As I have said, even this measure is deindexed so that the value of both programs will decrease each year. A 3 per cent deindexation will seriously erode all family benefits. I think this is the real hidden agenda of the Conservative Party and its big business allies. The Government wants to cut social programs and social benefits to the minimum. It wants to do away with universality. Let us not kid ourselves in that respect. Everything the Government has done points in that direction. This happens at a time when other types of social programs for families and children are also being cut, or being identified for cuts. We must not be fooled by the slight increase to the child tax credit and by the advance payment of $300 to poor families.

Fortunately, members of the Canadian public are not as naive as the Government thinks they are. They have made their views known. Over and over again in the last two years we have seen how Canadians truly believe that a social safety net in terms of universal old age pension and universal family allowance is the basic plank of social policy in Canada. This is seen as a right. It is important that we all contribute to the costs of these programs. It is also important to recognize not only the costs of rearing children but parenting. Workers who have children at home need more money than workers who do not have children. I believe that is obvious. A single person or a childless couple do not have the same type of expenses as do those with children. It is important that we make a major contribution to assist with the cost of raising children.

As I stated earlier, it is important that we recognize the next generation. It is important that they get a good start in life. It is important that they receive the care they need, particularly pre-schoolers. One in five children is poor. They do not have the requirements they need to develop fully into mature young people. We must look at this issue from a selfish point of view. After all, it is this generation of children which will look after us in our old age. They face a large task. We will live longer. Many of the ornery politicians in this House will be supported by the very children who should be receiving more generous family allowance benefits today from the Government.

In the Speech from the Throne there was talk about family values and, in particular, mention was made of traditional family values. I find some difficulty with this concept since, in many ways, the traditional family no longer exists. It is certainly in the minority. The majority of families have either two parents in the workforce or are single-parent families. The old idea of two parents with a son and a daughter and a mother who stays at home cooking and looking after the children while daddy goes out to work is really a bit of a myth, except in very few family situations.

My Party believes very strongly in family values. We were the ones who originally fought for the implementation of the family allowance. We would not have done that if we did not strongly believe in families and the values of family life. We must have supports of many kinds to assist families.

• (1620)

I confess that it is a little hard to swallow some of the rhetoric that was in the Speech from the Throne. It is hard to hear Conservative Members extolling the importance of families while they deindexed the family allowance and refused to reindex it. If they really believed in families, that was one of the most tangible things they could have done. It would really not cost that much. We have given them several ideas for how they could pay for it.

Second, as I said earlier, Conservative Members could show their real confidence in families by increasing the child tax credit substantially, by making it apply to working poor and average families and by having it completely indexed as well.

I think that this piecemeal approach really shows that what we need is a sound, comprehensive family policy in Canada. We do not have such a thing. No Government has brought one in. We are struggling with these concepts in the Special Committee on Child Care. While it is fairly narrow in its approach, I think it has given us some indications of things that should be part of a comprehensive family policy in addition to family benefits.

I hope that the Government will make substantial contributions toward improving accessible, affordable child care services, services that will be available in every region of Canada. We found that the child population in the Territories and on Indian reserves is increasing substantially compared to other parts of Canada. Yet there are relatively no child care services at all or extremely inadequate and perhaps even risky services there. There is not the kind of quality and funding that is required.

We must have a generous child care program. I am glad the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) mentioned child care in his speech. We will be waiting anxiously to see how many dollars are put toward that, and what the focus will be so that it will be a major step toward improving the quality of child care across Canada. Working parents should not have to worry about their children having good care, care which helps them to grow as individuals.

If course, we need a system that will also apply to families regardless of income. When we look at child care, we find that it is the average income family and not the very poorest family that does not receive any help with child care expenses. The poorest families receive help through the Canada Assistance Plan, although there is a great deal to be done there as well. We need a comprehensive program.

In some kind of comprehensive social policy of the future, I hope we can move toward a much more improved parental leave system so that mothers and fathers both can have a chance to share in parenting. Again, this is a change in the traditional concept of families. Mothers and fathers both should take turns at parenting, particularly during the first two years of a child's life, the very important time from infancy to toddler stage when the future personality of a child is developing. It is important that parents have real economic choices which will allow them to do their own parenting, and certainly more generous parental leave would assist in that.

My colleagues and I wish to see a Canada in which incomes above the poverty line are guaranteed and in which parents of children will not have to line up at food banks in order to supplement unemployment insurance benefits or meagre welfare incomes. In Vancouver—and this is true in other cities as well but I see it at my front door—single mothers have to line up at food banks. It is bad enough that for years single people from the skid row or downtown area of Vancouver have been standing in soup lines. Now this new institution which is being extolled by some right-wingers is forcing young mothers and their children as well as older people to line up in order to take charity, the old charity concept of the 1800s. This is just not good enough for Canada. It is not good enough for British Columbia and we should do something very major in the way of raising welfare rates.

We cannot talk about incomes rising above the poverty line unless we talk about opportunities for employment as well. I hear that members of the Liberal Party are looking into the fact that no guaranteed income policy is adequate unless there are guaranteed jobs, unless there is a program of full employment and unless there is also full employment at decent rates of pay.

As reflected by the Macdonald Commission, it would be very easy for right-wingers in the Liberal and Conservative Parties, and certainly those in the business world, to say that we will take away all the social benefits we now have for families and will put the money into a guaranteed income that will in effect be a guaranteed poverty. That is not what we in this Party want. We want guaranteed jobs for those who are able to work. We want jobs at decent rates of pay far above the minimum wage of $3.65 per hour, something which is a great disgrace in British Columbia. We want those who cannot work at all or who cannot work full time to receive income supplements that will at least bring their incomes to the poverty level so they can begin to move away from the degrading, demoralizing poverty cycle that condemns their own children to poverty and is passed on from generation to generation.

In any social policy that is to be determined, we must think particularly of the young people who are so disadvantaged in this generation. Young people especially need educational and training opportunities if they are to have any future at all. Many of them simply do not have access to education or training. There must be reasonable fees for education and for post-secondary education in particular. In British Columbia, student grants have been done away with. There should be interest-free loans so that those who are lucky enough to get to university or college are not saddled with debts of up to $20,000.

Education in Canada must not be only for the elite. We must not follow the proposal made by the Minister of Education in British Columbia. I am ashamed to say that he said that poor students should not apply to university if they cannot afford it. He reflects the Social Credit philosophy, as followed by the present Premier who was previously the Minister of Education. He thought that the only thing we needed in education was reading, writing and arithmetic, and even that was to be of questionable quality.

There is no way that we want to move backward in programs for youth. Members of the federal Party as well as the NDP leader in British Columbia have proposed a youth guarantee program that will guarantee two years of education, training or a job for a young person. That seems to be eminently reasonable. Why should we not invest in young people, particularly when they are at such risk and are so likely to get involved in other things if they do not have an income and if they have no hope for the future? Surely this would be a sound investment for the future.

In closing, I wish to speak up for Canadian women. Canadian women care deeply about family benefits, social programs and jobs for their children as well as for themselves. Once again, Canadian women were very disappointed in the Speech from the Throne because it provided no real measures to move us closer to equality. There are no measures in the Throne Speech to enforce equal pay for work of equal value, nor are there measures to require employers to remove the systemic discrimination which I am sorry to say still exists in many of the places in which women work.

Although the Prime Minister mentioned and deplored the situation of battered women in his speech, when questioned later he did not really make a strong commitment to help relieve the desperate plight of battered women, or to help with transition houses and related programs designed to support them when they are trying to move, with their children, out of violent situations.

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member to speak on Bill C-11.

Ms. Mitchell: I thought that in my initial remarks I was relating the child tax credit, which is a social policy, to a comprehensive social policy which includes the programs for women.

Women continue, in increasing numbers, to carry the triple load of raising children, doing housework and working full time—if they are lucky enough to get a job, which usually is at very low wages. Often there is no spouse or partner to assist.

Substantial government initiatives for child care and family support services are long overdue. More generous family benefits, including more generous child tax credit that is fully indexed and covers families up to the average income is another policy that is long overdue.

In conclusion, I want to say that we have indicated our agreement with this Bill, while registering our continuing concern that more must be done to assist Canadian families in a more comprehensive way.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take part in today's debate on pre-payment of the child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, this was a clear commitment made by the Conservative Government, a commitment which I think was very important since the purpose was to help low-income families with young children.

Mr. Speaker, I remember the day after the Budget was brought down in February 1986, when I had a chance to travel across the province of Quebec and meet people from all walks of life and all regions to discuss Mr. Wilson's Budget. Everywhere I went, Mr. Speaker, starting with the beautiful riding of Trois-Rivières and going on to Roberval, Abitibi and the riding of my hon. friend, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), and I even met people from the riding of Montreal—Sainte-Marie, and they were unanimous in their view that this was a fine initiative on the part of the Conservative Government—

Mr. Desrosiers: That's true.

Mr. Vincent: —a fine initiative, Mr. Speaker, and for two reasons: first of all, we raised the tax credit by $70 for 1985-86, by $35 for 1987 and by another $35 in 1988. So of course everyone was delighted with the increase and also with the kind of measure it was because it dealt with the problem of low-income families, in other words, families with an annual income of less than $15,000, which in this way will be able to receive $300 per child starting in November of the current year. Three hundred dollars per child for a family earning less than $15,000 is a lot of money, and just before Christmas and just before the winter, which is always a difficult time, that money is particularly welcome.

Mr. Speaker, those are the two points people made throughout the meetings we had on the Budget. And I think that today, we should congratulate the Minister and the Minister of State and avoid turning this welcome announcement into a game of petty politics. I think it is good news for families across Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I can see the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) laughing on the other side of the House—

Mr. Desrosiers: He objects to everything.

Mr. Vincent: —but he cannot object to this measure, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that this time he will have to be positive. He cannot be against this measure, that is just not possible. If he does object, Mr. Speaker, it would be like going against the people in his own riding. In any case, we will hear what he says later on.

This measure is not only a fiscal mechanism, it is a charitable and humanitarian fiscal mechanism. Earlier, I heard the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) criticize the technical aspects of this fiscal measure, but I did not hear him say this is the first time in the history of the Income Tax Act that we have a mechanism that reflects humanitarian considerations. I think that is important. Mr. Speaker, I remember when I was practicing in Trois-Rivières, in the beautiful riding you know so well, before I was given the opportunity to sit here on behalf of the constituents of Trois-Rivières, I remember the many low-income families which were actually taken to the cleaners by income tax discounters between February and April.

Mr. Speaker, 700,000 families will benefit from this measure in 1986, 700,000 families will get at least $300. A couple with two children will receive $600 as early as next month. Families will no longer have to deal with discounters demanding 15, 20 or 25 per cent. Nobody has referred to this, nobody has alluded to this unfortunate aspect of the system under which people had no choice but to get this advance tax credit through companies which in some cases were more interested in their own profits than in the needs of families. Mr. Speaker, we are still talking about families earning less than $15,000 a year.

This is something which must be mentioned. For over ten years now I have had representations about this from a number of associations—among others the ACEF in Trois-Rivières came to see me as early as November 1984. The income tax discounting issue had been on the back burner for ten years. Mr. Speaker, the Consumers' Association called on me to discuss it. For ten years absolutely nothing had been done to come to grips with the problems of families forced to deal with child tax credit discounters two or three months before April 30, or before the normal deadline after April 30.

A moment ago I listened to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). It is a new commitment, a simple commitment, Mr. Speaker. Our tax system has often been denounced, I have done so myself here in the House, and the Opposition does it regularly. For once there is no red tape involved. We are not even asking Canadian families to send us any papers. We are saying: If, in the previous year, you earned less than $15,000, and if you have children, you will receive automatically $300 in November. It is a simple measure, Mr. Speaker. It is a measure that is economical for the Government and simple for Canadian families. And the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides somehow criticized the fact that there would be no forms to fill in.

Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy and I congragulate the two ministers of Finance who have imagined a system whereby there will be no paperwork. I think this is a Government which is precisely trying to reduce the amount of paperwork. Everybody is aware that this cannot be done overnight. But this is a measure which is going in the right direction.

Unfortunately, once more, Hon. Members opposite are trying to scare people. They are trying to confuse them. We have put forward a tax reform, with changes—all tax reforms normally have them—and we have announced an increase in the Child Tax Credit over the next three years, $70 in 1986, $35 the following year and again $35 the third year, for a total amount of $140. It is written black and white in the Budget, it is settled and they are still trying to scare the people. Are the people going to get it next year? Will there be any change? Will there be this or that?

Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat disappointed with the Opposition. Really. I was under the impression that when a Government introduced a measure which was good for all Canadian families and expected by the Canadian people, everybody would agree, even though in the end the finance critic said: As a Party, we agree. But all his remarks were aimed at scaring people, Mr. Speaker. When the Government introduces very good measures, when everybody is in agreement, the Opposition should not continue to say: Yes, but perhaps something will happen . . . Perhaps! Mr. Speaker, I suggest that a tax reform is a major document. It has been criticized for not yet having been made public, but I remember the days when the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) was Minister of Finance in Quebec. He had talked about tax reform. If I am not mistaken, he was six years in office, but we never saw that reform.

Mr. Speaker, we should give the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Progressive Conservative Government some time to collect the necessary data so that the reform will meet the needs of Canadian families and businesses.

Mr. Speaker, he said there was nothing new. We are adding something new, that is a $70 tax credit for this year. That is quite an amount of money, Mr. Speaker. In 1986, the child tax credit will be $454. In 1987, it will be raised to $489 and, in 1988, to $524. Well, I can say, Mr. Speaker, that in my constituency of Trois-Rivières, low-income families with $15,000 or less are quite proud of the Progressive Conservative Government, they are quite proud of the policies which they needed. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) does not believe me as usual, Mr. Speaker, but he is always welcome in my riding.

Mr. Malépart: There are fewer opinion polls.

Mr. Vincent: He is always welcome in my riding and he can come and make inquiries, Mr. Speaker. He will be surprised. He is always welcome as long as I am told beforehand so that I can be there. I would be pleased to welcome him, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malépart: Your radio program . . . He can call.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, he can even call my radio program, it will be a pleasure. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, everybody does not get invited on a radio program. But credible people do.

Mr. Speaker, along those lines, speaking of helping low-income families, there is one thing that has not been mentioned yet—the refundable tax credit for sales tax. That is an excellent proposal, Mr. Speaker, $50 a year per adult and $25 per child. This is a true reflection of the philosophy, the clear commitment made by the Progressive Conservative Government with regard to families, young people, and the have-nots. It is important to stress that.

Again, this is a new measure. I would say, Mr. Speaker, especially since you were trained as a lawyer, that this is innovative tax law. This is unprecedented. Unfortunately, the Opposition who were previously in power have never thought of that. They thought of increasing the federal sales tax. Yes, they thought of, you can be sure. But the sales tax credit had never been seen before. This is both innovative law and fresh money in the pockets of the have-nots, the low-income families. But they will not mention that, Mr. Speaker.

They will not mention the increased disability deduction either. Some 100,000 Canadians will benefit from it. They will not mention that either. Of course it is not important that we increased it by $250. This is not the kind of issue which lends itself to criticism, which the Opposition can object to. Minimum income tax, Mr. Speaker . . . When we raised the issue in the House the New Democratic Party stood as one and congratulated us, but the Liberal Opposition took a negative view. Well, Mr. Speaker, again these were measures which stem directly from our clear and specific commitment to Canadians, which attest to the fact that we are here to get things done as we are expected to do, namely to support destitute people and help low-income families when they most need assistance. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, $300 in November for a one-child family, or $600 for a family with two children. As I see it, November 1986 is just about the right time to lend a helping hand without forcing people to fill in application forms. That, Mr. Speaker, is what is called caring for Canadian men and women, being imaginative, being creative. The task of the legislator is to enact legislation. The task of Parliament is to sanction legislation, but such legislation must be enforceable, and easily so, and above all be convenient for everyone.

In the past, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, we have had well known specialists in criminal law, and one gazed at pages and pages of the Criminal Code for a single section. That is not what the Canadian taxpayer wants. Now with the Income Tax Act, you have pages for a single sub-section. And we are accused of delaying tax reform. Tax reform means major changes. It means not coming up with income tax legislation running four pages to a paragraph or more, Mr. Speaker. And we are accused of dragging our feet. It is time to put the house in order. We shall do it according to the rules, within a time frame which I consider normal and with the introduction of important social measures which are expected and well received by the Canadian people.

As I mentioned briefly earlier on, I have travelled throughout Quebec and, while in Montreal, I visited the riding of my friend the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers).

An Hon. Member: You saw what a fine welcome we were given.

Mr. Vincent: I felt very welcome, that is true, Mr. Speaker. But the measures we are discussing today were greeted even more favourably than I was, which is only normal given their importance.

An Hon. Member: Enjoy it while you can since you won't be around for long.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, once again, you know how I do not like to play politics in this House, but I would reply to the Hon. Member of the Opposition that the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve will be here for as long as he so chooses. People there are proud of him and, personally, I am proud of what he is doing in that particular riding.

Mr. Speaker, we managed in a single Bill, and not too thick as you have noticed, we managed to give $300 per child to families earning less than $15,000. We also solved the problem of tax discounters and, in that same Bill, we raised the child tax credit. I think that is no mean feat, and it is all part of that fiscal system known as the tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, I think we must underline—

Some Hon. Members: At what page?

Mr. Vincent: The page number will help only if you know how to read.

Mr. Speaker, the fairness mentioned in the Throne Speech is already here, in one of the very first Bills presented to the House. It is only the second Bill, almost the first, and we are already proving that the Throne Speech did not use the word fairness in vain. We also get an idea of what the tax reform will be, something new, something innovative, something never tried before. I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, we are breaking new ground as far as fiscal law is concerned, but at the same time it is fun, because it is practical for Canadians.

I hope that as a result, Mr. Speaker, we will be able to pass that Bill quite promptly. You are signaling to me, and I should wrap up my remarks.

I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by commenting on the remarks made by the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party, who was lucky enough to have a lot of time. She said that next year—when people are familiar with the system—they will go back to tax discounters and that nothing will have been solved. I think she is totally wrong. I want to repeat to her that people will receive, without filling any form whatsoever a total of $300 as early as November. She might not understand fully the system we have put in place, because it is entirely new. She has nothing to fear, people will not even think of going to tax discounters, because they will receive their cheques through the mail.

