send it to the International Joint Commission. Matters on which we disagree are normally the ones which are sent to the IJC to have an independent arbiter for the purpose of resolving them. We are pursuing every possible legal and diplomatic route. We are linking arms with Queen's Park and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to see if we can resolve it. The problem is essentially with the State of Michigan and the City of Detroit, not with Lee Thomas, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency or the Government of the United States. That is why we are proceeding in the way that I have described.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville; one question please.

APPOINTEE'S RESUMÉ

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I have in my hand one of the orginal biographies of those appointed to the Human Rights tribunal Panel. There are 10 lines in it referring to Progressive Conservative involvement. I now have in my hands the document sent to the Human Rights Committee of the House of Commons, from which all 10 of those lines have been deleted. Would he not agree that that would raise a strong suspicion of an effort to mislead?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I absolutely reject that out of hand. The fact of the matter is that we received a request for the information for the first time a week ago last Thursday. We gave everything that we had in our office with respect to these appointments, and the basis upon which I had made the appointments. The Hon. Member knows that I brought in changes to the rules here which allow scrutiny of appointments. This Government and this Prime Minister, for the first time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PRIVILEGE

INTERRUPTION BY MR. SPEAKER OF STATEMENT UNDER S.O. 21

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege as a result of the decision by Your Honour to interrupt the statement which I was attempting to make pursuant to Standing Order 21 of the Standing Orders of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I know that Hon. Members would agree that when a Member of the House has risen on a question of privilege, all Hon. Members would want to hear the argument and give that Hon. Member the courtesy that would of course be extended to all other Members. Would the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) please continue.

Mr. Robinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, I rise on a question of privilege arising from the decision of Your Honour to interrupt the statement which I was making pursuant to Standing Order 21 of the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Surely there can be no privilege more essential or fundamental to Members of the House than freedom of speech. I respectfully suggest that the decision of the Speaker to vet, in effect, the contents of a statement which is made pursuant to Standing Order 21 in the manner in which Your Honour's decision was made, flies in the face of privilege not just of myself but of all Members of the House.

I was attempting to raise an issue of serious concern with respect to comments that had been made, after all, under the same Standing Order 21 on Monday, October 20 last, by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). In his comments to the House the Hon. Member for Bow River referred to certain suggestions that had been made by the New Democratic Party with respect to a policy of non-discrimination in hiring at all levels of federal jurisdiction, including the R.C.M.P.

The Hon. Member made certain comments which I think not only gays and lesbians but all Canadians who believe in human rights and minority rights would find deeply offensive and insulting. The Hon. Member referred to fairies and lesbian R.C.M.P. fairies, and hitting people over the head with powder puffs.

I suggest that it is entirely in order for another Member to rise in his or her place and suggest that those kinds of comments have no place in Canada today, in a Canada which respects minorities. That was the intent of my submission and the intent of my remarks under Standing Order 21.

While Your Honour in fact interrupted the Hon. Member for Bow River in the course of his remarks, Your Honour pointed out, as reported at page 510 of Hansard, that the remarks of the Hon. Member for Bow River:

—might cause a question of privilege or point of order in the Chamber.

Indeed, I suggest that according to Citation 325 of Beauchesne, Your Honour has an obligation to insist that the Hon. Member for Bow River withdraw, retract, the offensive expressions which he has made and apologize to the House and all Canadians for those offensive expressions. I submit that as a point of order.

In conclusion, my question of privilege is that surely Members of the House have the right to seek to rise in their places pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 21 to point out in a respectful and appropriate manner that the kind of language and stereotypical and homophobic rantings of the Member for Bow River have no place either in the House or anywhere else in this country. That was my purpose in seeking to remind all Members of the existence of a Charter of Rights which protects minorities in Canada. I hope, upon reflection, that Your Honour might recognize that such a statement is indeed entirely within the Standing Orders of the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if one looks at Standing Order 21, the qualifying section of that Standing Order is that a Speaker may order a Member to resume his or her seat if, in the opinion of the Speaker, improper use is made of the Standing Order. That is precisely what you did today, Mr. Speaker. That is precisely what you did on Monday, October 20, 1986, with the suitable admonition.

I believe what you are trying to do is to apply the rules in a consistent manner. What is good for the application of the rules on this side should apply to the application of the rules on the other side.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to Standing Order 21 which was referred to by the Hon. Government House Leader. Standing Order 21 says that the Speaker may order a Member to resume his or her seat if, in the opinion of the Speaker, improper use is made of the Standing Order. I believe the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has indicated very clearly that there was no improper use of the Standing Order and that it was in fact being adhered to. That is the point he was attempting to make.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have one brief point to make in response to the comment by the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister has suggested that the treatment which was accorded by the Speaker to the Hon. Member for Bow River on Monday last should have been accorded to me as well. I point out that the Speaker, on Monday last, did not in fact proceed with the Hon. Member for Bow River pursuant to Standing Order 21. Standing Order 21 would have required the Speaker to ask the Hon. Member for Bow River to resume his seat, as I was ordered to do. The Speaker did not do that but allowed the Hon. Member for Bow River to continue after an admonition.

I suggest that at the very least, if the argument of the Deputy Prime Minister is to be accepted, the same treatment should have been accorded to me.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any further Hon. Members rising on this question of privilege?

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has raised an important matter in the Chamber, referring to statements made by another Member during the period set aside for Statements by Members several days ago.

The House will recall that when that earlier statement was made, the Chair interrupted the Hon. Member and, I believe in gentle but firm language, indicated that what the Hon. Member was saying and what he might be saying would be offensive to Hon. Members and Canadians, and furthermore that the Hon. Member, as all Hon. Members would want to do, ought to be cautious in the use of language which would possibly lead to a point of order or question of privilege in the House, or to disorder which, of course, defeats the very freedom and rights to which the Hon. Member for Burnaby has most properly referred.

The Chair did interrupt the Hon. Member for Burnaby in the last few seconds of the period set aside for Statements by Members. It was the Chair's purpose to urge all Members again, including the Hon. Member for Burnaby, to be careful in the choice of words on an issue which, while legitimately raised in this Chamber, if raised in words which are inflammatory or apparently derogatory will lead to disorder.

I suggested to the Hon. Member for Burnaby that, under the circumstances, in view of the intervention by the Chair several days ago, which I think had the general approval of this House, perhaps that was all that needed to be said about it. I must indicate to the Hon. Member that I do not think that, under all the circumstances, it is a question of privilege, but I do think it is an important matter. Legitimate matters are raised frequently in this Chamber, sometimes in language which perhaps borders on the offensive, but nonetheless the issues are important. I invited the Hon. Member several days ago to continue the statement, taking into account the admonition which the Chair gave to that particular Member. The Hon. Member for Burnaby will consider that the remainder of the statement was of a different tone than the earlier part which I felt was possibly getting close to creating some difficulties in the House.

The Chair would prefer not to make a hard ruling at this time. Perhaps the Chair can carefully consider Hansard and bring the matter back to the House.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—TRADE POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Langdon:

That this House condemns the government for confusion, lack of direction, and secrecy in its trade policy, and specifically, condemns:

1. the misguided efforts of the Minister of International Trade to present a unilateral proposal to the United States which undercut the Canadian position before the Commerce Department's lumber countervail decision;

2. the weak and contradictory response of the same Minister to that lumber decision, by which she has neglected firm Canadian action and possibilities and used mere rhetoric and legal appeals within the very U.S. system of countervail she criticizes;

3. the failure of the Canadian Government to eliminate the damaging trade effects of the U.S. Farm Bill which hurts so many Canadian farmers;

4. the weakness of the Canadian Government in its response to the customs surtax and the differential U.S. tax on imported as opposed to domestic oil;

5. the way in which this government's free trade talks with the U.S. have made Canada a target of U.S. countervail and congressional action rather than helping this country escape such actions;

6. the lower priority given by this government to GATT negotiations rather than to comprehensive bilateral talks with the U.S; and

7. the failure of this government realistically to assess the massive constitutional roadblocks in the way of a truly fair bilateral agreement between Canada and the U.S.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) had the floor.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, just prior to lunch we pointed out as graphically as we could the fault in the first part of the motion we are debating today. In every case, every strategic move made on this issue was with the full support of industry, labour and the provinces. That of course included the initiative taken to settle the softwood issue before the October 16 ruling.

Let me now turn to the second point in the motion. The Hon. Member says the Minister:

—neglected firm Canadian action and possibilities and used mere rhetoric and legal appeals within the very U.S. system of countervail she criticizes;

The wording of this motion strongly suggests that the Hon. Member and his Party are willing to ignore one of the more important avenues open to us to continue putting our position forward as strongly as possible in the U.S. We do not propose to pick up our marbles, as some opposition Members imply they would like us to do. The stakes are too high for Canada with regard to jobs and revenue. Contrary to the Hon. Member's assertion, this Government, with our partners, continues to be consistent and forceful in its approach to dealing with this threat in a unified and cohesive manner. For the Opposition to suggest that our response is weak and contradictory is a clear indication they have a weak understanding of both the intricacy and delicacy of this issue, and the means by which we can resolve it. We intend to resolve it to Canada's satisfaction if at all possible.

I would remind Hon. Members that the preliminary determination of subsidy made by the Commerce Department on October 16 is not the end of the road at all. That preliminary determination must be verified and a final decision made by December 30. I think they will have some difficulty in verifying their own figures. Even if the preliminary determination is confirmed, countervailing duties would not be applied unless the U.S. International Trade Commission finds injury in its final determination due in mid-February. If either of these rulings are negative or ruled on in Canada's favour, the case is terminated. In addition, both sides have the right to appeal the outcome to the U.S. courts.

It should be clear to everyone by now that we have a long way to go and we have no intention of giving up. We will continue to consult with industry, labour and the provinces, as we have all along. It is important that Hon. Members understand there is a unified front in Canada to continue our fight in the U.S. Last week the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and I met with the provinces, labour and industry in Toronto to review in detail the basis for the preliminary determination by the U.S. Department of Commerce, and to plan our own strategy for the next phase. As I said earlier, it was the view of all parties concerned that the basis for the preliminary decision was badly flawed. It contained numerous examples of misinformation and confused analysis, and in some cases included double counting of costs and values. The unanimous decision of the meeting was to continue our fight through all avenues available to us under U.S. trade law. I am also pleased to note that support for this position was articulated by certain other members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Let me assure Hon. Members that we are not confining our efforts only to the U.S. In fact, the preliminary determination on lumber is inconsistent with U.S. obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. We will not weaken in our efforts to argue forcefully against the U.S. decision through GATT. We have invoked GATT dispute settlement mechanisms and our initial arguments have already been made to a GATT panel established at Canada's request.

The most troubling aspect of the U.S. ruling for us, and for many other countries, is the implications it has for the sovereign right of Governments to manage and establish the conditions for the exploitation of the advantages conferred by their natural resource endowments. This new twist in the interpretation of U.S. countervailing duty law has made our lumber dispute with the U.S. of particular concern and interest to other countries around the world. I can assure Hon. Members that the position Canada has taken to GATT has the support of many other countries, particularly those with important resource industries such as we have here in Canada.

Today it is lumber, tomorrow it could be pulp or newsprint or a number of other products or resources. This is not the way to conduct business between the world's largest trading partners. There is a better way and we must change the rules in order to stop the harassment by U.S. interest groups against competitive and fairly traded Canadian exports. Furthermore, the softwood lumber case points up a disturbing reluctance in the U.S. to accept the verdict when U.S. interests do not win a case. There appears to be a growing propensity in the U.S. to blame imports for problems which are the result of domestic policies, not foreign competition. There is an unfortunate tendency to assume that every foreign product which manages to compete successfully in the U.S. does so only because it benefits from government assistance of some sort or another.

An even more troubling assumption is that policies and practices which differ in any way from those used in the United States must, by definition, be unfair. Some down there have gone so far as to suggest that all foreign practices are unfair and the U.S. is the only country which still abides by the rules of international trade. Oddly enough, such suggestions have been accompanied by attempts to change certain of these rules unilaterally in the interest of more effective protection. In my view the demand for a level playing field can take some very strange forms.

We have seen that in graphic terms in softwood lumber. We won the case in 1983. We then faced a number of legislative initiatives seeking, in one way or another, to limit our exports to the United States. We then faced a fact-finding investigation and then yet another countervail this year and the threat that if the U.S. industry does not get what it wants there will be a likelihood of more Congressional action.

Where will it all end? This is why we seek new rules, Mr. Speaker. We seek a better shield against the forces of protectionism. We want more certainty, a more confident environment for investors and producers in Canada. This, in turn, will generate the jobs and economic growth which Canada needs.

I wish to conclude my remarks by reiterating several points. The Government has reacted strongly to the preliminary decisions of the U.S. Commerce Department a week ago last Thursday that Canadian provincial stumpage programs convey countervailable benefits to the Canadian softwood industry. We deplore this decision which cannot be justified either under U.S. law or GATT rules.

My hon. colleague, the Minister for International Trade has registered the Government's deep disappointment that Commerce Secretary Baldrige reversed his earlier decision in the previous softwood lumber countervailing case that provincial stumpage programs were not countervailable. In our view the U.S. ruling has no basis in U.S. law and is inconsistent with the U.S. obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Further, we have kept open every available avenue which we might wish to use. Our co-ordinated and forceful approach is going to carry us through and we intend to win this dispute. As I have said repeatedly, we have the commitment of organized labour, the industry and provincial Governments to work with the federal Government to get the U.S. Government to reverse its preliminary determination and to cease any further investigation. We are using every means at our disposal, both within the U.S. legal system and under the dispute settlement mechanisms available to us under the GATT. In fact, one of the major objectives of the Government in the new trade round launched in Uruguay last month is to strengthen significantly these international dispute settlement mechanisms. Time alone will tell us whether we have followed the right course. We believe it will show that we have acted with foresight, determination and courage.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister say in this House, as he did a few minutes ago, that the free trade negotiations have the support of labour when it is on record in at least a dozen press releases that the Canadian Labour Congress is opposed to the free trade negotiations? How can he make such a statement?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) referred to the question of free trade generally. We are talking of this particular dispute. We know exactly what is in the opposition motion. I sit in on all of those meetings. There are members of labour there although not all of labour belongs to the CLC. We know full well what the official position of labour is with regard to trade. However, on this particular issue they are fully in accord with what we have done.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the 15 per cent tariff, the small Canadian lumber producers have been discriminated against. They simply were not aware of the exemption provision. Despite the earlier comments of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), these companies were not informed of the procedures to follow. I have spoken to many companies personally. Their chief executive officers have informed me that they had no idea that this provision was available. They have no idea how to get on the list if there is still time to do so. Could the Minister tell us whether there is still time for companies to apply for exemptions? If so, how do companies actually apply?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, this tariff is a result of an industry in the United States petitioning its Government. The traditional response of the Canadian industry has been to fight it. We have worked with the industry, the provinces and labour to try to co-ordinate as well as possible a response to that and to try to get the Canadian picture across. The Canadian Forest Industries Council and its arm, COFI, centred in the Hon. Member's province, took the lead on that. There have been dozens and dozens of opportunities for information on that to go out. There was very wide media coverage all across Canada, a good deal of which started in my home province. It is possible that this was not pursued as aggressively as possible by COFI or CFIC because many small companies do not belong to the Canadian Forest Industries Council.

As we indicated before, we are going to try to get the United States to allow additional applications under that particular section of their trade law. I suspect that the companies which failed to respond to something which has been on the front page of the papers for four years will have to carry some of the responsibility for that. I am very sorry that many of the small companies do not belong to COFI or CFIC, but it was certainly widely publicized that this option was available to companies.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) has done an excellent job of reviewing the International Trade Commission's process of hearings, preliminary rulings, review, testing of data and final appeal of the final ruling. He indicated that the U.S. ruling was inconsistent with its commitment to the GATT agreement and also inconsistent with U.S. law.

Given those inconsistencies, can he explain why the Government has not spent more time in the talks with the United States on dealing with improvements to the dispute-solving of a mechanism by way of an international bilateral dispute-settling mechanism rather than continuing, as the U.S. insists upon doing, to use U.S. law, the U.S. International Trade Commission and, when all else fails, appeals to only U.S. courts? Why did the Government of Canada not attempt to break that deadlock since most of our products are tariff-free in any case?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, the point has been made many times inside and outside the House by the Minister for International Trade, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and myself that one of the concomitant benefits of going through this process will be that we will have a better mechanism for resolving disputes. At the time the initiative for freer trade arrangements was commenced it was made very clear that while these discussions were ongoing a sovereign nation like the United States was not going to throw its own legislation out the window. What has been done there for the last two years is perfectly legitimate. Not all of its industry, but some of it, made a certain appeal to their Government to remedy something which they felt was unjust, using their own legislation.

• (1530)

I happen to sit on the Priorities and Planning Subcommittee on Trade which gives a mandate to our negotiators. I can tell the Hon. Member, as has been stated time and time again in this House, that something which will definitely be part of that, and must be, is a better way in which two large trading partners can resolve problems which they inevitably will have. What mechanism it will be, what form it will take, whether it is a commission, is another issue. We just hope that during the next 16 months or 17 months we can definitely negotiate a better deal and come up with better trade laws than we now have.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the situation which faced the Government when it initiated these discussions was that by the end of next year, 80 per cent of our products moving back and forth between our two countries would be absolutely free and clear of tariffs. The main stumbling block in trade between our two countries has been the building up of excuses for restrictions of trade by way of various non-tariff barriers.

The main irritant which exists between our two countries seems to be the process by which we solve these irritants. The ITC has accepted the lightning, so to speak, from both sides. Why did the Government not begin with that main irritant instead of throwing everything on the table for bargaining, leaving us with the possibility of losing some of the non-tariff commodities which are now traded between us? Why did the Government not focus on that particular problem, a dispute-solving mechanism, and then worry about reducing tariffs after that was taken care of?

Mr. Merrithew: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, it is fondly to be hoped that out of this will come a better mechanism. Unfortunately, when the two countries decided to take that historic step of deciding to try to negotiate a freer trade arrangement, a better trading arrangement, from that point on one could not expect a sovereign nation such as the United States of America to immediately drop all of its existing strategy. Its industry and political system would not put up with that, nor would ours.

We have trade remedy legislation. Something which will come out of that, undoubtedly, and must do so, is a better system. In the meantime, just because two countries are attempting this kind of initiative, it does not mean it will be successful even in the final analysis. We know one thing which will come out of it and that is that during the course of the next 16 months or 18 months, or whatever, as we work toward that better arrangement, we will be better able to deal with the kinds of difficulties we have been faced with and, I suspect, always will be.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to dwell on two matters which have to do with paragraphs Nos. 3, 5 and 7 of the motion moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). Paragraph 3, much of which is interconnected with some of the other paragraphs, condemns the Government for its failure to eliminate the damaging trade effects of the U.S. Farm Bill which hurts so many Canadian farmers. The tragedy is that this Government, like previous Governments, has not learned any lessons from history, and I am speaking about recent history, that is, since the Second World War. When one examines the United States constitutional framework and the methods employed under its constitution, one realizes there is an excellent reason for the long history of the United States countervailing or even undermining and destroying international trade agreements. It has done that on many, many occasions, not only to Canada but to a number of other countries.

The U.S. Farm Bill means, of course, that while farmers in the United States receive $6 to $6.50 a bushel in Canadian dollars, Canadian farmers are receiving a maximum price of about $3.15 for No. 1 red spring wheat in Canadian dollars. The Americans are peddling their grain at around $3 a bushel for top grade grain to importers around the world, some of whom have been longstanding and faithful Canadian customers, and our Government expects the farmers of Canada to compete with the treasury of the United States and that of the European Economic Community.

If there was ever a time when the nation as a whole should pitch in and help in protecting our agricultural industry, it is now. The nation as a whole should share that through our national Government. When I speak about recent history, Mr. Speaker, I speak of the last 40 years during and following the Second World War, when there was an International Wheat Agreement by which the exporting and importing countries agreed on minimum and maximum prices year by year. It was working marvellously until the United States started undermining, undercutting and destroying the International Wheat Agreement. Then came the International Grains Arrangement as a follow-up. It was not as good as the IWA but it was better than nothing. Who wrecked that? I give you one guess, Mr. Speaker.

Year after year, since the Second World War, this has happened. It is not just in congressional election years or in presidential election times. Every year there has been countervail or we have had the borders slammed shut on us with respect to commodity after commodity, and Canada—and this is what is shameful about it—with its supine and servile attitude, continually crawls on bended knee to the United States and allows it to tell us what we should do with Canadian law or provincial rights, which is interference in Canadian sovereignty.

The present Government is in the process, I submit, of perverting the whole principle of what a deficiency payment is. It is not an acreage payment. It is not a payment on an amount sold. A deficiency payment is the difference between what production costs and the price a commodity has to be sold for because agricultural producers are not price makers but price takers. Unlike the manufacturing industry or professional organizations, it has to take what it can get. A deficiency payment is the difference between the price they receive and their costs of production.

It is not just western grain. It has also happened to the corn and soya bean producers in Ontario and Quebec with the U.S. Farm Bill. A deficiency payment is required for agriculture right across Canada. We in western Canada agree with that wholeheartedly. The Government horses around with $1 billion spread out among a host of commodities. That is a picayune pittance. It is not a deficiency payment. It does not come anywhere near meeting the agricultural producers costs of production. No other sector of our economy is more efficient than our agricultural industry. They have "efficiency-ed" themselves to death. What thanks did they get for it? They received lower and lower prices in the face of higher and higher costs. We have lost tens of thousands of agricultural producers over the last 25 years.

The question is: How much for a deficiency payment? For $2 a bushel No. 1 red spring wheat, and proportionate amounts for other types of grains and their different grades, the bill will be $2 billion. To do something about other agricultural products such as corn and soya beans, for example, in Ontario and Quebec, as well as other commodities across the country, the bill will be another $1 billion. That is what will be required if something sensible and meaningful is to be done within the principles of a deficiency payment.

If we took $1 billion and spread it out among all the agricultural producers of all the commodities covered—then maybe our western grain farmers might receive a couple of hundred bucks—then we are back to the $1 an acre up to 200 acres proposition that Mr. Diefenbaker sanctioned when he yelled around the country about how they want parity and not charity. What they got was charity every other year. They received two payments and then that was cancelled. It looks as if we are in for the same damn thing again. The question is for whom? If it is to be for all producers, then it has to be a sufficient amount of money.

From where will we obtain the money? Some two months ago my leader proposed that if the Government were to immediatley assess some taxes for all those who do not pay any income taxes back to last April 1 for the current fiscal year and that if the Government did something about the loopholes in the corporation tax system retroactive to April 1, it could collect the $3 billion needed for a deficiency payment.

I have another solution which I have suggested to the House before. There is something in the order of $38 billion—with a capital "B" as in "Benjamin"—on the books of Canada in deferred corporation taxes. If those who owe these taxes were charged the bank rate of something over 8 per cent interest, then there is the $3 billion which is needed. These are taxes which will probably never be paid and which have accrued since the early 1950s. This is a tax deferral which is perfectly legal for corporations.

I can name three corporations right now which, in total, have in the order of $5 billion to $6 billion worth of deferred corporation taxes. They are Bell Telephone Company, Inco and Canadian Pacific Limited. They owe in excess of $1.5 billion each. If they were charged a modest interest rate—a rate no farmer would receive—we would have our $3 billion. I hope the Government smartens up in terms of that deal. If it does, it will have the full support of all Members of the House.

I now wish to turn to the matter of free trade, freer trade or free trade arrangement—the name has changed periodically over the past year. I mentioned at the outset of my remarks something about the constitutional road-blocks which face us as a result of the United States' system. In terms of road-blocks, not only is there the President and his administration, there is also the International Trade Commission. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), has raised questions repeatedly about this subject. There are also the constitutional rights of the U.S. Congress, the Senate and the individual states.

Over the last 10 years we have had countervail duties imposed—or borders closed completely—on saltfish, fresh fish, hogs, cattle, live and butchered, shakes and shingles, lumber, steel, and even raspberries. I did not know that we even exported raspberries. However, we now know that the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia export a great many raspberries. It is about time we gave the United States the raspberry. Not only did that country enter into an international wheat agreement, an international grain arrangement, it also entered into a fisheries treaty. It was ratified by the Government of Canada, signed by the President of the United States and rejected by the Senate of the United States. From then on it was downhill for us in terms of the Atlantic fishery. The United States also entered into the SALT II arms treaty. After years of negotiation it was agreed to, ratified by the Soviet Union, signed by the President of the United States and turned down by the U.S. Senate. How many times do we have to learn our lesson?

The other delusion, illusion—the dreaming in technicolor that the Government does—is this. If it thinks that U.S. producers and manufacturers in a wide variety of commodities are about to hold still for Canada, or any other country, increasing in any significant way their share of a particular commodity market in the United States, then they are dreaming in technicolor. The U.S. Congress will not allow it. It never has and it is not about to start.

I listened to cattlemen talk with visions of grandeur about how free trade measures would increase our cattle market in the U.S. Three times in the sixties and early seventies, when the Americans saw that we were sending more than 400,000 head or other volumes down to their country, they closed the border. The hog raisers and that carpet-bagger Pocklington, who wants to build a big hog processing plant in North Battleford, have kidded themselves into thinking that the United States will hold still while Canada increases its share of the live and dressed hog market and pork products market in the United States. Do they think that the American hog producers and processors will hold still for that? They shouldn't kid the troops. If one believes that then one believes in the tooth fairy.

At the moment there is another constitutional matter to consider. I refer to the individual states—all 50 of them—which can prohibit a commodity from entering a certain state, mostly on health reasons, but there are others. For example, South Dakota still prohibits Canadian hogs from entering that state. For some time there were about five or six midwestern states which had hog prohibitions against our country. Who do these people think they can kid when we consider their constitutional prerogatives, and our supine acquiescence with the United States?

I would now like to refer to something else which is normally forgotten by the Government. Mr. Reagan received a tie vote in the Senate committee on the fast track on free trade. He received it only because he sent a letter to Senator Packwood which reassured the Senate, and that Senate committee, that there would be no denigration or reduction in the constitutional right of the United States Senate either to ratify or to order countervailing duties. There will be no change in that respect, and we can bet that there never will be.

It is merely a dream to consider achieving some type of broad free trade agreement with the United States and to believe that every year the Americans will not impose a countervail duty or close off any commodity market on which they think their own producers, processors or manufacturers need protection. Historically, that has been their record, and it will continue to be their record.

The question then is: What do we do instead? As we have done not only with the United States but with many other countries, I suggest we negotiate an agreement. We should negotiate a three-year, five-year or ten-year agreement, commodity by commodity, or groups of commodities, and I will use grain as an example. As we have done with many of our customers, we have negotiated contracts inclusive of minimum and maximum amounts. They can be negotiated year-to-year with respect to what the range should be between the minimum and maximum amount of exports to a certain country. I think of China and the Soviet Union in particular.

A minimum and maximum price are negotiated, and the price is negotiated each year between the floor and the ceiling. This is what we can do with the United States. It seems to me this is the only way we can do it. Then we will have a chance, for example in a ten-year contract, say in the lumber industry, to negotiate within that framework. Then our producers will know where they stand each year. They will know how to plan their production. This can be applied to any sector of the economy.

These types of deals should not be only with the United States. We have to quit putting all our eggs in one basket. Most of our eggs used to be in the Great Britain basket. I ask Hon. Members to look at what happened in that case. We lost almost all of it following the Second World War. These types of arrangements must also be made with Mexico, the Caribbean countries and Central America, especially in terms of fresh fruit and vegetables. These countries desperately need our purebred breeding stock, both dairy and beef. They desperately need expertise and technical assistance for agriculture. They desperately need hard currency. They are poor countries.

Hon. Members should go to Mexico to see the vegetables that are produced there. I visited three markets in Mexico City and saw beautiful vegetables there. The tomatoes were the size of cantaloupes. Why should we not have a three-year or five-year deal with Mexico amounting to $300 million to $700 million per year on vegetables? My wife is getting sick and tired of paying three bucks a head in February for cauliflower that was grown in Arizona or California and controlled by a multinational food company from the farm right through to the retail store in Regina. The situation is the same with fruit.

We can deal with a host of countries. It seems to me that that is the wiser course to follow. We would not be limited to one major market. We would not be dependent on the health of one country's economy. We would not be dependent upon the patronizing goodwill of a United States administration, be it Republican or Democrat, and we would not be subject to interference with our sovereignty by our big and powerful neighbour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? If there are no questions or comments, debate.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, earlier today when the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) spoke, she said that Opposition attacks on the Government's free trade policy were "negative, negative, negative". After hearing her speech, I think it is clear that what she had to say was empty, empty, empty.

The Conservative initiative to get a comprehensive free trade agreement between Canada and the United States is clearly an ill-advised and perilous undertaking. This centrepiece of Conservative Government economic and foreign policy will undermine our sovereignty and our ability to protect and enhance the cultural, social and economic well-being of Canadians. That is why we oppose the Prime Minister's initiative and that is why every day more and more Canadians say that this initiative must not be allowed to go ahead.

The Liberal approach to trade is to implement policies designed to secure and expand Canadian export markets throughout the global economy through the GATT framework. The Government speaks of following a two-track policy:

using the GATT and also talking separately with the United States. The fact is that the Government is downgrading our activity and influence in the multilateral GATT process. Instead of developing the necessary industrial and economic policies that will make Canada more innovative and competitive in world markets, the Conservatives have put all of their eggs in the basket of comprehensive bilateral free trade with the United States. This is nothing more than a new and dangerous form of continental protectionism.

The Conservative Government has failed in so many ways. It has failed to take effective action to help the more than one million jobless Canadians find productive and permanent employment. It has failed to address the financial problems confronting post-secondary educational institutions and in fact Conservative policy has made these problems worse. The Government has reduced expenditures on industrial and regional development programs. It has reneged on its promises to increase federal expenditure on research and development. In fact, it has gone in the opposite direction, as was demonstrated during the past several days when we saw evidence of how it has been savaging the National Research Council. Instead of cultivating Canadian sovereignty and our freedom to develop our own style and quality of life, the Conservative Government has rushed blindly into negotiations for bilateral free trade to integrate Canada further with the economy of the United States, weakening our capacities to develop policies to help our country become a successful and a first-class competitor in world markets.

In opening his free trade talks with Washington, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has dramatically raised Canada's profile in the current American national debate about trade. His timing and that of the Government could not have been worse. Business and Congress in the United States are in an absolute panic because they believe they are not selling enough in world markets. They want fewer rather than more imports from Canada and the world and this means that conditions are not right to get a trade deal that is a good deal for Canada. The only way the Government can get any kind of trade deal with the United States is to make concessions that will be unacceptable to Canadians generally.

While speaking for the Government today, the Minister said a lot about what she wants from the United States in a trade deal, but she did not say one word about what she is willing to give up in return. That is the problem. The silence of Conservative Members on this subject speaks volumes. It tells us quite frankly that there is no way we will get any kind of deal with the United States that is good for Canada without paying a price that Canadians will not want to pay.

We have seen how British Columbia shake and shingle producers have been damaged by President Reagan's imposition of a 37 per cent tariff. What happened there shows how the Prime Minister's alleged special relationship with President Reagan is meaningless when it comes to preventing the United States from taking steps to damage Canadian interests. Now there has been the recent decision made by American authorities to impose a 15 per cent duty on softwood lumber. This is the latest evidence of the incompetence of the Conservative Government and its bad management when it comes to trade relations with the United States.

The Minister for International Trade and the Prime Minister have, since that decision, been trying to argue that it shows why we need a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States. They say that such an agreement would mean that the United States would no longer be able to carry out harassing actions against Canada like the duties on shakes and shingles and on softwood lumber. Nothing could be further from the truth. Nothing could be more mistaken. President Reagan, in his famous letter to Senator Packwood, said very clearly that the United States will never give up its present laws enabling it to impose countervailing duties and other trade protection measures in any trade agreement with Canada. If that is the case, the Prime Minister, the Minister for International Trade and the entire Government are wrong. What is the point of seeking a general free trade agreement with the United States if it will not protect us against harassment by the United States of Canadian exports and will at the same time put at risk hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs and our ability to make our own decisions about the future of our country and its people?

There is no doubt that American negotiators at the bilateral free trade talks have specific and well-defined goals. The Americans have already talked about seeking a level playing field in their relations with Canada. They have already talked about wanting national treatment in their relations with Canada. What is especially disturbing is that the Prime Minister, in a speech made last spring on trade, said that he and the Government are ready to give national treatment to Americans.

He spoke of seeking for Canadians national treatment in the United States and there is no way that could be obtained without giving the same thing to the United States. This means that we will no longer have the ability to develop our own policies to foster Canadian enterprise, to foster specific Canadian industrial sectors, to foster Canadian economic development in less developed parts of our country, unless we give exactly the same treatment to the United States, to its companies, and to its own regions.

It is clear that in these free trade negotiations the Americans will seek to curtail regional incentive programs which encourage industrial development in disadvantaged areas like the Maritimes. They will seek to weaken the unemployment insurance program and other social programs so important to Canadians. They will seek the dismantling of our agricultural marketing boards across Canada, requiring Canadian farmers to face stiff foreign competition during an extremely tough financial crisis in Canadian agriculture.

American trade negotiators will ask for commitments affecting investment that will prevent future efforts to strengthen Canadian ownership of our economy. Particularly troubling and worrisome is that Americans apparently regard cultural industries as ordinary business enterprises. They will therefore be putting intense pressure to change our well-established policies encouraging the existence of Canadian books, magazines, theatre, broadcasting, and film. They will also be pressing us to give up our ability to set our own monetary and fiscal policy. Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, has already talked about seeking a higher value for the Canadian dollar. If this happens, it will remove a legitimate Canadian competitive advantage bringing at the same time higher interest rates for our economy.

What about the auto industry? It is central to the success of our economy, along with the forest products industry, I have to add. The auto industry is the basis for jobs for 120,000 automobile assembly and parts workers in Canada, and the basis for the jobs of hundreds of thousands of other workers in related industries.

Studies commissioned by the Conservative Government make it very clear that one of the targets on the U.S. negotiator's agenda could well be the removal of the Auto Pact safeguards that protect thousands of Canadian jobs, and make sure that there is an appropriate high level of Canadian content in cars assembled here. A month after the federal Government study on automotive trade was completed in November, 1985, Clayton Yeutter said:

> I do not preclude alterations of the Auto Pact as a result of comprehensive negotiations.

The Conservative Government's conduct of trade policy has been marked by a lack of preparation and incompetent management. The evidence is clear. The Prime Minister, his Minister for International Trade, and his Cabinet, this Conservative Government cannot be trusted to defend and support Canada's best interests when it comes to Canada's sovereignty and its trading relationship with the United States and with the world in general.

I believe that the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition, has a different and a better approach. As our Leader said, "We will look for Canadian solutions to our own and world problems, not just the fifty-first state approach of this Conservative Government."

This means above all that we must stand up for and defend Canadian sovereignty, something the Conservative Government has shown all too little inclination to do. Standing up for and defending Canadian sovereignty must continue to be the foundation for our national policies. These national policies must be aimed at defining and achieving the true potential of Canada. This will not come from this incompetent and wrong Conservative initiative. I call on this House and this country to reject this initiative, as I am sure they are going to do well before the next election and certainly when the votes are counted in that election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. McDermid: I have a question for the Hon. Member. He is saying that we should not carry on with negotiations with the United States, that this initiative should now be cancelled. His Leader—he is the white-haired gentleman who sits to your right—said that we should carry on. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) says that we should carry on. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is not sure where that Party is going. The Hon. Member said this morning that there was a policy and that he would send it right over to me. He has not done that yet, so there probably is not a policy. That was another of his great speeches that he delivers off the cuff and then gets caught with his proverbial pants down.

I would like to ask my hon. friend from Windsor, who always delivers a delightful political speech full of rhetoric and no positive ideas, why Premier Bourassa, who happens to be a Liberal, is supporting these negotiations. His Leader the other day said that we must carry on with these negotiations. Why is he today advocating that we do not carry on, that we abandon it immediately? Or, is the headline in The Toronto Star editorial correct when it refers to: "Having it both ways?". Is that what the Liberals are trying to do?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Our Leader has stated very clearly, as recently as last week in a speech to the Empire Club, that we cannot support the Mulroney trade initiative with the United States. In that speech he said that if the talks are to continue, the United States must agree to stop the harassment of Canadian trade through steps like the duty on softwood lumber, and also that there must be a commitment by the United States to drop trade protectionist measures like countervail.

Furthermore, if the Hon. Member is asking me about what our Leader has been saying, I would like him to explain this statement made in June, 1983 by his Leader when he said, speaking of free trade: "It affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it, not during leadership campaigns or at any other time." I do not often find anything to agree with on the part of the present Prime Minister, but what he said at that time in 1983 made sense and still makes sense. I am sorry he is not sticking with that very sound view that he expressed in 1983.

Mr. Caccia: As you probably recall—and this is a question to my hon. colleague from Windsor West—the present Government decided to dismantle the National Energy Program when it took office and, shortly after, the Foreign Investment Review Agency. I would like to ask the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) what he thinks of these two steps that were taken before the trade negotiations were launched.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Those decisions by the current Government were wrong on their merits. Apparently the current United States administration did not like those measures. That was a very important reason for the haste of the current Government to dismantle the measures in question.

Well, if that was the case, it was the height of folly for the current Government to throw away what could have been two key bargaining chips in moving ahead to get this House to approve its dismantling of the NEP and FIRA, using its massive majority, without getting anything whatsoever in return from the Americans. This is a prime example of how incompetent this Government is when it comes to managing the country's affairs, whether it is the trade relations we have with the United States, or anything else.

Mr. Kempling: I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) a couple of questions. He mentioned the Auto Pact and safeguards in his comments. I would like to ask him to tell this House how many times in the last 10 or 12 years the safeguards have been implemented. What was the Canadian content in automobiles exported to the United States last year and this year?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I can tell the Hon. Member that there were a number of occasions when Canada was part of the world-wide recession when the content level of Canadian production by the subsidiaries of the American based multinationals fell to the point where the safeguard levels were important. They were important before that, for example, on occasions which led to the building of the large van plant by Chrysler in Windsor some 10 years ago. If it had not been for the breach of Chrysler of the then safeguard regulations—and they are also the current ones— the plant would not have been built as a way of picking up the content required. I do not have at my fingertips the current Canadian content of cars exported to the United States, but I believe it is much higher than would be the case without the safeguard provisions.

I conclude by making the point that the inference in my hon. friend's question is strange. Some of his colleagues, speaking of contradictions, have said over and over again: "Don't worry, the Auto Pact is not on the table; the safeguards are not on the table; everything is okay". However, the clear inference in my hon. friend's question is that the safeguards are irrelevant and that we should not worry about giving them up. That is the Tory stand revealed out of the mouth of the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are four minutes remaining in the question and comment period. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), followed by the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), and then the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) did not write his speech. Knowing the integrity of the man and his knowledge, I am sure he would not make such a speech in the House. He spoke about shakes and shingles. I believe it was one of the Hon. Members of that Party from Newfoundland who initiated that debate on an opposition day. They did not have any idea about the industry whatsoever. They were prepared to continue exporting raw cedar to the United States. Now the Hon. Member stands here like a defender of our cause. It is disgraceful. These people do not know what is going on in the country.

I should like to pose the same question to the Hon. Member as the one I posed to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). Given that the Macdonald Commission, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), the International Woodworkers of America, the BCNI, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce advocate that we proceed immediately with free trade, how can he possibly rise in the House and say that we should use a two track method through GATT to negotiate with the United States and still advocate that we suspend enhanced trade talks with the United States? It behoves me. He is contradicting himself, and I would like an explanation.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think what I said is quite clear. If my hon. friend takes the trouble to read Hansard when it is available, he will see that I spoke in a perfectly consistent and logical fashion.

My hon. friend referred to a list of people who are supporting the Conservative initiative. I could give him a list just as long, if not longer of those who question it—the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the brewing industry, the grocery manufacturing industry, and so on.

The basic point is that the more we look at what the Conservative Government is doing, the more we realize that it is on the wrong track. Never mind whether it is one, two, or three tracks, it is on the wrong track when it comes to defending Canada's interests. Now that the Conservatives have noticed that the public is cooling off on their initiative, it is interesting how they are afraid to use the term "free trade".

Some Hon. Members: We never used it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): They say: "We never used it". When the Prime Minister made his initial statement, he said that the Government would seek the widest possible reduction of trade barriers in the agreement with the United States. What else does that mean?

I should like to conclude by making the point that on May 29 President Reagan of the United States, in a speech to the National Association of Manufacturers, said: "Just last week we began negotiations with Canada, our largest trading partner, on a new comprehensive free trade agreement which should lower barriers to U.S. exports". There is no doubt in the minds of President Reagan and his people what they are trying to get, if they are trying to get anything from Canada. There is no doubt in President Reagan's mind about what this Conservative Government is willing to give the United States.

By the way, Mr. Reagan did not say in his speech that this agreement would lower barriers for Canadian goods going into the United States. He did not say that it would lead to them giving up countervail. All he talked about was lowering barriers to United States exports to Canada. As the old Latin maxim says, the fact speaks for itself; res ipsa loquitur.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question or a comment, whichever you want to call it. The only time safeguards were used in the last 13 years was in the case of the Chrysler van plant in Windsor, of which the Hon. Member made mention in his comments. It was the only time that the safeguards were invoked, and it was because Chrysler in importing large trucks into Canada went beyond what was allowed under the Act.

Also I should like to tell the Hon. Member that in the last two years the Canadian content in automobiles exported from Canada has been pretty close to 80 per cent.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member made that comment. It reminded me of another time the safeguards came into play. It was in the negotiation of the arrangement for a substantial investment of hundreds of millions of dollars to expand the American Motors plant in Brampton. I can speak from my personal knowledge of the situation. The safeguards were a factor, and they continue to be a factor.

Again I ask why the Hon. Member is contradicting his colleagues—

Mr. Kempling: I am not.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —especially the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and using language which indicates very clearly that he is ready to give up the safeguards. I say on behalf of hundreds of thousands of Canadian auto workers: "Shame on you".

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the House Leader of the Liberal Party. Earlier today his spokesman on trade matters, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, said that the Liberal Party had a policy on trade. He said that it was produced after a series of policy meetings, that it was in booklet form or in written form, and that he would be pleased to pass it on to me. I have not seen it yet. I should like to ask the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Party if he would take it upon himself to ensure that I have in my hands the policy of the Liberal Party on the trade situation before the debate has finished today?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if I could have a page, I would be happy to send it to the Hon. Member. I hope he will read it. I hope he will support it. It is a lot better than that of the Conservative Party, which is dragging Canada down in its trade with the United States and with the world.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 66, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Customs Tariff—Effect of tariff on book publishing industry; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy)—Disarmament— (a) United States position on Strategic Defence Initiative. (b) Request joint parliamentary resolution be drafted; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Trade—Canada-United States negotiations—Economic Council's projection.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Langdon:

That this House condemns the government for confusion, lack of direction, and secrecy in its trade policy, and specifically, condemns:

1. the misguided efforts of the Minister of International Trade to present a unilateral proposal to the United States which undercut the Canadian position before the Commerce Department's lumber countervail decision;

2. the weak and contradictory response of the same Minister to that lumber decision, by which she has neglected firm Canadian action and possibilities and used mere rhetoric and legal appeals within the very US system of countervail she criticizes;

3. the failure of the Canadian Government to eliminate the damaging trade effects of the US Farm Bill which hurts so many Canadian Farmers;

4. the weakness of the Canadian Government in its response to the customs surtax and the differential US tax on imported as opposed to domestic oil;

5. the way in which this government's free trade talks with the US have made Canada a target of US countervail and congressional action rather than helping this country escape such actions;

6. the lower priority given by this government to GATT negotiations rather than to comprehensive bilateral talks with the US; and

7. the failure of this government realistically to assess the massive constitutional roadblocks in the way of a truly fair bilateral agreement between Canada and the US.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great pleasure that I take part in today's debate. As a Member from a rural riding, I am particularly interested in this issue, and I intend to comment on paragraph 3 of this motion, and I quote:

3) the failure of the Canadian Government to eliminate the damaging trade effects of the US Farm Bill which hurts so many Canadian farmers;

Mr. Speaker, the world market is now being influenced in ways that are affecting the incomes of Canadian farmers. We must fight on several fronts at once to put an end to this very disturbing trade development. We have shown that we can, and that we are able to take the necessary action.

Recently, in the Throne Speech, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sent a clear message to the farmers of this country: We will spare no effort to ensure the productivity and growth of our agricultural industry.

We realize that Canadian agriculture is faced with tremendous problems, and we must show our determination to protect the interests of our farmers in the face of this unfortunate subsidy war between the United States and the European Common Market.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may illustrate the impact of this war on our agriculture. According to the statistics provided by Agriculture Canada, for every dollar we spent in 1985 to help our wheat producers, the United States spent $2.57, expressed in Canadian currency. The European Common Market spent even more, namely $2.73, in Canadian funds. Instead of diminishing, the gap has widened during the present crop year, and it is estimated that the Common Market and the United States will spend nearly four times as much as we do, namely $3.75 in Canadian currency.

Mr. Speaker, the situation is absurd. The root of the problem is the Common Market's joint agricultural policy and the resulting US Farm Bill. This war of subsidies generates unrealistic world prices which simply cannot reflect production costs. Just think, Mr. Speaker, they now estimate that the U.S. Farm Bill will amount to a tax expenditure of at least $52 billion over the next three years, not to mention the $1.1 billion in export subsidies.

Right now the amount of export rebates—export subsidies, in fact—given to the European Economic Community is higher than the price of our wheat at Thunder Bay and, in some cases, this export rebate is twice as high as the initial price paid to western Canada wheat producers.

We all know that world market trends should not be dictated by government subsidies or measures, but indeed by supply and demand, by such factors as stocks and quality. This is why we must work hard, as other countries are doing, to eliminate this practice of resorting to subsidies and protectionist measures in the farm products trade. Painfully aware that the Canadian farm community is up against tremendous difficulties, we have made it quite clear that we intend to protect our farm producers against these unfair price-setting mechanisms.

Mr. Speaker, never before has agriculture been given top priority in the Speech from the Throne. We did just that. Never before either did a Government make such a strong and clear commitment with respect to men and women who belong to the Canadian farm community. We do live up to our commitments. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has proved to be a staunch defender of agricultural interests since we came into office. Thanks to his support we have been able to make a most eloquent case for Canadian agriculture, and again Mr. Speaker, this is only the beginning.

All Members of this House realize, of course, that Canadian farmers have been severely affected by the impact of unfair subsidy policies as practised by the United States and Europe. As the Prime Minister stated before the House, this deplorable situation may well undermine the very principle of free trade throughout the world. The Government of Canada is determined to stop this from happening. We are exploring every possible avenue at the international level in order to restore common sense and fairness, and once again, the case we have made shows our determination to help our farmers in this country.

Mr. Speaker, last spring, I was a member of the Canadian delegation that went to Washington to obtain some understanding of the US Farm Bill. We heard from the US Secretary of Agriculture himself that the United States would do everything in its power to regain the markets it had lost, and that they also wanted to teach the Common Market a lesson. Since, as I said earlier, I have a special interest in agricultural matters, I was also sent to Luxemburg for the annual meeting of European and Canadian Parliaments. We discussed the EEC joint agricultural policy, and they said, Mr. Speaker, that the Americans were subsidizing even more than they were, and that they could not do otherwise because of the problems of their own farmers. So it is a vicious circle between the United States and the European Common Market, and somehow we have to negotiate with these two superpowers. Hon. Members are all aware that we cannot afford to spend 70 per cent of our budget as the EEC does, on helping our farmers cope with the disastrous effects of this trade war. However, we are determined to fight with the resources we have, and we are confident, because our cause is just.

The issue of farm subsidies is high on the Prime Minister's priority list at the Economic Summit in Tokyo. As a result, agriculture has become one of the most important issues for the major trading countries. I know the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is taking every opportunity to explain Canada's position on the subject to his counterparts in other countries.

The Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board) (Mr. Mayer) also co-operates very actively with countries opposed to subsidies, with a view to finding solutions to the agricultural trade problems. Recently, with the support of a number of countries, we made strong representations to have agriculture listed on the GATT negotiation agenda, and we were successful. However commendable these efforts, their results will not be felt overnight. Such is the context in which the Prime Minister's challenge becomes really meaningful. As he stated, preliminary estimates indicate that about $1 billion will be required to provide assistance to Canadian farm producers. Tossing such figures around will not make the problem disappear, far from it.

Canadian agriculture covers several products, several agricultural regions, and several different conditions. In fact, it has to be one of the most diversified sectors we can think of, so much so that we will have to come up with an innovative approach if we want our programs to be effective.

As we have said on many occasions, Mr. Speaker, our farm producers are up against a country-wide problem which calls for a fair solution on a national scale. The Minister of Agriculture is now holding a series of consultations with the leaders of Canada's major farm organizations and with his provincial counterparts. In weeks to come I will be meeting with farmers in my riding of Argenteuil—Papineau to discuss the future of family farming operations. Providing fair and effective assistance is not something which can be accomplished overnight, and the Minister of Agriculture stands ready to devote a little more time to meet and consult with major interest groups before taking action. He simply wants to offer the best program available and we share his enthusiasm in this respect.

Mr. Speaker, our commitment is unmistakable: we will intervene to help the farming community, and we will do so as soon as possible. We have no intention of slashing into existing programs to come up with this additional help. We will find the money without adding to the tax burden, and this help will be in addition to the funds already set aside for Canadian agriculture. This process will result in a national program that is fair and will give farmers the help they so badly need. It is the kind of measures to which the Government was referring in the Speech from the Throne when it undertook to spare no efforts to help Canadian farmers. And our farmers know we are supporting them. We have always done so in the past and we will continue to do so now.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on her very fine speech. I think it points out again that the Government is the friend of agriculture and knows agriculture inside out. There are many people in our caucus who are active in agriculture and represent the Government well.

• (1630)

I want to point out to the House that when I requested from the Liberal House Leader their policy on trade, what was presented to me by the—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Oberle: He can make a comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member is now commenting on a speech made prior to the speech of the Hon. Member who just spoke. I hope he will comment on that speech only.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I understand that this period of time is for questions and comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary please take his seat? I think he is well aware that when he rises for questions and comments, the questions and comments are to be on the speech of the Hon. Member who has just finished speaking, not on any previous speech. I hope Hon. Members will take that as notice.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, does my colleague believe that a brochure outlining Liberal policy on trade would be a "transcript of a televised address by the Right Hon. John N. Turner on the free trade initiative of the Mulroney Government", dated Ottawa, June 16, 1986, in which he criticizes the Government but in which there is not one word of policy which is supposed to be the Liberal policy on free trade? Does the Hon. Member think that the Canadian people are that gullible?

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, of course I can hardly be expected to know the Liberals' policy on external trade since they don't have one.

The Hon. Member's question is quite apt, because today we are considering an Opposition motion that says the Government has done nothing to deal with the problem. I will restrict my comments to paragraph 3 and the U.S. Farm Bill, Mr. Speaker, since it was the subject of my speech.

The Government has taken this matter very seriously, and I can tell you that our Canadian grain growers, for instance, have been affected by the drop in world prices caused by the EEC's policy, while EEC producers have been shielded from these effects by their subsidies.

Mr. Speaker, Canada cannot tell the European Parliament what to do. Canada cannot intervene, because agriculture is not part of the GATT.

So, I would like to know— I think it has been pretty obvious ever since we came to Parliament, Mr. Speaker, that on the other side of the House, they may be criticizing the Government but, on the other hand, it is easy to criticize the other party when one has nothing to say. What kind of policy do they have on trade? We have no idea.

The Hon. Member who is the free-trade spokesman for the Liberal Party has a position that is entirely different from that of his leader, and every Member of the Official Opposition who rises in the House has a different opinion. Clearly, I cannot be expected to know their thoughts on the matter because they don't have any.

[English]

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, in her remarks, the Hon. Member indicated that the Conservative Government recognized the damage being done by the U.S. Farm Bill to Canadian grain producers. This damage was estimated by the prairie pools at $2 billion for wheat and barley, an additional $1 billion for western oilseeds and rye, and an additional $1 billion for eastern corn and small grains and soya bean producers. That totals approximately $4 billion in damage this coming year, to which the Government has responded with a $1 billion package. Let us consider the damage to the dairy industry, which is very important to her riding, if full free trade in agricultural products results from these talks. Professor Warley, a well-known and rather conservative-type of economist, has estimated that fluid milk producers can expect a 20 per cent to 40 per cent reduction in price if Canadian prices have to be harmonized with U.S. levels. There would be a $1.5 billion loss in quota values. Industrial milk producers would have to deal with a 20 per cent loss in price and a loss of quota value of $3.5 billion.

In light of that, can she explain why she supports initiating this kind of discussion with the Americans when the effect is going to be so devastating on one other aspect of agriculture in this country?

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, right now we don't know, because talks are in progress. Farmers in my riding bring up the subject every time we meet. They are concerned about the possible impact of free trade, because they say the Americans are going to invade the industry. I am not so sure about that, Mr. Speaker. What about the status quo? Canada is an exporting country. We need markets. Today, throughout the world and not just here, there is an incredible surplus in agricultural products. Our Prime Minister has to find us a place where we can sell those products we know how to make so well in Canada.

I am not so sure that talks with the United States would be a disaster. But these talks have to start first, and I think it is too early to speculate on the outcome. As a Government Member, I will be the first to stand up for the interests of my farmers, when the time comes to say yes or no to lowering trade barriers with the United States in the agricultural sector.

The Minister says so and the Prime Minister too. Right now, we are engaged in consultations. We are trying to see what the impact will be of this new openness, and eventually, we will.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that we have given—he said very specifically that our Government has made a commitment to Western farmers. We have brought in the money. Now, with the treasury we were left by the Liberals, we can hardly be expected to work miracles, but we did our best, and Western farmers and Eastern farmers as well received the benefits.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my comments this afternoon will be very short. I am by and large in support of the very thoughtful motion put forward by my hon. friend from Essex—Windsor. I am pleased to say I had the opportunity to second this motion and I think its importance requires it to be read to Members of the House once again, so I will simply say:

> That this House condemns the government for confusion, lack of direction, and secrecy in its trade policy, and specifically, condemns:
> 1. the misguided efforts of the Minister of International Trade to present a unilateral proposal to the United States which undercut the Canadian position before the Commerce Department's lumber countervail decision;
> 2. the weak and contradictory response of the same Minister to that lumber decision, by which she has neglected firm Canadian action and possibilities and used mere rhetoric and legal appeals within the very U.S. system of countervail she criticizes;
> 3. the failure of the Canadian Government to eliminate the damaging trade effects of the U.S. Farm Bill which hurts so many Canadian farmers;
> 4. the weakness of the Canadian Government in its response to the customs surtax and the differential U.S. tax on imported as opposed to domestic oil;
> 5. the way in which this government's free trade talks with the U.S. have made Canada a target of U.S. countervail and congressional action rather than helping this country escape such actions;
> 7. the failure of this government realistically to assess the massive constitutional roadblocks in the way of a truly fair bilateral agreement between Canada and the U.S.

• (1640)

I am sure that the people of Canada who are watching the debate today are feeling increasingly more perplexed and confused as they listen to members of the Government refer to these talks. As I have been sitting here, the talks which are ongoing with the United States have been called free trade talks, enhanced trade talks, enhanced bilateral trading agreements, the freer trade option, the comprehensive trade agreement and expanded trade with the United States. What is this free trade discussion?

Some Hon. Members: All of the above.

Mr. Riis: I believe that my friends opposite choose the definition to meet their particular bias. People listening to this debate must be shaking their heads. The Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) said that we are really trying to negotiate "good trade". Well, who is not trying to negotiate "good trade"? We have confidence in the ability of Canadian manufacturers, industrialists, businesssmen and entrepreneurs to compete internationally. This has been proven time and again in telecommunications, transportation and high fashion, to name only a few. I could go on and on. Canadians have demonstrated that they have the ability to compete internationally. They had the ability to carve out 30 per cent of the American softwood lumber market through aggressive marketing, doing a good job at home, modernizing their sawmills and having hard-working employees and sophisticated marketing strategies. We have done very well.

Mr. McDermid: And have the tables turned on them.

Mr. Riis: As my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade (Mr. McDermid) says, and now have had the tables turned on them. That is indeed the case.

What is it we are negotiating? We call it all kinds of things, but what exactly is Mr. Reisman negotiating?

Mr. Blenkarn: A better deal.

Mr. Riis: This individual has publicly advocated the negotiated transfer of Canadian water to the United States. That is his personal view. He is on record as favouring such an agreement with the United States. We do not know if that is what is being discussed behind closed doors. We do not know what he is negotiating with regard to our marketing boards. We do not know what our negotiator is saying with regard to UIC for our fishermen. This whole process is taking place in secret.

Mr. Blenkarn: Of course it is.

Mr. Riis: My friend from Mississauga confirms that it is being done in secret. It is not being done in secret in the United States. The American Senate recently held public meetings to examine the impact that these talks are having on particular sectors.

Mr. McDermid: Did you watch them?

Mr. Riis: In my constituency of Kamloops—Shuswap I have been asked the following questions: What is the impact of these talks on the cow-calf operators in Kamloops—Shuswap? What is the impact of these talks on vegetable growers? What is the impact of these talks on the feather trades? What is the impact of these talks on the fledgling brewery and winery industries in British Columbia? We know what the impact of these talks has been on the softwood lumber and shake and shingle industries.

The most critical group at this point is the Thompson Nicola Manufacturers' Association, which is comprised of 150 independent manufacturers which are attempting to learn what impact this will have on their manufactured products. As a Member of Parliament, I cannot respond precisely to those inquiries. There is no place they can go for answers because we do not know what is being discussed. I do not understand how Members opposite can endorse this 100 per cent when they do not know what is being discussed, what is being negotiated away.

I guess it is the Peter Pan approach. If you really believe you can fly, you can fly. If you really believe that Mr. Reisman will do a good job, he will do a good job. After our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had his little singsong and meeting with President Reagan in Quebec City, he said that he had all the faith in the world that we would liberalize our trade with the United States to everyone's benefit. Within a matter of days the shake and shingle tariff hit us right between the eyes and closed down a number of mills in British Columbia.

Mr. McDermid: Are they working now?

Mr. Riis: The Parliamentary Secretary asks whether they are working now. Most of the mills that closed in my constituency are still closed. The people were all laid off.

Mr. Stewart: Are their sales down?

Mr. Riis: Of course their sales are down. The Member asked if their sales are down. They are not operating, they laid off all their employees, they closed down the shop and boarded up the doorways. Of course their sales are down.

Mr. McDermid: Careful. When was the last time you were home, Nelson?

Mr. Brisco: They couldn't have been very efficient.

Mr. Riis: The Member from the Kootenays said they couldn't have been very efficient. I will talk to some of the sawmill operators adjacent to his constituency and remind them that they were not very efficient.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I hope Hon. Members will have questions and comments after the Hon. Member's speech. It is a great speech and I would like to listen to it.

Mr. McDermid: That's debatable.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) said that the shake and shingle operators who are not presently working were not efficient. I hope he will pursue that in the period for questions and comments later.

We are very concerned about what is happening. We have been asked to buy a pig in a poke. The Government is asking us to have faith in its ability to negotiate a good deal. That reminds me of Neville Chamberlain when he came back from Munich with a piece of paper in hand. He said he had a letter from Hitler saying, "peace in our time". Adolf Hitler said he would not invade the Sudetenland. Neville Chamberlain said that we could all relax because we had that piece of paper from Adolf Hitler.

There are some similarities between that situation and this in the sense that Mr. Neville Chamberlain was duped. I suspect that our Government was duped by the President of the United States when he said that their interest is really to facilitate our trade and help us whenever possible. The facts are exactly the opposite. Since this Government took over the administration of Canada, $5000 million worth of trade has had some kind of border penalty imposed on it. That has never happened before in Canadian history.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Riis: My friend says "wrong". Perhaps he could explain when we were so devastated by a foreign government at our borders. Is that the kind of deal that we can expect? Is that the kind of trading arrangement with the United States that our Prime Minister has been promising us? We all remember that when the United States subcommittee was deciding whether or not to proceed with the so-called free trade talks, the President wrote to Senator Packwood, the chairman of that committee, asking him to give the free trade talks his endorsement and saying that if there were any problems in areas such as softwood lumber, he would intervene unilaterally if necessary.

That is exactly what has happened. We have a 15 per cent tariff on our softwood industry. How did the Government respond? I suppose it reflected back to when the American Government first slapped a tariff on our shake and shingle industry and we came back with that heavy hand to show how serious we were. We said "It is time we slapped a duty on teabags, on Christmas trees and we will charge more for books coming into Canada".

In our own constituencies, I am sure we have all noticed the petitions circulating in virtually every bookstore, begging the Government to reconsider that particular decision. After all, who is being penalized? It is the readers of Canada. Canadian citizens who enjoy reading American publications are the ones who are going to have to pay more for these books in our bookstores. That really got to the Americans. It demonstrated clearly just how tough and serious we are.

Then there was the 15 per cent tariff on our softwood lumber. What concerned and confused a lot of people in Canada was when the Government decided, prior to an actuai decision by the United States, to say publicly to the American forest industry that it was guilty. We said "We are guilty, we do subsidize our softwood lumber". The Premier of British Columbia, Mr. Vander Zalm, at that time started the discussion when he stood publicly with his Minister of Forests and agreed. He said: "Yes, we believe we subsidize our softwood lumber industry and, therefore, we should get the federal Government to make a case for us". The Government did. It said: "Before you come in with a verdict, we are pleading guilty". The Government said: "We have in fact given up on the case which is before the ITC or the Department of Commerce. We are a guilty party". It confused people that within days of the jury coming back with its decision, we pleaded guilty. We should have waited until after the decision came down, but we did not. We played right into the hands of the Americans on this particular issue.

Five thousand million dollars of trade has had some kind of tax levied at our borders. We have seen the mismanagement of the Government, particularly during the last few days with the report of the Estey Commission, which indicated a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of $1 billion. This is the Government which was supposed to do business better. This was the Government which was going to clean up the act the Liberals left us with. This was the Government which was supposed to be fiscally responsible. This is the Government where the Prime Minister intervenes and has a prison built in his own constituency, placing an additional $40 million burden on the taxpayers. Is this fiscal responsibility? Is this what Canadians can expect from the Government?

We lost on shakes and shingles. We are losing on softwood lumber. We lost on the fishing industry. We lost on finished steel. Is this what our free trade arrangement with the United States is all about? As my hon. colleague indicated earlier, we would like to see a different approach. We do not see at this time much point in continuing with these comprehensive free trade talks. I am not certain we are even talking about free trade any more. Members of the Government have not used that term today.

We should be dealing with the lumber dispute, considering the impact it has on virtually every region of Canada and the tens of thousands of jobs which are at risk. As early as this morning, in conversation with one of the largest sawmill operators in central British Columbia, I asked what they felt the impact of this 15 per cent duty would mean for them. He said it was difficult at this point to determine, but it would certainly mean that layoffs in the industry would occur much sooner than normal in the traditional cycle and that recalls would occur much later. He said that a lot of people might be unemployed for a longer period during the seasonal downturn in central British Columbia than what would normally be the case. That was the best case scenario. Then, of course, he recognized that there were many sawmills where the margin of success which allows them to remain in business is certainly less than 15 per cent, and anticipated some mill closures. We say let us deal with these problem areas whether it is lumber, the fisheries or the shake and shingle issue. Whatever it is, let us sit down with the American counterparts and arrange a solution in those critical areas.

As I indicated earlier, we have a great deal of confidence in the ability of Canadians; industrialists, businessmen and entrepreneurs, to compete internationally. Let us look, then, at the GATT round of discussions. There is an opportunity to not only improve our relationship in terms of trade with the United States, but with all countries, to develop aggressively on all fronts. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) spoke earlier of this two track system. However, it appears these two tracks are widening as we go further and further along. Let us concentrate on a general agreement on tariffs and the trade talks as they begin now in terms of long-term security of our economic sector here in Canada.

In closing, I would suggest that the kind of agreement we must look at is something like the Auto Pact, not a free trade agreement. The Auo Pact is anything but that. There should simply be an agreement between the two countries on how to maximize the opportunities both in the United States and in Canada. That is the kind of model we feel we ought to be looking at in a whole variety of sectors as we negotiate ways and means of improving not only our trade relations with the United States, but with all countries with which we presently trade.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I always listen to the Hon. Member very attentively and I always find his speeches most interesting and informative. However, I was not only surprised but extremely disturbed at his comments this time, particularly when he talked about the fact that he did not know what was going on in the negotiations and that he was concerned they were being conducted in private. I wonder if the Hon. Member has ever negotiated anything himself in his career, either as a Parliamentarian or otherwise? I would be interested to know that. I certainly have and I can never remember a case where I have carried on those negotiations in public.

In addition, I know the Hon. Member's Party has a close association with the Canadian Labour Congress. I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us if he knows of any member of the Canadian Labour Congress who advocates carrying on its negotiations in public? I would be interested in knowing that. I hope the Hon. Member will tell us. Perhaps he could identify those members of the trade union movement who advocate carrying on negotiations with employers in a public forum.

The Hon. Member knows that when trade unions negotiate, they do it confidentially. They do it in private. When they arrive at the result, they announce it to their membership. It becomes public knowledge after the membership has had a chance to vote on it. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have indicated that that is exactly the process which will happen here as well. I would like to know from the Hon. Member if he has ever negotiated anything in his life. Second, can he tell us what trade unions which support the New Democratic Party advocate carrying on their negotiations with employers in public?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I assume the question was put in a way that does not deserve a direct response because the answer is very obvious. One of the major differences with negotiating a contract, working conditions or wages is that the negotiators have the full confidence of those they represent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: In other words, the negotiators of the contract are chosen because of their proven ability in the field. They are chosen because of their expertise and because they have the confidence of the people they represent, both on the management side as well as on the labour side. The point I was making earlier is that such is not the case in Canada today. Canadians do not have confidence in the Government of Canada to negotiate a good deal for them. Hon. Members need only ask the cattlemen in my constituency if they believe the Government of the day is representing their best interests. I can tell Hon. Members what their response will be. It will be no.

As I indicated in my speech, I was on the telephone as late as today speaking with a number of large forest operators. I asked them if they know what is going on in terms of these free trade talks. I asked them whether or not they have confidence in the Government, and they told me that they do not have any confidence in the Government. I did not bother contacting the number of small operators who have been betrayed by the Government. The small operators, and I am talking about small sawmill operators, perhaps those with 40 or 50 employees, were never informed or included. In fact, they were not even considered as part of the council, either nationally or in British Columbia. I say that they were not involved; they were not consulted. They were not involved in the process in any meaningful way.

In closing, the least the Government could have ensured was that all forest operators in the softwood industry, particularly in those areas which will be impacted by this decision, were made aware of the procedures so that they could be exempted. I refer particularly to those small companies that pay exorbitant stumpage rates under the small business program in the province of British Columbia. In a sense, they have been betrayed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I think the House Leader of the New Democratic Party ought to be advised that we have had three motions of confidence in this session. With respect to each motion the Government received the confidence of the House, which is the confidence of the people in our system. When the Hon. Member is talking to cattle operators, brewery people, chicken producers and timber operators in his riding, I hope that he will let them have some confidence in Canada. I hope he will give them the confidence that they will have access to a market 10 times larger than they presently have, which will make them more prosperous.

That is what the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has said, as well as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. That is what the Canadian Manufacturers Association has said. That is what every economic group in Canada has been saying, from the Economic Council of Canada down to the Macdonald Commission Report which, as he knows, was a Liberal report. Why would the Hon. Member not have confidence in Canada? Why would the New Demcratic Party not have confidence in Canada? Why would the Hon. Member not talk to his people and give them some confidence? Perhaps if he gave them some confidence he would not have the unemployment that he has in his constituency.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, granted, there have been three votes of confidence in this session. However, the people of Canada will have an opportunity in 1988 to indicate whether or not they have confidence in this Government. As the polls indicate today, the people of Canada do not have confidence in the Hon. Member or in his Government. However, I will leave that point for another time.

The Hon. Member asked whether or not the suppliers and manufacturers—Canadian firms—want access to the United States market. We have access to the United States market in softwood. We have access to the United States market in shakes and shingles. The Americans have stopped access to these markets. What has the Government of the Hon. Member done about it? How has the Government reacted? We have access which is why these groups say: "What does free trade mean? We have free trade in softwood." Have the Americans taken off the countervail? As part of the negotations have they said that that countervail will be taken off? No.

Mr. McDermid: You said it was a secret. How do you know that?

Mr. Riis: Because I have heard nothing to the contrary. The only thing I can assume from what I have heard and read—and I have certainly not had an opportunity to have a discussion with the negotiator—-is that the countervail will remain in place. We have free trade in softwood and it is not doing us any good. We have free trade in shakes and shingles, and it is not doing us any good in terms of the countervail threat which is always hanging over our heads.

In closing, I will simply say to my friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), that we have access in these areas. But if he is saying to the wine producers and the small brewers in British Columbia that they have nothing to fear in terms of free trade, then I say that he is absolutely and totally misinformed and wrong.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I got a great kick out of the Hon. Member's speech. It was full of inconsistencies. The Hon. Member has great faith in the business community and in the ingenuity of Canadians, particularly Canadian entrepreneurs and so on and so forth in terms of their carrying on. That is right, and so do we. The business community also supports the initiatives of the Government in the trade negotiations.

Mr. Riis: Even the breweries?

Mr. McDermid: Certainly. We have sectoral advisory committees, and the agricultural industry is well represented on it. In fact, all industries in the country are well represented on these advisory committees. They have input into negotiations, which is why these committees are in place. I am surprised that the cow-calf operators and the milk operators do not have that type of confidence since it is their people, the people for whom they vote in these various associations, who are sitting on these sectoral advisory committees. They are giving advice to the Government in this negotiation process and playing a very important role. I think that the Hon. Member is misleading his constituents when he stands up and says that they do not have confidence in the Government. When they ask him why they should have confidence in the Government, he should say because their representatives are sitting on the sectoral advisory committees which have been set up by the Government to protect their interests. That is the answer for his constituents. That is what the Hon. Member should tell his constituents when he returns to British Columbia. I know that they will feel a lot better then.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I will give a very short response, which will allow time for more questions. My recollection is that the various provincial federations of agriculture have indicated without exception some deep concerns about these negotiations. All the negotiations have taken place in secret. What is it that our negotiator is negotiating away? Is he negotiating away the dairy products marketing board? Is he negotiating away the various marketing boards which deal with poultry? These are the concerns that we as members of the New Democratic Party have. These are the concerns that have been brought to our attention by the various federations of agriculture. We are suspect whenever something as important as this takes place in secret, in camera, in private. If we have nothing to fear and if in fact the net gain to Canada will be obvious, then why the secrecy? What is it that the Government is attempting to keep from the people of Canada?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the debate this morning and this afternoon. Having heard the interventions of two Ministers and the desperate efforts of the Parliamentary Secretary, I sense that the Government is in deep trouble, by the way it has approached the debate today in a desperate attempt to confuse the issue and by asking for policy direction from the Opposition as if it had not a mandate to set its own policy. I find the debate an indictment of a Government that is in deep trouble. The debate points to the confusion, the lack of direction and secrecy in its trade policy on the part of the Government. It is a revealing and welcome debate.

When one looks at the negotiation process alone, one cannot help but think that the Government really made a decision without thinking it through and without realizing what it was getting into. Why on earth would the Government come into the House in the fall and winter of 1984 and introduce Bills which would virtually dismantle FIRA? Why would it announce in November of 1984 the elimination of the National Energy Program? Why would the Government do that if it had in mind a few months later to enter into trade negotiations with the United States? The answer to that question escapes me. Perhaps one of the Ministers or the very eager-beaver Parliamentary Secretary will want to answer that question later on.

Why would the Government give away two major, important trading chips before the negotiations were even announced, let alone even begun? With the elimination of the National Energy Program, the Government eliminated something the United States did not like at all but something which we felt and still feel is in our national interest. The powers of FIRA were reduced, and that was something that the U.S. Government did not like at all. However, we thought that was in the national interest. Then, having done those two things, the Government embarked upon the trade negotiations.

In recent weeks, the making of another policy decision has raised questions as to whether or not the Government has its act together. I am referring here to cuts made to scientific research and development. How can we approach a more competitive North American market situation while reducing our knowledge in technology and scientific progress by way of reducing the funds made available to that very important function? It does not make sense. It does not come together. It is a policy that does not seem to take into account the fact that if trade negotiations were ever to be completed, we would need even more to be scientifically and technologically equipped to compete in a more competitive market. How was that decision made? Not one government spokesperson has offered an explanation of that today.

In addition to the National Energy Program, FIRA and what has been done to scientific research and development, there is also the issue of the timing of these negotiations. Even the best friends of Tory Members would have to admit that it could not have been worse. The Government did not take into account or did not seem to realize how powerful Congress could be, how it could manoeuvre its own agenda to our disadvantage and how unwise it was to launch these negotiations just before a mid-term U.S. Congressional election.

That is not all. To launch trade negotiations at a time when we are enjoying a large trade surplus is certainly not the most advantageous moment to do so. We are not negotiating from a position of trying to arrive at a balance in trade. We are not trying to convince our trading partner that the time has come to give us a break. We are trying to negotiate with a partner who can ask at any time what Canadians are complaining about since they have a surplus and are selling to the Americans some $20 billion more than they are selling to us. The timing of these negotiations leaves one wondering about the thinking that went into the decision before it was made.

No matter how frequently questions are asked by Hon. Members opposite in the course of this debate, the conclusion is that this decision was not thought out. The entire measure was launched without preparing a strategy, without ensuring that we had certain chips with which to bargain and without ensuring that we had certain policies in place at home, policies that would make the transition manageable. It was done without ensuring that the American political process would not stand in the way of these negotiations. As we all know, Congress has now played a much greater role than it has at any other given time. Not only that but the U.S. Government now knows that it has a trade deficit with Canada, and that has never been so clear in the past as it is now.

Let me give the House an example of the kind of at-home domestic planning which is absent, the kind of planning the Government ought to have done in relation to these negotiations. The main debate here at home is about jobs. The preoccupation with jobs, be it in Ontario, Quebec, the Atlantic region or the West, is a real one. The Government cannot tell people that it is good for the economy to have freer trade in North America if it cannot give those people jobs and the assurance that there will be a managed transition and a way of protecting both existing and new jobs. Statistics and studies have indicated that there will be losses in manufacturing, services and other sectors. People will face the kind of job losses that result whenever a market becomes more competitive and particularly when the quantities produced by the American economy are such that it has all the advantages in retail pricing because of the volume of scale.

Why is domestic planning so evidently absent? Perhaps it has been kept a tight secret from the public and the Opposition. We do not know, for instance, of any adjustment program designed to protect some 520,000 workers who will lose their jobs as indicated by the Economic Council of Canada last week. What kind of protection will men and women who lose their jobs be offered as a result of the trade negotiations? We do not know.

That is not all. What kind of industrial restructuring will be put into place in order to strengthen our industrial capacities and lay the foundation for new industrial capacities? Where is the plan for facilitating the phasing out of certain industrial sectors in case we lose them? We do not know what will happen with the restructuring of industries in Ontario, Quebec and other parts of the country where industries exist. There is a big blank silence on that subject.

What will be our policy in research and development for facilitating our ability to compete once a free trade agreement of this kind is achieved? That we do not know. We all know, however, that cuts are being effected and that our research capacity is being diminished. We do not know what it will be compensated, offset or replaced by. In that kind of vacuum, with that lack of knowledge, it is no wonder the Opposition is opposing this measure. The Opposition has been kept in the dark. We do not know the answers to these three major questions.

I notice that the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) is smiling about this. I remind him that this is very important stuff. We are talking about the jobs of several hundred thousand Canadians whose future is at stake. That is what the news release by the Economic Council of Canada published on October 20—

Mr. Redway: Three hundred and seventy thousand new jobs. That is what it says.

Mr. Caccia: —about 520,000 jobs would be lost by 1995. That is not a minor figure. Even if it were only one, we would have to be concerned about how we provide for the transition of the person affected by this change.

An Hon. Member: Five million people change jobs each year.

Mr. Caccia: What we are talking about here is the potential management of a change that could be quite drastic. I submit that a change would not only be limited to trade. Once you touch trade, you also touch a number of other activities in our economy, as other speakers have indicated in a number of exchanges in Question Period. For instance, you touch social security, competition laws, standards, and any other activity that is somehow touched upon by the economy. Therefore, when we talk about so-called freer trade, we really are talking about a number of facets that affect our culture, our national identity, our activity in general well beyond just the question of trade. Maybe not in 10 years or 20 years, but maybe in 50 years I fear that what we are really talking about with the words "freer trade" will be something that could be determined as economic union.

I am very worried about this possibility. We cannot limit an integration on this continent in terms of trade. We cannot just reduce it to trade alone, for the reason that I mentioned a moment ago. Many other walks of life and many other activities would be affected. You cannot draw the line on trade alone, as has been the experience in Europe in the last two or three decades as a result of the economic unity that has taken place there.

There are measures that affect jobs and the livelihood of Canadians that flow from this initiative of free trade talks. There are aspects related to the environment that I would like to raise briefly in the limited time available. There is one aspect that flows from the national treatment policy that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) elaborated upon in a statement a few weeks ago.

National treatment is a technical term indicating that one country will give the other the same domestic treatment that it gives at home for the policies that it implements in relation to trade. To put it in a very descriptive way, the Prime Minister said: "Goods from Manitoba will be treated exactly the same as goods from Minnesota". That puts it very clearly. One may ask, for instance, how the very important initiative of shipping western coal to eastern Canada will be affected through the adoption of a national treatment policy. This was raised as a significant initiative and measure that would have some significant positive effect on the environment. Evidently the answer is that it could not be put into place in Canada. We could not go ahead as we would under the present conditions by shipping western Canadian coal to eastern Canada, unless we also extended the same treatment to the high-sulphur Virginia coal, which is environmentally undesirable, as a result of this specific national treatment referred to as one of our main pillars in the negotiations.

Therefore, there is reason to conclude that environmental protection could be seriously endangered if we were to conclude a free trade agreement that included a national treatment as one of its mainstays. By virtue of this example, this would have the effect of not permitting us to proceed with the utilization of western Canadian coal, which would permit us to create jobs in large numbers—up to, I am told, some 200,000 jobs—because of the rules that would have to be respected under the national treatment.

That is not all. In the management of the environment, a study was conducted on environment and free trade by the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council. It was published in June of this year. So far the Government has been completely silent about it. In that study, three basic thoughts are put forward as pre-conditions that would have to be put on the table by Canada in relation to the environment in the evolution of our negotiating position. The first one is:

> Canada's ability to manage a renewable and non-renewable resource use—must not be compromised and should if possible be enhanced through negotiation.

The second point made by the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council is:

> Canada's ability to control pollution and waste disposal through similar strategies must not be compromised, and should if possible be enhanced through negotiation.

Finally, the principle that:

> Canada's ability to protect natural ecosystems, including components such as habitats, wilderness, and endangered species, must not be compromised and should, if possible, be enhanced through negotiation.

Now, what in essence is the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council saying here? It is saying that once you enter a North American continental policy position or situation of free trade, you could have situations whereby certain companies, particularly the multinationals, demand the removal of certain environmental control standards in order to be more competitive with companies south of the border.

Mr. Speaker, I see that you are indicating to me that my time is up. I will perhaps leave the elaboration of this point to another occasion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Brisco: I have listened with interest to the remarks and statements by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I would like to ask him to respond to two or three points. He was criticizing us earlier in his speech because we had sought the views and the policy considerations of the opposition Parties. I understand that the role of the Opposition is to oppose. However, I think it is also understood, and one only need read the contribution to debate by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), when he sat in Opposition, to clearly understand that it is not unusual for the Opposition to offer additional suggestions or counter-proposals which are of merit. In seeking those out, it is the role of the Government to inquire of the Opposition about its positive contribution, rather than the Opposition devoting its entire time to criticism.

The Member for Davenport also made reference to the dismantling of FIRA and accused us of destroying something of value. It was FIRA that destroyed something of value, the entire petroleum industry and the way of life in Alberta. If the Hon. Member has any doubts, I ask him to read the admission by the Minister at the time responsible for that fiasco.

Mr. Axworthy: It's really prosperous now, you guys. It's really doing a lot!

• (1730)

Mr. Brisco: You will have your turn, Mr. Axworthy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, please.

Mr. Brisco: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) will also have his turn. One only needs to read the admission of Marc Lalonde to understand the process and exactly where that Government was headed. It wanted to crush and cripple the economic strength of Alberta. There is no other answer to that question. It is a matter of record from the mouth of the man who performed the act.

Finally, referring to the concern of the Hon. Member with regard to cuts in research, to make it simple for him, I suggest that he turn to page 4 of today's Quorum wherein it indicates "Government pledge of $1 billion for research not smoke and mirrors". I invite him to read that and then recant.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the first point raised by the Hon. Member is probably the major one. I draw his attention to the fact that we are not only criticizing and opposing. Our Leader came to the House, in June to deliver a speech on trade, which is something his Leader has not done, that contained some positive elements in the context of the free trade debate. I do not know about what the Hon. Member is talking. He was probably not here the day the Leader of our Party was in the House and delivered that speech. Today three of the six opposition speeches were from our side of the House. We even delivered to the eager-beaver Parliamentary Secretary a copy of the speech by our Leader to indicate to him the direction we would be taking in terms of policy matters. Concerning—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Caccia: I was asked three questions, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member opposite elaborate upon the purchase of high-sulphur coal by Ontario Hydro from the United States with the outflow of Canadian dollars? How could that be reversed, in terms of acid rain and the outflow of dollars by the purchase of low-sulphur western coal? While he was the Minister of the Environment it was probably one of the dossiers on which he worked. Would he advise the House what he did when he was Minister of the Environment to convince Ontario Hydro to use low-sulphur western coal rather than high-sulphur U.S. coal?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that the report on high-sulphur coal was published just a few weeks ago. The matter was studied as part of an initiative going back to Liberal times. However, the results were published and given to us in a report just a few weeks ago. Therefore it is a measure which is being advanced or put on the agenda, so to speak, in 1986. It is a very interesting measure, and I am glad the Hon. Member is interested in it.

If we proceed under a free trade negotiation scheme which includes the national treatment clause, we will not be in a position to make use of our own coal from the West to create jobs in the West and to reduce pollution in the East. I hope the Hon. Member understands what the national treatment clause entails and implies. It is a very restrictive clause which will not make it possible for us to use our western coal.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I know you are a biblical scholar and that you are quite aware of the point in the Bible where Jesus said that those who are not against us are for us.

I have listened very carefully to the remarks of the Hon. Member this afternoon. I listened as well to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). Time and time again I listened to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) over the last two years. I am still unable to figure out whether they are against us or for us.

Could the Hon. Member give us his own personal view on whether he believes that the Government of Canada should have commenced trade negotiations with the United States? Second, I should like his own personal view on whether he believes those trade negotiations should now be suspended. Third, I should like to know what is the official policy of his Party on whether trade negotiations should have ever been commenced with the United States. Fourth, I should like to know the official policy of his Party on whether or not those negotiations should now be suspended.

I have listened to his Leader and to the trade critic of the Liberal Party and I am still confused on whether or not they are for us or against us.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for York East is still unclear on where we stand, I can only attribute it to his lack of perception and capability to listen carefully. He has heard several speeches; he has heard us on a variety of occasions. He knows exactly what we are saying. We are saying that we want the pursuit of the reduction of trade barriers to be global. We do not believe in continentalism. We do not believe that it would be in Canada's best interest to engage in a negotiation on a one-to-one basis between us, a fairly small economy, and the Americans, a very large and powerful economy. Our best interest would be better protected in the context of the international global community with all 160 nations participating in the process of a GATT tariff reduction, rather than engaging in the construction of another market like the European one which in the end causes many hardships for those who are kept outside.

The Hon. Member also heard me saying that I am very worried about the terminology used in calling these talks free or freer trade negotiations. In the long term they will lead to economic union, which is not our political idea. I do not think it is the political goal of my Party, but it may be that of the Hon. Member's Party. Traditionally, until 50 years or 60 years ago, it was not. However that Party is entitled to change. We will certainly compare and confront each other with our views on the subject in the next election.

I think Canada's interest is not served in a bilateral trade negotiation. It is better served and only served when we proceed globally. If the view is a global one our position is strongest, and we are not handicapped in a relationship with a massive, powerful, and much stronger trade partner south of the border.

That is roughly the Liberal position which we have developed over decades under Mr. Pearson, Mr. Trudeau, and our present Leader.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, today's debate has been tremendous; we have now had about four different positions from the Liberals! It will be interesting when historians read today's edition of Hansard and take a look at the different positions expressed by that Party.

Because the Hon. Member is so interested in the ecology, does he agree with the statement that "Canada may use her excess water to bargain her way into the United States"? Does he agree with that statement which was made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he was Parliamentary Secretary to the resources Minister?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the Parliamentary Secretary for being so open and not only quoting but also giving a date for the quote. It shows that over time people can change their viewpoints. He has changed his viewpoint on a number of occasions, and why not? He has expanded his knowledge and his experience. I am sure that he has changed his view on certain issues.

I am sure that also applies to the leader of our Party because that statement was made over 20 years ago. There is certainly no intention on our part to engage in water negotiations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On that basis, I think questions and comments are terminated.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that as a Government Member it was rather amusing to hear the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who was a Minister of the Environment, talk about environmental matters. It should be noted for the record that as Minister he did not introduce one Bill, one motion or do a damn thing about the environment. He did nothing but cry, which is what he has done today.

Let me set the record straight. The New Democratic Party is ideologically opposed to any trade agreement with the United States.

Mr. Keeper: Oh, come on.

Mr. Kempling: That is what its members say. They want no negotiations and no discussions. At the same time, they want guarantees of access to that large American market.

Not only is the NDP ideologically opposed to a trade agreement with the United States, it is anti-American in its general attitude. If one listened to members of the New Democratic Party, they would have us cancel our trade discussions with the United States, as they said many times today, they would pull Canada out of NORAD and NATO, and align Canada with some iron curtain countries and stand on the border between Canada and the United States and shake their fists.

Mr. Keeper: Point of order.

Mr. Kempling: At the same time they want guarantees—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Surely there is some limit to the distortion that a Member can introduce into debate in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that that is debate. The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) has the floor.

Mr. Kempling: At the same time, the New Democratic Party wants guarantees of all kinds that will allow the United States to buy products under certain conditions. The reality is that the New Democratic Party is the buggy-whip Party of Canada.

Mr. Keeper: What is wrong with buggies?

Mr. Kempling: One need only read the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) to see the truth in that statement.

Mr. Keeper: What have you got against horses?

Mr. Kempling: What are you clattering about?

Mr. Keeper: What have you got against horses?

Mr. Kempling: There are some parts of the horses I can mention, but I will not go into that.

If we left it up to the New Democratic Party, it would be so far out of date that it would still be supporting buggy-whip manufacturers and wooden wheel manufacturers.

Surely the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor is not proposing that we negotiate a free trade agreement on the floor of the House of Commons? He has talked about secrecy and complained that he does not know what is happening. If that is so, he certainly is not reading the releases from the Department of Trade and has not read the very comprehensive book that has been prepared by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). It is his own fault, not ours, if he does not know what is happening.

We cannot negotiate a comprehensive trade agreement on the floor of the House of Commons. We are proceeding with discussions on a comprehensive trade agreement with the Americans to see if we can reach agreement on a variety of trade irritants that would put Canada-U.S. trade on a different level. There are some 300 protectionist-oriented Bills in the United States Congress, many of them are aimed at Canada and some of them are aimed at Canada exclusively. We cannot put our heads in the sand and retreat. We must find a way to deal with this and then negotiate an agreement. If we find a basis on which to forge an agreement, we will be able to deal with the countervail and anti-dumping procedures currently in place in the United States.

Perhaps we could use the example of the agreement between steel exporters in the United States and European and Asiatic exporters of steel. The American Government has dealt with this and had them come to what is called a voluntary restraint agreement in which the American Government will not proceed with anti-dumping or countervail remedies providing that they stay within the parameters of that agreement.

I believe that whatever trading agreement we can forge would have an element of that VRA so that people trading across the border would not be constantly harassed with threats of countervail and anti-dumping.

We hope there would be a procedure to deal with the trade irritants. A set of rules would be enshrined in a trade treaty so that the trade debate would be removed from Congress and Parliament. At no time have we told the Americans or have the Americans told us in the course of these negotiations that either side would set aside their countervail or anti-dumping.

Surely Hon. Members must realize that trade, tariff and taxes are the prerogative of Congress, not the prerogative of the administration. That is why the President had to go to Congress and the Senate to get approval to proceed with negotiations with Canada. It is not realistic to tell us at this stage of negotiations to ask them to set aside their countervail and anti-dumping because it will not happen. That is why the President stated in his letter to Senator Packwood that he would not set those aside. If we can forge an agreement we will have a method by which we can look after trade irritants as they come before the two countries.

Mr. Keeper: They will keep putting the boots to you, even if you have an agreement. That is the point.

Mr. Kempling: The difficulty we are dealing with here is that those Members are a bunch of caviar socialists, none of whom ever invested. They think an investment is buying a ticket in the 6/49 lottery. They do not know what investment means. Most of them have never worked a day in their life. If they had a callous on their hand, it would be a transplant.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Surely the Member should be required to tell the truth.

Mr. Stewart: He did.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. That is debate.

Mr. Kempling: It was never a condition of our trade talks that we would suspend countervail or anti-dumping procedures while discussions with the Americans proceeded. Furthermore, it was not their position that they would suspend any of their trade remedies while discussions continued.

It is quite possible that if there is sufficient agreement on issues that could lead to a trade treaty, the negotiators may recommend a suspension of each country's trade remedies as part of a preliminary phase in signing a comprehensive trade agreement.

Any agreement that we reach must be good for both parties. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that we will not sign an agreement unless it is a good deal for Canada. I am sure that the President of the United States holds the same view.

Mr. McCurdy: I am sure he does. He is going all over the place saying that he wants to sign a good deal for Canada.

Mr. Kempling: I see the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) who beats his chest about the Auto Pact and drives a Mazda.

Mr. Kempling: Several members of the Opposition have brought up the subject of our fish trade on the East Coast. In reality there is more trade in fish on the East Coast today than there ever was. The demand has increased. The only result of that tariff has been that it costs the American consumer more money. Lumber interests on the East Coast will tell you the same thing. We are going to fight to have the 15 per cent tariff eliminated or reduced, but what is it going to do? The industry says that we will have more orders for more lumber all the time. Jack Munro on the West Coast says that the 15 per cent tariff will not cause any jobs to be lost or decrease shipments across the border. Yet Member after Member in this House has risen and said that there will be 150,000 people put out of jobs.

We negotiated the Auto Pact a few years ago and I was involved in it from the beginning. At that time we heard the same doom and gloom from the same people. They said that everyone was going to be out of work, that American cars were going to flood across the border and that we would not be able to sell Canadian-made products in Canada. In fact, employment in the automotive industry has risen from 30,000 to 120,000. Recently the automotive parts industry announced that it will invest $875 million more in its operations in Canada. General Motors has announced a $2.4 billion expansion of its plant in Oshawa. On the international scale, 10 new automobile plants have been built in North America, five in the United States and five in Canada. I think we are doing very well.

This is my favourite subject and I could go on for hours, Mr. Speaker. I will deal with some of the comments made by Members opposite.

Americans say that they do not subsidize while we do. Anyone who believes that believes in the tooth fairy. I operate a business and I could not tell you how many invitations I had during the energy crisis from southern American states to start a business in the United States. Those invitations offered to pay my air fare and hotel expenses. They offered to lease me a plant or sell me a plant and give me a preferential mortgage rate. They offered to stack a state loan with a county loan and a federal loan to give me the working capital. All I would have had to do was guarantee that I would employ people. If that is not subsidy, I do not know what it is. We do not know what subsidy is in this country. Our negotiators are aware of that and we can handle it.

We are talking about a trade agreement. Members opposite engage in scare tactics. They have told the Canadian people that we are going to negotiate away medicare, social programs and unemployment insurance. That is nonsense. We are not negotiating those things at all. We are negotiating trade matters.

Mr. Keeper: What about generic drugs?

Mr. Kempling: You do not know what you are talking about, little boy. There are 40 generic drugs waiting to come on the market right now that the Member does not know about.

Mr. Keeper: You are giving it away to the multinationals and the Americans.

Mr. Kempling: This is great. It is five minutes to six in the House of Commons and everyone is hollering and screaming. I think it is great that there is so much interest in a debate.

Some of the Members here have taken a comment made by the Prime Minister about national treatment and used it as a scare tactic, saying that suddenly we cannot bring coal from western Canada to eastern Canada. That is nonsense. That subject has been around as long as I have been here. In 1973 we were talking about bringing western coal to eastern Canada. That subject was not dealt with by the Liberals in all the years that they were in power. We may have to take a look at it ourselves if it comes to that. I do not know what we will do with it.

I would like to speak about the reality of the labour scene. In 1985 we travelled from coast to coast in this country. A couple of members of the NDP were with us. They asked every person representing an employer who appeared before us how many people they would lay off if we entered the trade agreements with the United States. I attended all these sessions and I heard that they got answers from hardly anyone. Somehow they have magically pulled a figure out of the air which they do not have to prove.

Our export trade represents one-third of our Gross National Product. Approximately 2.5 million people in Canada are involved in our export trade. That is equivalent to having the whole City of Toronto or the combined populations of London, Hamilton and Ottawa involved in our export trade. Anyone who does not think that is important is not living in the real world. We think it is very important. We believe we have a duty to the people of Canada to explore whether we can reach a comprehensive trade agreement with the Americans and whether we can enshrine in a treaty a set of rules to work by so that we are not continually exposed to countervail, anti-dumping legislation and silly things like this 15 per cent tariff on lumber which is patently unfair. We will take whatever legal course we can. That is our job and that is the way the Minister is going to proceed.

Mr. Young: If you handle it like you handled the lumber, we're in trouble.

Mr. Kempling: Jack Munro does not agree with the Member and I think Jack Munro should know. The lumber people on the East Coast do not agree with the Member either. The best estimates we have is that we will continue to ship lumber to the United States.

With regard to the shake and shingle industry, we occupied 75 per cent of the market in the United States when that tariff was imposed. Before the tariff was imposed, the shake and shingle industry was operating seven days a week with two or three shifts and today it is operating at better than 85 per cent capcity.

Mr. McCurdy: The more contraband there is the better it is, is that it?

Mr. Keeper: You are promoting contraband.

Mr. Kempling: We have Kibbles and Bits yapping over there. They are the caviar socialists.

I guess it is time for me to conclude.

Mr. McCurdy: You had better quit while you are ahead.

Mr. Keeper: What about the question period?

Mr. McCurdy: You are almost finished rebutting yourself.

Mr. Kempling: I am proud of the action that has been taken by the Government. I think we are doing the right thing for Canadians in proceeding with these negotiations with the Americans. I am confident that the result will be a good agreement for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CUSTOMS TARIFF—EFFECT OF TARIFF ON BOOK PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in June of 1986 the Conservative Government slapped a 10 per cent duty on imported English language books. This very mistaken policy of the Conservative Government was in response to the tariff on shakes and shingles.

The Conservatives did that without thinking about it. They did not consider the consequences. It was convenient. There was a provision there and it was easy to do. So this very mistaken policy was adopted. It became very clear soon after, and in the intervening months it has become even clearer, that this policy has not resulted in punishing the Americans. It has certainly not made the Americans withdraw their duty on shakes and shingles, but it has hurt the Canadian publishing industry. It has raised prices on books and has hurt Canadian consumers, Canadian readers. It is in effect a tax on reading. The Government agreed to look at the situation. It has received information in the intervening months, and I would call upon it to reverse itself and take off this 10 per cent tariff.

We have information from the Canadian Book Publishers Council on the impact of this policy. Prices have been raised on books and, of course, administrative costs in managing this new tariff have raised the price of books even further. Canadian libraries are forced to buy books offshore. It is a peculiarity that books destined for public libraries are exempt from the duty. Librarians would expect rebates from the publisher. However, the rebate process costs more than the rebate itself. To get around this, libraries are buying directly from American agents. This means that Canadian publishers who previously had this business and could use the profit from that to help subsidize the publication of Canadian books have lost those subsidies they were in effect earning from their imported English language books.

Most imported books are sold through Canadian publishers and that important business has been lost. International co-publishing has been threatened. Canadian trade publishers have expanded their lists to include foreign originated books for which they have secured copyright in Canada. These books are often printed in the United States. Original Canadian books are often printed offshore for many other reasons, and there is a duty when they come into Canada. Therefore Canadian authors are hurt by reduced sales as a result. This has been an extremely unfortunate policy.

I would like to read what the League of Canadian Poets has to say:

> The League of Canadian Poets strongly objects to the imposition of a tariff on imported books and periodicals—
> The League has supported positive Government actions on behalf of Canadian writing and the Canadian publishing industry. The League, however, deplores any tariff barrier to the free flow of information, and opposes, specifically, this linkage of books and periodicals with current trade disputes and free trade negotiations.
> The League of Canadian Poets strongly urges the federal Government to rescind this tariff.

I wholly support that recommendation. This policy is not hurting American publishers, it is hurting Canadian publishers. It is not going to cause unemployment in the American industry. The Americans have their vast markets in any event, but it will hurt some co-publications.

We have as well information on the legal status of this provision. I agree with the legal opinion obtained by the Canadian Book Publishers Council that the policy is unconstitutional. It goes against the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which provides for equal treatment of our languages. People are not supposed to be discriminated against and now English language readers are being discriminated against because this tariff does not apply to French language books or, indeed, books published in any other language. The tariff is offensive to Section 16 of the Charter of Rights which provides that English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions. How can we justify, then, discrimination against the English language?

Finally, the tariff is incompatible with the guarantee in the Charter of freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communications. Clearly, this impedes the free flow of ideas and information and is highly offensive to Canadians for those reasons.

We have the hypocrisy of the Government. At virtually the same time, it announces a program of support for Canadian book publishing. It specifically included provisions to encourage the Canadianization of the industry, a large part of which is foreign-owned; to strengthen the Canadian part of it; and specifically to encourage Canadian institutions to make their purchases, even of imported books, through Canadian publishers. This very policy encourages them to buy around because of the financial penalty.

I also know that the amount of money the Government is putting into its positive measures for the encouragement of book publishing is actually less than what it is taking away as a result of the negative measures of this book tariff. We have an extremely unfortunate and misguided policy. I urge the Government to admit that it has made a mistake and to withdraw entirely this 10 per cent tariff on imported books in the English language.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) that our Government is committed to promote the Canadian book publishing industry. I also take this opportunity to describe to the House a series of measures which were unveiled by our Government earlier this year.

In his Budget of last February the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that $13 million a year over five years would be set aside to support Canada's book publishing industry. This is an increase of about 25 per cent over the previous years. A successful industrial strategy can only flow from adequate cultural support.

These new measures are aimed at two very specific goals. First, we want to boost the self-financing and growth capacity of Canadian book publishers within their own domestic market by launching a book publishing assistance program designed to set them up on a sounder financial basis. This program will cost about $8 million a year. Second, we seek to stabilize and rationalize the cultural success of books which have a significant cultural value but which cannot be financed solely by the forces of our Canadian market. Concrete evidence of this rationalization effort will be in the form of an annual $5 million-odd transfer to the Canada Council.

As to the Canadian custom tariff on imported English books, I would remind the House that the Government did impose this tariff with much reluctance and in rather saddening circumstances. As you recall, Mr. Speaker, without prior notice last May 22 the United States administration chose to give undue protection to American shake and shingle producers by imposing—savagely, one might suggest—a 35 per cent custom tariff on similar Canadian products.

The American Government acted in full knowledge that the Canadian producers were competing fairly. Diplomatic efforts to have this unfair measure withdrawn or to obtain compensation have proven useless. The Canadian Government has therefore decided regretfully that a firm and appropriate response would be required to show to the United States the negative effects of a deteriorating situation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reassert our commitment to the publishing industry and to emphasize the priority given to Canadian interests in international trade by our Government.

DISARMAMENT—UNITED STATES POSITION ON STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE (B). REQUEST JOINT PARLIAMENTARY RESOLUTION BE DRAFTED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, on October 14, the day after the very important meeting in Reykjavik, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) whether or not the Government of Canada would join with members of the Opposition in sponsoring a joint resolution to be communicated to our ally, the United States, indicating our support for the proposals on disarmament that would substantially reduce by 50 per cent the level of strategic arms and close to 100 per cent those arms of an intermediate nature. Such a resolution would incorporate the very strong and unmistakable commitment to honour the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty requirements of 1972 that there be no testing and development of space-related weapons other than those that are in laboratories or on fixed-ground sites.

I did not receive a proper reply from the Prime Minister. I am surprised because in the past, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) made it very clear that Canada held to the position that the ABM treaty must be interpreted in the most restrictive way possible and that there should be no attempts to alter, bend or shape the rules to allow for the testing, development and eventual evolution of a star wars system that would break the treaty.

Since that time, the Government has beeen backtracking on its original commitments. It has retreated from its original position. In fact, even this weekend, the Prime Minister in an interview given to an American network, said that he basically supports the concept of star wars and that he agrees with Mr. Reagan's approach of not putting it on the table as a bargaining chip.

I find it unacceptable and indeed tragic that a Government that purports to speak for the Canadian people would support the Reagan approach to arms control. This approach denies the world a chance to make an incredible breakthrough. In the last 30 or 40 years, how many opportunities have we had to reach a comprehensive test ban and to reduce the level of nuclear weapons by 50 per cent? How often have we had a chance to put some sanity into what is an absolutely absurd arms race?

The telling point in all this was that all that was needed was an agreement by the President of the United States that he would limit research and development on star wars for a period of 10 years. That is what the ABM treaty requires. It is not such a big concession. It is not such a major threat to security. Research would continue within laboratories but it would not get to the point where there would be a series of prototypes in outer space. At the same time, it would have meant that the super powers were again saying that they would not allow weapons in outer space. If the American President did not have the wit to see that, then surely his allies and friends in Canada should have told him that he should go no further, that he should get back to the bargaining table.

The Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs have expressed optimism and are saying that we have put down a foundation on which we can build. It is clear that the only way that foundation will be reinforced is by changing the attitude of the United States administration. That change will only come about if its friends and allies are prepared to speak up and say that it is time for a change.

I rise during this Adjournment Debate simply to express both my deep regret and my feeling of betrayal that the Government has withdrawn substantially from its previous position. It is now complicit in the approach being taken on the issue of arms control, an approach that will prevent the world from making the breakthrough which is so desperately needed.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in the wake of the Reykjavik summit and in view of the Hon. Member's expressed concerns about the Strategic Defence Initiative and its role in the discussion held in Iceland, it is important to re-emphasize the Government's current policy on this issue. The Reykjavik meeting was specifically dealt with by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in the statement he made in the House on October 21, but I will offer the House the following additional comments to supplement his remarks.

The Hon. Member will recall that the SDI is a research program aimed at investigating various concepts of defence against ballistic missiles. The successful implementation of an effective ballistic missile defence would alter the basis of nuclear deterrence from the threat of retaliation to denying a potential agressor the military objectives of a nuclear attack. Senior U.S.A. officials have stressed that should SDI prove ballistic missile defence to be feasible—and this will not be determined for several years yet, if ever—the U.S.A. foresees a co-operative transition with the U.S.S.R. to a greater reliance on defensive systems. This has been the U.S.A. negotiating position at the Geneva Arms Talks.

The Government considers SDI research to be prudent in light of similar Soviet activity in recent years. Despite this, the U.S.S.R. has until recently refused even to discuss the relationship between stategic offence and defence in Geneva.

The discussions in Reykjavik on this matter centred primarily on the relationship of the SDI to the Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty. In Reykjavik, Secretary General Gorbachev suggested all ABM research be confined to the laboratory. As the U.S. found this interpretation even more restrictive than the current terms of the ABM Treaty, the proposal was clearly unacceptable to them. It should be emphasized that prior to this point, President Reagan had agreed to a 10-year commitment to the ABM Treaty. Furthermore, any linkage established by the U.S.S.R. that agreement on other arms control issues be tied to our resolution of the SDI/ABM question would represent a step backwards from previous Soviet positions.

We have been assured by the U.S.A. that SDI research is being conducted within the restrictive interpretation of the ABM Treaty, in spite of the view in some circles in the U.S.A. that a broader interpretation is legally warranted. We are satisfied with the assurances we have received from the administration. The position of the Canadian Government continues to be that both sides should adhere strictly to the ABM Treaty.

Since Reykjavik both sides have indicated a willingness to discuss their remaining differences and build upon the progress registered there. The Government welcomes this and urges the leaders of both nations to complete the task at hand.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mayer that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to address the House today on a Bill related to western agriculture. I have been a seed grower in northeastern Saskatchewan for the past 36 years. I am familiar with the subject and, as a farmer, am pleased with the progressive changes that have been made to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act by the Minister.

These changes will allow the Minister to be able to implement certain policies that are more or less routine without having to go through an Order in Council. This will give the Minister an opportunity to act quickly when the need arises. Such things as eliminating the need for landlord signatures will be another regulation assisting the producer; interest rates for those in default will be more realistic; and emergency payments for unthreshed grain and others will make the Act less cumbersome to administer.

Producers who participate in both the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and the Advance Payments for Crops Act will be eligible to receive a total of $30,000. A few honey producers and maybe even wild rice producers in my constituency will benefit from this measure, as well as canola and flax growers.

The actual grain-on-hand rule change rather than prescribed tonnes per acre for the advance payment will be a help to high producing producers. Also, this change eliminates the need for a percentage of the Canadian Wheat Board initial payment to enter into the cash advance.

I was happy to see that there will be more flexibility in dealing with outstanding defaulted accounts. Maybe now a producer who is hospitalized with a serious heart attack, for example, and who cannot deliver when the quota is on will not be charged the roughly $2,500 in interest even though he is able to deliver before the end of the crop year. This shows some common sense in this area. The Minister will be able to approve emergency grain drying advances and emergency unthreshed grain advances without Order in Council.

Again, the Minister will be taking steps immediately as the situation warrants. However, I respectfully submit that the Minister could improve the grain drying clause and assist producers greatly by making the advance as soon as the producer requests it. If grain drying were done in the early harvest season there would be better quality grain for market and less left in the field unthreshed.

I come from an area in which we have a problem with great amounts of rain in September. Wheat harvested tough in August and early September will weigh 65 pounds per bushel and will Grade No. 1 or 2 when dry, while the same wheat harvested after the rains in late October will weigh 56 to 60 pound per bushel and will Grade No. 3 or feed. The same applies to all crops. Grain drying in August and early September is also two-thirds cheaper so the producer gains both ways. The Minister would encourage better quality with more bucks in the producers' bank accounts. I will be bringing this to the attention of the committee and will be submitting an amendment at that time.

I would like to congratulate the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board for putting forward an excellent Bill and for the leadership he has shown in his Department. I am sure he will bring forward further constructive recommendations.

Grain producers in Canada are suffering severe financial problems due to the price war that is going on between the EEC and the U.S. In spite of what members of the Opposition are saying, however, there are some bright spots in the agricultural sectors of Canada today.

I have not heard one word from hog producers about supply management since the price started to go up. This tells me that there is a good dollar being made there. Beef producers and chicken and turkey producers are enjoying much better prices with lower feed costs. Milk producers have their own long-term agreement and now also have lower feed costs. Grass seed and other forage crop producers are experiencing excellent prices and good yields. Honey producers generally had a lower yield but prices were good. I also heard that wild rice producers had a good yield and that prices are good. This, of course, does not help the bulk of farmers who are grain producers.

Just to indicate how serious the situation is, let me tell the House where the producer stands today. In the 1950s when there was a surplus of grain, before the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) sold grain to China, barley was trading among farmers and feed lots at three bushels for a dollar or 33 cents per bushel at the farm. This was because of a surplus in the system. All elevators were plugged. With that 33 cents per bushel, a farmer could buy 1.5 gallons or 6.8 litres of fuel.

Today's initial price from the Canadian Wheat Board is $1.40 to the farmer. This will not buy one gallon of fuel. It is more likely that it will buy 3.5 litres of fuel. However, if the farmer has registered his number, he will be able to buy one gallon of fuel with that one bushel of barley because the Government has taken steps to reduce the cost of fuel to the farmer.

The same applies to wheat. The Canadian Wheat Board's initial payment to the farmer is $3.20. With that money, he cannot buy two gallons of fuel. In the 1950s, combines cost less than $5,000 but now cost over $100,000. The comparison could go on and on and the answer would be the same. The cost of producing grain in Canada, even though there are better varieties and better yields, is far too high for the return per unit.

Some young producers who borrowed money to get started have paid interest to the amount of the original loan and still owe the original amount or more. Prices did not follow the inflation that was occurring at the time and all experts predicted that farmers would pay with the inflated dollar. Many producers are very good at what they do but they do not stand a chance if we carry on with the same old approach we have been using.

I do not think the federal Government can solve this problem alone. We must have co-operation from all segments of society. Each group connected to the problem is fighting to protect its own empire and will not give in to lower costs but rather is looking for ways to increase costs. In my opinion, these groups are fiddling while Rome burns.

Prairie pools and co-operatives have not dropped charges by one cent per bushel. Neither have they offered to pay any of their producers part of the money that is held back in dividends. Banks and financial institutions have not brought rates down but rather have thrown other roadblocks in the farmer's way. Chemical and fertilizer companies still charge the maximum price. Each one is valiantly protecting his own empire but hollering at the federal Government to do something.

The federal Government has done many things, the latest being a distribution of $1 billion which the farmers will have soon. However, we cannot do it all if we do not get co-operation from the rest of those involved. The Farm Credit Corporation will have to show leadership and come up with innovative ideas to get us over this hump. Why not take 25 per cent of the crop as a payment? Why not lower interest rates to 6 per cent and readjust them when prices get better? Why not allow producers who take in family members as investors to do so without having to pay penalties on the loans? Why not have set-asides for those who have no alternatives? Banks and financial institutions should follow that example. Other innovative ideas must be there and all should be used.

Grain handling companies and chemical and fertilizer companies should do everything they can to bring down the costs to the producers. If every organization co-operated, we may be able to save the grain producers of Canada. If we do not save them, cheap food in Canada will be something of which we can talk when we talk of the good old days. We might even have to pass a law to make it illegal for financial institutions, Governments, Crown corporations and the like to own land. What happened to that pool of money that was supposed to be available to lend to farmers at 6 per cent? The empire builders are again protecting themselves and a good idea lies dormant.

Now that I have that out of my system, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about a more pleasant subject. Very briefly, I would like to take a few minutes to tell the House about my great constituency of Mackenzie in Saskatchewan.

Mackenzie is the largest federal constituency in Saskatchewan and is comprised of some 75,000 square miles in north-eastern Saskatchewan. The people of my riding are a hard-working, aggressive, God-fearing, family-oriented mixture of races and religions who have all learned to live in harmony with the land in both the north and the south. The bulk of my constituents live in the agricultural area south of the tree line, about 30 miles north of my hometown of Nipawin.

Our type of agriculture is grown in what is called the parkland area of Saskatchewan. We grow over 100 varieties and kinds of crops including all grains, canola, flax, forage seed crops and faba beans. All the alfalfa dehydrating plants in Saskatchewan as well as a canola oil extracting plant are located in the constituency.

Honey is an important crop in the agricultural scheme of things with about 30 per cent of all Canada's honey production coming from the Mackenzie riding. This industry creates numerous permanent jobs and provides a great source of summer employment for young people who do field work and work in the extracting plants. All honey grown in the riding is Canada No. 1 and is shipped around the world.

Seed is a big industry in my constituency. Besides the usual grain and oil seeds, we produce many varieties of forage seed, mostly for export. Clover and timothy seeds are brought in from Norway, Sweden and Finland, countries with wet falls. My constituency has a climate similar to that of those countries but we have better harvesting conditions and are able to send back to those countries seeds which have not been mutated by different weather or soil conditions. This industry not only distributes many millions of dollars to producers, but also provides a very good source of employment to our people.

Our cattle and hog industry is well respected in Canada. We sell breeding stock to all countries in the world. Recently we sent Aberdeen Angus and Herefords to Scotland to improve their breeding stock. Their cattle were getting a little too small.

Our research station in Melfort, Saskatchewan serves 10 per cent of all the agricultural land in Canada. Over 50 per cent of Saskatchewan is covered with forest. The forest industry is very important and provides many jobs. There is a major sawmill at Carrot River and many other smaller mills for lumber and railway ties. There is a large stud mill, a chip board mill and a plywood mill at Hudson Bay, Saskatchewan. Many more people are employed in the pulp business all through the forest area. These products go to the pulp mill in Prince Albert which is now launching an expansion to produce paper. We have started a silica sand mining and refining plant in Hudson Bay. It will expand into all branches of industry where silica sand is used, and eventually employ 1,500 people. This is the only silica sand plant in the west. Canada imports roughly 250,000 tons of silica sand a year.

Tourism is a big business in my constituency which attracts people from all over the world to hunt moose, elk, bear, deer, and migratory birds. Saskatchewan has more lakes than Alberta and Manitoba combined—maybe not more water, but more lakes—and many of those lakes in my riding have good fishing and all summer and winter sports.

Mining is a big business in northern Saskatchewan. In my riding, we have the richest known deposits of uranium in the world. Key Lake and Rabbit Lake are producing now and others will come into production when these mines slow down. Key Lake produces more uranium than the rest of the world combined. There will be an even richer mine coming into production a few years down the road at Cigar Lake.

There are 13,500 square miles of gold producing rock in the La Ronge area. That is a lot of gold up there. As the man says, "There is gold in them thar hills". In the La Ronge area, Starrex Mine is a developing mine. It is 70 miles north of La Ronge. It will be in production in early 1987, and some other mines in the area will be coming into production. This year over 100 companies, mostly Canadian, are exploring and getting ready to start operations. They are spending over $25 million in my constituency.

Mining activities are also taking place in other areas in Mackenzie. At Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting at Flin Flon copper, zinc, and some gold and trace metals are being processed and have been for many years from the Saskatchewan side of my riding. Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting is now operating a new mine at Sturgeon Landing, which is south of Creighton, Saskatchewan. The main mineral is nickel, but there are other minerals and they are being processed at Flin Flon. There are also some platinum finds in the La Ronge area that look promising.

There is also a very interesting agricultural industry in northern Saskatchewan which is now employing a lot of natives as well as others, that is the wild rice industry. The lakes have been planted and I am told they have a good crop this year. That should bring many dollars into the North, as well as providing a lot of work. It is a very work oriented process to harvest wild rice since a lot of it is done by hand.

Many good things are happening in the riding of Mackenzie. The native people in the North are participating in most of these activities. They are building better schools, roads, homes, and places to congregate. The native people have become a strong voice in business in the North. They are forging ahead with the opening of the North. I am sure you will be hearing more from them in the future.

All this activity is going on in spite of the low prices in all segments of lumber, mining, and grain farming. They will work harder and times will get better. They always have that spirit that things will improve tomorrow.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this time allotment and again commend the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). I call on all Members of this House to give speedy passage to the Bill to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) on his speech outlining the activities in his area. It is always important that other Members of Parliament explain their ridings and what they are all about, because we have a diversity across this country. I was interested in his comments regarding some solutions to the current grain situation in western Canada and, of course, across the whole region. Our area does not grow the type of crops his area grows, but we certainly have problems with our grain industry in Ontario.

I was interested in his comments regarding a possible set-aside program. Is the Hon. Member referring to a set-aside program in order to increase prices, to take crops out of production, or is he talking about possible benefits to the soil by taking crops out?

Mr. Scowen: I was talking about trying to get a lesser amount of production. There really are two parts to that set-aside program. One would be that part of the debt would be set aside until things return to normal. On the other hand, we should set aside some crop production in order to bring our surplus down and more in line with what we can sell. Our soil conservation has suffered because of continuous summer fallow crop in western Canada. It is time we added a little more to that soil with some forage seeds.

Mr. Gottselig: I would like to commend my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen), on the excellent speech that he delivered. I would like him to expand on a few of his points. He mentioned the Melfort research station and the work that is going on there. Is there some special work there that would relate to what he mentioned on the set-aside program in terms of production? I was also interested in his comments on the diversity of the economy in the constituency of Mackenzie. That probably is a reflection of the necessity to diversify from the strict agricultural production as we have known it in Saskatchewan. Would he agree with me that the main reason the Minister has introduced these changes in the Act, is to take the power out of the hands of the bureaucrats in Ottawa and give it to the Canadian Wheat Board officials in order that they can respond in a much quicker fashion to the needs of our producers? The primary producer in this whole equation is the one whom we are trying to help.

As a producer and also as an agent for several landlords, I am familiar with all the points he mentioned. The provision not requiring a landlord's signature is an important one for a producer who has three or four landlords perhaps scattered across Canada and even in the United States. With the mail system being what it is today, we know that it takes a long time to get letters back and forth. I think it is a very important part of the whole equation.

Mr. Scowen: Mr. Speaker, I believe I mentioned that it would help producers in that particular case. I would like to refer to the diversity in agriculture in my particular area. Homesteaders came to the area from the Prairies. Most of them migrated there during the 1930s, but some settlement took place in the very early 1900s. That part of the country was mostly opened up as settlers were squeezed out of the Prairies and took up homesteading there. They found that they were able to plant alfalfa in small areas which they were able to break up. We must not forget that they had to break up little chunks here and there to prove up their homesteads. As a result they were able to obtain a very high seed yield.

Not knowing the circumstances, not knowing what was going on there, they thought that if they cleared bigger fields they would get more. That proved to be their downfall. There was a little insect called the leaf cutter bee and that fellow was tripping the seed very nicely for them. They killed him when they cut down the bush and cleared it away, so the alfalfa production dropped off substantially. Then they went into alsike clover, red clover, various other grass seeds, and so on. This is what brought about seed production in Canada. Other countries discovered that we were able to produce these seeds and asked us to produce for them.

The northern and southern parts of my constituency have always got along well. The southern part of the constituency is what we call the farming area. People from that area have found jobs and have worked in the northern part of my constituency about which I have spoken.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, as a Member from the grain growing area of the southern Prairies, I am pleased to join in the debate on Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grains Advance Payments Act.

By way of background may I say that it is obvious that the Canadian grain producer is facing a farm income crisis. Some 80 per cent of the Canadian wheat crop is marketed internationally and has accounted for much of Canada's favourable balance of trade. Lately, record world wheat harvests have increased stocks and depressed prices. It is regrettable that most of the problem relates to undue susidization of foreign grain production, much of which would be impractical without massive government assistance.

Canadian grain farmers have proven themselves to be among the most efficient in the world. They are ready, willing, and able to compete in the international market-place. Unfortunately, however, the play of the traditional market forces of supply and demand has been distorted by the disappointing trend toward subsidization world-wide.

It began back in the early 1960s when the European Common Market established its Common Agricultural Policy or CAP. This was a time when Europe was a major importer of grain and a good customer of Canada. Today, with an artificially high production supported by CAP and by domestic and import subsidies, the EEC has become one of the largest producers. In fact it is the third largest wheat exporter in the world today.

Over the past number of years the European Economic Community has been offering its excess production into the world market at prices which in fact are less than the cost of production. During this period the United States lost a portion of its traditional share of the world grain export market. It appears that U.S. attempts to convince the EEC to change its policy fell upon deaf ears. In order to reduce its massive carry-over inventory of grain and to regain its traditional percentage of the world grain market, last year the United States passed its Farm Bill which announced increased subsidies to U.S. farmers, with particular emphasis upon export enhancement programs. The level of subsidization is such now that the EEC and the U.S. spend $3.75 on farm support for every dollar spent by the Canadian Government on support for its farmers. In other words, the superpowers are paying something in the order of four times as much per bushel in farm support as we are able to pay.

Obviously these massive subsidies offered by the EEC and the United States have substantially depressed world grain prices. It appears that each superpower is quite prepared to structure export deals at virtually any level in order to make sales. One can only hope that taxpayers in western Europe and the United States will eventually rebel at the massive amounts of money being thrown away.

Canadian farmers are no longer competing with their counterparts in the United States and the EEC on the basis of efficiency—a playing field on which Canadian producers would do very well. Farmers are now trying to compete with the Treasuries of these two superpowers. It is well recognized that we in Canada simply cannot compete with those Treasuries. Our problems are compounded by our dependence upon export wheat markets. As I mentioned earlier, 80 per cent of our wheat production goes to export, while in the European Common Market it is only 20 per cent. Our domestic market represents 25 million people, compared with 250 million people in the United States and over 300 million people in western Europe.

I should like to illustrate in practical terms just what impact the grain subsidy war, this international shoot-out, has had on our farming community. At this point I want to thank the research department of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool for some of the information to which I am about to refer. In the Province of Saskatchewan, net realizable farm income in 1984—and that is gross receipts, including payments from government programs such as western grain stabilization, crop insurance, and so on—less depreciation and operating costs averaged $15,000 per farmer.

In 1985 the net realized income per farmer was $10,000, and for 1986 it is projected to be $9,000 per farmer. This sum represents not only the farmer's labour but also the return on a capital investment of almost $500,000. Out of this net realized income, the farmer must not only provide for his living expenses but also try to make payments of principal and interest. Without government support programs, net realized income would have been a negative figure for 1985 and 1986. As a matter of interest, at the same time the minimum wage in Saskatchewan is $4.50 per hour. If that is projected over a year at 40 hours per week, an individual could receive $9,360 per year without any investment at all.

To make matters worse, the farm cost-price squeeze is eroding farm asset values, so that equity is decreasing and with it borrowing leverage. When farmers lose their buying power, the entire agri-business complex suffers—dealers, agents, manufacturers, and small businesses alike.

It is against this background that the Government has become heavily involved on two fronts—international and domestic. The Government has become involved internationally because of the problem of low farm grain prices resulting from unfair practices beyond our borders. We must do everything possible to discuss, negotiate, and encourage an end to the subsidy wars. That is why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) raised the matter of the subsidies and agricultural trade at the Tokyo Summit. That is why in June the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) held a meeting of the grain exporting nations in Vancouver and why he participated in an international meeting in Australia and why he continues at every opportunity to lobby for a return to sanity in the world grain markets. That is why the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), recently in Uruguay, were able to fight for and secure the inclusion of agriculture on the agenda for the upcoming GATT talks.

The World Bank has studied this trend of growing subsidies and cautions strongly against them. In its recently released World Development Report, the World Bank estimates that farm support world-wide will reach $100 billion this year. The Bank refers to these subsidies as an escalating vicious circle and notes that higher farm revenues resulting from subsidies are largely wiped out owing to rising land prices and rents.

The Government recognizes the importance of Canadian agriculture and the damaging effects of our competitors' subsidies. That is why our Ministers have been at the forefront of this issue on the international stage. Progress is slow. Clearly the process will take time. In the meantime, our farmers need support and they deserve it. Through no fault of their own they are suffering.

The name of the game today, Mr. Speaker, is survival. That is why this Government is also acting on the home front. This is why we are improving existing legislation, such as the Prairie Grains Advance Payments Act, to make it more responsive to the farmers needs. The Act is designed to assist producers of wheat, oats and barley in meeting their short-term commitments by providing interest-free cash advances when sales opportunities are limited. Eligible producers are those who farm within the Canadian Wheat Board designated area and who hold current permit books. An individual farmer can receive up to $30,000 under the program. Bill C-12 will improve and streamline the operation of the Act.

The substance of Bill C-12 is, first, to delete several Order in Council requirements in the regulations under the Act. These requirements included approval of the application form, approval of emergency advance payments for grain unthreshed because of difficult conditions at harvest-time and the setting of the advanced rate for the crop year. Elimination of the necessity for Orders in Council will do away with potential administrative delays in implementing various aspects of the program.

Second, landlords who do not wish to participate in the advance program will no longer be required to co-sign an advance payment application submitted by a tenant. Until now a tenant wanting an advance had to have the landlord's signature on the application. Sometimes that was difficult to obtain. The amendment proposed would simply have the tenant sign an affidavit indicating he has clear title to the grain covered by the advance. This straightforward change will make the program easier and lessen the paperwork for those who are participating.

Third, a further amendment will ensure equitable treatment to prairie grain producers by basing cash advances on the amount of actual stored grain rather than on the present basis whereby an advance is calculated by the number of tonnes of grain prescribed per quota acre. Changing the method of calculation to actual volume in storage will enable a producer with high yields to benefit from the program also.

Fourth, another amendment has to do with interest rates on defaulted accounts which presently are set at the beginning of the crop year by Order in Council and remain unchanged until the account is settled in full. In order that participants might benefit from falling interest rates, an amendment will allow the interest rates for defaulted accounts to fluctuate in relation to current rates. At the same time, further proposals will provide the Canadian Wheat Board with greater latitude in dealing with producers who can show that extraordinary circumstances prevented them from being able to complete their repayment obligations.

I wish now to list briefly a number of other initiatives taken by the Government to support and help producers survive during this difficult time of unfair and cutthroat foreign competition, competition fueled by foreign government competition, competition which bears no relationship to the usual market forces of supply and demand; an environment in which the efficiency of our producers is being overwhelmed by offshore subsidies.

In grain farming there are basically three variables: input costs, volume and price. Volume is dictated in large part by the good Lord. It depends on decent growing conditions, moisture, wind, frost, insects and so on. On the other hand, input costs and price supplements are areas in which government can assist and, indeed, this Government has done so in a very big way.

The major input cost of many producers is interest, the carrying charges on loans for the purchase of land, machinery, equipment and operating money. We are told that at this time there is approximately $25 billion of agricultural debt outstanding in Canada. Therefore, a 1 per cent variation in interest rates has a potential, if upward, to drain some $250 million out of the farming economy. Conversely, if those rates move downward, it has the potential to enhance the farm community by the same $250 million. That is why the course of economic renewal laid out by the Government in the fall of 1984 remains so important, not just to agriculture but to all of Canada. The policies of economic revitalization through responsible deficit reduction, more efficient government and encouragement for the small business sector has not only improved job opportunities for Canadians but resulted in stable inflation and, most important, interest rates that are 3.5 per cent lower than when we took office. Interest rates that are 3.5 per cent lower mean that the farm community is paying out roughly $800 to $900 million less in interest costs each year than was the case previously. The prime rate and the farm credit rates are at their lowest level since the spring of 1978, eight and a half years ago.

This spring the commodity based loan program was established. This was an innovative experiment for existing farm credit clients in financial difficulty. This is a program in which the principal will fluctuate in relation to the price of the borrower's main commodity and a program which provides up front assistance through lower payments when the farmer's cash flow is least.

Our Government amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act to permit timely interim payments in the spring when these moneys are needed most by the farmer. The Western Grain Stabilization Act is a program whereby the federal Government contributes $2 into a fund for every dollar put in by producers, the idea being to supplement farm income when prices are low. Last year some $522 million was paid out and this year already an interim payment of $580 million has been made.

A previous Government instituted the capital gains tax which for 13 years hung over the farm community and prevented many, many farmers from realizing their retirement ambitions because their moneys having been plowed back into the farm, were tied up in the land which it was impossible to sell without payment of a king's ransom on a gain which was largely inflationary. Canadian farmers know it was our Government that moved quickly to eliminate that tax for most farmers by immediately instituting the $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption.

Our Government improved federal-provincial crop insurance by raising coverage from 70 per cent to 80 per cent without premium increase. Federal-provincial crop insurance is a program administered by the particular province and contributed to 50 per cent by the farmer and 50 per cent by the federal Government. This program last year paid out $375 million to Saskatchewan farmers alone.

Last year the Government responded to the disastrous drought conditions on the Prairies with the Prairie Crop Disaster Assistance Program which distributed $150 million to those western grain farmers hard hit by drought. There is more, Mr. Speaker, because our Government recognizes the predicament of Canadian farmers who, through no fault of their own, are suffering considerable hardship. The Government remains committed to helping Canadian grain farmers who are facing depressed incomes. The objective is to enhance their cash flow by approximately $1 billion. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has said this will be new money and will be distributed to the Canadian grain farmer. The form of the assistance is now being determined in consultation with the provinces and the farm community so that the system of delivery will be fair and equitable to all concerned. It is vitally important that cash gets to the farmers' pockets with a minimum of administrative cost. It is equally important that it be seen by most to be done fairly and evenly.

The Throne Speech made it clear that in meeting its commitment to Canadian agriculture this Government will spare no effort in seeking to continue to protect the interests of our farming community in the face of unfair pricing and subsidy practices beyond our borders. That is good news, not just for the producer but for virtually everyone else in Saskatchewan and the grain economy. It is well known that farm dollars are circulated many times over through the entire network of suppliers, agents, dealers, and merchandisers.

In conclusion, Bill C-12, will not of itself solve the problems facing Canadian farmers, but it will help. It is similar to a number of other initiatives such as farm debt review, rural transition, commodity-based loans, western grain stabilization, fuel rebates, help to cattle producers, improved crop insurance and drought assistance. Because it helps and because it is timely, it is part of the ongoing commitment of this Government to Canadian agriculture.

We are talking about survival, and every little bit helps. These common sense amendments in front of us today will result in elimination of potential administrative delays and will allow cash advances for harvested grain to be more readily available. These measures will assist cash flow when it is really needed. With the world grain market in its current precarious state it makes good sense to pass these amendments now to ensure that farmers obtain the maximum benefit. I therefore call upon all Members to give rapid passage to these proposals.

Mr. Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my colleague's remarks. I congratulate him on his continuing interest in and the work he has done on behalf of Canadian farmers. The economy of my constituency of Dauphin—Swan River in western Manitoba depends, for the most part, on agriculture, as does my colleague's. I believe, as does he, that this Government has proven its commitment over the past two years to western agriculture. He mentioned that the Government cannot compete with the Treasuries of either the EEC or the U.S. However, I believe, as does he, that we have gone a long way toward helping our farmers. He mentioned briefly the $1 billion pay-out announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about three weeks ago and I would like to ask him if he could expand on the consultations and method of payment under that particular program.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my colleague is indeed right when he raises the significance of the $1 billion which has been promised to Canadian farmers in this time of need. It has been stated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) that this payment will be forthcoming in consultation with the provinces and the farm community. That is vitally important because it is not for the Government to sit here in isolation in Ottawa and determine how money should be distributed to the farm community. That decision cannot be made in an ivory tower sort of atmosphere. It clearly requires the participation of the farm community. That is why it is significant that the Minister of Agriculture has had meetings with representatives of the farm community, and it is my understanding that further meetings will be held.

It is one thing to request a payment of $1 billion and another thing to point out the need for it. That is a well known fact and I think all of us in this House understand the plight that the grain farmer finds himself in through no fault of his own. However, it is also important that the system of delivery of this benefit be seen to be fair and equitable. It has to be structured in such a way that it is accepted by the farm community and seen by most everyone to be of assistance and not favouring one particular sector or group over another.

If I have one disappointment in all of this it is perhaps the reticence of the leading farm organizations to come forward publicly with concrete suggestions. They have been very quick to note the problem at great length. They have been very quick to request cash in the form of a deficiency payment. The problem is set out in many, many pages and the solution involves one sentence. However, I think they know, as do we, that there is a lot more to it than that. Is the payment to be structured as a per bushel payment? Is it to supplement the price? Should it be done through the price of domestic wheat? Should it be paid by the acre? If so, should there be a minimum or maximum number of acres? Should there be an export enhancement scheme? There are so many ways in which this benefit can be delivered and it is time, indeed I encourage farm organizations to come forward with some concrete suggestions, to assist the Government in its deliberations. I console myself with the thought that undoubtedly these proposals are being made privately, but I think it would be encouraging if the major farm organizations in the nation would have the courage to come forward with some concrete proposals rather than expecting Government to structure a program and then reserving the right to complain about it afterwards.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am a bit perplexed this morning. I have been listening to a number of Hon. Members describe in graphic detail the plight of the grain farmer. The point of this Bill is to advance payments as quickly as possible to those farmers. We are trying to co-operate. I would like to hear an explanation as to why members of the Government are prolonging this debate. We want to get on and deal with this as efficiently, effectively and quickly as possible. I do not know why government Members keep prolonging the debate on this Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Hon. Member made a comment or asked a question? The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, be it a question or comment I certainly welcome the opportunity to respond. It is my understanding of the operation of this place that my constituents are entitled to have me express an opinion in debate. In doing so I have expressed the feelings of my constituents in southwestern Saskatchewan about this Bill. It is one part of a program designed to enhance the position of the Canadian grain farmer in light of the unfair and disastrous competition he is facing. If the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is perplexed once again this morning, I cannot do much about it because it is not the first time he has been perplexed.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a question at all here of filibustering. It is a question of the Government talking about some important legislation in the House. This Government, as the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) will know, has made a major commitment to Canadian agriculture. We want Members on all sides of the House to have an opportunity to participate in this very important debate. Some very useful suggestions have already been made. I, as the Minister responsible, look forward to the study of the Bill at committee where we hope to take into account some of the suggestions that are being made here this morning.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, many members of the New Democratic Party, and I suspect of the Liberal Party as well, want to speak on this Bill.

Mr. McDermid: Where are they?

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) asks where they are. We are quite prepared to discuss all the concerns of the farm community at some length. However, we feel that it is important to deal with this Bill expeditiously. Members can relate their concerns in Committee of the Whole. We in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties want to proceed with this Bill. I do not know why members of the Government are prolonging this debate. We still have the third reading and Committee of the Whole stages in which to examine this Bill in detail. I find this very confusing. The New Democratic Party wants to have this Bill passed expeditiously in order to put money into the hands of farmers as quickly as possible. I urge members of the Government to move expeditiously as well.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I was beginning to think the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) did not want to hear my speech. I have listened for many hours to members of the New Democratic Party while wondering why they spoke on and on. I suppose it was because they believed in something very strongly and had some news to tell the Canadian people. I like to talk about good news as well and there is lots of good news with regard to agriculture because the Government has made a commitment to agriculture in western Canada.

I know it was difficult for the Member to listen to the excellent speeches made by the Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) and the Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) outlining the many programs and initiatives which the Government has put in place over the last two years to assist agriculture. I commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) for the influence they have had on the Government and for the excellent legislation they are bringing forward to assist all Canadian farmers. This Bill is an example of that.

The Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act was introduced in the early 1960s and has been a great help to farmers. However, it is time to update and renew it. Members have already spoken eloquently on how the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act is being updated. Grain producers in Canada have been facing very serious problems, most of which are financial. The reasons for this are well known as costs continue to escalate and prices continue to drop.

I have always found it amazing that people will produce far more than the world is capable of utilizing. Although there are people in the world who require food, our systems are not adequate to get the food to the people who require it. I am amazed that the European Economic Community is now talking about dumping food which has spoiled in storage bins while people in Africa do not have sufficient food to sustain themselves. This problem in agriculture can be traced to the international markets which are affected by the subsidies which have been previously outlined. It is due to this that the Government has taken such an active part in the international community to attempt to eliminate the approximately $100 billion of subsidies which go to agricultural producers. That is in the interest of Canada.

We are low cost producers and low subsidizers of agricultural production. We have many natural advantages for the growing of crops. We have the best grading system in the world and a well evolved marketing system. It is, therefore, definitely to our advantage to ensure that the international community works toward eliminating these subsidies. That is why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was able to raise this issue so well at the Tokyo Summit. The word went out from there that the Government of Canada is interested in bringing common sense back to the world trading picture.

In Uruguay the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was able to convince his fellow GATT signatories that the time had passed for papering over the problems and that it is now time to get down to serious discussions, to move toward action and away from talk. These efforts were successful and the GATT nations have agreed, for the first time, that agricultural trade will be a priority item on the agenda.

The amendments to this Act are part of the Government's over-all approach to agriculture. We are moving to improve existing programs while bringing forward new initiatives which will be of valued assistance to agricultural producers. This commitment was made in the Speech from the Throne and it is one of the strongest commitments to agriculture that I have ever heard in a Speech from the Throne. We will work closely with the provinces and producers to ensure that the assistance offered by the federal Government is truly helpful and will enhance the cash flow of Canadian farmers. The assistance offered by the Prime Minister will amount to $1 billion. The Government will participate in the changing of agricultural programs.

Several weeks ago the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board signed an agreement with the Soviet Union whereby it will buy 25 million tonnes of wheat and feed grain over the next five years. The Soviet Union is a very important customer of Canada. I am very pleased that it will continue to buy grain from us and count on us to deliver quality grain at a fair price. In the past two years we have reached agreements with other valued customers including Egypt and Brazil. Canada has a fine reputation on the world market for efficiency, reliability and quality. This has allowed us to find markets for grain even in a world situation of substantial surplus.

The figures recently released by the International Wheat Council indicate that world-wide volumes of wheat and flour trade dropped by 17 per cent over the 1985-86 crop year. However, at the same time Canada was able to increase its market share by 1.3 per cent. We were able to solve the work stoppage earlier this year at the port of Thunder Bay through negotiations. The people at the port have returned to work and moved a record amount of grain over the Thanksgiving weekend. Approximately 700,000 tonnes were moved through that port during the Thanksgiving weekend. It is a fabulous record and farmers are truly happy that labour in the port of Thunder Bay is responding to a difficult situation. I believe they will catch up to any lost transportation which resulted from the strike and that we will not lose any sales because of this temporary stoppage of grain movement.

These instances of productivity and efficiency in the grain industry must not go unrewarded. Indeed, the Government is committed to seeing that the exact opposite occurs. The negotiations on the world scene and here at home that I have described are several of the ways that we can support our farmers in this time of depressed world markets and prices.

The Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act has worked in the past and it will work even better in the future as a result of these changes.

Many of us who are knowledgeable about agriculture believe that there may be ways to rebuild these programs so that they can be more advantageous to our farmers.

Some years ago I put forward a program that I called the assured market plan, which would have taken the moneys under this program of advanced payments and those of the stabilization Act and put them into a plan by which the Wheat Board would pay farmers at the beginning of the crop year to commit a certain amount of production to the Wheat Board. This contract would allow the Wheat Board to call upon them throughout the year as supply or demand required. This would allow things like unit trains to develop and permit a change in the quota program which is now so important to western farmers.

The Wheat Board and the Wheat Board advisers took that plan and came up with something called MAP. It was not acceptable to western farmers and the Market Assured Plan has slipped by the wayside.

However, I believe a similiar if not better plan is being developed. The Wheat Board is now offering contracts to western farmers who produce No. 1 and No. 2 feed barley and oats because in 1984 there was a poor barley crop and concern throughout the Prairies that there would not be sufficient supplies to meet the kinds of markets that the Wheat Board could develop for export feed grains. Consequently, since we were worried about supply, I think we lost some early sales which could have been made.

In June, 1985, the Board had an open quota and found that there was a lot of barley in the system. Toward the end of the crop year, it had trouble finding sufficient sales to move the vast quantity of barley that was stored on prairie farms by farmers who were optimistic about receiving a better price. If the Board had known about those supplies sooner in the crop year, export markets could have been found for that barley, and at better prices. There is a problem in conveying the information about what is in the bins on the farms to the Wheat Pools and the Wheat Board so they can sell it into markets that they know are available. This is one reason why this year the Wheat Board is attempting to contract for barley early in the crop year so it will know what is in place and can make proper plans to move it to export positions.

I think it is important to explain this program so that some of the concerns that are being expressed by the community can be laid to rest. For instance, if a farmer does not take out a contract, will the contract barley be called upon before the quota barley, and will that farmer have to wait to deliver his supplies until all contract supplies are in place? Not only is that not the case, the opposite could be true. If the Wheat Board knew that it had signed for this contract barley, it might open the quotas to try to bring in new supplies early to determine what other supplies are on the Prairies and thus better gauge their export markets.

The livestock community also showed some concern that if too many producers sign up for contracts, they may bid up the price of off-board grain. I do not believe that will happen. I am sure that if the Wheat Board detects this, it will decrease the amount of bushels of grain under contract to make sure that adequate supplies are available to the domestic market. It is not necessary to contract in order to ensure that delivery opportunities are available. There is still freedom in the system and I personally hope that that freedom continues.

Let me use oats as an example. While there are fewer markets for feed oats, it is still an imporant crop in the northern part of the three prairie provinces. Many of the producers have been asking for more freedom to deliver oats into markets that they have found, such as double cleaned oats for the race horse markets of the western United States. They are competing very well with oats from Minnesota. We have the opportunity to put those oats into that California market at a lower price than our competitors, but those producers are having difficulty in getting permits from the Wheat Board to deliver to those markets. In fact, they have found it impossible in some cases.

We have the opportunity to produce oats for human consumption, which is done very little in western Canada. In fact, we import a good deal of that product into Canada at the present time. There are entrepreneurs in western Canada who are prepared to take the risk to produce that product in our own market and believe they can also market it into the United States. However, they are having difficulty getting permits from the Wheat Board to do so.

I believe it is time for the Wheat Board to open up to individuals who can find markets in the United States and to give them permits to see if they can succeed. I believe it will work well and the opportunity is here for the Wheat Board to be more lenient and open with the permits it offers to individual farmers and small producers who, on their own initiative, can find markets for oats in other countries. I believe it is time for the Wheat Board to take this into consideration.

This would be conducive to the growing and marketing of specialty crops and products from specialty crops. The Prairies have done an excellent job in diversifying and producing such commodities as canola, a rapeseed product developed through research, and finding excellent markets through the specialty crops system. Many producers are now growing lentils, birdseed and canary seed. I believe that the rapid expansion in the horticultural area means a great future for Canadian farmers. I hope our marketing system will bend to make sure that farmers can take advantage of any opportunities for their products.

I support the amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. As soon as we hear the views of Members of Parliament, I believe we should pass this Bill because many farmers in the Prairies will take advantage of these amendments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in my place today to speak to the amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. These amendments display the continuing concern of our Government. Our Government was elected in September of 1984 at which time we were given a mandate for reform. Revising the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act is one more indication of the concern we have in terms of acting in the best interests of western farmers in particular. The amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act indicate that we take our responsibilities seriously. I commend Hon. Members, particularly on this side of the House, for the ideas they have put forward. I think this indicates that we take our responsibilities seriously. It shows our concern for the economic well-being of our agricultural producers generally. We recognize the great place that agriculture plays in our country.

Canadians spend over $40 billion a year on food—a considerable amount of money. We have to thank our farmers for their efficiency in producing this food at a very low price. We do not always recognize the input of farmers when we open the fridge and take out some milk, or cheese, or when the meat goes on the table. I would like to pay tribute to those agricultural producers who are producing under sometimes adverse conditions but, nevertheless, very efficiently. They are showing that they can compete with anyone in the world when it comes to producing food on an efficient basis.

For us as prairie farmers 41 per cent of our cash receipts come from the sale of wheat. Wheat is king in Saskatchewan, particularly in the area I represent. However, there are many problems that exist beyond our borders, and other Members have dealt at some length with them. We rely on exports for the largest percentage of our sales. Over 80 per cent of our production must be exported into a world market, a market which is presently congested and in which granaries are overflowing. Many countries which used to import our wheat are now exporting wheat themselves.

The area which I have the honour to represent contains some of the finest farm land in the world. I am sure that everyone has heard of the great Regina Plains. This is an area of level, fertile and highly productive soil farmed by people who can compete with anyone in the world. My riding contains most of the irrigation in Saskatchewan which allows us to produce a wide variety of specialty crops as efficiently or more efficiently than anyone else in the world.

Grain producers across Canada are caught in a vicious cost-price squeeze, largely as a result of the shoot-out between the European Common Market and the U.S.A. We must provide support for these agricultural producers. We do not have the luxury of choice in the matter.

During the last recess and during the recent election in Saskatchewan I spoke to many of my constituents. Members of the Saskatchewan electorate recognize the support they have received from the provincial Government led by Premier Devine. They have endorsed the provincial Government's past record by giving him a new mandate. The deficiency payment which was first announced by the federal Government in the Speech from the Throne and which was later mentioned by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the House, as well as by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), is a recognition by the federal Government of the need to provide some support to our agricultural producers. My constituents have indicated their appreciation for this announcement. They have also indicated their appreciation for the priority that agriculture is receiving from the Government. In simple terms it is a matter of survival for our producers. The deficiency payment, as well as other program changes we have made, will lessen the strain on our producers.

I would like to mention some of these changes, beginning with the removal of the capital gains tax on farm land. This was a very positive step, one well received by the agricultural community. The drought program under which payments were made to livestock and grain producers as a result of successive droughts in western Canada was also well received. Changes to the Western Grain Stabilization Act to allow for interim payments, a change we had requested for some time, were made by the Government. Fuel tax rebates, shared-risk mortgages and commodity-based mortgages are but some of the changes our Government has brought about. They have been recognized and well received by agricultural producers.

All is not gloom and doom on the agricultural scene. We have been making progress in having agricultural subsidy programs discussed at world level meetings. Such a discussion took place recently at the Tokyo Summit. Such discussions will be on the table at the next round of GATT negotiations. Important steps have been taken by our Government to allow for these subsidy problems to be discussed at world level meetings and in order for some solutions to be arrived at.

I believe that more diversification is required on the Prairies. The recent work stoppage at Thunder Bay is a prime example of the vulnerability which exists in our grain marketing and handling system. At the time of the work stoppage considerable effort was put into having grain cleaned and shipped out of the Prairies on a unit train basis. I would like to see this concept improved even further. We should have cleaning plants on the Prairies where grain is grown. The screenings could be utilized for livestock feed. Grain would be shipped in unit trains and loaded directly on to ocean-going vessels. This would eliminate the cleaning and handling charge at the terminals. It would also create a good deal of employment on the Prairies where we have a steady supply of reliable workers available. It would also encourage and foster some of the new and innovative procedures which will be required in agriculture as we move into the 1990s and beyond.

I would now like to spend some time discussing the changes to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. Certainly, very valid points have been made this morning. One that I certainly support is the necessity of not having the landlord sign the cash advance for the producer. I look after several farms for non-resident and resident Canadian owners, and with the mail service being what it is today, particularly in terms of American landowners, there are great delays in having applications for advance payment returned. Most often farmers rely on the advance to pay up their day-to-day bills. Quite often they have large Farm Credit payments to make in the fall and interest-free cash advances assist producers who are going through very tough times.

Another excellent change being made is the current calculation for advances based on the number of tonnes of grain prescribed per quota acre. In the past, the high yield producers could not benefit fully. The proposed amendment changes the method of calculating the advance on the basis of the actual volume of grain the producer has in storage. This will be of particular benefit to those in my area who irrigate and produce very high volumes of grain.

The interest rate problem was with us throughout the early 1980s. When interest rates fell, farmers were still locked in to paying very high rates. The Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act was no different. Interest rates on defaulted accounts were set on the beginning of the crop year and stayed the same until the account was paid off. This Bill will change that. To avoid this problem, the Bill proposes that interest rates for defaulted accounts be allowed to fluctuate in relation to current rates.

These amendments will allow for more flexibility in dealing with outstanding defaulted accounts. The Board will be granted more latitude in dealing with producers who show that extraordinary circumstances prevented them from completing their obligations under the Act. I have and I am sure other Hon. Members have heard stories of illness, accidents or other conditions that prevent farmers from delivering grain on time.

Several regulations, routine and administrative in nature, are altered by Order in Council each year. The Government believes that this process takes too much time and creates unnecessary paperwork. It has seen fit to delete these requirements from the Act. As recommended by the Bill, the application form will no longer require Order in Council approval. Instead, the Canadian Wheat Board will be responsible for the approval of the form. The advance rate for the crop year will no longer require an Order in Council. The rate is set by the Wheat Board and its initial payments are already set by Order in Council. The current process is redundant and time consuming.

With these amendments, the Government has yet again demonstrated its commitment to reform and its concern for farmers. I strongly urge all Hon. Members to adopt these amendments and to pass Bill C-12 quickly.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig), on his contribution to this debate. I know the Hon. Member represents a vast grain growing area of south-central Saskatchewan and that he is a grain farmer himself. I am sure he notes with approval the strong commitment to the Canadian grain farmer in the Throne Speech and particularly the statement that the Government will spare no effort in assisting farmers and will work with provincial Governments and the farm community to develop a way of delivering a benefit of approximately $1 billion to grain producers in Canada.

Considering his expertise in the area and his farming background, I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on his view of the best way to devise a method of delivering this $1 billion to the farming community.

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) for his kind words. The key to this deficiency payment announcement was the method by which it was announced. It was first announced in the Throne Speech which indicated that we would spare no effort to assist those agricultural producers. It was later mentioned in the House by the Prime Minister. The Minister of Agriculture indicated that he would initiate discussions with the provincial Governments at the Deputy Minister level. Probably more important than that was the fact that we would involve the agricultural producer groups.

All too often in the past, we have seen programs announced from this great ivory tower without any concern for the people who are affected by them. The agricultural producer groups which have a grassroots level input can now enter into these discussions. This will provide a direct link with the producers and will allow us to institute the delivery of this program in a way that will be decided by the producers. I believe the key is that the producers themselves will put forward their ideas as to how this program should be delivered.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that we have heard 10 speakers on second reading stage of this Bill and the fact that we all know that farmers are expecting passage of this Bill, would the Hon. Member not agree that we should interrupt the debate now and put the question?

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek mentioned, I feel that I am here to represent my constituents. They want to hear our position on this issue. I do not feel that expressing my opinion on behalf of my constituents is holding up the business of the House.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I was not questioning the Hon. Member's right to speak in the House. I am simply saying that the principle of the Bill is to be discussed at second reading stage. We all know that in principle, this Bill is a good one and should be passed quickly. Why are government Members filibustering the Bill?

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that expressing my opinion on behalf of my constituents is filibustering the Bill. Perhaps the Hon. Member chooses to see it that way. His Party is well known for filibustering a great many things. I do not believe that we are filibustering this Bill.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, Parties decide to filibuster when they are in fact attempting to stop a Bill. If the Hon. Member is interested in representing his constituents, he would be well advised to take steps right now that would enable payments to get into the hands of farmers as quickly as possible rather than prolonging debate hour after hour.

It is not that the debate is not interesting. It is an interesting and useful debate. We are hearing various concerns from various parts of the country and that is fine. However, we are anxious to help the farmers and to put money into their hands. Hon. Members say that they want to represent their constituents. Believe me, their constituents would appreciate being represented by Hon. Members who took action to see that the money got into their hands as quickly as possible.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, just to set the record straight, the House Leader of the NDP knows that farmers presently receive money under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. This Bill has nothing to do with either limiting or increasing the amount of money available.

Last June, we very much appreciated the position taken by the New Democratic Party. Members of the NDP were in favour of passing this Bill at that time and if we could have done it then, all of the proposed amendments would have been in effect at the beginning of the new crop year beginning August 1. Unfortunately, it was the Official Opposition that held it up.

This Bill has been before the House this morning for an hour and a half and it was before the House for about an hour and a half a week ago. In total, it has been before the House for three hours. It is a piece of legislation that affects the agricultural community. A great many Members of the House directly represent farmers. This provides them a very good opportunity to rise in the House to speak on agricultural matters. Three hours is not a long time to talk about a Bill that will affect agriculture.

We appreciate the position taken by members of the New Democratic Party. If their point of view had carried the day, this Bill would have passed last June. We do not feel that three hours of discussion on an important piece of legislation will in any way hold it up.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, so that the record is perfectly clear, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board indicated that members of his Party were concerned about agriculture and about their constituents and therefore wished to make some comments on this Bill. I want to make it perfectly clear that there are many of us as New Democrats who also represent farm communities. As we originally decided, it would be in the best interests of the farm community to treat this Bill expeditiously. As a matter of fact, I recall requests to do just that. In our efforts to be co-operative, helpful, and assist in the movement and passage of this Bill as quickly as possible, many of our representatives of farm communities have decided to raise their comments at the appropriate place, not at the debate in principle.

I have been listening to the debates carefully this morning. Quite frankly, we have gone far beyond the debate in principle. The members of the New Democratic Party say that we should get the Bill into committee where we can deal with the specifics. We will then have another opportunity at third reading, and so be it. Again, I urge the Government to be expeditious and get on with the passage of this Bill, as it requested us to do originally.

Mr. Gottselig: I would like to add my comments to this debate. I have had the good fortune to sit in the House since November of 1984. In connection with serving my duty days, I have been here many times on Opposition Days. If the New Democratic Party showed as much concern for holding up the business of the House on some of those days as they are indicating now, more would be accomplished.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, this House has proceeded with debating of Bill C-12 long enough. Knowing that farmers are waiting for this Bill, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone):

That the question be now put.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find this a very extraordinary procedure. We had a member of the New Democratic Party yesterday standing up and chastising the Speaker for not allowing him the privilege of debating what he considered to be a very important issue. As the Hon. Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) indicated earlier, this is an important piece of legislation from the standpoint of the agricultural community. On this side of the House, we have a strong representation in the agricultural community. We have a number of Hon. Members who want to speak out on this issue, not only in support of the Bill, but indeed to outline to the House and to the Canadian people the tremendous record that this Government has in agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I cannot help it that the NDP does not have enough Hon. Members from the agricultural community to make a point that its members want to make. I cannot help it that they are not interested in agriculture. I cannot help it that they were wiped out in the Province of Saskatchewan because of their supercilious stand on agriculture in western Canada, particularly in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Ms. Mitchell: Let's comment on today's polls, shall we?

Mr. Mazankowski: I am glad the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is back, because he was literally whitewashed.

Ms. Mitchell: What about today's polls?

Mr. Mazankowski: He lost.

Mr. Mayer: He was blue washed.

Mr. Mazankowski: He was blue washed, that is right. He lost every provincial seat in this federal riding, I am told. That has been a traditional New Democratic Party area. I guess that the presence of his Leader and himself did not help matters. I understand they took the Leader into Saskatchewan for a day and a half and they polled him, because they were going down the tube. Unfortunately, the day and a half may have been the difference.

Ms. Mitchell: What's happening federally is that you're going down the tube. What's happened to your polls?

Mr. Mazankowski: Federally? We win in Pembina, we win in Saskatchewan, and the NDP loses in B.C. One of these days they are going to have to go back to the drawing board, which means that their policies are wrong on trade, their policies are wrong on job creation, their policies are wrong on economic renewal.

Ms. Mitchell: That's not what the polls are saying.

Mr. Mazankowski: Polls do not win elections, and you know that. The polls are wrong, and I am a Pole, as well. I am not only frank, but I am a Pole as well.

Mr. Mayer: You are the kind of Pole who wins elections.

Mr. Mazankowski: The NDP has the wrong stand on interest rates and economic renewal. It is the first time in eight years that the major economic indicators have been in the single digits. People across the country know that there have been some major changes and progress has been made. One of them is in the field of agriculture, both domestically and internationally. This Minister and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) have done a tremendous job in promoting the interests of agriculture in the international arena. I would like to compliment them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Just because our Hon. Members want to stand up and support these two excellent, competent Ministers who have distinguished themselves in the most exemplary fashion and who want to speak out on behalf of the farmers of Canada, they should not be denied that privilege by a silly manoeuvre by the Official Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Do they have a farmer over there? No. Well, they do not care. I do not know whether there is a farmer in the NDP caucus.

An Hon. Member: One.

Mr. Mazankowski: One. Well, that tells you the story. We have lots of farmers and a lot of Hon. Members who are interested in the farming community. We have to have the opportunity to debate the issue. I know that good news is very hard for these people to swallow across the way. It is quite obvious that is what they are trying to achieve by cutting off the debate.

We are going to oppose this motion, Mr. Speaker, because we still have some Hon. Members who want to speak—

Mr. Riis: This will look good in the polls.

Mr. Mazankowski: —in the event they have the opportunity to speak on this motion and say what they wanted to say originally. Then we will allow it to come to a vote. But we have Hon. Members who want to speak and the Official Opposition, or the NDP, will not deny the Hon. Members on this side the right to speak and the right to be heard on behalf of the people, the farmers of western Canada, and all of Canada. The farming industry is an important industry. It is in dire straits. It is in serious difficulty. This is the kind of debate that should be held in this institution. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Riis: I do not have a question or comment. What I want to suggest to the House Leader for the Government is, in fact, that the farmers of this country do not want to hear a lot of rhetoric. They want to see some action. What we said is, let us have some action in this House of Commons rather than have farmers sitting listening to hour after hour of Tories getting up and filibustering the Bill that is before the House which is designed to help the grain farmers across the country. We are saying, let us get on and handle this Bill as expeditiously as possible. I cannot believe that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has stood here and said he wants to talk this Bill out. He is going to vote against taking action on this Bill.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are trying to deny freedom of speech.

Mr. Riis: I want to say very clearly that we are very concerned about the plight of the family farm. We see family farms being replaced by agri-business and corporate agriculture right across Canada. We see an opportunity today to take some action and do what we can in the House of Commons to deal with this. Not long ago the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) asked us to do whatever we could to assist him. What did the Minister ask us to do?

• (1250)

Mr. Mazankowski: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Riis: The Government House Leader should listen carefully so that he understands how this place works.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am listening.

Mr. Riis: A request was made of the opposition Parties to pass the Bill before us as quickly as possible. We were asked whether we would co-operate with the Government. At that time we said: "You bet we will". We also said that if the Bill helps Canadian farmers and provides support for farm families, we would support it and that we would do whatever we could. As a matter of fact, we said that we would pass it with the absolute minimum of speakers. The Government House Leader can sit there and laugh because he was not the House Leader at that time.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am laughing at you.

Mr. Riis: The request was for our co-operation. We said that we would co-operate with the Government. We want to help family farms and grain producers. Assuming that if it was important to pass it in June, it would be even more important to pass it quickly today, we said that we should get the Bill into committee so that it could be dealt with as quickly as possible, get it back for third reading, and get on with other business of the country.

Perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister noticed what the polls indicated across the country today. The people of Canada have lost confidence in the Government. They have lost confidence in the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). They have lost confidence in the Progressive Conservative Party. Quite frankly, in every region of the country the Conservatives do not have the support of the majority of citizens. I cannot believe that the Deputy Prime Minister and Government House Leader stood in his place today and said: "We are going to stop the movement of this Bill".

Mr. Mazankowski: I did not say that at all.

Mr. Riis: He said that they wanted to slow down the movement of this Bill, that they wanted to keep the people talking but not to provide action. We are saying that members of the opposition Parties want action. We want to move the Bill forward as quickly as possible.

Mr. McDermid: What a phoney.

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member should reconsider the word "phoney". I believe it is unparliamentary. Presumably he will have an opportunity to make his speech. I guess they now want to prolong the debate on this motion.

I say to the Deputy Prime Minister and to the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board that if the request for speedy passage was valid in June of this year, surely to goodness the same request is valid today. We want to co-operate. We want to get on with other business of the House. We have other legislation in line. We have Bills which are awaiting passage.

Why is it that government Members want to filibuster and prolong debate unnecessarily—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could I ask the Hon. Member to conclude his comment?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I forgot that it was a comment; I thought I was on debate. Rather than a comment, perhaps I will direct a simple question to the Government House Leader. They have the co-operation of the opposition Parties to deal expeditiously with the Bill. Knowing all the legislation which is awaiting passage, knowing the state of affairs in the country, and knowing what the people of Canada through today's polls think of them, why will they not co-operate with the opposition Parties when they say: "Let's deal with it now. Let's get it into committee where it can be properly dealt with, not at this stage where it is being debated in principle only"?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer that question. The House Leader of the New Democratic Party has sort of toned down his rhetoric and emotion. If he is suggesting that three hours of debate on an important piece of legislation affecting western Canada, particularly prairie grain producers, is too long—

An Hon. Member: Two hours.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is it two hours? In any event the value which he places upon this institution and the value I place on it are different. The fact of the matter is that we have every intention of seeing that the Bill goes through to committee today. I appreciate the support of the Opposition in facilitating it.

However, I repeat that Parliament is a debating place. If Members of Parliament representing agricultural constituencies are to be denied the right to speak as a result of the tactics in which the Official Opposition and the NDP are engaged, I think it is an affront to this institution. It is an affront to Parliament. It is an affront to the people who sent those Hon. Members to represent them on the floor of the House of Commons. We are not filibustering our Bill. We are giving Hon. Members who are desirous of an opportunity to be heard and to speak on the Bill an opportunity to do so. I hope the Hon. Member, in his expression of goodwill, would allow that to take place.

I also hope that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier would withdraw the motion because I can assure him that with a couple of more short interventions the Bill will be passed into committee.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Mazankowski: The expert on parliamentary procedure in the back row over there says "No". I understand that he is taking his cues from her. That is fine; that will be recorded as such. The record will show that the NDP and the Liberal Party combined to move what in effect was an attempt to close the debate or to move closure on debate affecting the agricultural community of Canada. That is the sum and substance of it.

Mr. Gauthier: No, it is not, and you know it.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is the way it will be interpreted. The Hon. Member wants to deny western Members an opportunity to speak, and I regret that very much.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we agree with the Government that the Bill is urgent. We agree that it should be passed quickly. If the Government is disposed to do so now, we would comply and the question could be put.

What are government Members telling us? Do they want to call it one o'clock? If so, that is fine with me. However, I say to the Minister: "Please do not vote against your own Bill". That is what he is doing.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of voting against my Bill. I have every intention of voting against the silly tactic of that Hon. Member. All I am saying to him is that we will prolong the debate so that all our Hon. Members can speak, and then we will vote on it. If he were a gentleman about the whole exercise, he would withdraw the motion in the spirit of goodwill and in the expression of goodwill advanced by the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. We will allow our Members who have not had a chance to speak to continue to speak, and then we will take the vote.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a few brief comments on this matter. With the representation found in government ranks and with the capable speakers found in government ranks who want to put forward to their constituents some of the good news and to explain a Bill which is important to the people I represent, I find it strange that the House Leader of the New Democratic Party would ask: What is the difference between June and now? I should not have to explain it to the Hon. Member who has expertise in agriculture. He knows the number of farmers who are represented by his Party and the great farm vote which his Party received in the Province of Saskatchewan last October 20. I think it was two ridings. The difference between June and now is what is called the crop year. The crop year ends on July 31. That is why it was urgent when the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, denied consent to have this piece of legislation passed in June, in time for farmers to take advantage of it in the new crop year. The difference between now and last June is the fact that there is a crop year.

The actions about which the Hon. Member talked are evident to Canadian farmers. Those actions include the removal of the gas tax, the removal of the diesel tax, the removal of capital gains, and interim payments on western grain stabilization. I see that you, Mr. Speaker, are signalling that it is almost one o'clock. I would have liked to talk about drought payments, flood payments, livestock payments, and the $300,000 which was put into the dairy program. However, I see Your Honour rising, so I will take my seat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period provided for questions and comments is over.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

PARLIAMENT HILL

IDLING OF MINISTERIAL CAR ENGINES—ENVIRONMENTAL CONSEQUENCES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, last November this House unanimously approved a motion to put an end to the practice of idling car engines within the confines of Parliament Hill so as to protect the environment. To this end, your predecessor, Sir, had signs put up informing all drivers to shut off their car engines when waiting. Unfortunately, infractions are taking place every day. Ministers' cars and, most prominently, the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) limousine and cavalcade are the regular "idlers". This is a small number of vehicles, true, but the attitude displayed toward the environment is symbolically very important. How can citizens take the environment seriously if the Prime Minister and his Cabinet fail to give a good example?