Should the family earn more than $15,000, it will be required to give the money back and pay any interests payable. I think that is normal, that it is a matter of equity. We are taking this measure for low-income families, not for those with a yearly income of $50,000. If by mistake the latter received a prepayment of $300 in November, it would be only normal for them to give it back and pay interest on the amount the government paid them in advance. I think that makes sense, Mr. Speaker.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your usual kindness and ask the House to speed things up and pass this bill as soon as possible.

• (1650)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. The Hon. Member gave himself a good pat on the back for the concept of the child tax credit, and I thank him for that. But I would like to remind him that this measure was introduced by the Liberal government in 1978 to meet a need.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member who is pleased because that prepayment will prevent recipients from going to tax rebate discounters, if the purpose was to improve the standard of living, since the government did not have enough courage to outlaw tax discounting, why should a family in the member's beautiful riding of Trois-Rivières with an income of $15,000 to $23,000, be deprived of the right to that benefit by the Hon. Member, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)? As you know, Mr. Speaker, two people earning $15,000 a year are not wealthy, but these people are left at the mercy of the tax discounters. Why is this? Yet, this is the Government which decided that the ceiling for a low-income family would be $23,500. If the Government thought this important, why did it not decide that all families entitled to the full amount of the child tax credit would receive an advance payment so that they would not have to go to the tax discounters?

Why did the Government decide to leave out 538,000 Canadian families?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I am very proud that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) recognizes the Trois-Rivières constituency as the most beautiful in the country. I thank him for saying so.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member does not understand the exact purpose of this measure. This is a tax credit of $300 per child for families with an income under $15,000 a year. According to the statistics, families with an income under $15,000 are indeed those that have the greatest tendency to go to the discounters. That is the reason for this measure. It is very simple.

This Bill also solves in practice the problem of discounters. I think that what I said a few minutes ago has to be viewed in that context.

The Hon. Member mentioned 538,000 families earning between $15,000 and $23,000. Those were not the people who wanted to get their money early, Mr. Speaker. It was those who earned less than $15,000 a year, and I think that should be made clear on the one hand.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, obviously if the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government had not left us with a deficit in the order of $200 billion—an annual deficit which we have significantly reduced to date, but we still have a long way to go because of the interest to be paid on their debts, Mr. Speaker—we might have increased the Child Tax Credit, and indeed we might also have increased the $300 payment.

Mr. Speaker, interest payments on their debts accounts for 25 per cent of our spending every year. Their debt, Mr. Speaker, not ours.

In 1968, we had no deficit, we had no national debt. In 1984, some 20 years later, we had a $200 billion national deficit. What a shame, Mr. Speaker!

That is why we have been dealing with that matter, the problem of their debts, to help Canada forward. Up to now, we have been doing pretty well, Mr. Speaker.

In concluding, I would like to mention that the unemployment rate in the Trois-Rivières constituency was made public last week: it is already down to less than 10 per cent, in two years only, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malépart: I do not want to suggest to the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières that he is unaware of the facts. Far from it, Mr. Speaker.

I have in my hand a budget paper signed by Mr. Wilson. Everybody knows that he is a Conservative. The anticipated payment of the child tax credit to families whose annual income is $15,000 or less, on page 26, does not cost a cent to the Government. It does not cost a cent to the Government to have it up to $23,000.

I can see you are not well informed, and I think that you should change your speech. Perhaps he should have read the Minister's papers before sticking his neck out.

Mr. Vincent: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what the page is. You can figure it out as you like, if every month 700,000 families receive a maximum payment of $300, taking for granted that they have only one child, the cheques issued by the federal Government in November will deprive it of liquid assets it would have had till March or April. I think that is logical. Such is management or the circulation of capital.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in the debate on this Bill. First of all, I may recall that the previous speaker demonstrated he did not know what he was talking about. He made a good improvised speech, but I may point out that in the Bill before the House today, there is no mention of increases in the child tax credit.

The purpose of the measure we are considering today is quite simply, and I am not trying to mislead the House, I read here what was said by the Minister of Finance on February 26, 1986: "—to provide more timely assistance to low-income families and to reduce the need for tax discounting, the Government is proposing to advance payment of the child tax credit." This Bill is before the House today, Mr. Speaker, because the Government did not have the guts to get rid of the tax discounting system, under which tax discounters, and I will explain for the benefit of those who are not familiar with the term, provide early payment of tax refunds to people who sell their refunds, and to my mind, people who charge as much as 15 per cent for this service are as bad as loan sharks, Mr. Speaker.

We know that a substantial percentage of the earnings of companies like H & R Block and Household Finance is derived from charging low-income families for the child tax credit they receive in the form of a tax refund. So, part of the money we put into social programs to help families was going into the pockets of tax discounters.

I have to admit it was the Liberal Government that allowed this to happen. The system should have been abolished outright, after experience had shown the kind of impact it was having. It is unfair to poor families, as I said earlier, and in fact, the Conservative Government and the Minister of Finance had decided, in the other Budget, that a poor family had an income of up to $23,500. When we talk about income, this means family income. It means that two people are working to earn $23,000, Mr. Speaker. We are not talking about the rich. These are not Members of the House or Senators. We are talking about ordinary people. Since this Government wanted to maintain the child tax credit, it should have made pre-payment available to all Canadians receiving the full $300. And if, as the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières was saying, they really wanted to help people on humanitarian grounds, they should have made the amount available at the beginning of the new school year and not before Christmas. After all, when do Canadian families need money most? When the children go back to school, to pay for school supplies and clothes. That is what costs money, and that is when our families in Quebec and across Canada need more money than what they are getting through family allowance.

• (1700)

Mr. Speaker, what appalls me is that the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières mentioned this was being done in a "spirit of charity". Nothing could be farther from the truth, Mr. Speaker. The thousands of Canadian mothers do not want charity to raise their children. If they have children, it is because it is an honour and a duty. They are fed up with this Conservative Government's charity. Let them send you an early cheque, and I feel certain there is a majority of Progressive Conservative Members who do not accept the words used by the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent). This is not charity, this is something that is owed to our Canadian families, Mr. Speaker.

And on top of that, those people have the gall to try and tell us that those are increases, and then to hide deliberately the fact that at the same time, by the same decision, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has de-indexed family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that we recall how much Canadian families—and, mind you, this results from a consultation made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the so-called Blue Paper, which invited all Canadian families to file in recommendations. Members from all political parties who sat on the committee worked honestly and seriously, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance were saying that the reform of family income support policies was not aimed at reducing the deficit, but at giving more to those who need it most. What was the result, the end product? Six months later, because of pressures by mothers who came here on Parliament Hill, and whom the Prime Minister insulted by refusing to meet them, the Minister admitted it was in order to reduce the deficit, Mr. Speaker.

We all remember Mrs. Denis who was on Parliament Hill with a group of senior citizens. Well, Mr. Speaker, Canadian families were given the same treatment. I have figures here from the Department of National Health. How much did the Government take away from the families of our Canadian mothers? If Réal Caouette were still here, Mr. Speaker . . . And the Hon. Member says there was a $70 increase. With the other hand they took away more. They put half of it in one pocket, then they transferred it to the other pocket, Mr. Speaker. It is $1.21 billion that the Government will have taken by 1990-91 from the envelope that was to have been used to help families with children.

Mr. Speaker, last year, $15 million, $40 million in 1986-87, and up and up it goes, $135 million, $200 million a year, $340 million and $480 million which the Government will take away in 1990-91, and today Hon. Members will rise and tell us: This is a good measure. We took pity on them. It is charity. We are progressing. My eye, Mr. Speaker!

What has this Government done other than mentioning family assistance twice in the Speech from the Throne, and according to the Prime Minister it is the cornerstone of our society, Mr. Speaker: a cut in family allowances indexation, 3 per cent less. Worse still, Mr. Speaker, the child tax credit was de-indexed in the famous Budget tabled by the Minister of Finance on May 23, 1985. This Government had the nerve to de-index the measure for the neediest families which the Hon. Member is bragging about, yet at the same time it granted a capital gains exemption.

Mr. Bissonnette: Say something about interest rates!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, that is what the Government has done for Canadian families.

Mr. Bissonnette: Talk about unemployment!

Mr. Malépart: And today there are 538,000 families ... and if the Government and the Conservative Members do not accept an amendment to this Bill providing for advance payments, if the Conservative Members fail to support the motion of the Official Opposition, 538,000 Canadian families will be penalized with respect to this advance payment simply because the family income has gone up, somebody found part-time work and increased his income by $200 or $300, so that person will be penalized by being denied this advance payment.

Mr. Speaker, why create two categories of poor people in Canada? And for the reimbursement of the child tax credit, the Government has decided that it would be between $15,000 and $19,000. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing logical in this decision.

The House should remember the level of the child tax credit, before the decision made by the Minister of Finance on May 23, 1985: The maximum amount for a family was $26,300. All Canadian families with incomes between $23,000 and $26,000 were very heavily penalized. A family with two children has lost $272.

And to think that it is this same Government, this same Minister of Finance who have just decided to increase the maximum amount which can be invested in a RRSP.

There were consultations. I mentioned earlier that about a hundred groups appeared before the Committee. Following the tabling of its report, the Government went ahead and did exactly the opposite of what the PC Members, the NDP Members and the Liberal Members sitting on that Committee, the Canadian families and associations from coast to coast had recommended. All these people were unanimous in favour of changing the fiscal benefits to families with children which they felt was regressive, namely, the tax deduction for dependent children.

Mr. Speaker, I think that for the good understanding of Hon. Members generally, it is important to remind the House of the Government-published tables concerning this measure. There were examples in the Budget papers which indicated for instance that a family with a $10,000 income received $359. In view of the fact that family allowances are taxable, a family with a $80,000 income would keep $175. But what is the impact for a family with a $10,000 income and another family with an $80,000 income, as far as the child tax exemption is concerned? A family with an income of $10,000 or less is entitled to nothing, while a family with an income of $80,000 is entitled to a $363 tax deduction. Mr. Speaker, that is unfair. The idea was not for the Government to do three or four somersaults, making a small payment here; it should have initiated a reform along the line recommended by the Committee Members and the population as a whole. It should not have taken this opportunity to deceive the public and use some of the moneys earmarked for the income support of families with children to reduce the deficit or to reimburse guys who had lost $60,000 and more in the failure of a bank.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that we will pass the Bill. We are not going to delay it. However, I think it is important that the Government agrees to three amendments which make a lot of sense and will not cost a penny to either the Government or the taxpayers. They will increase fairness and correct inequities created by this Bill.

First of all, there is some ambiguity regarding interest charges resulting from overpayment or changes in the income situation of the person receiving the prepayment. We have already received a last minute document from the Minister and, according to that document, interest will be charged from the date the payment has been made, but, when we call the Department of Finance, we are told that it will not work that way. Considering that it will be an experimental project, it seems to me that, in the beginning, we should not charge interest if there is an administrative error in a prepayment.

I believe it would be important to devise a more flexible mechanism to try this out.

Here is the second amendment: If the Government really means to keep people away from tax discounters, why not send them the full amount, instead of sending a prepayment of $300 and telling them: Go and get the $154 outstanding from a tax discounter, because we do not want that "gang" to go bankrupt, because the tax discounters are our chums?

If you believe that a family with 2 or 3 children needs $400 to $500, then where is the logic of sending them a $300 cheque? What they say is: You are a client of Household Finance, and you've got to keep on going there.

To file your statement, to make sure that you get your $300, go to Household Finance. They will not charge you anything, even H&R Block. They say: Okay, there will be no charge for that, but there will be a charge of 15 per cent on the balance. And they will manage somehow to get your $300, and they will charge you another $15 for management fees.

Then we come here all steamed up, and the Minister of Finance (M. Wilson) will say: Social programs are so costly, it is outrageous. You bet they are: H&R Block is getting half of the total.

Why not accept this amendment? This year, we would send them a prepayment of $454. It would be more sensible and that situation would be avoided entirely. We are not here to maintain a steady flow of customers for tax discounters. We are here to solve the problem of medium- and low-income families. The interest payments should be avoided. It does not cost the Government one cent to send the full amount, since it has to be paid, six months earlier or six months later. Moreover, in the interest of fairness and equity, the ceiling should be $23,500, by the Government's own decision, instead of $15,000.

Mr. Bissonnette: Two hundred billion dollars deficit!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am confident that all the people who are listening to us are far brighter than the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Bissonnette). I am pretty sure the little Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bissonnette) never made much of an impression on anybody, and our population as a whole understands common sense.

Mr. Speaker, he is the only one to protest, but as usual, he has not understood anything. All he wants is his Minister's job, his limousine, the chance to cut ribbons and to travel, and a nice airport in his constituency, but he does not want to listen to those who are worried about the environment.

We shall let this patronage expert be because he will not be around much longer. Let us talk instead about the people who listen to us and who support this Parliament. The public pays the taxes, and the legislation passed in this place therefore has to be fair to the public.

I am convinced that some Conservatives still have the intelligence to understand the situation and that the Liberals are not the only ones to have done so. I am convinced that they have also understood the facts because, since there are 538,000 families involved, when one of them receives a cheque for $300, the neighbour will say: Why is it that I did not receive my advance payment? She will go to the office of her Member of Parliament where she will be asked to explain her problem. She will say that she earns under $15,000 a year. Her representative will say: That is impossible: bring me your tax return because this makes no sense. Ah! I see here that you have earned $15,200. I am sorry, but you are in a different category. You have been forgotten by the Minister of State for Transport. Mr. Speaker, our Brylcreem hero said: That's the cut-off point. And that is when people are going to start complaining and they will say it's all Brian's fault.

You are doing your best to make people hate your Prime Minister. I want to help you improve his image. Nothing could be simpler. First of all, no interest charges. Second, send the full amount, next year the second amount and so forth. Third, set the family income at $23,500, the cut-off point for families receiving the full child tax credit. That is straightforward and easy to understand. This way the system will be fair and reasonable for everyone. Just these three amendments.

Next year, the Minister can come back and review the situation and perhaps improve the system. It won't be perfect. Even under the Liberals it wouldn't be perfect. Only experience will tell—and three serious mistakes have already been made. In any case, next year the Minister will have to come back and admit we were right.

Remember the cutbacks in Old Age Security pensions: the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Bissonnette), our hon. friend from Saint-Jean, was positive everyone would support it. He defended the cutbacks, and then looked terribly foolish, Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said: Sorry, but we made a mistake. Mr. Speaker, he thought he was the only one in Canada who was right. And this is going to happen again, unless you are honest and vigilant and dedicated enough to consider our Canadian families. You are not being asked to . . . And it won't cost a cent more, although the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières would have us believe it would cost so much. I am going by the Budget papers, unless what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) says is not the truth. So what am I supposed to do? Let him contradict what I said.

However, on page 56 of the Budget Papers of the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, it is clearly stated: "Prepayment of child tax credit, effective date, 1986." In the cost in millions of dollars column, we find the words "does not affect full year cost". This means that this is not costing one cent more to the Government. Why not do it properly? Why always half measures?

You are indicating that I have one minute left. I trust that a large number of Conservatives will meet this evening with the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Finance and recommend that the changes we have suggested be made. I shall repeat these suggestions to make certain that all Members have heard them. First, no interest should be charged in the case of administrative mistakes made by the Department. Second, the full amount should be sent in prepayment so that people will not have to go to the tax discounters. Third, instead of setting the cutoff point for families entitled to prepayment of the child tax credit at $15,000, the cutoff point should be $23,500 as the Government had already decided that families with incomes under this ceiling would receive the full amount of the child tax credit.

I find it inconceivable that any Member of this House, whatever his political party, could rise and say that he disagrees with these amendments. If anyone does, I would like him to explain why he believes that a family with an income of $15,200 is wealthier than one with an income of $15,000.

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). I listened with interest to his participation in the debate on Bill C-11. In light of the debate which will take place within his own caucus starting tomorrow, does he believe that the child tax credit should be universally available to all citizens of Canada regardless of their level of income? Should we in fact remove the cap and allow the current allocation of approximately $450 to go to all Canadians regardless of income?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, if I understood the question correctly, it dealt with the universality of family allowances. I think the message is clear and the fight is over—universality of family allowances is maintained.

On the other hand, there is another aspect, and it will be debated at our convention in November. I think that in the area of social policies, involving families, senior citizens, the handicapped or whomever, it is important that we consider and try to implement what I for one would call the annual guaranteed income, in order to find the most effective way of cutting administrative costs and allowing people to receive something owed to them rather than charity.

I can state that I am working with other colleagues and this will be one of the subjects on the agenda, the guaranteed annual income formula, and also the development of a policy for senior citizens.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was highly critical of the Government's policy with regard to income support programs for families. Of course, he is aware that family income support programs at the federal level are made up of three parts. One is the child tax exemption in the Income Tax Act, the second is the family allowance, and the third is the child tax credit.

He is also aware that the former Government, of which he was a strong supporter, had put a system in place in which families with higher incomes benefited more from the combined effect of those three programs than lower income families. He is also aware that the changes that have been made by the present Government have ensured that lower income families benefit more from these programs than do higher income families.

Does the Hon. Member believe that higher income families should benefit more from the income support programs for families than lower income families? Why did the former Government not prepay child tax credits as he is advocating now? Third, will he tell us if it is the official policy of his Party to introduce immediately a guaranteed annual income and scrap all of these programs?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, to reply first to the question, I think that the Hon. Member should be well informed and should know that all social programs now in effect were developed under the Liberal Governement. However, we are not here to play politics but all of those programs should be amended taking into account their effectiveness, their use or the changing population.

I think that he was quite right when he said that there were three formulas for assisting families. It is true that the Government has attempted to reduce the funds earmarked for the rich but it forgot to transfer them to low- and medium-income families.

Such is the difference between a Liberal and a Conservative and I am under the impression, as shown by the figures, that one has to be really poor to be considered as poor and in need of help by a Conservative and such help is then equivalent to charity. For a Liberal, the distribution of wealth is made with a sense of dignity.

That is why the income is now set at $15,000 and according to the Conservatives, I do not know what the Member thinks of it, a family with such an income is poor while other families with an income of $23,000 are rich. However, conditions have not been changed for those who earn $100,000, who can use tax shelters and are entitled to a tax credit which reduces their income.

Concerning the guaranteed annual income referred to by the Hon. Member, I wish to emphasize that, no matter the political affiliation, we should strive continually to improve our income security programs, manpower training programs and policies. We are well aware that in 1990 there will be a greater number of senior citizens. Life expectancy is constantly increasing. In our ridings, there are senior citizens who are 80 or 82 years of age and they are still cavorting on the dance floor. Some 20 or 30 years ago, such people were perhaps in homes for the aged. Nowadays, they are full of energy, and we will soon have to consider housing policies for these people. We can see people living in traditional homes. When they reach a certain age, people want to live in some form of collective home with their peers; yet, there comes a time when their health fails them and they need extended care institutions.

Accordingly, I think that the various levels of government will have to seek together new ways to face a decreasing birth rate and changes in industrial production. In 1990 or 1995, there will be fewer people working to support those not working. Nowadays, we are in charge and we must be careful to make ends meet, so that when the time comes for us or our children to retire, there might be enough money for us to enjoy a decent living.

I think the debate on abortion is gaining momentum, but if we do not do anything to prepare for retirement the debate in the years 1990 and 2000 will be on a different issue: Do we endorse mercy killing because older people are becoming a heavy financial burden? What are we going to do? Our revenue sources have dried up.

If we want to act responsibly, I suggest we begin to look into this problem.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear the Hon. Member indicate that none of us are here to be partisan. I certainly expect I will remind the Hon. Member of that on occasion in the future.

I also do not believe that we are here to create fog and smog. Perhaps the Hon. Member would address himself to my question. Is it presently the official policy of his Party to introduce immediately a guaranteed annual income?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I think I said that we are not prepared to come up with a guaranteed income formula because this is not the kind of measure which can be implemented overnight. I would not want the Liberal Party to behave as the Conservative Party did with respect to consultation on the Blue Paper: they made lofty promises then turned around and did the opposite. In my opinion, and I am sure the Hon. Member agrees with me, the lesson and the humiliation which the Prime Minister and the Conservative Party had to live with concerning elderly Canadians and families were beneficial. That is what I told the elderly: You have given a lesson to all political parties, to all politicians, men and women.

Before taking a stand, words indeed sound just fine, anyone can fight for universality, a guaranteed annual income looks like a winner, what I want to know is how much it will amount to in terms of benefits. What I am fighting for and what all Hon. Members should be fighting for, in my opinion, is what this will amount to in terms of dollars and cents. Will people make a decent living? You could introduce a Bill and say: Let's help everybody and give them $5 each. That just about amounts to no help at all. So the mechanism is the important thing. For the Liberal Party, putting the mechanism in place is a matter of prudence and when we return to power, very soon, we will know what to do and we will not goof like the Conservative Government did.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to rise to speak to Bill C-11. This Bill has particular significance in a riding such as mine in eastern Nova Scotia. It is a riding that includes many people of lower income, and therefore many people with families who will take advantage and receive the benefit of this legislation.

I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) for this initiative which is designed to help needy Canadians.

Specifically, this Act to amend the Income Tax Act provides that there shall be a prepayment of $300 per child for families with net incomes of $15,000 or less in 1985. This prepayment is to take place in November for 1986. It is a prepayment which represents about two-thirds of the maximum child tax credit, which is $450 for 1986. Otherwise, in the absence of this initiative, that credit would not be payable until the claimants filed their tax returns for 1986 which, of course, is early in 1987.

Another interesting feature of this initiative is that individuals will not have to submit applications for their prepayment. Prepayment will be based on information provided in the 1985 income tax return, and the payment of any remaining credit will be made following the filing of the 1986 tax returns.

Those are some of the very specific items contained in Bill C-11. This initiative outlines, in very clear terms, the commitment of our Government to help those Canadians who are most in need, to help the low-income families and the poor of this country. This initiative is targeted at Canadians who most need help. It is a compassionate and humanitarian approach which uses our tax system for the benefit of needy Canadians.

This initiative is timely. It provides that the relief to low income families will come when it is most needed. It will be delivered before Christmas. This prepayment will reach families as they prepare their Christmas budgets, at a time when many low income families are greeting increased expenses such as heating and clothing needs with the onslaught of winter.

The measure before us is an interesting one. It is one which will benefit 700,000 families. Let us consider what that means. These households will be receiving a cheque which they can spend to meet the needs they face. This iniative is also designed to break the tax discounting cycle. It is designed to ensure that low income Canadians do not rush off to the tax discounters in the new year as they prepare their tax returns for the preceding year. The prepayment complements the Government's tougher controls on tax discounters which were implemented to protect low income individuals in Bill C-83.

Just what does this measure mean in terms of dollars and cents for low income families? The child tax credit has been increased from $384 for one child in 1985 to $454 for one child in 1986. In 1987, the figure will escalate to $489. In 1988, it will be $524 for every child in these households. It is a long-term plan which will provide long-term relief for low income and needy Canadians. It reveals a consistent direction on the part of the Department of Finance, a direction which calls for tax policies to be sensitive and responsive to the needs of those who most need help.

This measure complements the refundable sales tax credit, another measure which was extended to low income families based on a $50 credit for each adult and $25 for each child. It marks a major step forward in the expansion of the refundable tax credit system itself. It also complements the expanded eligibility for disability deduction to a further 120,000 Canadians, plus an increase of $250 in that deduction for a total of $2,860. It also complements the Government's efforts to achieve a minimum tax, to provide equity in all income brackets and to ensure that high income individuals pay their fair share of taxes.

The initiative before us is consistent with the over-all general mandate of our Government as outlined in the Speech from the Throne which provides and calls for fairness in the tax system. The prepayment of the child tax credit illustrates that principle. It is consistent with the reform of the tax system based on the philosophy of lower tax rates and reduced reliance on personal taxes. It is a progressive measure taken by our Government. It is also reflective of the strong commitment which our Government has in terms of preserving and strengthening the social safety net in this program. Through programs that are designed to achieve economic renewal, we are strengthening the revenue base of the federal Government so that very worthwhile programs such as these can be funded and expanded. It complements other social initiatives which we have taken, such as the spouses' allowance, which was extended to all low income widows and widowers aged 60 to 64. This increased income protection applies to about 85,000 Canadians and provides about $300 million in additional benefits to needy Canadians. It complements legislative changes to improve the Canada Pension Plan, which includes new financing arrangements and an improved benefits package, introduction of an early retirement option, increased disability benefits and a continuation of survivor benefits upon remarriage. It complements our Government's decision to expand the definition of disability under the Income Tax Act which was broadened to cover all severely disabled persons. An additional 120,000 Canadians are expected to benefit from this proposal.

Not only are we prepaying the child tax credit, we are increasing the number of dollars which will flow to needy families. All social programs are in place for needy Canadians. The ultimate goal of any Government must be to reduce the number of Canadians who fall within that category, that is, the number of Canadian families whom we would describe as poor. That must be the ultimate goal of a Government commited to improving the economic and social circumstances of its citizenry.

Surely a well-paying job is the best response to the social and economic needs of low income Canadians. More sound economic management is part of the program. Sound, stable and worthwhile employment for Canadians cannot be achieved in a vacuum. The economic record of the Government is very much a part of the social record of the Government. It is very much an attempt to meet and address the particular social needs of Canadians. I refer to the unemployment rate which has fallen from 11.7 per cent in September of 1984 to 9.9 per cent. We cannot ignore that we have introduced a bread-winner into many Canadian families. We cannot ignore that we have taken a family which faced unemployment and brought employment to it. We have brought into these households confidence, a feeling of control over one's destiny. We have given these people tools with which to solve their own problems.

When we talk about youth unemployment which has fallen from 18.4 per cent to approximately 15 per cent, we cannot ignore the social contribution being made to the lives of these young Canadians. We cannot ignore the fact that they will be better equipped as a result of this success to move forward into society and take their rightful role and become contributors to society. When we talk about the decrease in the Bank of Canada rate in the area of 3.4 or 3.5 per cent, we cannot ignore the fact that this too is a contribution to the real spending power of many needy Canadians. These needy Canadians buy on credit, and now interest rates are lower. Nor can we ignore the fact that these low income Canadians who aspire to become homeowners, or who are perhaps home-owners, will pay lower mortgage payments because of a decrease in this rate. These are contributions to the social well-being of families. We cannot isolate these economic accomplishments as if they did not have some strong and meaningful social implications.

When we talk about the reduction in the rate of inflation, we cannot ignore the fact that low income Canadians are particularly hard hit by escalating rates of inflation. When we talk about Canada's over-all economic performance in the world which some of these statistics reflect, we cannot ignore the implication this has for more and better social programs. When we talk about the Government's efforts to reduce the deficit and to increase revenues to the Government, we cannot ignore the fact that social programs are funded by the Government and the greater the resources of the Government, the greater the ability of the Government to expand, to enrich, and to continue these kinds of programs.

Of course, there are parts of the country where the economic benefits about which I spoke earlier are not being experienced to the same extent as they are across the country. However, in the riding I represent, we are seeing the benefits of renewed economic activity. We are beginning to achieve new jobs because of new economic policies.

The people I represent who are the chief beneficiaries of many of these social programs are very pleased that their jobs are coming to their area. They tell me that given a choice between a rich social program and employment, they are very quick to choose employment. They freely acknowledge that the best answer to many of their social problems is a full-time job.

In my area alone, agreements that will result in more than 400 jobs have been achieved in just two years. Some will say that 400 jobs is not really very much. It is probably about 400 per cent better than the job creation record of the Government that preceded us, so it is important. Any job for any person is substantial economic progress.

In my home town alone, there are two small plants with a total investment of $13 million or $14 million that will bring 80 or 90 jobs to the community over the next two years. The creation of these jobs was not possible under the previous Government. The previous Government had become tired and unresponsive. It believed only in passing out cheques, not fully realizing that economic progress and the creation of employment was the best answer to the social and economic needs of this part of the country.

I could provide to the House a very extensive list of the successes there have been in my constituency, an area subject to many of the regional economic initiatives of this Government and the previous Government. I will not, however, go into a detailed accounting other than to say that the Progressive Conservative Government is making progress in addressing the economic and social needs of all Canadians. It is a Government of which I am very proud. I am proud to contribute to the Government and I am proud to come to Ottawa and be a part of a philosophy that is responsive to the social needs of needy Canadians.

The record of the Government is a proud one. I fully expect that the Government will continue in this direction. With that, I would like to congratulate members of the Opposition for having the stature to express their very strong support of this Government initiative. It is my hope that they will, over the coming months, see it appropriate to express similar support for many of the other fine initiatives the Government is taking.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, in his speech to which I listened very carefully, the Hon. Member mentioned that his constituents would rather have a full-time job than receive the benefit of rich social programs. I wonder if the Hon. Member could elaborate on what he or his constituents would define as a rich social program.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the question is not really what is a rich social program. It is a decision that my constituents face as do most Canadians. The choice is between being solely dependent on social programs for their economic livelihood or being gainfully employed so that they, like many Canadians, will not be dependent upon any number of programs. Given a choice between being a Canadian who is the recipient of a social program such as the guaranteed income program, about which the Hon. Member may want to speak, and being a Canadian who is gainfully employed, my constituents, like all Canadians, prefer to take the option of being gainfully employed.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I do not think anyone in this House or in the country rejects the notion that there should be the option of jobs for those who want them. In respect to income support, that does not come from the Government of Canada but from the people of Canada. Often we in this House tend to forget who actually pays our bills.

Would the Hon. Member agree that it does not make economic sense for the head of a male-led two-parent family on social assistance who is receiving in addition to that a medical plan, a drug plan, eyeglasses, and other fringe benefits, to take a job that paid an amount equal to the social assistance payments but did not provide the fringe benefits? That individual would be forced to choose to remain on social assistance and would not have the opportunity to take a full-time job.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, in the course of my remarks, I attempted to make the point that I was not simply talking about employment but I was talking about employment that would meet the economic needs of Canadians. What my friend is outlining, of course, is a dilemma that is faced by many low-income Canadians. I know that the preference of many would be to go to work because the answer is not only determined by what makes good economic sense. There are people who will make that decision based on other factors like personal pride and social considerations and who might, notwithstanding the direct economic benefits of not going to work, nevertheless go to work.

Indeed, it is a complex question. I am advocating a job which provides an income to these needy Canadians, a job which permits them to meet their needs. Obviously, we do not want a disincentive.

Mr. Waddell: I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question, since he comes from Atlantic Canada and since the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is in the House today.

I wonder what he thought of the remarks of the Minister of Transport when he talked about the economy of the Hon. Member's region. It seemed to me that he talked about its being like Bangladesh and the Third World. Is that the way the Hon. Member perceives the economy there?

An Hon. Member: That has nothing to do with his speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) rises on a point of order which I could foresee.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been called to order myself in making a reference, asking a question, or making a comment on a speech of another Member that has not been relevant to the contents of that Member's speech, or to the Bill, for that matter, that we are debating today. I would ask Your Honour to rule out of order the Hon. Member with his comment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Prior to making a definite decision on the matter raised, I must admit I do not recall what the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) asked the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil). I do not recall any reference to that in the speech of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso, to my knowledge. However, I will listen for a minute to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

Mr. Waddell: Surely, they do not have child tax credits in the Third World. I would like to know if that means that the Government will expand it or will go back, because there is some insinuation of a Third World economy. What about jobs?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway to rephrase his question.

Mr. Waddell: Given the fact that the Minister of Transport did apparently make reference—and he can correct me if I am wrong—to Atlantic Canada having a Third World Bangladesh-type of economy—I wonder how the Hon. Member sees that type of economy—presumably the hon. gentleman was speaking for the Government—fitting in with the view he advocated in his speech about jobs and expanding social benefits.

Mr. Redway: On a point of order—

Mr. Crosbie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are all kinds of points of order. First, I will recognize the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I would have no objection to this supine and absolutely jejune and ridiculous question if it were factually correct. But never at any time in my life have I compared the economy of the Atlantic provinces to Bangladesh, or any other "desh". So why does the hon. gentleman not get what I said, quote it correctly, and then put his question instead of trying to infer that something untoward or reprehensible was said by the Minister?

An Hon. Member: Do your research.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That was the first point of order. On the second point of order I recognize the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Redway: Right, wrong, or indifferent, Mr. Speaker, the question had no relevance whatsoever to the comments of the Hon. Member in his speech, nor to the Bill, and I would ask that you move on to the next comment or question.

Mr. Crosbie: Absolutely.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I agree that the question is not relevant to the Bill. Questions and comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate this afternoon on Bill C-11. Before I do, perhaps I could appeal to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to share with us his dictionary, so we all can find sources of new words.

Bill C-11 was actually promised some eight months ago in the Budget, and it has taken the Government that long to put together a few pages of legislation in order to enact it. Then it wants us to deal with it very quickly in all three stages in this House.

Of course we will do that, because we recognize the importance of anything that will provide a more timely payment to at least one group of Canadians to ensure that the income that they need is in their hands at a time when, as we all know, expenses can be very high and anticipated needs of children, in particular, can be met because of the availability of this money.

We will support the Bill. But we do have some concerns with some of the actual applications, and I suspect at second reading we will get to some amendments that we will pursue.

Let me say at the outset one thing that it is important that it not only say here, but that when the Government is informing the recipients it make very clear, and that is that this is not new money. This is not an amount that these people will receive over and above the credit that they will get back on their income tax. It is only an early payment of something that they would normally have received in the spring, in any case. That has to be included in any of the literature that goes out, in a very bold way, to make sure that nobody misconstrues the intent and erroneously budgets on the assumption that: "Well, it's great. They have sent me $300 now just before Christmas, and then in the spring I am going to get that much more".

We see from time to time in our constituency offices individuals who are not used to the bureaucratic processes, who do not always read the fine print, or do not clearly understand the intentions of a particular program. I can guarantee you today, even if the Government does do as I suggest and makes it very clear in its literature, that there will be calls to almost every constituency office some time late next spring when people get a cheque that is much smaller than what they thought they should be receiving.

One of the things that bothers me about the Bill, Mr. Speaker—and it is something that I have seen with the Conservative Government here and I saw it in the Province of Ontario—is that they can take a good idea, but they can bog it down in red tape. Separating out those with incomes of less than $15,000, and saying that that group of Canadians whose aggregate income is less than $15,000 will receive this advance payment but those who are above $15,000 will not, indicates to me that somebody, either through a computer system or manually, will have to spend the time and the taxpayers' dollars to make those separations. At the same time we have those people who really do not know down to the last cent what their aggregate income is. They will be phoning the appropriate government offices, whether it is Revenue Canada or the income support offices, to try to determine why they have not received their $300. So that will add to the bureaucracy, because the people answering those calls will not be doing other work which they are currently hired to do. So aside from the fairness aspect, just from a straight efficiency point of view, I think the Government should reconsider the cap of $15,000 and allow anybody who is eligible for the child tax credit to receive that $300 advance payment.

With regard to the fairness component: those individuals who have incomes above $15,000 need that money at the same time of year as those who have incomes below $15,000. Whether it is winter clothing in certain parts of the country, whether it is appliances that are aimed at the household or Christmas presents, that would be of great assistance to those individuals as well. So for two reasons I think that section has to be changed.

I do not quite accept the over-all rationale that by paying this $300 out we are going to eliminate the problems with the tax rebate discounting. There will still be Canadians, who will find a need that forces them to go to the rip-off artists who will do nothing but gouge them and take hard earned money from them. We already know that half of the 1984 discounted returns involving the child tax credit cost Canadians $20 million, $20 million which should have gone to those individuals. Instead, it went to some kind of legitimate loan sharking outfit. Back when we were dealing with Bill C-83 respecting the Tax Rebate Discounting Act, we should have banned that procedure and not allowed anyone to make money from the financial difficulties of poor Canadians. The Government should rethink what it did in that event and bring in a new improved piece of legislation which we would very happily support.

During the presentation of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) who led off the debate on Bill C-11 for our Party, she talked at length about Canada's children. She indicated that we must ensure that we provided for them. One way to provide for them is to ensure that their parents have sufficient income. If the parents have sufficient income, the children have nutritional food, a decent place of accommodation, warmth, and what they need in an economic sense to allow them to grow and become valued Canadians. The flip side is that if parents do not have those economic tools, the children do not get the right kind of food to eat or the right kind of clothing to protect them from the elements. Therefore, they will not be the same kind of productive individuals when they reach adulthood. The general government policy has been one which has worked against children and families. It has added to the problem, not helped it.