I call upon the Prime Minister and his Ministers to change their ways, respect the will of this House, and set a good example by please turning off the engines of their cars.

INDUSTRY

DOMTAR'S TWENTY YEARS IN LEBEL-SUR-QUÉVILLON, QUE.

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in the midst of a black spruce forest about 80 kilometers north of Senneterre, the Domtar company at Lebel-sur-Quévillon is celebrating its twentieth birthday this year. Domtar has created a municipality, schools, an entire community, where people have managed to settle a part of this planet that seemed particularly hostile to human settlement but was rich in space and resources.

The Domtar plant produces Kraft pulp from resinous wood at a rate of 800 tonnes a day or 260 tonnes per year. The plant employs 605 workers and annually pays $11 million in salaries and fringe benefits.

Mr. Speaker, initially, workers and their families saw coming to Quévillon for several years as a way to save a substantial amount of money, but they finally became attached to this part of the country where they found a great spirit of camaraderie and friendship.

Today, more than 900 people are employed by Domtar in the company's various departments, and this year, 100 employees will be celebrating their twentieth anniversary with the company.

We congratulate these workers and their wives and children on the life they have made for themselves in the Abitibi region.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

STATEMENT MADE BY MR. TAYLOR UNDER STANDING ORDER 21

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, stereotypical slurs on any minority in Canada whether racial, religious, ethnic, linguistic, or sexual are deeply offensive to all Canadians who value equality and human rights. Such attacks are particularly serious when they come from a long-time Conservative Member of Parliament. The words used last week by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) with reference to lumberjacks—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair having already commented on the words at which the Hon. Member takes umbrage and the Chair having made those interventions in quite, I think, unequivocal language, must remind the Hon. Member that it is not the appropriate place under Standing Order 21 to carry on admonishments of Members when a Member has already been admonished by the Chair. I say this fully aware that the Chair has made it clear that the issue in this matter is a legitimate issue for this Chamber. The Hon. Member yesterday raised a point of privilege. There may have been some misinterpretation as to what the Chair said. The Chair has taken that matter under advisement and will return to the Chamber with it.

I would hope all Hon. Members will accept that the Chair feels that the continued use of Standing Order 21 for attacks on any particular Member, when that Member has been admonished by the Chair, is an inappropriate use of Standing Order 21.

With respect, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) raised a point of privilege yesterday and was given a very full hearing. The Chair will be returning to the Chamber at the appropriate time, with sufficient notice to the Hon. Member for Burnaby, to make a ruling upon the particular matter which he raised.

NATURAL GAS DEREGULATION—IMPORTANCE OF ACCESS TO UNITED STATES MARKET

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I believe that full deregulation of natural gas can be completed by the targeted date of November 1, 1986, and I wish to congratulate governments and industry for their zeal in accomplishing this.

In my view it is imperative that the result of deregulation is free access to all markets, including the United States. Only by free access can the deregulated price reflect the true market value, and only by free access can the industry develop to its full potential.

I would encourage government agencies to review the gas export surplus test and adjust the test so that it will encourage exploration, development, and production of natural gas. Long-term contracts will meet the need for security of supply and keep those much needed jobs in Alberta. The adjacent border price test needs flexibility so that the situation can be monitored and action taken only if a problem arises.

OPPOSITION TO POSSIBLE POSTAL RATE INCREASE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read to the House a letter from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business to the Minister responsible for the Post Office (Mr. Côté). It reads:

It is most distressing that the politics of rumour and innuendo have become the hallmark of a new session of Parliament. In this environment Canadians are now being asked to ponder yet another postal rate increase, which at this point you have chosen not to deny.

The Prime Minister and the Government, with much fanfare, have trumpeted the values of hard work and entrepreneurship through both the Throne Speech and Small Business Week.

With one hand offered to small business in congratulation for creating 70 per cent of the jobs during this Government's mandate, does the other hand wait to slap another unfair burden upon the independent business people of Canada?

Introducing further postal increases is not the way to deal with Canada Post's deficit. The time has come to show the will, courage and vision that are necessary to deal with the many problems facing this Crown corporation.

You may be certain that the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses will vigorously oppose any increase in postal rates and support all Canadians who have had enough of paying more and more for less and less as far as our postal services are concerned.

MULTICULTURALISM

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE AND OUTLOOK ON FUTURE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have good news and bad news about this Government's multiculturalism policy.

First, the good news. The Government, and more specifically the Prime Minister, has promised to increase the number of appointments of people from minority groups to sit on Government councils and commissions. Mr. Speaker, considerable progress has been made in the past two years. This Government has appointed more people from various ethnic groups than the former Administration.

And now, the bad news. What we have done is not enough. We must do more to reflect Canada's ethnic and linguistic reality, but I have every confidence in the Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism (Mr. Crombie). We are determined to reach our goal, which is the same equality for all Canadians.

TAXATION

NON-PAYMENT OF TAX BY CORPORATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, today, the grand prize for untaxed corporations goes to Sterling Trust.

This company paid no taxes at all in 1985 and enjoyed tax credits for the years 1979, 1983, 1984, with profits exceeding $10 million. This was possible owing to lucrative tax rebates arising from measures introduced by the previous Liberal Government and to action taken by this Conservative Government.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

SPENDING DONE BY PREVIOUS LIBERAL ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, this morning's Globe and Mail editorial appears under the heading: "The money machine".

Two years after the defeat of the Liberal Party, the Globe and Mail's editorial writer urges us to remember that the Liberal Government spent more than any other Government for political and partisan purposes; that the Liberal Government abused the system; that it failed to observe Treasury Board guidelines; that the Government privately spent taxpayers' money; that under the Liberal Government, for the first 20 months the job creation program was administered exclusively by Ministers and a few MPs, with no consideration for objective eligibility criteria; that this profligate spending for partisan purposes was done with borrowed money.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal caucus here in the House took part in and approved these infamous expenditures. As the Globe and Mail says, Mr. Speaker, "They bear remembering".

PEACE

GREAT PEACE JOURNEY'S QUESTIONNAIRE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, 20 representatives of the Great Peace Journey from many countries around the world were here today and it was unfortunate that neither the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) nor any senior Minister of his Government found the time to meet and greet them. This group is visiting heads of states in 14 regions of the world to discuss five questions with world leaders. They have already met with Prime Minister Gandhi of India; the Foreign Minister of Australia, Mr. Hayden; and Prime Minister David Lange of New Zealand. In December they will meet with leaders of the Soviet Union and the United States. They have requested written answers to five questions and I wish the Government would at least study the questions and then determine how it wishes to answer.

The five fundamental questions from this group are:

(1) Are you willing to forbid your country's defence forces from leaving your own country's territory if all other UN countries do the same?

(2) Are you willing to forbid nuclear weapons and other—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I very much regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NORTHERN ONTARIO—REDUCTION IN UNEMPLOYMEMT

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, yesterday statements were made in the House implying that no jobs had been created in northern Ontario since this Government came to power. In 1980 northern Ontario's unemployment rate was 7.7 per cent. By 1982, under a Liberal Government, it had jumped to 13.5 per cent. The Conservative Government reacted to this situation and created more than 29,000 jobs, bringing unemployment in northern Ontario down to 10 per cent.

In the last two years 19,000 jobs were created in northeastern Ontario, and 10,000 in northwestern Ontario. There are 7,000 less unemployed workers in northern Ontario, and this is significant progress.

Our Government's policy on job creation is successful, and it will continue to introduce policies and programs to benefit every region of the country. Our record of achievement in job creation is one that is clear. No Member who sat on his hands while the previous Government raised the unemployment rate of northern Ontario from 7.7 per cent to 13.5 per cent can lecture this Government on job creation in northern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PORT OF VANCOUVER—REPORTED BREAKDOWN IN NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN EMPLOYERS AND UNION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have just learned that waterfront employers in Vancouver have announced that contract talks with the longshoremen's union have broken down. I am very concerned about this because there are still nine days to go before the end of the 30-day limit which the parties agreed to impose in order to continue negotiations. I also understand that the union does not want to go out and is willing to work all cargoes, including grain. On behalf of Members of Parliament I would like to appeal to the parties concerned to do everything possible to resume negotiations, in their own interests and those of Canada.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

RESULTS OF DE HAVILLAND'S SALE TO BOEING

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, have you noticed that the opposition Parties have been extremely quiet lately about the sale of de Havilland to Boeing? Do you know why? It is because this is one of the great success stories of this decade. No jobs have been lost. In fact many more are anticipated. How about orders? They have increased dramatically. To quote this morning's Ottawa Citizen, "The roar of rivet guns, punch presses and lathes rarely stops at the sprawling de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd. plant in northwest Toronto these days. They can't make airplanes fast enough".

I am sure all Canadians and all Members of this House will agree that the forward thinking, perceptive and timely action taken by the Government should be very widely applauded.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SITUATION OF EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): This past weekend, Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of traveling to the Quebec City region where I met with people from Lévis, Quebec East and Langelier. Quebec City residents are wondering why this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and this Progressive Conservative Government chose to waste $41 million of the taxpayers' money by relocating the Drummondville prison in the Prime Minister's riding. These people want to know why the Government did not take $30 million to give immediate refunds to the 50,000 early retirees who are penalized as a result of the profligacy of the Prime Minister and the Progressive Conservative Government.

SMALL BUSINESS

SUCCESS OF LEMAIRE ENTREPRENEURS OF DRUMMONDVILLE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): To highlight Small Business Week, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay homage to three Drummondville entrepreneurs who stand as a shining example for all small- and medium-sized businesses, the Lemaire brothers of Papiers Cascades, Bernard, Laurent and Alain. With their father Antonio and their sister Madeleine they set up a system to recycle old paper in Drummondville. Their company has expanded over the years and has now become a multinational concern. Among other achievements, Cartonneries Cascades now operate plants in Quebec, Ontario and the United States, as well as three more in France.

Established in 1964, Cascades now include 25 companies with 3,200 employees and have posted sales of $400 million this year. The shares of this group, issued in November 1982 at $5 and valued at more than $150 last July, reflect the outstanding success of Quebec's Régime d'épargne-actions. The Lemaires and other such entrepreneurs are the vanguard of a new generation of Quebecers whose efforts and endeavours strengthen the Canadian economy.

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The repeated cut-backs in vital programs for the National Research Council are a betrayal of the Prime Minister's promises during the election, a betrayal of our young people, and are making this country more vulnerable in our ability to compete world-wide. Will he overturn the extremely harmful cuts to the National Research Council made by his Minister of Science and Technology and re-establish the priority that he gave Canadians to understand would be paramount in his Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my right hon. friend will know, the Government of Canada inherited a situation where, over the previous 15 years, per capita contribution of GNP to research and development had declined to the point where it was the lowest of the OECD countries, I believe. We had to begin the process of improving that situation as a percentage of GNP because we believe that it is very important in enhancing our competitive position, aside from the obvious benefits that it brings to the country. We are committed to a strategy of increasing the per capita contribution of GNP to research and development. That has been our policy. We are in the process of developing it and we hope to achieve substantial results from it.

DEGREE OF PRIORITY ACCORDED RESEARCH

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was inaccurate in his summary of the facts. In any case, during the election campaign he made a personal commitment to increase the National Research Council's budget by 20 per cent. Since he became Prime Minister, he has cut the NRC's budget by $120 million. Why does the Prime Minister think that spending a $41-million surplus on a prison in Manicouagan riding was a more important priority for this country than spending the same $41 million on research?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Liberal Party keeps picking on the people of Port-Cartier. Yesterday, one of his Members was picking on the people of Matane, after ignoring them for 15 years, and the Hon. Member would have us believe there is a connection with what we spend on research and development. We have announced a policy that is clear and that promotes research and development. We intend to work together with the private sector, universities and R&D institutions, and by the time we finish our term, I think we will have substantially increased the per capita contribution to vitally needed research in this country. Ours is a forward-looking and realistic policy which reflects not only our country's needs but also its economic potential.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO NOBEL PRIZE WINNER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could cite an authority that the Prime Minister might recognize. After learning of the cut-backs to the National Research Council our Nobel Prize winner, Dr. John Polanyi of the University of Toronto, was asked what advice he would give to young scientists in Canada today and he replied: "I think I would go to the United States". Can the Prime Minister conceive of a more damning indictment of his governmental policy than to have one of the leading scientists of our country recommend to the young people of Canada who are interested in scientific research that their only recourse is to go south of the border to the United States?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take a look at the records again, but my recollection is that not so long ago Canada's contribution had declined to 0.9 of 1 per cent of GNP during the record of the previous Government, which is, I think, the lowest of all the OECD countries. It has since moved up gently. When we took over I believe it was at 1.13 per cent.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Check your facts on that one!

Mr. Mulroney: The fact of the matter is that the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part drove scientists out of Canada into the United States. We are in the process of trying to bring them back. The Hon. Member should stand up and help us, as opposed to expressing the negativism in which the Liberal Party constantly indulges.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CUT-BACKS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister ought to check his facts or else he ought to reread his book. My question is also for the Prime Minister.

In trying to defend the indefensible cuts at the National Research Council the Minister of State for Science and Technology said yesterday: "Please, I do not enjoy this. None of my colleagues in Cabinet enjoyed what we had to do". Why did the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues have to do this? How can he justify cuts which are damaging Canada's ability to compete, and which are destroying Canada's pre-eminent research institute and the morale of scientists across the country? Why did he and his cabinet colleagues—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will realize, of course, that he has repeated the same question.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, what I do not enjoy doing, and what my cabinet colleagues do not enjoy doing, is having to correct in the shortest time possible 20 years of deliberate policies of neglect in the area of science and technology.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, by his own mouth the Minister and his cabinet colleagues stand condemned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE DOCUMENTS ON WHICH DECISION TO MAKE CUT-BACKS BASED

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister whether he is prepared to table in the House the studies on which he based his decision to cut the 20 million, as well as a list of the groups he consulted and of recommendations made by members of the NRC.

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, last night there was a meeting of the standing committee at which I tabled very important information. It is terribly unfortunate that the Hon. Member does not consider it important enough to attend such meetings.

SALE OF TICKETS FOR 1988 WINTER OLYMPICS IN CALGARY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. As the Minister knows, some 85 per cent of the tickets for the 1984 Summer and Winter Olympics were made available to members of the general public who wanted to attend the most popular events. Considering that there is a report out which states that some 50 per cent of tickets for the upcoming Olympics in Calgary have been reserved for a small so-called Olympic family, can the Minister confirm that this is the case? Can he tell Members of the House why so many people in the general public are being excluded if such a policy is in place?

• (1425)

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the report is erroneous. The Hon. Member is misinformed. Seventy-five per cent of ticket sales for the Calgary Olympics will be made available to the general public and 25 per cent will go to the so-called Olympic family, including national organizations, sponsorship groups, the IOC itself, and others. That compares favourably with the Los Angeles Olympics and falls under IOC Rule No. 60.

PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO POPULAR EVENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that the reports were not about events in general but about the most popular events. It has been suggested that public access to tickets for the more popular events including hockey games, figure skating, and speed skating, will be considerably more restricted than he has just said. Will the Minister reassure the House that that is not the case and that the Canadian Olympics will indeed be open to the general public?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): The Calgary Olympics will indeed be open to the general public. I cannot confirm that each and every event will have 70 per cent availability. The Board of Directors of the organizing committee is currently reviewing the situation for specific events but I can guarantee the Hon. Member, the House and Canadians, that 75 per cent of total sales of tickets for the Calgary Olympics will be made available to the public.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Minister, he knows that the issue is not 75 per cent of tickets in general. The people of Canada want access to the most popular events. Will the Minister take steps to ensure that the general public will have full access to hockey games, speed skating and figure skating, and that at least the same percentage of the general public will be able to attend these Olympics as attended recent Olympics? Will the Minister give us that guarantee?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that there will be an improvement over the sales that took place in Los Angeles. While I have the opportunity, I would also assure the House that the Olympic Games in Calgary will be the best ever Winter Olympic games in the history of the Olympic movement for Canada and for Canadians.

ALLOCATION OF TICKETS TO CORPORATE SPONSORS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport. Canadian taxpayers are putting out $200 million in revenue for the Calgary Olympics. They put out $62 million to build the Olympic park and $35 million to build the speed skating oval. How can the Minister explain to the Canadian public that big business will have access to the best seats in the house while the ordinary taxpayer will get the leftovers?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Member is totally wrong. The taxpayers are not making any direct contributions to the Calgary games. The $200-million contribution made by the federal Government is non-tax-revenue dollars. I am glad to inform the Hon. Member of that.

Mr. Broadbent: Where does it come from?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What did you do, print it?

Mr. Jelinek: Second, the best seats will be available to the public, but the organizing committee is abiding by International Olympic Rule No. 60 which ensures that 25 per cent of tickets go to the Olympic family. That is not only big businesses that are investing in Canada and in the Olympic Games for the sake of Canadians—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

SEAT ALLOCATION DISTRIBUTION

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that the seat allocation to the Olympic family and corporate sponsors is greater for the Calgary Olympics than it was for the Los Angeles Olympics and for the Montreal Olympics? I will tell you what the average guy in Sudbury wants to hear from you. He wants to hear that you are going to go up to bat so that he has a better than fifty-fifty chance to get the best seat in Calgary—

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member did ask a question.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to go to bat for the public to get a fifty-fifty chance. I have already gone to bat for the public to get a 75 per cent chance and the best available seats.

TICKETS FOR HOCKEY FINAL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Will the Minister confirm that what he is saying is that an elite is going to have as much as 50 per cent of the tickets to the final hockey game at the Calgary Olympics?

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): I have just made it as clear as I possibly could that 75 per cent of all ticket sales for the Calgary Olympics are going to the public, and 25 per cent are going to the so-called Olympic family. If the Hon. Member is asking me to look into specific events with specific cases, I will be very happy to do so. But I remind the Hon. Member that the responsibility for the ticket sales rests with the organizing committee. I will stay on top of the issue and make certain that the Canadian public, and indeed the public at large, are treated fairly and equitably.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE WITH OLYMPIC COMMITTEE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): By way of a supplementary question does the Minister know that according to the current policy only 8,200 of the 16,000 hockey seats for the final game will be available? Will he intervene directly with OCO and say on behalf of the Canadian people that they have to have 75 per cent of those tickets for the hockey game, for speed skating, for figure skating, and for the other major events? Will he make that commitment?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): I repeat that the Olympic Organizing Committee is reviewing the whole process on a case-by-case basis. I will make representations to OCO to make certain that Hon. Member gets as good a seat as possible.

Oral Questions

PLAN TO PROMOTE POSTAL RATE INCREASES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. In their communication plan the Post Office Authority are instructing divisional directors how to manipulate Canadians in order to sell them postal rate increases and service cuts. How can the Minister allow Canada Post to manipulate Canadians instead of serving them with home delivery to new houses, better customer service, and lower rates?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Marchment Commission consulted Canadians across the country to find out about their concerns with respect to the postal service. Since then, these concerns have been examined by the Canada Post Corporation. We have received the Corporation's recommendations, we are studying them and we will make our decisions known in due time.

UTILIZATION OF HUMAN AND MATERIAL RESOURCES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. How much does this public relations project cost Canada Post? Why are human and material resources available for advertising campaigns but none to ensure door-to-door mail delivery for new homes?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians have expressed the desire to have better service and better management at Canada Post, and I can inform the Hon. Member that since this Government came to power, the Corporation's deficit has been reduced considerably, productivity has increased and absenteeism has gone down.

Mr. Speaker, all this reflects better management.

[English]

JUSTIFICATION FOR POSSIBLE RATE INCREASE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Will he tell Canadians how he can justify a further increase in postal rates just after having gone through the process of cutting back on home delivery, and taking boxes off the street so that it is much more inconvenient for people to mail their letters? How can he justify a further increase in postal rates while he is continuing to cut back on postal service?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, may I simply remind my colleague that there is absolutely no question of reducing postal services; I believe I did mention that Canada Post have drafted a business plan. It was submitted to the Government, we took it under consideration and will announce our decision at the appropriate time.

INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES—PUBLIC OPINION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, here is what I want to know from the Minister: When is he going to announce his higher price for postage stamps and, when Canadians tell him what they think, will he let ordinary people express their views that now is not the time to increase the cost of stamps, or will he simply and blindly follow the advice of Canada Post officials?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Canada Post): Briefly, Mr. Speaker, I would remind my colleague that the Marchment Commission was set up to seek the views of Canadians with respect to postal services. It did just that, presented its recommendations to Canada Post and the Government, and they will be considered.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN PATROL FRIGATE PROGRAM

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It involves the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program. We all know that unfortunate delays have taken place in this Canadian Patrol Frigate Program revolving around problems with steel. Recent press reports indicate that there are going to be further delays. Are there, in fact, going to be more delays in this program, and if so, why?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): I understand there was an article in The Halifax Chronicle Herald on October 24 which indicated that there might be further delays in the CPF Program. We are informed by the President of Saint John Shipbuilding Limited that they are on track in terms of timing.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUTURE USE OF FORMER CANADIAN FORCES BASE IN MANITOBA

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, whom I welcome back from his visit to Manitoba. Will the Minister explain to the House now why he has permitted his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to interfere in the decision regarding the future use of the CFB radar base at Beauséjour? Why has the Minister yielded to the idea of building a prison there rather than following the Treasury Board recommendation of September 3 that this site ought to be used to help fulfil the claim for land entitlement from the Long Plains Indian Band?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise that the Treasury Board made a recommendation on September 3, which is not accurate, I would like to say yes, I did so have discussions with the Member of Parliament regarding the use of that. It is the long established policy within Indian Affairs to have discussions with the affected parties, with the province, and with the community. More important, there has not been any agreement on entitlement signed between the Province of Manitoba and the Government of Canada. The band in question has not entered into negotiations for entitlement.

SETTLEMENT OF LAND CLAIM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): I want to ask the Minister if he allows the Beauséjour site to slip away from him, where will the land come from to make this settlement and at what cost? Has Premier Pawley of Manitoba agreed to an alternate site? Do I have to remind the Minister about his trust responsibility?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker, I will fulfil that responsibility at a par or I would hope better than my predecessors who were represented in the former Government of this country, not my immediate predecessor. But I will tell the Hon. Member that discussions have taken place between the band and the Government of Manitoba. But again the Hon. Member knows before entitlement can take place there have to be discussions and an agreement on how to fulfil entitlement.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of International Trade said of the freer trade talks, and I quote from Hansard: "At the appropriate time, these negotiations will be ratified in the House". Yet her press secretary is quoted as saying later "this was a mistake".

• (1440)

Whom do we believe, the Minister or her staff person?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will reply to the Hon. Member's question. Yesterday the Minister used the term "ratified" in the colloquial sense, in that all activities of the Government come under the scrutiny of the House and the trade negotiations are no different.

METHOD OF RATIFICATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister indicated earlier that this comprehensive deal, if it is to be established, had to be "ratified", could he explain exactly what is the policy of the Government? Does it intend to take this immensely important issue before the people of the country through the House of Commons or not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have responded to that question in the House. I have communicated in writing with the First Ministers with regard to that issue. There is no difference at all between the position taken by the Minister for International Trade and myself.

UNITED STATES FUNDING OF MEASURES TO COMBAT ACID RAIN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In March of this year he told the House that millions of dollars were committed in the United States to abate acid rain. Would the Minister inform the House how much money the U.S. has put into the abatement of acid rain since March?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the answer is $400 million on nine major projects.

SULPHUR DIOXIDE EMISSIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Minister care to translate that amount of money into tonnage reduction of U.S. sulphur dioxide emissions spewing over the border into the Canadian environment since March?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can only assume that that was yet another lecture from the Hon. Member for Davenport on the need for the Government to take acid rain seriously. This Party and this Government do not need any lessons from that Member or that Party. This Government has done more in two years than the Liberal Government did in two decades.

JOB LOSSES IN ALBERTA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources described the situation—the tens of thousands of projected lay-offs in Alberta—as being a catastrophe. Does he agree that the situation developing in that province is catastrophic? If so, what does the Government plan to do about it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have acknowledged this situation as being a fact and in the past several months the Government, my predecessor and I have taken a number of measures. I will be in Calgary later this week to discuss further steps to be taken by the Canadian Government, the Province of Alberta and the industry, this time in the field of gas.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. We have made proposals in terms of a negotiated floor price to protect small operators or small companies in the Province of Alberta and in other western provinces. Since the Minister has agreed that the situation has gone on for many months, when does he plan to take some specific action and make some specific announcements?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In recent months, Mr. Speaker, the Government has unveiled a series of supportive measures for the oil and gas industry, and we are monitoring the situation. The Government of Alberta has announced and will announce other measures. A federal-provincial conference on energy, the first since 1978, will be convened in January. This Government is concerned over the energy issue, along with all interest groups, the provinces and the private sector.

HEALTH

SEX EDUCATION—PREVENTION OF AIDS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. According to Dr. Everett Koop, Head of US Health Services, sex education is the best way to fight AIDS, which is expected to become twelve times as prevalent over the next five years. Could the Minister inform the House whether his Government intends to set up a prevention program?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I know what the Surgeon General said with regard to the program in the United States. We have already taken similar steps. If the Hon. Member looks at the five-year plan of the Government, she will find that it was a plan not only to increase funding for AIDS research, but for education and for a very clear message in terms of the educative need so that people will protect themselves from the spread of the disease.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister give the House the assurance that new money will be earmarked for education programs and, more specifically, for sex education programs?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is on that committee. The former Government brought in a small program. When AIDS first became known, there was a response at the time. Obviously the issue has grown bigger; there have been more cases. Thus we brought in $39 million in a five-year program. It is new money, as the Government has indicated, for education and research. I hope the Hon. Member starts supporting it.

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATORY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Both he and the Prime Minister have repeatedly said that it is the objective of the Government to double our efforts in scientific research and development. Given that commitment, why did we learn today that one of our world-class astronomical research observatories will be closed in the very near future?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, what the Prime Minister has indicated in his book, and what I have repeated many times is that we will spend as much as is necessary to position Canada and its industries in the new frontier effectively and in every possible way.

Mr. Orlikow: The Minister did not answer my question.

ALGONQUIN PARK OBSERVATORY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Will he confirm that because of the cuts to the NRC the observatory at Algonquin Park cannot be expanded and therefore will be shut down in the next year?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that, as a result of reorganization or reallocation, the NRC expansion plans for the observatory scheduled for next year will not proceed.

FINANCE

MINING SECTOR'S DEDUCTIBLE SHARE BUYING PLAN

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance). The flow-through shares system in the mining industry is creating and sustaining employment and helping development in Abitibi-Témiscamingue and across Canada. The system provides the Government with an excellent source of revenue through all kinds of taxes, and the Abitibi region would like this program to continue. My question is as follows: Is there any truth in the rumour reported in a Toronto newspaper and originated by the Government of Quebec, that the Government of Canada intends to abolish the flow-through shares plan in the mining industry?

Mr. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question and his interest in the mining industry.

[English]

The Hon. Minister of State for Forestry and Mines and myself are very pleased with the increased activity in the mining sector. As for flow through shares, we are studying them and their use in the context of our broad tax reform. The Minister of Finance will be meeting on November 17 with The Mining Association of Canada on this matter.

RESUMÉS OF TRIBUNAL APPOINTEES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. There are now two different versions of the resumés of recent appointees to the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal. One version has been laundered of all political references, and the Minister has denied any responsibility for that operation. As he is the Minister responsible for the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal and for his own office, will he undertake to look into the discrepancy and explain to the House why it happened and who did it?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there may be two versions, but there is only one version of the truth. It is simply this—there may be two different resumés which are in existence. The one I sent forward from my office is the copy of the resumés we had in my office, the only ones I have seen. There is another one in the Human Rights Tribunal. They are completely separate and they are not related.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DIFFERENT VERSIONS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I ask the Minister, as the Minister responsible for reporting to this House on behalf of the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal, to look into the discrepancy and tell the House why there are two different versions circulating.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, all I can tell the Hon. Member is that as far as I am concerned I went ahead with the people who have been appointed, the 28 recently appointed in addition to the 71 appointed earlier this spring, on the basis of competence. That is the only criterion I want to have for these people who are going to serve in this very important position. I understand that the Standing Committee on Human Rights will have an opportunity to go through the scrutiny process. I invite the members of the committee to ask whatever appropriate questions they think are germane.

OMISSION OF POLITICAL AFFILIATION NOTATIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Given that those resumés went intact to the PM's office, to the PMO and to the Justice Ministry and in the next step to the Human Rights Committee were purged of all political affiliations, somebody purged them. Who done it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: The butler.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is a humorous thing at all.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: You finally agree on something.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am simply saying to the Hon. Member that if he is really serious about this matter—

Mr. Broadbent: We are.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —he would be asking the question in the committee with respect to the competence of the people who have been appointed. We have scrutiny of appointments. The fact is, and I have explained this to the House many, many times, that the resumé I have in my office is the one that I had and the one on which I relied for the appointments. How the other resumé came into existence, I have no idea how that happened.

MINISTERS' OFFICE CHANGES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Let me ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker, whether it is possible that the resumés were purged when there was the office cleanup for the change of Ministers?

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Broadbent: It is possible.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East.

FINANCE

CAPE BRETON INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT—REPORTED MANIPULATION BY INVESTORS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Finance. This morning we learned through a Globe and Mail report that the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit is being manipulated by some of the same individuals using some of the same methods as were used in the SRTC scam. Is the Minister aware of the ability of some of these investors to inflate their costs to pay for overpriced consultants and to provide excessive commissions and benefits from the tax credit?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Finance and the Government have been very assiduous in trying to close loopholes and in monitoring matters of that type. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the Cape Breton Tax Credit is monitored by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. All projects must be approved by that Department. Those sorts of things are monitored carefully.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While the Government squeezes such organizations as the National Research Council, it is losing hundreds of millions of dollars through tax loopholes. Will the Minister guarantee that each project approved will be investigated so that we will not have the same problem as we had under the SRTC?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, unlike the SRTC, this particular program requires that projects be approved in advance by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

BANKS AND BANKING

ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance).

In his Budget, the Minister of Finance said that free zones and an international banking centre would be established in the Montreal area.

Recently, we heard that a moratorium was expected on these projects. I wonder if the Minister of State (Finance) could inform the House whether a moratorium will be issued and if so, why? Would it apply to the free zones or the international banking centre or both?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, not at all. The Government has not changed its decision to promote the establishment of international banking centres. Discussions are continuing with representatives of the governments and cities concerned.

MULTICULTURALISM

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM COUNCIL

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. In reply to my question to him concerning the leaked McCreath Report which concludes that the Canadian Multiculturalism Council is nothing more than an extension of the Conservative Party, the Minister said he had not read the report. Surely after 10 days he has seen and read the report and plans some meaningful action. If the Minister is interested in restoring the reputation and integrity of this national advisory board, why has the Minister not asked or received the immediate resignation of the Vice-Chairman, Mr. McCreath, and why does the Minister refuse to initiate a full review of the mandate and operation of this very important national council?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Perhaps the Hon. Member will be interested to know, Mr. Speaker, that I will be meeting with the Council next weekend. At that time that and other matters will be discussed.

REQUEST FOR VICE-CHAIRMAN'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, that is simply not good enough. The Minister should answer the question. It is no wonder that the Tories finished last in the Multifax ethnocultural poll conducted last week. It is no wonder whatsoever.

If the Minister cares about restoring the usefulness that this Board can mean for all ethnocultural communities, which is now wounded by the comments of its own Vice-Chairman, will he not do the honourable thing and ask the Vice-Chairman to resign, and initiate a full review?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member I hope knows, the appointments were made two years ago. There were 60 people on that Council, all of whom have made an enormous contribution, and I will be meeting with them next week. If anybody is wounding that Council or the good name of multiculturalism, it is the Hon. Member.

TAX REFORM

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TABLE PROPOSAL

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. If the Government is truly committed to a fair and meaningful debate on tax reform, it must present a clear specific government proposal that can serve as the basis for public discussion. First, will the Minister table in this House the Government's specific recommendations concerning tax reform so that Canadians will know exactly on what they are to be consulted? Second, will the Minister undertake to hold televised public hearings on Canadian tax reform?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as I said last week, the purpose of this exercise is to begin with consultation, not to make up our minds before we consult. As for specifics, I will repeat what I said last week. The purpose of the consultations and of tax reform is to improve fairness, to simplify the system, to encourage Canada's economic growth and to improve the balance across our different sources of taxation. There are a number of other objectives. Those are clear. That is what we are consulting on.

ESSENCE OF PROPOSED REFORM

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to many people since the Minister of Finance made his announcement, and they keep asking me what they are being consulted about.

That is why I wish the Minister would at least let us know whether, as part of this consultation process, the Government intends to find ways to increase the number of dollars it is getting from Canadian families. In another words, will the proposed tax reform remain neutral about the sums of moneys collected from the average Canadian?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has said on a number of occasions that most Canadians will have more money in their pockets and pay less taxes after tax reform is completed. That is the Government's point of view and that is its objective.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PORT OF VANCOUVER—REPORTED BREAKDOWN IN NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN EMPLOYERS AND UNION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Last night the B.C. Maritime Employers Council announced that it had broken off talks with the ILWU despite the fact that the 30 day cooling off period has still nine days to go. Will the Minister appeal today to the Employers Council to resume talks with the ILWU to avoid an unnecessary and very damaging lockout?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern. I had the privilege of hearing the end of her statement a little earlier. I believe that the appeal has already been made by the Hon. Member. We are, of course, reviewing all our options in this particular matter.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONTACT EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): I will repeat my question to the Minister because he has not answered it. Will he contact the Maritime Employers Council today and ask it to resume negotiations?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as in all these difficult situations, we will look into the matter, analyze our options, and act accordingly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns U.S. support for the Contras. President Reagan says it is vital for America to intervene to prevent the establishment of a communist base as an outpost of Soviet power in Central America which will ultimately threaten North America. Does he agree with that statement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That is clearly the opinion of the President of the United States. As my hon. friend knows, we have a different view.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, that question was put to the Prime Minister on the MacNeil-Lehrer report and I wish he had been a bit more forthcoming. Will he then say in this House what the real view of the Government is on that question? Does the Prime Minister agree with the position taken by the President?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I just said that I do not.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN GROWERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Farm organizations have been quick to request funds in support of grain growers but slower with specific advice on how the money should be distributed. Have those farm organizations been consulted and have they provided input on how they feel the benefit can be best distributed fairly and equitably amongst the farm community?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that this is the biggest farm aid package ever put together to assist farmers. He will also know that the Minister of Agriculture has deliberately put in place a process by which farmers and the provinces can have some input. I think that is a refreshing change from the previous Government which used bureaucrats sitting in Ottawa to hatch out programs.

I think this process will serve farmers well. There has been one meeting already with the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier on a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

BROADCASTING OF PROCEEDINGS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise with you a question of privilege which I think is of some importance to the House. It deals with something that happened yesterday in the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology. This is not a reflection on the Chairman of that committee. I do not want at any time to reflect on his intentions. However, he ruled at the beginning of the meeting—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is rising on a question of privilege, having given the Chair notice. It is a matter of considerable interest to all Hon. Members. Therefore, will Hon. Members please allow the Hon. Member to be heard?

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to quote verbatim from the transcript of that committee meeting last night. The Chairman of the committee said:

> Members of the committee, I have given permission to the press to record this meeting and for the television cameras to be in the room behind the press table. Is there any objection to that?

I immediately said yes, I have objections to that procedure. I explained to the Chair that in my view he did not have the power to authorize televising of those deliberations. I sent you a letter this morning, Mr. Speaker, and I will not read the whole letter because I think it will be—

Mr. Prud'homme: No, it is interesting.

Mr. Gauthier: No, I think it would be unusually long. I want to make two points. No committee chairman has the authority to allow televising or broadcasting of committee hearings. Indeed, parliamentary immunity which accompanies electronic Hansard at this time would not, unless so authorized by the House of Commons, cover the proceedings of a committee. That last point is, I think, the most important one to which I will refer.

I was trying to protect not only my interests but the interests of all Members of this House. As of now, the House has not allowed broadcasting by radio or television of committee proceedings. Citation 16 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition says that:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus, privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

I will try to prove to you that last night my rights and those of all Members, and indeed members of the fourth estate, the press, were in jeopardy had the Chairman been allowed to proceed.

I must say, before I go on, that the Chairman saw the wisdom of my comments and withdrew his permission. Nevertheless, I felt threatened, and I say this with all generosity, by his arbitrary decision. It made me uneasy. I for one believe that certain committee meetings can and should be televised, and therefore I am in total support of any expansion of coverage of our deliberations by the fourth estate. On the other hand, I felt that had this happened last night it could have prejudiced some witnesses as well as prejudiced the right of freedom of the press because they would not have been covered by immunity, in my opinion. Citation 21 of Beauchesne says:

> The most fundamental privilege of the House as a whole is to establish rules of procedure for itself and to enforce them.

I suggested to the Chairman last night that he should consult with the Clerk and with you to find out what rules and procedures would prevail if the House decided to televise these proceedings. I quote again from Beauchesne, Citation 41(1):

> The control of the House over its publications is absolute. And,
> 44(1) Unauthorized recording or broadcasting of debates is not allowed.

It was put to me at the time that the committee could do whatever it liked by unanimous consent. I think if you go back to the precedents you will find that this is not true. Committees, including this House for that matter, cannot do what is illegal or unauthorized by constitutional law or by practice simply by unanimous consent.

I would like to quote a few more extracts from Beauchesne which I think reinforce my point that the privileges of the whole House were threatened last night. Citation 75 concerns the extensions of privilege. It says:

> Committee reports and the verbatim transcripts of committee hearings are documents published under the authority of the House and are entitled to the same absolute privilege as House documents.

The decision to televise proceedings of standing committees has not been taken by this House as yet, as far as I know, and therefore the absolute privileges of the House were not protected last night. I ask that you seriously consider the transcript of the committee hearings last night. I would like to make the point that I felt somewhat intimidated by the decision of the chair. Not knowing what our privileges would be had this proceeded, I felt the arbitrary decision of the Chair was unwarranted. If a witness before that committee, or anyone making comments, had been reported by the press, those statements could have been the object of some litigation. I suspect there could be a court of law which would have said that the witness or the person making those comments was not protected by parliamentary immunity and could have been subjected to some legal difficulties.

If you find that I have a prima facie case of privilege, I would be ready to move that the whole question of televising debates in committees be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure for examination.

In conclusion, I would like to reiterate that I am not reflecting on the Chairman's judgment. Maybe the Chairman was trying to act in good faith, but I believe, in the spirit of trying to keep order and get things moving, that the Government should take action. I propose to the House that we extend media coverage to the committees of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. It is inappropriate to attempt to move a motion in argument on a point of order or question of privilege. The Hon. Member may very well want to move a motion at some appropriate time. That, of course, is open to him. I will hear other Members.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the good will with which the Hon. Member has raised this point. I do not think this is a question of privilege. I have not had a chance to review the committee proceedings in any great detail, but I find the Chairman did say: "I have made my point so there is to be no recording of this meeting". I appreciate that the Hon. Member was present, observant and familiar with the rules of procedure. I think he took the right position and that, as a result of the interventions of the Hon. Member, the matter was resolved in an adequate manner.

I think this issue is within your jurisdiction, Mr. Speaker, and that of the Board of Internal Economy on which all Parties in the House are represented. I think that is where the matter should be resolved. While it is timely to raise this problem, I think the solution to it should be reached within that forum.

Just in passing, I find it rather amusing that the Hon. Member referred to Beauchesne's Fourth and Fifth Editions. His House Leader suggested the other day that those rules were archaic and out of order. I just wanted to mention that.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I am the designated spokesman for the Board of Internal Economy. As the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has pointed out, the Board has representation from all Parties in this House. The McGrath Committee recommendations covered this subject. The Government has referred this subject to the Board and the Board has dealt with it and is in the process of attempting to implement a solution. We hope a solution will be found as quickly as possible.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two comments. First, this is not a question of privilege. I do not believe that the Member's privilege would have been in any way affected by what happened last evening.

My second point has already been partially made. This issue is being addressed by both the Board of Internal Economy and the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. I do not think the House need be seized with a motion to act because it is doing that through its various committees.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important, at the very least, for you to confirm rulings of previous Speakers that the broadcasting of proceedings of committees is not subject to decisions of individual committee chairmen or unanimous decisions by committee members. Rather, I submit that, as was the case with the broadcasting of the proceedings of this House, there must be an order of the House in order to permit committees to have their proceedings broadcast.

It is very important that we have such an order of the House. As my colleague, the opposition Whip, has made clear, that which happened last night illustrates the peril of not having an order of the House in place which sets down a clear and consistent set of rules. If the Chairman of the committee in question had prevailed, there may not have been equal access for all the media to the proceedings. Also, as the opposition Whip pointed out, there may well not have been immunity with regard to what was said, either for the witness or the media transmitting the remarks. And there would not necessarily have been equal treatment of all Members with regard to the broadcast of the proceedings.

If I am wrong in what I am about to say, I know I will be corrected, but I believe that in the Government's response to the recommendations of the McGrath Committee it accepted the recommendation that there be a system for broadcasting of committees. My recollection is that in order for this recommendation of the McGrath Committee to be implemented there must be an order of the House. Such an order must be presented to the House by the Government House Leader.

A number of months ago there was consultation about an order which would permit the broadcasting of committee proceedings. The Official Opposition was then and is now prepared to have that order put to the House and to give it speedy consideration and passage, likely by means of unanimous consent.

In conclusion, I would like to urge the new Government House Leader to consider this matter on a basis of urgency and present this order to the House to enable us to have a system of broadcasting our committees very soon consistent with the spirit of the recommendations of the McGrath Committee, which recommendations, as far as I recall, the Government accepted.

The observations of the opposition Whip will have been most salutary if they speed up the action of the Government to put before the House an order which would allow the broadcasting of committees. Such an order is long overdue.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, in the past, I once authorized broadcasting the proceedings of a Special Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on External Affairs—I remember it was a special sitting on the occasion of a visit to Canada by Mr. Gorbatchev, who, at the time, headed a parliamentary delegation from the Soviet Union—and I am therefore inclined to take a very cautions stand on the question before the House today.

As Chairman of the committee, and like several Hon. Members who referred previously to the Committee on Management and Members Services, I realize the McGrath Committee looked into this matter. I realize that the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure would also like to look into the matter, but I submit, with respect, that this afternoon, at 3:30 p.m., I intend to raise this matter at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Management and Members Services, mainly to get a few more parliamentarians involved.

Second, and I think that is the beauty of the debate, we do not necessarily have to agree, even within the same party, on how fast we should proceed. I remember, Mr. Speaker—and I am delighted to see you sitting as Speaker of our House, since I said you were our Speaker—that there was some criticism, not of your election as Speaker but about the way we proceeded, because I think a number of the details of this election were not understood by most Hon. Members.

So I would submit, as, shall we say, one of the most senior Members of this House, that we should proceed with a great deal of caution. I admit I do not make a habit of being cautious, but I believe that instead of making a speedy decision in this case, our parliamentary committees should re-examine the question and draw their conclusions, and then we should have a debate in the House as soon as the Government decides to table the matter. But again, I would like to see everything done properly. I realize that the distinguished members of the press gallery have an important job to do. I realize that an I have been approached several times with the request that perhaps we could consider allowing the proceedings to be broadcast and televised. And I have done so in the past, on a special occasion. I created a precedent, but I made it clear at the time that it was not to be construed as a precedent according to the British system, where it practically has force of law.

I therefore submit, Mr. Speaker, that what we and what I personally would like to hear from the Chair is that all chairmen of parliamentary committees be given instructions that they are not to allow proceedings to be televised at this time until a decision is made by the House as a whole.

[English]

I hope that the Government House Leader will remind Members who are presently chairing the various committees that they cannot, on their own authority, allow such deliberations. We will have total chaos, where some committees will do so and others will not, without even giving the House of Commons as a whole a chance to deliberate on the subject and make a decision. I am very anxious to hear your decision, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, being one of those who in the past spoke in favour of televising the debates of the House, obviously I would not want to object to it in principle. However it seems clear to me that it can only be done on the basis of specific guidelines. The House must have given consent. In addition, hopefully when the House will soon agree to televise committee proceedings, I maintain that the House and those who will make the decision will have considered all aspects of television broadcasting.

First of all, are accommodations used in a rational manner? I was told that yesterday there were more than 150 people in room 269, a small room where the atmosphere became unhealthy.

The high temperatures generated by lighting facilities required for TV cameras are one of the many aspects which the Board of Internal Economy will have to discuss before making their recommendations to us.

Indeed, I will go even further and quote a statement made before the committee yesterday by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle):

[English]

"Mr. Chairman, I am sorry. This is not my time to intervene, but if the cameras remain in the room, I would not want them to photograph my papers over my shoulder. So I want them 20 feet away from me". I cannot blame the Minister. He is there with classified documents and perhaps he remembers what happened to another Minister not long ago.

There have to be guidelines if the cameras are to be allowed into our committees. Personally, I advocate that committees be open to the public as much as possible via the electronic media, but this has to be done in a very standardized fashion. When this is brought before the House, I hope that a complete plan that considers all these aspects has been carefully drawn up before it is presented to Members of Parliament.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Internal Economy Board I want to allay any fears. The Board represents all Members of the House, some of whom are seated here today. I want to assure Members that these considerations have and will be discussed and all aspects will be covered prior to the implementation, if implementation is the wish of the Board of Internal Economy, through the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I want to comment briefly to confirm the remarks made by the previous speaker and remind the House that the McGrath report contains very specific propositions concerning the way to proceed with the installation of TV cameras, not only in the House but in parliamentary committees as well. This was the object of many work sessions in consultation with press gallery representatives, and one proposition might enable us to implement the McGrath report recommendation which had been accepted by the Government. Therefore I would suggest that today's debate will make it easier for us to understand the situation and provide you, as Speaker, with an opportunity to gather all the necessary material to make a decision as soon as possible.

In conclusion I would say that this decision cannot be made by a committee chairman nor by one of the most important committees of the House, the Board of Internal Economy over which you preside. Basically the decision will be made by the Government House Leader who, after consulting with the House leaders of the two Opposition Parties, might introduce a resolution to be considered, debated and approved by the House.

Basically the decision must be made by the House as a whole and it cannot be the exclusive prerogative of any of the parliamentary committees. The decision must be made by all Members of the House and I, for one, hope that in the near future we will have television of committee proceedings, just as we now have televised debates here in the House.

I hope the Government Leader will respond quickly to these representations.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the question we are discussing at the moment has actually been under deliberation for many months. I concur that the point being made by the Whip for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is a very appropriate intervention, considering what happened last night. I believe that what happened last night ought to cause some Members, at least on the government side, some consternation in terms of supporting this, considering the shellacking that the poor Minister received.

When it comes back to the House we will have an opportunity to evaluate the situation and I am confident that the majority will support the suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will carefully distil that which borders on irrelevant argument from the very cogent points which Hon. Members have made. I do not think it is necessary for the Chair to rule on whether this is a point of order or a question of privilege.

The Chair indicated when the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rose to raise this matter that it was a matter of very great importance to all Members in the Chamber. It would seem that the interventions that Members have made will go a long way to assist in the resolution of the matter.

The Chair takes note that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, in raising this matter, is not in any way taking a position against the televising of committee proceedings. I think that ought to be properly noted.

The Chair, having listened with great care to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), nonetheless feels impelled to remind the House that a former Speaker has made it quite clear that televising of proceedings in committee is not appropriate until there is an order of the House.

However, the disposition of all Members seems to be to resolve the matter. Since this is a matter in which the Chair will also be involved, I think a useful purpose has been served in this discussion this afternoon and I thank all Hon. Members, especially the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mayer that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the motion of Mr. Gauthier (p. 807).

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, when we broke at one o'clock we were debating a Liberal motion to end the debate. I submit that had we spent that period of time debating Bill C-12 we would probably have finished the debate by now.

As a Member of Parliament who represents a rural Manitoba riding, I believe it is very important that I be allowed to join in the debate on Bill C-12 which has such an important effect on agriculture.

I disagree with the motion to end the debate because I want to say a few words on behalf of Manitoba farmers who are approaching me because of a lack of commitment to agriculture by the Government of Manitoba. Manitoba farmers are looking to the Government for leadership in agriculture, and I sincerely believe that they are finding that leadership.

I would like to take a few minutes to explain briefly to the House why it is important that all Members who wish to speak on Bill C-12 be allowed to join in the debate. My Party is a friend of the farmer. One need only go back to the Speech from the Throne to see that no other Government has given agriculture the type of priority we gave it in the October 1 Speech from the Throne. The Government gave agriculture top billing because we realize its importance to the economy—in fact, not just to the western economy but to the entire Canadian economy. We acknowledge with deep concern the tremendous difficulty our farmers are facing at this time.

In the Speech from the Throne the Government said it would stick to the course set over the last two years. Over the last two years the Government has channelled benefits to the farmers of our country in excess of $5 billion. That is a great deal of money in support of our farmers. Yet farmers are still not able to counteract the effects of huge subsidies beyond our borders.

It has been mentioned several times today that the Canadian Treasury is just not able to compete with the huge treasuries, the large populations and tax bases of the EEC and the United States. That is why two days after the Speech from the Throne the Government stuck to the course it set for itself regarding agriculture and pledged further help to our farmers.

While continuing to pursue every possible avenue at the international level aimed at restoring fairness and sanity to the world grain trade, the Government knows that our farmers cannot wait for international solutions. Make no mistake, our Government is a world leader in attempting to solve the international problems confronting agriculture. While the situation is international in nature, nevertheless, it deeply affects Canada's producers.

On October 3 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that the federal Government had taken the lead and was putting together the largest aid package ever for our farmers. This package has been estimated to be worth over $1 billion. However, a price-tag cannot be put on the results this measure will have for our farmers, namely, security and peace of mind.

I said that the Government is a friend of the farmer. True friendship means sticking together when times are tough and doing everything in one's power to make tough times a little easier. The Government is such a friend. One need only consider the source of this Bill C-12, that being the Government of John Diefenbaker, to know that my Party and Canadian farmers go back a long way together. Not unlike that former Conservative Government, this Conservative Government has done much for our farmers.

In our first Budget we delivered a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption on the sale of farm property. Any Member of this House who opposes such a measure displays a real ignorance of agriculture in Canada. We introduced new flexible lending programs through the Farm Credit Corporation. We established farm debt review boards which give farmers in financial difficulty greater flexibility to negotiate ways of staying in business. I might note that such a system has been long sought after by the farmers of Canada. We amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act to trigger record pay-outs prior to spring seeding when farmers need the cash most.

There is more. There is the $1.5 billion dairy policy; the three-party stabilization scheme for red meat producers; a doubling of cash advances under the Advance Payments for Crops Act; and a rebate program which effectively removes all federal sales and excise tax on farm fuels. These are but a few of the matters upon which the Government has acted that have directly benefited our farmers. The amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act are just a part of the Government's over-all approach of assisting our producers; but they are a very important part. These amendments will make the Act more responsive to the current needs of farmers.

I would like to take this occasion to commend the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) for his efforts to bring the Bill before the House under Prime Minister John Diefenbaker. The Act first introduced in 1957 has served farmers well. It was introduced to assist grain producers with their cash flow when their marketing efforts were hindered because of factors beyond their control. The amendments introduced in Bill C-12 will streamline the administrative process so that the program is more responsive to farmers' immediate market requirements. For example, landlords will no longer be required to co-sign advance payment applications; high-yield producers will be able to obtain larger cash advances due to the method of calculation based on grain stored as opposed to acreage and quota; and interest rates on direct repayments and defaulted accounts will be set in relation to current interest rates.

I know that it has been said many times; however, it is quite true and worthy of repetition. Our farmers are among the most efficient and productive in the world. It is our duty to provide programs and legislation which support our producers through times of depressed international markets, something over which they have no control.

I urge all Members to give speedy passage to these amendments. The sooner we act, the sooner our farmers will benefit.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White), on a useful contribution to the debate on Bill C-12. I noted in his remarks that he outlined a number of initiatives that the Government has undertaken in support of western and, indeed, Canadian agriculture, a number of programs which will particularly assist grain producers over this difficult period. I think most Canadians would view these as, hopefully, short-term measures pending a return to sanity in the world grain markets. I am wondering if the Hon. Member has in mind any long-term solutions. He mentioned a number of what we hope will be short-term initiatives which the Government has undertaken on the home front. What does he envision happening in terms of a long-term solution to these problems?

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. He is quite right. Besides recently reducing input costs and developing immediate support programs such as the $1 billion support program, the Government has been working very hard on international solutions. One must look at three recent examples in this regard.

First, the Prime Minister placed agriculture on the agenda at the economic summit in Tokyo. Second, there was the meeting on the West Coast of grain exporters initiated by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Third, there were the efforts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in placing the topic of agricultural subsidies on the agenda for the upcoming GATT discussions, which is something very important to Canadian agriculture. Most recently, there was announced a multi-billion dollar grain sale to the Soviet Union. I think we have proven that as a Government we have a long-term commitment to agriculture and that we are genuinely interested in the future of Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the comments which have been made by the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White), I wish to ask either the Hon. Member, or perhaps another Member, the following question. Do I understand correctly that the Government intends to vote against the motion which is presently before the House? This was a commitment made by the Government House Leader and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) just before lunch. I am simply seeking clarification with respect to whether or not government Members will stick to their words. Is the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River able to respond to my question?

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, my interest lies in the fact that my point of view on behalf of Manitoba farmers be set out before the House. I am interested in having this Bill passed as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Lewis: So are we all.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a privilege for me to speak on Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. To bring into perspective the importance of this Bill in relation to farmers, we must look at the situation on the Prairies and on the farm. I have just spent some time in the riding of Assiniboia, which is the riding I have the opportunity to represent. This riding produces 40 per cent of all the wheat grown in Canada.

We have had a history of problems in my riding. We have had drought. There have been problems of international priority which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) addressed in Tokyo. However, particularly in relation to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, we have a surplus of wheat on the Prairies. There are piles of wheat on the farms. Our Government is trying to move in terms of legislation which will deal with this situation, that is, through advance payments to farmers.

This morning I was very surprised to hear members of the Opposition trying to play down the importance of the Bill before the House. It was not long after the Government came into power that it made a move to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act, thus making payments available to farmers. It was not long before it made a move to increase the amount of the advance payments to farmers from $15,000 to $30,000. The importance of this legislation is that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) will be able to act efficiently and quickly to deal with the needs of agriculture.

I would like to speak about the record of the Progressive Conservative Party. Not since the days of John Diefenbaker have we seen a Government or a Prime Minister reacting to the needs of agriculture the way this Government and Prime Minister have. Members of the Opposition continually challenge the Government's record. Let us look at that record.

First, I would like to say that Canadian farmers can compete fairly with farmers around the world. However, Canadian farmers cannot compete with unfair competition on the part of the U.S. Treasury and the European Economic Community. Canadian farmers have been productive and the Government has recognized that. The Prime Minister said to Canadian farmers through the Throne Speech that he will spare no effort in assisting the farmers through this difficult period.

What has been the record of the Conservative Government? We moved on western grain stabilization. We are now moving on advance payments. We moved quickly during the very difficult drought. I can personally attest to the fact that the Prime Minister asked me to communicate with him on a daily basis about the problems the farmers were facing with the drought. The Prime Minister wanted to know what the situation was on a daily basis. The Government responded. I believe the example of the Saskatchewan election attested to that in a very positive way.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Absolutely.

Mr. Gustafson: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agrees. The farmers know who has been their voice in Ottawa. The farmers know that the Prime Minister has stood in the gap for them. Members of the Opposition tried to say that the drought assistance and deficiency payments were not new money. They tried to defuse the issue and the more they tried to defuse it, the more it became an issue. The farmers of Saskatchewan sent a strong message to Regina and they are sending a strong message of support to Ottawa.

When dealing with this Bill today, we are dealing with priorities. As a farmer, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister and as one who has seen the positive work the Prime Minister has done, I ask opposition Members if they are saying that food is or is not a priority. In the eyes of the Government, food is a priority. Agriculture is a priority in Canada and it must remain a priority so that it may become strong and help build this great country.

Certainly we are facing a difficult time. Agriculture is facing problems. However, the Government is taking up the challenge to meet these difficulties and face them in a positive way. The Government is facing them in a way that will benefit all Canadians, not only farmers.

We often forget that when a farmer spends money buying machinery, improving buildings, buying parts for implements or buying the many other things which are needed, the entire economy of Canada is stimulated. I have heard the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) say many times in the House that money spent on agriculture benefits all of Canada some 25 times in roll-over benefits. It benefits Ontario, Quebec and the rest of Canada. Therefore, it is very important that agriculture be a priority.

Not only in Canada but in all of North America, as agriculture has been strong, the country has progressed in a positive way. We must never lose track of that. Agriculture must be a top priority. It was made a top priority in the Speech from the Throne and it was made a top priority in the Tokyo summit where the Prime Minister laid out the importance of the situation relating to agriculture and its international sales before the nations gathered there. The Government and the Prime Minister will continue to lay before the international market-place the importance of agriculture.

We just signed a significant agreement with Russia for 25 million tonnes. This is a sale which will benefit not only farmers but all of Canada. These are the kinds of agreements for which we are looking and these are the kinds of agreements we must have in order to initiate the strength in agriculture that can help build this great country.

Before I resume my seat, I wish to say one more thing about agriculture and food being a priority. We in Canada have a large surplus of grain on our farms. We must give credit to the farmers for producing this grain. As well, we have been blessed with the moisture required to produce so much grain this year. On the other hand, there are places in this old world where there are starving people. I believe that food is a priority and this requires an educational process. Certainly every man, woman and child in this world has a right to eat. This comes from a farmer's heart. A farmer understands, as do all Canadians, that we have obligations but we also have some great opportunities.

I had the opportunity to represent Canada at the World Food Conference in Rome. I do not think there is a country in the world that is respected more than Canada, not only for the way we have responded in agriculture but certainly for the way we responded in offering food aid around the world. Through the Canadian food grain bank, the people in the Prairies are collecting grain right now to be shipped to underprivileged countries. This is a great challenge for Canada and we take no back seat in what the Government and the people of Canada have accomplished. They have realized that a great need exists to make food a priority. However, it can only become a priority if agriculture is strong and if the Government sees it as a priority.

We all must see the importance of the fact that everyone in this world has a right to eat. I suggest that it is an obligation not only of the Government but of the Opposition and every Canadian to see that food becomes a priority.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of my colleague. He will know—

Mr. Nystrom: Sock it to him!

Mr. Lewis: I intend to. This is going to be tough and I think you may enjoy it.

During the Saskatchewan election, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) made a lot of noise about the Prime Minister's credibility. He suggested that the election results would put that question to rest. In fact, he staked his meager reputation on that one question. I would like my friend to enlighten the House as to how the credibility of our friend from Yorkton—Melville stood up when he staked his reputation on the theory that the farmers of Saskatchewan would soundly reject the efforts of our Party to help the western farmers and, in fact, the Prime Minister's credibility. How did our friend's reputation stand up to that test?

• (1550)

Mr. Gustafson: I would like to respond to that question very positively. That question was asked on Global Television. I think that the Prime Minister's record stands for itself. The Saskatchewan people have spoken. I can assure you that in speaking with many hundreds of Saskatchewan farmers, they are very appreciative of the direction that the Prime Minister and this Government has taken, and the direction that any Hon. Member gives when it comes to advancing the positive direction of agriculture in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to follow my good friend from Assiniboia. What he did not tell the House was that the Conservative vote went down in rural Saskatchewan by three or four points. The NDP vote went up in rural Saskatchewan by three of four points. In my riding, we ended up with our vote increasing by three or four points. We received 46 or 47 per cent of the vote. That bodes very well for the next federal election when we will sweep that riding and have nine or ten seats in Saskatchewan.

The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) is the only Member of Parliament from Saskatchewan to have a provincial Liberal member represent his riding. That is quite a phenomenon in Saskatchewan politics, but it happened in the riding of Assiniboia. For the first time in the history of Saskatchewan, we now have a majority Conservative Government that received fewer votes than the Opposition party. The NDP received more popular votes than the Conservative Party, yet, because of the redistribution of seats, and by some luck in certain areas, it ended up being the Government of Saskatchewan.

An Hon. Member: A 12 seat majority.

An Hon. Member: Statistics are for losers.

Mr. Nystrom: Maybe poles are for dogs, like John Diefenbaker said.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Assiniboia that this is a very important issue. We want to see this cash advance legislation go to committee as soon as possible. Farmers need this kind of legislation. It is a piece of legislation on which we can all agree. I think it should go to the parliamentary committee as soon as possible so that it can be passed and become law. After that we should address other important issues that affect farmers in Saskatchewan and across Canada.

As the Hon. Member for Assiniboia said, agriculture is the backbone of our economy. We are very fortunate to have the most productive farmers anywhere. Those productive farmers are facing a crisis through no fault of their own. They are in a crisis because of a trade war between the Europeans and the friends of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the United States, Mr. Reagan and his administration. Because of that trade war prices for many commodities are now at the 1933 to 1934 level. Because of that, it is incumbent upon the nation as a whole to come to the support of the farmers with a major deficiency payment.

I know the Government is talking about a farm aid Bill of around $1 billion. We in Saskatchewan are hoping that about $400 million to $450 million will come to our grain farmers. That will be a help. I certainly do not criticize the federal Government for that. In fact, farm leaders and all politicians in the Prairies have been calling for a deficiency payment for farm aid. We do not know yet what form that farm aid will take. Will it be in terms of a grant, or will it be a combination of programs? Will it be based on marketing, or on acreage? We do not know those details. All we can say to the Government is that it should move as quickly as possible to make sure that there are cheques in the pockets of the farmers before Christmas because they need that money.

Another thing that is very important, and which I hope urban Members of Parliament realize, is that although $1 billion sounds like a lot of money, it is still not going to make up what the farmers are losing because of a trade war and bad international prices. I understand that a few days ago there was a study published in Ontario which said that farmers in this country need around $4 billion in support programs to bring prices up to where they should be in order for them to make a living and stay on the farm. One billion dollars is about a quarter of that. It is part way, but it is certainly not going all the way. I urge the Government to very quickly dispose of this Bill and send it to committee so that we can debate other issues of importance to farmers.

I believe there are a lot of things we can do. Agriculture is number one. When the farmer is better off, we are all better off, regardless of where we live. If the farmer is better off and making a few dollars, there will be a creation of jobs in the small towns and cities from one end of this country to the other. That will be good for Canada. It will be good for the creation of jobs in Ontario, the Atlantic region, Quebec, and western Canada. We had better start supporting the farmers more than we have in the past.

An interesting statistic about farm aid was released a while ago in The Globe and Mail. The business community in this country is supported by some $14 billion annually of federal government subsidies, tax write-offs, and assistance. If we can support the business community with over $14 billion a year, there is no reason why we should not put up a few more dollars to support agriculture in Canada. I hope that the Government will be receptive to that message and will increase the pot rather than contract and restrict the pot in terms of money to support agriculture.

I have said many times that we need a deficiency payment. We need a large deficiency payment and we need it because of the trade wars between the Europeans and the Americans. South of the border, the American farmer is guaranteed around $6 Canadian a bushel for wheat. He receives around $3 from the international price and around $3 from the American support program, which brings it up to $6.08 a bushel. Across the border in the riding of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), which borders Montana-North Dakota, farmers are producing wheat for not much more than half of what the Americans receive when they sell their grain to the same customers around the world. For that reason, the country as a whole must support our farmers at this time with a big deficiency payment.

Another thing that makes it tough on us is that it is not only the support prices in Europe and the United States, but the Europeans and the Americans are also subsidizing the export of grain to many countries around the world. Many of these countries are traditional Canadian markets. I do not have all my files with me today, but I can recall the ballpark figures in many cases.

I recall the American adminstration trying to sell wheat and barley, for example, to Saudi Arabia, Syria, Israel, India, Yemen, and Algeria with a subsidy of around one-third of the export price. In other words, they will sell grain at $150 a tonne and subsidize it by about $50 a tonne. We cannot compete in those kinds of sales with that kind of subsidy.

If we are going to find markets for our grain, we have to sell it to those countries at one-third of what the price should be. Because of that, the initial price for grain in this country has dropped by about 19 per cent. I believe barley has dropped by about 27 per cent. Again, it is the farmer who is suffering.

In the last provincial election campaign in Saskatchewan, I had a chance to visit around 20 different ridings. Approximately 15 were rural ridings. Everywhere I saw farmers in a worse situation now than they have been in since the 1930s. Those farmers are looking for leadership from all three political Parties. Those farmers want us to come up with the answers. They want to know that we are on their side. If we help farmers out they produce food and, if they produce food, jobs are created across the country, particularly for young people.

Let us look at unemployment rates. In the last four years unemployment rates have risen in the Province of Saskatchewan and in the Province of Alberta, primarily because of difficulties in agriculture and also in oil. I notice the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Van de Walle) is in the House. I congratulate him on his win. I understand that his colleagues call him "Landslide Wally". Perhaps that is appropriate for Alberta, but I am sure he realizes the kind of reaction there can be among people when they are afraid of the future when it comes to agriculture and oil production. In that it means jobs, the country should be coming to the support of the oil industry and of the agricultural industry in a time of trouble.

Those are some of the things we must do. Canadian farmers are asking for leadership in the House and across the provinces. Regardless of our jostling back and forth in the House on whether we did better than the Conservative Party or vice versa in the Saskatchewan election, the reality of the matter is that farmers are looking for all politicians to come to their rescue and do whatever they can. They are now suffering through no fault of their own.

I should like to make another point. I mentioned deficiency payments and support prices. Of course we are debating the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, so technically these things are out of order. However, we are speaking about the over-all problem, which is one reason I want the matter before the committee.

Another issue mentioned by the Premier of Saskatchewan in his campaign worth talking about is the production of farm chemicals in Saskatchewan or in western Canada in general. I support the idea. I am glad it was mentioned in the Saskatchewan election campaign. Last February, at the urging of a few dozen farmers, I introduced into the House a Private Member's Bill on generic farm chemicals. I hope the House will have a chance to discuss the idea of generic farm chemicals as soon as possible. There are large multinational companies such as Monsanto which are ripping off farmers by charging much too high a price for chemicals such as Round-up. The House should move to change the patent laws by reducing the patent from a 17-year monopoly to four years or five years, so that we can have production of generic farm chemicals in Canada just like we produce generic pharmaceuticals. If we could do that, we could entice westerners in particular to produce generic chemicals in western Canada.

Part of the solution was suggested by the Premier of Saskatchewan when he talked about chemical plants. However, I think the other solution can be determined in the House of Commons by changing the patent laws so that we can do this basically at cost for western Canadian farmers. I am not interested in paying high prices for farm chemicals. If we look at Round-up, for example, we find that Monsanto recovers its research and development costs every 24 days because of its sales around the world. Round-up is actually sold in Australia for half the price it is sold here in Canada. These are things which we as parliamentarians can change. We can do for farm chemicals what the country did many years ago for pharmaceuticals. We can change the patent laws so that big companies do not have 17-year exclusive monopolies, so that we can produce farm chemicals at cost and provide them at a much lower price to farmers across Canada.

A very thorough study of the issue was done by the Senate last year. The Senate is not full of radicals; it is a rather conservative institution, a conservative body. The Senate said that we should have generic farm chemicals, that we should get rid of long patents, and that if we did that chemicals could be produced at a much lower price. I think we should take it a step further and produce them right in this country, particularly in western Canada. It would provide jobs for western Canadians in the process.

We require a vision of the country where farmers are in control of those factories and plants so that farmers themselves, not large companies or Governments, are making decisions about the production of farm chemicals. Perhaps that is radical. It is a bit of economic democracy, a bit of local control, and a bit of self-direction. However, we can trust farmers to be in control of their own business and in control of their plants. In the process they will produce jobs for people in western Canada and produce farm chemicals at cost.

For those reasons I hope we can wind up this debate very soon. We all agree with the particular Bill. Let us send it to committee and get on with other important issues like farm chemicals, deficiency payments, the future of agriculture in Canada, and the need to support it to ensure that farmers are given an even break because they are the most productive farmers in the world. They are doing a good job, but they are now suffering from factors beyond their control.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Gauthier, seconded by Mrs. Finestone, moves that the question be now put. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Mayer, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moves that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

BELL CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C-13, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to move second reading of Bill C-13, the Bell Canada Reorganization Act. A similar version of the Bill was considered in a previous session. That Bill, Bill C-19, was drafted as a result of the corporate reorganization of Bell Canada in 1983. The purpose of the present Bill is the same—to ensure that Bell Canada continues to meet its obligations to the Canadian public in the provision of telephone services.

The reorganization of the Bell companies created a new parent holding company, Bell Canada Enterprises. Bell Canada, the telephone company, is now a wholly owned subsidiary of Bell Canada Enterprises, and Bell Canada Enterprises has become involved in a wide range of other unregulated activities and investments.

The Bill before us has been fine tuned as a result of considerable detailed examination of the previous Bill C-19 by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. When the Bill came before the House, it was debated at second reading, and then it went to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture for detailed examination.

The standing committee began studying this Bill a little less than a year ago, in December 1985. Representatives of 11 organizations, including interest groups, labour unions, telecommunications companies, delegates from business circles, Bell Canada, Bell Enterprises and the CRTC, appeared as witnesses.

Committee members got to know different viewpoints on the Bill and heard a few suggestions concerning the consolidation of CRTC regulatory powers with respect to telephone services.

Of course Bell Canada and Bell Enterprises were fearful that the Bill might jeopardize their international operations or even impose regulations. CRTC spokesman André Bureau stated that he and his colleagues were supportive of the Bill. According to him the provisions related to access to information from Bell Canada and to the authority to make a distinction between monopolistic and competitive operations were of prime interest to the CRTC.

[English]

I turn now to a clause by clause examination of what has been done in general terms but not in any great detail. In its subsequent clause by clause examination, the standing committee considered a number of Government and opposition amendments designed to improve and, as I say, fine tune the clarity of the previous Bill. In large measure these amendments were based on the very thoughtful submissions of the various witnesses, and they have been carried over into the present Bill C-13. We wanted to respect what the standing committee had done in the previous session of Parliament. Therefore, the amendments put through at that time were also reproduced in the Bill now before us.

• (1610)

When I look at these clauses I can say to you, Sir, that the first 10 clauses of Bill C-13 restate the provisions of the Special Act of Parliament under which Bell Canada was originally established a number of years ago. Essentially what those 10 clauses do is define the nature of Bell Canada's responsibilities as a telecommunications carrier and bring it under federal jurisdiction.

The next clause, Clause 11, contains a provision requiring the CRTC to approve the disposal or sale of Bell Canada shares, all of which are now held by Bell Canada Enterprises.

Clause 12 will allow the CRTC to obtain information from Bell Canada Enterprises relative to the regulation of Bell Canada's operations.

Clause 13 contains provisions which allow the CRTC to decide whether particular telecommunication services offered by Bell Canada should be carried out on a competitive or monopoly basis.

The amendments adopted by the standing comittee during the last session affect present Clauses 6, 7, 11 and 13. In addition to these amendments, Section 6(2) was amended during report stage debate on Bill C-19 in the House. Section 6(2) is the section that limits the advance payment for telephone service that Bell Canada can charge to six months. The amendment allows the continuation of the historical six month provision but also gives the CRTC the flexibility to set appropriate terms of payment as conditions change.

Clause 7, Mr. Speaker, is the clause that contains the existing statutory prohibition against Bell Canada holding a broadcasting licence. The CRTC originally recommended that legislation be enacted to prohibit Bell Canada and all other members of the Bell group from holding a broadcasting licence. However, during the standing committee's deliberation on Bill C-19 several witnesses stated that the clause would impose undue restrictions on Bell Canada Enterprises and its competitive subsidiaries.

Accordingly, at that time, Clause 7 was amended to specify that only Bell Canada and its subsidiaries may not hold a licence but that Bell Canada Enterprises and its other affiliates may apply to the CRTC for a broadcasting licence. That amendment was carried out as a result of the deliberations of the standing committee. The amendment put forward by the standing committee was accepted by the Government because of the wishes or the arguments of the standing committee. It may be that that clause among others, but that clause in particular, may want to be revised by the members of the committee when it is before them.

The third amendment adopted by the standing committee affects Clause 11 which deals with the approval or disposal of shares and facilities. As you know, Mr. Speaker, for many years Bell shares were widely held by thousands of shareholders. Now there is only one shareholder to Bell Canada, namely, Bell Canada Enterprises. Clause 11 would give the CRTC an opportunity to examine proposals which migh effectively transfer ownership or control of Bell Canada to a province, a foreign interest or to a Bell competitor.

Since the object of this section is to prevent a change in control of Bell Canada without regulatory approval, an amendment was put forward and subsequently adopted by the standing committee to the effect that CRTC approval would only be required for share sales on transfers that would result in Bell Canada Enterprises ownership falling below 80 per cent.

The fourth clause which was amended by the standing committee is Section 13. It reads:

Orders requiring undertaking or divestiture of activities.

This section contains two provisions which are commonly referred to as the "in" and "out" power.

A major feature of the Bell re-organization was the intended division of activities that are subject to regulation from those other activities which are to be conducted in non-regulated subsidiaries of Bell Canada Enterprises.

To prevent cross-subsidization of competitive activities by monopoly activities, subsections 13(1) and (2) give the Commission powers to order Bell Canada to undertake an activity provided by an affiliate not subject to a sufficient degree of competition. This is what is known as the "in" power. On the other hand, the CRTC can also order Bell Canada to divest itself of an activity that the Commission determined was sufficiently competitive not to require regulatory supervision. That is known as the "out" power.

Amendments adopted by the standing committee do, I believe, clarify the fact that provincially-regulated affiliates of Bell are not affected by the "in" power. They also ensure that activities which would not otherwise be subject to regulation under the Railway Act, if conducted by Bell, cannot be the subject of an order. Finally, they require the application of a more restrictive test before the Commission may order the company to undertake an activity or to divest itself of that activity.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to commend all committee members for the outstanding job they did during the previous session. The document submitted today attests to the thorough study of the contents of the Bill and the basic understanding of the issues involved. Committee members will of course have a further opportunity to examine this Bill, and I can say in advance that I will be pleased to consider any recommendation they might make.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Bill under study takes fair account of the interests of Bell Canada subscribers as well as those of Bell Canada Enterprises and their shareholders. I stress the fact that the CRTC does need the powers provided under the Bill to continue efficiently to regulate telephone services made available by a monopoly.

[English]

I have studied the recommendations that were put forward by the standing committee when this Bill was previously considered by the House and by the standing committee in its deliberations. I think they did a very good job in analysing the various clauses in the Bill and in making recommendations that improved them over-all. It may be that they will want to suggest other measures that will provide further improvement. I can assure them all that I will be willing to take into consideration any further suggestions they might want to put forward.

When considering this Bill for second reading, Sir, I would ask Hon. Members to keep in mind that this Bill is designed to maintain the excellent telephone system that has evolved over many years. At the same time, it is designed to allow the Bell group of companies to freely pursue a wide range of unregulated activities, both in Canada and internationally. I look forward to the work of the committee.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

BELL CANADA ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Island that Bill C-13, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister for her comments on our Committee's activities, and I hope the same spirit of solidarity and interest in the subject at hand will be maintained, especially of our telecommunications system and how it affects Mr. and Mrs. Average Canadian.

[English]

Bill C-13, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, has three objectives. First, to assure the CRTC's ability to carry out efficient monitoring and control of our regulated monopoly telephone system, Bell Canada. Second, to ensure fair and reasonable rates for subscribers with ongoing universal, affordable service to all users within Bell's area of operation. Third, to ensure that the regulation of Bell Canada allows it to grow to meet the challenge of the new technological era in which it finds itself, while not unduly impeding the profitability of Bell Canada Enterprises, its new parent. I believe the Minister acknowledged that to be an important aspect of the relationship as well.

Unfortunately the Bill, in its present form, does not ensure that any of those three objectives will be attained. The Bill contains major flaws. Its passage will not ensure fairness for Bell subscribers and may even facilitate unfair competition with our broadcasting industry. I bring to the Minister's attention that I expressed this concern when the Bill last came to the House as Bill C-19, when it went to committee and came back into the House. It is an ongoing concern not only of mine but of the broadcasting industry. I hope she will, as she has said, be open to an amendment in this regard. It is most regrettable that the Bill does not reflect the views widely expressed during the time when broad consultations took place.

Before embarking on an analysis of Bill C-13, it may be useful to review the legislative history which led to its introduction. In view of the importance of the Bell group of companies and the potential impact its corporate reorganization could have, the CRTC was directed on October 25, 1982, by the then Minister responsible, Francis Fox, to conduct an inquiry under Section 50 of the National Transportation Act into Bell Canada's proposed reorganization under the CBCA. The CRTC was directed to report its findings by March 31, 1983, so that the Government could take them into account in its over-all analysis of the reorganization. The Liberal Government also called for consultation hearings to be open to all interested persons. We were always a Government open and interested in consulting with other people before we took action.

Mr. Fox indicated that the general form of the reorganization was consistent with the Liberal Government's attitude toward increased competition and industrial development in the high-tech telecommunications sector. He stressed that the Government had been indicating for some time that all Canadian companies should make changes to enable them to be competitive, both here at home and in foreign markets. He said:

> While Bell Canada is most readily identified with the provision of telephone services in Quebec and Ontario, the Bell group is also involved in many other activities. The most major corporate reorganization of this important group of companies is obviously of great interest to the Government.

He pointed out that the proposed reorganization had raised questions and concerns regarding the impact on Bell subscribers and on the ability of the CRTC to continue to regulate Bell's monopoly in the provision of telecommunication services.

Mr. Fox said that the Government must be satisfied that the reorganization was in the over-all public interest.

The CRTC held its hearings in February, 1983, and many viewpoints were expressed on the issue. On the basis of the briefs and recommendations submitted to it, and taking its own study into consideration, the CRTC made its recommendations on April 18, 1983. It recommended that the proposed reorganization be implemented on condition that certain legislative provisions be adopted to strengthen and clarify the CRTC's power over Bell Canada and its affiliates, thereby protecting the interests of the subscriber.

On April 23, 1983, the Liberal Government announced its intention to study the CRTC's recommendations and draft the necessary legislative provisions to protect the interests of Bell Canada customers. That Bill was tabled, a subsequent Bill was tabled, and we are now speaking to Bill C-13. It has many of the legislative provisions initially recommended by my party. It should be noted, however, that the present Government has introduced significant changes to Bill C-13 which diminish the intent of that legislation.

During the last session, when the previous Minister introduced this legislation as Bill C-19, which by the way died on the Order Paper when this Government chose to prorogue, I had been speaking to my concerns involving many of the issues which had appeared after a long and arduous study and which formed part of the CRTC report tabled in 1983. It is a fascinating document which I think is well worth rereading. Many groups appeared with informed opinions to share with those interested in the improvement of both our telephone system and business systems in general. We are not fully satisfied that Bill C-13 in its present form will bring all activities of Bell Canada under the regulatory authority of the CRTC.

As I said, I have a number of areas of specific concern with respect to this Bill. These concerns include the furnishing of services, the potential for unfair competition in the broadcasting field, the lack of adequate safeguards for an indirect takeover of Bell Canada, and the impact of the divestiture clauses.

I will begin by considering the matter of furnishing service. My dissatisfaction with Clause 6 of this Bill stems from the fact that it fails to recognize that a customer has the right to be supplied with the most efficient and least costly telephone. We must not forget that the telephone is the outside line to the world and it is very important to shut-ins and our senior citizens. If they cannot afford the ever-escalating price of the telephone itself, let alone the service, it would be most unfair. I think the Minister would be the first to agree.

The Bill says that Bell Canada must furnish telephones of the latest improved design then in use by the company in the municipality or territory concerned. That could be anything from the newest of the high-tech touch tone to the fanciest of telephone answering systems. That is not necessarily what all people want. Many of the features are in excess of the requirements of a basic telephone service. I recall trying to get a plain old black telephone as they were bringing the new telephone systems into this House and I was trying to figure out how to use all this fancy stuff. I would love to have the little old black telephone back in some instances.

I would like to bring to the Minister's attention that one must be mobile and able to go to a boutique to select a telephone. When you order a telephone service, they do not automatically come with a piece of hardware to plug into the wall once the wires have been installed. The consumer must go to the boutique and is often overwhelmed by an array of new fandangled equipment. I am sure this can be a very intimidating experience for a frail, elderly citizen who had enough difficulty getting to the shop and must now cope with the modern technology. The telephone boutique does not always have in stock the least expensive but most efficient and effective piece of equipment.

A member of my staff moved into a new apartment. Since the information was not volunteered, she inquired as to what kind of minimum cost telephone was available. She was told that only the most expensive telephone was available. Her choice was either to take the touch-tone telephone which was available or wait six months until the least costly equipment would again be in stock in that particular boutique. The difference in what I pay for my telephone and what this person was forced to buy through Bell Canada is $8.80 a month. That is a lot of money. It is close to the cost of purchasing cable television on a monthly basis.

I do not think that was the intention of the Minister or Bell Canada. However, those boutiques should carry enough of the least costly phones to service everyone. Consumers have the right to be supplied with the most efficient but least costly piece of equipment. The consumer needs better protection. I do not think that Bill C-13, in its present form, will be instrumental in ensuring a universally affordable telephone service.

The furnishing of services and prepayment is referred to in Section 6(2)(c). The Government has changed this section from the version which appeared in the former Bill C-19. The present version of Section 6(2)(c) provides that if the CRTC fails to prescribe an amount which the telephone subscriber must pay in advance to obtain telephone service, Bell will automatically be able to charge a six-month prepayment regardless of whether the customer is a good or bad credit risk.

The Government maintains that the six-month charge is academic, that the customer will never actually be charged a six month prepayment by Bell because the CRTC will always prescribe the lower amount. If the Government is so confident that the CRTC will protect the telephone subscriber, why does it persist in holding that six-month prepayment clause over the heads of customers? I do not know why that could not have been removed or made more clear.

The Government also maintains that even if the CRTC fails to address the issue of prepayment, Bell will refrain from exercising the right given to it in this Bill to charge a six-month prepayment. Why give a company the legal right to charge something and then say that you do not expect it to use that right? That does not make much sense. Sooner or later the company can be expected to act on its right. That is only normal. Telephone subscribers will be asking some very direct questions as to why the Government has failed to protect them.

There are many people in the country who do not have the funds to pay a lump sum, semi-annual amount in advance should Bell deem it necessary prior to fulfilling its own obligation of connecting a telephone. The monthly rate of $8 or $10 multiplied by six is a substantial sum. Is it fair for the average struggling student, who finds it difficult enough to pay rent, heat and everything else, let alone tuition, to be expected to provide a six-month advance payment? What about the sick and elderly? I do not think it is very clever to leave this clause in the Bill.

I believe that the amount of an advance payment, if any, is best determined by the CRTC on an ongoing basis in order to ensure consistency with the needs of the subscriber. The CRTC will, no doubt, take note of the fact that with a public monopoly utility such as Bell the customer will not decline to pay and run away. I do not think they have to worry about that. I suggest that they will pay their monthly bill. Bell does not need up-front money with the income it presently has.

I wrote this part of my text in June, anticipating that this Bill would come back before the House was prorogued. At that time I did not know the extent of the profits which Bell Canada was privileged to earn. We should all be very pleased that its profits are so high because it means it is a very well-managed and highly efficient company. This has nothing to do with the state of the economy but rather with knowing how to perfect management.

The recent ruling of the CRTC directed Bell Canada to return $243 million in surplus profits to its subscribers. Bell anticipates approximately $207 million worth of profit in 1986-87 and the CRTC has directed Bell Canada to reduce its long distance rates. I suggest that this substantiates my point that up-front money is certainly not necessary for Bell Canada to function effectively and efficiently. It is a detriment, an unnecessary cost and often a burden to the general population.

At times I may speak rather harshly of Bell Canada. I will take this opportunity to recognize that Bell Canada is a very fine corporate citizen. It shows leadership in many areas in the country. In particular, it lends the services of its personnel. There was a very fine demonstration of that when Rick Hansen was in Ottawa last weekend. Bell Canada's Pioneer Club has been very supportive of his efforts. I would like to salute Bell Canada for that effort.

Clause 7 of the Bill prohibits Bell Canada or any company controlled by Bell Canada from operating a broadcasting undertaking. This is a continuation of the prohibition contained in the 1968 Bell Canada Special Act. Parliament has consistently opposed allowing Bell Canada to enter into the broadcasting field. The Parliament of Canada imposed certain restrictions and obligations on this regulated public service monopoly for having such rights of monopoly. One restriction was that they should not enter the broadcasting field. The report states it much better than I could. On page 69 it says:

> The Commission therefore recommends that legislation be enacted as follows:
> 2) prohibiting Bell Canada and other members of the Bell group from applying for or holding a broadcasting licence;

I suggest that that included Bell Canada affiliates as well as Bell Canada subsidiaries. They have said:

> The Commission is of the view that Bell and the other members of the Bell group should continue to be subject to the limitation prohibiting the holding of broadcasting licences, which under the Broadcasting Act includes licences to operate cable television systems.
> At this stage of rapid evolution in the communications industry, the Commission would be concerned with the degree of concentration that could arise in the industry if the Bell group were allowed to enter the broadcasting field. In this regard it is noteworthy that, in 1982, the size of Bell Canada, as measured by the book value of its telecommunications assets alone, was in excess of $10 billion, compared to assets of approximately $1.2 billion for the entire Canadian private television, radio and cable industries.

I strongly recommend that all Members who have cable companies, television companies and broadcasters in their ridings pay very strict attention to this clause because there will not be satisfaction among their constituents if they decide now to put these companies into a competitive position with the very well financed Bell Canada, particularly its affiliate Bell Canada Enterprises. It had a net profit of $1 billion. The report goes on to say:

> The Commission would also be concerned if the Bell group were to enter the cable industry, with the conflict of priorities that could arise in the group as between the development of the cable and the telephone distribution systems. The Commission considers that the public interest is best served at this time by the separate, and to some extent, competitive evolution of the cable and telephone distribution systems.
> With regard to Bell's suggestion that the Commission's power to award broadcasting licences would permit it to consider telephone cable cross-ownership issues in the future, it should be noted that it is not certain that telecommunications policy matters can properly be taken into account in licensing decisions under the Broadcasting Act.

I hope the Bill will give serious consideration to this area. Due to the recent reorganization of Bell, the company—now Bell Canada Enterprises—will be in a position to circumvent the prohibition contained in Clause 7 of the current Bill. Let us consider the following examples. The new holding company, Bell Canada Enterprises, could incorporate a subsidiary such as "Bell Canada TV", and for very little cost connect the transmission facilities of such a subsidiary through its affiliate, Bell Canada, to virtually every home in Canada at a very reasonable rate. Such a transaction does not run afoul of Clause 7 as it now stands because Clause 7 only catches companies controlled by Bell Canada. They used to be controlled by Bell Canada as subsidiaries to the old corporation, but now they are subsidiaries of Bell Canada Enterprises, affiliates of Bell Canada. Bell Canada no longer controls them, due to this reorganization.

The most obvious endeavour for BCE to become involved in would be cable television. The Canadian Cable Television Association fears that this gap in Clause 7 of the Bill would have a major impact upon its members. The association has expressed its concern to the Minister, but she has obviously not listened. I recommended in the committee and in the House that the word "affiliate" be added in that clause. No such change has taken place and I suggest that the Minister look at that clause again.

It is significant that the CRTC, in its April, 1983 report to Cabinet on the proposed reorganization of Bell Canada, concluded that the Bell Canada group should continue to be prohibited by law from holding broadcasting licences. The CRTC's rationale, which resulted from an exhaustive review of the arguments on both sides at a lengthy public hearing, was a concern over the degree of concentration of control which could arise in the Canadian broadcasting industry if affiliates of Bell Canada Enterprises were allowed to hold licences. The Commission concluded that the public interest would best be served by the separate and, to some extent, competitive evolution of the cable and telephone industries as separate entities. I emphasize the world "separate". The commission's conclusions are as valid today as when they were made. I have already read those conclusions into the record.

It is regrettable that the Government has not seen fit to respond to the serious concerns which have been raised by broadcasting companies regarding Clause 7. I have often relayed those concerns in the House and in the committee. I believe that Clause 7 of the Bill should have precluded the entire group of Bell companies from holding broadcasting licences. It is not too late for the Government to change its mind by amending Clause 7. I will urge the Government to do so before many Canadian jobs are jeopardized.

Clause 11 of the Bill provides that any sale by Bell Canada Enterprises of more than 20 per cent of the shares of Bell Canada must receive CRTC approval. I am quite delighted to at least see that provision because there was no limit in the Bill at the outset. While I had proposed a 10 per cent limit, the Government countered with a 20 per cent proposal which is now in the Bill. At this time it is under 6 per cent of external holdings and I do not know why the Government has increased it to 20 per cent.

The requirement in that clause for CRTC approval can be circumvented if a company acquires control of BCE itself. I point out to the Government that as a result of this gap in Clause 11, a company can acquire control of Bell Canada itself, without having to receive CRTC approval. This sounds very far-fetched. I read it again and talked to the Ontario Securities Commission. I suggest that the potential of and control within certain types of bonds that have been issued should be rechecked.

There may be those who would scoff at the suggestion that a huge company like Bell Canada Enterprises could be taken over, thereby yielding control to the successful buyer of Bell Canada. However, an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail on June 11, 1986, points out that a group of Toronto stockbrokers is attempting to take over BCE. The article states that: "Bell Canada Enterprises of Montreal, one of the country's largest business empires, is worried that stockbrokers might have found an indirect way to control the giant utility holding company". The article points out that such a takeover may indeed be a possibility and that BCE is concerned. If BCE is worried about this situation, why is the Government not worried or prepared to block that loophole in the Bill?

There has also been a lack of effective mechanisms to obtain information. I bring to the attention of Hon. Members the important April 18, 1983 CRTC report on the proposed reorganization of Bell Canada. At page 33, it states:

> It is the Commission's duty to ensure that the telephone subscribers of Bell Canada do not cross-subsidize the activities of the other companies of the Bell group. This duty requires that the Commission be in a position to determine the fair value of Bell's resources utilized by other corporate members having regard, among other things, to the value of such services in the market-place.
> In the Commission's opinion, it will not be possible to ensure the fulfilment of this duty unless it has access to contracts between third parties and BCE or its subsidiaries in circumstances where these may be relevant to transactions between Bell and its affiliates.

It may be grand that Bell has the expertise to lend to other parts of the world, but that does not mean we should have to pay for it as part of our telephone operating costs and have it reflected in our subscriber rates. I believe that Bell Canada Enterprises should pay the full share, as they properly belong as part of its costs.

I return to page 33 of the CRTC report:

> Another issue arising out of the proposed change in the status of Bell Canada within the Bell group relates to the Commission's power to require information from Bell affiliates to be organized, analysed and presented in the form the Commission considers necessary or desirable in order to enable it to discharge its mandate.

• (1650)

The CRTC stated further:

> In the Commission's opinion, it will not be possible to ensure the fulfilment of this duty unless it has access to contracts between third parties and BCE or its subsidiaries in circumstances where these may be relevant to transactions between Bell and its affiliates.

Clearly, Clause 12 of Bill C-13, as I have said, should have provided the CRTC with the legal right to obtain such information, presented in an organized and readily-understandable fashion, from Bell's affiliated companies. Unfortunately, the Bill does not so provide. Such a provision would have enabled the CRTC to properly fulfil its mandate.

In a presentation delivered on behalf of the Canadian Consumers' Association Dr. Myron Gordon told the CRTC:

> If—for legal reasons—the corporate veils created by the reorganization cannot be pierced by the CRTC, then the CRTC's ability to set fair and reasonable rates for telephone services would be destroyed. This is a strong, but nonetheless true statement.

The views of Dr. Gordon and the Canadian Consumers' Association were directed to ensuring that the subscribers of Bell's monopoly services were not adversely impacted by the reorganization. I share those particular concerns. I suggest that in this Bill the Government has demonstrated its neglect for the interests of Bell subscribers and its failure to act on the report of the CRTC in the proposed reorganization changes and modifications that would be required to ensure that the monopoly part of Bell Canada be maintained and fairly assessed.

Again, I bring to the attention of Hon. Members the following words of the Commission:

> With these considerations in mind, the Commission has concluded that, in order to ensure that its ability to exercise its mandate is not impaired after the reorganization, there should be legislative clarification of the power to compel the production of such documents and information from BCE and the other Bell affiliates as the Commission considers relevant to enable it to carry out its mandate. This power should also enable the Commission to require that such documents or information be organized, analysed and presented in such form as the Commission may determine.
> These powers, and those already vested in the Commission must, of course, be used responsibly and with discretion. They are all, including the power of the Commission to determine what is relevant in any particular situation, subject in any event to the scrutiny of the courts . . .
> The Commission therefore recommends that there be legislative clarification of its power to compel the production of such documents and information from BCE and the other Bell affiliates as the Commission considers relevant to enable it to carry out its statutory mandate. This power should also enable the Commission to require that such documents or information be organized, analysed and presented in such form as the Commission may determine.

That is not unreasonable in helping to determine subscriber rates or activities. It would certainly not be in contravention of Section 321 of the Railway Act.

With respect to the divestiture section, Clause 13(1) of the Bill ensures that a telecommunications activity of a Bell affiliate cannot become dominant in its market without attracting regulation. Clause 13(2) provides the CRTC with the means to prevent Bell Canada from engaging in a competitive activity, as opposed to its normal monopoly activity, by ordering Bell to divest itself of the competitive activity.

The stifling effect that a dominant carrier such as Bell Canada can have on the growth of competition is a product not merely of its size but also of its monopoly control of basic telephone services. It is something like a cash cow, which is exactly what it is. It is a constant flow of dollars which many people would love to have.

Access to revenues generated by monopoly services creates the distinct danger that these revenues will be used to subsidize competitive activities regardless of CRTC regulation, to the detriment of competitors which have no monopoly revenue to draw upon. The Bill does not by any means go far enough in preventing this scenario from happening.

In conclusion, I point out that the former Minister of Communications, the Hon. Member for Frontenac (Mr. Masse), during talks with his provincial counterparts acknowledged his sense of obligation to ensure that Canadians are provided with a universal telephone service at reasonable cost. In fact, Bell Canada has a mandate to provide, on an exclusive basis, as a regulated public utility monopoly, telephone service to all customers in its territory at a reasonable rate. This service has evolved over the last century into more than a privilege. It has now become almost a right for all Canadians.

I have tried to outline the shortfalls of Bill C-13. What it all boils down to is the fact that we can create children but we cannot create our own parents. By creating its own special parent company through reorganization Bell Canada has weakened the powers of the regulatory body, the CRTC, whose function it is to protect telephone subscribers. This Bill fails to give the CRTC the tools with which it can do the most effective job.

I look forward to the necessary changes to the Bill so that it will truly reflect what was in the minds of the founders of Bell Canada—a universal telephone system.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today, Bill C-13, respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, is a slightly recycled version of another Bill, Bill C-19, introduced by the Conservatives in the last session which, of course, was simply a recycled version of a Liberal Bill, Bill C-20, introduced in 1984. However, whatever it is called and whatever number it bears it is a mistaken piece of legislation. It shows a lack of telecommunications policy. It is a Bill dealing with one specific question on which the Government has capitulated in order to give Bell Canada what it wants.

Bill C-13 is virtually unchanged from its predecessor, Bill C-19. I know that the Minister said that there had been some improvements made as a result of recommendations presented in committee. I suggest that they are trivial changes and that the Minister has not learned much from the committee hearings.

The New Democratic Party certainly fought this Bill hard in the House and in committee, as did many citizens' groups, consumers' groups and ordinary Canadians concerned about their telephone service. They fought the old Bill and I suspect, like us, they will be fighting the new one very hard as well.

Bill C-13 represents yet another instance of the Government putting the interests of a large corporation ahead of the public. Most Canadians need their telephones. Virtually all Canadians are telephone subscribers. The largest company providing telephone service is, of course, Bell Canada. Canadians want good service at reasonable rates. It is certainly in the public interest that we have regulations to ensure that this be the case. The Bill before us does not take us in that direction, but instead makes it possible for the company not to avoid entirely regulation but allows certain aspects of its operation to avoid regulation. It certainly ensures that consumers will not receive adequate protection in terms of rates charged.

Canadians are the greatest telephone users in the world. The telephone is an essential means of communication in our large country. Many people would be isolated without one. It is an important matter. Yet the Government has absolutely capitulated to a large corporation which simply wants to bully its way through the courts and through Parliament in order to get what it wants.

The Bill before us would legalize the reorganization of Bell Canada. It is an example of how a corporation with a monopoly and guaranteed profits is allowed to spin off profits made in a regulated field into other areas and into other parts of its corporation. The Bill will permit Bell Canada to do in the 1980s what the CPR did earlier. The CPR became an enormously wealthy corporation and yet train service deteriorated. The public was not well served by it, yet corporate profits remained at an enormous level thanks to a privilege which it had as a monopoly.

I would like to review a bit of the history of this Bill. When the Bill first appeared as a Conservative Bill, it was tabled in the House by the former Minister on December 20, 1984. It was very similar to the Bill previously introduced by the Liberal Minister earlier that year.

It is worth noting that on May 10, 1984, the then Opposition House Leader wrote the Liberal House Leader urging him to split the old Bill C-20 into two Bills, one being called the Bell Canada Reorganization Act, an Act which could receive a quick second reading and referral to committee, according to the letter. When in Government, the Conservatives did exactly that. They split it into two Bills so they could sneak it through very quickly. However, they found a lot more opposition to it than they had anticipated but now the Bill is before us again.

At the beginning of a study of this Bill, a couple of points must be made. It is a short Bill. It does not deal with very much. Effectively, it outlines what already exists in regard to the regulation of Bell Canada. It is not what the CRTC, consumer groups and the former Government wanted. It is what Bell Canada wanted. It pushed and finally twisted enough arms to receive acceptance from Liberals and Conservatives. This shows what corporate power in Canada can do.

Bell Canada took on the CRTC, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, the Bureau of Competition Policy and any number of intervenors from consumer and public interest organizations. It fought them all. In the end, the Government backed off and the result is a Bill which only legislates what is already in place and allows Bell to join Canadian Pacific in being a major company which has prospered in a heavily protected government-created monopoly. Now it will be permitted to take the assets it gained thanks to that protection and use them as a basis for a diverse acquisition seeking conglomerate now known as Bell Canada Enterprises.

As much as anything else, this Bill sugggests the Conservative trend to deregulation: let the public interest be damned and let companies get away with what they want. In this case, it is to take the money and run. Bell Canada will be free to do as it pleases in the market-place with assets that it acquired thanks to its monopoly status. The existing Bell telephone service will remain under CRTC regulation but, and I stress this, without the important financial support which had provided cross-subsidization and had held down telephone rate increases. With increasing costs looming, we can expect increasing costs for basic telephone services.

I think we have to look at this Bill as being a failure in the development of public policy. It does not put the public, consumers and ordinary Canadians first. It would not have happened if we had a federal Government with a decent telecommunications policy and enough guts to take on Bell Canada and fight it in the public interest. That, I am afraid, we do not have. The Liberals did not want the Bill in the first place but capitulated. The Conservatives never put up a fight at all. Bell has managed to impose its corporate will on the country. It has got what it wants.

Let us look at how Bell has managed to do this. On June 24, 1982, Bell Canada announced a planned reorganization to create "a new, non-regulated parent company called Bell Canada Enterprises, Inc.". The Chairman, Mr. de Grandpré, described this as being a purification of Bell Canada's regulated activities. In his words, it would make the task of the CRTC easier by separating off Bell's regulated activity so the CRTC would not have to be bothered with all its other activities. He said that Bell Canada would remain the regulated utility but this reorganization would simplify the regulatory process. He said that under the old structure, Bell controlled about 80 different companies, regulated and non-regulated, leading to distortions. Of course, many Canadians did not agree with this and were concerned about the interests of consumers.

The spokesperson for the Public Interest Advocacy Centre said that this was an ingenious scheme to avoid regulation and that in football terms, it is an end-run again but around the other end. Other opponents of the legislation said that it was a recognition that Bell is really in the investment business, not the telephone business. Unfortunately, this has proven to be correct.

Bell Canada simply created Bell Canada Enterprises as its holding company, displacing Bell Canada. The profitable subsidiaries and the revenue for planned acquisitions went to Bell Canada Enterprises. Bell Canada became a regulated subsidiary with only three subsidiaries: a 30 per cent share in Bell Northern Research, a 24.6 per cent share in Telesat Canada and Tele-Direct (Publications), a subsidiary to be transferred to Bell Canada Enterprises as soon as practicable. The intent of all this is very clear. The intent is to get the profitable parts away from Government and from regulation.

To head off any interference, Bell referred the reorganization to the Quebec Superior Court. Courts can move very quickly. The law does not have to be slow. In barely two months after the referral, on September 24, 1982, the Quebec Superior Court approved the Bell Canada reorganization rejecting a federal Government challenge that the plan required the approval of the supposed regulator, the CRTC. Charles Gonthier, Justice of the Quebec Superior Court said that the arrangement is just and reasonable for the shareholders of Bell since it was approved by an overwhelming majority. The federal Government appealed this decision. Bell won the appeal in the Quebec Court of Appeal on March 25, 1983.

On April 18, 1983, CRTC investigations and hearings produced a 105-page report with recommendations, some of which appear in this Bill. Significantly, however, the regulation most necessary as a check against Bell Canada Enterprises was a minority shareholding in Bell Canada which is now 100 per cent owned by Bell Canada Enterprises. To the CRTC, this would be a "significant incentive" to conduct company affairs in the best interests of both subscribers and shareholders.

Hon. Members will understand that the creation of minority shareholders is a very commonly used device to ensure that certain interests are protected and are not ignored by a single shareholder. That recommendation was not included in the old Bill C-19 nor is it included in Bill C-13 which is before us now. In fact, the CRTC said that it should not be included in the immediate future.

Also omitted from the legislation were the arguments put forward at the CRTC hearings by consumers' organizations and particularly the Consumers' Association of Canada for some disposition of the capital gains which Bell had acquired as a federally chartered telephone monopoly. This is an extremely important matter when considering the amount of money that is at stake here. The CRTC had calculated the capital gains from the sale of Bell owned provincial telephone companies and Northern Telecom to Bell Canada Enterprises at $560 million. The Consumers' Association of Canada felt that $200 million should be returned to telephone subscribers. The value of these investments had quadrupled from an historical cost of $440 million. However, the CRTC saw no reason for subscribers to share in the capital gains realized by Bell, although obviously it was the fees paid by subscribers that made it possible for these capital gains to be realized.

Should this not be a consideration for us when looking at this Bill? Should the House not look at the public interest and the interest of subscribers? After all, the subscribers paid for the gains that were ultimately realized by the company. Should the Government not have a duty to protect the larger public interest when creating monopolies apparently in the public interest? Unfortunately, Government just turned aside and did not take its responsibilities here.

On April 21, 1983, having been defeated in the courts and having seen its own regulatory agency, the CRTC, accept the reorganization, the Liberal Government capitulated. It decided that it would not take any further court cases, and the restructuring would go ahead as Bell Canada wanted it. I cite the then Minister of Communications, Francis Fox, who said that because it has a favourable impact on the economy generally. In other words, what is good for Bell Canada is good for the country. However, he did not produce any evidence to explain why this would be so, and why Bell Canada's profits should be considered apart from the interests of subscribers and the people who have been paying their bills and making their profits for them over the years.

The federal Government threw in the towel on the issue of whether a publicly fostered monopoly had an obligation to consumers. This again is very similar to the kinds of deals that the CPR got away with over the years. Now technology has changed, and it is not the railways which make these big profits. We are now in the telecommunications era and that is how it is being done. The principle is the same and it is a very bad principle.

On April 28, 1983 the Bell reorganization went into effect at the Bell annual meeting. The chairman of Bell hinted only at future rate increases. He did not want to appear too greedy at this point. He did not announce any specifically. The next announcement on July 27 was even better for Bell. The new company reported an increase in profits of 40 per cent for its first quarter as an unregulated holding company.

On the telephone subscribers side it has been very different. There has been a campaign for user-pay charges on local calls, and much higher basic telephone service rates combined with deregulation of long distance service. We cannot be at all complacent about what is going to happen to consumers. What has this Bell reorganization accomplished? Has it created more jobs? No. We know that takeovers do not create jobs. Sometimes they result in the elimination of jobs. Certainly in this case, Bell has actually cut jobs since 1980. Has it resulted in lower rates for telephone subscribers? Has it resulted in better service? Well, telephone rates have continued rise. There has not been any benefit to consumers as a result of the reorganization. Phone centres and increased service charges mean that a visit from the telephone repair or service man is a very expensive rarity. Bell is eliminating those jobs and eliminating services that it previously provided.

Has it created more research and development in Canada? That, at least, would be a significant improvement. We cannot say that that has happened. Telecommunications is an area in which Canada has shown a great deal of expertise. Yet, we have to be worried about losing an industry that we have made some contribution toward developing in earlier years. Northern Telecom's record in Canada in recent years is not good. Between 1976 and 1980 Northern Telecom's Canadian workforce declined, although company sales doubled. At the same time, Northern Telecom's U.S. workforce grew from about 3,000 people in 1976 to nearly 19,000 in 1985. Since the Canadian workforce is now about 23,000, there is strong speculation that this joint Bell Canada Enterprises and Bell Canada subsidiary is really headed for the U.S. Certainly we have had comment, speculation, and we have worries to the effect that we are going to be losing research and development in Canada in this area. That is hardly anything that the Government can be pleased about, and it ought to be considerably more worried about it.

This Bill does not set any research and development commitments for Northern Telecom. This opportunity was missed in the long inquiry conducted by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission between 1977 and 1983. Instead, we are stuck with what Bell Canada Enterprises will give us, because governments have not ventured beyond various incentives and carrots for research and development to require that there be a minimum contribution made. In short, there is very little in the history leading to this Bill that is commendable at all.

I would like to refer to some of the arguments that have been developed by consumer organizations and other groups which are deeply concerned about this. One of the best briefs prepared is that done by the National Anti-Poverty Organization. In effect, the National Anti-Poverty Organization has been speaking for all ordinary Canadians, for all consumers and telephone subscribers. Poor people certainly need their telephones and are acutely worried about increased costs and decreased service. The points that they make affect ordinary Canadians with adequate family incomes.

The National Anti-Poverty Organization states in its submission that it is important to note that if the reorganization is allowed it becomes irreversible. It is not an incremental decision that can be corrected incrementally. It is not like a rate decision where if you make a little mistake you can roll it back, as in the case that we have seen recently, or you can adjust it in the future. This is a momentous decision. It is not something that could easily be reversed, if realistically reversed at all. It is something to which we must give extremely serious attention.

The redistribution of management functions has been a major claim that Bell Canada has been making as a reason for the reorganization, that it cannot create the management team that it needs in order to manage its affairs adequately. However, it has not managed to convince too many people of the necessity of drastic reorganization of this sort in order to redistribute its management functions. It could do that without this full-scale reorganization. Other companies manage to reorganize management functions without an Act of Parliament completely changing and hiving off one company from its holding companies.

The National Anti-Poverty Organization submits that Bell Canada's claim that it needs a holding company to plan is completely unsubstantiated. The Commission and Parliament ought to view the company's explanations and justifications on other aspects of the reorganization with considerable scepticism.

The issue of capital is extremely important. The National Anti-Poverty Organization in its submission stressed that capital is the life-blood of Bell Canada. Effective control in relation to capital is essential to meaningful regulation. However, after the reorganization, Bell Canada Enterprises would be able to limit the amount of equity capital available for Bell Canada's needs. The other riskier subsidiaries would receive equity capital more easily as they offer higher returns. The parent company could thus force the regulated company to obtain a higher rate of return or pay increased dividends to the detriment of subscribers. This is an extremely important point. It is one that the Government has not paid sufficient attention to, and has certainly not met the criticisms that have been raised here.

Let us note that Bell Canada acknowledged in questioning by the intervenors that it does not believe or expect that the CRTC can regulate Bell Canada Enterprises in any way, because the parent company will not be actively involved in the provision of telecommunication services under CRTC jurisdiction. Obviously. That is the whole purpose of the organization. The importance of this factor has to be considered in the light of capital requirements. After the reorganization, the cost of equity capital determined by Bell Canada Enterprises will, from Bell Canada's position, be akin to taxes in energy prices. Bell Canada will be able to argue that it is not in control of these, and that such costs must be passed on to subscribers.

We see that the needs of subscribers can be simply set aside and that companies can be starved for capital. In order to obtain adequate capital, which might have come from other subsidiaries in the Bell family, the rates to subscribers are increased. The views and motives of Bell Canada in relation to the capital question were revealed in cross-examination during earlier hearings. It was asked the following question: "After the reorganization, does it mean that the CRTC has no control of the capital issued by Bell Canada Enterprises?" The answer to that question is quite revealing—"There is a concession that the CRTC will have no control over the capital issued by Bell Canada Enterprises". This clearly reveals an important problem. The CRTC will not have any say, and the needs of telephone subscribers could be easily ignored.

If Bell Canada Enterprises will not force up the return from Bell Canada in the short run, equity will be denied Bell Canada and the return from other subsidiaries will improve Bell Canada Enterprises consolidated results. Sooner or later this will have to be recognized. Either service quality will be allowed to deteriorate and consumers will not receive the service they want, or there will be pressures to increase the rates. The relative earning standard will no longer be other regulated utilities in Canada but will be other unregulated subsidiaries of Bell Canada Enterprises abroad.

How effectively could the CRTC control Bell Canada with the gun to its head that service will be allowed to deteriorate if rates are not raised appropriately? Control will have shifted from the regulator to the regulated.

I note that Bell Canada prefers to talk about scrutiny rather than regulatory control. It is aware that rather important aspects will escape regulation as a result of the reorganization. What is scrutiny if nothing can be done about it? Surely scrutiny is simply the first step to be followed up by firm regulations where necessary. However, in this case there is a loophole or an escape, and the CRTC will not have the authority to regulate on the important question of capital.

Bell Canada's response asks us to accept two assumptions—that Bell Canada will always continue to represent the large majority of the assets of Bell Canada Enterprises and that it will never be in the interest of Bell Canada Enterprises to allow Bell Canada to deteriorate. I wonder how valid are those assumptions. I think we must be rather sceptical.

Let us look at the Northern Telecom example. It was created by a pool of capital which came from the earnings of Bell Canada and was allowed to survive by the forbearance of subscribers. Subscribers might have had reduced prices to pay but instead of the money going into the reduction of rates, it went into providing capital for Northern Telecom. Bell Canada is now saying that all the capital gain and goodwill of Northern Telecom belongs to Bell's shareholders. However, it was the subscribers who indirectly paid for that. They paid Bell Canada and the money was shifted away. If subscribers had the choice of lower Bell telephone rates, they might have chosen that rather than having the money go to the subsidiaries which then depart and take it with them.

All subsidiaries of Bell Canada have their roots in the telephone service. That is from where the money came. They were created in large measure by money which came from payments by subscribers which were greater than needed to provide the service. It seems to me very reasonable that some of that money ought to go back to them. That the company should be allowed to take it and run when it earned these returns in a monopoly situation is quite unwarranted.

For years Bell argued that it should not be regulated on a consolidated basis and that a subsidiary should be allowed to develop freely into competitive areas. In the old days Bell said that that was in the best interest of subscribers, in that the profits ultimately earned through the new subsidiaries would be used to reduce subscriber rates. It argued that the subscriber would ultimately benefit from the development of subsidiaries. Now we see subsidiaries becoming profitable and Bell Canada no longer wants to use them to benefit subscribers; it wants to grab the profits for itself. It has changed its tune very considerably from its early argument that it was in the interest of subscribers to have their money go into subsidiaries. Bell said that the subscribers would eventually get their money back, but now we see they will not get it back.

I should also like to refer to so-called intangible assets—the assets of goodwill, the Bell name and reputation, and corporate associations within the Bell group. If Bell wishes to divorce a subscriber at this point, it should make a fair division of the family asset and its future value. The amount to be paid to Bell Canada for the use of such assets should be equal to the amount which would be charged to any third party for them, either as a lump sum equal to the capital gain or as an equivalent royalty.

A company which has developed a business and has a good name does not give away its name or its associations. One has to pay for them. However, in this case Bell Canada Enterprises will obtain the good name gained through the telephone business and not have to pay for it. This is entirely unreasonable. Certainly we know that Bell Canada management wants to use that name. Bell Canada management thinks it is important, counts on it, and uses it internationally in sales and in the search for contracts in other parts of the world. However, when it comes to putting a price on it, Bell management says that it is not important and that it does not need the name.

If these same Bell managers resigned their jobs and set out to create a new company, there is no way the new company could obtain these intangible assets—its name and associations—without enormous expense, yet they propose to do it for the price of incorporation of Bell Canada Enterprises.

The Chairman, Mr. de Grandpre, attempted to make the case that the Bell Canada name was not much of an asset. At one point he even described it in large measure as a liability. However, its own advertising quite belies this notion. Bell Canada advertising emphasizes that foreign customers are attracted to and sold on the Bell Canada name, that it is an asset, and that it is important. They cannot have it both ways. They cannot use it in one fashion and then like to claim that it does not count for anything at all.

Management spends its time trying to make Bell Canada a household name not only in Canada but around the globe, yet it proposes to appropriate this value for the subsidiaries and Bell Canada Enterprises and to pay nothing to Bell Canada and its original subscribers for it.

I will not go into a detailed study of the different clauses of the Bill. Obviously we will have an opportunity to consider it clause by clause, but I should like to refer to one glaring clause immediately although we are addressing the general principle of the Bill at this time. I am referring to subclause 6.(2) which would give the company the right to demand a six-month prepayment of subscribers unless the CRTC ruled otherwise. It is a rather excessive provision. I think it shows a certain contempt for consumers or telephone subscribers. It epitomizes what is wrong in this piece of legislation. Obviously we will have an opportunity to look at it in more detail later, but I simply wanted to note it as a particularly offensive part of the Bill.

I want to note also that the Bill raises a lot of concerns for people who work in the telephone industry. The Canadian Federation of Communications Workers opposed the Bill when it last appeared before the House and went to committee. These are people who work in the industry and who know it. They have very serious concerns. Let me quote briefly, "We are very much opposed to any form of splitting off unregulated subsidiaries of the telephone carriers to carry on competitive activity. We oppose that because it lets the "shark out of the cage" as has been said and is therefore bad for consumers. We also have a direct interest in preventing fragmentation of existing union bargaining units". I think that is an important consideration. People who have been working together to look after their own interests to see that their needs are looked after can be in a position of being fragmented, of having to fight battles separately and of having to work in quite a different situation from what they were used to.

The Minister made very much of the point in her remarks that the Bill is a different Bill from the previous one. It does reflect some changes, but I suspect she is trying to butter us up with the statement. I do not think it is very much different from the previous Bill. Apparently there are not a lot of Conservative Members lined up wanting to speak on it. It seems that they do not see this as a new Bill that they want to discuss. I do not know whether they will be really embarrassed about it, but I note there was an attempt to sneak it through the House and bring it on while people who were concerned about this issue were in a meeting of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. The Government should be blushing and perhaps hanging its head in shame for trying to fool the opposition critics who were occupied in a standing committee meeting, an important meeting, while sneaking the Bill into the House.

Perhaps the Government hoped that people would not see this important piece of legislation and would get away with sneaking it through very quickly. I would like to assure the Government that it is not going to get away with any such thing. We are going to give this Bill very full attention. It is not quite a test case. There can hardly be that many companies in the same kind of situation, but I do remind the House that we have very broad concerns about corporate concentration and deregulation. These are very important themes in the Bill before us now and we are going to look at the Bill very carefully. We are going to look at it carefully clause by clause in committee.

We think the Bill is misguided. We think the whole question should be looked at from the context of a decent telecommunications policy. We are sorry to see that the previous Liberal Government capitulated to Bell Canada on this and that the Conservatives have simply had absolutely no vision in developing a policy for themselves. They have simply gone along with the tactics of Bell Canada of getting what it wants by moving quickly, going to the courts and simply bulldozing its way, ignoring the requirements of the CRTC. This is not the way to develop policy for the public. It is not the way to see that the public interest is served in this extremely important area of telephone service.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to be fighting on these general issues of deregulation and corporate concentration and we are going to be looking to see that the consumer is well served in this very important telecommunications matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, before resuming debate, I wonder if we could ask the Government what the business of the House will be for tomorrow and what Bills will be considered so that we can prepare ourselves accordingly.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the Government to proceed tomorrow with Bill C-14, the Excise Tax Act.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-13, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Bill we are debating today is the same Bill that we dealt with last year, Bill C-19. Bill C-19 was brought forward and debated in the House by the present Conservative Government. Bill C-19 was essentially the same Bill that was brought forward by a previous Government when Francis Fox was the Minister of Communications, which was then Bill C-20. That old saying "The more things change, the more they are the same" applies to Canada and applies to the Liberal and Conservative Parties. When you get down to the real life of how companies operate, particularly large companies and what powers they have and are given, there is no difference between the Liberals and Conservatives.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't tell that to Bob Rae.

Mr. Orlikow: We are talking about the federal House. We are not talking about the temporary situation going on in the Province of Ontario.

The principles in this Bill were opposed by a large number of organizations which appeared before the committee last year and which gave evidence in opposition. Bringing in this Bill now demonstrates even more clearly than bringing in the Bill last year that this is just another of the pre-election promises made by the Progressive Conservative Party on which it is reneging.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) before the election told the communications workers, Mr. Speaker, that no major changes would be made in this area of Canadian life until the Government had worked out, brought down and tabled a telecommunications policy. We have yet, despite the fact that the Government has been in office for two years, to see that telecommunications policy. This is another example of ad hockery. In an important facet of Canadian life, the question of telephones and telecommunications, we are permitting a major corporation to set the policy in reality rather than the Government. When the Government does bring down its telecommunications policy, it will find that the horse has been stolen before the Government has shut the barn door.

This Bill will legalize for Bell Canada what Bell Canada has done in recent years, and it will continue to permit Bell Canada to do even more of what it has done. We will see a repeat of what has happened in the last more than 100 years with the CPR.

I remind Members of Parliament that the CPR began as a proposal to build a railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to bind this country and the various regions, the then separate provinces and territories, into one country. Because there was not enough private capital to do that—it was too risky for private investors to put their money into building the railway because they were not certain that we would survive as a country or that they would make profits—they were induced, persuaded and cajoled into building the railway by grants by the then Canadian governments and subsequent Canadian governments of hundreds of millions of dollars and millions of acres of land. The railway operation controlled by the CP has been and is regulated.

Members of Parliament, especially those from slow growth areas, know how frequently the CPR has come to the Government of Canada or its regulatory agencies and made the case that it was losing money in the railway business by serving these areas. It received hundreds of millions of dollars in subsidies in this way. What the CPR does not say, what it does not want the Canadian people to think about, and what it does not want the regulatory agencies to look at, is that over the years it has expanded. It is no longer simply a railway company. It is now in the real estate business, the forest industry—

Mr. McDermid: So what? What is wrong with that? Don't you like successful Canadian companies?

Mr. Orlikow: I wish the Hon. Member would wait until I am finished. I would be very happy to answer any questions he may care to put. If he will listen for a couple of more minutes he will understand the point I am making.

CPR is in the forest industry, the real estate business and the mining business. How did that come about? It came about because of the land grants it got as a sweetener for building the railway. Those companies which the CPR controls, and there are dozens of them, are not regulated. The profits from those companies belong to CPR shareholders. The company does not want the people of Canada or our regulatory agencies to look at those profits which were based on the original land grants given to it by the Government of Canada. The company wants the people of Canada to look only at the railway operation which it says is losing money at this time. That is how it gets the subsidies.

That is precisely what Bell Canada proposes to do, will do and has already done to a certain extent, if we pass this Bill. Bell Canada was established to provide telephone service, as it does for almost all of the people and businesses in Quebec, Ontario and the Northwest Territories. Because it is a monopoly the rates are set after careful consideration by the regulatory agency, the CRTC. The profits Bell has made over the years have allowed it to grow to be one of the largest corporations in this country. Those profits accumulated from the monthly charges paid by subscribers, residential and business.

Bell used those profits to develop Northern Telecom, which has been an extremely aggressive company. It is one of the few companies in Canada to do a substantial amount of research. Yet Bell Canada has not been satisfied simply to control Northern Telecom. There is some rationale to this because Northern Telecom has developed products associated with the telecommunications industry. However, what Bell has done recently, and what it will be able to do even more successfully if and when we pass this Bill, is to spin off a whole series of companies which have no relationship to the telecommunications industry.

Let me just mention a few of the companies Bell now controls. It controls TransCanada PipeLines, Daon Development, one of the largest real estate developers in western Canada, and British American Bank Note Company. It purchased a year or so ago a large printing company in the U.S., Case-Hoyt. It purchased Comac Communications, Alphatex, and controls Ronalds Federated Ltd. Bell International is operating in Great Britain where it has made it very clear that it wants to do so without a union. We have to ask ourselves who benefits from this rapid growth of this giant conglomerate? It may be the shareholders who benefit, but what benefit is there to ordinary Canadians, particularly those who live in Ontario, Quebec and the Northwest Territories? It is their monthly payment for telephone services which enabled Bell to amass large profits and take control of these companies I have mentioned, and many more.

We have a right to ask Bell, and possibly other conglomerates if we have the opportunity, to answer some questions. Let me list some of the questions I think Bell should be asked to answer when it appears before the committee dealing with this Bill. We should get a list of the companies in which Bell has an equity position that gives it effective control of the company. When were those companies acquired? What was the price paid? What were the benefits to the company which led it to make these acquisitions? In other words, what were the tax benefits? We know, for example, that when Olympia & York took over Gulf Canada it used what has been described as the little Egypt bump and was able to avoid paying taxes of $500 million. What benefit does Bell get when it makes these acquisitions? What benefits were paid to senior officers of the acquired companies?

How many employees were there in each of these companies before Bell took them over and how many employees are there now? I think that we will find that while these acquisitions may bring substantial benefits to the officers and shareholders of Bell, they bring very little benefit, if any, to Canadians. They usually lead to the retention of less employees.

Bell has a good record of research efforts, in particular by Northern Telecom. We should ask Bell how much money was allocated by each of these companies for research and development before the takeover and how much has been allocated for it since Bell took them over. We ought to ask if there has been any reduction in the cost of production. In other words, did the acquisition make these companies more efficient and competitive? We are told every day of the week that we must become more efficient and competitive. We should ask whether there were any reductions in the cost to the consumer as a result of the takeover. These are all questions which we ought to ask because Bell has reached its present position and made its profits because of the money it received from the subscribers in Ontario, Quebec and the Northwest Territories.

Let us examine one of the companies in order to answer, at least in a small way, some of the questions which must be answered. In many ways Northern Telecom is a fine company. It probably puts as much effort into research and development as does any company in the country. It has grown rapidly as have its profits. I want Members of Parliament to consider that from 1976 to 1980 employment by Northern Telecom in Canada dropped but employment by a Northern Telecom subsidiary in the United States grew from 3,000 to almost 19,000.

Bell Canada received very substantial grants for its research programs. We recognize the tremendous improvements it has been able to make. However, what benefit is there for the people of Canada if the workforce of Northern Telecom increases in the United States, Great Britain and Turkey? Through the tax system and subscription charges the people of Canada have enabled Bell Canada to grow. I say that the people of Canada should benefit rather than only the shareholders of Bell Canada.

I would like to point out another thing which bothers me about Bell. The profits of Bell grew from $555 million in 1981 to $829 million in 1983. That is an increase of 40 per cent in two years. However, Bell Canada did not pay any corporation taxes in those years. In fact, it has accumulated a deferred tax account of $1.5 billion.

Before we give Bell Canada the blank cheque which we will by passing this Bill we ought to be able to ask it a host of questions. Before we permit this Bill to receive third reading or Royal Assent, the New Democratic Party will insist that Bell Canada answer a lot of questions. We will insist that Bell Canada come clean and show us that the people of Canada will benefit from this rather than only the shareholders of Bell Canada.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a couple of questions to the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who has a longstanding interest in this subject and worked on the previous Bill C-19. He will have noted that there is very little difference between that Bill and the present Bill C-13.

In his remarks the Member made a number of comparisons between CPR and Bell Canada and spent quite a bit of time discussing the effect of the recent employment trends within a Bell Canada subsidiary and the effect on Canadian research and development.

Would the Member now give us his views on what the effect of this reorganization will be on workers in the telephone industry and on consumers?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, we know what is happening in the telecommunications industry. For quite a number of years we have seen, at an accelerating pace, automation, computerization and mechanization. Work which was previously done by thousands of workers is now done by very few. When one phones Information for a number in most cities of the United States, you get a recording rather than an operator looking for the number because the whole system has been automated. Therefore, there will be many less workers than before. That is a problem facing all workers in the telecommunications industry as well as in many other industries.

With regard to the subscribers, if Bell can hive off more and more of the companies which it controls which are not in the telecommunications area, there will be no regulatory agency which will have authority to monitor the profits made by those companies. The regulatory agency will be restricted to the telecommunications business. I have already mentioned the CPR as a classic example of how a company can, through creative auditing, ensure that the consumer pays through the nose while the company laughs all the way to the bank with the profits it makes from the companies it has acquired which are non-regulated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the House I wish to point out that in the event that Bill C-13 is passed before six o'clock, tomorrow we will start with Bill C-14. However, in the event that Bill C-13 does not pass the House before six o'clock, we will carry on debate with Bill C-13 tomorrow and then go to Bill C-14.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE INTRODUCED. (B) CONTENT OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on October 9 of this year, I put a question to the Minister responsible for Official Languages (Mr. Crombie), asking him when the Government would table its Bill to amend the Official Languages Act. In his reply, and I quote from Hansard, at page 243, the Minister said:

—that Bill will be coming in due course.

Mr. Speaker, now that the Official Languages Act is about to be revised for the first time in seventeen years, I may say that I am concerned about the Government's delay in producing these changes. I am anxious to see some action on the matter and have these important amendments introduced.

Mr. Speaker, since the fall of 1984 we have witnessed the betrayal—perhaps too harsh a word—of election promises, promises that were not kept. We have seen budget cuts and personnel cuts, and we have yet to see much in the way of positive action. I urge the Government to introduce its amendments so that we can publicly reassure those Canadians to whom official languages are an important issue.

If we take a careful look at the promises in the 1984 Throne Speech, we find that in 1986, in this Government's second Throne Speech, our language laws are something of an illusion for this Government. Mr. Speaker, I would like to read, and I shall quote verbatim from the 1984 Throne Speech: "supporting official language minorities and in fostering the rich multicultural character of Canada. My Government is committed to or . . . ensuring that the equality of the two official languages—so vital to our national character and identity—is respected in fact as it is in law." That was in 1984.

Mr. Speaker, this promise was assessed as follows, two years later, on September 4, 1986, in an editorial in the Montreal Gazette, and I quote:

• (1800)

[English]

"It did", that is the Throne Speech, "promise a fairer deal for language minorities. It has not kept that promise".

And now, Mr. Speaker, in 1986, the Government has announced amendments to the Official Languages Act, to bring it into line with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. After two years of doing nothing, the matter is brought up again. The 1986 Throne Speech says, and I quote: "Official bilingualism is an indispensable feature of our national character. Seventeen years after its enactment, Canada's Official Languages Act now needs to be revised. Appropriate legislation will be introduced in this Session to ensure, as well, that this Act conforms with the Canadian Charter of Rights."

Mr. Speaker, after two years of seeing the false hopes created across this country, and I know wherof I speak, because I belong to one of Canada's diasporas, a minority language group that is trying to put teeth into this legislation and that cherished the hope of seeing some serious amendments considered in this House. It seems, Mr. Speaker, that once again, the Government has made much ado about nothing, or if that is too tame for my constituents, a Conservative dinosaur has laid a figurative egg, because for us, a Conservative is a dinosaur. What can I say? That's what they do, and they don't have much to show for it.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think there is anything to get upset about, but there is cause for concern because this is not the first time the subject has come up in the House. There was a report from the Standing Committee on Official Languages, which studies such matters regularly, a report tabled a while ago, which contains all the changes required to bring the legislation into line, to update it and give it teeth.

Perhaps I may recall what those recommendations are. And if the Conservative Government is at all responsible, it will take the plunge and introduce those promised amendments.

First of all, the Official Languages Act must be amended to clearly establish its declaratory and executory nature. Mr. Speaker, I have talked about this in the House many times. I think it is pretty clear what this means. Let us give this legislation, in addition to its declaratory role, the executory powers requested by the courts.

Second, the Government could introduce as Government Bills, if it so wishes, and I wouldn't mind at all, two Bills, namely Bill C-223, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act and give it primacy over all other Acts of Parliament, and Bill C-225, another Act to amend the Official Languages Act, this time with respect to the institutions of Parliament, the purpose being to make the Act apply expressly to parliamentary institutions, in other words, the House of Commons, the Library of Parliament and the Senate, which, according to a century-old rule, are not bound by statutes of general application unless these include specific provisions to that effect.

Mr. Speaker, I would recommend this Bill as required reading for certain Conservative Members, because I think it would be a good thing to have this legislation apply to Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, Parliament could put teeth into the Official Languages Act and give it the same powers as Section 24 of the Constitution, powers to provide redress in cases where its provisions are not observed, which means giving Canadians the right to go before the courts and state that there has been an infringement of their language rights. I think that is a very responsible recommendation.

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot I would like to say, but I know you are going to interrupt me, so I would urge the Government to take action and do so as soon as possible.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on an issue of great interest to me, as it is to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who has often mentioned the subject over the past few months when we had the privilege of sitting on the same committee. However I can see now he has just realized that we have official languages in Canada, although he has been here a lot longer than we have. The Liberals have been debating the issue for a long time, but just because we have worked together for a year and a half and discussed the problem it would seem they have come to the conclusion that we Conservatives are dinosaurs. Perhaps they were riding a flying saucer. We could not even see them. Well, some things do seem a lot easier when viewed from the Opposition side, but there was so much work to do that perhaps a few things were left out.

The interest expressed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier in the two official languages of Canada is shared by quite a few Canadians. One thing for sure is that the matter of official languages is one of the priorities of this Government, as evidenced in the Speech from the Throne delivered earlier this month. In this policy statement the Government did promise to introduce in this session a Bill specifically aimed at ensuring that the Official Languages Act is consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Mr. Speaker, this commitment happens to be a major element of our Government's dedication to national reconciliation.

Mr. Speaker, this Government considers that the equality of our two official languages is a basic aspect of our national identity. When we came into office we said we would make sure that the equality of both official languages would be respected both in fact and in law. This is an important commitment and we take it seriously. There is no doubt that Canada's linguistic duality is gaining ever wider recognition. Witness the fact that New Brunswick has become officially bilingual. Witness the fact that Ontario has made a lot of progress with respect to services in French, and the provincial administration expects to push further along this line. We can also see encouraging signs of linguistic co-operation in Quebec. As far as the West is concerned, French immersion for anglophone pupils is increasing at a rate of 15 per cent annually.

All this is very encouraging in terms of national reconciliation. However, there are still challenges to meet. We must strengthen language minority groups faced with the spectre of assimilation. We must also strengthen the Official Languages Act, Mr. Speaker, which has been in existence for seventeen years. Finally, we must find new modes of co-operation among the various sectors of our society, to promote our two official languages.

Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) mentioned previously in his answer to a question put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) at an early date during this session intends to propose some important amendments to the Official Languages Act and its application in the case of federal institutions.

I have good reason to believe that the Hon. Member, the House and the entire country will be very pleased with the scope of this renewal of our commitment to Canada's official languages.

MULTICULTURALISM—CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM COUNCIL—REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF VICE-CHAIRMAN. (B) REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to review a question I asked of the Minister of State responsible for multiculturalism last Tuesday during Question Period. My question concerned the leak of the confidential report of one Peter McCreath who happens to be the Vice-Chairman of the Canadian Multiculturalism Council. The confidential report basically admitted without any shame that the Council should be used as a very partisan vehicle and should be committed fully to the Conservative Party of Canada.

On that day, I asked the Minister during Question Period if he would comment on that report and do the honourable thing by asking the Vice-Chairman to relinquish his duties on the Council pending a full review. The Minister's response was that he had neither seen nor read the report. That was fine. I accepted the answer and took it at its face value.

This afternoon, I asked the Minister the same question again. He has had the report for a full week. His Parliamentary Secretary got a copy of that report from me for the Minister. This afternoon, the Minister refused to comment on the document. He refused to put distance between the document and the Government. He refused to suggest that what was said in that report was dead wrong and that he would not have any part in it. Instead, he simply chose to say that he would be meeting with the Council and that I and other members of the standing committee will have that opportunity. That response was completely inadequate.

The Council has been crippled and is hobbling because of statements made by its own Vice-Chairman. No Canadian will take this Council seriously. If the Government feels that the reputation, integrity and credibility of the Council should be restored and if the Council is to play any useful role whatsoever in advancing and enhancing the cause of ethnocultural communities across the country, then the Government has an obligation to act. It has an obligation to tell the Vice-Chairman that what is purported in the document is dead wrong and that the Government will not have any part in it. The Government should tell the Vice-Chairman that the consequence of advocating that position is to be relieved from his duties on that Council. That is the very least for which Canadians are asking the Minister. As well, the mandate and operation of the Council should be submitted to a review so that the Council and its members which have been put under attack by the existence of the McCreath report may be vindicated and their credibiliity and confidence restored.

To date, the Minister has refused to act. He takes it as some kind of a joke. He simply throws it back to us in a light and humorous way. I would suggest that that is not the way to approach serious business in this House. It is a stonewalling tactic that will work against the Government. It is the same stonewalling tactic that was used in the events leading up to the Parker Commission, a tactic that is now backfiring badly on the Government.

It is no wonder that the ethnocultural Gallup poll conducted by Multifax Communications Corp. of Toronto, a research company that is dedicated to ethnocultural communication and research, showed the results it did. It asked three ethnocultural communities in Toronto what would be the results of an election if it were to be held tomorrow.

It is no wonder that within the Italian-Canadian community, the Liberal Party has the support of 39.5 per cent while the Conservative Party has the support of 3 per cent. It is no wonder that 34.5 per cent of Chinese-Canadians support the Liberal Party while 5.4 per cent support the Conservative Party. Forty-one point three per cent of the Portuguese-Canadian community are committed to the Liberal Party while 5 per cent are committed to the Conservative Party. The Indo-Pakistani community in Toronto is in support of the Liberal Party to the tune of 46.3 per cent while only 5 per cent support the Conservative Party.

I am not advocating that we as Liberals should be taking advantage of these numbers, nor rest on our laurels. We have to continuously build on this base and ask for the continued support of these Canadians in the various constituencies. The message should be loud and clear to the Parliamentary Secretary, the Minister, and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who takes great pleasure in going into Montreal and annoucing all sorts of great things for the ethnocultural communities, that those communities are not satisfied, pleased, or happy with the policy thrust and directions of this Government. They are not pleased with simply laughing at the McCreath report. They are not pleased with the laughter at the subcommittee of the Tory caucus in Toronto which suggests manipulating the immigration and multicultural programs to the benefit of the Conservative Party.

The only people who are laughing are the Conservative Party members. That simply is not good enough for those Canadians. Those Canadians are simply saying, by these numbers as one example, that the Act has to be cleaned up and the action and the rhetoric has to stop. I am looking forward to the great wisdom of the Parliamentary Secretary to tell us if we are going to get the resignation of Mr. McCreath, and whether we are going to get the review that Canadians are asking for, or whether we are simply going to get another answer of stonewalling and further undermine the figures that will probably be coming out next month.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has demanded an immediate inquiry into the activities of the Canadian Multiculturalism Council, to restore the credibility and integrity of this national advisory body. The Hon. Member is spreading panic and confusion, misrepresenting the facts and sowing the seeds of doubt among our ethnic communities.

The Government does not share the Hon. Member's view that the credibility of the Council is at stake, nor does it share his perception of the vice-president.

If the CMC's mandate has remained basically the same since the organization was created as the Canadian Advisory Council on Multiculturalism in 1973, its structure has undergone several changes since that time, for the greater benefit of all groups, irrespective of their political affiliation. The Government intends to maintain the Council as an independent source of advice for the Minister and ensure that its members represent a cross section of Canada's ethnocultural communities.

The Hon. Member for York West has concluded that the Canadian Advisory Council on Multiculturalism is nothing more than an extension of the Canadian Conservative Party. I gave him evidence to the contrary on October 20 of this year, and I may refer him to Hansard at page 546. If he insists, I can give him some details on the ethnic community in Montreal to which I belong.

In any case, it is not the view of this Government, which sees the Council as a group of experts from a wide range of ethnic backgrounds and representing various professions. In the category of professionals, the Council includes a university administrator, a restaurant owner, a chemist, a physician, an engineer, an oil rig operator, an architect, an artist and a housewife. These people were chosen for their ability to use their own experience, their interests and their wisdom in the area of multiculturalism.

The Government will review the membership of the Council to ensure that it has at its disposal a vast spectrum of abilities. There is no need to re-establish the credibility and the integrity of the Council as they were never lost. It is simply a matter of respecting fully the principles and ideals of multiculturalism, which are so important for the government.

Mr. Speaker, all the criticisms of my colleague deal with a situation which was exactly the same under the Liberal Party before the election of the Conservatives in 1984. In an organization where the Government had spent enormous amounts of money, there was even a prohibition against campaigning for Conservative candidates, but not for the Liberals. Is this Liberal justice? Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York West does not have the real version of the facts. However, he is new here and he will learn.

HUMAN RIGHTS—VIOLATIONS IN U.S.S.R.

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on November 4, the review of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe opens in Vienna. The Vienna CSCE review will assess compliance with all aspects of the Helsinki Final Act by the 35 signatory states and, further, will consider any new commitments the signatories may wish to undertake.

I thank the Minister for his comments in reply to my question in the House last week regarding the review. I am pleased with his assurance that Canada will continue to press the U.S.S.R. for compliance with the accords.

This month my colleagues in the Parliaments of France, the United States, Italy, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom, Austria, and other countries are taking part in a co-ordinated effort by the International Parliamentary Group for Human Rights in the Soviet Union to focus attention on Soviet performance in respect of human rights agreements. One of the most basic of those rights is freedom of religious practice. A summary of the reality of religious life in Soviet-dominated nations quickly leads one to understand the importance of Canada and other countries taking a firm position on the issue.

Under Basket 1, Principal V11 of the Helsinki Final Act, the Soviet Union pledged to "recognize and respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practice, alone or in community with others, religion or belief acting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience". The reality is that the U.S.S.R. attempts to control all facets of religious life and to discourage belief among its citizens.

There are approximately 100 million religious believers in the Soviet Union representing major world religions, yet the only religious activity officially recognized by the Soviet Constitution is the freedom to conduct religious ceremonies in officially registered churches. The constitutionally guaranteed separation of church and state is interpreted to mean that the church has no say in state matters. However, the state retains total control over religious life through the Council for Religious Affairs, a government watch-dog body. The state maintains control over places of worship by enforcing registration requirements. All religious leaders and literature must be approved by the state, and access to seminaries is strictly limited. There is an absolute ban on religious education and charitable and relief works by religious communities. Believers are widely discriminated against in education, employment, and housing. Moreover, whole denominations such as the Uniate or Ukrainian Catholic Church and Jehovah's Witnesses are outlawed.

Individuals who are tried and imprisoned for their religious activities are charged under articles of the Criminal Code, an example being a charge of anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda or slandering of the Soviet state. This allows Soviet officials to claim that no one in the Soviet Union is imprisoned for religious beliefs. Recently new Soviet legislation was introduced which made it possible to rearrest prisoners just prior to the date of their release, thus "legally" extending their sentences. In 1986, prisoners such as Sergei Khordorovich and Nikolai Baturin were rearrested just prior to the date of their release. Baturin is now serving his third consecutive sentence in a labour camp. The number of people imprisoned for religious activities has nearly doubled since 1979. These prisoners of conscience are incarcerated in prisons, labour camps, and psychiatric hospitals.

The Minister asked me to advise him of any particular examples of violations of religious freedom which I would like to see raised in Vienna. The unconscionable suppression of the Ukrainian Catholic Church in the U.S.S.R. is a primary case in point. The church has some four million followers, yet it has been outlawed and forced to become part of the Russian Orthodox Church which is under state control. Despite harsh repression and persecution, the Catholic Church in Ukraine is still active underground.

The late Cardinal Slipyj, the Church's legendary head, spent 18 years in labour camps before being allowed to leave the country. Not long ago, Josyp Terelya, was sentenced to 12 years of imprisonment. He has already spent a total of 18 years in prison for his religious activities.

The treatment of the Ukrainian Catholic Church under the Soviet Government is a clear violation of the Helsinki agreements. I will be pleased to supply the Minister with specific cases and names of individuals who have been imprisoned as a result of Soviet policy.

My colleagues in IPG and I believe that religious freedom and other issues in Soviet human rights performance must remain squarely on the agenda at the Vienna Review Conference. The democratic signatories to the Helsinki Final Act must strengthen their support for human rights in the Soviet Union. Further, the democracies must insist that there be balanced progress in all areas.

Any new agreements in military, security and economic relations reached in Vienna must be accompanied by similar accords in human rights and by guarantees of performance under existing agreements. Suppression of religion, and discrimination against individuals following their conscience in defiance of dictates of the Soviet state are well documented, particularly oppression of the Ukrainian Catholic Church. Action must be taken to effect real change. I ask the Minister's undertaking that these matters be raised in Vienna by the Minister and the Canadian delegation.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the third follow-up meeting to the Conference on Security and Cooperation will begin on November 4 in Vienna, and all the elements of the conference process will be on the agenda, that is military security, economic cooperation, human rights and humanitarian cooperation. The participants will examine the extent to which existing commitments will be or have been kept and will analyse the proposals for making new progress.

Canada will first of all try to ensure that the Soviet Union and other Eastern European countries substantially improve their performance in fulfilling their commitments under the Final Act of Helsinki and the Closing Document of the Madrid Conference, especially as concerns human rights and humanitarian cooperation.

Mr. Speaker, we shall be frank in criticizing the countries with a performance under all reasonable standards, but we shall certainly underline the sincere efforts made by other countries, even if the results do not meet our expectations perfectly.

We will follow a constructive approach, Mr. Speaker, but as in the past we will continue to insist strongly on the fact that commitments which have been made must be respected, and that sustained progress through stricter compliance with the provisions of the Final Act is an essential prerequisite to the establishment of a climate of confidence vital for the improvement of East-West relations.

In so far as practicable, we would also like to achieve balanced progress in all fields covered by the Final Act. We take heart in the resounding success of the Stockholm conference on confidence-building measures and certain aspects of security and disarmament in Europe. We are now considering ways of making the best of it.

In the field of economics we are striving to promote trade as well as industrial and environmental co-operation. Since we are dealing with human rights and humanitarian co-operation, we deeply regret the fact that recent meetings of so-called experts—including the one on human rights held here in Ottawa—were unable to produce final documents because of the systematic opposition of eastern countries or their token concessions.

Because we do have sound information and given the positions agreed to by western countries during previous meetings, when next we convene in Vienna we will continue to insist on the fact that, if we want to restore lasting security in Europe, improvements in economic and military sectors will have to be matched with progress in the field of human rights, including minority rights and religious freedoms, human contacts and reunification of families, as well as other important measures designed to improve the circulation of people, ideas and information.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

RALLY HELD IN TORONTO

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House a massive rally being held today in Toronto by Indian people. About 2,000 people from Indian communities throughout Ontario are attending this rally. The Premier of Ontario and the Ontario Attorney General will address them.

This rally is being held in support of the right of aboriginal people to self-determination and to show politicians, both federal and provincial, and the Canadian public that self-government has grassroots support. The people support the efforts of their leaders who are trying to get their rights to self-determination and self-government recognized in the Canadian Constitution.

At the next First Ministers' Conference in the spring of 1987, the Government will have a special responsibility in this issue and must show leadership. The aboriginal peoples of Canada will not be satisfied until the rights of aboriginal peoples to self determination and self-government are recognized in the Constitution of Canada.

DEREGULATION OF NATURAL GAS INDUSTRY

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday natural gas deregulation is slated to start. To the consumer this means lower prices. To the producers it means access to larger markets. To both it means a competitive, not a regulated, environment.

TransCanada Pipelines is Canada's major gas carrier. It buys, it moves, it sells, and it produces gas. This concentration of power works to its benefit and to the detriment of an open, competitive gas market. TransCanada's transportation system must be severed from both its marketing arm and its producing company so that the three parts have not only separate management but also separate ownership.

GRANTS FOR HUMANITIES RESEARCH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Canadians know that the Conservative Government has cut into scientific research appropriations, and they realize that scientists are becoming unemployed as a result of these cut-backs. Not as widely known is the fact that social science and humanities researchers fare even worse under this Government. Grants to the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Councils of Canada do not match those awarded to other councils doing research in natural and medical sciences. Besides, owing to discriminatory tax regulation 2900, social science and humanities researchers are not allowed to seek private sector support.

Private sector companies which make grants to universities for scientific or medical research are eligible for tax credits. No such preferential treatment applies to research in humanities. Scientists in every field of university research deserve adequate funding, and discrimination against humanities is totally unwarranted.

WORLD PEACE DAY

MESSAGE OF YOUNG STUDENTS AT SAINTE-LUCIE SCHOOL IN JONQUIÈRE, QUE.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, today, I have for the House a very special message which 800 young primary school pupils at the Sainte-Lucie School in Jonquière gave me last Friday as part of their special activities in connection with the World Day of Peace. Mr. Speaker, the following is a quote from the message of peace I was given by Stephanie Gravel on behalf of the pupils of her school and asked to transmit to our Right Hon. Prime Minister.

"During the past few days, I have worked very hard on the peace project. I realize there are a lot of wars going on in the world, and that a great many people have died as a result of those wars. Today, nuclear bombs are powerful enough to destroy the entire surface of the earth. We ask you, the representatives of our country, to do everything you can for world peace."

Mr. Speaker, all the pupils at this school worked very hard on this presentation, and I have nothing but praise for this admirable project initiated by the Sainte-Lucie teaching staff at Jonquière, who felt it was important their pupils understand what the World Day of Peace means.

FERRIES

MARINE ATLANTIC'S ANNOUNCEMENT OF FARE INCREASES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, Marine Atlantic is at it again. Over the past weekend we were informed that passengers will pay 30 cents more for each one-way crossing from Prince Edward Island to New Brunswick. Rates on the Nova Scotia-Newfoundland service will increase by $1 per passenger and $2 per vehicle one way, with various rate increases for other ferry services provided by Marine Atlantic.

There was no consultation with the Premiers of Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland before these increases were announced. This type of treatment of our island provinces must stop. The Mulroney Government must stop hiding behind Marine Atlantic and other Crown corporations, and stand up for the rights of our island provinces.

It is time the Government told Marine Atlantic that enough is enough. It is time that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) recognized that Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland are part of the Canadian Confederation, and as such should be treated equally with other Canadians. They should be able to travel to and from their sister provinces without paying those unjust ferry rate increases.

PLIGHT OF COMPANY PENSIONERS

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, the five-member all-party subcommittee on the Canadian National Railways pension system was appointed by the former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Don Mazankowski, in April, 1985, to study all aspects of the Canadian National Railways Pension system. The report of the subcommittee contained recommendations that were comprehensive, fair, and realistic. It was presented to the House of Commons in April, 1986, and forwarded to Canadian National Railways for study and reaction. Six months have passed. Although pensioners have waited patiently and expectantly, CN has not yet responded. Our excellent efforts as a Government in general pension reform, and the sincere concerns expressed by CN pensioners appear to have gone unnoticed by CN. The only response from that corporation to date has been silence.

My patience and the patience of the 47,000 Canadian National pensioners are rapidly eroding. Canadian National and its board of directors would be well served by responding positively to the recommendations for increases in pensions, spouses' allowances, and survivor benefits. CN must reply quickly to show that it is concerned about the financial security of those who gave many years of service to the Canadian National Railways system.

STATISTICS CANADA

STAFFING OF WINNIPEG OFFICE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I recently wrote to the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada about the future of Statistics Canada in Winnipeg. Until last year the Winnipeg office worked with one regional director and two assistant regional directors. The director retired last year and he has not been replaced. The two assistant regional directors report to the regional director in the Edmonton office.

• (1410)

This is not the first time this has happened to Winnipeg since the Tories took office in 1984. The CN tried it in its prairie region. Transport Canada had it in mind in respect to the regional office in Winnipeg. Now Statistics Canada is getting away with it by downgrading its office in Winnipeg.

How many more times does this have to happen before Manitoba Members of Parliament in the Conservative Party stand up to the Edmonton caucus and the Vegreville caucus which seem to want to move everything of regional significance from Winnipeg to Edmonton? Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament from Manitoba say absolutely nothing about it. They should be ashamed of themselves.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION TARGETS FOR 1987

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the Government will be announcing the new immigration targets for next year. Speculation has it that these numbers will be increased However, I warn the Minister and the Government that it is futile to set unattainable targets; by this I mean not matching the figures with the resources and personnel available in our consulates across the world to process the appropriate numbers.

For instance, this year targets have been set at between 105,000 to 115,000. However, immigration officials have confirmed that, based upon six-month statistics, these numbers will only reach a maximum of about 85,000 to 90,000. Therefore it is intellectually dishonest for the Minister and the Government to go across the country saying that immigration levels are at 115,000 for this year when in fact the people coming to Canada will only number approximately 85,000.

I ask the Minister to ensure, when he announces the targets tomorrow, that they will be attainable by giving appropriate resources and personnel to our consulates across the world.

TOURISM

PROMOTION OF GREAT LAKES ATTRACTIONS ADVOCATED

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as a tourism study released earlier this year indicated, Canada possesses a great variety of tourist attractions. My constituency of Sarnia—Lambton on the shores of the Great Lakes has many attractions and diverse activities to offer visitors to our area. The Great Lakes are one of the most beautiful areas in the country and should be touted, for all to hear, as a glorious vacation destination. From a weekend, to a month, to a lifetime, we have attractions which cannot be matched anywhere else in the two North American countries.

I ask the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt), on behalf of the Government of Canada, to look into beginning co-operative efforts with the U.S. State Governments along the Great Lakes to publicize and promote a co-operative tourism effort.

I serve notice to the Minister that I will be following his progress on this suggestion very closely in the future. A result could very well be the reactivation of the cruise ships plying the Great Lakes and rivers, tying up at Sarnia, Bay City, Windsor, and Port Stanley.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CALL FOR HALT TO LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS—EFFECT ON ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on page 16 of the first report of the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry the following recommendation was made to Parliament:

> The Minister of National Defence should immediately halt all North Shore and Labrador low-level military air flights and assess the effects of such flights on the environment in these regions, as soon as possible.

There were 24 Members of Parliament who participated in the study—20 Conservatives, 2 Liberals, and 2 New Democrats. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) failed to live up to the recommendation in the 120 days since the report was tabled and now publicly refuses to do so.

The federal environmental assessment review reference is fatally flawed. Its terms of reference only allow for assessing ways of mitigating the impact of low-level flights, not for stopping them if they are unacceptable.

In my view the actions taken to date by the Minister of National Defence show contempt for the Standing Committee, and in particular for those three Newfoundland Members of Parliament who participated in this extensive study. What about the rights of the Innu? Can no one hear their voices?

TELESAT CANADA

CONTRACT AWARDED FOR NEW GENERATION SATELLITES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Telesat Canada, which is 50 per cent owned by the federal Government, recently signed a contract with Spar Aerospace Ltd. to build the two most powerful dual-bank satellites ever to serve North America. Telesat will pay Spar $180.5 million for these new generation satellites known as Anik-E1 and Anik-E2.

The Government assisted Spar in the development of these versatile and reliable satellites with a $53 million federal grant in August. These satellites are scheduled for completion in 1989, and launch in 1990. This generation of satellites is at the leading edge of current technology and will sell in international markets well into the next century.

The contract also ensures that Telesat Canada will be able to meet the needs of Canadian broadcasters and other telecommunications users for state of the art data, voice, and broadcasting services at very reasonable cost.

CONSTRUCTION OF PORT-CARTIER PRISON—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF CHOICE OF CONSULTANT ENGINEERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister or, in his absence, to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the political patronage involved in awarding contracts for the prison at Port-Cartier.

Today it was reported in the press that one of the architects for the consortium that was awarded the contract said he was told to utilize the services of consulting engineers Desseau, Dupont and Desmeules from Montreal. Could the Prime Minister inform the House why his Government made the architects hire this firm? Could it be because the firm contributed several thousand dollars to the Conservative Party's coffers, or is it just a coincidence?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have had a number of inquiries from Members opposite in the last number of days concerning this particular issue. I reaffirm the information I gave last week, that is, all contracts awarded with respect to the prison were awarded according to Treasury Board guidelines. My learned friend is well aware of that fact.

REPORTED DONATIONS TO PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, we have made a number of inquiries but we have had very few answers from the Government.

According to the same architect, local companies have no choice but to attend Tory fundraising events and make generous donations to the Conservative Party if they hope to get any government work. Why is this practice allowed to happen? When will the Government put a stop to this kind of nonsense and this abuse of taxpayers' money?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member would bring to the attention of the House the fact that he received a copy of the Auditor General's letter dated October 27 which was the basis of much of the criticism that he raised last week. In this letter concerning sole sourcing it was admitted by the Auditor General that he had made a mistake in his report. I thought the Hon. Member would have brought that message to the attention of the House.

CONSTRUCTION COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP—PMO REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should be careful. The Auditor General never said that, and he knows it. He will have to rectify his answer later.

Is this pork-barreling to Tory friends not the real reason why Mr. Simon Landry of the Prime Minister's Office sits on the board concerning the construction of Port-Cartier, or is that another coincidence?

Mr. Nunziata: It's corruption.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, my learned friend indicates that I made an error concerning the letter from the Auditor General. The letter states: "There is the possibility of a mistake in the statement regarding sole source contracts". I can say that the Auditor General has gone on to confirm that that is the case.

OPPORTUNITY FOR PRIME MINISTER TO APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE EXAMINING PORT-CARTIER PROJECT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I must admit the Government is not being particularly forthcoming in providing information on Port-Cartier, but there are other Members in this House who are. I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of his boss, and ask him the following: Since a committee of the House decided yesterday evening to hold hearings on the entire Port-Cartier question and to ask the Prime Minister to appear before the committee, could the Deputy Prime Minister take steps to ensure that the Prime Minister will do so?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, for the information of Hon. Members, I reviewed all the contracts awarded for the F- . . . , for Port-Cartier.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: And the F-18 too! I reviewed that one as well.

I can inform you, Mr. Speaker, that in both cases, contracts were awarded on a competitive basis. And in both cases, this was done in accordance with the Treasury Board's criteria and guidelines. I shall be delighted to give any Member of this House a list of the contracts awarded, with the amount, date and conditions governing the contracts.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if you can find any relevance there to my question, you must be a genius!

I will repeat my question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Since a committee of the House decided yesterday evening to hold hearings on the Port-Cartier question and has decided to ask the Prime Minister to appear before the committee, can we expect the Prime Minister to appear before the committee and clarify this whole case?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think I already answered the Hon. Member's question—

An Hon. Member: No!

Mr. de Cotret: Do you want chapter and verse on Port-Cartier? Do you want to know exactly what happened in the matter of Port-Cartier?

Mr. Speaker, we shall be delighted, and I shall be delighted personally, if so required, to appear before the committee and describe each of the contracts awarded to the lowest bidder and to the most competent bidder, in each case, and we certainly have no apologies for the way contracts were awarded in this particular instance.

ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. I was sent a copy of the letter dated October 27 to which the Minister referred. I checked with the Auditor General's office today and was told that the contracts in question today, namely, concerning the architectural firms which contributed to the Conservative Party and which are alleged to have received the contract for the prison in the Prime Minister's riding without tenders, are not what is referred to in the letter the Minister has cited.

Is the Minister telling the House that the architectural firms which got this contract did so only after they submitted a bid on tender?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that, as is normal practice, three firms were invited to tender. They all tendered and were evaluated. Their technical evaluations came in at various levels, obviously. The cost was considered and, in the total evaluation made by the Department concerned, the firm with the highest ratio, and by a good amount, got the contract.

I will give the Hon. Member the amounts. The firm that got the contract had a rating of 110.5. The second firm was 98.5. The third firm was 93.5. The cost differential on a contract of over $1 million was less than $40,000.

CONTRACT BIDS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is important to clarify all of this. Is the Minister saying that the three firms which obtained the contract were the three lowest bidders?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): No. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to be very clear and I will be happy to give the Hon. Member the documents. There were three groups invited to tender. They were evaluated on technical criteria. I can give the technical results. Firm A had 101.5 as a technical rating. Firm B had 96.5. Firm C had 81.5. Once the cost was factored in, following normal procedures and tendering practices, Firm A had 110.5, Firm B had 98.5 and Firm C had 93.5. The contract was given to the firm which had the highest evaluation.

TREASURY BOARD GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, there is obviously a lot of haziness or uncertainty about the criteria used. Will the Minister confirm that the guidelines which the Treasury Board of the newly elected Conservative Government is using are the same guidelines it inherited from the Liberals, which guideliness permit the Government to award thousands of contracts worth millions of dollars without going through the tendering process?

Mr. Benjamin: Nothing has changed.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, those allegations are, to say the least, incorrect.

Mr. Broadbent: It was a question.

Mr. de Cotret: The contract was given to the firm which was judged the most competent to give the best value for the money of Canadian taxpayers. That is the basis on which this Government gives all its contracts.

RIGHTS TRIBUNAL APPOINTEE, MADAME MOREAU-LANDRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and is with regard to the appointees to the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal. In defending those appointments yesterday the Minister of Justice said that the decision was made on the basis of competence.

I have looked through the curriculum vitae of Madame Moreau- Landry and I sent a copy of it to the Minister to refresh his memory. There is nothing in it which is relevant to service on a Human Rights Tribunal. Was the Minister's decision about the competence of Madam Moreau-Landry based on this CV which his office made public, or did he consider other information and representations in making his decision about her?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question points out that we do have scrutiny of appointment provisions in our new rules. The Hon. Member is quite entitled to request that Madam Moreau-Landry appear before the committee where she can answer these questions directly. The Hon. Member need not take my word for it. He can speak to her himself and ask her the questions he thinks appropriate about her qualifications.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister, not the candidate whom we will examine in due course.

BASES FOR MINISTER'S DECISION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, was the Minister's decision based on this curriculum vitae, or did he make the decision based on other information and representations? If so, what were they?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the appointments which I am responsible for bringing before Cabinet I try to recognize a number of factors, including the fact that we want to have competent women and representatives of minority groups involved in this process. Indeed, I believe that 15 of the 28 people who were appointed are from backgrounds other than English or French. I think it is important to have a cross-section of Canadians available in a pool from which an independent chairman can select these tribunals, depending upon the circumstances.

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—ARCHITECTURAL CONTRACT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Would he explain to the House why the contract for architectural services at Port-Cartier was not put out to public tender but only to a list of selected suppliers? Canadians thought we had put an end to the stench and nonsense of this selection process—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member has put his question and is going into argumentative debate.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member was here last Friday when I explained, in some detail, the process which was followed. We always put construction projects out to public tender. Another process is used for engaging consultants. This process has been in place and approved by Treasury Board for a very long time and has withstood the test of scrutiny.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Those were the old Liberal guidelines that we thought we were rid of in this country.

My supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. Yesterday the steering committee of the Justice Committee adopted my motion to ask the Prime Minister to appear before the Justice Committee to clear the air on the patronage and corruption which appear to surround the Port-Cartier prison deal. My question is very straightforward. Will the Solicitor General assure the House that the Prime Minister will in fact appear before the Justice Committee, as the Steering Committee has asked him to do, and come clean with respect to this deal?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already answered that question. I will be more than happy to appear before any committee of the House, and give all the details.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We did not ask you. You are not invited.

Mr. Robinson: The Prime Minister, Bob, not you.

Mr. de Cotret: Do you want the information?

Mr. Robinson: We want the Prime Minister.

Mr. de Cotret: Do you want Canadians to know—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Laurier.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Prime Minister said in his book that a one point increase in research and development would create one million jobs and he promised to double Canada's spending on research and development to 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product. Yesterday the Minister said that he was steering away from that goal and that 1.3 per cent might be adequate. Why has he abandoned the Government's goal of doubling spending on research and development to 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for reading the Prime Minister's book. I recommend it to most Canadians because it lays out a clear vision for the future of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: The Hon. Member asked about my statements relating to spending targets. I cannot recall abandoning any target that I had announced previously.

Mr. Berger: I read the reprint of the Prime Minister's book. It is entitled "Where I Stood".

GOVERNMENT OBJECTIVE

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer is clearly not satisfactory. The science community and all Canadians are looking for leadership and direction. Does the Minister stand clearly by his Party's stated goal and, if not, what is his goal?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, I spent three hours on Monday night clearly laying out the goal of the new Government. It operates in two phases. The first phase, which is now complete, was to clean up the mess that was left behind from 20 years of Liberal neglect. The next phase is to bring Canada to the new frontier and establish our presence there.

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—AUDITOR GENERAL'S LETTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Earlier in the Question Period he referred to a letter that was sent to me, the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, as well as to some other cabinet Ministers. He said that this letter from the Auditor General referred to the contracts that are in question before the House today. The Auditor General's office has again confirmed with me that this letter has nothing to do with that contract. Will the Minister tell us why he is quoting it and leaving the wrong impression in the House?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): I would be happy to do that, Mr. Speaker. A great number of allegations have been raised in the House about the practices that have been involved in Port-Cartier. A number of newspaper reports, and indeed questions from Members opposite, were based on statements in the Auditor General's report. It has been brought to our attention that some of those statements were in error and I wanted to clarify the record, which I did.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister just admitted that in referring to this letter in answers he gave earlier to a member of the Official Opposition, he was incorrectly referring to the letter, and he should have said that.

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. There continues to be a practice in Canada of the Government giving contracts worth millions of dollars, without tender, to companies that often donate to political Parties, which leaves the impression of favouritism. Considering this, will his Government take action now to put an end to this process and have public tendering for all contracts?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first let me respond to the preamble to the question. The letter that was quoted refers to Section 7.95 of the Auditor General's report where he states very clearly:

—that in order to meet the deadline, CSC had to use shortcuts to its normal contracting procedures. For example, it entered into sole source contracts for project management and for the preparation of preliminary site plans.