I should like to refer to some examples. It has been estimated that the partial deindexation of children's benefits will result in a real reduction in the value of government support to children and families in 20 years. We know that a dollar will buy so much today and that 10 years from now it will buy even less because of inflation. Also it has been estimated that 20 years from now the family allowance will be worth $18 per month, compared with the $31.27 of today. The child tax credit will be worth $326 per child, compared with $384 today and $480 in 1988. The family income level up to which the full credit will be paid will only be $13,800, compared with $26,330 in 1985 and $22,516 in 1986. We have a responsibility for more than just today. We have to look down the road to see what will be the implications of the policies of the Government of Canada and of Canadian political Parties for my children and their children.

In the 1985 Budget children's benefits were to be reduced by $600 million by 1990, with $55 million being pulled out in 1986 alone. The May 1985 Budget eliminated the federal tax reduction, which was a form of tax relief for low and middle income taxpayers. It would have paid them up to $50 per individual or $100 per family this year. It also shifted the personal income tax system from full to partial indexation for both personal exemptions and tax brackets.

The February 1986 Budget imposed a 3 per cent surtax on basic federal tax for all taxpayers, rich and poor alike. In terms of sales and excise taxes, taxes which tend to go after poor and middle-income earners with a greater vengeance than those in the upper quintiles, the Budget extended a 1 per cent increase in federal sales tax which was to have ended on December 31, 1988. It also raised taxes by 7 per cent on things like construction materials, cable and pay television services, and 11 per cent on other taxable goods. Also the February 1986 Budget raised the federal sales tax by another percentage point, which particularly hurts smaller communities as well as the North.

The policies of the Government support the existence of soup kitchens across the land. In many cases we are finding single parent families going to soup kitchens because their UI or welfare is no longer sufficient to provide them with basic necessities. Whether it is in Thunder Bay, Vancouver, or Toronto, soup kitchens are an indication of a sickness in society—the disease of poverty. The Government is aiding and abetting this disease by not ensuring that sufficient income levels are available to Canadians and by tampering in bits and pieces through the back door with income support programs, family allowances, and other programs designed to get money into the hands of working and poor Canadians.

In my final moments I should like to elaborate on something in which I have believed strongly for years. My Party has had a history of supporting this concept back to the days of the CCF. I am referring to the whole concept and application of a guaranteed annual income. Such a program can be designed to meet the needs of all Canadians by ensuring that they have a level of income sufficient to meet their daily needs—to provide shelter, heat, and nutritional food which are so necessary. It could be designed to minimize bureaucratic costs and to ensure that money got into the hands of those who needed it in a way which did not set up a massive bureaucracy that vastly outweighed anything in existence today. It could use taxpayers' dollars as they were intended, to support those Canadians who need support from taxpayers. I see it operating as a universal program with no means test except for the means test of the income tax system, assuming that we finally have an income tax system which is really fair.

Those Canadians who would receive the GAI would find it taxable above a certain level. If one had a full-time job at any level of pay or had income from other sources, part or all of it would be recovered through the tax system. In the context of the question which I raised with the Conservative Member who spoke prior to me, there are built-in disincentives in two of our income support systems for people to get off them.

I should like to refer to the welfare system as I know it in Ontario and to use the example of the so-called ideal family of four—two parents and two children. The mother could be working at home and the father could be attempting to find employment. While he and his family are on welfare, in addition to the imcome provided for accommodation, meals, and clothing, they receive a drug benefit card, eyeglass assistance, and their OHIP is paid for. If the father goes out and finds a job which pays him at the same level as the cheque from welfare, he has a choice. He can decide to take that job. He is one of those Canadians, and there are a lot of them out there, who wants to work. The job is not unionized. It only pays what he would get on welfare, and there is no fringe benefit package. All of a sudden, this father has to come up with the money to pay for his OHIP. There may, however, be some support. If his children or his spouse get sick, he has to find the money for the necessary medication. If a member of the family has eye problems, he has to come up with the money for glasses or whatever. From an economic standpoint, no matter how hard he wants to get out of the house and get a job because he is as frustrated as everyone else, he cannot afford to do so. Basically, the system says that you have to stay on welfare.

I recognize there is some movement now to modify that situation to allow some individuals on welfare to take a job and not be penalized. That is a positive step.

I wish I had more time to elaborate, but I see Mr. Speaker, that you have signalled to tell me that my time is up. This one case I have outlined of a guaranteed annual income where there is no built-in disincentive allows people to earn what they can, be it a part-time job or a low income job. To know that your family has sufficient income is a responsibility of this Parliament, and as soon as we can we should put in place the mechanisms to let that occur.

Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to reasonably quick passage of Bill C-11 so we can get the money into the hands of the people who need it.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL—TABLING OF GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO FIRST REPORT

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67(2), I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Government's interim response to the First Report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS—GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today Orders in Council made since the Government's last tabling before the summer adjournment. There has been a slight delay in the tabling only because we had to await yesterday's motion which named Members to the standing committees and which in turn enabled the organization meetings of those committees.

As the Government House Leader indicated to a Member opposite, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), I believe, who sought information on the status of these Orders a few days ago, once they are tabled the 30-day countdown for the committee to which they are referred begins. The Government did not wish to disadvantage any of the committees that way so we awaited the passage of yesterday's motion on committees before we tabled them.

I would like to thank Hon. Members opposite for raising this point and for their understanding on it.

PETITIONS

OBJECTION TO INCREASED TAXATION AND REDUCED GOVERNMENT SPENDING PROGRAMS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I consider it my duty to present a petition duly certified and signed by about 110 Niagara residents, most of whom reside in the riding of St. Catharines. The petitioners wish to record their objection to increased taxation and the reduced government spending programs implemented by this Government in its fight against increased deficit spending.

CALL FOR TIGHTENING OF IMMIGRATION REGULATIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions this morning. The first petition calls for the tightening of immigration regulations because of the admission of 155 Tamil boat people into Canada.

LIFTING OF SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the second petition asks Parliament to revoke all sanctions against South Africa.

REVITALIZATION OF VIA RAIL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition signed by a number of residents of the ridings of Thunder Bay—Atikokan and Thunder Bay—Nipigon who call upon the Government of Canada and the House to implement a revitalization of VIA Rail and to ensure that the necessary rolling stock for the transcontinental trains are ordered and that the contracts go to the Can-Car Rail facility in Thunder Bay to ensure continuation of employment.

CALL FOR START OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF JAPANESE CANADIANS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions which calls on the Parliament of Canada to deal honourably with Canadian citizens of Japanese descent by entering into negotiations immediately with the National Association of Japanese Canadians. The petitioners note that the NAJC is the only national organization which has dealt with these citizens and has developed a position on redress, and they call upon Parliament, therefore, to negotiate this. The petition comes from residents of Toronto and Ottawa and from some residents of the Vancouver area of British Columbia.

Introduction of Bills

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-225, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act (institutions of Parliament).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to have the Official Languages Act apply specifically to the institutions of Parliament, which, according to an age-old rule, are not bound by general legislation unless specific provision is made.

The proposed legislation would apply to the Library of Parliament and the permanent offices of the Senate and the House of Commons. The private offices of senators and Members would remain exempt.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think you will find there will be unanimous agreement to put the following motion, which would have the effect of enabling the newly reconstituted External Affairs Committee to fulfil travel obligations it had made before prorogation of the House. I move:

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada for the purpose of holding public hearings and studying Canada's official development assistance policies and programs and that the necessary staff do accompany the committee, consistent with the committee's budget as approved by the Board of Internal Economy.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED MISUSE OF COMMONS STATIONERY AND FRANKING PRIVILEGES

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning the flagrant misuse of House of Commons stationery and the frank by the eight B.C. Members of Parliament of the New Democratic Party, signed by each of them, including the Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), to deliver a blatantly political message by way of a mass mailing on the B.C. election campaign solely for political gain.

The letter in part states:

We are asking you to join with us in getting to work to elect the next provincial New Democrat government. Phone your local campaign headquarters and get involved now.

Mr. Speaker, I consider this to be an abuse of my privileges and my station as a Member of Parliament, both in terms of the proper application and use of stationery and the frank. If you look at Hansard for December 15, 1982, you will find that the position taken by the then Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, Mr. Anguish, described the position of the NDP then, as opposed to the position of the NDP now.

I ask that you rule in favour of this matter.

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Further to the comments of my hon. colleague from Kootenay West (Mr. Briscoe), I would ask that this matter be referred to the appropriate committee, perhaps the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, and request unanimous consent of this House that this letter be tabled with the House. This a blatant abuse of parliamentary privilege for political gain by the Members from Skeena (Mr. Fulton), New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) and Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

We all know that during election campaigns we are representing particular political Parties. Once we become Members of Parliament we represent all of our constituents, no matter what their political stripe. This kind of abuse must be stopped.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if you are about to hand down a ruling on the point that was just raised, perhaps I may contribute to the debate and point out that the privilege all Members have to send mail free of charge is a privilege they have under the Post Office Act and not under a Standing Order of this House. I think there is a very real danger here. How Hon. Members make use of the privilege they are granted under the Post Office Act is starting to be the subject of decisions made here in the House. This may lead to a situation where we have Members commenting on the contents of mail sent by other Members. I think the danger lies in the fact that the Chair is getting involved in ruling on the contents of sealed first-class envelopes sent to Canadians across Canada. It is the principle of the thing that bothers me. I am not saying that I support the manoeuvre of our NDP Members, but I do maintain it is not up to the Chair to start ruling on the contents of first class mail sent by Members pursuant to the Post Office Act.

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make my remarks on this issue. Every time there is an election across this country, whether it is federal or provincial, by-elections, or the referendum in Quebec, the same type of issue is raised either in the House, in a letter to the Speaker, or a letter that is sent to the appropriate committee of the House. We can all find examples of that happening and I do not think it is anything new.

Mr. Mazankowski: Blatant abuse.

Mr. Murphy: If you want to go into examples, I have a householder put out by the Minister of International Affairs with the Premier of B.C. which was sent out during the B.C. election. Obviously, that would be another example of people interfering or getting involved in the provincial elections. We all have examples.

What I am saying, and I think it is an important issue, is that yes, people do always have some political bias in their householders or their mailings. That is a well-known fact. By the rules of the House it is up to the Member to take responsibility for what he or she mails. Of course, the constituents who always have the wisdom know the source of the information, know what is going on and make the ultimate decision as to whether or not they deem it appropriate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like the record to show that whether the Speaker finds this an abuse of Members' privileges remains to be seen. It certainly is an abuse of the taxpayers' privileges. How the NDP in such a sanctimonious fashion can stand up and say it is all right for them to flog their Party in the B.C. provincial election is outrageous and disgraceful.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this whole question of the use of our franking privileges under the Canada Post Corporation Act has got to be looked into by the House. What happens is that people take a look at us as Members and say that we are abusing our franking privileges for reasons for which they were not given in the first place. I think that the matter goes deeper than the British Columbia election and the clear abuse there. I say it is "clear abuse", but Members from the New Democratic Party may say, for partisan reasons or whatever, that it is not. In any event, whether it is this particular alleged abuse or some other alleged abuse, this question of the franking privileges and the use of franking privileges by Members is surely an interest that goes to the concept of Members and the concept of the privilege of Members generally.

It reflects upon us as Members whether we are honestly conducting our business as far as the public is concerned or whether we are taking advantage of our position as Members to feather our political nest, so to speak. Whether or not it is this issue, this matter ought to be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure for a study and a report to the House, to set out for all Hon. Members the guidelines under which franking privileges might be used.

I am sure you, Sir, have received complaints from your constituents concerning material which you sent out. Whether or not it was partisan, you may have felt that it was perfectly accurate. I sent out material which people complained was perhaps an improper use of the frank. There is no question about it; the postal Act gives us a very broad right to use the frank. Indeed it directs that Members' mail should be franked.

Certainly in my view—and I think it is the view of other Hon. Members—it ought to be looked at and examined at this point by the committee.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. I think what is bothering all Members of the House is the fact that it is such a blatant abuse of the franking privilege and such a blatant political move to say, "Phone your local campaign headquarters and get involved now", when it is a provincial matter. That is what is bothering all of us.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of hypocrisy going around the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Let me finish. I have the householder of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) entitled "Report From Parliament", and there she is with Bill Vander Zalm on the cover.

Mr. Mazankowski: So what?

Mr. Waddell: So what!

Mr. Mazankowski: It is a different Party.

Mr. Murphy: Like hell it is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. No doubt the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) would like to put forward an argument on whether or not this is a question of privilege. I would ask him and other Hon. Members to confine their remarks to just that.

Mr. Waddell: I will. It is not a point of privilege. It does not affect that Member directly on the narrow technical ground. It may be a point, on examination by the committee, as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) said, about the use of the frank. If the committee wants to do that, then the committee should do it. It has the appropriate means of doing it. There is a chairman of the committee, and it has ways of taking things under consideration, but this particular point should not be referred from the Speaker.

Ms. Copps: Don't play politics.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is yelling at me—

Ms. Copps: No, no. I am the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) was not here when the referendum was going on in Quebec. She should look at some of the stuff her own Party—

Ms. Copps: Fighting for Canada is hardly the same case.

Mr. Murphy: Shut up and sit down. Why don't you get some more government business—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway has made his point.

Mr. Waddell: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not finished making my point. On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan).

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my point is on the same issue but it is somewhat different. When Your Honour is considering whether this matter should be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, the use or misuse of the frank is one issue.

Something which deals directly with the privileges of Members of the House of Commons is the use of House of Commons stationery and equipment. It is clearly within our privileges to have free stationery provided for our work as Members of Parliament. I contend that the use of the stationery itself constitutes a breach of the privileges of Members of Parliament when it is used for a provincial election purpose.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, just very briefly and just to respond to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), I would beg to differ with him in that I think this issue indeed affects all Members of the House of Commons. From the standpoint of privilege, it goes to the very heart of our functions as Members of Parliament. Anything done individually or collectively which would serve to undermine the integrity of individual Members of Parliament, or to undermine the honour or dignity of this institution, has an impact upon all of us.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who suggested this was an issue which should be clarified. I think it is time that we had some clear guidelines, rules and regulations that would give all Hon. Members some guidance in the future in respect of the use of the frank, the use of mailing privileges, and the use of House of Commons stationery and envelopes. It is a much broader issue than simply the fact that a group of New Democratic Members of Parliament saw fit to get involved in an election campaign by so directing mail to a selected list, I take it, in the Province of British Columbia.

In the interest of the honour of this institution, I would urge that this matter not be considered in the narrow context but indeed be considered in the broader context. We are all trying to improve and restore confidence in this institution, and I think this would be one way in which we could move toward achieving that objective.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I had not finished my remarks. I know I sort of interrupted myself and that you, Sir, ruled me out or cut me down. I would ask for an opportunity to be able to complete my remarks, and I will try to keep them temperate.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will understand why the Chair moved to another Hon. Member. Would you please complete your remarks as quickly as you can.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, there was no attempt on behalf of the Members to abuse privileges blatantly. The attempt was to try to get people to involve themselves in the provincial election.

Mr. Kaplan: On the NDP side.

Mr. Gauthier: Of course, on the NDP side.

Mr. Waddell: I want to tell Hon. Members that I have received no feed-back from my riding, no complaints. As the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said, I think the whole matter should be looked at in the sense that I referred to the householder of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) and to other stuff sent out by the Liberals in the referendum campaign and so on.

That is the work of the committee, and the committee chairman has it in his or her power to consider those things. I do not think it should be directed on this specific issue by the Chair. The matter has been vented in the House, and I would respectfully suggest that that is the remedy the Hon. Member should take.

Mr. Brisco: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Copps: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) rising on this question of privilege?

Ms. Copps: I am rising on a question of privilege arising out of a statement which was made by an Hon. Member during the course of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would permit us to deal with the question of privilege before the House and then I will hear the Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: Sure.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief point as well. I think we are seeing an example of an abuse by Members of Parliament in participating in such a partisan way in a provincial election. On the other hand, I have difficulty seeing how it amounts to a breach of privileges.

If constituents agree or disagree with what their Members of Parliament have done, it may tend to bring particular Members into some disrepute and criticism in their ridings. I think they deserve to be criticized and brought into disrepute for taking the step of participating in a provincial election in the way they have.

I do not know whether the Province of British Columbia, like the Province of Ontario, has limits on campaign spending. However, I can see the implications of getting one's friends or Party supporters at the other level of Government to involve themselves in some special manner in one's election campaign in a way which is worth money but is not counted within one's campaign limit. It seems to me to be an abusive thing to do. I hope the voters of British Columbia focus on this issue and make it clear in the way they vote that they do not approve of Members of Parliament using the advantages they enjoy as Members of the House of Commons to participate in such a partisan way in an election.

I also think it is going a long way to ask the Chair or a committee of the House to read the first-class mail which Members of Parliament send out and to decide on some basis or other whether it is a violation of privileges. I want respect for Members' right to be able to put what they like in the letters which they send out so far as privileges are concerned. However, so far as the approval or disapproval of the electorate is concerned, I think this debate is very well founded, but perhaps not the point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair feels that there has been sufficient argument on the point of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) and to which the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) spoke. The Chair has been assisted by the interventions from all sides of the House. I am persuaded by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault)—and that argument was supported by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)—that the Chair should not move without great care in ruling on whether or not a communication sent under the frank is a question of privilege. However, having said that, I think it is clear that there could be cases where, depending upon the content of the communication sent under the frank, it could be a question of privilege if the content worked against the right of Members to free expression and the carrying out of their obligations as Members.

I have had the opportunity to look carefully at the document in question. It is the view of the Chair—without at the moment commenting on the propriety of sending that particular document, and I want that clearly understood that I am not commenting on that at the moment—that it is not a question of privilege.

The question of propriety, which has been clearly raised as a matter of concern to Hon. Members, is properly a matter that ought to be taken up in another place. The Chair has no power to allow a private Member to table the particular document, and the Chair cannot unilaterally refer the matter to whatever committee might be appropriate to do so. That is a matter which Members can consider among themselves, and there are other means to deal with the issue. Again, I find that it is not a question of privilege. I am not commenting on whether it may very well be an appropriate subject in front of another forum.

I want to thank all Hon. Members for their interventions which have been helpful to me. Especially I want to thank the Hon. Member for Kootenay West and the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni for bringing notice of this and giving me the opportunity to see in advance the actual document.

COMMENT OF MR. MURPHY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the course of the representations to Your Honour with respect to this issue, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) stated and I quote: "Shut up and sit down. Why don't you go out and get some more government business for your family".

I believe that the Member's statement was completely unparliamentary and absolutely wrong. It was a total distortion and it was uncalled for. I would ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if it is part of the record or not, but I certainly did not mean to cast any aspersions with regard to the Member or her family. I think the record will speak for itself.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I heard the statement. The statement was also heard by my colleague. I would ask the Member, in light of the new spirit of generosity in the House, to make an unequivocal withdrawal. He knows what he said and what he said was completely wrong. It was uncalled for and it is an abuse of my privileges. He is implying that I am using my position to secure government business for my family, and that is wrong.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has not had the advantage of being able to read the "blues" nor have other Members. As is obvious, there may be somewhat of a different recollection as to what was said and what was heard. However, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) might be disposed to indicate that if the comments were offensive, whether or not they were meant to be that he would withdraw them, otherwise the Chair will have to consider the "blues" and bring this matter back to the Chamber. Would the Hon. Member for Churchill like to comment?

Mr. Murphy: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. As to the exact nature of the comments, I do not recollect every word that I said. I suspect the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) certainly heard my intent, and if she takes any offence with that, I do withdraw them without any qualifications.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg).

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me, just to go back to your earlier ruling on this matter, is it not possible—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has made the ruling and it would not be appropriate to open up that matter. I am sure that if the Hon. Member has any further matters he wishes to discuss, there is a disposition in the Chamber to discuss it further among all Members and I am sure the Hon. Member can take it to the appropriate place.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, October 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak in favour of Bill C-11. This Bill represents another in a series of Bills introduced by the Government improving family benefits. Members on all sides will recall that the first major reference given by the Government to a parliamentary committee in January, 1985 was to study family benefits and pension reform. I participated very actively in that study. During the course of our deliberations and family benefits, we made a number of findings which were reported in our parliamentary report. First, the benefits as they existed up to that time, after tax, had a roller-coaster effect. What this meant was that the worst off in our society received the least benefits. As income increased, benefits after tax increased. They increased until you hit the level of $27,000 and then very gradually decreased. A person making $50,000 received only slightly less than a person right at the poverty line.

It was the finding of our committee that benefits should be increased for low-income families, that they should remain roughly the same for middle-income family and that net benefits from the three programs should be reduced for upper-income families. At the same time, we made specific recommendations that the child tax credit should not be paid in a lump sum as part of the tax refund. We also identified that the tax rebating process, as a result of people turning in their tax refunds for a discount, was resulting in a significant loss to the taxpayers who were trying to benefit with moneys being diverted to the outside.

Might I quote two very brief extracts from the committee's report because they are directly relevant to the Bill. First:

> 5.9 There are practical problems with the Child Tax Credit as it now exists. First, for lower-income families the benefit is delivered as a yearly lump sum. Some witnesses have proposed that it be delivered monthly, with the Family Allowance, to increase the amount available for day-to-day expenses. However, we were most impressed by the evidence of the National Anti-Poverty Organization who suggested that families, who have no access to credit, appreciated receiving a bigger sum to cover larger expenses such as household repairs, back-to-school clothing and so on. We were persuaded by this argument.
> We proposed that if reform results in a substantially larger Child Tax Credit than exists at present the Government should consider the feasibility of paying the benefit out more than once a year, but not monthly.

This recommendation of our committee is directly reflected in the Bill. Let us continue:

> Second, the Child Tax Credit has encouraged the growth of tax discounters. Pursuant to the Tax Rebate Discounting Act, discounters are allowed to charge up to 15 per cent for their services. We do not want money which helps provide for the needs of families diverted to tax discounters. We feel that 15 per cent is an exorbitant rate of return for the risks discounters take in advancing refunds to low-income families.

The Government has acted on all six of the recommendations of the parliamentary committee. We have increased benefits to low-income Canadians dramatically. By the end of the transition period, the benefits will have increased to those earning the least, that is, from $1,484 a year to $1,812 a year for a family with two children in Ontario. Similarly, benefits remain the same in the key threshold area of $30,000 to $40,000, but once you get over $40,000, net benefits after tax are reduced. By the time you are looking at a family with an income of $50,000, the net benefits after tax have been reduced from $1,048 a year to $764 a year, exactly the direction which the parliamentary committee recommended. Similarly, our recommendation that the child tax credit be split into two or more installments and an advance payment made has been adopted. This will provide money at a key time of the year when winter clothing is being purchased.

Finally, the Government acted on our recommendation to limit tax discounting of family allowances in two ways. First, we passed an amendment to the Tax Rebate Discounting Act to limit the amount charged by discounters to $45 a year plus up to 5 per cent of the amount in excess of $300. As well, in providing an advance payment we are eliminating the possibility of tax discounters getting their hands on the money. This Bill will result in a payment of $300 per child to families with incomes of less than $15,000 a year. Some 700,000 families will benefit, primarily female-led families. We are acting on a problem that was directly dealt with in our report.

We also pointed out that measures of this type were necessary to combat the rising incidence of poverty. In the years from 1970 to 1980, the incidence of poverty decreased each year. However, under the last Government, in the years 1981 to 1984 inclusive, the incidence of poverty in our country increased. Members will be aware that last year, as a result of the measures we took, the incidence of poverty in Canada fell for the first time in five years. That is a very important achievement for this Government and I fully expect that it will fall again next year as a result of measures introduced in Bill C-11.

It is obvious that these measures will improve the lot of the poor. I was very disturbed yesterday to hear the Liberal Party finance critic and the health and welfare critic for the NDP suggest that these were merely administrative measures and there was no substance to the Bill. Indeed, we heard the familiar refrain that there was no new money in this Bill. Yet it is obvious to anyone who looks at it that the result of the Bill will be to put substantial new money in the hands of people who need it most. Previous to this a very high proportion of people receiving the child tax credit went to tax discounters and received only 85 cents on the dollar. Some 15 per cent of the money provided by the federal Government was being diverted to tax calculation agencies rather than being used by the people for whom it was intended.

It may be the view of the Liberal Party and the NDP that the only thing that counts around this place is spending more and more taxpayers' money without looking to the question of efficiency. It is pretty obvious to anyone who looks at it that for many families there will be an immediate increase of 15 per cent in the amount they receive as a child tax credit because of this Bill. I am surprised that the Liberal finance critic, a former Treasurer of the Province of Quebec, could suggest that money paid six months in advance is not worth any more than money paid in the late spring. Everyone knows that the cost of living is increasing, everyone knows that if you have to borrow money to buy clothing for your children or if you have to go to tax discounters, you have to pay for it, and that means benefits to the poor are decreased. It is pretty obvious that we are operating much smarter than the previous Government did because there is going to be a dramatic increase in the income of low-income families affected by this Bill.

I have outlined six specific measures that we as a Government have taken as a result of the recommendations of the all-Party committee on child benefits. However, I do not think the process has yet ended because, as all Members are aware, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated that he will be looking at social benefits in his Budget next February to see how we can, within the principles he outlined, provide more money, better directed, to those most in need. This measure is a good example of how the Government can be a lot smarter while being prudent with taxpayers' money.

Finally, the one point in this Bill which I think should be highlighted is consistent with the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs of which I am also a member. We recommended that there be tax reform in this country to produce a much more accessible and simple system for the poor. Under this Act the money will be paid automatically to those most in need based on their prior year's income. They do not have to apply for it. We feel, and I am sure Members of all Parties are aware of this, that people were not applying for benefits because they were overwhelmed by the complexity of the tax system. Under this new system there will be an automatic distribution of the money, and under the tax reform proposals which will come to the committee next month I am sure we will see a much simpler income tax form.

Finally, once again I would like to congratulate the Government for listening to the unanimous recommendations of the all-Party committee and acting so quickly to bring in this Bill which we are discussing today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member. The Bill proposes that if the payment is higher than that to which the individual concerned is entitled, the Government will require that the excess not only be repaid, but that interest will apply to that excess beginning April 30. We in the Liberal Party would like to see this amended so that only the excess paid be recovered, and I wanted to ask the Hon. Member what he thought about that. This is an important point because low-income families, at least in my riding, who are entitled to the child tax credit, the ones who are going to get this prepayment of $300 in November, surely cannot be expected to pay interest on that money if for some reason their income for the year was such that they were not entitled to receive the amount they did. Would the Hon. Member agree with us that the excess can be recovered by the Government but that charging interest is pushing it a little too far?

Mr. McCrossan: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with that. This Bill proposes to make an advance payment of two-thirds of the amount of the child tax credit to low-income families, those who earned less than $15,000 in the previous year. Families will receive the child tax credit until their income is significantly above that amount, and the amount of the child tax credit will decrease fairly slowly as income rises. What we are talking about is someone who was in very dire straits the year before but whose circumstances have improved substantially during the course of the current year. For example, the recipients in November or December of this year will likely know full well whether their income has jumped from below $15,000 to above $25,000 and whether they will be at the level at which the child tax credit decreases substantially. You will obviously be very aware of your situation if your income has jumped by over 60 per cent. I do not think it is unrealistic to ask that those people recognize that this is an advance and return it as quickly as possible if they no longer qualify for it.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I understand the point the Member is making. However, he forgets that the people to whom this prepayment is addressed are those who have possibly had changes in their family status during the year. For example, there may have been a death of a child which the Government would not know about. The child care situation may have changed during the year. The income tax department makes a mistake, and it may have done just that, yet that individual will receive that money and will be charged interest in the following year if he was not entitled to it. I think it is quite reasonable that the amount to which people are not entitled be recovered. However, many of these families are not familiar with the complexities of the income tax system and I do not understand why they should be asked to pay interest on something they did not ask for and which has been given to them because we think they need it. Why should we charge them interest on moneys which should be recovered?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for posing that question because it highlights an important part of the Bill. He asked hypothetically whether if a child has died during the year the family will receive the money without knowing they are not entitled to it. Under the administration of the previous Liberal Government, which the Member represented, if a child died during the year the family would lose the child tax credit. One of the important provisions of this Bill is that if a child dies during the year the family keeps the child tax credit. The premise of this question is flawed because we have corrected the very problem about which he posed his question.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the interventions made yesterday. I apologize to the last speaker for not having heard his intervention due to another commitment.

I fully understand the necessity for government Members to highlight the positive aspects of this Bill. Quite frankly, I am very disturbed by this Bill because if you analyse it in isolation, Bill C-11, which provides for the prepayment of the child tax credit, seems to be a step in the desirable direction. However, if you look at it in conjunction with income security and the policy that we would like to develop for Canadians for the future, you must regrettably conclude that this is only public relations to create an impression of government action and improved conditions but which actually makes no progress at all.

The Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) made interventions on this yesterday which I thought addressed very well the technicalities of this Bill and some of its shortcomings. I would like to add to those interventions an observation with regard to discounting. The provision of two payments per year instead of one per year allows for greater exposure to discounting practices. Why does the Government not accompany this Bill with a measure to eliminate, as has been done in the United States, the practice of allowing the discounting of government cheques, thus eliminating the losses thereby incurred?

I would have preferred if the Government had taken an approach which would have given Canadians the total picture rather than creating a false impression. There is nothing in this Bill about improving the redistribution of income in Canada.

There is no reference to tax reform for low-income Canadians, or to security systems to provide protection for incomes that are below the poverty line. It seems to me that the Government has lowered the poverty line arbitrarily to a level of $15,000. I cannot understand why that was done or what the reasoning for it was. I have listened to several interventions by government spokespersons and so far in this debate an explanation for that has not been given.

The disposable income of low-income families in Canada has gone down as a result of the two Budgets since 1984 because of increased federal taxation, deindexation and the totality of the child benefit package of which this Bill is a component. In the end, that detrimentally affects the income situation of Canadian families in the lower income levels. I will say more about that later. First I would like to put some facts and figures on the record to illustrate the point I am attempting to make.

The tax measures introduced by the Government in the May, 1985, and February, 1986, Budgets are affecting the personal income taxes of individuals considerably and reducing their purchasing capacity and cash-in-pocket situations. I will give you some examples of how this has been done. First, as a result of the modified indexation measure, Canadians will have $570 million less to spend. The second example is the elimination in May, 1985, of the federal tax reduction which used to be available. That has resulted in a total reduction of cash for the average consumer of $490 million. Third, when one takes into consideration the 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtax on the basic federal tax which was introduced in May, 1985, the pockets of the average consumer are soaked for an additional $550 million. When we consider the deductions that were allowed under the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan in the income tax system until May, 1985, we see an additional $80 million that Canadians cannot put aside on their own.

Finally, the 3 per cent surtax on personal income tax which was introduced in February of this year has meant that $560 million is not available and in circulation for the Canadian consumer.

When we also consider the effect of sales and excise taxes, some of which are visible and some of which are not, we see that there are some rather staggering amounts that are no longer available to the average Canadian consumer. Obviously this affects the low-income consumer more than others. The broadening of the sales tax base as a result of the 1986 Budget has meant that $510 million is no longer available to average Canadian consumers. The 1 per cent sales tax increase alone, in May, 1985, has meant that $990 million is no longer available to average Canadian consumers. The addition of the 1 per cent increase in sales tax rates, which was introduced in February of this year, means that $815 million has been cleverly soaked up, with very little political impact so far because it is virtually a hidden tax that nobody can see at the moment of purchase. The excise taxes of various kinds, introduced between the Budget in May, 1985 and the Budget in February, 1986, amount to some $390 million.

When we consider the total amount of money that has been taken from the pockets of the average Canadian consumer, particularly as it affects the low-income consumer, we see from a personal income tax point of view that there is a total reduction of $1.175 billion in available cash, so to speak. That is the combined effect of the two Budgets of May, 1985 and February, 1986. The combined effect of the sales and excise taxes in the two Budgets, at the expense of the consumer, particularly the low-income consumer, is $2.695 billion. The effect of personal income tax plus sales and excise taxes is that there is more than $3.8 billion of less disposable income available to the average Canadian. In light of that information, I wonder whether some of the speeches of yesterday and this morning would have rung the same.

When the capacity of Canadians to purchase is being adversely affected, the Government suddenly introduces Bill C-11, acclaiming its generosity by providing two advance payments and even providing some cash before Christmas. Of course, this sounds very attractive, and that is why I am objecting to such an approach in isolation from the total picture. Instead of improving the over-all situation, I believe it has been seriously degenerated at the expense of Canadian taxpayers through this kind of Progressive Conservative charity with the compliments of the Canadian Government. What a sham.

There are certain elements of the dimension of poverty in Canada that must be put on the record. For instance, in the 1960s, poverty was mainly associated with the elderly, the disabled, natives and people who lived in economically depressed areas. Today, the main groups are women, natives and disabled persons, with unemployed youth representing an emerging fourth group. That is a completely new dimension.

Second, poverty today is becoming more strongly associated with women. In 1984, the rate of poverty among non-elderly female-headed families was 46.4 per cent, compared to a rate of 11.4 per cent among male heads of families. Fifty-two per cent of unattached elderly women remain in poverty. In 1984, 2.3 million, or 56 per cent of all poor people, including children, were female.

Two-thirds to one-half of those who rely almost exclusively on federal and provincial social assistance for support consist of the elderly, the disabled, lone-parent mothers, which is another emerging group, and members of native groups.

Finally, some 56 per cent of poor Canadians worked during 1983 and few relied on social assistance, contrary to the widespread mythology that exists in many circles. Only in Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan can the working poor receive benefits while working. Only the Quebec program is specifically designed to help low-income workers.

We can see from this observation on the dimensions of poverty in Canada by David Ross, who has written extensively on social policy issues in Canada, that we have a long way to go in rectifying the situation.

Let me return to examples that relate to the family as it is affected by the Budget. First, let us look at the two-earner family earning $10,850, which is a low wage by anyone's standard. That represents half the poverty line for a metropolitan area and little more than one-quarter of the average income for a couple with two children. We find that in 1986, the family gets $23 less in family allowance than it would if the Government had not chosen to index benefits partially. That observation applies to all the families with this and similar incomes.

Because of the elimination of the federal tax reduction, the imposition of a 3 per cent surtax and the partial indexation of the tax system, a couple which earns somewhere between $10,000 and $11,000 a year pays $35 more in federal and provincial taxes. The $23 loss in family allowances and the $35 tax increase means that the family loses $58 in disposable income in 1986. This figure, of course, is included in the larger figures which I itemized for you a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, to demonstrate that actually what we are facing is a slippage, a reduction in purchasing power and a decrease in the capacity of low-income families to compete in the market-place for what they need.

It must be recognized that the same family which earns between $10,000 and $11,000 gains $60 in child benefits in 1987 because the increase in the child tax credit is more than the loss in family allowance. The family pays $85 more, however, in income tax. The family now receives a refundable sales tax credit of $145 in respect of the 1986 taxation year and, in the end, the family finds itself, as a result of this Budget, in a very peculiar situation.

In 1989 the income tax payable by the family will increase more than is offset by the child benefits and the sales tax credit gains, so that the family's disposable income in 1989 will be $48 less than it would have been without the Budgets of 1985 and 1986, and the loss will rise to $167 in 1990.

This may sound, and does sound, a bit complicated, but the accounting is important to see this measure not in isolation. It must be seen as it converges with other measures affecting the well-being, welfare and social security of the average Canadian family, particularly the 20 per cent of families at the lowest income levels across the nation. In two and a half to three years from now, in 1989, the impact of all these measures will come together, negatively affecting the purchasing power of the average Canadian family and, in particular, the income of those who are struggling at below the poverty line.

Therefore, I cannot join with others in hailing Bill C-11. I find it a measure which creates a false impression of a progressive measure which is in itself only a technique of payment, not an increase, as has been properly pointed out. It somehow creates the illusion that things are improving while in the medium term, namely, by 1989, the position of the average Canadian family, particularly those who are struggling at just above or below the poverty line, will be negatively affected. Therefore, we on this side call upon the Government to come forward with an income tax reform which will redress this situation and permit the development of an income security position for Canadians who are reaching the income levels of a minimum of around $20,000, which will permit them to regain the ground they lost as a result of the measures contained in the Budgets of 1985 and 1986.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act in order to permit a new system of advanced payments on the child tax credit for 1986, and for future years. I welcome the opportunity to speak as a member of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs and as a Member of Parliament from the prairie region, the southwestern corner of Saskatchewan. This is an area which has been treated unkindly over the past three or four years, first by drought and now what was to have been the bumper crop of 1986 is suffering serious deterioration owing to poor weather conditions.

The Prairies, as you will know, Mr. Speaker, is an area which is very heavily dependent on agriculture. Besides the actual producers, certainly much of the employment is directly dependent upon the prosperity of agriculture. It is an area in which the grain farmer in particular is feeling the pinch owing to low world grain prices, a situation which has arisen as a result of conditions beyond our borders such as the disastrous grain trade subsidy war between the United States and the European Economic Community.