That is the letter that was referred to and the Auditor General refers directly to that paragraph, saying there is a possibility of a mistake.

Mr. Broadbent: I am telling you to ask him.

Mr. de Cotret: I am telling you that in terms of—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister may tell the Hon. Member anything he wishes, but it must come through the Chair.

Mr. de Cotret: I have told the Hon. Member, and I will tell him again, that all contracts of which I have knowledge that were given in this project, were given through the normal competitive process approved by Treasury Board and they were given to the lowest bidder—

Mr. Broadbent: On invitation.

Mr. de Cotret: —or the most technically competent bidder. We are getting full value for the taxpayers' money through this process.

Oral Questions

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On June 20, 1985, the then Minister responsible for Canada Post announced that before future rate increases are considered by Cabinet, Canada Post must implement new measures to improve productivity. Will Cabinet consider the two-cent increase proposed by Canada Post and, if so, what new measures were implemented to improve productivity for the Canada Post system?

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who answers for Canada Post repeatedly stated in the House, the Government has received the Canada Post business plan and will take it under consideration. An announcement will be made in due time.

FORTHCOMING BUSINESS PLAN TO BE PRESENTED BY GOVERNMENT—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): In answer to my question yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Canada Post was not sure what would be tabled, so today I should like to ask the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) if the business plan to be unveiled by Canada Post within a few days will be a consultation paper or Government policy. Are we going to learn the truth once and for all?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Whenever the announcement is made, Mr. Speaker, it will be Government policy.

FINANCE

MINING INDUSTRY'S FLOW-THROUGH SHARES PROGRAM

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The junior mining companies, prospectors, and developers, the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, investment houses and drilling companies are very concerned about the future of the flow-through shares system. Will the Minister tell the House whether he is prepared to make sure that this program continues for years to come?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his question. His interest in the mining industry is well known. We are studying the use of flow-through shares in the broad context of tax reform. I would not want to pre-judge the results of this broad exercise and the related consultations at this early stage of the process. However, the Minister of Finance will be meeting with the Mining Association of Canada on November 17 to discuss tax reform in general. I am sure this subject will come up.

PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO 1988 WINTER OLYMPICS EVENTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns tickets for the 1988 Olympics. He will know that yesterday we did not get an ironclad statement from the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport ensuring that 75 per cent of all tickets, including those for gold medal events, would go to the general public. Will the Deputy Prime Minister give his commitment on behalf of the Government of Canada that it will take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that tickets for all events, including the medal events, will be available to the general public at a rate of 75-25?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is out of the House on business. However, I can advise the Hon. Member that the Minister's position is that 75 per cent of all tickets should be available to the public. He is negotiating that with the Olympics Committee.

GOVERNMENT'S TICKET ALLOTMENT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): My supplementary question is directed to the Acting Minister. Will the Minister confirm that the federal Government has asked for as many as 6,000 tickets to be held in its name? If he can confirm that, would he agree to have the information regarding which groups those tickets will go to tabled in the House?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the only thing I can confirm is that the Minister's principle with respect to 75 per cent is firmly held and he is negotiating that. I will bring the other matters to the attention of the Minister when he returns to the House.

DEREGULATION OF NATURAL GAS INDUSTRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. We are rapidly approaching the time when the so-called deregulation of gas is supposed to take place, that is, deregulation of production but not transportation or distribution. What is the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government doing to protect the small producer who now stands to be ripped off when deregulation takes place on November 1?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I can tell you he is at the present time dealing, working, and negotiating with the Minister of Energy for Alberta and with the other Ministers of Energy across Canada. Those discussions are going ahead very well. We are assured that the Natural Gas Markets and Prices Program which was announced last year will come into effect.

PROTECTION OF SMALL PRODUCERS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, this is October 29. The deregulation is suppose to take place on October 31, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is still negotiating an important subject like this. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister again what the Government is doing to ensure the small producer does not get crushed in this deregulation move.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, one thing this Government does not do is act unilaterally. We are negotiating. The Minister is out there and will make an announcement soon.

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS ON PUBLIC SECURITY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. He has been saying that the NRC budget cut-backs will not jeopardize public safety, yet the Prime Minister did promise improvements aimed at protecting us against crime, fighting terrorism, and tackling the drug traffic issue. Can the Minister explain why he is axing projects of the NRC public safety section which provides every description of scientific assistance to police forces in all Canadian communities?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, what I did say is that the cuts or reductions in programs which were announced by the NRC would, of course, be reviewed by myself and my colleagues in the context of the operating plan which has to be approved by Cabinet. In the event that public health and safety or important priorities of the Government would be affected by any of these cuts, these programs would, of course, be reviewed and kept intact.

EFFECT ON RESEARCH DONE FOR POLICE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Chief of Police of Metropolitan Toronto and the chairman of the advisory committee to the project said these cuts will be devastating to police research. Will the Minister of State for Science and Technology not acknowledge that the muddle-headed cuts going on at NRC have already caused too much harm and ought to be stopped now and the whole process reviewed by the House Committee on Science and Technology so we can have an orderly process in developing a science and technology policy which will not devastate and savage the NRC?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the cuts to which the Hon. Member refers are not being made now. They were made back in May. The specific section to which the Hon. Member makes reference is not at all a research section but a group of four or five people who co-ordinate research which goes on in other departments and liaises with client groups such as the Hon. Member mentioned.

I said I would look into this matter. The research, obviously, is not impaired by this cut as the Hon. Member alleges, but if, indeed, the capability of the NRC to serve outside client groups is seriously impaired in this important area, I will look into it and see what can be done to preserve it.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT'S COMMITMENT TO VERSATILE DAVIE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last Monday, the employees of Versatile Davie in Lauzon were very disappointed to learn that, in spite of the commitment made by the Government, they will not be receiving $3.7 million to create temporary employment, but only $1 million. Can the Minister explain why his Government did not keep its commitment to the Davie workers in Quebec City?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie for giving me the opportunity to tell the House that we have accepted to contribute $1 million to help former employees of the shipyards around Lévis. Given the quality of the projects submitted and the situation of employment in the region, there is no way that the Government could make a commitment months in advance about a situation which might change. We have committed $1 million, but I never eliminated the possibility, as pointed out in the release you have before you, of doing more if necessary.

INQUIRY WHETHER SOREL AND MONTREAL EMPLOYEES CAN EXPECT SAME RIGHTS AS QUEBEC CITY WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister did not tell us why he did not contribute the $3.7 million, but he will recognize that the same problems exist at Marine Industries in Sorel and at Versatile Vickers in Montreal. Can the Minister now promise that the employees of Marine Industries in Sorel and Versatile Vickers in Montreal will have the same rights and the same programs as the workers in Quebec City?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is no magic recipe to solve employment problems. We analysed a particular situation in Quebec City and made an appropriate response. If we are asked to intervene in other areas, not only in Quebec, but throughout Canada, we shall do so according to the needs identified.

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the Deputy Prime Minister and rephrase a question which was posed before. I do not think the Government heard it right. The Steering Committee of the Committee on Justice, of which I am pleased to be a member, passed a motion moved by the Hon. Member for Burnaby that the Prime Minister should appear before that committee and answer questions on Port-Cartier. My question is simple. Will the Prime Minister appear before that committee?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board has indicated he is prepared to provide all the information necessary in connection with this particular issue. He said he is prepared to appear before the committee as long as is necessary, and to provide all the necessary information. I am not sure whether it is customary for Prime Ministers to appear before standing committees, other than the fact that the Hon. Members across the way want to do a little grandstanding.

Mr. Nystrom: Cover-up.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They couldn't draw a crowd on their own.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, given that the Prime Minister's Office has been involved in this matter of the location of the prison, and given that the Steering Committee did not ask for the President of the Treasury Board, why will the Government not accommodate the Steering Committee, and the Canadian people who want to know these answers, and let the Prime Minister appear before the Commmittee on Justice?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is interested in information or in creating a bit of a scene. I think, quite frankly, if he is interested in information, the President of the Treasury Board has given information.

Mr. Broadbent: Misinformation.

Mr. Mazankowski: The President of the Treasury Board is indeed responsible. He is prepared to appear before the committee and give the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members all the information they require.

Mr. Nystrom: Cover-up.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is not information the Hon. Members are after, it is really something else. They are just doing a little grandstanding, I submit.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PROPOSAL TO CONSTRUCT NEWFOUNDLAND—LABRADOR VIADUCT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In April of 1985 the president of a Quebec-based consulting firm, LMBDS-Sidam Inc., Mr. Pierre Lajoie, wrote to the Prime Minister outlining a proposal to undertake the construction of a $7 billion jetty between the island of Newfoundland and Labrador. I sent a copy of the proposal to the Deputy Prime Minister. Can he advise the House whether or not the Government is considering supporting financially, for the purposes of economic, environmental and social impact studies, this proposal by the Quebec-based consulting firm?

FEDERAL FINANCING INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister responsible for DRIE has also met with representatives of this company to discuss the possibility of federal government funding for this project. Have you planned to meet groups from Quebec, such as the Conseil du patronat, the Groupement québécois d'entreprises and the Chambre de commerce de Montréal? If so, when will you be meeting these groups?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we shall be meeting many groups from Quebec, including the Mouvement Desjardins, the Conseil du patronat and the Confederation of National Trade Unions.

SOCIAL SCIENCES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question as well is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The Government has told the research councils to find more private-sector money and has instituted a matching grant formula, yet a double standard between the granting agencies has been instituted. What convoluted answer can the Minister provide us to justify tax credits for donations to the natural and medical sciences but not to the social sciences and the humanities? Is the Government telling us that social sciences and the humanities are simply not that important?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, certainly the premise of the question is not acceptable. It turns out that the Government's grants to all of these councils have been meaningfully increased. It is true that certain parts are matched differently but the over-all contribution will increase greatly. That should be clear to all Members of the House.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Secretary of State who is in charge of funding for the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. How can the Minister, who is a decent and fair-minded person, continue to serve a Government that so blatantly treats research particularly in the social sciences and humanities with such contempt and unfairness?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this morning I met with the Chairman of the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. He supports the Government, as I would expect the Hon. Member should.

LABOUR

OLDER WORKERS' ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour.

Since the Labour Adjustment Benefit program was terminated last August, and as the Minister of Finance made the announcement in his last Budget, can the Minister tell the House what initiative he has taken and what is the status of negotiations with the provinces on the establishment of the new Program for Older Worker Adjustment which is supposed to improve and give some flexibility to the eligibility criteria of the new POWA for older workers, particularly in the textile, clothing and footwear industries?

Hon. Pierre Cadieux (Minister of Labour): As I said in the House last week, Mr. Speaker, $125 million have been set aside for this program, about which I personally met with all my provincial counterparts. Negotiations are progressing between our officials with a view to creating a program designed for all older workers throughout Canada.

PUBLIC SERVICE

OFFER OF CASH BONUS TO MANAGERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General has commended the Government for the introduction of cash bonuses to be paid to some 4,000 managers in the Public Service this year if they cut their budgets. My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is it not wasteful to offer these managers a cash bonus in order to reduce their budgets, when keeping costs down is a major part of their jobs in the first place?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have announced and will obviously implement a productivity bonus to encourage more efficient use of public resources in the Public Service. I do not see how the Hon. Member can possibly be aware of the details of it as they are still under study since it is a complex issue which deals with an institution as complex as the federal Government.

POSSIBLE CONSEQUENCES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, since the elimination of person-years or the termination of jobs is one of the management initiatives that would qualify for a cash bonus as outlined by the President of the Treasury Board on February 27, I ask the President of the Treasury Board, alias "The Terminator", is there not a danger of creating a hierarchy of hit-men, a bunch of bureaucratic bounty hunters, each one in a hurry to knock off the other?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition is reaching new heights in trying to confuse issues.

Some Hon. Members: Heights?

Mr. de Cotret: Confusion has become the mainstay of their arguments. I stand by the statement that we will be introducing a bonus for productivity. We have never talked about the nature of the bonus. We have never linked the bonus to reducing the labour force. We have talked about it in terms of making available better value for the money of Canadian taxpayers.

FINANCE

PREPAYMENT OF CHILD TAX CREDIT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Since parents who need the child tax credit do not seem to be able to get any information about this, how does the Government intend to inform Canadians if they are eligible for the advance on the child tax credit and how they may apply for it?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, that piece of legislation was passed just a few days ago. We are looking at an insert in the first mailing to ensure that appropriate questions are answered. I would welcome suggestions for what should be in that insert from any Member of the House.

Ms. Mitchell: There is considerable confusion in the community about this matter.

QUALIFYING CRITERIA

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister about a certain discrimination which I believe still exists against those applying for this advance. Does the Minister agree that a low-income woman with a new baby or an unemployed parent whose income has decreased from the previous year, will not be eligible for this child care advance? If he agrees with that, what will he do about this injustice?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, first we should remind ourselves that 700,000 low-income Canadian families will benefit from this prepayment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hockin: The year after next, the low income registered will be the basis upon which the prepayment will be sent, and that is how that problem will be taken care of.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LONG PLAINS BAND'S LAND CLAIM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I have here a government document indicating that on September 3 the Treasury Board Lands Management Advisory Committee approved the transfer of the Beauséjour forces base land to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the Long Plains Indian settlement. Does the Minister deny the existence of this decision?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition is getting a little closer this time. Yesterday the Hon. Member's colleague said that on September 3 the Treasury Board had advised this. The Hon. Member is referring to an internal recommendation from within the Department of Indian Affairs regarding the purchase of the Beauséjour site.

Mr. Allmand: I am referring to a committee of the Treasury Board.

METHOD OF SETTLEMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister deny that this land would have been available for the Long Plains settlement if it had not been for the interference of the Minister of National Health and Welfare? Is that how the Minister carries out his trust responsibility to Indians?

• (1500)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, I will not confirm what the Hon. Member has put forward. What I will confirm is that discussions are ongoing with the Province of Manitoba regarding ways to fulfil entitlement. I am informed that land discussions are taking place with the band and the Government of Manitoba. The Hon. Member must be aware that dividing bands and creating new reserves and bands is not the way to resolve disputes within band councils.

DEFINITION OF ISOLATED POSTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Could you tell me whether there will be any changes in the rules for designating the communities where the remote posting status will apply in January 1987? In both the affirmative and the negative, I would like the municipalities of Joutel and Chibougamau to be included in the consultations.

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): I thank my hon. colleague for his question and commend him for his ongoing interest in this issue. In the February, 1986, Budget the Minister of Finance announced a new permanent system of tax benefits for northern Canada. These measures are now being finalized. They will contain essentially the same criteria for qualification as is currently in place. In addition, transitional relief will be provided for isolated posts which ceased to qualify due to changes in population or access. Full details will be available when the regulations are published.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATION OF SELF-GOVERNMENT ISSUE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Minister will recall that at the last First Ministers' Conference the Prime Minister called for a constitutional acknowledgement of the right of Indian communities to self-government. Given that the Government's proposed amendment was rejected because it required prior negotiation of agreements, can the Minister of Justice tell us if the Government is going to be tabling an amendment before the First Ministers' Conference so that the native leaders may give it some consideration?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I am pleased to respond to that question. A week and a half ago in Toronto we indeed had the first opportunity of meeting with leaders of the aboriginal peoples of Canada and the provincial representatives. I am pleased to be able to report to the House that we have all agreed on a process in terms of a rolling draft where there will be ongoing consultations between now and the First Ministers' meeting. The aboriginal peoples are very satisfied with the direction in which we are going.

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA FOR SECURING GRANTS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence, the Deputy Prime Minister may be able to reply.

The Government has promised to pay Canadian grain producers an amount of $1 million to help these producers, who are in trouble—

An Hon. Member: One billion dollars!

Mr. Garneau: —$ 1 billion in new money. I would like to ask the Government whether it has now decided on what basis this subsidy will be paid. Will it be based on form production or on the marketing of the grain?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): That is precisely what the Minister of Agriculture is doing right now. The Minister is working with representatives of farm organizations and the provincial Governments to develop the best program to distribute the necessary and badly needed funds to the agriculture sector in a fair and equitable manner.

PRIVILEGE

INTERRUPTION BY MR. SPEAKER OF STATEMENT UNDER S.O. 21—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: The Chair indicated several days ago that consideration would be given to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), and the matter would be brought back to the Chamber.

On October 27, 1986, the Hon. Member for Burnaby rose on a question of privilege at the end of Question Period to suggest that his privileges as a Member had been infringed by the Chair's interruption of his statement under Standing Order 21 earlier that day. In that earlier statement he had called upon all Members of the House to join with him in "condemning the offensive and degrading references which were made by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) to homosexuals who seek to work within the RCMP". Similarly, on October 28, 1986, the Chair intervened during a statement made pursuant to Standing Order 21 by the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

All Members will recall that when the Member for Bow River made his statement on October 20, 1986 I had interrupted him and asked him to "examine some of the words in his statement which might very well be very offensive to a great number of Canadians and might cause a question of privilege or point of order in the Chamber". The Member for Bow River was allowed to continue his remarks, but clearly he did heed the advice from the Chair.

If the Chair interrupted the Member for Bow River and requested him to review the language he was using, which he in fact did, then surely the Chair was also under the obligation to interrupt the Member for Burnaby who was attempting, under the guise of a statement under Standing Order 21, to comment upon the same language that the Chair had already dealt with. Such comments would not have been in order a week following the initial event using the usual vehicle of a point of order or question of privilege, because the time for raising such matters had expired and the matter had already been dealt with. In the Chair's view, such comments were also not in order using a Standing Order 21.

The Member for Burnaby was quite correct when he stated that Members are protected by parliamentary privilege for what they say in the Chamber. However, he will also realize that in order to protect this privilege, Members have imposed upon themselves certain restrictions as to what they may or may not say. Certain language is unparliamentary and not allowed. Likewise, certain actions are prohibited in our practice. It is the Chair's duty to enforce these restrictions. I have said on another occasion that these restrictions have not been imposed unilaterally on this Chamber, but have been designed by the Members in this Chamber and brought here by consent.

As Speaker Sauvé stated on January 17, 1983 when setting out guidelines for the current Standing Order 21, "The time set aside for Member's statements should not be used to make personal attacks". I concur totally with this admonition and suggest to the Hon. Member for Burnaby that this is a prohibition which the Chair must enforce in order to maintain decorum in this Chamber and to protect all Members.

Standing Order 21 requires the Speaker to "order a Member to resume his or her seat if, in the opinion of the Speaker, improper use is made of this Standing Order". It is advisable for all Hon. Members to remember that when this new order was drafted those who sat in judgment on this matter decided deliberately not to try to codify every possible exigency that might arise. I repeat what the order reads:

> The Speaker may order a Member to resume his or her seat if, in the opinion of the Speaker, improper use is made of this Standing Order.

In the Chair's view, the use of Standing Order 21 to ask the House to condemn language used by another Hon. Member in a situation where the Chair had already raised the matter and dealt with it was an improper use of the Standing Order. I have examined the record and the rules and reread the comments made by all Hon. Members. I am still of the same view. Therefore, I do not feel that the Hon. Member for Burnaby has a valid question of privilege.

I wish to add something to these comments. As I have said in this House regarding this not easy issue, Members have a right to debate issues in this Chamber, no matter how delicate or difficult they may be. But in the use of the language with which they debate it, the Chair must always be mindful that one cannot have free debate in the Chamber without order.

SIGNING OF MASTER COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT WITH PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to announce today that we shall soon be signing a master agreement with the Public Service Alliance of Canada that will cover some 170,000 federal employees. Never has such a large number of employees been affected by this kind of agreement.

When our Government took the reins, Mr. Speaker, it was faced with a difficult situation. The Public Service had just spent two years under legislative restrictions, and almost all of its 76 collective bargaining agreements were up for renewal.

In its firm resolve to improve labour-management relations, Treasury Board quietly started working on this mammoth task and managed to conclude agreements covering about 208,000 employees in 76 bargaining units, and did so while observing the principles of justice and equity. Salary increases have averaged an annual 3.55 per cent for three years, and are therefore below the inflation rate.

Mr. Speaker, following several rounds of intensive negotiations, in April 1986 the Government was able to conclude with the Public Service Alliance and the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada an agreement on the principles governing master-agreement bargaining. Hon. Members will remember the statement statement I made on the subject in the House, on April 17, 1985.

Talks with PIPSC started on September 10, 1985, and an agreement was concluded on February 27, 1986. On July 9 of this year, we signed a master-agreement with PIPSC covering 7,000 employees in 18 bargaining units.

Negotiations with the Public Service Alliance started on September 5, 1985 and continued until early 1986. On March 4, 1986, the Alliance asked for a conciliation board which met for the first time on June 25. Thanks to the report published today, we will be in a position to sign a master-agreement very shortly with the Alliance.

[English]

With the advent of the master agreement system, collective bargaining in the federal Government becomes much more efficient. Future collective agreements will be easier to administer, and less time will need to be spent at the bargaining table.

In the case of the Alliance, the master agreement will cover approximately 80 per cent of the terms and conditions now found in 39 individual collective agreements. Issues such as rates of pay, hours of work, and annual leave continue to be negotiated at individual bargaining unit tables.

This innovative approach is a result of the strong commitment of the Government to establishing harmonious labour relations with Public Service unions. It is a tribute to the strong spirit of co-operation on both sides which has made the new bargaining system possible.

Under the terms set out in the binding conciliation board report being made public today, the following improvements are to be implemented. First, a dental plan will be introduced for all employees represented by the Alliance, with premiums to be shared on a fifty-fifty basis between the employer and the employee. Second, female employees will receive a 17-week maternity benefit to close the gap between unemployment insurance and salary level. Third, in future collective agreements any retroactive pay will extend to those individuals who leave the Public Service before the collective agreement is signed. Fourth, new provisions against sexual harassment and discrimination are included which confirm existing Treasury Board policies. Finally, various other provisions include improvements to shift and weekend premiums and other allowances.

I wish to take this opportunity to thank the members of both bargaining teams. I also wish to thank the members of the conciliation board—Bruce Light, employer nominee; John Fryer, Alliance nominee; and, in particular, Martin Teplitsky, Chairman, whose excellent work, expertise and dedication were instrumental in bringing this unique process to a successful conclusion.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the Minister and congratulate the parties involved, namely the employer's representatives and the union spokesmen, for at last reaching a consensus on a master agreement. Like the Minister I acknowledge that we all strive for efficiency and that, with the generous co-operation of public servants, the Government has managed to come up with a proposition which the unions can live with. I think this should please everyone concerned.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) said he was pleased to unveil this master agreement. I wish we had been given the famous report of this conciliation board, but this was not to be. I cannot really comment on the contents of the report since I do not have it. I did get the Minister's statement and I thank him for that. I am still waiting for the report of the binding conciliation board.

Mr. Speaker, it should be emphasized that progress in this case was not as easy as the Minister would have us believe. He rose in the House in April 1985 to announce that he had concluded an agreement with the unions. We eventually found out that it was not quite an agreement. It was an understanding which was not finalized. Negotiations went on until early 1986 and they were finally put in the hands of a conciliation board in March this year at the request of the Public Service Alliance of Canada—and the Minister himself has admitted this—so as to overcome the roadblock which prevented them from progressing.

I want to commend the PSAC officials because, as spokesmen for the employees, they did their homework and they did their utmost to obtain the best possible agreement from the employer, the Treasury Board.

[English]

I must say that I am not too impressed with the chest thumping in the third paragraph of the Minister's statement. He said that the employer, that is the Treasury Board, settled with the bargaining units of the 208,000 employees in a way which was fair and responsible. He went on to say that increases in rates of pay averaged 3.55 per cent per year over three years, which was lower than the rate of inflation.

There is nothing fair and there is nothing responsible in asking a public servant at the bottom scales of pay to take home less pay because inflation was more than what he or she received. The Minister used that envelope and said that it had been increased by 3.5 per cent. However, I do not think that a type of approach where the rich get richer and the poor get poorer is reasonable, responsible, or fair. Therefore I should like to get from the Minister the take-home pay figures. I believe, as do many other people, that indeed take-home pay has gone down. It is below what they had when the Government came into power. I think that is neither fair nor responsible.

I want to make another point which I think is an important one. It deals with the question of the conciliation board itself. It is a binding decision by a committee of people who are specialists in the field. I take it that the Minister will be able to explain to the House certain matters relating to this agreement. For example, the Minister said in his statement that female employees will receive a 17-week maternity benefit to close the gap between unemployment insurance and salary level. I would like to know what is meant by "closing the gap". Does the Minister plan on compensating employees totally by enriching unemployment insurance benefits to the level of an employee's salary, or will a percentage be given, as is done in certain places?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is the practice that in answering statements made by Ministers Members confine themselves to the amount of time taken by the Minister to deliver his statement. I am sure the Hon. Member is close to completing his remarks.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I did not realize that I had taken so much time. I apologize to the House.

I wish to offer my congratulations to those who negotiated the agreement. I do not think that the Minister should do any suspender snapping or chest thumping about this. As President of the Treasury Board I do not think he would want us to believe that he is the one who solved the issue. He had to resort to binding conciliation. When that is done it is because an impasse has been reached and because a problem cannot be settled.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a precedent-setting and historic agreement. I wish to congratulate the people from the Public Service Alliance of Canada and those from the Government, including the Minister, on the fact that a master agreement is now in place after some 60 or 70 years of collective bargaining in one form or another.

As the Minister knows, this evolution has taken a long time. In a quiet way, there have been some improvements in terms of labour relations since the Minister came to office. The Minister will acknowledge that I am not noted for paying compliments to the Government. However, I think it is worthwhile to note that this is a positive development which I hope will be of benefit to the some 150,000 or 160,000 public employees in the Public Service Alliance who will be covered by the master agreement announced by the Minister this afternoon.

I regret that binding conciliation had to be resorted to to achieve this agreement. There are a number of elements in the agreement which had proven to be out of reach. They are highly desirable elements which illustrate what should be achieved with master contract bargaining. In the past one particular unit of the Public Service Alliance might have achieved some progress in a particular area but other units would have to fight like heck in terms of bargaining in order to achieve the same progress. In this respect I note that four years have passed since, after a strike, the clerks won the maternity provisions which will now be extended to all female employees in the federal Government as a result of this agreement. That is a measure which is long overdue. It might not have occurred on a universal basis without that previous action.

I know that public servants will welcome the implementation of a dental plan which will now be almost universally available to all in the Public Service. It might even be extended to Members of Parliament soon. These are positive steps forward.

I think it should be acknowledged that this process took a long time. In fact, it took too long. The initial discussions on a master agreement began prior to the 1984 election. We are now at about the midway point in terms of the three-year agreement which is being entered into as a result of binding conciliation. There are some important issues with which we have to deal. A number of them affect women employees in particular. I refer to issues such as equal pay, affirmative action and child care provisions. Regrettably, no steps were taken in terms of adoption leave. I hope that the Government will accept that this puts it at a half-way point. There will have to be some evolution in terms of learning how to use this new structure without reviving new tensions to replace the ones which were overcome as a result of the master contract bargaining.

Before the Minister dissolves into total euphoria, I must say that I am also concerned about this agreement. I am concerned that a couple of issues have not been addressed. The first issue with which I wish to deal was on the agenda the Minister made for himself when he was appointed President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). I refer to the question of political rights. Apart from very senior civil servants, people working in the Public Service of Canada should have essentially the same political rights as any other citizen in Canada. The other issue is one which I regret was not addressed. I refer to the question of lay-off procedures. As one trade unionist described to me today, the procedures in use are medieval. They set employees against employees. They affect morale and encourage favouritism and all types of abuse. They must be changed. Having resolved this particular problem, I urge the Minister to come to grips with this issue and to implement important changes so that, if the Government insists on firing civil servants, it be done in a way which is not only fair but which is seen to be fair by the people involved. If that were the case, the extra time that might be involved to make the system fair would far more than compensate by the improvements in morale.

Those are my comments. We will look on with interest in terms of how this agreement will work. Even though I regret the way this measure was achieved, I hope people will see it as a result of how collective bargaining can be a productive and positive element in our society.

PETITIONS

CANADIAN TARIFF ON IMPORTED BOOKS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a series of petitions which I would like to table. The first states that whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information; and the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors and Canada's culture; and rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized librairies; the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

I have petitions from Nova Scotia, in particular from the Cities of Dartmouth, Waverley, Bedford and Halifax. One is from Sackville, New Brunswick.

I have a series of petitions as well from the Province of Quebec. They are signed by citizens living in Lennoxville, Ste Foy, North Hatley, Sherbrooke, and other cities.

I have additional petitions signed by citizens of Ontario who are very upset with the 10 per cent tariff. These petitions come from Burlington, Scarborough, Unionville, Pickering, Whitby, Willowdale, Thornhill, Markham, Toronto, Don Mills, Richmond Hill and Mississauga.

I have petitions signed by people living in Edmonton and Sherwood Park.

I have other petitions signed by people living in British Columbia.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member has presented her petition well.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not wish the Hon. Member to continue to name the cities. She has presented her petition well. She may proceed if she has another petition to present.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I have additional petitions which come from Hudson, Quebec.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. If the Hon. Member has a petition on another subject, then she may present it. That is what I was saying. I believe that she has presented her petition well.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I too rise on the same matter. I have petitions signed by Canadians who are suggesting that if the Canadian Government wishes to retaliate against the Americans, then it should do so against citizens of the United States and not against citizens of Canada. The people who have signed this petition state with respect to the tariff against imported books that it penalizes Canadian consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors and Canada's culture. It is for that reason that I present petitions from various ridings in Ontario in the hope that the Canadian Government will realize its folly and rescind the tariff immediately so that our book industry and cultural organizations can thrive without interference from the Government.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have petitions on the same subject. The petitioners from Prince Edward Island call upon the Government to rescind this tariff which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries with respect to free trade negotiations.

I have a petition here from 30 people in Charlottetown and the surrounding area. I also have a petition from Halifax and parts of Nova Scotia. I have another petition from Yarmouth on the same subject, and Shelburne County, Nova Scotia. I have another petition signed by 25 residents of the Halifax-Dartmouth area of Nova Scotia. I have another petition dated October 3rd from Halifax and other parts of Nova Scotia. I present these to the House in their name.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is also my duty to present to this House a few petitions from people in New Brunswick on this tariff on imported books in the English language, which is also known as a tax on reading. The petitioners are from Fredericton, Dalhousie, Woodstock, Riverview, Hartland, Newcastle, and many other towns and villages in New Brunswick. The petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff, which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy on cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present some petitions from Alberta where some people say that the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which limits access by Canadians to literature and information. I also have the honour to present a petition from residents of British Columbia who say that the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry in the U.S., yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors and culture.

I have the honour of presenting another petition from the Victoria area of British Columbia. The petitioners say that rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition program and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries.

I am sure you will be happy to know that I have one more petition in which the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind this tariff, which threatens irreparable harm to the Canadian book industry and compromises federal policy and cultural industries in respect of free trade negotiations. Most of these people come from Vernon, British Columbia.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure and honour to present a petition signed by the required number of people asking the Government of Canada to withdraw this retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language which limits access by Canadians to literature and information. The tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry in the U.S., yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors and culture. Rising book prices have placed a strain on the book acquisition programs and policies of our nation's public and specialized libraries. I have two petitions and I humbly pray that Parliament take these petitioners' requests and act accordingly.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, the Income Tax Act, and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, laid upon the table on Friday, October 24, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Petroleum Gas and Revenue Tax Act, the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the first time and printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the statement by the Minister, this day's sitting will be extended by 16 minutes.

BELL CANADA ACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 28, consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-13, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-13 is just the latest name for a project which has been promoted in this Parliament for several years by both of the old Parties. There has been a little restructuring of the legislation but there is no essential difference between this Bill and the previous legislation.

This is a Bill to reorganize Ma Bell. The word "reorganize" is meant to sound harmless and neutral to the general public. The public is interested in Ma Bell and in having a telephone service. In Canada there are only 25 million people scattered across a very large area and we make great use of telephones for both local and long distance calls. We make great use of the related services as well. Therefore, the public is very concerned about what is going to happen. In the past, the public has been told to rely on the CRTC to ensure that Bell's rates are reasonable. This Bill will make a mockery of the public's confidence in the CRTC to regulate Bell Telephone. That is why the New Democratic Party has fought this Bill from its inception.

Under the name of reorganization this Bill will divide Bell into two parts. One part will be profitable and the other will lose money. Lo and behold, the money-losing part will be the part for which Bell was originally created and through which it has made millions and millions of dollars of profit. Throughout its history Bell has charged its consumers sufficiently high rates to make very substantial profits. It invested much of those profits in subsidiary corporations which were developing new technology in telecommunications. It is now investing in companies which have nothing to do with telecommunications at all. For example, Consumers Gas, which supplies a large part of southern Ontario with gas, is now part of a telephone company. Bell has made such investments because it is no longer seriously interested in communications. It is now an investment company first and foremost. If Daon, the real estate conglomerate in western Canada, produces a higher rate of return than telephone services, money is spent on inflating the value of real estate in Vancouver and other parts of western Canada through Daon.

We have always been told that the hard-working entrepreneur labours early and late to make a better mouse trap. People beat a path to his door to buy his mouse traps. He saves a little money from the proceeds and with that makes even better mouse traps. Hence, more people come to his door and he makes more money. That is not the story of Bell Telephone. Now that Bell has captured a large part of the telephone market, it does not really care whether or not many of its customers get service.

Many of us have experienced the result of that change of attitude. Twenty or 30 years ago Bell Telephone was falling over itself to please us, offering better telephones, better repair services, better this, that, and the next thing. Those days are gone. If you want your telephone repaired today you must bring it to the Telephone Centre. They do not bother sending a repairman to see what is wrong with the equipment which they own, operate and which they installed and from which they get the profit. Bell does not want to be bothered to provide the service it used to provide, for which service the customers are still paying.

The service part of the Bell empire will be hived off and called the regulated company. Consumers will still be able to argue with the CRTC about whether Bell is giving the service it is required to give under the law and for which it is paid. The money which Bell has drawn out, and probably will continue to draw out, from the service portion of its empire will continue to be invested in other areas which may or may not be part of the telecommunications industry. We may or may not know about it. The fact is that the unregulated part of Bell will be unregulated. Bell will be able to do whatever it pleases with its profits.

As a matter of fact, this reorganization took place three years ago. If people on the street want to change a law, they must change it before doing whatever they want to do under the changed law. We cannot break the law and have the law changed later to cover us. However, the rules are the opposite for multibillion dollar companies like Bell. They can make the change first and then the Government will consider passing a law to legalize what they have done. Here in Parliament we are being asked to legalize the change which Bell made about three years ago. It separated the basic service on which it made its millions from the subsidiaries from which it expects to make more billions of dollars.

The reorganization went into effect on April 28, 1983. At that time Bell only hinted at future increases. On July 27, 1983, Bell reported a 40 per cent increase in profits for its first quarter as an unregulated holding company. The new system allowed Bell's profits to jump by 40 per cent in three months. There is nothing the consumer can do to get fairer telephone rates because that part of the Bell enterprise has been unregulated for over three years.

Bell developed a manufacturing company which has gone by several names including Northern Telecom and Bell Northern. Northern Telecom did some research into new systems of telecommunication. Although Bell Canada was very rich, it did not want to pay for the research. Instead, it got grants from the federal Government to subsidize the research. Some very good and popular developments resulted. Northern Telecom and Bell Canada are now reaping the profits of the discoveries paid for by the Canadian people. They are not even keeping the jobs in Canada. For example, in the period from 1976 to 1985, Northern Telecom's workforce in the United States grew from 3,000 people to 19,000 people. In other words, 16,000 new jobs were created in the United States thanks to the taxpayers of Canada who subsidized those new inventions.

Bell does not want to return to the working people of Canada the benefit of the money that the working people of Canada gave to Bell through their taxes. In other words, we cannot even rely on this new reorganized outfit to do useful research. There is a lot of talk about tax breaks to these companies for research and development. Even if Bell does the research through one of its subsidiaries, it will not necessarily give the benefit of that research to Canada.

There is a further problem. Ma Bell has not been the best of employers over the years and decades.

Mr. Malone: How would you know?

Mr. Heap: An Hon. Member asks how I would know. It happens that my wife and a number of my friends have worked for Bell Telephone and I know the kinds of conditions under which they worked. I suggested that Ma Bell has not been a good employer over the past years and decades. It has improved somewhat recently because a real union, the communication workers union, has organized some of the employees. The communications workers union has been very successful in the last few years in winning the support, the free choice of many of the workers at Bell Canada, and the auto workers union has been successful in winning many of the votes in Northern Telecom. However, with this new deregulation and new reorganization, Bell Telephone will be able to play the old game of employer against the worker. The ordinary working man or woman must go out every day and put in a work day to get enough money to keep putting bread on the table. Their only defence against a large corporation that can simply shut down the plant, transfer workers around and play games with the workers' jobs in order to weaken their position and cut their wages, is to agree to form a union.

There are free votes in the union. I have been with the paper workers union for 16 years and have been at other meetings of labour movements to watch the voting process. It is a great deal more democratic, with all its faults, than what one can observe at the annual meeting of a large corporation such as Noranda, which I have also attended.

Mr. Malone: Oh?

Mr. Heap: Yes, I have attended a Noranda meeting with a voting share. I observed the almost invisible amount of democracy in the way a large corporation governing its business operates as compared with the much more grass roots democracy that operates within most unions.

The only strength of the union rests with the ability of the workers to join together and present a united front to the company. Now the company will have much greater freedom than before to split the workers into different jurisdictions, different corporations, or different companies, to prevent the workers from joining together to bargain with the company in the only way that gives them any strength. Therefore, this reorganization, as it is called, is a very serious threat to the workers' hope for a decent wage level and decent working conditions.

One working condition that is particularly important to workers at Bell Telephone is to be able to live like a normal adult human being at work without being harassed by supervisors and electronic supervisors. They want to be able to work without having every breath, movement, and sneeze rated against them. That kind of interference with a worker's life, right down to the most basic bodily needs, is the kind of thing that Bell, with its electronic expertise, is trying to develop to an inhuman degree with many of its workers. The only defence available to those workers is not Parliament, not the CRTC, not the legislatures of the provinces, but the union which is directly created by those workers who have day-by-day experience with what happens. On the basis of what those workers are willing to do jointly, the union can defend the right of the workers to have human dignity on the job. That will be threatened by Bell Canada reverting to its old anti-union and anti-worker attitude, once this reorganization gets fully under way.

It is a great shame that this Bill was to be apparently slipped through Parliament quickly. Not only did it come before the House yesterday almost without warning, while certain interested people were engaged in previously scheduled parliamentary business, the schedule changed again today. At nine o'clock this Bill was not going to come before the House until next week. Suddenly, at ten o'clock, it was going to be discussed today. In other words, it looks as though those who are responsible for this Bill are ashamed of it and know how much public opposition has been expressed at the CRTC and in the media. They know how much consumer organizations and worker organizations are opposed to the Bill and do not want it openly debated any more than necessary.

The Government attempted to slip the Bill through quickly yesterday and is attempting to do so again today. However, it will not work. We will oppose this Bill as strongly as we can, not only here at second reading but in the committee. There is no good reason for Bell Telephone, or Bell Enterprises, whatever it wants to be called, to squeeze the telephone consumers and telephone workers as it is.

The company is rolling in dough by anyone's standards. Let me list just a few of the companies that it has been able to buy up but which have nothing to do with providing telephone service. I have already mentioned TransCanada PipeLines, and Daon Developments. It is also into the British American Bank Note Company and Case-Hoyt. It purchased Comac Communications, Alphatex, and controls Ronalds Federated Ltd. It is operating in several countries besides Canada. It has money to burn and buy up other corporations, which does not create more jobs. In fact, when one corporation buys another, it normally reduces the number of jobs. Perhaps the shareholders will benefit if the rate for the shares goes up by 40 per cent in three months. However, why should they benefit from a company that has drawn its revenue from the money paid mainly by Canadian home subscribers and by the taxes paid mainly by Canadian working people? It is not as though Bell Canada were paying its share of the taxes. On the contrary, it is getting these massive subsidies from the taxpayers in one way or another.

I am very sorry that the Government appears only interested in running this Bill through as fast as it can. I am sorry that the Liberal Opposition shows so little interest in opposing this Bill, although I am not surprised. The Liberals were trying to drive similar legislation through when they were in government and, in this respect, both old Parties are exactly the same. The only difference is that one sits to the left of the Speaker and the other sits to his right. Their politics, their goals and their friends, like Bell Telephone, are the same. The only opposition to this Bill will come from the working people of Canada who are the ones who most need to use the telephone and the ones who are paying the whole shot. We will be hearing a lot more from those working people before this Bill becomes law.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a simple question for the Hon. Member. The present reorganization of Bell Canada could allow Bell Canada to incorporate what could be called "Bell Canada TV", for example.

Mr. Heap: I didn't hear you.

Mr. Gauthier: "Bell Canada TV" or "TV Bell Canada".

Mr. Heap: Or Tinker Bell.

Mr. Gauthier: Or Tinker Bell, yes. This new holding company could possibly compete with, say, cable broadcasters. The Hon. Member and I, as well as Members of the House, know that the extensive network of Bell Canada would probably allow it to get into every home, therefore making things for the cable companies very difficult indeed and possibly very unfair.

The possibility arises, I believe, because Clause 7 of the Bill restricts the expansion but not to subsidiaries. I wonder if the Hon. Member has any opinion or views as to whether Bell Canada should be allowed to get into the cable systems? How does he view that monopoly, because that is what it is, to get into this field of cablevision? I should tell the Hon. Member out of fairness that the CRTC did advise Cabinet to restrict Bell Canada and not allow it to go into the broadcasting field. How does the Hon. Member feel about that?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has raised a good question and I am very glad to comment on it. The kind of abuse of the trust of telephone consumers now being possible, as suggested by the Hon. Member, is exactly the sort of thing that the present Cabinet and the previous Cabinet of the Party of the Hon. Member, ought to have taken steps to prevent.

When the people of Canada over the past century paid for telephones, and the working people of Canada built telephones, they did not do so with the idea of creating not only a monopoly in the telephone business but a monopoly in the television business. To the extent that many Canadians still believe there ought to be such a thing as competition, Canadians are very uneasy about the monopolistic practices of Bell Telephone. They would be very shocked if Bell Canada, through this legislation, would be able to take over the cablevision business, as the Hon. Member has pointed out is possible. It is certainly a duty of the Cabinet to introduce amendments to this Bill, in line with the recommendations of the CRTC, to ensure that that cannot happen.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question for clarification. I think the Hon. Member clearly understood that it was due mainly to the reorganization of Bell Canada that it is now possible. Bell Canada Enterprises is a holding company which in principle could set up a subsidiary or an affiliate, which I guess is a better word, which would get around Clause 7. This is my question to the Hon. Member. It was not because of the intention of the Government. Bell Canada reorganized its corporate structure allowing it to put out tentacles into certain deals. Would the Hon. Member join with me, and many other Hon. Members of the House, in telling Cabinet that we do not want Bell Canada Enterprises, through its affiliates, to set up broadcasting corporations and, therefore, take over cable companies?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member. However, he did not understand my response which was exactly that it was the duty of the present Cabinet, as it was that of the preceding Cabinet, either to prevent the reorganization which created Bell Canada Enterprises or to restrict it from doing such things as monopolizing the cablevision industry.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) asks questions which in essence tend to raise fear when no fear need be raised. He talks about what might be, not about what is proposed. However, setting that aside for a moment, I stand here as a Member of Parliament who represents rural Canada to say that we are pretty tired of being dominated by the kinds of views expressed by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. Rural Canada today receives terrible television reception. My constituency is in a situation where at best we will get one good clear TV signal in the east end of my riding, and my constituency is made up of some 113 various communities. Yet Hon. Members opposite have the audacity to stand here and suggest that we should deny rural Canada the one opportunity we have to be able to watch national events, sporting events and the various kinds of important things which bring us together as Canadians.

Mr. Gauthier: No.

Mr. Malone: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier shakes his head.

Mr. Gauthier: You are twisting the whole thing.

Mr. Malone: I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that while the Hon. Member shakes his head, he should bear in mind that the reception of television on the Prairies is unacceptable.

Mr. Gauthier: I agree.

Mr. Malone: And here is an opportunity to bring to those people who provide food for urban people the kind of reception they justly deserve. He ought not to sit there and rally against that opportunity to give fair and equal treatment to other Canadians. I want to hear the Hon. Member for Spadina justify the New Democratic Party's opposing the farming communities of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is getting a little fantastic when he suggests opposition between the New Democratic Party and the farmers in any province. The only two points the Hon. Member tried seriously to make were not quite as fantastic but were very wide off the mark. First, he said we should not talk about what might happen but only about what is planned. The fact is that it was the CRTC which warned us what might happen.

Mr. Gauthier: That's right.

Mr. Heap: We should take its warning seriously given our experience of the twists and turns of a company like Bell Telephone or Bell Enterprises. Whatever name it chooses to call itself, tomorrow will be just another name under the same management. There is an obligation to look at what is probably going to happen or what could very well happen and provide safeguards against it. One does not wait until the House is burning down before one thinks about fire protection. There is not likely to be a second chance.

Second, if the Hon. Member, as a resident of Alberta, does not like the public corporation, the Alberta Telephone Corporation, which handles Alberta's telephone service, he has, of course, recourse. I am sure he does not want Ottawa to interfere with the Alberta Telephone Corporation. The point is that if the Alberta Telephone Corporation wishes to make some arrangement with any other body to provide television service which Albertans, in the Hon. Member's opinion, are not rich enough, smart enough or industrious enough to provide for themselves through satellite and so on, they can enter into that arrangement. That is a very different matter from giving the whole monopoly in Canada to Bell Canada Enterprises.

Mr. Stan Graham (Kootenay East—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, as a former member of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, I was honoured to be present at the time this Bill, known then as Bill C-19, was examined clause by clause. I feel we have been given an excellent opportunity, or at least I have, to have a second chance to look perhaps a little deeper than we are sometimes permitted when examining a Bill. This is particularly true considering the fact that the Bill dealt with Bell Canada, and to a western Member from the southeast corner of British Columbia, Bell is very far away.

When she introduced the Bill yesterday, the Minister spoke very enthusiastically about the work of the committee. I have to concur with the Minister on that. The committee put in a tremendous effort. Nevertheless, it is not always possible to examine all of the ramifications of the wording of some of the clauses of this Bill.

Bill C-13, the Bill we are debating today, is an almost verbatim copy of the previous Bill C-19. In fact, just a minor change has been made. That change is in paragraph (c) of Clause 6 of Bill C-13. The clause has been changed so it now includes the words: "if the Commission has not otherwise specified". Almost everything else in the Bill is identical to Bill C-19.

My concern is with Clause 7 of the Bill. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) more or less skirted this issue. It was dealt with more fully yesterday by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). My concerns appear to be somewhat similar to those of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Clause 7 reads as follows:

> Neither the Company nor any person controlled by the Company shall directly or indirectly hold a broadcasting licence or operate a broadcasting undertaking within the meaning of the Broadcasting Act.

That appeared at the time to cover all aspects of Bell Canada's operations. It has since been brought to my attention that this does not cover the operations of Bell Canada Enterprises, an unregulated portion of that vast company. It is for this reason that I would like to go on record as being somewhat concerned about, if not opposed to, Clause 7 as it presently reads.

Why am I opposed to Clause 7? A parent company will invariably treat a subsidiary company in a preferred fashion. What will occur down the road with Bell Canada or perhaps B.C. Tel? Would this permit a subsidiary company to have a preferred position? If so, our local community cable operators would be eliminated. Life could be made very difficult for them. Although it is difficult for cable operators to cover all the area surrounding them because of the cost of installation of cable, nevertheless we must hold to the fact that they are community cable companies and as such have performed a very human service over the years. Invariably, a telephone company is much less personal than a private cable company owner, someone who is a member of the community and has a feel for what the people in the community want as opposed to what the large company may decide to do.

As I have said, Bell is a long way away from Kootenay East—Revelstoke, but what is good for Bell is also good for B.C. Tel, Alberta Government telephones and any other telephone company throughout this large country of ours. Therefore, I wish to be on record as believing that Clause 7 should be changed so that it deals also with affiliates of Bell Canada and not simply Bell itself and its employees. This would prevent the elimination of the small community cable companies which should be protected to the best of our ability.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question with regard to the difference between the Bill before us today, Bill C-13, and the previous Bill C-19. The Hon. Member admitted that only one clause of the Bill had been changed, yet Hon. Members who were in the House yesterday will recall that the Minister made a big point out of how changed the Bill was. She said that she and her Department had listened to members of the Opposition and members of the committee and had made substantial changes to the Bill. How does the Hon. Member account for this discrepancy?

Mr. Graham: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is a discrepancy. As I heard the Minister's speech yesterday, she said that changes had been made and brought about by the co-operation of the members of the standing committee. I pointed out the change that has been made. However, the Bill as is, with the exception of concerns about Clause 7, is more or less satisfactory to the members of that committee including the Hon. Member. The Bill should be satisfactory all the way through except for Clause 7.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, indeed, one of the clauses of the Bill which was changed was Clause 6. As I read it, the Bill as it is now worded would allow Bell Canada to charge subscribers for six months of telephone service prior to service being installed. I take it that the Hon. Member knows about the clause to which I am referring. Clause 6(2)(c) provides that if the CRTC fails to prescribe an amount which telephone subscribers must pay in advance to obtain telephone services, Bell will automatically be able to charge a six-month pre-payment regardless of whether the customer is a good or a bad credit risk.

In debate, government Members have maintained that the clause is academic because Bell would not impose that charge. If that is so, why give a monopoly like Bell Canada the power to impose that charge? If government Members are convinced that it will not charge that amount, then they should not give Bell the right to do so. Would the Hon. Member give Bell that right or would he debate the clause in committee and have it changed to prevent Bell from charging subscribers a six-month pre-payment?

Mr. Graham: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) misunderstood my remarks, if indeed he was listening earlier. I referred to the fact that the change between the old Bill C-19 and the new Bill C-13 was in Clause 6(2)(c). I quoted the change as "if the commission has not otherwise specified . . . " That change indicates a desire on the part of the committee and of this Government to accommodate the concerns of all Parties in the House.

Mr. Gauthier: Does the Hon. Member believe that the CRTC should be authorized to set that rate, or would he give the monopoly, Bell Canada, the right to set that rate?

Mr. Graham: We are broadening the debate a long way when we drag in the CRTC at this point in time. These changes are perhaps part of what eventually must become a review of all aspects of the broadcasting industry, including the operations and dictates of the CRTC.

Mr. Gauthier: I enjoy this because we are going to clarify another point. The CRTC exists as a regulatory body because Canadians as a whole have given Bell Canada a monopoly over certain services. In my view, that is why the CRTC should be the one to set the up-front rates charged to customers to install phones in their homes. I believe that, but I take it that the Hon. Member is telling me that he does not believe that.

Mr. Graham: It is fair to say that the CRTC has, on many occasions, performed its functions in a satisfactory manner. But it is also fair to say that perhaps a massive review of the entire structure would change some of the aspects and regulations of the CRTC. To answer your question specifically, you would not want Bell Canada regulating itself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am here to participate in the debate on Bill C-13 which is entitled an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada. I think it would be more aptly labelled the selling out of the Bell subscribers.

I represent an area in Ontario which is fairly unique. The bulk of my constituents do not depend on Bell Canada for their residential and commercial services. The City of Thunder Bay and the surrounding rural area of 35 to 40 miles is served by the City of Thunder Bay Telephone Department, which is a municipally owned and operated public utility. This utility over the years has expanded its service to take over much of the area adjacent to the City of Thunder Bay which was served by Bell Canada. If this utility does not have the lowest rates in the country for residential and commercial services, it has the next to lowest rates. It operates as a utility and provides an essential service to the subscribers of that area. It ensures that the revenues derived in excess of its operating costs under the limits prescribed by the regulatory agency in the Province of Ontario are reinvested to improve services to existing subscribers, to expand into rural areas, and to upgrade those services. At the other end of my riding, which is the largest geographical portion of the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan, we have services provided by Bell Canada. It is with great interest that I take part in the debate today on Bill C-13. This Bill is designed to make legal something that Bell Canada has already done, that is, to restructure itself and carve out its subsidiaries in such a way that the subsidiaries are no longer controlled by the regulatory regime in place through the CRTC. That has been done even though those subsidiaries, whether they are Northern Telecom, Bell Canada Enterprises, or Bell Canada International, have all been spawned as a result of the use of the revenue generated from services that Bell Canada provided in the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, and the Territories. It has taken subscribers' money and poured it into the development of new subsidiaries. It now wants to take those lucrative subsidiaries into its corporate structure and to its shareholders and move them out of the field where there is protection for consumers to the whole land of free enterprise. In effect, it has had its subscribers subsidize its improvements, expansion, and now it wants to ensure that there is no way that the regulatory agencies of Canada can force Bell Canada to return the profits from those investments back to the subscribers who provided the initial capital.

Quite frankly, that is consistent with the way this Government operates in relation to deregulation—whether it is deregulation of airlines, rail systems, natural gas, or telecommunications. The Government is allowing those corporate sectors to get away with whatever they can. There is no protection for the consumers. We have had an excellent example recently of the importance of regulatory regimes to consumers in this country. That relates to an application by Bell Canada for a rate increase. The CRTC ruled that what it wanted was excessive. In fact, the CRTC ruled that Bell Canada had already received too much from its subscribers and ordered it to give its subscribers two months' worth of free phone rent. CRTC further ruled that long distance service charges be reduced, because too much money was made there.

I do not accept the Government's philosophy. While I agree that we need reregulation in many areas because some of our rules are a bit out of date, we should not just throw them out. We should look at them in the context of Canada in the 1980s through to the 1990s and determine what appropriate set of rules are needed to ensure that a utility such as Bell Canada is able to have the funds to provide the level of service that we deem appropriate, and at the same time have that built-in protection of regulation. In this manner, the subscriber to the telephone company can have some protection. It is very difficult for a hundred thousand subscribers to get together and mount a campaign to force a company like Bell to change its pricing structure and give consumers a bigger benefit. That is why years ago we put in place the regulatory system of the CRTC.

One of the areas in the Bill I would like to deal more specifically with is an area that concerns me as it relates to services in my riding. It is an exception to a clause that requires the company, in this case Bell Canada, to furnish services in certain cases. In subclause 6(1) it reads:

• (1630)

Where a telephone service is requested by any person or organization for any lawful purpose in a municipality or other territory within which a general telephone service is provided by the Company, the Company shall, with all reasonable dispatch,

(a) furnish the service; and

(b) subject to any order of the Commission under Section 13 that restricts the right or ability of the Company to be a supplier of telephones, furnish telephones of the latest improved design then in use by the Company in the municipality or territory.

That is where the company is required to provide service, but there is an exception in subclause 6(2) which reads as follows:

Nothing in subsection (1) requires the Company to furnish the service or a telephone where

(a) the premises for which the service is requested are not fronting on a highway, street, lane or other area along, over, under or on which the Company has a main or branch telephone service or system;

(b) the telephone on the premises would be situated more than 62 metres or such other distance as the Commission may specify from the highway, street, lane or other area—

This subclause means that unless Bell Canada has a cable running along the highway, the people who live adjacent to it will not be eligible for telephone service. They are not eligible to receive, at a rate equal to what other Canadians will be paying in that service area, some of the new technology allowing them access to the communications system. When Bell Canada receives a request from a Member of Parliament like myself or from a citizen who may live a mile or two from the end of the line, so to speak, on the Trans-Canada Highway or on one of the other major highways in a rural area, Bell can say that it will not install a telephone unless the person requesting the service picks up the tab for the installation of poles and telephone lines to his or her home.

This is a major problem in rural Canada, particularly northern areas. Many citizens have been unable to receive the services which you, Mr. Speaker, and I take for granted. Those of us in the House of Commons who have offices here and in our constituencies have multiple lines and multiple instruments with which to conduct business. However, that is not the situation in rural areas.

There are two areas in my riding which do not have telephone service although they are within a reasonable distance and there is a reasonable number of residences grouped within those areas. Fire, police, and ambulance services are also located some distance away. The situation is such, that because of the Bill and Bills like it, residents living near the Pigeon River south of Thunder Bay must drive 10 or more miles to use the telephone. They might be calling the volunteer fire department to indicate that their home is on fire, or the ambulance service to indicate that someone has taken a heart attack, or the police to indicate that there has been a robbery. It is actually easier for them to drive to the fire station than to travel to the nearest telephone. This kind of restriction in the current age of electronics is inappropriate.

Where there are some logistical problems in terms of running telephone lines, a company like Bell should be required to provide residents, at a price reasonably similar to that paid by residents connected to telephone lines, with some type of mobile telephone. The systems are in place. Cabinet Ministers now have telephones in their cars. Cellular phones allow people to go from place to place, to retain the same telephone number, and to work in their cars. We should ensure that rural residents have the same opportunities.

I should like to return to the Bill itself in a general sense. What I find most disturbing about the Government's decision to legalize what Bell Canada has already done is that it is allowing an evolution away from the concept of a utility. Decisions were made by Bell Canada some time in the past to invest in other areas to expand their power base. Some were directly related, such as Northern Telecom, but others were not so related. Now we as a Parliament are moving to allow Bell Canada to take advantage of the income it received on the investments, not for the benefit of subscribers but rather at their expense.

As I understand it, the revenues from the subsidiaries go back into the mother corporation. They are examined in the context of the viability of the company and the prescribed levels of rate of return. Although I have not looked at it carefully, I would suspect that the recent ruling of the CRTC in respect of the two months of free rent was based in part on the profits from the subsidiaries coming back into the mother corporation.

Let us take a look at the profits. In 1979 the profits were $432.6 million. In 1980 they went down by about 37 per cent to $273.4 million. In 1981 they went up by 103 per cent to $555 million. In 1982 they went up by another 11 per cent to $615.4 million. In 1983 they went up by 34.8 per cent to $829.8 million. In the first quarter of 1984, the latest figures I have available indicate that the profits were $203 million.

They were up 34 per cent over the figures for the first quarter of 1983. Clearly the company is not doing too badly.

I gather the shares of Bell Canada are one of the more respected shares and that they are held by a number of people. However, we must recognize the fact that there is another kind of shareholder. I am referring to the subscriber who does not have any choice in areas covered by Bell; only Bell instruments and lines are available.

The subscribers are also investors because their money was used over the years, not only to help provide profits for Bell Canada, but to provide Bell Canada with the money necessary to expand and develop its subsidiaries—Northern Telecom, Bell Canada International, Telesat Canada, Bell Northern Research, Tele-Direct, and Bell Communications Systems. Those subsidiaries have been funded in part by those subscribers-investors.

We are not only reorganizing Bell. We are reorganizing the subscribers. They will no longer be investors in the system; they will be just subscribers. It is a real shame. The Government—and I gather that it was supported by the former Liberal Government—will now go ahead with this option. It is similar to what the Liberals did years ago in respect of the CPR when it allowed the company to divest itself at the ultimate cost of transportation services.

I look forward with interest to the remainder of the debate. I encourage Conservative Members to join in, to state their case, and to fight on behalf of consumers. However, in closing, I remind them that only Quebec, Ontario, and the Territories are covered by Bell Canada. Let us not forget that there is B.C. Tel, owned by the people of British Columbia. There is the Alberta telephone company which is owned by the people of Alberta. There are the telephone companies in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Kenora, Thunder Bay and the Maritimes. These are public utilities which use their revenues to provide services.

These revenues are not for the lining of pockets or for the development of private sector corporations which can be spun off out of a regulatory regime. They are public utilities, utilities that Conservative Governments in the provinces I have named dare not tamper with. In this respect we have only to consider the Province of Saskatchewan and the backtracking it did during the election in terms of the possibility of selling off part of Sask Tel. The Government knew that it would not survive on that issue.

So I say to Members across the way that what they should be looking at if they really want to provide service and stability to the consumers of Bell Canada is instead of chopping it up into little pieces, perhaps it should be kept as one company and moved into the public sector to remain that way.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, considering the significance of the legislation which is before us, I am surprised that Members of the Government are not taking the opportunity to express themselves in defence of this Bill. It is a Bill that affects an important component of Canadian life. As I understand it, Canadians are the most frequent users of telephones. The telephone is an extremely important aspect of the way in which Canadians stay in contact with one another, do business with one another and keep families together over large expanses of land. If this is a good Bill, then it must justify, in my view, a strong and vigorous defence of the contribution that it will make to the improvement of Canadian life in terms of telephone service. That must surely be the justification for the Bill, at least I assume that it is. However, the silence of government Members gives rise to doubt.

A couple of months ago my wife was complaining to me about the fact that our telephone was just not functioning. In fact, it stopped working one Saturday morning. We called up Ma Bell, said that our telephone was not working and could someone come to fix it.

Mr. Boudria: Thursday of next week?

Mr. McCurdy: No. We were told to give a call the following week and they would see about Thursday of the week after. The company finally got around to fixing the telephone. By God, you could pick it up in your hand and hear static as well as voices. I suppose it could be said that it worked twice as well as it did before in that we heard twice as much noise. We called up Ma Bell to have the telephone repaired again. There were problems here because when we did this the person on the other end of the phone could not hear us for the static. Thus we had to use someone else's telephone once more. Mr. Speaker, would you believe it, our telephone still has static on it. Some people might not realize that these types of experiences which many of us have with a service for which we pay so much in terms of excessive deposits and other inconveniences is a result of the reorganization of Bell. These experiences are but examples of future problems which users will face as a result of this reorganization.

What has happened is that the profits that have been generated for Bell by consumers are now being used up by a voracious conglomerate which stalks our land and, indeed, the world, gobbling up other corporations such as TransCanada Pipelines, Daon Development, British American Bank Note, Ronalds Federated and Case-Hoyt. It is a hungry animal being produced here. It lives on an infinite diet of profits.

The Bill before us is like a birth certificate or a baptism cerfificate. It is a piece of paper which legitimizes this monster, this new conglomerate that will produce no new services. It will not produce any new jobs for the people who have fed its appetite in the past. We know that the Bill is a repeat, a slightly improved version of a Bill first introduced by the Liberals.

At first, the Liberals fought the creation of this beast. When the Quebec Superior Court approved the new structure the Liberals fought against it. They eventually gave up. However, they didn't do so without a good fight first. We do not see the Government giving Bell a fight. As I said before, if Members of the Government are not fighting it then they must like it. If they like it, then they should get up and brag about it. They should tell the world how good it is. However, there is nothing but silence from Members opposite, nothing but guilty smiles on faces of Members opposite.

The contents of the Bill were first brought up in 1982. It dealt with a reorganization plan which would benefit everyone. It would set up Bell Canada Enterprises and separate Bell Canada, the telephone service, from an investment conglomerate which I described before as being so hungry. It was described by the president of the company as a purification process. In fact, he suggested that if the telephone service were separated from the rest of the holdings of Bell then, by gosh, it would be easier to regulate and that we would not have all this confusion about the 80 other companies it holds. He suggested things would be nice and neat and tidy. Some thought that the measure was intended to avoid regulation and thus deprive Bell of some of its cross-subsidization. This produced the expectation that the cost of telephone service would be kept down, at least in some measure, by the profits generated in other areas. So Bell is not associated in a large part with that service to the consumers with which it was identified in the past. Only three things remained. The first was the 30 per cent of Bell Northern Research and a 24 per cent share in Telesat and Tele-Direct.

As Members will recall, the CRTC investigated the reorganization. It generated 106 pages of analysis and some recommendations. It must be recognized that some of these recommendations are contained in the Bill. They have merit and will advance the interest of consumers to some measure. As other Members have observed, a notable control was omitted from the Bill. I refer to the requirement for a minority stockholder or stockholders in Bell Canada as a check on Bell Canada Enterprises. A measure such as that should be in place. It is something which has been supported by consumers and the Consumers' Association of Canada, which pointed out that Bell Canada got away with shifting over $500 million in capital gains to Bell Canada Enterprises which should have been left with Bell to have been of some benefit to Bell and its users.

We will likely look to a future in which Bell Canada will be starved of capital by Bell Canada Enterprises, their being no means to ensure that its capital needs will be met. The cost of that will devolve upon the user, a cost in money, poor service and new demands for increases in the basic rate, charges on local calls, and increased long distance charges, all this by virtue of a greater pressure for deregulation which this Bill represents.

This is just one more example of the useless growth of huge conglomerates in an attempt to find better and easier ways of making money without creating jobs or encouraging creativity.

There are those on the government side who would say that Bell Canada Enterprises is a large corportation with large research activities and that it will create jobs. In fact, not one single new job will be created by this reorganization. Existing companies are being purchased. In one instance Bell International has imposed a non-union policy on its wire and cable acquisition in Great Britain. That is not in the interests of workers. Overall, Bell Canada has lost jobs and that is manifest in the difficulties faced in getting service. The criteria of utility to the Canadian public has not been met.

Has there been new research? All one has to do is consider the record of Northern Telecom, an admittedly research intensive company. In 1976 there were 2,900 jobs at Northern Telecom in the U.S. Since then that number has increased to 20,000, while the number of jobs in Canada continues to decline. This arouses the not unreasonable suspicion that Northern Telecom is about to desert Canada for the greener pastures of the U.S. In what way will this benefit Canadians? In no way.

The final question of greatest relevance is will this legislation mean lower rates and improved service, or any of the other things we expect of a company devoted to the service of Canadians? No. It will not improve conditions for those who depend on Bell Canada.

I regret that this Bill has not been the basis for a strong and concerted debate. Having observed the absence of a vigorous defence by the Government, I note there has not exactly been a vigorous participation by the Official Opposition.

Mr. Boudria: I am always here.

Mr. McCurdy: Then I hope that vigour will be demonstrated. When I resume my seat I will look forward to the usual eloquence in defence of Canadians we expect to hear in this kind of debate. Therefore, with an expression of appreciation for the opportunity to participate in this debate, I will resume my seat in the hope that the people of Canada will see this very important Bill subjected to the kind of discussion which would benefit both the Bill and the people of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Miss MacDonald, seconded by Mr. La Salle, moves that Bill C-13, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

[Translation]

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux, for the Minister of State (Finance), moved that Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to speak to Bill C-14, a Bill that arises from the February 26 Budget and, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, from the Ways and Means motion tabled on June 11 of this year. The purpose of this Bill is to increase federal sales tax in certain areas. An increase of 1 per cent will raise sales tax on construction materials from 7 to 8 per cent, on alcohol and tobacco from 14 to 15 per cent and on other commodities from 11 to 12 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, this tax increase will help the federal Government fight the deficit, a deficit that does not seem to worry the Opposition very much. Some Hon. Members across the way even seem to think it's funny.

Mr. Boudria: I was laughing at the Conservative Government.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, the deficit we have today was left us by the previous Liberal Government. With this Bill, we are seeking the revenue we need, to help the Government in areas where the Opposition so often says we are not doing what should be done.

Mr. Speaker, as an excellent lawyer and businessman you will agree that if we do not bring down the deficit, if we do not reduce the enormous debt left us by the Liberal regime . . . Mr. Speaker, we have reached the point where 25 per cent of the Government's annual expenditures are used to service our debt, or should I say their debt, Mr. Speaker.

• (1700)

An Hon. Member: Twenty years of Liberal mismanagement.

An Hon. Member: It does not bother them.

Mr. Vincent: They never did get around to managing anyway. As you know, Mr. Speaker, last week the Auditor General presented his report in which he referred to the spendthrift habits of the previous administration and pointed out how they wasted Canadian taxpayers' money for unduly partisan ventures, but the people were not fooled and they turfed them right out. In the beautiful riding of Trois-Rivières, Mr. Speaker, two days before the September 4 election, they signed contracts worth millions of dollars for strictly partisan projects, but the electors caught them at this game and voted for the Conservative Party, for Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and, of course, for your humble servant, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: And they have been glad about this change ever since.

Mr. Vincent: And, Mr. Speaker, everything is going fine in the riding of Trois-Rivières, as everywhere else in Quebec and in the rest of Canada.

To get back to the tax increase, I must say it is necessary. Mr. Speaker, various comments have been made about our region. I challenge the Hon. Member to come to Trois-Rivières. Any time at all, I will be glad to welcome him. Liberal Party representatives visited us twice in two years and they did not even manage to attract more than 25 people all told.

An Hon. Member: —Saint-Maurice, 20 years of patronage, no wonder they voted Liberal.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, when his leader visited the riding of Trois-Rivières a year ago, there were more people at the oyster dinner than at his meeting. There is therefore nothing to be concerned about.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to reduce the deficit. If we cannot do so, the interest rates will increase.

An Hon. Member: No one is working.

Mr. Vincent: The Members opposite are not worried about interest rates of 22 or 23 per cent; they have seen it all before and they were happy with interest rates of 24 per cent. However, Canadian taxpayers prefer rates under 10 per cent, which is what they have now. A high deficit also means a weaker dollar. The Liberal Party was happy when the dollar was even weaker. We now have a stable dollar, Mr. Speaker, and this helps Canadian businesses to export and make profits in the United States. Unfortunately, they do not understand this, Mr. Speaker. I can see that they understand nothing of what we are trying to say.

An Hon. Member: They are not good teachers in financial matters either.

Mr. Vincent: The most important result of reducing the deficit and having money in the coffers of the state is that we can maintain valid existing programs. We can also maintain our social programs, which I find very important. The Opposition may laugh, but I find this important and we need some money to do it. To have this money, Mr. Speaker, there are areas in which we can increase taxes, and I think that Canadian taxpayers find such increases reasonable. For instance, the tax increase on tobacco will not kill anyone, quite the opposite.

An Hon. Member: On alcohol.

Mr. Vincent: The tax increase on alcohol is another reasonable measure, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: The reduction of the tax on gasoline!

Mr. Vincent: The Hon. Member speaks about the reduction of the tax on gasoline. This was not mentioned either.

An Hon. Member: He does not talk about the $140 in the pockets of the taxpayer. The companies which are saving money with their trucks have not lowered—

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, when we speak about reducing the deficit, it is on two levels. On one hand, we increase certain taxes in areas where it is reasonable to do so and where the taxpayers can accept it, and on the other hand, we reduce Government expenditures. There have been major reductions in Government expenditures, as you know, Mr. Speaker. There have been cut-backs certain programs where the previous Government used to spend shamefully for patronage projects in various constituencies. There have been cut-backs in these programs, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Judo clubs and churches.

Mr. Vincent: This helps to reduce the deficit and it is another reason why Canadian businessmen have pride and confidence in this Government, and are willing to invest.

Almost 600,000 jobs have been created in this country over the last two years. They were not created by the federal Government as a Government, as an employer—we cannot afford that because they left us with too large a deficit—but by Canadian businessmen who had confidence in this Conservative Government. They invested money, they created jobs, and because of their actions we now have interest rates below 10 per cent and 600,000 new jobs in this country. Mr. Speaker, those figures need no explanations. The Opposition may bicker, this is all they can do, but the facts are there and they speak for themselves. It is my view that the February budget has been well accepted across the land. I had an opportunity to travel across Québec, and in Québec it has met with marvellous acceptance. People are happy that the country is being managed as they themselves manage their own businesses.

Saturday night, I was in Trois-Rivières for the Economic Corporation's gala, and many business people were in attendance. Six hundred persons were there. There were trophy awards, what they call the Radissons in Trois-Rivières. Let me say by the way, Mr. Speaker, that Radisson was a Conservative, as you know. The Radisson trophies were awarded and I heard only positive comments on the current administration.

People in Québec have understood the deficit increase this year: $2.5 billion, it is true, as compared to our own forecast. But they know this is the second time in 25 years that a federal Government has said: Our expenditures will come up to such an amount and, by the year-end, the actual figure is the same one. We did not have to apologize at year-end for having overspent by $1 billion. Or a few billion dollars. No, Mr. Speaker. And business people respect that, because what they want is a Government that is good at managing, that stays within budgeted expenditures.

Of course, in this country, we cannot know beforehand what problem we will have with grain in Western Canada, what problem we will have with oil on the international scene, or what other problems we may have in Québec or in the Maritime Provinces. I believe Canadians are aware of that. But they are also aware and proud to see that this Conservative Government and their Prime Minister are acting in a responsible manner, that we know where the money we spend is going. The money we spend is not used for partisan purposes. In ridings that were exclusively Liberal—you may check with our Conservative Members—before 1984 they did not have the same budgets. The budgets were different for Liberal ridings and Opposition ridings. And surely my colleague from the New Democratic Party will agree with me on that.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is what we did. We shut the valve. We put an end to that. Ridings throughout the country are dealt with on an equal footing and it is essential for their Member to work in the House of Commons as well as close to the Ministers.

With reference to deficit reduction, Mr. Speaker, expenditures of some departments or programs could have been cut further. In the first place, they would have been the first to blame the Government and rightly so. I think that in the February 1986 budget we had to seek additional revenues and make the cuts we did. We could have chosen another solution which would not have been an increase in revenues and we could have made further cuts. However, Mr. Speaker, some remote ridings such as that of my colleague would definitely have been penalized. I think that whether it was in the riding of Abitibi—Témiscamingue, Trois-Rivières or Lac-Saint-Jean, in the Gaspé peninsula or even in your own riding, Mr. Speaker, which is to a certain extent considered as being regional, it would have been unacceptable. It is sure that large urban centres would not have suffered from the consequences, but the regions would have borne the cost. And, Mr. Speaker, I was the first to object to that. On the other hand, I think that now Canadians from all across the country have accepted a certain increase in federal sales taxes.

Mr. Speaker, let us not forget that when we talk about federal sales tax, we have had a Canadian first on fiscal matters: the federal sales tax credit. It never occurred to the Party which was in power before us to implement such a move.

I do not want anybody to tell me that the increase in federal sales tax will be at the expense of the have-nots, those in the lower income brackets. All families whose income is under $15,000 a year will be entitled to a tax credit, and we know that it is more attractive than a $50 deduction for an adult and a $25 deduction for a child. A family of four earning less than $15,000 will get a $150 tax credit. Mr. Speaker, that means getting money from those families with average or higher incomes who can afford to pay this additional tax, and that is also caring for those with lower incomes.

Mr. Speaker, that means going in the direction of a tax reform, towards a more fair and equitable tax system.

The same is true with the minimum income tax, Mr. Speaker. I remember that when we introduced the minimum income tax in December 1985, the Liberal Opposition was against it.

I also remember that the Leader of the New Democratic Party rose to congratulate us but the Liberal Opposition was against it. Do you know why, Mr. Speaker? I presume they opposed it because it was a good measure. They have opposed every good step we have taken. Or could it be that all Members of the Federal Liberal Party earn more than $50,000 per year? That might be the other reason. I do not know. But it has to be either of them.

We should therefore give it some thought. We should also remember that when we deal with an increase of the federal sales tax, we may be told that it is going to hurt the farmers involved in tobacco production. We did think of them, however, and we thought of creating a special fund to help them. We really put a lot of thought into that federal sales tax increase which is not high for everyone . . . I am thinking, Mr. Speaker, of the assistance to farmers. We extended the duration of the fuel tax rebate program, we increased that rebate for farmers.

We did so because we wanted the increase to be fair and reasonable and the lower income brackets to be protected from the impact of that federal sales tax.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore submit that it is important to pass this Bill expeditiously, and I urge Members of the House to help it pass as quickly as possible in order for us to be able to proceed with our social programs as well as other economic and cultural programs of importance for our country and for all Canadians.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, following the Budget tabled last February 26, which was very well accepted and understood by Canadians of all levels, but appears unfortunately not to have been understood yet by the Opposition, I can assure you that we are going to carry on with this so that someday even the Opposition will understand it.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard a speech in which the Hon. Member tried to blame us for the deficit and referred in glowing terms to the Conservative Government's economic record.

Perhaps my hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) was not in the House during the debate on the Speech from the Throne and did not read Hansard for the proceedings of the debate on October 23, 1986, at page 660, and starting on pages 674 and 675. At the time, Mr. Speaker, I quoted to the House an article by Alain Dubuc of La Presse in which he did an economic analysis of the Conservative Government two years after the elections.

Mr. Boudria: Say it again!

Mr. Gagliano: And obviously, after what he told us in his speech, Mr. Speaker, I will have to read a few quotes from Mr. Dubuc so that my hon. friend will know how his Government performed.

Mr. Speaker, on September 6, Mr. Dubuc said in his article:

"Measuring economic growth is the best way to find out whether the economy is progressing at an acceptable rate. Growth was 3.3 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984, during the last two years of the Liberal reign. In 1985, under the Conservatives, the rate of progression dropped to 4.5 per cent and is not expected to exceed 3 per cent this year, since we are entering a slowdown phase, not a phase of progression".

Mr. Speaker, if the Conservative Government is proud of its economic record, and it is very fond of saying so, why is there no economic growth? And that is not all Mr. Dubuc said. Mr. Speaker, he referred to inflation as well.

The inflation rate had been reduced to 4 per cent in the summer of 1984 when the Liberals lost the election, and there has been no change since then.

My colleague mentioned the dollar. Our dollar was worth 77.14 cents U.S. in August 1984. How much is it worth today? Did you hear the latest news?

Mr. Boudria: Seventy cents!

Mr. Della Noce: And the 22 per cent interest rates. Look at them now.

Mr. Gagliano: Oh, yes, my colleague from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce). Let us talk about interest rates. Will you have the nerve to take credit for lower interest rates as a result of Conservative Government action, or will you admit it just might be due to the American policy? Interest rates have gone down on international money markets throughout the world. So now you know!

Mr. Waddell: Mulroney said that the Hon. Member for Duvernay is very important. Maybe so, but he is not in the Cabinet!

Mr. Gagliano: Of course, the Hon. Member for Duvernay is very important.

Mr. Waddell: But he is not in the Cabinet!

Mr. Vincent: Don't tell me you are going to support the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou!

Mr. Gagliano: He is the only Conservative Member of Italian origin, but he has yet to join the Cabinet.

If I may continue, Mr. Speaker. That is not all Mr. Dubuc had to say. He referred to the purchasing power, which indeed relates to Bill C-14. If only my colleague would listen, he might learn something.

Speaking about the purchasing power, Mr. Speaker, and I quote:

"The purchasing power is how a Conservative measures his wealth. In 1985, when inflation went up by 4 per cent, wages increased by 3.5 per cent, and the same thing seems to be happening this year. While the purchasing power would decrease by 1 per cent, the tax burden imposed by the Federal Government will have increased by 23 per cent."

The Hon. Member has just left, Mr. Speaker. He cannot accept the facts. There they are. Tax increases of 23 per cent in one year! This affects the purchasing power. This is what we are discussing in relation with Bill C-14, Mr. Speaker, a tax increase on manufactures and air transport. A tax increase on communications and fuel. Are there any others? These are some of the taxes being increased in this Bill, and that is not all. Other measures are expected in the February Budget.

One thing is certain, and that is that, for 1986-87, there will be $5 billion in tax increases. Yet, we learned in September from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that, in spite of this $5 billion increase in taxes in one year, he cannot control his deficit, which will be $2.5 billion higher than anticipated. That is how the Conservative Government, which used to accuse the Liberals of being unable to control the deficit, is now doing the job.

Mr. Speaker, I said all this simply to reply to what the Hon. Member said about the efforts of the Conservative Governement to reduce the deficit.

As a result, they will still increase the deficit because they are indeed preventing economic growth, increasing inflation and reducing purchasing power. If, let us say, Canadians do not have enough money and the product is too expensive, they have less money available to spend. How will economic growth happen? This is what you Conservatives do not understand—

• (1720)

I cannot reply to the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), Mr. Speaker, because I do not think economics is his strong subject.

I would like to deal with tax reform, Mr. Speaker, because for a number of months, almost a year, I could even say since this Conservative Government came to power they have been talking about tax reform.

Mr. Malépart: Words, nothing else.

Mr. Gagliano: In the May 1985 budget, after a rather extensive study, the Minister of Finance stated he had given up the idea of a value-added tax, surely because of pressures from small business people. He told us, they were going to review the whole issue and come up with a system, a tax reform—they must reform at least the sales tax. In the February 1986 budget, he stated he had given up the idea of the value-added tax but would introduce a business transfer tax—whatever the terms used in the French version—and within a very short time, perhaps in June, I think that was indicated, he would be tabling a White Paper in order that Canadians could learn what the Government's intentions were on that tax and we could have had a national debate. So June was September and then October, and not long ago he announced:

THE MINISTER LAUNCHES PRE-BUDGET CONSULTATION AND TABLES GUIDELINES FOR AN OVERALL TAX REFORM

Mr. Speaker, we have nothing on that, no specific information. What is involved actually is a budget consultation which the Minister of Finance does every year. Once the Minister of Finance has tabled his budget, he opens his next round of consultations for the following year. But he would have us believe that tax reform is involved, when all this is about is pre-budget consultation, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the Minister of Finance does not have a very clear idea of where he is going on that. So he lets go a balloon and says: We are consulting you.

But what is it? Usually, Mr. Speaker, the person involved in a consultation will put forward "x" number of proposals or options. And then that person will ask: "Which of these proposals do you feel is the best, the one we should adopt, which would be appropriate, or are there others?" Mr. Speaker, the Minister has put forward no proposal whatsoever, sticking to empty statements. If the Progressive Conservative Party sat for as many as 20 years in the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, it is no accident: it is a fact. They never have any clear notion of where they are going, no long-term plan of action. Never!

Mr. Della Noce: Your party certainly had none, with a $1 billion deficit.

Mr. Gagliano: We remained in power for 20 years, and when we regain power, we will keep it for another 20 years, because we are going to prepare a proper platform. We are going to tell people where we are going. As for you, after two years in Government, you are still carrying out studies.

For instance, last year, the price of postal stamps was increased by two cents, and as a former small businessman, my friend the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) should know what a two cents increase means.

What does the Government do, Mr. Speaker? It says, this is the last increase. The Minister responsible for Canada Post at the time had clearly indicated that it would be the last increase that before the Government could impose another one, Canada Post would have to demonstrate that it has increased its productivity. This Government does not even have the guts to say no to Canada Post! The more so because business people have written letters stating: "Listen, now is not the time to increase postal rates; now is the time to administer this Corporation properly and fine tune its management." But no, Mr. Speaker, they announce that there is going to be a business plan. They have been saying for the past year that it is coming. We thought we were goint to get it by Friday. Apparently, it has been postponed, because even within the Conservative caucus, not everybody agrees with this increase. My friend the hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) may be prepared to accept it, but not the others. There are a few Members who have the courage to stand up and say, as some did the other day in the House: "We are going to fight this increase and perhaps delay further this action plan." But the Government will have some day to tell the whole truth about this matter and state its intentions, because it cannot continue administering this country without knowing where it is going.

But to return to Bill C-14, Mr. Speaker, there are tax increases everywhere. This is going to hurt consumers and corporations, and we are now dealing again with taxes in the House. How many other things have we not had the opportunity to debate that went past us unnoticed. For instance, as a lawyer, you know that it used to cost $200 for a federal incorporation; today it costs $500. From $200 to $500, a $300 increase for an incorporation! It is unbelievable and frightening! But, who incorporates? It is certainly not the large companies which will suffer, since in legal fees only it costs them ten times that much. It will hurt small businesses, which will not be able to take advantage of the benefits which accrue from incorporation. It is a well known fact that incorporation brings a number of benefits, and in particular a reduced rate of taxation. Today, the cost of incorporation jumps by $300. This is a hidden tax, which was announced in the Budget, but is not even mentioned in Bill C-14, although it is still there.

Take the increase in postal rates, Mr. Speaker, that is also a hidden tax. If you calculate the cost for a small business, even at 2 cents a letter, it can add up to $1000 to $1500 a year. Take now the subject of liability insurance. What is being done? My colleague from Duvernay should know very well that all the car dealers and repair shops in Montreal have the same problem. They cannot get liability insurance, even for a small fortune. I known one case where the premium increased to $7000, although it was only $1000 two years ago. Yes, you are in Governement and you let the insurance companies do whatever they wish. Are we going, one day, to have a Canadian policy dealing with insurance? Are we going to let people from London or New York set the rates?

Mr. Della Noce: We are going to change everything.

Mr. Gagliano: Change everything, exactly, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Vincent: On a point of Order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) on a point of order.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, with respect, we are considering a Bill that deals with federal sales tax, and the Hon. Member is talking about insurance premiums. I think we should get back to the subject of this debate, which is federal sales tax. If the Hon. Member has no particular comments on the subject, Mr. Speaker, perhaps he could let someone else take the floor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) has a point. I will let the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (M. Gagliano) give us another example. However, that does not mean he can devote his entire speech to these details. I'm sure the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou understands. The Hon. Member may proceed.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I was taking insurance and our postal services as examples. These are taxes too, and my point was that small businesses will be stuck with all the taxes we are increasing here, sales taxes in addition to all the other charges and licences that are being increased by hundreds and thousands of dollars. At the end of the year, how can they expect to survive? I wanted to use this as an example, Mr. Speaker, to make Canadians understand the impact of this tax increase.

Mr. Speaker, I also would like to inform the House that in November 1985, the Angus Reid company polled Canadians on entrepreneurship in Canada. The results, published in February 1986 when the Budget was brought down, show that Canadians agreed with the Budget. They were prepared to start new businesses, to take risks, to work long hours and even to move to other areas. They were ready to take chances to become good entrepreneurs. But two things in the poll caused a certain amount of anxiety, and these were higher taxes and the lack of pension funds for small businesses.

Before the Hon. Member rises to reply and waste the time of Hon. Members here in the House, I want to say that this information is indeed relevant, because small businessmen and small businesses and Canadians do not want to go into business because taxes are too high, and now, once again, the Budget is an excuse to increase taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to quote some figures, and perhaps the Hon. Member could learn something here.

Here it is: the 1984 Economic Statement and the May 1985 Budget. If we look at the 3 per cent deindexing of income tax, this has cost Canadians $570 million, which means a 5 to 10 per cent surtax amounting to $550 million, and there is also the 1973 tax rebate that was eliminated and which has cost us $490 million. We have a whole list to show that, as I said earlier, Canadians will spend $5 billion more in taxes in 1986-87. That is a fact.

An Hon. Member: They will save $7 billion!

Mr. Gagliano: And how will they do that? The Hon. Member says that they will save $7 billion, Mr. Speaker.

That is not all, even though we have just been told that there are no other measures. However, we have to wait for the next Budget when the Minister of Finance introduces his new tax so that even the air we breathe will be taxed. This will mean billions of dollars more, Mr. Speaker.

Such is the Conservative Government: Taxes, taxes and still more taxes.

An Hon. Member: It costs a lot to pay for Brian's friends.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to speak about the deficit. Naturally, we want to reduce the deficit—

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gagliano: Yes, but we want to do so without strangling the Canadian taxpayers as you are doing!

An Hon. Member: That shows intelligence.

Mr. Gagliano: As for you, you speak about reducing the deficit, but what do you do? An amount of $41 million has been wasted to keep the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) happy and build a penitenciary in his constituency. And there are many more examples.

Why should we not tell the truth to the Canadian people? How can you explain that the deficit will be $2.5 billion more than forecast in your Budget?

The Hon. Member said earlier that we knew nothing about the oil crisis in the West. However, Hon. Members will recall that, during the Budget debate, we asked the Minister of Finance questions such as: How can you expect to keep to the figures announced in your Budget in view of the decrease in oil prices? Does this mean that the taxation figures are wrong?

You knew what was going on. You said: We shall succeed. But now, you are saying: Well, we made a mistake in our figures. That is childish, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malépart: But they have money for their friends in the banking sector.

Mr. Gagliano: The Hon. Member has reminded me about the banks. Those $1 billion would have reduced the deficit, Mr. Speaker!

The billions of dollars spent for the banks would have reduced the deficit.

An Hon. Member: The Gulf deal!

Mr. Gagliano: The capital gains tax exemption, which even your friends are now criticising. Yesterday, the Economic Council said that this measure should be abolished. How many billions of dollars, which could have been used to reduce the deficit, will this cost Canadians? You want to reduce the deficit on the backs of the poor! But for your rich friends, you go overboard. That is the difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives. We are in favour of reducing the deficit, but only if this can be done without hurting Canadians because people still have to live. We are going through an economic crisis. Naturally, the Governement has to act, but it is up to us to stimulate the economy. I have just quoted Alain Dubuc, an expert from the newspaper La Presse. Indeed you have stifled economic growth and fueled inflation which we had managed to bring down.

Let us talk about the creation of 500 or 600 . . . what is the latest employment figures, they change every day. Let us talk about that. I have something to read here, again by Alain Dubuc, Mr. Speaker. Here it goes!

Job creation. This is where the Mulroney Government told the truth. Between August 1984 and August 1986, 569,000 jobs were created in Canada, but the figures seem to indicate this was a one-shot deal. Not a single job has been created since early 1986. There were 11,632,000 jobs in January, we now have 11,615,000, a net loss of 17,000 jobs since the beginning of the year.

It is all here. How do you explain the fact that you created these 569,000 jobs and that now, in 1986, we already have 17,000 fewer jobs than at the beginning of the year? It is quite simple. The Liberals had set up the Canada Works program. Under this program—

An Hon. Member: Do talk about this program.

Mr. Gagliano: Listen, you will learn something here. How do you juggle with statistics? Listen. How do you juggle with statistics?

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member simply will not listen to the truth.

Once in office the Conservative Party came out with its very own job-creation program and cut the number of weeks from 52 to 26.

The fact is that they create the same job twice. This is how you create jobs, and it makes all the difference. This is where you have been juggling with the statistics, so much so that after a year and a half of those programs we are losing jobs. And so it is. But the truth hurts, they are not prepared to accept the facts.

Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) used to be a leader of gas station operators, and now he is leading the muffled ones. Would you please ask him to listen religiously to the speech, the excellent speech being made by the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), rather than interrupting . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) could well resume his speech.

Mr. Della Noce: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) on a point of order.

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I think that no leader of gas station operators, nor any Canadian for that matter has any lesson to learn from the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte

Marie (Mr. Malépart) because he should have been here to see what happened before his speech—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well. Order, please. Would the Hon. Members let the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) resume his speech and listen to him?

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take too much time, but I would simply like to share an experience with my colleagues, even if they do not want to listen, and, as I say, usually they do not. What can you do about that, the facts are there. We have had this Conservative Government for two years now and, as we have already seen, their great thrust, which is on the economic side, is leaking from everywhere. But last summer, Mr. Speaker, I had an interesting experience. I led a task force on small businesses for my party. Then I had the privilege of travelling across the land, from Vancouver to Halifax, and I met with many business people, men and women, who were committed to this country's economic development and who worked long hours in their businesses, often with very little reward or profit.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, they were concerned, as I said earlier and as shown in the poll taken in February 1986 about a pension fund and because taxation rates were too high in Canada. And when I say taxation, I cannot do as the Minister of Finances who wants to reduce income tax and increase the other taxes, because when Canadians talk about taxes, they have in mind sales taxes, permits and income tax, everything. Nowadays, when Canadians figure out their taxes, they add up all what they pay. Mr. Speaker, I think that my comments apply to all parties in this House. It is too much. The message was clear, the Canadian taxpayers' tax burden has to be lessened. This is one of the major concerns of Canadians either whether they live in Vancouver, Halifax, Calgary, Montreal Quebec City or whatever.

The other concern of Canadians, Mr. Speaker, had to do with pension plans. Small businesses can only create their pension fund with what is now called a RRSP or registered retirement savings plan, it is the only way. This is not like our own retirement plan. There is a pension fund for Members of Parliament, for public servants, and for teachers; everyone has a pension fund. However, the businessman has no pension fund and often those people work for 20 or 30 years and when a misfortune occurs, they have nothing left, no unemployment insurance, no pension, nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Government should move in that direction. The Conservative Government being in power, it should act without delay. We, in the Opposition, are going to make it part of our Party platform, and as soon as we form the next Government, we are going to act immediately contrary to the Conservatives who are still studying after two years. Of course, the whole tax issue must be addressed seriously; significant and concrete tax breaks should be given to small businesses. We should make it possible for them to invest in a pension fund. In fact, in its May 1985 Budget and again in its February 1986 Budget, this Government had proposed to allow a certain amount of the pension fund money from various municipalities or organizations to be invested in small businesses. However, Mr. Speaker, this plan does not work, because it is very difficult to convince business people to invest in a concern with only one manager and lacking the administrative structure of a large corporation.

Theoretically, therefore, it could be possible to invest pension funds in small businesses; in real life, however, this does not happen very much and what people would like to have is for the Government to consider a system whereby a businessman who has put away some money in a pension fund or RRSP, to invest this money in his own small business. Wherever we went, that was one of the recommendations that were made.

Of course, this matter should be examined from every angle, because it is nevertheless necessary to preserve the pension funds, so that when the time comes, there is pension money, because we are well aware that small businesses are high risk ventures; but there is also the whole tax issue, and the small businessman should be allowed to use as capital for his business the money he has invested in his own registered pension fund.

Mr. Speaker, as Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou, I know small businesses very well, having worked in the field as an accountant for several years. I will make a commitment to seek a pension scheme, so that we—even our young people, because they often tell us: Yes, we should like to go and work in the Public Service because of its pension plan. When the time comes for us to retire, we would be O.K.; but in the business world, there are too many question marks. When one has a pension scheme, one can say: Listen, beside the privilege of being self-employed, with all the power a businessman has, the courage he can demonstrate, in the end, to get a pension fund—

[English]

Mr. Riis: I rise on a point of order. Earlier today during Question Period the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) referred to various documents. He indicated his willingness to provide them to the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Would it be appropriate to ask the President of the Treasury Board to table those documents in the House.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on the same point of order. I know that would normally be something that is addressed directly after Question Period. On behalf of the Government, I will be pleased to make inquiries and see if we cannot table those documents or make them available to the opposition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, resuming debate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I note the lateness of the hour and see that it is a scarce House of Commons. Because it is the supper hour, I assume that a fair number of Canadians will be tuned in and listening to what is going on in this House.

For those Canadians who have tuned in, Parliament is now debating Government Bill C-14. This Bill will increase the hidden taxes that Canadians will be paying. This Bill adds a 3 per cent surtax effective July 1, 1986. This is a 1.5 per cent surtax for 1986 and 3 per cent for each year following. This is contained in the Budget that was originally introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on February 26, 1986. It deals with the 3 per cent surtax on income.

What we are debating today is the increase in the sales tax, which will raise a fair bit of change for the Government. This is a 1 per cent increase in the sales tax. This will cost the average family an additional $150 per year. There is a 4 and 6 per cent increase respectively on alcohol and tobacco. This will cost the average family $20 per year. This Government has introduced a new sales tax, excise tax, and hidden taxes on numerous items. It has increased the tax not only on cigarettes and alcohol, but automobile fuels and gasoline.

The Government has introduced sales tax on candy bars and soft drinks. It has put a sales tax on vitamins and pharmaceutical items. It has placed a sales tax on a whole slew of items. It even placed a sales tax on pet food. When that was dealt with in committee, I tried on a symbolic basis, and also on a real basis, to have that tax measure amended to exempt blind people. They have to feed seeing-eye dogs, which are generally large German Shepherds, and whose food costs run into quite a bill. The Government was not interested in hearing any of this. It is determined to increase the amount of sales tax charged to Canadian people.

What is the record of the Government in terms of sales tax? In the two short years it has been in office, it has dramatically increased the amount of revenues collected through sales tax. In fact, in 1988 the sales tax introduced by the Government in its two Budgets will yield more than twice the amount of revenue drawn from the changes to personal income tax and more than four times the amount of revenue accruing from corporate tax changes. In other words, from 1984 to 1988 the sales tax introduced by the Conservative Government will amount to some $6.7 billion of additional revenue, whereas the increases in personal income tax will mean an increase of some $3.3 billion in federal revenues, and the corporate income tax changes will only mean an increase of $1.4 billion.

In the name of fighting the deficit, the folks opposite have increased our taxes quite substantially. Of course the smallest increases go to their corporate friends. The next highest hit group is average Canadians. We have all seen the increases in personal income tax. However, the biggest tax is the hidden tax, the sales tax, or the back-door tax.

Let us look at the impact of these changes upon the average Canadian family. In the November 1984 economic statement, just after the Conservative Party was elected, it increased the sales and excise tax, which will cost the average Canadian family some $350 extra per year. It again increased the sales and excise tax in the May 1985 Budget, which will cost the average family some $325 more per year. The increase in the February 1986 Budget will result in an extra $170 being paid per year by the average family. That totals some $845 in extra taxes which the average Canadian family will be paying.

Approximately 69 per cent of the individual tax increases introduced by the Conservatives since they assumed power was in the area of hidden taxes, while only 31 per cent was in the area of up front personal taxes.

As I said, there has been a dramatic increase in the use of sales tax under the Conservative Government. In fact its use is quite extensive. When we compare it with the other OECD countries, we find we are one of the highest in terms of relying upon hidden or sales tax as a form of public revenue. I should like to refer to an article by John Ferguson which appeared in The Ottawa Citizen the other day. In part it read:

> Figures from the Paris-based Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development show that taxes on goods and services already make up nearly 33 per cent of all taxation revenue in Canada, compared to 30 per cent in Britain, 29 per cent in France, 27 per cent in West Germany, 18 per cent in the U.S. and only 15 per cent in Japan.

I acknowledge that those OECD projections include provincial sales tax as well.

The extensive use by the Government of the sales tax is not surprising. A sales tax is hidden. I suppose to politicians like the ones who now form the Government there is a certain attractiveness; they can increase taxes without people feeling them directly. These are the taxes which they pay every time they purchase a chocolate bar or some other manufactured item. These are the taxes which they pay if they drive automobiles and purchase gasoline. They pay the nickels and dimes. It is a nickel and dime Government. It nickels and dimes Canadians to death.

It is not surprising that Hon. Members opposite bring in these types of tax increases. It is because they are regressive. They affect the poor more than they affect the rich. Everyone must eat. Everyone needs shelter. Everyone needs some form of transportation. Ostensibly we all take some form of vitamin pill, drink pop, or whatever. However, if one is on the low end of the income scale, the percentage of one's income going to pay these taxes is quite a bit higher than that paid by a high income person. Experts agree that generally sales taxes are regressive because the poor pay more as a percentage of their total income than do the rich. It is no wonder the Conservative Government prefers these types of regressive tax measures.

We talk about the hidden nature of these taxes and about the unfairness of them. They do not affect the well-to-do in the same way as those with lower or middle incomes.

Two years ago some of my colleagues and I visited Washington to learn about some of the proposals in its Government's tax reform package. I will never forget a luncheon we attended with the chief lobbyist for the American Manufacturers Association. That Association bitterly opposed the tax reform package, but it acknowledged that the United States had a problem with its deficit and that some new revenues needed to be created. It certainly did not want to see an increase in the corporate tax. It wanted the United States to introduce a new form of tax on consumption, a sales tax, an excise tax. That is how the Association wanted the U.S. to generate more revenues.

It was not surprising to hear the Business Council on National Issues make the same proposal. It does not want tax reform. They do not want to see the Government touch the exemptions, loopholes, and special tax treatment for large corporations. On the other hand, it complains about the deficit all the time and recognizes that some proposals must be brought forward to generate more revenue. Lo and behold, the Business Council on National Issues suggested an increase in sales tax or an increase in taxes on consumption. We in the New Democratic Party are opposed to that form of taxation because it is hidden, because it is unfair, and because it is regressive. We stand behind the notion that a fair tax system must tax income, not consumption.

One reason for insisting that taxes must be on income rather than on consumption is that we can ensure that those people in a better position to pay will pay a fairer share, a larger share. The principle of the ability to pay is adhered to on a tax based upon income rather than one based upon consumption. However, the Conservative Government prefers to increase its revenues from consumption rather than from income.

Another reason we are not happy with a tax on consumption is that it erodes the disposable income of the Canadian family. The most recent quarterly economic review published by the Department of Finance shows that during April and May of 1986 the disposable income of Canadians fell by 2 per cent after rising 3 per cent in the previous quarter. The Conference Board of Canada agrees that consumer spending will be slowed by Conservative tax increases. Personal outlays are projected by the Board to slow from a growth rate of 5.2 per cent in 1985 to 2.7 per cent in 1987. The National Council on Welfare has also joined in this course on consumer spending, noting that a steady decline in the disposable income of all Canadians should be expected over five years as a result of direct and indirect tax increases.

The third reason we are opposed to this tax measure is that it erodes the ability of Canadians to spend. It decreases the disposable income of Canadians. If we are to have an economic recovery then surely it must depend upon the average Canadian family being able to buy the goods and services it needs. If Canadian families are able to buy the goods and services they need, then we will have people working. We will have new incomes being generated and new economic activity. Then we might have some chance to reduce the deficit. To take more and more of the disposable income out of the pockets of Canadians means that the average Canadian will have less money to spend on the items that he needs. In turn, that will create business failures, low consumer demand, lay-offs in plants and a steady decrease in economic activity.

When the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) introduced Bill C-14 he spent a fair amount of time talking about the deficit. I also wish to spend some time talking about the deficit. The deficit is important regardless of what the Conservatives might claim. We in the New Democratic Party consider deficits to be serious problems. I come from the Province of Saskatchewan where we have had CCF and NDP Governments. Those Governments maintained balanced or surplus budgets throughout all the years they were in power, through good times and bad times. We recognized that if we had to borrow money from the banks in order to pay for government operations that in the end it is the banks and the big boys who benefit the most, as indeed they do benefit from deficits. The banks and the financiers benefit since there is no better entity to lend money than governments. Governments will always pay back, and always at the going interest rate.

Why do we have the deficit that we do in Canada? Some Conservatives and some Liberals, especially when they were in Government, claim that we have been living beyond our means. According to the OECD we are one of the lowest spenders on social programs of all OECD countries as a percentage of our Gross National Product. We spend less than Italy, Ireland, Germany, France, Holland, Denmark and Great Britain. When we consider education, health, pensions, family allowances and income support programs we spend less than all the other OECD countries. When I hear these people tell us that we are living beyond our means, I know that compared to other industrialized countries we are not spending more than they are on hospitals, pensions, unemployment and education. In fact, we are far from it. When I am at home talking to my constituents who are pensioners, I see that they are scraping by on the pensions that they receive.

We also see cut-backs in terms of educational institutions. My university back home is starving for funds. Day in and day out we hear Members of the Opposition attacking the Government for the cut-backs on research. However, the Government justifies these cut-backs in the name of fighting the deficit. My statement in the House today is that it is not because of the NRC, hospitalization, pension funds, unemployment insurance or the family allowance that we have the deficit today.

I suggest that the cause of the deficit dates back to a few years ago when the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance. He and his Government started a program of economic recovery based on tax breaks. The theory at the time, and one which is still adhered to by the Conservatives, is that if the boys at the top, the large corporations, make more money and more profits then those profits will be re-invested. This will create more demand, more plants and equipment, more jobs and more economic activity. In other words, if the guys at the top do well, economic recovery will occur because their profits will be circulated throughout the system. That is why in 1983 some 79 profitable companies paid no corporation tax at all. In fact, 64 companies made over $25 million in profits apiece, and those companies did not pay one cent in tax. This was so that they could do better, which would create an economic demand which would in turn create jobs, and so on and so forth. So that year there were some $13 billion in earned income and profits that were not taxed. If there was a fair tax system in place, in 1983 alone the Government would have collected $10 billion in revenues which would have substantially reduced our deficit.

Members opposite do not see things differently from the Liberals. They have no different philosophy. They have continued giving tax breaks to the corporate elite. They point out that they have plugged up a few loopholes. They take great credit in having plugged up the scientific reseach tax credit scam. I call it a scam because it was a scam. It was introduced by the loony Liberals. It was a loony idea. It threw open the doors of the Treasury. All the money-grabbers in the country were invited in for a free lunch. They came in, and it cost the Treasury some $3 billion. The Conservatives, of course, claim that they plugged it up. They did, but they took their time doing it.

In October of 1984 the Minister of Finance rose in the House and declared a moratorium on the program. However, he included a grandfathering clause. What we have discovered is that of the $3 billion that was lost, around 45 per cent of it was lost after the Conservatives came to power. They knew this was wrong. They knew it was a scam. They knew it was a raid on the public Treasury, but they just could not close the doors all at once. They had to do it gradually. Thus they allowed another 45 per cent of that $3 billion to go out the window, some $1.4 billion. That was their contribution to plugging up this loophole.

We suggested on October 10, 1984, when the Minister announced the moratorium, that the Government shut the loophole, and shut it tight. We told the Government that it was wrong. The Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue told us it was wrong. The Government did not listen. It had to put in a grandfathering clause which cost us an extra $1.4 billion. Then the Government introduced a $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: The Hon. Member says "Hear, hear". He figures it is going to be of great help to the farmers in his district.

Mr. Towers: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is the Hon. Member, who claims to be from Saskatchewan, speaking on behalf of Saskatchewan farmers? I would like him to answer that question yes or no. He is talking about the $500,000 capital gains exemption.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. de Jong: If I might continue my remarks, I do not think that was a very valid point of order. If the Hon. Member would just keep his seat and hear me out.

In two years time, maybe one year, the Hon. Member will discover that the farmers in his riding will consider the $500,000 capital gains exemption to be meaningless. I predict the value of their land will decline so rapidly in the next two or three years because of the state of agriculture in this country that they will be happy to be able to get out of the farming business with the shirts on their backs.

Mr. Towers: Tell that to your farmers!

Mr. de Jong: Unfortunately, that, to me, is the state of agriculture in this country. I stand here on the floor of the House of Commons and state in public—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. de Jong: —that agriculture is facing a horrendous crisis. Land values have already started to erode to a very significant extent. Financial institutions will have their backs to the wall. A horrendous transformation of agriculture will be forced upon us. Unless and until this Government gets serious about agriculture, it will slide into the most dismal state imaginable. The $500,000 capital gains tax exemption will be like eating cake while the tragedy unfolds.

Mr. Towers: You don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. de Jong: I challenge the Hon. Member to stand up in this House two years from now and prove me wrong.

Mr. Towers: I will be happy to.

Mr. de Jong: I sincerely hope that I will be wrong.

One of the reasons for this situation is the U.S. Farm Bill and the subsidies European countries are paying their farmers. It would cost us $4 billion to $5 billion, not $1 billion, to catch up. Of course, we cannot afford that. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) says Canada is in no position to compete with the treasuries of Europe and the U.S. Part of the reason for that is the deficit. Part of the reason for the deficit is the tax policies of the former Liberal Government and this Government here.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it should be made clear to my friend that when he refers to the former Liberal Government he should not suggest that we are part of that. We were elected in 1984 to improve the administration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. I would also like to remind the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) that he has one minute left today and he will have 11 minutes when we resume debate on this Bill.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, is the time taken in these scurrilous points of order deducted from my allotted time? All right, good. I am afraid that not too many Conservative Members will be standing up speaking on behalf of this tax increase in C-14. They are trying to bootleg their name into Hansard by these scurrilous points of order which have no validity whatsoever.

Let me continue my remarks if I may. We now begin to realize why we have the kind of deficits we do.

Mr. Malone: Because NDP Members were elected.

Mr. de Jong: We have not had a fair system of taxation where those who are able to pay their fair share do in fact pay their fair share. We have instead a system where a teller at the Royal Bank of Canada in 1983 paid more dollars and cents in taxes than the bank did, even though it had over $300 million in profits.

My comments will continue tomorrow on the same station at eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.16, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.16 p.m.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL

TABLING OF CHANGES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the opposition Party House Leaders and with the chairmen of committees and clerks involved in respect of the necessity of a few changes to Orders in Council, which orders have been referred to specific committees. There will be unanimous consent of the House to put a motion to correct these discrepancies. Also included were two judicial appointments which are beyond the scope of the routine procedure. The motion that I am proposing would serve to withdraw that. Accordingly, I move:

That Orders in Council P.C. 1986-1958 and P.C. 1986-2209 concerning certain appointments made to the Canada Post Corporation, tabled in the House on Thursday, October 16, 1986 and referred to the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs, be deemed to have been withdrawn from the said Committee and referred to the Standing Committee on Government Operations;

That Order in Council P.C. 1986-2302 concerning certain appointments made to the Canadian Human Rights Commission, tabled in the House on Friday, October 17, 1986 and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, be deemed to have been withdrawn from the said Committee and referred to the Standing Committee on Human Rights;

That Orders in Council P.C. 1986-2040 and P.C. 1986-2041 concerning certain appointments made to the judiciary, tabled in the House on Thursday, October 16, 1986 and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, be deemed to have been withdrawn from the said Committee and that the tabling of the Orders in Council be declared null and void; and

That, the thirty sitting day period for consideration of Orders in Council P.C. 1986-1958, P.C. 1986-2209 and P.C. 1986-2302 by the respective committees, under the provisions of Standing Order 103(1), shall be deemed to have commenced upon the adoption of this Order by the House.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to present his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, October 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), I should like to advise him that it is the understanding of the Chair that he has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to continue my remarks on Bill C-14. As Hon. Members know, the Bill is an outcome of the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) earlier this year. It seeks to increase the sales and excise taxes on numerous items.

In my remarks last night I detailed at some length where the increases were applied. I also noted that since taking office the Government has dramatically increased sales and excise taxes. It increased as well the numbers of items on which sales and excise taxes are placed. Because of the Conservative Government, we now pay increased taxes on soft drinks, fruit juices, chocolate bars, vitamins, insulation material, gasoline products, construction materials, and other manufactured products.

I enumerated as well the regressive nature of the sales and excise taxes. They are essentially hidden taxes. When a consumer or taxpayer purchases an item, he or she does not see the percentage being paid in taxes—the nickels and dimes and very often dollar bills. As opposed to the provincial sales tax which is added on to an item when it is purchased, federal sales and excise taxes are hidden in the cost of the item purchased. Therefore we call it a back-door tax. It is a tax which takes money out of the back pockets of taxpayers. They are not aware that they are paying it. The average Canadian family pays hundreds of dollars every year in these taxes. In fact, since the Government was elected, the average Canadian taxpayer pays some $800 more per year in hidden taxes.

Of course the Government has justified Bill C-14 and other measures which increase the tax load of the average Canadian on the basis of fighting the deficit. In my remarks last night I stated that we in the New Democratic Party are also concerned about the deficit. The amount spent every year just to service our accumulated debt is money which cannot be used for other purposes. We disagree with the Government, as we did with the Liberal Party when it was in power, that Canadians are living beyond their means and that we are spending too much money on social programs. I take issue with those remarks. Compared with other industrialized countries, the percentage of our Gross Domestic Product spent on social programs is one of the lowest. It is lower than that of Italy, Ireland, Holland, Denmark, England, Germany, Sweden, Norway, and France. When I refer to "social programs", I mean pensions, family allowances, education, health, and income support programs. As a percentage of everything produced in Canada, we spend less on these programs than other OECD countries. It is not that we are living beyond our means, certainly not compared with other industrialized countries.

Why do we have the present deficit? In my remarks last night I suggested the reason for the deficit of today was that we have not had a fair taxation policy. We have not been taxing in a fair way large corporations and wealthy individuals who can afford to pay taxes. Those who are able to pay taxes have not been paying their fair share. Billions of dollars have been lost because we do not have a fair taxation policy in Canada.

One example I used was that of a teller with the Royal Bank of Canada. In 1983 that teller would have paid more in actual dollars and cents in taxes than did the Royal Bank of Canada, although it made over $300 million. To rub salt into the wound, the Government of Canada gave the Royal Bank of Canada over $6 million in tax credits that same year. Not only did it have a profit of over $300 million and did not pay one cent of tax on it, it in fact received money from the Government. I just use it as one example. One could examine the taxes paid by all banks and find that they were certainly not carrying their fair share of the load.

Another example is the youth who pumped gasoline for Shell Oil in 1983. He paid more in dollars and cents in taxes on his meagre income than did Shell Oil in the same year. Had we had a fair taxation system, we would not have the deficit of today.

We can lay blame on the Liberal Government of previous years. Indeed it must accept a large amount of responsibility. However, the Government changed in 1984. Canadians were expecting a different direction, but all they have seen is a continuation of the same direction of philosophy, that is, the trickle down theory. That theory indicates that if corporations such as Shell Oil and the Royal Bank of Canada are doing well, eventually the profits will be recirculated in terms of new investment and new capital equipment, the creation of more jobs, and so on. However, we have seen that the trickle down theory in fact has not worked. The extra profits, tax breaks, and loopholes given to large corporations have not produced the types of jobs they were supposed to produce. Much of the extra profit went into corporate takeovers and mergers. The Canadian economy today is one of the most centralized and concentrated economies in the western world. In large part corporate takeovers are financed by the existing tax regime. In other words, they are financed, aided and abetted by Canadian taxpayers. We in the New Democratic Party not only point to the unfairness and inequities of the system but demand change or genuine tax reform.

The Minister of Finance rose in the House and presented a paper on tax reform. We certainly welcome this move toward tax reform. If there is a genuine desire on the part of the Government to institute a fair and equitable tax system, it will have our full and total support. Unfortunately, we suspect that the Government will be playing a shell game.

Indeed, the Minister will present a tax reform package that will do away with some loopholes, that will attempt to simplify the tax system and indeed that might even reduce the tax rates ordinary Canadians will pay. However, we strongly suspect that while the Minister of Finance will reduce tax rates for ordinary Canadians, he will increase, as he has in Bill C-14, the amount of taxes average Canadian families will pay out of their back pockets in hidden sales taxes.

This Government has relied more than previous Governments on hidden sales taxes as a source of revenue. In fact, the Government has suggested that it will soon introduce a form of a value added tax or a business transfer tax. We are awaiting the Government's proposals in this area. Previously the Minister of Finance stated to us in the Finance Committee that he would have a paper ready as of April of last year. April has come and gone. Then the paper was to be ready in September. September has come and gone.

We suspect that there will be dramatic increases in sales taxes while there will be some small decrease in the amount of income tax Canadians will pay. It will be a shell game designed to confuse Canadians so they think they are paying less in taxes when in actual fact they are paying more. We in the New Democratic Party opposed Bill C-14 for the reasons I have enumerated and for other reasons that my colleagues will mention in the debate on this Bill.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, Bill C-14 before the House today arises from the budgetary measures of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and its purpose is to amend the Excise Act and various taxes in this country. To rephrase this for our listeners, it means tax increases for all Canadian taxpayers.

Madam Speaker, when introducing this Bill, the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières said that its purpose was to reduce the deficit. Later on I will explain and show how the Conservative Government should have proceeded to reduce the deficit, but first I would like to consider the general aspects of this Bill and how they relate to the May 1985 Budget speech and the February 1986 Budget.

Let us consider all those other taxes the Government has decided to impose and what the consequences will be for Canadians. First of all, I think we all remember that this Government has decided to modify the indexation of the basic deduction for dependents, and this applies to all taxpayers. After trying to subtract 3 per cent from the indexation of Old Age Security benefits and family allowances, it proceeded to do the same for the tax tables, thus affecting both the taxpayer and his family.

On February 26, the Government changed the rules for the married exemption in the year the marriage takes place. In the Budget Papers tabled by the Minister of Finance in February 26, we see that the Government has just saved $20 million. This means taxpayers are paying $20 million more to support the Conservative Government's wasteful spending.

In 1986, we also had a 3 per cent surtax that was expected to produce $550 million and will cost taxpayers $1.2 billion in 1987, $1.26 billion in 1988, $1.325 billion in 1989 and $1.4 billion in 1990, and all because of the 3 per cent surtax.

Madam Speaker, if we consider the increase in federal sales tax in the February 26 Budget, taxpayers will be paying $700 million more in 1986, $1.05 billion in 1987, $1.125 billion in 1988, $1.2 in 1989 and $1.3 billion in 1990.

Raising the tax on tobacco will give the Government about $150 million more annually between 1986 and 1990. Then we have the changes in the airport tax, another increase, and there again, the Government expects to collect about $15 million annually over the next five years.

Madam Speaker, we recall that in the 1985 Budget, this Government started to attack the people of Canada, our families and our senior citizens. First, it decided to tax candy and softdrinks. It went on to tax pet food and was adamant in its refusal to grant exemptions for guide dogs for the sight-impaired.

At the same time, the Government decided to take advantage of illness in this country and tax drugs in Canada. I am referring to over-the-counter drugs like aspirin and cold remedies. The Government decided to tax them all. When children get sick, the Government is delighted, because it gets more tax revenue.

The same applies to surgical and dental instruments and X-ray machines, so that when Canadians go to the dentist, they will be paying more as a result of the taxes levied by this Conservative Government.

Wood stoves, the entire building industry, solar heating systems, insulation panels and tubes... Madam Speaker, about the only thing that has not been taxed by this Government is the air we breathe, and that is only because it has not yet found a way to do it.

Mr. Prud'homme: But it will soon happen.

Mr. Malépart: My colleague for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), who has a long experience of the House of Commons, tells me, and he is certainly right, that it will soon happen. Our own Brian will soon find a way to tax the air we breathe.

Madam Speaker, taken all together, the two fuel tax increases, two tobacco and alcohol tax increases, and two sales tax increases on soft drinks, food products and health products have had an enormous impact on the purchasing power of Canadian men and women.

The figures I am going to quote show the impact of the two Budgets of the Conservative Governement. A family with an income of $15,000 will see its taxes or purchasing power increase by 23 per cent. However, a family with an income of $200,000, who must have friends somewhere, will have a tax increase of 1 per cent.

Madam Speaker, is it any wonder that the Governement has lost so much ground in the polls? Why is it that the public has no confidence in the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)? It is very simply because of this inequity, incompetence and social injustice.

• (1130)

If we look at single parent families with two children and an income of $15,000, we see that, as a result of the two Budgets, they will have to pay $248 more in taxes. For a family with an everage income of $200,000, the increase will be $418. As for taxpayers with an income of $150,000, their tax increases will be proportionally much lower in view of their ability to pay.

We have been told that the purpose of this Bill is to reduce the deficit. Everyone in this House, whatever his party, agrees that the deficit must be reduced. However, we disagree about how to do it.

Madam Speaker, it would be appropriate to remind the House about the scandalously wasteful spending of the party opposite. While this Government was asking Canadian families to accept lower than anticipated increases in their family allowance cheques, it was spending $55 million to change the colour of the Armed Forces uniforms. The difference between the Conservatives and the Liberals is a matter of priorities. All the Conservatives said: We prefer to have lower family allowances and spend $55 million to get a blue uniform for our soldiers; this will make them better. We, Liberals, say: It is better to maintain our family allowances; our soldiers are competent enough and they will not improve because of the colour of their uniforms. It is only the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who believes that appearances are all important, but the Liberals disagree.

There is also the matter of the additional $400 million spent by the Government to send more Canadian soldiers to Europe. This is again a matter of priorities. I am not against our participation in NATO, but I do disagree with the priorities of this Government since this happened at the same time that the Governement wanted to de-index old Age security pensions. That is the difference between a Liberal Government and a Conservative Government. A Liberal Government wants to protect Canadians. A Conservative Government wants to reward its wealthy friends. We can understand why. In all our history, the Conservatives have not been in power very long, and when they have formed a Government, they have taken whatever they can get. We have only to recall the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. He was doing quite well for himself!

If we want another case of wasteful spending, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is now in the House, the Governement took away $30 million from 50,000 Canadian workers, including 21,000 in Quebec, people who had paid unemployment insurance premiums for 20 or 30 years and who had accepted early retirement so that younger workers could get a part-time job, and in other areas, such as Trois-Rivières, where companies closed down and laid off their employees, these workers were entitled to benefits from their pension plans, to which they had contributed, in addition to unemployment insurance benefits, but the Conservative Government took away their cheques every month without any warning and with the support of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It has been estimated that these people are losing $10,000 a year because of the Conservative Government policy, yet at the same time the Reichman brothers used these funds to buy Gulf with Petro-Canada. This is where Quebecers in Montreal East were taken to the cleaners—$800 million worth of tax havens.

As you can see there is no limit for the rich, but as far as the Conservatives are concerned no such preferential treatment can be extended to most poor people and middle income families. Their motto is: The rich will get richer, the poor will get poorer. So much for the Conservative Government strategy.

I just referred to the case of the Montreal East Gulf refinery where we were taken for a ride, where Conservative Members had to give up in frustration after openly admitting they had been hoodwinked by their Prime Minister and others. So now we learn that the Government wants to spend $80 million to operate yet another refinery in the Maritimes. In this case they claim the American market is there to be tapped, but when Gaz Métropolitain was prepared to re-open a refinery with a minimum grant the then Minister of Employment and Immigration flatly refused. They said no at the time, but now they sing a different tune because the refinery is located in another province. Some $80 million right down the drain!

The collapse of banking institutions has to be the unparalleled precedent: roughly $1 billion was handed out to 200-odd depositors, including ten or so with investments of at least $2 million. They got their money back straight from cut-backs in family allowances paid to mothers. Their allowances were slashed just so the Government could come up with $1 billion cash for depositors who had at least $60,000 in these banks, not for taxpayers with a mere $10, $100, $500 or $1,000 to their names. At least $60,000 is the amount all Canadians had to pay to make up for the mistakes and blunders of this Conservative Government, they have had to make do with smaller family allowances, pay taxes on drugs and a sales tax on materials. That is where money could have been saved in order to reduce the deficit, rather than coming up with a bill that strikes at the whole Canadian people.

It was recently reported—and the scandal is getting bigger and bigger that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself helped waste another $41 million simply by transferring, to his own constituency, a penitenciary that was to be built in the constituency of Drummondville, and the cost is to be $41 million. At the same time, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) will not refund the $30 million to Canadian taxpayers who paid unemployment insurance premiums. That is a scandal. Will you call that sound management? Instead of introducing with Bill C-14, they should have prevented that squandering of money.

We could talk about the cost of receptions given by the Prime Minister, about his travelling expenses, about the cost of caviar. If the Prime Minister likes to eat caviar, let him pay for it. But making taxpayers pay for his caviar receptions in Europe, that tops it all. He could share the eating habits of Canadians in other areas. At his own expense, he may well treat himself whenever he wishes, but on the backs of the Canadian people he should exercise more restraint.

Remember the wasting of money when the Prime Minister was master of ceremonies for the President of the United States. He stated then: Let the party, let this reception cost whatever it may. But that was the taxpayers' money. And now, in order to pay for all those errors, those blunders, as we recall that famous consultation he had with business people, labour unions, at an astronomical cost, and then the Government turned around and did the opposite of what those people had recommended. Well now, they have to introduce legislation to increase the taxes to be paid by all Canadians, thereby strinking at everybody. We know very well that some people do smoke. Those people are taxed to the hilt, having to pay a bundle in order to cover the $41—million cost of transferring the Prime Minister's penitentiary. People who drink alcohol, liquor also pay a heavy cost for this Tory Government's squandering of money.

Our unemployed who lost those $30 million also pay a high price for the foolish actions and the boobs of a Government anxious to salvage failed banks, something that could have been foreseen with a better administration and better managers.

There is something else that should also have been discussed instead of having this Bill to reduce the deficit, rather than hitting the whole population with indirect taxes—Madam Speaker, I have two minutes left—the changes to the RRSPs. We know that in 1983, RRSPs cost $4.9 billion to Canadian taxpayers, and who in the population can save the nicest amount of money for their retirement? Will it be a family earning between $15,000 and $20,000 with 2 or 3 dependent children? This is a regressive measure.

Madam Speaker, in view of my limited time, I would like to show Hon. Members what will be the consequences of the new changes to RRSPs, as proposed by the Government, changes that raise the ceiling. The way the Government went about it—and this reminds me, since the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is here, of the amendments to prevent workers from benefitting fully from their unemployment insurance—it was indeed the scheme in which the money was paid by middle-income people, by workers. But if you withdraw the money from your tax-exempt RRSP, because you earned a lot of money, you can withdraw the full amount, and you are still entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. That is Tory justice. But to come back to this new measure, and I would like to conclude with a few words on RRSPs, when someone with an $8,000 taxable income contributes $1,000 to an RRSP, thereby decreasing his tax liability, this costs the taxpayers $346. But when someone earning $80,000 contributes the $5,500 maximum, it will cost the taxpayer $3,323.

Madam Speaker, I conclude on that, and this shows clearly that this Prime Minister, this Tory Government are there to favour the rich. They have no understanding whatever of the less privileged people, they have no appreciation, no compassion whatsoever, for middle-income people.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). I agree with most of his criticisms of the tax proposals of the Government. However, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that for 42 of the 49 years between 1935 and 1984 we had Liberal Governments. It was Liberal Governments which really developed, expanded and refined our tax system to its present state. The Conservatives are making it worse.

The Member has criticized the Conservative Government because the tax changes which it made benefit the rich at the expense of the poor. The Liberals were in power for three and a half of the years between 1980 and 1985. The following corporations paid not one cent in corporation taxes in at least one of those years: the Royal Bank; the Bank of Montreal; the Argus Corporation; the Power Corporation headed by that great friend of the Liberal Party, Mr. Desmarais; Investors Group, also headed by Mr. Desmarais; and the Roman Corporation, that giant corporation headed by that great Conservative who came here as a poor immigrant and is now a multimillionaire. How does the Hon. Member explain the failure of the Liberal Government to ensure that those and many other corporations paid their fair share of taxes?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: I am quite pleased with the question asked by the Hon. Member because the more often the NDP Members rise, the better they show that they have never been in power. They remind me of the days I was sitting in the Quebec Legislature when Opposition Members belonging to the Parti Québécois appeared to be the purest ones but when they came to power, they were the most insensitive towards the people. Moreover, I am pleased to answer the Hon. Member's question, because it gives me the opportunity to recall the great achievements that came to be in the social area under the previous Liberal government. In the first place, we should not forget old age security pension, the guaranteed income supplement, the spouse allowance in 1975, the income tax exemption for older people in 1948, the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan in 1965. We also introduced public housing in 1949 as well as family allowances in 1945, the tax credit in 1978, the child tax exemption in 1978, the public assistance scheme in 1966, unemployment insurance in 1940, health and postsecondary education funding in 1957 and 1951, personal income tax exemptions in 1917, indexation of income tax for individuals, indexation of social programs as enacted under the present Leader of the Official Opposition, our future Prime Minister after 1988.

I am pleased that the Hon. Member is clearly asking what should have been done today. Why should a reform be undertaken today? In the first place, social programs—We started just as in the case of tax shelters or taxation, to bring in improvements year after year to social programs, to the income security program, to health care and so on and so on. Like any other organization, now that we have created a whole series of programs, we must pause and take stock of the situation. If we are to provide a guaranteed annual income program, I agree that we should reevaluate all social programs and figure out their cost. There are about twenty of them, and we should establish their administrative costs, find a way to streamline the bureaucracy involved and to give better services to the people.

The NDP should be congratulated for the research it has done on corporations that do not pay any income tax. The same concern should apply to the individual taxpayers. Tax shelters piled up for years, some of them going back to the Diefenbaker years. They served a useful purpose in their time, but a reassessment is needed now. It is important in my view that changes be made through a tax reform. First of all, there should be a minimum tax for corporate and individual taxpayers. I also think that tax exemptions for corporations or individuals which are regressive and more useful for the rich, as I demonstrated was the case of RRSPs, be changed. When specific groups of people need help, we should use direct payments or tax credits. I suggest it is important that this kind of work be done. The Government will invite us to do it. I must confess a bit of apprehension in that regard because when you examine programs through a consultative process—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member does not further the questioning by turning each answer into a speech. I think other people might want to ask questions and that is why I take the liberty of interrupting the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

• (1150)

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member has used his time without answering my specific question.

Mr. Gauthier: There was no question. You did not have a question.

Mr. Orlikow: Of course I had a question. I would be pleased if the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) would make his own speech.

My question was very simple. How can the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) criticize the Conservatives for the tax breaks they are giving to the wealthy when, as I pointed out, his Party's tax system evaluated—

Mr. Gauthier: It was very progressive.

Mr. Orlikow: I say to the Hon. Member, as I said to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, that there are hundreds of corporations, some of which are the largest in the country, which did not pay a penny in corporate tax.

The Hon. Member was critical of the increased tax breaks that the wealthy will get because of changes in the RRSP regulations. I remind him that the RRSP system was developed by the Liberal Government and cost Canadian taxpayers hundreds of millions, in fact billions, of dollars.

I suggest that rather than having the RRSP system it would be much better to use the money which we have lost to increase the old age pensions for everyone. That is what the Liberals should have done but did not.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for a brief comment in order to allow one more question.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked the same question and I gave an answer. I fully agree that the matter has to be reviewed.

Why did I launch an attack against the Conservative Government? Simply because we are now considering a Bill which, instead of being aimed at reducing the wasteful expenses I mentioned earlier, will force all Canadians to pay for the mismanagement of the banks and the $41 million the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wants to blow away.

I think I singled out a few sectors where the Government could have tightened the screw to lower the deficit. As to the tax reform, you may rest assured that as usual the Liberal Party will be very vigilant to make sure that middle and low income Canadians are adequately protected.

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague on the other side. With respect to the banks' collapse I might suggest he would be well advised to read the latest decision. We had to pay up, sure enough, but the Government has not been held responsible for this fiasco.

My colleague stated that Members on this side are wondering why they have fared so badly in recent polls. Yet he had just finished saying that indexation has to be restored. Does he think people are stupid, or is he suggesting that the polls will be more favourable if we start handing out money to the people? Is that the kind of logic he wants us to endorse?

Mr. Malépart: How sad, Madam Speaker, how very sad. At first when I went to his riding I thought the Hon. Member had more judgment, but every time he takes the floor he shows his lack of calibre. A five-year-old child would have gotten the message. I am sorry to say that the Hon. Member is stupid but, Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order! The Hon. Member for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) on a point of order.

Mr. Hudon: Madam Speaker, I wish to remind my hon. colleague that he should answer the question without trying to deride people. Let him just answer the question. I am going to ask a question, and if he thinks it is a dumb one, let him rise and say: That is a dumb question, and let him resume his seat. That is all.

Mr. Malépart: He understood nothing—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order please. The time for questions and comments is now over. Is the House ready for question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I had anticipated that some Conservative Members would want to defend the tax increase proposed in the Bill under consideration, Bill C-14. I am deeply disappointed that not one of those Members, not even the Secretary of State of Canada and Minister for Multiculturalism (Mr. Crombie) is willing to assume the task of defending a tax hike.

I wish to remind all Hon. Members that the sales tax is going to be raised once again by 1 per cent. This means that the new rates will be 8 per cent for building materials and cable television services, 15 per cent for alcoholic drinks and tobacco and 12 per cent for other taxable goods.

Madam Speaker, last week, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised in his speech that he would make some changes in the fiscal reform so as to make it more progressive and fairer for ordinary Canadian families. Unfortunately, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did not comment on any of the actions of his Government since the September 84 election. As a matter of fact, during those first two years of the Conservative Government, instead of introducing a fairer tax system, they have implemented a tax system which is less fair, very much so, than the previous one. And clearly, Madam Speaker, there were quite a few problems already with the existing system when they came in power.

Madam Speaker, we have mentioned the fact that the various changes brought about by the Conservatives have resulted in a tax increase of $1,300 a year for the average Canadian families in September 1984. And where has this tax burden been mostly applied? The tax burden was weighted heavily towards excise and sales tax, instead of using personal and corporate income tax. This new emphasis means that most of the new taxes are regressive.

Madam Speaker, I can give you the exact figures, the figures we arrived at during the tax inquiry we started early this year.

The November 1984 economic statement increased sales tax and excise taxes for the average Canadian family to the tune of $350 per year. In the May 1985 Budget, the Government again imposed a 1 per cent increase in sales tax, which cost the ordinary Canadian family an average of $325 per year. Finally, in the February 1986 Budget, another $170 per year, so that we now have a total of $845 per year. And all this in only two years' time, Madam Speaker! During that same period, income tax increases which, as everybody knows, are more progressive and more equitable for families whose financial circumstances may vary, these increases totalled only $385 per year, so that 69 per cent of our tax increases were covered by excise and sales tax and only 31 per cent by income tax.

[English]

I raise that because I believe these heavy tax increases are a preview of what the Government intends to do in the future. Last week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stood in the House, as his colleagues are not prepared to do now with Bill C-14, to tell us that great days are ahead. He rose to make a promise that I am sure we will hear often between now and the 1988 or 1989 election. The Conservatives will say: "We will cut taxes, is that not wonderful?" Let me tell ordinary Canadian taxpayers, including those in the Niagara Peninsula, that they should hang on to their wallets. They may find a few dollar bills in their front pockets, but they had better watch what the Conservatives are taking from them as a result of the increases in sales taxes that the Government is contemplating.

The Government is anticipating a new form of sales tax called the business transfer tax. Western Europe and other countries which have used this kind of tax have found it very costly in terms of what it takes out of the pockets of consumers. The advantage to the Government is that it can bring in a new tax while cutting the tax rate and appearing to reduce taxes. However, the tax base is spread at the same time, until far more is being taken from that particular source of taxes than before.

Our tax probe inquiry last spring took me and my colleagues from the New Democratic Party to every corner of the country. We went as far as Yellowknife, Yukon, Newfoundland, Vancouver and Victoria. We went to every part of the country to talk to people about their concerns about the tax system. We talked to small business people, consumers, trade unionists, business people, tax experts and people in municipal and provincial Governments. They told us what should be no secret, that is, there are real problems with our tax system. The present sales tax is a bad system and should be abolished. We should be looking for alternatives. I accept that one alternative is some form of value added tax such as is being proposed by the Minister of Finance. However, that said, let us be very specific and not use it as a Trojan horse, that is, take an enormous amount of new revenues from families on ordinary incomes who are having a heck of a time surviving in today's economic environment. Yet that appears to me to be what the Government has in mind.

The Government is saying it is going to plug loopholes and cut personal income tax rates. People in low income brackets do not have a lot of loopholes. On the other hand, they are not going to get many cuts because the cuts the Government has in mind, in terms of marginal tax rates, are the rates of 43 per cent, 48 per cent and 54 per cent which, in gross terms, between federal and provincial Governments, are charged on upper income tax earners. There is not much benefit for people with ordinary incomes. They may receive a few dollars but nothing much more than that.

In terms of corporate tax, the Minister has made some ineffectual suggestions, dare I say, about perhaps increasing the tax on corporations. We know the Government has now begun to realize that Canada, like the United States, has to plug corporate tax expenditures and if it does so, it can reduce the rate of tax on corporations. That in itself is not necessarily objectionable. What is objectionable is the Government's suggestion, and it was quite explicit in the budget paper of May, 1985, that it wants a corporate tax reform which will be revenue neutral.

[Translation]

To be revenue neutral means that instead of increasing its revenue through corporate taxes, the Federal Government will take no additional revenue from the corporate sector. Certain loopholes will be eliminated. Corporate tax expenditures will be eliminated or else limited or reduced, but generally, businesses will be compensated by such a reduction of their tax rates that they will not pay any more taxes than they do now.

[English]

We have seen, and we have cited these figures in the House on many occasions, just how little increased revenue the Government anticipates from the corporate tax side over the course of the next few years until 1990 or 1991. As I recall, it is something in the order of about $2 billion. We are faced with the heavy expenditures of the Government of Canada, with the difficult situation with regard to the deficit and we have a situation where tax expenditures, many directed to the corporate sector, are currently worth about $28 billion a year. If these tax expenditures were eliminated today, it would virtually wipe out the deficit. Therefore, it seems irresponsible to me for the Government to say, as it said in May, 1985, from which it has not backed away, that it is going to get rid of tax expenditures to corporations, but instead of using the money to limit the tax burden on other Canadians or using it to cut the deficit, it is going to turn around and give back the money to the corporations.

What the Government is saying, and it is quite clear, is that the Minister of Finance and his colleagues now look on the business transfer tax, on a reform of the sales tax, as a great big cash cow which it can milk in order to get new revenues to plug the deficit or to do other things it feels are important, such as putting prisons in the Prime Minister's riding.

It is clear that although this tax is to be called a business transfer tax, there is no mistaking who will pay. The consumers will pay in the first place because more than half of final demand obviously comes from consumers buying goods and services. Second, it will be paid for by consumers because, to the extent the tax is paid by businesses buying goods or services from each other, they will pass on those costs to the consumer in the end, and in the end it is the consumer who will pay.

Let us take the example of a bushel of wheat which is grown in western Canada. It sells at a domestic price of $5.50 or $6. It is then shipped to central Canada and milled into flour. Perhaps as flour it is worth $12. Then it is taken to a bakery and turned into bread and in the form of bread it may be worth $30 or $35. It is then shipped to the foodstore where it is finally sold to the consumer and that $6 worth of grain winds up as $50 worth of bread which is purchased by the consumer. On the value added at each stage, no matter how the calculation is made—and I accept the business transfer tax is slightly easier than the proposals for value added tax on the European model—there will be a tax at a certain rate on the farmers' sale, on the value added by the farmer in taking a bit of grain, fertilizers and so on, and turning it into wheat. So there is value added on the miller, on the baker, on the wholesaler and, quite possibly, at the retail level, although I am not sure whether that is contained in the proposals of the Minister of Finance because we have not seen them as specifically as we might. Therefore, the rate of tax at the end is going to be equivalent to a hidden sales tax on either the wholesale or the retail value of the entire commodity, and any transactions between businesses will still result in an increase in tax which will ultimately be paid for by the consumer.

The question then is, what will the rate be? Will there be any kind of diminution for people who are on lower and modest incomes? We have to look at Bill C-14 and what the Government has done in order to see just what its current stance is on this very important issue. In the first place, as I said a few moments ago in French, since 1984 the Government has increased taxes on the average family by $1,300, and 70 per cent of that increase has come from increases in sales and excise taxes. That is an increase of $845 a year. Has the Government done anything in order to lighten the burden of those increases on people in modest circumstances so as to make it a more progressive system? The answer is, virtually not at all.

I want to draw to everyone's attention that a sales tax by its definition is proportional to what people spend. If we have large exemptions, such as the current exemption on food and other necessities of life, then in fact it does tend to deal more with the disposable income of people after they have met the necessities of life and, therefore, it is to that extent somewhat more progressive. A future business transfer tax, if the base is going to be broadened, I presume is likely to touch such things as rent, food, fuel oil or other basic necessities of life. We are going to have to wait and see. It is difficult to judge the Government's proposals until we get that far.

But let us take that $845 increased tax burden in sales and excise tax on the average family and ask what the Government has done in order to try to moderate that. What it has done is to bring in a sales tax credit. That sales tax credit is, if I recall correctly, worth $150 a year to a family, and the value to a single person or single mom is worth $100 a year. That is not a heck of a lot of relief when we look at the average bill of $845. In fact, what we find when we look at the figures is that the impact of the sales tax increases has been relieved by up to about $1,500 a year for people with very modest incomes. Beyond that point we see that this is not a proportional tax. It is a regressive tax. A regressive tax is a tax which hits more heavily those in modest circumstances than it does those in better circumstances.

The following are figures which have been drawn from the report of the National Council on Welfare. It must be noted that we are looking only at the impact of the increases in sales tax and not at the over-all impact of sales tax, which I believe we should be doing. According to the National Council on Welfare, the cost of the tax increases in 1985 and 1986 on a couple with two children at the $15,000 level will be an increase of $215. However, after the sales tax credit is taken into consideration the net cost as a percentage of family earnings will be 0.4 per cent. In other words, the sales tax credit is relatively effective in ensuring that those people at that income level, which is below the poverty line, are not heavily hit by this new tax. However, the sales tax credit expires just above that income level. When we consider a family with an income of $20,000, we see that the tax increases are estimated to be $269. I think that is a bit low. There is no relief from the sales tax credit at all for such a family. Therefore, the net cost is the same as the gross cost, which amounts to 1.3 per cent of the family's earnings. As we move into higher income brackets, for instance the $30,000 bracket, the sales tax increase is equal to 1.2 per cent of family earnings. At $40,000 it is equivalent to 1.1 per cent of family earnings; and at $100,000 it is equivalent to 0.9 per cent of family earnings.

I wish to say, Madam Speaker, that with your knowledge—

[Translation]

With your knowledge of Quebec society, for instance, you will see that it is much easier for someone with a family income of $100,000 a year to pay .9 per cent more of his income in sales taxes than it would be for someone with a yearly income of $20,000, just above the poverty line, with a wife and two children, to pay 1.3 per cent more of his income in sales taxes.

[English]

That is the problem we face. By its actions the Government has brought in a sales tax credit which is so paltry that it does not do anything to stop the regressivity of the current sales tax increases which were levied in 1984 and 1985, except for those people with incomes below the poverty line.

If the Minister had said last week that a major change in the sales tax credit, or an equivalent measure, was needed to ensure that on all incomes up to, let us say $40,000 or $45,000, the net impact was progressive as opposed to regressive, then I, as a New Democrat on behalf of my Party, would have said that we will seriously look at the measure. However, that was not done. Instead, the Minister has come forward with some bold words about tax reform on the one hand. On the other hand, as a result of his actions in Bill C-14, he is taking us in a direction which is the exact contrary. Bill C-14 is nothing but a hangover from the last Budget.

In terms of this value added tax, the business transfer tax which we will have, the Canadian federal sales tax currently taxes only 30 per cent of the potential base in terms of private consumption. In Denmark, for example, the value added tax is imposed on 80 per cent of private consumption. In France and West Germany the figure is 29 per cent, and in the U.K. it is 60 per cent—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Cassidy: I was quite prepared to keep on, Madam Speaker. I hope that members of the Government will actually stand up and defend this intolerable measure which is being imposed on the ordinary taxpayer.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, it is with a great deal of interest that I look at the items which fall under the Excise Tax Act being presented in Bill C-14.

Over the last two years the Government has imposed the largest tax increases ever upon Canadians. The Government promised fair and equitable measures. It promised to be open and to listen to the people and reflect their concerns. Unfortunately, the Government has been a great disappointment to many Canadians.

When Members are out in their ridings, and as we talk to our constituents, many of us sense their great unhappiness, their cynicism and their lack of trust in legislators. Money is tight and jobs are scarce. Students do not know how to make decisions with respect to their futures because the whole situation is so unstable. The concerns of the people being expressed in the ridings as we meet them, whether we are Conservative, Liberal or New Democratic, indicate a great sense of instability.

What accounts for this instability? We need to look no further than the Government of Canada. Many people watch the proceedings of the House, especially during that silly period between two o'clock and three o'clock. They think that is all we do here. The ridiculous comportment of many people in the House has left the Government in general, and the public in particular, very disturbed. It is the job of the Opposition to test and check, to ensure that we are responding in our proper role. All the ordinary people see is the external behaviour. They do not appreciate that we also work at this hour in the House to study the Bills the Government presents. If members of the public were to think about what the Government is proposing to do in Bill C-14 they might become even more cynical. The Government has literally emptied the pockets of the low and middle income people of Canada. The disposable income available to make the wheels go round, the money people need to spend on goods is no longer there. We are seeing a slow-down in the economy. What I am saying sounds simplistic. I want it to be simple because I want those who look at the bottom line of budget sheets to stop and realize that these figures represent actual dollars in the pockets of everyone. The tax dollars which are being pulled out of these pockets, most of it in hidden taxes, is disconcerting to these people.

It is simplistic of the Government to say that it has modified the indexation of the tax table by 3 per cent. This will not look like much in the ordinary person's pocket as they go to fill out the required forms. When we look at what that does in terms of the nation we see that it is taking $570 million out of the collective pockets of taxpayers. We must also consider the 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtaxes which were imposed in the November and May Budgets respectively. They represent another $550 million which will be taken out of the pockets of taxpayers.

The Government eliminated the 1973 federal tax reduction which cost the taxpayers another $490 million. The Government levied a 1 per cent increase in the sales tax rate in November of 1984 which removed $1 billion from the pockets of taxpayers. That is $1 billion in taxes on goods on which people were not used to paying taxes previously. It was increased again in May, 1985 to the tune of $990 million. In fact, we do not even seem to care where we put our zeros at this point. The poor taxpayer is hounded and he does not know where to stop or start.

The Government put a sales tax which was broadened across the spectrum to include pharmaceutical products and consumer products. This included construction goods, cable and pay-TV services, alcoholic beverages and tobacco. On construction, taxable goods were increased from 7 to 8 per cent; cable and pay-TV from 7 to 8 per cent; alcoholic beverages and tobacco from 14 to 15 per cent. On other taxable goods, the increase was from 11 to 12 per cent. The sum total is billions of dollars.

When I talk about those kinds of taxes and we look at the 1986 Budget with an additional 3 per cent surtax, the additional 1 per cent sales tax, the alcohol and tobacco excise tax, it amounts to close to $5 billion of taxes taken out of the economy, which is the highest in our entire history.

Yet we were able to find a billion dollars of relief for the banks. We were able to find practically $1 billion in tax concessions to Gulf. We were able in many ways to cut back the middle and lower income people and to give bonuses to the well to do. I agree that incentives for productivity in our society are very important. But there is a need for fairness and equity. Canadians want, deserve, and expect fair play from their Government. This is not what they have received. The right to increase RRSP limits from the original $5,500 to $7,500, which is going up to $15,500, will cost a $40 million loss to the Treasury this year. It is very nice for people in the upper income tax bracket who can take out savings and protect themselves for their older years in life. It is very important that we allow for that, but we have to allow for it on an equitable basis. We have to start looking at how we cover everyone with proper pensions that are portable and vested and have a cost-of-living adjustment. This applies to not only those who presently have pensions, but also to those who are not covered.

The capital gains exemption now covers art, boats, and apartments in Florida or Paris. There is a capital gains protection of up to $500,000, which is half a million dollars. That is five times $100,000. There are people who do not even know how to write these kinds of figures, and they are the largest percentage of the population. In this Chamber we were elected to represent all strata of society, not just upper income earners. This Budget is a Budget for upper income earners. It is true that the argument is that you must protect those upper income earners because they are the people who make the wheel go round. Do they really? Who is the mass of society going out and purchasing the goods and the services? It is not the small 3, 4, or 5 per cent at the top of the scale. It is the majority of Canadians.

I would like to suggest that this is a totally unacceptable Budget, with five billion dollars more in taxes with still no control of our deficit. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has announced that he will be $2.5 billion short of the target, so there is something wrong with the planning that we see in front of us. The Government talks with a great sense of pride about what it has done in the communications and the cultural field. The Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) Government has feebly attempted to place this high priority, but it has forgotten a few of the things it has done. In the Government's first Throne Speech there was absolutely no mention of Canadian culture. In the 1984 Economic Statement and in the subsequent May Budget of 1985, we witnessed cut-backs to the cultural industries of a grand total of $122 million. The Government felt guilty over its previous cuts, and in February of this year it allotted $75 million to fund a number of cultural initiatives. I am pleased that it did that. It was just including and increasing some of the work that we had already started. Even with that addition there was a shortfall of $47 million. In July the cultural community again shuddered as there were rumours of more cuts. This was to correct an error in the Minister of Finance's budget calculations. There were cuts of $10 million to the CBC; $210,000 to the National Art Centre; $1.6 million to the National Film Board; and $1.95 million to the Canada Council. That adds up to an additional $13.7 million. All the hopes of February had been dashed. This week we heard that the CBC in its upcoming Budget for 1987-88 may be cut an additional $50 million. In this light, the Government stands there and says that it is committed to the cultural industries, it is going to protect our cultural sovereignty, and it is going to see that Canadians can stand proud and tall and count themselves in the cultural stream. I would suggest that actions speak louder than words. This Government has been very famous for shaking your hand happily beforehand and then finding ways to apologize in a backhanded way.

I alluded to the sales taxes, excise taxes, alcohol and tobacco taxes, and manufacturing taxes. Many people in Canada travel by air. Effective May 1, 1986, there will be a tax on domestic air travel, which will be limited to a maximum of $50, while the tax rate will increase from 9 to 10 per cent. The tax will be extended to tickets sold outside of Canada on or after August 1, 1986. That is very good for our tourist industry. But at least we avoided the major part of Expo. Expo was a great success for which we can all be grateful.

On the telecommunications side, there has been added a telecommunication programming service tax called the TPST tax. This tax applies to television equipment provided to customers of cable and pay-television services. It also applies to equipment used by hotels and other closed-circuit broadcasts. The TPST was increased by 1 per cent to 7 per cent in the 1985 Budget. The proposed legislation will increase this tax by another 1 per cent to 8 per cent effective April 1, 1986. The Government is certainly finding many ways to enable the Minister of Finance to reduce the deficit effectively. The only problem is that he has not controlled it yet, even with all these excessive taxes.

The 1985 Budget may be perceived as having changed the method by which federal sales tax is levied on motive fuels. There is a sales tax which continues to be imposed as an ad valorem tax, that is, 12 per cent after April 1, 1986. But it is calculated as a specific amount per litre. The specific amount is adjusted quarterly, according to the industry's selling price index as published by Statistics Canada.

The Ways and Means motion to Bill C-14 is intended to clarify how the sales tax calculation is to be made. We can see some very significant increases in here through the federal excise tax on non-commercial motive fuels which will be at 1.5 cents per litre. The 1985 Budget increased the excise tax on gasoline and aviation gasoline by 2 cents per litre effective September 3, 1985. This tax is scheduled to increase to 4.5 per cent on January 1, 1987. We are looking for ways to discourage tourism. When you look at the cost of gasoline, tourists must receive an incredible shock when they find out how much it costs to fill their tanks. I wonder if these costs do not offset some of the difference in our dollar calculation. They are a disincentive. I would suggest that the tourist industry has to work twice as hard to attract tourists because of our hidden taxes. They return home and wonder what happened to their money.

I am not pleased with the way in which the Government has chosen to direct this piece of legislation. I speak on behalf of the people in my riding of Mount Royal. They are concerned about jobs, the future, and the ability to live on a decent scale. In order for them to do that, they require justice and equity in the tax system.

I encourage government Members to examine their budgets and the way they are levying taxes, in the interest of everyone, not just the well to do.

Mr. Suluk: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) made reference to the CBC in such a way that she implied the Government created some difficulties for cultural groups by its cut-backs to the CBC. It is my understanding that the CBC received in the last one year period almost $1 billion.

In addition, the CBC is the only major communications network in the North. Almost half its programs are in the Inuktitut language, the main language of northern residents.

With a situation such as this, as well as the earlier one to which I referred concerning the CBC receiving almost $1 billion from taxpayers, how could the Hon. Member honestly believe that cutting a few million dollars from the budget of the CBC would undermine the cultural identity of Canadians? Would it not be fairer to tell the CBC to trim some of its more exotic expenses?

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It provides me with an opportunity to say a few things which I think need to be said.

Very few of us realize the very difficult management task of the CBC. If one stops to think about the CBC, one realizes that it is quite an extraordinary national expression of Canadians. It expresses our diversity, as well as the beauty and grandeur of our country. It certainly has some problems. Nothing in Canada is perfect; nothing in Canada is totally beautiful. However, we should stop to think about the activities of the CBC. It broadcasts in French and in English across the land, from Newfoundland to B.C., from Cap d'Espoir to Vancouver Island; from the U.S. border to our friendly borders in the far North. Its services cover the Inuit and other native peoples, as well as our diversities in major regions, both in radio and in television. We should also think about the fact that on the international scene the CBC is an instrument of Canadian national policy of which we should be extremely proud.

There has been a $75 million cut to the CBC plus $10 million in new equipment which was required, for a total of $85 million in the November statement. There was an additional $10 million cut when the Minister of Finance made a mistake and announced $500 million. He was short and went to find places to cut, so he cut the CBC again. He has now cut another $50 million, or it is an anticipated increase. Therefore we are talking about $145 million in cuts.

Let us also look at a serious matter which is of concern to everyone in the House. I am referring to the $57 million which we cannot find and has not been accounted for. The Auditor General is concerned about it, as is the President of the CBC, Mr. Juneau. Mr. Dye and Mr. Juneau are trying to locate that money. The problem in terms of its loss was the institution of a new budgeting procedure.

My answer to the Hon. Member would be a return question to him. What right had the Government in 1985 to allow the CBC to go into a very complex budgeting procedure, a new fangled highly complex system, without ensuring that a backup system was in place or that the Department of Communications was doing its proper job in supervising the CBC?

We must be very cautious when we talk about the CBC and in a sense protective, but at the same time we must demand the kinds of answers we as legislators require.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and thought she made an excellent speech. She outlined the very regressive nature of the taxes which are being heaped, with each succeeding Budget, upon low and middle income Canadian families. It is certainly not the progressive taxation regime about which most Hon. Members talk. She dealt with the matter in great detail by indicating the increases in excise and sales taxes and so on.

However, I would be interested in her view of the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a week or so ago. He talked about tax reform and trying to reduce income tax scales. I am wondering whether she finds the same conflict in her mind which I find in mine. One economic statement and two Budgets, all of which contained devastatingly regressive taxation measures, have affected average Canadian families of four with incomes of only $30 per year to the tune of an additional $630. However, the Government talks about tax reform in terms of lower income scales for lower income families.

The first two Budgets of the Government seemed to be geared toward reducing taxes for large multinational oil companies, increasing taxes for low income families, deindexing the income tax scale for families, deindexing personal exemptions, deindexing the family allowance, and so on. Does the Hon. Member see the Government making a 180-degree turn on its taxation policy? Because the Minister talked about reducing income tax levels—and I believe it was modelled after the American system—I would be interested in hearing the Hon. Member's comments.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I do not have much time to answer the Hon. Member as my time limit is coming to an end. However, I should like to make three observations. First, whatever happens, the purchasing power of the dollar left in an individual's pocket will be reduced. As we near Hallowe'en, the trick or treat is that personal income taxes will go down and corporate income taxes will go up. That is how the Government blows a smokescreen, because in essence, there will be more taxes of a hidden nature through the business transfer tax. The food bank that presently exists in the riding of Mount Royal, a total shame, will simply have a longer line of people who are waiting to get one decent hot meal per day. I would suggest that things will get worse if the measures outlined by the Minister in his speech, as I understand them, come into action.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, it is my intention to speak very briefly and only on one aspect of Bill C-14, that being the excise tax imposed on airline tickets. The point I wish to make is that the Government of the day is responsive to the representations of the citizens of Canada.

Some time ago, the excise tax on airline tickets was 7 per cent, I believe, or perhaps 8 per cent, and there was a cap on it, a maximum tax payable of $35. About a year ago, or perhaps a little more, changes were made to that excise tax in order to generate more revenue. Of course, the Government had a very good point when it argued that additional revenue from aviation was required because the amount of money that was being collected was nowhere near enough to provide the necessary services to aviation.

At that time, the excise tax was raised to 9 per cent, but the cap of $35 maximum was removed. This resulted in taxes on an airline ticket from the town in which I reside, Yellowknife, to Frobisher Bay on the other side of the Territories of about $150. This, of course, was ridiculously high. The airfares in that area are high to begin with and to put a $150 tax on top of that is ridiculous. The situation was the same for all long distance transportation in Canada. In those areas where ticket prices on a per mile basis are higher, the northern and remote areas of the country in particular, the removal of the tax cap was particularly onerous.

As a result of the removal of this cap, many representations were made to the Minister of Transport of the day, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), by chambers of commerce, municipalities and even the Province of British Columbia. I was worried for a while because I thought that the Government might not do anything about this. However, it did turn out well. The Minister of Transport was responsive to the wishes of the citizens and so was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The legislation that is before us, Bill C-14, increases the excise tax to 10 per cent but reimposes the cap. This is what the people wanted. They did not mind paying their fair share in taxes on airline tickets, but they did not want to pay $100 or $150 in taxes on expensive tickets. They wanted the cap reinstated, and that is what Bill C-14 has done. Therefore, I would like to take this opportunity to thank both the former Minister of Transport and the Minister of Finance for acceding to the wishes of Canadians and in particular those who live in the far reaches of the country.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that one of the reasons for the increase in revenues sought by the Government through the increase in the excise tax on airline tickets of 1 percentage point in the 1986 Budget is that it will be used to pay for the exemption on capital gains which will shortly rise to $500,000. Of course, every resident of Western Arctic will be paying some increased amount of money because of the increase in the sales tax. I would ask the Hon. Member to estimate what proportion of the residents of his constituency, particularly among the Dene and the Inuit, will be in a position actually to benefit from the exemption on capital gains in any meaningful way. His answer is likely to be darn few because we know those capital gains exemption benefits will go to wheelers and dealers, people who drive BMWs and Porches and who live in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. Very few people who live in the vast expanses of Canada such as those which lie within his particular constituency will benefit.

Given that very few if any of the Hon. Member's constituents will benefit from the capital gains tax exemption and given that those few who will benefit will be those who were in the upper income brackets to begin with, where is the justice in raising the sales tax paid by all residents including trappers, miners, hunters, truck drivers, construction workers, housewives and day care workers in his constituency? This will be done in order to give a tax exemption to a very small proportion of people in the country and an even smaller proportion of people in his own constituency.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, first I think the Hon. Member is wrong to assume that the increase in excise taxes will only pay for the exemption on capital gains. That, of course, is wrong. Excise taxes come in and go out of general revenue. One could equally argue that a tax of this nature will pay for old age pensions or will go into the unemployment insurance fund. The Consolidated Revenue Fund receives money from many sources and there is a number of ways the money goes out of the fund.

The exemption on capital gains has been very well received in my riding as it has right across Canada as far as I can see. I do not know the exact proportion of people who can benefit from it, people who cannot benefit from it or people who can benefit from it in the future in any one riding. The capital gains tax exemption is an incentive for people to invest, start small businesses or begin to farm with the expectation that they will be able to benefit from it in the future.

Since the capital gains tax exemption has been in effect, I have noticed a resurgence of small business investment in my riding. People are getting involved in agricultural pursuits. I am sure the exemption is one of the underlying reasons for this. People now have an incentive and can see a future advantage. The measure has been well received in my area and if there has been any criticism of it, it has been that it has not gone far enough.

A great many of my constituents would argue that there should not be capital gains taxes at all. One group in particular feel a little left out in the cold, and that is, prospectors. Sales of their properties are not treated as capital gains. They argue, and I certainly support them in their argument, that we should go back to the old rules which were that capital gains applied to prospectors.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I would like to comment on the discourse of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). I too am glad, as one who represents a northern riding with many far-flung communities, that the Government made a wise decision to put the cap back in place on the excise tax on airline tickets at a level of, I believe, $50. That is somewhat higher than the previous level but certainly better than the example the Hon. Member gives. It was an extreme example, of course, but then we live in a country where the geography is extreme. In order to go from one half of the Northwest Territories to the other it is often necessary to travel via southern Canada and via more than one airport.

That brings me to a point which I had hoped the Hon. Member for Western Arctic was prepared to address, that is, the double taxation which falls very heavily on residents of his riding by virtue of the excise tax on motor vehicle and aviation fuels, and refined petroleum products of all sorts. As the Hon. Member well knows, gasoline used to fuel a flight from, say, Baker Lake through Churchill or from Pine Point to Yellowknife, bears a tax because of the cost of transporting it to those communities. There is presently no arrangement, mechanism or scheme to eliminate what is in its ultimate effect a measure of double taxation of northern residents. In many remote communities, for example, a litre of gasoline requires the burning of a quarter litre of gasoline to transport it to the community in which it is going to be consumed, and that quarter litre is taxed at the same rate. Therefore, I would like to ask the Hon. Member, particularly given his role, unless it has been superseded, as Chairman of his Party's northern caucus, if any consideration has been given to some measure to adjust these inequitable effects of the excise tax.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member certainly brings a very good point to light. My colleague from Nunatsiaq has spoken about this on several occasions. The question is much more important in his part of the country than it is in mine.

It would be nice if we could do something to alleviate taxation. I am sure, Madam Speaker, you do not like paying taxes any more than I do. I must confess that I have not given a great deal of thought to the point raised by the Hon. Member but I certainly will in the future. The question which immediately jumps to mind is how you would administer such a plan. Would you have a blanket exemption for the fuels used in the transportation of other petroleum fuels or for all commodities? What would the effect be on revenues?

It is interesting to point out that for the territorial Government, sales taxes on transportation fuels are a pretty sizeable source of revenue. It is sometimes hard to accept that when you drive across the border from Alberta, where there is no provincial sales tax on fuels, and you get north of the 60th parallel, you are faced with a pretty hefty increase in the price of gasoline and diesel fuel because of the tax levied by the territorial Government. Of course, that is their decision to make.

I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his valid observations.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, we have before us a Bill whose life was somewhat interrupted. Bill C-14 implements changes to sales and excise taxes announced in the Budget Speech of February 27, 1986. I think a brief résumé of the nature of these changes will be instructive to understanding the effect they will have on the Canadian economy and the Canadian taxpayer, particularly those at a lower level of income, on whom this tax will bear regressively.

The 1 per cent sales tax increase applies to a number of essential goods and services, for example, construction materials, where the rate goes from 7 per cent to 8 per cent. On other taxable goods it goes up from 11 per cent to 12 per cent. While neither I nor my Party need shed too many tears over the increase in taxes on alcoholic beverages and tobacco, both of them destroyers of human life and longevity and both, after all, the popularly styled sin taxes, which frankly are set at a level which might easily be increased with over-all benefit not only to the exchequer but also to the health of the nation, yet they are taxes people pay. When we look at the over-all impact of the excise tax and federal sales tax increase, we cannot believe it will be anything but negative. The increase in these indirect, hidden taxes, as they are sometimes known, is part of the Government's strategy of increasing taxes. Indeed, it makes a very powerful contribution to the implementation of that strategy.

My Party has calculated that the tax burden on the average family since the Progressive Conservatives came to power has increased in the order of $1,300. That is based on an annual income of $35,000 for a family with two dependent children. It is useful to contrast the level of increase in taxes on the average family with the level of increase in taxes on the average corporation. Here the disparity is quite dramatic. I frankly believe that when the history of the 1980s is written, unless there is some dramatic move by the Government, something rather more than what was promised in the recently tabled proposals for tax reform, this decade will go down as the period in which the average family in Canada was called upon, and called upon disproportionately, to shoulder the burden of deficit fighting. That will be seen as a sad commentary on the orientation of the Progressive Conservative Government.

The increases which have taken place already, together with that proposed by this measure, constitute $845 of the $1,300 figure I referred to. The November 1984 Economic Statement adds approximately $350 a year. The May 1985 Budget adds $325 a year. The February 1986 Budget adds $170 per year for the average family. Because of the ratcheting effect of successive increases, this is beginning to take me back to my point about taxes being paid on taxes. So we have a situation where the average family in Canada is being called upon to bear the burden of this Government's deficit fighting initiatives.

At this point I wonder if I might call it one o'clock, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

CULTURE

FIFTH INTERNATIONAL FILM FESTIVAL IN ABITIBI-TÉMISCAMINGUE, QUE.

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): From November 1 to November 6, Mr. Speaker, Rouyn-Noranda will be the site of the fifth International Film Festival in Abitibi-Témiscamingue.

Over the years, this has become a long-awaited major cultural event which is the pride of our people and which has an impact far beyond our regional boundaries.

About ten countries will be represented at the festival this year and we will have the privilege of attending the world première of a few films.