It is from this "prairie" perspective that I would like to address Bill C-11, which is a part, albeit a small part, of the Government's over-all agenda which was charted back in the fall of 1984 and which has continued through the Budgets and the recent Speech from the Throne. It is a course of action involving responsible and prudent management of the economy and of the taxpayers' contributions. It aims at specific areas, economic renewal, national reconciliation, and social justice in particular.

I would like to talk about economic renewal because we cannot afford much social justice or regional assistance if our economy is moribund. The stark reality is that Government has no money of its own. This should not be a sudden inspiration. The fact is that the Government's only source of funds is those moneys that we as citizens choose to entrust to it. Obviously, we cannot continue to borrow into perpetuity for programs, social or otherwise. It is not a matter of choice. Unless the Government shows restraint, Canada will, in the not too distant future, reach the point of no return where interest charges on the national debt would be such as to consume the entire federal revenues, thus leaving no moneys for social programs such as the child tax credit.

The short-sighted opportunistic policies of the past have created a mountain of debt which has placed this nation on the very precipice of disaster. When this Government came to power, the nation's finances were in a serious state of deterioration. A string of deficits, which began back in 1970 and continued through to 1984, created a huge accumulation of debt which of itself is contributing more and more to the fiscal problems in the form of ever higher debt servicing requirements, ever higher interest payments. Furthermore, government expenditures continued to rise throughout this period continuing a trend established back in the mid-1960s. This fiscal situation is an effective barrier, a road-block, an obstacle to economic growth. Heavy government borrowing cannot help but put upward pressure on interest rates. As the debt accumulates and interest costs mount up, investors naturally become concerned about future inflation. Their concerns have the potential to manifest themselves in a downward pressure on our dollar and consequent upward interest rates.

Interest rates, as we all know, are the single determining economic factor in Canada. Lower interest rates have the potential to encourage the kind of initiative and investment on which our future prosperity depends. Lower interest rates will result in more small business activity, small business now being the backbone of this nation, and will result in more home building, more construction and, most important of all, more jobs.

We saw in September 1984 that we must alleviate the misery of unemployment and invigorate the regions of this nation. We have had to reduce government expenditures and at the same time raise government revenues in order to be able to cope with and to overcome this legacy of debt.

This Government is the first in 15 years to face reality. The Government decided to take some courageous measures toward bringing government expenditures under control by improving management procedures, by increasing government efficiency and by eliminating obsolete and ineffective government programs. For the first time in probably 40 years, discretionary government spending has actually decreased. For the first time in four years, government revenues have actually exceeded expenditures when excluding the factor of interest payments.

The trend to ever-increasing deficits has been arrested and reversed in spite of the catastrophic servicing problems arising from the compounding of interest on accumulated debt. Measures were introduced to encourage private initiative with the sure knowledge that it is the small business private sector which generates growth and employment in Canada.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My understanding is that we are debating Bill C-11. I would submit that the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) is using the pre-scripted speech designed for government Members to use in addressing the Speech from the Throne.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not believe that this is a point of order. I think the Hon. Member will probably speak on Bill C-11. I think he is getting to it. If the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) would like to ask him questions or make comments after he has finished his speech, I would be delighted to hear from him.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): I appreciate the generous intervention made by my friend, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry). I think he might be right in a court of law, but I suggest that in the court of public opinion we are given a little more leeway. I am sure he will appreciate that. Indeed I will welcome the opportunity to respond to his questions in due course.

The November 1984 economic strategy laid out the need for enhancing and drawing upon the strengths of all of the regions in order to keep a solid foundation for economic renewal which was to be based on the encouragement of public initiative, on the streamlining of Government and on responsible deficit reduction. Subsequent Budgets have continued in this direction for renewal charted in the fall of 1984.

The question to be asked now is if the strategy is working. I suggest that by any reasonable measure or standard, the policies of the Government have been successful. In terms of economic growth, the growth in the Gross Domestic Product of Canada was the second highest of all of the industrialized nations in the world last year. Inflation has been stable at around 4 per cent for the past several years creating the most encouraging investment environment in the last 15 years. Interest rates are down almost four points since election day. The prime rate is at 9.75 per cent and that is the lowest it has been in some eight and a half years. Of course, mortgage rates have responded accordingly.

Job creation is fundamentally important because more Canadians finding work will mean not only additional tax revenues coming into the pot but also reduced government expenditures through lower unemployment insurance and social assistance contributions. This is the absolute bedrock. The most significant and important problem to address at this time is unemployment, and the need for the provision of conditions under which meaningful, permanent, durable jobs will be available for Canadians is compelling. It is the task of Government to try to create the conditions and environment in which the private sector can flourish and in which private initiative can be undertaken with a minimum of red tape in the knowledge that there is some possibility of success.

The facts are there. Over the past several years, some 595,000 new jobs have been created. Youth unemployment is down by some three points. The unemployment rate has decreased from 11.7 per cent back in 1984 to 9.5 per cent at the present time. In my Province of Saskatchewan, the unemployment rate is 7.5 per cent, some two points below the national average. All of this has happened in the face of extraordinarily low commodity prices.

Clearly the results prove the correctness of the direction and thrust of our policies. We have been doing something that our predecessors never dared to do. We have been trying to grapple meaningfully with a mountain of inherited debt and at the same time help out the disadvantaged regions and deal compassionately with those who find themselves in need.

My hon. friend asked where Bill C-11 fits into all of this. It is part of the over-all strategy of the Government commenced in the fall of 1984 leading to economic renewal, to the alleviation of regional disparity and to social justice. The 1986 Budget presented a clear promise that fiscal integrity would be restored over a reasonable time frame. It also took steps to improve tax fairness, to aid small business, to help the farm community, to provide more flexibility for RSP withdrawals, to extend the fuel tax rebates for primary producers and to initiate new measures to assist low-income Canadians.

Bill C-11 calling for partial prepayment of the child tax credit is in keeping with our clear commitment to help those in our society who find themselves in need. This prepayment will provide timely assistance to Canadian families and will reduce the need for them to resort to tax refund discounting.

Last year, the 1985 Budget increased the child tax credit for lower income families from $384 per child to $454 this year, $489 next year and $524 in 1988. In instances where there are not taxes payable, the credit is refunded, thus ensuring that low-income families are able to benefit. The amount of the credit is reduced by $5 for each $100 of family income over $23,500. This child tax credit initiative has been targeted, of course, to those in society who need it most and represents a compassionate and caring approach.

As the child tax credit increased, the prevalence of tax rebate discounting services also increased. Some of these discounting services preyed on the recipients of child tax credits by charging 15 per cent of anticipated refunds. In many cases, over 50 per cent I am told, these refunds consisted solely of the child tax credit. In response to this problem, the Government passed last year an Act to amend the Tax Rebate Discounting Act so as to increase the level of consumer protection provided to those who use the tax rebate discounter to receive an immediate cash settlement of their anticipated payments. The maximum rate was reduced in that legislation to 5 per cent on any amount over $300. That legislation helped to break the cycle of dependence on the tax rebate discounting operations. Bill C-11 will certainly further that objective.

Bill C-11 will permit the Government to prepay a portion of the child tax credit that would otherwise only be payable at tax time the following spring. The legislative measures required are, first, to ensure that prepayment will be $300 per child, an amount equal to approximately two-thirds of the full credit. The remaining amount will be paid after the 1986 income tax return has been filed and processed. Second, the prepayment will be made automatically to eligible claimants who had a family income of less than $15,000. No application will be required. An estimated 725,000 families will benefit from this.

The essence of the Bill is to provide timely help, help when it is needed. This help is needed in the fall, a time when the burdens of caring for children are the greatest.

The initiative under this Bill will assist a number of farm families in my constituency who, through no fault of their own, find themselves in a difficult cash flow position. They are also heartened by a number of other measures that have been instituted by this Government, which I briefly want to mention. These include the recognition of agriculture as the most important building block in western Canada. They will remember that this Government overturned two of the most catastrophic man-made disasters ever to face western Canada in the form of the National Energy Policy and the capital gains tax. Both of those measures were dealt with by this Government in the first year.

Mr. Speaker, western Canadians remember when there was a drought and a need and this Government contributed $48 million to livestock drought assistance, and a further $150 million by way of crop disaster assistance. They recall that compulsory metric measurement was causing all sorts of grief in the fields and on the farms. They know that we allowed imperial measurement and mixed measurement on a voluntary basis. When the cattlemen were being devastated by the dumping of beef by the European Common Market, a practice that the previous Government permitted and which allowed importation of Common Market beef to increase from zero in 1980 to 50 million pounds in 1984, they will remember that it was this Government that invoked the meat import law and assisted them in their successful countervailing application. Because cash flow was tight and there was a need there, they know that we doubled the cash advance levels under the Advance Payments for Crops Act. We promised that we would make western grain stabilization more responsive to the needs of the farmer. They will recall that we instituted amendments which permit a timely interim payment in the spring, when the dollars are needed most. They know that we improved the Canada-Saskatchewan crop insurance program by increasing coverage from 70 to 80 per cent without premium increase. This same program, contributed to jointly by the farmer and the federal Government and administered by the province last year, paid out some $376 million to Saskatchewan farmers, $125 million in my riding alone.

This list goes on and on. I see that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker. I just want to close by saying that this Government has done all it can do to help the needy and the disadvantaged and to assist the regions of this country. We have done it in spite of historically low world oil and grain prices. We have persevered in spite of the legacy of debt left by our predecessors. We shall continue to build this nation and to forge a better tomorrow.

Mr. Parry: I would like to ask the Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson)—and it did not escape my notice that eventually he did get around to talking about the child tax credit—whether the Government's introduction of Bill C-11 should be construed by the Canadian people as indicating at last a commitment to that principle of universality which is so necessary to maintain not only equity within our system of family benefits, but also the commitment of all levels of income earners to such a system.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): In responding to that question, for which I thank the Member, I have a duty to point out to him, as I thought I had done on numerous occasions during my discourse, that the fiscal position of this country at this point simply does not enable us to achieve an ideal Utopian world.

I would like to quote a passage from the Fiscal Plan, which the Hon. Member has I am sure and which was presented to him as part of the Budget papers in February, 1986. On page 13 it says this:

> Rapid growth in the public debt over an extended period, as has been experienced in Canada in recent years, can seriously limit the growth potential of the economy. As the debt accumulates it fosters uncertainty and heightens fears of inflation. These erode investor confidence, reduce the incentives for risk-taking, put upward pressure on interest rates, discourage private investment and slow economic growth.
> In short, a vicious circle can be created where higher interest rates and slower economic growth put upward pressure on the deficit, adding to the debt and debt service charges, which feed back again on to interest rates and the economy.

I want to say to the Hon. Member that I share the concern which he feels for the needy in our society. But I suggest to him that the Government has only a couple of alternatives: One is to increase its revenues, the other is to decrease its expenditures. As I mentioned, there is another possibility, and that involves getting people back to work so that they can be putting into the system rather than taking out. That is the direction that this Government has pursued with some considerable success.

Mrs. Sparrow: The early payment of the child tax credit certainly demonstrates the concern for the need of low-income families in Canada. I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson). He has worked very hard to have this Bill introduced and I know all Canadians welcome it. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague in regard to the $300 per child that will be made available to the eligible claimants whose family income is less than $15,000: Does each claimant apply? Is it based on the 1985 tax return? Is it based on a 1986 estimated earned income? Also, I would like to have him explain the ramifications of an overpayment.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): The essence of the Bill is that the calculation will be based on the previous year's income, so for 1986 prepayments the calculation will be based on family income as determined in the 1985 tax return. The cut-off at $15,000 of family income was made in order to avoid problems which could arise with substantial overpayments. The limit is $23,500 of family income. Below that level the entire child tax credit is payable, but it is payable in advance automatically only to those with a family income beneath $15,000. I am sure that level was set sufficiently low in order to avoid the kind of problems which could arise in the event of overpayments, which was alluded to earlier in this debate. The balance of the payment will be received once the current income tax return has been filed and processed. It would appear, with the level set where it is, that there would be very few overpayments, but should there be overpayments they would be recovered from the recipients.

Mr. Rompkey: I was very interested in the Hon. Member's speech and I wanted to ask him about a couple of points he made. Earlier on in his speech he talked about cutting the deficit and helping the disadvantaged in the country. I take that to mean the regions, although I realize that he referred to the child tax credit as well. That is a Herculean task. The fact is that it has not happened. In cutting the deficit and trimming government programs, the Atlantic area in particular has been devastated as a result. When central Canada catches a cold, we get pneumonia, and that is exactly what has happened in terms of that particular region. The government record in cutting the deficit and helping disadvantaged regions is not very effective.

I wanted to ask him too about a topic that we share, and that is the energy policy and particularly the demise of the PGRT. If you want to help disadvantaged regions, one way to do it is by helping the Canadian oil industry. I do not know about companies in the west, but I understand many of them are having difficulty and many people are getting laid off. I do know that there are no rigs off the East Coast of Newfoundland and that projects like Hibernia are on the shelf. I want to ask the Hon. Member, if he really wants to help the disadvantaged regions, if he really thinks the National Energy Policy was so bad, and if he really believes in the demise of the PGRT, what is he going to recommend? What is he going to say to Canadians who want to work on the oil rigs? What is he going to say to small Canadian companies? What is he going to recommend to his Government to replace the PGRT and to try to put some order, some stability, some optimism, and some hope in the energy industry, and particularly the small Canadian companies in Canada?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond to the first point of the Hon. Member. I think we have been over it many times. We had the choice of going along the old path. It was a wide and low road, and it had been travelled many times in the past. It was a road which involved spending without responsibility, a road which involved handing out programs without responsible taxation, and a road which led our country to the edge of bankruptcy. It is a road which leads to nowhere.

I think it has been stated and restated a thousand times that if we persist in the ways of the past, in the old ways, we will have a debt with servicing charges which will consume all revenue. In that event there would be no funds for the day-to-day operations of the country, let alone the kinds of programs or social net to which Canadians have become accustomed. We really have no alternative. We cannot carry on with the old ways of the previous Government of which the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) was a Member. Clearly a different approach has been necessary.

It is fairly evident, by examining every available statistic and every available critique, that the handling of the economy by the Government to date has been reasonable. I think the results are pretty clear. We are walking a very precarious line. We would like to do more; there is no question about it. The Government would like nothing better than to open the coffers wide and come forth with all sorts of programs. However, they cost money, and if by doing so we cause a run on the dollar and shoot interest rates up three or four points, we have accomplished nothing.

With regard to the Hon. Member's second point, I must say I was somewhat confused by the question. I had understood, when he talked about replacing the PGRT, that in fact it was a tax burden. The industry was very vociferous in wanting it taken off. In fact, the Government has responded by eliminating it. It forms part of an over-all package designed to try to stimulate activity in the industry and to get away from the old policies which involved taxation before getting down to the bottom line. We must provide for an environment where Canadians can earn some money and be taxed after they make it rather than before.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson); he made some interesting points. I assure the House that there are many people in my constituency of Saskatoon East who will certainly welcome receiving some advance payment in the form of the tax credit proposed in Bill C-11, particularly at this time of the year.

On behalf of the agriculturaily based people in Saskatchewan, who are the backbone of our economy, does the Hon. Member see a parallel between western grain stabilization and the child tax credit; in other words, giving people assistance when they most require it?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) for his observation and question. I certainly think he has hit upon one of the very important thrusts in Bill C-11, that is, to provide timely assistance to those who need it.

The Western Grain Stabilization Act was amended last year in order to permit timely interim payments so that producers of the country could have the funds in time for spring seeding. Indeed, one of the purposes of Bill C-11 is to enable recipients of the child tax credit to receive a timely interim payment, a payment in the fall when the expenses of running a family are highest. There is a very significant parallel. It is all part of the over-all thrust of the Government to try to put funds into the hands of Canadians when they need it, not when some bureaucrat thinks they should have it.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in the debate this afternoon on Bill C-11, which represents the first of the measures growing from last February's Budget that the Government has brought before us for consideration.

The measure has been debated by speakers from all three Parties in terms of its significance, with members of the Government arguing for its importance, and with members of the Opposition making more of it as a change in the administration of one particular part of the child benefit package provided by Canadian Parliaments in years past for families in Canada. My own feeling tends to be toward the latter one. I see it more in the nature of an administrative change than a change of great significance. However, who would deny the importance of putting money into the hands of families late in the year as winter sets in and before Christmas in order to allow them to make use of the money? Since this money will be going to the more needy families in Canada, those with incomes in the previous year under $15,000, it will certainly be a significant advance to them.

The Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare heard many representations while it was considering child benefit provisions over the past 18 months. Certainly presentations were made about the timing and the administration of the child tax credit. There were those who pointed out the importance of this payment to families, a payment which is in the hands of mothers at whatever point they may receive it and which allows them to make purchases that are so important to poorer families. Those with very limited incomes see very small cheques from week to week. For them to have this lump sum, a sum which for 1986 will be $454 per child, will certainly put into their hands a significant amount of money with which they can make the kinds of purchases households inevitably require at various times. One can think easily of the need for appliances, the cost of winter clothing, and all kinds of needs of children which the poor find very difficult to provide from the weekly incomes they may otherwise have. Obviously a payment of $300 per child, to be received some time late in the calendar year and to be based upon the previous year's income to determine who receives it, will be very important. I am sure all of us join in in recognizing the validity of making the change.

However, one aspect of it that concerns me is the possibility that part of this change in administration has been made because of the existence of tax discounting. Discounters were allowed over the past several years to develop their business by working out income tax returns, advancing part of the returns to the persons for whom they made the calculations, and then taking off consent forms which entitled them to receive the total returns after they were administered by Revenue Canada. The practice of tax discounting has led to some monstrous abuses. If this year's change in the administration of the child tax credit is something like a Christmas gift for 1986 from the Parliament of Canada, last year's gift in a sense might have been the passage on December 20 of Bill C-83 which amended the Tax Rebate Discounting Act and established limits on how much tax discounters could take.

I note that discounters were allowed to keep a full 15 per cent on the first $300 of a refund, which of course nicely matches the amount being advanced this time, and 5 per cent on any portion above $300. For those receiving a little more than the tax credit and perhaps a provincial tax credit of some sort or another—and I am thinking of the one in Ontario with which I am familiar—the $300 might well represent the larger part of what they were receiving. In fact 15 per cent of that or $45 over a few weeks—and certainly it would be no more than two months or three months between the filing of the return and receipt of the money by the discounters—represents a very high rate of return.

What should have been done, as has been done in the United States, is to end this particular practice of discounting. The fact that two-thirds of those who were discounting tax returns had incomes under $8,000 and that half of the discounted returns in 1984 involved child tax credits indicates something of the significance of the failure of the Government last year to put before Parliament a measure to end this practice. When I point out the further fact that almost $20 million of the discounted child benefits ended up in the hands of discount firms—and $20 million seems an outrageous amount of money which the Parliament of Canada had wished to put in the pockets of mothers for the sake of their children—is quite monstrous. That leads me to say that if the purpose of the provision this year is designed to prevent tax discounters from getting as much money then it represents a curious sort of thing.

On the one hand I have conceded that there is a gain to families. There is a sort of social gain from this change in administration, but it would seem to me that the obligation put on Revenue Canada to pay these cheques out is going to cost the Government something. If that were to be done only for the failure to deal fully with tax discounters, it would represent a very nice way in which millions of dollars is remaining in the hands of the tax discounters while the people of Canada have to pay the additional money for making these advances. If the purpose was to avoid tax discounting, then it is costing the Canadian taxpayer a good deal. If it is designed to put money in the hands of mothers at a time when they can use it and to spread out the payments early in the winter rather than at the end of the winter, it achieves its original purpose and of that I am not being critical.

Just looking at one particular item in the child benefit package can easily take our attention away from the entire problem that faces us. I would like to spend a few moments on other matters, Mr. Speaker. The increase in the child tax credit, and this particular change in the way it is administered, is a relatively small part of what the Conservative Government has done in the area of family benefits. We have had a great deal of talk about reform. We received from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) early in 1985 a booklet setting forth various possibilities and suggesting the desire of the Government to make savings in some areas in order to focus the money better toward those most in need. That last phrase, the need of some Canadians over others, has been a refrain in all of this discussion. The tragic thing that happened through 1985 is that the actual decisions which the Government made in following through on this supposed reform did not lead to changes that saw the total budget in this area being better targeted. What we saw instead was a decision to reduce benefits and to use the saving in order to reduce the deficit of the Canadian Government. That decision, which was quite clear by the time the Finance Minister presented his Budget in May, 1985 and which the Minister of National Health and Welfare conceded when he spoke in the House in September, 1985, is one I want to explore. Though we see one particular decision on the child tax credit that is to the advantage of poorer Canadian families, other actions that have been taken on the family allowance, on the child tax exemption, even on the child tax credit itself in the long run, are decisions to the loss of Canadian families.

There was a year ago the struggle over deindexation of the family allowance itself. The Government had been severely stung, harshly attacked, and justly attacked in June, 1985, for its decision to deindex the old age pension. That battle the people of Canada won. We in the New Democratic Party and in the Opposition generally were pleased about that victory for the people of Canada.

The tragedy of the situation for children and for families was that the battle to prevent deindexation of the family allowance was not won. The Government insisted that in the future the inflationary increase in family allowance payments would be decreased by 3 per cent each year. At times when the inflation rate is only 4 per cent or so, that represents a deflation by three-quarters of the amount that the family allowance would grow. If we remain in the economic doldrums in which the country has been for some time, which is marked, among other things, by these lower inflation rates, we will see very significant decreases in the real value of the family allowance. We will see a dropping from over $30 down toward $18 over the next 20 years. That seems to me to be a very significant attack on Canadian families ultimately. It represents a fiscal spending decision in the Finance Department which contradicts all the rhetoric of the Government as far as its concern about families is concerned.

When we look at the child tax credit itself, we see a significant increase by $70 this year, and we see plans to increase the child tax credit for 1987 and 1988. Then some of those other provisions kick in and we have the deindexation of increases in the child tax credit after that, with the result that over the years through the 1990s and after the turn of the century families will see that figure shrinking too.

For us in the New Democratic Party concerned about Canadian families in their various situations, not just the most needy but average Canadian families, the working poor all across the country, these decisions were mistakes. What we should have had was a significant increase in the child tax credit, not by the $80 that takes it to $454 but rather by some 80 per cent over the base of the previous year. That would cost the Canadian Government a fair amount of money, but other decisions could be made. If we were seeing a genuine reform of the child benefit package which reflected and responded to the needs of Canadian families and at the same time we saw the kind of reform of the tax system which Governments should be carrying out to ensure that the Government has the resources needed to provide for Canadian needs and to give us the resources here in Parliament to meet those various needs, then there would not be the kind of crisis the Conservatives are always talking about. We could find the resources.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if we had had a really thorough minimum tax we would have raised more than enough money to cover the costs of the child tax credit which we had proposed with an 80 per cent increase in it. If we took the 1981 MacEachen Budget and the reductions in marginal rates for the wealthy Canadians and rolled those back, we would have more than $1 billion to use for the purposes of the child benefit package.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it one o'clock, after three o'clock the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) will have five minutes remaining for his debate plus a 10-minute period for questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

STATUS OF WOMEN

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, up until October 18, 1929, your mother and mine, your grandmother and mine, and your great-aunts and mine did not know that they were not legal persons in this great land of ours. It took five courageous Albertan women to challenge the law all the way to London, England, to get an interpretation of the BNA. Only then were women in Canada declared persons in their own right. That was an historic and landmark decision which I salute today. However, women still remain disadvantaged in terms of income, social and employment benefits, and pensions. The Government has legislated a loss of economic rights for women through deindexation of family allowances, discrimination in spousal allowances, and in the child tax credit. Equal sharing in pension benefits has not been achieved, and true employment equity will not be realized because there is no mandatory enforcement mechanism.

Just as those five women were not content with the way things were in 1929, we are not content in 1986. Women, speak out or your silence will be taken as acceptance or, worse still, satisfaction with the way things are.

NATIONAL LITERACY DAY

CAMPAIGN TO COMBAT ILLITERACY

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was National Give the Gift of Literacy Day. This was the first occasion for the observance of a highly commendable initiative by Canada's private sector. The Canadian Book and Periodical Development Council has set a three-year goal to raise $400,000 to combat illiteracy across Canada. This is precisely the type of partnership and momentum in our society which our Government wishes to support. I personally am pleased that the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) will carry the lead federal role in this initiative.

An estimated four million Canadians lack the necessary reading and writing skills to take part in many activities which the majority of Canadians take for granted. I am confident that the Secretary of State will provide the national leadership needed on this issue to enhance public awareness, and launch joint ventures which can help overcome this silent but very pervasive barrier to citizen participation.

FINANCE

NECESSITY FOR MAJOR INCOME TAX REFORM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, Gaz Métropolitain today has been awarded first prize among all companies which pay no corporate taxes.

Indeed, through a series of tax measures implemented by the Liberals and the Conservatives, this company was given the right not to pay any corporate taxes for four years on profits of about $61.1 million.

Had Gaz Métropolitain been expected to pay even only 25 per cent of the corporate tax rate applicable to its profits, average Canadian men and women would have paid $15 million less in taxes.

May this first prize stand as a reminder to the Conservative Government that a major overhaul of the tax system is urgent and long overdue.

SMALL BUSINESS

DYNAMIC POSSIBILITIES OF SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government will be making every effort to promote small- and medium-sized companies throughout Canada during Small Business Week, October 19 to 25, whose theme is: Managing for Success.

The week's activities will be sponsored by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in co-operation with the Federal Business Development Bank and other organizations such as Boards of Trade which will hold over 600 various events from coast to coast.

In recent years small business has led the way in terms of job creation in Canada. The Conservative Government is fully aware of the dynamic economic prospects of small business.

In his economic renewal statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stressed the need to promote the entrepreneurship and risk-taking spirit. Therefore I invite all businessmen to meet with officials of various federal departments who will make themselves available to provide information on Government services and programs.

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO SHOW GREATER JUSTICE FOR UNEMPLOYED CANADIANS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) swore there would be no cuts in unemployment insurance benefits. So how does he reconcile that with what was said by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), who clearly indicated in the document that the Government saved $30 million on unemployment insurance benefits for pre-retirees?

Mr. Speaker, there are 50,000 Canadians whose unemployment insurance benefits have been cut following a decision by this Government.

And, Mr. Speaker, if this Government approves the Forget Report's recommendations, Quebec stands to lose $930 million; Newfoundland, $210 million; Prince Edward Island, $50 million; Nova Scotia, $130 million; New Brunswick, $230; Saskatchewan, $60 million; Alberta, $130 million and British Columbia, $430 million.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all Conservative Members to wake up and force this Government to be fairer to unemployed Canadians.

MULTICULTURALISM

GOVERNMENT'S OPPOSITION TO RACISM AND DISCRIMINATION

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity to speak from this end of the House. The Throne Speech on October 1 renewed the Government's commitment to multiculturalism and the ethnic communities in Canada. The Government encourages the entrepreneurial spirit which characterizes our many minority communities which contribute so essentially to Canada's economic development. Any existing remnants of institutional barriers are being dismantled. This is indeed welcome news in my riding of Edmonton East with its large and varied ethnic communities.

We have taken a positive leadership role in opposing all forms of racism and discrimination. We will continue to recognize the great contribution made to Canada's social and economic fabric by our many different cultures. Mr. Speaker, multiculturalism has been and will continue to be a top priority of the Government.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—DISMISSAL OF WORKERS FROM MOZAMBIQUE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, last week the Government of South Africa once again tried to protect apartheid by increasing its aggression against the front-line states of southern Africa. South Africa's firing of tens of thousands of Mozambiquans working in South Africa, on top of military attacks against Mozambique by forces mounted in South Africa, may well mean outright starvation for many in Mozambique.

Canada takes pride in being in the forefront of the struggle against apartheid. The Government was warned by CIDA in February and by the Human Rights Committee this summer of the need to prepare plans for helping the front-line states, including Mozambique.

I now call upon the Government to raise Mozambique immediately from the lowest CIDA category for bilateral aid to the highest category, to reinstate CIDA humanitarian and technical aid to the African National Congress, and to rally other like-minded Governments and multilateral organizations to co-ordinate a response to South African aggression.

NEWFOUNDLAND SUPREME COURT VACANCIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, justice delayed is justice denied. Like all Canadians, the people of Newfoundland have a right to a fair and speedy trial, but at present a full 20 per cent of the positions on the Supreme Court of Newfoundland are vacant, including that of Chief Justice. This is the responsibility of the new Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and his delay is unacceptable.

One reason for the delay in filling the vacancies mentioned in the St. John's Sunday Express is that there is widespread opposition to the Minister's reported plan to appoint the present Minister of Energy of the Newfoundland Government to head the court. The Canadian Bar Association has come out very strongly against the appointment of active politicians to the bench and the Minister of Justice has expressed a willingness to accept their advice. The Minister should do his duty and make the necessary appointments.

This is not a hypothetical problem, Mr. Speaker. There is a backlog of cases before the Newfoundland Supreme Court which must be heard. There are 31 criminal cases and 365 civil cases awaiting hearing. With five judges missing, the Minister of Justice should be called on to do his duty or resign.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—CALL FOR SUSPENSION OF PRESIDENT

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): "Button, button, who's got the button?" At the CBC though the game is "Million, million, who's got $57 million?" How can Pierre Juneau claim that the CBC has increased its operating efficiency when $57 million is unaccounted for? In the CBC annual report the Auditor General claimed, "I am unable to express an opinion as to whether these financial statements are presented fairly in accordance with acceptable accounting principles". Is that good conduct, Mr. Juneau? I think not. The Auditor General went on to say, "In my opinion the Corporation did not maintain proper books of accounts". Is that good conduct, Mr. Juneau? I think not.

Can you imagine if a Minister of the Crown were to come before Parliament with $57 million unaccounted for?

As a member of the Communications and Culture Committee I call upon the Minister to suspend Pierre Juneau immediately from his duties until this blatant incompetence is fully examined by the Public Accounts Committee.

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, just two weeks after the big talk in the Throne Speech about the need for new initiatives in the area of research and development, the Conservative Government has announced yet another round of budget cut-backs to the flagship of scientific research in Canada, the National Research Council.

These drastic new cuts to the NRC budget will cost the agency over $20 million and eliminate up to 200 jobs. Irreplaceable research programs will once again be lost to Canada, including the very photochemistry and kinetics laboratory where Professor John Polanyi began his Nobel Prize winning work. Jobs and astrophysic research in an institute named after another Canadian Nobel Prize winner, Gerhardt Herzberg, will also be cut.

Since the Conservatives came to power, the National Research Council has been forced to endure a reduction of almost one-quarter of its budget and almost one-sixth of its workforce. Many of the most highly skilled scientists, technicians, laboratory assistants and support staff who have lost their jobs are my constituents. I can tell you that they are demoralized and disgusted with the Government's approach to research and science policy. It is no wonder that Canada is losing its scientific talent and intellectual resources to other countries.

When the Conservatives announced that they would double their spending on research and development in Canada, little did we dream that they would be cutting it instead in this dastardly way.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

FIRE SERVICES EXEMPLARY SERVICE MEDAL—INELIGIBILITY OF RETIRED FIREFIGHTERS

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, many retired firefighters across Canada are being discriminated against by their exclusion from the list of eligible candidates for the Fire Services Exemplary Service Medal.

The criteria for this honour stipulate that firefighters who have been on a force on or after August 29, 1985, with 20 years service, are eligible. Therefore a firefighter who retired on August 28, 1985, does not meet the eligibility requirements as outlined by the Chancellery of Canadian Orders and Decorations.

My concern is for those firefighters who served not only for many years before August 29, 1985, but for those who displayed exemplary qualities of leadership and selflessness, who should not be discriminated against because of age or date of retirement. Therefore I urge the Government to remove the August 29, 1985, eligibility deadline for the Fire Services Medal so that as many as 5,000 retired firefighters can be considered for this national honour.

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—CHANGES IN DEPARTMENTAL ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, with universities and colleges in Toronto closed down in protest by administrators, faculty, and students alike, our national Liberal task force is going across Canada for the next three weeks to pinpoint immediate steps the federal Government could take to rectify the grave crisis in the field of post-secondary education.

Why has the Government changed those individuals responsible for post-secondary education twice over the past two years? We now have our third Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), and our third Deputy Minister. Is it because they were all incompetent, or was it because those Ministers and Deputy Ministers were embarrassed by the Government's betrayal of our youth and our country's future?

Does the Government have anything creative to offer to the more than one million students and teachers in our colleges and universities other than cuts to the transfer payments formula, a freeze on the level of student loans, and proposing to call yet another conference to stall off federal action?

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

USE OF POSTAL FRANK BY NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, a former New Democratic Member, Mr. Anguish, stated in the House on December 15, 1982, that a Member's frank must be used:

> —in a way that upholds the honour of this institution. This is not accomplished if Members use their privilege as Members of Parliament, especially with regard to franking of correspondence, to send correspondence which has a political leaning or nature to it.

As usual, the New Democratic Party speaks from both sides of its mouth when just such an abuse is being committed by NDP Members from Skeena (Mr. Fulton), New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), Cowichin—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), and Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). They have all signed a blatantly political B. C. election campaign letter on House of Commons stationery and mass mailed it, postage free, to British Columbia.

NEED FOR REPLACEMENT OF PASSENGER CARS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday morning I had the opportunity to meet over a thousand workers at the Can Car rail plant in Thunder Bay. They are members of the Canadian Auto Workers and the Office and Professional Employees International Union. They asked me to send a message to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). They believe that it is important that Canada, as a nation, replace its existing VIA Rail transcontinental passenger cars with new ultramodern double-deck equipment. They believe that a revitalized VIA is essential to the Canadian economy.

They also know that their jobs depend on VIA getting the funds in order that that contract for double-decker cars can be placed. Eleven hundred jobs at Can Car in Thunder Bay, along with jobs for Bombardier, depend on the Government ensuring that VIA has the necessary funds to replace its rolling stock.

I call upon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and his cabinet colleagues to announce immediately they will provide the necessary funds for this project.

FORGET COMMISSION—REPORTED RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the reported recommendations which are contained in the Forget Commission Report. We have information which proves conclusively that the Government of Canada is participating with this particular Commission in trying to take moneys away from the very people who are in desperate need. That is typical of the policy and ideology of the Party opposite which is simply that there is no room in this country for weak regions, weak businesses and, more particularly, weak individuals who, through no fault of their own, cannot find any employment.

The recommendations contained in the Forget Commission Report would see $210 million dumped out of Newfoundland's economy, $50 million from Prince Edward Island, $130 million from Nova Scotia, $230 million from New Brunswick, $930 million from Quebec, $60 million from Saskatchewan, and $430 million from British Columbia.

The unemployed do not need a signal from the Government of Canada which tells them it wants to take away their last and only hope of survival. What the unemployed and the weak people need is assurances from the Government that it will come forth with a job strategy program which will provide opportunities for them.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL CUT-BACKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has gone overboard in its admiration for the Diefenbaker Government. It is now trying to repeat the Avro Arrow disaster.

The President of the National Research Council of Canada said yesterday that the latest cut-backs at the Council were regrettable, tragic and worse.

My question is as follows: How can the Minister justify cut-backs that according to the President of the Council are regrettable, tragic and a threat to Canada's economic future?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would help if I told the Hon. Member that in the Speech from the Throne there is an announcement of $1 billion of new money going into university research. Hundreds of millions of dollars have gone into provincial subagreements to strengthen regional capabilities in the new industrial sector. There is $800 million going into the space program which led the President of the NRC to say: "We are presently engaged in building up new programs for which the Government has provided new resources", one of these being biotechnology and one being a space program, 40 per cent of which will be allocated to the NRC. That is what—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has a lot of nerve to say that, when the President of the National Research Council has called these cuts "tragic".

LABORATORY WORK

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): The internationally recognized member of the Order of Canada, Dr. Basinski, said yesterday when his position was slashed: "It is easy to wreck a lab. It is extremely difficult and takes decades to build one up again". If it takes a generation to repair the damage that the Minister is inflicting on the Council, why is he destroying these research teams? No more Avro Arrows!

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, there is no destruction of any research teams.

Mr. Axworthy: You can say that with a straight face? Get serious. Shame on you.

Mr. Oberle: With respect to the specific person the Hon. Member mentioned, his information is once again false. We make no apologies. There are no cuts. There are reallocations and reassignments in line with new priorities. We are going into the 21st century; that is what we are doing.