Mr. Speaker, we owe the resounding success of this international film festival primarily to the enthusiasm and dedication of the organizing committee, and also to the calibre of international cinematographic productions, the generous co-operation of the media and, of course, the ever growing participation of the people of Abitibi-Témiscamingue.

So movie fans of Abitibi-Témiscamingue, Quebec, Canada and the world, will be meeting in Rouyn-Noranda from November 1 to November 6 next.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT'S OPPORTUNITY TO HELP GENERAL MOTORS PLANT IN SAINTE-THÉRÈSE IN ORDER TO PROTECT JOBS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—Richmond East): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to speak in support of General Motors of Canada and its efforts to maintain its automobile plant in Sainte-Thérèse (Québec). The many years of service of some 4,000 employees in Sainte-Thérèse symbolize their hard labour and their loyalty. We must also note that the Sainte-Thérèse employees are ready to compromise.

The Government of Canada must help General Motors maintain that plant in operation. A committment should be made to General Motors of Canada so that it can keep the 4,000 jobs and ensure the future of that plant.

I therefore encourage the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) to do everything that is needed to protect the 4,000 jobs at the General Motors' Sainte-Thérèse plant.

The Province of Ontario has received from General Motors a $2-billion committment. It is now Québec's turn.

SITUATION IN OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Canada lost its real Energy Minister yesterday—Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani of Saudi Arabia. No longer will a Canadian Prime Minister, in the immortal words of the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), "dance sheikh to sheikh in the desert" with one of the world's most powerful men. Canada once tried to have its own national energy policy but the Liberals retreated from it and the Conservatives completely dismantled it, making us totally reliant on the so-called free market of international prices.

There is no real free market for oil. In the politics of oil we have only a choice of who is going to call the shots—the Sheikh and his successors, the large international oil companies or, so far as it is able, the Canadian Government with a real energy policy. That would mean a Canadian energy policy with made-in-Canada gasoline prices and Canadian control, both public and private, over our most important energy resource, namely, oil. The alternative is once again to leave the choice of our next Energy Minister to King Fahd and the Councillors of Riyadh.

EXTENSION OF APPLICATION OF SECTION 17(6) AND (7) OF ACT

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, I was most happy to see the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) table the legislation to extend until January 4, 1988, the 10-week standard qualifying period in the of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup riding.

This proves once again that this Conservative Government responds to the employment needs of areas that are particularly underprivileged. This means that in my constituency, the qualifying period for unemployment insurance remains 10 weeks.

That Bill tabled by the Minister of Employment and Immigration goes to prove that my representations, those of Action-chômage and of the Mouvement Chambre de commerce de Rivière-du-Loup—Kamouraska did not remain unheeded. During September 1985, I formally approached the Minister of Employment and Immigration asking that Sections 17(6) and (7) of the Unemployment Insurance Act remain in force.

In conclusion, fishermen, peat moss workers and others have reason to welcome as I do a very heartening announcement by this Conservative Government.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS' PRAYERS FOR PEACE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week religious leaders from many faiths met in Assisi to pray for peace. It is essential that Governments listen to these prayers and do something concrete to assure peace.

Since the end of World War II in 1945 there have been 120 regional wars throughout the would, resulting in 19 million deaths, 11 million civilian and 8 million military. In 1986 Governments in the world spent over $900 billion on arms while 15 million children died of hunger. According to the Thorson Report in 1983, it would require $18.5 billion to provide food, shelter, education, and health care to the world's poor.

How can we justify $900 billion for arms, which goes far beyond what is required for defence and security and which does nothing to deal with the causes of conflict? When will we stop this madness?

THE PERFORMING ARTS

STRATFORD SHAKESPEREAN FESTIVAL

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that within my riding we have a great cultural industry called the Stratford Shakespearean Festival Foundation. October 31 marks the end of their fiscal year. It has been a great year, with improved finances, but they still need much more public support.

The festival receives the least percentage of government support of any major artistic institution in Canada. The hundreds of thousands of people who come to it spend another $50 million in the surrounding area, and the Governments of Ontario and Canada have a spin-off benefit of about $5 million in taxes.

I am very pleased that a troupe of the festival actors is presently in Ottawa presenting the play "A Man For All Seasons" at the National Arts Centre. I know that you have enjoyed this play, Mr. Speaker, and will agree with me that this troupe has wonderful artistic talent and is a great asset to Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AWARDING OF CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I protested the way in which Winnipeg is being downgraded by the Tory Government, referring to the new subordination of the Winnipeg office of Statistics Canada to Edmonton. Last night it was widely reported that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is arguing for the CF-18 contract not going to Winnipeg on the grounds that western Canada recently received $1 billion in aid to grain producers. If the Prime Minister actually used such an argument, let me tell him that the $1 billion program is a national program, only a fraction of which goes to Manitoba. Furthermore, are we to take it that the $1 billion, which was a special response to a special need, is to be constantly held over the heads of western Canadians?

Until now, Manitobans from all parties chose to trust the Government to respect the tendering process, to have confidence in the merits of the Winnipeg bid, and not be the first to politicize this issue. If the Prime Minister actually intends to use the national farm aid program against Winnipeg, then such an approach is completely unwarranted.

Finally, could it be significant that the contract favoured by the Prime Minister might also be favoured by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), because 400 jobs will be created in Edmonton by that contract?

DENIAL OF SECOND-CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES FOR RELIGIOUS PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, Canadians who have had to become accustomed to the high-handed attitude used by officials of Canada Post when dealing with the taxpaying public have yet another surprise in store, courtesy of the board of this Crown corporation.

Not only is Canada Post denying second-class mailing privileges to Canadian religious publications, the chairman's recent ruling on an appeal by a religious publication that this publication was insufficiently religious in content and not to be classed as a religious publication, must be considered bordering on the sublime, even for Canada Post.

I do not subscribe to this publication but I doubt that Canada Post has either the criteria or the qualifications to make this judgment call.

Not only do I urge him, I beg the Minister in charge of Canada Post to take control of this monster before it devours us all. The mandate of Canada Post is to deliver the mail on time.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, during the International Peace Week, close to 200 students of the Paul-Gérin-Lajoie Secondary School in Outremont have written to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty).

I am pleased as their representative here to convey to this House the concerns and views of these young people aged 11 to 16 about world peace.

These children prompt us to reflect on the arms race, nuclear tests, hunger and poverty as well as stresses and conflicts which now prevail throughout the world.

These students are suggesting among other things the use of funds earmarked for arms for humanitarian purposes, research, education and job creation. They ask the Minister of National Defence to take concrete steps to maintain peace in Canada and to promote it elsewhere in the world.

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, it is a clear case of the pot trying to call the kettle black. The Hon. TAXATION

NEED FOR TOTAL REFORM

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce today that the company getting our award as an untaxed corporation is the Canada Trustco Mortgage Company. Canada Trustco has benefited from loopholes provided by successive Liberal and Conservative governments and obtained tax credits in 1979 and 1980 in spite of profits amounting to $52.4 million. If we had a fair taxation system in Canada and if Canada Trustco had paid a 25 per cent rate on its profits, Canadian taxpayers would have had their own taxes reduced by $13.1 million because of that company alone. It is high time for the Government to introduce measures for a comprehensive tax reform.

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I attended a public meeting in my riding. A number of people were there to talk to me about the government cut-backs at the National Research Council. They brought to my attention an advertisement published by The Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada on the subject of these cut-backs. The ad notes that since 1984 the budget of the National Research Council has been reduced from $.5 billion to $400 million and the number of employees has been reduced from 3,600 to 3,100. The ad notes there will be a further loss of 200 positions.

This group calls upon the Government, particularly the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to honour the promises made during the last election campaign and not only stop the cut-backs of these programs but increase the over-all spending on research and development, especially at the National Research Council.

The signed cut-outs addressed to the Prime Minister do not comply with the rules for presenting petitions, and I wanted to take this opportunity to put these views forward. I intend to send them to the Prime Minister and express my own hope that these cut-backs will be reversed and that the NRC budget will be increased.

ADMISSIBILITY CRITERIA AND CONTRIBUTION RATES

Mr. Marcel Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Government introduced a bill amending the Unemployment Insurance Act to extend the variable admissibility criteria and maintain present contribution rates for unemployment insurance for a year. The new legislation will be beneficial to small and medium-sized businesses as well as to workers in Québec East. The Governement intends to maintain contribution rates at their present level for 1987. With this decision, Mr. Speaker, we will avoid a substantial increase in contributions paid to the unemployment insurance fund.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, our representations were successful. Our arguments and our ideas on the matter were rewarded with a favourable response from the Minister. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) should immediately consider the recommendation of his own commission on the subject which recommended establishing a self-insurance scheme for these sports, as has been done by the school boards in Ontario. PUBLIC WORKS

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Public Works. It concerns the prison at Port-Cartier. Yesterday in the House the Minister referred to a letter from the Auditor General dated October 27, in spite of the fact that it was not addressed to him and in spite of the fact that the Auditor General stated in the letter that it would be prudent to avoid discussion of the matter until the issue has been investigated. The Minister said at that time: "—it was admitted by the Auditor General that he had made a mistake in his report." That is not the case. It is not true. It is not what the Auditor General said in the letter.

Mr. Crosbie: Does he have a question or not?

Mr. Nunziata: Will the Minister stand up today, admit that he was wrong yesterday regarding the letter from the Auditor General, apologize to the Auditor General, and apologize to the House for a blatant misrepresentation of this letter?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is reluctant to interfere with the lead question when it is posed by a member of either opposition Party. I would ask the Hon. Member to rise again and put the last part of his question in words which are less inflammatory.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the statement of the Minister would appear to contradict the contents of the Auditor General's letter, is the Minister prepared to stand up today, admit he was wrong yesterday, apologize to the Auditor General and apologize to the House?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I did indeed raise a letter from the Auditor General dated October 27 that had been in circulation. In it he indicated, and I quoted the first sentence of it, that indeed there was a possibility of a mistake. We have checked with various officials and confirm that in our view there is a mistake. I am very happy to note that in today's paper it is reported that the Auditor General has seen fit to recheck the situation and verify the information in his report.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, on three separate occasions yesterday in the House the Minister of Public Works said that the Auditor General was wrong. I spoke to the office of the Auditor General today and was told that, in fact, that was not what the Auditor General said in his letter.

NEED FOR PRISON

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Solicitor General. In paragraph 7.89 of the Auditor General's Report the Auditor General stated that the prison could not be justified based on need. In the House on October 22 the Solicitor General said that, in fact, there was a need for the prison.

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

• (1420)

Mr. Nunziata: The Solicitor General has contradicted the Auditor General in his finding that there was not a need for a prison at Port-Cartier. Will the Solicitor General stand up today, admit that he was wrong, and apologize to the Auditor General and the House?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Let me reiterate that I have never contradicted the Auditor General. Indeed, I agree with his tables. I refer the Hon. Member to paragraph 7.51 of the Auditor General's Report where he says that there will be a surplus of 30 protective custody beds. That figure includes the Port-Cartier beds of 250. If Port-Cartier is not built, the 30 surplus must be subtracted which leaves a deficit of 220 beds. That proves that we need the building of this prison.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: The Solicitor General once again contradicts the conclusions drawn by the Auditor General.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

TREASURY BOARD DECISION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): My second supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the Auditor General stated at paragraph 7.99 of his report that the Treasury Board did not have all the facts when it approved the relocation of the prison, and in view of the fact that the President of the Treasury Board said in the House on October 21 that he did have all the facts when he approved the relocation, will the President of the Treasury Board stand up today, admit he was wrong, and apologize to the Auditor General and the House for undermining the authority and integrity of the Auditor General of Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): I am happy to stand up in the House today and reaffirm the statements I made when I answered the question. I would like to indicate to my hon. colleague opposite that in no way was I questioning the validity, the judgment, or the right of the Auditor General to make that statement from the point of view of the Treasury Board. I felt that the Treasury Board at that point had the required information. He obviously felt otherwise. It is a legitimate difference of opinion, and I stated that, and I stand by my statement.

PENITENTIARIES

CHOICE OF ARCHITECTS' FIRM FOR CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN PORT-CARTIER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday, following questions from the Opposition about the awarding of contracts for the Port-Cartier penitentiary, the Minister said, and I quote: "The contract was given to the firm which was judged the most competent to give the best value for the money of Canadian taxpayers." In the light of this statement, could the Minister inform the House why the firm that designed the penitentiary at Donnacona was not chosen and was not even considered, although the same plans and specifications are being used to build the penitentiary at Port-Cartier? How come?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think I made it quite clear to Opposition Members yesterday that the usual procedures were followed in awarding the contract. An evaluation was made, the company that won in the bidding was given a rating of 110.5 by the officials of the department concerned, compared with ratings of 98.5 and 93.5 for the two other companies. I also offered to be available for questioning by Members in committee, when I would be delighted to provide more details, something question period does not allow me to do.

POSSIBLE APPEARANCE OF PRIME MINISTER BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister, who may wish to take this opportunity to table the relevant documents in this case. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, considering the fact that a committee of this House has asked the Prime Minister to appear before it to justify the statements made and the action taken with respect to Port-Cartier, whether he is prepared to make a commitment today and inform the House that the Prime Minister will appear before a committee of this House as soon as possible, to provide the desired justification?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that statement is totally untrue. There is no committee that has called for the appearance of the Prime Minister. I understand there has been a recommendation put forward by a steering committee, but that would have to be ratified by the Standing Committee itself.

• (1425)

AUDITOR GENERAL'S LETTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Yesterday, in trying to weasel out of a question regarding—

Some Hon. Members: Order. Order!

Mr. Riis: Yesterday, in an attempt to avoid a question dealing with government patronage and contracts at Port-Cartier, the Minister hauled out a letter from the Auditor General. What was the intention of that particular move?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, very clearly the intention was to put before the House all relevant information which formed the basis of all the inquiries of last week. Additional information, through the letter of the Auditor General, came to our attention, and it was important that Canadians knew of that information immediately.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the questions posed yesterday dealt with the architectural contracts and the tendering of those contracts at Port-Cartier.

The letter of the Auditor General dealt with the management project, a totally unrelated set of contracts. When the Minister of Public Works said that the Auditor General admitted he had made a mistake and that he had confirmed the Auditor General had made a mistake, had he actually spoken to the Auditor General to ensure that was the case?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I believe my words were that the Auditor General indicated the possibility of a mistake. We have checked our records. We know the situation. We confirm that a mistake had been made. Now the Auditor General is to check out the actual facts.

INTEGRITY OF AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's comments yesterday in the House that the Auditor General had admitted that he had made an error were regarding a set of contracts totally unrelated to the questions being posed about architectural services. Was the Minister, in his response yesterday, simply trying to evade questions about the Government's integrity by casting doubt on the integrity of the Auditor General of Canada?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. I think some question about the integrity of government practices had been put in issue. Indeed, a question about that issue had been raised by the Auditor General. Now he has agreed to go back and verify the basis of his information. This is appropriate, and we applaud this initiative of his.

COME-BY-CHANCE OIL REFINERY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. On Monday of this week the Premier of Newfoundland, Brian Peckford, and the Hon. Member for St. John's West jointly announced the sale of the Come-by-Chance oil refinery to a Bermuda-based company called Newfoundland Energy, for $2. Yesterday the Newfoundland Premier confirmed that the refinery had still not been sold. Why did the Minister of Transport, representing the federal Government, participate in a press conference with Premier Peckford announcing the sale of the Come-by-Chance oil refinery when Petro-Canada, the owner of the refinery, advised both the Premier and the Minister in advance of the press conference that no deal had been concluded for the sale of the refinery?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Minister of Energy is the Hon. Minister of State for Forestry and Mines, and he will take that question.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I assure the Hon. Member and all Members of the House that the people of Newfoundland certainly welcome the opportunity to have additional jobs and economic activity in that province.

MINISTER'S PARTICIPATION IN PRESS CONFERENCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the people of Newfoundland welcome that kind of opportunity, but they are not willing to be participants in The Gong Show. I will repeat my question. Why did the Minister of Transport, representing Her Majesty's Government, participate in a press conference with the Premier of Newfoundland announcing the sale of the Come-by-Chance oil refinery when Petro-Canada, the owner of the refinery, advised—and they told me so this morning—both the Premier and the Minister that there had been no sale?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am awfully sorry the Hon. Member does not share the happiness of the people of Newfoundland in having those new jobs in that area.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR BAN ON CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I suspect he will know that Steve Fonyo's father has said that he wished someone had warned him of the hazards of cigarette smoking when he was young. Of course he will know that Mr. Fonyo is now dying of lung cancer. Will the Minister respond positively to Mr. Fonyo's appeal? Knowing that tobacco companies are spending $200 million a year to undo any good that the Minister's pro-health campaigns are doing, will he respond positively by putting an end to the disinformation campaigns, with a total ban on cigarette advertising?

• (1430)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us received the news of Mr. Fonyo Senior's illness with deep regret. Regarding the ban on advertising, as I told the Hon. Member earlier, that issue has many more implications. It is not simply a matter of banning advertising so that people will no longer smoke, thereby ending lung cancer. Obviously that which the Hon. Member continually puts forward is not the complete answer.

PLEA BY PHYSICIAN'S ORGANIZATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not respond favourably to the latest campaign of Physicians for a Smoke-Free Canada? As the Minister knows, Members of Parliament will receive black-edged cards when their constituents die from tobacco-related diseases. Will the Minister respond favourably to the plea Physicians for a Smoke-Free Canada made this morning when they stated that they are tired of government inactivity, and specifically requested a ban on advertising as a first step toward controlling smoking in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, regarding the argument that there has not been government activity in the last two years, I really do not think I have to defend that once again in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member knows as do most Hon. Members that, from my perspective, if it were possible, the route I would like to take would be to ban cigarette advertising. I constantly hear the argument that Finland has done so. I spoke to the Minister for Social Security of Finland two days ago. The Finns had to amend their Constitution in order to ban cigarette advertising so that it would not be an abrogation of press rights. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that, when she wants to put facts before us, she should put the entire package before us so that we can look at it in that sense.

COME-BY-CHANCE OIL REFINERY—ROLE OF PETRO-CANADA

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago Premier Peckford promised Newfoundlanders that he would "blow their minds" with an announcement. The announcement was made. It did not blow their minds, it boggled them. The Premier announced the sale of the refinery but Petro-Canada said that it was not sold. However, the Minister promised us today that jobs will be created and we thank him for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the extensive applause with which some Hon. Members are greeting the preamble to the question of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate. Perhaps if the Hon. Member would proceed with his question there might be more applause.

Mr. Baker: I am sure there will be, Mr. Speaker. Since Newfoundland Energy Limited is so keen and is putting up $20 million to reopen the refinery, could the Minister tell the House what he thinks is wrong with Petro-Canada? Why could Petro-Canada not do what this company says it will do with the refinery?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the people of Newfoundland are very, very happy that this company will try to find markets and make things happen in Come-by-Chance, something which the Hon. Member's Government could not do.

NORTHEASTERN UNITED STATES MARKET

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the projected market is in the northeastern United States and the refinery in the riding of the Minister used to supply that market until it got cut off, as did refineries in Quebec and Nova Scotia, and jobs were lost. What guarantees do we have now that the Come-by-Chance oil refinery will not also be cut off from this same market at the very time it is opening? We do not want Come-by-Chance to go by chance again.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can be assured of one thing: there were more jobs lost in Saint John, New Brunswick, by the former Liberal Government's policies. The opportunity for new jobs and economic development is welcomed by the people of Come-by-Chance. They are the ones who will be the net beneficiaries of this, and the Hon. Member should be very happy about it.

TRADE

FREE TRADE WITH UNITED STATES—POSSIBLE EXCLUSION OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for External Affairs.

Yesterday, the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec met with the three political parties in Ottawa to object to the inclusion of the farming industry in the free trade discussions with the United States.

My question is this: Can the Minister now assure us that agriculture will not be included in the free trade negotiations between Canada and the United States?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the question of the Hon. Member surprises me. Is he suggesting that agriculture should not be part of the free trade negotiations?

Mr. McKnight: Remember the leadership in Saskatchewan, Lorne.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER GIVE COMMITMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. The UPA has said that the dairy industry and sectors such as poultry and pork production would be destroyed by a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

Can the Minister tell us once and for all whether or not the farming industry will be on the negotiation table, because the UPA would like an answer now.

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of elements involved in the negotiations. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that a poll released today showed that 57 per cent of Canadians support the free trade initiative of this Government.

OWNERSHIP CONTROL REGULATIONS

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Last night before the Finance Committee, the Chairman of the Continental Bank stated that in order to preserve the jobs of his employees he had no option but to seek a merger with a foreign controlled bank since, without legislative changes, large Canadian non-bank financial institutions such as Sun Life and National Trust could not acquire the Continental Bank. Will the Minister bring in changes to the ownership provisions for Canadian financial institutions in order to enable control to remain in Canada should a similar situation develop in the future, or is he satisfied that the loss of Canadian control is the only way to save jobs in Canada?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking about a future policy about which he is curious. I can guarantee him that in the next month or two we will bring forward our policy which will endeavour to maintain Canadian control as best we can, create jobs, and increase the further competitiveness of our banking system.

EXISTENCE OF NEW MARKETS FOR PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister or the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Last year around this time, Gaz Métropolitain and the Quebec Government were asking the Conservative Government for assistance, in keeping the Gulf refinery open in Montreal East. The Energy Minister at the time answered that there was no market.

Could the Minister inform the House today how he was able to find an export market when a year ago, there were no markets to keep the Gulf refinery in Montreal East operating?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that in the ongoing negotiations for the Come-by-Chance refinery, no federal moneys are directly required. All of the output of this particular refinery will go to the United States thanks to very good negotiations by the Province of Newfoundland.

EVOLUTION OF MARKET

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister doesn't have his facts straight. The Government is going to sell at a discount price of less than $2. And besides, Gaz Métropolitain was merely asking for permission to purchase the Gulf refinery.

Could the Minister explain what has changed in the energy sector to make him say today there is a market in the U.S., while a year ago, the Energy Minister at the time told us there were no markets?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it should be well known that the purchasing company will purchase the entire output of that particular plant. We think it has found its own market niche and we welcome that kind of opportunity for economic activity in Come-by-Chance.

LYELL ISLAND LOGGING OPERATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Haida people and Canadians from coast to coast want to know if the federal Government is prepared to offer fair compensation to the loggers and logging companies on Lyell Island and in South Moresby so that the area will be protected. Can he tell this House, the Haida people, and the people of Canada, whether or not he is prepared to make that offer today?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Good question.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is a good question. I provided the answer in this House some weeks ago when I said to the House and, through it, to Western Forests Products Ltd. that the Government of Canada would be very predisposed toward sitting down with them to negotiate the value of the timber licences and to reasonably compensate the company for them.

POSITION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer. However, as he knows, logging is going on on Lyell Island today in areas under negotiation for designation as Canada's highest priority national park. Is the Government going to take the necessary steps to get the co-operation of the B.C. Government to stop that logging before it becomes the South Moresby National Slash Park?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the situation is delicate. I do not think one needs to resort to exaggerated rhetoric to underscore the problem. The Government of Canada is deeply concerned about what is happening in the South Moresby area. I do not think it would be an overstatement to say that violence, even death, is possible if this thing gets out of control. We are working behind the scenes, quietly, reasonably and co-operatively, with the Government of B.C. and the Haida themselves to see whether we can avert disaster.

TAXATION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT DECISION ON MINIMUM TAX

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, or in his absence, for the Minister of State (Finance).

The Conservative Governement has imposed a minimum personal income tax, but not a minimum corporate income tax when we know that thousands of profitable corporations pay no taxes in Canada.

Must we conclude, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance was not aware of certain figures which are essential to prepare any budget or implement any major tax initiative? Or must we conclude, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance and his Government deliberately and unduly favour these companies, some of which are very large?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the issue of a minimum tax for corporations is of course being examined in the ongoing consultations on tax reform. I will tell the Hon. Member that 13,000 Canadian corporations paid tax last year that had never paid tax before. I will also tell him that the American system of a minimum corporate tax is not working very well and produces trivial amounts. We have to look at this carefully because there is no easy answer.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE GASOLINE PRICE INCREASE—DELAYED IMPLEMENTATION ON BEHALF OF CONSUMERS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Last Spring, when the price of crude oil went down by 60 per cent, the Government was very slow to react. Canadians had to wait three months before noticing any change in the prices at the pump.

According to a Canadian Press release from Calgary, there will be an increase in prices within a month.

Can the Minister assure us that the Canadian consumers will have the same three months of grace before there is any increase at the pump?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there is no constitutional authority for the federal Government to set prices. We can only try to ensure that the market-place is truly competitive. In that regard, the Director of Investigation and Research in the Competition Branch is monitoring petroleum markets directly. If the Hon. Member has any evidence of efforts to manipulate the market to the disadvantage of consumers, she should let us know and we will take action immediately.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO GIVE EQUALITY OF TREATMENT TO CANADIAN CONSUMERS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister.

Last Spring, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources became involved by sending a short and weak telex to the oil giants pleading for lower prices at the pump.

Can the Minister state what action he plans to take to provide Canadian consumers with equality of treatment?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I just became aware at lunchtime that in the Niagara Falls region right now gasoline is selling at 32 cents a litre as a result of a price war. We are trying to promote as much competition as possible so we will have price wars as frequently and as widely spread as possible. That is the best way to get the best results for consumers—good healthy competition.

LYELL ISLAND LOGGING OPERATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In order to avoid the possibility of violence and death, which the Minister referred to a moment ago, will he stand in his place today and publicly ask the Government of British Columbia to stop the logging on Lyell Island until such time as successful negotiations can be concluded?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that I was in Vancouver a few weeks ago to meet with my provincial opposite number, Austin Pelton, to make a request similar to that which the Hon. Member calls upon me to make now. I can assure him that we are pursuing the matter with vigour. The position of the Government of Canada is clear and it has been conveyed clearly to the Government of B.C.

OBSTACLES TO SETTLEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, if that kind of representation has been made privately, I again ask the Minister to make it publicly here. I also ask him, if the federal Government is prepared to put up money, what is the problem? If the money has been offered and the federal Government is willing to negotiate, who is standing in the way of a successful negotiation of that problem?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think one of the things standing in the way of progress is the grandstanding which the Hon. Member is wont to do from time to time. I say that with reluctance because it is not characteristic of his personal style. I draw to his attention a sentence from a letter written by his colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena, to the Prime Minister, in which he said: "This issue transcends partisan bickering".

Mr. Blaikie: Indeed.

Mr. McMillan: I commend it to the Hon. Member.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF TORPEDOES FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Yesterday it was revealed that the U.S. Navy overcharged Canada and Turkey by more than U.S. $14 million on the sale of torpedoes. As most of this sale was to Canada, our share of the overpayment could be Can. $18 million, plus interest. Can the Minister inform the House what measures his Department is taking to retrieve the overpayment?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the House that we have no reason to believe that Canada was overcharged since the final cost of the contract will not be known until the expiry date, 1988 in this case.

[English]

MONITORING OF CONTRACT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Can the Minister assure this House that all contracts of this nature are monitored, from the manufacturing stage to the middleman, to the final purchaser? Will that be done in this case, and will she give us a report on the final outcome?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, of course I can give the assurance that we will follow the competitive procedure and that further information will be made available in due course. It may be that the allegations we have been hearing are unfounded.

SERVICE TO NEW COMMUNITIES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. According to newspaper reports the Post Office is planning a major publicity campaign to sell the idea that mailboxes are better than door-to-door delivery. Is the Minister now in a position to confirm that the Government has decided against door-to-door delivery in new communities?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Government has not decided on anything.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Truer words were never spoken.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): We have been presented with a corporate plan which we are examining and, when we are ready, we will make the announcement at the appropriate time.

Mr. Keeper: I take note of the fact that the Minister has not denied that he has decided against door-to-door delivery.

COST OF PROMOTING IDEA MAIL BOXES BETTER THAN DOOR-TO-DOOR SERVICE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister prepared to tell the House how much money Canada Post officials will spend to promote the idea that mail boxes are better than home delivery, and why should this money not be used to expand the services people want, which is door-to-door delivery?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can only answer that Canada Post have considerably reduced their deficit since 1984—down to $184 million from $347 million—precisely as a result of sound corporate administrative decisions. Naturally we will weigh the representations and recommendations made by Canada Post and respond in due time.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE TO REINSTATE DEMOCRATIC SYSTEM IN KANESATAKE INDIAN BAND

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Kanesatake Band Council is elected for life, under the Customs Hereditary Chief system. Many members of that band, who do not agree with that system nor with the policies or philosophies developed by the Kanesatake Band Council, submit that their rights are flouted since they cannot get information and no public meetings are held, and because of their disagreement, they have become second-class band members. Can the Minister, under the authority that is vested upon him, intervene in order that the democratic system that existed before 1979 be reinstated?

• (1450)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest. She is correct that the Oka Band has election by custom, that being the Mohawk custom. It would be totally inappropriate for the federal Government or this Minister to interfere with the elections or customs of the Indian government of the Oka Band.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING—RADIO OBSERVATORY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Science and Technology. The Minister of Science of British Columbia has called the Government's plan to shut a radio observatory a "dereliction of responsibility". He has also expressed a "lack of confidence" in the leadership of the federal Government.

Given this damning indictment of his policy from a respected scientist and a Minister of the B.C. Government, will the Minister of Science and Technology immediately agree to reverse his plan to cut the budget of the National Research Council?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I, too, monitored the statement of the Minister of Science in the former B.C. Government. It made reference to the closure of one or the other of the observatories in British Columbia. There is no intention of closing those observatories.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, it is not a specific observatory that is being criticized, but the Minister's policy.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE STUDIES

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister table in this House the analyses upon which he based his decision to cut the budget of the National Research Council, the list of groups which he consulted, and the recommendations and advice he received from members of the National Research Council?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I said the other day, I spent three hours in the Standing Committee tabling and offering all kinds of information to Members. Unfortunately, this Hon. Member did not see fit to attend the meeting. He can read the record of it and he has access to all the information I tabled.

FISHERIES

FRASER RIVER—DUMPING OF DEBRIS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Since last Saturday the Kerkhoff-Hyundai consortium has been raising polluted debris from the bottom of the Fraser River near the Pattullo Bridge and dumping it just over the edge of the pilings into the flowing river, thereby seriously endangering the fish habitat.

Why is the Department of Fisheries permitting this dumping when no environmental impact studies have been done and no public hearings have been held?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received a report from officials on the West Coast about the problem raised by the Hon. Member. If there is any evidence of contraventions of Sections 31 and 33 of the Fisheries Act, appropriate action will be taken immediately.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I am shocked. This has been going on since Saturday and the Minister does not know anything about it.

REQUEST FOR INSPECTION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Will the Minister take immediate action by having his inspectors go to the site and immediately begin to conduct the necessary tests to protect the fish in the Fraser River?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if practices are occurring which are contrary to the habitat provisions of the Fisheries Act, immediate actions will be taken if they have not been taken already.

Every incident is not brought to my attention immediately, but I certainly take seriously the necessity to act immediately upon receipt of evidence. The only evidence I have heard is the allegations of the Hon. Member.

Ms. Jewett: Go check it out. That is really shocking.

MARKETING OF FRESHWATER FISH—SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. What is the Government's response to the September report of the Senate Fisheries Committee on the marketing of freshwater fish in Canada? Will the Minister now allow competition with the monopolistic Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am very cognizant of the Hon. Member's interest in the freshwater fishery in the western Arctic. I visited the Hay River plant of the FFMC with him and met fishermen there some years ago. Indeed, about a month ago we received a report from the Senate Committee on the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. That report is being reviewed with provincial and territorial officials and officials of the corporation. Improvements will be made to the corporation which will benefit the fishermen and employees of the plant in the Hon. Member's riding. The suggestions which are viable will be initiated.

CAMPAIGN TO PROMOTE MAIL BOX SERVICE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. I have a copy of the 60,000 advertisements which were distributed to postal employees advertising the new Tory buzzword, "super mail box" which is to replace home delivery in new residential districts.

Is this part of the postal business plan which the Minister is supposed to announce? If not, what is in the plan? Canadians want home delivery rather than a "super mail box".

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I have said earlier, I think the Post Office has improved tremendously since we came into power.

Mr. Orlikow: You're kidding.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): The super mail boxes will upgrade service for rural and urban customers. This will have no impact on customers currently being served by letter carriers.

Mr. Keeper: You'll get to them later.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCE INTENTIONS IMMEDIATELY

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, why is the Minister not announcing his plan immediately instead of leaving Canada Post reduce its services and increase postal rates?

Why not say exactly what you are going to do, instead of letting Canada Post do your work for you?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again, Canada Post is a Crown corporation that operates and has to make corporate decisions. I have indicated that many improvements have been made by this Government, and the matter of superboxes is something else that involves the management of the corporation and that is part of its plan.

As far as we are concerned, we are still assessing the plan that was submitted to us, and when our decision is made it will be announced.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS INDUSTRY DEREGULATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Energy and is with regard to natural gas deregulation. The Conservative Party's policy in its handbook reads as follows: "We will adopt market sensitive pricing for exported natural gas while ensuring that Canadians always pay less than their American neighbours". Is that still the policy of the Government of Canada?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, at this very time my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, with his colleagues, the other Energy Ministers of Canada, are making a statement in Calgary with regard to this matter. I think the statement will be well received by the producing provinces, the consuming provinces, the distributors, and the pipeline companies. I can assure the Hon. Member that the agreements that were made by the participants will ensure that the consumers and producers are protected.

EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the recent announcement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in Calgary is the opposite from the previous Conservative policy that surplus tests and the adjacent border tests will disappear for natural gas. Why is the Government sacrificing our precious gas resources to give Americans cheaper gas than Canadians? Why are you following that idiotic policy?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could quote what the Minister said:

> We can and will, however, carefully monitor domestic and export prices to ensure that Canadians are not placed at a disadvantage.

Surely that is clear enough.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MEMBERS FIRST ELECTED IN 1972

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I extend to you and other distinguished Members of the Class of '72 the congratulations of the House on the fourteenth anniversary of your election to Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Excise Tax Act

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) rose on his point of order, I could not think of what would surpass in importance the weekly question as to the business the Government will call for the next seven days. However, now that I have heard his point of order, I entirely agree that it was a worthy one in this case.

I would like to ask the Government House Leader what business he intends to put before the House in the next seven days.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, today we will continue with second reading of Bill C-14, the Excise Tax Act. If that is concluded, we will proceed to Bill C-17, concerning the PGRT. Friday is an allotted day. I understand the Liberals will be presenting a motion in that regard.

On Monday we will return to Bill C-17, and on Tuesday we will move to Bill C-15, the amendments to the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act, standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) had the floor.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to reclaim the floor, even in the somewhat disruptive aftermath of Question Period, because it gives me the opportunity to emphasize again to the House the way in which the Progressive Conservative Government is garnering its increased taxes principally upon the backs of ordinary Canadians and at the expense of the budgets of ordinary Canadian families.

Before we rose for lunch I was at the point of coming to the division of increased taxes under the Government. The figures are instructive and I hope the Government will observe and absorb them because they are surely a signpost showing the principles the Government is following in its tax gathering campaign.

There has been an increase of $6.7 billion in sales and excise taxes since the Government took power, compared to $3.3 billion in personal income tax increases, and a meagre $1.4 billion in increases in the corporate income tax. The only conclusion one can reach when considering these increases together is that they are regressive.

We know that the sales and excise taxes that go into the purchase cost of most goods that are purchased in Canada—apart from food and refreshments obviously—are taxes that are paid in a much more equal fashion by the poor and the wealthy than any other form of tax. Not only have repeated studies analysed this tax as being regressive, I have not even heard anyone on the government side contradict this analysis. Unlike the personal income taxes which are progressive in the sense of being paid at a higher rate as one's income increases, sales and excise taxes are regressive.

For example, if a person with an annual income of $15,000 buys the same mix of taxable goods and services as someone who earns $75,000 a year, they pay the same amount by these indirect taxes. It should also be pointed out how these taxes are concealed from the taxpayers, namely the consumers. Unlike the provincial retail sales taxes which are added as a percentage of the price and are visible to the consumers, except in the case of beverages in some provinces, federal sales taxes are hidden from the consumer because they are included in the final price of the item. For example, families with an income of $20,000, who are not eligible for the so-called refundable sales tax credit which the Government has introduced, are the ones who will be hit hardest by this combination of sales and excise tax increases.

It is worth-while calling the Government's bluff on this question of the refundable sales tax credit. Our Party is not against such a tax credit and believes it does something to offset the increased taxes, but let me point out the analysis of the National Council of Welfare which has calculated that while this form of tax relief reduces the over-all burden considerably, it does not fully offset the cost of that increase. The $50 and $25 for each child will offset most of the increase, perhaps, for families who are in the $10,000 to $15,000 income range, but those with incomes below even $20,000 will be paying more in tax even after the refundable sales tax credit has been factored in.

It is no secret to those who study economics that this diverts money from consumer spending. Indeed, the Conference Board of Canada has calculated that the increases will assist in slowing down personal expenditures by Canadians—that is, no expenditures—from a growth rate of 5.2 per cent in 1985 to 2.7 per cent in 1987. The National Council of Welfare has pointed out that over the last five years, with the exception of the wealthy and, gratifyingly, the very poor, on the average Canadians have experienced a decline in their purchasing power. I believe this is a trenchant criticism of this increased tax measure. When this is allied with the fact that over the last eight years Canadians have experienced a drop in their real wage income, their real available spending power is also declining.

This must also be juxtaposed with statements by the Progressive Conservative Government concerning the need for economic growth. The restrictive effect that these increased taxes have on consumer spending will, of course, have an adverse effect on economic growth over-all.

I want to relate what we have seen the Government table in Bill C-14 to its suggested plans for tax reform and point out some of the inconsistencies. It is not my purpose to deny the possibility that the Government may indeed have had a change of heart or, perhaps as some of its back-benchers might say, suffered a change of heart. The fact is that there is a clear divergence between the actions of the Government in tabling Bill C-14 and its stated intentions, at least in the statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on October 23, 1986. The statement that the Government needs more consultation time was instructive. Perhaps the Government wanted more time to elapse so it could garner tax at higher rates before introducing any measure which might lead to some loss of tax revenue in one of the three major tax accounts.

The Minister of Finance stated that he intended to reduce the rate of personal income tax in relation to over-all revenue. He felt that this could be done by seeking higher revenues from the corporate and sales tax systems. We can applaud an increase in the corporate taxes as a means of ending some of the outrageous selective tax preferences which my Party is now daily highlighting in the House, and with very good response from Canadians, I might say. Those measures have enabled many corprorations to avoid completely the payment of tax at the same time as their income statements and balance sheets are showing their increasing health. At the same time the stock market is showing in the clearest way possible that these corporations, which are in fact flourishing and prospering, are failing to make a contribution to the tax system.

Looking again at the sales tax system, it is difficult for my Party to see where further increases can be imposed without further increasing beyond the degree to which we are presently condemning the regressivity of that system. I think there is some fear of the imposition of a business transfer tax, a modified version of the value added tax, now endemic in other jurisdictions and, indeed, generally adopted within the European Economic Community, because that is in the statement as well. Similar products should bear the same rate of tax and the sales tax burden should be spread more equally across goods and services. We have here what has been referred to as "smoke and mirrors" and what has been referred to as "front-pocket donations and back-pocket extractions". As we have seen in the past, and as a well known satirical piece points out, the net result is that lower and middle income tax payers in Canada are going to pay. It is they who will make up the difference.

The over-all unfairness of the system is bolstered by the increase in sales and excise taxes, the hidden taxes, more regressive taxes which are difficult to administer, inflationary and, frankly, it is difficult to see how any business transfer tax could be introduced without essentially spreading some of the negative characteristics we have pointed out in the federal sales and excise taxes with, of course, the exception of the positive aspects the "sin taxes" have of discouraging the use of those products which are obviously harmful to all of us.

With respect to the business transfer tax, a value added tax by any other name, we have not seen anything concrete proposed, so perhaps it would be appropriate to leave that tax, even though it might cause an increase in the number of companies collecting by fifteenfold, and return briefly and finally to the federal sales and excise taxes. By 1988, revenues from the federal excise taxes and duties will have risen over 1984 by almost 90 per cent. That, I think, in a word, sums up the degree to which the Government is shifting to a form of tax which has been condemned by commentators right across the ideological spectrum in terms of economics, as a tax which is really counter-productive to the economy and one which is less than fair to those people who bear the largest share of the tax burden, and those people we must be concerned with, the ordinary Canadian family.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Debate.

[Translation]

Questions or comments.

Is the House ready for the question?

Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak on Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. The purpose of this Bill is to increase certain taxes, which means that Canadians will again have to pay more for certain consumer goods, including manufactured goods and petroleum products.

To find out what might be of interest to Canadians in a Bill, you read what the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary had to say about it. I will therefore refer to yesterday's Hansard at page 878, where the Parliamentary Secretary, speaking on behalf of the Government, introduced this budgetary measure.

[English]

I found it interesting that the Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) spoke for exactly 10 lines on the Bill itself. He said the Bill arose out of the Budget of February, 1986 and from the Ways and Means motion tabled on June 11 of this year. The essential and substantive part of his speech reads:

Excise Tax Act

The purpose of this Bill is to increase federal sales tax in certain areas. An increase of 1 per cent will raise sales tax on construction materials from 7 to 8 per cent, on alcohol and tobacco from 14 to 15 per cent and on other commodities from 11 to 12 per cent.

That is all we heard about Bill C-14 because for the rest of his speech he, true to form for a real good Tory, made political and partisan comments. I read it twice and underlined it trying to find further comments on Bill C-14, and there was nothing.

To be fair to the Parliamentary Secretary, perhaps he did not want to, or was not capable of doing what he should have done, and that is explaining what Bill C-14 was all about, the principle of it. But his speech was all style and little substance. So I will try, with all humility, to cover what the Bill intends to do. I will try to go along with my usual parliamentary habit and clarify somewhat what is in this Bill.

First, the Bill is a federally manufactured sales tax increase. This tax of 1 per cent will add tremendously to the costs of manufactured goods. I want to give to the House an appreciation of the impact of this tax. In his speech, I must admit, on page 879 in Hansard, the Parliamentary Secretary said:

—this Conservative Government and their Prime Minister are acting in a responsible manner, that we know where the money we spend is going.

That is fine, but he says further on that the Government announced in its last Budget that:

A family of four earning less than $15,000 will get $150 tax credit.

He enlarged on the great generosity of the Government and how lucky Canadians were to be allowed to receive $150 tax credit if they earn less than $15,000. I looked at my notes, which were quite substantial, to see what the facts are. What are the cumulative effects of the main tax measures introduced by the Tories since they took power in 1984? To find out one must go back to the November 1984 Economic Statement, and the respective Budgets of May 1985, and February 1986. If one goes through that exercise one will find that increases in taxes have been substantial.

However, for the couple with two children earning $15,000, the family to which my hon. friend referred yesterday, we find that because of the modified indexation of 3 per cent, because of the additional 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtaxes, because of the elimination of the 1973 federal tax reduction, because of the modification of child benefits, the family allowance, the tax credits, the exemptions—all those matters put together—that family will have to pay $190 more in tax than it paid in 1984. This shows that, indeed, the $150 is not sufficient even to cover these costs.

If we look further we will see that there is a 1 per cent increase in sales tax rates effective November, 1984; a 1 per cent increase in sales tax rates effective May, 1985; and an increase in the so-called sin taxes on tobacco and alcohol levied in the same Budget. The sales tax base was also broadened by that Budget. There were increases in the RRSP limits, and there was the famous capital gains exemption from which, we know, a family with an income of $15,000 does not profit very much. When we add all of this together we find that the result comes to an additional $175 for these items minus, and I must be fair, $10, which is a possible deduction on capital gains that a family earning $15,000 may have. That is a hypothesis which I put out.

With respect to the February, 1986 Budget, there are additional measures. We see that there is a 3 per cent surtax which adds $10 to the tax bill of this same family. It takes care of the $10 they gained on the capital gains exemption. Then there is the refundable sales tax credit which was mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary. There are increases in the tobacco and alcohol excise taxes which will cost this family another $40. When we add up all these figures, this family will pay $255 more than they paid in 1984, even taking into account the $150 sales tax credit. That is not what I call fair, equitable or responsible, which are the words used by the Parliamentary Secretary. I think they are unfortunate words. So much for the federal manufacturers' sales tax increase and its impact.

The next item with which I wish to deal is the alcohol and tobacco excise taxes. I think people who use alcohol and tobacco should be paying additional taxes because they add to our national health bills. They eventually cost us more money. We should try to capture this money from them so that we can look after their health if they do not wish to look after it themselves.

The next item I would like to refer to is the air transportation tax. Effective May 1, 1986, the tax on domestic air travel will be limited to a maximum of $50 while the tax rate will increase from 9 per cent to 10 per cent. The tax will be extended to tickets sold outside Canada on or after August 1, 1986.

The fourth item with which I wish to deal is the telecommunication programming services tax. This tax applies to television equipment provided to customers of cable and pay-TV services, and to equipment used by hotels and other closed circuit broadcasts. The TPST was increased by 1 per cent to 7 per cent in the 1985 Budget. The proposed legislation will increase the tax by another 1 per cent to 8 per cent effective April 1, 1986.

Then we come to the fifth item in the Bill which deals with the motive fuel tax. Members will recall that in the 1985 Budget the method by which federal sales tax was levied on motive fuels was changed. As a result, the sales tax continues to be imposed as a percentage or ad valorem tax. It is calculated as a specific amount per litre. The specific amount is to be adjusted quarterly according to the industry selling price index as published by Statistics Canada. Clauses 6, 7 and 8 of the Ways and Means motion to Bill C-14 are intended to clarify how this sales tax calculation is to be made. We all know that additional sales taxes were added in 1985 to the order of .32 cents per litre for regular gasoline; to .35 cents per litre for unleaded gasoline; to .36 cents per litre for premium gasoline; and to .29 cents for diesel. We also know that the sales tax increase as per the Budget of April 1, 1986, will be increased by .329 cents for regular gasoline; .36 cents for unleaded gasoline; .37 cents for premium gasoline; and .302 cents for diesel.

The next item with which the Bill deals is with respect to tourist literature. The 1985 Budget exempted government-sponsored tourist literature from federal sales tax. Effective February 27, 1986, the legislation proposed here would extend the exemption to tourist literature acquired by boards of trade, chambers of commerce, municipal and automobile associations, and similar organizations. The exemption applies only to material that is of general as opposed to specific commercial nature and that is distributed to the public at large free of charge. I think this is a plus in the Bill.

The next item with which I wish to deal is the refunding of sales and excise taxes on motive fuels to diplomats. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will decide who will receive such refunds. This Bill proposes to refund sales and excise taxes on motor gasoline and diesel fuels to eligible diplomats from countries that provide similar relief to Canadian representatives.

The eighth item in the Bill deals with tax collection by Revenue Canada. As an aside, I am going through the Bill in this way because I think that yesterday most of us missed the principle at hand here. I am trying to be as brief and as specific as I can. Therefore I hope Hon. Members will excuse me if I do not go into too many examples with respect to each one of these items. According to existing legislation, Revenue Canada officials can demand payment of taxes owing for an unlimited amount of time. The Ways and Means motion to Bill C-14 proposes to allow Revenue Canada to collect only that amount of tax that will be paid or will become payable within 90 days after Revenue Canada serves the taxpayer notice of its intention to collect.

The ninth item deals with a motive fuel tax rebate to farmers. This is a measure in which a great many Members are interested, and justifiably so. It is a measure which has been mentioned by many Members in their speeches yesterday and today. The 1986 Budget extended a three-cent-per-litre fuel tax rebate to primary producers for another year, or until January 1, 1988. Then, on April 30, 1986, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that effective May 1, 1986, the tax rebate would be increased by another 2.5 cents per litre, for a total rebate of 5.5 cents per litre. The Government, and justifiably so, estimates that this measure will save farmers an aggregate $165 million over the next two years.

This is a laudable move, and something which is justified. I only wish that the trappers had been included in the same measure. There are quite a few people who make a living from trapping in Canada, and they should be allowed the same rebate and receive the same consideration from the Government. As was mentioned before in debate, unfortunately this has not come about yet. Being an optimist, I am hoping that some day the Government will see fit to allow people who make a living from trapping to be eligible for this rebate.

The only difficulty is that the $165 million over the next two years is based on an estimate. It assumes that the rebate program will be fully subscribed. However, previous experience will show that this is a questionable assumption. Not all people are aware of the rebate and, therefore, not all farmers claim it. The Government, therefore, gets away with not having to pay it all. Nevertheless, it is there and people should know about it. It is a good measure and we applaud it.

The last and final item is the impact of this sales and excise tax Bill on federal Government revenue. According to the Government's figures, this increases and extends the fuel tax rebate to farmers over the next two years. It will cost $65 million in lost revenue for 1986, and $100 million for 1987. This is in addition to the $120 million of lost revenue indicated in the years 1986 to 1990 under the commodity tax measures. Those items will be shown in the eventual cost to the Government, and, therefore, will have to be authorized by the House.

I wish to end my few remarks by saying that we deplore the fact that Canadian consumers are again being asked to pay increased sales taxes and will have to bear the brunt of these measures. I plead with the Government that it not use these regressive tax measures to try to expunge the national deficit. The $150 sales tax credit is a good measure. It is not sufficient to allow those in the low income groups to really be protected from these additional measures. This reduces their take-home pay and their capacity to keep up with both inflation and the demands of their families. If the Government wanted to be fair, equitable and just, it should have come in with a sales tax credit of a great deal more than $150 for those families. That would have given them a little more relief and would not have used what I would define as very regressive measures in terms of their revenues.

I end my remarks on that note. I hope that the Government will be responsive to expanding that sales tax credit, which I think is a good measure, and will allow for those with low and moderate incomes to protect themselves against inflation and increasing taxes.

Mr. Boudria: I congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his usual eloquence and objectivity in his remarks.

Does the Hon. Member think it is fair—and I know he will have considerable comment about this—that a married couple with two children, whose income is $15,000, will have to pay an increase in taxes of $255 as a result of the economic statement of November, 1984, and the Budgets of 1985, and 1986. Does he think it is fair that the Tories want to go through with this regressive tax measure which will inflict that sort of pain on ordinary and low income Canadians?

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I thought I made this quite clear in my comments, but I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me a chance to repeat what I thought I said in my speech, namely that it is unfair, regressive and lacking in any equity whatsoever to force these families where four people have to live on a very low income of $15,000, an income that is below the poverty line—we recognize that today—and in absolute terms, below the poverty line means that they are constantly having a hard time making ends meet and even putting food on the table. God knows that the definition of poverty... We should make a distinction here between absolute and relative poverty. Without wishing to seem frivolous, absolute poverty—intellectually speaking—may be what the Conservatives are suffering from, but as far as... Yes, you Tories are absolutely incapable of any kind of original thinking. But absolute poverty, aside from the Tory connotation, may mean being unable to support one's family. Relative poverty means one is poor compared with other people in the same environment. Someone can be poor, meaning that he is unable to keep up appearances.

I realize that the Hon. Member—

Mr. Boudria: Beauharnois—Salaberry!

Mr. Gauthier: —for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) has a good definition of poverty, but I was not referring to intellectual poverty. I was referring to poverty—

Mr. Boudria: Not Conservative poverty!

Mr. Gauthier: —as an economic concept, and not as a lack of intellectual capacity or initiative. He is an expert as far as that goes. Initiative just may be something which helps people make progress. A Conservative does not have initiative and stays put, he does not move at all. Therefore it is not very hard to define.

I would like to tell my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) that I am very sorry indeed to see this regressive measure under which the Government will tax two-child families, couples with income as low as $15,000. I said in my remarks that the Government was supposed to use this sales tax credit measure to boost the income of those people and give them the money they need to make ends meet. That is all.

Mr. Boudria: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. I thank my colleague for giving such a clear answer to my first question. Since he gave a very good explanation in answer to the first question I put to him, I should like to ask him whether he can understand why the Progressive Conservative Party on the other side continues to introduce such regressive measures—against a couple with two children, earning $15,000 a year, therefore already below the poverty level as my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) so eloquently put it a moment ago—whether he can understand why the Conservatives would want to promote this kind of tax measure.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, the explanation is fairly simple. All we need do is look at the tables and figures to appreciate that poor and middle income families are hit hardest by sales taxes and regressive taxes. Couples with two children and an annual income of $30,000—let us refer to figures which are not quite as dramatic as the $15,000 mentioned earlier—did suffer as well because of the 1984-85 and February 1986 Budgets. Again I might enlighten the House with a series of figures I have here. A couple with two children and an income of $30,000 has to pay $245 more than in 1984 as a result of the 1984-85 Budget which reduced indexation by 3 per cent, added 5 and 10 per cent surtaxes, did away with the 1973 tax reduction, and changed family allowances, the tax credit. In addition, they have to pay $280 more because, as you will recall, the sales tax went up by 1 per cent in 1984 and by another 1 per cent in 1985 and the tax base was enlarged, which means another $280, and when we add to that the impact of the 1986 Budget and the 3 per cent surtax, the 1 per cent increase in the sales tax and what we call the sin tax on alcohol and tobacco. We end up with $630 more a year for a couple with two children and a $30,000 income.

If we look further—and this is the funny thing—if we look at a family with an income of $50,000, we see that, because of the capital gains tax exemption, these people are paying only $575 more. With an income of $50,000, they are therefore paying less than a family with an income of $30,000. I wanted to point this out because when I mentioned this fact recently in a speech, a reporter told me that I had made a mistake. I replied that I had not because, according to the figures, a family with two children and a $50,000 income pays less in taxes today than a family with a $30,000 income.

Mr. Boudria: Incredible!

Mr. Gauthier: It is indeed incredible. I repeat that a family with a $30,000 income pays $630 more while a family with an income of $50,000 pays $575 more.

When I look at the Tories, Madam Speaker, I tell myself that they are right to look embarrassed. Is it not embarrassing to be taxing the middle classes more than the rich?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

• (1540)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I realize that we are anxious to get this Bill into committee for thorough examination, but this is an opportunity for Members of Parliament to discuss Bill C-14 in principle. The Bill we are debating today imposes a whole set of new taxes upon Canadian citizens. When they purchase soft drinks at the end of the day, they will pay more federal taxes. When they pick up chocolate bars or packages of gum, they will pay more federal taxes. When they fill up their gas tanks on the way home, they will pay more federal taxes. If they purchase some food for their pet cats of budgie birds, they will pay more federal taxes. I could go on and on, but we are actually discussing a new regime of taxes being levied by the federal Government upon Canadians.

Not only are these taxes vast, comprehensive, and all encompassing, they are sneaky. They are hidden taxes. People do not understand and recognize them unless they have listened intently to the proceedings in the House of Commons, read Hansard or read carefully some of the financial pages in our national publications. Average Canadian citizens are unaware of the sneaky attempt to levy additional taxes.

This comes at a very peculiar time. I listened with interest to the comments of the Minister when he introduced Bill C-14. He went on at some length about the need for the Government to obtain more revenue. Of course he was concerned about the deficit, as we all are. We are all deeply troubled by the size of the deficit facing Canada. He went on to explain that this was why the Government had to go to Canadian citizens—rich or poor, middle or low income earners, easterners or westerners, men or women— and ask them to pay more taxes. I make that point for the following reason. It is the most regressive form of taxation anywhere in the taxation regime.

Living in a northern climate, most Canadians will be purchasing winter tires or heavy duty winter batteries; most Canadians will be winterizing their automobiles and so on. They will be required to purchase these materials and therefore pay sales taxes. Everyone pays the same amount of sales tax on a set of snow tires which costs $150, for example. Whether they are very wealthy or poor, whether they are low or middle income earners, it is irrelevant. Therefore it is perfectly clear who is penalized most by these taxes—low and middle income Canadians. The same amount of money is levied upon everyone.

When corporate presidents earning $200,000 to $300,000 per year purchase snow tires, they will pay a few extra dollars as a result of Bill C-14. They will not notice it. It will not have a significant impact upon their lifestyles; as a matter of fact, it will probably have no impact whatsoever. However, when low income earners who are heads of households with two children and annual incomes of $15,000 purchase the same snow tires for their automobiles or trucks, they also have to pay a few extra dollars as a result of Bill C-14. It will have a significant impact upon those families. This is why we in the New Democratic Party will oppose Bill C-14 at every stage. If there is a need to raise money or revenue, there are more appropriate ways of doing it.

Why do I say "if there is a need"? It is because in introducing this piece of legislation the Minister made a point about the deficit. It is not surprising that we have an increasing deficit. When we look at the tax system, we find that there are tens of thousands of profitable Canadian corporations which pay no income tax to the federal Government year after year. As a matter of fact, in 1983 there were 79,196 profitable Canadian companies which did not pay a single penny in federal income tax at the corporate level. By the way, their profits combined were some $13.3 billion. In 1983, $13.3 billion went untaxed.

I suppose one of the reasons for the present deficit—and unfortunately it appears to be an increasing one despite the comments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)—is that our tax system is so incredibly inept, biased, and unfair that it allows $13.3 billion to go untaxed. This is not my figure. This is not our figure. Figures such as this one were brought to our attention as a result of our 1986 tax probe. Various organizations across the country provided us with information. In fact, the federal Government provided the information indicating that 79,196 profitable corporations paid no income tax to the federal Government in 1983.

We should also consider the fact that 64 of the companies which paid no federal income tax in 1983 had profits in excess of $25 million. These are not corner stores or small Canadian companies; their profits in 1983 were in excess of $25 million. It is not surprising the Government has trouble in terms of collecting revenue.

May I make a rather humble suggestion. Rather than penalizing Canadian citizens by increasing sales and excise taxes or by imposing what is being called a business transfer tax, which will be even more oppressive, the federal Government ought to give serious consideration to an immediate overhaul of the tax system at both the corporate and personal levels and ought to determine to what extent it needs to continue to raise more revenues on the backs of Canadian taxpayers.

I do not have to remind Hon. Members of the SRTC boondoggle. It was an attempt by the Liberal administration to encourage Canadian companies to participate in research and development. Because of its ill-conceived nature, this cost Canadian taxpayers somewhere in the neighborhood of $2 billion to $3 billion. I do not have to remind you, Madam Speaker, of the billion dollar bank bail-out or of the billions of dollars that have now been given to the multinational oil companies as a result of the removal of the PGRT. It has been estimated that as a result of that decision, billions of dollars will not be going to the federal Treasury over the next few years.

I suppose the most stinging indictment of all is the continued support of the Minister of Finance for the $500,000 capital gains exemption. There are very few countries in the world where one would find people whose incomes are derived from selling race horses, artifacts or Caribbean boats or from investing in the Hong Kong stock exchange going totally untaxed to the tune of half a million dollars. I am not aware of any country in the world which has carte blanche application of a capital gains exemption. I have never heard of such a country, but perhaps other Hon. Members are aware of other countries that have this provision.

I would like to tell the House about the general track record of the Government since it has taken office. If there is a hallmark of this Government, it would certainly be the fact that any increases in revenue tend to come by way of hidden taxes. Rather than making up-front increases to the personal or corporate tax levels, the Government imposes hidden taxes so that Canadians are unaware of what is going on. Now the Government is committed to introduce what would be a simply inappropriate type of tax, a value-added tax, or as the Minister of Finance has called it, a business transfer tax. It should not be called a business transfer tax because it is essentially a widening of the federal sales tax base.

At the moment, the sales tax base is restricted primarily to the manufacturing sector but the business transfer tax the federal Government will be introducing in the next few months will tax virtually every business transaction that takes place. Experts in the tax field have called this a massive tax grab. I do not know of one single tax expert who has not called it a massive tax grab, a licence to print money or another descriptive phrase of that nature.

The Government might be lowering the personal tax rate so that a few extra dollars get into the pockets of Canadians. While a few extra dollars might go into their front pockets, the Government will be reaching behind to pull a few hundred dollars out of the hip pockets of Canadians. This will be done through a hidden, sneaky tax called the business transfer tax. It is a very regressive step and one that will concern you, Madam Speaker, a great deal, unless it is introduced in the context of over-all, massive, comprehensive, total tax reform along the lines of that which occurred in the United States.

In the United States, there has been a shift away from the personal taxpayer to the corporate taxpayer. President Reagan himself has decided that $120 billion will be moved onto the shoulders of the corporate sector and off the shoulders of the personal sector. That is the kind of step that makes a great deal of sense.

The Government has been taxing and taxing Canadians. In the economic statement of November, 1984, the federal Government announced a 1 per cent sales tax increase that had previously been introduced by the Liberals. The Government also announced an increase in the petroleum compensation charge. In the May 1985 Budget, a 1 per cent federal sales tax increase was announced for January 1, 1986, and an excise tax on gasoline was to be increased by 2 cents per litre on September 3, 1985, and by 1 per cent per litre on January 1, 1986. A new excise tax of 2 cents per litre on diesel and aviation fuel was imposed. There was a broadening of the federal sales tax base to include candy, confectionary, soft drinks, pet foods, certain health foods, energy conservation equipment and pharmaceutical devices. An excise tax on tobacco was increased by 52 per cent in the May 1985 Budget and an excise tax on alcohol was increased by 2 per cent. In the February 1986 Budget, there was a 1 per cent federal sales tax increase for April 1, 1986. An excise tax on tobacco increased by 6 per cent. An excise tax on alcohol increased by 4 per cent.

Adding together all of these personal tax increases including sales tax, excise tax, gasoline tax and personal tax increases, it amounts on average to $1,350 per Canadian family. By a Canadian family, I mean a family of four with an average annual income of $35,000. As a result of two years of Progressive Conservative Government, each Canadian family is paying an extra $1,350 out of its pockets. That means that in every small community, whether it be Richmond, Kamloops, Chicoutimi, Carp or Hawkesbury, the average Canadian family is losing to the federal Government $1,350 each year, year after year.

What does this mean to the small businesses in those communities? It simply means that that money is not circulating in those areas. That money is down here being used for highly questionable expenditures like bail-outs to bank depositors.

I will never feel comfortable with the fact that the Government provided thousands of millions of taxpayers' dollars to depositors like the Bank of America, Wells Fargo, the Bank of Japan, the Bank of Hong Kong, the Bank of Abu Dhabi and the Bank of Saudi Arabia. Did those banks really need to be bailed out by small Canadian taxpayers? No, Madam Speaker. As a matter of fact, this has not happened anywhere else in the world. Taxpayers' money has never been used to bail out uninsured depositors of that type before.

The record of the Government has been rather abysmal. Just the other day, I read with interest the October 1986 issue of a magazine entitled Policy Options. It would make good reading for Members of Parliament because it goes on to describe the impact of taxes in vivid detail. As a matter of fact, it almost makes one break down after finding out what is happening to the poor and middle-income families of Canada. It discusses the massive tax increases imposed on the average Canadian family. The middle-income group is being squeezed and squeezed at the same time as tax breaks are going to upper-income earners, those who are most likely to take advantage of the $500,000 capital gains exemption and the changes to the Registered Retirement Savings Plan. If a person happens to have $15,000 lying around at the end of the year, he can put it away tax free. How many of your constituents, Madam Speaker, have $15,000 at the end of the year to invest in retirement? If they do have $15,000 in cash to invest, ought we not use our tax system through a tax deferral program to assist that handful of individuals provide for their retirement?

The point I am trying to make is that at the same time as we are giving break after break to upper-income earners, we are hammering away at the middle-income earners. We are hammering away at the poor. The number of poor people is increasing while the middle class is decreasing. At the same time, when you shift your attention to the corporate side, you find the effective tax rate paid by small companies is higher than that of large companies. As a result of various tax breaks, thousands and thousands of profitable Canadian corporations do not pay tax. We have a long list of companies in the $50 million to $300 million profits range which have paid no income tax at all. That is why the Government slaps on to the backs of ordinary Canadians a whole range of new taxes such as we see in Bill C-14.

• (1600)

The rather sad aspect of all this is that these taxes are not out in front for everyone to see. In a sense we are not being honest. We are not being accountable. What we are levying as a result of this Bill's passage is a whole set of under-the-table, sneaky, behind-the-door taxes. The person paying the taxes is, by and large, unaware of it. If we believe in our tax system, if we want to be accountable for our deeds, it is imperative that we put in place a progressive, not a regressive, tax system. People should pay according to their ability to pay. If you have a large income, you can expect to pay a bit more tax. If you have a very low income, then in many cases you should be paying no income tax whatsoever. That is the kind of tax system a progressive country should have.

I will simply say in closing that we will continue to speak against this Bill. We will do what we can to encourage government Members to see their folly in the hope that the Government will see fit to withdraw the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments?

Mr. Holtmann: Madam Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member with maybe just a short preamble. He talked about NDP principles. I think both this House and the Hon. Member need to be reminded about NDP principles as we have seen them concerning taxes. He mentioned that this was the most regressive tax in Canada. I would like to remind him that in the great Province of Manitoba, which I dearly love, an NDP Government put in place a 1.5 per cent payroll tax. He cannot stand in this House and say that was not a regressive tax by a party which says it stands for the development of small business. That Government penalized small business people.

I also want the Hon. Member to consider what happened when we had a scientific research tax credit. The first person to jump on board was a cabinet Minister in the Pawley Government. Consider the principles of the NDP and their attitude in rejecting what we are trying to do to broaden the tax base so we can carry on some of the social programs they support. If the Hon. Member wants to add to the number of social programs, how is he going to pay for them?

He knows that in Manitoba an NDP Government thinks nothing of taxing small business. Members of the NDP think nothing of jumping in to reduce their personal income tax, as was demonstrated by one of the provincial Ministers. They think nothing of doing that when they can take advantage of it. Where is the NDP's principles is the question I would like to ask the Hon. Member.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the intervention by my hon. friend. I will do my best to respond.

There were a number of questions. The point I want to make right off the mark is that when I refer to the fact that there are 79,196 Canadian corporations not paying tax, I do not necessarily say those individual companies have done anything wrong at all.

Mr. Siddon: Most of them are small.

Mr. Riis: A lot of them are relatively small businesses, yes. They are simply using the tax system which successive Liberal and Conservative Governments have put in place. They are not doing anything wrong by using what the duly-elected Government of Canada has given them to use. They will presumably take advantage of the $15,000 retirement program and are not doing anything wrong, just simply taking advantage of a silly program.

Mr. Siddon: You would take it away from them?

Mr. Riis: What I am saying is that it is wrong in principle when we go out and gouge the taxpayer time and time again. We have done that so many times in the last two years since the Progressive Conservative Government took over—

Mr. Siddon: Not true and you know it.

Mr. Riis: —more than any other time in Canadian history. Some $1,350 in increased taxes for the average family. We are simply saying that it is wrong for profitable corporations like the Bank of Montreal, the Royal Bank, Shell Oil, or the Hudson's Bay Company to not pay some tax. It could be $10, it could be $2,000. Some tax. Surely the Hon. Member is not saying on behalf of his colleagues that banks which make at least hundreds of millions of dollars should not pay any tax at all.

Mr. Siddon: He did not say that.

Mr. Riis: I hope he is not saying that.

Mr. Siddon: What about Manitoba?

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member made the point that, presumably, there are some difficult times in Manitoba. If my recollection is correct, when the unemployment figures came out last month, the Province of Manitoba had the lowest level of any province in the country. There were also some statistics from the Department of Finance recently which said that there was more business investment per capita in the Province of Manitoba than in any other province in Canada. The Hon. Member stands in his place and presumably implies they are having some difficult times. They are not perfect. What I am saying is that there is more corporate investment per capita in Manitoba than in any other place in Canada and unemployment is the lowest in any place in Canada. He should be leaping to his feet and congratulating that province's Government, saying it has done an excellent job and thank you very much.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, this Bill will certainly not implement tax reform, as the Hon. Member and others have pointed out. However, in recent weeks the Government has spoken about tax reform. Considering what has been done over the last two years to gouge middle and low-income taxpayers, to talk about tax reform now seems a bit incongruous.

Perhaps the Hon. Member mentioned this in his speech and I did not hear it, but does he believe it would be a good idea, considering the promise of the Government to bring in tax reform, to suspend these measures altogether until we see what the Government has in mind specifically, or, as an alternative, make this a temporary Bill as from time to time some tax measures have been made. It would be timed to expire in one year's time or two years' time. We can then seriously work on tax reform. To vote for a Bill like this while there is talk of tax reform appears to be contradictory.

I would also like to know whether the Hon. Member, as a principal representative of the NDP, takes the position that before we discuss tax reform there should be some direction from the Government. It should not simply be saying, as it did in answer to a question the other day, that it is not putting any kind of paper or direction before the Canadian people as to where it would like to go. It is consulting without any paper on the table and it is just going to listen. In any case, I would like to hear the views of the Hon. Member on those questions.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I know how hard the Hon. Member works in his constituency and that he is well aware of the problems of his constituents. The people of his constituency are almost unanimously overtaxed. Whether you are a small business owner, an employee in a large or small company, or self-employed, you are overtaxed. We have taxed people too much. Therefore, I agree with the Hon. Member that to proceed with this with the promise of tax reform around the corner is inappropriate.

I am going to attempt to predict the future. I know that is a shaky business. However, I believe that you will see the biggest con job that you have ever seen in your life. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has not called this the business transfer tax for no reason. He wants to give the impression that the business transfer tax is a tax on business. Rather than raise corporate rates or remove some of the most obvious corporate loopholes, he will simply say that the Government is levying a new business transfer tax which, as you well know, Madam Speaker, is not a business transfer tax but a fancy value-added or sales tax.

If the Government was committed to real and comprehensive tax reform, it would not be proceeding with Bill C-14 as it is before us today. This is one of the most regressive and backward- looking comprehensive sales taxes that has been introduced in a long time.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Science and Technology—(a) Request for restoration of funding. (b) Basic research funding. (c) Scientists employed by Council; the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand)—Employment—(a) Private sector job creation—Minister's statement. (b) Training of workers; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Agriculture—(a) Assistance for grain farmers. (b) Allocation of assistance.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux that Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question? Debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, thank you for this opportunity to take part in the debate today. In fact, I was somewhat reluctant because I thought the Conservative Government would have realized it had to change its approach and that today in the House, we would hear Conservative Members being more straightforward about the disastrous effects these budgetary measures would have on Canadians.

I was disappointed, though not surprised, when not a word was said today by Conservative Members about this budgetary measure, and I am referring to Bill C-14.

[English]

Yesterday in the House of Commons the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) presented this Bill to us. We were all here listening very attentively to him. Most of us were listening with great anticipation, hoping that the Parliamentary Secretary would present an unbiased, non-partisan view of this Bill, listing all its benefits. Instead, he spoke only very briefly about what the Bill would do. He said:

> The purpose of this Bill is to increase federal sales tax in certain areas. An increase of 1 per cent will raise sales tax on construction materials from 7 to 8 per cent, on alcohol and tobacco from 14 to 15 per cent and on other commodities from 11 to 12 per cent.

He then went on to compliment the Tory Government and say all kinds of other partisan things. That is about all he said about the Bill. We are in the House again today waiting with great anticipation for another Conservative Member to explain to us in detail the positive benefits of this piece of legislation. However, that has not been forthcoming and that is very unfortunate. I would like to read some of the partisan remarks which the Parliamentary Secretary made yesterday. He said:

> As you know, Mr. Speaker, last week the Auditor General presented his report in which he referred to the spendthrift habits of the previous administration and pointed out how they wasted Canadian taxpayers' money for unduly partisan ventures, but the people were not fooled and we turfed them right out.

Can you believe that a Tory made a remark like that, Madam Speaker? I am sure you are surprised that such a remark was made in this House, and I do not blame you. I am totally dumbfounded that a Conservative would have the unmitigated gall to make such remarks and I know you are as well. He went on to apologize for some of these taxes in his usual conservative way and said:

> On one hand, we increase certain taxes in areas where it is reasonable to do so—

Please bear in mind the words "reasonable to do so". I will tell you the true story of what will really happen. I have a table in my hand which indicates the net effects of Bill C-14. A family of four with one breadwinner earning $15,000 a year will have their taxes increased by 1.7 per cent. Do you think a family of four with one breadwinner earning $15,000 a year can afford to pay any more money to the Tories? Surely not. I know that you understand that.

A family of four earning $50,000 a year will have increased taxes of 1.2 per cent. How can it be fair that someone earning $50,000 a year ends up paying a proportionately smaller increase than someone earning $15,000 a year who has the same size of family? I will now turn to another situation.

A single-parent family with two children and an income of $20,000 per year would see its taxes increased by 2.1 per cent. A single-parent family, $20,000 per year and two children.

Now consider the pitiful circumstances of a person with an income of $100,000 per year. A married couple, one breadwinner, two children, $100,000 per year. I realize the Conservatives think these people are much to be pitied. But consider. This family's taxes will increase by 1.7 per cent this year. This means that with an annual income of $100,000, you get a better deal from this Government than when you have an annual income of $20,000 as a single parent, a mother with two children. And why? Remember what the Parliamentary Secretary said.

Remember that the Parliamentary Secretary said that "we increase certain taxes in areas where it is reasonable to do so". It is the view of the Parliamentary Secretary that it is reasonable to do that which I have just described. Let me read more of what he said. Since he is a Parliamentary Secretary, presumably what he said in the House of Commons must be Conservative policy and that he believed it to be accurate. He said:

All families whose income is under $15,000 a year will be entitled to a tax credit . . . A family of four earning less than $15,000 will get a $150 tax credit.

The Parliamentary Secretary congratulates himself and the Conservative Government in an attempt to have Canadians believe that the family of four earning less than $15,000 a year will get some benefit from the Government. The net effect, however, is not that a family of four will be $150 richer, it will end up $255 poorer.

[Translation]

Well, let me explain, Madam Speaker, because I know I am stirring your curiosity. Here we are. Here is this family of four I was referring to, if we add the 3 per cent de-indexation of income tax, the 5 and 10 per cent surtax, the elimination of the 1973 deduction, changes to family allowances, the income tax credit and the exemption, all this adds up to a $190 tax increase. The 1 per cent sales tax increase in 1984, the 1 per cent sales tax increase in 1985, the widening of the sales tax base, higher alcohol and tobacco taxes amount to a $175 increase per year for that family of four earning $15,000 a year.

As far as the capital gains exemption is concerned, I may safely say that for people with a $15,000 a year income, earning capital gains means that they have to have some sort of capital. The odds are they do not have any, but let us assume they gain $10 on that. The February 1986 Budget that increased the surtax by 3 per cent, that increased this family's costs by $10, the income tax refund the Parliamentary Secretary was bragging about yesterday, all this amounts to a $150 reduction. That is true. And, finally, the 1 percent sales tax increase in the February 1986 Budget increased the whole package by 40 per cent.

Mr. Desrosiers: What is this guy bawling about again?

Mr. Boudria: I will tell the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers)—whom I welcome in this House, that I am glad to see him—that it costs that family of four an extra $255 what with the budget measures and Bill C-14.

[English]

There are those who believe that the Government needs the money. The Tories say that the Government needs the money because it is managing the Government properly. I hear some Conservative voice over there saying that they are cleaning up a mess from the past.

Mr. Siddon: Absolutely.

Mr. Boudria: I wonder if the cabinet Minister making that remark now has told his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to stop flying around with two jets—

Mr. Siddon: Don't be ridiculous.

Mr. Boudria: He just said he was concerned with the waste of taxpayers' money. I do not hear that partisan Minister saying that to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister travels with five cars. Most of us can only use one car at a time, but the Prime Minister uses five to travel around Parliament Hill. He has three or four cars with flashing lights, and a big limousine. We see King Brian going all over the place when the previous Prime Minister to whom another Member is referring used to do the same with one or two cars. If the Tories are prudent with taxpayers' money, why do they waste that money in such a way? Can the Tories tell us to whom they gave the $1 billion in the bank bail-out?

Mr. Siddon: The farmers.

Mr. Boudria: Let the record show that they do not even know to whom they gave a billion dollars of the taxpayers' money, yet the Government congratulates itself for doing what it believes is a good job.

The Government decided to build a prison and since it will use tax dollars to do so, this is relevant to the Bill we are discussing today. While a prison is usually built where it is needed, this is not necessarily the criteria that the Government used. It decided to build a prison in an area where it can get the most votes and probably decided that since the Prime Minister is in danger of losing his seat, the jail should be located in his riding. It will cost $40 million more for a prison where it is not needed and about which there is a question as to whether it is needed at all.

Mr. Siddon: It is needed.

Mr. Boudria: The prison will open in September, 1988. While there is speculation that there may be an election at that time, I say it is merely a coincidence. In order to open the prison in September, 1988, the Prime Minister must accelerate the construction of the jail that we do not need in the location where it is not required. Therefore, the Government will bypass regular contract procedures, according to the Auditor General, bypass usual mechanisms and hand out contracts right and left. Is the Government doing this because we need the facility? No. It simply seems to be a good way to spend $41 million.

If one divided the number of votes that the Prime Minister needs to be re-elected in his riding by that amount of money, I suggest that running an election in his constituency will be very expensive. There was a very appropriate cartoon in today's Ottawa Citizen which showed a prison on wheels being pulled by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) with the Prime Minister standing beside him and congratulating him for his initiative to put the prison on wheels so that it can be moved from one location to another. I hope there are wheels on the prison in Port-Cartier so that it can be moved to where it is needed because it is certainly not needed there.

I want to quote from a book entitled "Where I Stand" because it is rather interesting reading. In this book written by the Prime Minister, he states at page 44:

> How can a government call on a nation to restrain itself and to be more realistic in its collective demands upon our economy when its own record is an unbroken string of fiscal excess? Canadians may be many things, but stupid we are not. We simply will not buy leadership that so blatantly has one code of conduct for itself and quite a different one for the rest of us.

That is from the book entitled Where I Stand, written by none other than the Leader of the Conservative Party. He talks about many things. He talks about legislation such as that with which we are dealing now. I will read what he said about tax bills. Presumably, it would apply to this Bill. After all, the Prime Minister said so and one assumes he would be telling the truth. He said in his book Where I Stand on page 51:

> A simple procedural suggestion concerns the question of accountability. One of the most objectionable aspects of the budget process is that budget measures usually take effect the moment they are announced.
> I believe it should be accepted as a matter of principle that no new budget measure takes effect until it is actually passed by Parliament and given Royal assent.

I do not know about you, Madam Speaker, but I am paying those taxes right now and they have never been passed in this House. That is contrary to what is in the book written by none other than the present Prime Minister. I can only question if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was aware of the book Where I Stand.

Mr. Gagliano: Or the book "Where I Stood".

Mr. Boudria: Or should the book be appropriately retitled, as my colleague suggested, "Where I Stood"?

Circumstances sure change and being in power sure has changed this Government. It now has a moral sense which is far different from the one it used to have.

The Leader of the Conservative Party was interviewed concerning the deficit by Jason Moscovitz, a very respected journalist, on November 9, 1984. He clearly accused the Government and the Progressive Conservative Party of being inconsistent in its policies. I would love to elaborate, and if I am asked to do so by some of my colleagues in the 10-minute question or comment period, I will do so because that is a very important point and I know that you, Madam Speaker, would want to be aware of it. I thank my colleagues for the opportunity to participate in this debate and look forward to answering questions, particularly on that point.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, my friend opposite has a long reputation for going after patronage, saying it is improper and certainly leaving the impression that he himself is above that type of conduct. However, certain revelations have indicated that may not be so. I would like to read Resolution No. 7138 and ask the Hon. Member's view as to whether this would constitute patronage: "Moved by one Frank Kinney, seconded by one R. V. Friel that whereas the recreation building for Sarsfield and Vars were reconsidered and new submissions were presented in light of recommended changes to the building plans, be it resolved that Ron Morris Construction be accepted for both buildings at $48,816 for Sarsfield and $34,400 for Vars and that construction be allowed to proceed. The approval of the Vars building is subject to the donations being raised to $5,000. Yeas, Kinney, Friel, Boudria. Nay, Counsellor Macdonnell left his seat. Carried."

Mr. Blaikie: Point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) on a point of order.

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, I submit the question asked by the Hon. Member is not relevant to the debate. It has no bearing on Bill C-14. And if he has a question, I would like it to relate to the debate.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) knows he should confine his comments or questions to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). If he were to make a link, I could accept it. If not, I would have to call him out of order.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I am making the link in the sense that the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) habitually, practically every day, preaches about patronage in the most sanctimonious terms—I guess what gets me is the fact that he's so sanctimonious about it—and then we find he is no better than anyone else.

Mr. Blaikie: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member should have made the link to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott-Russell.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have made this point before and I make it again. The intent of the 10-minute question and answer period was to allow Hon. Members of Parties other than the Parties of the Hon. Member who just spoke to make a comment and to question. There has been a habit developing in the House of allowing Members of the same Party to rise when there are Members of other Parties standing to question Hon. Members, and it is about time it ended.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I had seen the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—

Mr. Blaikie: I was rising on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): —rise earlier and I did not see him rise again so I thought he had nothing to say. I will give him the floor. I agree with him that Hon. Members from other Parties should be given the right to speak and he will be next. I thought he had relinquished his wish to speak.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, you misunderstood me. I was not rising on my own behalf. Earlier when you saw me rise, I rose on a point of order with respect to what the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) had been saying. I was not seeking the floor. The point I made a moment ago, I made on behalf of Conservative Members who were seeking the floor, not on my own behalf.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, in congratulating the Hon. Member for his great speech I would like to ask him a question. Since he represents a constituency that has many well-informed consumers, I would like to know if he could describe for us the consequences all those tax increases as imposed by Bill C-14 will have, and what impact these well-hidden, well-disguised taxes will have on those well-informed consumers, considering that their purchasing power has decreased since April 1st, when those taxes were introduced.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. In the circumstances I would appreciate a short answer from the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Certainly, Madam Speaker. I will be pleased to provide a very brief answer to that very eloquent question asked by my colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

The Hon. Member asked what cumulative impact that budget measure, Bill C-14, will have on Canadians, especially those living in my riding.

I would tell him—using only a few groups, very briefly—that a family with an annual $15,000 salary will be paying $255 more. For a family earning $30,000 a year, and this I did not bring to your attention, Madam Speaker, but I know you are anxious to know, that family will have to pay an extra $630 a year. A family earning $50,000 a year will be paying $575 more. The increase is lower than for the family with a $30,000 income.

I thank the Hon. Member for asking that most pertinent question.

[English]

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, Madam Speaker, I followed with considerable interest the speech we heard a few moments ago. You have ruled on the relevance of certain material. The public at large and Hon. Members of the House are quite capable of reading the daily newspaper, page 18, and drawing their own conclusions.

The Hon. Member draws attention to the fact that there are people in the country who live below the poverty line and who are in difficulty. This is quite so, and no one disputes that fact. However, it is interesting to review some of the matters that have occurred which have assisted in adding to this number. For many years we have had increasing deficits. In fact, they amounted to tens of billions of dollars during the time that the party of the Hon. Member was in government. A series of reports by Auditors General clearly indicated that the financial management of the country was completely out of control. It was recommended again and again by these Auditors General that measures should be instituted to deal with this matter. Nothing was done until the last Auditor General's Report which was tabled in the House last week. In his report the Auditor General has said for the first time that Canadian people can genuinely have some hope that measures have been taken in terms of taking into account the serious situation and dealing with it.

With respect to spending, we have instituted means to get the deficit under control. However, the Hon. Member and his party have constantly complained about every effort we have taken to arrest the run-away spending and to properly manage the affairs of the country. The Auditor General quite properly pointed out that there are still a great many programs that require action. I hope that the Hon. Member and his colleagues will assist the process and help us to take the measures that have to be taken, not the least of which must be with respect to the multiplicity of a great many Crown corporations in which spending has been totally out of control.

I would now like to put a question to the hon. gentleman. Is he not in favour of arresting the deficit? Is he not in favour of getting the expenditures of the country under control? Everything I have heard the Hon. Member and his colleagues say seems to make the opposite case.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I am glad that we are not marking questions this afternoon. That question would certainly not rank as one of the top questions of the day.

Mr. St. Germain: These are questions and comments.

Mr. Boudria: I did not tell the Hon. Member what to ask me. Perhaps he can refrain from telling me what to answer.

Mr. Merrithew: Maybe we should ask about your resolution while you were in Council.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time set aside for questions and comments should not turn into dialogue between Members. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has the floor, and he has one minute remaining.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I will answer the question very slowly so that the Minister in the front row who was heckling will be able to understand the sense of what I am trying to tell him. No one is in favour of increasing deficits unless necessary. That is a motherhood issue. What I am against is the fact that the Government is wasting taxpayers' dollars at the same time as it is hitting below the belt the poorest families in the country. I will not apologize in the House for defending the interests of the poor people of my riding and the people with lower and medium incomes elsewhere. It is about time that the Government stopped thinking only of its rich friends and started thinking about ordinary Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Since the point of order took up some time I will allow one more question.

[Translation]

Mr. Hudon: Madam Speaker, to clarify matters I would have a question for the Hon. Member who was throwing figures at us earlier. He said we are helping only the rich, for he said earlier, as Hansard will confirm, that a single-parent family earning $20,000 will get a 2.1 per cent increase, and that, since we are helping the rich a lot, a family with a $100,000 income will get a 1.7 per cent increase. That is true. But he implied that automatically the rich were paying less because their increase was 1.7 per cent. He was saying the opposite when he stated: There is a $255 increase on $20,000 and a $630 increase on $30,000. This is helping the rich a lot. They already pay $300 more, then a $575 increase on $50,000. So he will have to repeat what he said earlier, because it is not true that with 2.1 per cent they are paying more than those with 1.7 per cent. People earning $100,000 pay much more than those earning $20,000. If he is asking for parity, let him say so.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Very briefly, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: For sure, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member speaks like a mathematics wizard when he tells the House that 1.7 per cent of $100,000 is more than 2.1 per cent of $20,000. It must have taken him a lot of time, a lot of figuring to reach that conclusion, which is quite true.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I will have a word to say whenever the unofficial debate in front of me ceases.

I would like to say a few words about taxes, which is appropriate when we are debating a Bill such as we are debating this afternoon. I thought it odd that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton) who, when commenting on what the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) had to say, had the nerve to get to his feet and talk about the so-called fiscal responsibility being displayed by the Progressive Conservative Government and to refer to the Auditor General's Report in the context of the events of the last few weeks. I say that because of what the Auditor General's Report shows, among other things. I admit that it makes something of a general comment that, over-all, matters have improved, or something along that line. But surely the thing that stands out in the Auditor General's Report is the evidence with regard to the prison in Port-Cartier. So far I have not had anything to say about that issue in the House. However, the Hon. Member by raising it gives me a chance to reply to it.

Surely, Progressive Conservatives cannot maintain on the one hand that they are making substantial progress with respect to cleaning up the type of mess that was left to us by the Liberal Party while on the other hand going to great lengths to defend a decision to relocate a prison in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding for really no other reason than the fact that it is the Prime Minister's riding. I do not think that there is a Progressive Conservative Member in the House who in his or her heart of hearts does not think that that is exactly the kind of thing that they entered into politics to eradicate. I am sure it must be very difficult for them to sit in their places day after day and have to listen to the defences of this action offerred, quite naturally, by their senior Members. It must be very difficult indeed. So I extend my sympathies to them on this occasion for the great misery in which they must find themselves, and continue to find themselves as long as this issue stays before the public, as indeed it will for some time yet.

With respect to taxes and the increases in taxes which Bill C-14 represents, I would like to say something about how I regret that taxes, even regressive taxes such as sales taxes, are not used more selectively and for other purposes. I am referring here to a matter I raised in the House, I believe just last week, with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) concerning taxes on leaded and unleaded gasoline.

In this Bill, as in others, there are opportunities for the Government to use the tax system as an instrument of other goals, in this case an ecological goal, an environmental goal. Personally, I cannot understand why. I cannot see the logic of why the Government has refused to equalize the price of leaded and unleaded gasoline through the tax system.

A great hurrah has been made about the goal of the Government to get rid of leaded gasoline by 1992. At the same time, it should be acknowledged that the Royal Society recommended to the Government in its study that this be done by 1990. Nevertheless, the Government has set 1992 as its goal. I wish it were earlier, but it is not. In the meantime, the very least that could be done, which is not a big deal, is simply to reduce the incentive that exists at the pumps for Canadians to use leaded gasoline. People are misfuelling now and using leaded gasoline when they should be using unleaded gasoline in order to save the difference between the price of leaded gasoline and unleaded gasoline. I cannot for the life of me understand why the government doesn't act on this.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) said that the continued use of leaded gasoline—and he used the words—was like arsenic in your children's food. That is not something said by some grandstanding opposition Member. That was said by the Minister of the Environment. Surely if that is the case, and I do not think that it is too extravagant an analogy, the least we could do would be to have a tax system that discouraged people from doing that type of thing. I think it bears repeating, and I will repeat it at every opportunity, that I cannot understand why the tax system is not used in that way. If we must have regressive sales taxes and other hidden taxes, why can they not at least be used for some worthy social or environmental goal?

Another one that comes to mind is the tax on recycled oil. Many things are said about conservation and the need to recycle. Yet, if my memory serves correctly, at one point there was no tax on recycled oil. Now there is. I forget when that tax came into being. I cannot even say whether it was the responsibility of the former Liberal Government or the Conservative Government. This is a tax which should be lifted so that there is an incentive to make economic the reuse of certain substances, in this case used oil, so that we do not, as a result of those types of products being uneconomic, have them dumped down the sewers, or disposed of in other environmentally unacceptable ways.

I raise those two examples. I can think of other ways in which sales taxes and other taxes could be used to make cheaper those things which would be environmentally better for people to use, and to make more expensive those things which are damaging to the environment. That in the end is not the solution. I acknowledge that it simply means that those who can afford it can continue to do the environmentally damaging thing, and those who cannot will through the tax system be forced to be more responsible than they otherwise might.

I do not suggest it as a total solution, but I do suggest it as a way of doing things which a Progressive Conservative Government in particular might embrace. It is comparable to a market mechanism. It still leaves the choice with people, rather than doing what those awful socialists might do and making it impossible for people to do the wrong thing by legislating against it. I say to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker), who is in the chair now, who is known for his rants against the socialists, that I am making a suggestion to him and to his colleagues that I think should find some favour with them. I cannot understand why they do not take those opportunities in the tax system to do that.

With respect to the tax system and tax reform, I wish to say that I cannot believe that we will get from a Progressive Conservative Government the kind of tax reform that I for one, and my colleagues as well, would really call tax reform in a genuine way. I will say why. It is because of the way the Conservatives believe the economy ought to be organized, and certain things that they believe about society. One of the most disappointing days of my life in the House—and I have been here seven and a half years now—was the day when the Minister of Finance introduced his first Budget. He was reading through his Budget Speech, and when he came to the point where he announced the $500,000 lifetime exemption—

Mr. Blaikie: That is just exactly what I was going to refer to. The Minister of Finance announced the $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption and the whole Tory caucus erupted into applause, as if that was the highlight of their political career, and as if that was the thing for which all of them had entered politics. Finally, the goal had been achieved. Finally, people who had $500,000 would be able to escape taxes on their capital gains.

I said to myself, what is wrong with the type of Government we have? What is so profoundly sick about the Progressive Conservative Party that that is the type of thing, out of all the other things that the Minister of Finance had to say that day, that would bring them to their feet; that would cause them to give a unanimous ovation to the Minister of Finance. People who had $500,000 in capital gains would be able to avoid paying taxes. I thought to myself, how many of my constituents are clapping at that announcement? How many of my constituents have $500,000 that they have made on some type of capital gain that they are now glad they do not have to pay taxes on? I can tell you very, very few of them. Yet, those are the people for whom the special emotion of the Progressive Conservative caucus is reserved on the day of a Budget Speech. That was the same Budget Speech in which the Progressive Conservatives announced that they were going to do away with the indexing of the Old Age Security.

That is why I have absolutely no expectation whatsoever that there will be any genuine tax reform coming out of the Progressive Conservative Party. It defies the imagination that genuine, progressive tax reform could come out of imaginations so warped and sick that they could cheer and find as the highlight of the Budget Speech the fact that people who had a $500,000 gain in capital gains were going to go without being taxed.

An Hon. Member: Shame, shame!

Mr. Blaikie: The Minister of Finance said that the problem with this country is there is not enough rich people in it. You can imagine what kind of tax reform we are going to get when the Minister of Finance believes that the problem with the country is that there are not enough rich people. I say that the problem with this country is that there is a diminishing number of middle income people. It is also a problem that there are too many poor people. One of the problems we do not have, as far as I am concerned, is that there are not enough rich people.

We have a situation both in Canada and the United States—I think it is actually more advanced in the United States—where the middle class is declining and growing smaller through the elimination of well-paid union jobs and some of the older industries in which people were paid a fair and decent wage. What is happening now is an increase in the disparities between the bottom of our income strata and the top. That group in the middle is getting smaller and smaller.

We often hear from the Government that jobs are being created, but what kind of jobs are being created? They are part-time jobs and jobs that do not pay as much as some of the old jobs that have disappeared. We are looking forward to a time when even more of those less well paying jobs will be created as part of the free trade package and part of other so-called competitive efficiencies being introduced into our economy.

I remind the Progressive Conservative Government of the old Aristotelian dictum—if we want to prevent revolution, the best way to do it is to have a large middle class. This is an insight which goes back to Aristotle. It may not be that we are at the point of talking about preventing revolution. However, if we want to prevent disparity, tension, and social fragmentation, which will eventually come but is present to some extent as a result of the disappearance of the middle class and of the continuing and growing numbers of poor, the Conservative Government should look less for more rich people. It should look less for people with $500,000 from some kind of capital gain. It should look more to preserving the incomes and lifestyles of middle income Canadians and to increasing those of the poor.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I should like to make a couple of comments vis-à-vis the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) about the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. Of course the House realizes that everything above $500,000 is taxable. What does he think a $500,000 capital gain means to Conrad Black, the Eaton family, or other wealthy people? They will pay taxes over and above that amount. Also, I would ask him what that $500,000 exemption means for people like him and I or eastern Europeans in my riding who came to Canada from countries where they were locked into an economic system, usually socialist, and a cultural system from which they could not break out? They could not purchase a piece of land or build up a small business in order to obtain their own capital. Those people know that this is the best system, what is generally called a capitalist system.

This party brought in a minimum tax for the rich, to make them pay their fair share. The significance of the $500,000 capital gains exemption is very important. It permits people to build their own pension plans. If the socialists were in power, everyone would be dependent upon and under the thumb of the Government because they would not have been provided with an opportunity to build up an estate. When young men and women reach retirement age, they can have $500,000 and they can tell the Government to get out of their life. They can say: "Stay out of my life; I will set my own freedom for myself and my family". That is why it is so important.

Also the Hon. Member talked about the middle class. I agree that the middle class has diminished in some countries. All socialist countries do not have a middle class. Some Third World countries have a small very rich class and a huge poor class. The reason for this is that they had deficits. They permitted their Governments to get them into deficit positions which led to inflation and an adjustment at the end. It is NDP deficits which lead to the loss of the middle class, and under NDP Governments they would never have a $500,000 exemption.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, the theory offered by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills would make some sense if at any time the NDP had been in power in the United States where the problem of a diminishing middle class is even more aggravated than it is in Canada. If the Hon. Member wants to maintain, as I have heard him maintain before, that everyone to the left of the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills is a socialist, the theory holds true. I know he also thinks on occasion that many in his caucus are socialists just by virtue of the fact that they are to his left. If one's imagination is great enough, one can have an internal coherence theory, and the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills has that kind of imagination.

I will turn to the question of capital gains. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party repeatedly misrepresent the position taken by the NDP on capital gains. We have not been against people who have established the kind of estate about which the Hon. Member talked—small-businessmen and farmers. We have not argued that capital gains tax should be necessarily applied in a universal way. If the Government was concerned about giving that kind of break to people who have come to Canada—and they do not have to be recent immigrants; they can be people whose families have been here for hundreds of years—why did it not make a distinction between those people and people who make $500,000 by investing on the stock market, selling a yacht, turning over condominiums in Florida, or various other things which are not nation building. It has nothing to do with the Canadian economy, estate building, or thriving on the freedom of Canada which people have been glad to find when they arrive here. For that matter, it has nothing to do with capitalism. We could still have capitalism and have a capital gains tax. Let us not kid each other.

Why did the Government not make a distinction between farmers and small-businessmen who deserve a break and the people who are making $500,000 on the stock market, selling condominiums in Florida, or turning over their yachts?

Mr. Thacker: Could I make a very brief response, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will allow the Hon. Member a very short response.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, the point the Hon. Member misses is that the right to a $500,000 capital gains is a personal right by virtue of being a citizen of Canada. When people come to Canada or are born in this country, they have a right to that capital gains. Whether they choose to use it on yachts, houses, or farms, it is a personal privilege. Everything above the $500,000 has a capital gains attached to it. It is a fundamental right acknowledged by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. People have a fundamental right to property, and it is not a right which the NDP would give them. The NDP would take it away from them.

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He mentioned tax reform in his speech, and I am very interested in it. In his announcement in the House, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that the scope of the tax reform was to reduce personal income taxes, to increase corporate taxes, and to increase consumer taxes. However, in the Budget of May, 1985 and the one of February, 1986 we saw the opposite—increased personal income taxes, reduced corporate taxes, and increased sale and excise taxes. Does the Hon. Member believe that the Minister of Finance is really interested in tax reform? Who is kidding whom?

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member makes a good point. There is no reason to believe, on the basis of past practice, that we can count on the Government to engage in the kind of tax reform it would like the Canadian public to believe it is willing to consider.

Turning to something the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills said, he seemed to argue that a capital gains tax exemption was a basic human right according to the UN. It is interesting to hear Hon. Members on the right wing of the Conservative Party quoting the UN. Normally they see the United Nations as some kind of conspiracy for world government and other nasty things. In any event, I am told that the President of the United States just signed into law many measures to eliminate capital gains tax exemptions. I hope the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills will be using his lively imagination very soon to adjust his political vision, so that even Ronald Reagan will be found to the left of the Hon. Member and even he will have joined the socialist hordes.

Mr. Holtmann: Madam Speaker, I do not know how much time is remaining in the question and comment period, but I could not help becoming involved in this discussion. If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) would check, I am sure he would find that there are many people in his riding who are very pleased by the capital gains tax exemption. Farmers did not have the same privilege as those who owned homes in urban centres and could sell their homes capital gains tax free. Over the course of 30 or 40 years, there was a fair amount of inflation in many areas. Urban dwellers had that right but farmers never did. In many cases, if a farmer passed his farm on to his son, there was nothing left for him. The capital gains tax exemption was the most welcome news for farmers. I never heard one iota of criticism about that exemption.

The capital gains tax exemption rectified a situation that was so negative before. In the past, a farmer could not pass his farm on to his son because he would not be left with enough. He would sell it to someone else who had speculative ideas or to a foreign investor because he had to calculate all the tax he had to pay after selling the farm while leaving himself enough money on which to retire. He did not want anything from the Government. He did not want social programs. He was willing to do it on his own. That is the philosophy of this Government and a lot of people believe in it.

The capital gains tax exemption was a very effective measure and I am sure the people of the Hon. Member's riding appreciated it. Perhaps one could say that the number is too high, but as my hon. friend indicated, that is the farmer's fundamental right.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I will give the Hon. Member time to answer.

Mr. Blaikie: Madame Speaker, the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) has made a very eloquent defence of a measure designed to help farmers and small businessmen. He indicated himself that $500,000 was perhaps a little on the high side for such a measure. However, it is true that such measures ought to be put in place, and this is not the only one. There are other ways to ensure the survival of the family farm and the ability of farmers to turn over their land to their children. I believe that is a good idea and I have never spoken against it. I made it very clear when I responded to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) that I was not against it.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Madam Speaker, this being my first opportunity to do so while you are in the Chair, I want to congratulate you for assuming this responsibility and wish you well in your new duties.

Madam Speaker, anyone dealing with Bill C-14 might be tempted to suggest that this piece of legislation, like so many others, will have an impact, that it has both positive and negative aspects. Still I wonder whether Hon. Members are really aware of the actual impact this Bill will have on the average taxpayer, on families, and on indivuduals. If we contrast the provisions of Bill C-14 with the figures the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) gave us in his February 26 document entitled "Budget Papers", on page 53, we can readily appreciate to what extent Canadian taxpayers will be hard hit by this legislation over the next few years.

This Bill is not even 15 page long, but do you realize the heavy load it will lay on the shoulders of Canadian taxpayers during the years indicated by the Minister of Finance? What it means is that Canadians, men and women alike, will have to pay $6 billion more between now and 1990. For this year alone, 1986, an additional load of $820 million: the 1 per cent increase in the sales tax will cost Canadian taxpayers $700 million, the increase in taxes on alcohol another $125 million, and two minor changes will translate into an additional $5 million reduction. Which means that altogether these additional taxes will amount to $820 million as a result of Bill C-14 now under consideration.

The year 1986 was incomplete from the fiscal point of view and yet we will have to pay $820 million in additional taxes. Madam Speaker, in 1987 which will be a complete year under Bill C-14, we will have to pay an additional $1.2 billion in taxes. In 1988, this amount will reach $1.275 billion and $1.455 billion in 1990 for a total of over $6 billion, $6.1 billion to be precise.

Madam Speaker, therefore to say that this bill is significant for Canadian taxpayers is obviously an understatement which goes to prove how much of an impact government decisions have upon the taxpayer.Madam Speaker, I would like to add that although Bill C-14 alone will considerably increase the fiscal burden of Canadian taxpayers, we must not forget about two other decisions taken by this government since coming to power. Based on the figures I have just mentioned and which were taken from page 53 of the Budget Papers published on February 26, I have been able to show that a 1 per cent sales tax increase will bring revenues in 1986 of some $700 million, and of $1 billion for a whole year.

If we add to Bill C-14 the impact of the two measures previously announced and adopted, which means another 2 per cent, as, since the Conservative Government has come into power, the sales tax has increased by 3 per cent, 1 per cent as provided in Bill C-14 and another 2 per cent of increase approved by the Conservative majority in this House, this means another $2 billion a year.

This means that in federal sales taxes alone, if we add the impact of Bill C-14 to that of the two previous measures adopted by the Conservative majority, Canadians will have to pay an additional $2.7 billion in 1986. The same applies to 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990. According to the figures tabled by the Minister and according to conservative estimates, which reflect the Government's philosophy, for the excise tax alone, we have to add another $5 billion, or $1 billion a year multiplied by two, since there was a 2 per cent increase, which means $10 billion.

The amount of taxes, approved without any fuss in many cases, is incredible, and if the Opposition did not take the time to call the attention of Canadians to these matters, many people would not realize what they are paying in taxes and the effect that this can have on their purchasing power. These are decisions made by the Conservative Government.

Madam Speaker, there has been a lot of talk in the last half hour about the jobs created this month. We have heard that it was thanks to the action of the Conservative Government that these jobs were created.

I would like to point out respectfully, Madam Speaker, that when the Conservative Party was elected in 1984, economic recovery had already been underway for a few years, due to a great extent to the international context. After the crisis of 1982, we were beginning to see very positive results. This was illustrated by the review used by our friends opposite and published by the OECD.

If we look at the cumulative effect of the Budgets tabled in this House in May 1985 and February 1986, we find that what we had forecast on this side of this House is now happening. In other words, the taxation activity of the Conservative Government is stifling the economic recovery which was strongly underway in late 1983 and early 1984. We have said that the combined impact of the two budgets introduced by the Conservatives would be to slow down the Canadian economy so much that it would have a hard time recovering from it. I said, in a previous speech in this House, that it took between 12 and 18 months before the effects of a budget on the economy, whether they are positive or negative, could be measured, because the economy has to absorb these kind of fiscal measures and it cannot be done overnight.

When we look at what happened to job creation since the beginning of 1986, we realize that, unfortunately, we had every right to blow the whistle, to warn the Government of the extremely serious consequences of its budgetary measures on the Canadian economy. The figures published in early September, I believe, showed that since the beginning of 1986, there had been a net loss in Canada of 17,000 jobs. The newest figures, published recently, showed some degree of recovery and, so far this year, the net loss of 17,000 has turned into a net gain of 15,000 jobs. That is 15,000 jobs for the whole Canadian economy between the months of January and September inclusively. I submit that it is largely due to these fiscal measures.

Madam Speaker, we were told, and I heard it from my hon. friends on the Government side when they talked about the deficit... You have, like myself and all my colleagues, participated in the 1984 electoral campaign. During that campaign I heard speeches from and had face to face debates with candidates. Some have been appointed president of Crown corporations and travel by rail. However, I think that he is competent and I do not want to draw any attention on this matter. I did take part in those debates. I was then told that the Government's deficit was a real one but it was immediately added that it would be entirely counterproductive to increase taxes because economic growth would be stifled.

When I was in debates with more or less important candidates of the Conservative Party, I realized that those people were merely repeating what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had said that is it would be counterproductive to increase taxes.

A few months after they were elected, conditions had entirely changed and taxing the Canadian economy had almost become a stimulus for economic growth. In my questions or answers and during my debates with the Minister of Finance, I was asking him: "Do you intend to tax the Canadian economy to the extent that such taxes will weigh very heavily on its development?"

Unfortunately, we realize today that we were right and that the Conservative candidates who were repeating the statements made by the Minister of Finance were indeed giving the Canadian people an entirely different direction than that taken by the Government since September 4, 1984.

Madam Speaker, the sales tax I refer to could be considered on a line with the increases for alcohol and tobacco, but as I said earlier, if we add it all up, it means $16 billion in new taxes by 1991 or 1990. For this year alone, it means $2.82 billion, just in sales tax.

Madam Speaker, I would like to compare these facts with the speech the Minister made recently in the House, where he spoke about tax reform. The Minister said that he wanted to make the tax system fairer and more equitable and so forth, the kind of scenario an academic might give you on the subject. We asked him to be more specific. Unfortunately, it was impossible to get more specific information in the House, either from the Minister of Finance or from the Minister of State (Finance).

For more information on the Government's tax policies, we have to go back to July 18 and to the beginning of September, when the present Minister of Finance made his speech in Washington. I forget the exact date, I think it was September 8 or 9. In both speeches, the message was as follows: first, increase corporate taxes and reduce personal income tax. In his Washington message, as though the Minister were afraid to tell Canadians outright from his seat in the House, on television where everyone could see him, in any event he told us, albeit in Washington, that one of the Government's tax reform proposals would be to impose a new tax, a transaction tax that would apply not only to businesses but to all manufacturing enterprises, to the whole service industry. This means paying a tax when you go to the hairdresser, Madam Speaker, or, in my case, when I get a haircut, and when your notary or lawyer or accountant provides a service, there will be a tax—

Mr. Prud'homme: When you go to Mass!

Mr. Garneau: —as my hon. friend says, I hope they are not going to tax masses and religious services in our churches. However, this tax is intended to cover every production activity.

If we consider the statements made to the press on July 18 and the speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in Washington—I am of course referring to the Minister of Finance of Canada and what he said in Washington—and we draw a parallel with what appears on pages 52 and 53 of the Budget Papers of February 26, Madam Speaker, I would say that even someone with the best of intentions who would set out to make a purely objective analysis of the Government's policy, well that person would be in for a big surprise, because after trying to make a completely impartial judgment of the Minister's statements, this person would fail to understand why, ever since September 4, 1984, the Government's tax measures have been the exact opposite of what was said by the Minister on July 18 and in his speech in Washington.

I have just spoken about the sales tax and the philosophy it reflects. Now, I would like to say a few words about two other matters, personal income tax and measures affecting corporations.

If we look only at the effects of the 1986 Budget—I am setting aside for now the 1985 Budget, which resulted in an increase of billions of dollars because of the partial de-indexing of taxation tables and the 5 and 10 per cent surtax applied to Canadian taxpayers—if we look only at the effect of the Budget brought down on February 26, 1986, we find that the cumulative effect of this Budget on personal income tax will be a net increase of $100 million in 1986, $700 million in 1987, $800 million in 1988, something over $800 million in 1989 and $900 million in 1990. We therefore have an increase of $3.3 billion in personal income tax.

I trust that no one will be shocked to learn by how much corporate income taxes will increase during the same period. The increase will amount to $240 million in 1986, $270 million in 1987, $80 million in 1988, $175 million in 1989, and $50 million in 1990. Here again, Mr. Speaker, the impact on corporations is not due to any change which might have increased corporate income taxes. It is due only to the structural effect of the measures announced by the Conservative Government. In other words, the 3 per cent inventory allowance was suddenly removed, which represents a substantial and immediate tax increase. However, since this is compensated by a decrease in tax rates, the net effect mentioned by the Minister of Finance, either directly or through his officials, would be nil. In other words, the impact of the February 26, 1986 Budget on individuals will be a $3 billion increase, whereas in the case of corporations, taking into account the consequences I have just mentioned, will be something less than $1 billion, and in the long term it will have no effect at all. In a nutshell, here is what the Minister of Finance has done since he took over on the advent of the Mulroney Government: direct and indirect taxes on individuals have increased considerably, $3 billion in personal income tax in the February 1986 Budget alone, not to mention the share these same taxpayers have to fork over in federal sales tax when they buy Canadian made goods. In the meantime corporate taxes went down, so when the Minister of Finance comes into the House to make a statement on tax reform and pretends that the purpose of the whole exercise is equity, neutrality, justice and what have you—the kind of words we find in any dictionary and hear from the pulpit, on Sundays usually—we can see that it is the other way around altogether.

So why now? Madam Speaker, you will understand why we on this side of the House, and I especially, have tried on several occasions to have the Minister of Finance come clean and tell us exactly just where he is leading us with his tax reform. I asked questions about the surtax or the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. I tried to find out which exemptions he wanted to abolish to lighten the onus of tax legislation on Canadian taxpayers. We could not get answers! How can we enter upon a loyal, bona fide discussion with this Government when the only reference we can use is the impact of the May 1985 Budget and the February 1986 Budget that are completely—as far apart as the North Pole and the South Pole, with all that difference between the two.

Madam Speaker, if you add the additional effect on personal income tax, the impact of the May 1985 Budget, the cumulative effect by the end of 1990 would not be $3.3 billion, but many more billions of dollars. This is why you will understand easily that on this side of the House we will oppose Bill C-14. We will vote against it. We are going to use all available means to draw the Canadian taxpayer's attention to the most harmful effects of this legislation. Not only are they harmful as such, but they are totally at odds with the statements made by the Minister of Finance on July 18, in his Washington speech.

Madam Speaker, you may rest assured that not only here but also in committee my colleagues will question the Government and find out the actual impact of each clause of this Bill which is of such consequence for the Canadian taxpayers.

• (1730)

Mr. Harvey: Madam Speaker, fortunately the speech made by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) will certainly not create any upheaval in my area. This Member belongs to a party that has led this country to the brink of economic disaster over a very short period. We know full well that in 1968-1970 the national debt was about $15, $17 billion, and in a matter of years it had gone through the $200-billion mark, and after creating something like 400 Crown corporations, many of which are in financial difficulty, I would be pleased to ask the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, in view of the fact that the Liberal Party is experiencing tremendous difficulty in reaching a consensus on important matters, on the constitutional issue on which they are so divided, on the matter of free trade talks with the Americans, where they are again deeply divided, I would like to know whether we may expect the Liberal Party to reach a consensus on the major tax reform this Government is getting ready to work on and about which it is getting ready to consult major agencies in Canada.

I would like to know from the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) whether for once the Liberal Party of Canada, a supposedly responsible party, will find a way to write down and publish something articulated on tax reform. I would be pleased to read it, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, I indicated earlier that I was willing to approach a tax reform as fairly and objectively as I could. But I ask the Hon. Member who put the question: What should I take a stand on since nothing has been brought forward?

All we had from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is what I would call a motherhood and apple pie statement. There was no concrete proposal.

I could return the question to the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi and ask what response could we give to the Business Council on National Issues, which recommends to the government to abolish the $500,000 exemption on capital gains tax.

Our stand has been from the beginning that this exemption is unfair.

Madam Speaker, what the Conservative have been saying about the deficit would make me laugh if it were not such a serious matter, because when I campaigned with my colleagues in 1984, we said we could not make foolish electoral promises considering the financial situation Canada was in as a result of the worldwide economic recession we experienced in 1981 and 1982. The hardship was felt not only in Canada but everywhere in the United States and in European countries, and the whole western world went through an economic crisis.

Perhaps I may answer his question with a question: Is the Conservative Party suggesting that in order to keep the deficit down during the recession in 1981-82, when thousands and thousands of workers were being affected, it would have been better for the Government to ignore these people, to make budget cuts and cut unemployment insurance and leave those unfortunates who lost their jobs as a result of the recession to their own devices? Is that their way of developing the economy and at the same time making their policies reflect a measure of social justice?

Personally, I think the decisions made in 1981-82 that had an impact on the deficit were decisions that had to be made. With hindsight, perhaps we would have done certain things differently. But the fact remains that there was every justification for government intervention.

And I would like to put the same question to the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi. Considering the economic recovery that started in 1983, halfway through 1983 and accelerated in 1984, when we had a GNP growth of 4.5 or 5 per cent, I want to ask him why, after almost three years of economic recovery, this Conservative Government which was going to solve all our problems has, in three years, managed to add $100 billion to the national debt?

You say it was $200 billion. For the last full year under the Liberal Government, our total national debt was $160 billion, and in three years you will have added $100 billion to that amount. Which means, dividing $100 billion by $260 billion, an increase of 50 per cent. However, I think all this is beside the point, not only as far as Bill C-14 is concerned but also if we consider the realities of our economy.

Look at the United States. There we have a President who was elected in 1980, when he promised to fight the deficit. This year, the United States will have the biggest deficit the U.S. economy has ever had, namely $220 billion.

That is why I wouldn't mind getting into some of the more detailed aspects, such as free trade and the party's position, and whenever the Minister and the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi care to have a debate on the subject, I am ready and willing. For the time being, however, we are talking about Bill C-14, and its effects not just on the Canadian economy but on the taxpayer, and I am ready for any other questions within that context.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides referred to a document, "Business Council and National Issues", published in October 1986. I want to quote from this document because it is rather interesting, since this is not a Liberal document, but a paper which comes from a politically independent group. I quote from page 1:

• (1740)

"To begin with, many fear that the present tax system is having an adverse effect on job-creation and ultimately on our standard of living".

[Translation]

And further on:

[English]

"The current tax system was identified as an obstacle to growth and reform of the tax system was seen as an important dimension of economic renewal".

[Translation]

In his remarks the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides described the impact of the February 1986 Budget. Of course he refrained or did not want to tack onto the economic document of 1984 and the 1985 Budget the cumulative effects of these Budgets.

I wonder if he would share his views with us and tell us what were the cumulative effects of those three Budgets, those of 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Garneau: If we consider the cumulative effects, Madam Speaker, the figures are so high that an observer who has not read the small print in the legislation that have been passed and who is not familiar with the two Budgets might think that the Member of the Official Opposition is juggling with figures which do not make sense and are beyond reality. On the contrary, and I want to assure all those who are listening here in the House or watching television that the figures are for real. The cost in 1986-87, the cumulative effect of the two Budgets represents a little over $5 billion for Canadian taxpayers. This includes the 3 per cent de-indexation in the tax tables, the 3 per cent surplus, $570 million. There was a 5 and 10 per cent surtax which Conservative Members may have chosen to ignore and, if we combine this with the elimination of the 1973 tax exemption, we are looking at another $1 billion. Then twice there was a 1 per cent sales tax, good for something like $2 billion, and a few other changes. But if we consider the full impact of the 1985 and 1986 Budgets, along with some of the decisions announced in 1984 in the early stages of the Conservative mandate, we end up with a total of $5 billion over a single year.

When the Business Council and National Issue deals with this matter, I have to admit to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier that indeed it is quite a realistic approach. If we were to sum up this document we realize that the—and this is supposed to represent big business. The mouthpiece of the capitalists. I am beginning to wonder whether, from an ideological standpoint, the Conservative Members and the Conservative Government might not stand to the right of the major Canadian corporations.

Do you know what major Canadian corporations are recommending? That the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption be abolished, and the ones who are making this recommendation are those who could benefit from this exemption since they can make investments which will bring them capital gains. It is not someone with an income of $15,000 or $20,000 who can afford to invest in the stock market and have capital gains.

Another interesting aspect of this is that the Conservative Government has announced changes to pension plans as concerns what can be invested in registered retirement savings plans. This system is also helpful. I have nothing against investing in RRSP's. But what people tell us is that such measures benefit the wealthy more than the poor and that a policy which has just been announced should now be changed to make it more equitable. This should be replaced by tax credits.

Madam Speaker, the question asked by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier was very relevant and it gave me an opportunity to add a few comments to what I said some minutes ago.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating a set of proposals by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It is the same Minister of Finance who is now talking about bringing in a fairer tax system.

These proposals are the latest in a series of tax measures brought in by the Government and the Minister which have increased the sales and excise taxes and have cost every family in this country $1,300 since the Government took office.

Let me tell the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann), who intervened in this debate to defend the $500,000 exemption on capital gains, that for every one of his constituents who will benefit from that measure, he has 100 or 200 constituents who cannot afford to pay that $1,305 increase in family taxes which the Government has imposed.

I want to say something to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker). First, he should keep the record straight. He said that socialist countries have no middle class. I am certain that he would want to make it clear that he was talking about communist countries in eastern Europe. Countries in western Europe, beginning with Scandinavian countries like Sweden, Denmark and Norway, and going down through West Germany, Holland, Belgium, Great Britain, France, Italy, Spain and Portugal all had, have or will have social democratic Governments. All of those countries have very wealthy people and a middle class that is alive and well. All of those countries allocate a greater part of their Gross National Product to social security and health. All of them have less poor people than Canada.

Mr. Daubney: Not true. Portugal.

Mr. Orlikow: Just look at any of the OECD reports and you will see that except for Spain, Portugal and Italy which are poorer than Canada—

Mr. Daubney: Okay.

Mr. Orlikow: Those facts are correct. Spain, Portugal and Italy are doing much better than before. We should keep the record straight.

We should keep the record straight with respect to taxation. After listening to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills I think he would call anyone to the left of Genghis Kahn a socialist. He should be current and understand what has happened in the last month in the United States, which has its most conservative president in 50 years. They have turned their tax system around and have cut the rate of corporation taxes and the rate for personal income taxes, without increasing excise taxes but by closing the loopholes on corporate taxes and personal income taxes.

The Hon. Member talked about capital gains tax. We have made it very clear that we do not oppose farmers and small business people being able to turn their farms and their businesses over to their children without having to pay capital gains tax. I point out to the Hon. Member that in its most recent tax change bills, the United States has increased rather than decreased the rate at which people pay taxes on any capital gains they make. The Hon. Member should at least be current and look for advice from the very people whom he has lauded so often.

We are opposed to this Bill because it continues the process which the Government began when it took office. In November of 1984, the Minister of Finance in his economic statement announced an increase of 1 per cent in federal sales tax. That is something the Liberals had proposed and the Conservatives had opposed when they were in opposition. The petroleum compensation charge was increased.

• (1750)

In his May 1985 Budget, the Minister of Finance increased the federal sales tax by another 1 per cent effective January 1, 1986. He increased the excise tax on gasoline. He implemented a new excise tax of 2 cents per litre on diesel and aviation fuel. He broadened the federal sales tax base to include candy, confectionary, soft drinks and pet food. I wonder what he has against the kids who like candy? He increased the excise tax on tobacco and on alcohol.

In his Budget of February 1986, the Minister of Finance increased the federal sales tax as of April 1, 1986 by another 1 per cent. He increased the excise tax on tobacco and on alcohol. We have calculated that those tax increases cost every family $1,305.

At the same time, the Minister of Finance was permitting, as has the United States for many years, some of the largest corporations in the United States and Canada to get away without paying any sales tax at all. The Citizens for Tax Justice in the United States has compiled its annual list of corporate taxpayers or what they call "corporate free-loaders". It is no surprise to me that not only are many of the top 10 corporate free-loaders not paying any taxes but are receiving tax rebates. They are getting money back.

The top 10 companies in the United States had a profit of $39.6 billion from 1982 to 1985 and received a rebate of $1.5 billion for an effective tax rate of minus 3.8 per cent. I would like to put on the record some of those companies. Boeing Company between 1980 and 1985 made profits of $2.25 billion. It received a tax rebate of $121 million. Pepsi Cola received a rebate of $89.3 million. DuPont received a tax rebate of $179 million. Texaco received a tax rebate of $68 million. International Paper received a tax rebate of $59.8 million.

The Government is congratulating itself because it sold—I believe it gave—de Havilland to Boeing. Boeing in the United States, as I indicated, paid no corporate tax at all. I am worried that Boeing in Canada will be permitted by the Minister of Finance and the Government to do in Canada what it did in the United States, that is pay no taxes at all.

We must ask the Minister of Finance if that is the kind of fair tax system he talks about. The illustrations I have given about what has happened in the United States can be duplicated over and over again in Canada. Our research tells us that there are a whole host of companies, some of them the largest corporations in Canada, which in the five years from 1980 to 1985 paid no taxes at all in at least one of those years. Let me detail some of these corporations.

The Royal Bank and the Bank of Montreal paid no taxes at all. There is not an employee of either of those banks who has not paid income tax, but the companies they work for have made hundreds of millions of dollars in profits and paid no taxes at all. The Hudson's Bay Company, the Thompson financial interest, is among the largest and wealthiest groups in the world. It owns oil companies, newspapers, television stations, and retail stores, yet paid no taxes at all. The Power Corporation and some of its groups, and the Investors' Group, paid no taxes at all in at least one of five years I mentioned. I could go on and on, Madam Speaker. I am sure Conservative Members of Parliament know a good deal more about the Roman Corporation and Mr. Roman than I do. He has become one of the wealthiest people in Canada. I do not object to his doing well if he is aggressive and clever and adds something, as he does, to the productive capacity of this country. However, I think that as long as ordinary citizens, some of them making very little over the minimum wage, have to pay income taxes and the kinds of sales and excise taxes I have talked about, it is only fair to say to Mr. Roman, and to the hundreds like Mr. Roman, that they should be paying their fair share of the taxes as well. We have not seen any desire on the part of the Minister of Finance or his Government to do that. What we have seen again and again is increases in taxes, many of them hidden. We are now talking about a business transfer tax, which is another form of sales tax but even more regressive than the previous sales taxes.

We have seen increases in taxes, usually hidden, as often as the Minister of Finance can figure out how to do it, which adds to the burden of the ordinary citizen, which cuts down on the real incomes and living standards of ordinary Canadians while at the same time encouraging and permitting those at the top to live ever better and better.

It is our intention, which will come as no surprise to Conservative Members of Parliament, to oppose this tax measure which we believe to be regressive and unfair, and we will continue to urge the people of Canada to demand a tax system which will be fair and one which will get the revenue the Government needs to provide the services from those who are best able to pay. The proposal contained in this Bill does the exact opposite. As we have done in the past and will do in the future, we intend to oppose and vote against passage of this Bill.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF FUNDING. (B) BASIC RESEARCH FUNDING. (C) SCIENTISTS EMPLOYED BY COUNCIL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, on October 16 I asked the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) if the $20 million being cut from the National Research Council could be restored. Many of the programs of the National Research Council have been cut because of the desire of the Government to reduce the deficit. It seemed to me to be a modest request given the significance of the work carried on by the NRC and the manner in which the Government spends its money in other areas.

One can ask which is more important, spending $41 million more to move a prison to Port-Cartier or spending $20 million to keep NRC at a minimum strength to continue its programs. This question has been asked of me a number of times in a number of different ways. Why, for example, could not $20 million be found in the $1 billion for research for the universities which the Government keeps talking about?

This is a valid question, and one which the Government should seriously answer. As more persons become aware of what is happening at the NRC, they will see that panic cuts are shutting down entire programs in which huge amounts of capital have been invested in the past. This is no way to wind down research. It severely undercuts the resources available to the nation in terms of scientific expertise.

We know already that we will be losing a world-class observatory at Algonquin Park, and that the electromagnetic engineering section of NRC is being closed down despite its clear record of achievement in health areas that the Minister of State for Science and Technology said he would protect. We will know more about the effects of these cuts in the days ahead. In fact, each day brings a new horror story of how Canada is losing out again in an area in which the Government has promised major improvements in national performance in scientific research and development. After all, the Government promised that it would move to devoting 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product to scientific research and development.

The question I asked also raised the question of Dr. John Polanyi, our new Nobel Laureate in Chemistry, who began his distinguished career in Canada in post-doctoral work at the NRC. The Minister's response to my inquiry about giving future Canadian researchers the same opportunity that Dr. Polanyi had was to beg the question by saying that Dr. Polanyi had not worked for the NRC for some time and that he is now a professor at the University of Toronto.

The facts are these. Dr. Polanyi began his career in Canada. He came from Great Britain to the NRC. His lab is now being shut down as a direct result of these cuts. Dr. Polanyi greatly enjoyed his time at the NRC. In his own words: "It was a great place to do science". Dr. Polanyi now has great doubts about Canada's will or ability to support research. He said that if he were starting today: "I think I would go to the United States." Nothing could be more clear-cut about our decline in the eyes of those who know research work best.

It does no good for the Minister to say that Dr. Polanyi has endorsed the policies of this Government because he has not yet moved to the United States. Other universities have felt the brain-drain acutely, and it will be accelerating. When one examines it, the Government's five-year, $1 billion plan for university research means that matching grants from industry must fund additional research, otherwise funds for research are frozen and will decline.

No doubt Dr. Polanyi will have no trouble obtaining research funding now. But what about the future Polanyi's? What private sector corporation will have the wisdom and the funds to back them when they are unknowns trying to get started, as so many of them are?

For these and many other reasons I must go back to my first question. Will the Government find a fairly small amount—$20 million—so that valuable research and development in the national interest at the National Research Council can continue? Without it we may be at a research point of no return.

It is a final irony that the one university which seems to be suffering the most from lack of research funding is the University of Waterloo, a university which entered new fields of computer technology. Yet it is the whole nation which is watching and which will suffer from the Waterloo which the Government has reached in scientific research.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member, Dr. Polanyi worked at the National Research Council for two years ending in 1954. He then moved to the University of Toronto where most of his research was performed with extensive assistance from the Natural Science and Engineering Research Council. The success of his work there demonstrates the strength of supporting pure research at the universities.

The decision to scale down the NRC laboratory dealing with photochemistry and kinetics was made by the NRC's Executive Council after careful consideration of all programs. The photochemistry program at NRC has been wound down over the last decade as the science and technology has been transferred to industry and universities. Dr. Polanyi is himself an example of this development.

It should be remembered that Dr. Polanyi's connection with the laboratory is now 32 years old. He joined the laboratory in 1952 after completing his PhD. at the university of Manchester in England and worked there for two years before moving to the University of Toronto. While there he received increasing support from government granting programs. In fact, this year with $220,000 he is the largest single recipient of a research operating grant in the whole country.

The important thing we can learn from this is that world class basic research was done at a university with government support. This demonstrates the vitality of the government approach of supporting pure research at the universities. Basic research at the universities can be effective.

The Government wants to foster basic research at the universities because the graduate students involved in this effort come away with the most up-to-date experience possible. In many ways, it may be easier to perform such research in government laboratories, but then it has proven difficult to train people to use the results. Our new thrust is to move the performance to universities where training is an integral part of their job and the knowledge of outstanding researchers like Dr. Polanyi can be passed on.

This is a healthy shift in emphasis. We are not discontinuing all basic research at NRC and other government laboratories. It has its place there. But we are pushing more of it toward the universities. In 1950 only 19 universities received research assistance from the federal Government. That number has now increased to 52. The university sector represents a rich and varied pool of talent that is well able to undertake the increased work being sent its way. That is why earlier this year the Government took steps to preserve the funding level of the granting councils for the next five years, even in the face of the need to control spending wherever possible.

I must say that the alarmist attitude of the Hon. Member opposite does nothing for the research community in Canada.

AGRICULTURE—ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN FARMERS. (B) ALLOCATION OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on October 8, 1986, I directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and asked him about the $1 billion assistance program to grain farmers which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) mentioned a few days before. This was an interesting announcement by the Prime Minister. In the Speech from the Throne on October 1 there was no mention of the $1 billion of assistance.

Three or four days later when the Minister and the Prime Minister spoke in the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the Prime Minister casually mentioned that the Government was going to provide assistance to farmers, that the amount of the assistance had been estimated at $1 billion, and that he was going to negotiate it with Premier Devine of Saskatchewan.

It was very interesting that that announcement came during the Prime Minister's speech. We assumed that it resulted from a sheer terror telephone conversation supposedly to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) from Premier Devine in the midst of the election campaign, and to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight). This precipitated the casual mention of $1 billion of assistance need. The Prime Minister followed this up on about October 8 saying that this was desperately needed by western farmers.

At the same time the Premier of Saskatchewan suggested that the assistance would be in the form of a cash deficiency payment. However, the Minister of Agriculture was saying that the assistance might be in the form of a loan or some other assistance. As a matter of fact, I am not sure whether the Minister of Agriculture ever said that it would be a cash deficiency payment. Time has passed, the election has gone by, and the whole matter seems to be going into limbo.

There have been meetings of Deputy Ministers. In fact a Deputy Minister returned from a meeting in Saskatchewan and announced that the benefits would be made available on the basis of 1986 crop production, which would mean that in Saskatchewan there would be a cash deficiency payment of $457 million. Of course the office of the federal Minister of Agriculture denied it. Everyone has looked with great interest at this $1 billion of assistance. In fact, some farmers have actually called it "Brian's bogus billion". No one seems able to find out whether the money exists, whether it will be paid as a deficiency payment, whether it will be a loan, or whether it will be a loan guarantee. In any event, time goes on and the Government continues to talk about meetings and discussions.

I had an opportunity to discuss the issue with a provincial Minister. Although these supposed consultations are taking place, he certainly did not know how the assistance would be paid. In one comment to the media the Minister of Agriculture said that the $35 million self-sufficiency program in Atlantic Canada, which he announced some time last summer, might be raised to $50 million. That was the only reference to how the money would be paid, whether it exists, whether it is new money, old money or whatever. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to announce tonight that it is not "Brian's bogus billion" but in fact is a $1 billion cash deficiency payment.

In another exchange which I had with the Minister of Agriculture concerning the $1 billion assistance for Canadian grain farmers, I asked him whether it would be paid as a deficiency payment in order to reduce the obligation of the Government under the western grain stabilization fund. Knowledgeable observers of the grain trade have said that the Government would be obligated under that fund to pay about $1 billion for the 1986-87 crop year. In his report the Auditor General pointed out that the deficit in the western grain stabilization fund this year would be approximately $100 million. We were trying to clarify whether it was new money to decrease the obligation of the federal Government under the western grain stabilization fund.

The Minister said that it was not to reduce the Government's obligation under the fund. It seems that the $1 billion under this aid program will be brought in under an appropriation Bill or in some other way and will not be used to reduce the Government's obligation under the western grain stabilization fund.

Provided that it is not a bogus offer on the part of the Government, grain farmers will be getting $1 billion of assistance as a result of the tremendous problem in national grain trading and pricing this year, perhaps the worst since the 1930s. As well, people in the western grain area or the Wheat Board area will be receiving $1 billion or whatever the western grain stabilization fund will pay out.

I know the Parliamentary Secretary, being a very illustrious Member of Parliament and having great responsibility in the field of agriculture, will want to announce in clear and decisive tones tonight exactly how much money will be paid, on what terms it will be paid, whether it will be a cash deficiency payment based upon deliveries of grain, whether it will be an acreage payment, and how it will be paid out in other parts of Canada. We look forward to his comments this evening.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, on October 3 of this year, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised a $1 billion assistance program for grain farmers who are being affected by the subsidy war between the EEC and the United States. The measure had hardly been announced when the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) asked us to put the cart before the horse and announce how much farmers in his riding would receive and when.

I am sorry to disappoint him, but we want to act responsibly and consult with the main parties concerned before going any further. To this end, the Prime Minister announced in the House that the federal Government will be consulting with the farmers and the provinces before taking any action. We want to improve self-financing for farmers in the most effective and equitable way possible. I think that is pretty clear.

The so-called subsidy war between the EEC and the United States has created a national problem which requires the right national solution. Instead of going out and spend, spend and spend as the Hon. Member for Algoma would have us do, we want to consult with farmers' organizations and act in consultation with the provinces.

For some time we have been discussing with the provinces how best to help our grain farmers. In Victoria, on August 27 of this year, the Agriculture Ministers of all governments made a commitment to intervene in this area, in order to assist the agricultural sector and protect industry-related jobs throughout the country.

Following this meeting, the Ministers asked their officials to formulate recommendations on ways to assist the farmers affected by this subsidy war.

Madam Speaker, these recommendations were discussed at a meeting on October 9 in Ottawa. The provincial deputy ministers of Agriculture then pursued this task by assessing all options for countering the harmful effects of these subsidies.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Algoma would care to hear what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) told them at the beginning of this meeting, and I quote:

> We are not excluding any options. We are asking you to help us identify the best and most equitable ways of giving farmers the assistance they need.

Madam Speaker, the meeting was held less than a week after the Prime Minister's announcement. We believe quick action is necessary but also that we should think and consult before we spend. The Prime Minister has announced that the federal Government will increase the farmers' cash flow by about $1 billion. This new federal aid comes in addition to assistance already available under existing programs and will not involve reallocation of funds earmarked for other farm programs.

I said earlier that we are facing a problem which affects all farmers throughout this country. A national problem calls for a national response, and this is why I believe our initiative will take into account a wide range of farm products and various needs. The situation is clear and we have shown that we are prepared to take action. No option has been left aside. We are now looking at all possible solutions in co-operation with the main interest groups. Given the circumstances, this process is quite reasonable.

This week the Minister of Agriculture will have consultations with the leaders of our major farm organizations. I expect you will be there. Later on this month he will be meeting with his provincial counterparts, for the same reason.

EMPLOYMENT—PRIVATE SECTOR JOB CREATION—MINISTER'S STATEMENT. (B) TRAINING OF WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, on October 7, I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) if his speech of October 6 in reply to the Speech from the Throne was a forecast of a further withdrawal from employment creation by the Conservative Government and of further cut-backs in job creation programs. The Minister did not answer my question and consequently I scheduled this debate for this evening.

• (1820)

In his speech of October 6 the Minister strongly suggested that the private sector, the provinces and individuals should have the principal responsibility for job training and job creation. That was nothing new. What was new was for the first time, at least that I recall, a Minister was saying it. Up until that time Ministers were saying that they were committed to job creation and job training but doing the opposite.

The Minister and his predecessor had already taken steps to abdicate their role in job creation. In the spending Estimates there was a reduction of $300 million from 1984 to 1986 in job creation funds, approximately 27 per cent when inflation is taken into account. The number of employment centres has been cut, including specialty employment centres at universities. The number of people counselled by the Department has been cut. When an unemployed person seeks counselling with respect to employment, only about 20 per cent are given interviews and registered. The others are referred to bulletin boards where they are directed to look for work. There have been cuts in unemployment insurance, post-secondary education, and institutional training in the Department.

All this is happening at a time when 1.2 million people are unemployed. The Government maintains there have been improvements and of course the rate of unemployment has declined since the pit of the recession in 1983. However, it is still 9.5 per cent nationally. In Atlantic Canada it is nearly 15 per cent; in Quebec, 10.7 per cent; in the rich Province of Alberta, 9.9 per cent, higher than the national average; in British Columbia, 12.3 per cent. Youth unemployment is still approximately 15 per cent. While the Government claims it is doing well, there is still much to be done and this is no time to cut back on job-creation programs and leave it to other people.

In 1981, the year before the recession, unemployment was 7.5 per cent, and that should be the goal. In the period between 1965 and 1980, the average rate of unemployment was 5.6 per cent. That is a goal which should be pursued by the Government before it starts cutting employment programs. Part-time employment as a percentage of total employment has increased from 9 per cent in 1980 to 18 per cent in 1986. Those unemployed for more than a year is double in 1986 what it was in 1983, and four times the rate in 1981.

My conclusion is that if you look at all these statistics which I have referred to, this is no time to be cutting back on these programs. It is no time to be sloughing off the federal Government's responsibility. It is no time to tell individuals, the private sector and the provinces that this is their primary responsibility and the federal Government has nothing to do with it; or, if the Government does not go that far, that its role is not the principal role. It is, and the Government should return to the budgets and commitments it had when it came into office in 1984. This is no time to withdraw.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, when the Minister says that "practical training and job experience lead to permanent jobs", I fail to see what is wrong with his statement because this is what the new reality of job creation is all about.

My colleague opposite says that our job creation programs are necessarily geared to training, he claims that this is not a new approach, but he is quite wrong. It was a new approach indeed, the new job creation programs had to be geared to training, and this is how we got results. Members opposite do admit there have been results, but my colleague seems to imply that they were nothing but a by-product of improvement in the world economic situation. This is unfair, it was due to concerted action on the part of all interest groups, private and public promoters alike, they all co-operated and managed to overcome the greatest danger we faced when we took office, a danger which is becoming smaller with time.

I agree with my colleague, we should strive for even lower unemployment rates. We all agree on that, but one thing is clear: whatever one may say or do, it is a fact that since September 1984 our job creation programs and policies have been successful, unemployment did go down. There are fewer unemployed. The unemployment rate has declined. And when people say that we pay less for unemployment insurance, it is obvious. I, for one, would like to pay nothing for unemployment insurance. That would mean full employment. Therefore, if people say that the Government is paying less, I am obviously happy. If we are paying less, it is because more people are working, which is what Canadian men and women want to achieve. This is why we have instituted new programs featuring compulsory training. Challenge '85 was a success, Challenge '86 was an even greater success since even student summer jobs were career oriented, and you can be sure that Challenge '87 will be better still!

The Acting Speaker (Mme Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT POLICY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, in the next few days the Government of Canada will be making important decisions on a new comprehensive native claims policy. This is an opportunity to establish a more productive and mutually beneficial relationship between the aboriginal peoples and all Canadians.

The new policy must affirm aboriginal rights. It must enable the aboriginal peoples to protect and enhance their cultures. It must allow them to have decision-making authority over their own lives, lands, and resources. Self-government must be a part of the new policy.

These are the essential elements, the reasonable and just accommodations which the Government must make if it is serious about making the aboriginal peoples partners in our great Canadian Confederation.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the confusion and disarray among the Liberals on the importance of the freer trade talks continue to grow and spread.

There is the Leader who says: "It is no good but the talks must go on". Then there is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who says: "No way. We are fence builders".

That confusion was compounded when the marketing vice-president of Canada's largest Great Lakes shipping group, the Canada Steamship Lines, called for a common Shipping Act and the putting of U.S. shipping protectionism on the table of trade talks. Then came the well-known Liberal leadership contender, Paul Martin Jr., president of the same shipping company, who told a Liberal fund raising dinner in St. Catharines a few days ago that the free trade talks with the United States are not the answer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HONDURAS—REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF CONTRA BASES BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, of all the countries in South America, Honduras receives the most development aid from Canada. It receives almost $40 million a year. Considering this, Canadians must be very concerned about the growing militarization of Honduras. Today's Globe and Mail reported that the United States plans to establish Contra bases on Honduran islands off the coast of Nicaragua.

The Contra war is an anti-development war. The Contras have targeted teachers, doctors, nurses, and other development workers for murder and kidnapping.

If Honduras continues to be used as a military base to destroy development in Nicaragua, Canadians must ask about the value of our development assistance. Canada must protect the integrity of its development program by protesting to both the United States and Honduras against this crude attempt to force Nicaragua back into colonial status.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

HEADQUARTERS OF FUTURE CANADIAN AEROSPACE AGENCY

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): This week, Mr. Speaker, I asked that the Canadian aerospace agency be headquartered in my riding. Indeed the riding of Longueuil has all facilities to accommodate this agency whose establishment will be announced in the near future. My riding already has the skilled labour force needed in this field, not to mention an industrial and transport infrastructure which is second to none and ranks among the most efficient. Longueuil and Greater Montreal are ideally suited to the needs of the aerospace industry. Earlier this morning the Government decided to award the F-18 maintenance contract, further acknowledgement that the Montreal region is best for aeronautical and aerospace projects.

Establishing the Canadian aerospace agency in Longueuil is bound to revive the local economy, especially so if the agency's mandate is to oversee the applied research related to this new technology. The agency will also reinforce our sectorial economy development policy.

THE ECONOMY

WESTERN CANADA—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech at the opening of this session of Parliament the Government said that special emphasis will be given to diversifying the economic base of western Canada. Prior to this in my own region we had the cancellation of the NRC research station, the VIA maintenance base, and many of the transportation aid programs. Now we have the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) that a western Canadian consortium is not capable of undertaking technology transfer in the interests of Canada. This is the effective program of economic development that the Government is offering to diversify the base of western Canada. Instead we have the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saying that we are giving aid to farmers. This aid program is going to be distributed across the country.

The real question we have to ask is this. When is the Government going to understand that in order for western Canada to realize its economic potential it must have federal investment to enable it to develop its scientific, technological and industrial base. All the Government has done up until now is reduce, eliminate, subtract, and eviscerate that base. It is time that the Government understood that western Canada demands its fair share.

NOVA SCOTIA LIBERAL PARTY—ADVICE ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF HALIFAX

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to all Atlantic Canadians that we in the P.C. Party are competely opposed to the current Liberal thinking as expressed at its annual meeting in Nova Scotia this past weekend.

The Liberal Party of Nova Scotia, short of ideas, sought the advice of National Sea President, Gordon Cummings, and of Bank of Nova Scotia Vice-President, Peter John Nicholson. The Liberals were advised to concentrate economic development in Halifax at the expense of the rest of the Atlantic region. The idea is to turn Halifax into another Toronto. This may be the type of advice that the Liberals of Nova Scotia are seeking. These corporate people in their ivory towers will have a hard time justifying these ideas to the entrepreneurs of Middleton or the fish plant owners of Yarmouth. If the policy of the Liberal Party is to stifle business development in 99 per cent of the Atlantic region, I would like to state very emphatically that I am glad I am not a Liberal.

LYELL ISLAND—PROTECTION OF HAIDA PEOPLE FROM LOGGING OPERATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, less than a century ago over 90 per cent of the Haida population on the Queen Charlotte Islands perished from small pox and other diseases introduced by the white population. Thousands of Haida men, women, and children died in the South Moresby area in a few short months in the mid-1880s.

Yesterday the federal Government made it clear that a cash offer is on the table to compensate fully the loggers, communities and forest companies for the cutting rights on Lyell Island and South Moresby. The Haida have returned to Lyell Island and they are erecting a long house at Windy Bay. They have made it clear that these lands are their country, their spirit, their past and their future, and that they will be preserved.

Yesterday the federal Government warned of violence and even death if the logging continues. Mr. Speaker, the logging continues at the request of Premier Vander Zalm. Today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) must call his friend and avert disaster. The process that will lead to the possible death of Haidas, loggers or others, must be stopped.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

COST OF ELIMINATING REGIONAL DISPARITIES

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): In recent weeks, Mr. Speaker, we have been witnessing a rather peculiar phenomenon. Our Liberal Opposition colleagues are adamantly opposed to the construction of a prison in Port-Cartier in the riding of Manicouagan because, they claim, it will cost a little bit more. Apparently, Mr. Speaker, they would have us believe that every time the Government is prepared to spend a little bit more money to create jobs in regions which are far removed from major urban centres we ought to forget about it and totally ignore these people who are up against high unemployment and its many attendant problems.

If this is true, Mr. Speaker, does the logic of the Liberal Party imply that we ought to neglect or simply abandon Canadians who happen to live far away from major cities, in regions where we might have to spend more generously to spur the economy?

Our Opposition colleagues would be well advised to reconsider their funnel-like approach to regional disparities in this vast country of ours, otherwise many Canadian men and women might make them regret it.

LYELL ISLAND—NEGOTIATIONS URGED TO STOP LOGGING OPERATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, South Moresby, in particular Lyell Island, continues to be the focal point of conflict between Western Forests Products and the Haida Nation. Yesterday in the House the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) said that "the Government of Canada would be very predisposed toward sitting down with" Western Forests Products "to negotiate the value of the timber licences and to reasonably compensate the company—".

The Minister left unanswered the legitimate question of why negotiations to stop the logging have not begun. If there is a disposition to negotiate, why are negotiations not yet under way in light of this near-crisis situation? I urge the Minister to proceed with all possible speed, because the situation is serious, and to demonstrate the Government's commitment to native rights in South Moresby and throughout Canada.

NARCOTICS

VIDEO CAMPAIGN TO COMBAT DRUG ABUSE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the video messages which the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) unveiled yesterday are proof of the Government's desire to urge Canadian youth to resist drugs. Drug abuse, including alcohol abuse, does untold damage to our young people. Drugs sap the potential of young lives and can cause irreparable damage.

Along with drug enforcement must come drug education. We must do more to impress upon Canadians, especially youth, that taking illegal drugs is socially and personally unacceptable. We must reduce the demand for drugs, and we must do it early.

Professional and amateur athletes represent an excellent way to reach youth with a message to which they will listen. Athletes are role models and an inspiration to Canadian youth. When they talk, young people listen. The co-operative spirit between Government and professional sport means that everyone wins. Through continued support and hard work we shall reduce the demand for drugs among Canadian youth.

AWARDING OF CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT TO CANADAIR

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, only one hour ago the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) announced that the F-18 maintenance contract is being awarded to Canadair despite the fact that the Bristol bid was less expensive and that government people consider it to be of higher technological value. The reason of technological transfer given by the President of the Treasury Board was not even considered in the evaluation system of government officials.

This points out the problem we have with our tendering and bidding system. It is very important that citizens and corporations of Canada believe that they will be dealt with equitably in the tendering system. If the Government is going to award a contract on a basis other than price or technical evaluation, then that should be stated at the outset. It is a matter not only of the integrity of the bidding system, but of the integrity of the Government itself.

RECEIPT OF CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT BY CANADAIR—IMPACT ON MONTREAL REGION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, today, the people of Montreal must be both proud and disappointed.

The Government's decision reflects honourably, first of all, on the workers at Canadair, the Canadair Survival Committee chaired by Mr. Cherry, all the members of the Board of Trade of Montreal, and on Robert Bourassa who managed to force the Government to make up for the mistakes it made in Quebec. Today, I think Montreal has reason to be proud and to rejoice.

It is too bad, however that Quebecers have to set up a survival committee and come all the way to Ottawa just to get their fair share.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

OECD REPORT COMMENDING GOVERNMENT'S PRACTICES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development has joined the Auditor General in publicly praising the Government for its efforts in managing the public purse and the deficit. I commend the Government for its commitment and efforts to curb public expenditures. Guidelines for economic renewal have been stated, such as tax reform, enhanced trade, and increased employment. We are on the road to economic recovery and the foundation has been laid for sustained growth. Saskatoonians, and Canadians in general, will benefit from a Government which is prepared to face tough decisions related to reduced expenditures, duplication, and waste.

When you look at the Liberal Party you can see the flaws in their own financial management. At the time of the 1984 election they borrowed money and were in debt to the tune of $2.5 million. Now officials claim they must raise almost $22 million in the next two years to pay off the debt and get through another federal election without going into the hole. Shame on the Liberals who mismanaged the public purse and who cannot practise fiscal responsibility.

FAMILY REUNIFICATION ADMISSIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Under the immigration levels announced yesterday the Government, for the third year in a row, froze at 45,000 the number of immigrants who can be reunited with their families in Canada. Why did the Minister choose to ignore the strong recommendation of the parliamentary committee for an increase in the family class under our immigration rules?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated when I responded to the standing committee report, I was able to respond favourably to almost all of their recommendations. There was only one I disagreed with. The five recommendations dealing with the assisted family and assisted relative class, which I described as the most exicting and far-reaching, needed more consultation and thought. I said we would go into that with the private and public sectors and the provinces. In the meantime I can assure the Right Hon. Member that family unification is the cornerstone of our immigration policy.

INQUIRY WHY SUFFICIENT PERSONNEL NOT FORESEEN TO PROCESS IMMIGRATION APPLICATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister created false expectations when he promised to increase immigration to Canada without providing the personnel required to process immigration applications, especially for family reunification.

Why did the Minister not provide sufficient personnel to process immigration applications, especially for family reunification?

[English]

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the quality and intensity of the work of all Members of Parliament who went around the world and provided me with an excellent report on procedures and practices gave me a good indication of the ways I can improve and cut out a lot of the bureaucratic red tape and ease the entry of immigrants to Canada. I have also looked at the quality of service in our country. We are going to look at state of the art technology, and the procedures and practices which have been in place for years and which we cannot rationalize. When we do all those things and become more efficient and cut down a lot of the struggles and frustrations people have been going through, we are going to be able to bring a lot more people into this country with the same resources.

DEPARTMENT'S EVALUATION SYSTEM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that he followed the recommendations of the committee. He ignored one of the more important recommendations. Another one that he ignored is a change in the evaluation system for immigrants to allow more points for those people who have family members in Canada. Why did the Minister not accept that recommendation so as to facilitate the reunification of families and allow Canadians already in the country to have their family members join them here?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, one thing is very clear. We have heard and understood the frustrations and what the communities have been going through. In the levels that I announced yesterday, we added some 32 new categories of independent skills in which immigrants do not need a relative or do not need a certified job offer in their pocket. While we withdrew 12, the 20 additional categories show our willingness to make movement in those areas.

We said that in order to open the assisted family class and assisted relative class we would have to understand the full implication and do so in consultation with the community, the provinces, the private and public sector, and indeed with Members of Parliament. That is what we will be doing. Furthermore, an indepth study under the Minister of National Health and Welfare is already under way, with the participation of my Department. We look forward to the results.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

AWARDING OF CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER FACTOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. In making the announcement of the decision on the CF-18 maintenance contract this morning, the President of the Treasury Board confirmed that Bristol Aerospace had the lowest price and lowest bid. When the original tenders were announced, price, not the question of technology transfer, was considered to be the primary criterion. When did the change take place? Why did you make the change, and why was that not part of the total submission so that all the companies would have an equal chance in that kind of application?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we had two excellent contenders at the final moment, through the bidding process. They were very close on technical merit and on cost. We looked very closely at the issue of technology transfer because it is an important issue for the country. The Government had a choice, and it made a very deliberate choice to favour Canadair because we felt that the downstsream technology transfer could be better done through the existing facilities of Canadair than by the competing consortium because Canadair is a producer of aircraft as well as being in the maintenance business. The bids were close and it was because of that overriding factor that the contract went to Canadair.

TENDERING PROCESS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, this being Halloween, it looks like it is a case of trick and treat. I suggest that we have to ask some serious questions about the way the process was handled.

Without looking at the end result, the fact is that when the original tenders were put forward and the applications were sought, the question was basically one of the lowest bidder for that contract. Now that the rules have been changed in midstream, is it not proper that the Government should have made that very clear to those excellent submissions that were made so that there would not now be the suggestion that in fact the real question was one of interference, not one of confidence?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): First, Mr. Speaker, there was no interference of any kind. Second, it was clearly indicated in the original bids that the Government, as in all bids—which the Hon. Member's deskmate can confirm—is never bound to the lowest bid. That is clearly outlined in those submissions. However, my colleague raises an interesting point and one that I would like to address seriously in the House.

Stating all of the national concerns that we may have in making a final decision is something that we would certainly want to consider in future requests for submissions. That has never been done before and my hon. friend has raised a serious issue that we would be happy to consider. However, I still stand fast by my word that this contract, on an economic and financial basis and for the future of Canada, was given to the best consortium that made a bid.

CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS FROM GOVERNMENT SOURCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On February 12 in the newspaper La Presse, someone from the Prime Minister's Office clearly indicated that Canadair would obtain the contract. According to the newspaper, a source near the Prime Minister had said that Canadair could virtually rely on getting the contract.

• (1125)

[English]

The very next day in Winnipeg, the Minister of National Health and Welfare was quoted as saying: "I just know that from our Manitoba perspective, things will be okay". The Minister followed that up by another extraordinary statement. I hold the headline in my hand. The Minister of National Health and Welfare said in Manitoba he was confident the CF-18 contract would land in Manitoba. In a decision as important as this in terms of its regional reception, does the Prime Minister think it is appropriate for Ministers of the Crown to go around the country building up false expectations, with different things being said in different parts of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think, not unlike some other matters in the past, this contract has brought about a fair amount of comment from Members of Parliament and people who are not Members of Parliament. I do not think that is to be unexpected.

I suppose in a country as diverse as ours that is something which has taken place and will take place in the future. I do not think there was anything untoward said in any of those cases. I think the reasons provided by the President of the Treasury Board indicate that the award was made in the national interest.

EFFECT OF MINISTERS' STATEMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I find the Prime Minister's answer extraordinary. Is he saying it is his perception, not that of Members of Parliament, backbenchers, or even members of the Opposition, that Ministers of the Crown who will be involved in the decision themselves ought to go around the country in future acting as cheerleaders for their regions and leaving their regions with the expectation that an important decision which will be made is going to come down on their side? Does that not sow confusion in the country instead of promoting national unity which a Cabinet should be about?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will consult the statements my hon. friend has in front of him from some months ago. I would be happy to take a look at them. I did not hear that anyone was trying to provoke disunity in any way. Cabinet officers clearly from time to time are called upon to make comments on impending decisions, which in no way violates their commitment to objective consideration. I think that is probably a fair statement.

I, along with my hon. friend, recognize that from time to time certain issues will challenge national unity. Even with the best faith in the world, from time to time in Canada issues will arise which will be placed in that context. Decisions such as this are made with a sense of fairness and a realization of that historic difficulty in Canada, which is why I ask for the support of my hon. friend in this kind of decision which was clearly made in the national Canadian interest.

REQUEST THAT MINISTERS NOT MAKE CONFLICTING STATEMENTS PRIOR TO AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board in his announcement today said the decision was made in the national interest and I clearly hope that was the case. Will the Prime Minister give us assurances that, before any other major decision of this kind is made, he will give instructions to his Cabinet Ministers not to go around the country saying different things in different regions creating expectations that he knows inevitably will be frustrated in part because all regions, in a decision like this, cannot perceive themselves simultaneously to be winners? Will he give us that assurance?

• (1130)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in an ideal situationI think what my hon. friend is talking about is public men and women acting at all times with a total sense of objectivity and a degree of dispassion in regard to their regions and their electors, of which they are from time to time incapable. I understand that. I hope that there is nothing in what my hon. friend has said which indicates that someone's judgment was flawed or compromised because of that.

I want to tell my hon. friend, as he knows, that a decision such as this is a painful and difficult one for all involved in a country such as Canada. I can only tell the Hon. Member that all members of the Government deliberated in a spirit of fairness and openness and arrived at a decision to complement the national interest. I hope that is the manner in which it will be viewed.

IMMIGRATION

FAMILY REUNIFICATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. The Minister will know that under the Conservative Government the numbers of family-class immigrants are a far cry from those under Liberal Governments in the 1970s and 1980s at which time the family-class category was the pillar of the entire immigration program. In freezing, for the second year in a row, the number of family-class immigrants, why is the Minister refusing the opportunity and right of more Canadians successfully to sponsor their relatives while increasing the number of independent and business immigrants who do not have family in Canada? Does the Minister not agree that having family in Canada deserves far greater recognition and priority than the Government is prepared to give?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): In 1982 your Government eliminated the independent skills—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask all Hon. Members to make their comments through the Chair.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, in 1983 the independent skills provisions were removed which resulted in a drop to 89,000 immigrants. In 1984 the figure was 88,000; and in 1985 it was 84,000. This year is the first time in three years that the number of immigrants admitted to Canada will increase.

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FAMILY CATEGORY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is being intellectually dishonest—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: I am talking about family immigrants which, for the benefit of the Chair—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Apart completely from the use of the word, the Hon. Member's comment is most argumentative. I know the Hon. Member has a question; will the Hon. Member put it?

Mr. Marchi: Given that in 1975, 64,000 family-class immigrants were allowed into Canada; in 1980, 51,000 were allowed in; and that last year only 35,000 were allowed in, will the Minister not concede that his level for family-class immigrants is too low and ignores the frustrations Canadians experience in being separated from their loved ones? Will he not introduce immediate reforms to increase family immigrant numbers to a realistic and adequate level?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we know full well the value of the family, which is why family reunification has been the cornerstone of our immigration policy. Last year more than one-half the people who were admitted to Canada were members of that class. I want you to know, Mr. Speaker, that it has taken a while to rebuild what was undone in those years. We are now moving ahead, and moving ahead firmly so that we can assist those families who want to be together.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. If technology transfer was the basis for the decision with regard to the CF-18 contract, why was it not a part of the original 75-member panel process? Why were the rules of the game changed at the end of the game in the ninth inning? How does the Minister square his claim that technology transfer was the basis for the decision with the fact that the technology transfer was left out of the original panel process?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first, I have already answered the question. It is a little difficult to enhance my previous answer. Perhaps we should have said that in the original bids. I have instructed my officials to talk with the officials of the Department of Supply and Services to ensure that we might mention that type of thing. However, technology transfer is not something that is within the purview of the bidding firm. It is something that is within its own composition.

When we saw that the final offers were very close to each other, we had a choice. We had a choice to look at how the technology would be transferred. In one case we felt that there was a compelling argument that technology for Canadians would be transferred more effectively than in the other case, and we opted for that choice. We had a choice and we made it. We stand by it.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I note that the Minister has just admitted that he changed the rules at the end of the game.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister now ready to make public all the documents, including the report of the original panel on this bidding process, particularly in light of the doubt that has been cast on the bidding process and in light of the questions that have been raised about changing the rules of the game? Will the Minister refer the matter to the Auditor General for an objective study so that we can clear up the facts and clear up the process?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to tell my hon. colleague that there was no change in the bidding process in any way, shape or form, at any time, in any contract—

Mr. Murphy: Just the evaluation!

Mr. de Cotret: There was no change in any way in the bidding process. It is well known that when we enter into a competitive bidding process and the bids are within 10 per cent of each other there are questions of national interest and so on that can be brought in perhaps to balance the scale in favour of one or another. We did just that. We went through a very legitimate bidding process in this case, as we do in every case.

Second, there is no doubt cast on the decision. It is a decision which was made in the national interest with respect to technology transfer. I wish to assure my hon. colleague that I will make all relevant information available, as long as it does not contravene the normal practices which are in place to maintain the confidential nature of information given to us by competitors. If they are willing to make the information available, then I am more than happy to give the Hon. Member all the information. This is a decision which is good for the country, and I am willing to stand by it. I will be happy to give the Hon. Member the information.

BANKS AND BANKING

BANK CLOSURES—COMPENSATION FOR UNINSURED DEPOSITORS—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF RECIPIENTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank who were paid nearly $1 billion out of the public purse. Since the Government refused to identify them and left the matter in the hands of Mr. Justice Estey as of October 4, 1985, and since the Estey Report is silent on the matter, will the Minister now undertake to release the names of those uninsured depositors so that the taxpayers may know where their money went?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. As she knows, when the Commission was established the question of the names of the depositors was something on which Justice Estey was to decide. He has not seen it appropriate to release the names. It is not now our position to challenge Justice Estey's decision since it was his decision. He received the names and he has decided not to publish them.

SCRUTINY OF PUBLIC EXPENDITURES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. On October 4 of last year the former Deputy Prime Minister said in this House: "Public funds are at all times subject to the scrutiny of Parliament. That is what this place is all about." How can the Minister justify this violation of the taxpayers' right to know the names of those who, having received $60,000 in deposit insurance, then received many thousands of dollars by way of unconditional gifts from the Government?

• (1140)

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the categories of groups, associations and individuals that were helped in this regard were published very thoroughly, and that helps to meet in a major way, if not to the specific individual, the kinds of questions raised by the Hon. Member.

ESTEY COMMISSION REPORT—COST OF COMPENSATING UNINSURED DEPOSITORS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question on the subject of the Estey Commission Report and on the pay-out of close to $1 billion to uninsured depositors upon which the Government decided but which was not dealt with adequately in the Estey Commission Report. Since the Estey Commission made it clear that the failure of the two banks was due to their improvident lending practices in the early part of the 1980s and perhaps earlier, and since the information provided by auditors to depositors for their guidance was wrong but that was a normal commercial risk, can the Minister now explain why the taxpayer has to pay $1 billion when it is clear that those depositors took commercial risks and they should have paid for that themselves?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, clearly that particular judgment was looked at by Mr. Justice Estey. I do not think it serves any purpose for the Government to interpret the report or to point fingers. Out of respect for the report, we ought to use it to build a better future with a stronger supervisory system.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the Government seems to be hiding behind Mr. Justice Estey's coat-tails when it comes to letting taxpayers know how the money was spent, will the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member made a very long preamble and it was received by the Chair because it set out the basis upon which the Hon. Member could ask a question. I would ask that the Hon. Member, when asking a supplementary question, get to the question.

Mr. Cassidy: My last four words, Mr. Speaker, were: "will the Minister agree". I will continue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: Will the Minister agree that the Government will refer this report to a parliamentary committee which may consider a number of areas that were not dealt with adequately in Mr. Justice Estey's Report and which relate to the responsibility of the House?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, all aspects of financial institution reform which the Government has been putting together for the last number of months and will be presenting to the House very shortly will be looked at by the committee.

IMMIGRATION

REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration and is a very simple one. Regarding the new immigration levels the Minister announced just yesterday, can he assure us that there are no limitations on the ability of families to reunite in Canada?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the number of family-class immigrants cannot be frozen and depends upon the sponsorships emanating from Canada. There is no quota or limit. Levels were increased substantially last year as well. Today it is much easier for a member of a family to come to Canada than it was under the previous Government.

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PORT-CARTIER PROJECT CONTRACT ADJUDICATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. A few days ago, we learned that the architectural firm responsible for the Port-Cartier project had been forced to use the Desseau, Dupont et Desmeules engineering firm by the Government, apparently because this firm contributed to the electoral funds of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Can the Minister explain why the Desseau, Dupont et Desmeules firm received $137,500 without any calls for tenders being made for the Port-Cartier project if not because they are friends of the Government?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to comment on whether or not this company donated to any particular Party. I am able to say with assurance that the company was recommended by public servants as having the best and most competent proposal of all competing bids.

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, let me repeat the second part of my question. Can the Minister tell us why, according to documents provided by the Department of Public Works, the same firm was awarded $137,500 worth of contracts without tender? Why was it given those contracts without tender, according to documents from the Minister's own Department?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Boudria: When will the Government stop playing trick or treat with taxpayers' dollars?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Bring in your brother-in-law.

Mr. Gauthier: How about yours?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member has put a question and apparently has invoked another.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is almost redundant to repeat what has been stated in the House during the past 10 days and that is that, on construction projects, tenders are called if the amount involved is over $30,000. With respect to consultants' awards, there is a procedure of which I have given the details to the House. These procedures were followed and are Treasury Board directed. We followed that process.

OLYMPIC GAMES

ELIGIBILITY OF PROFESSIONALS TO PLAY ON NATIONAL HOCKEY TEAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who will know the extent to which the performance of Canada's national hockey team is a source of great pride to Canadians from coast to coast. Now that new regulations allow for players from the National Hockey League to be included on the Olympic hockey team, would the Prime Minister ensure, either himself or through the Minister responsible, that the President of the National Hockey League and the team owners will be contacted to seek the assurance that their players will be permitted to play on Canada's national hockey team?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that things haven't been the same since I hung up my skates.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: No, that's two years from now, Brian.

Some Hon. Members: oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I would like to thank my hon. friend for his observation. In the absence of the Minister responsible, I will be in touch and will report back to him.

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE SCHEDULE FOR 1988

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. When the Minister responsible returns, would he also make an effort to contact the President of the National Hockey League to ensure that when the schedule for 1988 is drafted, a two-week period be set aside to enable all appropriate players to play on the national hockey team so we can beat the Soviets, the Swedes and the Americans?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Ouellet: Another skater!

Mr. Broadbent: It's a real skater.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I am glad members of the Opposition recognize my many talents. Obviously the Minister is not in the House. I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and will pass it on to the Minister.

WAR CRIMINALS

ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING AUSTRIAN PRESIDENT

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, substantial allegations have been made concerning the complicity in serious war crimes in Yugoslavia of the President of Austria, Mr. Kurt Waldheim. A cloud now hangs over the United Nations itself where Mr. Waldheim once served as Secretary General. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs advise what special steps he has taken on my previous request that an impartial international tribunal be convened to investigate the serious allegations that have been made against Mr. Waldheim?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question and for her very keen and continuing interest in this matter. With regard to the question of Canadians who might have been involved in activities during that time, the Hon. Member should know that, for the first time, this Government has acted by establishing the Deschênes Royal Commission.

With regard to the question of the allegations respecting Mr. Waldheim, we have, as has been requested, checked with all of the available files that exist at the United Nations and elsewhere. We are consulting with other countries to see if there is action that would be appropriate for Canada to take or for others to initiate. Naturally, I have noted the most recent allegations. All I can report at this stage is that we have them under consideration.

RETIREMENT ALLOWANCE PAYABLE TO FORMER UNITED NATIONS SECRETARY GENERAL

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Has he acted upon my request that we withhold the retirement allowance of $81,650 to be paid to Mr. Waldheim by the United Nations until the investigation of the international tribunal is held? Surely the interests of justice require that the Minister instruct our United Nations Ambassador at least to move in that direction?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are considering all the implications of that request. I am not yet in a position to respond definitively to the Hon. Member. As soon as I am aware of all the implications—and she would know that we would want to be sure of all of them—I will report to her and to the House.

ELECTROMAGNETIC ENGINEERING SECTION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. On Wednesday he promised that any cuts at the National Research Council which affect the health or safety of Canadians would be reviewed. In that context will the Minister review the chopping of the entire electromagnetic engineering section? It is involved in research on cancer, radiation safety, air transport safety, and blood plasma preparation. It has also done work for the Department of National Defence. All these activities involve the health, safety, and protection of Canadians.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have said that there would be such a review if public health and safety were involved. Of course the review would also determine whether this critical work is not already done in some other agency of Government, some university, or even in the private sector.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has extensively set the basis for his first question. I would ask him to put a short supplementary question.

COUNCIL'S OPERATIONAL CUTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, rather than us raising, one by one, the cases of irresponsible cuts at the National Research Council, would the Minister not agree that it would be preferable to terminate this cutting right now, so that the NRC can continue its work and its valuable portion of Canadian research will not be wrecked, as the Government is doing?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I happen to have the highest regard not only for the management of the NRC but for the Eminent Persons Council which advises management on the operations of the National Research Council. I think the Hon. Member is somewhat irresponsible when he calls that management structure irresponsible.

REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The day before yesterday, the Minister stated that there would be no change in the Unemployment Insurance Plan in 1987. Can the Minister tell us whether he intends to take one year to reimburse retroactively the 50,000 early retirees who were cut off by his Government?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have repeated many times, and particularly to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, that we were waiting for the recommendations of the Forget Report on the issue of pensions and early retirees and that we would be considering the matter then, and my answer is still the same.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF INTERESTED PARTIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that the Coalition québécoise pour les retraités et les préretraités has requested a meeting with the Minister on November 7. Will the Minister accept to meet these people? Second, to avoid this Committee having to pay to go before the courts, does the Minister not believe that he should tell them at that time that he will reimburse retroactively the amounts due since the Commission has a surplus of $174 million?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I met last Friday with one of the coalitions involved in this matter. I shall be meeting the other group next week. However, if I have not yet had the report of Mr. Forget, I shall certainly not give such an answer.

FINANCE

NON-PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY CORPORATIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of State for Finance indicated, as reported in Hansard, how many companies had paid tax last year which had not done so before. Would the Minister tell the House, in view of the 80,000 companies with profits totalling $13 billion which did not pay tax in 1983, how many thousand profitable companies escaped paying tax last year?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting and very detailed question. I will have to ask for some time to get the answer. However, what I was saying yesterday was that, compared with the year before, 13,000 more companies paid taxes last year than ever before. The Government's closing of tax loopholes and properly administering the tax system have made that possible.

MINISTER'S AWARENESS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. How can the Minister be aware of figures which are suitable and complimentary to his Government and be so completely unaware of figures which should be open to Canadians and to all of us?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we are not unaware. We want to be precise, and I will try to get the precise answer for the Hon. Member.

DENIAL OF SECOND-CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES TO CHURCH PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have an interesting question for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Recently Canada Post officials have denied second-class mailing privileges traditionally enjoyed by a number of Canadian church publications, thus increasing their costs fivefold. Will the Minister forthwith instruct Canada Post to review and to reverse these regrettable and unwarranted decisions?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The Government is aware of the situation. Indeed Canada Post is actually reviewing the matter, and we expect an answer shortly.

INCOME TAX

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I will direct my question to the Minister of State (Finance). It deals with two aspects of the last budget, the capital gains exemption and the international banking centres.

A few days ago, the "Business Council on National Issues" tabled its report on tax reform and recommended the repeal of the $500,000 exemption on capital gains. Here is my question to the Minister: Is the Minister aware of that recommendation, and does his Government intend to respond immediately and remove that form of tax evasion that favours almost exclusively the wealthiest groups in our society?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of that recommendation. It is part of an interesting report they put together. We are encouraging groups across Canada to consult with us and to give us their views as we go into the tax reform process. This report is a good example of it.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that the Minister did not answer my question. I would like to try my luck on the other aspect now. Yesterday or the day before, the President of the Montreal Stock Exchange indicated the Government wanted to backtrack on the establishment of international banking centres in Vancouver and Montreal. Is that view as expressed by the President of the Montreal Stock Exchange accurate, and if not, when does the Government intend to table the legislation that will implement the formal commitments it made in the Throne Speech?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, on the question of international financial centres there has been no change in the policy of the Government. It has been stated time and again and has not changed.

DOMESTIC PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does he think it is fair that Canadians should pay more for Canadian natural gas than Americans living next door to them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this was answered yesterday in the statement of the Minister wherein he said that the principle that Canadian gas would not be sold on export markets for less than comparable prices on the domestic market can, I believe, be upheld but implemented with the flexibility appropriate to a less regulated market. As a result of that decision there have been major announcements to the benefit of Alberta and western Canada. We hope that there will be others.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Given that the Conservative campaign policy handbook states: "We will adopt market-sensitive pricing for exported natural gas, while ensuring that Canadians always pay less than their American neighbours—" it is patently obvious that people in Los Angeles will pay less for Canadian gas than will Canadians living in Toronto. Why did the Prime Minister break another campaign promise?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That question was asked and answered yesterday. There has been no deviation. The object of the exercise is one of fairness for consumers and hope for western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT OF DEREGULATION

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the agreement announced yesterday on the deregulation of natural gas prices. That agreement will help the western producers and the western economy. Does the Prime Minister believe that all consumers of natural gas in Canada are going to benefit from that agreement in the future?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that interesting question. One of the things that has happened in the energy sector in western Canada is that the sector was crippled by government attitudes, which have now been substantially corrected. We hope that we can count on all Members of the House to support this type of initiative which frees up and generates new economic activity in western Canada, while providing for fair prices for Canadian consumers.

EXPORT PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the removal of the border price test. Can the Prime Minister guarantee that under the $4 billion natural gas deal to 19 utilities in the northeastern United States over the next 50 years gas will not be sold at a price cheaper than that which is provided for gas customers in Ontario and Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that goes to the original answer. The Minister responded that he had asked the Chairman of the National Energy Board to advise him of the impact of recent developments in the Canadian natural gas market and to recommend actions which may be taken to ensure that federal regulatory procedures are compatible with a less regulated environment. That is the objective of the Government, which is based on fairness, and we hope to see that followed through.

CANADIAN TARIFF ON IMPORTED BOOKS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise again because my office is being flooded by petitions from people who are upset about the 10 per cent book tariff tax. They are looking at Mr. Scrooge when Christmas is coming. They want this book tax removed. This is a tax on reading which is offensive.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member read the prayer on the petition.

Mrs. Finestone: I would be pleased to so do, Sir.

To the Honourable House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefor provide a remedy. Humbly sheweth whereas the Government of Canada has imposed a retaliatory tariff on imported books in the English language—note not in the French language—which has limited the access of Canadians to literature and information. And whereas the tariff has little negative effect on the publishing industry of the United States, but we shot ourselves in the foot, yet penalizes Canada's consumers, book publishers, book sellers, distributors—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thank the Hon. Member. All Hon. Members understand the point of the petition. Does the Hon. Member have any other petitions to present?

Mrs. Finestone: I understood that you wished me to read the petition, Your Honouor.

Mr. Speaker: It is the disposition of the House, and I so advise the Hon. Member, that the House has the import of the petition.

Mrs. Finestone: May I now table it?

PRIVILEGE

NOTICE OF QUESTION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It relates to my privileges as a Member of Parliament. It is with respect to the release of press reports yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) in his speech in Calgary. A critic always has a relationship with the Minister's Department, which seems to make the House work. I had this relationship with the Department of the previous Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) to advise the Chair if I have received this information correctly that this took place outside the Chamber yesterday. Under those circumstances, it is customary that notice be given. Perhaps the Hon. Member has attempted to give notice, but the Chair has not received any notice.

Mr. Waddell: No, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I can give notice now for Monday and raise it then. It will be a matter of privilege with respect to releasing documents to the press and not releasing them to Members of Parliament, in spite of repeated attempts.

Mr. Speaker: I wish all Members to know that I am in no way foreclosing on a question of privilege by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway. The Hon. Member will know that the notice should be addressed to the Chair in writing. I take it the Chair will receive that notice later on today returnable on Monday.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—TRANSPORTATION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau) moved:

That this House regrets that, at a time when thousands of workers in the transportation sector are looking for jobs; when the national rail transportation system is threatened with extinction; when the St. Lawrence Seaway navigational network is in complete economic disarray; when all major Canadian airlines have reported substantial losses in 1985-1986; when Canadian National is uprooting operations in Moncton and in Montreal that have contributed to those local economies for decades; when deregulation is threatening the future existence of the Canadian trucking industry; when established safety standards protecting travellers are in danger of disappearing in a deregulated environment; and when the uncertainty of privatization proposals hang over the employees of Canadian National, Air Canada and our national airports, the Government is addressing the problems of the national transportation system with insensitive measures based on frivolous ideological decision-making.

• (1210)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think there is no single area where the Conservative Government's failure to act has been greater and more obvious than in the area of transport.

In less than two years this Government has already had five Ministers at the Department of Transport, but no major legislation has been adopted by this Parliament.

During the first session, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski)—and I am glad to see him—the Minister of Transport at the time, tabled four major Bills: the National Transportation Act, which was Bill C-126; the Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act, which was Bill C-75; an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extraprovincial undertakings, which was Bill C-127 and an Act respecting rail passenger transportation, Bill C-97.

Now, we were expecting this Government, through one of the most important Ministers in the present Cabinet, to try and make some progress in this particular area. It so happens that only one of the Bills was considered in the House, while the other three were put on the Order Paper and were never examined by this House, much less approved by Parliament.

The Minister's colleagues, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and the Hon. Member for Roberval (Mr. Bouchard) made only a fleeting impression on the Department. The Hon. Member for Rosemont seemed to think that transport meant trips abroad, while the Hon. Member for Roberval promised to settle the thorny issue of Montreal International Airport, in other words, whether Dorval or Mirabel would become Montreal's major airport. A commission was appointed, the Hon. Member for Roberval left the Department, the Commission submitted its report and now, two years later, the Government still has made no decision other than to maintain the status quo, build a road to link the two airports and provide free bus service for Mirabel and Dorval users.

That is all the Government has managed to do on this major issue, and I say that it should not have taken two years to reach such a conclusion. This is a clear demonstration of this Government's incompetence in the area of transportation. I must say that the only things which have worked well in that Department are the political appointments, because the most massive and scandalous political appointments over the past two years under this Government have been made by the former Minister of Transport and his officials. All Crown Corporations have been affected. All of them, whether Via Rail, Air Canada, Ports Canada, or the CNR, are now overcrowded with PC bagmen, Tory organizers, former PC MPs, and even PC candidates defeated at the last election.

Competence or even knowledge in the area of transport has never been a selection criterion. Patronage has been the fundamental rule followed across the board by the Minister of Transport and his colleagues.

Transportation in Canada has always been and must remain a major instrument of economic development. This country has been established and developed thanks to our railway network and has witnessed a significant economic expansion from coast to coast brought about by the construction and operation of airports and seaports. Instead of using it as a tool for employment and job creation, this Conservative Government has managed in two years to create chaos and confusion among all companies involved in the transportation industry, the air carriers which have recorded losses as well as shipping companies which are experiencing difficulties and the railway and trucking companies which are really enraged by the Government's decisions.

Well, the Government somehow managed to antagonize all these people and create so much uncertainty in the transport industry in Canada.

The Government would have made a deliberate effort to ruin everybody that it could not have done better. But what is even more tragic are the consequences of this Government's incompetence which will result in thousands of jobs being lost for the workers in the transport industry.

This Government—need I say it—had promised to create jobs. What it has done in the transportation area is create more unemployment. Specialized workers, by the hundreds, have been laid off by Transport Canada which has cut its own personnel, by such Crown Corporations as Via Rail, Air Canada, CN Marine and the CNR, at the Government's request.

Thousands of workers involved in the manufacturing of rail rolling stock have been fired by Canadian corporations unable to secure Government contracts, while a simple and intelligent buy Canadian policy in the area of transportation could have saved hundreds of jobs in major companies in the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario and Western Canada.

And last, but certainly not least, hundreds and hundreds of workers in the various Canadian shipyards have already been or are about to be victimized under a ruthless industry rationalization policy imposed by the Government which is forcing shipyard company officials to unite and form a common front to streamline their operations and shut down a number of existing plants. While the former administration bent over backwards to secure contracts for all shipbuilders throughout Canada, this Government is telling them: If you want a contract you will have to convince one or two of your competitors to lock their doors just so we will not have to deal with so many of the existing shipyards. I cannot think of a more cavalier attitude towards these thousands of workers who thought the Government was on their side. The stupidity of the Government is unequaled, or perhaps it is surpassed only by its stubborn insistence on levying additional charges from maritime companies through its coast guard service cost recovery scheme.

The St. Lawrence Seaway shipping industry is in the midst of an economic crisis, as was so ably explained by the seaway president when he appeared as a witness before the parliamentary transport committee. And he is not the only one who is complaining about the negligence of the Conservative Government. All the witnesses, all those who gave evidence before the House of Commons Transport Committee concerning Bill C-75 attacked Clause 4, on the grounds specifically that the implementation of this Tory policy would result in a major traffic loss from ports on the St. Lawrence to alternative routes, especially to New Orleans and other American ports on the East Coast, and also a significant loss of competitivity for Great Lakes carriers and Québec export companies. What has the Government done? Up till the last minute of the last session, it persisted in maintaining Clause 4 in Bill C-75. And at this very moment, we do not know yet what the Government is going to do.

We suspect the new Minister of Transport, who may want to amend Bill C-75 is struggling against his colleagues from Finance and the Treasury Board who are bent on getting those additional revenues from an industry that is in serious difficulty. Now, a standing sub-committee of the Transport Committee has been set up to look into the serious problems of the St. Lawrence Seaway. It must be said that this Government has refused to agree to any resumption of the work of that sub-committee. Did the Minister fear he would be embarrassed? Is that the reason why he would not allow that sub-committee to carry on, and would not allow it to meet and work during the summer months and to call on American officials during the fall in order to get a better idea of the situation in the port of New Orleans, and especially to find solutions to those problems that confront us, at a time when those American ports are nibbling at our clientele, when rapid solutions must be found to the economic renewal of our ports on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence. That sub-committee has not yet been re-established, but I would like to read a letter I received from the President of the Dominion Marine Association.

• (1220)

The President of the Dominion Marine Association wrote to all members of the Standing Committee on Transport. He said:

> We feel strongly that the work of the Standing Committee in this regard, only just begun in June, should be continued so that the House of Commons can, through the Committee, gain an appreciation of the severe implications that current problems pose for the Seaway's future.

[Translation]

Clearly, the situation along the St. Lawrence Seaway must be tackled head on by this Government, and I hope this Minister has the courage to accept that the Standing Committee on Transport look into that question without being gagged as it has been a few weeks ago.

The situation is hardly better in the area of passenger rail transportation. As we know, thanks to the efforts of Association Transport 2000, we finally could lay our hands on the famous Horner Report. That report, which has cost the Canadian taxpayers thousands of dollars, as I must say, recommends a 13-point plan of action to save VIA Rail and make it viable. Unfortunately, in a way that is typical with this Government, both the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) have decided to shelve it, because it did not agree with their narrow-minded and inconsistent vision of what the future of that important Crown corporation should be. The Horner Report asked for an immediate and significant injection of public funds to make VIA Rail viable. Unfortunately, the Government did not have the courage to put its money where its mouth is. It made wonderful promises during the election campaign, but since the election it has left VIA Rail go down the river, replacing seasoned directors with political friends. No wonder then that the recommendation made by the Task Force on VIA Rail asking for an important administrative review went unheeded. The Government denies that Crown corporation the necessary means not only to become profitable but also to serve Canadian travellers.

As I said earlier, the Bill has not even been considered in this House. It shows how sincere the Conservative Government is concerning railway passenger services. To this day, in the second session of Parliament, the Bill has not yet been reintroduced and we do not know where the Government will be going with that policy. Besides, they want to apply to transportation the old phrase which says: Use it or lose it. The Government is indeed saying to Canadians: "Let the market do what we do not have the political will to do ourselves". It is obvious that in the field of transportation, the trademark of this government is its lack of political will.

Of course, it is idealistic to ask Canadians to finance in a profitable way the operations of a passenger service. There is no country in the world which has railway passenger services that are profitable. One rail line in Japan between Tokyo and Osaka has become profitable while the rest of their railway operations are not. Even in France where passenger services are speedy and most comfortable, managers are unable to bring their operations out of the red.

Now how can a country as diversified as ours with such a small population ask Via-Rail to be profitable? It is absolutely unthinkable and unacceptable.

Since my time is running short, I would like to deal with another area of transportation which I feel is quite important, and I mean deregulation. Now this Conservative Government which likes to imitate, if not to copy stupidly, every decision made by the Americans and President Reagan has decided to go head on into deregulation. The move towards deregulation which has developed south of the border has become a craze in Canada which is epitomized in Bill C-126, an Act concerning the National Transportation Act. If this Bill is ever adopted by the House—and I am wondering about it because right now we do not know where this government is heading and the Bill was not even reintroduced this session—it could have serious consequences on the transportation industry, but also and mostly on regional development.

I think that all who have commented on this Bill recognize unanimously that it could have a negative impact on their industry, in particular on the trucking industry.

In conclusion, I would like to remind the house of the words of the chief executive of the Canadian Trucking Association who said:

• (1230)

[English]

I thought you might be interested in our critique of Bill C-126 and Bill C-127 with supporting documentation. While we aren't opposed to substantial regulatory reform, they have taken this thing so far that it almost makes you wonder if they have a clue what they're doing.

[Translation]

I see that my time is almost up and I would like to conclude by saying that we, in the Opposition, feel compelled to force the Governement into action in the transport industry. Not only do we blame the Government for its lack of action but we want to make them understand that transportation is an important tool of economic development in this country and that instead of trying to cut costs, the Government should come up with the necessary funds to ensure the well-being of all of those who are in some way involved in transportation all across the country.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, I am rather pleased that the Hon. Member has laid out the new Liberal transportation policy because it is quite a deviation from that of his colleague, the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) or the position that the Liberals took when they were in government. They now seem to be directly and totally opposed to any form of regulatory reform. I find that rather strange.

Mr. Berger: That is not what he said.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is what I interpreted. You can continue to confuse the science and technology issue and I will stay in the transportation field. I think we can probably separate those two issues quite clearly in our minds. The Hon. Member has said that the Government is moving too fast and too deep in terms of regulatory reform. I suspect that he is suggesting that this move should not continue.

The Hon. Member has quoted some members of the trucking industry in expressing their legitimate concerns. There is no question that they are legitimate concerns, but I think what has been outlined in the new National Transportation Act is a smooth and orderly transition to a less regulated environment. The provinces agree that there is far too much regulation in the trucking industry and there is a proliferation of regulations as they apply from province to province. It is a major impediment to interprovincial trade. I think it only makes good sense to try to resolve that.

The fact is that unless the federal Government attempts to co-ordinate this in a realistic and co-operative fashion, these kinds of impediments will continue. It is rather interesting to note that the for-hire trucking industry's share of the market has been on the decline while the in-house trucking has been growing.

Let me deal with air transportation. Of course, when his colleague, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, was Minister, he embarked upon a process of regulatory reform in the air sector. I think the results have been very good in terms of providing new and improved services to areas that did not have service before. For example, Air Nova is a carrier that is now providing service to Sydney, Halifax, Yarmouth and Charlottetown. Voyageur is a new entrant, as is City Express, PropAir, Quebecair and Harland Aviation. These airlines are providing service to areas that were never serviced before.

I simply wanted to ask the Hon. Member if he can clarify once and for all the position of the Liberal Party with respect to deregulation or regulatory reform. We have never used the word "deregulation", but have called it regulatory reform. Are the Liberals backing off from the position they took when they were in government prior to 1984?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to point out to the former Minister of Transport that the problem lies with the Bill as introduced by the Government, which contains no safety measures at all. That is what concerns us, and we suggest that this shortcoming in the Bill is totally unacceptable.

The Bill was introduced in the wake of one of the worst years in terms of air safety throughout the world. Although 1985 was one of the worst years in the history of civil aviation, the Minister is going ahead with a deregulation Bill in which no provision is made for any form of safety for the travelling public. He knows very well that deregulation will bring about increased competition, that new companies will be competing. This might lead to a lack of integrity in the management and a reduction in the maintenance, inspection and control of aircrafts. That is what happened in the United States, and what happened there is bound to take place in Canada. What we are saying then is: Let there be more inspectors in the Department of Transport so that the job gets done. But the Government answers: No, there is no need to increase the number of inspectors, the companies themselves will self-monitor their operations in these great times of deregulation. That is wishful thinking in my opinion, and we suggest that the Government is not assuming its responsibilities with respect to deregulation when it introduces a bill that has no regard whatsoever for safety concerns.

The Deputy Prime Minister referred to the Canadian Trucking Association and agreed that the Association had a valid point. There is even more to it, and I would like to quote another paragraph of that letter:

[English]

One would almost think that the future viability of the common carrier concept is no longer considered important in some respects.

Hopefully they will start over but in their present form, these Bills are a disaster for the private sector common carrier transportation industry and truckers especially.

[Translation]

Those are not my words, they are written by the representatives of the Canadian Trucking Association. That is what they think of the two little babies of the former Minister of Transport.

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I was also rising for a question or comment, and as I understand it, it is the practice normally to alternate between the two sides of the House. Is that right?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is indeed the practice to alternate. I had understood that the Deputy Prime Minister had a very short supplementary. I was going to recognize him and give you an opportunity to rise afterwards, which I still intend to do. The Deputy Prime Minister.

• (1240)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A short comment, please.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will be very brief, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member suggested there was no provision for safety in the new piece of legislation. Safety is spelled out in very succinct and categorical terms. That is one of the first basic criteria upon which we base a sound transportation system. I wanted to make that very clear. Furthermore, Canada's record in the aviation sector is excellent. We brought in a new aeronautics Bill which tightened it up. We have brought on new inspectors and tightened up the security very, very much, certainly a lot more than was done in the days when the Hon. Member's Government was in office.

Mr. Ouellet: I do not want to start an argument, Madam Speaker, on whether the previous Government took more to heart the security and safety of the traveller, but the fact is that since the Government took office there have been a lot of incidents at airports. Indeed, we have asked the Department of Transport to do more and it is still continuing to drag its feet. That is the reality.

[Translation]

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister to explain or comment—

An Hon. Member: Not the Minister; the Hon. Member.

Mr. Berger: I am sorry, it was a slip of the tongue. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the former Minister of Transport, to comment further the issue of transport in relation with VIA Rail. I recall that, when we were in power, we made some cut-backs in service to enable VIA Rail to purchase more equipment. We wanted to increase the equipment budget because we thought it crucial that VIA Rail have modern equipment to be able to make its railway passenger service profitable one day. The Conservatives objected—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Hon. Member has put a question. Time is short and we want to allow the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) to answer the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Berger: If I may, I would like to finish my question.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There will be less time for the Hon. Member for Papineau to answer, but go ahead.

[Translation]

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member has referred to the recent report published by Transport 2000, which states that the Government is killing the passenger service, and I was wondering whether the Minister, or rather the Hon. Member could make a few additional comments on this important matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has the floor, but for one minute only!

Mr. Ouellet: It is obvious that the previous Government had a three-pronged program aimed at restoring VIA Rail's efficiency. This program consisted of the following three elements. First, the purchase of new rolling stock, engines and passenger cars.

Second, the establishment of maintenance centers in the four regions of the country, namely the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario and Western Canada, in order to afford this transportation company substantial savings in the repair and maintenance of its rolling stock.

And third, the rationalization of passenger service, increased marketing efforts on certain profitable and important routes and abandonment of other routes which had been deemed useless and were not used by the travelling public.

Upon taking power however, the new government has completely bungled these priorities. It has restored unprofitable routes. It has refused to allow VIA Rail to purchase new rolling stock. As of now, VIA Rail still has no new rolling stock—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time alloted for questions and comments has now expired. Debate. The Hon. Minister of State for Transport.

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Transport)): Madam Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak for a few minutes, but before giving Canadians the information I have prepared, I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who was talking about patronage just now, that perhaps he should talk to the Leader of the Opposition, who was a patronage expert at the time, and as for the political courage to which the Hon. Member referred to earlier, which, in fact, under the previous Government was pure arrogance, I think there is a big difference between a Government that consults before making decisions and a Government that was as arrogant as the previous one was.

Madam Speaker, I intend to address the Government's priorities in the transport field. The Government's highest priority is surely to guarantee the safety of our transportation network. We cannot and will not tolerate any compromise for the sake of achieving other Government objectives in this sector. In pursuing this objective, the Government has taken some important initiatives with respect to our various transportation modes, and it continues to do so. Last year, Parliament approved a number of amendments to the Aeronautics Act, which gave Canada its best legislation on aviation security in 60 years. The regulations on the transportation of hazardous goods were adopted last year, and they are now being implemented with the full co-operation of all provinces. After consultation with the provinces, we also reached agreement on a uniform national safety code for the trucking industry.

Amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, designed to improve marine safety, were tabled in the House last spring and will be reintroduced for debate. As for the railways, we have had consultations with all parties concerned, prior to drafting amendments to the Railway Act that will promote the use of advanced technology.

The Government's commitment to economic reform remains firm. Very shortly, we shall be tabling the new National Transportation Act and the accompanying Motor Vehicle Transportation Act. Except for a few minor technical changes, these Bills will be identical to those tabled last June. We trust they will be considered without delay and given the attention they deserve.

The last major review of our national transportation legislation took place nearly 25 years ago. The Hon. Member for Papineau said earlier that his Government had done a great deal for transportation in this country, but it has been 25 years since they or any government even touched this legislation. In 1961, Madam Speaker, the MacPherson Royal Commission of Inquiry published a report on transport that was to form the basis for the National Transportation Act passed in 1967. Since then, the sector has developed and matured considerably. The trucking industry is buoyant, and the railways have concentrated their operations in bulk commodity transport.

Air transport has trebled and never before have such comprehensive services been available in this sector.

Intermodal transport services have expanded and the needs of shippers have diversified. The number of Canadians who prefer train or bus travel has declined, and the automobile remains the favourite way to travel in Canada.

The 1967 National Transportation Act and other related statutes stem from a regulatory approach which is no longer acceptable. Such legislation were adopted when transport markets were considered as being underdeveloped and when carriers were deemed to need protection.

In short, Madam Speaker, over the past 20 years the previous Government took a paternalistic view of people involved in transportation, and we intend to steer a different course altogether. Similarly, users are subject to undue control by regulatory agencies which decide for them how they should deal with carriers. Such regulations have stifled the competitive spirit and more often than not have led to higher rates and fewer services.

As the transportation sector expands, regulations ought to become more flexible and simpler to enable the industry to meet the ever changing needs of shippers and users alike. We should eliminate restrictions which thwart competitiveness and keep prices high, and then promote diversity and initiative. The regulations and the agency which implements them should be more flexible, more readily accessible to Canadians, less procedure-oriented.

Madam Speaker, when I was responsible for small business—in the Department of Industry, if you will—my provincial counterparts and I signed memorandums of agreement to reduce red tape and simplify procedures. We will take similar action in the transportation sector. We should encourage mediation and less formal dispute settlements. As stated in the November 8, 1984 document entitled "A New Direction for Canada: An Agenda for Economic Renewal", the current economic situation calls for the removal of barriers which stand in the way of growth and competitiveness in Canada's transport industry.

A fresh policy and a new legislative framework have become imperative if we are to face the realities of the 1980s, the 1990s and beyond, and if we aim at building a sound foundation which will enable us to meet the challenges and benefit from the opportunities of the next century.

The new legislation reflects the commitment of the Conservative Government to five principles. First, transportation safety is our number one priority and we cannot over emphasize it. As you will recall, Madam Speaker, whenever there is an announcement or a press conference regarding new transportation legislation or policies, security always is and still remains the priority. The Canadian transportation network must meet the needs of shippers and travellers. Trimmed down regulations which would reduce the intervention of the state would stimulate innovation and entrepreneurship. Greater reliance on competition and market forces will result in a decrease of unit costs, more competitive prices and a greater range of services for shippers and the Canadian public.

Canadians want a regulatory framework which is both open and accessible without being excessively slow and costly as is now the case.

Madam Speaker, the reforms contained in the new legislation represent a made-in-Canada policy. The existing legislation provides only one way of dealing with complaints by shippers, carriers or the public: an investigation by the Canadian Transport Commission, which can include a public hearing to determine whether the public interest is involved.

This procedure has been criticized by everyone as too costly, too slow and inappropriate for settling differences about prices or services between a shipper and a carrier, for instance.

New provisions taking into account the particular situation of transport in Canada are proposed so that private differences between shippers and carriers can be settled quickly and economically:

A mediation service provided by the National Transportation Agency at the request of the parties involved.

An arbitration procedure will be established to settle differences when mediation fails. The independent arbitrator appointed by the National Transportation Agency will be able to choose only between the final offer of the carrier and that of the shipper.

The new legislation will also include an amended and more effective investigation mechanism for the cases where the public interest is involved.

Upon a complaint being filed, the national transportation board will be empowered to investigate any actions, omissions or rates of a carrier that could harm the public interest.

The various needs of different areas of Canada have been taken into account by the previous Minister of Transport, the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), following many consultations held across the country, and also by the Standing Committee on Transport.

To give but two examples, the results speak for themselves. The national transport policy statement, on which the new national transportation board based its decisions, does recognize that transportation is the key to regional development, as this Government has indicated on a number of occasions. Regional development is one of our commitments, and transportation is the key to that development.

The regulations concerning air services in Northern Canada, which the Deputy Prime Minister referred to earlier, will include other criteria that will safeguard the public interest, namely the maintenance of essential air services at reasonable costs in difficult and precarious conditions.

In Southern Canada, where most Canadians live, this increased competition between air carriers will lead to better fares and to services that are better suited to passenger needs. We have already witnessed the arrival of new regional air carriers such as Air Nova, as indicated earlier by the Deputy Prime Minister. In many cases those companies, as is the case with Air Nova, are using Canadian-designed aircraft, Dash 8's and Dash 7's—like City Express or others for instance—and this is good for our Canadian manufacturers and employees.

And when the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) said earlier—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Minister. However, he should be aware that when the House resumes, he will have 5 minutes more if he wants to use them, after which there will be 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House took recess at 1 p.m., the hon. Minister of State (Transport) (Mr. Bissonette) had the floor.

Mr. Bissonnette: When we stopped for the lunch break, Madam Speaker, I was dealing with the interests of our producers and shippers.

You can rest assure that the interests of our producers and shippers will better coincide with those of our rail carriers and truckers in the very near future.

Our shippers will get better services at more competitive prices, and that is the purpose of this whole updating of the transport legislation. It is absolutely essential to make our producers and shippers more competitive, both in Canada and abroad, in a world where competition is increasingly strong.

Madam Speaker, let me tell you what is going on now and what had gone on for some years. Canadian shippers were taking advantage of the situation by shipping goods by other means of transport available in the United States, because American carriers were not required to publish their transport rates, while we had to, in Canada. The changes which we are making are therefore going to be beneficial both to the carriers and shippers.

It goes without saying, therefore, that carriers will have to become more efficient to meet the challenge of an increased competition. There is no doubt about that. However, we trust that our carriers will be able to meet the challenge and be up to the task. I should be misleading you, Madam Speaker, if I said that all the benefits would accrue without the people involved having to make a number of concessions. In many respects, however, the legislative reforms simply reflect the reality of a transportation network which has changed considerably.

We have sought the advice of all interested parties on the need of a reform and the proposed changes. They have all agreed that a major reform is essential; that they do not all agree on the details of the proposed legislation is quite normal. There are governments which do not consult, preferring to impose, as did the one to which the Hon. Member for Papineau (M. Ouellet) belonged and of which I emphasized the arrogance a while ago—well, we have consulted, and it is normal for people to express their views and sometimes disagree. One thing is sure: the measures which will be implemented will provide for a transition period during which each organization and province will be able to adapt.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, I should like to touch briefly on a point which the Hon. Member for Papineau raised a while ago, that is, the Saint-Jean Airport. I want the Hon. Member for Papineau to remember that 20 years ago, there were 600 people working at the Saint-Jean Airport, and that there were not 50 left when we came to office in September, 1984. The Liberal MP who had represented the Saint-Jean riding for 20 years had never bothered to try and create jobs for Saint-Jean workers at this airport.

As elected representative for the Saint-Jean riding and as Minister of State (Transport), I can assure you, Madam Speaker, and the people in Saint-Jean that the airport will be enlarged to create jobs, and that this will happen soon.

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a few comments and ask some questions to the Minister who just spoke on behalf of the Government.

Madam Speaker, the motion introduce today by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has considerable importance. In an area like the one I represent in the House, the Montreal area, transportation has always been, and will be for years to come, the main industry. Whether it is rail, air, or maritime transport, Montreal, due to its location, has always been a transportation hub, not only for the rest of Canada, but also for the United States.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Papineau reminds us of several aspects—companies and jobs—connected with the transportation policies of Canada. These policies were developed over time to build a country, because the Canadian geography was not as favourable as in other parts of North America, we had to bridge the distance between East and West, so that transportation was always the connecting link, the means to build the country we now have. However, in the last few years, several aspects being discussed today thanks to the motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member from Papineau, concern rail transportation.

I want to ask the Minister how he and his Government intend to deal with these problems, not just in terms of jobs but in terms of the importance of the Montreal region for the transportation industry and transport—related industries. In the past 18 months, the only Canadian company manufacturing locomotives, Bombardier-MLW Ltd., has practically closed down, and now, the only locomotive manufacturer in Canada as far as I know is a Canadian branch of a US company which, now it no longer has to compete, will probably be tempted to have its manufacturing done in the United States. And Canadians will no longer be able to build their own locomotives, either for VIA Rail or for CP or CN.

Bombardier-MLW Ltd. has been shut down, and another related industry as well, and I am referring to Hawker Siddeley Canada Ltd., with its welding shops and foundry. And what about the railway maintenance workshop in Montreal which apparently will be closed, with some jobs remaining to repair American trains if any come in for repairs.

I want to ask the Minister about this policy the Government is considering. Does it have an answer, not just for the people who work there, does it have a plan to ensure that the Montreal region will continue to be what it has been in the last 100 years, a major railway transportation centre?

Mr. Bissonnette: Madam Speaker, I shall be happy to clarify a few points regarding the transportation industry in Montreal, and in addition to railway transportation, I will also address what we intend to do about the industry in general, not just in Montreal but across Canada. But to get back to CN in Montreal and the points mentioned by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), when I looked at the CN dossier, I started to wonder what the previous Government had done in the last 20 years and what kind of guidelines it had given CN. When in 1978, CN was told to become self-sufficient, it had to acquire the means to do so and this meant rationalizing certain parts of its network and some of its repair shops. And today, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides has the nerve to insinuate that this Government is taking jobs away from the people of Montreal! When the Government gave CN those instructions, it did not tell them: if you decide to close certain repair shops, you will have to find something else to replace those jobs. They never did anything of the kind, and that includes the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who was very much involved and was part of that Government.

We asked the CN people to try and find contracts elsewhere. The previous Governement did not even have enough imagination to believe in private enterprise and to believe that a Crown corporation could go hunting for repair contracts in other countries, as we will be doing with CN in Montreal. I do hope the CN management has well understood the clear message that CN employees are important to us, that jobs in Montreal are important to us, and we proved it in the last two years. As I am sure you know, and it is worth repeating, 600,000 new jobs have been created in Canada, of which a little over 100,000 in Quebec, and they have been created by the private sector, contrary to what the Hon. Member for Papineau indicated in his statement today when he said that the state had to be a protective state, looking after everything.

No, this is not the Conservative Government's philosophy; ours is to create an environment in which private enterprise can develop and in which private sector enterprises will develop as much as possible and create jobs. And this environment we have created because we control Government expenses, interest rates and inflation rates. This is a good climate for investment, this is the kind of climate that creates jobs.

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, if the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bissonnette) wants to take it that way, to be partisan—I thought I asked a forward-looking question, but he was looking backwards so, if you do not mind, we will both look backwards.

When the Liberals were in office, if that is the way you want to look at it, Bombardier-MLW employed over 1,000 people and was building engines for Canadian companies. The same thing happened at the Hawker Siddeley foundries. When did those operations close? After September 4! Imagine, Madam Speaker, now they come and tell me that 600,000 jobs have been created! The Minister of State should consider what has happened since the impact of their last few budgets was first felt on the economy. There has been a loss of 17,000 jobs in Canada. Up to and including last August, 17,000 jobs had been lost in Canada. Last month, 35,000 were created. That leaves a surplus of about 15,000 jobs. You then have the gall to brag about the creation of 15,000 jobs in a year and to refuse to answer questions. What will you do about the transportation policy to allow Canadians to build—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) knows that he should address the member through the Chair.

Mr. Garneau: Right, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bissonnette).

Mr. Bisonnette: Madam Speaker, this Conservative Government believes in private entreprise. This is what we are going to do in the area of transportation and we are going to simplify these regulations. We will eliminate all red tape to give people a chance to develop in a country where shippers and carriers enjoy free entreprise.

Such is the policy of the federal Governement and the Conservative Party and I will never apologize to the Liberals for what they have done.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of State (Transport) (Mr. Bisonnette) should answer the questions put to him. This question is quite simple and I will repeat it for the third time because my colleague for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has already asked it twice. Twice we have heard platitudes but no answer was provided. Some 2,500 workers in the Montreal area have lost their jobs since the Tory Government has come to power.

They were manufacturing locomotives in the East end of Montreal in the Bombardier-MLW plant, in the Vickers shipyards, in ironworks and foundries. Those people lost their job because the Tory Government failed to provide contracts to those companies as was done in the past. Moreover, Madam Speaker, I would like the Minister of State to answer the following question: What is he doing for those unemployed people as a result of the Governments inaction?

Mr. Bissonnette: Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) that we are not going to dig ditches for the sake of building bridges. We are not going to have trains built if we don't need them. But we have created a climate that has made it possible to create over 100,000 jobs in Montreal. That is what counts, Hon. Member for Papineau! Thanks to deregulation, the transportation industry will continue to expand instead of being shackled by regulations that have remained unchanged for 25 years. You were never able to adjust to change. We are going to adjust the industry to the realities of the 21st century.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise on behalf of my Party to debate a motion that addresses a serious problem, to use its own words, in "frivolous ideological" terms.

The import of this motion is essentially to put all those federally-regulated means of transport in Canada out for debate. That is a worthy intent. The fashion in which it has been done does not reflect any credit on the movers of the motion. It is a fashion that suggests that we will have un dialogue de sourds, an interchange between two sides in terms of the failures of one and the achievements of the other. Into that debate I will attempt to inject, if I may make so bold, some measure of discussion of what the real problems in transport in Canada are, how they derive, and where the solutions may lie.

The motion that the Opposition has put forward covers almost every aspect of freight and passenger traffic in Canada. Reading the text of the motion, one could almost imagine that the Liberals had not been in power for a decade or held power for 17 of the last 20 years. Reality is different. Virtually everything that this motion complains about is the result of decisions taken, actions left undone or indeed done by the previous Liberal Governments. It is worthwhile to mention that while I have no cause or inclination to defend the Government, the fact is that many of the things that have happened in the area of transport over the past few years have their roots in the inaction or the budgetary shortcomings of the previous Liberal Government.

Airline deregulation began in the Ministry of Transport when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was Minister. He was pulling in people from right and left, overspending his budget by a factor of twice and breaking some of the rules which then constrained the salaries of his officials in order to gear up the public relations effort that went along with this. Presumably the Liberals are taking the position that their brand of regulation would not have gone as far as the present Government. Since the Government has passed no legislation of substance in this area up until now, it is clear where these trends and initiatives started. We must acknowledge that the idea of complete deregulation at the same time of all phases of federally-regulated transport in Canada is a folly which originates with this Government. I would dare to say that it is a folly which is encountering increasing resistance as the adverse consequences become evident. It is obvious that in the area of freight transportation, no matter how the freight is travelling, in a time when industry is suffering from low commodity prices, low returns on transport, and poor sales during this transition period, deregulation is being introduced at a time and in a fashion that can only aggravate some of the problems which now exist. We have had contradictory statements from the Government and have not had it plain and clear as to the future role, if any, of the Canadian Transport Commission. Is it going to disappear from the scene, as has been suggested? Will it stay, as the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) in one of his parliamentary answers has replied?

The issue of safety is essential to an understanding of this debate and it is an essential part of the concern that all Members of Parliament should be demonstrating for Canadians. Here I would warn the Government and caution the Opposition. The caution is that the dramatization of safety concerns will obscure the very real concern that should be manifested. If we simply go around the country and say that safety is out of the window and there will not be a regulation that can be enforced—

[Translation]

This means there will be a free-for-all in the transportation sector.

[English]

If we do such a thing, we will be rendering a disservice to our fellow Canadians. Equally from the Government's side, if we were to go around and say that safety will not and cannot be compromised, then we might miss the reality of some serious changes in the safety regime which may have unfortunate consequences for Canadians.

I am referring particularly to the matter of air travel safety and rail transportation safety. We have at last the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. My belief is that the preliminary implications of the CASB are very good. I would also point out that recent studies indicate that the regulations on fatigue in flying, principally pilot fatigue, are among the least effective in the world. They are not widely and strictly enforced in the manner that they should be. In many cases they do not provide for adequate recuperation for pilots before undertaking their next flight. Like most Members of the House, I read the aviation safety reports and the accident reports. I also read the reports of minor accidents. The number of cases in which pilot error is indicated should be a clear warning to the Government that there is something lacking in the present system. Also the lack of ability to enforce the existing safety regulations is something that should concern every Member of the House.

The operating rules for railways which have been enforced for many years by the Railway Transport Committee of the CTC were not regulations introduced on a whim or a caprice. They were introduced over a period of years or decades in response to perceived needs. To say—

[Translation]

As the Minister of State (Transport) (Mr. Bissonnette) said, we are going to get rid of all that red tape and even tear up the rule book—I'm not quite sure about the context—but I think we should not forget that this so-called red tape consists of regulations that are there for a very good reason, namely to ensure our safety.

[English]

We should look at those safety regulations. The Government must take the utmost care in discarding any one of those regulations.

Turning to the situation of rail freight under this Government, we have seen over the last couple of years a continuation of the trend toward job cuts. I am very glad to see the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) sitting in the House. This is a matter that relates to the substance of this motion that I feel he should be taking up with his Department and on which he should be conducting a detailed scrutiny. When I read the press release on immigration levels I see that three categories of railway workers and the category of airline pilots, are designated as categories in which Canada has a shortage by virtue of being awarded 10 points in the immigration regulations. I cannot believe that that is so. In my riding many railway workers have been laid off or have been bumped to other parts of the system. Many pilots in Canada are unable to obtain employment, even though in some cases they possess the highest qualifications that our licencing system allows. The idea that we are effectively telling people in other countries that Canada has a shortage of people to fill those jobs is, to my mind, not only a slap in the face for those Canadians in those occupations who are unemployed, but is also cruelly deceiving those people who might come to this country under the assumption that such jobs are available.

We have already gone into the matter of privatization and the problems that this is causing particularly in terms of the CNR. I would be surprised to hear anyone on the government side deny the loss of employment that has occurred in the maintenance, the engineering, and the repair functions of the CNR. I am surprised that CN is not looking at those proposed job cuts with more appreciation for its potential liability should there be an accident which can be directly traced to deficient standards or defective maintenance. I believe the savings in eliminating these maintenance and overhaul jobs would look small compared to the possible liability involved in the companies being sued by someone who suffered an accident because of a failure of equipment resulting from lack of maintenance. Cabooseless trains is an example of the same problem. What will be the legal position of CN or CP in an accident where the injured party could claim that the lack of a caboose was a contributing cause to an accident? We have also heard in the last two months complaints from railway pensioners. In any debate on our transport system it is entirely legitimate that we raise those concerns. In many cases these people have given their whole working life to the railway system and now, because of a lack of indexation or inflation adjustment, they find their retirement incomes are totally inadequate. In examining the rail sector I think we have to harken back to reports issued some years ago which show the degree to which the railways' infrastructure costs and those of other modes of transportation are subsidized. If ever those costs were factored in to the cost of the transportation network as a whole, we know the rail mode would look a lot better than it does today.

Turning to air transport, the airport management strategy of this Government seems to have nothing to it but cut, cut, cut. The Government wants to slough off the responsibility for airports to municipal authorities. It seeks to cut back drastically the subsidies to municipal airports by something like 30 per cent next year. Where is it going to end? Are we going to have a national transportation system or are we going to have airports run individually by the municipalities, with a resulting lack of co-ordination? Perhaps the Government feels there is a better way to do things but it must realize that some airports will not be able to continue without these subsidies. It would also be unreasonable for anyone in this debate to talk about airports without mentioning the expenditures, some of them useful but much of them needless, on airports in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding. All Members of the House should be interested in this comparison. In Kenora—Rainy River there are presently 32 active airports, only four of which receive assistance from Transport Canada. The number of passengers passing through those airports far exceeds those of airports which are much less active but which have received capital works such as runway extensions for which there was no operational argument to justify them other than the need for paying someone to put down paving which probably has not had a wheel on it yet.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I would also like to comment briefly on the situation in Canada's shipyards, and especially in the Province of Quebec. It seems that today, about 70 per cent of skilled workers in Canada shipyards are unemployed, and this Government—need we bring this up again—met with the president of one of the shipyards to look at the future of the industry in Quebec, which is clearly a conflict of interest situation. On March 26, it was announced that a $130—million contract would be awarded to Versatile Davie for the construction of a super ferry for CN Marine, now Marine Atlantic Inc. It has now been six months and nothing has materialized yet. Why? The Government should explain, Madam Speaker.

[English]

I would like to turn now to the situation of VIA Rail. That corporation was established by the previous Liberal Government with great fanfare and shortly thereafter left in orphan status. The present state of affairs is that the companies dedicated personnel, particularly the operating personnel, are doing their best with ancient equipment. The Government announced several times that there would be new engines and new rail cars to replace the creeking 30 year old and 40 year old equipment on VIA Rail. Again—

[Translation]

As in the case of the super ferry, except that this has been going on for a much longer period, nothing has been done. There have been no announcements whatsoever.

[English]

The CN and CP charges, which never seem to have been submitted to a proper examination by an outside authority, are of course dragging VIA Rail down into a deeper deficit position. What the people of this country are looking for in the matter of VIA Rail is simple honesty. The Government should either say it will cure VIA Rail, or stand up with some dignity and belief in its principles and say it will kill VIA Rail. It makes no sense, from either a management or political point of view, to keep VIA Rail in this state of limbo. The Government has to be clear on where it stands on the future of VIA Rail. The uncertainty is far worse than any precise move the Government could make, be it positive or negative.

Finally, I would like to talk about some of the consequences within my own riding which flow from the Government's drift and lack of initiative. We have had lay-offs in the divisional points of Sioux Lookout, Rainy River and Kenora. We have seen lay-offs of CN personnel in Fort Frances, not just in the running trades or the equipment department, but also in the maintenance-of-way and other ancilliary areas. We have seen contracting out of bunkhouse operations and of course our railway workers have faced the threat of job elimination, which is surely at the end of the agenda in the cabooseless train hearings.

We know, in spite of the transitional provisions, which I think were indeed wise, concerning deregulation of air traffic, that airlines in northern Ontario are basically on a hit list of the majors. In the last couple of days we have seen Air Canada moving to take over Air Ontario and Austin Air. We know that in the past this has led to predatory practices directed at the smaller airlines and their elimination. My constituents fear that this will happen again.

The Government has continually stalled on the matter of extending the Loran C network to cover the whole of Canada. I have risen on more than one occasion and pointed out to the Government the very useful improvements in navigation and therefore in air safety available through installation of this system. Indeed, within the last couple of days it has come to my attention that the American Government may be interested in the construction of a Loran C station in Canada which would also improve coverage in the U.S. because of unique locational factors. The Government should be grasping at that sort of possibility instead of ignoring it. For the Government to say that the global satellite positioning system is an effective substitute is to ignore the realities of the difficulties in the United States space program and to ignore the responsibility for creating jobs and improving air safety in Canada in this decade rather than waiting for the next. In conclusion, the Government must give the entire area of transport much more attention.

• (1440)

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's speech on this motion. He mentioned what a good system the Loran C is for navigation, for aircraft as well as ships. The Canadian Owners & Pilots Association publishes a monthly newsletter. They qualified what the Hon. Member said about the Loran C coverage. The newsletter says that by 1990 the United States will have coverage for the entire continental U.S. Saskatchewan is a preferred site for such a station.

In the same newsletter there is a little note with regard to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding of Manicouagan. It says:

> According to press reports, the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney has announced that ILS installations, costing $7 1/2 million, are to be made at airports within the boundaries of his constituency of Manicouagan. It was pointed out to us that his particular riding is bathed in marine Loran C signals which may be used by aircraft having functioning Loran C receivers to conduct non-precision approaches at no additional cost for ground transmitters.

Is the Hon. Member aware of this? When Hon. Members have asked for a few dollars to create part-time employment in their ridings, members of the Government have indicated that we are extremely short of funds. Is the Member aware that this is occurring in the Prime Minister's riding? Does he think that those dollars may be better spent elsewhere? This is what the Canadian Owners & Pilots Association are pointing out to us.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I must thank my hon. colleague for his question, which I could not have phrased better myself. Members on the government side may not appreciate the utility of the availability of the Loran C signals in the riding of Manicouagan or in most coastal districts of Canada. As reported in the newsletter from which my hon. colleague quoted, the use of such a system enables a pilot to split the numbers. In other words, he may land accurately at the end of a runway through the use of that navigational system only. I understand that a company in the United States uses that system to keep track of its delivery vehicles within a city. This is a system of great accuracy. That is of obvious benefit to non-marine areas of Canada. Pilots in central Canada could derive great use from it.

The Hon. Member's question illustrates very well the double standard which the Government applies with regard to the funding of projects. Money is available to gild the lilies in the Prime Minister's riding. A good system is already in place there, yet there is $7.5 million available to enhance the instrument landing system when neither accuracy nor safety is available in many other parts of Canada.

This is not a criticism which I make lightly, Madam Speaker, but I thought it was the most disgraceful manipulation that I have ever seen when the Prime Minister produced a widow from his riding to say that she would not be a widow if this system had existed previously. That is disgraceful because many people from remote ridings in Canada would be able to make the same claim and twist the public's collective heartstrings in that very way. For the Prime Minister to suggest by implication—

Mr. Forrestall: He can't say that with impunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Hon. Member has made his point.

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, I am rather surprised to hear the Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry), who seems to be in cahoots with the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), saying that the Government seems to be forgetting about the safety standards which protect travellers. He made very little reference to the Aeronautics Act which was amended last June. I would like to put a couple of points on the record.

The Aeronautics Act provided for an independent civil aviation tribunal system to be created to hear and determine appeals from penalties assessed by Transport Canada quickly, fairly and informally. Challenges could be made to suspension or cancellation of a licence, an assessment of fines or refusal to renew a licence. Doctors and optometrists will be required to report conditions of patients holding licences who may have medical problems which could affect flight safety. Licence holders will be required to identify themselves to any attending physician or optometrist and are deemed to consent to the disclosure of medical information.

Coupled with that are the safety measures in our airports in which each of us take part every week. There are X-ray machines in place. Since last October baggage has not been allowed to precede a passenger on international flights. By next year this safety measure will be in place on domestic flights. There is now more RCMP presence in the airports in addition to the regular security personnel.

In light of all the things which the Hon. Member himself has seen taking place in the past year and the various regulations which have been put into effect, would he not agree that the setting of standards and their diligent enforcement is a logical means of protecting the public interest? Instead of telling people that the Government is doing nothing, why does he not report that which has actually happened and been put in place through law?

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I must thank the Hon. Member for the opportunity to address those concerns. He is talking about security. I did not have the opportunity to discuss airport security in my speech. Although the methods that are being used are cumbersome and irritating to many travellers, I agree that they make a great deal of sense in view of the world-wide increase in terrorism against aviation. In Canada we have mercifully experienced only one instance, although that was indeed a terrible instance.

I was talking about regulations and the ability to enforce them. While the improvement of an appeal system for people accused of offences against the Aeronautics Act is desirable, I cannot see how that, in itself, will enhance safety.

• (1450)

The Hon. Member does make some legitimate points about security and a good point about the appeal system. However, these do not address the safety concerns. He will know that the number of near miss incidents reported by air traffic controllers in Canada has risen by an uncomfortable amount in spite of the measures he is talking about.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I want to make two points. The opposition Parties appear to be denouncing deregulation, yet every one of these incidents that have been mentioned have happened under a regulated society. How can they blame these incidents on something that has not yet come into force? It is beyond me and simply does not make sense because these happened under a regulated society.

My second point concerns truckers. For many years regulation has been the downfall of our trucking industry. In fact, I am surprised that we have a national trucking industry in Canada at all. If a trucker from Alberta wants to haul goods into or through Saskatchewan, he first must get a permit in Alberta which costs approximately $1,000 and then get another permit in Saskatchewan for another $1,500 or $2,000. If he wants to go through Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec, he must pay another $2,000 or $3,000 in each province. In other words, these regulations have created ten separate states in Canada, and in order for a trucker to haul beef from Alberta to Montreal, he had to go through the United States. We had to make arrangements with the Americans for our truckers to go through the United States. I wish I had more time because these regulations are destroying the trucking industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry, I must interrupt the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). I will allow a few seconds for the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) to answer, then we will resume debate.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, I would simply say in reply to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) that his observations reflect indeed today his apparent stance against any form of regulation with the industry. Our stance is that what is needed is not deregulation on the basis of simply following an ideological perspective from our south, but reregulation. Regulations are as much in need of rewriting as they are in need of abolition.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I believe there was an understanding that one of the Liberals would speak next. However, if I am in error and they do not wish to speak, I will proceed.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) on a point of order.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I simply wanted to draw your attention to the fact that my colleague from Newfoundland was about to enter the House and take the floor, at the suggestion of our friend.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was responding to a page's summons, and when I heard the Member finish his speech I immediately rushed back into the House.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Hon. Member can feel very fortunate that we were not debating Bill C-75.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I was prepared to give the floor to the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) but he was not in the House. If I have the permission of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Kilgour), and there is unanimous consent, I will give the floor to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, we on this side play by the Marquis of Queensbury rules. Yes, indeed he has our permission.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I apologize to the Speaker and my colleagues for not being in my chair. However, I had been summoned by a page.

What is most disconcerting about having to be recalled in such a way is that not only have I upset Madam Speaker and my colleagues in the House, who I know were waiting with bated breath for my comments, but I find myself rising to speak having just been the beneficiary of a kind gesture from Members opposite. You do not know how it pains my heart, therefore, to have to proceed with the comments I must, in good conscience, make.

Today we have set aside a period of time in the House to debate what is really an urgent and pressing matter in this country. It is the insidious, slow and almost invisible manner in which the Government of Canada has completely changed the way in which Canadians and, more importantly, the Government views the role of transportation in our nation.

I believe it is important to look at the history of transportation in Canada. From the days of John A. Macdonald, that great Conservative Prime Minister who I am sure Members opposite will applaud—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: They are so predictable, Madam Speaker. From the days of John A. Macdonald, transportation has always been a vehicle for building this country. John A. Macdonald did not propose and support the notion of building railways from sea to shining sea because it was a good free enterprise idea. He did not want to have a railway that ran from one end of this country to the other because an enormous profit could be realized. He wanted a railway from sea to shining sea because he understood that in order to reconcile the differences between the various regions and people in this country he needed a way to unite them. The railroad was built from sea to sea, primarily from his initiative.

That is but one illustration of the role that transportation has always played in this country. Time does not permit me to give many other examples of the role of transportation in Canada.

Let us examine what has happened in the last couple of years. The Government has decided through its deregulation initiative that transportation is no longer an essential element of nation building. Furthermore, it has decided that transportation is no longer an essential ingredient in ensuring regional opportunities and regional equality. It has adopted a user fee policy in this country by which it implies that transportation facilities are no different from a McDonald's or a grocery store. Such stores are placed where there is enough demand and enough volume of sales. If you live in the tiniest town on the eastern shores of this great nation overlooking the Atlantic Ocean, there will be no McDonald's. According to the Government's user-pay policy, it is saying for the first time in our history that where there is a huge population and a demand, there will be transportation services.

Where there is not a huge population and where there is no market-place demand, where the free market sector will not give it, Government will no longer provide transportation services. That is a radical departure from Government policy in a country of 25 million people, a country which has within its boundaries the largest land mass, notwithstanding the Soviet Union, on the planet earth.

For the first time we are denying transportation services to the people who live in the province of my good friend, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), the Province of P.E.I., an island province. For those people the ferry system is not a scenic route by the sea. They do not wake up in the morning and say: "I think I will go out today and ride the ferry so I can enjoy the fresh air and the sunshine". They ride the damn ferry because there is no other way of moving themselves or freight onto or off that island. Yet the Government is now saying to P.E.I. that the ferry service shall be provided on a user-pay basis. There was a 15 per cent increase last year, and there were more increases announced last week, which means that ultimately we will essentially cut the umbilical cord, transportation, which keeps the island of P.E.I. viable and it will shrivel and die because the free market did not say that P.E.I. should live.

In my own Province of Newfoundland, which is separated from the rest of the country by 90 miles of water, that same kind of philosophy is applied with exactly the same kind of contemptible results. The Government wants to spend $600 million to build an ice-breaker to patrol our northern waters. Because the Government has such a friendly relationship with the American administration, it now needs a $600 million monolith to keep the Americans from ploughing through our territorial waters. What is the best way of establishing one's ownership of something? What is the best way of proving one owns something? It is to be there, to have possession, and the way to demonstrate possession is not with a $600 million ice-breaker. It is by supporting the people who live in the North, by giving them a transportation policy which allows them to live in the North and have a quality of life while they live there.

Rather than putting money into northern transportation systems, into getting rid of the high air fares for people who live in the North and allowing people to get goods, food and all the necessities of life at a reasonable cost so they will live in the North and hold up Canada's flag, we are going to put $600 million into an ice-breaker. That is the kind of irrational, knee-jerk, non-people oriented, free market balderdash being promoted by the Government.

There are a number of examples of the shortsighted doctrinaire and philosophical wizardry which this administration wants to impose upon the people of Canada. In Moncton, New Brunswick, a thousand jobs are now at stake because Canadian National—sea to shining sea—is no longer going to be a presence in New Brunswick. It is being moved out because the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) says he wants to get Candian National lean and mean and thinned out so he can privatize Canadian National.

A thousand jobs are going to disappear, but the answer of the Minster for Transport is that those people are no longer viable. I wrote down what he said. He said: "We are not going to dig rivers so we can build bridges". That begs the question. Is the Government going to manufacture prisoners to fill prisons? It cannot have it both ways.

The hypocrisy of the Government is appalling. It is not the hypocrisy that bothers me. It is not the fact that the Government talks out of both sides of its mouth that bothers me. It is not the fact that this kind of deception is being perpetrated that bothers me. It is the glibness with which the Government attempts this deception that bothers me. I do not mind having tall yarns spun but I mind very much when the person who is spinning those yarns has a grin on his face and actually believes that myself or the Canadian public is foolish enough to believe them. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, the people of Canada are not swallowing the double standards or, I should say, lack of standards of this administration.

The Canada Shipping Act was an Act which was in great need of overhaul. It desperately needed to be reviewed, modernized and updated. All of us in Parliament who are interested in transportation matters participated in that upgrading with Bill C-75. Members of all three Parties did a good job. But at the eleventh hour, the Minister of Transport of the day, the man who is currently Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), slipped in an innocuous sounding clause, Clause 4. I am sure Madam Speaker is beside herself wondering what is Clause 4. Why would it raise the ire of the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe? Sit patiently, Madam Speaker, and I will tell you.

Clause 4 is a clause which allows the Minister of Transport to impose user-fees. "What for?", Madam Speaker asks, "What user-fees?" User-fees for Coast Guard services, navigational aids and ice-breaking services. Madam Speaker asks: "How can that be? We are a marine nation. We have the largest coastline of any nation on earth". Surely the Government of Canada would not contemplate telling people who are in need of search and rescue services that they have to think before they push the panic button because they may have to pay regardless of whether they can afford it. That is precisely what the Government is now attempting through Bill C-75.

That Bill died on the vine because we in the Liberal Party opposed it. We are now waiting to see how the new Minister of Transport, who comes from Newfoundland, feels. I would like to say of the Minister of Transport that he is an assembly line politician, body by Fisher and tongue by Gillette. I hope his brains are as sharp as his tongue and he will see the light of day and drop Clause 4. We are waiting for the answer with bated breath.

I issue a warning now that if Bill C-75 comes back to the House containing Clause 4, it will meet the most severe resistance this Party can mount to ensure that the little people of this country are not sacrificed.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: You would not know about those kinds of people, the people who live in our towns and villages—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member should know he should not speak directly to other Hon. Members but through the Chair, please.

Mr. Tobin: Of course, Madam Speaker, you make a good point. I should not speak directly to other Hon. Members. I speak through you. I should never respond to unintelligent comment but, of course, other Hon. Members should not comment while I am giving a speech. I would never do that when in my chair.

Bill C-75 is another example of the kind of nonsense in which the Government is involved. There is another Bill pending called the National Transportation Act.

Mr. Forrestall: A great one, too.

Mr. Tobin: The Hon. Member opposite says it is a great Bill but I never heard him. I just anticipated what he might say. There is nothing wrong with any Government attempting to modernize, refine and respond to technological change by presenting a piece of legislation which keeps this country current in a competitive world. There is nothing wrong with that. We do not object to it.

• (1510)

However, there is something desperately wrong when accompanying this idea of deregulation is the concept, as espoused by the Government and contained in the Bill, that transportation is no longer something born out of public necessity and convenience, as we have always defined it in Canada, but is instead something that is market-driven. There is something wrong when the Government says, for example in the case of airline transportation, that as of the date the new Bill is passed airlines will be able to enter and exit markets at will with only 60 days' notice to a regulatory agency and with no basis of appeal.

Let us try to understand what that means. Currently, airlines in the country are licensed on a route system. They are allowed to fly some of the money-paying routes, some of the gravy runs, but they must also by law take some of the lesser-paying routes in the rural and northern parts of Canada, both on the East Coast and in the western parts of Canada. By law they must, in financial terms, take some of the bad with the good. That is the way that we ensure that Canadians are given some minimal level of service no matter where they live.

Under the new legislation, airline companies will no longer be licensed on a route system. They will be licensed to fly to each and every individual stop in the land. If they want to abandon a northern community, they are required to give 60 days' notice and then they are out. There is no appeal possible or available to members of the local communities involved. There is no regulatory agency to pass judgment on what is a public necessity and convenience. If that is not treating the public's airways in the same fashion in which McDonald's treats it franchises, then I do not know what it is. The impact will be that in the far-flung regions of the country many of our citizens will be left with a third, fourth and fifth-rate service, or no service at all. That is the nature of deregulation.

With respect to the air side, we know that in the United States deregulation has led to huge losses and bankruptcies. Finally, it has led to mergers. Instead of a competitive environment, we are ending up with an industry which is more monopolistic than ever before and which is deeply in debt. That is the model that Canada is following. We know that in the first six months of this year CP Air has already lost $26.5 million. We know that in the first quarter of 1986 Air Canada has already lost $46.2 million. We know that Pacific Western has already lost $4.6 million in its first quarter. We know that every major company is losing money.

In that environment this administration wants to impose a U.S. model. I can only say this. If the user-pay philosophy continues, then the people of Canada will not have it. They can stand, in the interest of deficit-cutting, having a bit of fat cut. In the interest of deficit-cutting they can stand having a bit of muscle cut. But what they cannot stand is when the Government cuts through the fat, the muscle and down into the bone and begins to bleed away the marrow which is the life-blood of Canada.

It is time for the Government to wake up, conduct a complete review of its transportation policy in order to understand what it is doing to people who live in areas where the primary resources are produced. The Government must get back on an intelligent, compassionate and Canadian track, the kind of track proposed by John A. Macdonald, someone whom members of this Government claim to revere.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): First, Madam Speaker, I should like to comment briefly on the debates heard in the House earlier this morning and this afternoon. Considering all the speeches we got from the Opposition benches, NDP or Liberal, and everything we have experienced in this country in the last 25 years, I think we simply have to say that if this country has transportation problems in 1986, as we do back home in the Gaspé area and the Magdalen Islands, we owe them to others, and particularly to the Liberal Party.

Ever since September 4, 1984, Madam Speaker, we have tried with the former Minister and the new Minister of Transport to solve the problems about which Members of the Opposition failed to do anything at all during at least two decades. This is why we were enthusiastic about the National Transportation Act, Bill C-75 or any other. Transportation is the kind of issue which this Opposition did not want to tackle when they were on the Government side because they did not have enough courage. Indeed, Madam Speaker, prior to 1984 the previous Government had one principle, which was to stay in office. Do nothing, but hang on to power. We have no such principle, Madam Speaker. We are quite prepared to tackle these problems so that our fellow Canadians back home will be able to travel out of the Gaspé area just as easily as the people of Edmonton in Alberta, Newfoudland or anywhere else can travel from their place of residence. That is the problem we had to face in 1984. Regardless of the oratorical circumlocutions of our colleague from Newfoundland, our former Minister of Transport did not have the nerve to come to grips with transportation issues. As Canadian men and women, transportation to us means that all people should be able to travel throughout our country, visit other lands, exchange ideas, and communicate. That is what we want.

Madam Speaker, I want to refer to a few points which I think were raised this morning by my colleague from Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), especially patronage. However one may feel about patronage, I was first elected in 1984, I have been in the House for two years, so I cannot pretend to be aware of everything that is going on, except that—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member ought to relate his remarks or his question to the speech we have just heard. I will again give him the floor if he has a question to ask, otherwise I will recognize the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) so he might comment on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray)

[English]

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, in terms of the debate this morning concerning patronage and transportation, the point I was trying to make is that after 25 years of making appointments the Liberals said that Conservatives were not eligible because we were not competent. When we talk about our national transportation legislation, and I notice that the Hon. Member—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but he is getting into debate now. He is not rising on a question or comment.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought I was entitled to 10 minutes in which to make comments and then ask questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I remind the Hon. Member that the 10 minutes following debate is for Members from all Parties to comment or to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken. I now give the floor to the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would have been happy to hear a speech by the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray). I served with him on the Transport Committee and know that he is capable of arousing himself to his full height for 20 minutes on occasion. However, let me address what the Hon. Member has said. What the Hon. Member essentially said when he got up is: "We have the courage to make the hard decisions". As a Member who comes from Îles-de-la-Madeleine, I was surprised. I was expecting the Hon. Member to stand up and say that, yes, as one who comes from one of those parts of the country which is isolated and which is not a suburb of Toronto that he—

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would ask you, Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) would give me two minutes so that I may ask him two questions. Then I will let him address those questions.

Mr. Tobin: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is not a point of order but it is a reasonable request. If the House is—

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House agrees.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I would like to speak to the point of order. First, it is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I did say that.

Mr. Tobin: Second, if I can give a short answer, the Hon. Member may exercise his right to use up the remaining 10 minutes. I would like to answer his first question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member will rise to speak if the Chair says so and so will he give an answer. I will allow the Hon. Member to complete his short comment, and then, with the consent of the House, give the floor to the Hon. Member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray).

[Translation]

Order! The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), on a point of order.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, I believe that according to our Standing Orders, after a Member's speech we have questions and comments for a period of ten minutes to be shared as fairly as possible among Members of the parties on both sides of the House.

If the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) takes the whole ten minutes, this means there will be no time left for other Members to comment on what was said by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) must realize that no one from the New Democratic Party asked to be recognized, and the Hon. Member himself did not rise, because I certainly would have noticed.

I will add a few minutes to the period for questions and comments so that everyone will have a chance.

The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, as I was saying before I was interrupted, the only thing the Hon. Member had to say in response to the statement I made is that we had courage. I was wondering if he had the courage to rise and represent the people who sent him to Parliament. No doubt he will tell us in a minute.

The Hon. Member makes the argument that there are problems in 1986 and that is the fault of the previous administration. There are problems in 1986. There were problems in 1976. There were problems in 1966 and in 1956. There will be problems in 1996. No one is suggesting that the world is stagnant. No Government is perfect, whether it be a Liberal, a Conservative or a New Demoratic Government. We are suggesting that the measure of a Government is how it responds to problems.

Any Government that takes the position that if it had been in power for 20 years, the world would now be perfect and everyone would be looking at each other through rose-coloured glasses is foolish. It does not work that way. That is the Utopia preached by members of the NDP and look where they are. It is not the Hon. Member's fault that there are problems and it is not the fault of past or future Governments. What the Hon. Member will be judged on is how he responds to those problems.

The Hon. Member speaks of courage. He should find the courage to reflect the views of the people who sent him here. He should not sit silently as prisons are built in a pork-barrel fashion across the land at a time when his people cannot be served because they live on the Magdalen Islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. That is the kind of courage he ought to find within himself when he rises in this Chamber, not the courage required to play to the applause of the majority. If the Government continues to mistake the applause of the majority for the approval of the people of Canada, the Government will be short-lived.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I have a question for my hon. friend from Newfoundland, who spoke with great eloquence about the concerns of the people of the Maritimes, which concerns the tabling of a Bill by the Minister of Transport to amend the National Transportation Act.

Is the Hon. Member aware that the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission made the following statement: "There is a large body of opinion in the Atlantic region that considers that the confidential contracts suggested by the Government in its Bill will harm the interests of businesses in the region, especially of the small- and medium-sized businesses that are the mainstay of long-term employment". Would the Hon. Member care to comment?

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has raised an excellent point and that is to the extent that public hearings were held on this Bill which is forthcoming—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) on a point of order.

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, if I understood correctly, once the Hon. Member has concluded, I will be allowed to ask him a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will ask his question when he has the floor.

The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) with a brief answer, please.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I would like to answer the question. I would be glad to stay for as long as Madam Speaker would have me stay to answer all the questions. I simply want—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry. I will say it in English. I am giving the Hon. Member the floor to answer the question, but I would like that answer to be short.

Mr. Tobin: I understood it in French, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Your comment to me did not indicate that.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member wishes to advise you that he finds it difficult in the face of constant interruptions—

Mrs. Mailly: Poor baby.

Mr. Tobin: The problem is that the House is not able to remain silent for 30 seconds so that I may give intelligent answers. I will wait for a further question. Obviously Madam Speaker is in a difficult position. Other Hon. Members wish to ask questions and I will wait.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): This is totally out of line. I know that from now on, the Hon. Member will want to refrain from making such comments on whatever decisions are made by the Chair. The Chair will keep the House in order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe wants to make it perfectly clear that he is in no way commenting on or making any remark whatsoever with respect to the competency, the judgments or the rulings of the Chair. The Hon. Member is merely pointing out that, under the Standing Orders, the Hon. Member has the right to answer or not answer questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: It certainly is. It is in the Standing Orders.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The comment was not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) has said that he has two quick questions to ask. I will allow the Hon. Member to ask them very quickly and I will allow the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) to answer them very quickly.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, very briefly, the question I would pose to my hon. colleague from Newfoundland is about transportation. Is it not true that in the past two years, safety under our new deregulation—and it is not deregulation but economic regulatory reform—has not been compromised by what has been done in the past two years?

Second, with all the changes that have had to be made to the three modes of our transportation system and with the airport security required to combat acts of terrorism, would the Hon. Member—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair was wondering if there was a question. Could the Hon. Member come to it right away? The question and comment period has been going on for too long. That is enough. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for London—Middlesex (Mr. Clifford).

• (1530)

Mr. Ouellet: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, in all fairness, I believe we have agreed that the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) could ask a short question. And I think that in the same spirit of fairness, you should allow the Hon. Member who had the floor to answer. The time allowed must be shared fairly between the Hon. Member making a comment and the Hon. Member who answers it. And I submit that the Hon. Member's time has not expired, and that he is entitled to answer before we resume the debate.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Papineau will realize that the time for questions and comments had long expired. The Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) kept making comments and questions were not forthcoming. I had said that I would allow two quick questions, and those questions did not come. As there were no questions, I decided to resume debate, and the Hon. Member for London—Middlesex now has the floor.

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. I should like to set the record straight—

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I simply want to say that I understood the Hon. Member to ask me about safety. He was about to ask a second question about security and terrorism when he was cut off. However, he asked one clear question, which I understood and which I think all Hon. Members of the House understood.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) is now debating with the Chair. The decision has been made, and the Hon. Member for London—Middlesex has the floor.

Mr. Clifford: Madam Speaker, the motion indicates that the Government has not been very active when it comes to airports. I should like to set straight our actions with regard to airports. However, I should like to establish some background; to talk about the importance of airports; and to talk about Government actions in this regard, recommendations which have been made, and what the future might hold.

I will proceed by giving a little background for Hon. Members opposite. By way of profile, Transport Canada is involved with 213 airports across the country through direct ownership, operation, or financial support. Some 77 of the largest and busiest airports are operated and managed by the Department. Approximately $51 million has been invested, with 51 million deplaning and emplaning every year and with 4 million landings. It is a huge area of activity.

The capital value of investment in our airport facilities excluding land was $8 billion, and the revenues generated were around $600 million. Capital expenditures amounted to $214 million, and maintenance costs amounted to $398 million. We even found time to spend $36 million on non-federal airports. One can see that there has been a tremendous scope of activity with regard to airports in Canada. Indeed it is very important.

In addition to the approximate 4,500 employees, there are 500 Corps of Commissionaires and 400 RCMP officers. The retention of the RCMP was a major commitment of the Government to airport security. The Canadian airport system is recognized throughout the world as a leader in safety, security, and technology. Transport Canada is second only to the Soviet Union as the world's largest manager and operator of airports.

The contribution of airport activity to the national economy is significant. Airports are the focal point for regional and local economic activity resulting from direct expenditures by the airport aviation industry and associated commercial services, tourism, related transportation industries, and from many other direct and indirect expenditures.

In May, 1985 our Government initiated for consideration a new management structure for the federal airport system, one which would provide for a self-sustaining system and allow for the independent operation of local airports. That position was enhanced in June, 1985 with a position paper entitled Freedom to Move. The paper indicated that the Department of Transport would make every effort consistent with safety and security requirements to reduce the administrative burden of its operations, to ensure that existing facilities were being efficiently used before new capital expenditures were made, and to conduct operations and activities in a more commercial manner.

Hon. Members opposite indicated that we had no concern for the safety of Canadians, that we were sloughing off. I hope that I have made two points in what I have outlined thus far—first, that the Government has a tremendous commitment to the entire scope of airports in Canada and, second, that even though we want to look at new ways to manage the enterprise—and we are embarking upon those new ways—at no time has the safety of Canadians and indeed citizens of the world ever been given anything but the highest consideration.

In October, 1985 a task force on airports was established. Its goals were to examine alternatives to the present management structure of Canada's airports and to take the first step in a consultative process designed to gather informed opinion on the subject. The task force was comprised of individuals from industry, the community, and Government. The task force report entitled The Future of Canadian Airport Management was released by the Minister of Transport as a basis for discussion with key groups and interested individuals as we continue to explore options for an improved airport management structure.

I refer Hon. Members to some of the basic principles which the task force concluded were essential to ensure the well-being of Canada and Canadians under any new system and therefore, were necessary elements of any future management scheme for Canada's airports. The safety and security of the flying public and the airport property will remain paramount. I think it is important to reinforce that. The provision and operation of air navigation services, such as air traffic control, and of regulatory services, such as certification and enforcement, will continue to be the responsibility of the federal Government. As our task force travelled across Canada, we listened to Canadians from coast to coast who were concerned about those two items. We indicated—and certainly the task force report reveals it—that the Government was committed to the safety of the travelling public.

Transport Canada will maintain a national airport system plan. Any transfers should be subject to negotiations on a commercial basis. Any new owners shall have the freedom to design, construct, and operate site facilities provided that they adhere to the safety and security regulations. Finally, in the case of an imposed public duty not directly related to a commercial operation of an airport, new owners or operators shall be reimbursed for the related costs.

With those principles clearly before it, the task force went about its study and concluded by making the following recommendations to the Minister of Transport:

1. retain the responsibility for safety and security within Transport Canada and ensure that the present high standards are not jeopardized.

2. retain the responsibility for air navigation, air regulation and certification of airports within Transport Canada as a separate entity from airport management.

3. be receptive to the establishment of local authorities by responding favourably to requests from local groups that have the support of their respective provincial and municipal levels of government.

4. ensure that, where no immediate local interest exists to establish authorities, airports are transferred to Crown corporations.

5. facilitate the changes already under way in Transport Canada to streamline the operation of airports and increase their commercial orientation.

• (1540)

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) intends to use the task force report as a basis of further consultation. He has urged that this consultation procedure be a very active one. In my area of London—Middlesex some action is already under way. The municipal governments and the Chambers of Commerce have committees in place and they are proposing recommendations to the Minister. I am sure that this is happening all over Canada. When given the opportunity to react to the recommendations of this task force, there are many Canadians interested in this new venture to revitalize the airports of Canada, and their recommendations will be coming forward to the Minister.

Safety and security continue as the highest priority within Transport Canada. The October 1 national security enhancement procedures for passengers and baggage have already been implemented. At the local level at the airport in London—Middlesex, over $200,000 has been spent on new security systems to make sure that passengers can travel without fear. New fencing systems have been put into that airport, as they have across Canada. Our record is impeccable.

Expo 86, the most successful world exposition in history, proceeded free of incident at the Vancouver International Airport. The same priority is being given to the preparation for the 1988 Olympics in Calgary.

The management of airports has been separated from the regulatory and navigational services within Transport Canada since October, 1985. One of the mandates given to the airport authority group in Transport Canada is to increase the commercial viability of airports and to close the gap between airport costs and airport revenues. A number of major thrusts are under way to stimulate revenue generation and encourage cost reduction with the overriding objective of having airports operated on a more business-like basis. Many local groups supported by the provincial and municipal governments have expressed interest in becoming more involved in the operation and promotion of their airports. This type of activity is alive and well in my part of Canada.

It was the Progressive Conservative Government that established the Montreal Airports Advisory Board and asked for local input to the resolution of the Mirabel-Dorval airports issue.

Representatives from all interested groups in the industry, business community, and provincial and municipal governments were brought together to make recommedations to the Minister of Transport.

Recent statements by the Government of British Columbia attest to their appreciation of the importance of airports to local and regional economies.

Local participation in the management of airports would promote not only the operations of the airports, but also the needs of local public and businesses, and permit greater potential for realization of private sector opportunities. That is one of the exciting new venues in airport development that will take place. The Minister of Transport recently announced the Department's intention to seek private sector investment in a third terminal at the country's busiest airport in Toronto.

The objective is to achieve a solution to the overcrowding of passenger processing facilities by getting the maximum involvement of the private sector's innovation, entrepreneurial initiative, and commercial experience. The Department expects that this challenge will be accepted and that a new era of co-operation and partnership between the public and private sectors in the airport activity will be launched.

All the foregoing initiatives represent a reasoned, sensitive approach to seeking improvements in the management of the Canadian airport system. All these initiatives are being taken with full recognition of some basic principles. This is worth being repeated so that Members opposite and all Canadians will realize that safety and security are paramount. They are paramount in all of our planning on this side of the House and with our Minister of Transport. Our actions in the past two years have indicated our deepest concerns for this. In an era of world-wide terrorism and fear for the flying public, Canada has moved forward with new innovations in safety and new procedures for passengers and their baggage. We are internationally recognized for our achievements.

Better ways of operating the system are being sought while ensuring that equity of access is guaranteed and that a national system is maintained. There has been much talk that this Government will allow a fragmentation of the airport system of Canada. The point may certainly be made here today that we are going to maintain that national system of airports that we are so proud of. Indeed, we are recognized around the world as being a leader in the airport system.

Airports are an integral part of the Canadian economic fabric. Airports are essential for social transportation needs such as medical evacuation, resupply depots, and relief from isolation. When the standing committee travelled to the far north of Canada, we learned first-hand how important transportation is to the people who live north of 60½. We listened to them, and I hope we listened to them well. The Government is going to ensure access for those people to the south, and for them to visit their friends, relatives, business associates in the North. The Government is proceeding with the utmost regard for the economic and social well-being of all Canadians in its review of the airports system.

I think it is important that we say that airports have been vital to the development of Canada. Airports are today what railways were in an earlier time. Our Government recognizes that. We are committed to the development of new innovations in airports. I have cited one or two of them here today, our move to the private sector of terminal 3 in Toronto. There are other initiatives underway which will be reported to the Minister as a result of his task force on airports. The future bodes well for airport development and Canadians should know that this Government is committed to improving that service for all of us.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) on debate.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): It is a pleasure to see you in the chair, Madam Speaker. As the Member for Vancouver East, I am very pleased to be able to speak on the whole question of transportation problems. There have been problems and concerns from my constituents and also from Canadians as a whole.

I agree with the presenter of this motion, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who said that thousands of workers in the transportation sector are looking for jobs. That certainly is the case in Vancouver East, on the West Coast, and across Canada. I agree with some of the points raised by the Member, but I must say that there is a noticeable lack of concern about the transportation problems of western Canada, particularly of the shipping industry in British Columbia.

I want to concentrate a number of remarks in this area. First, there is the question of the policy of both the Liberals and the Conservatives on deregulation. We have always opposed this policy for a number of reasons, not the least of which is that it undermines services to less populated regions of Canada. It also undermines jobs, particularly women's jobs. It should be thoroughly evident to Members shouting across the aisle that the whole process of deregulation throws the airlines, particularly Canadian-owned airlines such as Air Canada, into cut-throat competition. As we know, larger airlines like Air Canada or CP Air tend to use regional carriers for other routes.

I think we will find that the airlines, in order to be competitive under this new regime, will cut back on expenses. The main expense they will cut back on is staff. I would like to point out that it is particularly women's jobs which are at great risk. As usual, women in the service type of position, such as flight attendants, ticket takers and maintenance staff are the ones most likely to be affected. I recall last year hearing from some women connected with airlines in the interior of B.C., for example, who were being forced to either lose their jobs or move as massive changes were occurring in their industry.

A couple of Members on the Government side mentioned that there was no concern about safety at Canadian airports under deregulation. The Canadian Aviation Safety Board apparently disagrees with this position. A recent clipping from The Globe and Mail said that more rest for flight crews is urged. Canada needs to radically strengthen regulations proposed for January to control flight crew fatigue in the country's sky. No other nation is as lenient in its regulations, the CASB said in a report to the Minister of Transport. There we have the view of flight crews who surely are in a position to know.

As to security at airports, I would like to remind Government Members, and the last speaker in particular, that the Government was committed to removing RCMP from airports. It was our Party which questioned this very strongly. As a result, the Minister reconsidered, after the Air India disaster, and we finally got a decision to keep the RCMP in supervisory positions at airports. Since that time the Government has refused to take over total responsibility for airport security.

Security at airports is tendered by the airlines and we think Transport Canada, not the airlines, should tender, supervise and train security personnel.

Having said that, I would like to use my time primarily to concentrate on transportation issues and policies which have come to my attention over the last year or two as a result of my contacts as the Member of Parliament for Vancouver East. Our concern primarily was shipping and shipping-related industries, and the Port of Vancouver. What happens to the Port of Vancouver, of course, reflects what is happening to the West Coast generally.

First of all, we were concerned and continue to be concerned that Bill C-25 provided for increased charges for Coast Guard services or use of Government wharves and other services. We continue to be concerned that such charges will increase the cost of shipping. It is already difficult to compete in the shipping business and this will make us less competitive. This is of great concern and could be a considerable burden on smaller boat owners, and operators of fishing vessels.

I want to raise another point which has come to our attention. I believe it was the Liberals who terminated the weather ships off the West Coast. I know people who worked on those ships and it was very important that we had them off the coast to warn small boat owners of coming storms, as well as providing marine research services. Now we have the threat that lighthouse keepers off the B.C. coast will be replaced by computers. I would just like to point out, if Members do not already know, that lighthouse keepers do much more than turn on lights.

I have a very strong letter from the United Fishermen and Allied Workers on this issue. They are very concerned that the Department of Transport plans to do away with the manning of seven lighthouses and cut staff by half or more in five others. These lighthouse keepers play a vital role in helping to make the waters off the B.C. coast safer for mariners, both commercial and pleasure. There have been numerous cases where lighthouse keepers have saved the lives of fishermen when their boats floundered. Many other cases go unreported where, by way of a timely bit of information about the weather, a boat and the lives of the crew are saved.

The waters off the B.C. coast are among the most dangerous in the world. Seven fishermen have died since the first of the year. Lighthouse keepers are an integral part of the already too-thinly stretched safety web on this coast, so we appeal to the Government to reconsider and make sure that the lighthouse keeping service is preserved.

My concerns, as I said, are particularly related to other matters affecting the Port of Vancouver and other West Coast ports. First of all, I would like to point out that we heard earlier this year about the rather insidious trend developing, and there was no Government intervention at all to prevent this, whereby shipping from Central Canada to the West Coast and from there to ships to go across the Pacific Rim is deliberately being cultivated along U.S. routes rather than Canadian routes. I refer particularly to CN which I understand has increasingly been using routes which connect from Central Canada down to Chicago, from there across American railways, and from there through the Port of Seattle or other West Coast American ports rather than Canadian ports.

These are Canadian goods leaving Canada or coming to Canada. I think that is a disgraceful situation. There are a number of reasons for this. I understand that the U.S. has favourable tariffs to encourage this. They also have double decker carriers for containers. These are problems that we should be looking into in Canada and, if necessary, we should improve our technology. However, we should have some kind of intervention by the Government which prevents a Crown corporation from shipping Canadian goods through the United States and out through American ports rather than on Canadian railways through Canadian ports.

I would also like to talk about other issues such as a current concern which I raised this week with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) about the Port of Vancouver and the fact that longshoremen were locked out by the Maritime Employers Council and the tremendous danger this is to the shipment of grain and other cargo out of the Port of Vancouver.

I was very pleased when New Democratic Members raised this in the House. Several weeks ago the Minister intervened and the employers' council agreed to a 30-day cooling off period. The lock-out provision was withdrawn, the people went back to work and the grain was allowed to flow through the Port of Vancouver. It was very upsetting to learn this week that, although there were nine days left in the 30-day cooling off period, the employers had stopped negotiating. On Monday the Minister said that he would intervene once again. We certainly hope that he will and that these disputes can be resolved in order to allow shipping to continue through the Port of Vancouver. The union has assured us that grain and bulk cargo will continue to be handled if there should be a lock-out. However, we want to prevent a lock-out.

Another issue of great concern to Canadians, and particularly British Columbians, is the death of our shipbuilding industry. I am sad to say that that word is not too strong. The West Coast was an outstanding centre for the building of ships throughout and following the war. It is regrettable that we lost our merchant marine after that period. I blame the Liberal rather than the present Government for that. I was glad that the Member for Papineau recognized the particularly bad situation in British Columbia.

Three major British Columbia shipyards have closed since the present Government has been in power. This is a very tragic situation. We have among the most skilled shipbuilders in the world. These tradesmen, who are getting older, were laid off and, since there has been such a decrease in this industry, young people have not been trained. The doors are closing. The only thing which could help us in the interim is for the federal Government to approve the building of the Polar 8 ice-breaker in B.C. shipyards.

Mr. Forrestall: Why don't you tender for it?

Ms. Mitchell: Versatile Marine and other industries in Victoria have the capacity to build the Polar 8 as they have documented. I implore the Government to get on with this contract.

One of the Liberal Members implied that this ice-breaker was a frill and not needed. I checked this out because I wondered about it myself. However, I was assured that this ice-breaker is a means of keeping the North and the Port of Vancouver open for many more months of the year and would benefit that area.

Mr. Forrestall: The Port of Vancouver really freezes over, doesn't it?

Ms. Mitchell: I wish the Member across the way would listen for a little while. I know he is interested in transportation issues.

Mr. Forrestall: When you talk to me about an ice-breaker to keep the port of Vancouver functioning, I have to wonder.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would allow the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) to finish her remarks.

Mr. Forrestall: She doesn't have to listen to me. She doesn't as a rule. I'm surprised I'm getting to her.

Ms. Mitchell: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think this is a new era of civility. I would like to take this opportunity to praise the Conservatives. I thought the Member would like that. He will recall that just before the 1979 election the Conservative Government had a very sound shipping policy. It was interested in re-establishing Canadian shipping and a Canadian merchant marine. The policies were good and a number of people commended them. Unfortunately, none of these policies have been implemented. The Conservatives have not introduced incentives to help the shipbuilding industry. Our shipbuilding industry is dying.

I am also concerned about dangerous goods. I cannot help but condemn the former Minister of Transport who allowed the transfer point for dangerous goods to be moved from Vancouver Centre into Vancouver East instead of moving it entirely out of a densely populated area. This is of great concern to my constituents. We have had a number of meetings. I request very strongly that the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) review this situation and take steps immediately toward the relocation of the transfer point so that the very dense population of my riding is not threatened. I have received many petitions on this issue. A waterfront coalition is working on it. We ask that something be done about this now. It is unfortunate that money was invested in that transfer arrangement.

In the time I have remaining, I would like to refer to a very nonsensical proposal made by the Premier of British Columbia and the Minister responsible for economic development to take over the Vancouver International Airport. This was a fantastic idea of the Premier's, spouted on impulse during the election. It was not based on any research or rational planning. Of course the Premier wants control of the only money-making airport in B.C. However, I noticed that he was not interested in taking over any of the money losers. He seems to think that the taking over of the Vancouver International Airport will be a great job creator and a solution to the economic problems of B.C. It is a mystery how this will happen. I trust that the federal Government will have more sense than to consider releasing control of this federal airport. We do not need another fantasy land in British Columbia.

In conclusion, the issues which I have raised are tremendously important to all Canadians and particularly to British Columbians and my constituents in Vancouver East. I urge the Government to take action.

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, I would like to comment on some of the remarks made by the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) this afternoon. I applaud the concern she has shown for the port of Vancouver. However, I believe the talks broke down this past week because the unions left the table rather than the employers. I am very pleased to note that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) is closely watching the developments in the port of Vancouver.

The Member spoke about the transfer point for dangerous goods. I suspect she believes that Fraser Valley East may be the most logical place for dangerous goods to be in the shipping mode. I hope she was not implying that in her remarks.

With regard to pollution and dangerous goods, the Member did not allude to the fact that in the Bill which was proposed in the last session to amend the Shipping Act, there was authority to provide for and prescribe interim standards for the carriers of dangerous goods in bulk and in the case of new substances. It also provided that it be within the power of pollution officers to board ships which are being modified to conform to the inspection provisions of the pollution convention. It also provided for authorization to delineate emergency zones and regulate traffic within such zones and, on occasions when there is the likelihood of a spill, order any ship to moor or proceed as directed and also to obtain, for prosecution purposes, samples of pollution from ships without search warrants.

These are some of the things which were in the Bill. The Member's Party should have been more helpful in ensuring that that Bill was passed and proclaimed.

In her opening remarks the Member spoke of the deregulation of the airline industry and about how it is cutting back on services. It has been my experience that there have been more flights per day from smaller points to Vancouver than ever before in the history of aviation in British Columbia. Perhaps she could indicate the various communities that she knows have less service now than they had three or four years ago.

• (1610)

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, first I want to return to the point raised by the Hon. Member concerning the Port of Vancouver and the controversy that led to a lock-out. I do not think the Hon. Member is correct in his assessment. I will not argue the point here but it was my understanding that he was not presenting the situation correctly. The fact is that the talks did break down and it is important that they resume. That is why I was asking the Minister to intervene in my question and statement on Monday in the House.

As far as deregulation is concerned, I know that the Hon. Member is very knowledgeable about airlines. We recently visited almost every airport in Canada during our tour with the Special Committee on Child Care. I might say that we have some very fine airports and we were quite impressed with them. However, he knows more about airlines than I do because he travels on the smaller airlines.

My point was that we do not want any jobs lost through deregulation. I feel very strongly that this is a likelihood and I would appreciate if the Hon. Member would check into it and help me obtain more data about whether or not this is the case.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). This motion not only concerns transportation and the difficulties in that sector, it relates to the general policies of the Government with regard to regional development.

When the Government came to office two years ago, it seemed to adopt a trickle-down approach by which it would make the successful areas of our country grow rapidly so that eventually some benefits would trickle down to the outlying regions of our country. The Government pursued this policy for almost two years, until the uproar in its caucus was so incredible that it abandoned that policy last July 7.

In fact, in the Speech from the Throne the Government for the first time talked about an economic opportunities council in Atlantic Canada and diversifying the economy in western Canada. It is interesting for Liberal, Conservative and New Democrat Members from northern Ontario to note that the Throne Speech did not say anything about setting up an economic diversification council or anything else for nothern Ontario.

Perhaps if the Government's other policies were successful, it may have had an opportunity to let the trickle-down theory work. It has been said that if one feeds the horse enough oats, the sparrows will have some. Obviously the screams from the sparrows in the Tory caucus from Atlantic Canada, western Canada, and northern Ontario became unbearable for the Cabinet because when it met in Saskatoon in the first week of July, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) suddenly discovered regional development. In the meantime, however, he had drastically reduced the budget of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and reduced subsidies for transportation and other programs in eastern Canada.

The Prime Minister launched a privatization program which may be quite successful in Toronto and the Golden Horseshoe, but does not do much for the regions of the country. That background and the introduction of the privatization legislation during the last gasp of the last session in June has led to this debate on transportation policy today.

This debate is very appropriate because it allows Members on all sides to describe how the transportation policies and general approach of the Government with regard to privatization is working. In terms of general economic growth in the regions of the country, I am suggesting that the Government's general economic policies have not been successful. Clearly, between 1983 and 1986, under both Governments, we have seen a dramatic 3.5 per cent to 4.5 per cent growth in the southern Ontario area, but I contend that the growth in the regions of our country, whether we are talking about forestry, or mining in northern Ontario, has not been spectacular.

This is particularly true in the energy field. The former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), said that she would create hundreds of thousands of jobs in the energy sector. We can see that at least 55,000 jobs have been lost in the energy sector alone.

Mr. Forrestall: What does this have to do with transportation?

Mr. Foster: That is why the deregulation of railroads and airlines is such a disaster. The Government's economic policies are having a disastrous effect on the regions of the country. Obviously the Government is not feeding the horse enough oats because there is not enough left for the sparrows in the regions of this country.

There is no area of our country where this is more apparent than in Sault Ste Marie. The Minister for International Trade, who is going to create hundreds of thousands of jobs as a result of a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States, must face the prospect of the tube mill at Algoma Steel being shut down, thereby laying off some 800 people. A $375 million new tube mill is not even running.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I be so presumptuous as to inquire whether relevancy with respect to the matter in front of us is of importance? I have listened to this great debate and in the last 12 minutes I have heard transportation mentioned once.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I note that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Forrestall) is very concerned about transportation and the disastrous effects of the Government's policies on the entire country. I am simply pointing out what privatization is doing to the transportation sector.

Mr. Forrestall: A steel mill?

Mr. Foster: Right now, Algoma Steel faces a prospect of the Algoma Central Railway shutting down because of the policies of the Government.

• (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will answer the Parliamentary Secretary by saying that the motion has been presented in a very broad manner, therefore, I believe the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) is still within the relevancy of the motion. However, I will caution the Hon. Member to reread the motion and to stay as close to it as possible.

Mr. Foster: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to congratulate you both on your appointment as Deputy Chairman of Committees and on the wisdom of your rulings because you really are making very wise decisions. I know the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East is very sensitive about the Government's economic and transportation policies. Those transportation policies really permeate the entire country.

I will eventually get to the problems the Government is creating in air and surface transport, but I would like to now deal briefly with the whole question of rail transport in the Algoma district. For 80 or 90 years the Algoma Central Railway has been operating in the Algoma district. This fall, because of the Government's energy and industrial policies, we face the danger of that railway shutting down. Because of the volume of sinter which has to be moved from Wawa to Sault Ste Marie, it is not economically viable any more. There is a shortfall of $5 or $6 a tonne in the moving of that sinter.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) will be able to reassure the House and the people of Algoma district and Sault Ste Marie that they have a transportation policy, that there is a proposal in the Bill which will provide financial guarantees and assistance to ensure that railways serving the regions of our country like the Algoma Central will be able to continue to operate. In fact, if there is not an arrangement made in that regard, we face the prospect of the shutting down of the iron ore mines in Wawa which employ some 300 or 400 people. It provides something like 60 per cent of the revenues of that rail line. Therefore the viability of the rail line itself is being called into question, not only the rolling stock, the crews, and so on, but the shops in Sault Ste Marie.

If the mining operations in Wawa are shut down, the rail lines for the transportation of ore and goods and so on are called into question, and the viability of the Algoma tour train, the Agawa Canyon tour train, which is the most important tourist attraction in our area is affected. Some 100,000 passengers a year are carried on the Algoma Central Railway line. Therefore it is essential that we find out from the Government whether its policies on energy are going to be supplemented with deregulation policies on the railways. We do not know where that stands because Bill C-126, which was introduced in June, has not been reintroduced.

If the whole thing is a case of hand-wringing and no action, as we see in the reduction of the transportation subsidies and assistance in Atlantic Canada, then we could face not only the destruction of our mining community, but the operation of the Algoma Central Railway and the tour train, with the resultant impact on the City of Sault Ste Marie. We could be facing the prospect of the loss of some 2,000 jobs.

I do not believe this will happen. I do not think even this Government is callous enough to wash its hands of the whole thing and say: "We are for deregulation. If the regions of the country have a tough time, that is their problem". I do not think this Government will do that. However, we have no commitment yet. It is important we find out exactly what the Government's policy is in that regard. We already face the prospect of the loss of 1,500 jobs in the steel operations at Sault Ste Marie. If we had to face the prospect of the loss of 2,000 jobs in the operation of the Algoma Central Railway because of the Government's policy, it would have a devastating impact on the community. It is incalculable. It would be totally devastating.

I certainly hope the Parliamentary Secretary, who is very good at heckling, is equally good at listening and carrying the message to the Minister and to the Government. This is of the utmost concern to our district. The Government has provided subvention of some $3.2 million for the Algoma Central Railway for the maintenance of the passenger service. I believe that is justified and a good subvention. However, equally important will be the maintenance of that railway with regard to the transport of sinter, ore and raw materials to the mining operations, and to the operation of the Algoma central tour train as well. If that whole operation were to shut down with the loss of 2,000 jobs in transportation, mining, tourism and in related hospitality industries, it would be one of the most severe blows to ever strike that section of the Algoma. Clearly, it would be a most severe blow, coming only two and a half years after the Conservative Government came to power.

I want to speak as well about the impact of the privatization which is going forward with the proposed Bill C-126, which was introduced last spring, and the deregulation relating to that Bill, as well as the general policies of the Government with regard to deregulation. Just a couple of weeks ago Air Canada pulled out of Sault Ste Marie. The Government's explanation was that it had to pull out because of the Government's policy of deregulation. I think it was more contrived than that. In fact, what it did is reduce the number of Air Canada flights into Sault Ste Marie to only one. It was positioned so that it was a very inconvenient time to fly in.

Air Ontario provides air transport in at a very convenient time. We ended up with the pull-out of Air Canada, and the national air carrier no longer serves a city of 82,000 people and a general population of about 120,000. The unions protested as well as the city, but in the end the airline pulled out and we no longer have the national air carrier providing service to that community. We will be moving down to 20-year old aircraft. Hopefully, Air Ontario will provide something better. However, it is a general vote of non-confidence by Air Canada and by the Progressive Conservative Government in the City of Sault Ste Marie at a time when it has lost literally hundreds and hundreds of jobs. We needed that type of moral boost, that vote of confidence that maintaining Air Canada, the national air carrier, would have provided.

It can be argued that there were only 21 Air Canada jobs; but when a community has already lost several thousand jobs, every job becomes precious. The people who lost their jobs had the choice of either taking early retirement or being shipped off to Toronto which is the central air transportation centre of the province. The people who chose to stay in Sault Ste Marie had their wages chopped from $13.60 per hour to about $6.50 per hour. So, when the Minister of Transport stands up in the House and says that he will look after the Air Canada employees, he certainly will have to look after them. They just took a 50 per cent cut in wages or else they moved to Toronto and took on mortgages of $75,000 or $100,000. What we have is a Government which speaks in a very general way about looking after the employees.

We are very unimpressed with the Government's move toward deregulation. We are very unimpressed with its economic policy. We are not very certain how its general commitment to the regions of the country will work out. We see that in the first two years of its mandate it is not working out very well.

Mr. Lesick: Madam Speaker, I listened with keen interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). He talked about transportation, but spent most of his time on the subject of the general economy. It seems that the transportation business is in good condition. The Government will propose a new Bill dealing with transportation which is not yet before the House. Our plans will be progressive. Our plans for the general thrust in transportation are open. No longer will we be constrained by Government regulation. No longer will we be constrained by regulations that do not allow freedom of movement and that do not allow one company to compete with another. It is competition that will give us the best value and the best service for our money. The general economy has been allowed to free-up. This has allowed it to be more efficient than it was under the constraints of the previous Government.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member this. Does he want change for the better or does he want to stay with the old and be suffocated by regulations and by antiquated methods of movement? Does he not wish us to be progressive? We are a caring Government. We watch over what is best for the people. How can the Hon. Member talk of the old and not give in to the new which is better?

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) in terms of transportation. Clearly, the Government of the Hon. Member when it came to power talked about allowing free market forces to decide everything. Under the present Government we were supposed to really see the economy grow. There was supposed to be a natural development in all regions of the country without any direction or assistance from the Government. Clearly, if one travels around Canada today and looks at the policies of Government in Atlantic Canada, in particular, one will see that there are user fees. Where there has been a reduction of assistance for transportation, one will see very concerned regions of the country. I doubt that most regions of the country, apart from the Golden Horseshoe of Toronto and its environs, are really seeing much growth at all, probably not even 1 per cent or 2 per cent. Clearly in the mining areas of the country there does not seem to be any policy for development.

The Hon. Member talked about plans for progress. Well, if he were to talk to the Air Canada workers who were in Sault Ste Marie earning $13.50 per hour three weeks ago and who are now trying to feed their families on the $6.50 per hour they earn at Shell, then he would clearly see that the Government's policies concerning deregulation and pulling out of Air Canada are not very convincing. If the Hon. Member were living in the community of Wawa and working for Algoma Ore Properties and if he were to hear the Government saying that, well, its policy is survival of the fittest, then he would wonder whether there would be any existing jobs.

I think the fact that the Government tried its policies for two years, saw that it was disastrous in the energy sector, saw that its whole thrust in free trade has been fraught with difficulties and is likely to collapse over the next year, then he would understand that when the Prime Minister came out of the cabinet meeting in Saskatoon last summer he was not talking so much about free market sources but about regional development as if he had just discovered it. In the Speech from the Throne the Prime Minister talked about an Atlantic Canada Opportunity Agency and then he talked about regional diversification in western Canada. This did not happen because he had a divine inspiration. It happened because back-benchers were screaming loud and clear every Wednesday morning.

Suddenly, the cabinet Ministers were screaming loud and clear in Saskatoon. Suddenly, regional policies concerning transporation and other issues were giving a new aspect to the Government's policy. The Hon. Member talks about there being no constraints on transportation and the general economy being freed-up. In many areas the general economy has not only been freed-up, it is not growing at all.

• (1640)

I hope the Government will get concerned about how transportation relates to those regions because transportation is a vital instrument and part of the regional development policy in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in view of the transportation policies implemented by the Liberals, I consider this motion to be a bad Halloween trick. For instance, just before the 1984 elections, when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was Minister of Transport, he had a staff of 127 officials, and believe it or not, the now Deputy Prime Minister reduced this number to 30. As a second example, there were the cutbacks made to VIA Rail services under the Liberals in 1981, I believe, and the fact that we re-established those services. In other words, we have no lesson to learn from the Liberals in the area of transport.

[English]

Time is limited and I have much to say. I will have to go quite quickly.

In reply to the motion before the House, I would like to speak on Freedom to Move, the Government's plan for economic regulatory reform in transportation. Please note that I did not say deregulation. We have only made plans for regulatory reform. In some cases, there will be much less regulation; in some cases, more; in all cases, better regulation. We are not simply following models in other countries by deregulating everthing.

As I said earlier, we plan to have more regulation in some cases, particularly regarding safety. I would point out 13,000 person-years are involved in safety programs on which $1.2 billion is being spent. Many of these programs will expand because safety was, is and always will be the prime issue of importance to the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kilgour: We do believe that the existing regulatory regime needs to be improved. The transportation system must be run for the long-term good of all Canadians. The regulatory regime must be open and responsive to the needs of Canadians from St. John's to Nanaimo. We will have a made-in-Canada policy, recognizing Canada's unique characteristics and transportation requirements.

The policy has been refined through extensive consultations with business, transportation companies, users, labour, the travelling public and provincial and territorial Governments. The main thrust of it will be to bring economic reform to transportation in Canada, to encourage competition, to improve the price and range of transportation services and to support the growth of key economic sectors in society. For once, the tilt will be in favour of consumers, not the shippers and transportation companies.

If I may, I would like to give the House a summary of how Freedom to Move came about. For at least five years and in some cases 10 or more years, various groups and inquiries have suggested that Canada's regulatory policy and process should be modified and updated to fit in with the late 20th century. For example, the Economic Council of Canada, university transportation centres, shippers' and consumer groups, government studies and various consultants have frequently documented the case for less regulation in air; different, more uniform and less regulation in trucking; improved, speedier and fairer regulations for rail shippers and especially for captive shippers; and a leaner regulatory agency with a capacity for faster and fairer regulation. These and other pressures including ones from south of the border have led many to the conclusion that we should undertake not a piecemeal but a comprehensive reform package.

The then Minister of Transport, the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), officially introduced the idea of comprehensive regulatory reform in a speech he made to the Canadian Industrial Traffic League in February, 1985. He suggested that all regulatory legislation ought to be updated and modified at about the same time and within the same framework. There was a country-wide process of meetings, discussions and consultations and the inquiry got under way immediately.

The rationale and the basic elements for regulatory reform were introduced in a document entitled Freedom to Move in July, 1985. Once again, there was extensive consultation with all on many occasions. Where the feedback was persuasive, several modifications to the proposals have been made. Such modifications have been made in northern air travel, trucking regulation and the recognition of a legislative link between transportation and regional economic development.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) spoke about this basic question this afternoon and we recognized this point of which many have already spoken.

[English]

The proposed Transportation Act and Motor Vehicle Transport Act were introduced in Parliament on June 26 as Bills C-126 and C-127. With the proroguing of the House of Commons, those two Bills died on the Order Paper. The legislation has been accorded the highest priority by Cabinet and I am happy to announce that the two Bills will be re-introduced to the House of Commons on a priority basis next week.

The four main components of the legislation on which I will touch today if there is time are air, rail, trucking and marine. I will deal with aviation first.

Those of us in southern Canada have been receiving the benefits of a reformed and less extensive regulatory environment in the air industry for a number of years. This has come about by various Ministerial policies and by Canadian Transport Commission regulatory changes on entry and exit rulings, tariffs and licensing conditions. Freedom to Move actually brings the legislation more into conformity with the way the southern Canada air transportation environment currently operates and at the same time eliminates much of the existing obsolete and unnecessary regulatory authority. The obvious general support given to the adoption of the principles of Freedom to Move relative to all air services in southern Canada proves the point.

The actual reform proposals for the airline sector in 1985 were the following: first, entry to any class of domestic commercial air service would be based on a "fit, willing and able" requirement as opposed to the current public convenience and necessity test. Again, it is the consumer we are trying to help, not the carriers. Compliance with the Ministry of Transport's safety regulations—and the Minister has constantly said that this is our first concern—for operating certification and proof of adequate insurance coverage with be required to meet the new entry requirement. Second, withdrawal would not be impeded except by a requirement for advance notice. Third, there would be no ongoing regulation of domestic tariffs but there would be provisions for the agency to review unreasonable fare increases. Carriers would be required to make their schedules of tariffs and tolls available at their business offices for public information purposes and to retain a record of such tariffs and tolls for a minimum of three years but would not be required to file them with the new regulatory agency which would replace the CTC.

These regulations were originally intended to cover all of Canada but that most invaluable tool, the consultation process, came into play. We received many submissions on regulatory reform as it applied to northern air transport including submissions from the Governments of Yukon and NWT. Travellers, shippers, communities and individual carriers all made their views known.

• (1650)

Three major reports indicated that air services to northern and remote areas were essential. We accept that. The areas are sparsely populated with small communities, meaning small markets. Carriers depend upon a mix of passenger and freight to remain viable. Charter operations make up a significant proportion of revenues. Freight flow is unidirectional, meaning that freight revenue must also cover return trip costs. It is more expensive to operate in the North, as we know, and traffic is very seasonal with less prosperous times during large parts of the year.

All these factors had an influence upon government thinking. They told us that for now, and for a considerable time to come, some degree of economic regulation was needed to ensure the stability and adequacy of air services in the North. They also made us realize that the immediate application of the fit, willing and able entry standard may not provide enough regulation to ensure the goals of adequacy and stability.

At the same time, maintaining the status quo is simply not a tenable proposition. It is unduly bureaucratic. The regulatory burden is too heavy. It limits the ability to serve markets efficiently. It is not always responsive to needs, and it means higher prices for the often neglected consumer.

A new modified regulatory reform initiative is proposed for air services to, from, and within northern Canada. It is designed to assist the transition of carriers into a more competitive environment, to be sufficiently flexible, and to gradually bring the benefits of increased competition to northern travellers and shippers.

The key aspects of this modified regulatory regime are as follows. First, applicants who wish to start a new air service will be required to meet the safety and insurance requirements. There will be a new reverse onus public interest entry test whereby entry would be granted unless those opposing the application can establish, to the satisfaction of the new regulatory agency, that allowing such entry would lead to a serious decrease in the level of air services provided at regulated communities, or would create significant instability in the provision of essential air services at protected communities. There would be a more pro-competitive entry test than the current public convenience and necessity test.

Licence conditions will continue in the North to limit aspects of the activities of carriers such as the type of service—scheduled versus charter—routes, points to be served, and schedules. Anyone wishing to leave a market would only have to give 60 days notice to the agency. There would be no requirement to maintain service beyond the notice period.

As for southern Canada, tariffs in the North will no longer have to be filed with the agency but simply maintained at their business offices for public inspection and kept for a period of three years to comply with potential agency needs. Unreasonable fare levels and increases will be reviewable upon complaint, and confidential contracts will be allowed. No subsidy program is intended, but the Minister will have the authority to grant a subsidy in cases of urgent necessity.

I should now like to turn briefly to the subject of rail transportation where we will again have a mixture of regulatory reform. In some cases it will be less; in several cases it will be more. The new legislation will allow shippers to negotiate confidential contracts with Canadian railways for the first time. Shippers and railways will have the flexibility to negotiate the services and other conditions appropriate to a shipper's circumstance and to tailor rates more closely to the competitive situation of the shipper. To protect against abuse, confidential contracts will be filed with the agency, and summaries of the non-confidential components will be published.

The existing provisions on agreed charges, which are essentially open public contracts, are continued in the new National Transportation Act primarily as a transition measure since a number of shippers currently benefit from them.

In the interest of fair competition between railways and between truckers and railways, the new legislation retains the essential requirement that all rates be compensatory. Modifications will focus on the prohibition of rates which are predatory—and we in western Canada know about those—or designed to drive a competitor from the market.

These changes affecting rail freight tariffs will allow shippers and railways more freedom to adopt a commercially innovative approach to rate and service negotiations. Shippers will benefit from specially negotiated rates and conditions which reflect their own particular situations. Railways will be in a position to compete effectively with U.S. railways for transborder traffic. That is a very important factor today. The role of the new agency will be that of a watch-dog, acting only on complaints.

The new legislation also zeroes in on what has been described as Canada's No. 1 transportation problem—the captive shipper. Captive shippers fall into two general categories. To some extent they can be found in major metropolitan centres on the lines of a single railway carrier but beyond the four-mile interswitching limit, such as major oil refineries in the Montreal and Toronto areas.

Captive shippers may also be those resource shippers located in the more northern or remote areas of the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, and certainly in various parts of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia. They are essentially captive to one railway without the possibility of enjoying a real, practical, and cost effective choice of either intermodal or intramodal transportation to move their lumber, coal, potash, or other mineral or petrochemical products.

Our Freedom to Move legislation will get at the heart of these problems by introducing competitive line rates, terminal running rights, and increased interswitching. They are all designed to give the captive shipper a competitive option and to provide competition through regulation.

I should like to make three main points. Competitive line rates is a fairly simple concept. Captive shippers who are local to just one carrier will be able to have access to another carrier at the closest interchange. This means that captive shippers will have competitive options, services, routes, and very likely competitive rates. This is something which they do not enjoy under current legislation. It is something about which we in western Canada have been shrieking politely for many years.

Competitive line rates will only be available to those shippers who cannot benefit from the new interswitching limits or from terminal running rights. Also, the common carrier responsibility will be on the connecting carrier, not the originating one.

I should point out that this will not necessarily result in short hauling or a diversion away from the local carrier. It will result in that situation only where the local carrier cannot or refuses to respond to or match the competitive rate being offered by the other carrier. As in any other industry, it is only lack of competitiveness which may result in traffic loss over a part of the route to destination. For domestic movements, including import and export traffic at Canadian ports, shippers will have to designate a continuous Canadian route if more than one continuous, cost effective Canadian route exists. This is designed to protect domestic traffic for Canadian railway carriers.

Shippers have embraced this concept as an answer to their problems. It is supported by the CMA, CITL, Coal Association of Canada, Canadian Fertilizer Institute, Council of Forest Industries, Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, Retail Council of Canada, Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada, Mining Association of Canada, Propane Gas Association of Canada, Canadian Chemical Producers Association, and several others. These groups represent billions of dollars in railway freight rate revenue annually.

Despite objections from CN, CP, and several labour unions, we think that with the conditions attached to competitive line rates, this proposal will not seriously affect their returns. We also recognize that we must allow the railways to reduce their costs, that is, more freedom to manage their affairs with fewer legislative and regulatory hurdles.?

The second measure designed to increase competitive access for captive shippers is the issue of terminal running rights. Originally proposed by CP Rail, it will allow one railway to run over the lines of another railway within a 50-kilometre radius of a railway interchange.

The third measure will substantially increase the present four-mile limit for railway car interswitching in urban areas to 30 kilometres. Canadian cities have grown rapidly, and the limit should reflect today's realities. However, the new interswitching charges will have to be compensatory.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 82(12) the proceedings on the motion have expired.

Accordingly the House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5 p.m.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

The House resumed from Thursday, October 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-14 before us today is a Bill which came out of the February, 1986, Budget. It is a rather slim Bill; it does not have very many pages. However, the contents of it add up to a very heavy burden for the average taxpayer. The Bill legislates approval for a number of tax increases with which Canadians have been coping for some months now.

We must remember that the tax increases in the last Budget were on top of the tax increases in the first Budget of the Conservative Government in May, 1985. As I said, it adds up to a heavy burden for the average taxpayer.

For example, the federal manufacturers sales tax has been raised three times in 18 months. The tax rate is now 3 per cent higher and, as well, the tax base was considerably broadened to cover more items. As a result Canadians are paying about $3.5 billion more per year.

The Government says that it needs this tax revenue to fight the deficit. We all care that the deficit should be reduced, but surely the Government must also be sensitive to how the deficit will be reduced.

I do not think enough attention has been paid to the role which unemployment has played in the deficit we are now facing. During recession years when we were averaging between $11 billion and $12 billion per year in unemployment insurance, it was certainly a major factor in our deficit. Also, unemployed people do not pay income tax. They do not make purchases on which they would pay sales tax. Surely if we are seriously attempting to tackle the deficit, especially now in the fourth year of recovery, we should be addressing ourselves much more to the question of unemployment.

These sales taxes run quite a risk of slowing down economic recovery and of adding to unemployment. In order for our employment record to stand still we need economic growth of 3 per cent a year. We are not getting that at this time. In their budget speeches government Members spoke about economic recovery. However, more independent observers have pointed out that we have problems which, I believe, are in no small way due to the Government's policy of "tax, tax, tax".

• (1110)

The Government's first economic statement was presented in November, 1984, very shortly after it came into power. In that statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) set out his basic principles for economic recovery. He said: "Deficit reduction is the key to rebuilding confidence and confidence is the key to growth and job creation". Quite a lot of time has passed since November, 1984, and it is interesting to hear what economic analysts are saying. In the October issue of the Business Conditions Bulletin published by Woods Gordon one reads:

> It is becoming increasingly apparent that economic progress in 1986 has been very limited. Overall, the economy has been at a virtual standstill since the beginning of the year.

Data Resources of Canada says:

> The choppy and only tepid path of real economic growth has had a predictable impact on the labour market: employment growth has stagnated since late last year.

I have no wish to attack the Government again about broken promises or to be unduly negative. However, no one will easily forget the constant refrain of "jobs, jobs, jobs" in the 1984 election campaign. Therefore the Government must expect to be held accountable for policies which work against an increase in employment.

We have seen increasing attempts by this Government to tax its way out of the deficit by way of sale taxes rather than income taxes. Sales taxes have, for very good reason, been traditionally regarded as regressive. While income tax is related to one's ability to pay, sales tax is charged on every product regardless of ability to pay. It hits the poor harder because they have less discretionary income and are obliged to spend more of their income for the necessities of life. Even so, the Government's recent announcement of its guidelines for tax reform included a mention that the Government intends to rely more on sales tax revenue in the future.

There is some evidence that all these sales taxes are having a dampening effect on consumer confidence and that consumer spending is down, with the resultant effect on the labour market. The Minister of Finance recently announced that all the tax increases which consumers have been asked to shoulder have not worked and that the deficit will be higher than forecast.

Let us consider some of the specifics of Bill C-14 in this context. The numbers in this Bill and those given in the February 26 Budget Papers add up to very large tax increases. Between now and 1990 Canadians will have to pay an additional $6 billion. In 1986 alone there will be an additional burden of $820 million. The 1 per cent increase in the sales tax will cost Canadian taxpayers $700 million. The increase in tax on alcohol will probably amount to another $125 million. In 1987 Canadians will pay an additional $1.2 billion in taxes. They will pay an additional $1.355 billion in 1988 and $1.455 billion in 1990, for a total of $6.1 billion.

Measures previously announced and adopted resulted in a 2 per cent increase in sales tax. That, combined with a 1 per cent increase in Bill C-14, amounts to a 3 per cent increase. This is a very heavy burden which seriously affects jobs and poor families. We are now in the fourth year of recovery and the Government's taxing policies have slowed down economic growth. There is great risk that this will continue with very serious effects on our already too high unemployment rate.

I have an article dated October 31 headed "Is Michael Wilson a Reverse Robin Hood?" The article makes the point that this continued emphasis on sales tax will hit the poor hardest and that the likely beneficiaries will be the rich. If the future policy is to put more and more emphasis on sales tax rather than on income tax this will be compounded because the poor, who now pay little or no income tax, will not benefit from the proposed reduction in personal income tax but will pay greatly for the business transfer tax which is essentially a sales tax.

The Minister has spoken of increasing corporation taxes, which I understand the New Democratic Party is in favour of. One must remember that in the long run it is people who pay corporation taxes. If corporate taxes are increased, those taxes will be passed on to the consumer who will end up paying for them.

• (1120)

The Government claims to be sensitive to the relationship of social and economic goals. Yet there is disturbingly little in the Speech from the Throne about an economic strategy for Canada, and this kind of Bill does not inspire confidence. With over one million Canadians still out of work, unemployment is a very real problem that has proven resistant to the Government's efforts to date. Clearly the Government will be more successful in meeting social policy objectives if it has the means at its disposal. The means will not be there if the economy is not performing well.

This Bill runs a very serious risk of damaging the economy. The Government has talked a great deal about enhancing investor confidence and indeed, if there is investor confidence, businesses can start up, businesses can expand and thereby create jobs so that the unemployed can go back to work and young people can again begin believing in the future.

However, will we get increased confidence from a Bill that piles on tax after tax, reduces consumer spending, and leaves people with less to save?

There is no more urgent problem facing the country at this time than unemployment. It is a problem for individuals, families, and for our whole economy. It has been said that work may not be a blessing, but the absence of it certainly is a curse. Unemployment is a demoralizing and soul-destroying experience. It shatters ideals and ambitions and puts a blight on family life. It lies at the root of any number of social ills. On the other hand, an employed person is paying taxes, spending money on consumer goods and probably saving, since Canadians are great savers. He or she is contributing to government revenues which are the means for providing all social programs for all Canadians.

It is very disturbing to see that the Government is not putting more effort into creating the climate that will assure Canadians of the jobs, jobs, jobs, they have been promised. Instead, all we are seeing are taxes, taxes, taxes.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, when concerns are raised about the burden of an increased sales tax or other taxes that deal with consumption rather than income, an answer given particularly by the Conservatives is that it can be dealt with by some type of credit or refund from the Government. In fact I am sure that the Conservative Members in this debate will point out that the Budget provides for a tax credit for low-income people to help offset the higher cost of the Conserative increases in sales tax. Is this really the answer, or is there some type of sleight of hand here? The proposal is that the cut-off point for sales tax credit be only $15,000. Would the Hon. Member comment particularly on what this $15,000 cut-off point means in terms of a definition of poverty, or low income?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, that $15,000 figure is so low as to be meaningless because people with an income that low find it very difficult to buy taxable goods. For example, they are not likely to be in the housing market, and we saw a big increase in sales taxes on all construction materials.

A family consisting of two adults and two children, earning an annual income of $30,000, will be paying about $600 more in taxes this year. That is a sizable cut in the income of a family which is certainly not rich or affluent. Of course, that family does not qualify for the sales tax rebate. Indeed, I agree with my hon. friend that the $15,000 level to qualify for a sales tax rebate is so low as to be meaningless.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). Is it not true that putting the cut-off point at $15,000 is an attempt by the Conservative Government to have a new definition of poverty, one that is not the definition established by Statistics Canada or any recognized experts on the subject? My recollection is that the latest Statistics Canada figures with respect to a definition of poverty speak of a family income in the area of $20,000. Are the Conservatives flying in the face of the Government's own impartial statistical agency, not to mention experts across the country, in having the cut-off point for the sales tax credit or refund at only $15,000?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the Government arrived at this cut-off point of an annual income of $15,000, but certainly that is below the poverty level as established by Statistics Canada, the Canada Council on Social Development, the Social Planning Council of Toronto, the Senate Committee on Poverty, and indeed all the authorities of which I know.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) on a question or comment. Then the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) to expand on her comments with respect to corporation taxes. In the seven years that I have been here, I have been amazed at how essentially dishonest Parliament has become with the population. There seems to be a feeling that taxes, or revenues, will come from someone else. I know that the members of the New Democratic Party particularly argue for dramatic increases in corporation tax. I agree with my friend opposite that it just means they will increase the price of their products to ordinary Canadians and it simply masks the fact that it is people who pay taxes rather than some mythical third party.

Is it the official position of the Liberal Party that corporation tax should be kept down for that reason? If not, what percentage of tax does she believe the corporations should pay?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, that is a very loaded question but let me attempt to answer it. First, I can understand very well the outrage that we hear from people such as those in my constituency who work extremely hard to buy homes and support children on salaries that are well under $30,000 a year. People like that may hear of corporations being able to write off the costs of their corporate jets and so on. They often feel a certain outrage that they are carrying a very high burden. I think we have to respond to that outrage and be very sure we have the clear facts.

• (1130)

The Auditor General, I think, has done quite a good job in pointing out the results of taxes forgone, or the so-called tax expenditures. Indeed, a former member of the Conservative Party, when he chaired the Public Accounts Committee, made a very useful contribution to the debate on tax expenditures. So I believe we have to be sensitive and understand people's outrage and their need for explanations.

That being said, we also have to be very sure that we are dealing with practicalities rather than with ideology. Some phrases like "corporate welfare bums" are great in a campaign, but when one looks at the facts it really comes down to the point that, if a corporation is paying more taxes, in most cases that gets passed on one way or another to the consumer. The real answer is not that corporations should pay less and individuals should pay more. The real answer is for us all to know the facts and to have a very clear handle on what tax expenditures are coming in. Over the years, indeed, our taxation law has grown more and more complex. Tax expenditures have increased in complexity. I think our first responsibility, our first task, is to simplify matters so we all know what we are dealing with. Then we must be very clear about what the burden is and on whom.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I think we have a certain amount of fuzzy thinking on the part of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) and on the part of the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) who asked the question regarding the passing on of corporation taxes to the consumer. I think the Hon. Member for Trinity expressed it very well. The labourer, the person who goes out and by the sweat of his brow makes his living and pays taxes not only through income tax, but in excise taxes which are being increased by this particular measure, has to be separated to some extent from the person who takes the profits of the corporation for which he has done nothing specifically. He has used his investment capital in some way to receive these profits and it is the profits which are being taxed in corporations, or what are not being taxed in corporations. There are large numbers of corporations which are not being taxed at all. That tax break, theoretically, will be passed on by dividends to the shareholders, not to the consumers. So what we are doing is reducing the amount of return from investment. That is what is intended here. Does the Hon. Member not recognize that reducing the profits of corporations is a more equitable way of taxation than the present consumer tax or income tax directly on an individual?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is being naive if he assumes that when corporate taxes go up the corporations will not so arrange their affairs as to pass on some of the costs to the consumers. However, if the Hon. Member is asking me to say that I think at the present time the legislation put forward by the Conservatives since they have been in power has increased the burden on the individual taxpayer, particularly in the area of sales taxes, in an inappropriate and unfair way, then I would certainly say that is so. The effect of the Bill before us is really to increase the burden and more so on those who are least able to pay. I think it is a very unfair Bill. I also think it is bad economics.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to another point the Hon. Member made in answering a previous question. The Auditor General indicated in his report that $28 billion in tax incentives and loopholes was forgone by the Government by this process. I would like the Hon. Member to comment. I would also like to ask her whether the Liberals, if they were in power, would do somthing about this, and what they would do?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to speak for my Party. Our major policy convention will be held in another four weeks and, in our Party, policy is set by the grassroots. In the upcoming months I will be able to speak with more firmness about our Party's policy. However, I think the Hon. Member's question is a loaded question. To say at this stage exactly how we would divide the tax burden, when we are just going into a series of public consultations, would surely be a very unwise thing to do. The Hon. Member certainly remembers the Carter Commission and what happened to that. He will also remember the proposals in the MacEachen Budget. There is a very clear lesson there. Changing our tax system is always difficult and complex and must be done with maximum consultation and public input.

The Hon. Member's Party, I understand, has been holding hearings on tax policy. The Standing Committee on Finance is just starting to study the question. I am sure my Party will have some panels on the subject, and certainly in the next year or so we would hope to have some very specific proposals.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I must say I was a little disappointed to hear the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), who is greatly respected in this House, avoid the questions put to her this morning. I am reminded a little of last Monday's debate on trade. I think the position of her Party came out good and firm, "free trade if necessary, but not necessarily free trade". We have heard that kind of phrase before. I am surprised that after 20 odd years in government, the Liberal Party is not yet prepared to say what its position would be on the tax Bills before us with respect to corporate tax.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member will read the Bill. The Bill does not deal with corporate tax. It deals with sales tax. I addressed the Bill and explained why I thought the sales tax was regressive, unfair, hard on the poor, bad economics, and that it is likely to dampen consumer demand and increase unemployment, which is one of our main concerns. Corporate tax is not before us today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate.

• (1140)

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise with respect to Bill C-14. I followed with great interest the debate of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinty (Miss Nicholson), who was not able to outline the position of the Liberal Party since it is in the process of being developed. That probably explains why the Liberal Party is doing so well in the polls.

When a Party is in opposition it is wise to be on the side of every issue. Members of the Liberal Party have tried very carefully to walk that line, but as we come closer to the general election the Liberal Party will have to declare its position on some of these major policy issues. The minute the Party does that, 10 per cent or 15 per cent of the population will say that they do not like the position at all and that the Liberal Party is no better than the New Democratic Party or the Conservative Party. Members of the Liberal Party will find that their standing at the polls will be hurt as they come to take decisions, and that the Government will then look a lot better.

We must appreciate where we are as a nation and where we were when the Conservative Party came to power. At that time the Liberals had been the governing authority for 20 years. They stayed in power during the period 1972 to 1974 with the direct and open support of the New Democratic Party. During that time they put in place a series of economic and fiscal policies which led the country into a national debt situation which, per capita, is almost three or four times greater than that of our immediate neighbour to the south, the United States of America.

It is in the context of the largest per capita debt that we have to consider the sales tax and excise tax increases. We have to consider the reductions, and they will be dramatic ones, in corporate exemptions and in the tax expenditure account, as well as an increase in income taxes, particularly on the rich as a result of the minimum tax. When we assumed power we decided as an over-all policy that there would have to be increases in corporate taxes and in income taxes, especially those on the rich, and also increases in income taxes on upper-income earners, not necessarily the very rich. At the same time we recognized that there would have to be dramatic cuts in government expenditures.

We are now moving on all fronts, even in terms of indexing. What the Liberals and members of the NDP did was index the expenditure side of the federal Government and deductions against revenue sources to Government. So when we went through the period of high inflation we saw that the expenditures increased proportionately, just as the revenues dropped proportionately. This was so because both sides of the equation had been indexed, which is why we now have a national debt of well over $200 billion at the federal level alone.

I often hear people say that federal debt is not significant because we owe it to ourselves. The argument has some validity with respect to federal debt. But what is not told to our citizens is that, because we at the federal level absorb all the domestic savings, primarily through Treasury Bills, Canada Savings Bonds and those types of instruments, we have left the provinces, all Crown corporations, federal and provincial, and private corporations exposed. Private corporations are exposed in that they now have to go offshore in search of funds. The provinces, Crown corporations and private corporations owe over $90 billion outside Canada. This debt poses a great threat to our senior citizens and our lower-income earners.

If international interest rates rise, as they may well rise, that means more dollars have to flow out of the country to service the over $90 billion foreign debt. That move will drive interest rates higher, and it could cause our dollar to drop. This in turn will have a massive impact on our senior citizens. As a country we are faced with the dilemma of having a huge national debt. While our per capita debt is much higher than that of the U.S., we are higher even than Mexico, Brazil, and Third World countries, which is causing concern to our international banking system.

We are also faced with the fact that at March 31 next year we will have finished another fiscal year. Canadians need to appreciate this fact. Even with all of the changes which we have implemented we will have to add another $32 billion to the national debt, which will bring it up to $250 billion as opposed to $220 billion. To service this extra debt of $32 billion next year's Budget will have to be increased by $3 billion just to cover the interest on the increase. Some 93 per cent of today's deficit is the result of paying interest on money borrowed to finance yesterday's deficit. That is the dilemma which we are in now.

I can remember that as recently as 1968 we did not have a deficit in this country. We had a small national debt even after having developed our huge nation, bought the West, opened it up, and fought two world wars. For the first 100 years of Confederation the national debt amounted to $18 billion and the nation's budget had no deficit at all. In fact there were surpluses. After the Conservatives came to power following 18 years of a Liberal-NDP coalition, the national debt had risen to over $200 billion and our national yearly deficit was over $30 billion.

Mr. Keeper: It's your debt now; you're maintaining it.

Mr. Thacker: It is true that it is now our debt. We have had to take hard decisions to counter it. We want Canadians to understand that we are in a dilemma that was not of their making. It was a position gotten into as a result of conscious and deliberate political decisions taken by the Liberal Party. The NDP cannot get around the fact that it aided and abetted the Liberals, particularly during the 1972 to 1974 period.

My friend opposite spoke about unemployment. There is no doubt that it is serious. I think we must also appreciate that the deficit is so large that even if we took one million unemployed and gave them jobs paying $30,000 a year, if the economy were such that we could do that, a person making $30,000 per year would pay about $6,000 in federal income taxes. So one million people at $6,000 would give us an extra revenue of $6 billion. However, the deficit would still be $32 billion; and if we deducted $6 billion from that we would still have a deficit of $26 billion. Of course the unemployment account would go down by perhaps another $6 billion. However, we would still have a deficit of around $20 billion. This sets out the magnitude of the cursed deficit which we face. We spend about $25 billion to service this debt. If we did not have the debt then we would have a balanced budget today. The country would be strong and we would be able to get into making deficits to create jobs for our young people. However, when one starts with a huge deficit it makes it very difficult.

I also wish to clarify another point because I think too many Members try to pass it off as if there is someone in our society who makes a huge amount of money and there is someone else who can pay.

We need to start with the following facts. If one earns $30,000 a year that person is already at the 85.54 percentile point. This means that if one earns $30,000 from all sources there are only 14.46 per cent of people who pay more in taxes than that person.

Mr. Riis: If you believe that you believe in fairies. That does not happen to anyone in the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There will be an opportunity for Hon. Members to ask questions or make comments after the Hon. Member has finished his speech. If the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has a comment to make or a question to ask after the Hon. Member has finished his speech, then I will be happy to recognize him at that time.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I tell my hon. friend that the figures I have quoted were taken out of income tax statistics this morning. They show that if one has an income of $30,000 per annum one is already at the 85 percentile point. If a person makes $50,000 per year, less than what we as Members of Parliament make, he is at the 98.1 percentile level. Less than 2 per cent of the people in our society make more than $50,000 per year. In fact that is not 2 per cent of the people in our society but 2 per cent of the people who pay income tax and file income tax returns. That indicates to me that there is no other large group in society that could pay. If we took every cent from people who made over $100,000, that would barely touch the deficit.

We should be honest with our fellow citizens. We should say: "Look gang, there is no one out there except you and me and ultimately the deficit has to be picked up by you and me". As Members of Parliament who make $55,000 per year, we are probably at the 99th percentile point. We should be thinking of what extras we can pay.

On an entirely personal note, it seems to me to be wrong for members of the New Democratic Party to argue for the continuance of universality with respect to family allowances—they want to continue to receive it themselves—while people are standing in food lines. Somehow, that strikes me as being wrong. I think we as Members of Parliament should face that and should realize that we have to pay more. In a sense, we will be paying more because of the minimum tax.

I was glad to hear the comments of the Hon. Member for Trinity vis-à-vis the corporate tax. I have argued here that corporate tax is very much like a sales tax. It is passed right through to the citizens. It is the citizen who is buying shoes and clothes who pays the corporate tax.

If I had my druthers, I would have the following tax system: every time we as elected Members of Parliament went to our constituents to tell them of a beautiful program that we wanted to give to them, we should have to say in the same breath: "Here is where the money will come from and this is how much you are going to have to pay, Mr. Farmer, and this is how much you are going to have to pay, Mr. Shoemaker". If we did that, we would hear the people saying: "We do not need that program. Thank you very much, Mr. Member of Parliament. It might be a great idea, but we would rather keep the money in our pockets and decide how to spend it".

I have often argued in the House that I would rather leave the money with the people and let them decide how to spend it. I fundamentally believe that millions and millions of individual decisions taken by citizens in their communities and homes for their own best interests would lead to a spending policy that is wiser than the Liberal-NDP policy which has been to tax the money into Ottawa so that the politicans and the Cabinet may decide who will win and who will lose.

Mr. Keeper: You're the one who's taxing it with this Bill.

Mr. Thacker: Yes, we have to say to the people that, as a result of the policies the Liberals and NDPs put in, the people will have to pay. For so many years we had all of these wonderful policies. We all liked the programs, but we paid low taxes. There was a cash flow difference which gave us the appearance of wealth. As a result of having good programs and low taxes, we paid too much for land and for our businesses. It has to come to an end because the trick is that we were borrowing the money and the deficit started to rise.

In 1968 only about 5 per cent of tax revenues went to pay interest on the debt. That figure went to 10 per cent, then to 15 per cent, and then to 20 per cent. We in opposition were saying that it was not right to pay a higher and higher percentage of our revenue, right off the top, to service the debt. Suddenly over 33 per cent of the revenue started going right off the top to pay interest on the debt. That money is not available to be used to create new programs. The people who are rich and have so much money that they can lend some to the Government with no risk, sit back and lend that money to the Government while the Government pays 33 per cent of all its revenues to maintain that loan. This means that we are losing the middle class. The rich are becoming fabulously rich while those in the middle class lose the benefits of government programs. We have to face up to that. We have to make a very difficult adjustment and I think the people are beginning to see that we must do so.

There is no doubt that there has been an increase in the direct taxes payable by the people. I do not think members of the NDP or the Liberal Party will be able to argue against that because of the European experience. Several European countries are run by socialist Governments. These Governments have moved almost unanimously to value-added taxes, an indirect tax. This is another way in which Governments are dishonest with their people. They take the money from them indirectly rather than directly through an income tax.

Mr. Riis: And you're going to do the same thing.

Mr. Keeper: That's what you're doing.

Mr. Thacker: Yes, exactly. That is what is happening in Canada. People need to understand that.

Mr. Keeper: Are you saying that you are being dishonest today?

Mr. Thacker: My friend from Winnipeg always gets very exercised when people try to tell the citizens what truly is happening. Socialist Governments in Europe use a value-added tax of about 12 per cent to 15 per cent. If we in Canada switched to a business transfer tax or a value-added tax, it would only have to be in the 2.5 per cent to 3 per cent range to raise the same amount of money as we raise through our tax system.

That the value-added tax in Europe is about 15 per cent tells us how much money those socialist Governments take from their people in order to redistribute it in the way the politicians want. They do this rather than leaving the money with the citizens and letting them decide how they want to spend their own money. Canadians should look forward to that if they want the Government to continue taking money away from them and deciding who will be the winner. Decisions about who will be the winner are never based on economic factors. They are based on being friends of the Government or on being in an industry that the politicians, for the time being, feel is a good industry. However, that is never the same as what the market-place would decide.

Canadians need to appreciate the fact that taxes will go up, up, and up. It does not matter which Party governs the country. However, Canadians are better off with us because we are trying to get them to appreciate the role of government and how obtrusive it has become. I hope Canadians will react by saying that they want less government control and that they want the money left with them so that they may decide how to spend it themselves.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the words of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker). I applaud him for his concerns about the deficit and the need to be honest with people. If he is being honest with taxpayers, presumably he is justifying the taxes on all sorts of items that had never been taxed before, like soft drinks, as well as the additional taxes on gasoline, cigarettes, and alcohol.

In this same spirit I would like to ask the Hon. Member two questions. Day after day we read in the media about the fact that it will cost the taxpayers of Canada, by the Auditor General's estimates, an additional $41 million because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) decided to locate a prison in his constituency. If the prison were to be built where it should be built for all sorts of sound sociological and business reasons, it would not cost Canadians an extra $41 million.

As well, we read in the media about the contract that was recently awarded for F-18s. The experts had given Bristol 926 out of 1,000 points and Canadair only 843 out of 1,000 points. If we are supposed to make decisions on sound business, logical, technological, and financial grounds, why was the decision made to give the contract to Canadair? I believe that the Hon. Member is a straight shooter. Will he indicate to us what he really believes about various issues? What does he think about the decision to relocate the Port-Cartier prison? Second, what does he think about the decision to award the contract to Canadair against all logical, financial, and business reasons? What are his personal views on those two topics?

Mr. Thacker: I could give a full 20-minute speech on both of those topics setting forth my views. It is not strictly relevant to the Bill today, so I will only make a comment or two.

Since this country has been founded, Governments have been making open decisions as to the placing of prisons, for example, and other factors. It is not necessarily based on the cheapest cost. If prisons were going to be put in the cheapest location, they would all be stacked up around Kingston. Kingston got going in the first place because the Government made a conscious decision to put a prison there, probably for political reasons.

In my riding of Lethbridge—Foothills we have a wonderful research station. It was put there originally because there was a Liberal Member of Parliament from that region. It would have been much cheaper to do that research in Ottawa because of the already established experimental farm. Those decisions are made. We are saying to the Canadian people that we made an open, honest decision. The role of the Opposition and the Auditor General is to point out how much more that is going to cost. We are saying to Canadians that because of regional development purposes, we think that is a wise expenditure of money. If the Opposition disagrees, they will do what they will do in the next election.

The members of the Opposition have exaggerated the figures. It will be $41 million over the 20 year life of the contract. Think of the benefits to the region of Port-Cartier and the people there who, rather than being on social assistance with no sense of a future, will be able to become guards, stay in their community and have schools, hockey teams, and still be on the north shore. To my mind that is a valid expenditure of money. We poured billions of dollars into the maritime provinces and parts of the West when they were developing and getting on their feet. I do not apologize for that. I do not think all of our prisons should be around Kingston because of an earlier political decision.

Mr. Keeper: Because of an earlier Tory Prime Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, it is amusing to listen to the Hon. Member who is so honest and frank with Canadians and indicates to them that he and his Government are in the process of increasing their taxes and intend to keep on doing it. Then, when he talks about waste in Government, he is not willing to hit the nail on the head. The Auditor General has pointed out that there was no up-to-date study which indicated that prison was needed now. At the same time, by moving it to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding, it is going to cost an extra $41 million. Why do you not deal with that frankly?

Mr. Thacker: We have dealt with that honestly. With respect to the CF-18 contract, Winnipeg would not have been in the offing if it had not been for a conscious government decision when the former Liberals were in power to transfer the Air Canada maintentance contract to Winnipeg, which they subsequently lost. It was a patronage decision to put it into Winnipeg in the first place. It seems to be a touch hypocritical for Mr. Pawley, the Premier of Manitoba, to be yelling and screaming because that business was sent to the West as a political decision in the first place. It would have been cheaper to do it in Montreal and Toronto, because during the Second World War they had built the buildings, the infrastructure, and the expertise.

An Hon. Member: What about the bidding process?

Mr. Thacker: It was put in the West in the first place as a result of a political decision. Second, Mr. Pawley, within his own province makes those types of political choices daily as to whether he is going to put a project in Winnipeg, or whether he is going to move it to Brandon or the North.

We have been trying for months to get Mr. Pawley and the NDP Government in Manitoba to come into a tripartite sugar-beet production agreement. The Province of Alberta has agreed. That whole sugar-beet industry is on a string because the NDP Government in Manitoba does not want to get into a tripartite agreement. The reason is that the sugar-beet growers are in two Conservative ridings in southern Manitoba. He does not want to get into it for that reason. He should not be quite so hypocritical when he is yelling about us.

Mr. Althouse: With regard to the last statement that the Hon. Member made regarding sugar-beets, is he trying to tell the House that Manitoba did not plant sugar-beets last year and Alberta did? The fact is that Manitoba did have a program that kept sugar-beets being grown last year. Alberta did not even plant sugar-beets, because that Government could not come up with a program either. At least Manitoba can go into these talks having maintained growers last year. Their experience might be of some use in this particular set of negotiations. We still have several months to go before the final decision on planting takes place.

The reason that I attracted your attention, Mr. Speaker, had to do with some comments made during the Hon. Member's speech. He talked about the terrible effects of high interest rates and how that had contributed to the rapid acceleration of the deficit. I would like to ask him this. Knowing what the effect would be on the deficit and on Canadians, why did he and his Party support the changes to the Bank Act which unleashed those very high interest rates, along with the cancellation of the old usury laws? With the exception of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), most of his Party had supported those changes. Can he now explain why?

Mr. Thacker: If my friend opposite is saying that the high interest rates that we have endured as a nation were the result of the amendments to the Bank Act, I will simply disagree with him on that point. Those changes to the Bank Act which permitted foreign banks to come in and compete with the five banks that had a monopoly position in this country for decades was not the decision that increased the interest rates. The reason that the interest rates went up to 18, 19, and 21 per cent, was as a result of accumulated deficits. Countries all over the world have lived through this before. We seem to be not capable of learning from it. Any time there is a Government, whether it is a king chipping or clipping the coins, or turning on the printing presses, which is what happened here, that leads to deficits that in time automatically leads to an interest rate increase, inflation, higher interest rates, and then the collapse.

What we are enduring right now is the collapse at the end of this 15 year period of madness. That collapse is very difficult. We have whole towns going out of business. We have farmers by the tens of thousands having to give up on farming. Every year there are tens of thousands of small businesses that go out of business. We are now into the adjustment phase. There is no doubt that when we get through it the people who survive are going to be well positioned and the country is going to continue on. However, it would not have been necessary to go through all of that if parliamentarians had stood up, as members of our Party did for years, and argued against those deficits. It is a fundamental deceit when governments say to people that we will give you this wonderful program and you can keep your low tax. It is true that in the short run you can, but ultimately people have to pay.

It is people who pay the taxes and create the wealth. If you do not give people a chance to get a job, which is what happens after inflation and the adjustment phase, they cannot create the wealth. I say sincerely that I think that all of those programs, offered without having a corresponding tax, has hurt the poor more than if the scenario of the late sixties had been carried on where the Government, if it had a program, had increased the taxes so there were no deficits.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act is a very crucial debate. This Bill comes out of the previous Budget. It is important for Canadians to understand the essential message of the Bill before the House. In a nutshell it indicates that the Conservative approach to taxation is unfair. The Conservative Government is increasing the tax burden of ordinary Canadian families in an inequitable fashion.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important to everyone, that all Canadians understand the message the Conservative Government is sending them with this legislation. The Government's approach to the tax system is unfair. It is proposing to increase the tax burden for the average family, and they way it has chosen to do this is unfair.

• (1210)

I should like to take a look at the history of our taxation system. First I will make a few comments about the last 20 years and the direction of that system. Also, I will look closer at what the Conservative Government is doing today and has been doing for the last couple of years. Then I will make some comments about the future and about what is likely to happen in the taxation area.

Two important trends have stood out in the taxation system over the last 20 years. These trends are important to ordinary Canadians in that they affect the burden of taxation, where it falls, and the extent of it. The first trend which has been evident for the last 20 years concerns the responsibility of paying for the expense of Government, whether the money is used wisely or wasted, as was the case in the transfer of a prison to the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It was a clear waste of some $41 million according to the Auditor General's report. The burden of taxation has been placed more and more upon the shoulders of ordinary people, and profitable corporations have been carrying less and less of the responsibility of paying for government services. While corporations exist to make a profit, they are also citizens in a sense. Most corporations have a public relations arm or team to ensure that their image is a good one, that they are seen as good corporate citizens. It is incumbent upon them to carry their fair share of the burden.

However, over the last 20 years, under both Conservative and Liberal Governments, the burden of taxation has fallen more heavily upon the backs of individual Canadians, while corporations have tended to walk away with a lighter and lighter load.

It is not surprising in that context to have heard the comments of the Hon. Member in the Liberal Party who questioned New Democrats raising the matter about the share of the taxation burden carried by corporations. She claimed that if the taxes on corporations were increased, they would just pass them on to consumers and, therefore, there was no use in taxing them. That analysis ignores the fact that profitable corporations can absorb a portion of the taxation burden. Corporations should not always be free to raise their prices whenever they want. Market forces can force corporations to absorb some of the costs rather than the burden always being passed on to consumers.

Another major trend in taxation has been that the income tax system has become less and less progressive. A generally accepted notion of the income tax system is that it is a way in which people can pay their fair share. Those who earn more pay more because they are capable of paying more; those who earn less pay less because it is more difficult for them to pay taxes. This principle has been eroding in a very significant way over the last 20 years. I wanted to make those two fundamental points about the taxation system over the last couple of decades under both Liberal and Conservative Governments.

Another point needs to be mentioned. The Auditor General indicated in his report that the taxation system was very complicated, that the system of giving tax write-offs to corporations was very complicated, and that it was very difficult to trace just exactly where public money was going. Every time someone is forgiven taxes, in effect it is an expenditure of public money. Obviously when the Government starts a program, it is an expenditure of public money. However, when it fails to collect taxes, it is also an expenditure of public money. The whole system of write-offs riddling the taxation system and giving breaks to corporations for various reasons has become so complicated that it is difficult, if not impossible, to trace the impact of any particular write-off. The use of the taxation system as an economic instrument is being undermined, and the capacity of using the taxation system to steer the economy is being weakened. Since the system cannot be understood, it is not only unmanageable but is less equitable.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, during the last 20 years, there have been two important developments in our tax system. First, the tax burden for corporations and individuals has changed, in that the burden has been shifted to the average Canadian and away from the corporations.

Second, Mr. Speaker, personal income tax has traditionally been progressive, in that those who earned more, paid more and people who earned less, paid less. However, this concept is weakening and today, personal income tax has become less progressive than it was before.

[English]

I should like to comment about what is going on today with Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, and what has been going on for the last couple of years under the present Conservative Government.

• (1220)

It is important to note that since that Government has been in office it has managed to increase taxes on an ordinary Canadian family by $1,305. That is an enormous increase for an ordinary family, by which I mean one with two dependent children, earning $35,000 a year. Of that $1,305 Conservative tax increase, some $845 is in sales and excise taxes. That is the significance of this legislation.

Why do I raise questions about the increase in sales and excise taxes? Not only because people are strapped for money and this is not the time to be increasing taxes, but also because the way these taxes are being increased is unfair. Sales taxes are hidden taxes. They are not, as my friend across the way suggested earlier, an honest representation of government policy direction. They are a way of raising taxes without people really noticing. Louis XIV of France, a master at raising taxes, had a finance Minister who helped him raise the money for the grand palaces which he built and lived in. That Minister described taxation as a matter of being able to pluck as many feathers from the goose as possible with the least amount of hissing. That describes what the Conservative Government is doing today in relying so heavily upon sales and excise taxes.

Five minutes, is it? Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your letting me know how much time I have left in my speech because time passes faster than I realize.

Mr. McKinnon: Not for us.

Mr. Keeper: Did I hear some applause?

We criticize the heavy reliance of this Government on sales taxes because they are hidden taxes. They are also inequitable. Whether you are a single parent on welfare or a millionaire, you pay the same amount. That is an inequitable approach to taxation. It is also a brake on the economy. It tends to take money out of the pockets of consumers and therefore slows economic growth. If we should be doing anything to the economy right now, it would be to keep it moving rather than slowing it down.

I have talked about the past and present so I want to take a couple of minutes to say something about the future. The Conservatives appear to be promising tax reform. At the same time they say they are going to lower the income tax rate. What is this all about? It seems to me that the promised income tax rate cut is kind of like a carrot to get the donkey moving. At the end of the road there is going to be a big stick, the continued increase in sales taxes by way of a business transfer tax or whatever name is given to it.

I encourage Canadians to take a very close look at the specific proposals the Government comes down with under the name of tax reform. To what extent will it increase the tax burden on ordinary Canadians and to what extent will it rely upon regressive rather than progressive taxes? They should not be fooled by the Government saying it is going to lower income taxes while at the same time it forgets to mention sales tax increases.

To conclude, Bill C-14 sends a clear message to Canadians that the Conservative approach to taxation is unfair. It increases the burden on ordinary Canadian families. This is the continuation of a trend which has developed over the last couple of decades under both Liberal and Conservative Governments. It needs to be challenged and we in this party seek to challenge it. I call upon Members opposite to be critical of their leadership and make sure that the tax reform package is designed for ordinary Canadians and is not just another tax increase.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my friend. He made a valiant attempt to understand how this country and its economy operate. However, sometimes he does not come through very clearly. I am sure he would like to have the unemployed in his riding find jobs. If the Government offered tax incentives for business in his riding or some of the ridings north of his, there would be greater transportation costs, it would cost more to train people, and more for many other things in those areas. If the Government decides to offer tax incentives, as he was talking about, does he not think it is important that people in his province and in his riding, or even north of it, also share in the benefits other Canadians in the southern part of Canada enjoy?

So far we have created jobs for about 600,000 more Canadians. We would like to continue with tax reform so we can employ more Canadians, and I think the Hon. Member will agree with that.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for the question because it gives me an opportunity to elaborate on some comments I have made. The point that I was making concerning tax incentives is a point which the Auditor General made in his report this year and last year. That is, we are spending roughly $30 billion on tax incentives for corporations in the name of various economic objectives.

• (1230)

The Auditor General makes the point that this system of tax write-offs is so complex that it is almost impossible to measure its impact. In previous reports he has questioned the effectiveness of such tax write-offs. We are spending billions of dollars for economic objectives and I want to be ensured that the tax write-offs will be effective before I support them. We must make a comprehensive examination of the tax incentives in order to ensure that our financial capacity is used effectively.

The Government delights in mentioning the 600,000 new jobs from time to time. This increased employment is the continuation of a previously existing trend. There is no great new boom in the Canadian economy. Most Canadian families have at least one member who is unemployed and they can verify this through personal experience. There has been an increase in jobs, but that happened under the previous Government as well, and most of the growth is in part-time jobs. I would not brag too loudly about the employment record of the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), I want to take this opportunity, as the Member for the North Shore and of course for Charlevoix, and I say this because the riding covers half of the North Shore—as I was saying, I want to take this opportunity to explain to the Hon. Member that he, his party and the Opposition should stop criticizing our investment at Port-Cartier.

Criticizing the Hon. Member for Manicouagan and Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for investing in our remote areas and for redistributing some of this country's wealth is hardly the right attitude, and I think it is an insult to the people of the North Shore and especially to those who live in these remote areas. If the Government were to limit its spending to our large urban centres, which so often benefit in any case, and I am thinking of Vancouver, Calgary, Quebec City, Montreal, Halifax, Toronto especially, and even Winnipeg, this would no longer be Canada.

To hear the Hon. Member, maybe we should close down the North Shore. Why not? We were the geese that laid the golden eggs for this country for fifteen or 20 years, when it was a case of simple arithmetic to prove that North Shore workers were paying more income tax and providing more services to Canada than any other community, and now that we have a Member and a Government promoting these remote areas, people scream bloody murder. I know it pays politically to hammer the Prime Minister. All the Opposition parties are doing it, but I think they should stop try to make political hay out of this situation.

It costs more on the North Shore, I agree. Food costs more. Products generally cost more. You know what the Saguenay syndrome is? Every time you cross the Saguenay, freight costs go up, Mr. Speaker. We don't benefit from the Maritime Freight Act, we don't have a railway, and so forth.

I think these comments, which have become increasingly frequent in the last few weeks, are an insult to the people in our area and to those working in remote regions.

I also wonder whether the Hon. Member—and this will be my final comment, I will give him time to answer—I wonder whether the North of Winnipeg, and I am referring to remote communities, I wonder whether they appreciate your comments? Do you represent Winnipeg or the interests of the entire community, including people who live 300, 400 and 500 miles away?

If I may, Mr. Speaker, enough is enough, I am sick and tired of hearing that. I think it is utterly ridiculous. Of course I agree with the Hon. Member, let those who earn more pay more. This is quite normal, this is what the Government is doing. A tax will soon be imposed on all citizens and all corporations so that no-one will be tax-exempt, particularly the rich.

On the other hand, like all its predecessors this Government has a responsibility towards Canada, and Canada includes these regions and especially those who reside in remote areas.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised a few important points and I should like to comment on them.

Mr. Speaker, when I refer to the Port-Cartier issue, I have in mind the effectiveness of such expenditures. I am not saying that the money should not be spent in remote regions, but I think it is important that the money be spent effectively. Let us not kid ourselves, Mr. Speaker, Port-Cartier has been chosen as the site of the proposed prison because it happens to be in the riding of the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. Other ridings in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada report a higher unemployment rate than does the Prime Minister's riding. So why should this prison not be built in the region where the unemployment rate is the highest? Obviously this riding was chosen for political reasons. Since the prison is to be relocated from Drummondville to Port-Cartier, what happens to the people of Drummondville? Do they not need jobs too?

Mr. Hamelin: A prison is already located there.

Mr. Keeper: As well, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General made a number of references to this prison, including the fact that there was no study to confirm the need for this type of institution. Yet the Government has decided to proceed with this project and build the prison. In addition, by relocating the prison the Government will be making extra expenditures of $40 million, which is a lot of money for this one prison. There are other ways of wasting money, and the Government's bank bail-out was one of them. I think the funds must be spent wisely if we want to create jobs for Canadians. The money used to bail out the banks could have been set aside to create quite a few jobs, on the north shore for instance.

Why not use the money earmarked for this prison to create jobs on the north shore or in other regions of Quebec, but in an effective and useful manner this time?

Mr. Hamelin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, if we are to create as many jobs as possible, these funds must be spent more effectively.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins).

• (1240)

[English]

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate on Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. It is important to make it clear for the people who are listening to this debate that a majority of the measures that we are discussing in this legislation came into effect with the introduction of the Budget in 1986. They are not new or additional increases, we are simply going through the process of passing legislation to legalize those measures.

This Bill is an integral part of our over-all approach to economic renewal. We must keep reinforcing what we said in September, 1984, about our goals and our objectives as a Government. One of our major priorities was economic renewal.

Unfortunately, we must keep harking back to what the circumstances were at that time. After so many years of Liberal rule we were in a terrible deficit situation. Spending had risen by an average of 23 per cent per year, the gross national debt had grown by 50 per cent, and debt service costs had grown by 85 per cent. In fact, from 1981-82 to 1982-83 the deficit rose from over $14 billion to over $27 billion, an increase of $13 billion in that one year.

People sometimes forget that our financial situation was out of control and that if these spending patterns had continued, we would have been $100 billion more in debt than we will be as a result of the measures we have introduced. It is necessary to remind Canadians that when we took office we said it was necessary to tackle the economic issues, including the deficit. I know that the first thing I am asked when I meet people in my riding is what we are doing to manage the economy and bring the deficit under control.

People are concerned about the future for their children and grandchildren if we simply keep piling up a debt without any thought about its implications in the future. For instance, 93 per cent of today's deficit is the result of paying interest on money borrowed to finance yesterday's deficit. We know that increasing the deficit at a rate that was out of control would inevitably lead to higher interest rates, a weakened dollar, and would have impaired our ability to maintain a wide range of programs. It would have potentially impaired our ability to provide the very social programs that we want for our elderly, our children and those in need.

We said two years ago that we would make changes. The House will recall that in the economic statement and our Budgets we laid out a program so that for the first time in 40 years government spending is actually reducing and, for the first time in six years, the deficit is also declining.

We are debating legislation which has increased revenues through sales taxes and excise taxes in certain areas. It is important to remember that while some taxes have increased, for every dollar in increased taxes, expenditures have been cut by $3.

Let us consider some of the steps that have been taken to reduce the deficit. It is never easy to cut programs and it causes some pain and hardship to those who may have a certain interest in certain government programs. However, we have had to take some tough action, including the elimination of the Canadian Home Insulation Program, the Registered Home Ownership Savings Program and Katimavik. We have closed down the heavy water plant, got rid of Canagrex and have modified the rate of indexation of transfer payments to the provinces. It is not easy to take these steps, but governing involves making some tough decisions. We know that each Department of government has been reviewed and is going through a process of managing more efficiently and spending smarter.

Hon. Members opposite may not want us to take these steps, but we feel it is in the public interest and what the people of Canada have asked us to do. There is no limitless pot of money from which we can draw and, if we do not make those very tough decisions, we cannot expect to maintain a competitive edge in the international field.

The measures we have implemented in the past two years include measures to reduce government expenditures and to sell off Crown corporations. Some of our measures have resulted in a reduction of $560 in the cost to average Canadian households.

The proof in the pudding is in the results of our measures, about which I am most pleased. No one can deny that job-creation has occurred in this country. Over one million more Canadians are working today than were working in September, 1984. I indicated in my speech in reply to the Speech from the Throne that 80 per cent of those jobs are full-time. Members opposite keep giving other statistics but they cannot deny the truth.

We know that unemployment has decreased by 2.2 per cent between September, 1984 and September, 1986, so that it is now down to 9.5 per cent. Furthermore, we know that inflation is holding firm.

The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) expressed some concern about the impact of these increased sales tax measures on the economy. We know that they have been in effect since April of this year and there has not been an adverse impact on employment which has, in fact, increased. We also know that consumer confidence has increased because consumer spending is at its highest level in 21 years and its second highest level in history. They have not had an adverse impact on consumer spending.

When we consider the international statistics, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) quoted during the Throne Speech debate, we know that according to the 1986 report of the European Management Forum, in the past two years Canada has moved from eleventh place to sixth place in improving our competitive position. We can be very proud of that record. Recently, a high level delegation from Japan visited Canada to meet the Government and private sector groups throughout the country. I had an opportunity to have an informal meeting with some of those delegates and discovered that they were almost astonished by the changes that have taken place in the economy of Canada in the past two years and the level of confidence that this was creating. Obviously, this will make Canada a much more positive place for investment and growth.

During the weekend the Prime Minister spoke to an organization and said that if we want to deal with the country's social problems, first we have to ensure that we have a healthy economy and economic growth. As he said: "Only a healthy economy can lead to the proper funding to combat social ills". It seems obvious, yet it is important that we reiterate those points time after time. It is always more pleasant to spend money. In fact, I find it interesting that the Liberals in their policy sessions being held across the country are saying: "Spend more money. Spend more money". That is all very nice, but we cannot afford to do that. When we spend more money in that way, ultimately it will come back to private citizens who will not then have the kind of income to invest in order to create the jobs which are required. It must always be balanced.

The particular increases with which we are dealing today are a very reasonable and sensible way to raise the 30 per cent which we believe should be raised through increases in taxation. There is a 1 per cent increase in excise tax in some areas. These changes will generate about $1 billion in additional revenue in 1987, which will really help us to meet our target of deficit reduction. At the same time, we have within this legislation looked at areas which need special attention. I recall when the Budget came down last April. I was particularly pleased by one of the measures which would exempt certain kinds of information for the travel industry from federal sales tax. That is information which is made available by Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade to help us sell Canada to tourists. That was one of the sensitive issues which we included in these provisions.

Hon. Members opposite have been concerned about the impact on lower income families, but they must keep in mind that in the enactment of the Budget we have indeed had that under consideration and have introduced a special refundable sales tax credit to lower income families. The credit provides $50 per adult and $25 per child, which could mean $100 per family with two children, and will be paid to families with an income of less than $15,000. The total benefits are reduced by $5 for every $100 in income over that amount. I think that particular measure, along with the measure we passed a couple of weeks ago for the refundable child tax credit, shows our concern about those families in Canada at the lower end of the wage scale. We know that many of those families are headed by women. We are trying to ensure that they benefit from the measures and are not unduly burdened by tax increases. I believe we have accomplished that.

I think the measures we are discussing today, which were introduced in the Budget, fulfil all the criteria of our philosophy, our commitment to economic renewal which is based on more efficient management of Government, reducing Government spending and reducing the deficit, and only, when necessary, increasing taxes, and certain taxes in a way which has the least dampening effect on the economy or on the ability or the initiative of people to take risks and to create entrepreneurial activities and create jobs.

I was in Vancouver on Saturday and spoke at a fascinating conference of aboriginal women who were interested in going into business. There were 90 or 100 women from the Vancouver region who were all looking at opportunities to start new businesses. This conference helped them to develop skills and create the partnerships and the networks. I talked to many of those women. They had ideas for shops and child care services, on reserves and off reserves. There was a tremendous feeling of confidence and optimism. As we know, the majority of new jobs created in this country are created by small business. In British Columbia, women are creating small businesses twice as quickly as men.

We can think of the group I met and spoke with on Saturday as really the leading edge of what we want to see happen in this country; people taking risks, making investments, and we in Government providing them with the framework and the environment in which they can take those risks successfully. I felt so good about that particular experience that I wanted to share it with my colleagues.

I also feel good about the kind of legislation we are debating today because it is consistent with our over-all policy of economic renewal, of new opportunities for our citizens and, as we have always said, a new Canada for all Canadians.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed listening to the speech of the Hon. Member, as usual. She talked about the hope that this legislation will increase tourism. She referred to the clause in the Bill before us which exempts people who relay information to tourists from tax on that particular written information. She, and indeed all of us, hope that this will contribute somewhat to an increase in tourism. However, I wonder, looking at the rest of the Bill, if she is not concerned that while information to potential tourists will not be taxed, this particular Bill creates actual extra expenses for tourists. I note there is an air transportation tax increase from the current 9 per cent to 10 per cent. There is an increase in fuel tax on regular gasoline from 3.2 cents a litre to 3.9 cents a litre. If the tourist flies in, his or her ticket will be more expensive because of these taxes. If the tourist drives in, it will be more expensive to use ground transportation. I just wonder how the Hon. Member sees the tourist industry being able to absorb these very real tax increases which amount to something in the order of 10 per cent. How will this affect the tourism industry?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased my hon. colleague has raised this issue because it is an issue which is very close to my heart. I might point out with respect to the air transportation tax the Hon. Member mentioned, there is a ceiling of $50 on domestic flights so that it will not place an undue burden on those who fly within Canada for long distances, particularly those residents of the North with whom we are very concerned.

One might think from what was said by the Hon. Member that these tax measures, most of which were in effect during the summer except for the gasoline tax, which did not come in until after, might have had an adverse effect, but I can assure my hon. colleague they did not. Not only as a result of Expo, but because of all the activities going on across the country, this has been an absolute boom year for tourists coming to Canada. It is terribly exciting.

I was at the United Nations in New York last week and had the opportunity to visit with our Consul General. We talked about tourism and what our New York office is doing. I was told there was a great deal of interest from the eastern United States. I particularly want to get them all out to British Columbia because we want people to come back after Expo and enjoy the glories of my wonderful province.

There were tours already booked. The raising of awareness in the eastern United States about Canada as a tourist destination has been fantastic. We will be following that up with very significant advertising campaigns co-ordinated through the Ministry of Tourism as well as with the private sector. Therefore, I can assure the Hon. Member that this kind of sales tax increase has not had a dampening impact. In fact, I see a great potential for growth in tourism which will benefit the economy of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Before I call it one o'clock, I would inform the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) that she does have five minutes left in the time for the questions and comments when Orders of the Day are called.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

USE OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES CONDEMNED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker:

S.O. 21

The use of chemical pesticides in rural and urban settings has contaminated lakes, streams, aquifers, wildlife and food marketed all over the world. Farmworkers, their families, and non-farming residents of areas placing heavy reliance on chemical pest control often suffer acute and chronic ill effects from pesticide exposure. Severe economic losses result as many pests develop resistance to chemical controls. Farming methods dependent on high capital inputs can also accelerate soil erosion and fertility loss, threatening the base of all agricultural productivity and human sustenance.

This quote is from the Ottawa Declaration, made on World Environment Day, June 5, 1986, by concerned scientists from Canadian and American research institutes. These scientists urge their colleagues:

—to explore innovative sustainable systems of crop and livestock production, and particularly to seek pest control methods which protect human and environmental health.

TRANSPORT CANADA

DEPARTMENT'S FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY—CONTRIBUTION TO WELLBEING OF SOCIETY

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured and privileged to point out that Transport Canada is celebrating its 50th anniversary today. I am sure that Hon. Members and all Canadians are as proud as all the employees of the Department to mark this first half century today, the first 50 years of Transport Canada's outstanding contribution to the well-being of our society.

[English]

Yesterday, November 2, was the fiftieth anniversary of the Department. On that day in 1936 the Department of Transport Act was proclaimed by Parliament when the former Departments of Marine, Railways and Canals, and the civil aviation branch of National Defence were merged into one.

Today Transport Canada's role and responsibilities are global in scope. Canadian airlines span the world. Search and rescue telecommunications are relayed through satellites. We must address environmental concerns and such issues as international terrorism in our planning.

I would like to salute Transport Canada and its people. May the next 50 years be as productive and inspiring as the last half century.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DELAY IN PROCESSING RETURN OF STATUS APPLICATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, since the changes to the Indian Act were made to enable those people who had lost their status as Indian people to have their status reinstated, over 70,000 applications have been received by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. To date fewer than 13,000 have been processed. People have been waiting for more than a year and still have not had their applications processed. Many young native people have had to forgo their education and job training plans while they wait for a decision on their Indian status.

I urge the Minister and the officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to recognize this outrageous situation and to take immediate steps to process the backlog of status applications.

SHIPBUILDING

LACK OF DEFENCE ORDERS FOR ONTARIO SHIPYARDS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, Canada has thousands of miles of coastline, perhaps more than that of any other country in the world. We are a member of the North Atlantic Alliance, with areas of responsibility. Yet for all practical purposes we are without a navy. Given the difficult starting point of the Government in its marine renewal it has experienced delays and frustrations. Meanwhile Ontario shipbuilding yards remain without a contract, yards that have a proven record in Coast Guard vessel design and construction, yards that have proven themselves in navy refit and repair.

Whatever the cost advantage there was in the original program, it has long since disappeared.

I ask the Department of National Defence to review the cost benefit of seeing men at work building ships and the pride that we all can share as Canada's navy puts out to sea.

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, on Friday when the Government made the decision on the CF-18 it overturned a bid that was, by a clear margin of 10 per cent, the winner on the basis of technical competence and low price. The rationale given was something called "technology transfer". However, the Government has not given any explanation of what it really means. It has provided no evaluation, no assessment, and no criteria. Perhaps even worse is that, as part of the process, the Government did not give the competing companies any opportunity to make a bid based upon technology transfer.

What is this new technology transfer? In the case of the CF-18 it obviously does not relate to the manufacture of planes because the licensing is clearly related only to the servicing and maintenance of the aircraft. There goes one argument.

The other argument used by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is that only Canadian companies need apply. Does that mean that the new-found interest of the Conservative Government in recruiting foreign investment to help build Canada is no longer applicable? Does it mean that companies are no longer able to provide for this technology transfer if there has been foreign investment in them? I suggest that technology transfer is simply a subterfuge and what we really need is for the Government to come clean.

WELFARE

DECREASE IN NUMBER OF LOW-INCOME PERSONS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, low-income Canadians are defined as those who spend more than 58.5 per cent of income on the essential items of food, clothing, and shelter. Happily, substantial progress against poverty has been made since the present Government took office. There were 298,000 fewer low-income Canadians in 1985 than there were in 1984.

The National Council on Welfare has pointed out two factors which account for this reduction. These are improved social program benefits and a reduction in unemployment. Obviously the major cause of poverty is unemployment and therefore the major weapon against it is job creation.

Since September, 1984, the Government has provided an economic climate in which over 600,000 jobs have been created and under which the unemployment rate has fallen from 11.7 per cent to 9.5 per cent.

The Government stands committed to alleviating the curse of poverty through the provision of long-term meaningful jobs for Canadians.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the celebration of the CBC's 50th anniversary this weekend was marred by the fact that in this of all years the CBC failed to account properly for millions of dollars of expenditures.

Let us not be so curmudgeonly as to fail to congratulate the CBC for its many contributions, for being the voice of Canadians speaking to each other and for often winning prizes. All this is done with a budget that is modest by international comparisons.

[Translation]

Canadian men and women who work for the CBC deserve a round of applause. The outstanding quality of their programs has earned them the respect of radio and television broadcasters throughout the world. Listeners and viewers, particularly in the remote areas of Canada, appreciate their work and dedication.

The Sauvageau-Caplan report advocates a still greater role for CBC broadcasting in the future.

[English]

The millions of Canadians who listen to and watch the CBC will want Parliament to wish it well on its anniversary on their behalf. May it have a computer that really works, better labour relations, more women on the air, and enough money to produce the high quality programming Canadians want and need.

EXISTENCE OF FOOD BANKS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding press reports to the contrary, a Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament did attend the National Conference on Hunger this past weekend. I attended the conference because of the growing number of people my constituency office has had to refer to food banks for help.

In 1980 there were no food banks in Canada. The term "food bank" was virtually unknown. Today there at least 94 food banks and hardly a week goes by without some reference to food banks in the media.

The existence of food banks in Canada is a direct result of the high interest rates that brought on the recession in 1981. Although interest rates have been falling and the economy recovering, food banks are not disappearing. We are in danger of food banks becoming a permanent part of our social safety net. That is no reflection on the good intentions of those who work at food banks, or those who donate to food banks. But do we really want to have—

ROLE OF CHARLES PHILION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I would like to draw the attention of the House to the role played by a retired member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Charles Philion.

According to The Globe and Mail, Mr. Philion found racist elements in the RCMP's personnel policy. He was responsible for revealing the existence of the report and bringing it to the attention of the RCMP Commissioner.

According to the article, Commissioner Simmonds put an end to this policy, and today, I would like to talk about Charles Philion's role in this respect.

NATIONAL CRIME PREVENTION WEEK

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF COMMUNITY VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, this is National Crime Prevention Week across Canada. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) will be travelling the breadth of this nation from Victoria to St. John's to acknowledge the many activities that are taking place at the community level to make our neighbourhoods safer and better places to live.

Hundreds of programs have been set up across the country. There are thousands of Canadian men and women volunteers who are working to make the crime prevention partnership between the police and the community strong and effective. Volunteer work is tremendously important to our society. One of the most satisfying aspects of the crime prevention partnership is the extent of the volunteer effort that goes into it. We are seeing a resurgence of community level participation addressing a whole host of social challenges. Mr. Speaker, everyone can play a role. Mr. Speaker, everyone should play a role.

DEPENDENCY ON FOOD BANKS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, New Democrats share the outrage of delegates who attended the Hunger Conference last weekend. It is a national disgrace that food banks have been institutionalized because our social security system does not provide enough income for families. I am appalled that in Vancouver thousands of people must line up at food banks. Many of them are women and children.

At a summer poverty forum poor people told us that welfare must be raised, earnings must be exempted, and parenting must be recognized. We must have affordable housing and child care. Governments must act on several fronts to end poverty. We need aggressive job creation, tax reforms, higher minimum wages, pay equity, and guaranteed adequate incomes above the proverty line. Volunteer organizations should not have to feed hungry people. Governments must act now to eliminate hunger and poverty in Canada.

NARCOTICS

SUPPORT URGED FOR CAMPAIGN AGAINST DRUG ABUSE

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) suggested that illicit drug use in our country was a very serious problem and was epidemic. Recent information, including a new Gallup poll, confirms that most Canadians are as concerned as the Prime Minister. The Gallup poll indicated that 75 per cent of Canadians agreed with the Prime Minister on this issue.

Illicit drugs are a dangerous trap for all Canadians, especially the young. In that connection it is important to note that both the Canadian Football League and the National Hockey League have begun major drug education campaigns for the youth of Canada. Each of us should support wholeheartedly the efforts of the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), and the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) to control this major crisis facing us all. As Members of the House we have a special responsibility, particularly with respect to education.

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—EFFECT ON REGIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, to achieve regional equality requires strong, bold initiatives by the national Government. In regard to the award of the CF-18 contract to Canadair in Montreal one must ask these questions. What does it mean to the regions of this country? What does it mean to western Canadians? What does it mean to those Canadians in Atlantic Canada?

Is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saying to western Canadians: "Go grow your wheat"? Is he saying to the people of Atlantic Canada: "Yes, continue your fishing"? When it comes to diversifying the economies of western Canada and of Atlantic Canada, the Prime Minister and the Government say an unequivocal "No". What does it mean with regard to a program that the Prime Minister initiated called the Atlantic Opportunities Program? This was a golden opportunity for the Government to put its money where its mouth is. This was an opportunity for the Prime Minister to say to those individuals in Atlantic Canada: "We are going to give you a real opportunity and a real chance to diversify your economy." Shame on the Prime Minister.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER FACTOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Government's handling of the maintenance contract for the CF-18 was unfair to the companies involved in that the standard bidding procedure was not followed. If the question of technology was the determining factor, why did the Government not say so in the first place rather than making it the prime factor only as late as last Thursday or Friday?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, regarding the right hon. gentleman's preamble to his question, I would like to repeat what I said last Friday. There was no change in the bidding process in any way, shape or form. We stood by the bidding process throughout. We went through the bids, through evaluation, through ministerial recommendation, and finally to cabinet action. In no way, shape or form was the normal process subverted.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): If technology was not a factor in so far as the companies were concerned until last Thursday or Friday, and the Government of Manitoba was not informed that was the prime factor, why was Canadair not awarded the contract about a year and a half ago, and instead of raising false expectations why did the Government not provide alternative work of equal quality to Bristol and IMP?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I must repeat once again what I said last week. We had two excellent bidders in those two groups covered by our technical evaluation teams. The bids were very close, both technically and as to cost. A number of considerations were taken into account. Given the fact that the bids were very close, we had a choice to make in the interests of Canada as a whole. That was not in any way against the bidding process. We made that choice, and one of the factors was technology transfer which we considered to be important. We made the choice on that basis and we stand by our choice.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT HAS NOT ISSUED CONTRACTS TO OTHER COMPANIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same Minister. If the technology transfer to a company that builds whole aircraft is so important, and since Canadair is the only company of its kind in Canada, why wasn't the maintenance contract awarded a year and a half ago? And why didn't the Government spend the last 18 months obtaining contracts of equal value for companies like Bristol in Winnipeg and I.M.P. in Halifax, to give them a fair break?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think two comments must be made in this respect. First, about the time frame. We observed the time frame set for awarding this contract. The time frame was extended somewhat because initially, none of the bidding groups satisfied all the criteria. We therefore had to make a second call for tenders, which delayed the process for a couple of months.

I also can inform my hon. friend that when awarding contracts, the Government has always made clear it is not anxious to award the contract to the lowest bidder. The call for tender specified that "the proposal would be evaluated on the basis of socio-economic benefits such as Canadian design, development and manufacturing, and the technical support staff used by the entrepreneur."

Mr. Speaker, I think we observed every single rule governing the bidding process.

ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In a memo dated October 31 the Director of the Algonquin Radio Observatory stated that due to Government forced cut-backs at the National Research Council, the Algonquin Radio Observatory would have to be closed, with the loss of specialized and unique expertise, and to the severe disappointment of scientists in Canada, the United States, and Europe. How could the Minister justify this ill-conceived closure of the largest fully steerable radio telescope in North America, in view of the Government's stated commitment that research and development would be a major priority? Is the Algonquin observatory to become yet another Tory graveyard of excellence—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said last week, that plans for the refurbishment and extension of the observatory have been postponed and that there will be some cuts to the program. The decision to close the observatory has not been made. I wish the Hon. Member would keep that in mind when he asks his next question.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister could tell the House why the employees have been asked to apply for other jobs. How can the Minister justify the closing of this $40 million world-class telescope to save $1.1 million and to cut 20 jobs at a time when the Prime Minister of Canada has squandered enough money on a prison in his riding, not only to pay for upgrading the Algonquin Radio Observatory—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask Hon. Members to confine their questions to a question, not to argument.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government relies upon the wise counsel of 20 eminent persons who help the management committee of the National Research Council to select priorities in accordance with national priorities. The Council and the management committee have not made a decision on the Algonquin observatory. In fact other alternatives are being considered. I wish the Hon. Member would not be such an alarmist, because it is not very helpful to the morale of the people.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER FACTOR

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. He knows very well that the Government of Manitoba and others think that the process of awarding the F-18 contract was not a fair one and that in some sense new criteria were introduced at the last minute. Was the question of technological transfer an item which was added at the last minute?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think I have just answered that question. I told an Hon. Member through you, Mr. Speaker, that from the very beginning of the bidding process there was a clause indicating that consideration would be given to socio-economic benefits, including such terms as Canadian design development and Canadian manufacturing, engineering, and support personnel which would be used by the contractor. In no way does that exclude or preclude considering technological transfer; quite the opposite. I would think that is a very important part of the clause, and it was in there from the very beginning.

Mr. Broadbent: It may well be that the Minister thought that general phraseology included transfer of technology. However, the Minister also knows by now the Bristol Corporation did not think that, the Government of Manitoba did not think that, nor did a number of other people.

TENDERING PROCESS—INCLUSION OF GENERAL CRITERIA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister a question about this important tendering process. He said in the House on Friday, with reference to the future, that the Government would consider spelling out in a more detailed way such specific national concerns. At a meeting I had this morning with representatives of the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce of the City of Montreal, they also indicated that they would like a public spelling out of such criteria. In view of those facts, would the Minister now assure us that, before any other tendering process is entered into, there will be the spelling out of such general criteria?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I indicated on Friday—and I stand by what I said—that I would be happy to consider how we could phrase the general clause to which I have referred to accommodate as many people as possible. However, I can only tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when we act in the national interest we do not necessarily have to spell it out. I would think that any responsible Government of the country would act in the national interest. It was in the national interest to ensure that we had the best possible transfer of technology. In our view the group of firms which could best assure that in a very close tendering process involving excellent firms was the group of firms headed by Canadair.

• (1425)

PERCEPTION OF FAIRNESS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister and everyone else in the country know that decisions of this kind are very sensitive and very difficult. Everyone understands that. However, the Minister also knows that such decisions must be perceived to be fair.

With this in mind, when will the Minister be prepared to tell the House something about the proposed change in criteria and about his own commitment to consider making more specific some of the national considerations which were clearly in the Government's mind when it reached this decision?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is talking about changes to the criteria in this contract, I can assure this House that there were no changes in the criteria for this contract. The criteria were well spelled out. We followed the bidding process. We had the evaluation, and ministerial recommendations by one Minister before the Cabinet shuffle and by another after. The recommendation was acted upon in due course, after thorough study and evaluation, by the Treasury Board. We followed the process as well as any process can possibly be followed in this field.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

FUTURE OF AEROSPACE INDUSTRY IN WINNIPEG

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The spokesperson for Bristol Aerospace said that they may well have to close the aircraft maintenance division, a company which has provided service for the Department of National Defence for over 30 years. The union president says that over 300 jobs could be lost.

What does the Government intend to do to keep the aerospace industry alive in Winnipeg? Can we be assured that the same kind of specious and biased arguments which were used in the CF-18 decision will not be used in the decision on the CF-5 maintenance contract or in judgments on other aerospace industry work?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I, of course, must reject very vigorously the pejorative allusions made by my hon. friend. They are unacceptable and completely inaccurate. The decision was made in the national interest. That having been said, I can assure my hon. friend that Bristol, which is an excellent company, has had a very productive association with the Government of Canada over many years. We will ensure that that association remains productive and beneficial to Bristol.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that many people in Manitoba find that decision unacceptable because of the criteria that were used.

WINNIPEG RAILWAY SHOPS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question about the remark of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who said that "Manitoba is owed" as a result of the decision taken by the Government. Does the Government intend to pay its debt to Manitoba, as described by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, by restoring funding for the National Research Centre on Science and Technology and ensuring that CN will do the light hopper work in the Transcona shops in order at least to retain that technology in the city of Winnipeg rather than having it taken away by the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in an ideal situation in matters such as this there would be no losers, there would only be winners. Unfortunately, that is not always the case. As I indicated to the House, these decisions are painful for a national Government because we want, as would any Government, to do our very best for all regions at all times.

As the Premier of Saskatchewan and the Government of Alberta pointed out yesterday, the Government has done an enormous amount for western Canada. I want to assure my hon. friend that we do not consider that to be enough. We have taken and shall be taking many more initiatives on behalf of western Canada, and Manitoba in particular, which I know my hon. friend will be delighted to support.

MINES AND MINING

NORTHERN ONTARIO IRON ORE MINE—ALGOMA STEEL'S INTENTIONS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines. It has been reported that Algoma Steel intends to close its iron ore mine in northern Ontario resulting in the loss of thousands of jobs in transportation and tourism as well as in mining. Can the Minister advise the House whether he has been in touch with officials of Algoma Steel? Can he clarify whether this report is in fact accurate?

• (1430)

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, certainly that news report is a source of worry to the Government as well as to the people in that particular community. That operation has had some difficulty for several years. They have made proposals to the provincial Government, to labour, and I guess to some of our Departments, with regard to a package that might preclude its being shut down. Those proposals are under consideration now.

With respect to whether we can verify the truth of that statement, I can only say at this time that there is no formal announcement.

PROPOSALS CONCERNING MINE'S FUTURE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Could he advise the House whether it is his intention to call in officials of Algoma Steel and the railway company involved, who jointly made the proposals to the Government, to discuss with them this week the feasibility of adopting the proposals that they put forward to the Government?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has been in touch with me and other Ministers of the Government and several weeks ago arranged a meeting on this very subject between Algoma Steel and Algoma Central Railway. The lead Department for the Government of Canada in this matter is really the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Department of Transport is also acting in the matter and the Government of Ontario, of course, is also involved. Negotiations are continuing and I have no doubt that, if the Solicitor General has his way, we will do what we can to assist in the situation.

ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Press reports on the weekend have given support to Doctor Donald Morton's statement to the effect that he had no choice, had no money, and had to cut the telescope program. In a memo dated October 31, 1984, Doctor Donald Morton, Director of the Herzberg Institute of Astrophysics, stated: "It is with regret that I must announce these changes with the loss of dedicated staff with specialized expertise and the need to close a major telescope". Who is telling the truth? arm's length NRC, or the Minister with a hands-on policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the Hon. Member to rephrase the latter part of that question.

Mr. Gauthier: In that case, which version is correct: the arm's length statement of that Director of the Institute who says "We have no alternative, we will close next summer", or the hands-on attitude of the Minister, saying, "We have decided to cut the moneys."?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the decision to modify the program at the observatory and postpone or cancel expansion plans was made by the Management Committee of the NRC on the advice of the council. It is not my decision. My information, after phoning the President of the NRC this morning, is that a decision to close the observatory has not been made.

PROFESSIONAL'S FUTURE PROSPECTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. This morning, the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada tabled its annual report in the House, and in it we read: "Canada cannot afford to lose very many qualified replacements for its aging research staff and highly specialized professions." What does the Minister have to say to university students today? What kind of career can they expect? What can they expect from this Government besides cutbacks and program cuts?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, instead of looking at one particular program, the Hon. Member should examine the Government's record in total.

Mr. Gauthier: I have. I will send you a copy.

Mr. Oberle: With regard to universities, we have committed ourselves to a program which will produce a billion dollars of additional funding to universities over the next five years because we believe so strongly that this fundamental research needs to be combined with the task of training our next generation of scientists. That is the kind of program we are promoting.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT— BUREAUCRATS' RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Earlier in Question Period he said that despite the feelings among parts of Canada that the Government changed the rules part way through the game, technology transfer was one of the criteria from the beginning. If that is the case why did the 75 top bureaucrats who examined the bids recommend Bristol?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have answered this question time and time again. There were no changes in the criteria for the allocation of this contract at any time during the submission process. There were clauses in the initial requests for submissions that were exercised, given the fact that two excellent groups of companies were very close to each other. That was a choice that the Government had and that is a choice that the Government made. The Government exercised that choice in the best interests of the country.

TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER DECISION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Does the Minister mean to say that if the Government made that decision on the basis of technology transfer, the government experts ignored that completely? Who made the choice that technology transfer would be better served at Canadair than at Bristol?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when there are two excellent bidders the terms of the submission indicate very clearly that the Government reserves the right to award the contract to other than the lowest bidder and also reserves the right to consider other criteria. That is what the Government did. It had a choice and exercised that choice in the best interests of the country.

BID MADE BY THIRD CONSORTIUM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Minister stated on Friday that the decision to award the CF-18 maintenance contract was between two successful bidders, Canadair and Bristol. He also stated that a third consortium was dismissed "because of technical insufficiencies". What were those insufficiencies and when was that decision made to exclude the consortium?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague should know that I am not at liberty to reveal the details of any commercial submission on any request for bids. Throughout the evaluation process one of the groups of companies was judged to be non-compliant from a technical point of view and was dropped at that point.

Mr. Dingwall: I suggest to the Minister that that particular answer could be interpreted in the most negative way, calling into question the integrity of the bidding process.

REQUEST THAT UNSUCCESSFUL BIDDERS BE REIMBURSED

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of fairness and equity would the Minister not deem it appropriate to reimburse those two bidders, IMP of Halifax and Bristol of Winnipeg, the full cost they have incurred in submitting proposals for this contract?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

MINES AND MINING

FUTURE OF WAWA IRON ORE MINE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines. The Minister is well aware that the proposed iron ore mine closure at Wawa is apt to cost that part of Canada 6,500 jobs, perhaps even more. He indicated that it was a source of worry to him and others and that he guessed there had been some representation to some of the Government Departments. As the Minister responsible for mines is he aware of the situation and the whole problem associated with the closure at Wawa? If so, what has he done about it and what is he planning to do about it?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can rest assured that I certainly am aware of what has been done as well as what the problem has been in the past. A proposal has been put forward by the company. It involves the province, the federal Government, and labour. We will make an announcement once those solutions are considered by all three parties.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware of the proposal that has been put to the federal Government and, if so, when can we expect some comment because there is a great deal of concern, particularly among the 6,500 people who are likely to lose their jobs if the mine closes?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can rest assured that I am aware of the problems. They are under consideration and, as stated earlier by the Minister of Transport, their consideration involves other levels of government. A potential solution will have to be considered by labour. This is under consideration and an announcement will be made when there is something to announce.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PAROLE SYSTEM

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Why is the Government taking risks with public safety and with public confidence in the parole system by transferring the responsibility for its supervision from trained professionals in the Public Service to volunteers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could take that question as notice and ask the Solicitor General to get back to the Hon. Member later on this week.

RALLY HELD IN TORONTO BY PAROLE OFFICERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. With regard to the rally by parole officers which took place in Toronto on Saturday afternoon, will he give assurance on behalf of the Government that reprisals will not be taken by the Government against those public servants who chose to participate in that demonstration?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Without having all the facts at my disposal, I will certainly convey that representation to the Hon. Solicitor General. I am sure he will be in touch with the Hon. Member.

Oral Questions

FUTURE OF ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Last week when I asked the Minister about the Algonquin Radio Observatory, and again today when he was asked questions about the closing of that observatory next year, he denied that a decision had been made. The director of the Herzberg Institute today notified 25 permanent employees that because of the cut of over $1 million to its budget, the observatory will be closed next year and their jobs will be phased out. Will the Minister explain what is happening?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had explained it. There is a reduction in the program which has been announced. However, the decision on the long-term future of the observatory has not been decided. How many more times can I explain that? The Council is looking for alternatives.

Mr. Orlikow: Given the fact that these people have been given their notice, how can the Minister say that?

USE OF OBSERVATORY'S EQUIPMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Is the Minister aware of the plan that when the observatory, which cost $40 million to build, is closed, the equipment will be cut up and sold as scrap? Is the Minister aware of that plan?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that plan, nor am I aware of any lay-off notices going to any employees. I state emphatically that that has not happened.

APPOINTMENT OF ANTONIO ARCANGEL TO HUMAN RIGHTS TRIBUNAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In response to opposition questions about Conservative appointees to the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal, the Minister said the issue was competence. Was competence the reason for the appointment of Toronto Tory, Antonio Arcangel, who, in the current issue of Toronto Life Magazine, praises the Government of Ferdinand Marcos and its nine-year imposition of martial law in the Philippines by saying: "We were so happy. We would go home at 11 in the evening and have a sound sleep thinking there were no more people making a mess out there". Is that the kind of person we want in our Canadian Human Rights Tribunal here in Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, members of panels who have been selected across the country in the various provinces and regions are all competent and responsible people—

An Hon. Member: How would you know, John?

Mr. Crosbie: —as far as we know—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crosbie: —and it is unheard of for scattered statements to be plucked out of the air and imputations made about them. It has never been done in this House before and I find it very unbecoming now.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF APPOINTEE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am asking a serious question and I would like a serious answer. Who in this Government is checking the qualifications of people who are appointed to a quasi-judicial tribunal, the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal? Would the Prime Minister personally investigate this appointment, and if in fact the statements attributed to this gentleman in Toronto Life are true, will he be thrown off the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal, because we do not want a supporter of martial law on the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a member of the committee in question. If the Hon. Member was seriously concerned—

Ms. Copps: I am.

Mr. Crosbie: —about the integrity and qualifications of these persons, she would not be up slandering them in this House. She would be trying quietly to find out in committee what their qualifications—

Mr. Gauthier: He made the statement himself, John. Come on.

Mr. Crosbie: —and backgrounds are.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the Hon. Minister to withdraw the word "slandering". I do not think it was necessary and I do not think most Hon. Members in the House feel that way.

Mr. Crosbie: I withdraw the word "slandering" and replace it with the word "disgusting".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rossi: You are a big joke.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Minister to withdraw that word in view of the context within which it was said.

Mr. Crosbie: I withdraw, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: Good.

DENIAL OF SECOND-CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES TO CHURCH PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office who will know that recently Canada Post officials denied second-class mailing privileges to the national publications of the Lutheran and Presbyterian Churches. In view of the fact that other churches continue to enjoy second-class mailing privileges, will the Minister consider instructing Canada Post to restore the privileges previously enjoyed by the Lutheran and Presbyterian publications? And will he ask Canada Post to ensure there is some consistency in the application of its rules?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Post Office is fully aware of the situation. The chairman is presently reviewing the situation and we hope to be able to make an announcement in the near future.

ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. A few moments ago he said that questions about NRC are hurting morale. I would have him know it is the answers which are hurting morale.

An Hon. Member: It's the evasions.

Mr. McCurdy: If, as the Minister states, the radio telescope is not at the present time to be shut down, when will the decision be made as to whether it will be shut down, and by whom?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): The decision on any program of the National Research Council is made by the board and the management of that Council.

COMMITTEES' REVIEW

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not agree that the NRC Associate Committee on Astronomy and the NCR Management Committee are appropriate bodies to have reviewed the matter of the telescope, as indicated in this memo I hold, and to come to the conclusion that the telescope would be shut down?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): If such a prestigious committee came to that conclusion, I would say perhaps it would be shut down. It would be its decision to make.

BANKS AND BANKING

ESTEY COMMISSION REPORT—NON-PUBLICATION OF UNINSURED DEPOSITORS' NAMES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last Friday the Minister of State said that when the Estey Commission was established it was to decide on the question of releasing the names of the uninsured CCB and Northland Bank depositors and that Mr. Justice Estey had decided not to release the names. Can the Minister clarify that answer since, contrary to what was said on Friday, the matter of the uninsured depositors was not in the Commission's published terms of reference and the report is silent on the matter?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference for the Estey Commission, as the Hon. Member well knows, are not so broad as to identify every specific item which might or might not be considered by the Estey Commission. The Hon. Member is quite aware of the position the Government took at the time. We decided it was inappropriate for us to release those names because we valued highly the importance of the privacy of individuals as expressed in the Bank Act and the fact that this also is reinforced by the traditions of the Access to Information Act. We know that the matter could have been considered by Mr. Justice Estey. He chose not to do so. I think the matter rests there.

INQUIRY CONCERNING POSSIBLE INTERIM REPORTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer today differs from the answer given by the Minister of State for Finance on Friday. Will the Minister tell the House whether Mr. Justice Estey submitted interim reports? Did he recommend that any portions of his report, or reports, be kept confidential?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Justice Estey did not issue any interim report, and did not ask whether or not any of his report should be made confidential.

Oral Questions

PORTS

PRINCE RUPERT—FUTURE OF GRAIN TERMINAL NO. 1

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport regarding Prince Rupert Grain Terminal No. 1. I am sure the Minister is aware that Price Waterhouse has studied the feasibility of operating the facility and has found that it can be run at a profit. Underwood McLellan has completed an engineering study and has found that the facility is basically sound. Since there is now an offer from Alberta Terminals to purchase and operate the facility will the Minister add his support to maintaining and operating this facility?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a grain elevator and handling facility which is in excess of 60 years old. In 1979 the present Deputy Prime Minister and the present Minister of Agriculture arranged with a consortium for a new elevator to be built in Prince Rupert. The consortium has the right either to have it demolished now, having spent over $200 million on the new facility, or to return it to the Government of Canada. My predecessor went to great lengths to attempt to arouse interest in operating the old facility. There was no interest expressed within the time limit that he indicated earlier in the year, and there is no present proposal before the consortium. I can only say that I will continue to look at the matter, but that is the present position.

REPORTED PURCHASE OFFER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, over 40 per cent of that facility was built since 1969. The taxpayers of Canada turned it over to the consortium for one dollar. The taxpayers own it. My question to the Minister is very simple. Since Alberta Terminals has offered $14 million for it and since Prince Rupert Grain wants to tear it down at a cost of $3 million, does it not make more sense to keep it in operation handling grains such as feedstock that are not competitive with Prince Rupert Grain No. 2? This would keep people in Prince Rupert, and in the country, working.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman does not understand that an agreement was entered into with the consortium in 1979 and that it expended something between $200 million and $250 million. It has certain rights in this matter as well. I reaffirm what I just told the hon. gentleman. I am advised that there is no concrete proposal with any figures capable of being analyzed or reviewed now before the consortium. That is the present position. There is nothing concrete before it in terms of concrete figures on which it can decide to act or not.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONSTRUCTION OF DETROIT INCINERATOR

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of the Environment or such other Minister as may be appropriate. Yesterday we learned that a number of environmental groups in the United States are prepared to go to court to stop the construction of the Detroit incinerator which is causing great concern to so many Canadians because of its lack of environmental control equipment. Will the Government join in such a court action or at the very least will it provide funds to appropriate Canadian environmental groups to join in such an action to prevent this incinerator from being built and threatening the health and safety of large numbers of Canadians?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, discussed this case in detail with the EPA Administrator, Mr. Thomas, at their regularly scheduled meeting on environmental issues. Officials of Environment Canada and External Affairs held consultations with Washington on this matter on October 22. The Minister of the Environment and other representatives of the Canadian Government are vigorously restating our concerns on this very important matter.

COURT ACTION CONTEMPLATED IN UNITED STATES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is not ready to give a commitment to provide financial support with respect to the court action for which I understand there is precedent with regard to the Niagara River problems, I ask the Minister whether he will at least have officials of the appropriate Departments meet with Mark Richardson, counsel to the American environmental groups which are contemplating the court action, to see how the Canadian Government can best support their action which is of such an essential nature to so many Canadians?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that the Government of Canada is exploring all options on this particular issue. We will continue to press our case with the United States, as well as look at those options. I can assure the Hon. Member that his concerns will be expressed to the Minister of the Environment on his return to the House.

NARCOTICS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COMBAT DRUG ABUSE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. According to the results of a Gallup poll released today, 75 per cent of Canadians agree with the Prime Minister's comment that the use of illegal drugs in Canada is an epidemic. Will the Minister advise the House if he intends to take urgent action to deal with this problem as he would with other epidemics? If so, when and what?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member has said was included by Gallup in a poll conducted approximately two weeks after the Prime Minister's statement. I think the Prime Minister's statement clearly reflected what a number of us knew as a result of communications we had had with parent-teacher groups and others. It is very clearly confirmed in the Speech from the Throne which includes a drug strategy. For example, the Solicitor General will be making certain announcements in the next few days along this line. There will be others. The Prime Minister's view has been very solidly endorsed by the average Canadian.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FUTURE OF WINNIPEG RAIL SHOPS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It has to do with a comment made by the Hon. Member for Provencher that Manitoba is owed one by the federal Government. Will the Prime Minister tell us when the appropriate Minister in his Government will make a statement in the House about matters that are relevant to the economies of Manitoba and western Canada? For instance, when will we be told that new transcontinental equipment will be ordered? When will the VIA Rail shop in Winnipeg be built? When will the capital expansion of the diesel shop in Transcona happen? We need to know these kinds of things.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as an outstanding representative of Manitoba and western Canada, was merely indicating in response to a question that, inasmuch as he is aware of the commitment of the Government to western Canada, he can speak with certainty that there will be future good news for western Canada, and for Manitoba. In that, of course, he is quite right.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY INQUIRY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, we do not want further news of the kind we have had so far—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member gave a very lengthy preamble to what turned out to be a very detailed and lengthy question. Perhaps on his supplementary question he could be direct.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government when the appropriate Minister will make a statement with respect to what will be done for the aerospace industry in Manitoba, and for all the other industries that I listed in my first question. We need to know this.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as soon as possible in all cases.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RESCIND DECISION TO TRANSFER PRISON LOCATION FROM DRUMMONDVILLE TO PORT-CARTIER

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance regarding a disagreement between the provincial Ministers and the federal Minister of Finance about equalization payments. The fact is that the Quebec Minister of Finance has said he is willing to reduce his demands in an attempt to reach a settlement with the federal Government. My question is as follows: Considering the general opposition in Quebec to transferring the Drummondville penitentiary to Port-Cartier, would the Minister of Finance be willing to recommend withdrawing this decision in order to save many millions of dollars that could be better used to increase the equalization payments Quebec needs so badly?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has referred to disagreements that were encountered during the course of a Finance Ministers' meeting in Edmonton on Friday. I think there was general acceptance that the proposals that were on the table from the Government of Canada were reasonable proposals. There were some Ministers who, I thought, were a little bit unrealistic in the demands that they made, particularly in view of the fiscal position of the Government of Canada. I quite firmly stated to them that we could do certain things to enhance the fairness of the equalization program but that it was not possible to go to the extent of the demands made. In that regard I think that they were quite unrealistic.

[Translation]

EDUCATION AND MEDICAL CARE IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance claims that an agreement has been reached and that everybody has come round to his position. However, the facts are there: the Quebec Minister of Finance is not happy with the decisions that were made.

And to get back to my question: Does the Minister really believe he has his priorities right by spending money on transferring a penitentiary or does he feel that education and health care for Quebecers have a higher priority? That is what I want to know.

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member understands the nature of the equalization process. The equalization payment is a totally unconditional payment on the part of the federal Government to certain provinces which are not as well off as others. Those moneys can be used in any way the provinces want to use them, but we have made it quite clear to the provinces that equalization will continue to be a priority of the Government of Canada.

We indicated that the growth rate in equalization payments will continue to be one of the highest of all government programs, and the enhancement that was discussed on Friday would have increased that growth rate even more. It is for that reason that I felt that the provincial Finance Ministers who opposed this were being unrealistic and did not understand, or did not want to understand, the fiscal position of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver— Kingsway on a question of privilege.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I have before me a letter from the British—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Question Period has expired. I thought the Hon. Member was rising on a question of privilege of which I had received notice. Does the Hon. Member wish to proceed with his question of privilege?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I thought I could sneak in one more question. I will ask the Hon. Minister of Transport to return tomorrow and we will take it up from there.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WADDELL—FAILURE TO RECEIVE COPY OF MINISTER'S SPEECH

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have raised a question of privilege and you have in your possession the letter I wrote to you giving you notice of it. The facts are as set out in the letter. I would just say that the role of a critic in this House, and I have been—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know whether or not the Hon. Member wishes me to hear argument. However, I think it is the right of the Hon. Member to put the basic facts when arguing a question of privilege. I would invite the Hon. Member to exercise his right accordingly.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the facts are set out in the letter, a copy of which has been given to the Hon. Minister and yourself. I would ask you to adopt those facts.

In summary, on October 29 and 30, both myself and members of my office staff tried to receive a copy of the Minister's very important speech on the deregulation of natural gas which was to be given in Calgary. My office was repeatedly promised the document and was told certain things about what was going on that were not true. The result was that the press in Calgary and elsewhere managed to receive a copy of the Minister's speech before I did. The Minister's speech was made available to the press before it was made available to Members of Parliament. I was not asking for an advance copy of the speech but just for some co-operation.

This is a continuing trend. Sometimes speeches are given to the press before they are given to us. I know this has happened on one other occasion.

A critic must respond quickly. When the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) was Minister of Energy, she made a point of making speeches available to the Opposition. She was a good Minister. We received a continual runaround from the present Minister's office so that I was not able to respond in the House as critic.

The story came out of Calgary where they are able to control the news. So much as it is possible, they are able to control the news because there was no general critical comment from a federal Member of Parliament in Calgary.

This kind of thing is becoming the trend. It is a breach of the privileges of Members of the House and it is not the way to run a Department. I am sorry to see this happening. The Minister came into his Ministry highly regarded. If this is the way he will act, it is very regrettable and I believe it is a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I had to work on the text until the last minute, and this explains the delay. Perhaps there was a Translation delay, I have no idea. I can assure you that the text was ready when I gave it. It was ready at the last minute because I corrected it until the last minute, as Minister responsible for departmental policy. It was with this in mind that I revised the text.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is fair for me to say that of all the suggestions made, I find the suggestion that we are controlling the news to be the most amusing. I believe this is an isolated incident. The Hon. Member will know that the Government has made every effort to co-operate with opposition critics on statements by Ministers and on instances such as this. I would suggest that this is not really a question of privilege but an isolated incident. We will do our best to see that these problems are ironed out in the future.

Mr. Speaker: On Friday, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) very courteously delivered to the Chair a letter setting out extensively the facts of the Hon. Member's grievance. The Chair has considered the facts as set out in the letter and has also listened carefully to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway. Hon. Members will note that I invited the Hon. Member to be sure that when rising on an occasion like this, he put at least some of the basic salient facts on the record of the House because the Chair feels that that is helpful. The Chair has also listened to the Minister and to the Parliamentary Secretary.

The Chair is conscious of the fact that this kind of complaint has been made repeatedly over a great many years. All Hon. Members will know that when some who sit on one side of the House sat on the other side, this kind of complaint, taken as a point of privilege, was made.

The Chair feels that the complaint is a serious one, but must advise the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members that in the view of the Chair, it is not a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway has heard the statements of the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary. It would seem to the Chair that there is in both those statements a disposition to say that they regret that the incident occurred. I am sure the Hon. Member can, with that disposition of goodwill evidenced, take the matter up with his House Leader, the House Leader of the Government and perhaps as well the House Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Perhaps together they may be able to work out an understanding so that the Chair will not have to take up the time of the Chamber to deal with this kind of complaint.

In the interests of parliamentary reform and of enhancing the role of the private Member, of committees and of critics, a careful adherence to all of the courtesies that can be exercised would be helpful to the administration of Government and certainly to the mood and attitude in the House. After having been in this new position for one month, I think the Chair can say that Hon. Members of the House have been extremely helpful to the Chair and I thank them for that. I think that helpfulness was exhibited in today's exchange.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m., there were five minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins).

[Translation]

I will now recognize Hon. Members who wish to go on with the period of questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Hicks).

• (1510)

[English]

Mr. Hicks: I would like to comment briefly on the very good speech of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) which was made in her regularly imitational style.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hicks: The Hon. Member alluded to the air transportation tax, which has been increased from 9 to 10 per cent. When that was done, many people living in remote areas were extremely concerned. This Government has recently taken steps to alleviate some of those concerns. I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on those steps.

Mrs. Collins: I would like to thank my colleague for Scarborough East (Mr. Hicks) for his very kind comments. Yes, indeed, the question of the air transportation tax is part of Bill C-14 which we have before us. To begin with, it is important to remember the reason for the air transportation tax. It is a tax which goes toward the provision of airport facilities and navigation services, so it is a tax directed toward specific services.

The Hon. Member will recall that prior to the introduction of the change in the last Budget, there was a transportation tax of 9 per cent without a ceiling. That was a hefty bill for people from the further regions of this country, particularly from the far North where the costs of air transportation can range from $800 to $1,000. What has been accomplished with the new revision is that the rate has gone from 9 per cent to 10 per cent but there is a ceiling of $50 on domestic travel. That means that even if the airfare is $1,000 from point A to point B, the limit of the transportation tax will be $50. That is certainly consistent with our whole approach in trying to make taxation fair. In this particular case it is going to help people who live in the far northern parts of the country or the farthest regions. On the other hand, there is not the same limitation on the tax which went into effect in August on the cost of air travel from outside the country. Generally speaking, you can get such good rates these days, and many of the airlines offer specials, that quite often you can go a long way for $500, which is where the $50 tax comes into effect.

Mr. Riis: I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's speech. It was a very entertaining and exciting presentation. The Hon. Member indicated a concern that most speakers to this debate have regarding the deficit and ways and means of combating an increasing deficit. The implication was that one of the ways of increasing revenues for the federal Government was by levying these taxes on all types of new items and increasing the levels of sales tax, which is a regressive tax.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member her views regarding the $500,000 capital gains exemption. Does she feel that it is appropriate to have a carte blanche capital gains exemption up to $500,000 so that a person who makes money by speculating in land in Florida or Arizona does not have to pay tax on that money or if someone is speculating in the Hong Kong stock exchange and makes profits there of up to $500,000 that one should pay no tax on that? Personally, how does the Hon. Member feel about this provision? To my knowledge such a wide application of exemption from capital gains does not exist in any other country in the world.

Mrs. Collins: I thank my hon. colleague for his comments. I not only try to be entertaining but to be enlightening about the legislation that we are putting forward.

I had the opportunity of commenting on the capital gains exemption a couple of weeks ago when I spoke in an earlier debate in the House. I believe at that time I explained to the House that I felt it was a very important measure and one that had not received as much attention as it should. It is an important tool in encouraging new investment. I would hope that most of that investment would be in Canadian activity, particularly in small Canadian companies. As Members know, other provisions have been brought in during the past year to encourage that as well. I have found that it is often identified as only wealthy people who are going to benefit from the capital gains exemption. To some degree they will. However, ordinary Canadians who have a little bit of money to invest in a penny stock, some other stock, or a piece of property will have the benefit of that growth and the opportunity to reinvest and to spend. That will assist in improving the economy over a period of time. I have certainly welcomed that measure and I think it will be an advantage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are terminated. On debate.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as we are having this debate, this measure is already in place, because it came into effect in April of this year. It might not harm for a moment to indicate to Canadians what is taking place in terms of a persecution of the consumer by way of increased sales tax. In most of these cases it is invisible because it is incorporated in the price of services or goods long before they reach the consumer.

What we are debating today with this Bill C-14 is an increase of 14 per cent in the sales tax for construction goods. This is an increase from 7 to 8 per cent in the tax rate applied to construction goods. There is an increase from 7 to 8 per cent in the cable and pay-TV services. There is an increase from 14 to 15 per cent in the tax rate as it applies to wine, beer, tobacco, and other alcoholic beverages. There is an increase in the tax rate from 11 to 12 per cent in a number of other taxable goods, which are too numerous to be listed here today. However, the increase taking place now compared to the one which existed before translates into some pretty surprising percentages.

In the case of construction goods, the increase in the tax rate from 7 to 8 per cent means a percentage increase of 14 per cent in the tax itself. In the case of cable and pay-TV services, the increase as a result of this legislation represents an increase of 14 per cent. In the case of wine, beer, tobacco and other alcoholic beverages, it represents an increase of 7 per cent. The increase that applies on other taxable goods is an increase of 10 per cent.

On January 1 of this year we witnessed another increase in the tax rate on manufacturers' sales. At that time we had an increase comparable to what we are debating today. In other words, in the same year there is a double whammy by the Conservative Government to the Canadian consumer by way of applying twice an increase on sales taxes that in the end amounts to the following. There is an increase in the sales tax of 28 per cent on construction goods and similar material and an increase of 28 per cent in cable and pay-TV.

There was also an increase of 14 per cent on wine, beer, tobacco, and the like, as well as an increase of 10 per cent applied to all other taxable goods. If we look at the tax as it was before January 1 of this year and as it is now after two increases have taken place, we understand the decline in the political fortune of the Tories in Canada this year. We also understand why their performance in the polls is so weak, why there is a downward trend, and why their popularity in general is suffering.

We are witnessing a hard year in terms of the application of taxes upon consumers. It is a taxation regime based upon a Tory philosophy which says that everyone, no matter what their income, should pay the same tax. In addition, the tax is not visible at the time of purchases.

It is unlikely that the purchaser of construction goods will pay the tax in the end. It will be consumers at the retail level who will pay for it. In the case of cable and pay-TV services, the subscribers will pay for the increase in taxes. The same must be said about consumers of alcoholic beverages and tobacco. That is the inevitable conclusion at which one must arrive in examining the application of the measure before us for debate.

What is happening in 1986 is a continuing erosion of the purchasing power of consumers by way of the imposition of an invisible tax which hits harder those with lower incomes and much harder those who are below the poverty line. The policy is a typical Tory approach to economics. It reinforces the well known perception about which people on the street speak when they say that Tory times are tough times. It is another example of the application of economics which are regressive in social terms and are bad per se because they diminish the capacity of consumers to purchase and to keep the economy healthful and vital.

Earlier this morning the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) made reference to the Bill as being a necessary instrument to pick up the tab for the deficit by taxation. That is the point of departure or the watershed between the Tory approach and the Liberal approach to tackling the deficit. The Tories are trying to tax people in every respect. They have the notion that by doing so the deficit will be reduced substantially. They say that it is a medicine which must be taken to reduce the deficit, the monster which has been described in various interventions on the part of the Conservative Party.

I submit that it is the wrong way in which to reduce the deficit. One does not bring down the deficit by applying a tax which hits the poor hardest and hits the well-to-do least. It is actually an unfair way of dealing with an important measure, that is, the reduction of the deficit. It should not be fought on the backs of those who can least afford it. In that respect Tory Members and those of us on this side of the House part ways in a very dramatic and drastic manner. I do not think they should pick up the tab for the deficit, as the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills put it, by way of taxation, particularly a sales tax which is applied equally on everyone and therefore hits hardest those who can cope the least.

There are other ways of reducing the deficit. There are other techniques of maintaining the good health of the economy, actually increasing its momentum, increasing the revenues of the state, and gradually coming to grips with a reduction in the deficit itself.

There is an aspect in Bill C-14 about which I should like to comment very briefly. It concerns the ways and means application on page 11a as it affects petroleum products, in particular regular gasoline, unleaded gasoline, and the like. We have the introduction of a tax whereby unleaded gasoline is taxed more heavily with the application of a tax of $0.0036 per litre and the tax on regular gasoline is $0.0032 per litre. In other words, we are witnessing the application of a policy whereby the consumer of unleaded gasoline, that is an individual driving an environmentally friendly type of engine, is being penalized by an ever-increasing tax on unleaded gasoline.

We on this side of the House raised this matter almost a year ago. At that time the Conservative Government had already introduced a taxation measure which applied a greater tax upon unleaded gasoline than upon regular gasoline. In second reading debate—and I believe it was also at third reading—we drew to the attention of the Government the way this could be avoided. We suggested that a tax increase on gasoline ought to be applied with greater emphasis on regular gasoline than upon unleaded gasoline in order to protect the environment. I remember Your Honour was in the Chair and listened patiently to what would be the advantages in environmental terms in the application of a greater tax on regular gasoline than on unleaded gasoline.

I regret to report that the Tories have done it again despite promises and statements made in public. For example, on October 31, 1985, as reported in The Globe and Mail, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. MacMillan) proclaimed that eliminating the price difference between leaded and unleaded gasoline might be the best way to end widespread misfuelling. He went on to say that he would co-operate with the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and with provincial colleagues to see whether the disparities in the price of gasoline could not be addressed. Then he extolled about what Canadians ought to do, namely, pay a premium to protect our health. He indicated that this would be a way of protecting the health of our children.

As we know, unleaded gasoline is not as harmful to human health as is leaded gasoline. That was a year ago, almost to the day. However, we find ourselves facing a second increase. This despite representations made to the Government a year ago, and despite promises and declarations of good intentions, which is basically what they remain, by the Minister of the Environment. He seems to be very prone to making promises and impotent in delivering upon them. That is very regrettable because the question of taxation of unleaded versus regular gasoline is becoming a national concern. There is no reason why a Government which claims to be interested in protection of the environment, human health and other resources affected by acid rain, cannot proceed through a change in taxation policy to ensure that unleaded gasoline costs less at the pump than regular. I for one cannot understand why this cannot be achieved given the length of time which has gone by since the matter was first raised.

It is true other jurisdictions, being the provincial Governments, impose taxes on gasoline. It is my fervent hope that the Ontario Liberal Government will be the first jurisdiction to adopt a policy which taxes unleaded gasoline less than leaded. While that process is under way, however, we in this House of Commons have twice witnessed a tax Bill in which this basic fact has been ignored. Therefore I urge Conservative Members who care about the environment in fact as well as in words to register this point in their national caucus. The matter has not been dealt with. It is not right that the gap between leaded and unleaded gasoline would continue to rise to a difference of over 3 cents a litre at the pump. Imposition of the Ways and Means figure I mentioned earlier will result in an even greater differential.

I refer those Members concerned about the reaction of farmers to that excellent clause in this Bill which provides refunds to farmers on the purchase of gasoline. I refer now to Clause 9 as a whole which takes into account the desirability and necessity to compensate farmers, and I suppose it applies to fishermen as well, on the gasoline they consume.

In essence this Government has to come to grips with its economic policy so as to make it jibe with its environmental policy. That has not yet taken place despite the repetitive promises made by the Minister of the Environment. In fact, the Government made a regressive decision by extending the phasing out of lead in gasoline to 1992 instead of 1990. For that reason alone let us at least have a tax policy which will result in a price for unleaded gasoline at the pump which is less than leaded.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired. Questions and comments.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was quite intrigued when the Hon. Member first made the proposition with respect to the difference in price between leaded and unleaded gasoline. Is it the view of the Liberal Party that it would consent to an amendment to the Ways and Means motion to increase the tax on leaded gasoline to make it the same price as leaded gasoline?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would care to look up the submission I placed on the record at the time of the debate on Bill C-80 he will find the formula and precise percentages which would have to be applied to regular and unleaded gasoline in order to bring about this switch without a loss of revenue to the Treasury.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Hon. Member will of course realize that the whole question of taxation is changing given our tax reform proposals. This Bill is really a temporary Bill. The only easy way of doing this would be to have an identical tax on gasoline, whether it be leaded or not. Therefore I ask him again, will his Party consent to an amendment to the Ways and Means motion so that the particular schedules concerned can be amended at a later stage in the proceedings?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I went to committee on Bill C-80 with an amendment. I was not granted the opportunity to submit it there. I did submit it as an amendment on third reading in a detailed manner. It is in Hansard, and all the Hon. Member has to do is to look it up. It can be done if there is the political will to do so. I urge him, though, not to confuse this Bill with tax reform. I doubt very much, and I think deep down he does too, that tax reform and the imposition of taxes on gasoline will have very much in common. This tax, once it is in place, will be hard to remove no matter what kind of tax reform you engage in. If we are going to have tax reform, it will be Tory tax reform and I am very suspicious of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no more questions or comments, debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I am sure Canadians are not overjoyed today, listening to a parliamentary debate a proposed sales tax increase on certain products. No taxpayer in his right mind appreciates paying more for any product, good or service he might consider buying.

Still, Mr. Speaker, Canadians readily admit that the existing situation could not last any longer. Canada was sliding down a dangerous hill, heading full speed for a bottomless pit. Under the previous Government, the gross national debt increased by 50 per cent in only a few years, and debt servicing soared by 85 per cent.

More specifically, the deficit rose from $14 billion to $27 billion between 1981-82 and 1982-83, almost doubling in a single year.

Mr. Speaker, we probably cannot repeat it too often.

• (1540)

Our annual budget is now $116 billion, and every time Canadian taxpayers are presented with a new Budget, they should realize that there will be a shortfall of nearly $30 billion—yes, $30 billion—in revenue to balance the budget, which means that we are spending more than we get in revenue. This shortfall is now $28 to $30 billion annually, but if we had not intervened, it would be as much as $38 to $40 billion annually, nearly $10 billion more per year. The annual deficit was close to $40 billion, as it was during the last year of the previous Government's term. This administrative disaster led us to apply sounder management practices aimed at reducing the rate of growth of the deficit, which we wanted to see below the growth rate of our economy.

The purpose of Bill C-14 is to achieve that goal through legislation that will generate revenu and at the same time reduce our expenditures. The tax increases produced in this Bill represent 30 per cent of our deficit reduction program, while spending cuts represent 70 per cent. Exactly what kind of revenue are we talking about in Bill C-14? Seven hundred million will be raised by increasing federal sales tax during the 1986 fiscal year, rising to $1.05 billion in 1987. Excise tax will produce $125 million in 1986, and twice that much: $250 million, in 1987.

However, there are other reasons as well for increasing our revenue and bringing down the deficit. Ninety-three per cent of the present deficit arises from interest payments on the amounts we borrow to finance the previous deficit. Yes, Mr. Speaker, 93 per cent of our present deficit consists of interest payments on the money we borrow to pay off the previous deficit.

We also want to maintain our basic social programs. Consider the child tax credit Canadian families will be able to claim this year. In fact, Canadians with incomes of less than $15,000 will be able to claim $300 per child in November. Furthermore, the child tax credit will be increased by $70, which will raise the credit to $524 starting next year.

Job-creation programs are also very important, and we are allocating $4 billion over two years to job creation through our six job-strategy programs.

Farmers will also benefit, Mr. Speaker, through a reduction in tax on the gas they use in their farm operations. This is the kind of assistance they need and the kind we are giving them.

Mr. Speaker, another very important measure, one we implemented in the last Budget, is the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption.

Mr. Speaker, I still remember that very recently some Canadian farmers told me how much they appreciate the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. Mr. Blackburn, they said, you know, we were no longer even able to give or sell our farm to our children. It was viewed as a capital gain and we did not even have the money to pay taxes on it. Thanks to the tax reform—our tax reform—now we can do that, let our children take over and keep the farm going. This $500,000 capital gains tax exemption is a measure which Canadians really appreciate.

A number of other Government initiatives bear fruit as well, and this would be a good opportunity to raise the matter of employment. When we came into office the unemployment rate was 11.7 per cent, today it is down to something like 9.5 per cent. We have created 595,000 jobs since we took over in 1984, which works out to 24,792 jobs a month against 7,345 under the previous administration. In other words we are creating three to four times as many jobs each month. Three to four times as many jobs a month has to be some kind of an achievement, Mr. Speaker, a significant figure which Canadians should be aware of. It is still not enough, of course, what with an unemployment rate of 9.5 per cent, an improvement but still not enough by a long shot. We must keep up our efforts and, as a responsible Government, that is exactly what we are doing. We are always coming up with job-creation policies, ever on a quest for a fresh approach to this problem.

Mr. Speaker, Canada's economic growth is another challenging issue. In terms of economic growth, Canada ranks second among the 24 OECD member countries. It is indeed a promising performance. This means that, on 24 countries, Canada had the second best record for economic growth and job creation. That is an important factor and it must be taken into account.

Let us speak also about the announced tax reform. Our Government has said that it would examine the options offered for an in-depth tax reform. We remain committed to our objective of implementing a simpler, fairer and more efficient tax system. Our review deals with the relationships between the three major components of federal taxation, that is direct personal income tax, corporate income tax and the sales tax, and their role in meeting our tax reform objectives in Canada. Our Government has established major principles to promote the debate in coming months as well as public input on reform options. In fact, what we want is more equity in the tax system. Our taxation system must ensure an equitable distribution of the tax burden among all taxpayers. This means that taxpayers in the same situation must be covered by the same taxation system, that all high income individuals and all profitable corporations must pay their fair share of taxes and that similar products must be subject to the same sales tax rate. The sales tax burden must be distributed more equitably among goods and services and the sectors which produce them, which is not the case now.

When we talk about a tax reform, our objective is to reduce the personal tax rate and perhaps to increase the corporate tax rate. I refer to an article by reporter Vincent Cliche which appeared last October 29 in the newspaper Le Soleil. The author had this to say: Yet it has become necessary to review the method of taxation in Canada, first for a very pragmatic reason since the United States have already completed their own reform which will come into effect in 1988. The attraction of simplicity could incite many corporations or taxpayers in Canada to opt for the American system and to decide to pay their taxes in the United States. It is therefore important for us to join in this process. However, the major reasons for an in-depth review of the tax system, as everyone including the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) himself recognizes, is that Canadian taxpayers pay too much in taxes, to the extent that the percentage of federal tax revenue from personal income tax has been increasing constantly in the last 25 years to reach the present figure of 50 per cent.

Finally, the tax burden balance between lower and higher income earners, between individuals and corporations, has been greatly jeopardized by the gradual introduction of tax shelters.

This is therefore a major tax reform, and I think that Canadians are happy to see our Government undertake such a reform.

While we are on the subject of Government policy, I should like to mention the one that was made public over the past weekend concerning a major contract which was awarded to Canadair for the maintenance of F-18 aircrafts. Mr. Speaker, there was a difference of less then 3 per cent between the Bristol Aerospace and Canadair. Our Government acted in Canada's best national interest when it decided to grant this contract to a Montreal corporation. I must say that even if this decision is difficult to accept for a province, I suggest that, under the circumstances, Canadair being an airplane manufacturer, it will fully benefit from this high technology transfer.

With this in mind, our Government decided to award a $104 million contract for three and a half years to Canadair. Over the weekend, a great many Canadians have congratulated our Government for its choice, a choice which was both difficult to make and of great importance in view of the high technology involved in this maintenance contract for F-18s.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should talk about the inflation rate, which is still around 4 per cent. This is part of this Government's performances, as is another one our policies applying to 185,000 widows and widowers aged 60 to 64, who can now get the spouse's benefit. This is very important.

There is of course something else that we might be able to implement and I am thinking in particular about single people who are in the same predicament and unfortunately cannot benefit from it. In order to extend that, and of course I do not think there is one single Member here who would not wish we could give more to Canadian men and women in need or facing difficulty. But we need money for that, and it is not always possible to act as and when we would like to.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to recall that during the summer, when the Quebec Caucus met in the Beauce area, it was my pleasure as a Member for Jonquière to present to my colleagues a working paper on voluntary retirement at age 60. This is another policy I know would be most popular with Canadian men and women. It would have the additional benefit of opening jobs for our young people who are looking for employment or are trying to get into the labour force after graduation, or for fathers or mothers aged over 40 who very often have difficulty re-entering the labour market.

Mr. Speaker, we now have 1,160,000 Canadian men and women aged 60 to 65, and I was recommending that gradually, over a five-year period, we implement a policy of voluntary retirement under which in 1988, for instance, people aged 64 could go on early retirement; in 1989, it would be those aged 63, in 1990 those aged 62, and so on and so forth. This would mean that Canadians who so desire, who have worked hard, could decide on a well-deserved retirement to allow young people who would like to work to get into the labour force. Mr. Speaker, it is a sad situation for Canadians, or for young people aged 20 to 25 to be jobless. And I can tell you that as Members of Parliament, we regularly have those people coming to our offices to discuss the problem. They would like us to introduce more measures to help young people get on the labour market and be entitled to a job, which is so rewarding for everyone.

Mr. Speaker, I mention that because it is important and it is part of this Government's policy, because we are trying to implement those policies, and in order of course to do that we need more revenues, and to make the Canadian economy work better and to continue reducing the deficit.

Bill C-14, the Bill we are considering today, has a disagreeable side for Canadians because we are going to increase sales tax in certain areas. People should realize that the money we raise in this way, $700 million this year and $1.05 billion next year, will enable us to sustain the social policies we are introducing now for the benefit of Canadians. I am sure they agree with what we are doing, Mr. Speaker, to put our economy on a sound basis and steer a straight course so that pretty soon, instead of an annual deficit of $30 billion, we will have a balanced budget within several years.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for this opportunity to speak to Bill C-14 and the various sales tax increases it entails, and those were my comments on the subject.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spent a considerable amount of time talking about the deficit and defending the type of tax proposed in this Bill.

The Auditor General has suggested that the Government of Canada has forgone billions of dollars in tax expenditures in various forms of relief mostly to corporations. In years past this has amounted to considerably more than our deficit and this year it amounts to $28 billion, which is as much as our deficit this year.

Would the Hon. Member agree that a better source of funds to reduce the deficit in a more effective way would be to ensure that all or part of the tax expenditures of corporations are tapped by the Government? According to the Auditor General's Report from last year, these tax expenditures amounted to between $23 billion and $50 billion. This year, the Auditor General specified that at least $28 billion was forgone by the Government in this way.

[Translation]

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the question raised by my colleague does underscore or indicate how imperative a tax reform has become in this country. A good many tax shelters are now allowed, yet Canadian taxpayers must pay ever more taxes as years go by. The tax reform we are about to embark upon will undoubtedly deal with the tax shelter issue since the proposed reform would advocate higher corporate taxes and a lighter tax burden on Canadian taxpayers.

Needless to say, the Auditor General's report has raised this important issue and, as it happens, one of the recommendations of this Government is to implement a tax reform which should benefit all Canadian men and women.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Trade—Canada-United States negotiations—Economic Council's projection; the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy)—Unemployment insurance—(a) Pay-outs in Atlantic Canada. (b) Request for Government guarantee; the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson)—Finance—(a) Sales tax—Effect on disposable income. (b) Personal taxes—Request for rollback.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we spend an inordinate amount of time discussing the deficit and the methods of reducing it. The Hon. Member who just spoke indicated that the main reason for the establishment of Bill C-14 was to reduce the deficit and that the time is now. I do not believe anyone in this House does not recognize that the deficit is a major problem. We operate under a financial structure where our financial institutions are the strongest organizations in Canada and they will continue to take their pound of flesh regardless of the economics of the country and how much it hurts us. Therefore, we have to take seriously the fact that the deficit costs us $20 billion to $30 billion a year to service.

The point we should make clear as often as possible is that there are ways of dealing with the deficit other than nickel and diming us to death with sales taxes on every little item a consumer purchases. The sales tax in any form is a regressive tax. It takes the same amount of money away from persons who are trying to live on $7,000 or $10,000 a year as it does from the person who earns $100,000 a year. Since we all consume approximately the same amount of most items, this is not a fair way of dividing the burden. All Parties in this House and every Government in Canada has recognized that there is some value in having a progressive type of tax. But that progressiveness is being attacked by the Government with the Bill which is before us today. Progressive taxation means that the person who is able to pay the most, pays the most. A regressive tax is a tax which it is necessary for the individual to pay regardless of how much he earns. Therefore, every time tax is put on a loaf of bread, whether the bread is purchased by someone on welfare or someone who receives a very small wage, they will have to pay the seven cents, eight cents or nine cents, whatever the tax amounts to on that loaf of bread, in the same way as a person who earns $100,000. Of course, that tax affects the low wage earner a great deal more than it does someone who earns a good wage.

It seems to me that when the Government uses these sales taxes, these hidden taxes, to a large extent, in its attempt to reduce the deficit, it is being cowardly in its approach. It is unwilling to say to those who earn a great deal of money that they should pay. It chooses instead to hide the tax so that everything which is purchased will contribute to the reduction of the deficit. The Government thinks this will not be noticed by most individuals because when one goes to buy a loaf of bread, the fact that it is two cents or three cents more expensive will not really be a factor because that loaf of bread will still be purchased.

It is of great concern to me, to members of my Party and to many people across the country that this Bill deals not with who is able to pay but only with the collecting of money. It does not recognize that Governments have a social responsibility to even out the amount of money which people live on.

Two weeks ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) rose in his place and promised he would make some changes in the taxation structure to make it more progressive and fairer for ordinary Canadians. But today we are debating a Bill which does exactly the opposite. This Bill is not fair to ordinary Canadians and will make it more difficult for the Canadian family to survive. What makes it more of a problem is the fact that the Government has shown that this is not something new it thought up last week. This is a policy which it has carried on for two years and intends to continue to carry on. In the first two years of this Conservative Government, instead of introducing a fairer taxation system, it has increased the amount of taxes to be paid. It has made the system less fair than it was before. There were quite a few problems in the tax system before the Government came to power but instead of doing what it said it was going to do in its campaign speeches before it was elected, it has continued to increase the complexity and the unfairness of the tax system. The Government in the two years it has been in power has added something over $800 per family in direct taxes. It has also added a considerable amount in regular income taxes. So that a family of four who thought they were doing pretty well two years ago, unless they received a 7 per cent increase in income per year, is earning less today. That problem is being perpetuated by this particular Bill.

The Government has a propensity for using hidden taxes. Sixty-nine per cent of the tax increases in the last two years have been in excise and sales taxes and only 31 per cent of the increase of money taken in has been in income tax. The Government suggests there are a lot more people earning a better wage than before, at least it keeps telling us that. I think it is important to recognize that the Government is speaking from a certain position. It is likely to continue to develop its tax structure in that way regardless of how much it says it will improve it.

We have suggested that the Government increase the corporate tax rate. I was not surprised to hear the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) defend the corporate tax structure—the Liberal Party has been doing that for many years. The Government is now suggesting that it will increase corporate taxes. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) seemed to express some concern with respect to that point. We must recognize that if corporate taxes are increased it is likely that there will be some adjustments passed on to consumers. Tax on corporations is tax on income which cannot be avoided in quite the same way that other taxes can be avoided. If a corporation makes more money by gouging the consumer then it will have to pay more tax on the extra money it earns. We recognize that this extra money may be used to increase profits. If that happens then a law which is in place in the country will have to be utilized when it is obvious that corporations are gouging consumers.

The Minister of Finance has suggested that what the Government will do is to close the loopholes and eliminate some of the tax expenditures which the Auditor General suggests costs the Government some $28 billion per year. If this is done, the Government will be able to take advantage of this forgone money and increase the income of the Government. Consequently, it can do what it spends so much time telling us it will do, that is, reduce the deficit.

Today I had the fortunate—or unfortunate—adventure of looking into what is happening to the farm community in Saskatchewan. As Hon. Members know, the Government in the last year established the Farm Debt Review Board. Maybe it has not helped the farmers much as yet. There is even some suggestion that it may not help farmers. However, it has done one thing. It has made available statistics about farm foreclosures. For instance, statistics from the Farm Debt Review Board, which is in place in every province, show that there were 1,233 notices by financial institutions of intention to foreclose against farms in Canada between August 5 and October 16, a matter of just over two months. I was a little shocked to find out that Saskatchewan accounted for 677 of those notices. In other words, more than one-half of those notices were filed in the Province of Saskatchewan. The rest of the country is also in bad shape. For instance, Alberta had 217 financial organizations file against farmers. Manitoba had 110; Ontario had 142; Quebec had 42; and there were 27 in New Brunswick. Little Prince Edward Island even had 12 financial organizations file against farmers. The same is true in the case of British Columbia.

I make the point that even as the Government puts in place what it says may help farmers, it brings in this Bill which affects every item a farmer buys. It affects every item which is necessary for production. Today farmers will tell us that it is input costs which are killing them. I refer to the cost of fuel, the cost of money, fertilizer and chemicals. These are costs which are making farming less profitable when one considers the low prices farmers receive for the commodities which they produce. The Government talks about how it will help the farmer through the review board and other measures while at the same time it puts forward a Bill such as this which will cost the farmer even more money. I use farming as an example, but this measure will affect every industry in the same way. Each time direct taxes are increased input costs are increased. This in turn makes it more difficult for industries to make profits.

Over the last few years the effect of increasing input costs without increasing commodity values has decreased farm incomes to the extent that there have been 1,233 filings with respect to foreclosures in a matter of a few months. That is only a small part of what will happen to the farming community. I suggest that what the Minister of Finance is doing through this measure is playing a shell game with the taxpayers. He is telling them that he will shift the tax burden and reduce the amount of income tax they must pay. Taxes may disappear momentarily, but in the end they will return in larger amounts than ever before.

Instead of this shell game which moves taxes from income to direct taxes the approach should be much more worth-while. If the Government continues in this approach it will not be long before we will be penalizing the poor and ordinary Canadians to the extent that we will be paying much more in terms of welfare. We will be increasing the number of food banks necessary to keep people alive. The taxation process that is being put into effect through this Bill will contribute to this.

I believe the direction that is being taken is wrong. Instead of trying to increase direct taxation, the Government should take the advice of the Auditor General and eliminate as quickly as possible tax expenditures from corporations.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) spoke eloquently of the problems faced by farmers. I wonder if he would spend a few moments explaining to us about the things he thinks could be in tax legislation that would be of direct assistance to the farming community not only of Saskatchewan but of Manitoba, Alberta and elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I used the example of farmers being affected by this type of taxation, but this example must be extended to every ordinary Canadian. If the only thing the Government will do is to increase the price of goods used by farmers, it will increase farmers' input costs. If the Government were to pick one particular industry to do something about, it should make the inputs to that particular industry exempt from tax. The Government has done this in the area of fuel. The tax paid on fuel by farmers is only a small percentage of a cent after receiving the rebate. If that rebate applied to all other inputs, there would be some effect on the cost of production on each farm.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would shed some light on a question that has been arising in the House for many years and that is the matter of the hesitancy of the Government to move on the definition of a farmer for taxation purposes. I know the question about Section 38 of the Income Tax Act has been raised here for as long as I can remember.

Perhaps I could ask the Hon. Member to indicate whether or not this matter is still a problem and why it is that the Government seems to be taking so long to take action on this matter. The Government is two years into its mandate and has still taken no particular action on defining Section 38 of the Income Tax Act more precisely.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, Section 38 supposedly defines a farmer as a hobby farmer, a part-time farmer or a full-time farmer. As long as a farmer makes money, the Government is willing to call him a farmer regardless of how much or how little he makes. It is when he starts losing money that the Government starts changing its rules.

As soon as a farmer loses money, the Government says that he cannot deduct the money he has lost because he is not a farmer. It tells the farmer that farming is just a hobby with him and he has spent that money for his own enjoyment. That problem must be faced and it must be faced very quickly.

As I indicated, 677 people are faced with foreclosure. That is an indication of what is happening to farmers. More and more farmers are getting jobs off the farm so that they can survive. If they make more money off the farm than on it because of the economic structure of agriculture, then the Government tells them that they are no longer farmers and therefore cannot deduct their losses against their incomes.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak on this Bill. A number of Hon. Members have spoken about what the Bill is about and what it is not about. If I may, I would like to discuss what the Bill attempts to do and why it attempts to do it. Then, since members of the other Parties have raised a number of questions about social policy, I would like to spend most of my time speaking about what we have done in that area of great importance to many Canadians.

Some Hon. Members say that it does not contain too much good news, but the good news in the Bill is that it provides a one-year extension of the fuel tax rebate for primary producers. The rebate will go from three cents per litre to 3.5 cents per litre. We believe that is important in that it fulfils a commitment made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the primary producer sector which, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is in great difficulty.

The Bill is designed to raise revenue. We are chronically short of revenue thanks to the 15 or 16 years of financial mismanagement on the part of the earlier Government. The Bill will generate approximately $700 million in the present fiscal year and about $1 billion in 1987.

It is a little known fact that about 93 per cent of today's deficit has accrued as a result of paying interest on money borrowed to finance the previous Government's accumulated deficits. That, of course, has led to higher interest rates. Interest rates are decreasing, but they are not low enough yet. The deficit has led to a weaker dollar, and I would point out that about $90 billion is owed by Canadian provincial Governments, the federal Government, Crown corporations, private citizens and corporations to external creditors.

Maintaining a strong dollar and keeping interest rates as low as possible are two things which are very important to Canadian men, women and children. The national debt is close to $250 billion. The mountain of red ink in which we find ourselves impairs our ability to provide better and richer social programs to citizens who need them. We are trying to spend smarter. We are trying to eliminate waste and unnecessary programs. We are trying to sell off some Crown corporations and we are trying to help low-income Canadians.

I believe our social programs are excellent. Someone has said that a rising tide lifts all boats including human boats. The creation of jobs is probably the most important social policy we can have. We have created fully 595,000 jobs since we were elected in the 1984 election. The national unemployment rate was 11.7 per cent on election day. I am happy to confirm that last month, it was 9.5 per cent. I know, as do other Members from western Canada and the Maritimes, that the unemployment rate is still too high in our own regions but over-all, jobs are being created at an average rate of about 25,000 per month.

More than 75 per cent of the jobs that have been created since we took office are full-time jobs. Youth unemployment nationally has dropped by fully 112,000 since the election or, in percentage terms, from a dreadful 18.4 per cent to about 15 per cent. Of course, it must still drop further.

Fully 328,000 more women across Canada were working last month than in September 1984. The unemployment rate for women across Canada has dropped from 12 per cent at the time of the election to 9.7 per cent now. I understand that employment has increased and unemployment has decreased in all 10 provinces since the election. This is small comfort to an unemployed constituent of yours or mine. While door-knocking about 10 days ago, I met a person from the oil sector whose income had dropped from a salary of $4,000 a month to $1,000 a month in unemployment insurance benefit. That is a very difficult thing for him to go through. He, you, and I are all grateful for the unemployment insurance safety net.

My point in citing these figures is that creating a social, business, and investment climate where jobs can be created is a central feature of our social strategy on this side of the House. More jobs are still needed, especially in the west, Quebec, and Atlantic Canada. Unlike our political opponents, we have already shown considerable success in creating a climate where jobs are being created in good numbers. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) mentioned that the OECD forecast that this year Canada will have the best employment growth rate of any major industrialized country of the 24 OECD countries. It is this political Party on this side of the House more than any other that cherishes the inherent dignity and worth of each individual Canadian. Our Party does not look at our fellow citizens as being members of this consumer group or that production unit. We see people as individuals created by a creator who must never again be treated by Government as objects, units of production, or the like. From that perspective comes true compassion and help for disadvantaged Canadians.

Let me illustrate what we have already achieved in three areas. First, with regard to disabled persons, there has been a substantive increase in funding for the participation program which encourages self-reliance, self-determination, and self-managment by disabled Canadians. The Walter Dinsdale Information Centre for Disabled Persons opened in Calgary in April, 1986. There were new measures designed to improve access for disabled individuals to federal Government buildings. There was an increase in the maximum housing renovations program for the disabled to $5,000 from $1,500. There was a significant broadening of the definition of "disabled person" in the Income Tax Act for purposes of eligibility for the $2,590 disability deduction, which is expected to add about 120,000 disabled persons to the current claimants. I am very proud of that record for disabled Canadians.

Second, with regard to seniors, we have extended the spouse's allowance to more than 85,000 low-income widowed persons who are mostly women, aged 60 to 64, regardless of the age of their spouse at the time of death. We have significantly enhanced pension and other benefits to our veterans and their spouses. Pension plans in federally-regulated sectors are to be improved by our legislation on such issues as portability, benefits for part-time employees, and equal benefits for men and women. Proposed changes to the Canada Pension Plan will improve it in terms of its future financial health, benefit elibility as early as age 60, increased disability benefits and the continuation of survivor benefits upon remarriage. Many seniors will benefit from our new definitions of "disability" for purposes of the Income Tax Act. A further 350,000 senior taxpayers have been exempted from having to make more tax instalment payments. Thank goodness for that. We have increased flexibility in using funds accumulated in RRSPs and removed the maximum limit on registered retirement income funds. We have funded over 1,900 New Horizon Program projects in one year alone.

Third, with regard to women and families, about 10 days ago in the House we debated our child tax credit proposal, under which will hopefully next month send a prepayment of $300 per child to approximately 700,000 families whose income in 1985 was $15,000 or less. More than 4 million families with incomes of less than $15,000 will also receive a refundable sales tax credit of $50 for each adult and $25 for each child.

We are committed to economic and social equality for women. The latest issue of Chatelaine magazine provides a pretty fair assessment of some of our initiatives. More is needed, but we are making headway in some important areas. The recent Throne Speech outlined a number of initiatives to protect and enhance Canadian families, which are the cornerstone of our society. Unfortunately, they are probably more under attack now than at any point in Canadian history. We will move on pornography. This is simply hate literature against women, children, and the family. Its linkage to increased crimes against women and children is pretty clear. Robert Lunney, our Police Chief in Edmonton recently pointed out that you can obtain video tapes in Edmonton which advocate incest. Is it any wonder that there were a reported 17,000 sexual assaults in 1985 alone across Canada?

For the first time in history, we will initiate a national drug strategy against illegal drugs. Can anyone in the House doubt that a $9 billion to $10 billion a year illegal drug industry is at the epidemic level? I note that, as was mentioned earlier in Question Period, according to Dr. Gallup about 75 per cent of Canadians think that it is at the epidemic level, as was pointed out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

We have already moved against street soliciting, primarily because of the Hutt decision which in effect said that it is virtually impossible to be found guilty of soliciting in a public place. This created many juvenile prostitutes of both sexes. Once the new law is finally upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada, which I am certain will be the case, it will reduce the number of young boys and girls who enter this self-destructive and brutal occupation.

In short, we believe that deeds are more important than words in matters of social policy. We have already done much. We will do a great deal more. The Bill itself before the House is part of a mosaic of raising more money to enable us to do more things to help Canadians in distress and in difficulty to cope with problems that they need help with.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): It gives me great pleasure to rise this afternoon to address the House of Commons on Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

I listened with great pleasure to the speaker before me who was representing the Government side on this particular piece of legislation. Perhaps it conjures up comments made by a colleague of his. I used the past tense because he is no longer a member of the Conservative Party or the governing Party. He is the Member of Parliament for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin), who now sits as an independent. One of the many reasons that Member of Parliament prefers the independent category as opposed to the Party of the governing side is that, in his own words, he believes that the Conservative Government is essentially a Party of the rich, a Party very much interested in the elitist category of this country and not a Party of the people. Using his own definition, he felt that he and his principles and the values represented in his riding precluded him, and perhaps impelled him, not to sit as a member of the Government Party but to seek his independent category and thus better represent the aspirations of his own constituents.

When you look at Bill C-14 you see the facts behind the reasons for the Member of Parliament for Terrebone and the very difficult decision that he must have had in switching from the governing side to that of independency. Bill C-14 states that the federal manufacturers' sales tax increas on construction goods goes up from 7 to 8 per cent. On cable and pay-TV services it goes up from 7 to 8 per cent. On alcoholic beverages and tobacco there is a rise from 14 to 15 per cent. On other goods there is a rise from 11 to 12 per cent. There is an alcohol and tobacco excise tax, as I earlier indicated. There is an airport transportation tax. There is a telecommunication program service tax. There is a motive fuels tax. And on and on.

Basically, Canadian citizens are not advocating that taxes should be going down. All Canadians, including Members of the House, know that if taxes are to go anywhere, they will go up, or remain the same. That principle is accepted by Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific as long as the tax burden is fair and equitable and as long as taxes are applied in a way Canadians can accept. Canadians must know that they are being asked to shoulder expenses incurred by a federal Government which wishes to do well for the citizenry across the land. Canadians accept that principle if all taxpayers are being asked to shoulder the same burden, proportionately speaking. However, there is great concern about the philosophy of the Conservative Government that some people should pick up a bigger piece of the tax burden. Some individuals are being asked to shoulder disproportionately the burden of taxes.

This gives rise to the reality that there is a growing disparity between the rich and the poor, a growing gulf between the have and the have-nots, a growing gulf between those in the urban centres and those in the more regionalized and perhaps disadvantaged areas. This fuels speculation that somehow the priorities of the Government are out of whack and that the burden being asked of those less well off is unfair and inequitable. It is at that point that the Government is asking for trouble. It is aggravating an already bad situation, and it is really trying to kick the poor taxpayer who cannot bear another kick. That is when we have a tax revolt; that is when the fires of disparity give rise to emotionalism.

Individual taxpayers cannot be asked to carry the burden unfairly. When we look at unfairness, what are we talking about? Let us look at the last couple of Budgets introduced by the Government. We see an unfairness in the cumulative tax increases. A family with an income in the range of $15,000 to $20,000 will be facing a cumulative tax increase of some 23 per cent by 1990, compared with a 15 per cent increase being faced by those earning between $30,000 and $50,000, a 4 per cent increase being faced by those earning $100,000, and a 2 per cent increase being faced by those earning $200,000. What do we think a $15,000 wage earner will do? What questions will he or she be asking of elected representatives, more specifically of the Government of the day? One does not have to be an economist to understand the frustrations being felt by such individuals. That is where the disparity or the fuel for enhancing the disparity comes in.

They are asking a $15,000 wage earner to face a 23 per cent increase by 1990. On the other hand, the $200,000 wage earner will only face a 2 per cent increase. The $15,000 wage earner will not take it sitting down. He or she will send a message to the Government, as we are trying to do in this national Chamber. We, as Members of Parliament, have an obligation to rise and at least inform the Government of what its financial and fiscal policies are doing across the land, particularly in communities like York West that are typical working-class and middle-class communities.

I have attended numerous public meetings on the subject of taxes and the fiscal policies of the Government. No one in the country minds meeting together our fiscal challenges in the 1990s and beyond. However, no one is prepared to shoulder the burden on an unfair basis.

The disparities between the have and the have-nots or the rich and the poor are actually being reflected for the very first time in national polling studies. Never before have Canadians perceived the gulf of disparity to be hitting Canada as much as it has in the last few years. They never perceived Canada as having a well defined class structure. Although we have Mr. Porter's vertical mosaic, Canadians did not want to believe that there was a well defined class structure. For the first time in history there are very clear signals from polling studies that Canadians are beginning to understand and accept the perception of class disparities or class structures.

The fights in our country have been along other lines. We have had linguistic battles between the legitimate rights of Francophones and other communities which perhaps did not wish to extend those rights across the board. We have been able to put that behind us, for the most part. We have had struggles between the East and the West, where perhaps regionalism gave rise to emotionalism, where perhaps Alberta could not understand the manufacturing centre of Ontario and vice-versa. We have also had struggles among provincial Governments whose responsibility it is to protect their regions and parochial concerns, as well as the clashes which have ensued with the federal Government. Those facts tell us that the country is not easy to manage or to govern because of its vastness in size and what size implies in terms of priorities.

However, we have never had the battles along the lines of class structures which have unfortunately occurred in other parts of the world such as Great Britain. Those fires have been fuelled consistently for years under Margaret Thatcher and her brand of Conservatism. We are beginning to see an element of that disparity taking on a more active role.

Is it any wonder that we see the manifestation of those disparities and inequities indicating that somewhere in the system things are not right? When we look at the increases in the numbers of food banks in the country, we realize that something is wrong. Not only are there increases in the numbers of food banks, whether they are in local parishes or in community centres in Vancouver, Toronto or Montreal, regrettably and unfortunately the line-ups outside food banks are growing longer and the food supplies in those banks are becoming more sparse. Is it any wonder there was a conference on food banks and the hungry in Toronto this past weekend?

We are in 1986; we are not in the 1940s. There is nothing more degrading for human beings in society than having to line up in the morning with their children in tow to ask for their piece of daily bread. There is nothing more serious than human beings having to say to the state, society, their neighbours, community centres, or local parishes: "I do not have enough dollars to go to the IGA to buy food for my supper this evening". Thousands of individuals are lining up in front of food banks. I have seen them in Toronto and I have seen them in Vancouver. There is nothing more repugnant than to have to see that. There is nothing more repugnant than to have to ask ourselves why in today's rich, educated, technological society we witness fellow Canadians having to line up at food banks. Yet, when you look at something like Bill C-14, it is not surprising at all.

Consider some of the statistics produced by that very Government. After all these cumulative tax measures are in place, a person earning $50,000 or more faces a 1.2 per cent increase in taxes by the end of 1986. Yet a single parent family with two children faces a 2.1 per cent increase. At the very least the single parent family would expect the numbers to be reversed. Someone with a $100,000 income will pay a tax increase of 1.7 per cent. However, an elderly couple with less than $25,000 has a 2 per cent increase. Is it any wonder that the National Council on Welfare put out a report just last month which said the disparity between rich and poor in Canada is increasing at an alarming rate?

It said there were close to 4 million Canadians, or 16 per cent of our population, living in poverty. That is more than there were in 1980. One child in five is growing up in poverty, single mothers are five times more likely to be poor, and 60 per cent of female single parent families are poor. If that is the unfortunate reality facing Canadians from coast to coast, then why do we not have legislation which will adequately address that reality? Why are we asking the elderly to pay more than the $100,000 wage-earner? Why is the cumulative tax about 23 per cent for those earning $15,000, and only 4 per cent for those earning $100,000?

I would suggest, and other Canadians would suggest, that somehow the Government has its priorities out of whack. Somehow the mind-set governing its philosophy is out of whack with the realities. If there are 4 million poor, if tax increases are more for those less well off, then we are not talking about fairness and equity. We are proving the truth of the words of the Hon. Member for Terrebonne when he described the philosophy which has enveloped the Conservative Party and the Government of Canada.

We are not talking only about the working poor. We are also talking about a middle class which has constantly and consistently been clobbered by the Government. An individual came to my office last Saturday during constituency day and said he always thought of himself as a member of the middle class. He has a bungalow, two children, his wife works part-time and he holds down a pretty good job. What he then said was very indicative of where people are coming from in their thinking about a Government of the stripe we have seen over the last two years. He said the Government is making it more difficult for him to call himself a member of the middle class. That individual and thousands of others like him are beginning to see society in terms of the politics of extremism.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: You are either a have or a have-not in this country. It is more and more difficult for that person to remain part of the middle class. Taxes are increasing at a rate that he and his family cannot keep up with. Hon. Members might have some snide remarks or they might smile, but I suggest they go back to their constituencies and talk to some of those middle class Canadians. That will counteract the mind-set which seems to have been plaguing their Party and their Government for a long time.

One message I have as an opposition Member is to tell the Government to address the realities. It should shape a fiscal policy and tax program which does not exacerbate but which addresses and solves the problems. Once again, no one in this country is unwilling to pay increased taxes to deal with the challenges we have to deal with as a young, progressive nation. At the same time, no one is willing to have to pay more than his next door neighbour, particularly when the next door neighbour can better afford to pay more of that burden.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has given us a great harangue but he does not bother reading the Ways and Means motions. A motion was filed on June 11th and again last Friday which specifically gives his $15,000 wage-earner a tax credit equal to all of the sales taxes paid to this Government. The Hon. Member does not know that. He says there is discrimination. Yet for the first time in history we have a Government prepared to be fair, to make sure the ordinary person gets a sales tax rebate. Yet what does he do? He harangues it as if he did not know any better. In fact, he does not. If he went down to his own riding of York West and talked to his constituents, he would find they are all employed, making more money today than they have in any time in their lives. Their properties are worth more. Their businesses are worth more. They are all working and they all have a good life. Why does he not say so? Why does he not say that this is the best Government his constituents have ever had?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I used to have great respect for the Hon. Member but I think he just blew it there. He suggests that somehow I am preaching something that is not real. What I am doing is perhaps being a lightening rod for the Canadians he refers to in my riding, and essentially Canadians from coast to coast. If Canadians thought that somehow this Government was being fair and compassionate, if Canadians thought this Government was the best they have ever had, then the Government would not have the problem in the polls it has had ever since it was elected two years ago.

• (1700)

I wish the Hon. Member would not leave because this is the best part. The Government was elected with the largest majority in history. Canadians voted for a change. They wanted to see what the Conservative Party could do. We have seen the Government, which has such a large majority, throw away its support and popularity in such a short time. In the two years remaining in its term it will exacerbate that.

Members of the Opposition are trying to convince the Government to listen to Canadians and learn from what they are saying. Canadians will make the judgment. When Canadians read the statistics of the disparities in the 1986, 1987, and 1988 tax forms, they will become much more active than they have been. The poll results of today will look good by comparison in two years time.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Member gave a very eloquent speech on behalf of the downtrodden and unemployed who are suffering as a result of the taxation system of the country. He was quite right to spend a substantial portion of his time attacking the Conservative tax regime and pointing out that it has added to the taxation and debt load of ordinary Canadians. However, would he not also admit that there is inequity between the amount of taxes being paid by ordinary Canadians and that being paid by the rich as well as between individuals and corporations?

In other words, individuals with low incomes are still paying proportionately much more than they should. Those with large incomes are still paying very little, if any, income tax. An increasingly larger share of income tax is being paid by individuals rather than corporations. Indeed, it has become evident lately that a large number of corporations are paying no taxes at all. They are earning vast sums of money year after year and are paying no federal tax at all. To be fair, would the Liberal Member who just spoke not admit that this taxation system was imposed by the Liberal regime of the last 16 years?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party failed to note that our Party has historically and traditionally been a Party of reform. We have sought to make Canada a better place for everyone. We have tried to shape the policies of the country as fairly and equitably as possible. I do not suggest that that reform is finished, that the problems have been solved. During the 16 years that this Party was in power it was recognized as having done the right thing and moved in the right direction. If the New Democratic Party had all the right answers, it would have been in Government for those 16 years. The fact that it was not reflects the thoughts and priorities of Canadians.

During the 16 years when my Party was the Government, we brought forward fiscal reform to make Canada a little more progressive, equitable and fair in order to eliminate the class barriers which are taking on a new definition under the present Government of Canada. We in the Liberal Party feel that the reforms we put forward have come to an end, that instead of becoming a progressive country with regard to fiscal outlay we are turning the clock back. We feel that four years of Conservative rule will undermine the progressive elements of reform which this Party introduced and which we will once again champion after 1988.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Hon. Member thinks that the lowest interest rates in eight years are helping the rich or the middle class.

I would also like to know whether the fact that people with an annual income of $15,000 or less will receive their child tax credit cheque in November, instead of having to wait until they file their income tax returns, will help the rich or the poor.

I would also like to know whether the fact that inflation is below 4 per cent is helping the rich or the poor.

If the Hon. Member is perfectly honest, Mr. Speaker, he will answer that it helps both the poor and the middle class, and that his comments earlier were not exactly correct.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked me to be honest and fair and admit that low inflation and interest rates help the poor. Of course they do, but they also help the rich. I do not know what the Hon. Member intends by her question. If low inflation and interest rates help the Canadian working poor and the Canadian rich, we are on an equal playing field. That is fine and fair. We, too, advocate as low an interest and inflation rate as possible. However, leaving those two aspects aside, we are left with what the future course of fiscal responsibility will be. Is it fair to have taxes which favour the rich over the poor? She should ask this of her constituents and executive to hear the real answers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the period for questions and comments comes to an end after some of these speeches.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Gatineau, on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I should be grateful for some guidance. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) is back to his old tricks of shouting comments once the debate is over with. If the Hon. Member for Bourassa had anything to say about the subject, it seems to me he could have risen in the House and made his comments at that time.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I was only doing what the Hon. Member did when the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) was speaking. I did exactly the same . . . I took a leaf from the Hon. Member's book of etiquette and acted accordingly.

Excise Tax Act

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I find these comments out of order. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) has the floor.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise to continue debate on Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. This Bill provides for the third increase by the Government in the sales tax and excise tax since it took power in September of 1984. We sometimes leave the impression that the tax increases are much smaller than they actually are because we talk about a 1 per cent increase. To be more accurate, we should be describing it as an increase of one percentage point in the tax base. These seemingly small one percentage point increases mount up to a great deal of tax. One should consider this not as an increase of 1 per cent on three different occasions, but as a basic sales tax increase to 8 per cent from the 5 per cent sales tax when the Government took power. That is an increase of over 40 per cent, which reflects a much greater increase than 1 per cent.

• (1710)

Those 1 per cent increases have added up. In 1982, federal revenues from excise taxes and duties amounted to just over $2 billion. This year they will total more than $4 billion on an annual basis and will be in excess of between $5 billion and $6 billion per annum going into 1988. This means there is nearly a 300 per cent increase in that type of tax over the mandate of the Government.

We know that the 1984 Economic Statement contained an agreement by the Conservatives to increase federal sales taxes which had been announced by the Liberals. It also contained an increase of a percentage point for federal sales tax, bringing it from 5 per cent to 6 per cent, and an increase in the petroleum compensation charge. Just over six months later, in the May 1985 Budget, there was a further 1 per cent increase in sales tax, to 7 per cent. As a result of the February Budget and the implementation of this Bill, there will be a further 1 per cent increase in sales tax on April 1, bringing the sales tax on these items to 8 per cent from the 5 per cent in September, 1984. In a matter of two years, sales tax has risen from 5 per cent to 8 per cent. In addition, this legislation will increase taxes on certain goods from 11 per cent to 12 per cent, and from 14 per cent to 15 per cent on wine and spirits.

This Bill does not reflect small increases of 1 per cent, but very substantial increases in excess of 10 per cent to sales and excise taxes in this country. These extreme increases add up very quickly as far as individual Canadians are concerned.

To this point the Conservatives have netted the federal coffers almost $7 billion from increased sales and excise taxes alone. During the same period, the Progressive Conservative Government has increased corporate income taxes by an additional $1.4 billion and has increased personal income taxes by $3.3 billion. This amounts to a total tax grab of more than $11.5 billion since coming to power just over two years ago. If it were not so serious it would be rather amusing to consider that the Government has attempted to reduce the deficit by increasing these taxes between $11 billion and $12 billion, yet the deficit has only decreased by a few billion dollars on an annual basis.

In the year the Government took office the deficit exceeded $36 billion. This year the deficit will be over $30 billion even though the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised to reduce the deficit to below that amount. The Government has not succeeded in bringing down the deficit by as much as it has charged Canadians in extra taxes.

There have been some serious cuts to services and additional charges have been made against Canadians who use Government services. Yet no dent as such has been made to the deficit. I believe the accumulated deficit is approaching some $300 billion, and while it costs a great deal to carry this deficit the only changes the Government seems capable of making are increases that will affect ordinary Canadians by reducing their take-home pay and purchasing power.

Several high profile groups in Canada have commented on this reduction in purchasing power. They include the National Council on Welfare, which is often quoted by my Party. It has noted that there has been a steady decline in disposable income of all Canadians, which can be expected to continue over the next five years as a result of this kind of taxation policy we see in Bill C-14. It is essentially a regressive tax because it taxes the items that people need, like goods and services to maintain their standard of living. This is a hidden tax because it is already included in the purchase price of goods. On the other hand, provincial sales taxes are very clear because when one pays the bill, the additional 5 per cent or 7 per cent is clearly stated as the extra sales tax. Similarly, we know what we pay in income tax.

Income tax in Canada is considered to be a progressive tax because the rate of income tax increases as one's taxable income goes up. This means that people who have $20,000 in taxable income will pay a lower proportion in income tax than those who have a taxable income of $45,000. I believe the rationale behind this tax is good because it assumes that there are certain goods and services that all of us must have and on which we cannot cut back. We need a certain minimum for food, clothing, housing and transportation needs in this country to maintain a certain standard of living. Families who are in the $20,000 income range do not have much opportunity to save, but families who earn $45,000 find it much easier to set aside savings or pay a higher tax rate. Therefore, our system of taxation is a progressive system in which higher income families are charged more.

However, our over-all tax policy has not been so clear or fair. We have permitted the income tax system to deteriorate over the years to the point where it is reported that some corporations pay absolutely no income tax even though they showed very good profits. We have seen statistics made public in the last few months that show that some 80,000 Canadian corporations, all of which showed substantial profits, paid absolutely nothing in corporate income tax.

This is the way we have permitted our income tax system to deteriorate. We have moved away from a progressive form of taxation to one which is now so full of loopholes that, to some extent, it is becoming a regressive kind of tax. Families with an income of $20,000 are paying more tax than some corporations which in the past year earned profits of up to $450 million. These corporations paid absolutely zero in income tax. That does not seem fair when a family is trying to struggle along with an income of just over $20,000 and is not receiving any tax breaks. That family pays its share of income tax, but one of our large corporations in the downtown area showed hundreds of millions of dollars of profits and contributed absolutely nothing by way of income tax to the maintenance of our services.

The two views of taxation are whether it should be a progressive tax or a regressive tax. The arguments some Conservative philosophers have given is that the regressive tax is in fact a fair tax. We have heard some allusions to that, although not too many Government Members, to their credit, have actually defended regressive taxation. They have made references to regressive taxation and supported that position in a vague sort of way by saying: "When the tide rises, it carries us all, rich and poor alike". But they know in fact it carries the very wealthy much further and much faster than it carries the low income earner.

The continued move is toward the hidden regressive kind of sales tax that we see presented in this legislation before us today. This is the third attempt at this kind of legislation. What the Government has succeeded in foisting on the people of Canada, has resulted in less income for ordinary Canadians and a rapidly accelerated tax load. For those people who are considered middle income earners, who may have both spouses working, two dependent children and a family income of $35,000, a fairly typical Canadian family, these particular sales tax and excise tax increases which have come into effect since the Government took over, have resulted in a total increase in taxation to that family of just over $1,300.

The 1984 Economic Statement which placed the first one per centage point increase on sales tax cost that family approximately $350 a year in clothing and building materials and so on which would include the hidden sales tax. The Budget of May, 1985 added another $325 to that family's tax burden. The recent February Budget which announced the sales tax and excise tax increase we are debating today, will have added another $170 per year. These increases total just over $1,300 for this particular family, and $845 of this new burden would be due to sales taxes. The rest would be the increases in excise taxes mostly with regard to transportion costs, driving one's automobile or riding the bus. With the increase in fuel tax and airport taxes, the increase in airline tickets would show up in that family's expenditures if they took a vacation once during that period of time.

The tax increases are fairly substantial. Most Canadians have not been so privileged as to have received that kind of income increase to their own personal family income. As a result of this kind of tax policy, low income and medium income families are worse off. Government Members have made it very clear that there is a tax credit for those low income families who earn between $10,000 and $15,000. We applaud that, but we also point out it is very hard going in the very cold waters of "sink or swim" for those families who earn between $15,000 and $20,000. Their income position is not a whole lot better but they do not have that kind of tax break. They still pay the extra excise and sales tax with no compensation back in the form of a tax break. Those families are finding it increasingly difficult to live under this kind of tax regime. These hidden taxes are not just sales taxes. I mentioned so far the increases to sales tax. I would like to talk a little bit about the kinds of increases which have fallen on Canadians who use fuel. This is something which is important because Canada is a large country and we must have fuel not only for heating our homes but to be able to move around in our automobiles and use our transportation system. There was an increase of two cents a litre on September 3, 1985. There was a further one cent per litre increase on January 1, 1986. There has been a new excise tax of two cents per litre on diesel and aviation fuel imposed since that time. Those increases have meant extra costs to the budgets of ordinary families with no recognition of how much harm that is doing. The Government simply explains it away by saying: "This is the way we are asking our people to fight against the large deficit". Yet the Minister, who has collected something in the neighbourhood of $11 billion and $12 billion in new and extra taxes in the sales and excise area alone, has, in spite of cuts, still left us with an annual budgetary deficit not very much different from the annual budgetary deficit left to us by the Liberals. With a total expenditure of something over $120 billion annually, we are failing to collect taxes in excess of $30 billion. The Government has not decided to collect taxes from large corporations where the money is available but has chosen instead to go after low and middle income earners. It is ignoring the several hundred millions of dollars of profits of corporations which are escaping without paying any taxes at all. This is unfair. The situation must be but right. There is a great deal of money to be collected from that area.

One of the old rules of taxation Tommy Douglas used to follow when he was Premier of Saskatchewan—and I would point out he got rid of what was for his time the very large deficit he inherited—was to give tax breaks to the ordinary people in Saskatchewan and taxing those corporations which had surplus funds. Failure to do that will result in a continuation of the kind of policies we had under the Liberals where these large tax breaks have resulted in large amounts of money in corporate coffers. These corporations do not use this money to start new businesses. They simply use them to buy each other out with the result that a lot of people actually lose jobs rather than get jobs.

• (1730)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member the same question I asked the previous spokesman from the Liberal Party. As Hon. Members are aware, the Member from the Liberal Party stated that there were all sorts of tax reforms taking place under the Liberal regime. He stated that it was only in the last two years under the nefarious Government of the Conservative Party that the situation had fallen apart, that all of a sudden there was poverty in the nation and that the tax system was unfair. He suggested that all of a sudden our corporations are not paying their fair share of—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Member is coming to his question. However, I will hear from the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: I would like some direction from the Chair, Mr. Speaker. When I rose previously to ask a question, the time for questions and comments had expired with respect to the speech of the Liberal Member. I now see that the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) is bootlegging a question on the previous speech. I wonder if Your Honour could make it clear that we are talking about—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): As soon as the great Member for Ottawa—Vanier stood up I knew exactly what he was going to request. I also know that the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) is directing his question to the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). I believe he was coming to his point. I am sure that as a result of the comments by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier the Hon. Member for Churchill will now ask his question.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, despite the provocation I will not repeat the preamble to my question. Suffice it to say that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) points out that the Liberals seem to be awfully sensitive with respect to this issue.

Presuming that the preamble to my question had been restated, my question was with respect to the fact that there was obviously a situation in which we did not see tax reform during the last 16 years of Liberal Government. I would like the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre to comment on that fact.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I was just getting to the Hon. Member's point when my time ran out. The philosophy of the previous Government, and one which seems to be carried on with little noticeable difference by the current Government, seems to have been to provide more incentives and loopholes in the tax system. This would have the effect of leaving money in the hands of the corporate sector on the assumption that it would be reinvested and that jobs would be created.

On the face of it, it sounds like a good argument. It sounded like a good argument, and it was something which was experimented with. However, after a few years of experimentation, when it became clear that jobs were not being created by the corporate sector as a result of these types of policies and that real job creation was taking place in the very small business sector, large corporations rather than create jobs were forming conglomerates. In these cases they bought each other out. This usually resulted in a great many middle management people of one or other of the takeover corporations being retired. Oftentimes plants were shut down in order to make the productive capacity of the new corporation even more efficient. This had the net result of fewer jobs. Canadians financed the augmentation of some corporations with no benefit going to the taxpayers or the workers.

We have to rethink this particular theory. It seems to me that if the small "c" conservative economic analysis which says that there should be absolutely no corporate taxes were put in place then there would be absolutely no way that corporations could retain earnings at a lower corporate tax rate. I would only accept that argument if earnings were distributed to shareholders and the shareholders of those corporations then decided how expansion should take place.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the New Democratic Party will be quite angry with the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) since in the early part of his speech, before dealing with the usual NDP ideology, he was quite sensible in that he fingered the real problem. This problem is the $300 billion national debt. He set out the tax increases that people will now have to pay. He also set out all of the cuts that have been made. He then went on to admit that in spite of all these cuts we still have a deficit of $32 billion. I point out to the Hon. Member that without those cuts we would have had a national deficit of $38 billion or $39 billion. As a farmer, can the Hon. Member tell me how his Party would cope with a $30 billion yearly deficit? Would the Hon. Member increase income taxes? If so, on whom and by how much? Would he increase corporate taxes or sales taxes? I think that Canadians are entitled to know the position of his Party.

It would be very simple for the Hon. Member to put it forward if he has thought about it. I would like to be able to send copies of the Hon. Member's speech out to the constituencies to say: "If you are not happy with our solution, then here is how the NDP will solve the problem". We know that the Leader of the Liberal Party said that he would reduce the deficit by 50 per cent within three years of coming to power. In order to achieve this he would have to implement massive tax increases, something in the order of $16 billion or $17 billion. What would the NDP do?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I will give the Hon. Member my personal assessment of this situation. When the NDP comes to power there will be more Members than I in the Government. As I suggested in my speech, there is really only one place at which to attack the deficit. We need more money. We are spending in excess of $120 billion per year and collecting only about $80 billion or $85 billion. The only thing that can be done in such a situation is to collect the money where there is money, just as Tommy Douglas did in Saskatchewan. There is no point in raising sales taxes on the people who earn less than $20,000. There is no point in trying to obtain money from the poor workers or those who are on welfare. We cannot attack the deficit by permitting large corporations which have profits of up to $450 million to pay absolutely zero in terms of tax. There has to be a method by which to collect taxes out of these enormous profits. If we do not address that issue then we cannot address the problems with respect to employment or the deficit.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member refer to the question of solving the deficit problem and solving all the tax and fiscal problems of Canada by increasing taxes on corporations. I know that his is a compelling argument to many people. Over the weekend I attended the National Conference on Hunger. At that conference I heard one person after another who lives below the poverty line get up and express concern with respect to the solution of the Hon. Member. They felt that his solution was a regressive type of tax. They felt that increased taxes on corporations would be passed on to them as the poor of the nation.

Does the Hon. Member agree with the opinions of the poor people of the country with respect to the question of corporate taxation or does he feel that they do not really know what they are talking about with respect to this issue?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member will agree that along with tax breaks if there were some requirements imposed upon corporations to provide jobs then some accommodation could be worked out. I do not think we should assume that people will have to pay more for products simply because corporations are paying an ordinary amount of tax. I think that has to be seen. However, I think it is clear that poor people will have to pay more tax with these types of taxation measures, something that cannot be avoided. Everything they buy has an additional tax on it of up to 40 per cent because of these types of policies.

• (1740)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we did not have a chance to pursue the argument put forward by my hon. friend from the Conservative Party. I understood him to be paraphrasing the participants in the poverty conference. The statement he made seemed to suggest that they were against corporate tax increases because corporate tax increases mean that ultimately the people will pay.

It seems to me that the measures we are debating today, specifically the increases that were imposed in the last federal Budget directly on the taxpayers in the form of sales and excise taxes, are in fact a form of direct taxation of poor people and those who can least afford to pay. These are in fact the most regressive kinds of taxation. If there is to be an increase in corporate tax, something that might be affected could be the issue of profit margins or shareholders' returns.

Quite sincerely, this particular tax measure encapsulates the philosophy of the Conservative Party. I hesitate to say Progressive Conservative Party because I think it is a contradiction in terms, a contradiction underlined by the kind of regressive tax measures introduced by Bill C-14 and further compounded by recent statements made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) relating to tax reform.

The Minister has been titillating the Canadian public for quite some time. He has been suggesting that he will introduce a tax reform package that will in fact ease the burden currently faced by middle-class families. We realize, because of the announcement he made in the House a few days ago, that the Minister is not prepared to ease the burden on middle income taxpayers. Sure, he will reduce personal income taxes, but at the same time he is suggesting that we charge more sales taxes and more of the kind of direct taxation which hits the hardest at those who are in the worst position to pay.

Let us look at the effect of the tax measures contained in Bill C-14 along with sales tax and other tax measures. It has become increasingly clear that the Government has no intention of easing the tax burden on those who cannot afford to pay. In fact, Government Members seem to have devoted themselves primarily to those who cannot afford to pay. An elderly couple earning a total of $27,000 per year—and most Hon. Members will know that senior citizen couples do not, generally speaking, earn that much—will face a total tax increase of $500. At the same time, a family of four earning $100,000 will face a tax increase of $1,740. The percentage of the tax increase imposed on the elderly couple earning $27,000 per year is higher than the percentage of the tax increase imposed on the family earning $100,000 per year.

The same is true all the way down the line. The group that is hardest hit by Tory fiscal policies aimed at ordinary working people is the family with one income earner who has one adult dependent and two children. Because of measures introduced in the last three Budgets, that kind of family will pay an extra $630 in taxes, an increase of 2.1 per cent. In my own community, a steelworker who may be supporting a wife and a couple of children on $30,000 per year will be asked to bear a greater burden of the public tax increases than a family of four earning $100,000 per year. The vice-president of the steel company who may be earning $100,000 per year or more will be faced with less of an increase in his or her taxes than the average steelworker. I think this is what is intrinsically wrong with Bill C-14 and with the legislation that we have seen over the last couple of years. Middle class Canadians are losing their ability to keep pace with inflation because any gains they make are taken away by the tax man.

What is happening to all this money? Where is it going? The effect of the 1986 Budget will be that $100 million will go back to the coffers of the Government in 1986, $700 million in 1987, $800 million in 1988, and $900 million in 1990. This is an increase of $3.3 billion in personal income taxes. This has been imposed by a Minister of Finance who then had the gall to say that he will reduce personal income taxes. Sure he will reduce personal income taxes. He will reduce them after the exorbitant $3.3 billion increase that he has already imposed on the Canadian taxpayer.

Where has the money from the increase gone? It took 48 hours for the Government to decide to come up with $1 billion to bail out two insolvent banks. We have learned from the questions asked repeatedly by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) that the Government never even revealed the names of the depositors. It hid behind the Estey Commission. The Government said it would wait for Estey's recommendations to find out the identities of those who received $1-million giveaways courtesy of the Canadian taxpayers via the Minister of Finance. In fact, Estey was never asked to look at the identity of the depositors. It was a decision of the Conservative Government of Canada to keep secret from Canadian taxpayers the identity of those who received the $1 billion in bail-outs that came from tax initiatives imposed by this Government.

In 48 hours, we lost $1 billion. That still leaves us with $2.3 billion. The Government's election hymn was that it would reduce the deficit and clean up the terrible mess left by 20 years of Liberal administration. We know what kind of cleanup is occurring. We have seen the cleanup in the Prime Minister's Office. There was a 54 per cent increase in his budget. We have seen the cleanup in the travelling entourage, complete with Hercules, security maids and butlers and a travelling bevy of staff and hangers-on numbering up to 50 or 60 people who have to accompany the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on every trip abroad. At the same time, we saw the Government telling the taxpayers that it wants them to pay.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the most serious aspect of this Bill is the fact that if sales tax is applied as suggested in Bill C-14, many people . . . For instance, if you buy a house in Montreal, if you want to buy a new home, for every one per cent increase in sales tax, it will cost you around $500 or $600 more, depending on the kind of house.

If, in addition to the 3 per cent sales tax increase imposed by this Government, we consider the 3 per cent increase introduced by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, we see that thanks to the Conservative Government we have now in Ottawa, the total increase may be from $2,000 to $3,000, the amount the federal Government will be taking from families who want to buy a home.

As I pointed out earlier, the family most seriously affected by the tax system will be the family of four with one breadwinner earning around $30,000, in other words, the average or not even the average family in Canada, and that family is being asked to shoulder the heaviest tax burden.

For example, Mr. Speaker, according to the Wilson Budget a family with an annual income of $100,000 will pay a tax increase of only 1.7 per cent, which works out to $1,740. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, a 1.7 per cent increase is not a big amount for a family earning $100,000 a year. However, if we are talking about a family whose annual income amounts to $30,000, all indicators in Canada show that a man with a wife and two children who earns only $30,000 a year will see his tax rate go up by 2.1 per cent, or $630 more per family.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Conservative Government policy is to have middle and even low income families pick up the tab.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the response of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is that families earning less than $15,000 are entitled to a rebate. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is shameful and utterly ridiculous to brag about rebates to families making do with $15,000 or less a year when we know that the poverty level in Canada applies to any family with less than $22,000 or $23,000 a year, depending on the number of children in the family.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, just to be sure that the Government will do something at least for men and women who live below the poverty level, it should tell these families that any person who earns less than $23,500 a year, as advocated by the Senate committee on poverty, should get a sales tax rebate from the Government. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, it will become quite clear that this Government failed to react when the people urged it to repeal the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption which can only help those who are already well-to-do, the rich in our society.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at the Order of the Day since the Conservatives are in power—

• (1750)

[English]

Since taking office in 1984, we see what the Conservative Party has really intended for families in this country. The tightening and redirecting of family allowances with a review during the summer of 1986, which serves as a potential precursor of a further erosion in family allowances. The tightening and reduction of unemployment insurance benefits to those 50,000 people who were denied unemployment insurance benefits in 1986 because of a unilateral, dictatorial government action to include pension as income for the purpose of unemployment insurance calculation without even waiting for the Forget Commission Report. I am pleased to learn that the Forget Commission has recommended to the Government that pension not be included as income for those 50,000 Canadians who were cut off in 1986 as a result of the Wilson Budget and the Mulroney decisions on the unemployment insurance. I hope that the Government will follow their advice. I urge every one of those 50,000 people to write to their

Member of Parliament and tell them that they want the Government to accept the recommendation which would ensure that at the very least all those who were affected in 1986-87 and 1988 will not have their benefits cut back and reduced.

We have heard the horror stories in the House. We have heard the horror stories from individual families and from the people in my own riding who were employed at Miracle Mart, some with 15, 20 or 25 years service who have been cut loose without a penny and told to find other jobs. But they cannot collect unemployment insurance even when many of them have put their small severance pay into a nest-egg so that they could retire with some dignity.

In the time that this Government has been in office there have been severe cut-backs to job training generally, and in particular to employment programs for youth and women. A few weeks ago in the House we heard the Minister saying that the Government was introducing these new programs for women. He did not tell the people that it was this Government that withdrew programs for women as one of the first acts of its changes to the delivery system in the Canadian Jobs Strategy situation.

Social housing is another area. The impact of these cumulative sales taxes, as well as the decision by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to increase the individual guarantees anywhere from 1.5 per cent to 3 per cent on the purchase of a new home, have added several thousand dollars to the cost of a new home. When you have a situation, as we do now in the City of Toronto, where the real estate market has increased by 30 per cent in the last year, and where most average Torontonians have to come up with somewhere in the neighbourhood of $120,000 to purchase an average home, home ownership is indeed becoming a Canadian dream that will not see fruition and reality under the policies of this Government. Specifically with respect to social housing—

[Translation]

First, the Tory Government turned over the full responsibility for social housing to the provinces; now, it is doing the same thing concerning older workers.

The federal Government states that it wants to withdraw, to surrender the responsibility to the provinces, claiming that they know better the housing situation on their own territory. This sounds like a great idea. The only problem is that the Federal Government should sign first an agreement with all the provinces. Some provinces, like British Columbia, are not at all concerned with social housing. If we, as Members of Parliament, truly believe that there should be a national policy on social housing, we do not have the right to surrender our responsibilities to any provincial Government whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker, the same thing is now happening to older workers.

[English]

The Minister of Finance made another pronouncement. Millions of dollars are saved by eliminating the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. In the last federal Budget the Minister said that we are doing away with the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. It is costing too much money. Instead, we are going to replace it with a program called Program of Older Workers' Adjustment. The Minister said in his Budget that a POWA replacement program would be in place in August of 1986 to assist those hundreds of thousands of older workers who have been laid off and disenfranchised and are completely fed up with a society that even after the recession says to them, "I am sorry, you are going to have to face an unemployment rate that is double what it was before the recession". We have not seen POWA.

An Hon. Member: What is POWA?

Ms. Copps: It is the Program of Older Workers' Adjustment. It is $125 million program which was supposed to replace the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program, specifically targeted to those older workers who are being crushed by technological change. Everyone in all of the ridings is concerned with the people who come into constituencies who after 20 and 30 years' service are laid off. Nothing has been done. Not one single provincial agreement has been signed. The federal Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) went to the provinces and said, "We would like you to come on board with POWA. But we would also like you to foot part of the bill". They do not want to foot part of the bill, because at the same time the federal Government is cutting back on transfer payments in post-secondary education and health.

It is interesting that of the $3 billion that we are coming up with as a result of these tax increases, not one single penny is going toward older workers. Not a single penny is going towards the POWA program which was promised by the Minister.

Am I to understand that my time is nearly up?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You have five seconds.

Ms. Copps: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is more to come on this subject in the future.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

TRADE—CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—ECONOMIC COUNCIL'S PROJECTION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, have I ever had an opportunity to tell you a little about my constituency? I see you nodding your head, Mr. Speaker; I guess I have. Notwithstanding that fact, I will remind you of a few things about my constituency.

The riding of York East is situated in the geographic centre of Metropolitan Toronto. One of its characteristics is the fact that there are more jobs per thousand residents in my constituency than anywhere else in the whole of Metropolitan Toronto, with the exception of the downtown financial core. It is a very industrialized riding.

Some of the businesses and industries in my riding are very large ones, such as IBM. Others—in fact many hundreds of them—are quite small with only a few employees or workers. Many of the workers in the small plants and in the larger ones are worried at the moment. They are worried about the trade negotiations which we are undertaking with the United States. They are worried about what the press likes to call "free trade". They are also worried because they do not know what might happen to their jobs as a result of these trade negotiations.

A few days ago they heard from the Economic Council of Canada. Unfortunately, they do not feel much better as a result of those comments. The Economic Council of Canada said that it was quite possible that some 370,000 new jobs could be created by 1995 as a result of a new trade agreement with the United States. However, the Council also said that all Canadians must be sensitive to the prospect that some citizens will lose their businesses or their jobs as a result of more competition from lower cost United States-made goods entering Canada.

That is a sobering thought, especially if one thought that one's job or business might be affected by the trade negotiations. What would you do, Mr. Speaker, if you lost your job as a result? I know that you are a young man and that you could be retrained. Perhaps that is what you are thinking, that you would go through a retraining program. However, many of my constituents do not see themselves in your age category. They think of themselves as older workers, and they believe it would be impossible for them to retrain. Perhaps they are looking to some special government programs to help them, perhaps special retraining programs. They have not heard anything from the Government as yet about what sort of special retraining programs might be available. They also wonder if there might be some financial assistance for them as a result of what could happen through the trade negotiations. Again they have not heard anything specific from the Government about what those programs might be.

However, they have heard some people say: "Businesses go bankrupt every day. People lose their jobs every day. How can we tell who are the people losing their jobs as a result of trade negotiations and who are the people losing their jobs through inefficiency, lack of good management, or whatever?". These same people say that there is not much point in trying to assist people financially or through retraining programs because they cannot tell whether they are losing their jobs for other reasons or through the trade negotiations. My constituents have heard those comments and are disturbed by them.

They have also heard comments from other people who ask why we should assist businesses which go bankrupt or people who lose their jobs through the trade negotiations, because it will only increase the cost for the winners in the process and they will not be able to afford to compete with the Americans after the negotiations. They are worried by those comments as well.

How are we, Mr. Speaker, you and I, going to reassure our constituents that these trade negotiations are going to be of benefit to them? How are we going to tell them that everything is going to be okay? I think the Government can start by telling you and me and all of our constituents what it calculates both the job gains and job losses to be as a result of these trade negotiations. It can also tell us which industries it believes as a result of its studies are going to be the winning industries and which are going to be the losing industries. Most of all, I think it should be telling us how it is going to cushion the blow. Are we going to have retraining programs? If so, for whom and what kind, and how do people qualify? Are we going to have financial assistance? If so, what is it going to be? Those are the questions that you, I and our constituents are asking, and I know that tonight you and I are waiting with bated breath to hear the answers from the Government.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, it is a pity that you cannot give the answer because I am sure in your previous position as a very important part of the Edmonton Eskimo machine you must have had a lot to do with international trade. Probably. Anyway, the answer I have to give here is the following.

Mr. Murphy: Which has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. Greenaway: The section of the Economic Council of Canada annual review dealing with Canada's trade experience and opportunities discussed the impact of several Canada-U.S. trade scenarios on GNP and employment, based on computer simulations. These simulations made various assumptions, the most favourable of which, such as the removal of trade barriers plus productivity gains, led to an assumed increase in employment of 376,000 by 1995. Other assumptions, such as gradual removal of trade barriers plus productivity gains, removal of trade barriers with no productivity gain, and protectionism with retaliation, all led to different results ranging from an increase in employment by 1995 of 321,000, to a net loss of jobs totalling 528,000.

All such studies based on computer simulations or econometric models make assumptions about how such key elements as productivity, exchange rates, investment and prices respond to the elimination of tariff and non-tariff barriers. Some recent studies include projections done by the University of Maryland, Informetric, and the University of Toronto, as well as those done by the Economic Council of Canada. While estimates of the impact of freer trade on employment vary owing to variations in inputs, the common thread running through all the studies done so far is that freer trade would produce an over-all net national employment gain of between 1 per cent and 3 per cent of the current employment level. With a current employment level of about 11.5 million, that translates into between 115,000 and 345,00 additional jobs.

There, Sir, is your answer.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PAY-OUTS IN ATLANTIC CANADA. (B) REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but add to the comments between the Conservative Member who asked the previous question and the Conservative Member who responded on behalf of the Government. He said that you, as a former member of the Edmonton Eskimos, would know how to deal with the problems that Canadians face in keeping jobs in Canada with regard to free trade negotiations. It reminded me, with the greatest respect, that we did guarantee there would be Canadian jobs for people playing for Canadian teams. That was kind of a Canadian content measure. I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, would have kept your job even without that particular piece of legislation, but others who played for the Canadian Football League did need that sort of protection.

I rise to speak in regard to a question I asked on October 15 of this year. It resulted from the leaking of certain information regarding the Forget Commission. There have been indications that the report of the Forget Commission will result in a drastic change in the way with which unemployment insurance is dealt. This concerns me and my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), so much so that we both asked questions that day in the House of Commons.

We pointed out that Atlantic Canada receives approximately $620 million from the Unemployment Insurance Program. We wanted a guarantee from the Government that that amount of money would continue to go to Atlantic Canada through similar programs if not through the Unemployment Insurance Program. We also spoke at that time about the need to recognize the very fragile economy in Atlantic Canada. The fishery, forestry and mining industries, as well as the small business and other sectors, have relied on part-time and seasonal work for a very long time, and that is not likely to change overnight. We said that regardless of what the federal Government does as a result of the Forget Commission, it must take that into account.

It is not only me and the Leader of the New Democratic Party who are concerned about the Forget Commission. I could quote people from across the land, but one of the most interesting quotes is from the Conservative Minister of Social Services in Nova Scotia, Edmund Morris, who said that this could "wreak havoc on the economy of Nova Scotia".

This is a very serious matter. The fishery and forestry industries have relied on seasonal work for a very long time. The economy of that part of Canada is not changing quickly. The people in that area will continue to rely on unemployment insurance. We are not happy about that or proud of it. However, we are concerned that whatever the Government does as a result of the Forget Commission take into account the economy and job situation which exists in Atlantic Canada. We hope that as a result of the work of the Forget Commission the Government will do all it can to enhance, rather than destroy, that which presently exists in Atlantic Canada.

I raise this issue again at this time because, in response to my questions and those of the Hon. Member for Oshawa, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) would not give us those assurances. The Minister was right to say that he cannot respond completely to the report of the Forget Commission which has not yet come down. However, he could have taken the opportunity to say, in response to our questions, that there will be certain protections for Atlantic Canada, to guarantee that $620 million will still go to that region and to guarantee that there will be some new job creation programs for that region. He did not do that, Mr. Speaker, and that is one of the reasons I raise this issue at this time.

In addition, I believe the people of Atlantic Canada are still very nervous as a result of the scant mention they received in the Throne Speech. The leaks from the Forget Commission indicated that the Government must get up in the House and explain what it is going to do. I am afraid that the Government's response will be that we cannot allow the unemployment insurance program to continue as it is year after year. I am afraid that the Government will admit that there are problems in Atlantic Canada but will say that it will not deal with the problems of the mine workers, small business and the others involved in various industries in Atlantic Canada. Instead, the Government will talk about the need to reform unemployment insurance.

It is not good enough to talk about the need to reform unemployment insurance. The people of Atlantic Canada are demanding from the Government a clear indication of where it is going. Unemployment has not been reduced in Atlantic Canada in the two years during which the Government has been in power. It is one of the regions that has not benefited from the general improvement in the economy. Frankly, they are very nervous about the Government's intentions and are very concerned that there has been no set direction with regard to what is happening in Atlantic Canada.

• (1815)

It is fine for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to say in the Throne Speech that Atlantic Canada will be considered and there will be a new agency set up to see what can be done for Atlantic Canada. The truth is, however, that the Government has been in power for two years and if it is going to do anything for Atlantic Canada it must do so soon, not in a few months prior to an election. If the Government has a plan of action for Atlantic Canada, Quebec and other parts of the country, this is the year for it to act. We want to hear what it will do.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to some of the comments by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), in conjunction with the answer that was already supplied to him by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard).

There are several holes in the comments made by the Hon. Member. First, he stated that there is a lack of understanding or sensitivity to the problems in Atlantic Canada. I just returned from a meeting in which we dealt precisely with that problem. For instance, fishermen in Newfoundland are facing problems because they no longer have access to job opportunities in the off season due to the mechanization of wood cutting, wood hauling and so on. Those job opportunities are gone and the Government is well aware of that because of the representation from those areas that we have in our ranks. We understand those needs.

I suppose the Hon. Member believes that an unemployed person in Atlantic Canada is different from an unemployed person in western Canada. Perhaps he believes that being unemployed is easier in some parts of Canada than in others. That is unfortunate because I believe the unemployed in Canada face the same kinds of problems.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made it very clear, in referring to the comments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his May 23, 1985 Budget Speech, that the Government has no intention of reducing its support to the unemployed anywhere in Canada. It will not do that.

We have asked the Forget Commission to look at our system. I believe most Canadians would agree that the system probably requires changes that may be different for various regions of the country. We have asked the Forget Commission to consider this and bring forward recommendations. We intend to study these recommendations conscientiously and then make changes to improve and simplify the system on behalf of all Canadians, particularly unemployed Canadians. We are looking for improvements and we look forward to the Commission's report.

FINANCE—SALES TAXES—EFFECT ON DISPOSABLE INCOME. (B) PERSONAL TAXES—REQUEST FOR ROLLBACK.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my comments this evening are based not only on the most recent question but a series of questions that I asked in the House following the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Government's unprecedented action in paying out $1 billion to uninsured depositors whose names are being kept secret.

By now we are all too well aware of the circumstances of the bank's failure less than six months after the Government bailed it out and guaranteed its viability. Since then I have asked over 50 questions in the House. I have participated in other adjournment debates and in debate on the Bills brought before the House to deal with the bank bail-out and later, the bail-out of uninsured depositors.

The Government's record of providing answers to my questions and those put by my colleagues has been consistently poor. We were told that all our questions would be answered by a special inquiry. First we were promised a parliamentary inquiry. Then the Government appointed the Estey Commission and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in the House on October 2 of last year, and it is found in Hansard at page 7250:

• (1820)

—the Government appointed Mr. Justice Estey with the broadest possible terms of reference so that the full truth can come out, including the conduct of everyone involved and the policies that went into the matter. Mr. Justice Estey will put the spotlight on those people who are responsible.

We have the Estey Report now and, indeed, it is for the most part a very thorough and illuminating document. It confirms much of what we have said in the House about the bail-out being undertaken in an atmosphere of panic and haste without proper information or adequate follow-up.

The report does not answer all of our questions, but the position of the Government appears to be that now the report is public, the case is closed. This is not so. I agree with Mr. Justice Estey when he says in his report at page 21:

It may be that other forums—having different objectives will reach different conclusions with respect to duties and obligations of the participants in these events.

I am not prepared to close the book on the bank failures and the bail-out of uninsured depositors because the principle of ministerial accountability is at the heart of our parliamentary system. That principle is not being observed.

The Government has made much of the fact that the Estey Report does not put blame on Ministers for events prior to the CCB bail-out. However, the report condemns in no uncertain terms the way in which the decision to bail out the bank was reached. It condemns the bail-out package itself and the almost total lack of follow-up action from the Government. The report says about the bail-out, at page 125:

The concept adopted was—at best half baked.

—this bail-out was ill-starred from the outset and had no chance of success.

And at page 174:

The bail-out program seems to have been conducted more like the launching of a toboggan. Once it was placed on the slope, its course, speed and destination were left to gravity and the toboggan. There was no steering mechanism and no machinery for change of direction or increased financial support or indeed any other adjustment, whatever risk may loom up.

And on page 173:

—the Minister of State appears to have made no effort to press for an early and organized hands-on examination of the loan assets of the bank.

That was after the bail-out was decided upon. And at page 175 it says:

The combination of the lack of information at the time the rescue program was adopted and announced, and the tenor of that announcement and subsequent statements by the Ministers—boxed the Government into a position where the only defensible alternative was universal compensation of creditors of the bank.

Under a system of ministerial accountability, someone has to be in charge. Our traditional notion of ministerial accountability says that Ministers of the Crown are responsible and that ignorance of an issue, or being poorly served by officials, does not absolve a Minister from responsibility for decisions he or she has taken. This is fundamental to our system of Government and it is not acceptable for the Government to refuse to take responsibility for its actions which are costing the taxpayers close to $2 billion.

As I mentioned earlier, I and my colleagues still have questions to ask. I would like to have answers to those questions and some indication that the principle of ministerial accountability means something to this Government.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I might indicate at the outset that I checked with the Table officer and I understand that the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) was going to deal with the question she raised on October 23, at page 663 of Hansard. That question deals with tax reform and sales tax. One subject with which it does not deal is the Estey Commission. I would be more than happy to speak to the question of the Estey Commission with respect to those two banks, but if the Hon. Member has indicated, as I believe she has, that she only wants us to deal with the question raised on that date, it is very hard to reply. Therefore, my answer will be like a ship which passes another ship in the night and will have nothing to do with the subject raised by the Hon. Member late in the day this afternoon, without indicating, if I understand correctly, that that is the subject she wanted us to deal with.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think I should allow a point of order here to the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

• (1825)

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the confusion arose. I was expecting to deal with the issue of the Estey Commission. If the error arose in my office, then I certainly regret it. While I appreciate the Parliamentary Secretary's offer to give me a reply with respect to a question concerning sales tax, I agree with him that it would not be a very sensible procedure.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, even if the error arose because the office of the Hon. Member had the wrong date, or the wrong question, if I may I would like to put on the record what the Government has to say in reply to her question concerning sales tax. She has had a chance to speak in the House and I think that sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe a situation such as this has arisen before on the "Late Show". It has happened that an Hon. Member has raised a specific question and the Parliamentary Secretary has responded to a totally different question. I think it only fair to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to read whatever he has into the record. If the Hon. Member wishes to ask another question on the "Late Show" at another time she will be allowed to do so.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to correct the matter. If the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary wishes to read his answer into the record, I have no objection to that. However, I would like to make it clear as a courtesy to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Parliamentary Secretary and Members of the House, that I said that if the error arose in my office then I regret it. I am not saying that the error did arise in my office. It could very well have arisen at the Table or anywhere else.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is perfectly fine. The Parliamentary Secretary may now respond.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, with respect to a question that was not raised by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), in her original question she questioned the benefits to Canadians of a tax reform package which is pivotal to what we will be doing in the next two years since we know it is so important to Canadians. The Hon. Member indicated that reducing personal taxes with one hand and taking revenue back with the other in the form of an increased sales tax was diabolical, or some such term—

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have never used such language. I really object to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have allowed these points of order. The question that was to be raised on the "Late Show" was with respect to sales taxes—effect on disposable income. (B) Personal taxes—request for rollback, as reported in Hansard on October 23, 1986, at page 663. I hope that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will now complete his remarks so that we can call it a day. I do not wish any other points of order to be raised, particularly since this is the Adjournment Debate and it is something which is not usual in this circumstance.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member's view of the matter was simplistic, partisan and narrow in view of the tax reforms we are considering.

[Translation]

In her statement, the Hon. Member lost sight of the basic objective of our tax reform, which is to make each component of the taxation system, that is personal income tax, corporate income tax and the sales tax, more equitable, simpler and more efficient. A lowering of personal income tax rates is a major objective of our tax reform, but it is not the only one. The first objective of the Government is to solve the problems in each of these taxation fields.

Once they are met, these objectives will provide lasting benefits for Canadians. For instance, Mr. Speaker, the federal sales tax now has several weaknesses: it favours imports rather than goods produced in Canada; it penalizes our exporters and it differentiates between the producers of similar products. The Government is looking at reforms which will ensure that the sales tax applies more consistently in all sectors of the economy. The widening of the tax base will also help to reduce the tax rate. This will improve both the equity and the efficiency of the tax, not to mention the fact that it will make compliance much simpler for businesses and the administration much easier for Revenue Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary but his time has expired. Only three minutes are allowed for a reply.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2) the committee requests a comprehensive response.

This report deals with the income tax remission order granted to Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company, a subsidiary of Dome Petroleum Limited. The committee is concerned that the remission order conferred a substantial benefit without Parliament's approval. The remission was used in an unconventional and unprecedented way to implement government policy rather than to provide relief from an aspect of the tax system. Moreover, the amount of the remission was not disclosed in the public accounts as required under the Financial Administration Act. The use of a remission order in this way denied Parliament an opportunity to consider a significant expenditure of public funds.

The committee is recommending that disclosure of all income tax remission orders be required and, further, that prior parliamentary approval be required for remissions exceeding $20 million in value.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

RAILWAYS—POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for giving me the floor at this time, since I realize that under the provisions of Standing Order 29, your office should have been given notice one hour before, and I was unable to meet that requirement. Thank you very much.

[English]

Pursuant to Standing Order 29 I give notice that I wish to move a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent and pressing importance, namely the situation at Moncton, New Brunswick, where 1,000 jobs are threatened as a result of a decision by CN, a Crown corporation, to close its railway shops there.

I have previously asked for an emergency debate on this issue. In fact, I made the request on June 18, 1986, shortly after CN announced its intention to sell the Moncton railway shops to Canadian General Electric. However, things have changed since then. The proposed sale to Canadian General Electric, which would have salvaged 300 jobs, appears to be very much in jeopardy and will likely not materialize. The deal hinged on the various unions in the Moncton area agreeing to waive a "no contracting out" clause. When the deal was taken to a vote the membership of two of the seven unions refused to accept the proposal because the deal was unacceptable to them.

Things are right back where they started and the complete closure of the shops—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand the Hon. Member's concern. I wonder whether we may not move directly to the motion. Standing Order 29(3) states that "the Member shall rise in his or her place and present without argument the statement referred to in section (2) of this Standing Order". I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern. I think we should move directly to the motion and your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: It is the feeling of the Chair that an Hon. Member rising on an application such as this should have an opportunity to present the basic facts and reasons for moving the motion. The Chair is in the hands of the House. Perhaps the Hon. Member could conclude his remarks briefly and present the motion itself. I intend to defer my decision until 3 o'clock.

Mr. Robichaud: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, things are right back to where they started. There is a threat that over 1,000 jobs will be lost. A deal was in process with CGE and CN which would have saved some jobs, but it now seems that talks have been suspended and that Moncton could lose 1,000 jobs. In a province where the unemployment rate is 13 per cent this would be a disastrous loss. For these very serious reasons I respectfully move:

That this House do now adjourn.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for his speech on a very important matter, but I shall postpone my decision until three o'clock this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE AND CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-15, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour today to address the House on a matter of grave concern for all Canadians—child sexual abuse. We are here to do something about this. Our younger generation is the promise of Canada's future. We have a responsibility to protect children from sexual abuse and exploitation and to deter those who would seek to victimize them.

It is a high priority of the Government and myself, as Minister of Justice, to address this issue in an effective and sensitive manner. To that end I am asking for the support of all Members in this House in order that this legislation may be dealt with without delay so that those children who are presently being exploited can have some protection under the law.

In 1984, the Committee on Sexual Offences against Children and Youths, the Badgely Committee, reported that half of all Canadian females and one-third of males are at some time victims of unwanted sexual acts, 80 per cent of which occur when the victims are children or youths. Over the last two years police departments and child welfare agencies have seen a significant increase in the rate of reporting of child sexual abuse cases by as much as 25 per cent to 50 per cent.

[Translation]

This disturbing increase in the number of cases reported is in some measure due to the fact that both the experts and the general public are now more aware of the problem of sexual offences against children. Furthermore, children themselves are also better aware of the parameters of this problem, thanks to educational programs that teach children not to submit to the various physical advances that may be made by their elders or by persons in a position of authority.

[English]

In April, 1985, the report of the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution, known as the Fraser Report, was published. The work of the Fraser Committee in part overlapped that of the Badgley Committee so that recommendations were made by both committees on certain aspects of child sexual abuse such as the provisions presently existing in the Criminal Code which are applicable to child sexual abuse and to juvenile prostitution.

The Badgely Committee and the Fraser Committee have made a significant contribution in identifying the scope of the child sexual abuse problems in Canada in those areas where present legal provisions have failed us. In addition, officials in the Department of Justice and other concerned Departments have met with more than 300 individuals representing more than 200 different organizations across Canada to gather the views of certain non governmental organizations and private sector agencies concerned with children's issues about the recommendations of these committees. Consultations were also conducted with the provinces. As a result of the review of the recommendations of the two committees, and these consultations, legislative amendments were developed to deal with the problems of child sexual abuse, reception of children's evidence and juvenile prostitution. The findings of the Badgley and Fraser Committees and the consultations with the provinces and the public clearly pointed out that the present Criminal Code provisions do not adequately cover the full range of sexual behaviour that children may be induced to engage in, nor are young girls and boys afforded the equal degree of protection of the law required by our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

This Bill would create three new criminal offences, namely sexual interference, invitation to sexual touching, and sexual exploitation, to ensure that children under 14 years of age are protected almost absolutely from all manner of sexual contact while children up to the age of 18 years would be protected from sexual exploitation by anyone in a position of trust or authority or on whom the child is dependent.

The new offence of sexual interference is designed to cover a wide range of sexually abusive behaviour consistent with the Badgley recommendations. The consent of the child to being touched for a sexual purpose is irrelevant. The child is to be protected from all touchings for a sexual purpose, with one exception. This exception would cover youths aged 12 or 13 who are not more than three years older than the complainant. Of course, if the complainant under 14 did not consent to the sexual activity with a 12 or 13 year old accused, the young accused could be charged under present sexual assault provisions.

Since the age of criminal responsibility is 12, children under 12 would not be held criminally responsible for any sexual activity. Over-all, the effect of this new offence would be to provide an almost absolute protection to children under 14 years of age from being touched for a sexual purpose.

The Badgley Committee found that very young children were sometimes bribed or otherwise induced to perform sexual acts upon another individual. Under the present law, no sexual assault is committed by the inviter in this situation and prosecution under the indecent act provisions may not always be successful.

In order to ensure more complete protection for children under 14 from all manner of sexual abuse, a new offence would be created termed invitation to sexual touching. It would be an offence for anyone to invite a child under 14 to touch him or her for a sexual purpose. It would also be an offence for anyone to invite young children to engage in sexual touching of themselves or others.

The two new offences which would afford protection to those under 14, sexual interference and invitation to sexual touching, would be hybrid offences with Crown election whether to proceed by way of indictment or summary conviction. Where the Crown decided to proceed by way of indictment, the maximum penalty available would be a ten-year sentence of imprisonment.

The proposed third new offence, that of sexual exploitation, would protect young people under the age of 18 from sexual activity with an adult who is either in a position of trust or authority, or on whom this young person is in a relationship of dependency. This offence recognizes that a young person requires special protection from those individuals who would use their position of authority, or the child's trust or dependency to exploit them.

There was a great deal of concern expressed by child care workers and others, as well as by the Badgley and Fraser Committees that those accused of sexual offences against children should not be able to avoid prosecution easily by arguing they did not know the age of the child involved. With respect to the three new offences, and in fact all the provisions that would protect children, mistake of age will not be a defence unless the accused took every reasonable step to ascertain the age of the complainant.

There is another form of sexual abuse of our youth that has increasingly been openly practised across Canada. It is the exploitation of our children by those who seek their services as prostitutes and by those who would benefit financially from putting them to work as prostitutes. This Bill would create a new indictable offence punishable by a maximum sentence of five years for anyone in any place to obtain the services of a juvenile prostitute. Both the Badgley and Fraser Committees recommended penalizing the customer of a young prostitute, as did the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Justice and Legal Affairs in 1983 in its report on prostitution.

The House may recall that I had the honour of being my Party's spokesperson on the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee at the time. I recall the deliberations and many thoughtful presentations made to that committee by individuals and groups across Canada. It is my honour today, as Minister of Justice, to be putting forward legislative changes to deal with the problems addressed by the Justice Committee three years ago. This Bill would also increase the penalties for living from the avails of a prostitute from the present ten-year maximum sentence of imprisonment to 14 years, if a young prostitute under 18 was involved.

[Translation]

It is not sufficient, however, to create new sexual offences and to amend the present provisions of the Criminal Code accordingly. As the Badgley Committee pointed out and as consultation with non-governmental organizations has confirmed, it often happens that very young children cannot benefit from the protection of criminal law because they cannot be sworn and, consequently, cannot testify in court. Those who abuse very young children can often do so a number of times or abuse more than one child without having much to fear from the law.

The Bill we are about to consider provides a number of amendments to the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act, in order to resolve the problem of the admissibility of evidence given by children and to put in place more flexible mechanisms to gather that evidence.

[English]

An amendment to the Criminal Code would remove the current need for corroboration before a conviction can be sustained when it is based only on the unsworn evidence of a child. Amendments to the Canada Evidence Act to enable more children to testify would provide a procedure whereby a judge would examine a child under 14 to determine whether the child could be sworn or heard to affirm. If the child cannot be sworn or make an affirmation, the judge would determine whether the child could be heard on promising to tell the truth. The weight to be given to such evidence would, of course, be a matter for the judge or jury to decide.

A further proposal would abrogate the doctrine of recent complaint. It has been observed that children are frequently unable to bring themselves to make a disclosure of their sexual victimization until a significant time has passed. This inability has resulted in offenders evading prosecution and indeed punishment.

It is also proposed that a videotape of a child victim under 18 describing the acts complained of could be shown in court if the child adopted the contents while testifying. During the series of consultations held with groups and individuals across Canada, my officials were told of numerous instances where young children felt intimidated by the nearness of the accused in the courtroom. Further amendments would permit the judge to exclude the accused from the courtroom during the testimony of the child complainant in a sexual offence case, if the judge believes that the exclusion of the accused is necessary to obtain a full and candid testimony from a child. The excluded accused would, of course, be able to watch the proceedings on closed circuit television and would have the facility and ability to communicate with his or her legal counsel.

We have often heard that sexual abuse is a cyclical problem, that individuals who are abused as children often abuse children in their adult years. It is my hope that this legislation will assist in breaking that cycle of abuse by using our system of justice to protect those who cannot protect themselves, the innocent victims of child sexual abuse. It is not my intention to hold out these amendments to the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act as a solution in and of themselves to the complex and tragic problem of child sexual abuse. However, and this I stress, these amendments are an integral part of the commitment of the federal Government to do everything reasonably possible to stop this damaging conduct.

My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), is actively co-ordinating an effective federal approach at the policy and program level to combat child sexual abuse. My colleagues and I will be working closely with the provinces and territories to ensure an integrated effort. The amendments before the House, in the context of all the other steps being taken, will send out a real signal that society will not tolerate the continuation of child sexual abuse and exploitation. We will use the full weight of the criminal law to afford our children the protection they have the right to expect.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party, her Majesty's Official Opposition, I am very happy to participate in the debate. I begin by assuring the Government and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that we support action in this area. We welcome the Bill. While we have some concerns I will deal with in a moment, we feel this is an important area for action with respect to Criminal Code amendments. Even before the—

[Translation]

Even before the Badgley Report, there was a feeling among the general public about the seriousness of child abuse and people realized that it was a matter that had not been satisfactorily addressed by our society. What really came out of the Badgley Report was that the extent of the problem was far greater than anyone had suspected.

[English]

A problem was revealed by the Badgley Commission of a proportion which could hardly have been anticipated by many Canadians. The Badgley Report makes recommendations for many bodies to act on. While there are recommendations which cannot be implemented by Government, there are a certain number which can be, including strengthening the Criminal Code to deal with the problem of child abuse and molestation of children. I am very glad the Government has reintroduced this legislation. I would have been happy to deal with it in the last session of Parliament but I am glad it has been raised in this session. I look forward to the important work the committee will do in looking at the recommendations and to seeing this Bill legislated, hopefully, in this session of Parliament.

Let me say, however, that I think we have to give the public more time to react to the Bill than we seem to be doing. It is true that this Bill is virtually the same as Bill C-114, but I do not think too many of the groups which looked at Bill C-114 realize that the Bill has been reintroduced in this session. I hope that, when it comes to committee, at least three or four weeks' notice will be given to communities which are interested, that the Bill is here, that important considerations are before Parliament in this area, that new crimes are being created and that traditional safeguards for the accused are being removed, so that there will be some opportunity for those interested in these questions to get their act together and put a submission in before the parliamentary committee. I think the committee's work will be important because we are creating new crimes and removing traditional safeguards which accused have relied on in the past in connection with offences against young children.

I think it important that there be new crimes created and that some of the safeguards which have prevented cases from getting to court in the past be looked at and removed. Nevertheless, when we make changes such as that, it is important they be done with notice and opportunity so that members of the Committee on Justice can consider all the points of view which have to be brought to bear before steps are taken.

A fundamental step on which we must all agree, I submit on behalf of the Official Opposition, is to find ways of getting more cases where young people are sexually abused before the courts of the land. Whatever the safeguards and definitions of the past, the Badgley Report is right in observing that not enough cases have come before the courts. I think judicial decisions, condemnations and judgments against accused in connection with sexual offences have an enormous deterrent effect.

People have felt comfortable about getting away with sexual abuse partly because it involved the family where, one might have wrongly felt in the past, the law did not venture and partly because children were involved. Offenders might have felt, because of their more powerful position, that they could get away with it. Whatever the reasons, we have to throw light on this area of behaviour and bring reprehensible behaviour before the courts and obtain more convictions.

There have been barriers in the past which have prevented these cases from coming forward. In part, this has been because of definitions. As the Minister has indicated, and here he has our support, some new offences are being created with new definitions of unacceptable behaviour in relation to young people. I am particularly pleased to see the particular provision with respect to "persons in authority". I am pleased with the provision with respect to the protection of children under 14 and of the greater precision which is attached to the exemption for sex play among children which we must recognize is a normal part of growing up through adolescence. The law must recognize that, and is doing so, with the exception provided for in that provision. But that is not an exception from which an adult should be able to benefit. Again, the Minister's provision makes it clear that exploitation by adults of young children for sexual purposes by adults will be a punishable activity. It will be a crime and will be brought before the courts, if it can be.

On the other side, there is a treatment of the traditional barriers which have prevented behaviour of this type from coming before the courts. There is, first, the qualification of the complainant. The Government is proposing the removal of the requirement that corroboration be retained. If one looks at the cases, one sees that the kind of corroboration asked for by the courts has provided cover and has made it impossible to bring forward many cases which should have been brought forward. Where an adult organizes his assault on the young person with care, corroboration will not be available. Those of us who have practised in the area, and Members of Parliament who have followed the amendments of the Criminal Code in this area in the past, know that the corroboration requirement, which has no counterpart for offences against adults, has probably been the single greatest reason why cases have not been able to be developed to the point where they can be brought before the court. This requirement is to be removed.

• (1140)

Second, we are looking at the acceptability of the complainant's evidence. Is the young person competent to tell a story? Is the young person aware enough of the consequences of what he or she is doing? Is he or she conscious of the difference between truth and falsehood so that a court can be asked to accept such evidence?

We are moving from a point in the law at which courts focused on admissibility to a point where they now focus on questions of weight. In general, I welcome very much this development in the law. Our traditional British system of justice when compared with other systems in the world—and one has to recognize them as fair in themselves—more than the civil law system and other systems I have looked at tends to exclude evidence which tells the trier of fact that certain matters cannot be taken into account.

In many other systems the approach is different. In such other systems the court is allowed to consider evidence that is relevant and to say what weight it should be given. The Bill before us seems to be moving more toward a system in which formerly inadmissible evidence will be considered while the question of what weight it should be given will be raised.

I also have some reservations about the sufficient intelligence test that the Minister proposes be maintained in the law. While I agree that a judge ought to assess the capacity of a young person to tell a story as it happened—something about which the judge will have to make some judgment—"sufficient intelligence" is a test that has already been looked at by the courts. If one looks at the leading case in the field, Horsberg v. The Queen which dates back to 1968, one will see that the sufficient intelligence test boils down to a requirement that the complainant be of above-average intelligence. This is a case which went to the Supreme Court of Canada. The above-average intelligence standard is a high standard. It is applicable to less than one-half of the people in a given group. It means that more than one-half of the children who might otherwise be complainants will fail the test. A great many cases that ought to be brought forward will not be brought forward.

While a judge ought to look at the intelligence of the complainant to apply the sufficient intelligence test, according to legal precedent this will result in the exclusion of a great deal of evidence rather than in its admissibility. This is subject to the question of how much weight is given to the evidence of the young person who tells a story and who is intelligent enough to be able to put forward a story that he or she believes to be true and that reflects a proper recollection of the incidents alleged to constitute a crime. This is a test which I will want to look at in the committee.

I would now like to deal with the removal of other traditional safeguards recommended in the Bill. First, there is the removal of the warning that the judge traditionally gives in the case of even formerly admissible evidence by a young person to the trier of fact that it is evidence of a young person and that the trier of fact must be extra careful in considering it. This warning will not be necessary in the future under the regime to be established by the legislation which is before us. I think that is a positive move.

The admission of videotape evidence taken soon after an incident occurs is an extremely important and welcome addition to the law. This means that shortly after the commission of an offence, the young person will be able to tell the story on videotape. I ask parenthetically why there could not be provision to have the story placed on sound tape. There may be some circumstances in which video cameras are not available and where evidence could be given on an ordinary tape recording. Videotape gives the trier of fact an extra dimension in which to make judgments. One can watch the demeanor of the child telling the story. This helps one to conclude whether or not the child has been truthful and accurate. However, as I have said, video equipment may not always be available. If we are to trust a judge or a jury to make a judgment about the truthfulness of the evidence of a child then a sound recording may be useful. This is one of the issues on which we will question the expert witnesses who appear in committee to see whether or not such a provision can be added. From the stories I have heard from people who practise in this field, four or five years can go by between the time an offence is committed and the time the accused is found guilty or not. Thus videotaping a complainant at a time closer to the incident will reflect more accurately the vocabulary and life experience of a child. The evidence a child gives in court will be much different four or five years later because of the evolution of the child, because of his or her greater understanding of the sexual behaviour of adults and because of his or her own sexuality. That in itself is an argument for admitting a videotape or some other similarly recorded earlier recollection.

The provision with respect to the videotape calls for it to be made soon after the incident complained of. I wish to suggest that perhaps a videotape should be made soon after the child reveals the commission of an offence. Sometimes a period of time goes by before a child who has been subjected to the conduct about which he or she complains reports it. Again, there may be other intervals between the time of complaint and the time of trial. To limit videotaping to soon after the incident occurs will exclude videotape evidence in a case in which a child waits a year or two before deciding to complain about certain behaviour. I wish to discuss in committee the opening of a window for videotaping not only soon after the incident occurs, as is presently proposed, but soon after the disclosure or the making of a complaint by a young person. In general, I think that videotaping of this nature, or any taping, will enhance the ability of the court to make a proper decision.

I now wish to speak about the exclusion of the accused from the courtroom, which is unprecedented in our system of justice. The argument for exclusion is that the complainant when giving evidence in court could be intimidated while he or she is doing so while the accused is sitting in the same room, glaring, as he or she is entitled to do, at the young person in the witness box. The thought is that if the accused is removed then the young person might feel more free to tell the story. One could say the same about other people around the accused. In many cases, as in incest cases, for example, there might be other adults present in the courtroom whose presence could be intimidating to the young person. If this power is to be given, we ought to see if the judge might also have the power to exclude others who, by being present in the court while the young person is telling the story, might prevent the young person from feeling comfortable about telling the entire story.

Let us look at this from the other side for a moment. Nothing would be worse than developing a regime under which an accused would be denied a fair opportunity to defend himself or herself. What is the impact on the court of removing the accused and perhaps a larger group of people during testimony? I believe it is very prejudicial. If I were sitting on a jury and the accused was ordered by the judge to leave the courtroom along with others because of his or her demeanour, I would find it pretty prejudicial. It might also damage the ability of the accused to defend himself.

The statute calls for the video taping of the procedure so that somehow or other, the accused will know what is going on in the courtroom while he is away and will be able to instruct counsel or respond to counsel. The machinery that is proposed here is a radical innovation. While I welcome it and believe it will achieve the basic goal of the Official Opposition, which is to see more of these cases come before the court and be dealt with by the court, we want to be fair as well. We want to be certain that the machinery the Government has in mind will not prejudice a jury or a trier of fact and will not tend to lead to convictions in cases where the accused has a defence and is innocent.

What I am about to say applies to this particular provision as well as to some of the other provisions. There are other jurisdictions in the world that are trying all these different methods. I do not think there is anything in this legislation, new and radical as it is for Canada, that has not been tried elsewhere.

It is not good enough for the Government to defend a procedure by saying that it has been tried elsewhere. We need to know how it has worked where it has been tried. In connection with divorce reform, some of the measures that were brought forward were called terrific by the Government because they had been tried elsewhere, but we heard evidence from elsewhere that it was not working as well as the Government had hoped it would work here.

In fairness to future accused and in the desire for fair trials, we want to know how these measures have worked where they have been tried. Have they been beneficial, have they resulted in miscarriages of justice or have they resulted in decisions acceptable to the population, decisions that provided a deterrent to the community and showed that young people are being protected by the courts of the land? Have these measures shown that certain kinds of behaviour will be punished and that there is a greater risk than there had once been of this type of behaviour being found out and dealt with by the courts?

The final issue with which I would like to deal regarding the reduction of safeguards is the matter of prior sexual activity. In the areas of sexual assault and aggravated sexual assault, the former Government of which I was a part led a move away from evidence of prior sexual activity being brought forward to prejudice the court against a complaint in rape cases. All of us at the bar know that the development of the law had been so regrettable and unfortunate that a woman with a certain kind of prior sexual behaviour could never bring a complaint before a court. Nothing that was done to her of which she would complain would result in a conviction because of the prejudice created by her former sexual behaviour. That was an unacceptable development of the law and it was important to make a move that permitted anyone who was raped, whatever her prior sexual behaviour, to bring forward a complaint and to obtain justice in the courts of the land.

In the legislation before us, the Government is proposing in proposed Section 246.6 that no evidence shall be adduced by or on behalf of the accused concerning the sexual activity of the complainant with any person other than the accused. Again, I welcome this provision but I want to be certain that we will not be moving too far in a direction which will prevent relevant evidence from coming before the trier of fact so that he may deal with the question of its weight. How much can one safeguard the truth while still allowing for a wide latitude in the admissibility of evidence that is logically relevant?

There is a lot in this Bill. It is very important that we move it forward. It is important that there be tougher laws in this area designed to punish offenders who target young people and abuse them sexually. I hope that the process of Parliament will work quickly. I would like to assure the Minister of my co-operation. However, I must note that the Minister's predecessor had a very poor track record with the legislation that was brought forward.

I can name chapter and verse a number of the Bills that were brought through the House, and I would if the Minister were here, which have been struck down as violating the Charter. I believe it behooves all of us to take more care than the Government has taken to date of the Charter implications and the requirements of the Charter for fair trials, free speech and free access. We do not want to see the Government continue to abuse the Charter and the goal of the Charter which is to enhance the rights and freedoms of Canadians. That kind of concern which has not meant much to the Government so far must mean a great deal to the Opposition.

When we deal with legislation, as important as it is, we do not want to see the Conservative tendency which one also sees in the United States toward having pious declarations become legislation and particularly criminal legislation for which people may be convicted and serve time. We do not want to translate a public sentiment into a criminal statute. We do want to respond to a public sentiment and, within our traditions of fairness, free speech and all the other rights and freedoms we enjoy in Canada, we do want to try to advance society and protect young people and women, but at the same time we want to do this in a way that is consistent with the fundamental freedoms that make this a liberal democracy. However often Canadians rally for a drastic solution to a problem, when cases come before the courts as a result of drastic sentiments, they want the people who appear before the courts of Canada to have fair treatment.

Criminal Code

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate on this very important piece of legislation, Bill C-15. It is important and long overdue legislation designed to deal with the hidden tragedy of child abuse.

• (1200)

It was in August of 1984 that the Badgley Commission submitted its report to the Government documenting what it termed "a national crisis" of the sexual abuse of young people. There has been debate and considerable discussion since that time as to the actual extent of child sexual abuse, and the extent to which it may be a phenomenon which is increasing in our society, or merely one which is being reported in increasing numbers. Nevertheless, no Member of this House can deny that we all have an obligation to deal quickly and effectively with this tragedy.

The Badgley Commission recommendations were tabled in August of 1984. Shortly after that I called upon the newly elected Government to move forward and take action to deal with the concerns that were raised by that commission, not necessarily to implement all of the recommendations chapter and verse by any means, but to recognize that a problem does exist and it is one that should be addressed. It took the Government over a year before it even began to respond to the recommendations of the Badgley Commission.

Approximately one year later, in August of 1985, the ministry embarked upon a series of consultations. These consultations were rushed so much that many of the groups consulted strongly protested the nature and the process of the consultations. They were also concerned that the Department of National Health and Welfare was not involved in those negotiations, and certainly should have been.

Following those consultations the Government introduced two Bills last June. This is once again a lag of almost another year. It is a matter of considerable regret that in the concern that was expressed, in my view quite properly with respect to the companion Bill C-114 on pornography, many of the important questions raised by the legislation on child sexual abuse were completely ignored.

Quite understandably, the press focused on the repressive and Neanderthal provisions of Bill C-114, the pornography legislation, and completely ignored many of the provisions dealing with child sexual abuse in Bill C-113. Much of the important focus and concern that had been raised at the time of the tabling of the Badgley Commission Report was lost in the publicity and the concern over pornography legislation.

I am pleased that the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has decided to move forward with the child abuse legislation separate and apart from Bill C-114, the pornography legislation. If it is his intention to bring forward similar legislation to that brought forward by his colleague, the now Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), I would suggest that he delay that as long as he possibly can because it certainly will meet with vigorous resistance from many Members in this House.

That is not to say that we in this Party believe that action is not necessary to deal with the present archaic laws in Canada on pornography. Clearly such action is needed, particularly in the area of violent pornography and pornography which is degrading. To suggest that we take the sweeping approach to stomping out any depiction of consensual adults sexual activity, as advocated by many of the Minister's colleagues, is surely an approach that we cannot accept.

I would suggest to all Members of this House that they go back two or three years and review the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in dealing with similar legislation on pornography and sexual abuse of young people. That legislation was Bill C-53. The present Minister of Justice spoke at that time to the Justice Committee with considerable force and eloquence against the proposals of the previous Government in Bill C-53. I intend, in the course of the deliberations on this legislation before the Justice Committee, which I understand will be dealing with this legislation, to remind the Minister and his colleagues on that committee of the position that he took at that time on that legislation. I hope that perhaps, with that consistency for which he is so well known, he will in fact adopt a similar position in response to amendments that I intend to put forward to this legislation.

The Badgley Commission documented a very disturbing human tragedy involving young people in Canada. It is a largely hidden tragedy, as I indicated earlier. The scars of the sexual abuse of young people can be borne for a lifetime. Too often the abuse of young people is then in turn repeated, and that vicious cycle is continued. The Minister referred earlier to this. This is a cycle which we must make every possible effort to break. Clearly there can be debate as to the actual extent of child sexual abuse in Canada. There are those who argue that the estimates by the Badgley Commission are excessive and unreasonable. Whatever the extent, it is clear that this Parliament must take firm and effective action now to deal with that crisis.

Clearly changes in the law are required. There is no doubt about that. I intend to comment on the Minister's specific proposals.

I believe it is also essential that we recognize that changes in the law alone are totally inadequate to deal with this serious problem. Indeed, changes in the criminal law may in fact result in a significantly larger number of people coming into direct contact with the criminal justice system. If the additional resources are not put in place to deal with those individuals—here I speak both of victims and offenders—then we will be doing a disservice and not a service to the victims of sexual abuse.

There must be a clear recognition of the need for significantly enhanced resources both provincially and federally to deal with the problem of child sexual abuse. We have to look at the prevention as well as the assisting of victims of child sexual abuse and resources to treat offenders, those who would abuse the children themselves sexually. I have spoken about the victims of child sexual abuse. It is important to note that there are also adult survivors who bear the scars of sexual abuse that they may have suffered as children. There must be resources to assist the adult survivors of sexual abuse to cope with those problems and overcome the scars and the pain which they have suffered. In short, we have to attempt to break that cycle of child sexual abuse which is so pervasive.

In this regard, it is essential to note that many of the resouces which should be in place are seriously lacking. Many of the legislative provisions at the provincial level are seriously lacking. I believe that there are only four provinces, four jurisdictions, which even include sexual abuse as part of their definition of children in need of protection in their child protection statutes. Clearly that must change. While we cannot rewrite provincial legislation, we can certainly send a strong signal of our concerns.

It is also important that we look at the enhanced provision of services for abused children. There are many omissions in this area. There is duplication of effort, the absence of effective co-ordination between service programs, and ineffective evaluation of whether policy initiatives, guidelines, and programs are actually working and benefiting children. Too often provincial jurisdictions are not putting the amount of money into this problem that they should be. Too often professionals that work in the field are not paying the type of attention that they should be.

In a paper in which Lorenne Clark did a critique of the Badgley Report she stated:

> —how is one to make sense of the fact that most jurisdictions do not even recognize sexual abuse of children as behaviour constituting a sufficient condition for declaring a child to be a child in need of protection, that the agencies dealing with the problem do not even know whether the guidelines they are following and the programs they have developed either work or benefit those for whom they are intended, and do not function either as major direct recipients of complaints or even as frequently utilized referrals, and that in two-thirds of the sexual abuse cases coming to them, they themselves may have contributed to that abuse because their belief in the importance of keeping the families of these victims intact led them to refrain from intervention when they already knew that sexual abuse had taken place?

We have illustrations from across Canada about the absence of resources. In Halifax, Children's Aid Society workers now deal with about 50 cases each. This is a far too heavy case load. There is a three month waiting period for psychological treatment of sexual abuse. Similar inadequacies have been documented across the country in the summary of the consultations prepared by Neville Avison of the federal Ministry of Justice. I should like to quote what I think Mr. Avison said very well in his report. He said:

> It was believed to be useless, or even worse than useless, for the federal Government to address the legal concerns without having—plans being implemented for the infrastructure of programs and services that would be required.

I strongly support that statement. We need resources at both provincial and federal levels. There must be an effective co-ordination of the involvement of the federal Government in this area. For that reason I very much regret that the Ministry of National Health and Welfare has not played a higher profile or a more active role in the whole question of dealing with child sexual abuse.

It was in June of this year that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) said that the Government would be announcing shortly the appointment of a special adviser on child sexual abuse. He said that there would be committees of regional advisers as well. One can debate whether there should be a special adviser reporting to the Minister or a commissioner reporting to the Prime Minister as Badgley recommended. However, what surely should be beyond debate is the suggestion that the Government should move quickly to ensure that there is an effective co-ordination of the response of the federal Government in this area. The Minister said in June of this year that the Government would be announcing shortly the appointment of this special adviser. It is now November and we are still waiting. Five months later and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is unable to join us in the debate this morning, has failed to act on the promise which he made to move forward with an effective co-ordinating body. I would hope the Minister would recognize his responsibilities and take action on this matter immediately.

As well, the Minister of National Health and Welfare announced with great fanfare that the Government intended to spend the sum of $20 million over five years to deal with the whole question of child sexual abuse. The evidence is clear that such an amount is a pittance and falls far short of what is necessary to respond effectively to the concerns of those who are active in the field of child sexual abuse. That $20 million is approximately half the amount the Government is wasting on the construction of a federal penitentiary at Port-Cartier in the Province of Quebec. The total amount the Government is prepared to commit to child sexual abuse is half the amount being wasted on the construction of a federal penitentiary in the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It is shameful that the Government is not prepared to spend more money or to put more resources into effectively dealing with the concerns surrounding child sexual abuse.

A former employee of the Department of National Health and Welfare, Dr. Susan Painter, who worked for that Department from 1981 to 1984 as director of an information service on family violence, has said that she does not understand why her former Department has not responded. She said:

> I don't see any excuse for the lack of action.

She is right, and it is about time the Minister of National Health and Welfare recognized his responsibility in this area and realized that a legal response is simply not good enough.

I would note, in closing on this particular point, that Mr. Neville Avison commented in his summary of the discussions following national consultations that those attending the discussions regretted the absence of a National Health and Welfare representative from the discussion team. Once again we see the colleague of the Minister of Justice failing to fulfil his responsibilities to the children of Canada and failing to play an active role in this important area.

We must look at the whole question of social services, but we must recognize as well that there is a more fundamental and basic question which we as a society must address—the whole question of male socialization in society. It has been pointed out that over 98 per cent of the offenders in the area of child sexual abuse are males, are men. It is men who are the pimps. It is men who are overwhelmingly the consumers of pornography. It is men who are the customers of prostitutes. Until we can attack in a very fundamental way the socialization which leads to this phenomenon of men being the abusers, the users, and the customers, surely we will not have come to grips with the problem of child sexual abuse or discrimination against women and children.

Again it was Lorenne Clark who wrote very eloquently about this particular matter in the paper to which I referred earlier. I should like to note briefly her comments. She said:

> Sexual response is a learned behaviour, and until men can accept themselves as the equals rather than the superiors of women, and can learn new sexual responses appropriate to that status, most aspects of the problem will remain unchanged.

The Church Council on Justice and Corrections, in its brief to the Minister, noted that there was a societal problem in the socialization process of young males. Until recently women and children were considered to be subjected to the power and authority of their husbands and fathers, with very few rights of their own. Women have now acquired legal rights by law and are starting to have these rights respected, but to attribute rights to children is a very recent concept. It is still revolutionary to say that children are not the property of their fathers but are citizens with equal rights to respect and dignity. In that regard I note that it was the former Hon. Member for St. John's East who introduced a Bill into the House in 1978 proposing a Bill of rights for children. I introduced similar legislation, and I believe that approach is one at which we as Members should look with considerable care.

In looking at the whole question of the sexual abuse of young people and children, we recognize a serious concern in society. However, I believe it is very important that in focusing as we are today on the sexual abuse of young children, we not lose sight of other forms of abuse of children. There is a danger that if we as a society focus upon the sexual abuse of young people, we will not give the attention which is warranted to other forms of violence and abuse of children.

In 1959, Canada was one of the signatories to the United Nations Declaration of the Rights of the Child. That Declaration set out very clearly that the child shall enjoy special protection and shall be given opportunities and facilities, in law and by other means, to enable him to develop physically, mentally, morally, spiritually, and socially in a healthy and normal manner and in conditions of freedom and dignity. We as a society have fallen far short if that is to be our benchmark, as I suggest it should. We have not come to grips with the problem of physical abuse of children, and I am not speaking here of sexual abuse. We have not come to grips with the battering of children which was so clearly documented by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs in its 1981 report. We must recognize that that is a serious concern we must address. Surely we must ask ourselves whether it is really appropriate that we should in effect be tolerating child abuse explicitly in the provisions of the Criminal Code of Canada. In its 1981 report, in referring to Section 43 of the Criminal Code, the committee indicated:

> The Criminal Code as it now stands provides a legal framework for child abuse.

I remind Hon. Members that it is Section 43 of the Criminal Code which indicates explicitly that schoolteachers, parents, and those who stand in the place of parents can in fact use what is called "force" against children.

Why? Why is it that we as a society are prepared to tolerate the use of force against those who are the weakest and most helpless in society, when we will not allow the use of force against any other citizen in our community? It used to be that we would allow the use of force against women, who were seen as appendages or chattels of their husbands. Fortunately those days are gone, but we as a society still tolerate the use of force and violence against our children. I believe, and I speak now as an individual and not on behalf of my party, that the time has come for us to re-evaluate this question. We have to ask ourselves very seriously whether we should not be adopting a fundamentally different approach to the way we treat our children. In Sweden, following lengthy study and debate, the law was changed to prohibit use of physical punishment against children. The law now reads that a child may not be subjected to physical punishment or other injurious or humiliating treatment. The time has come for us to examine very carefully whether that is not an appropriate response for us as a society. After all, what is the dividing line between a spanking and a beating? Who makes that very important decision?

We also have to look at the extent of violence on television. The reality is that a child exposed to television over a number of years will probably have seen something like 18,000 deaths by the time he or she reaches the age of 18. Our movies are full of violence. Video games encourage children to kill as many creatures as possible, as quickly as possible. I am sure that leads to attitudes which can in turn generate violence.

Then there is the violence of poverty itself. The National Council on Child Welfare documented this problem very eloquently. We have the poverty and violence of hunger and cold. We have poverty and violence which leads to young native people drinking photocopier fluid and dying, as happened in Peerless Lake, Alberta. Surely we must not overlook these other forms of abuse and violence of our children which leads to teenage suicides in record numbers in some of our provinces. As Jeffrey Wilson, an author who has written extensively about the position of young people in our society, said, too often the modern reality of Canadian childhood includes the shopping mall, the street corner, the teenage drug abuser, the child suicide, the AWOL kids, struggling in our cities to find a job, a fake ID and a warm place to sleep for the night. That is the reality of too many children in Canada today.

This legislation deals with a number of concerns in this area. It deals with evidentiary provisions which would make it easier to prosecute child sexual abuse in Canada. It would make it easier for children to give evidence. It deals with substantive law in the Criminal Code and there are provisions dealing with juvenile prostitution. Allow me to refer briefly to the clauses in the legislation dealing with juvenile prostitution.

In March of 1983, the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General considered the whole area of prostitution. It did not agree on many things. In fact, there was only one issue on which all three Parties in this House agreed. That was, that the Criminal Code of Canada should be amended to provide sanctions explicitly against those who would attempt to purchase the sexual services of young people. We supported that suggestion in 1983. We have since advocated that the Government move on that suggestion. Certainly we are pleased to see the legislation before the House today incorporate that important provision. I am also pleased to note that the Government rejected the recommendations of the Badgley Commission in that respect.

I see the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) has just entered the House. She served with distinction as a member of the Badgley Commission. I say to her that while there were many important provisions in that report, the suggestion that young people be charged as criminals for engaging in acts of prostitution is one that I believe this Government quite properly rejected. However, the Government went on to deal with prostitution in a manner which many of us felt to be completely inappropriate, and Bill C-49 was adopted in the last session of this House despite the opposition of both opposition Parties. That Bill in effect made life even more difficult for young people on the street involved in acts of prostitution. It has driven them underground and in some cases has made them more dependent on pimps. David Dranchuk, who has worked extensively on the streets of Vancouver with juvenile prostitutes, pointed out that since this Bill was enacted the lot of juvenile prostitutes is worse than it was before. We warned the Government of that, and unfortunately the warning has turned into a harsh reality. I hope the Government recognizes that that approach was wrong. It flew in the face of the recommendations of the Fraser Committee and certainly it contributed to the expansion rather than the reduction of child sexual abuse.

Dealing with the two major areas of this Bill, I would like to touch on the evidentiary provisions. My friend from York Centre has already referred to a number of the proposed changes, as has the Minister himself. Surely the fundamental principle must be that we allow the child to tell his or her story clearly in court without any sense of intimidation. Does this Bill facilitate that objective? It would eliminate the present requirement for corroboration. We welcome that and we will support it in committee. It is quite unfair that under the present law, if a child cannot be sworn and there is no corroboration, the case must be thrown out of court. That has been a significant barrier to dealing effectively with child sexual abuse in the courts.

However, the provisions as presently drafted fall significantly short of what we believe should be the case. The governing principle should be to facilitate communication by the child. There should not be a test of sufficient intelligence, as proposed in this Bill. We have already seen that the interpretation of this test has led to unreasonable expectations. One judge said it is not good enough to have just average intelligence, the child must be above average in intelligence. Yet, it should not be the intelligence of the child that governs, it should be the ability of that child to communicate to the court that governs. Surely judges should be able to weigh the evidence.

I suggest as well that children be allowed to use devices which might assist them in communicating. A young child, for example, might wish to use an anatomically correct doll to explain exactly what has happened to him or her. I believe that should be permitted by the courts.

The provisions with respect to videotaping evidence are a step forward. The drafting of this provisions leaves something to be desired, however. I believe videotaping should be allowed not just shortly after the offence, because in some cases the child is afraid to speak and it is only after several weeks or months that it finally has the courage to speak out. I would suggest that shortly after the disclosure of the offence the videotaping should be permitted. Nor is it good enough just to permit videotaping. I suggest a record in another form, perhaps an audio recording, is appropriate as well. If this is to work effectively there must be the fundamental safeguard of allowing the accused to watch the evidence of the child and comment on it to his or her lawyer. There are obviously many parts of the country in which there are not adequate resources to facilitate such videotaping of evidence. I suggest that the federal Government should assist in providing those resources.

• (1230)

There are also concerns about the provisions with respect to decorum in the court room and the exclusion of the public from the court room. It may very well be that there should be provisions for the exclusion of the public at the discretion of the judge when a young person is testifying. There are a number of other evidentiary provisions which we will want to examine carefully in the course of committee study.

The Canadian Council on Children and Youth has made a number of important recommendations for changes, as has the Metropolitan Toronto Special Committee on Child Abuse. I hope that they will be given an opportunity to appear before the committee and make representations in the area of the presentation of evidence. One area in this Bill which I would emphasize as being of fundamental importance, aside from the substantive offences which I will deal with shortly, is the question of evidence. We are concerned that the proposals fall dramatically short of what is appropriate for ensuring that children's evidence gets before the courts.

There are lawyers, particularly defence counsel, who have various concerns about these provisions. Harold Levy, the editor of the Criminal Lawyers Association Newsletter, has called these changes "incredibly dangerous". I have a great deal of respect for Harold Levy. He said:

> There seems to be a "believe-the-children movement" which is tied into the children's-rights issue. But they don't have the right to be believed just because they are children.

I fundamentally disagree with that. The fact is that under the law as it now stands children are disbelieved just because they are children. It is about time we recognized that children do have the right to be heard and we should be taking the necessary steps in law to facilitate that right.

The last portion of the Bill which I would like to address contains the substantive provisions of the legislation, the new offences which are created in this Bill. This is obviously an area of the law which is in serious need of overhaul. The Badgely Commission and the Fraser Commission documented offences which are not covered by the existing provisions of the Criminal Code. Similarly, there are other actions which are presently criminalized which should not be the subject of criminal sanction. I would like to address both of those areas in the few minutes I have remaining for making my remarks today.

There are some serious weaknesses and inequities in the substantive offence provisions of this Bill. The Bill refers to "sexual touching" and creates offences for that. Sexual touching is not defined in the legislation. I realize that it is difficult to define that with precision, but I suggest that the committee should try to formulate an appropriate definition of "sexual touching". If it does not, there is greater potential for abuse of this, particularly by law enforcement authorities who may define as "sexual touching" conduct which none of us in this House would reasonably believe should fall under that particular description.

The Bill would, as well, criminalize adolescent sexual behaviour which is currently not the subject of criminal sanctions. As the Canadian Council on Children and Youth has pointed out, under the present law we do not criminalize the acts of a 14-year old who may be necking and petting with a 13-year old or the actions of two 13-year olds who happen to be fooling around or engaging in sexual activity or experimentation. No one in the House is suggesting that we should take steps to indicate our approval of teenage sexual activity. However, the reality that young people under the age of 16 do engage in sexual experimentation must be faced. This Bill would criminalize that sexual experimentation amoung young people. I suggest that education at home, school, church and elsewhere is the best way for children to develop in a sexually healthy and mature fashion. We should not use the sledgehammer of criminal law against sexual experimentation and activity between adolescents.

The Bill is curious in that it would say that it is okay for a 13-year old and a 12-year old to engage in adolescent sexual experimentation. However, for a 14-year old and a 13-year old to engage in the same kind of sexual experimentation is a criminal offence. That makes no sense whatever. I suggest that we study very seriously the recommendations of the Canadian Council on Children and Youth in this area.

In addition, the Bill would single out for special treatment under the Criminal Code the offence of buggery. It would reduce the age from 21 to 18 but would maintain the offence of buggery for special treatment. The Special Committee on Equality Rights recommended that there should be a uniform age of consent for homosexual and heterosexual activity. I suggest that by retaining the offence of buggery and applying an age of consent of 18 to it, the Government continues to discriminate against young gays. I suggest that the committee may want to examine as well the term "buggery".

In reality, in dealing with the offence of buggery the Government is saying that two 17-year olds, including two 17-year olds of the same sex, for example, cannot engage in an act of anal intercourse but may engage in any other form of sexual activity. If the Government wants to justify this form of discrimination, surely it will have to demonstrate to the committee that this conduct is more harmful than heterosexual conduct or other homosexual conduct in the same age group. I suggest that in the absence of the ability to demonstrate that, the legislation should apply a uniform age of consent.

I note as well that the legislation attempts to lower the age of consent from 21 to 18 for buggery. However, at the same time there is a quite pejorative reference to consent by individuals who are "feeble-minded, insane, an idiot or imbecile". I suggest that maintaining that kind of language in the Criminal Code is quite inappropriate. I hope the committee would redraft that language if it is to be maintained at all. I suggest that in the absence of compelling evidence the committee should adopt the recommendation of a uniform age of consent.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize that we in this Party recognize that this subject must be addressed with care and in depth by Parliament and, in particular, by the committee which will be established to consider the legislation. It requires careful study. We have co-operated in ensuring that the debate on second reading of this Bill came forward quickly. I hope that the Minister recognizes that there must be adequate time for those groups involved in this issue to be able to prepare their responses to the legislation and appear before the committee. I hope the Government will ensure that there are adequate resources to assist them in appearing before the committee.

The legislation before us is of fundamental importance. We in the New Democratic Party are prepared to give it very serious and responsible consideration. I hope the Government will recognize that the changes which I suggested would make this a better Bill which all members of the House could support.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on tabling this Bill so soon. I also wish to reiterate his request that all Canadians support the fight against child sexual abuse. This request was made earlier by the Minister to the Opposition parties, and I was happy to hear spokespersons for the two Opposition parties give the House the assurance it would have their full co-operation for speedy passage of these measures.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister sought this co-operation not only because he believes in these measures as the Minister of Justice of Canada, but also because two important committees made the same request previously. The Badgley Report and the Fraser Report both recognized that the problem was an urgent one and required a joint effort by all levels of government in Canada and by all other social agencies and organizations in our society. The Badgley Committee submitted a total of 52 recommendations addressed to all levels of government and to the private sector. They contain a wide range of approaches, including heightening the awareness of society, public education, improving public health and amendments to criminal law. The Badgley proposals specifically identify two preconditions. First of all, to deal effectively with the personal and social ills arising from child sexual abuse will require concerted action on the part of all levels of our society. Second, the Government of Canada must play a central role in this action. Consequently, it is only logical that the Canadian Government should use criminal law to fight against certain kinds of behaviour that cause considerable harm to others and that it should involve special social and educational measures in the process. While the federal Government can play a major role at the national level and continue to make the public aware of these issues, we must remember that under the Canadian Constitution, the responsibility for providing social and health services to Canadians lies with the provinces. The federal Government will therefore act as a catalyst in this area and seek the co-operation of the provinces in dealing with these issues.

The key to the success of this new program which is aimed at fighting child sexual abuse will be to obtain the co-operation of all levels of government and the private sector. These problems must therefore be addressed, first and foremost, at the local level, and we hope that in future, the provinces will help the federal Government to identify areas where concerted action could be taken. I am convinced that this Government also intends to maintain and even strengthen its close relationship with the many volunteer organizations involved in this field. Private sector participation is a must as well. We are aware that in many instances these organizations are in an ideal position to take quick and appropriate community action.

This Bill deals with several major issues, Mr. Speaker, but I am pleased that the Government has seen fit to dissociate it from the legislative measure on pornography. It would have been unfortunate had all these Criminal Code amendments been lumped together, for Bill C-15 would have lost its impact and the special consideration it deserves precisely because it excludes other measures related to pornography. As a matter of fact there is no doubt that within a few weeks— recently the Minister of Justice did express the hope that the Bill might be introduced before Christmas—the Bill on pornography will come up for reconsideration which will not include these provisions respecting sexual abuse of young children.

Among other points, Mr. Speaker, I intend to deal today with specific amendments related to the Canada Evidence Act.

As a criminal lawyer with over 15 years' experience I paid special attention to the amendments concerning corroboration, testimony by the spouse, failure of the accused to attend when a child gives evidence, in certain cases, admissibility of videotaped evidence, lack of recent complaint and extension of the limitation period.

This week, Mr. Speaker, I heard about and read certain articles dealing mainly with the question of corroboration. This rule, which is very familiar to judges and lawyers alike, caused many problems to prosecutors and much satisfaction to lawyers for the defense. In my opinion, this is an exceptional rule. Why require corroboration of the evidence of a child if you do not require the same corroboration in the case of evidence given by a very old person or someone whose evidence before the court is rather incoherent.

In such cases, the usual rules of evidence apply, which means that the evidence is judged on its own merits. Who is in a better position to evaluate evidence than the judge or members of the jury? Who could be in a better position than these twelve men and women to decide whether evidence should be believed totally, partly or not at all, whether it is given by a 40 year-old or a 10 year-old?

It seems to me that most jury members are Canadians with children of their own, and they are aware of the problems which can result when a child tells his own version of the facts. Parents are able to understand, judge and assess what a child has said and generallly to decide whether he should be believed completely, partly or not at all, just as jury members do in all cases before the courts in Canada by listening to the evidence of the witness, whoever he may be.

I am very happy about this new rule which removes the need for corroboration, and as a defence lawyer, it does not scare me. I am convinced that other defence lawyers will be able, through an appropriate cross-interrogation, that the judges will be able, thanks to their usual wisdom, and that the jury members will be able, thanks to what they see happening before their eyes and their own common sense, to decide what credence should be given to the evidence of a child.

I am not worried at all. I have myself been much more concerned when I saw frightened young children give evidence not knowing whether they should say that they knew what the Bible was or what the nature of the oath was, not taking the oath and afterwards giving their evidence quite coherently and credibly, and when I then saw, because of this corroboration rule, the judge often say publicly at the hearing that, regretfully, he could not accept the evidence of these children because it had not been corroborated on an essential point involving the accused. Then, the accused was acquitted on a technicality. Canadians find this unacceptable. So do the parents of these young children. Generally, this is viewed as unacceptable by our society, where there have been some changes in attitudes that we should recognize today. Mr. Speaker, such corroboration is no longer necessary in 1986. Nowadays, it is replaced by the normal rules of evidence, which normally determine how you should judge evidence.

As a defence lawyer, I am not at all worried about the accused. They may not be acquitted on technicalities, but they can still be acquitted if they are able, by effective cross-interrogation or other evidence, to weaken or undermine the evidence of the child, as that of any other witness. This is the fair solution.

The presiding judge at a trial by jury will no longer have to advise the members of the jury to be careful before condemning an accused on the evidence of a child. This will no longer be necessary. However, in any trial by jury, the judge must explain thoroughly the nature of the evidence and what the jury members must do before deciding whether a witness should be believed completely, partly or not at all. He must explain this well. In any case, my personal experience has always been that the jury members' just as anyone else who follows a trial closely, make up their minds about the quality of a witness and of his evidence. There is therefore no reason for concern about this either.

By the way, I want to say that I am also delighted that the legislation should no longer discriminate between young girls and young boys. I think it is a very good change. This is indeed a practical application of the political speeches and promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in 1984, reiterated in the first Throne Speech, and reiterated again recently in the last Throne Speech. This is an example with practical application in our daily life. I suggest all Hon. Member should congratulate the Government for this new legislation.

There is also an amendment to the Canada Evidence Act which would now allow or even compel the spouse of an accused to testify when the victim is a child of the accused. That is normal. In many cases, that might be the only testimony. A mother might be aware of a fact and could not tell it to the judge, because of a particular provision in the legislation which generally made it possible for the accused to say: I do not want my wife to come and testify against me. This is a time honoured tradition which all Canadians will accept to break in the case of sexual offences against children.

Mr. Speaker, a provision of this Bill which will make it possible for the presiding judge or justice, under special circumstances and following an investigation, to exclude the accused during the testimony of a child, will certainly create a whole new jurisprudence. It obviously raises a number of practical problems, as in the case of an accused who would defend himself.

Clearly, the Legislative Committee will have to study this provision closely and consider its application to various cases. Yet, as counsel for the defence, I also put a lot of trust on the intelligence of the presiding judges who will be called upon to determine exactly when this very special provision should apply. I firmly believe, for instance, that in the case of an accused who is defending himself, the justice would appreciate and decide each case on its merit.

In my opinion, that videotaped evidence should become admissible is excellent. Of course, in our courts, it often happens that proceeding commence only several months, if not several years, following the alleged offence. How could we ask a ten-year old child, for instance, to remember all the details two or three years after the alleged offence.

In practice, we used to try and refresh the child's memory by using a previous statement. From now on, this legislation will allow the courts to refresh the child's memory publicly and openly, and if the child is able to recognize his or her previous statement, this videotaped evidence will become admissible as proof. Again, that is an excellent change. This applies also to recent complaints which have always caused serious problems before our courts. The absence of prescription is also a very good thing. In fact, such a prescription exists under the Criminal Code for all offences punishable on summary conviction. It continues to exist. For indictable offences—it did not exist for other indictable offences and I do not see why it should exist in the case of a sexual offence against a child. No distinction should be made. That is a measure which is therefore more equitable.

The existing criminal law provisions contained a number of restrictions and I will single out a few, Mr. Speaker. Young boys and girls did not enjoy equal protection under the law. In many cases the victim had to be a female and the accused a male.

Most offences related exclusively to vaginal sexual intercourse and did not cover the wide variety of sexual activities which can be described as abuse of children such as touching, masturbation and oral-genital contacts against which young boys and girls alike must be protected.

There was also the Criminal Code legal presumption whereby a boy under 14 was deemed unable to maintain an erection and have sexual intercourse. This flies in the face of today's biological reality, Mr. Speaker.

The age of sexual consent varies under the existing Criminal Code provisions, but this will be changed according to the sexual act involved and the sex of the participant.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is running out. I wanted to make these few remarks on the amendments and tell you that this Bill is one of the social justice measures unveiled by the Government in the Speech from the Throne delivered less than a month ago. I invite all Canadians to familiarize themselves with these new rules and abide by them. I urge all my colleagues in the House, regardless of their Party, to support this Government endeavour which goes a long way to meet the wishes of the members of the Badgley and Fraser committees, as well as those of Canadians and parents throughout this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member is in the House, there will be time for questions and comments after the oral questions period.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PANEL OF CHAIRMEN

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to advise the House at this time that, pursuant to Standing Order 92(5), the following Members have been appointed to the Panel of Chairmen: Robert Coates and Anthony Roman.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in answer to my second question concerning the closure of the Algonquin Radio Observatory located in Algonquin Park in eastern Ontario, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) had the gall to say that I was an alarmist and that I was not being helpful to the morale of the employees. This is a new-found method of diverting blame and responsibility from the Government. It is a cheap tactic.

If the Minister is genuinely concerned about the morale of the employees, why did the director in charge of the observatory visit the site one week ago today and tell the employees that they should submit their resumés so that they would have an opportunity to apply for other jobs? How does the Minister think that affected morale? Instead of blaming the Opposition for asking pertinent questions about this incredible Government, why does the Minister of State for Science and Technology not admit that it is the unconscionable financial restraints imposed by his own Government that have caused this entire mess? It is the Minister who is creating the alarm, not the members of the Opposition.

I visited the employees last Sunday and I can tell the Minister that there was absolutely—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

HOUSING

INCREASED RESIDENTIAL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that our residential building industry continues to boom. This is just one more sign that the economic objectives of the Government are right on track. As quoted in The Globe and Mail of today:

> Residential construction across Canada continues to outpace even the most optimistic forecasts—
> "The spectacular strength of new home building—is breath-taking—

Up to September of this year national housing starts number almost 125,000—a 26 per cent increase over the same period last year. The figures are equally impressive for the Province of Ontario where there is a 29 per cent increase over last year's starts. However, this building upsurge carries right across the country. For example, the Province of Nova Scotia is ahead by a spectacular 50 per cent.

In my riding of Niagara Falls and the surrounding area housing starts are 34 per cent ahead of last year. This is good news for Niagara Falls and good news for all of Canada.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CALL FOR ACCELERATION OF MANITOBA PROJECTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, Manitobans of all political stripes feel that a great injustice has been committed against our province. In the days and weeks ahead the Government will have ample opportunity to address that injustice by making good on other decisions that will beneficially affect the Manitoba economy.

Specifically, the Government should act as soon as possible to implement the remaining two-thirds of the box-car rehabilitation program in Transcona; decide to build, and to build in Winnipeg, the new light-weight hopper-cars; proceed with the VIA Rail shop in Winnipeg; order the new transcontinental equipment for VIA; review its cancellation of the manufacturing technology centre; live up to its commitments to Churchill; reverse the shift of IRDP funds to central Canada; and reverse the cut-backs in federal transfer payments to the provinces, such as Manitoba, which are hardest hit.

In addition, the Government should also be looking for ways to prevent the unravelling of the aerospace industry in Winnipeg—a process begun by the Liberals a long time ago when they transferred the Air Canada overhaul base in Winnipeg to Montreal—instead of helping to unravel that industry further as it did last week.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

GOVERNMENT'S RECOGNITION OF WORK OF VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the work of volunteers in our society has enriched the lives of those who participate in such services as well as the lives of those they help. The dedication of workers like Margaret Corbett, Helen Fennell, and Don MacLean from the riding of Welland has contributed greatly to the communities of South St. Catharines and Thorold.

Mr. MacLean has worked for many years organizing recreational sports. Mrs. Fennell has contributed years of work to the Canadian Cancer Society. Mrs. Corbett has been very active on behalf of severely mentally handicapped children. The two women were among 71 people across Canada to be awarded the Canada Volunteer Award Certificate of Merit this year.

I was pleased to hear in the Speech from the Throne that the Government plans further support for the growth of volunteer service in society. Recognition of the value of volunteers should be a priority of every level of government and of all Canadians.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PARKER COMMISSION—PAYMENT OF FORMER MINISTER'S LEGAL EXPENSES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I object to the Government's authorization of a payment of up to $350,000 for the legal fees of the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens) who is defending himself on violations of conflict of interest guidelines. I believe it is fair for the Government to pay the bills of a Minister who is defending the way he did his job and his behaviour as a Minister. However, in this case the allegations are that the Minister in effect engaged in moonlighting while he was a Minister.

I submit that it is not fair for a person who is defending himself on allegations of moonlighting to have his bills paid by the Government of Canada. There is no precedent for this of which I am aware, and I tried to find one. Any official of the Government who must defend his own conduct before a commission should have his fees paid, but not for doing things extraneous to the job.

POLITICAL PARTIES

RESULT OF PEMBINA BY-ELECTION

Mr. Walter Van de Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, the by-election in the Pembina riding held on September 29 was history in the making. The electors of Pembina demonstrated once again their confidence in the Progressive Conservative Party, the one most competent and best equipped to administer the affairs of our great country.

The by-election was a personal victory for me and I can assure my colleagues in this House that I will live up to the trust that has been placed in me.

The residents of the Pembina constituency have been disastrously affected by the dramatic drop in the world prices of oil and grain. I will be concentrating my efforts on the areas of agriculture, small business, and energy, areas which are so vital to the economy of the Province of Alberta.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PAROLE SUPERVISION PRIVATIZATION PROPOSAL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Department of the Solicitor General has recently privatized, without consultation, parole supervision for 250 parolees in Toronto to the John Howard Society. The mission of the Correctional Service to help offenders become law-abiding citizens is demeaned by shoving aside a professional workforce of highly skilled and deeply committed workers in favour of the employees of a largely voluntary organization. This change does no service to parolees and it does no service to the people of Canada who demand a professional supervision service.

Not only is the whole system of parole put into question by this ill-conceived move so too is the John Howard Society's role as one of the most important prisoner service organizations in Canada. Indeed, there is internal division on this question.

I call upon the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to halt this mindless proposal immediately and to allow the Justice Committee to hold full hearings on it. As well, I would hope that the Government would ensure that there would be no reprisals against those public servants who had the courage to speak out against this senseless move toward privatization in the Correctional Service of Canada.

RESEARCH

CONSEQUENCES OF GOVERNMENT CUT-BACKS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, today I should like to read in this House a letter sent to the Prime Minister of Canada by one of my constituents and I quote:

I have been an employee of the CNRC for six years. During that period, I have filed 14 industrial copyright applications for which permits have been purchased by three Canadian companies. I have also written 46 scientific papers and an internationally renowned book. I mention this to show that I am an above-average researcher in Canada as elsewhere.

Due to the recent climate of uncertainty for applied research in this country, I am now considering going to work abroad. Unless conditions change drastically in the near future, the best scientific engineers will soon do likewise. The federal Government should act as soon as possible to prevent such an exodus which would have long-term disastrous effects.

Mr. Speaker, the Government should put an end to its cut-backs and encourage our young scientists to stay in this country.

AIRPORTS

CALL FOR REACTIVATION OF ARCTIC AIRPORTS PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, despite recommendations of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, and many others, the Arctic Airports Program still remains in limbo. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is on record as acknowledging the need for proper airstrips in remote areas, both for safety and economic reasons. Manicouagan has already been the beneficiary of his vision. However, about 11 identified locations exist in the Territories where airstrips are either rudimentary and unsafe, or non-existent. The Arctic Airports Program, which was allowed to expire by the previous Government, must be reactivated if northerners are to travel in safety.

LETTING OF CLEANING CONTRACTS—EFFECT ON EMPLOYEES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post in letting out its new contracts for cleaning has robbed the lowest paid workers of their collectively negotiated rights by asking them to take a 50 per cent pay cut. Canada Post is taking advantage of the fact that labour law does not protect those people and their collectively negotiated settlement.

I call upon the Minister to meet with the workers in order to resolve this conflict and prevent a further deterioration in labour-management relations at Canada Post, which could threaten postal service in our country. Will the Minister take some action so that Canada Post cannot take advantage of the lowest paid workers who are being asked to take a 50 per cent wage cut?

QUALITY OF LIFE

IMPORTANCE OF FIGHT AGAINST DRUG ABUSE

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, the recent report by the CUM Public Security Commission states that the fight against drug trafficking must be supported by political will.

I am proud that this Conservative Government already has recognized this and taken the steps needed. The Solicitor General has stressed once more his determination to set up a national strategy to reduce both the demand and supply of drugs.

Drug consumption is a problem that goes far beyond criminal acts and health hazards. Too often, it opens the door to criminal habits such as stealing, receiving, and sometimes even prostitution, all of which arise out of the need for drugs. The problem however is not exclusively a criminal one. It is an educational and a social problem. This is why the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) are joining efforts to find a solution. This is a national problem that requires a concerted effort on the part of all Canadian. This Government is doing its share, and all Canadian men and women should welcome this.

Oral Questions

INCREASE IN PRICE OF GASOLINE DECREED BY ULTRAMAR

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, there were bad news for Quebecers today. The Ultramar Corporation has announced an increase of close to 2 cents a litre on gasoline at the pump.

Mr. Speaker, we all remember that nine months ago, this Conservative Government approved the purchase by Ultramar of the Gulf refinery and other facilities, so that it could shut down the Montreal East End refinery, reduce competition, secure a monopolistic position and increase fuel prices at the pump.

It is my hope that this Conservative Government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) will ask Petro-Canada not to follow the bad example set up by Ultramar. And I am inviting all Quebecers to boycott Ultramar and to fill up at other stations where they can have cheaper gasoline.

THE PRESS

IMPORTANCE OF WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS—NECESSITY TO RETAIN SPECIAL POSTAL RATES

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, the first newspaper which I ever read was a community weekly newspaper. Like many Canadians, I continue to read such newspapers literally from cover to cover. For many of us who either grew up in rural communities or continue to live in rural communities, the weekly newspaper was and still is an important and sometimes the only source of information. Moreover, the weekly newspaper was and is a unifying factor, a source of local pride, and the personification of the community itself.

Due to the vastness of Canada, and the degree of isolation which exists in many of our rural communities, Governments historically have recognized the need to subsidize postal rates for many of our special interest publications, including weekly community newspapers.

• (1415)

Unfortunately Canada Post officials are now threatening to absolish those special postal rates. The end result, tragically, would be the demise of some local newspapers due to an insufficient number of subscribers and advertisers.

In light of the historic and continuing role of weeklies as community builders and supporters, I urge Canada Post officials and the Minister responsible to continue the policy of concessionary rates to this industry.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONCTON SHOPS—PROPOSED SALE TO CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. He knows that the CN shops in Moncton are the largest industrial employer in the Atlantic provinces. He also should know that the Deputy Prime Minister promised that there would never be any massive lay-offs at those shops. He indicated at one time that there was no prospect of a sale. Of course there have been negotiations for a sale, and now we learn from Canadian General Electric that the sale has either been cancelled or suspended. Why does the Government not fulfil its promises to the people of New Brunswick? What is the Government doing to try to save the CN shops at Moncton?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition might keep in mind that during the period from 1980 to 1984 average employment with CN declined by 8,000 persons. We wonder where he was while that was happening.

To deal with the position at Moncton, the proposed sale of part of the main shops at Moncton, which was arranged by CN, to CGE, is not cancelled. CN is still prepared to meet with the unions concerned to see if the matter can be resolved. Two of the seven unions have refused to agree to what they call contracting out so that the present employees of CN can continue to do the same work for CGE at those shops—maintenance work on Bombardier locomotives. It is still prepared to meet with them and hope that agreement can still be reached, so the matter is not yet concluded.

CN and the Government will do everything possible to see that the 303 persons who would have jobs in the CGE operation get that opportunity and that Moncton has the opportunity for that kind of industrial development.

[Translation]

NECESSITY THAT CN SHOPS IN MONCTON NOT BE CLOSED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Moncton shops used to employ 1,200 workers, but only half of them are left now. As the Minister would know, the Moncton CN shops are one of the mainstays of the economy of the Atlantic Provinces. The Deputy Prime Minister had promised they would remain open.

Why is the Government attempting to shirk its responsibility? Why is the Government failing to live up to its promises to New Brunswickers? Why is the Government failing to live up to the promises it made in the Speech from the Throne? Why is the Government abandoning the men and women who work in the Moncton CN shops? These are facts.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, let me say that the Government is fulfilling its responsibilities and that CN is doing its best to meet the responsibilities it accepts, and to be a model employer. I will refer to the 1,022 employees affected by the fact that the CN shops in Moncton had to be closed. They had to be closed because CN must operate productively and efficiently, as directed by the Government of 1978. The Liberal administration of Canada then directed that they had to stand on their own feet.

Of the 1,022 employees, CGE hopefully would employ 303; 150 are transferred to CN's Gordon Yard; 132 will be taken care of in other aspects of CN work; 200 have options to move to other shops in the system; and 237 will be offered comprehensive benefit programs and retraining assistance. We and CN set up a special $4 million fund to help in the industrial development of Moncton. The Government has met every ounce of its responsibilities and will continue to do so.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, those words will not give any comfort to the workers of Moncton and the Minister knows it. The Prime Minister, when he was in New Brunswick this summer, told the people of that province, "I won't give you the finger, I will give you the time of day". I do not know what the Prime Minister has given the people of Moncton but it certainly is not the time of day. Now that it is five to midnight for the people of Moncton and the workers in those shops, cut out the subterfuge and tell us what the Government is really going to do about it.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman wanted to be helpful and not just try to take partisan advantage of an unfortunate situation he would be urging the two unions concerned to drop this ideological fixation on contracting out and permit their Moncton members to go ahead so CGE can set up a locomotive manufacturing establishment in Moncton. The only thing stopping that now is the refusal of two of seven unions to permit this to happen so that the employees doing this work now can do it in the future. That is where he could be helpful.

FUTURE OF SHOPS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport knows CGE has suspended its plans to buy the railway shops in Moncton. He also knows that CN said it would close the shops if the deal with CGE did not go through. It seems that deal is quite remote at this moment. Is the Minister going to stand idly by and allow CN to shut down the shops, or is he going to save the shops as the previous Minister of Transport promised the people of Moncton?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman wanted to be helpful he would be side by side with the Hon. Member for Moncton who met yesterday, and is meeting today, with CN to try to resolve the situation and persuade the union to drop this restriction so that this manufacturing enterprise can go ahead. That is what he would be doing rather than doing everything he can to stop it, which is all he has done in the past.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I will not be a party to union busting. Never once has that Government come out on the side of the Moncton workers.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE WITH CANADIAN NATIONAL

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister when he will intervene and instruct CN to take a second look and come up with a deal acceptable to the workers and the community of Moncton? We cannot afford to lose 1,000 jobs.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the friends of the Moncton workers have been hard at work attempting to save the 1,100 jobs or see that adequate training, retraining, and other help is given, or see that 303 of them work in the CGE manufacturing facility in Moncton. The Minister of Labour appointed a mediator to help reach an agreement. An agreement was reached with the seven unions on October 13 which the internationals have turned down out of callous disregard for their members who live in Moncton. He should be trying to persuade those internationals to help free the workers in Moncton to take those jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE WITH CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have never heard such unmitigated nonsense from a Transport Minister before, and I have been through eight of them. Ministers of Transport are going through a revolving door around here. He knows that the Canadian machinists and Canadian pipe fitters voted nationally across Canada not to accept contracting out after the bitter experience of post office workers. We all know that CGE has not burned all its bridges although there is an element of blackmail and holding to ransom by that company. Will the Minister assure the House that he will ask CGE to show some understanding, compassion and patience, let the collective bargaining process take its course, and assist in getting the parties concerned back to the bargaining table?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that five of the seven unions involved, that is in excess of 50 per cent, five out of seven, agreed to allow contracting out under the conditions set down, that it would not be a precedent for national labour negotiations and the like. The hon. gentleman could have a persuasive effect on those other two unions if he would stir his stumps and try to do something other than criticizing everything that everyone else tries to do.

• (1425)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister keeps running away from the facts and his responsibilities. That is a national contract. It is not a contract only for Moncton. The Minister damn well knows it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question and leave out some of the words.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POSSIBLE REOPENING OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister now tell us what action he has taken, if any, or will take, to get CGE to keep its mouth shut and get the two parties concerned back to the bargaining table? One vote does not close out a contract or a deal. There needs to be further bargaining and the Minister knows that. Will he assist in that process and will he get it going as quickly as possible?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman leaves the rhetoric behind he starts to make sense.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: Listen to that.

Mr. Riis: You try that.

Mr. Broadbent: Yeah, you try it.

Mr. Crosbie: I retract. He doesn't make sense, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You should try to make sense.

Mr. Crosbie: My office has been in the touch with the president of CN constantly. CN is ready to meet with the unions involved again and to do anything humanly possible to get them to see the virtues, merits, and lack of danger of the course which is being suggested. Canadian General Electric is doing just what the hon. gentleman suggested. It is keeping its mouth shut and waiting to see. It is not going to pull out prematurely either. We all want 303 jobs and a manufacturing industry established in Moncton.

Mr. Robichaud: We want 1,000 jobs, not 300.

Mr. Crosbie: That is what those who are keeping their mouths shut want, but not some of those who are not keeping their mouths shut.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION MODERNIZATION PROJECT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Earlier this year the federal Government made a commitment to the Province of Nova Scotia to fund the modernization of Sydney Steel Corporation. Now the Premier of Nova Scotia says that the federal Government has retained Arthur D. Little of Toronto to do a marketing study of Sydney Steel Corporation. Could the Prime Minister tell me why the federal Government is reneging on its commitment to the Sydney Steel Corporation and the Province of Nova Scotia?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is co-operating completely with the Government of Nova Scotia with regard to this very important matter for the people of Nova Scotia, and it will continue to do that.

Mr. Dingwall: He doesn't know his file.

PREPARATION OF MARKETING STUDY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, if the federal Government is keeping its commitment, why is this maketing study necessary at this particular time? Why is the Premier of Nova Scotia saying that an unfavourable result of this marketing study could result in the federal Government pulling away its commitment to funding for the modernization of Sydney Steel Corporation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose one would have to ask the Premier for his answer to that. We are of the view that the project, as set out originally, which required federal and provincial commitment, is a valuable and valid one and we continue to work with the provincial Government in that regard.

ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Algonquin Radio Observatory has a world-class reputation, having gained respect in virtually every country in the world. Regrettably, due to government cut-backs, it has had to curtail a $6 million expansion. On Friday the head of the Herzberg Institute wrote all the employees directly involved telling them that the facility at Algonquin was going to be shut down. Given the Prime Minister's commitment to double research and development spending in Canada, how could his Government sabotage such a worthwhile scientific endeavour?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I was sitting here I was reading some of my mail. I have a letter here signed by the Director whom the Hon. Leader of the NDP mentioned, Mr. Donald Morton. He says that no final decision has been made. This is a letter dated November 3 to: "All staff of the Herzberg Institute of Astrophysics". It states: "No final decision has been made on the future of the Observatory".

• (1430)

FUTURE OF EMPLOYEES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the House will have noted the date on the letter. All of us would like to see copies of it.

Perhaps the Minister can explain how two things happened yesterday. First, he announced that no final decision had been made, notwithstanding what had been said on Friday. It was also announced yesterday that 90 per cent of the positions currently occupied in the observatory were going to be abolished. It is a logical problem to many of us how an observatory can be run without any employees. Will the Minister explain that?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the information given to us by the Leader of the New Democratic Party is again erroneous. Not 90 per cent of the positions have been affected.

Mr. Broadbent: How many?

Mr. Oberle: I want to tell the Hon. Leader of the NDP that there is an urgent and pressing need for us to develop a new national strategy that will take us into the 21st century. Changes will have to be made, including changes that will eliminate some irrelevance that is in the community, to make sure that all of our programs and all the instruments available to the federal Government are focused properly on a set of new priorities that are urging us toward the next century.

Mr. Broadbent: One way that you do not improve R and D is to destroy a world-class operation. That is what the Government is doing.

COST OF OPERATING OBSERVATORY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. He spoke eloquently about this subject during the campaign. That facility presently costs between $40 million and $50 million. That is what the Algonquin facility is worth. Can the Prime Minister explain how the Government is performing rationally by shutting it down completely or mothballing it in order to save $1 million in needed funds now? Does it make sense not to provide that necessary $1 million and continue to destroy that facility? Why does the Prime Minister not live up to his commitment to expand research and development facilities instead of destroying them?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what the Government is doing. It is expanding on the Government's and the nation's capacity to do research and science related activities. Let me provide the Hon. Leader of the NDP with the facts. I will gladly send him a copy of the letter. It says that there will be no reduction in the service during the winter of 1986-87—"during which time a number of options for providing the necessary facilities to the Canadian Astronomical Community will be investigated". This is what I have said consistently and what the President of the NRC said when he held a press conference three weeks ago. The facts are here. Why would the Leader of the NDP wish to distort them?

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On December 28, 1985, the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion said in Sydney: "I am here to tell you that it is going. The Sysco agreement is there. There should be no doubt now concerning the future of Sysco". Will the Prime Minister explain to the House why this new market information was not requested in early 1985, or is the Sysco modernization another broken promise by an untrustworthy Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): With respect to the Sysco modernization program, Mr. Speaker, the engineering contract has already been awarded, the engineering project got under way last October 1, and the work is expected to be completed within six to eight months. Such activities indicate to me and to the people of Cape Breton that the Government is following up on its program to help Cape Breton and Sysco. We are not backtracking. On the contrary, we are moving ahead and making good time.

[English]

INITIATION OF MARKETING STUDY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister. I say with great sincerity that the Minister is not on top of the file. Who is responsible for the request for additional market information? Is it the Government of Canada, is it the Government of Nova Scotia, or is it both parties participating in an unconscionable act on a people who have been disgusted by the Government?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, when I look at the action the Government has taken on behalf of Cape Breton, I do not believe that rhetoric holds true at all.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Valcourt: The actions taken by the Government with respect to Sysco modernization are in line with what had been planned. We are doing whatever is necessary to ensure that this works, and works properly.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—ABILITY OF CANADAIR TO PERFORM WORK

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Minister must be aware of stories that Canadair does not have the necessary and expensive technology needed for the maintenance of the CF-18. Was the Government aware of this fact? Does the Government have any cost estimates with regard to how much this could cost Canadair and, if so, who will pay that extra cost?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): As I have stated repeatedly, Mr. Speaker, we were dealing with two excellent groups of companies which were deemed fully competent technologically to do the work. As a matter of fact, the current exercise is the reason why we have favoured Canadair as a company which can manufacture airplanes and ensure their maintenance. We had a greater possibility to ensure the transfer of technology which will occur over the next few years and that is the reason why, in the common interest, we decided to award the contract to the Canadair group rather than to the other consortium, both being excellent.

[English]

REQUEST THAT CONTRACT BE REFERRED TO AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister three specific questions and he did not answer any of them. Since the integrity of the Government is in question with regard to its decision-making process, will he agree to the request made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre on Friday afternoon and ensure that all the papers necessary to look into the Government's decision-making process in this matter are referred to the Auditor General?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when a Government acts in the national interest, I doubt sincerely that its integrity could be questioned. We have made a difficult decision based on complex criteria in the common interest which we pursue as a Government. For that matter, Mr. Speaker, we will have to make other difficult decisions, but always in the best interest of Canadians from coast to coast.

[English]

COST OF TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Since he apparently did not hear the previous questions, I will pose them again. Litton, Bendix, and Garrett, which were three sub-contractors in the Bristol consortium, have said that they will no longer transfer technology that they possess for free as they had intended. It will now cost an extra $30 million, which means $30 million on top of the $104 million Canadair bid. Will the President of the Treasury Board state whether that was taken into account and whether the Government will sudsidize Canadair? Is this not a good reason for reassessing that decision?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I, and I am sure the Hon. Member, have taken notice of a press release that was put out at approximately 11.30 this morning in which a study, apparently, was made public by the Government of Manitoba, alleging that this amount of money would be required to ensure the completion of the contract. I am sure my hon. colleague would grant me the time to look at these allegations in more detail before answering the House more fully.

Mr. Axworthy: The Government has had two years to do its homework.

TOTAL COST OF CONTRACT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister tell us that all the negotiations have been completed with McDonnell Douglas and all the sub-contractors? Are all the costs in or is there, in fact, an outstanding $30 million cost that will be added to the bid of Canadair which will require some form of subsidy by the Government of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that would be quite surprising. We have said over the past... A team of some 75 very competent officials from three departments had been set up to carry out a technical assessment. I feel they have examined all the relevant factors. When we announced our decision, we made public the findings of this public assessment and we are going to continue making public all the information which are not commercially confidential to try and reassure all our hon. colleagues that the decision was truly made to promote an increased transfer of technology through Canadair.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF BURSARY PROGRAM

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. He will know that students have higher and higher debts to bear. Some are starting their working lives with debts of $8,000, $10,000 and, indeed, $20,000. Will the Secretary of State not agree this is deplorable and that the Canadian Student Loan Program is not adequate to meet the needs of students? Would he consider a bursary program instead of or in addition to the current loan program?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite correct, this is a very, very important matter. Indeed, I will be discussing that very topic with the provincial Ministers of Education at our next meeting.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, why has the Secretary of State not published any annual reports on the Canadian Student Loan Program since his Party came into Government? Why is he covering up a situation which he must know is getting worse, and what action will he take?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Ministers of Education for the provinces met in mid-September. They asked if I would join them in a consultative committee. I have indicated my desire to do so. We are meeting within weeks. At the conclusion of that meeting, of course I will be happy to meet with the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members of the House to deal with the situation.

DELAY IN RESTRUCTURING INDUSTRY IN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns the crisis in Quebec shipyards. On October 10, the Minister promised, for the umpteenth time, that on October 24 work would start on the super ferry Caribou II, seeing this as the answer to the 5,000 jobs lost as a result of the sale of Versatile's Lauzon and Montreal operations to Marine Industries. Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether it is true that this transaction has been delayed and no jobs have been created because of a disagreement between the Government and the company on the restructuring of the TRUMP program?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed aware of this Government's efforts and success in this area, in which it has joined forces with the Province of Quebec and the private sector to reach an agreement on restructuring the industry in Quebec. As for the information the Hon. Member is requesting, namely, the reasons for the delay, I am not in a position to confirm there has been a delay, but I certainly shall consider his question and give him an answer as soon as possible.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION CONCERNING FRIGATES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister check . . . This will be the fifth time the Minister informs shipyards from Lauzon to Quebec City that the ferry Caribou II will be built. There have been a lot of promises, but nothing concrete. Considering the problems being encountered by the company in Saint-Jean, where a delay of five or six months are expected, could the Minister give the House the assurance that the frigates that were promised the Sorel shipyards on February 2 will be built within the time-frame previously promised by the Government?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to point out that the Hon. Member's insinuations that there has been a delay in the frigate program at Saint-Jean has no basis in fact. As for the other issues he is raising, we will also give him that information, and I hope that when construction starts on the Caribou, he will rise in the House to applaud the Government.

MINES AND MINING

FUTURE OF ALGOMA ORE MINE AT WAWA

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines. It concerns a problem in the community of Wawa in my riding. It is of grave concern that there have been some massive lay-offs in Wawa during the last several months. We are now faced with possibly a complete closure of the Algoma Ore mine in that locality. Closure is unthinkable as it would bring economic chaos not only to Wawa but to the whole area. Will the Minister please tell this House, and through this House the residents of Wawa, what is being done to circumvent this closure?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all share the Hon. Member's concern with regard to the potential loss of jobs in Algoma's Wawa operation. I guess it is no secret that for a long period of time that particular company has had a very difficult time in remaining competitive. The company has put forward a package, if you will, of potential solutions which would require perhaps assistance or concessions from labour, utilities, the province, and from the federal Government. That package is under consideration and we will try to respond as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE

FARM DEBT REVIEW BOARDS—HANDLING OF CASES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In the first two months of operation the Federal Farm Debt Review Boards have received over 1,200 Notices of Intention to foreclose family farms. Six hundred and seventy of these Notices of Intention were filed in Saskatchewan. The present debt review board structure cannot properly handle the hundreds of cases before it in Saskatchewan. How does the Minister intend to alleviate this serious and unworkable situation?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think we have to appreciate the fact we are breaking new ground. There have been some rather minor difficulties in the start-up process. However, if we find that numbers continue to grow and it develops into a major problem, the Hon. Member may recall that under the legislation it is possible for us as a Government to establish more than one debt review board for each province.

FAMILY FARM SITUATION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the number of Notices of Intention filed indicate the extent of the real crisis in farm financing and show as well the inadequacy of the Government's actions to date. Does the Government have any plans to stem this attack on the family farm?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to examine the record since day one, he will find many major initiatives which have been taken by the Government—

Mr. Fulton: Name one.

Mr. Wise: —to ensure the continuation of the family farm.

Mr. Fulton: Name one.

Mr. Wise: That's where we were yesterday, that is where we are today, and we will be there tomorrow.

IMMIGRATION

AWARDING OF MINISTERIAL SPECIAL ENTRY PERMIT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Media reports today confirmed that the Minister awarded a special ministerial permit to an individual with a record of over 20 criminal convictions, a man the Minister lobbied for as a backbench Member of Parliament. Given that this outrageous decision goes against his own departmental advice and the position taken by three former Ministers of Immigration, on what grounds does the Minister base a special entry into Canada for this individual? Can he clarify if any of his staff or officials helped in the drafting of the rehabilitation letter, signed by this individual, to his Department and Cabinet?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we have a family which has been with us in Canada since 1979. It is well established, well thought of, and has many supporters. There was a technical obstacle to other Ministers making a recommendation to the Governor in Council. The individual removed the obstacle by admitting he was the man in the conviction. It was then I was able to make a recommendation to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, that answer is a slap in the face to the thousands of legitimate immigrants who cannot get into this country, and makes a mockery of the process.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVOKE DECISION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister again why an individual with over 20 criminal convictions gets awarded a special admission into this country when thousands of Canadians cannot even be reunited with their families abroad? Is it not time to revoke this very regressive decision immediately and retain some credibility and fairness in the system?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the man had a right since 1981 to rehabilitate himself under the provisions of the Immigration Act. He came forward this year and signed a declaration. If formal approval is granted, steps will be taken to grant permanent resident status to the man and his family. This person has no criminal conviction in Canada. I ask the Member—

NARCOTICS

DRUG TESTING IN WORKPLACE—POLICY OF AMERICAN MOTORS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It concerns drug testing. The Prime Minister is aware that mandatory drug testing in the workplace is common in the United States but very uncommon in Canada. Is the Prime Minister aware that American Motors is now insisting that, as a condition of employment, some 3,000 employees in the process of being hired in Bramalea and Brampton are required to take a urine test for drugs? Is the Prime Minister aware of this policy of American Motors? Does he support such a policy in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to examine the specifics of the question set out by my hon. friend. Some weeks ago I had the occasion to describe the drug situation in Canada as I saw it and felt it to be at that time. I am delighted to see that most Canadians agree with that.

POSITION OF PERSONS SEEKING JOBS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, since the federal Government put some $60.5 million through the DRIE program into the American Motors plant, what advice does the Prime Minister now have for job-seekers who have to take this urine test for drugs when the Government has no clear policy on the issue, and when the Canadian Medical Association and the Canadian Bar Association are still reviewing the issue of compulsory urine testing for drugs?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is at a federal-provincial Health Ministers' conference. I will take the question as notice.

May I remind the Hon. Member that the Government has taken the lead nationally and internationally in many areas related to the use of drugs, particularly in the area of sports. I will be delighted to deal with the other part of the question when the Minister of National Health and Welfare returns.

PENSIONS

PROTECTION OF PENSION PLAN FUNDS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. What action or what legislation is being proposed to protect the contributions made to pension funds so that those funds will be secure, safe from creditors and abuse, and available to pensioners on retirement?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my hon. friend for his important question. I think the Hon. Member knows that on the bankruptcy of a plan sponsor the pension plan is normally wound up. When that happens the Pension Benefits Standards Act provides that no funds can be paid out for the benefit of the employer until all benefits provided under the plan have been fully secured. In that case, I should tell the Hon. Member, the Department of Insurance very carefully monitors this situation. Under amendments to the Pension Benefits Standards Act to be introduced in January, further powers to strengthen that provision will also be put in place.

ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In reply to one of my questions yesterday the Minister stated that there had been no decision to close the Algonquin Radio Observatory. If the observatory is not to be closed will the Minister explain why, one week ago today, the director of the observatory asked the employees for their resumés so that they could apply for jobs elsewhere? Was this just a matter of creating better morale among the employees?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will send to the Hon. Member a copy of the letter signed by Donald Morton, Director of the Herzberg Institute.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that I have said consistently that there is a modification plan to the program, something which the Council decided to do. Some employees will perhaps be looking for placements in other laboratories of the Government, or even in the private sector or in universities. That may have been the reason the director took this initiative.

FUNDING FOR OBSERVATORY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I refer the Minister to the final paragraph of Dr. Morton's letter dated October 31, which is in opposition to what the Minister read out today.

The director stated that if the observatory is not kept at its present level and present funding it will have to be closed down. How can the Minister stand up and say that some people will go but the observatory will stay? He is in direct conflict with his own director. Will the Minister explain that to the House?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I did say that I would undertake to send the Hon. Member a copy of the letter which states no such thing. The letter, which I will read from again, states that no final decision has been made as to the long-term future of the observatory. This letter is as late as November 3, 1986. They are not my words; I am using the words of the director who made the decision.

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION MODERNIZATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It refers back to the issue of the Sysco modernization Phase II. Is the Prime Minister still convinced that this is a viable project? Is he prepared to keep the promise with respect to the over $100 million in federal funding for this project?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can add to my earlier response.

FUTURE OF EMPLOYMENT IN PLANT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the question of viability was what the Prime Minister neglected to talk about in his earlier response. Is the Prime Minister not aware that a shut-down of this plant, or a marked reduction in its activities, will cost up to 1,200 jobs in a devastated part of the country which has already had far too many economic blows from this and other Governments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of attempting to create jobs in Nova Scotia and across the country. We have tried to avert shut-downs and to create new employment opportunities across Canada. From time to time there are predictions made by members of the Party of the Hon. Member, and others, which indicate that certain government policies could result in a loss of jobs. I think that my hon. friend will agree that there has been a very significant increase in job creation across Canada since the Government came to office, something in the neighbourhood of 600,000 jobs. I think that is quite a considerable accomplishment.

TELEVISING OF NORDIQUES HOCKEY GAMES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Last Saturday evening, the Québec Nordiques hockey team was playing against another NHL team, the Hartford Whalers, but the only game available to Quebecers was between the Washington Capitals and the Calgary Flames. Why is it that Quebecers cannot watch the games of the best hockey players in Canada, the Nordiques, on Radio-Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I understand quite well why the Hon. Member is raising this important question. I believe that Radio-Canada has not obtained the broadcasting rights to the Nordiques games from the NHL. However, I shall refer the matter to the CBC to see whether a solution can be found to the problem.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PARKER COMMISSION—PAYMENT OF FORMER MINISTER'S LEGAL EXPENSES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the decision of Cabinet to pay the legal fees of the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion in the amount of $350,000—or over $1,700 per day. Will the Prime Minister explain to the taxpayers of Canada why they should be forced to pay the former Minister's legal bills when the average taxpayer has to pay his own legal fees whether they be for a divorce or to fight a speeding ticket?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member knows that this is a public inquiry. The Hon. member for York—Peel is central to the inquiry. It was considered essential that he be there and that he have legal counsel. It was the decision of the Government to assist him with his legal fees.

• (1500)

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows that the Government was not under any legal obligation to pay the legal fees and in effect the Government is prejudging the case.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE REVOKED

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister prepared to revoke that inappropriate decision, and would he not agree that Cabinet should not be in business to provide legal aid to its buddies?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Government made a decision to assist the Hon. Member for York—Peel in this particular case. If I am correct, I believe there were cabinet Ministers of previous Governments who, under certain conditions, received similar kinds of relief. I am amazed that the Hon. Member would suggest that there should be a double standard in this case.

SPORTS

ORGANIZATIONS' DIFFICULTIES IN SECURING INSURANCE COVERAGE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport. He will be aware of the pending crisis facing every YM and YWCA across the country. We learned today that the one in Kamloops has been forced to put all of its programs on hold pending a resolution of the crisis it faces in securing comprehensive insurance. Would the Minister explain to the House what he is doing personally to ensure that YM and YWCAs across the country, as well as other groups, including the Red Cross, Boy Scouts and other charitable organizations, stay in business and continue to provide services by obtaining insurance at affordable rates?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, this is a global problem. Regarding the YW and YMCAs as well as sports in general, I am a step ahead of the Hon. Member. Over a year ago I appointed a commission to look into the situation and to bring forward specific recommendations. That commission has worked diligently over the past six months and has brought forward recommendations which are under review. We will be in a position to begin to implement them in the very near future.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

REQUEST FOR ADJOURNMENT—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I indicated this morning that I intended to reserve my ruling on the request of the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) to hold an emergency debate under Standing Order 29.

The matter raised by the Hon. Member is certainly very important. However, the conditions set down in Standing Order 29 are quite strict. While the situation in Moncton is serious, I have to refuse this request because it does not meet the criteria established under Standing Order 29.

[English]

I would like to say to the Hon. Member that the refusal to accept an application for an emergency debate must in no way be taken as an indication from the Chair that the matter is not in itself very important. I want all Hon. Members to understand that and I thank the Hon. Member for raising the matter.

CRIMINAL CODE AND CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-15, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to ask a question to my Conservative colleague about his statement in the House this morning, but as he is absent, I believe I shall just go on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I ask the Hon. Member whether she wanted to ask a question or to make a speech?

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Are we in the period of questions and comments following the speech of an Hon. Member? If I could have the name of the Hon. Member, we will do what we can to assist the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: I think I can assist all Hon. Members. When the House rose, the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) had completed his speech. I do not think that the Hon. Member is in the Chamber. If it is the wish of the House to wait a moment for the return of the Hon. Member, I would think that that would be an appropriate response, and then I could recognize the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. For the time being, we are unable to locate the Hon. Member who spoke. I would suggest, if it meets the favour of my hon. colleague opposite, that you stand down the period for questions and comments and we will do what we can to get the Hon. Member back into the Chamber.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is asking that this matter be put over for a few minutes. Is it for one minute or for five minutes? Under the circumstances—

Mr. Lewis: After the next speech?

Mr. Speaker: Is that the disposition of the House?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, just to make it as clear as possible, I do not think it has been our practice to allow questions and comments to be put off for a while. I think it would be difficult to do so. I see the Hon. Member has just walked in so perhaps he will take questions now.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Gérin) has the floor.

Has the Parliamentary Secretary concluded his speech?

Mr. Gérin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am ready for the questions and comments if there are any.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I would like—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. Members will know that following a speech on debate, there is a question and comment period of 10 minutes. The Hon. Member who had completed his speech just before the noon adjournment is now back in the Chamber. The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) wishes to ask that Hon. Member some questions. That Hon. Member will listen to the questions and, no doubt, will give a reply. Now I believe everyone is satisfied and we are back on track.

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggested it was easy for a 10-year old child to come forward and take the stand in court, before a jury of 12 people. I would like him to amplify his point, because when I was sitting on the Badgley Commission, we heard several representations indicating that a child 10-year old or younger felt very nervous in the presence of a jury.

The groups that presented submissions really insisted that, in order for a child to be able to give evidence, the evidence should be taken as true, and no jury should be there. Otherwise the child will be frightened.

Mr. Gérin: I thank the Hon. Member for her question, which is relevant. Clearly, an 8-or-10-year old cannot have the self-assurance of an adult before a court of justice. It is quite a shock for any person to appear as a witness before a court of justice.

But this should be balanced against the right of the accused to be tried before a jury. And if the accused were to be deprived of that basic right, this would greatly prejudice any Canadian who is facing a serious charge.

But, I must say, in the light of my personal experience before the courts, that there are alternatives for a judge presiding in a case before a jury, like hearing witnesses in camera for instance. He may reduce the court staff. He may allow a child's mother or father to be in attendance during the testimony, and above all there is now a provision in this Bill that would allow the judge to ask that the accused himself be excluded. So who would remain in the court? The judge, perhaps a stenographer or a clerk. There would remain counsel for each side and 12 members of the jury, and this is much less frightening than what we now have considering that usually the courtrooms are generally filled with people.

This means that those new facilities made avaible to the courts by this legislation are reassuring in my view as to child testimony.

And may I add that, to my knowledge, the Badgley Report did not deal with 8-, 9-, or 10-year old children, because they are not the ones generally who are severely shocked, but rather teenagers aged 15, 16 and 17 who will have to tell of a sexual experience for instance, something they are not used to. So they are reluctant to tell about it. Whether there is a jury or not, I do not think this will change anything. And this is where understanding is needed from the judges, the counsels and everyone for that matter.

Mrs. Pépin: I would like some further clarification. When the Hon. Member says that a child can suffer some trauma or more trauma than he would otherwise if he is 10 years old, does he mean that the child can be more or less intimidated? From his own experience, can a child be more or less traumatized depending on his age? Also, the Hon. Member emphasized the need for the accused to be there to defend himself, but we must remember that, in the case of sexual assault, the accused is often a relative. In most cases, it is the father, the stepfather, an uncle or other relative. I come back to my question. In that case, why did the Government not accept the recommendation of most of those who made submissions to the Badgley Commission, that is that children should be able to give evidence in a different atmosphere, without having the accused and the jury present?

Mr. Gérin: There are two ways of making a charge. It can be done either by summary procedure, without a jury, or by indictment, which generally gives the accused the right to a trial by jury. The prosecutor, with the police officers who have prepared the charge, and probably the parents in this case since the rights of the victims must be protected and the parents are entitled to be present at such preliminary proceedings, decide together what type of procedure is appropriate in that particular case. This partly replies to the question.

However, if after this preliminary work, because of the seriousness of the charge, it is decided to proceed by indictment, in the case of an offence punishable by 14 years of imprisonment, for instance, if it is decided to bring a serious charge which can result in a serious sanction or sentence, I do not think that we can forget the rights of the accused, as he is facing a rather serious interference with his freedom. He is told that he could lose 14 years of freedom. I do not see how the accused in such a case could lose such a basic right as that of being judged by his peers, that is to a trial by jury.

I think that this Bill allows some flexibility. For certain charges, probably the majority, I imagine that the accused will be charged by summary procedure. He will therefore be facing a judge without a jury.

In very serious cases, when the freedom of an individual accused of a serious offense is involved, it will be possible to have a trial by jury, but there are other provisions which allow a judge to decide to exclude the accused from the court room when the witness gives evidence. This goes a long way toward protecting the child. I am personally convinced that this measure will have excellent results.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with care to the remarks of the Hon. Member. Could the Hon. Member explain the delay in the decision of the Government to appoint a special adviser on child abuse? Last June the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) promised that he would be, as an urgent matter, appointing a special adviser to co-ordinate the federal Government's activity in this important area. Yet, five months later a special adviser has not been appointed. Can he explain the reason for this lengthy delay?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Badgley Report as such dates back to September 1984. A great many representations have been made since then. There has also been the Fraser Committee; a great number of groups have made representations to the Government. It is not surprising, therefore, that there was a certain delay which was necessary to introduce this Bill and obtain the consensus that will be required of all Canadians to address all these serious problems which have existed for decades and which the Government has had to face. I realize too that this two-year delay since the Badgley Report may appear long on the face of it, and the delay my hon. friend is referring to may also appear to be long. Yet, it touches on essential and extremely fundamental issues. All the groups wanted to be heard. As far as this Bill is concerned, I think that most recommendations have been accepted and are reflected in this legislation. I am convinced that in the very near future, with the cooperation of the provinces and other voluntary organizations in Canada, the still undecided issues, including that referred to by my hon. colleague, will be addressed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has the floor for a very short question.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, of course the Hon. Member did not answer the question, but my supplementary is this: In this Bill, why does the Government continue to discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation, given the fact that age of consent is 18 with respect to certains acts and 14 with respect to others? Why such discrimination?

Mr. Gérin: You will admit that we must set . . . There is no discrimination, that is not the way I see it. We have to draw the line somewhere. Where is it? In the case of a child is it age 13 and a half, 14 and a half, 15?

Mr. Robinson: But why two lines?

Mr. Gérin: Why two lines? I too have children and I make a distinction between the one who is 13 and the other who is 17 and a half. All parents know this, it is not the same thing. Personally I do not think my little 13-year-old girl is in the same situation as my boy who is 17 and a half. A distinction has to be made between a child and an adolescent. The Government has decided it is going to be between ages 14 and 18. I think it is extremely logical, extremely fair. The old act referred to another category, 16-year-olds, and people were utterly confused. Now we are setting two lines: under 18 and under 14. First we do not change anything to the legal age, which is 12, then we say that people aged 18 or more have reached majority and will have to assume their responsibilities since the other majority age of 21 will be abolished. It is a definite improvement and I fail to see what else could have been done. All children under 18 cannot be treated on the same basis. There is a major change, a major distinction to be made with respect to children aged 13, 15 or 18 for example.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs Pépin).

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this new Bill, Bill C-15, is basically to protect children against sexual abuse and exploitation. Following a study of the Badgley Report, it was felt that amendments were needed to deal with sexual offences against children.

The amendments being proposed to provide increased protection for children may be summarized as follows: provisions for receiving unsworn evidence from children who are victims of sexual offences, without the need for corroboration; permission to videotape statements by a person under the age of eighteen in which he describes the acts complained of (the tape being admissible as evidence); provisions imposing severe sentences on persons who seek the sexual services of persons under the age of eighteen (up to five years imprisonment); provisions that raise the term of imprisonment from ten to fourteen years for those who live on the avails of prostitution of young persons under the age of eighteen.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the amendments provided in Bill C-15 will give children more effective protection against sexual abuse. In fact, this Bill draws heavily from recommendations contained in the Badgley Report, published in August 1984. I shall now give a more detailed assessment of some of the legal provisions included in this Bill.

I agree with Section 139 which provides that consent is no defence when the complainant is under fourteen. The fact is that even behaviour that does not resort to force or to the threat of such force or to misrepresentation or the exercise of authority can still be such as to unduly persuade a person under the age of eighteen to consent to the commission of a sexual offence, whatever it may be. In fact, the provisions of the new Section 139 are a direct reflection of Recommendation 13 of the Badgley Report.

As for the new sub-section 139(2) which provides that: "it is not a defence that the complainant consented to the activity that forms the subject-matter of the charge unless the accused (a) is aged twelve or thirteen years; (b) is less than three years older than the complainant; and (c) is neither in a position of trust or authority towards the complainant nor is a person with whom the complainant is in a relationship of dependency." I am somewhat puzzled, because it has been proven that young victims are as likely to be exposed to threats of force on the part of persons whose age is relatively close to theirs as they are to threats by those who are older, as far as participating in sexual acts is concerned. Assuming that the complainant is thirteen, the accused could be fifteen and thus avail himself of the provisions included in subsection 139(2). I would suggest that a 15-year-old adolescent is stronger than a 13-year-old adolescent and can therefore handle his younger brother and take advantage of him for sexual purposes.

Concerning clause 140 on sexual interference, I would like to see it amended along the lines of Badgley report recommendation No. 7 which reads as follows:

"Every person who, for sexual purposes, touches the genital or anal region of a young person with any part of the body or with any object is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to: (i) imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years if the complainant is under age 14, or (ii) imprisonment for 10 years if the complainant is between ages 14 and 16.

In this section, "young person" means a person under age 16.

The fact that the young person may have agreed to the activity which is the object of the charge, or that the accused may have thought the young person to be 16 years of age or older does not constitute a defence to a charge."

Again I would like new clause 154 on buggery to be amended along the lines of Badgley report recommendation No. 5 which reads as follows:

"Every male person who commits buggery on a female person who is not his wife and who is under age 18, or on a male person under age 18, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to: (i) imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years, if the person with whom the act was committed is under age 14; or (ii) imprisonment for five years if the person with whom the act was committed is between the ages of 14 and 18."

Similarly, new clause 155 on bestiality should be amended to take into account the Badgley report recommendation.

As to clauses 166 and 167 respectively, first the parent or guardian procuring sexual activity, and second the householder permitting sexual activity, I think the new text of law is appropriate.

In my judgment, however, the provisions concerning exposure and contained in section 169 should read as follows: "Every person who, for a sexual purpose, exposes his genital organs to a young person, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary declaration of guilt; in this section, "young person" means a person who is or, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, appears to be under the age of 16."

I agree with new section 195 concerning juvenile prostitution. The wording of subsections (2), (3) and (4) would seem adequate to protect children against this terrible scourge of our society.

As for the section which does away with the need for corroboration of a child's evidence, I agree with the provision that such corroboration is not necessary in order to convict a person accused of a sexual offence against a child.

I would like to see Recommendation 19 of the Badgley Report fully reflected in this Bill, because I think this particular recommendation was overlooked.

Finally, my concluding remarks concern the evidence of children who have been victims of a sexual offence. The new Bill remains silent in this respect. I feel that fundamental changes must be made in the legislation to enable children to testify on their own behalf in the course of judicial proceedings.

Although the testimony of victims of sexual offences is now considered with less scepticism than it was previously, the legislation is still very wary about evidence given by children. I think there should be no special provisions in this respect. The evidence given by a child should be heard and considered in the same way as that given by an adult. According to studies made for the Badgley Report, there is a very little basis in fact for assumptions that question the truthfulness of evidence given by children and their ability to clearly remember the facts of a sexual offence.

We can therefore say that young children are not more inclined to give vague descriptions to the police than are older children.

Consequently, I would like to see Recommendation 18 of the Badgley Report made part of the new Bill.

Finally, I would like to express my approval of a new provision in the Bill authorizing the presiding judge to exclude the accused from the courtroom during the testimony of the complainant, if he is of the opinion that exclusion is necessary to obtain a full and candid account of the acts complained of from the complainant.

On the whole, I must admit this is a satisfactory Bill, but there are still many amendments to be made to the legislation, and I hope to have the opportunity of debating these amendments in committee. I also hope that enough time will be allowed for persons or groups wishing to make representations before the committee, so that everyone will be able to contribute.

I can assure you I will be taking an active part in the proceedings of this committee, but I still think a great deal remains to be done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Are there any questions or comments about the intervention of the Hon. Member? If not, we shall continue the debate with the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif).

• (1530)

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the serious problem of sexually abused children, the Government has now introduced in second reading Bill C-15, an Act to amend both the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act.

The new provisions contained in this Bill will provide better protection for children because they will give more flexibility and strength to our legal system.

Obviously, the changes in the present legislation will have immediate effects on health and welfare programs. First, the new legislation will allow the authorities to institute proceedings against a greater number of offenders, and it is virtually certain that this will result in a greater number of charges and convictions.

Mr. Speaker, these offenders, and there have already been references to the Badgley Report and other studies on this subject, are nearly always men. Often, they are also the fathers, brothers or uncles of their young victims, and this constitutes a challenge to the legislators, as well as to the professionals, psychologists, psychiatrists, social workers, and all the others who must prepare the families to face the legal process and live with the consequences.

Also, the fact that these children will be able to give evidence before the court either on videotape or in person, will require special training for those who are in charge of these interviews so that they can carry them out not only in a way that will be legally acceptable, but also to avoid any psychological trauma for the child.

The judicial system as well as the social and health systems will have therefore to work hand in hand, not only in the particular cases which I have just mentioned, but also in other cases which I should like to review quickly.

As everybody certainly knows, it is with a pluridisciplinary outlook that the Government announced on June 10 last a series of initiatives which was to include not only this bill under review, but also a major package of social legislation. From that moment, Hon. Jake Epp was designated as responsible Minister and undertook to set up in his Department a secretariat to coordinate all federal measures in his own Department and in all other departments concerned.

An interdepartmental committee has just been established to promote this coordination. This committee is made up of representatives from the Secretary of State, the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, of the Solicitor General, of Justice, of National Defence, and Status of Women Canada.

This new Secretariat will complete a wide range of programs already implemented by the Department of National Health and Welfare since 1978, including mainly a National Information Centre on Family Violence and the funding of numerous research and demonstration projects.

Mr. Speaker, all these years of work in the area of child abuse have given the Department a working experience and a global perspective on this issue, a perspective which places the current legal reforms in a quite unique social context.

Like any social or medical problem that arises suddenly and unexpectedly, sexual abuse has left us helpless as a modern society. Helpless first because the fact, as reported in the Badgley Report in 1984, that in a major survey, 50 per cent of women and 40 per cent of men did recognize that they had experienced undesired sexual acts before age 16.

Those who answered were people of all ages, that is 30-40-60-year olds who remembered their childhood in the 1920's and 1930's.

In that half or so of Canadian men and women, there are still people who have been severely shocked and to-day they are the parents, the offenders or the teachers perhaps of our children.

For one reason or another, a large number of those people need help either themselves to be good parents, or because they are subject to persistent personal anxiety or to dangerous and hard to control behaviours.

Given that tragic problem, let me refer briefly to the approach and the measures that will be considered by the department over the next five years.

As you already know, $20 million have been earmarked for a program to help prevent and solve that problem. We must look at the issue, in a comprehensive and multidisciplinary way, about which do I need to stress, experts consistently agree. As in any family violence problem, whether children or battered wives are involved, the question must be addressed by all professions and at every level of society. In other words, it is not for governments alone to deal with sexual abuse. Professional associations, national non-government groups, school systems, benevole societies, people in general, everyone in both the private and public sectors has a specific role to play.

In almost all cases, the youth protection service remains the co-ordinating agency; sometimes task forces in hospitals play that role, that is they invite to a common table physicians, police officers, teachers and all sorts of experts to draw up guidelines to ensure a responsible and co-ordinated intervention.

One could ask what is the use of passing legislation to control criminal behaviour if the victims go unnoticed by the experts, if these experts have not learned to work with the police to set up well-documented files, if there is a lack of co-ordination between child welfare services, family courts and criminal courts before all of which the family has to appear?

The department will seek the co-operation of all sectors and disciplines. In its working context, Mr. Speaker, the department will have to always remain aware of the fact that the provinces are to be the first to intervene in cases of sexual abuses and provide with necessary follow-up services for the victims, the families, and the offenders. However, the federal Government has an important contribution to make by supporting the provinces in this work. The department is very much aware that all parties involved with the problems are overwhelmed by the frightening number of former and recent victims who report to the authorities day after day. It is essential to find long-term and short-term solutions which are both inexpensive and effective.

One solution of particular interest to the Department is to support systems whose contribution has not always been readily recognized and ask them to join in the task of educating the public and protecting and following up problem cases. I am thinking, for instance, of the churches which have played a supportive role for families, especially in rural areas. The job environment is also an excellent way to reach a large number of parents and make them aware of the issue of child abuse, while at the same time we could also increase their awareness of violence generally in the family.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to consider the family context and the problem of violence in the home. Preliminary research has pointed out that abuse is often related to other problems existing in the family. For instance, a study in Alberta supports the results of research carried out in the United States which show that children who followed their mother to a shelter after the mother was abused by the husband or partner, were far more likely to suffer sexual abuse than children in the general population.

Studies have also shown there is a cycle of violence that goes on from generation to generation. In other words, girls who have been sexually or otherwise abused as children are more likely to become victims of abuse once they are adults, while boys who suffered sexual abuse are likely to repeat their experience by acting as the aggressor once they have become teenagers or adults.

The important thing to remember is that the problem of sexual abuse must be considered within the perspective of the family. This brings us to another very important aspect, namely, prevention. Considering the so-called cycle of violence, it is imperative to start prevention programs in order to persuade the general public to reject value systems that promote violence and sexual exploitation in particular.

Our knowledge of the way the public can be educated is still very basic, and much remains to be done to find out how we can inculcate more acceptable values. Long-term prevention is probably the best way to eradicate the problems of sexual abuse.

Mr. Speaker, we may be overwhelmed by the increasing number of cases being reported to provincial offices and police stations, and by the continuing shortage of services from agencies that are already working to full capacity, but it is also a fact that although the problem has been recognized, science has not yet had time to collect, examine and verify its various working assumptions.

We still have a long way to go before ascertaining which types of treatment are successful and which are ineffective. Were surgical science at the same point as sexual abuse is now, few of us would agree to an intervention. And still, given the numerous descriptions of recent and past victims, social and mental services must overcome uncertainties and help victims. Therefore the federal Government will fund research and demonstration projects to establish a sound basis for the treatment of victims and assailants alike. All the initiatives I have just mentioned will help professional staff deal directly with families and will have to be taken after consultation with experts in the field and the provincial Governments which are responsible for looking after the people involved, in a multidiscipline perspective.

To ensure success the Department is preparing a consultation for next fall to promote a concerted approach aimed at a national strategy in which all parties involved will participate, including the private and public sectors as well as the victims themselves. All Government levels will be represented: the federal Government, provincial and territorial administrations, municipalities and small communities. The preparatory work done this year and the results of next fall's meeting will be the basis of the program for the next four years. Without the participation of major Canadian institutions we would not even consider setting up prevention, research and general education programs, or preparing professional staff and the public at large to come to grips with this urgent problem. Mr. Speaker, we are seeking a national commitment.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? There being none, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise to speak generally in support of Bill C-15, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act, which deals particularly with the very serious issue of child abuse. We support this Bill in principle. We are pleased that the Government brought it forward separately from other sections of the Bill which was presented in the last Session of Parliament. We had serious concerns about many of the sections dealing with pornography in that Bill. Although we want some amendments to this Bill, we support it generally in principle.

The portions of this Bill concerning juvenile prostitution and sexual abuse of children are of deep concern to me and my constituents, as I know they are to all members of the House. In Vancouver East we have had and still have very many young people on the streets involved in juvenile prostitution who were victims of sexual abuse as young children. I will speak about that a little later.

It is a great tragedy that the lives of so many young people are being ruined as a result of early sexual abuse. Unless there is some kind of treatment or intervention, very often their lives continue to be disfunctional in many ways as they become adults. My colleagues and I spoke very strongly in the debate on Bill C-49 on the need for stricter sanctions against the customers of juvenile prostitutes. I am pleased that there are some tougher sanctions applying to that contained in this Bill. This is, of course, only one aspect of dealing with the issue of juvenile prostitution. We need a multifaceted approach to dealing with young people on the streets.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), very ably analysed the concerns which we have about this Bill from a legislative point of view in his remarks this morning. I hope these matters can be improved through amendments. These are also concerns of the Canadian Council on Children and Youth. I refer Members to its analysis which is based on research and refers to concerns of the Badgely and Fraser Reports as well.

I would like to briefly summarize these concerns. First, under this Act a judge would be given the power to determine whether a child is capable of giving evidence. We find this to be far too subjective. I do not think it is fair to put judges in this position either. We believe that attention must be given to that section of the Bill. Second, there is the problem of whether the accused should be in court while a child is giving testimony. This Bill says that the accused may be in court. Surely this is a very intimidating experience for a young child who is being asked to testify against the person who has abused, frightened and damaged him or her and who may be sitting very close by in the court room. We do not feel that this is appropriate. It should not be allowed.

Third, we approve of the use of videotapes for taking evidence from a child. However, we do not feel there should be any time limit on this. I am sure that provision can be amended. It is obvious that we cannot just sit a child down and say that we are now going to talk about this terrible thing which happened. A child must have time to disclose information which is very painful and may be repressed. They must be in a very comfortable situation with people whom they trust. It is much better to do this at the appropriate time. I do not see why information obtained later should not be included on videotapes as well. It is certainly a better way of obtaining the information than in a very painful, formal and frightening situation.

Fourth, we are happy that the Bill does not require corroboration of a child's evidence. I have a very interesting article by June Callwood to which I refer members. She quotes an authority which states that children at about the age of six are able to make mature judgments on many matters, are able to speak for themselves and should be allowed to do so. The article to which I refer was in The Globe and Mail in October.

This Bill discriminates on the basis of sexual orientation. We believe there should be a consistent age of consent for both men and women. I believe that is practical and reasonable. This was recommended by the Special Committee on Equality Rights as well. Finally, it is quite unreasonable that the penalties prescribed in the Bill for beastiality exceed those for abuse of a child by a person of trust. Surely that should be changed.

I do not want to go into greater depth on the legislative issues which my colleague covered so ably this morning. Rather, as the critic for social policy, I would like to concentrate on some of the social aspects and implications of child abuse and the need for a much broader approach than is presented in this Bill. I believe very strongly that this is an obligation of the federal Government as well as provincial Governments.

In my earlier remarks I said that my colleagues and I are very concerned that so many young people are homeless and on the streets. There are young people from all over Canada on the streets of my riding. It is a real tragedy, not only that these young people are homeless but that they are involved in prostitution and drug abuse and often other illegal pursuits such as breaking and entering and other activities which are destructive to themselves as well as society. The case histories of many of these young people frequently reveal that they have been abused as younger children, often by people in their family such as a relative or friend who is a trusted person. If the abuse continues, this is extremely destructive to the child's personality.

These are the children who are withdrawn and anxious in school and have very low self worth. Often their teachers do not go beyond these symptoms to recognize that there is a very serious underlying family problem. They do not try to get help for the child but they have an obligation, as we all do, to do something about it.

I have also heard of cases of children who have gone to a doctor suffering from physical abuse. I saw a case on television involving a child with anal bleeding for which the doctor prescribed a diet of bran. The fact that this was a symptom of serious child abuse was not recognized. Medical and other professionals are reluctant to recognize child abuse, just as they are reluctant to recognize family violence and the battering of women. They are reluctant to intervene in family situations because it still seems to be part of our training that we do not interfere. However, it is extremely important to the protection of a child that we recognize what may be happening and intervene in such situations.

Furthermore, social workers often have little training in this field. In Vancouver, for example, unfortunately the Department of Human Resources had to retire, or fire, a sexual abuse team which consisted of the most skilled specialists in this field. They were recognized right across Canada and this team was very important as a resource to help train social workers and school personnel. That team was eliminated. During this time of restraint the Government also fired child care workers who were required to work on a one-to-one basis with children who had been abused, had family problems, and needed much help to recover.

I want to return to my remarks concerning young people on the street. Many of them are involved in prostitution. I have here a very realistic and moving article entitled "Street Youth in Vancouver", which was written by a youth worker, David Dranchuk. He has worked with young people on the streets for the past six years and is employed by the Anglican Church of Canada. I want to read from this because I believe he gives a very eloquent account of his personal and hurtful experience of what is happening to young people and what little we are doing about it. He says that Vancouver is the runaway capital of Canada. Some of the children are as young as 12, but most are around 15 or 16. These children come from all over Canada. He goes on to say:

> Most of the children I find on the streets have a history of running. Often they are from unstable home situations or have already been removed and made wards of a child protection authority. Very often there is a history of abuse—physical, emotional or sexual; especially sexual abuse.
> When I take a closer look, I find that these children have a lot more in common. They tend to have a very poor self imagine; perhaps the result of abuse. Not surprisingly, they have a profound distrust of adults in authority. Many are emotionally disturbed and don't feel wanted or accepted. For acceptance, they will do almost anything.
> This need for acceptance is very significant. Because the street community is a very accepting one, they gravitate to the streets.

He goes on to say:

> Before too long, the young runaway learns an important axiom of street life. Nothing comes for nothing. You have to pay. And because they have no money, sex becomes the common token of exchange. This is particularly true of girls who have been sexually abused at home.
> If this child is not diverted from the streets and its sordid activity, he or she becomes entrenched into street life. It is not a good life. It is self destructive. I sometimes call it death on the installment plan.
> Drugs are a big part of street life.
> Drugs help to numb the pain of living. Drug overdoses are common. Sometimes the overdose is fatal. What a senseless waste of a young life!

He goes to note that there are practically no services that are relevant or usable by these young people. They are unable to stay in foster homes and landlords will not rent to them. Therefore, they end up on the streets. Employers will not hire them so they turn to drug trafficking, shoplifting and various forms of break and entering, theft, and prostitution. Wherever they go they seem to get repeated confirmation of their own lack of personal worth.

I know that where there are young people on the streets in my riding, people in the neighbourhood tend to abuse them and do not want to have anything to do with these kids. They do not even want a youth centre in the area. It is a very sad situation.

Mr. Dranchuk went on to say that many services are needed. I would appeal to the Government, particularly the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in co-operation with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), to ensure that there are funds available and special projects are developed that will provide some of these services. Mr. Dranchuk states that they need more street workers because there are only three street workers in Vancouver for literally hundreds of kids. They must be special people who, themselves, can live on the streets and be accepted by street people. He goes on to say:

> Also needed is a Youth Services Centre open seven days a week until about three in the morning. Besides trained counsellors, such a Centre should have emergency food along with laundry and shower facilities.

There are only one or two training programs that supposedly help young people but usually are not relevant at all. Once the bureaucratic screening and selection procedure is completed, young people who might begin to be interested simply drop out. If they happen to be lucky enough to get a job or into a job-training program, they are usually paid minimum wage so they often end up back on the streets because they do not have enough to live on.

Mr. Dranchuk also states that another needed facility is a "safe house" where street kids can stay for up to three days. These are suggestions by people who have experience with what can be done. The important point is that there is no funding available to provide these specialized services now and I urge the Ministers who are directly involved in this area to give some attention not just to imposing penalties through the law which, of course, must be done as far as customers are concerned, but to provide an alternative for these young kids who are on the streets for a reason.

There is also a need for prevention. We hear much about programs that have been initiated in some schools that are helping children to be more aware of potentially unsavoury relationships. One program in particular teaches children to say no if there is sexual touching that is likely to lead to sexual abuse. This is a progressive approach and I think many parents who are very anxious also need such programs to learn how to deal with this problem in an educational, relaxed way so that they are not over-anxious and creating an unhealthy situation for their children.

The legitimate concerns about child abuse are certainly much more open as a result of many public programs dealing with it. However, I hope that this approach to more awareness does not lead to over anxiety and near hysteria. I believe that is happening in some areas. In British Columbia there have been incidents of child abuse by teachers. This has caused a general backlash against the whole profession of teaching, which is grossly unfair. I think it is also very unfortunate if good teachers, or care givers of any kind, cannot show the normal kind of warm affection and responses which are important to children and to the relationship between a child and an adult.

I believe we have to do positive things in both prevention and treatment as well as through the laws, such as in the Bill before us, and we must ensure there is not a great hysteria. In our hearings on child care we are finding that parents are very reluctant to hire male child care workers in daycare centres, for example, which is very unfortunate. This again is because of reports of perhaps just one or two situations where there has been some child abuse. It is very important that we have male child care givers in our centres because so many of the youngsters do not have other male adults in their home environment.

Finally, I would like to take a moment to refer to many women who have been victims of sexual abuse or other forms of family violence and who may be in transition houses. There have been studies which show that women who have been abused often marry wife batterers and their children in turn may suffer from family violence. I recommend to all Hon. Members, and to the Committee on Justice, that they review a film which we showed very recently called "Breaking Silence". It is available from Women in Focus, a group in my riding of Vancouver. This film very eloquently shows many examples of women who have been victims of abuse and the terrible trauma which still remains with them as adults, affecting their lives, and the great importance of treatment and prevention for both adults and children.

I say once again that I am pleased to support this Bill, along with my colleagues. We think there are amendments needed, as well as a whole program which will deal with children and young people who have been abused.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to put to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). I am glad her Party agrees in principle with the Bill. The section with respect to an accused being in court or being excluded from court is a permissive section in that the judge "may" exclude an accused. If I understood the Hon. Member correctly, she said it should be mandatory, that the accused "shall" be excluded from the court while a child is giving his or her evidence. Throughout the long history of criminal law, it developed that the accused had to be in court to protect his interests and rights. If there is a mandatory exclusion, how would the New Democratic Party handle a situation where a man or woman represented themselves rather than be represented by a lawyer?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I think this is a matter which surely should be dealt with in committee, with witnesses. I am not a lawyer. Probably the Hon. Member knows better than I the legal aspects. However, I am sure the Hon. Member would find it very difficult if his own child or a young child he knew was in the position of having the person who abused them sitting in court while they were giving testimony. As a social worker, I find that quite unacceptable, but I would leave it to the committee to decide on the details of the law.

Mr. Thacker: If I understood the Hon. Member correctly, as a question of principle she feels the accused should be excluded with the word "shall". I wonder if it would not be wiser to leave it to the judge as the Bill provides?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague has indicated, there may be some circumstances where the accused perhaps should not be excluded. I would suggest to my hon. friend that we leave this to the committee, which will have witnesses before it. I think it is important that there be a time period for witnesses to prepare and be familiar with the Bill. I think that is something that the Canadian Council on Children and Youth have particularly advocated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no further questions or comments, we shall resume debate.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues today in the debate on Bill C-15 which deals with amendments to the Criminal Code with respect to sexual abuse of children. I am pleased to hear from my colleagues on all sides of the House that there is agreement about the importance of these legislative changes and the fact that they have been long awaited throughout the land.

I would like to review the situation and some of the background of which I am aware. We know, of course, of the excellent work done by the Badgley Commission. Its report was released in 1984. Perhaps, on the Canadian scene, this was the first time that the myths of child sexual abuse had been exploded. Up to that time people had been afraid to talk about the subject. We are now aware that it has been going on for many years. It is something which happened in secret and there had not been a great deal of public discussion.

I recall the first time I really became aware of how widespread it was is when I lived in Campbell River in the early 1980s. A very courageous young woman, who had been the victim of sexual abuse herself, finally spoke out and started a self-help group in the community. At that time there was no funding. She would go to various service clubs and groups to raise a little money here and a little money there for a telephone service or answering line. I sat in on some of those discussions and was amazed at just how shocked people were to even think that these things were happening. In this case, the woman had been sexually abused by her father. We could not believe this existed in a quiet and pleasant town. We became very aware of the impact the number of incidents of abuse had on that particular woman's life. Since those days there have been many different stories and books published on the subject.

When the Badgley Report was released, we were shocked as well by the statistics it presented, that at some time during their lives one in two females and one in three males have been victims of one or more unwanted sexual acts, that four in five of these unwanted sexual acts had first been committed against these persons when they were children or youths, that three in five sexually abused children have been threatened or physically coerced by their assailants and that one in four assailants is a family member or a person in a position of trust. About half are friends or acquaintances and only about one in six is a stranger. I think it is very sad and shocking to us all to find those kinds of things going on in our society.

We are very aware, of course, that this has been happening for centuries and statistics show that it is most generally women who as children have been the victims of sexual abuse and have been afraid to speak out. There is an interesting anthology published in 1983 entitled "I Never Told Anyone". It is writings by women survivors of child sexual abuse. It is this kind of book, along with others, which has brought this issue to the fore and have enabled women who have been victimized to speak out. I would like to read from the Preface by Louise Thornton:

> This collection of women's voices speaks out about what is seldom said, seldom told, seldom acknowledged—the sexual violation of children. It is about the silence of nights spent holding in screams, holding back tears, holding in one's very self. And it is about the stillness of days when all of a young girl's resources are used up in keeping the secret from everyone, sometimes even herself. The women in this anthology are breaking this silence. Whether by whispers or cries or shouts or screams, they will continue to shatter it with the power of their own voices, their own words.

There are some very moving stories in this anthology. I think what is important is that over the last few years there has been a recognition of how important it is to speak out, and now we are beginning to help our children understand that.

• (1610)

I saw a television documentary last week which I believe was entitled, A Violent Secret. It depicted a young girl about 11 or 12 years of age who had been subjected to some unwanted sexual advances in a small town. She kept the issue a secret for a long time. The program depicted how her behaviour had been affected in terms of her friends and family because she felt so demeaned. I know the type of experiences young people go through because they do not understand what has happened to them and how destructive these experiences can be to their self image. This particular story had a happy ending in that the young girl was finally able to tell her parents and the perpetrator of the crime was brought to trial.

A National Film Board film entitled, Feeling Yes, Feeling No, is being shown in schools across the country. It is important that we begin to educate our young people about child sexual abuse. It is important for them to know that they do not have to take it and that if something happens to them they must tell someone whom they trust.

The legislation before us today is an important weapon in the fight against child sexual abuse. It deals with the legal framework. Other Hon. Members have mentioned today that we recognize this is only part of what we need to do. The rest has to be done through educational programs and support programs in communities. I am pleased to see that the federal Government, primarily through the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), is initiating programs in this area, as well as the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) through his missing children initiatives.

Often there is a connection. Many of the children who go missing have often been victims of some type of unwanted sexual abuse in their early days. Obviously, all of these matters tie together. What the communities are asking for is a stronger legislative framework which will more clearly enunciate the crimes involved and send a clear message to members of society that we will not condone the sexual abuse of children under any circumstances. The legislation before us is an important part of that process. There will be other legislation coming forward in terms of amendments to the Criminal Code which will deal with child pornography.

In terms of this legislation, I wish to pay recognition to the tremendous work that groups in communities across the land have undertaken. In this regard I think of my own riding of Capilano and, in particular, a woman in my riding, Mrs. Olive Wyatt, who has been personally dedicated to this issue for years. For some time she has been visiting different community groups to raise the issue and to appeal to these organizations. She has worked with the churches and is personally involved with the stores in my area in terms of getting them to take child pornography off the shelves. She has been consistent and persistent in her efforts. It is as a result of the efforts of such women, and others across the country, who have helped to raise public conscience and outrage with respect to this issue that has resulted in the Badgley Report and the Fraser Report, as well as the legislation which is before us today.

As has been said earlier, this legislation deals with several different areas. It makes provision for some new offences. A problem which existed before was that offences were not comprehensive enough to deal with the real situation. Included in the legislation is the new offence of sexual interference, which is an important one. Once the legislation is enacted, it will be an offence to touch anyone under the age of 14 years for a sexual purpose with any part of the body or an object. Sexual purpose is defined as one directed to the sexual arousal or gratification of the individual initiating the activity. I am pleased to see that this offence will be applied equally to boys and girls, which is something the equality committee recommended.

The second offence with which I wish to deal is the offence of invitation to sexual touching. This will go a long way toward dealing with a problem that existed before and which could not be dealt with effectively in criminal law. It will now be an offence for a person to invite or urge a child under the age of 14 years to touch another person in a sexual way. Often when we are dealing with children six years of age and under we find that they have been urged or invited to partake in such activity. They do not know that what they are doing is wrong and that it will cause trauma to them. The person who is making the invitation is the perpetrator of the offence and should be dealt with in a harsh way by the law.

The third new offence of sexual exploitation will add sections to the Criminal Code to protect young persons between the ages of 14 and 18 years from sexual abuse committed by persons in positions of trust or authority. As I mentioned before, it is a sad reality that much of the sexual abuse of children is carried out by persons in positions of trust, that is, relatives, friends, people whom the children know and of whom they have no reason to be afraid. Yet in such circumstances an incident can occur.

This legislation will prohibit a person in a position of trust from touching a child between the ages of 14 and 18 for a sexual purpose or from inviting them to touch any part of their own bodies or another person's body for a sexual purpose. These new offences which form the core of the amendments will be successful in laying charges in a number of instances in which it has not before been possible.

In terms of the presentation of evidence, we have heard a great deal about the subject in the past. It is very difficult for children to go into a courtroom situation, something which has been designed for adults. They are already traumatized by the events which have occurred to them. We are introducing provisions which will allow for the videotaping of evidence soon after an event has occurred which can be used as evidence at trial. Corroboration of a child's evidence will not be required since, in many cases, that is just not possible.

In certain circumstances a child will be allowed to give evidence without the accused being present. It can be a very humiliating experience for a child to give evidence in front of the accused. We know that what has happened in the past is that someone has known about a situation of child sexual abuse and yet has been unwilling to bring the offender to trial because of the former provisions involving the child and the giving of evidence. In those cases the family sometimes did not want to go through with it. What we are now saying is that it is an obligation to do this because the person who has committed the offence should not be allowed to continue in the same manner. We have to bring them to court and to punish them.

Another area with which the legislation deals is the important area of child prostitution. A new offence is created, that is, to be a customer of juvenile prostitution under any circumstances. A much heavier sentence is provided. There are increased penalties with respect to living off the avails of prostitution when a juvenile, either male or female under the age of 18 years, is involved. Sentences of up to 14 years have been provided for in these circumstances.

We know the tragedy of child prostitution. We know that in many cases juveniles, the children involved in prostitution, have come from circumstances in which they were either sexually abused or were the victims of other types of abuse in their own homes and that they have a very low sense of self-esteem. They do not have the support systems of their own families or friends and often they take to prostitution because they have been offered some type of friendship by a pimp or by other people. They think that that is the answer. Of course we know that it is not. In the circumstances in which they find themselves, the potential for violence and disease is even worse.

We need the laws. As my colleagues have said, we need the programs as well in order that we may provide alternatives for young people who have entered into prostitution. We should provide safe homes and training programs so that these people have other opportunities beyond prostitution.

We know from the evidnece that quite often, young women and men go into prostitution because they think it is an easy way to earn money. If they have no training, they feel that they have no other way of making money. We would suggest in those circumstances that there be other training options and opportunities for these people to earn money so they are not left on the streets.

There is a great deal that needs to be done yet. Personally, I am very pleased to see the initiatives the Government is taking in this legislation and in other ways. For example, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has established the office of a special adviser on child sexual abuse. This office will provide a co-ordinating point and there will be an inter-departmental committee of senior officials from all Departments involved including Health and Welfare, Justice, Secretary of State, Solicitor General and Indian and Northern Affairs. This committee will help co-ordinate our approach.

Of course, it is not just the federal Government alone that can help in these circumstances. We need to work with the provinces and the territories, with community groups and with volunteer organizations that have an interest in these issues as well. We in the federal Government are taking the initiative and are providing this leadership role. Although we know we will not eradicate the problem, we will raise public consciousness through these kinds of initiatives. We will be able to deal with these offences, we will be able to provide options and opportunities for young people and children who have suffered abuse and we will be able to provide a better life for them.

I look forward to the discussion in committee where we will deal with some of the specific issues in the Bill. I look forward as well to early passage of this legislation so that its provisions may come into effect.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for her speech. I appreciated it. Of course, we have approved of the Bill and its principle is a good one. As the Hon. Member said at the end of her remarks, we will be looking at the Bill very attentively in committee to make sure the amendments to the Criminal Code are good and proper ones to make.

I have a brief question to ask the Hon. Member. She mentioned that the sexual exploitation part of the Bill applied to children between the ages of 14 and 18. I would like it to be clear in my mind that I understand the Bill as she does. I believe the clause in question indicates that that part of the Bill applies to children up to the age of 18. This means that it applies to those who are still 17 but not to those who have reached 18. I would like to make sure that the Hon. Member understands the Bill as I do. Perhaps the Hon. Member would correct her remarks on that small detail and agree with me that it refers to children up to the age of 18 and not the age of 18.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for pointing that out. Terminology in Bills always causes me great difficulty. Once one reaches the age of 18, one is an adult. Ordinarily, this and other legislation does not apply. That is my understanding of this legislation as well.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest and care to the speech of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). She is a colleague of mine from British Columbia and a former colleague from the Special Committee on Equality Rights. One of the unanimous recommendations made by that committee was for a uniform age of consent for sexual activity. In view of her support for that recommendation of the Equality Rights Committee and as a member of that committee, could the Hon. Member indicate if she intends to attend Justice Committee meetings and support amendments which would ensure that that principle is included in this legislation as well?

As the Bill is now worded, there is no uniform age of consent. There is an age of consent of 14 in most circumstances but an age of consent of 18 in the case of buggery. Could the Hon. Member confirm that indeed she does believe that there should be a uniform age of consent and that she will do her best to ensure that that principle is enshrined in this particular legislation?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I suppose one could imply from the legislation that 14 is the age of consent although there are provisions such as the one for sexual exploitation that apply after the age of 14 and up to the age of 18. There are some exceptions to that general rule.

As the Hon. Member knows, I am not presently a member of the Justice Committee. I would be pleased to look at the Bill in some detail and if I find that there are provisions that are inconsistent, I would be pleased to discuss them with the Hon. Member.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the speech made by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). I wonder if she would share with the House her opinion on what effect the circulation of explicit child pornography has on the increased number of cases of child molestation. Perhaps she could tell us how important it is in her opinion to curtail the distribution of that kind of material.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his questions. As he knows, later in the Session we will be dealing with amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with pornography. The Bill which was previously before the House contained special clauses dealing with child pornography.

I am not an expert on this and I cannot honestly say what kind of linkage there is. There is the perception that there is a linkage between child pornography and potential incidents of sexual abuse of children. I have read reports that go one way and the other on that so I cannot comment categorically on the true linkage. In my own opinion, child pornography is heinous and we should take very strong measures to ensure that it is eradicated from the shelves of supermarkets and from video cassettes.

Child pornography is degrading. Earlier, we talked of some of the consequences of sexual abuse. In some instances, the sexual abuse may be unwanted fondling or kissing but even that is degrading to someone who does not want to be touched or offended in that manner. It is particularly important for women to build their independence because women have often been the victims of this kind of pornography and abuse. I think it is important that it is made very clear that we do not accept that, whether it is in video cassettes, in magazines or in actual life. We need laws that deal very sternly and effectively with all of that.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

CRIMINAL CODE AND CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-15, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in part, I am happy to be able to participate in this debate. I am happy that there is all-party consent to move ahead with these very positive amendments contained in Bill C-15, but I must also point out that I am a little unhappy because most of the people who have chosen to speak on this issue in the House have been women. I know some of the men have spoken out. Certainly we have heard from a spokesman from each Party. It is unfortunate that in the main the parliamentary push tends to come from women to deal with issues such as child abuse, pornography, and issues which affect the fabric of family life.

I would like to return for a moment to some of the practical applications not only of this Bill but of the whole issue of prosecution in child abuse cases. I had the privilege of serving as a Member of the Ontario Legislature on the Social Development Committee, which produced two reports on child abuse. This Committee travelled to a number of communities across Ontario.

One thing that came out loud and clear in the course of those hearings on child abuse was that notwithstanding very positive changes in the Criminal Code, or any efforts that we might make as parliamentarians, until child abuse as an issue comes out of the closet, there will continue to be children who will be molested, and families who harbour the molestation of children. Certainly those children whose families have the courage to confront the aggressor through the criminal justice system more often than not are spurned and have an experience which frankly would lead people away from reporting.

On a couple of occasions when we as Members of the Ontario Legislature investigated, a well-meaning parent or relative who became aware of the situation of child abuse had convinced the child to come forward. In some cases the child was of an age where they were able to testify under the old rules. Yet, because of the court process and the extremely complicated and lengthy jurisprudence involved in following up a child abuse case, in many instances the abused child had to go into court and repeat over and over the allegations. In many cases an acquittal resulted simply because of the insufficiency of the laws and the insufficiency of the uncorroborated testimony.

Although a number of these changes will serve to encourage people to report and get to the root of the cause of child abuse, it is my fear that unless we as a society and as a Parliament start speaking out more strongly on issues like child abuse and are prepared to talk about them, not only in the context of Parliament, but also in the work that we do on a daily basis across the country, too many child abuse cases will remain closet cases.

There was a case in my community where an acquittal resulted simply because the current cumbersome criminal justice system does not serve our children well. There are some positive changes. Certainly one is in the announcement by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) where he talks about the possibility of having videotaped testimony. I recognize the inherent dangers that this might present in terms of civil liberties and being able to confront your accuser.

If you talk to experts in the field, for example people from the Toronto Sick Children's Hospital, which has a division specializing in investigating cases of child abuse from a medical and psychological point of view, they will tell you that it is extremely important when dealing with the evidence and the testimony of a child of a certain age to telescope the number of interviews, interventions, and the number of adults who are involved in questioning a child who has been potentially subjected to child abuse. With every subsequent interview and court appearance, the notion that that child somehow is guilty of the offence is reinforced.

This is something that the changes in the law will serve to modify. They are recognizing the fact that a child who is not over the age of 14 can provide testimony which is uncorroborated and that the onus is upon the defendant, not upon the child and the child's lawyer, to make sure that that child is not capable of providing witness in a courtroom.

There are some other issues which have to be addressed. The Government chose to tread rather lightly in light of having been burned in the last session of Parliament on some of the rather wide-ranging and unacceptable changes to the pornography law, and wisely decided to break up the issue dealing specifically with child abuse from the general over-all issue of pornography. But at the same time there is an element in the question of pornography which deserves to be dealt with in very short order. That is the issue of child pornography. It falls into the same category as the type of Bill that we are looking at today. There will hardly be a parliamentarian in the House who says that they do not support a move which will get tougher with child abusers. It is accepted that all Members of Parliament welcome the changes and would prefer that they become part of the Criminal Code as quickly as possible so that these people who are perpetrating heinous acts on young children will be punished.

The same sense of disgust and urgency appears when we deal with the issue of child pornography. At this point there has been no specific legislation in the House dealing with a curb on child pornography. What we have seen and what the Government is going to have to take some of the blame for is the cut-back on border enforcement. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a comment in the House today about the crisis epidemic in drug abuse. It is fine to talk about the epidemic in drug abuse. At the same time you cannot have the Government talking about an increase in child pornography, the difficulties of child abuse, the increase in drug abuse, and then cutting back on the people who are policing our borders to make sure that this type of garbage does not get into our country.

In the City of London, the Customs and Excise union has been told that for administrative reasons they are going to be down-sizing to almost half of the 99 employees as part of the Government's cut-backs. The employees in the administrative division of Customs and Excise in London have been told that they may get their walking papers.

On the one hand we have the Government making a commitment in the context of this Bill to say that it will amend the Criminal Code; "Yes, we are prepared to amend the Criminal Code". However, when it comes time to fund the agencies and the organizations that are involved with enforcing the flood of pornography entering this country, primarily from other countries—most of it is not made in Canada, most of it is filmed or photographed elsewhere—the Government cuts back on Customs and Excise officers and eliminates whole departments, as in the case of the City of London, without a squeak or a murmur, without a word spoken by the area Members of Parliament from the City of London who were approached on the issue of the down-sizing of the Customs and Exise office in the City of London.

The Government does bear some responsibility to ensure that not only do we move with the Criminal Code amendments, but recognize that Criminal Code amendments must be coupled with proper enforcement. If the tools are not in place through our Customs officers to ensure that pornograpy and drugs are not getting into the country, then frankly some of the Government's commitments ring a little hollow. It is prepared to change the law when it does not cost any money. As soon as it starts to cost some money, not only is it not interested, but it will in fact use the border as one area where there can be cut-backs to reduce the deficit. Unfortunately, this lack of financial commitment is endemic in this Government's policy toward families.

I was pleased to see that in the upcoming issue of Maclean's Magazine there is a special article devoted to the issue of early childhood education and some of the work that is being done on the parliamentary committee. This does have a bearing on questions of child abuse. More often than not if a child is in a secure, controlled, and well-supervised environment in the very early years, the chances are that they are going to be less prone to being subjected to incidences of abuse from within their own family, or from other sources.

In many cases early childhood education centres offer an early warning system. In some instances the system can expose a case of child abuse before it reaches the point of no return, before the child is so irreparably damaged that there is no possibility of rehabilitation.

When Katie Cooke's report came out, it made some specific recommendations dealing with the universal right of children to proper care. When we talk about universal accessibility to day care, we are talking about the right of all children under the age of five—those children in the zero to four age range, which are most critical years—to proper supervision, to be properly looked after. I do not think any Canadian would deny the fact that an investment in children at that young age will pay off very well in the future.

If we continue to allow the crisis in day care, the rather ad hoc situation of the moment, to exist in an uncontrolled and unlicensed fashion, we will find that those children who become victims of child abuse at a very young age will continue to face that abuse, undetected in some cases for years. We have heard the horror stories of children who have been subjected to abuse from within their own families, from friends, relatives or other people. Oftentimes it would be beneficial if these children were involved with an organization which was taught early detection, the warning signals or the danger signals. Such organizations could be taught to look for bruises or for the vocabulary of a little child being far beyond what could be expected. These are the danger signals which professionals in the field can sometimes ferret out and in fact curb or cut off child abuse before it reaches epidemic proportions.

Unfortunately we as a society seem to see all these things in isolation. We do not look at a global family policy. We look at whether we can bring in a Criminal Code amendment which will not cost money. Certainly it will increase the work-load of the courts, but if it does not have any effect upon the federal deficit, everyone would support it. If it does not cost any money, of course we will support it; that goes without saying.

This particular piece of legislation contains a number of positive elements, including the closing of loopholes which were in fact somewhat sexist. In the olden days we did not think of the possibility of a young boy being raped. I think it is a reality today. In the past we talked only about vaginal sexual intercourse. That is being dealt with in this legislation, and it is positive.

We are also dealing with the invitation to sexual activity. In other words, it becomes a crime for one not only to engage in sexual activity with a young person under the age of 14 years, but also to invite them. In a sense it is the child version of solicitation. For heaven's sake, if we are prepared to convict an adult for solicitation of another adult, it stands to reason that we should be prepared, at the very minimum, to proceed against someone who invites a young child to participate in sexual activity before reaching the age of 14 years. That is also positive.

The decision to differentiate for people who are in positions of trust is another positive element. It will now be illegal for an adult in a position of trust with a male or female young person under the age of 18 years, as was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), to touch or invite touching of the offender or another young person's body. That is a plus; that is a positive thing. There is a number of positive changes in this piece of legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if we really want a family policy, it is not enough simply to talk about changes to the Criminal Code, because such changes do not cost us anything. However, what would be useful in addition to these amendments, which are valid and which will have the support of everyone in the House in my opinion, would be to do something about pornography, for instance. We know that, because of the new cutbacks at the excise division offices, where the Government has reduced the number of employees, we are admitting to Canada a much greater volume of pornographic material, involving both adults and children.

I think that it is important for the Government to reassert that we should not only protect our children, but also do what we must to pay the cost, because it will cost something to give all children under the age of four the right to child care services in Canada. From birth to the age of four, all children should have access to child care provided either by the parents, by sitters at home or by other people.

A long time ago, it would probably have been heresy to believe that everyone in Canada had the right to a high-school or even a university education. This was not a given right in the 20s, 30s, 40s, 50s or 60s. Canadians did not have a given right to post-secondary education. They now have this right because, in Canada, equality is a precious gift.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the principle of equality must apply first and foremost to our young children. Anyone who has studied psychology knows that children are psychologically and developmentally affected the most deeply by what happens to them between birth and the age of three. These are the findings of psychologists who have carried out numerous studies on children.

If we forego the responsibility in the case of single parent families or families where both parents work outside the home and provide no assistance for child care, it is obvious that all children will not be treated equally.

Mr. Speaker, if we support this Bill, which deals directly with changes to the Criminal Code in cases of child abuse, we should also urge the Government to introduce in the House a comprehensive family policy which would deal not only with the criminals brought before the Courts, but also with a strategy to reinforce the examination of pornographic material from abroad.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) reminded us again today in the House of the drug problem which affects many young people and which leads a lot of them to prostitution, for instance, to support their drug habits. It is not good enough to speak against these things, and the Government should have also a policy which would make it possible to hire more personnel for border enforcement in order to prevent any pornographic material involving children from coming to this country, just as we stop drugs from entering this country.

What we are doing here is good and does not cost anything. I think it would be good for the Canadian people to be aware that the House is willing and ready, not only to amend the Criminal Code, but also to allocate funds to develop a family policy which would encompass such issues as day care centres, pornography, the family council, etc. Those are very significant issues for Canada, and I think that we are taking today a major step forward. However, if we do not want to take two steps backward, we will have to back our policies with a decision to provide funds for this project; failing which, those would remain empty promises which cost nothing.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? If not, resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

• (1650)

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is the last speaker for the NDP and he will be returning from his office shortly to take part in this debate. Perhaps in the meantime I could say a word or two on the Bill.

We need to see Bill C-15 as another major step in the modernization of our Criminal Code, which is now almost 100 years old. Our society has changed rather dramatically over the last 90 some years, so it is clearly time for a major restructuring of the Code. Members will remember Bill C-18 from the first session of this Parliament where we made dramatic changes to the drunk driving sections of the Criminal Code. As a result, the number of accidents and deaths on the highway dropped precipitously.

As well, in 1979, before your time, Mr. Speaker, the then Minister of Justice, now Senator Jacques Flynn, under the leadership of Prime Minister Joe Clark, started a process involving the renewal of our Criminal Code. The Law Reform Commission looked at the entire Criminal Code. Now, very likely this month, we will be tabling in the House a first draft of the new model Criminal Code which will deal with substantive sections. Later on there will be a proposal with respect to procedure in the Criminal Code. As Members know, a commission dealing with sentencing will shortly be reporting.

It is my hope, as chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, that Parliament will come together either with the committee, a subcommittee or indeed a special committee to take up these three streams of criminal law reform and pull them together so that by the centenary of our existing Criminal Code, which I think is 1992, we will have passed and proclaimed a brand new and modern Criminal Code which will take us into the 21st century.

I would like to first deal with the comments made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). I do not know that she was speaking officially for the NDP, but there is a provision in the law which says an accused may be excluded from the court while the allegedly abused child is giving his or her evidence. That seems sensible. We all know there can be continuing intimidation by someone in a position of power and authority over a young child. Yet we do not want to forget the principle of criminal law which says that the accused has the right to be present in court and to hear his accusers and hear the evidence against him or her. The judge, under this Bill, will have the discretion to exclude the accused.

If I understand the NDP position, and I may not, they want the Code amended so that the accused shall be excluded when the evidence of the child is being given. I would very much argue against that in principle. I believe we should leave that decision to a judge. For example, assume the accused is defending him or herself. How would you physically handle that? If the Code says they "shall" be excluded, then they shall be excluded. It seems to me there has to be some discretionary power here and I hope the NDP will review its position on that point.

I am sure that most Members will appreciate that this Bill provides a two-pronged approach to dealing with the rather alarming incidents of child sexual abuse by creating three new offences to protect children from sexual abuse. At the same time it amends the Canada Evidence Act to enable more children to testify in court. The Badgley Commission reported an alarming incidence of child sexual abuse but I will not go into the figures which were placed on the record by my colleague from Capilano. Suffice it to say that it is a problem which is at least being reported.

I am not sure that there is any more sexual abuse today than there ever has been, but it may be that there is an increase as a result of family breakups. In any case, it is clearly acknowledged today that there is a vast number of young people who have been sexually abused. I guess the real tragedy is that it is often done by someone in a position of trust, whether it be a parent, uncle, aunt or other relative. Obviously we need speedy passage of this Bill so that our children, who we all agree represent the future of this country, can grow up to be strong, straight and normal human beings.

With respect to the three new criminal offences, they are sexual interference, sexual exploitation and invitation to sexual touching. This would ensure that children under 14 years of age are protected almost absolutely from all manner of sexual contact, while children up to the age of 18 years would be protected from sexual exploitation by anyone in a position of trust or authority or on whom the child is dependant. At the age of 18 the young person would have full sexual autonomy and no longer receive special protection. The offence of sexual interference would protect both boys and girls under 14 from all manner of sexual contact.

This new offence would cover a range of activities from fondling of the child's genitals to full acts of vaginal or anal intercourse. Children 14 to 18 years of age could consent, as they are able to now, to all forms of sexual activity not otherwise prohibited by law, an example being buggery. However, the same child would be protected from sexual exploitation by a person in authority or in a position of trust or a person on whom the child is dependant.

• (1700)

I see that my friend, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, is now back in the House. Since I will have the opportunity to deal with this Bill for hours and hours at committee, I will now stand down in order that he might rise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member? There being none, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for debate.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must thank my very good friend, the Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker), for allowing me the opportunity to make a few remarks on Bill C-15. As he has indicated, as a member of the committee he will have an opportunity to comment during the committee hearings as well as at third reading stage. I appreciate the opportunity which he has provided to me today.

This Bill is an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act. It provides for amendments to the Criminal Code to protect young people from sexual abuse and exploitation. Parliament is taking a very important and long overdue step today which deals with the tragedy of child sexual abuse. I am sure that every Member of this House believes that it is a tragedy that such a growing number of young people in our country are caught up in this disastrous situation. As responsible Members of Parliament, we have an obligation to deal with child sexual abuse as quickly and effectively as possible as one step toward bringing an end to this very serious tragedy.

The tragedy associated with child sexual abuse was reported on extensively by the Badgely Committee. That report identified the present situation of child sexual abuse in Canada as a hidden tragedy. The report called it a hidden tragedy because for so many years its widespread nature was not well known or understood. It is now coming more and more into the public eye. I am told that in Kamloops approximately six or seven cases of child sexual abuse are reported to the authorities every week. Those are only the cases which are reported. I suspect that, as with so many other things, for every case which is reported there are many more which are unreported and remain part of this hidden tragedy. Of course, that is to say nothing of the hundreds of young boys and girls in my constituency of Kamloops—Shuswap who are in what social workers call "care", meaning that they have been forced to leave their normal homes and are being cared for in one context or another.

The Badgely Commission uncovered an almost unbelievable level of child sexual abuse and exploitation. It referred to the cyclical nature of child sexual abuse. That, of course, refers to the fact that those who abuse young people sexually today were themselves victims of child sexual abuse earlier in their lives. The challenge is for us to do whatever is necessary to bring an end to this vicious and hideous cycle of child sexual abuse.

In its report the Badgely Commission suggested that we must strengthen the Criminal Code to deal more effectively with child sexual abuse. I am sure that all Members of Parliament are often visited in their constituency offices by parents, and particularly by mothers, who report a fear for the lives of their children. They are shocked by events which become public in their own neighbourhoods. The Members for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) have spoken of the tragedy of young people on the streets of so many Canadian cities who have fallen victim to sexual abuse and exploitation of one kind or another. In our constituency offices we are informed of individual tragedies and urged to do whatever we can to bring an end to this very serious situation.

We New Democrats will do everything possible to expedite the passage of this Bill in order to bring it into effect as quickly as possible. We regret, however, that we could have been dealing with this matter much earlier. The Badgely Commission tabled its report in August of 1984. It is only today, more than two years later, that the Government has decided to introduce Bill C-15 which attempts to implement through law a number of the recommendations of the Badgely Commission. Therefore, while we are pleased to be finally dealing with this, it is unfortunate that it was not dealt with much earlier.

As I said, we New Democrats are very serious about this matter and will do whatever we can to facilitate the early passage of this legislation. We have some concerns and would like to make some suggestions to make the Bill more effective. When the Bill is referred to the Justice Committee, we will certainly make a number of suggestions in that regard. We will call for a number of groups and organizations to appear as witnesses to provide suggestions as to how this legislation can be made more effective. We will also seek suggestions of other ways in which we might deal with child sexual abuse.

The Bill before us protects children from sexual touching. It protects young people from those who might take advantage of their position of authority, trust and dependency. I need not recount reports which have become public over the past number of months of people who have taken advantage, in a sexual way, of their positions of authority, trust or dependency. This tragedy is often hidden because it often involves parents, other people in the home, members of an extended family or close friends, which makes the situation all the more hideous.

As well, this legislation addresses the exploitation of children as prostitutes, both in terms of the users of child prostitutes and those living off the avails of child prostitution. This is a most serious situation. Young people who become part of the community known as street people in our cities are often forced to prostitute themselves on our streets because the existing facilities and agencies are unable to meet their needs.

I am pleased that this legislation is a step toward dealing with those who exploit these tragic young people. Those who are living off the avails of prostitution will be dealt with in an especially harsh way. It is open to discussion whether the measures are harsh enough and such discussion will take place in committee. However, I cannot imagine that we could be too harsh on people who take advantage of the plight of young people and exploit them sexually. Of course, the problem in the past has often been the insufficient number of cases that actually get to court. This legislation attempts to give new definitions of what is to be considered unacceptable behaviour when it comes to child sexual abuse, and a new definition of persons in authority in an effort to more closely identify who they are.

The Bill also calls for the judge to utilize the information that is provided by young girls and boys. There is some concern that these young people need to be above average intelligence before the judge or jury can use the information and evidence that they provide. We have some concerns that this above average intelligence test case situation, by definition, would probably eliminate half the children. I suggest we should use children who are able to provide appropriate, adequate evidence, regardless of what we might think about their level of intelligence. I believe it would be relatively easy for a judge or jury to determine that intelligence.

I am pleased that the Bill includes the admission of videotape evidence taken shortly after the offence. My hon. colleague, the Member for Burnaby, has indicated that this could also include audiotape evidence, particularly in those areas where it is difficult to obtain videotape, such as rural areas. This is another matter that can be developed more thoroughly in committee.

Furthermore, the Bill provides an opportunity for the judge and jury to view the body language of the child as the child is providing evidence. Those of us who are parents often know that we can often tell more about our children by their body language and facial expressions than by what they are saying. Therefore, I believe videotape evidence will be a useful new approach.

It is possible for three to five years to pass from the time of the incident to a judge actually delivering a decision. Such an interval can cause problems, particularly when the videotape evidence was given shortly after the offence. We may want to take advantage of using that type of evidence after the young boy or girl has had an opportunity to deal with the tragic event in their own way and perhaps provide further evidence later.

I believe this is the first time it has been proposed to exclude the accused from the courtroom. Since a young boy or girl may feel intimidated if the accused person was before them in the courtroom when they were providing evidence, I believe this is a major step forward. However, there are a number of concerns which must be examined in the committee.

While I am pleased that we are dealing with amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with child sexual abuse, it is important that we recognize that it is simply one small step toward eliminating child sexual abuse in Canada. There are a number of other federal, provincial, and local government initiatives that should be taken, particularly by providing the resources to assist in the counselling of victims of child sexual abuse. Too often there are not enough adequate resources to provide proper counselling to the hundreds of thousands of young people who are exposed to sexual exploitation. This aids and abets the child sexual abuse cycle to which I referred earlier, to say nothing about adults who seek counselling or legal means to deal with sexual abuse they experienced as children.

We should also recognize that the offenders who are involved must be treated. It is not appropriate to ignore people who have committed or been convicted of child sexual abuse, knowing full well it will be a matter of months or years before they are on the streets of Canada again. It is in the best interests of our society to deal with these offenders by treating them through proper counselling.

The existing programs must be better co-ordinated. The Hon. Member for Burnaby indicated that most provinces today do not recognize child sexual abuse as a definition of behaviour requiring child protection in provincial jurisdiction. Not only must this be changed, it is an example of so many problems that need co-ordination in order to maximize their effectiveness.

The case overload for those professionals dealing with child sexual abuse or violence associated with young people is becoming normal. I have many friends in my constituency who are social workers. They have described their caseloads to me and I cannot imagine how they can begin to deal effectively with any of the cases when they are so overworked and the demand on the system is so horrendous. If the Government is serious about dealing with the abuse of children, it should take the opportunity to provide the professionals and the support systems with resources to do the job that is required.

Let me point out to the House that in June, 1986, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) promised the people of Canada that he would appoint a special adviser to co-ordinate the Government's response to child sexual abuse. I remind the House, particularly members of the Cabinet who are here today, that five months have passed since that announcement. I cannot imagine a more welcome appointment, particularly with the introduction of this legislation, and I hope the Minister makes that announcement soon.

Let us examine the degree to which the Government is concerned about child sexual abuse. The Bill is a step in the right direction and we have heard some very thoughtful speeches in the House of Commons today. However, let us consider what the Government is spending to deal with child sexual abuse. It recently announced that it plans to spend $20 million over five years. That is probably what it spends in one year for brandy and cigars during entertainment parties. The expenditure of $20 million over five years to combat child sexual abuse in Canada is simply inadequate and inappropriate. The Government can show its concern and commitment to deal effectively with eliminating child sexual abuse by providing the adequate resources and funds to ensure that the appropriate programs, agencies, organizations and individuals are mobilized to combat this tragedy.

In closing, I suggest we must carefully consider what we do as Members of Parliament. I want to refer to Section 43 of the Criminal Code which essentially legalizes violence against children, whether that is in the schools through corporal punishment or by spanking. It is legalized in our Criminal Code and I believe that when we are concerned about violence, violence against children in this case, we should recognize that we ought to remove that section from the Criminal Code.

We must also recognize the violence and abuse associated with poverty in our country. All Hon. Members have spoken about the increasing levels of poverty in Canada. We know that many children in our constituencies come from very poor families and we are aware of the abuse in their lives as a result of that poverty. We in the New Democratic Party will support this Bill in principle and will work to improve it.

• (1720)

I want to conclude by suggesting that if we are concerned about child sexual abuse, the exploitation of children, and violence against children in one form or another, we should take a second look at the kind of entertainment we provide through television and the kind of toys sold in our stores. The Rambo-style doll, the violence and killing shown on television and the violent games on the video machines young people involve themselves with, I suppose, makes it an extension of a young person's life to kill indirectly through television or the video screen perhaps thousands and thousands of people. They see it often glorified in the Rambo-style entertainment. That is something which is topic for another discussion, but in my opinion, when we talk about ways and means of ridding our country of child sexual abuse and violence, it is something we should keep in mind.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice (Mr. Gérin) has the floor.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for offering to cooperate with the Government and indicating her party's intention to support this Bill. I think this goes along the line of the Badgley and Fraser Commission reports which were asking all Canadians, all political parties, all people interested in this matter to set aside all political bias and to move forward in the best interest of Canadian children. My hon. colleague's co-operation, therefore, is consistent with these views.

Now, I have listened attentively to her recommendations concerning Section 43 of the Criminal Code, and I suggest they should be carefully looked into. For that matter, this Bill is based on a concept which is somewhat new, that is to say a relationship of trust and dependency to which we are not really accustomed in our legislation and which, I think, may provide a solution to many problems.

This dependency which is stated at the outset of this Bill and establishes quite clearly that when a person is in a situation of authority towards another, or when a child is in a relationship of dependency towards an adult or another person, such a person would be guilty of an indictable offence and liable to more severe penalties, and could not use as a defence the consent of the victimized child.

These new provisions, I think, are consistent with what my hon. colleague has suggested under Section 43, and I should like to hear her comments concerning this new concept of authority in the light of her suggestion about Section 43 of the Criminal Code.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member. I simply want to reiterate that since we are at second reading stage of the Bill and discussing its principle, I cannot express strongly enough how much my party and I support the principle of the Bill. It is long overdue. I wish we would have had the opportunity two years ago to debate this Bill with the new Government. I wish we would have had the opportunity to debate the Bill many years ago with the previous Government. However, we are debating it today and we appreciate that.

Protecting young people from those who might take advantage of them, those in positions of authority, trust and dependency, is a most appropriate part of the Bill. There have been many examples made public recently of people in positions of authority—I think they are well known and publicized so I will not refer to specific cases—and members of the family, fathers, uncles, and so on. Individuals who exploit special situations where people are dependent upon them must be dealt with severely. The Bill attempts to define more carefully what these positions are, and the definitions associated with them, in the hope of being able to deal more effectively in the courts with people who find themselves falling within the definition of "authority and trust".

It is important to recognize that when dealing with this very fundamental and basic question, some very startling figures come to mind. Ninety-eight per cent of people who use and abuse customers who are children, young boys and girls, are men. Men are the consumers, the customers and, unfortunately, they are pimps who are involved in the business associated with child sexual abuse. These people must be dealt with. We have to recognize that sexual responses in today's society are certainly by and large a learned behaviour, particularly in the kinds of situations with which we are dealing in this legislation. It is time that we as a society and as Members of Parliament do what we can to get away from this macho image of sexuality where the male is the dominant superior participant and deal with sex on a completely different basis, where there is no master, no superior participant. In the socialization of our society this is a clear model and is something we must all do what we can to eliminate and change.

To react directly to the points made by the Hon. Member, this is a very important piece of legislation and while we will co-operate and act as expeditiously as is reasonable, we feel it should receive debate and discussion. Quite frankly, I have heard some of the most valuable and thoughtful presentations today in the House from all sides. I think we have struck a chord. We are dealing with an issue, a tragedy, about which all of us feel very strongly and we are pleased to be making an effort today, at least as a first step, to remove and eliminate child sexual abuse in Canada.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just have a very brief question in the spirit of co-operation. I am quite impressed with the quality of the speeches. I do think we have a message to give to the public and that is we indeed want their input. We are asking them to be present at the committee stage so we will have an overview of the situation as it applies to the problem at hand.

I believe I may have heard the Hon. Member badly or not clearly—

Mr. Prud'homme: No, you heard him well.

Mr. Gauthier: —when he said that the previous Government had done nothing to study this problem. I think he will remember that in 1978, at least from my memory, the Law Reform Commission tabled some recommendations dealing with the child sexual abuse problems. Indeed, there was a Bill presented to the House which was very contentious and gave rise to the Badgley Commission which, as we all know, reported here in August of 1984. Therefore, there has been a very intense debate for eight years with Canadians on the one aspect of this whole problem, that is sexual abuse of children. I do think that Parliamentarians as a whole take a very active interest in this problem and would like to be supported and receive the benefit of suggestions from those groups which do have something to say about it.

• (1730)

Does the Hon. Member not agree that the input of the various groups which deal with both the accused and, more importantly, the children, would be important to a debate which we all feel is important? Sometimes we are accused of not grabbing the attention of the public and that on certain topics there has only been one day of debate. Some people say that we have not debated the Bill long enough in order to draw their attention to it. The point is how do we get members of the public to work with us to solve these problems?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) poses, as usual, a thoughtful interjection. I want to recognize that it was his Government which initiated the Fraser and Badgley Commissions. I do this to give recognition where it is due.

In terms of the points made by the Hon. Member, we are indeed anxious to seek as much public input as is possible and reasonable under the circumstances. That is why we all feel that we do not want to move hastily with this Bill, that people who have been watching and listening today would have found it a most useful debate. I think a few more contributors would simply add to the educational process, especially in terms of alerting the public to what is involved.

I do not want to suggest that we hurry with this legislation but that we deal with it thoughtfully and expeditiously.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment first. I hope the Hon. Member does not want us to go back and have the testimony of the witnesses who came before the Badgley and Fraser Commissions repeated. These commissions consulted with virtually hundreds and hundreds of people. The time for discussion is over. There is a piece of legislation before us and we ought to deal with it quickly and promptly at the legislative committee stage.

I seek my friend's advice with respect to how he feels criminal law can become involved at any point in time vis-à-vis professional associations. For example in the case of a doctor accused vis-à-vis his patient we find that in a certain sense the professional association will protect the doctor. In the province of the Hon. Member there were the cases of male teachers involved with a large number of young men. In a sense the professional association had to protect their union members. The same is true in the case of lawyers.

Will the Hon. Member share his views with us concerning teachers, since they are truly in trust relationships with young children? Does the Hon. Member think that teachers' associations should have different types of laws, almost criminal-type laws, or does he think we parliamentarians should provide some sort of law which would get beyond the corporate protection these associations and societies provide to their members?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks an appropriate question. Professional associations, and teachers' associations in particular, certainly ought to be more open in terms of monitoring different situations and in terms of having more of an opportunity to render discipline within their organizations. This would have ensured that the problems that we experienced in British Columbia over the last two or three years would never have occurred. However, I think it is within the professional associations themselves where this vigilance ought to occur. Through the proper procedures and openness, an accounting more or less of individual members, this can be achieved. This might be something more appropriately dealt with during the hearings of the committee by witnesses who are knowledgeable in these areas.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to make a few comments with respect to Bill C-15 which deals with amendments to the Criminal Code and amendments to the Canada Evidence Act. Specifically, it deals with the subject of child sexual abuse and exploitation.

I can tell Hon. Members that legislation of this type is welcome throughout the country. I know it will be welcomed by my constituents in Niagara Falls who applaud the Government and the House for moving forward with legislation in this area. One thing we should do with a law of this type is put it into context in terms of what we as a Government have tried to do with the Criminal Code. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker), has indicated that we are approaching the one-hundredth anniversary of the Criminal Code. It is certainly my opinion, and one shared by many of my colleagues in the Government and other Members of the House, that many revisions have been necessary to the Criminal Code. Some of them have been made already and, obviously, there will be more to come. I put those amendments in this context as well.

I believe that the provisions of this legislation fit in well with other moves taken by the Government which have tried to take better care and show more concern for the victims of crime. In terms of the legislation which is before us the victims, of course, are children. Other moves that we have taken have provided protection for all Canadians. This is a good and valid point, and something with which the House has had to deal. The Criminal Code, as well as the interpretation of it, has for too long and in too many instances been not enough concerned with victims' rights. This was made clear to me when the House was recalled during the summer to pass the legislation dealing with dangerous offenders.

After that legislation was passed, someone from the press said that there was criticism being expressed in the country that we are not concerned enough with the rehabilitation of criminals. I replied quite honestly. I said that the people who sent me from Niagara Falls to this House are law-abiding people. They are people who have something to say and who want to be protected by the Criminal Code. For too long and in too many cases their rights and concerns have not been expressed.

I can tell Hon. Members that I am proud to be a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It has been a very active committee. I will not go so far as to say that it is the most active since someone may correct me on that point. However, I will say it is as active and as busy a committee as we have seen in the Thirty-third Parliament.

Our committee has dealt with a number of issues. Hon. Members will remember that shortly after our election a decision came down from the Supreme Court of Canada which struck down the Criminal Code provisions with respect to the importation of hard-core pornography. I was pleased that we did not wait two or three years to do something about that decision. We did not hum and haw and say that that is the way things go, that the garbage will now come across the border into our country. Within 10 days the then Solicitor General tabled legislation in the House making it illegal to import hard-core pornography into the country. That is one example of the Government's worry about those who are exploited by hard-core pornography and how we protect the values which we as Canadians hold. What the Government has done is to move toward protecting in a more responsible way the victims of crime. The Speech from the Throne reiterated our commitment to family values. I believe this is something on which the people of Canada count. Our record with respect to justice matters bears that out.

We had the whole subject of prostitution and, in particular, street soliciting before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in the form of Bill C-49. Those of my colleagues who sat with me on that committee and those who watched the debates in the House of Commons were told again and again by the critics of the Bill all the dire, terrible things that would happen. We were told that all we would have to do is wave at someone and we would find ourselves in jail. In fact, what has happened in the last few months since the Bill's passage is that we have seen a beneficial effect for a great number of people in the country. In my riding of Niagara Falls where this has been a particular problem, I have been told again and again by the merchants and by those who are responsible for enforcing the law that it is working. The situation has been controlled.

I was very interested to read a comment made by a woman who had been engaged in prostitution in the City of Ottawa. She said that the way things were going, she would have to get out of the business. There are many members of my party and I am sure of the other parties in the House who would welcome that. That is not the kind of profession in which we wish to see people. That move away from prostitution was one of the by-products of Bill C-49. We made the point very clearly in that legislation and we are making it in this legislation as well.

An interesting comment was made by an Hon. Member concerning the entire subject of sexual abuse and the role to be played by all of us in society. She mentioned specifically the early warning signs that can be seen by child care workers. It has been my privilege these last few months to be a member of the Special Committee on Child Care, a special committee very ably chaired by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin), who has done an outstanding job in organizing and co-ordinating the Government's investigation into that subject. We heard that child care workers across the country are in a unique position to observe the effects of and to detect child abuse. It is so important to detect such a thing at that age because of the pernicious nature of child sexual abuse and the damage it can do to children. It is incumbent upon all of us to deal with this problem as early as possible. Many times, a child's first exposure to the outside world takes place in a daycare centre or a family child care centre.

Without prejudging what the committee will do, it was made clear to us that we must impress upon those who deal with children at a very early age the importance of recognizing the signs of child abuse. We as a society must encourage the detection of child abuse. People told us that they were afraid to speak up. Perhaps they suspected something was wrong but they were afraid to come forward. They thought that they might somehow be liable or subjects of reprisals. We as a society must encourage people again and again. We must tell them about the different signs for which they should look and remind them of their obligations to children and to Canadian society as a whole.

The fight against child sexual abuse is not confined only to daycare centres. The responsibility to do something about human exploitation rests on all of us as a society. In the last few years, how many of us have entered neighbourhood candy stores and video rental stores to see some of the hard-core pornography and kiddy porn that is on the shelves? I believe we have a responsibility to do something about this.

Simply expecting the Government to do something seems to be a Canadian disease. Everyone thinks that if there is a problem in Canada, Ottawa had better do something about it and spend money on it. However, I believe it is the responsibility of all of us. When we go into corner candy stores and see garbage on the shelves that is offensive to us and our children, we have the obligation to speak up and say that that is not the kind of thing we want to see on the shelves.

When I went to candy stores 25 years ago, comic books were being sold. I remember people saying that I should not be reading comic books because they were not good for me and would hurt my development in the English language, the one in which I was brought up. I think most parents would say now that if only comic books were in the corner candy stores, they could accept that. Now, however, many corner candy stores carry what is in my opinion hard-core pornography. I believe we must do something about that.

Earlier in this Session, I posed a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I told him that I, the people of Niagara Falls and many of my colleagues would welcome new legislation designed to deal with violent and hard-core pornography. I received an assurance from the Minister of Justice that something would be done and I welcomed that assurance just as I welcome this law.

There are many aspects to this law. I am particularly pleased that we will deal with the problems of sexual interference and invitation to sexual touching. The new Criminal Code provisions will make it an offence to touch anyone under the age of 14 for a sexual purpose. As well, the new legislation will make it an offence to invite or urge a child under 14 to touch another person in a sexual way. As several of my colleagues have pointed out, we have concluded that the age of sexual autonomy for most purposes will be the age of 18, and I believe that is valid. We as a society have an obligation to protect children under the age of 18 in the way outlined in this piece of legislation.

Among other things, this legislation deals with the problem of sexual exploitation and attempts to protect children under the age of 18 from that. A number of people have pointed out that this is a very serious problem. I believe it was the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) who said that it is a hidden crime and I must agree with him. For too long, this sort of thing has gone on.

I have referred to some of the bad things that have happened to Canadian society in terms of tolerance of pornography, but I can say that there is a growing awareness of the problems faced by children and other persons who are in a position to be exploited by persons in positions of trust. I will be very pleased to see that matter referred to the committee for discussion.

As well, this legislation deals with the subject of prostitution. It provides that a customer who seeks to obtain the sexual services of an individual under the age of 18 is liable to five years in prison. I believe that that is a tremendous provision. That is one of the reasons Bill C-49, the law on street soliciting, works. It goes after the customers as well. There is nothing that will clean up juvenile prostitution or prostitution in general quicker than to get at the customers. When the customers are afraid to get involved, it becomes possible for those who want to get out of this business to do so, to get on with their lives in a way I think most people would think proper.

I am pleased that those who live off the avails of juvenile prostitution, the pimps, have been dealt with in this legislation as well. The penalties for that crime have been increased from 10 years to 14 years imprisonment and that is good as well.

I see I have only a few moments left, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make some comments about changes to the Canada Evidence Act. One of the clauses in the Bill deals with the problems involved when children take oaths. This can be a frustrating and difficult part of a case involving child sexual abuse.

I was in court one day as counsel and was able to observe what happened with respect to a child who was accusing a young man of sexual abuse. I believe the child was eight or nine years old. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, under the Canada Evidence Act, the judge has to make inquiries as to whether or not the complainant understands the nature and quality of an oath. In that particular case, the judge could have ruled either way. I do not think the child understood the oath in the traditional way, the way I was brought up to understand it.

If it is decided that a child does not understand an oath, the consequences are that the child's evidence must be corroborated. The combination of the two can be fatal. If the child does not understand the nature and quality of an oath and if there is no corroboration, there generally is no case. In most cases of child sexual abuse there are no witnesses. It is done in an alley or in someone's basement. It is done away from other people or witnesses. The changes are very good. I am encouraged to see that improvement.

I also notice that videotaped statements are now permitted where a child claims sexual abuse. That videotaped evidence is to be taken very soon after the complaint is made. One of the problems is that it becomes an excruciatingly difficult and trying time for the child who has made this accusation. They are questioned again and again. Mr. Speaker, you are aware of the legal process in this country. Generally, it is many months before a preliminary hearing. It may be a couple of years before the trial.

There are a number of things by which all of us can be very encouraged. The Government is to be commended. This is the type of legislation that Canadians want and deserve. It fits in with the other positive moves made in the Criminal Code. I welcome them. I would urge my colleagues to get this to the committee stage as quickly as possible, so that this very soon can become the law of the land.

Mr. Robinson: I have listened with interest to the comments of my colleague from Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) who is a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. He was recently elected as the vice-chairman of that committee. I congratulate him in the House on his election to that lofty position.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question with respect to the evidentiary provisions of the legislation. One of the concerns that has been raised about the Bill as it is presently drafted is that children should be able to communicate their concerns and position with respect to possible child abuse and sexual abuse to the courts without any intervention or any type of intelligence test.

The Bill as it is now drafted would require that the judge determine that the child in question is of sufficient intelligence before that child could tell his or her story to the court. This provision has been criticized by a number of organizations, including the Canadian Council on Children and Youth. I know that the member is a fair-minded member who approaches this legislation on the basis of its merits. I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he, as a member of the committee, recognizes that this is a concern with the legislation. Hopefully we could, rather than insisting that judges impose some sort of intelligence test on children before they can testify, recognize that the primary concern is whether or not that child is able to communicate.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): I thank the Hon. Member for that question. The law as it is presently drafted did not come about by accident. All of us are very concerned about the rights of the accused. Many times it is very devastating, particularly to an individual accused of a sexual crime. I have previously spoken in the House on my opinion that those who are charged with sexual offences should not have their names published in the newspaper until there is a conviction. The reason for that is that it is devastating to a person who is charged with an offence like that. In the end it did not make any difference whether they were cleared of that charge, or the charges were withdrawn.

I conclude by saying that it is valid to say that the child has to be sufficiently intelligent to understand what he or she is saying because of the dire consequences it can be for an individual charged with the offence. I would be very pleased to deal with these matters more explicitly and in more detail when they reach the committee stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has the floor.

Mr. Prud'homme: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, because I know my colleague and friend the Hon. Member from Montreal—Mercier (Mrs. Jacques) definitely wants to rise in the debate. So I would say that all speeches in my view have been clear and specific. We all want this legislation to be passed as soon as possible. I support this legislation. I wanted to be here to prove it, but I would like the Minister to listen closely.

[English]

I wish the Minister would listen very attentively. We have passed this resolution in one day. I hope that the Minister and my colleague who spoke before me will agree that in view of its importance and to show that we want to protect our youth as they should be protected, it would be wise to call witnesses. I know that it will be up to the committee to decide, but I hope we will have the Minister's approval to call witnesses. I will look at his face and I will understand if he says yes. Then I will say publicly that the Minister indicates that yes, indeed, he is in favour of us calling some witnesses. You approve of that, I am sure, Mr. Minister. You can look at me and indicate if you do.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to make sure that some progress is made in this matter. There is at least one other Hon. Member who would like to address a few remarks. I hope that she will not be prevented from doing this today. Perhaps she will have an opportunity of speaking tomorrow.

In connection with the whole question, I know that the committee will give this matter serious attention. As far as I am concerned, there is no problem in having a reasonable examination so that the matter may be resolved on a proper basis. I know that the Hon. Member would not want me to intrude as a representative of the Government with my views as to how long the deliberations should take. Knowing the people involved in the legislative committee, I know that they will give this matter serious attention and will hear appropriate witnesses.

Mr. Prud'homme: Good.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Mercier (Mrs. Jacques).

Adjournment Debate

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, over the last two decades we have seen an increase in the incidence of sexual violence against children, especially child prostitution. The concerns raised in that respect and a better understanding of their nature are the reasons for the important amendments to the legislation and to social programs as proposed by this Government. This is why today the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Hnatyshyn) tabled in Parliament the amendments to the Criminal Code and to the Canada Evidence Act that are aimed at protecting children against sexual abuse and exploitation. Those amendments were first tabled in June last, following the tabling of the Badgley Committee Report on sexual offences against children. Those measures at the time met with strong support from Parliament and the whole society. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) was appointed as the federal minister in charge of co-ordinating the social and educational measures connected with it. Since then, he has confirmed the decision to appoint a special council on the sexual exploitation of children and a regional advisor, and indicated that the Secretariat for children that are victims of sexual violence in Health and Welfare Canada has held consultations with federal and provincial departments and the non-government sector.

In the last Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, the Government confirmed its intention to re-introduce those amendments as soon as possible, and this is what we have done today. So I urge the House, Mr. Speaker, to pass this legislation as soon as possible in order to protect our young Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Hnatyshyn seconded by Mr. McKnight, moves that Bill C-15, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

BANKRUPTCIES—SUPPLIERS' RIGHT TO REPOSSESS GOODS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, on October 15 I directed a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) with respect to the Government's upcoming legislation on bankruptcy as it will pertain to suppliers' rights to repossess goods for which they were not paid. The Minister assured me that the Government would hopefully bring forward recommendations for change to the Bankruptcy Act in the near future.

• (1800)

As indeed most Members of the House are aware, there are many shortcomings in the existing bankruptcy legislation. I commend the Minister for addressing this matter which has been overlooked for too long. However, it is imperative that I indicate to the Minister the dangers of leaving unattended the inadequacies contained within the Bankruptcy Act, as they fail to pertain to the protection of the Canadian supplier and wage-earner. One has only to look around in Canadian society at the problems caused by the failure of the Act to protect the Canadian supplier and wage-earner.

As the Minister is well aware, Parliament passed the Bankruptcy Act in 1949. However, since then there have been increasing problems with the legislation. This is amply illustrated by the fact that there have been six unsuccessful attempts to change its provisions over the past few years.

Under current law no special consideration is given to suppliers in bankruptcy situations. For example, a supplier could deliver goods to a business on a Friday and the business could be closed or bankrupt by the Saturday, and the supplier is unprotected. Of course this points out a very grave shortcoming. I ask the Minister to consider a measure taken in Quebec some time ago giving the suppliers of bankrupt businesses 30 days after the appointment of a trustee in bankruptcy in which to repossess goods for which they had not been paid.

As well, wage-earners have received the short end of the stick in bankruptcy legislation for far too long. It is time that wage-earners be suitably protected with new bankruptcy laws up to a limit of $2,000. They should be given priority to secured creditors, namely, banks, Crown corporations and Crown agencies. These men and women have rightfully earned the wages and rely upon them as their sole means of sustenance.

The matter has been neglected far too long. It is not only wage-earners, but those persons employed on a commission basis in the area of sales. Sales commissions and expenses should also be considered in the same manner as wages. Salesmen who were on the road and incurred expenses can be left high and dry under the current law.

Once again I urge the Minister to reconsider changing the Bankruptcy Act and to ensure that suppliers of goods, wage-earners, and sales people on commission receive priority treatment ahead of secured creditors such as banks, Crown corporations, Crown agencies, Revenue Canada, sales tax departments, and so on. It is long overdue. These people should get what is rightfully theirs.

Again I commend the Minister on his initiative, but I also say to him that it is time to redress a grave injustice to many Canadians.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to provide additional information to the answer given by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to a question put on October 15, 1986 by the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson). That question dealt with the status of suppliers of goods in the proposed amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. The Hon. Member was hoping that provisions would be introduced to allow an unpaid supplier to repossess the goods delivered to an insolvent debtor. He was referring to the system in effect in Quebec, under which suppliers of goods enjoy that right in that province.

As indicated by the Minister, the issue of unpaid suppliers is now under consideration by him. I must stress however that a decision has been made to review the Bankruptcy Act by stages.

Over the past 16 years, 6 attempts at completely remodelling the Bankruptcy Act have failed. For that reason, a list of questions to be dealt with has been compiled, and it has been decided that the most urgent would be adressed as a priority. The five issues identified as having top priority are: the protection of wage earners; provisions with respect to the activities of secured creditors and receivers; provisions to promote financial reorganizations; provisions dealing with bankruptcies and consumer offers; and, finally, the Crown's preference as a creditor. At the same time, a number of amendments of a rather technical nature, aimed at improving the efficiency of the bankruptcy system, will be tabled.

Although the importance of the problem of suppliers of goods is fully recognized, the aforementioned issues have been identified as the most urgent and ready to be solved. On the other hand, I am in a position to assure the House that the Minister intends to address the matter of suppliers in a later stage of that review.

The matter of unpaid suppliers is still under consideration. Incidentally, the possibility of using a system similar to that in Quebec has been considered, but as yet no decision has been made.

• (1805)

[English]

I think it would be useful to clarify the extent to which unpaid suppliers enjoy a right to repossess under the Quebec Civil Code. The Hon. Member should be aware that this right in Quebec applies only under certain conditions, namely that the goods delivered have not been sold to a third party, that those goods were in the same condition as when sold, and only if the request for repossession is made within 30 days following delivery of the goods.

Earlier this year, the Government passed a law to help farmers experiencing financial difficulty. I am of course referring to the Farm Debt Review Act. This was the first element of a series of measures intended to improve federal bankruptcy legislation.

Hopefully, the Government will be able to introduce the next, and second element soon. That would be the package of amendments I referred to earlier. Following that, it is intended that additional outstanding issues, including the status of unpaid suppliers, be addressed as expeditiously as possible.

CANADA POST—PLAN TO PROMOTE POSTAL RATE INCREASES—UTILIZATION OF HUMAN AND MATERIAL RESOURCES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): This evening, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to a question I directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post last October 28. We had just learned that Canada Post had prepared a communication plan, a rather thick document, in an attempt to manipulate Canadians and sell them on the forthcoming postal rate increase.

A few days later, Mr. Speaker, we learned through the postal workers' own paper—with a circulation of 60,000 copies— that a rather expensive advertising campaign had been launched to explain the new home delivery system through community boxes.

Indeed here is the question I put to the Minister: How can he allow Canada Post to devote so much energy and so many human and material resources to sell Canadians on a postal rate increase they do not want and a delivery system which they never did and never will accept? If they were to accept this, if the community box delivery system were to become the Government's permanent policy as of tomorrow, we would be creating second class citizens. In other words, people go to the trouble of investing and buying new houses which spur the construction industry and create jobs, yet these people will be penalized, Mr. Speaker, because they will not be getting home delivery like all other Canadians do. I think that it is a social injustice that this Government is creating.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to Recommendation No. 8 of the Marchment Report which stated, and I quote:

> Communities in urban areas which do not enjoy daily door-to-door delivery be consulted with a view to offering the choice between alternate day letter carrier service or daily mail service through the use of group, community or post office boxes.

There was no proper consultation, Mr. Speaker. Also, the same report had recommended that another five years be granted to Canada Post to get rid of its deficit. Here is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced on February 26, 1986, and I should like to quote from page 8 of his Budget's speech:

> The Marchment Committee has recommended another five years to reach the break-even point. This is not acceptable.
> Following discussions with the President of Canada Post, the Government has requested a new operating plan to improve productivity at Canada Post so that the Corporation will reduce its operating deficit to zero by the end of fiscal 1987-88. The Government is confident that by taking further steps to improve productivity and efficiency, Canada Post and its workers can meet the objctive of self-sufficiency while improving reliability of service to the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has obviously decided to go completely against these two recommendations of the Marchment Commission, and we know that Canada Post wants now to increase by 2 cents the cost of stamps for first class mail.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to use the short time remaining at my disposal to mention also that this is the second increase in the cost of stamps since the Progressive Conservative Party came to power. As a matter of fact, when the former Minister responsible for Canada Post announced on June 20, 1985, that the Government was giving the green light to Post Canada to increase by 2 cents the cost of stamps, he said, and I quote in English, Mr. Speaker:

• (1810)

> Mr. Beatty said that, before future rate increases are considered by the federal government, Cabinet will expect Canada Post to implement new measures to improve productivity.

Canadians do not believe that any new measures have been implemented to improve productivity. The only thing which was implemented was community boxes. People in new homes in Canada are not receiving home delivery. Therefore, the Government and the Canada Post Corporation is discriminating against Canadians and creating second-class citizens. Perhaps tomorrow Canadians will learn the truth. All Canadians await the so-called postal business plan which the Government is supposed to announce to indicate how we will receive our mail in the future. We hope that tomorrow we will still have only one class of citizen in Canada.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in my judgment in the past two years Canada Post has shown a remarkable capacity and ability to do more with less. As the Hon. Member indicated, tomorrow at three o'clock in this Chamber the Minister will be tabling the corporate plan for Canada Post. We do not have to wait for the future to identify the progress already being made and that which has been made in the last couple of years.

Over the past two years the volume of mail handled by the Corporation has increased by almost 7 per cent. At the same time the number of employees has been reduced by 2,000, a saving of some $60 million. Not only has the volume of mail increased, but Canada Post is serving more and more homes and businesses. Service has been extended to over 200,000 new homes and businesses since September of 1984.

The Minister will be reporting on strides being made in improving the reliability of service. These have been made by the introduction of new and consistent standards, systems and procedures into the Corporation's operations in order to keep the mail flowing smoothly and to handle any potential problems as they start to develop.

• (1815)

At the same time as these improvements have been implemented, Canada Post has gone through a period of downsizing. One thousand vacant positions have not been filled in the past two years. As I just indicated, in the same period, 2,000 employees have left the Corporation through normal and accelerated attrition. I might add that this has not been at the expense of those employees actively involved in moving the mail. The administrative and management group which has been criticized as being top heavy has been reduced by 10 per cent. Senior management, in fact, has been reduced by some 26 per cent.

Non-salary expenses have also been remarkably contained. Through strict control, these expenses have only been raised by $5 million. I note that inflation alone would have added $50 million in itself.

Canada Post is a business, of course, and like all businesses the heart of its financial structure is in revenue. In the same two-year period we have been discussing, Canada Post increased its revenue by some 15 per cent. Although the Corporation did raise its rates in June of last year, 60 per cent of this increase in revenue is directly linked to sales growth and other factors.

I do not mean to bombard my hon. colleagues with figures, I simply want to point out that there is much evidence that Canada Post Corporation has begun its much needed turnaround.

The past few years should give us confidence that breaking even can be achieved and should give us reason to look forward to the corporate plan when it is introduced tomorrow.

Perhaps I can suggest that we applaud the Post Office instead of bashing it.

ABORTION—COLLECTION OF STATISTICS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, in August of this year Statistics Canada announced in a letter to health care administrators that it will no longer compile statistics on therapeutic abortions in Canada. The decision was taken to cease funding for the collection and analysis of abortion statistics as part of an over-all expenditure reduction. Statistics Canada is now processing 1985 abortion data, however it has stated that 1986 data already gathered will not be processed.

When I questioned the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada last week, I was told that meetings were being held between Statistics Canada and officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and that the Minister was awaiting a report from this group. There were indications at that time from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) that his Department could compile statistics on abortion from medicare payments to doctors.

It is incredible that it is not a priority of our national statistical record-keeping agency to keep statistics on abortion which is the most controversial social issue facing Canadians today. Surely an agency that can tell us how many bathrooms there are in this country should be able to tell us how many unborn Canadians are killed by abortion each year.

The suggestion that the Department of Health and Welfare gather abortion data from provincial medicare payments simply will not work. In 1977, the committee on the operation of the abortion law, under Chairman Robin Badgley, stated that:

> Provincial medicare insurance commissions maintain information on the procedures paid for under existing fee payment schedules for physicians. Because there are sizeable variations between the provinces in how procedures are classified for payment, and in particular, how these relate to induced abortion, no uniform summary from these sources can be made for the country.

I submit that in order to properly compile and analyse the data needed to provide the level of information now published under the therapeutic abortion program, the Department of National Health and Welfare would in fact need to duplicate the services and expertise now available from Statistics Canada, with the result being no cost saving to the taxpayers of Canada at all.

We need to know more, not less, about abortion if we are to resolve this social dilemma. We need to tell Canadians that one in five women seeking abortion is in fact seeking a second or third abortion. We need to tell Canadians that nearly 200 babies killed each year in Canadian hospitals are over 20 weeks of gestation. In order to absorb the ghastly statistics, we need to realize that 10 times the number of Canadians have been killed in the womb than in war. We need to wonder why one out of every four children conceived in the Province of British Columbia is aborted.

The information published each year by StatsCan has provided us with gruesome but necessary information on the practice of abortion in this country. We are able to assess the ages of the women involved, whether they are married or single, the age at which they abort their children, trends in urban and rural areas and provincial differences in the rate of abortion. All of this information helps those who address this problem in terms of supporting and caring for women seeking abortion. Alternatives to abortions will be much harder to establish if we cannot give an accurate profile of those who seek it in the first place.

One of the reasons given by Statistics Canada for the cutting of the therapeutic abortion data is that the data collected does not reflect the true numbers of abortions performed in Canada. StatsCan has collected data on legal abortions and not on the thousands of illegal abortions taking place in free standing clinics, mainly in the Province of Quebec.

In other words, the number of illegal abortions has risen to the extent that information on abortions performed in hospitals no longer gives valid data with which to assess the problem. Surely the solution to this dilemma cannot be to stop gathering the data because it is not the statistics themselves which are the problem, but the illegal abortions being performed contrary to the duly enacted Criminal Code of this country. The federal Government must make it known to the provinces, Quebec and Ontario in particular, that Section 251 of the Criminal Code must be enforced.

Each year nearly 65,000 unborn Canadians are killed in Canadian hospitals. Sheer numbers alone indicate the magnitude of the problem. But we need more than total numbers. We need all the information we can get on abortion, statistical and otherwise, if we are ever to solve this problem. The gathering of therapeutic abortion data by Statistics Canada must be re-established immediately to help all Canadians resolve the issue of abortion in Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I share the opinion of the Toronto Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) that we must have objective and reliable data on abortions in Canada. The issues related to the debate on abortion are complex and if the statistical data can help us to gain a better understanding of them, I think that it is important for us to have these data.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, since I have been the Minister responsible for Statistics Canada, I have been able to see for myself to what extent this agency plays an essential role by providing data on all major issues facing Canadian society. Few subjects are debated in this House without our relying on data from Statistics Canada.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, like all federal agencies, Statistics Canada always tries to improve its programs and is completely supportive of the efforts made by our Government to control its expenditures.

In this context, last spring, my predecessor undertook, in close cooperation with the chief statistician, a review of all departmental programs to establish our priorities.

Good statistics on abortion would certainly have been viewed as a priority, but the program then in existence was judged less important because the data compiled dealt only with therapeutic abortions authorized under Section 18 of the Criminal Code 1969 Amendment Act. Since the data was incomplete, our investigation had only limited usefulness and could even be misleading in certain cases.

Mr. Speaker, as a woman and a minister in a government concerned with social issues, I recognize the needs expressed by many people who wish to obtain statistical data on abortion. Consequently, my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), and myself have asked the officials of our Departments to examine all possible solutions which would enable Statistics Canada to continue to provide relevant information on this issue.

I am happy to announce today that the publication of data on abortion will be maintained. A new method for compiling the data will however be used. Our yearly estimates will from now on be based on data from the provincial records of doctors' fees. These estimates will be more complete than the present data since they will include abortions practiced in Quebec clinics.

On the other hand, they will be less detailed because these records contain little information on socio-demographic and medical factors. However, Statistics Canada officials have identified a means to counter this problem. Their review of the information on socio-demographic characteristics previously compiled has shown that changes are relatively slow to occur. It was therefore decided that this information would be published every three years rather than annually.

To implement this program, we shall need the cooperation of hospitals and other provincials organizations. I expect that the provinces will accept to cooperate with us in this most important matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

THE PRESS

THREAT TO WEEKLY NEWSPAPER POSTAL RATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Government is planning to discontinue the special assistance which has been available to weekly newspapers in Canada for over 70 years. This decision will have a terrible effect on the hundreds and hundreds of weekly newspapers which have an annual circulation of over 200 million, most of it in rural Canada. These newspapers play a vital role in the community life of Canada. They help the communities and the districts they serve to function, to grow, to mobilize community spirit, and to build a more vigorous and informed society.

This postal assistance must be retained for newspapers or we will see many of them destroyed by this vicious action by an insensitive Government. I call on the Government to withdraw this irresponsible plan which threatens to destroy many of our rural and community newspapers.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN DIFFERENT LEVELS OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, national reconciliation is one of our Government's priorities and we have already achieved promising results. It has to do as well with municipal administrations, a Government level which deals directly with ratepayers.

Last Sunday, November 2, was municipal election day and a number of new municipal councils were elected to office. My constituency of Labelle includes 37 municipalities whose mayors and councillors promote the well-being of the same citizens whom I represent here in the House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, ever mindful of the aspirations of our common electorate, I offer them full support in the discharge of their responsibilities.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

APARTMENT RENTAL INCREASES IN TORONTO

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, for the third time in recent years CMHC is increasing rents in its Toronto Main Square apartment complex by excessive amounts. The federal Government should show leadership in providing affordable housing. Instead, it is taking adantage of its immunity from provincial rent review law to hit these tenants with unfair rent increases.

Those increases have nothing to do with increases in actual costs. The Government is trying to catch up after the six and five legislation of a few years ago.

The Conservatives, when in opposition, supported that legislation. The Government is now stating that while it supported what the previous Government did, it does not accept the result, and is reaching back over the years to retrieve the difference, and more.

The Minister should open up the process to public scrutiny. He should state clearly that rent increases will be within provincial guidelines. He should order CMHC to roll back the latest 10 per cent increase and force officials in his Department to justify any increase before Ontario's Rent Review Board.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—OBSERVANCE OF RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from a 12-year-old girl from St. Catharines who asks: "How in the world, these days, can a person be sent to prison for seven years plus five years in exile for simply trying to re-establish the right to meet in common prayer?"

Josyp Terelya is only one of many openly declaring their religious faith and opposition to the Soviet Government's denial of basic human rights. Many more are burning their passports, knowing the consequences of being caught without one. They take their strength from their faith and commitment to freedom and justice.

That same cause is why our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is in Vienna today emphasizing human rights as a high priority and in the knowledge that without these basic rights and freedoms there can be no peace, either within a country or the world.

REASON FOR GASOLINE PRICE INCREASE CONFINED TO QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, Quebecers learned the sad news that Ultramar, with service stations in Quebec, Ontario and the Maritime Provinces, has decided to charge 2 cents more for a litre of gasoline, but only in the Province of Quebec. Today we have heard that Shell is planning to take similar action.

Mr. Speaker, alleging that the price of crude oil has gone up, these two companies will add 2 cents to the cost of a litre of gasoline in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would ask the multinationals whether Quebecers are the only ones who use crude oil, and how they can explain that the increase applies only in Quebec. Why not charge the same price from coast to coast?

May I remind the House that 11 months ago the Conservative Government let Ultramar shut down the Montreal East Gulf refinery, and that during a press conference the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs warned that Quebec consumers would suffer from this reduced oil production capacity.

WORK OF LIMOILOU ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, on October 25 and 26 of this year, I had the privilege of attending a seminar organized by the Limoilou Economic Development Corporation. I would like to extend my warmest congratulations to the organizers of this business meeting which was very successful.

The purpose of the seminar was to bring together business people in order to help them find ways to enhance their visibility and their ability to compete and thus better serve the people of Limoilou.

Participants knew that by exchanging information and ideas, they might be able to develop a joint solution to their problems. In fact, both business and the people of Limoilou will benefit, since a number of positive measures were taken by the entrepreneurs following the seminar.

Mr. Speaker, this brainstorming weekend for Limoilou business people and the results it produced demonstrates what solidarity can do to enhance the lives of the people of Québec East. Mr. Speaker, they have my unqualified support.

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—POSITION OF MANITOBA PREMIER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Premier Pawley, in expressing his opposition to the awarding of the CF-18 contract to Canadair rather than to Bristol in Winnipeg, is supported in that opposition by people from all sectors in Manitoba. They resent very much the claim of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) that Premier Pawley is a crybaby. They especially resent it coming from a Minister who said: "Anyone living in the Atlantic Provinces is 1,000 per cent luckier and better off than if they were living in one of these Third World countries". He went on to say: "We should not always be looking at southern Ontario. It is very healthy occasionally to look at Haiti or Sri Lanka . . . ". NATIONAL CRIME PREVENTION WEEK

CHAMBLY POLICE FORCES' INITIATIVE TO PREVENT ABDUCTION OF CHILDREN

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, in connection with National Crime Prevention Week, I would like to talk to the House about the initiative taken by several police forces in the riding of Chambly, as part of their campaign against child disappearances.

With the co-operation of community groups in my riding, the police sent out kids' passports which, in addition to sensible advice for parents, contain a description of the child registered with a photograph and fingerprints.

Mr. Speaker, the disappearance of a child is such a tragedy that we must do everything we can to prevent it. We can only hope it will never happen. However, when a child does disappear, the kid's passport is a formidable research tool which makes the work of the police much easier.

The feedback in the riding of Chambly is excellent, and I would urge all Members of this House and all Canadians to support their police forces in similar projects.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PLANNED TRANSFER OF PAROLE DUTIES TO JOHN HOWARD SOCIETY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, as you know, there is a growing concern in the Toronto area about the Government's plans to hand over important parole functions to the John Howard Society. The federal Government's privatization program in Toronto would transfer operations of the 40-bed Keele Street Centre and the 15-bed Montgomery Community Corrections Centre to the John Howard Society. As a result, public safety will in fact be jeopardized and compromised.

The John Howard Society has traditionally been an inmate advocate group using the services of volunteers, students, part-time workers, and ex-offenders. In contrast, parole officers are professional law enforcement officials whose mandate is to protect the public. Parole officers are also directly accountable to the federal Government.

Despite the fact that the privatization of parole services represents a significant departure from present government policy, there was no consultation with the Metropolitan Toronto Police. There has been no consultation to date with the Union of Solicitor General Employees, and no consultation with Members of Parliament. I call upon the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to refer this matter immediately to the Standing Committee on Justice for further consideration.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE '86 PROGRAM—CREATION OF JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, the Challenge '86 program was very successful in providing quality work experiences for thousands of students across Canada. It appears that more than 75,000 students obtained jobs under the summer employment SEED component with the help of federal funds.

SEED is one of a number of initiatives which have helped student unemployment decrease from 17.9 per cent in 1983 to 14.1 per cent in 1985. In Erie riding, 82 employers were selected for this program, accounting for 199 jobs. The returns of a questionnaire I sent out requesting an assessment were more than favourable and pinpointed the success of the program.

Nearly 80 per cent of the respondents stated they would not have hired someone this past summer if it were not for SEED. Everyone believes the work experience gained on the job will help prepare students for employment. Their comments included: "The SEED program is an excellent tool for employers and students". "Very beneficial", they said. "We applaud the Government's effort in this area", they said. "Anything helps, especially those—"

ICE-BREAKER CONSTRUCTION—BRITISH COLUMBIA SHIPYARDS' CLAIM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, all parties support the building of a world class ice-breaker to service northern ports and protect Canadian sovereignty. New Democrats have advocated this for years and have been concerned at government delay.

Recent contracts for frigates have gone to Maritime and Quebec shipyards giving a much needed boost to eastern yards. In British Columbia three shipyards have closed while skilled workers are unemployed. B.C. shipyards are in desperate need of contracts to keep their operations alive.

Members of Parliament from British Columbia, of all Parties, are confident that our world class workforce and expertise in shipbuilding can meet the requirements for constructing the Polar 8 ice-breaker. We eagerly await a government announcement that it will be built in British Columbia.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—THREATENED CLOSURE OF WAWA MINE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Government ignored the request we made to help the workers at the CN shops in Moncton, despite the rhetoric of the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister's promises made on his recent visit to Atlantic Canada. Today my question relates to northern Ontario.

The Conservative Government announced a widely heralded recovery package for northern Ontario, yet it has revealed no details. Why will the Government not be more specific? Why will it not come to the aid of some of the endangered workers at the Algoma Ore mine in Wawa, Ontario?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House last week, this federal Government, perhaps unprecedented in recent times, has recognized the unique difficulties in northern Ontario. The Government is prepared to address those difficulties. We have had meetings in northern Ontario. Led by the Solicitor General an economic plan is being considered. As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated in the House the other day, as did the Minister of Transport, the specific question relating to Wawa is currently being considered by DRIE officials, and by others. I can tell the right hon. gentleman that this Government, unlike the Government of which he was a member, is prepared to deal with the very critical and serious problems that affect northern Ontario.

FUTURE OF WAWA IRON ORE MINE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Deputy Prime Minister that I was in Geraldton, Ontario last week, and that Northern Ontario is sick and tired of the empty promises and false hopes held out by the Government.

Why did the Government announce a recovery plan without even revealing the details? And why isn't the Government prepared to provide assistance to the railways to help maintain mining jobs in Wawa?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, because, unlike the previous Government, we sit down and work these problems out with those who are directly affected. We think that northern Ontario, by virtue of its basic strengths, can build on those strengths and together we can develop the kind of comprehensive program to which the Hon. Member refers.

I can tell the right hon. gentleman that at a meeting in Sudbury a couple of weeks ago there was great enthusiasm shown for the approach the Government is taking. I can assure the Hon. Member that if he is patient he will see the type of policies and programs that he wishes his Government had come up with when it was in office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALGOMA CENTRAL RAILWAY—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the Deputy Prime Minister is beginning to test my patience. He has certainly tested the patience of the people of northern Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Last week in response to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior, the Deputy Prime Minister said, in respect to northern Ontario: "Just watch us". He made the same type of commitment to the CN workers in Moncton, which shows how much that particular engagement is worth.

The Minister knows that the Algoma Central Railway is subsidized for passenger and tourist travel. Why not give some aid to the railway in order to preserve those jobs in Wawa, those jobs which concern 300 to 350 miners, 350 railway workers, and the health of the economy from Sault Ste Marie right up to Wawa on the east end of the lake?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it has been said before, and I will repeat it, there is a program that is being considered under the auspices of DRIE. Ministers have met with representatives of this particular area. I am sure that there will be a satisfactory solution. When the Right Hon. Member talks about patience, I can only tell him that in the last election those people up there lost their patience with the Liberal Government, which is why they elected so many Tory MPs, which is what they will continue to do in the future.

• (1420)

POSSIBLE LOSS OF JOBS TO MICHIGAN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is he aware that, because of the lack of assistance for the Algoma Central Railway, hundreds and hundreds of miners in Wawa will lose their jobs because those jobs will effectively be transferred from Wawa to mines in northern Michigan? Why is the Government not prepared to make a commitment today to make sure that those jobs stay in northern Ontario rather than move to northern Michigan?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, now we're in trouble.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentlemen are interested in listening to the facts, they are these. In so far as the railway operation is concerned, there is no present policy that will permit for any general assistance to the Wawa railway. That has been recognized by the railway company and by Algoma Steel. They are seeking general assistance from the Province of Ontario which has a very heavy responsibility, and they are asking the Government of Canada to assist as well by seeing what kind of an assistance program we can come up with on a fifty-fifty basis. That has been discussed by the Minister of DRIE and his officials with the Province of Ontario. As soon as those discussions are concluded, I am sure steps will be taken in accordance with the work of the Solicitor General who has been working on this issue for weeks. He began long before it ever came to the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite.

RAILWAY'S TOURIST SERVICE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that the closure of the Wawa Mines would also shut down the Algoma Central Railway tour train which brings 100,000 tourists, mostly from the United States, to northern Ontario every year? The Province of Ontario has already made a commitment to provide assistance. Why is the Government of Canada procrastinating in making a decision, leaving everyone in the lurch as to whether or not there will be assistance to maintain the mining operations and the jobs in tourism?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the value of the railway and the fact that it brings in very heavy tourist traffic to the area. This Government is also prepared to render assistance and will do so in conjunction with the Province of Ontario when discussions are concluded. The Hon. Member need lose no sleep on that matter. The Solicitor General began looking after this long before the Hon. Member ever brought the matter up. The necessary assistance to be provided in conjunction with Ontario, once it is agreed to, will be put in place. We are determined to see that northern Ontario is helped in its time of need.

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO AUDITOR GENERAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Important questions have been raised about the Government's claimed costs and benefits associated with technological transfer in the CF-18 maintenance contract. Pertinent among these questions has been the relevance of a Defence Department document that was known to the Government in August, 1985. In order to clear up all of these questions and in order to clear the air completely, will the Government now agree to refer all pertinent documents to the Auditor General?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to answer my hon. colleague by saying that, since taking notice yesterday of the telex that was raised in the House, I have made extensive investigations with people responsible for the evaluation team. I can assure the House that the costs that were quoted of $100.5 million in one case and $104 million in the other case included all technology transfer costs and that not one penny in additional costs will be borne in any way, shape or form by the Canadian taxpayer.

• (1425)

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, considering that many people objected— not simply the company that did not get the contract, which is perhaps understandable; not simply the Government of the province that did not get the contract, which is perhaps understandable, but other disinterested citizens—including Conservative members in the Minister's own Party who have raised questions about the figures used to get final assessments upon which the decision was finally reached—given the uncertainty that rests over all this, I ask the Minister why, in order to make the Government's own case, does it not refer this data to the Auditor General?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): I would like to emphasize once again that the evaluation team was composed of some 75 officials—

Mr. Orlikow: Whom you didn't listen to.

Mr. de Cotret: —representing the Department of National Defence, the Department of Supply and Services, and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. The results were made public. The results were very close between two highly competent groups of companies. We had a choice. We made that choice. It was a policy decision on the part of this Government, and we stand by it.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say, with respect, to the Minister that he knows very well that all the figures that went into its own assessment were not made public by the Government. He also knows that at least two companies that have a good public reputation have issued statements that fly in the face of what the Government is claiming to be the case. I repeat that if the Government has confidence in its own case, what has it got to lose by referring these documents to the Auditor General?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer is simple. We have nothing at all to lose by referring all relevant documents to the Auditor General. The Hon. Member for Oshawa ought to know that the Auditor General is a servant of this House. He will perform his duties in the normal way, and I should be very surprised if the Auditor General did not examine a contract as important as this one. And when he does, as always, the Government will be at the disposal of the Auditor General, to give him the information to which he is entitled.

Mr. Broadbent: A year from now.

MONCTON SHOPS—POSSIBLE JOB-CREATION ALTERNATIVES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Canadian General Electric has always been welcome in Moncton. I remind the Minister that the Save our Shops Committee passed a unanimous motion stating that the CGE deal was not enough and did not meet the needs and expectations of the workers and the community. Is the Government looking for alternatives to compensate for the hundreds of jobs that will still be lost even if the CGE deal goes ahead?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, nothing but superhuman efforts would fit the bill. That is the type of efforts that have been made with respect to the Moncton situation. I am happy to advise the Hon. Member that to date CN has accommodated 551 persons. That is in excess of half of the people involved. If we can resolve the Canadian General Electric situation there will be a further 303 persons looked after. CN is making a major effort to see that all of the 1,022 workers affected receive this type of treatment.

In addition, the Government and CN have allocated $4 million to help the people of Moncton attract other industries to the city of Moncton. That is $4 million more to assist in that situation, apart altogether from every other government program that exists today in New Brunswick and Canada. That is what we are doing. What is the hon. gentleman doing except criticizing and trying to impede what has been done?

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The fact is that even if the CGE deal goes through 662 jobs will be lost.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Those are the facts.

Mr. Robichaud: I ask the Minister will he start looking for alternatives to the loss of these jobs, or is he just simply going to point the finger at the unions and blame them for what he as a Minister has failed to do, that is, find alternate employment for the workers in Moncton?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a dialogue with the dead. I have just given the figures: 551 persons so far have been found other employment by CN. If the CGE situation is resolved that is another 303, and that will be 854. The others, if we cannot find them employment, are being offered generous retraining and settlement provisions and the like. That is what has been done.

• (1430)

There is still a healthy chance that the situation with Canadian General Electric might be resolved. CN is still interested in doing all it can to resolve this matter with the unions. Matters are proceeding behind the scenes about which I cannot speak here and now. I hope that situation will be resolved and, when it is, I hope the hon. gentleman will be more pleased than he now indicates he is with the 551 jobs which have already been found.

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It concerns the answer of the President of the Treasury Board to the question of whether or not to refer all relevant documents to the Auditor General. Surely the Prime Minister realizes that the time to clear the air about the contract is now, not next year when the Auditor General might look at the contract in due course. Would he agree to having that documentation and the contract referred to the Auditor General, as was requested by my Leader?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the Auditor General reports to this House. If we on the Government side were to try and influence the Auditor General, I think my hon. friends opposite would be the first to protest such action. The Auditor General is perfectly free to scrutinize these documents in the course of his duties, and I am sure he will do so.

[English]

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE REFERRAL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, that answer is complete rubbish. My first question was directed to the Prime Minister who has made much—and rightly so—of the issue of national reconciliation. Given that this issue has exacerbated regional tensions in the country, and in the interest of national reconciliation, would he not have the air cleared now in respect of the integrity of the Government's position in the matter and agree that the Auditor General look into it now, not next year?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, despite fear of repeating myself, the Government does not direct the Auditor General. The Auditor General is a servant of Parliament. He is free to act as he so chooses. This is an important and complex issue. I am sure he will be very interested in looking into all the details. As a Government, as we have always done, we will be most co-operative in making the information available to him.

BID SUBMITTED BY IMP OF HALIFAX

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He must be aware that on October 24, 1986, the Minister of Public Works, through the media, informed IMP of Halifax that it was still in the running. To the dismay of that particular consortium and the people in Atlantic Canada, we found out from the President of the Treasury Board that its application had been dismissed because of technical insufficiencies months before that date. In view of the knowledge about the Minister of Public Works misleading the people of Halifax and IMP, what is the Prime Minister prepared to do about it?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to the part of the submission process which had to do with repair bids. Initially we had asked three consortia to present bids to the Government for this important contract. The three bids were found to have some technical defects. Some were more serious than others, I will admit. However, in the sense of fairness and equity, and since we were asking for a repair bid, we thought it only equitable that we ask all three, after explaining to each one the details of the deficiencies, to try to bring forth a repair bid that would address those deficiencies. That is why we included all three throughout the process.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister wishes—and I am certain he does—to protect the integrity and confidence of the bidding process with regard to this particular contract and future contracts, does he not think it fair and appropriate, under the circumstances and because of the many unanswered questions, that all documentation either be referred to the Auditor General as requested by my colleagues, or that the Minister and all documentation be presented before a parliamentary committee so that Canadians will have an opportunity to review firsthand all unanswered questions regarding this most important tool of economic development?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have conscientiously answered all the questions put to me in the House. As I said before, I am willing to make available any information that is not protected by a business confidentiality clause.

Mr. Speaker, a decision was made by the Government, a decision that has its merits, and if you are against that decision, I wish that once and for all, you would announce your position one way or another and let Canadians know where the Opposition stands on this issue.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONCTON SHOPS—REPAIR WORK INQUIRY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I think he will know—and his predecessor knows it—that in order to keep the CNR shops at Point St. Charles busy and fully employed, Point St. Charles was to be allowed to tender for contracts to repair railway equipment of other U.S. and Canadian railroads. Will the Minister call upon CNR to allow the shops at Moncton to do exactly the same, to keep employees not taken on by CGE employed at the Moncton shops?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. gentleman knows the answer to that question. A decision was made and announced last June by CN, not by the Government, which since 1978 had been directed by the Government that it must stand on its own feet. As a result of studies it had done—and it had three heavy shops—it had to shut the shops in Moncton if it was to continue to be efficient and productive. At the same time it announced that all repairs of CN heavy equipment would be done at the Transcona shops in Winnipeg and that the Point St. Charles shops would be turned into a contract facility. That is what it is doing.

There is no chance that CN can reverse that decision; the decision is made in connection with Moncton. What we all now have to try to achieve is for other manufacturing and repair facilities to go to Moncton, and it is on that we are working.

COMPANY'S POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister still has not explained, nor has CNR, why the same opportunity to tender for repairs of railway equipment from United States railroads given to the shops at Point St. Charles was not given to the shops at Moncton.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as a result of this study, and for reasons of its own internal economy and efficiencies, the decision was made that it would have to close the Moncton shops and that, since 65 per cent of all the business of CN is now done in the West, it would have to concentrate its heavy repair work in the Transcona shops in Winnipeg. If the hon. gentleman is against that, it is inconsistent with what his Party is screeching and screaming about in the last few days in connection with Winnipeg and work which will be done in Montreal by Canadair. Make up your mind which geographical section of the country you are going to support.

COPYRIGHT

USE OF VIDEOTAPED MATERIAL FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Staff in community colleges have brought to my attention that copyright and its application often poses serious problems for educators. Will the Minister ensure that the new copyright Bill addresses the issue of in-class use of inexpensive and readily available videotapes and such material?

• (1440)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, when the parliamentary subcommittee examined copyright revision it made a recommendation that classroom use of copyright material should be exempted from the copyright legislation and so stated in the copyright legislation. In fact, when the Government responded in February to the subcommittee's report, the Government indicated that it accepted the subcommittee's recommendation and indicated that the legislation would so state.

INQUIRY WHY ULTRAMAR WISHES TO INCREASE PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I may remind him that yesterday, Ultramar announced it was going to increase the price of a litre of gas by two cents. This will, of course, affect the entire market, especially in Quebec.

Could the Minister explain why we are getting this increase from Ultramar at a time when, according to the Vice-President of the Gasoline Retailers Association, the multinationals have yet to pass on all the benefits of the drop in the price of crude to consumers?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is well acquainted with the fact that price controls per se are not within federal jurisdiction. They are within provincial jurisdiction. If the Hon. Member wants price controls, he should talk to his colleagues in Quebec City.

In terms of federal responsibility, we have the responsibility to ensure a fully competitive market. The market in petroleum products, gasoline, is being monitored by the Director of Investigation and Research under the competition bureau. If the Hon. Member has any evidence of collusion or any evidence that any company is trying to influence the market to the detriment of consumers, he should let us know and we will act immediately.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ASK PETRO-CANADA TO MAINTAIN PRICE OF GASOLINE AT REALISTIC LEVEL

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it was this Government that gave permission to close down the Gulf refinery in Montreal, which reduced competition and created the conditions in which today, the price of the gas sold by Ultramar can go up.

I want to ask the Minister to explain to the House why he is letting Ultramar take this action, since this is the company that authorized the shutdown of Gulf in Montreal.

Since the Government controls Petro-Canada I also want to ask the Minister if he will ask Petro-Canada to maintain the price of its gas, at least to protect consumers and promote competitive pricing.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in order to encourage more competition, we passed a new Competition Act in June which gives important new powers to the Government. Under those new powers the Government is monitoring the situation. I repeat again that if the Hon. Member or any other Hon. Member has any evidence of collusion or undue influence on the market by any company, Petro-Canada included, please let us know and we will act, and act immediately.

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—REQUEST OF SOLICITOR GENERAL'S EMPLOYEES' UNION IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, on behalf of prison guards, the Solicitor General's Employees' Union in Quebec urged the Government to put an immediate end to the Port-Cartier construction project before it is too late.

Here is my question to the Prime Minister: Can he respond to this urgent request and, more to the point, explain why he wants to build a new prison in Port-Cartier when his own correctional service expects there will be 400 too many maximum security cells in Quebec by 1992? It does look like a white elephant!

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that question has been asked many times in the House and answered many times in the House. I would ask the Hon. Member to read Hansard once in a while. Sometimes he is unavoidably absent. Perhaps the Hon. Member might familiarize himself with the issue. The decision to build a prison at Port-Cartier was taken for very good and valid reasons, all of which have been substantiated.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members know that it is not the practice in the Chamber to refer to the absence of an Hon. Member at any given time even if, in referring to that absence, the benefit of the doubt is given. I would ask the Hon. Member to make the preamble to his supplementary question short.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister who may be here but who refuses to answer questions from this side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: Come on. Play fair, guys.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Tomorrow morning the Justice Committee of the House of Commons will be considering the recommendation of the all-Party steering committee that the Prime Minister appear before that committee and answer questions on Port-Cartier. My question is very straightforward. It is for the Prime Minister and not for one of his Ministers. Will the Prime Minister appear before the Justice Committee as the steering committee has requested and answer the questions, the answers to which Canadians are entitled?

An Hon. Member: The muffler.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am truly amazed—

Mr. Rossi: This is the butler.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am truly amazed at that question, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has been around this House for some time. He knows very well that decisions are not made by a steering committee. Decisions are made by the standing committee. This is simply—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Get it under control.

Mr. Mazankowski: —a recommendation by the steering committee. My understanding is that the standing committee will deal with it. At that time if there is a recommendation as per the Hon. Member's suggestion, it will be considered in that light.

PROCEDURE FOR AWARDING CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services and has to do with the Port-Cartier project management.

We have just learned today that the contract award procedure concerning the Port-Cartier prison construction project management was such that indeed only one firm could even hope to be selected since it is the only one whose staff has had experience within the departmental correctional service.

Why does the Government still follow a contract award procedure which favours one company over another? And can the Minister confirm that this procedure was followed because the Government was afraid it might not be able to meet the Prime Minister's deadline?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): I am the Minister of Supply and Services. All standard criteria were applied with respect to this tender call. We had a list of suppliers, 13 companies. Eight submitted bids, three qualified, and we chose the lowest bidder because the company has the experience and can do the work.

[English]

BECHTEL CORPORATION CONTRACT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see this Minister answering the questions this week. Another one was answering them last week. In view of the fact that Bechtel Corporation got its contract at the same time that one of its employees was on loan to Correctional Services Canada, does the Minister intend to launch an inquiry to determine whether or not there has been a breach of Section 49 of the conflict of interest code for public servants? If not, why not?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am the Minister responsible for the administration of the guidelines. Allegations have been made of a possible apparent conflict of interest involving members of the Public Service. According to current established practice, a review will be undertaken immediately to ascertain the facts. That will be undertaken by Treasury Board under the mandate we have to administer the guidelines. I have already spoken to the Solicitor General who has requested that this investigation be done with the shortest delays and I can assure my hon. colleagues that that will be the case.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

ALLEGED SEXIST ATTITUDE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and only he can answer it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: That is the end of that. Next question.

• (1450)

Ms. Mitchell: The Prime Minister's Office has been criticized for sexist attitudes toward a female member of the Press Gallery. Can he assure the House and the women of Canada that his staff will stop requesting dates when interviews are requested, whether or not in jest?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I understand that there were press reports, which I think can fairly be categorized as unsubstantiated, with respect to Mr. Gratton. I understand that Mr. Gratton is now consulting his lawyer. I do not think that further comment is appropriate at this time.

PRESS SECRETARY'S CONDUCT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Since at least one reporter was apparently insulted by his tacky and hurtful act, will the Prime Minister instruct his press secretary to apologize to those he has offended by his unprofessional conduct?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member respects the principles of fairness. I think she understands that in this country a person is innocent until proven guilty. I do not think it helps to reinforce the other point of view by repeating unsubstantiated stories in the House.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—POSSIBLE REPRISALS AGAINST NEIGHBOURING STATES

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations. I understand that she represented Canada last week at the funeral of the late Mozambique President, Samora Machel. While in Mozambique did the Minister take the opportunity to discuss with representatives of the front line states whether or not, or indeed how, Canada might come to their assistance in the eventuality of economic or political reprisals from South Africa?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I indeed represented Canada last week at the funeral of President Machel of Mozambique. During my trip, I was able to meet many representatives of front-line countries, including the President of Zambia. Naturally, they all told me of their concern about the sanctions imposed by South Africa and the retaliation which could ensue. The situation is certainly very tense.

Mr. Speaker, I naturally informed all the representatives of these countries that Canada would continue to offer them practical support, either politically or through development assistance programs.

APPOINTMENT OF ANTONIO ARCANGEL TO HUMAN RIGHTS TRIBUNAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Why did his Government approve the appointment to the Human Rights Tribunal of Marcos supporter Antonio Arcangel in September of this year, when on August 15 specific allegations of subversive activities regarding an organization he headed were tabled at a meeting with representatives of the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is raising these allegations on the floor of the House of Commons under the protections of the Chamber. I have taken notice of the allegations which were raised during my absence from Ottawa, on Monday, and those which she now raises. I am looking into the matter.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Will you report to the House?

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I have a supplementary for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I would like to know if he is willing to respond to the telegrams he has received asking that the name of Mr. Arcangel be withdrawn because his appointment gives a very bad image to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. Following the freedom movement for the Philippines, is the Prime Minister willing to respond to the requests that the name of Mr. Arcangel be withdrawn?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will answer that question although it was directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Ms. Copps: To the Prime Minister.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: To the Prime Minister. I apologize. The Hon. Member is afforded protection to make allegations freely in the House.

Ms. Copps: The meeting took place on August 15 at External Affairs.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: However, there is a principle involved which allows the person whose reputation is being impugned to state his side of the story.

Ms. Copps: You appointed him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would like to have the opportunity to look at both sides of the matter as I know the Hon. Member would in similar circumstances.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. COUNTERVAIL LAWS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. It was reported last week that Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, speaking in Chicago stated that countervail laws are not up for discussion at the trade negotiations. The Minister has said that they are. Could the Minister tell us whether or not they are under discussion?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to correct the record. I have examined the text of Mr. Yeutter's speech. He did not make the comment which the media have attributed to him. Contingency protection measures, which include countervail and antidumping measures, are very clearly on the negotiating table. These are the new trade rules and regulations which we are hoping to achieve through the negotiations with the United States.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Murphy: The invisible man.

Mr. Riis: Does the Prime Minister not agree that it is totally inappropriate for the wife of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to be using the Minister's staff for her own private gain?

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State For External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand that there has been a correction issued in this regard.

Mr. Blaikie: By whom?

Miss Carney: It has been stated that the person in question is a part-time employee on the staff of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and that Ms. McTeer pays her for any work she does on her behalf, which is consistent with the practice carried out by many people.

Mr. Beatty: Apologize.

Mr. McDermid: Check your facts.

Mr. Riis: I am certainly not going to do any apologizing.

TREASURY BOARD GUIDELINES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my information is that a ministerial assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been seeking information to assist the Minister's wife in her private affairs. Will the Minister look into this situation? If there has been a misuse of public funds, will the guidelines of the Treasury Board be adhered to?

Mr. McDermid: She just answered that.

Miss MacDonald: You ought to be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Riis: She was wrong. She doesn't know what she is talking about.

Hon. Pat Carney (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is odd to hear such allegations made by a Party which publicly says that it supports work for women and working women.

Mr. Broadbent: I can't believe that.

Mr. Riis: Sit down.

Mr. Murphy: She calls from the External Affairs office.

Miss Carney: Now they do not even want to hear the answer.

Mr. Riis: Well, not that kind of answer.

Miss Carney: I can assure the Hon. Member that I have looked into these media reports and that no guidelines or rules have been breached through the use of a part-time worker for this purpose.

Mr. Murphy: She did it from the External Affairs office.

IMMIGRATION

ISSUANCE OF SPECIAL MINISTERIAL ENTRY PERMIT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. Yesterday the Minister justified the granting of a special permit to an individual with over 20 criminal convictions on the basis that he admitted to his record as opposed to having denied it for the last eight years. This is completely unacceptable reasoning.

Why did the Minister extend special privileges to this individual for simply admitting to the record, disregarding the advice of his Department and three previous Ministers who concluded that such a criminal record means that this candidate is both inadmissible and unwanted in this country? What are the real reasons behind his judgment?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, it is a consistent policy that this country, supported by our Acts, permits rehabilitation. This is a very delicate issue. We are dealing with the rehabilitation of a human being.

APPLICANT'S REHABILITATION LETTER

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, not only is the Minister facilitating the special entry of this individual, he also interfered with the rehabilitation letter. Since his own official, Mr. Westerberg, has confirmed that the rehabilitation letter was redrafted and retyped in the Minister's own office, why did he doctor this important letter to justify his own personal decision? Why the political indecision or interference in such an independent rehabilitation process?

• (1500)

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with the rehabilitation of a human being, a father, a husband, and a case in which a child is involved. There is wide community support, including the clergy, businessmen, professionals and national organizations. He has admitted his guilt. Those are the things that might have disqualified him. I have proposed him to the Minister of Employment and Immigration as a candidate for admission.

NARCOTICS

MANDATORY TESTING FOR DRUGS—APPLICATION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Yesterday I mentioned in the House that American Motors of Canada was insisting that new employees pass a mandatory urine test for drugs. This is the latest in a list of Canadian organizations that require this kind of test for employment purposes. Does the Minister agree with mandatory tests for drugs as a condition for getting a job in this country, or does he agree with many Canadians, including many experts, that this is a possible violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think a couple of things should be made quite clear with respect to the question raised yesterday by the Hon. Member. It is imporant to understand that AMC is under provincial jurisdiction in this matter, so that it is not a matter of federal jurisdiction. In terms of our national drug strategy, I think it has been made quite clear by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and other spokespersons on behalf of the Government that mandatory testing is not part of our drug strategy and will not be part of it. I believe our position with respect to this issue is quite clear.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PARKER COMMISSION—LEGAL EXPENSES OF FORMER MINISTER'S WIFE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are outraged and find it unconscionable that the Government should be paying the legal fees for the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion at the Parker Inquiry. I learned today that the Government is considering paying Mrs. Noreen Stevens' legal fees. Will the Government assure the House and Canadians that under no circumstances will it pay Mrs. Noreen Stevens' legal fees at the Parker Inquiry?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is simply a hypothetical question and I think the Hon. Member knows it. If such a decision is made—which I do not believe is contemplated—he will certainly find out about it in due course. I do not anticipate that such is the case.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Rideau Hall
Ottawa,

November 5, 1986

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Brian Dickson, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 5th day of November, 1986, at 5.00 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to one Bill.

Yours sincrely,
Léopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

PETITIONS

FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present the following petition on behalf of the Canadian Federation of Students, signed by 67 students from eight different provinces, calling upon the Government to request a First Ministers Conference to renegotiate a fair and equitable and progressive agreement for the funding of post-secondary education.

MISSING CHILDREN LEGISLATION—EFFECT ON POLICE INITIATIVES

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the parents of Tecumseh Elementary School, Home and School members and citizens of London-Middlesex. This petition deals with missing children and Bill C-70, which, for financial expediency, considers children missing after six months to be dead. They want assurance that this Bill will have no bearing or effect on police department initiatives and efforts to find any missing children, and in fact calls upon the Government to enhance programs to facilitate the identification and recovery of missing children in Canada.

Introduction of Bills

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL AND RELOCATION OF CANADIAN EMBASSY IN SYRIA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present four petitions from my constituents who humbly pray and ask the House that whereas the access to the Canadian Embassy in Syria is very difficult for people who are born or brought up in Christian areas of Lebanon; whereas Lebanese people are harassed by the Syrian roadblocks and guards; whereas Lebanese people are charged a fee upon entering and leaving the Syrian border, that no foreign money is allowed to pass through Syria; these people request that the Canadian embassy be removed from its present location in Syria to a new location in Cyprus.

REMOVAL OF POSTAL BOXES FROM SOUTH PARKDALE AREA

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present to the House a petition on behalf of the residents of Parkdale-High Park, protesting the removal of postal boxes from the South Parkdale area.

The petition expresses their frustration with the level of service being offered by Canada Post, and I wish to add my endorsement to their demand for the return of the postal boxes to the neighbourhood.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 6 and 18.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION EXPENDITURES

Question No. 6—Mr. Crofton:

For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation made or planned capital expenditures over $50,000 and, if so, by location, what were the amounts?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): 1. I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

It is the CBC's understanding that the Honourable Member is asking, in the context of the Corporation's overall capital budget, for information as to what expenditures in excess of $50,000 the CBC has made of plans to make, by location, in the extension of transmission service.

Of the very few remaining coverage extension projects, all of which were started before the budget cuts of December, 1984, only one will entail the expenditure of more than $50,000 in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987. That project involves an affiliate replacement and is for an FM transmitter at Elk Lake, Ontario, which will broadcast the CBC English radio AM service.

As for the Corporation's over-all capital expenditures for 1986-87, they comprise:

	($ millions)
Additions and replacements to plant and equipment—primarily involve replacement of obsolete production facilities and in some cases improvements to existing facilities to maintain an efficient operation.	46,115
Replacement of obsolete transmission facilities and extension of the broadcasting service—includes only those extension or affiliate replacement projects that had been started before the announcement of budget cuts in December 1984.	18,140
Consolidation of plant facilities—planning and engineering costs for the proposed consolidation of Toronto CBC facilities.	4,173
Total:	68,428

CREATION OF JOBS

Question No. 18—Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton):

1. Since September 4, 1984, have any sponsors in the Constituency of Victoria—Haliburton been approved to create jobs under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act and, if so (a) how many (b) how many jobs have they created?

2. What was the total funding involved in the Constituency?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration):

1. Yes

   (a) 15

   (b) 76

2. $514,914

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the third occasion the House has been asked by the Government to consider changes to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. I am pleased to tell Hon. Members that this will be the very last time.

In September of 1984, my predecessor, the former Minister of State for Finance, was assigned the task of carrying forward a number of ad hoc changes to this tax which had been left over as unfinished business of the previous Government. Early the following year the Government was able to negotiate a new energy pricing and taxation deal for western Canada. This new deal, the Western Accord, began the process of healing the enormous economic and political damage done by the National Energy Program. In the Western Accord, the federal Government agreed to the general phase-out of the PGRT by the end of 1988. It also agreed to its immediate elimination for new production and a number of other relieving changes.

The amendments Hon. Members are now being asked to consider follow the spirit of that historic agreement. Hon. Members are being asked to approve legislation which will accelerate the phase-out, terminating this unpopular and inappropriate tax on all revenues attributable to production after September 30, 1986.

Let me remind Hon. Members of the political and economic importance of the legislation before us. This legislation will mark the end of the petroleum and gas revenue tax, a tax which has done more to alienate western Canada than any other single measure since Confederation. It was a tax which imposed an unjustifiable burden on the petroleum industry when it was enjoying prosperity and was threatening to strangle it in today's environment of much lower crude oil prices. My party recognized the inequity of this tax and promised in 1984 to abolish it.

The previous Government designed incentive systems which gave with both hands. It provided both income tax incentives and direct grants. At the same time, the PGRT and income tax systems were taking money from the petroleum industry with two hands. We have fulfilled our commitment to abolish this tax and we have done so in a fiscally responsible manner.

The decision to remove the PGRT immediately rather than follow the originally agreed upon schedule was not taken lightly. The decline in international oil prices had already reduced the Government's expected PGRT revenues in the fiscal year 1986-87 by some $425 million. Earlier this year the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced increased relief targeted to small producers by increasing the small producer credit to $2 million per year. The continued slump in oil prices necessitated additional action. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), although very new to his portfolio, met with his provincial counterparts and industry representatives in August of this year. After these meetings and the assurances obtained, it became possible for the federal Government to immediately eliminate the PGRT.

The cost of this elimination is not cheap. It will cost $150 million for the remainder of this fiscal year. But it is money well spent because it will help to save the jobs of Canadians and because it reaffirms to western Canadians that this Government truly cares about their current economic problems and stands ready to help where it can. These are difficult economic times with our large deficit, but we are taking $150 million out of our own treasury in order to hasten the schedule of abolishing the PGRT.

I have spoken about why it was necessary for the Government to accelerate the PGRT phase-out. My colleagues from western Canada have pointed out on many occasions how the National Energy Program in general, and the PGRT in particular, was responsible for so much economic and political damage to this country. I would like to now bring to the attention of Hon. Members one of the less well-publicized provisions of the legislation we are considering. I would like Hon. Members to consider the treatment of the smaller corporations who receive royalty income. Many of these corporations typify the spirit of private entrepreneurship and risk-taking which the Government is attempting to encourage. These corporations were ignored by the previous Government in the design of the small producer tax credit. They were left out.

My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), met personally in July with representatives of these companies in order to understand their concerns. This has never happened since the tax was first imposed on the country in 1981. Several Hon. Members from Alberta provided valuable imput. The result of this combined consultative effort is an amendment which will permit these smaller corporations to claim a credit against the PGRT on royalty income effective January 1 of this year. In dollar terms, the cost to the Government is small, but in human terms, the benefits are large. It will help many smaller operations through these most difficult times. It is also a concrete example of how well representative Government can function.

In addition to these two important measures, the elimination of the PGRT and the retroactive relief, the Bill contains several items of a housekeeping nature which are consequential on the removal of the tax. I will not take up Hon. Members time with details on these measures. I do, however, want Hon. Members to consider the Bill as expeditiously as possible, and I urge the committee to report back at an early date. I am pleased to tell Hon. Members that with the passage of this Bill, it will be the last time we will ever have to consider changes to the petroleum and gas revenue tax.

• (1520)

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-17. I would first like to make a few comments with regard to the words of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) who said that the Liberal Government gave with both hands, as if that was a failing at a time of downturn in the energy sector. It seems that the present Government is not giving at all but merely taking away with both hands.

Members of the Government talk about doing away with the petroleum and gas revenue tax, a measure which will cost the federal Government $150 million. They say it as if they deserve a pat on the back, when they are really just giving back to the oil companies their own money. It is of small comfort to the energy sector which is undergoing the difficulties it is undergoing at the present time.

The Bill states that no petroleum and gas revenue tax will be payable with respect to revenues and royalties attributable to production of petroleum or gas after the end of September, 1986. I think that is a good provision. The Bill also implements tax relief for oil and gas producers, something which was announced earlier by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The legislation also exempts the PGRT up to an amount of $1.5 million in terms of royalty income earned by corporations, a measure which was announced on September 17. This provision has now been broadened to include individuals who earn up to the same amount of money.

Our Party would not have chosen to give top priority to doing away with the petroleum and gas revenue tax. We felt, and we still feel, that the major need in the energy sector right now is in terms of small producers. These are the people who are vulnerable. In times of a downturn in the energy sector we must not only deal with making life more comfortable for oil and gas companies but we must deal with their very survival. The problems now being experienced by the small producers could be critical to a great many.

It has been said that these small producers brought on their own problems, that they took advantage of the upturn in the economy when things were booming and that they went out and spent. That is not completely true. Of course some did that. Perhaps others spent unwisely or a little too much and became over indebted to the banks of the country. However, a great many companies in the oil patch in difficulty right now are companies which have been in business since as early as the 1930s. They are family businesses, businesses in which the presidents, chairmen and senior executives know all their employees on a first name basis. They know the families of these employees and are often on good terms with most of them, not only in a business sense but in a social sense as well. One can imagine the heartache caused to these managers and executives when they must cut back on employees whom they have had for as long as 20 or 25 years. I ask Hon. Member to imagine being in the position of knowing employees as these people do, and their families, and having to put them on the unemployment rolls. It is not an easy thing for these people to do. It is unfortunate that it has to be done at all. That is why we in the Liberal Party say that priority must be given to helping these small companies.

Most of these small companies are Canadian companies. If the Government feels, as it says it does, a certain sense of urgency and priority toward the principle of Canadianization, then we must protect these Canadian companies. This is Canadianization where it counts most, in the sector which actually produces oil and gas, where it is most important to our economy and to the whole theory of Canadianization.

Most of the beneifts which will accrue from doing away with the petroleum and gas revenue tax will go to the 10 to 15 largest companies, including the multinationals. However, a great many benefits will accrue to smaller companies which put together land purchases and farm them out to larger companies under a drilling contract for a royalty share of production. By doing away with the petroleum and gas revenue tax we will be helping a certain number of small companies, which is why our Party does not oppose this Bill. Because of the difficulties which exist in the energy sector right now, even though the programs which we think would be the most helpful have not been put in place, we will not vote against a Bill that will be of some help. The fact that we can give something to this hard-pressed sector is of tremendous importance.

What will flow from this legislation and how will the provisions of it be implemented? The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) tells us that he will do away with the petroleum and gas revenue tax but that he will ask the Petroleum Monitoring Agency to review and check up on these companies to ensure that the money they are saving from not having to pay the PGRT will be reinvested in the economy. I see that as a kick in the teeth to the energy sector. The Government would not ask General Motors or Litton to report to the Petroleum Monitoring Agency to ensure that their money is reinvested. What the Government is saying to these companies, which it says are so important to the economy and in which it has so much trust, is that it really does not trust them. It is either that or that the Government has a deep fear of the energy sector and no respect for the major companies themselves.

We in the Liberal Party feel that there must be certain measures taken to protect the energy sector. We would not go so far as the Government has gone in this respect. However, we say that in the interests of Canadianization, and not dealing with any particular size of company whatsoever, the Petroleum Monitoring Agency should take time from looking through the keyholes of the major oil companies to see what they are doing, and to monitor and check the transfer of assured supplies of oil and gas. This is the major concern as we see it.

With this downturn in the energy sector so many of these small oil and gas companies in financial difficulty will now become vulnerable to bankruptcy or takeover, not only by major companies but by other companies as well. We saw that Interprovincial Pipe Line purchased Home Oil's reserves of oil for a mere $4 a barrel. This will be a sky-high price in a few months' time if the downturn in the energy sector continues. In a short period of time we will see proven reserves of oil being purchased for as little as $1 a barrel, if these difficulties continue.

So what can happen? If one company buys another we know that a transfer has taken place. However, if one company only buys the reserves of another there is no way of knowing that the transfer has taken place. We have no way of knowing in whose hands lie our very valuable reserves of oil and gas. So we are asking the Petroleum Monitoring Agency to check and tabulate any transfer concerning the ownership of proven reserves of oil and gas so that we will have this information which can be published on a regular basis.

We are in favour of the elimination of the petroleum and gas revenue tax. By doing away with it the Government has said that it is in favour of that as well. When was this measure taken? It was taken on September 8, right in the middle of a by-election campaign in the constituency of Pembina. When did the crisis in the energy sector begin? It began in the latter part of January of this year. What has changed between January and now? Nothing at all has changed. It is just that the problem has existed for considerably longer than anyone would have expected. Nothing has changed. It is just that the energy sector is still in this economic abyss into which it has fallen. The problem has existed month after month and each month it gets worse. It increases not in an arithmetic progression but in a geometric progression.

We had to suffer for practically nine months before the Government realized that something had to be done. Why could the Government have not done something earlier? Why could it not have given the energy sector the benefit of the removal of the petroleum and gas revenue tax earlier? The Government came close to doing it in August when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources went to Calgary to speak at a luncheon. All the senior executives of oil companies were there to listen. They all expected that the Minister would announce the end of the petroleum and gas revenue tax. However, he did not announce it. He said that he would do away with it if the province reduced its royalties and reinvested the money in the energy sector, and if the companies could agree to put money back into the energy sector. What unmitigated gall and audacity it took to say that he would give the oil companies back their own money only if they did something else. The Government did not have a heartfelt belief that something had to be done for the energy sector. It only did something for the energy sector because the by-election came along and because the Government realized it was in difficulty. It wanted to do something to win the by-election.

The Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Van de Walle) is present in the House today. I would like to congratulate him on his victory. The by-election was not won by the Government doing away with the petroleum and gas revenue tax, it was won by the Hon. Member himself and the campaign he waged. However, the Government did not know that that would be so at the time. It thought that this measure would be very instrumental in the winning of the election. The Government was wrong. This just shows that there is not a commitment on the part of the Government to do something for the energy sector.

We have said that we support the eliimination of the petroleum and gas revenue tax. It is something that will help the energy sector. However, we wanted as well a cash flow stabilization program in conjunction with provincial Governments. A cash flow stabilization plan is something that would be entered into by both provincial and federal Governments and would help the small producers.

I think we in the Liberal Party might have made a mistake by saying that we are in favour of the cash flow stabilization plan. Because of the vindictiveness of this Government, if another Party announces that it is in favour of a particular program the Government then feels it cannot get the credit for it. If the Government cannot get credit for it, why put it into effect? Helping people is of no importance. The only thing that is important is to get credit for the programs. We in the Liberal Party may have dealt a death-knell to the federal Gvoernment's participation in the cash flow stabilization program by stating that we are in favour of it, thereby removing much of the possibility that the Government could take credit for the program. To heck with the people who would benefit from it.

The federal Government's neglect of the energy sector and its failure to participate with the provinces, and particularly the Province of Alberta which requested assistance through the cash flow stabilization program, will have a very serious effect on the energy sector. I cannot emphasize enough the difficulty in which this sector finds itself at the present time. It is estimated that over-all energy investments will be $900 million less than forecast last year by the Economic Council of Canada. By 1990, actual energy investments will be $3 billion less than initially forecast by the Economic Council of Canada. These are very serious statistics indicating that the industry is just hanging on by its fingernails.

What is the Government doing? It has eliminated the petroleum and gas revenue tax. We also heard some classic pronouncements by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In addition to taking away assistance from the energy sector, these pronouncements are actually trampling any hope the energy sector may have. The Minister recently said that self-sufficiency in the energy sector is on hold. What a thing to tell the energy sector now. It is estimated that in 11 years Canada will have used up all of its light and medium crude oil produced by conventional means. That means that we will have to import all of our required light and medium crude oil. What will the country do? We talk about security of supply but we will not even be able to supply ourselves with any light or medium crude unless we do something about it.

Right now Canada is a net exporter of oil even though it imports light and medium crude oil. We do, however, export more heavy oil than we import light and crude oil. This makes us a net exporter of oil, but each year we import more and more light and medium crude oil. By 1990 at the very latest, and probably as early as next year or 1989, we will be a net importer of oil. Why is this? It is because the Government is frozen at the switch. It does not know what to do. It is completely mesmerized by this problem, by the deficit and by polls. As a result, Canada's economy is fragmenting, particularly in the energy sector.

In deference to my friend, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), the agricultural industry as well is at the top of the Government's neglect list. Economic crises are occurring in Canada. The only part of the country which is doing well economically is southern Ontario. This is not the Canada we all envisioned. This is absolute neglect, this lack of planning or concern for anything. Things are adrift.

What is going to happen if we ignore the energy sector and do not have some thought for security of supply? I am not saying that billions of taxpayers' dollars should be poured into the energy sector, but certainly prudently stated fiscal regimes for the tar sands and heavy oils in the offshore can bring on even a little more quickly than normal these other reserves, and foster the continuation of exploration, and will develop more quickly the potential of reserves that exist. It will help to prevent us from completely ridding ourselves of all our reserves of light and medium crude oil before we have something to replace them.

This is very serious and important. We are not talking about a band-aid approach here. We are talking about the long-term economy of the country. We are talking about an industry which we here in Ottawa, and governments and preceding governments, have encouraged and want to stabilize. The Government will say that it cannot spend money in the energy sector right now because the price is too low. When the price goes up things will be different. The price can go up and then the price can go down again, then we could be in the same position. If we do not level out the peaks and valleys in the energy sector there will never be any type of consolidated action.

The banks had a very difficult time in the last few years. They are going to be very jaundiced about financing additional activity in the energy sector. How will we deal with that particular question? The banks are a very important component. The only way we can deal with that concern is by presenting a program that will show that there is more confidence and stability in the long term in the energy sector.

It was recently announced by the Government that it is going to deregulate natural gas. If there was ever a misnomer it is the deregulation of natural gas. The only deregulation is in the price to the producers. Even the producer is not completely deregulated, because the poor producer has to carry on his or her back the cost of the surplus test. Prices are being rolled back on the producers.

The money that is paid to the producer is only one-third of the total that is paid at the burnertip in the household or in the manufacturing plant. A great deal of money is paid to the pipeliners and the carriers, such as TransCanada Pipelines, to carry the natural gas from the production site to the user. Once it is carried through the pipeline, then it is picked up by the distributors. The distributors are provincial public utilities. There is no control whatsoever over them by the federal Government or the National Energy Board. They have a set percentage that they are going to make. That set percentage would be at least 15 per cent more in most cases. They are not going to help the energy sector in its difficult time. We will not hear the distributors say they are going to cut back on their margin because times are tough in the energy sector. No. You will not hear that. The National Energy Board is now saying that we are going to cut back on the profitability and the intake of TransCanada Pipelines and the other pipeliners. They are not going to suffer either. Who is suffering? It is the producers that are suffering because they are going to get less for their product.

At a time when we need some cash flow and support in the energy sector the price to the producer is being rolled back. I have talked to producers who have been offered less than a dollar a gigajoule on the spot market for natural gas. These people are only going to be working for the banks. They will not be working for themselves any more. How long can they hold on? Why is this happening? It is happening because of this Government's major fear of the word "regulation". It feels that anything to do with regulation is bad. If regulations exist, such as they do with the distributors and the carriers, then it ignores that they exist. It is blind to those regulations. This is deregulation regardless of how many regulations continue to exist.

What about the householder? What is the householder going to do? Right now natural gas is competitive with other types of fuels. It is competitive now even before deregulation. If the price of natural gas goes down substantially what is going to happen? First, it is going to make it much more competitive with respect to the alternate fuels. Do you mean to tell me, Mr. Speaker, that the provinces will allow natural gas to decrease further giving other energy suppliers an additional edge on their own public utilities, such as hydro-electric power? No, that is not going to happen. It is not going to be allowed to happen. Even though the producers are being gouged by the price they are being paid, the homeowner is not going to benefit.

What is going to happen is that the pipelines and the carriers are going to gradually increase their margin. The distributors are gradually going to increase their margin. The provinces, through taxes, are going to increase their take. This has happened already. The Province of Quebec announced an increase in its retail sales tax. The Province of Manitoba has placed a tax on the fuel used to transport the natural gas in the pipeline system as it goes through Manitoba. These are the types of things that are happening. Who is suffering? The producer is suffering, with no benefit to the householder.

What about transportation itself? Prior to this when all the natural gas was going through the pipeline, commercial natural gas was subsidizing somewhat the transportation of the natural gas that went to the retail homeowners. But now, because you have direct buyer and seller contracts, that is not possible. The total cost of the transportation of the natural gas through the pipeline system must be picked up by the householders themselves. This means that transportation costs are going to be greater. Deregulation is not going to wash. I predict very confidently that we will have an Alberta border price by the end of the spring of 1987. The situation is continuing to deteriorate.

I would ask the Government to please look at this sector again. Look at its problems to see what else can be done to help this sector along. So much needs to be done, not only in a monetary sense but from the point of view of building up the confidence of the producers in the oil and gas sector. By doing away with the adjacent border price, as was done recently, all that will result is cheaper gas going into the United States. More gas will be sold, but there will not be much more return, if any, in total revenue. The additional gas that is sold will not bring in enough extra money to make up for the reduced price of the gas per gigajoule.

Gas is being sold more cheaply to Americans than to the householders in Canada. That is not right or fair. There is a gas bubble in the United States that will soon dissipate and disappear. By selling this cheap gas to the United States we are inflating that bubble, making it an even longer sausage. The problem is that we are not going to get any more money by doing away with the adjacent border price. We are not being fair with Canadian residential consumers. We will lengthen the gas bubble in the United States, but we will put producers in a more difficult position, particularly the small ones, because they will receive less for the natural gas they sell. We are not helping them where they need help most, other than in a higher price by giving them access to the pipeline system. There is no prorating involved that would give small producers more of a chance to get into the pipeline system, thereby enabling them to sell their natural gas.

This is a very badly advised energy policy. Doing away with the adjacent border price has once again aroused the ire of protectionists in the United States who now think that it is unfair competition to sell natural gas in the United States more cheaply than it is being sold to Canadians.

Although we support the assistance provided by the Bill—and it is the only assistance the federal Government has given—we denounce the insensitivity of the Government in not developing a proper fiscal regime and energy policy for Canada. We further denounce the misguided programs the Government has brought into effect which hurt both Canadian consumers and producers.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to an earlier understanding, I wonder whether we could revert to the tabling of documents and then statements by Ministers to allow the Minister responsible for Canada Post to table pertinent documents and to make a statement. I believe there is agreement to that effect with the other two Parties.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to this procedure, as long as it is within reason.

I was required to ask the critic of my Party to remain an extra three-quarters of an hour to accommodate the Minister who was late in making a statement; they are normally made at three o'clock. Is the document which was given to the Hon. Member at one o'clock today the document from which the Minister will be speaking? I also ask the Government House Leader to assure us that there have been no changes to that document, so that we do not have any surprises.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the conciliatory attitude of the Hon. Member. He is always that way, although sometimes he may not appear to be. He is very genuine and I appreciate working with him.

Essentially the statement is the same, but there is a slight deviation which has been discussed with his critic and with the critic from the New Democratic Party. I think he will find it to be consistent with what he hears from the Minister when he makes his statement.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the same spirit, we are certainly prepared to co-operate. However, I ask for the indulgence of the House to wait perhaps a moment or two while our critic is making his way to the Chamber. We were standing by, and he decided to slip out for a few moments.

I know the Government House Leader feels that it is in our interest to work and co-operate with each other whenever possible. I simply want to remind him, in the spirit of co-operation, that we are always prepared to do that and always have. I would ask that he take whatever steps necessary to ensure that this co-operation is maintained in other precincts as well.

For example, I hold in my hand Bill C-6, a very complicated and lengthy Bill dealing with petroleum resources offshore Newfoundland. The Bill was before the legislative committee last night. There was an understanding reached by members of the committee that the Bill would be studied beyond yesterday and, as a matter of fact, that they would not sit beyond 5.30 p.m. Shortly after five o'clock the NDP critic left for another engagement, and the member of the Liberal Party left shortly thereafter, with the understanding that it would end at 5.30 p.m. and that deliberations would continue today. However, after the two opposition Members had left the members of the committee decided to extend the hours and complete consideration of Bill C-6 in terms of its evaluation and examination.

It is that type of action which sometimes makes it difficult to co-operate when we have requests for co-operation. If that is the way government Members on that committee see co-operation and working in a positive and co-operative way with opposition Members, then we require some further discussions to ensure that the business of the House is maintained and conducted in the most business-like fashion possible.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows, as we all know, that the committees are masters of their own house and make their own rules. Whatever agreements they may or may not make are certainly within their purview.

I am not aware of precisely what happened at the committee meeting yesterday to which the Hon. Member referred. I am not aware of any undertakings or understandings which may or may not have been made. However, I can assure him that I will look into the matter.

I also want to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party and to the House Leader of the Liberal Party for their co-operation. It is a give and take business. So far, we have been able to help each other and to work toward dealing with the issues in a manner which behoves us all as representatives of the people and with the respect this institution deserves. I am most grateful to both of them.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader may be technically correct when he says that committees are masters of their own proceedings. However, the reality is that there is a majority on such committees of government supporters. For the Government House Leader to suggest that he is entirely without influence when it comes to government members of committees is something at which we could only smile. I suggest to him that in matters like the one involved in the legislative committee on the offshore Bill last night, he should be anxious to use what influence he has to ensure that there is fair treatment for all concerned. If that is not the case, it is bound to have repercussions in the House.

For example, in respect of the matter about which the Minister responsible for Canada Post will speak shortly, we offered our co-operation when, for reasons not yet explained, he was unable to make his statement during the time ordinarily set aside for such statements by Ministers. We also offered our co-operation in respect of the minor deviation in the text distributed in advance. However, sometimes our patience will have its limits. Therefore I suggest to the Government House Leader that he be not afraid to use his influence in a constructive manner when some of his caucus colleagues, perhaps inadvertently, forget about the elementary requirements of fairness in the proceedings of the House and its committees.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a very short comment in so far as my hon. friend's remarks in respect of the committee yesterday and using my influence are concerned. Even for me it is very difficult to use my influence after the fact.

TABLING OF BUDGETARY PLANS—1986-1987 TO 1990-1991

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister responsible for Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2) and Section 132(4) of the Financial Administration Act, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, copies of the corporate plan of the Canada Post Corporation for the years 1986-91.

Mr. Speaker, said report may be referred to the Standing Committee of the House on Government Operations.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PROJECTED BUDGETARY PLANS

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce today that the corporate plan of Canada Post Corporation for 1986-87 has been tabled in the House. The plan corresponds with the Government's concerns for improved and more reliable postal service in Canada and the need expressed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his budget speech earlier this year to achieve a financial break-even point in expenses by the end of 1988-89.

It has been developed to respond to the concerns expressed by Canadians to the Marchment Committee when that group travelled from coast to coast to re-examine the mandate and productivity of the Corporation. This committee, headed by Mr. Alan Marchment, examined the complicated problems which plagued Canada Post and presented its findings in an honest and comprehensive report less than one year ago. The Corporation has recognized the importance of its findings and will implement key recommendations in the corporate plan. The plan, Mr. Speaker, will set a date for the establishment of delivery standards for properly prepared first-class mail in line with those of the Marchment report: two days maximum for local mail, three days within provinces and four days from province to province between major centres.

[English]

The Corporation will also take into account in this plan the need to improve the public's access to postal services in the most cost-effective manner and will, therefore, expand on the current role of the private sector in providing these services at convenient times and in convenient locations as well. In meeting the target of balancing its operations, its operating costs and expenses by 1988-89, as outlined in the February Budget, the Corporation is required to avoid increases in the basic postal rate of the scale the public experienced in past years of the corporation's existence.

The Corporation may apply for rate increases, but in the case of the basic letter rate these increases must be justified on the basis of such factors as inflation measured by increases in the Consumer Price Index.

In order that the Corporation does not rely unfairly on rate increases, Mr. Speaker, an interdepartmental working group is reviewing now the possibility of establishing an effective neutral third-party regulatory agency that will ensure that any postal rate increases are justified.

In assisting the Corporation in meeting its financial targets, the Government has taken note of the Marchment recommendation that Canada Post should be reimbursed in full for services it provides free or at reduced rates in order to implement certain government policies. These services include the likes of free mail for the blind and the transport of supply to certain northern communities at less than cost.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canada Post will be reimbursed in full, so that the groups concerned may continue to benefit from the services it provides free or at reduced rates, for as long as this form of assistance is part of the Government's policies.

[English]

The Corporation is also expected to contribute toward keeping postal rate increases in line by reducing its spending, particularly its overhead costs and to continue improving its productivity and efficiency in all activities.

Progress has already been made in these areas by the reduction, for instance, of senior management by 26 per cent by the end of this fiscal year and operational changes, such as, color coding the mail to ensure speedy processing.

In the current fiscal year, the Government is expecting to fund the Corporation's operating deficit to the amount of $132 million as compared with $184 million last year. In the next fiscal year the amount of funding is expected to be $30 million and will be reduced to zero by 1988-89.

[Translation]

Since 1981, Canada Post has not invested sufficient capital to improve its facilities. Its fleet of vehicles (trucks and cars) has an average age of seven years, which we consider to be well above the normal replacement age.

So that Canada Post will have the capital it needs to improve its services—another recommendation from the Marchment Report—the Government has made provision for an increase of $103 million in funds earmarked for Canada Post for this fiscal year, and an increase of $161 million for next year.

[English]

In keeping with the Government's arm's length approach, the President and Chief Executive Officer of Canada Post Corporation will be holding a press conference today to explain in detail the directions and initiatives the Corporation plans. I believe that the plan developed by the Corporation's executive, in response to the clearly expressed opinions of Canadians and the orientation of Government guidelines, represents the best balance between the need to provide improved reliable postal services and the responsibility to ensure that postal services no longer operate at a deficit.

Canadians at large as well as Members of this Parliament of all Parties have expressed considerable interest in the development of this plan. I have accordingly felt that Parliament should have a full opportunity to review the rate increase components which the Corporation has assumed in the forecast included in the plan. I am, therefore, proposing to refer this aspect of the plan to an appropriate committee of this House. I would hope that this will be done as swiftly as possible.

This balance between improved reliable service and operational break-even is a delicate one. We all know that. The corporate plan put forward by Canada Post required that all Parties concerned, shareholders, management, labour and the general public make sacrifices in order for it to succeed. The shareholder appeals to both management and labour members to work together in an harmonious effort to restore their sense of pride of Canada Post.

The Post Office Department recorded surpluses on a regular basis in the first part of this century, and other postal administrations appear capable of operating on a profitable basis today. There is no doubt that Canada Post can achieve these goals provided we support its efforts.

The plan being presented goes a long way toward restoring these values in the postal service and toward moving Canada Post Corporation in a direction that helps it meet the requirements of the future. It may require new attitudes and approaches, but I am certain Canadians will support these well founded efforts aimed at ensuring that Canada has a postal service of which we can all be proud.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, it seems that producing this summary of the 1986-87 to 1990-91 Canada Post budget plan has turned out to be a painful exercise this afternoon. We have been promised this plan for months now, and today we thought we would finally see the light. I commend the Minister for respecting parliamentary traditions and sending us a copy, but five minutes later he called to say a corrected version was on the way, but unfortunately we had a hard time finding the change. Apparently there was none. At 3 o'clock this afternoon the Minister was not feeling well, so here we are at ten minutes past four, the media are standing by, the Canada Post press conference has been delayed, and I am wondering. Maybe the Minister will have better luck next time. This is the second time. He once had problems with his Bill on pharmaceutical products and now he is experiencing difficulties with the post office. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister better luck next time.

After listening closely to the Minister's remarks I must say I am very disappointed because the Minister seems to think he is still on the hustings. You have been in office for two and a half years and you ought to assume your responsibilities, you are supposed to administer the country. This document is full of nice words, but nothing here gives us a clue as to what the postal corporate plan might be.

For instance, in his remarks the Minister did not say anything at all about community boxes, not a word on that, Mr. Speaker. Why?

An Hon. Member: They would rather not brag about it.

Mr. Gagliano: It says only that Canadians who already have home delivery will continue to have it. Others will have a service equivalent to or better than what is available from commercial carriers. What does it mean, Mr. Speaker? Why would the Minister hesitate to come clean and not say to people who live in suburban areas or even to those who just bought a house downtown: From now on, forget it, home delivery is a thing of the past. It is a fact. Why not admit it openly instead of pretending they will be getting improved services? Just what are improved services, Mr. Speaker?

In today's statement, the Government has just created two classes of citizens: one gets home delivery, while the other has to brave our Canadian weather to fetch the mail. And why, I ask you? Don't they both pay the same taxes? And now we have a two-cent rate increase, will people without home delivery get a discount or will the rate be the same? Why not give everyone the same service, Mr. Speaker, instead of dividing people into first and second class citizens, into people with and without home delivery?

Mr. Speaker, in the Budget Speech of February 26, 1986, we read on page 8—I'm not making this up—and I quote verbatim:

> The Marchment Committee has recommended another five years to reach the break-even point. This is not acceptable.
> Following discussions with the President of Canada Post, the Government has requested a new operating plan to improve productivity at Canada Post so that the Corporation will reduce its operating deficit to zero by the end of fiscal 1987-88.

Mr. Speaker, the Marchment Committee recommended that Canada Post's deficit and its corporate plan be spread over five years. As far as I can see, the only reason the Minister of Finance announced on February 26 that he wanted to reduce that deficit immediately is that he wanted to impress Canada's big corporations and the business world, since he was unable to set the Budget deficit below $30 billion. We were told after September that it would be impossible to reduce the deficit any further, and that it would actually be $2.5 billion more than forecast. That is the only reason, Mr. Speaker.

Today, Canadians are being asked to accept these cutbacks in services. This is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister will realize that this is so, because today, across the country, there are movements afoot to protest these cutbacks because they are unacceptable, and the Minister knows that perfectly well. He even came to my riding, where people told him that Saint-Léonard was not somewhere out in the bush! Mr. Speaker, there is a small area in that riding with 50 homes. Now what excuse is there for not providing home delivery to 50 homes built in 1985, when 85,000 people get their mail delivered at home? How do you explain this? What kind of policy do you have? That is the difference between a Liberal Government and a Conservative Government. They are not aware of the needs of ordinary people. They took good care of bankrupt financial institutions and wealthy depositors, but the average Canadian cannot even have home delivery service. That is a fact, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: It is true.

• (1610)

[English]

Mr. Gagliano: We definitely do not agree with the Government's plan. We believe that Canada's postal service is an essential service and that every Canadian has an equal right to that essential service. We do not accept the Government's creation of two classes of citizens, those who receive their mail at home and those who will, from now on, have to go to the corner of a street to pick it up. That is unfair because all people pay income tax, sales tax, and real estate tax.

The postal corporation is asking for a two-cent increase in the price of stamps. The people who will not receive home mail delivery will have to pay the same price for stamps as those who will. This is unfair. I am sure that Canadians across the country will remember this. I am sure that starting tonight the Minister will hear from groups which are already planning to protest because this Conservative Government policy is unacceptable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, today Canadians are asking whether postal rates will continue to go up and whether service at the Post Office will continue to be cut. We did not receive a clear answer to that in the Minister's statement. However, like the mail these days, the Minister was late today. He was late because he had a struggle in his own caucus to get his plan approved. It is right that he had such a struggle because the Minister hopes to increase rates and cut service. His own caucus has put the brakes on this.

There is a difference between the statement which was distributed to us and what the Minister just said in the House. The addition was that the rate increase components of this plan will be referred to committee. I am happy that they will be referred to committee, but it was obviously the intention of the Minister to go ahead with rate increases. It is only because Members of the Government have been hearing that people will not put up with this and put pressure on him that it is being referred to a committee and that people will be spared, for the moment, a rate increase.

The plan before us is not what Canadians had been hoping for. They hoped for a blueprint for good, reliable, reasonably priced postal service. Before us we have a plan which will mean more postal rate increases and service cuts in the long run. I want to touch briefly on three aspects of this plan. The first is the process of how we got here, the second is service, which most people are concerned about, and the third is some specific things which the Minister said in his statement.

First, with regard to how we got here, the Minister mentioned the Marchment Committee Report. He has mentioned this many times in the past as a justification for the fact that he did not consult with people. He said that Marchment consulted. People have not been involved in the making of this plan. It was not done through an open process, but rather behind closed doors. That is why the product is so unsatisfactory.

In his original statement the Minister did not say what he was going to do about postal rate increases. He hinted about it but was forced to retreat from that aspect. He was trying to hide his intentions with regard to postal rate increases. He makes no mention of the Post Office's plan to spend money to try to sell the new plan to the public. How much money will be spent on advertising to try to sell this plan to Canadians?

With regard to service the Minister mentioned three things; service standards, the monitoring of them, and a neutral third party for rate increases. Like most Canadians, I am skeptical about whether the Post Office will actually live up to standards. We want to have standards established, but we want to see the goods delivered before we will have any trust in the Post Office. With regard to monitoring, it would be nice to have an objective third-party monitoring system, but what standards will they monitor and how will they go about monitoring them? The real monitors of postal service in the country are citizens. They know when their mail is on time and when it is late, like the Minister today.

I want the Minister to continue to review the third party mechanism for examining postal rate increases as he suggests in his plan. We want to know the scope and effectiveness of this mechanism, because if it is simply a way to fob off postal rate increases on a so-called objective body so that the Minister can remove the political pressure from implementing postal rate increases we will be stuck with deteriorating service and postal rate increases. Thank goodness that there was division in the Tory caucus and back-benchers on that side who heard from the Canadian public and were able to put pressure on the Minister to at least delay this postal rate increase and refer it to committee. I am concerned about a Minister who tries to fob off his responsibility for postal rates to a so-called neutral third party.

The Minister has failed to extend door-to-door service to the new suburban developments. He is continuing an arbitrary and inequitable approach to mail delivery. Furthermore, he promises to extend that inequitable approach to rural routes by putting super mailboxes in rural locations. Canadians want to know if this inequitable approach will be extended to Canadians in other areas who presently enjoy door-to-door delivery. When Canadians see the Minister treat people in suburban developments in an inequitable and arbitrary fashion, they fear that the same may happen to them.

The Minister talked about reimbursing the Post Office for specific services and identified specific subsidies that go to the Post Office. That is fine as an approach, but it begins to appear that perhaps the Minister is attempting to rename the Post Office deficit and copy the American Post Office which has specific subsidies tailored in before it balances its books, in order to say it has arrived at financial self-sufficiency. It seems that this is the approach the Minister is taking so that eventually he can declare victory and say that he has won the war, while we are still subsidizing the Post Office.

The Minister also mentioned private sector counter services. We need more information about this. Does he mean more drug store Post Offices and less full service Post Offices in urban centres? He talks about reducing spending and improving productivity. Until now, that has translated into cuts in services. Is that what will happen?

The disappointment felt by Canadians as a result of the plan the Minister has put before us today is that it fails because it is not the blueprint that Canadians wanted for good service at a reasonable cost. Canadians want reasonable postal service, accessible postal service and equitable postal service. This so-called plan fails on all counts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As a result of the Minister's statement and the replies, today's sitting time will be extended for 25 minutes.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I will try to put my stamp on this debate. I am about to deliver a long speech on the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and on the deregulation of natural gas.

I notice that when I speak on the deregulation of natural gas people tend to yawn, as their eyes glaze over. Indeed, I do that myself, in spite of the fact that this is one of the most important subjects in Canada that deals with regional issues in many ways similar to the CF-18 contract, where there are producers in one part of the country and consumers in another. It is an old Canadian problem of regionalism and trying to satisfy diverse regional interests.

This Bill eliminates the petroleum and gas revenue tax which was implemented as a result of the old Liberal National Energy Program. This tax was put on right at the wellhead rather than being a tax on profits. Oilmen said that this was a unique tax which did not apply to other resource industries where taxes were levied at the profit stage rather than at the wellhead.

The Province of Alberta almost declared a war over this tax by turning off the oil pumps that supplied eastern Canada. Peter Lougheed, the former Premier of Alberta, was called the blue-eyed sheik as a result of his response to the petroleum and gas revenue tax. He thought this was a provincial responsibility, not the responsibility of the federal Government, because it was a royalty, or tax, on the resource itself which provinces are allowed to impose under our system. He said that the federal Government had no business implementing this tax because it was not federal jurisdiction. The premier and the industry were upset about this tax and a seven-day debate ensued in the House, which I will discuss later. We soon forget that interesting period of energy wars, yet we may see it again in the future.

In spite of the criticism of the tax, it collected a lot of money from the oil industry which would rather find a way around paying tax. For instance, Shell did not pay any federal income tax in one year because it could reinvest all of its profits. Ordinary working Canadians pay taxes from their paycheque but sometimes the big oil companies can escape paying tax. However, the industry did pay a lot of money through the petroleum and gas revenue tax and that is why we are having this debate today. The Government indicated that it would phase out the PGRT in its so-called Western Accord which was entered into in 1985.

There has been pressure from the industry and the Government of Alberta as a result of the disaster in the industry out west from the drop in world oil price from $30 a barrel to $15 a barrel. There has been a shakeup in Saudi Arabia with the replacement of Sheik Yamani. We will no longer see a Canadian Prime Minister dance "sheik to sheik", as the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) once said.

The dramatic decrease in the oil price has brought on a crisis in Alberta, which produces most of the oil in Canada. It has called for help and one of the ways to assist the people and companies in Alberta is to eliminate the petroleum and gas revenue tax immediately rather than phase it out. That is the purpose of this Bill.

We in the New Democratic Party support the Bill, but we have some real concerns. I do not believe that it is really the answer to the problem of the oil companies. I have been the energy critic in my Party for six years now and have seen the ups and downs throughout the National Energy Program. I have learned certain things as a result of watching this happen, which I will talk about later. This Bill is not the answer. It is just a disaster bail-out which does not really reach the Canadian producer in Alberta, who is the one we should be trying to reach. The Canadian producer really needs help, and it concerns me that in the weeks and months ahead there is a real danger that many Canadian producers could go under. The progress we have made is shared by all three Parties. I want the Conservatives to be honest when they talk about the National Energy Program and I will be honest when I talk about them. All three Parties, including the Conservatives, supported Canadianization of the industry. We have different ideas and philosophies about Canadianization but we all supported it. To put it broadly, we thought that Canadian companies, whether public, private or mixed, in many ways would serve the interests of Canada better than having a vital and strategic resource such as oil controlled by outsiders, and I will not put it any higher than that. I am afraid we are in danger of losing the progress we have made towards more Canadianization in the industry.

• (1630)

The National Energy Program wanted to have 50 per cent Canadianization by 1990. I think it succeeded. We are up there. But to have 50 per cent of one of our most crucial industries controlled by ourselves is no great shakes. Perhaps we should have more. Perhaps our goal should be higher. Certainly, if our Party were in power we would make the percentage of Canadianization higher.

I do not believe this Bill will solve the problems of the western Canadian oil industry because I feel the only thing which will solve the problems of that industry will be higher prices. Oil prices are too low. It is as simple as that. What is needed is justice for the producer and for the consumer.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is not going to solve the problems facing the oil industry in western Canada. What we need is a policy which is fair to producers and consumers alike. For producers, it means a good price; for consumers, it means a competitive industry selling its oil products at a fair price.

[English]

Let me try to explain that in a little more detail. I think we have to be fair to the producer and to the consumer, and that means that when the prices are going through the roof, as they were a few years ago when OPEC under the former chief, Sheikh Yamani, pushed the oil prices up dramatically, the Canadian Government puts a ceiling on the price. So Canadians paid less for their gasoline than the Americans. That was given justice to Canadian consumers because it is our resource. But Canadian producers paid a price. They would have received artifically higher prices, forced up prices, but higher prices nevertheless. But they lost money, although when they exported oil, they did get the world price. Now that the price is going through the basement, what a fair Government would do is to put a floor on that price. My Party has advocated that. My Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), advocated it in Oshawa and in Calgary. One can criticize us for the policy, but please do not say we are inconsistent, because when prices were going through the roof we said: "Let's have a made in Canada price".

In order to get the body politic—and in Canada that is often defined as the consumers in Ontario and Quebec—to accept it, it seems to me we have to do something in return. What we have to do is to ensure there is fair competition and the lowest possible prices at the pump level. We do that by changing the situation we have right now. We have a monopoly, an oligopoly, really, of a few producers who control these large companies, including Petro-Canada, who are integrated. They control the refining and the wholesaling of gasoline. The small independent person who sells gasoline is struggling to compete and sometimes he can get frozen out by various methods so that prices are forced up. Sometimes, and we saw it happen over the past year, when there is a decline in the world price for oil, it is not passed along so quickly to the consumers. I want to underline that. The small Canadian firms, the producers, are the ones with the real problems right now because their price has gone down so much. The large integrated oil companies can survive because they have what we call "the downstream". The upstream is the drilling for oil and producing it. The downstream is the selling, the refining, wholesaling and marketing at your corner gas station. In the downstream, the companies are doing all right. The Calgary Herald on October 29 published a story by Peter Morton. The headline reads: "Integrated firms' outlook brightest", and I will quote it in part:

> The third-quarter results (of the integrated companies) were excellent relative to what others were experiencing.

Integrating means produce, refine, wholesale, retail, and that would be companies like Shell, Gulf, Texaco, Imperial and so on. And this was said by Phil Swift from Deacon Hodgson Inc., which are investment and oil analysts. He went on to say:

> Among the integrated companies, Imperial Oil Ltd., Shell Canada Ltd., Texaco Canada Ltd. and Husky Oil Ltd., all reported increases in downstream earnings.
> Most of the integrated oil companies were showing sharply higher earnings from refining and marketing operations because of the 90-day lag between crude oil supplies and refining output—

So in fact they were doing all right. I have another article from The Toronto Star on October 24, 1984. It reads: "Shell post gains after East Coast pull-out".

At the end of the article the President of Shell described the results as encouraging. He said that in view of the depressed oil price environment and the exploration write-off, the drop in resource profits was partly offset by some restoration of oil products results. That means refining and selling the gasoline and oil for automobiles. The Globe and Mail on October 29 said: "Imperial Oil's downstream profit in the last three months was $90 million compared with $16 million the year earlier and $93 million for all of 1985".

What is happening in Canada is that the large companies are squeezing the downstream and making money so they can cover their behinds in the upstream at the expense of Canadian consumers. I can understand that. But the small Canadian companies in Alberta, which are the companies that get off their behinds and do the most exploration, do not have this lucrative downstream where they can milk the consumer. They only have the upstream, that is, the selling of crude oil and, of course, they have to sell at world market prices which are dramatically declined. That is why we have a problem in the oil industry. That is also why, incidentally, when Canadians drive in the United States, they are shocked by how low gasoline prices are. There are two reasons for our higher prices. One is that we have more tax, which does not tell the whole story. The second reason is that we have what is called an oligopoly. This is a big word which only the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) will know. It means that a few companies, about four or five, including Petro-Canada, control the refining and the marketing. The Government did not make it easy, by the way, by closing the refinery in the east end of Montreal.

[Translation]

This is why gas prices are high, and another reason is that the Conservative Government shut down the Montreal East refinery, and the New Democratic Party believes it was a mistake. This is why Canadian drivers, both men and women, have to pay more for their gas. Driving down to Vermont or New York, for example, one can see that gas prices are not the same.

[English]

I wish to suggest that what we need is a made in Canada oil price. It has been suggested by the small producers in Alberta that the Government should give them $20 per barrel for 500 barrels, the difference between that and the world price which may be even $15 per barrel, and they will pay the Government back in the future. It seems to me this is a measure which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) could have brought in. It is something which could have been considered. It could be something of a stabilization program. However, as the Liberal Member who spoke on this Bill said, perhaps the Opposition has used that word before. The Government could call it something different. It could be called a Conservative energy program, which could give a break to these small producers.

Getting rid of the petroleum and gas revenue tax will provide some relief to some companies. However, by and large, the relief will be provided mostly to the bigger companies and not to the small Canadian producers. This is the flaw in the Government's policy.

There is also a flaw in the Bill. I do not think I can put forward an amendment which will make any difference. However, I will share with Hon. Members what I think the flaw is. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced in a press release on September 8, 1986, that the Government of Canada will eliminate the petroleum and gas revenue tax effective October, 1986. It is stated in the news release:

> Mr. Masse said he had their assurances that the PGRT savings would be reinvested in exploration and development activity.

I ask Hon. Members, if they controlled an oil company and received a big saving what would they do with the money? Would they use it to pay off their debts? Would they use it to buy up some small Canadian oil companies? Some of these small companies are desperate. In fact, one of the companies in the association of small producers recently announced its bankruptcy. The Alberta company of the Leader of the Liberal Party has just announced its bankruptcy. These small pools of oil can be bought from these companies at $15 per barrel or less. Why reinvest by going into the ground? This is the flaw in the Bill. The money could be repatriated. For example, Imperial Oil could give it back to Exxon. Shell could give it to Texaco. Mobil could send the money to New York. One must watch that the money that we are not taking from the oil companies as a result of eliminating this tax is reinvested. The companies may take the money and run, if I can put it that way.

I have in my hand a release issued by IPAC on the same day as the Minister's release. IPAC is the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada which represents medium-sized oil companies. These companies state that they are pleased, of course, that the Minister removed the tax. They see it as a positive first step in a sequence of events that will restore viability and investor confidence in the oil and gas industry. The association's spokesman is Mr. John Howard, Chairman of IPAC.

Members of the oil industry are famous for saying: "Just give us this". Once they are given that they then say: "Give us this, which is a good second step. Now go to the third step". First, they wanted to get rid of the PGRT; they got that. They now want the royalties reduced; they got that too. They will then want something else. They will lobby for tax changes. They never get enough. My heart bleeds for these poor oil companies.

The Chairman of IPAC stated in his release:

> My discussions with our member companies indicate that the bulk of the money saved by the elimination of the PGRT will be reinvested in the industry . . . The industry response to the Western Accord in 1985 supported the position that most of the PGRT money saved will be reinvested.

Just wait one minute. The Minister of Energy has reassurances that PGRT savings will be reinvested. We now see that the industry says that "most" of the money will be reinvested. This will be determined by whom? Who else but the oil companies? There is nothing in the Bill which states that a company cannot just take the money and run. There is nothing that states that it has to be reinvested in the industry. What I am saying is that if we look at the situation of the industry we will see that there are a great many factors which may go against it in terms of reinvesting this money. It may not want to reinvest the money in exploration and development. That is the real flaw in this Bill.

The Minister says that it will be monitored. I do not know how the monitoring will take place, and I do not think it will be particularly effective. I have talked about the money that the integrated oil companies are making in the downstream and that the small producers are suffering.

I would like to read into the record an editorial published in The Toronto Star dated September 10, 1986. I think it is worth-while citing. It states:

No wonder Calgary oil executives clapped approvingly on Monday when federal Energy Minister Marcel Masse told them that the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax (PGRT) would be lifted effective Oct. 1. Masse was answering the prayers of Canada's oil giants—including multinationals such as Imperial Oil, Shell and Texaco—just when depressed international prices are pinching industry pocketbooks hard.

There can be no doubt which companies will benefit most from the Government's decision to accelerate by 28 months its plan to phase out the tax—at an estimated cost of $1.5 billion to the federal treasury. They are the biggest oil companies, the firms that make up the Canadian Petroleum Association, which lobbied heavily for the tax break and whose members account for 90 per cent of Canada's oil production, 76 per cent of the industry's workers and 80 per cent of PGRT revenues.

Yet these recipients of Ottawa's largesse aren't necessarily the neediest oil companies. As the Senate energy committee warned recently, the most distressed producers are the smaller, mostly Canadian-owned firms, which "drill the majority of Canadian oil wells" and are "more efficient than the larger companies at finding and developing small oil pools."

We don't argue with the need for Ottawa to assist the hard-pressed West in general or the oil industry in particular. Indeed, we have editorialized in favour of such assistance. But in scrapping the PGRT, the Tories are employing a shotgun when a rifle would have been preferable. Instead of targetting federal aid through loans or grants for individual firms and frontier energy projects, the Government has chosen to grant a broad tax break that will benefit the biggest firms most.

That was an alternative. The Government could have targeted loans or grants. It could have gone to frontier energy programs and even encouraged them. The editorial continues:

And the Government has failed to obtain firm guarantees that the resulting windfall will be spent on exploration for and development of new sources of oil and natural gas. Instead, the industry is given only bland assurances that it will re-invest the tax savings properly. But what's to stop the multinationals from using the money to buy up struggling Canadian oil firms at fire-sale prices, thereby undermining the longstanding goal of Canadianization, or from making non-energy investments that won't add one barrel of oil to our dwindling reserves?

Not the Progressive Conservatives, who cling to free-market ideology when there is no free market in oil, just a market manipulated by the Saudis and their allies.

• (1650)

Hon. Members might ask what I would do about this. I believe I have already said that the answer is that we need higher prices targeted by a stabilization program that would benefit the small producers and could be paid back later on as world prices rise. I do not know how much time I have left to speak but—

Mr. Crosbie: Too long.

Mr. Waddell: Too long for the Hon. Member for St. John's West. At least he is listening to my speech. I hope he is learning something.

Mr. Crosbie: I'm the only one here listening.

Mr. Waddell: We will be hearing from many Conservative Members who will talk about the National Energy Program. I can just smell it coming. They are going to talk about how the National Energy Program of the Liberal Party destroyed the Canadian West. I can almost make that speech myself.

I would like to point out a couple of things for the benefit of those Hon. Members. We are dealing with a new reality. We are dealing with now. Let us deal with the situation out West as it exists now. Second, there are many myths about the National Energy Program. One such myth is that it was not popular. In fact, it was very popular in Canada. All the polls taken showed that it was a popular program except in certain areas.

Mrs. Sparrow: Oh?

Mr. Waddell: I am sorry, the oil industry in Calgary is not Canada. It is an important part of Canada. All parts of Canada are important. However, the oil industry in Calgary does not make up the majority of Canada. We should be careful when we hear that the program was not popular. All the polls taken showed that the program was popular and that the expansion of Petro-Canada was incredibly popular and is still popular.

The second myth is that the NDP supported the Liberal Party in the creation of the National Energy Program. We did not support the Liberals.

Mr. Siddon: You're still supporting them. You're arguing for a thing of the past.

Mr. Waddell: That is a great myth. If Hon. Members want to live myths, that is fine, but it will not help us deal with today's problems. The Hon. Member should know that. He was a Member of the House at that time. I would draw his attention to the debate on Bill C-57 which was held in May of 1981. At that time, I and the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) moved the various motions necessary to delete the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act from the provisions of Bill C-57. My motion was identical to that of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre. It was voted on simultaneously and was defeated by a vote of 118 for the motion to 124 votes against.

Bill C-57 itself was passed a few days later by a vote of 132 to 84. The NDP voted with the Conservatives in their unsuccessful bid to defeat the Bill.

Mr. Siddon: Why are you still speaking for Mr. Lalonde?

Mr. Waddell: Why am I still speaking for Mr. Lalonde? The fact is that we said that the NEP was flawed because it would shift exploration away from the western sedimentary basin—

Mr. Siddon: That's what we said too.

Mr. Waddell: It would take it to the frontiers at incredible costs. We acknowledged that there had to be some incentives to explore in the frontiers and that the program had to be a national one. We said that the PIP grants would be incredibly costly, and it turned out that they cost $7.3 billion.

Mr. Siddon: Now he's talking the right way.

Mr. Waddell: That expenditure resulted in a limited amount of Canadianization. We objected to the PGRT because we felt that it was really a provincial royalty. Westerners understand that it is not really a federal tax but is more like a provincial royalty.

Mr. Siddon: Sounds like double-talk now.

Mr. Waddell: I invite the Hon. Member to check the record. We also said that the National Energy Program would damage co-operative federalism. I suggest that the Hon. Member read House of Commons Debates of May 28, 1981. At that time, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) made that very point. Our finance critic, Mr. Bob Rae, made the same point and said we needed to help small Canadian oil companies. We argued against the Bill when it was before the House. We said that the PGRT would hurt western Canada. Western Canada was hurt by the National Energy Program but it was also hurt by a world recession which occurred at the same time.

This is where Conservative Members are the most vulnerable. I hope they will not rise and give us this rot about the NDP supporting the National Energy Program. They should study the votes and look at the facts. We do not agree with Conservatives. Obviously we differ. At least Conservatives are not like Liberals. We know where Conservataives stand and we honestly differ with them. We share the goal of Canadianization but Conservatives believe in doing it through private companies. We believe in doing it through a mix of public and private companies and we believe in using Petro-Canada as an instrument of Government policy.

We believe in Canadianization. With $7 billion, we could have Canadianized the industry much more quickly. In fact, we could even have bought some oil companies for $7 billion. However, we do not believe in a completely nationalized oil industry; we believe in a mixed industry. We believe in trying to let western provinces develop the oil industry so far as they can, but there must be a national energy policy because it seems to me that Conservatives kid themselves if they believe in the free world price of oil and the free market for oil.

In committee the other day, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) spoke of the free world market price for oil. The fact is that no energy analyst believes any longer that the market is not controlled. It will be controlled by a cartel like OPEC which shot the price of oil up twice in the last 15 years or, previous to that, by the multinational oil companies which controlled the price through oligopolistic practices, anti-competitive practices and control of production or by the state. In a sense, it was inevitable that the National Energy Program should use the state to try to control one of Canada's most vital resources, namely, oil.

I predict that if it goes on for long enough, the Conservative Government will have an energy program as well. It cannot entrust the energy sector to the so-called world market. I suggest that any energy analyst worth his salt will tell Conservative Members that there is no real free market for world oil. Let us not hear the free market argument in this debate.

I would like to say a word about the deregulation of natural gas. The deregulation of gas was announced for November 1 as part of the energy accord signed by the federal Energy Minister and the Energy Ministers of the producing provinces, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. I believe that accord was signed in July of 1985. There have been problems with deregulation of gas. There was an announcement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources last week which I called short-term gain for long-term pain. I do not know where I borrowed that expression from, but I have heard it before in the House. I think it was changed a little bit.

• (1700)

An Hon. Member: Mr. Crosbie may be the culprit.

Mr. Waddell: Maybe I see the author over there. I will put my mukluks on and ask him.

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't you stuff them in your mouth.

An Hon. Member: It was the NDP.

Mr. Crosbie: The gang that couldn't shoot straight shot down my mukluks.

Mr. Waddell: He says "the gang that couldn't shoot straight". We managed to shoot down his Conservative Government all right. It didn't take long.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is this: This deregulation of gas is supposed to be cheap gas for consumers in eastern Canada. The fact is that they are going to get some gas a little cheaper, but not $20 off their bills, as the Canadian Press story out of Calgary stated. They will get it a little cheaper, but in the long run they are going to pay more. The reason is the Minister announced this week that he is going to get rid of the surplus test for gas. We had a 25-year surplus for gas, and now it has gone down to a 15-year surplus. The National Energy Board looked at it and changed it to a 15-year surplus. Lo and behold, the Minister is now trying to get rid of that surplus. That will mean that we will export like mad our natural gas that we now have to the American market at cheap bargain basement prices. The industry will want to do that because they need money like mad. The result will be that we will sell that gas cheap, gas which costs a dollar a thousand cubic feet to find. After we have used all that sweet, cheap gas in Alberta, we will then have to go into the foothills and into the more difficult places to get the gas. It will cost five times as much, therefore, the consumer may pay five times more. It may not be quite five times, but may be it will go up from $6 a thousand cubic feet to $15 a thousand cubic feet. That is the short-sightedness of this program.

The other problem is that it is going to hurt the small Canadian companies, because they will not have enough money to go and explore for that more difficult type of gas, which costs more money. The big oil companies will be able to get back in there and get a greater share of the exploration.

As well, it has allowed Canadians the opportunity to get rid of the border price. That means that Canadians should not pay more for Canadian gas than Americans living in California who are heating their swimming pools in Palm Springs, or running their air-conditioning, who will be paying less for Canadian gas than Canadians in other parts of the country.

I draw your attention to the 1984 Conservative campaign handbook, at page 44, which states:

> We will adopt market-sensitive pricing for exported natural gas, while ensuring that Canadians always pay less than their American neighbours—

They have gone back on another campaign promise. We are really seeing a problem in the sense that we are exporting like mad our gas and our oil at cheap prices and then we will find down the road that we will be short. It is a stupid person that sells out Canadian resources at bargain basement prices for a cheap buck and forgets about the future. That is short-sighted.

My House Leader made a reference to the committee. I wish to tell the committee members who passed a Bill, in my view in breach of a promise to conclude their meeting at a certain time, that they should understand how Stalinism works. The way Stalinism used to work was that Stalinists would lobby to get on a committee. They would get on the committee and then they would ask for a minority voice in the committee. They would get a minority voice, maybe two people out of a five member committee, and then they would ask for a majority. As soon as they got the majority they would close down the committee. That is Stalinism. They should have a look at what they did after making an agreement and then, as soon as the Opposition is gone, breaching the agreement and going through a Bill that we were going to pass anyway today or tomorrow. When you cannot trust the word of western Canadian MPs, you have really hit a new low. But I hope we can remedy that.

An Hon. Member: If you keep defeating NDPers.

Mr. Waddell: You will be gone next time, my friend. Take a look at Pembina.

I will conclude by saying that we will not oppose this Bill. The Bill is a bit of a desperation attempt to help an industry that is in trouble. It may be helping the wrong part of the industry. It does not help the small producers, and it does not make sure that the money that it gives to the industry is going to be spent for drilling and finding more oil. They may just take the money and run. I think that we need other proposals from this Government and I urge them to bring them forth. They should start with a stabilization plan for the small producers and give them a decent price for their oil. Eastern consumers will buy that if it is a fair deal. If it looks fair to the East and to the West, they will buy it.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, it is a particular honour for me as an Albertan to speak in support of Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act.

This legislation will mark the end of the petroleum and gas revenue tax, which was a discriminatory, unfair, front-end, well-head tax that did more to alienate western Canada than any other single measure since Confederation. Why was the petroleum industry singled out in Canada to bear an unjustifiable burden? I can tell you why, and Marc Lalonde has admitted it. The Liberal Government did not want to see the West gain strength and thereby achieve financial independence. He wanted westerners to be second-class citizens. That is unfair, unjust, and discriminatory.

I will sit down now, Sir, as I believe that you have a messenger, and I will continue later.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

[Translation]

And being returned:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend the Right Honourable the Deputy to Her Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, His Honour is pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bill:

> An Act to amend the Income Tax Act—Chapter 44, 1986.

• (1710)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying earlier, it is a joy for me as an Albertan to rise to speak to the total elimination of the PGRT.

Why was the petroleum industry singled out to bear this unjustifiable burden? Marc Lalonde has admitted that the Liberal Government did not want to see the West gain strength and thereby achieve financial independence. He wanted westerners to be second-class citizens. That was unfair, unjust, and discriminatory. One industry in Canada was singled out to bear the burden of this well-head revenue tax which could not be deducted for income tax purposes. It was a tax on a tax. The previous Government was taking money from the petroleum industry with two hands.

Last April, along with my Alberta colleagues, I visited with the previous Minister of Energy and received agreement that the PGRT had to go. This was followed by visits and consultations with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). When I drew to his attention the disastrous situation for producing provinces and the total unfairness of this specific tax on one industry, an industry which was suffering dreadfully due to international world prices, the infamous tax was terminated, not just phased out.

I have not forgotten the deficit. We must support deficit reduction. It is the priority goal of the Government. We cannot leave this heavy debt load on the shoulders of our children and grandchildren.

In September, 1984 when the Conservative Government was elected, the forecast deficit was $38 billion and growing. In two years the Government, under the excellent direction of the Minister of Finance, will have the deficit reduced to $32 billion. Interest rates are down almost four full points. Inflation has levelled off at 4 per cent. The unemployment rate is now at a single digit figure. These are remarkable accomplishments, but there is much more to be done in this area.

I want to return to talking about small explorers and producers, the one, two and three man companies which use royalty income for cash flow. Royalty income has always been considered by many as a passive income not used for activity. How wrong that is. Activity is exactly where it is used. These small companies have that great spirit of the entrepreneur. They are the risk takers. These companies were totally ignored by the previous Government. Alberta MPs put the facts about the small producers before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We explained their dilemma and how the situation could be rectified. The Minister announced in mid September that these small producers would receive PGRT relief on the first $1.5 million royalty income retroactive to January 1, 1986.

PGRT taxed revenues, not profits. PGRT taxed one region of the country in order to subsidize exploration elsewhere. PGRT provided $10 to $10.5 billion in revenue to assist frontier exploration through the PIP grants.

PIP grants provided up to 80 per cent of the costs in the frontier for exploration. It depended upon the COR content of the company, that is, the Canadian Ownership Rating that a company had. According to the percentage you had, you could get up to a maximum of 80 per cent of costs written off. This forced or enticed Canadian companies that could ill afford it into the frontier, not based on geology, not based on economics but based on giveaway PGRT dollars. Western Canadian producers supported the frontier action, but no additional production has been achieved. Let me correct that because Amauligak in the Beaufort did produce some 300,000 barrels last summer, which oil was shipped out and sold to Japan. That was a pilot project and although closed down today, I must add that the Beaufort has great potential for future development and production.

Back to the PGRT and the PIP grants, Mr. Speaker. Western producers have paid some $10 billion in PGRT since its inception. PIP grants cost $7.2 billion. It is easy to see that western producers subsidized all the frontier exploration. Self-sufficiency and security of supply are Canadian issues, a Canadian responsibility and, therefore, should really be paid for by all Canadians.

• (1720)

This PGRT tax was introduced unilaterally by the Government of the day in October, 1980, a unilateral decision totally unacceptable to my Government. We believe in consultation with industry and with provincial Governments. National reconciliation is a must. But without consulting the provinces, the Grits, who did not have an elected Member west of Winnipeg, implemented the blatant revenue grab along with a made in Canada pricing regime. The National Energy Program contained many new taxes designed to bolster the federal coffers while reducing the provincial share and the industry's share of resource revenues.

In June, 1985, we moved to deregulation of oil. This came about by the signing of the Western Accord in March, 1985. It has worked extremely well and the western producers as well as all Canadians are very pleased.

On November 1, 1986, we moved to deregulation of natural gas. There are two major concerns here: the regional reference border price and the export surplus test. In the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) last Thursday, he addressed these two concerns. We must allow export licences in order to create cash flow and cash flow creates activity and future security. It is very important that we monitor this regional reference border price and that we allow gas exports. We can monitor and check on them twice a year, and if there is some sort of problem in that area, the National Energy Board or the ERCB within the Province of Alberta can certainly address the issues.

Last week the Province of Alberta made a statement. I congratulate the province for it. The Premier of Alberta and the Energy Minister announced a $1 billion assistance package intended to strengthen the viability of the energy sector, to stimulate activity and investment, to create jobs and thus contribute to Canada's energy security. The package contains three components: help for producers, royalty reductions and royalty holidays. Western Canadians have been living under the National Energy Program for too long. In 1980 and 1981 living in Calgary I saw the exodus of drilling rigs. Drilling companies had three choices. They could move their rigs out of the country and find work elsewhere; they could stack the rigs and gain no revenue; or they could go belly up. We lost 30 per cent of our rigs and we lost 30 per cent of our human resources. This was a totally unacceptable situation. Obviously there was no exploration to find a replacement for the oil and gas being utilized.

Now we have the Atlantic Accord signed in February, 1985, and the Western Accord of March, 1985. We have deregulation of oil, and we are moving in the area of deregulation of natural gas. As I said, the Minister stated that he would look into the regional reference border price and monitor it. I believe the National Energy Board will be reviewing the surplus test, the 15 reserves to production. For security of supply, Mr. Speaker, the surplus test will not work. We need long term contracts. We need activity. The National Energy Program has gone. We have nailed it shut.

May I conclude by saying that working together through consultation, we can and we will build on the greatness of Canada not only for today but for the future.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow). According to the Hon. Member and her Party when in opposition, all the problems of the energy industry were created by the then Liberal Government which was responsible for the National Energy Program that destroyed the industry and led to the exodus. The people of Canada were not told that the problems which developed then and which have got worse since were caused by the calamitous drop in the world price of oil. We were told by the then spokesperson for the Conservative Party, the Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), who was for some time the Minister of Energy, that all we had to do was just to get rid of the National Energy Program, just to get rid of regulation, that the free market would work and that we would have 200,000 new jobs in the energy industry in Canada. But what do we see, Mr. Speaker? We see 50,000 layoffs in Alberta. We see the industry virtually shut down off the Atlantic coast. We see virtually no activity in the Beaufort. That is what happens when you leave everything to the free market. I do not blame the companies. They do not see any profit in the next few years and they will not invest their money.

When will the Hon. Member face up to the fact that the free market may work fine for the companies and even for Government when the price of energy is high, but it just does not work when the price of energy is low? Maybe what we need, if we are going to protect ourselves for a few years down the road when the price of energy is high again, is Government intervention. Maybe we need a floor price. You cannot have that if you really believe in the free market. That is what we really need. Some of the independents in Alberta, who used to be great champions of an absolutely free market, are beginning to see that. I wish the Member would give some thought to that idea. In the United States they never had a NEP under the Reagan administration and the industry there is just as much in the doldrums as it is in Canada.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to review some history. The National Energy Program was introduced in October, 1980. At that time the PGRT was 16 2/3 of the wellhead. It was a front-end revenue tax and it destroyed the industry. Rigs left and there was very little activity. That was caused by a front-end tax which was used to fund offshore exploration. Offshore exploration for security of supply is a Canadian problem and should not rest on the backs of the producers in one industry. I am not advocating that hydro electric power companies should pay a front-end revenue tax on every kilowatt they sell. I am not advocating that every tonne of coal should have a 12 or 16 per cent front-end tax. I do not think any of that is fair.

The downturn which started in 1980 was due to the National Energy Program. Companies cut back to the bare bones. They had to lay staff off and cut wages. During the election campaign in the summer of 1984 the Progressive Conservative Party said that there would be no Government intervention in the oil industry. We believe in the free market system. At that time the oil price would have been between $30 and $40 U.S. a barrel, although I would have to check those figures because the price has been fluctuating so much. The Conservatives were elected because we said that Government would get out, there would be no regulation or intervention.

We got rid of the PGRT. We got rid of the 25 per cent back-in. Activities on the East Coast and in the Beaufort have been curtailed for strictly economic reasons. It is uneconomical today to produce in either Hibernia or the Beaufort. Some companies say it costs $20 to $22 U.S. a barrel to produce in the Beaufort and I believe it may cost a bit more in Hibernia. It will be very costly to bring Hibernia on line, although transportation will not be that costly. The Beaufort has the best reserves and production will not be nearly as costly as on the East Coast, but transportation will be a problem. We need a pipeline. We can build a pipeline from Tuktoyaktuk down to Norman Wells and perhaps tie into the Norman Wells-Zama pipeline. Unfortunately, that is only a twelve-inch pipeline and we would have to decide whether to twin it or to go for a twenty-four or thirty-six-inch pipeline. Pipelines are costly.

All Canadians realize the problem with the deficit. All Canadians realize that we must get the deficit down in order to keep interest rates down. Interest rates keep mortgage rates and inflation down, which has certainly helped the manufacturing industry in southern Ontario. There is no doubt about that.

The second kick which we got was the fall in the international price of oil. This was not a made in Canada price. It was due to an international situation over which Canada had no control. The industry wanted a total free market system and we gave it to them. A recent survey in Alberta showed that 51 per cent of producers contacted did not want a floor price or stabilization while 30 or 31 per cent of them would entertain such an issue. The majority of people only want a fiscal structure to bring into reality the true price of a barrel of oil or an mcf of gas. That which is happening today is an international problem. That which happened in 1980-81 was strictly the result of a Liberal Government policy to rape the west.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have two short questions which could be answered together. The Member said that Mr. Lalonde, the former Minister of Energy, was "unjust and discriminatory towards the West". How does that differ from the present Prime Minister's unjust and discriminatory treatment with regard to the CF-18 decision?

The Member spoke twice about lowering the deficit. By getting rid of the PGRT the Government will be unable to collect about $5 billion. Where is the Government going to come up with that money, or does the Member believe the Government should cut programs instead of replacing that money?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I rule the Member's first question out of order. It does not relate to the speech of the Member.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I agree that the CF-18 maintenance contract is not relevant to Bill C-17 which we are discussing today. The Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) talks about discrimination with regard to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I would like to review a few things which the Government has done in the area of agriculture. No Government has done as much as this Government has to support that industry. Including the $1 billion deficiency payment, the Government has spent almost $7 billion to help all farmers across Canada.

Mr. Gormley: That is more than any other Government.

Mrs. Sparrow: I do not think it is fair to say that there is discrimination. We removed the National Energy Program and got rid of the unfair discriminatory tax. We increased job creation funding in Alberta. We never received fair payments before. Things are changing. The Government is treating every area of Canada equally with regard to agriculture, energy, and job creation. That is the only way in which all Canadians can work together for a better country.

Mr. Schellenberger: The Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) is doing so well in responding to questions that I thought I would ask her one as well. The Liberal and NDP speakers were both concerned about gas sales to the United States. Does the Hon. Member have these same concerns? Will she explain how that will assist cash flow and help self-sufficiency rather than hurt it in any way?

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. colleague's question. Gas sales to the United States are absolutely necessary and mandatory if we want security of supply. We cannot sit on the gas. We need activity. Companies need cash flow and in order to get it they must sell their product. We need the markets. As one of my colleagues indicated, the United States is going through a gas bubble. We need to be assured of markets. We need to sell our gas today in order to have supplies tomorrow.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the chance to say a few words on Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. I was very interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow). I thought it was interesting that she spent a lot of time telling us how great everything is with the Tory Government in power. That reminds me of a chap I met in Pembina during the by-election there. He had just come away from hearing the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) make a speech. He said that the Deputy Prime Minister had told them how great everything was and was going to be. He said, "If everything is so great, why do I feel so bad?" That summarizes the situation. The Hon. Member for Calgary South spent much time giving us national statistics. She did not spend much time talking about unemployment in Alberta which has not seen such a nose dive in jobs in at least three or four decades.

In June, the province expected to have an oil and gas exploration program worth up to $12 billion, but it was reduced to approximately $6 billion. There are usually 30,000 jobs per billion dollars of oil and gas exploration, and one must ask why the situation is so terrible if the Tory economic policies are so great. It is like the farmer who heard the Deputy Prime Minister make a speech in St. Albert and asked: "If things are so great, why do I feel so bad?" I think that is the way most Albertans feel about the Tory Government.

The Government may talk about billions of dollars and a positive situation, but we see on television that hundreds of millions of dollars in drilling exploration and development equipment is being auctioned off to the highest bidder. No one in Alberta has seen anything like it since the 1930s.

The Hon. Member did not mention that when the Petroleum Incentives Program was abandoned last spring, unfortunately at the same time that world oil prices were dropping dramatically, the PGRT which raised the money was only eliminated after a desperation call by the Tories working in the Pembina by-election. The Government did not want to give up the PGRT for two or three years, even though it had stopped the petroleum incentive grants in March. That program provided approximately 35 per cent grants in the western sedimentary basin in Alberta. The Government removed that at the very time that the international prices were collapsing at record rates.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) visited Alberta in August. He was unwilling to eliminate the PGRT, but by early September when the screams were ringing in the ears of every Tory, particularly those in the caucus, the Minister took action to remove the PGRT. It is interesting to note that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) campaigned that he would remove the PGRT, but when it came time to actually eliminate it, it took the Pembina by-election and the loss of thousands of Tory votes for him really to do it.

I had the opportunity with a number of other Members to attend a presentation by the Syncrude organization which produces some 125,000 barrels of oil a day in the tar sands of northern Alberta. I thought the proposal was extremely reasonable. That organization has received some $82 billion from the Alberta Government to conduct pre-engineering and planning in order to double its production sometime after 1988. It has begun a program which would increase production by some 20,000 barrels a day, a rather significant increase of 15 per cent. It has already spent some $400 million this year and is taking a risk even though world prices were dropping.

Those capital investments in that syncrude project will increase its efficiency, capacity and production by some 20,000 barrels a day, on a plant of 125,000 barrels a day.

The proposal was simply to ask the Government to consider providing some security as a backdrop if world prices dropped below $15 U.S. a barrel. This would have allowed that organization to complete that project which will cost approximately $750 million. Syncrude was proposing that the provincial and federal Governments provide a back stop for a project which would create thousands of jobs that are desperately needed in northern Alberta where there has been a longstanding strike. If this proposal is not accepted, the project will be mothballed for several years, which will encumber the ultimate 50 per cent increase of that project.

I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if the Government would consider that proposal but I received the usual non-answer. There was no real commitment to do anything. It is a pity because it is a good project that would be very useful in creating jobs and the technology that would benefit the whole country.

The locked-in ideology of the Government seems to be preventing it from providing that guaranteed agreement. That is the kind of problem we will face in the years ahead.

Syncrude is not asking for a loan or funding, but simply a guaranteed agreement to assist it in the completion of that project. I was very impressed with the project because it could increase its production after 1988 by 50 per cent, or 75,000 barrels a day, to a total of 225,000 barrels a day. That is close to 20 per cent of Canada's oil production right now.

I had the opportunity to serve as Parliamentary Secretary when the Syncrude project was born in 1975. At that time there was a requirement for federal Government investment, and I think the Government came in with three or four principal players with an investment of some $300 million, which Petro-Canada now holds. I do not believe that the Syncrude project would exist today without some Government involvement and confidence. The Government is making a serious error by not helping that project go ahead now. We saw the Government weasel back and forth on the removal of the PGRT. It certainly was quick to take away the PIP grants but incredibly slow to remove the PGRT. In The Edmonton Journal on October 29 there is an article entitled: "A real horror Tory". I quote in part:

• (1750)

There's only one catastrophe worse than the slump in Canada's oil and gas industry and that's the performance of Marcel Masse as federal energy minister.

Recently, Masse made the preposterous claim that the energy industry is not a job-creation sector. Then he broke one of Brian Mulroney's sacred election promises by placing Canada's goal of energy self-sufficiency on hold.

I think it is really interesting that the Government came to power talking about creating hundreds of thousands of jobs in the oil sector. Clearly, within two years, we are seeing hundreds of thousands of jobs in the energy sector lost. I am especially conscious of that because one of the major industries in my constituency of Algoma is Algoma Steel. It is one of the best steel tube pipe producing companies in the country. It normally employs about 800 people. It has a new $350 million tube mill coming onstream, running its first runs of tube right now, but it apparently will not operate for quite some time and we have 800 people laid off. They believed the Government when it said there would be hundreds of thousands of jobs in the oil industry. They did not realize that hundreds of thousands of jobs would be lost. Clearly, the policy of the Government has changed since the election campaign and since the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has become the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). Her policy was to create hundreds of thousands of jobs. The new Minister says energy is not a job-creation sector. So it is a problem that travels from one Minister to another.

I suspect the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was appointed to be the Minister for International Trade because everyone knew that her policies were a total and complete disaster. She waved around the Western Accord. The problem with the Western Accord was the last paragraph. It is a little paragraph about an inch long. It says that if oil and gas prices in Canada rose or fell precipitously, consultations would take place. Well, the consultations may have taken place but there has been no result. We still have very little oil and gas exploration and development activity going on, which is not only hurting Alberta now but is going to hurt it more this winter. It hurts the entire Canadian industry because the flow through affects every company in the country which is involved in the manufacture of tubes, piping and equipment for that sector.

There was another decision made by the Minister in a recent speech which The Edmonton Journal described as "A real horror Tory". The Minister abandoned the whole question of self-sufficiency during the first four or five years of 1980 that we had set as a period in which to become self-sufficient in energy production by the end of this decade. In fact, we achieved that by 1983 with exploration and development going on in the Beaufort Sea, in the Hibernia, in the Atlantic shelf, and the increased activity in the western sedimentary basin with the non-synthetic crudes from the Syncrude and tar sands. Two years after this Government came to power with its policy of self-sufficiency, it was abandoned by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources this fall. The editorial in The Edmonton Journal issue of October 29 said:

> Now, after finally acknowledging that the "situation in Alberta is a catastrophe", he offers nothing but paternalistic smarm to comfort the 55,000 Albertans who stand to lose their jobs this winter.
> "A catastrophe situation requires a response, but not just any response", says Masse the procrastinator.
> Not prepared to consider Alberta's proposal for an oil price stabilization plan, Masse seems happy to let this province's oil patch languish until next January when he holds court over a federal-provincial conference of energy Ministers.
> Masse's response is not just "any response"; it's no response.

I think that is the part that breaks the heart of the smaller producer. It is interesting that the Hon. Member for Calgary South talked about the people from Alberta. There was a poll taken which showed that 51 per cent of Albertans wanted a free market price. Everyone wants a free market price if it is high enough, but clearly many of the small producers—and Premier Getty of Alberta has said this many times—want to see a cash flow stabilization program put in place. When we look at the reduction of $1.5 in tax revenues over the two or three years, we wonder about the main benefit going to some 25 of the largest producers, the multinationals, which may send the money back to their parent companies in the United States or may reinvest and buy up small producers and oil and gas exploration companies. If we are able to forfeit that much in revenue, why could there not be some assistance for the smaller Canadian companies in a kind of petroleum stabilization program which the premier of Alberta has pleaded with the Government to establish?

I believe that this winter things will be so difficult and disastrous that the Minister will come on board and agree to that some time in January, perhaps, when the federal-provincial Ministers meet, but it is certainly a tooth-pulling exercise to get the Government to respond to these tremendous needs, which are not only destroying our movement towards self-sufficiency but are costing thousands of jobs not only in Alberta but throughout the Canadian economy. The oil and gas sector is important throughout Canada not just in the western basin. We support this Bill because it provides assistance to the industry. However, we think it is not going to provide the assistance which is needed for the smaller producer who employs a lot of people and who has the potential to assist this country in a desperate time for the oil and gas industry.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to offer a comment on the debate today. Like many western Canadian Members, I am disappointed but not particularly surprised to hear the Liberals and their friends in the NDP lamenting the passing of the petroleum and gas revenue tax. This tax and its terrible implications on the oil business not only in Alberta, where it is characteristically seen as having done so much harm, but in my Province of Saskatchewan are very evident. For example, in my community we see that companies such as Gulf Oil and other large and small companies have had placed on them unjustifiable financial burdens. The fact is that the PGRT taxed revenues and not profits. The fact is it was arbitrary and unilateral. It was introduced without consultation. Western Canadians, and in particular those in the western part of Saskatchewan, will have seen the commitment our Government has made to the oil industry in general and particularly to the companies affected by the PGRT.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate a few of my colleagues for the work they have done. First, I congratulate the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) on his remarks today. I also congratulate the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) who, through her work on the Energy Committee and in the House, has made clear to Canadians the reasons for the PGRT being removed altogether and why our Government has acted to this end.

I will now take my seat to allow other Members from my Party to speak further on the matter.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the comments of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley). I had an opportunity to visit his area last year about this time. I visited the Husky upgrader and saw the plans for development in the Lloydminster area. I would certainly like to see the whole project go ahead. As I have mentioned, in terms of Syncrude, there should be a regime in place to see that these types of production go ahead. These are long-term projects which cannot be started quickly and ended quickly. There has been a great deal of impressive research done in this area, especially by Husky. I was particularly impressed by the number of jobs that were created in the area. I hope that the Government will not only remove the PGRT but that it will provide the type of assistance and energy policy which will take us forward.

I recall being with the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake at a dinner sponsored by the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. One of the people at that dinner was an active member of the Progressive Conservative Party. This dinner was about one year ago. At that time this PC Party member and I were talking about the 1,500 or more gas stations the Government was purchasing from Gulf. He described to me how he had written to the Prime Minister, whom he had supported in the election campaign, stating that he could not imagine why Petro-Canada was buying out a major oil company just to have thousands of more gasoline stations. The Prime Minister's response, which was breaking his heart since he had supported him in the election, was that Petro-Canada was really an independent organization and the Government did not have any say in it whatsoever. He said that the Government did not want to influence it in any way. I am sure that if many western Conservatives who voted for the Prime Minister in 1984 knew that he would allow Petro-Canada to operate completely separate from the Government with no direction or assistance from it, they would have been heart-broken. These people expected some leadership from the Government in this regard.

I thought I should relate this incident because I am conscious of how much oil is produced in the Hon. Member's area.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the comment of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley). How many times do we have to tell the Hon. Member that we did not support the PGRT when it was brought in? How many times do I have to tell him that we did not support the National Energy Program? I ask the Hon. Member to check the record.

Mr. Crosbie: Methinks the Hon. Member doth protest too much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) to direct his question or comment to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I was directing my question to the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake because he spoke about the PGRT. All I can say is that I invite the Hon. Member to read the speech I made today. I gave Members of the House the vote patterns in it, and I would like to address this issue.

The fact is we need a national energy program. It does not have to be called a Liberal National Energy Program. We need some sort of program. There must be an energy program in place for Canada. I ask the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) what we really received for the $7.3 billion that we gave in PIP grants. Does the Hon. Member think that was an effective method of Canadianization, given that all Members of the House share the same concept of Canadianization? I preface my remark by saying that I do not think the Hon. Member believes there is a free market for oil. Perhaps he believes there is. Perhaps he is like many members of the Conservative Party. Does the Hon. Member really believe that Gulf competes on the same basis as some small independent oil company in our system?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) asks several good questions of me. I have had the opportunity of serving on the Energy Committee with the Hon. Member for a number of years. The question the Hon. Member put to me is the exact question we put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Parliamentary Secretary when the PIP grant was being dealt with. It was delightful to hear the Parliamentary Secretary, who was carrying the PIP Bill, say: "Look. For the $7 billion worth of PIP grants which were given out during the period 1981-84, we identified some $90 billion or $98 billion of oil reserves, both in the East Coast offshore and in the northern areas of Canada". So it did not sound like a bad exchange to me.

We have heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) talk about getting rid of tax expenditures because we cannot control them and because we do not know where they are going. Getting rid of tax expenditures is like providing PIP grants as opposed to capital cost write-offs or capital cost allowances which the Government is bringing in with regard to the oil industry. I think it would be interesting to put such a question to the Minister of Finance.

If he really believes in this business of getting rid of tax expenditures and if the Government is to vote money, then Parliament should vote that money to individuals rather than having them claim it. If he wants to be consistent, then he might want to bring back PIP grants rather than putting in place capital cost write-offs or an expenditure system.

• (1810)

The Hon. Member wants to know if there really is a free market. The market is decided by OPEC, the U.K. and a few other countries around the world.

I find it interesting that certain people do not want the Government of Canada, a freely elected Government even if it is a Tory Government, to set prices but they do not mind having the 15 or 18 OPEC countries set the price of oil. Unfortunately for the oil producing industry, those countries are not very successful at setting prices at a level which will allow us to take our oil out of the ground, particularly in the frontier areas.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is really an expert in agriculture. He knows a great deal about agriculture and markets, much more than I do.

In a pure free market with pure free trade in oil, what would happen to Saudi Arabia and Alberta? Where would all the money go?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would not attempt to deal with such esoteric arguments as the Hon. Member has made. There really is no free market. The market depends on the interplay of dozens of countries and on how tough those countries are willing to play the game.

It seems to me that projects like Syncrude and the heavy oil operation at Lloydminster as well as projects on the East Coast should have the benefit of a much better energy policy than the one we have now. The present policy is seeing the industry shut down. The Minister of Energy has admitted publicly that he has abandoned the concept of the energy sector being a job-creation sector. As well, he is abandoning the concept of self-sufficiency.

A recent editorial in the Edmonton Journal disapproved strongly of the Government's policy to abandon the goal of self-sufficiency and the concept of job creation in the energy sector. Those concepts formed the central mantlepiece of the Government's economic policy in its first year in office.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, this late in the day, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-17, the legislation that will terminate the petroleum and gas revenue tax. I have listened with some interest to the earlier debate. Of course, it is a very happy day for all of us in the West. I was pleased to hear the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow). I know of the tremendous amount of work she and her colleagues from Alberta have done toward the elimination of the PGRT and the dismantling of the Liberal National Energy Program.

Indeed, today we are taking the necessary steps that will put the final nails in the coffin of an unjust tax. We are burying for good an inappropriate creation of the previous Government. We are burying a tax that threatened to do irreparable damage to federal-provincial relations. We are burying a tax that was choking the petroleum industry in a period of low oil prices. We are burying a tax that has been compared to a dead skunk under the front porch: this tax had to be removed in order to make the house habitable. Now that the tax has been removed, the oil industry will be able to breathe easier.

I am not telling Hon. Members that all is well in the oil industry or that the removal of the PGRT is a cure-all. We know jobs are being lost daily and the economic impact of the problems facing the industry is being felt across Canada. However, I can tell Hon. Members that the removal of the PGRT is an action that is both politically and economically justifiable.

We are not giving the oil industry windfall benefits. We are returning to the industry a small fraction of the revenues that should never have been taxed away in the first place. Removing this tax removes a penalty on the industry, a penalty for having been successful in the years prior to the NEP. Eliminating this tax has been compared to stepping on one's foot and then expecting eternal gratitude for finally agreeing to take the foot off. The PGRT is gone and it is good riddance to an unjust tax.

When thinking of the impact the PGRT had on the oil industry, I am reminded of the 1970s when, in my own Province of British Columbia, the NDP Government imposed unjustifiable taxes on the mining industry. That had a terrible impact on that industry. Surely we can learn from such examples. When a Government becomes too greedy because it thinks one industry or another is benefiting from international prices, it tries to take that benefit away unjustifiably. The effect of that on the lowering of confidence and investment is so detrimental that it is just not worth it.

I lived in Calgary in the years just prior to implementation of the PGRT and then for a period of time after it was implemented. I worked with the oil industry and I recall what happened to it. It went from optimism, jubilance and perhaps in some cases over-investment to darkness in only a couple of months. We all know what resulted in the years that followed until our Government came to power two years ago and began to dismantle the National Energy Program. Today, the Government has put forward a Bill designed to do away with the last vestiges of the really unfair PGRT.

The purpose of this Bill is to eliminate the PGRT or, as it has sometimes been called, pigs gathering round the trough. The revenue trough is empty now, but what happened to all the money that was scooped out since the PGRT was introduced in 1981? The money that was taken from western Canada was poured into 80 per cent PIP grants designed to entice companies to drill primarily in the offshore. How many new oil and gas discoveries were made with the PIP money? A few, but not many. How many Canadian oil companies were encouraged to over-extend themselves disastrously to qualify for grants and artificial enticements? How many Canadian consumers paid extra money at the gas pumps so that Petro-Canada could buy Petrofina at an inflated price? In the answers to these questions, we can see the legacy of the National Energy Program.

This legislation puts an end to an inappropriate intrusion of Government into the private sector. The end of this tax combined with the other energy policy initiatives already taken means that the petroleum industry will be able to function in a free market. The industry is facing tough times today, but in the long run it will be stronger. We know that international oil prices are low but at some of the meetings I have attended, I have sensed optimism. Predictions have been made that oil prices will rise again to the $18 to $20 range.

In the long run, the Canadian industry will be able to compete without being strangled by taxes or being enticed into poor investments by Government grants that are too rich to be refused. In the future, the petroleum industry will be treated more like other industries. In the view of our Government, that is the way we should approach industrial strategy.

I urge all Hon. Members to give speedy passage to this Bill. I see it as being a part of a continuum of efforts made by the Government to fulfil its commitment to the Canadian people. In the last three weeks, I have had the pleasure of speaking on three different measures, all directed toward that goal. I spoke on the rebate of the child tax credit, on the amendments to the Criminal Code dealing finally with child sexual abuse, and on today's Bill which finally does away with the petroleum and gas revenue tax.

The legislative record of the Government has fulfilled our commitment in the Speech from the Throne to a modern, tolerant and caring society, a society that treats all its citizens with fairness. Today, we end the era of unfairness in the PGRT. I can assure all Hon. Members that we will continue to ferret out unfairness in all areas of Government so that we may do away with it. Today we end the era of unfairness in the PGRT. I can assure you we will continue to ferret out in all areas of Government unfairness and inequity and do away with those as well.

• (1820)

I join with my colleagues in being pleased to have this opportunity and I look forward to the speedy passage and the end of this infamous and unfair intrusion on an industry which is an important, integral part of the Canadian economy, and particularly to the western economy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Angus: My question is directed to the Hon. Member. One of the things that supposedly was promised was a better deal for consumers. Today in Toronto I appeared at the Ontario Energy Board hearings into an application by one of the Ontario natural gas distribution companies. Part of the discussion today—I cannot say evidence because there was debate about whether it could be considered as evidence—was the fact that TransCanada PipeLines and ICG Ontario Limited had entered into an agreement on rates that are confidential which would give to major Ontario consumers—big companies, in other words—very cheap rates.

Given the scenario where one group in Ontario is going to get preferential rates for natural gas, primarily Alberta natural gas, at the expense of the ordinary consumer, does the Member feel that this was the goal of her Government's policies as it related to deregulation of the energy industry in western Canada?

Mrs. Collins: I thank the Member for his comments. I am not familiar with the particular case that he presents or the hearings that he has attended today. But I do say that consumers across the country are certainly benefiting from lower oil prices. That is not only due to the fact that international oil prices are low, but because we are reducing the taxation level. Every time we go to the gas pump the evidence is right there. It costs a lot less to fill up. I would say that the initiatives that this Government has taken have indeed been beneficial to the consumer of energy in this country.

Mr. Angus: I have a short supplementary for the Hon. Member. In her response right now she talked about the price at the pumps. I would like to ask her whether you can still buy Canadian gas at American pumps cheaper than you can in Canada?

Mrs. Collins: I have not filled up at any American gas stations with Canadian gas so I cannot give you the actual facts. I just know that when filling up at Canadian gas stations in some cases it is $10 less, if you have a big gas-tank car.

Mr. Angus: Tell me where these places are.

Mrs. Collins: I do not buy very much gas myself, because I do not drive very much. But I have noticed the difference. There has been quite a change in gas prices, particularly over the last eight months.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, may I take part in the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, but there is not time left.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

COMMEMORATION OF SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to remind Hon. Members and all Canadians that next Tuesday is Remembrance Day.

November 11 will have a special personal meaning for veterans and their dependants. For some it will be an occasion for painful memories as they reflect on the sacrifices that have affected so many families. All, however, will be bound by feelings of pride. Hon. Members, I very much hope that all of us, and indeed all Canadians, will share this pride.

I get many letters from men and women who are concerned that the passage of time is robbing Remembrance Day of its stature. I share these concerns. For nearly 70 years Canadians have been marking Remembrance Day. It could be that familiarity has gradually been breeding apathy. If so, this would be a national shame.

Certainly overseas the contribution of Canadians to the cause of freedom is very well remembered. Every year thousands of French men and women join with us at the Service of Remembrance at the Vimy Memorial in northern France. In this, the fiftieth anniversary of the unveiling of the Vimy Memorial, we will again share in a silent tribute to those who won our country so much honour.

On a smaller but very human scale, I think of the British school children who climb up a hill every Remembrance Day so they can place hand-picked flowers on the lonely grave of a Canadian airman.

Here at home, this Parliament has greatly assisted many members of our veteran population. This population includes some 650,000 veterans of the two World Wars and Korea, approximately 280,000 widows of veterans, and another 350,000 dependants of veterans. On their behalf I want to thank my cabinet colleagues and all Members of the House and Senate for their generous support of the measures the Government has been able to introduce. These measures were directed toward very special Canadians—veterans and their families. I can assure the House that such non-partisan co-operation was and is very much appreciated.

Hon. Members, Remembrance Day must never become a day just for veterans and politicians. It should be a day when all of our nation pauses to reflect on the many blessings we have inherited from those who lie buried in 70 countries and the seven seas.

Let us never forget that they gave their lives so that we might know peace.

When King George VI dedicated our national war memorial in 1939, he said:

> The very soul of the nation is here revealed.

I think the same can be said for all the cenotaphs and war memorials that grace so many of our towns and cities in this country.

My sincere hope is that wherever or however Canadians observe Remembrance Day they will not regard it as a routine duty but as a very special privilege.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, as spokesman for the Official Opposition, I want to join the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) in urging all Canadians to observe Remembrance Day with respect and gratitude.

As a nation, we certainly have every reason to be grateful to those who represented this country during the two World Wars and the Korean War. More than 100,000 Canadian men and women made the supreme sacrifice, while among those who did return, some will suffer the effects of the war for the rest of their lives.

• (1110)

[English]

The Official Opposition has been only too pleased to support some fine legislation which has been presented to Parliament. The amendment last spring to increase benefits for those who were forced to suffer for so long in prisoner of war camps was particularly welcome. I also applaud the Minister for immediately recognizing the merits of the Veterans Independence Program, introduced by the Liberal Government, and for becoming one of the program's most enthusiastic boosters.

[Translation]

In the Speech from the Throne, it was announced that 6,000 World War I veterans would qualify immediately for this very progressive program. I was very happy to hear this, and I know that the Minister and all the Members of this House earnestly hope that the remaining 25 per cent of World War I veterans who are not yet eligible for benefits under the Veterans Independence Program, will be given that opportunity as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the men and women in this group are the last of a legendary generation of heroes. In a book he just published on the Battle of Vimy Ridge, author Pierre Berton describes the horror, suffering and bravery observed during a war in which Canada fought with such distinction.

Mr. Speaker, to all Canadians who have not yet had an opportunity to do so I extend an invitation to visit the imposing Vimy monument, the only silent testimony to the commendable conduct of these 11,000 valorous Canadians who will be resting for ever in that part of French soil.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we are only too acutely aware that these courageous men did not take part in what might have been the last war. Indeed, responding to the quest for freedom and the call of the nation, other Canadians had to leave their loved ones, pack up their meagre belongings, and face danger and death during World War II and the Korean conflict. The strategy and weapons used during these two wars may have been different from those of World War I, but the gravestones which mark the final resting place of the many Canadians buried overseas have remained unchanged.

Mr. Speaker, the Remembrance Day poster distributed by the Department of Veterans Affairs bears these words: "THEY GAVE US PEACE". It is true, and this alone is the best reason why, in silence, we should pray and thank God next Tuesday.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I am honoured to join with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) and the spokesman for the Official Opposition in reminding Canadians that Tuesday, November 11, is Remembrance Day.

Over the years of membership in this House, and as a member of the Veterans Affairs Committee, I have been pleased to note that political partisanship becomes less acute when it comes to matters affecting veterans and their families. This is as it should be because the achievement of our veterans has benefited us all. I commend the Minister on his willingness to listen to the views of veterans and those who represent them. Much progress has been made, but as the ranks of veterans decline, perhaps we could do more for those who remain. Many are of an age where they increasingly need assistance. In this regard, I certainly support the recent decision to provide immediate eligibility for the Veterans Independence Program to First World War veterans who would otherwise have had to wait until 1987 or 1988 to apply. These veterans now have an average age of 90 years. They have waited long enough, and I am glad it has now been recognized.

Our purpose today is not to glorify war. Those men and women whom we remember especially today, fought not for personal gain or glory. They served together to preserve democracy, liberty and freedom. Their sacrifice was such, that people everywhere said that never again should wars be permitted. These were wars to end all wars, it was said. That was the hope of those who fought in those times. Achieving that goal would indeed be the finest remembrance we could offer to their sacrifice.

The recent meeting in Iceland between the leaders of the two most powerful nations in the world was an occasion for high expectations that good sense would prevail to bring an end to the arms race and resultant global tensions. Instead, as we all know, the negotiations broke down. The memorials to the war dead at Arlington, Leningrad and here in Ottawa, all sadly remind us of what can happen when nations stop talking to each other to resolve differences.

All nations should spare no effort to ensure that those military powers will continue their negotiations to de-escalate the arms race. It is a race that no one can win. This is also a moment when we should give thought to the thousands of our fellow beings in this world whose lives are ones of intense suffering. They look to us for assistance and relief and we in Parliament should not lose sight of the need to develop an economic order throughout the world which would eliminate poverty and want for all people, and to that end, eliminate the need for war.

They served and we remember them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: At this moment I would ask all Hon. Members to rise for a moment's silence.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR RELOCATION OF CANADIAN EMBASSY FROM SYRIA TO CYPRUS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise again today to present a petition to the House signed by constituents of mine of Lebanese extraction who humbly pray and ask the House that whereas the access to the Canadian Embassy in Syria is very difficult for people who are born or brought up in the Christian areas of Lebanon; whereas Lebanese people are harassed by the Syrian road-blocks and guards; and whereas Lebanese people are charged a fee upon entering and leaving the Syrian border; and that no foreign money is allowed to pass through Syria, the Canadian Government remove the Canadian Embassy from its location in Syria and move it to a location in Cyprus.

Petitions

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of Canadians who express their opposition to the Government's declared intention to introduce legislation which will change the Patent Act, the results of which will be to increase the cost of drugs to Canadians by many millions of dollars each year.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of people in my constituency who say that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 106 I have the duty and pleasure to present a petition signed by a number of citizens of Canada who are protesting the raid on the pockets of the sick and the poor by the proposals of the Government to make changes to the Patent Act which would allow increases in the price of drugs in Canada. These people call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House signed by some 70 or 80 people from the great riding of Yorkton—Melville. It is a petition which opposes the changes to the Patent Act. The people who have signed this petition state that they are afraid that this move will result in higher drug costs to provincial Governments and to Canadians in general. They are calling upon Parliament to reject the proposals that are about to be made which will increase prescription drug costs for Canadians.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, duty and pleasure to present a petition on behalf of senior citizens in La Pas and Flin Flon, Manitoba. In their petition my constituents express their concern with the federal Government's intention to increase the cost of drugs. They point out that this will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose ongoing health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on a continuing basis.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure it is merely a slip of the tongue of Members opposite. However, under Standing Order 106 all petitions must be properly certified by the Clerk before presentation. If they are—

Mr. Benjamin: They are!

Mr. Lewis: —and if Hon. Members could point that out when they submit them, then I think they will be in order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Any petition presented by a member of the New Democratic Party, and every petition that will be presented today, will certainly have been certified through due process.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I have just checked with the Table on behalf of my Party and the Government as I wanted to examine these petitions. There are none available.

Mr. Benjamin: You do that at your leisure.

Mr. Mazankowski: Quite frankly, I think we have the right to know if the petitions are consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 106.

Mr. Benjamin: Are you getting nervous?

Mr. Speaker: A point has been raised by the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) which is with respect to a matter of order. If there is an appropriate reply to be made by the other side, then I would ask the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) to rise again if he has something to say. However, Hon. Members know that it is not appropriate for them to be calling across the aisle on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought I made my point clear to my hon. friend earlier. All petitions which have been presented in the past and all the petitions which will be presented today have been duly certified by the Clerk. That is the appropriate way of proceeding with the presentation of a petition. That is what the Standing Order calls for, and that is what we have done. I do not know what the Hon. Member is attempting to do in terms of holding up this process.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not arguing the point. However, as a matter of courtesy I think I should have the right to see the petitions. I do not have that right now; I am being denied it.

Mr. Benjamin: You must go to the Clerk and ask to look at them.

Mr. Mazankowski: They are not there.

Mr. Benjamin: The page is still picking them up.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap has assured the House that the petitions are in order. I know that Hon. Members will accept his word in this regard. On the other hand, the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister says that he would like to see the petitions. I understand from the Table Officers that they will be available shortly.

Mr. Benjamin: You can't see them until after they've been presented.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get involved in this debate but—

Mr. Keeper: Then sit down!

Mr. Gauthier: —this is an important point which has to be made. Since when is the Government entitled to look at petitions that are duly presented pursuant to Standing Order 106?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It would be very hard for Members of Parliament to present their petitions to the Government before we actually have a chance to present them in the House. Before these dubious points of order were raised by Members on the Government side, that is exactly what members of the NDP caucus were trying to do.

• (1130)

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition from quite a number of citizens from the Province of Manitoba and these people call upon Parliament to reject proposals to change the Patent Act which would increase the cost of drugs significantly and hurt many Canadians and they resent the fact that concessions are being made in the U.S. free trade negotiations.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition that has been certified as correct by the Table. The petitioners live in Flin-Flon, Manitoba, and state that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject those proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour of presenting a petition that has been scrutinized by the Government House Leader and found to be acceptable. It too is on the subject of the Government's proposal to harm severely senior citizens and many other Canadians by providing for unlimited increases in drug prices. The petition is of particular interest to the House because it comes from a Conservative-held riding, Cariboo—Chilcotin, and the people of that riding are outraged and concerned about this matter. The petitioners are from places like Quesnel, Alexis Creek, Williams Lake and many other communities. These people are expressing their concern to government Members and ask that the Government withdraw this odious proposal.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of people from my constituency who live in the communities of Paddockwood, Northside and Christopher Lake. The petitioners express their concern at the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act and the effect that this will have on the cost of necessary prescription drugs. They call upon Parliament to reject any such proposal which would increase drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which has been certified according to Standing Order 106—

Mr. Nystrom: Did you check with Maz?

Mr. Keeper: No, I have not submitted it to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). The petitioners point out that the Government has caved in to the lobbying of multinational corporations and that this proposal the Government is presenting will cost Canadian taxpayers and consumers. The petition calls upon the Government to withdraw the legislation.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 106, it is my privilege and responsibility to present a duly certified petition from Canadians who are very concerned about changes to the Patent Act which will result in higher drug costs and will impose burdens both on individuals and on provincial drug plans. The petition calls upon the House of Commons to reject that legislation, and we intend to do just that.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition which, pursuant to Standing Order 106, was certified as being correct as to form and content on October 7, 1986, by Clairette Bourque, the Clerk of Petitions. I would be most happy to have the Government House Leader read this petition and consider it very carefully as soon as it has been filed with the Clerk according to the Standing Orders.

The substance of the petition is that these residents of Canada, mostly from Toronto, object very strongly to the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act so as to increase the price that most Canadian citizens will have to pay for drugs. They point out that it bears particularly upon the aged and infirm and upon any who need drugs on an ongoing basis and that the profits will go primarily to the United States and not to Canada. Therefore, they urge Parliament to reject these proposals that will impose hardships on all Canadians.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I wish to table a petition which was certified on November 6, 1986, by the Clerk of Petitions. The petitioners raise their objection to the proposed Patent Act changes relating to prescription drugs, changes which they believe will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers. They point out that it will result in higher costs for provincial government drug plans throughout Canada and that it is another example of Conservative Government concessions to the United States in the free trade negotiations at the expense of average Canadians. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition which it is my pleasure to present. It is a petition which was certified pursuant to Standing Order 106 on November 6, 1986, by Clairette Bourque, and this petition too stresses very strongly the concern of residents of Manitoba about the proposed changes to the Patent Act which the Government is on record as intending to introduce. The petitioners feel that these measures will hurt Canadian health needs and they also have a very strong sense of resentment over their feeling that this is a concession to the United States with respect to our free trade negotiations. They call upon the Government to reject clearly this proposed course of action.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour of tabling a petition that has been properly certified under Standing Order 106 by the Clerk of Petitions, Clairette Bourque. It has also been vetted by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), as you may have observed, Mr. Speaker.

The contents of this petition are similar to those tabled previously. My petition comes from the Windsor area. It is, of course, representative of the feelings of affected people all over the country. Of course, it protests the intention of the Government to introduce legislation to change the Patent Act in a fashion which will increase the costs of prescription drugs to many Canadians who need such products for their health. The petitioners protest as well the fact that this legislation is a product of American blackmail, and they demand that the Government withdraw any future consideration of tabling legislation as threatened—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is certainly making clear to all Members of the House that he has a petition and the thrust of that petition is apparent. The Hon. Member is now going beyond presenting the thrust of the petition and entering into a debate, which other Hon. Members seem to want to get into. I would ask that the Hon. Member conclude reading his petition.

• (1140)

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, those who have signed this petition humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposals which will increase the prescription drug prices. If anybody has missed the point as illustrated by the behaviour of government Members on the submission of these petitions, then they will see that this is only the beginning of the fight.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour, the privilege and the duty to present to this House a petition duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions.

[English]

This petition calls upon the Parliament of Canada to protect Canada's drug consumers, particularly senior citizens, from the adverse effects of changes in the Patent Act which would essentially deny access to drugs at a moderate cost that Canadians have heretofore enjoyed.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition which has been certified as being correct as to form and to content by the Clerk of Petitions. This is a petition which has not been vetted by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), will never be vetted by the Deputy Prime Minister, and should not have to be vetted by the Deputy Prime Minister.

It is a petition of the residents of Winnipeg calling upon the Parliament of Canada to reject the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs, which will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. This measure would unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis, which would result in higher costs to the provincial Government drug plans. It is another example of Canadian—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members are making their point. They are trespassing on the rules. Would the Hon. Member please close his remarks.

Mr. Blaikie: The message is clear that Canadians reject the proposals of the Government to change the patent drug laws. We in the New Democratic Party are going to make that absolutely clear in the coming weeks and months.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present on behalf of a number of western Canadians a petition which, pursuant to Standing Order 106, has been certified as being correct and appropriate in terms of form.

Very briefly, the petition is against the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. It will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, I also use the opportunity to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the House do now proceed to the Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the said motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Riis) which was negatived on the following division:

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OZONE LEVELS IN MONTREAL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as you probably know, ozone can pose a serious problem to human health in our urban centres. In Montreal, for instance, ozone levels are frequently higher than the standard considered safe for human health. Ozone can impair breathing by harming lungs and it can cause damage to crops and vegetation. The Montreal group STOP recommends that "Environment Canada and Environment Quebec work together to monitor ozone levels upwind and downwind of Montreal, and in rural areas of Quebec" and to "measure the amount of airborne pollutants inhaled by pedestrians in downtown Montreal".

I urge the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to approve STOP's proposal to establish an ozone control strategy for Montreal to determine what actions are required to eliminate the hazard to human health posed by high ozone levels.

HUMAN RIGHTS

IRAN—PERSECUTION OF BAHA'IS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to remember a continuing war, namely, the systematic persecution of the Baha'is, the largest religious minority in Iran. This horror story has been going on since the hateful Ayatollah Khomeini regime took power in Iran seven years ago. The matter is especially urgent at this moment since the United Nations Commission on Human Rights is this week drafting a resolution in New York for the General Assembly.

Continued pressure and international monitoring of the situation in Iran have helped keep the number of executions down, but thousands of Baha'is, including elderly people and young children, are still suffering physical intimidation. Livestock and crops have been plundered by Iranian authorities. All Baha'i property, including cemeteries, has been confiscated.

Canada has been vociferous in protesting this campaign of terror. Now we must take one step further at the United Nations. I ask the Government to consider instructing the Canadian delegation to move a human rights resolution on Iran.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLIGHT OF MEMBERS OF BAHA'I FAITH IN IRAN

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, to continue in the same vein as the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott), I want to point out that action is urgently needed by Canada at the United Nations to help members of the Baha'i faith in Iran. There are 300,000 Baha'is in Iran, none of whom have legal status as "persons" under the Constitution, because the theocratic regime considers them to be "infidels".

• (1405)

[English]

Their refusal to give up their religion has led to the judicial murder of 207 Baha'is and the imprisonment of 700 more, including children. Many of these prisoners have been mentally and physically tortured.

The more fortunate Baha'is who have kept their freedom are denied the right to work. Many of those fired have been ordered to repay their salaries from years of employment, and their children are either denied public education or mistreated in school. Widows and children of executed Baha'is have their property confiscated by the state.

The Canadian Government must act now at the UN to sponsor a resolution condemning these atrocities, and reassure the Baha'is of Iran that the international community has not forgotten them. Without such leadership by the Government we are leaving the Baha'is entirely at the mercy of the fanatical Government of Iran. We are giving that Government the freedom to persecute these people even more harshly than it has in the past. International pressure has helped the Baha'is before, and we must ensure that it helps them again.

HUMAN RIGHTS

IRAN—PERSECUTION OF BAHA'IS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the sad state of human rights in Iran will be on the agenda of the 41st Session of the UN General Assembly. Executions, mass arrests, and torture, tacitly approved by the Supreme Court of Iran and other Government institutions, continue.

The Baha'i religious minority in Iran continues to bear the brunt of a state approved persecution campaign with the apparent goal of elimination of this religious minority. Last month Mr. Mihdi-Nizhad, Mr. Habibu'llah Muhtadi, and 16-year old Bijan Talibi were killed simply for not recanting their religious beliefs.

There is an urgent need for decisive action by the Government of Canada. It should instruct the Canadian delegation to the UN to work post-haste to ensure widespread support for the UN resolution currently being drafted on human rights in Iran. We in the NDP join with other Members in this House in asking that Canada be the main sponsor of the resolution to show our deep concern over the lack of civil rights in Iran.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CLOSURE OF RCMP POSTS IN MANITOBA

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, the Manitoba Government has developed the bad habit of blaming all its troubles on the federal Government. It should look in its own backyard and start guaranteeing adequate services for people in southwest Manitoba.

Rural residents of my constituency fear for their safety because Manitoba's provincial Government has decided to cut costs by closing RCMP detachments in Deloraine and Reston. Over 1,200 people have attended protest meetings in these two communities in the last few weeks. Because of the long distances between communities, neighbouring RCMP detachments will be forced to cover a wider area. That means it could take the police up to half an hour to respond to a call.

Although the federal Government will pay about 30 per cent of the bill for RCMP services in Manitoba this year, we unfortunately seem to have little say on how this money is spent. When the current 10-year federal-provincial agreement on RCMP services expires on March 31, 1991, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) should ensure that the federal Government has some genuine authority over the question of how the provinces administer RCMP services in the future.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

PRICE OF GENERIC DRUGS—EFFECT OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, now we see it. The Government is cowed, has bowed and kowtowed to the American multinationals on the drug question. We heard the response of senior citizens when the Government tried to cut back on pensions. We are going to hear from the senior citizens, the disabled, and other people across this country who believe the price of free trade is too high if we have to give up the competitive pricing system we have in the drug industry at the moment.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Liberal Party, that we are going to be fighting this move in the House and in our constituencies. The Government is going to be made to back down on this issue in the same way it was forced to back down on the senior citizens' pension cuts. Someone has got to speak for the seniors and we are going to do it.

CHILDREN

MEASURES TO PROTECT

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Government on a series of strong measures governing missing children and child abuse. These initiatives are good news for all Canadians. In August the missing children's registry was officially opened. That vital program enables the RCMP to work in a co-ordinated search with police forces across Canada. Having access to the computerized data base of missing children at police information centres is a further step towards a safer society, one which will protect our youth.

I also applaud my colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), for introducing Bill C-15 to protect Canada's children from sexual abuse and exploitation. The Government recognizes that such protection provided by the Criminal Code will require the support of community associations that are committed to assisting with these problems.

• (1410)

I urge all levels of Government and organizations to collaborate on these initiatives to protect our youth and the social fabric of Canadian society.

EMPLOYMENT

CRITICISM OF JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, one of my Thunder Bay constituents sent me the following letter a couple of weeks ago:

I recently saw Prime Minister Mulroney speak on national television, stating he had created 560,000 jobs since his election in the fall of 1984.

I would like to remind him on behalf of the unemployed youth of Canada that many of those jobs pay minimum wage and are often temporary.

Since 1984 I have personally been employed through not one but four Government programs (it was not due to incompetence that I was released from these jobs, but simply because the organizations I was employed by already had a "permanent" staff and could not afford to hire an extra worker).

It makes one wonder how many other Canadian youths have been nickled and dimed to death by Mr. Mulroney's "job-creation programs", and yet he's so very proud of himself for creating so many jobs.

This critical letter speaks for thousands of young Canadians whose hopes for good, permanent jobs have not been fulfilled. They are angered by a Government that spends more energy taking the credit for jobs that low-interest rates have created than it does taking the actions that remain necessary if young Canadians are to find the work they want and deserve.

CREDIT UNIONS

ACTIONS OF ONTARIO GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, this spring our Conservative Government took courageous action when we rescued and saved deposits and pensions of many credit unions, co-ops, farmers, and labour unions when two western banks collapsed. Contrast this courageous action with the anti-credit union, anti-labour and anti-business action by the Liberal Ontario Government when its Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Monte Kwinter, indicated in public forums that he will take away hard earned profits and share dividends of Ontario credit unions.

Located in my Willowdale riding are the DUCA Community Credit Union, the Municipal and Police Credit Unions. These and the Polish and Ukrainian Credit Unions resent the attempts of the Ontario Liberal Government to legislate away these hard earned profits and dividends to cover fees, insurance premiums, reserves and interest charges.

My constituents and I urge the federal Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) to tell the Ontario Government to stop these anti-union, anti-caisse-populaire and anti-business actions immediately.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF CORPORATE PLAN TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Canada Post announced that the matter of postal rate increases would be referred to a committee of the House for review. Why did he not include the matter of the new community super mailbox for review? If yesterday's announcement is not a farce, why does the Minister not refer the whole corporate plan to the House committee for review?

[Translation]

Why is the Minister refusing to do anything for the many communities who have no door-to-door delivery service, as in Saint-Léonard and Ville d'Anjou, on Montreal Island, in the ridings of Mercier and Longueuil and in so many other communities? Why doesn't he give them door-to-door delivery? Is he going to tell them they are second-class citizens?

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY—NDP LEADER'S LETTER

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, when our Government made the decision to turn our Canadian pharmaceutical sector into a dynamic and first-class industry, leading to an unprecedented increase in the number of jobs in research and development, Le Devoir Économique of October 1986 mentioned 3,000 high-level jobs and $1.4 billion in investment. And now, the Leader of the New Democratic Party sends a three-page letter, in English only, to all Canadians, except Quebecers, to object to this plan.

This is one more NDP inconsistency. Their party doesn't want 3,000 new jobs and prefers to ignore 27 per cent of Canadians: six million Quebecers.

It is also an insult to Quebec's economy, Mr. Speaker, and Quebecers will never forget this affront by the socialists.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

PRICE OF DRUGS—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the Government's cave-in to the United States on the question of drug prices. It has used the sick and elderly as a pawn in order to maintain the currency of the free trade negotiations with the United States. Was it not enough to attempt to deindex pensions for our older people? Was it not enough to impose taxes on non-prescription drugs? Why must the weak and the elderly be used as pawns in order to maintain these negotiations with the United States?

• (1415)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the previous Liberal Government in June, 1983, announced, as government policy, the decision to restore patent protection for drugs. The Hon. Member for Papineau was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at the time. If the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is now saying this has something to do with trade talks, perhaps he can enlighten us as to what trade talks the previous Liberal Government had under way at that time?

[Translation]

THE SICK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, chief American negotiator Clayton Yeutter listed drug manufacturing companies among the five priorities of the United States. Those are the answers.

My question is this, Mr. Speaker: Abandoning our lumber industry was bad enough, so why abandon sick Canadians now just to salvage these negotiations with the United States?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman believes we should have research and development in this country, and if he believes that the 8,000 jobs the Le Devoir Economique estimates for Montreal alone are something we should disregard because some mischievous people might make this false association between what we are doing in Canada, for Canada's benefit, and the trade talks, he is entitled to his point of view, but it is not a view shared by this Government, nor by anyone who has the welfare of our young scientists in mind.

Mr. Turner: The Prime Minister, I notice, is not answering these questions.

COST OF MEDICATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): We may have been prepared to accept independent inquiry recommendations, but the Government has gone far beyond that. The Government went further at the risk of our sick and our elderly. What about the price of heart medication, arthritic pills, antibiotics—just to satisfy the American Government on this particular issue?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for one thing, those pills the right hon. gentleman is talking about, those drugs, will remain on the market. The legislation does not affect them one little bit. The hon. gentleman ought to examine the Bill before making those kinds of judgments.

Second, the people he talked about are covered by drug plans. Over 85 per cent of Canadians are covered 100 per cent by drug plans.

Mr. Gauthier: Who pays for that?

Mr. Andre: Whatever cost there might be in terms of drug plans will be way more than offset by the thousands of jobs, high-tech jobs in biotechnology, which will be generated.

Mr. Gauthier: We have heard that before.

Mr. Andre: Any reasonable person will reach a conclusion that this is a good package.

[Translation]

INQUIRY CONCERNING DEMAND FOR LEGISLATION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The provinces, retired Canadians, welfare recipients, the generic drug industry and the Consumers' Association of Canada have all spoken against the Government's proposed drug patents policy.

My question is quite simple: Who is in favour of this legislation which could prove to be very costly to ailing men and women throughout Canada?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for one, the Government of Quebec, because under the Liberal and PQ Governments there were unanimous resolutions passed in the National Assembly asking the federal Government to do what we are doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: And I repeat if one examines the legislation and the program, one will not be able to substantiate the accusation that drug prices are going to rise.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh?

Mr. Andre: The fact is there will not be any rise in drugs on the market now, and in terms of the future we have all kinds of safety mechanisms—

Mr. Gauthier: We don't trust you.

Mr. Andre: —to ensure that consumers are not affected badly by this legislation.

[Translation]

PRICE OF GENERIC DRUGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is telling us that prices will not go up.

Does the Minister know that the multinationals sell their valium for $80, whereas the same product is available from generic drug companies at $2.31?

How can the Minister justify his decision when we know that, if this legislation is passed, an ulcer treatment drug called Zantac which sells for $89.69 will never be available as a generic drug which would cost only $9?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the drugs—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Who's on drugs, Harvie?

Mr. Andre: —about which the Hon. Member speaks will remain on the market. There is no change in terms of those particular drugs. The savings that she talked about will remain for consumers. It is simply false to suggest that there will be an increase.

I also remind the Hon. Member that, on average, it takes 11.5 years for a generic drug to be brought into competition with a brand name drug. We are proposing a 10-year exclusivity period. On average, the period of exclusivity will be less than what it is now for competitive generic drugs.

UNITED STATES POSITION ON PATENT LAW

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. One thing Canadians do know is that at present we pay 20 per cent less than do the Americans for drugs. That is fact. Will the Prime Minister acknowledge that at the "shamrock shuffle" President Reagan asked that this item be placed on the Canadian agenda, that Special Envoy Yeutter complained about Canada dragging its feet in terms of changing our patent law, and that last spring when Vice-President Bush was here he also urged the Canadian Government to change this law in order that multinational American drug companies could gouge Canadian consumers the way Americans are gouged at home?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party should be aware that drug prices in Canada, where there is no generic competition—and this involves the innovative drugs—are 20 per cent less in Canada than in the United States. It is as a result of the difference in the market here and not as a result of the patent law that this has resulted in savings to Canadians. The Hon. Member should not make that jump, which is illogical if he were to look at the facts.

With respect to who is pressuring us, since 1969 the whole of the industrialized world has been criticizing us for having patent laws that are out of step with the rest of the world.

MULTINATIONAL DRUG COMPANIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister admit that the leading voices for change to this legislation are the multinational drug companies? Will he admit that the pressure did indeed go on with the former Government and that all consumer and all pensioner groups—all those concerned with keeping drug prices down in Canada—are completely opposed to what the Government is trying to do?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the leading proponents of restoring patent protection for inventions in this very important area are members of the academic community, the young scientists who want to work at research and development in Canada.

Mr. Orlikow: That is nonsense!

Mr. Riis: Talk to Frank Oberle.

Mr. Andre: I invite the Leader of the New Democratic Party to accompany me to the academic institutions which I will be visiting as we announce major new research and development investments. I invite him to talk to any professor of pharmacology—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to go to every campus in Canada right now after what the Government has done to research and development in this country. I will go any day with the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister. Canadian consumers would have to spend $650 million more as a result of the action of this Government, so why such an unfair measure?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that figure is absurd—absolutely absurd. The Hon. Member proposes this absurd figure and asks us why.

Mr. Broadbent: We'll give you the figures for that.

Mr. Andre: My question is why the Hon. Member has such a vivid imagination and why will he not look at the facts as they are there. He will see that it is a good Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

ANTICIPATED INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a report from CP wire service in which the office of the Minister reponsible for Canada Post is quoted as stating that the Minister still expects the price of a first-class stamp to jump to 36 cents from 34 cents by next March despite opposition from the Government's own back bench. Why did the Minister mislead his own caucus, the House, and all Canadians yesterday by referring the rate increase to a committee when he already says that in March he expects an increase?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first of all, it is this Government's concern to respond to the needs of Canadians by providing a better and more reliable service at affordable cost. That is why we set up the Marchment Committee which, after examining the issues and travelling across this country, submitted 29 representations. We have adopted 28, so we are indeed responding to the needs of Canadians.

INQUIRY WHY ALL PLANS OF CORPORATIONS NOT REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, if yesterday's announcement was not a total farce, why doesn't the Minister refer all Canada Post's plans to a committee instead of just the postal rate increase? If the Government is being serious about this, why doesn't it let Parliament have full scrutiny of these plans?