An Hon. Member: You know that's not true.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, if the Nobel Prize winner, Dr. John Polanyi, was starting his career today and turned up at the door of the NRC, it would be slammed in his face because the Minister would have closed the lab at the time he began his career. Why has the Minister slammed the door on future Canadian Nobel Prize winners?

An Hon. Member: Because he doesn't know any better.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member mentioned Professor Polanyi of whom we are all so proud. Professor Polanyi is a recipient of precisely the money I mentioned, the $1 billion which is going into university research, because that is where he worked.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh, come on. Don't give us that nonsense.

Mr. Oberle: And he was the recipient of $1.5 million.

Mr. Caccia: Sit down.

Mr. Oberle: That is what resulted in his Nobel Prize.

Mr. Axworthy: You are an embarrassment.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT COMPETITIVENESS OF CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. His own election promises of 1984, the policies of our trading partners and particularly the United States which spends double what we do on research and development, and the comments of the very distinguished President of the National Research Council have all indicated that Canada needs to do more and spend more on research and development. Why is the Minister jeopardizing the competitiveness of Canadian industry with his broken promises and the cut-backs that occurred yesterday?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, not only do I agree with the Hon.

Member that we must spend more but I also announced that we are spending more: $1 billion over the next five years into universities, hundreds of millions of dollars into the provinces, $800 million to get us to the new frontier. These people might want to torque around in the 19th century but we are looking to the 21st century.

INDUSTRIAL SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister would not want to mislead the House. Pursuant to the Minister's own estimates for the National Research Council of Canada, $34 million will be cut in this fiscal year from direct support for industrial innovation and development. Will the Minister tell the House why these cut-backs which will jeopardize Canadian industry are being made? Do not be speaking out of both sides of your mouth.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the reallocations being undertaken by the NRC were announced yesterday. There are no reallocations to the Industrial Support Program.

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF FUNDING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the same Minister. The Nobel Prize given to Dr. Polanyi yesterday indicated the respect the international scientific community has for the work of Canadian scientists. The same day, the Government negated that achievement by cutting many of the basic research programs conducted by the National Research Council. Today will the Government recognize the achievement of Dr. Polanyi and many others at the NRC by restoring the very small amount necessary, some $20 million per year, so that future Canadian researchers will have the same opportunities Dr. Polanyi had?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Polanyi has not been associated with the National Research Council for some time. He is a professor at the University of Toronto. I just reiterated what was in the Throne Speech. There is a strengthening of our university research capability which must be linked with the training and teaching of highly qualified personnel to the tune of $1 billion.

BASIC RESEARCH FUNDING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Polanyi is a long-term critic of efforts on the part of Canadian Governments in the field of scientific research. In 1976 he said:

> We are in the process of forcing mediocrity on our established researchers, while denying even that dubious privilege to our aspiring scientists.

Does the Minister agree with Dr. Polanyi's concerns about funding basic research, and if so, what plans does the Government have to redress the disaster dealt to the NRC?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, yes, I do support Dr. Polanyi's assertion that we do have to spend more money. That is why I announced more money for university research. The students who have worked with Dr. Polanyi throughout all these years would certainly not agree that there is mediocrity in their university.

SCIENTISTS EMPLOYED BY COUNCIL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, what explanation is the Minister prepared to offer to the many scientists who have worked for the NRC for 20 or 30 years, who have gained national or international recognition for their work, and who have been told in the last day or two that their employment has been terminated? Is that the kind of thanks this country will give to those talented people?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first I am pleased that the Hon. Member has given me the chance to say that their employment has not been terminated and perhaps to ask him why he would insist on destroying the morale of the finest institution we have in this country.

GOVERNMENT'S PRIORITIES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

The reallocation of funds referred to by the Minister is proceeding on the basis of some very strange priorities.

Dr. Lark Kerwin tells us that projects in the medical field will be cut, and this includes, for instance, research on the preservation of blood plasma. And meanwhile, the Government wants to support U.S. space projects.

I would like to ask the Minister where this Government's priorities lie. Should the health of Canadians come first, or should we support U.S. space projects? Where are this Government's priorities?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, just to put the record straight, I will quote Dr. Kerwin who said: "We are still Canada's largest and strongest general purpose research agency and do intend to go on into a period of expansion".

CUT-BACKS IN TOXICOLOGY RESEARCH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, among the areas that unfortunately will suffer cut-backs, we find the ecotoxicology section at the National Research Council, which tells Canadians how they can combat the toxicity of pollutants.

I want to ask why a Government that says it is trying to fight pollution has decided to axe the toxicology section at the National Research Council. Is that an acceptable priority?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the chance to examine in detail the reallocations that were made. I wish to take this opportunity to assure the House that there will be no injury to public health, to public safety, or to the environment. If the programs from which the reallocations are intended to come are not already carried out in another Department of the Government or in a university, I shall not be signing the Estimates which have to be produced for next year.

SCIENTISTS' POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Would he tell us who among the NRC, the Science Council, representatives of any scientific organization in the country, any industrial scientists, or any of the hundreds of academic scientists who have written to him and various Members of the House, recommended the savaging of the NRC for space research or any of the other hare-brained cuts or reallocations in scientific research support the Government has perpetrated?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I could cite hundreds of examples, letters, and recommendations which I have received from all the associations to which the Hon. Member referred, telling me of the need to readjust our priorities, to ensure that we have the necessary highly qualified personnel, to ensure that we are in a position to cope with the new society in terms of strategic technologies which underpin our industrial capacity, and to ensure that we are in a position to stay in the fast current which will lead us into the next century. That is what these people are telling me.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, of course the Minister has not answered my question. Perhaps he can answer the following one. For a Government for which trust is a problem, how does it expect scientists whose advice has already been ignored to believe now that they will have any impact at all upon government policy by participation in the so-called four point program to strengthen science announced in the Throne Speech?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech is quite explicit. If there is one area where the Government has identified a clear priority, it is in the area of research and development and science related activities. This is why we have identified $1 billion of new money for university funding, and this is why we have attempted through industrial subagreements to allay regional disparity through science and technology and all other programs inherent in the Throne Speech.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ELECTROCHEMICAL RESEARCH CENTRE IN MAURICIE

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. My region of central Mauricie is recognized as one of the cradles of the electrochemical and electrometallurgical industry in Canada.

Following the 1984 election, the Government announced that an electrochemical research centre, planned for central Mauricie, would not be built, but that it was negotiating the conclusion, the content and the administration of an agreement for a research program with the IREQ. Since then, nothing.

In view of the importance of this research centre for the economic recovery of our region, could the Minister tell us what he is planning to do to expedite these negotiations? Will he have the guts to reconsider his decision and decide to build a centre separate from that of the IREQ, as suggested and wished for by the NRC?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his first question in the House. The project to which he is referring has nothing to do with any involvement of the National Research Council but would come about as a result of the subagreement we have with Quebec. Let me tell the Hon. Member that there is perhaps a greater sensitivity in the Province of Quebec for science and technology, and that is why we have a $100 million science and technology subagreement with that province. I will do whatever I can to examine the Hon. Member's concern.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN IREQ AND HYDRO-QUEBEC

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if he could indicate the terms of the agreement between the IREQ and Quebec Hydro concerning the centre and the possibility for NRC people to do research at the IREQ centre?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the initiative has come from the Province of Quebec. Question Period would not lend itself to permit me to give the Hon. Member every detail of the initiative, but I will undertake to procure it and communicate it to him in another fashion.

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister two weeks ago announced that there would be $1 billion for grain farmers across Canada. Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm, as farm groups have told us today, that the federal Government has no specific proposals to make to the farm groups that are meeting with the various Ministers this afternoon?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what the Prime Minister and what the Minister of Agriculture have said in this House on previous occasions, namely, that a meeting was held with the provincial Deputy Ministers of Agriculture. Today, I believe, a meeting is being held with representatives of farm organizations.

This Government does not choose to outline its programs in a unilateral manner but seeks co-operation and the goodwill of the producing community and the provinces to put together the best and the biggest farm aid package ever put together in the history of this country.

REQUEST FOR SPECIFIC PROPOSALS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister. This is not a new problem. The problem the grain farmers face has been known for many, many months. Why is it that the Government does not have any specific proposal? Why after all this time are there not specific proposals about which these farm groups can be consulted?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad the Hon. Member does not pay attention to what goes on in the agricultural community because on August 27 the federal Minister of Agriculture and his provincial counterparts did meet to lay out a strategy for assistance to those producer groups affected by the price war in commodities, namely, grain and other commodities affected in the international marketplace. That is precisely what is going on. At that time a figure of around a billion dollars was outlined. This Government has responded indicating a willingness to support the farmers of Canada to the order of approximately a billion dollars. The details are now being worked out.

Mr. Murphy: The banks got better treatment than that.

POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT MAKING CUT-BACKS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns the changes to the unemployment insurance system recommended by the Forget Commission.

Can the Minister tell us whether he was informed at his meetings with Mr. Forget that the Government should reduce its expenditures by $2.37 billion on the backs of seasonal, temporary and part-time workers who work less than six months a year?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as he did yesterday and the day before, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has referred to the recommendations of the Forget report. I have to tell him that, when the Government establishes a Royal Commission, it must then wait for the Commission to table its report officially. It will do so on November 30, 1986.

POSSIBILITY OF MAKING CUT-BACKS IN RELATION TO CERTAIN GROUPS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, did the Minister learn in his two meetings with Mr. Forget that, according to the recommendations of the Commission, the Government should take away 40 per cent from the group of workers with an income under $200 a week while the cut-back will be 22 per cent for those with a weekly income over $400. Is the Minister aware of that?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have said many times that it is wrong to quote what a report might say to try to put fear into the minds of Canadians. This is an example of such a practice.

COMMISSION'S REPORT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, a Minister who wants us to believe that he hears no evil, sees no evil, and refuses to speak evil of the recommendations of the Forget Commission.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Tobin: Does the Minister not realize that he can no longer ignore those recommendations simply because the final report has not been presented to the Government? Is he prepared to respond fully if I provide him today with yet another detailed oral briefing on the contents of the report?

An Hon. Member: Are you the commissioner?

Mr. Tobin: I have got the report.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when I last heard about it, the Chairman of the Commission was Mr. Forget and not the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe.

EFFECT OF POSSIBLE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that I am not the chairman, otherwise the report would be radically different. Will the Minister not agree that the contents of this table that come straight out of the report, which I am sending to the Minister along with the minutes of the meeting of the Commission at the end of August, indicate clearly that the Commission's recommendations will damn Canada's poorest citizens to a life of increased welfare dependence? The Minister now has those tables in front of him.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to certain documents, but I do not know where he got them. As all the Members of this House who have much more experience than either the Hon. Member or myself will agree, when a Government asks a Royal Commission to table a report, the Government must then await reception of this report before commenting how it will be applied, whatever the Opposition may say. This is what I am trying to do.

LEADED AND UNLEADED GASOLINE—REQUEST FOR EQUALIZATION OF TAXES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, given the final report of the Royal Society on lead in the environment, and given the report's confirmation of the need to get lead out of the environment as soon as possible, could the Minister of Finance consider in his next Budget, if not sooner, equalizing the taxes on leaded and unleaded gasoline so that there would at least be no encouragement to Canadians to use leaded gasoline over unleaded gasoline?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond on behalf of the Minister of the Environment that the Commission, having released its report, endorses the Minister's decision to eliminate leaded gasoline by December, 1992. That objective still remains the objective of the Minister and this Government.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Minister had paid attention to the conference this morning he would have noticed that Dr. Hare said he stood by the Royal Society's original recommendation that the switch-over be made by 1990 and not 1992. The Minister, however, has not answered my question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Government, whether it sticks to 1992 or not, consider in the meantime equalizing the taxes on leaded and unleaded gasoline so that there is no encouragement to Canadians to use leaded gasoline over unleaded gasoline? That is a question for the Minister of Finance and one that he can answer.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be advised by the Hon. Member what questions I can or cannot answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What I can say to him is, yes, we have reviewed that recommendation. We tried to see whether there was a possibility of putting it into the last Budget, but we were advised by experts on this particular question that it would not have had any major effect at all on the production of leaded gasoline. For that reason we decided against doing so.

Mr. Blaikie: It is the use of it.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—POSSIBLE EXISTENCE OF LAWSUITS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It is a very serious question. Yesterday the Minister told the House "no information was kept secret" about the huge lawsuits the Government could face from de Havilland's secret Texas deals. How does the Minister explain that there is no mention whatsoever in committee records of these lawsuits for false dealings when the previous Minister had full knowledge of them for six months?

• (1440)

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, my friend did not do his homework yesterday so I will do it for him today. On January 28, 1986, my colleague, the former Minister said: "As you can see, we have narrowed down the Government's ongoing obligation to something exceeding $500 million, compared to the $1.5 billion I indicated was our ongoing obligation at the present time." Once again, Mr. Speaker, this Government dealt appropriately with the matter.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, once again this Government is just not being upfront with the Canadian people. I have in front of me the document to which the Minister refers. Why has he attempted to persuade the Canadian people that this outline of liabilities, which is very precise and has nothing to do with the possible lawsuits I have talked about, has any relevance with respect to this question? The points on this document do not deal with this issue.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we did not have to persuade Canadians of the necessity of selling this company. It had already lost $1.2 billion. We dealt with a company which provided technology in Canada. We made sure that the jobs here were secure. That is exactly what Canadians expect us to do and that is what we did.

ACCOUNTABILITY FOR GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Communications with whom, incidentally, I and six other Members were first elected eight years ago today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCrossan: Last year the CBC spent $57 million which it cannot account for. Can the Minister guarantee to the House that none of this money was misappropriated or, indeed, stolen?

Hon. David Crombie (Acting Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications is out of the House on business. The Hon. Member may or may not be aware that the Auditor General is continuing to work with the CBC to reconcile the differences. I also gather that the CBC has established a task force with respect to this matter. It may well be that the Hon. Member may want to raise the question with the Minister when she returns on Monday.

MANDATE OF CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM COUNCIL

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Multiculturalism and concerns a confidential report written by the Vice-Chairman of the Canadian Multiculturalism Council and addressed to his Government. It says that all council members are committed supporters of the Conservative Party of Canada, reflect advice from a selection of the Government's principal supporters, and are committed to the Government's survival beyond the next election.

Why has the Minister's Government changed the mandate of this national advisory body and given it over $350,000 in public funds to safeguard and satisfy the political interests of the Conservative Party of Canada?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I guess a couple of points are probably in order. First, I have not had a chance to read the report. Secondly, the Hon. Member will appreciate that this is something which his Party established two years ago and we are simply carrying on the mandate.

I met with the executive committee of the council and will be meeting with the full council at the end of the month. In my meeting with the executive committee they did not raise the report. I have no idea whether these people are Conservatives, Liberals, or New Democrats. If the Hon. Member says they are, he might want to ask them because some of those people—

Mr. Marchi: Your Vice-Chairman says they are.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for York West.

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF COUNCIL'S VICE-CHAIRMAN

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, if the Government wants partisan advice—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Marchi: —the Conservative Party should pay for it, not the taxpayers of Canada.

Will the Minister put an immediate end to the scandalous manipulation of the multicultural program and begin by asking for the immediate resignation of the Council's Vice-Chairman, and initiate an immediate investigation into the affairs of that council?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, members of that committee were chosen two years ago on the basis of their knowledge of their community and their willingness to make a contribution to this country. The Hon. Member may want to impugn their integrity but he ought to be careful before he does. That is why I say to him that he should remember that their contribution is to this country and they should not be asked to contribute to the Hon. Member's politics.

Oral Questions

REMOVAL OF MAIL BOXES FROM TORONTO STREETS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the post office. Right now the post office is in the process of taking 700 mailboxes off the streets of Toronto. How can the Minister square this reduction with his often-stated intention of improving service at the post office?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have said on several occasions that Canada Post officials must administer their appropriations as efficiently as possible and constantly monitor deliveries to make sure they offer the best service at the lowest cost possible. This is their commitment. Corporate decisions are made and we intend to abide by them.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DOES NOT GIVE PRIORITY TO NEED FOR SERVICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. What is the Minister's rationale for concluding that savings due to the smaller number of mailboxes will exceed the revenue loss resulting from more service delays? Is cost his only consideration? Why not consider the need to provide services?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think I just answered this question as well. I am saying that Canada Post must try to provide the best service possible at the lowest cost. It constantly monitors services to achieve this goal.

HUMAN RIGHTS

APPOINTMENTS MADE BY GOVERNMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Again it has to do with the matter of patronage on the part of the Conservative Government. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware of the fact that one-third of the applicants selected among those who submitted résumés to our human rights committee indicated that one of the major reasons why they were chosen is that they belong to the Progressive Conservative Party? For instance, does he agree with Mrs. Marie-Thérèse Landry who stated in her summary: We had good years, Mr. Léon Balcer was Minister of Transport in the Diefenbaker Government. Is this the way applicants are selected—

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the appointments which the Hon. Member impugns are appointments to the Human Rights Tribunal where the Government's role is to appoint members representing a cross-section of Canadian society. I do not know if any of them happen to have an allegiance to the PC Party, but surely if one-third of them did, that would not be too high. Even in the present polls, one-third of the Canadian public support us. By the time of the next election it will be two-thirds.

APPOINTEE'S QUALIFICATIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is not only we in the Opposition who disagree, it is human rights advocates across this country who realize it has been turned into a mockery.

Does the Minister believe that the qualifications listed, like those of Mr. S. Charles Facey—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Ms. Copps: —who lists among the reasons for his appointment the fact that he contributed to the Robert Coates defence fund, does that make him a good government representative on the Human Rights Tribunal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, apparently the Hon. Member does not think that Conservatives have any human rights or any interest in human rights. She is completely wrong. Why does she impugn Goldie Hershon of Quebec, Maria Teresa Domaradzki of Quebec, Peter L. Bortolussi of Ontario, Jenny C. Wong of British Columbia—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Crosbie: —and Ronald Lou-Poy of British Columbia with these attacks on their merits and qualifications to accept these posts which are voluntary and which will help the people of Canada? It is a dastardly attack on these good people.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

REQUEST FOR PRESIDENT'S IMMEDIATE SUSPENSION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Auditor General of Canada announced that $57 million had disappeared into thin air. No one knows what it was used for. If this had happened in a public company whose shares are traded on the stock exchange, an investigation would have been ordered right away and the books seized. This is happening at a Crown corporation. Is the Secretary of State, who today is replacing the Minister of Communications, prepared to make a commitment to immediately suspend the President of the CBC and place the CBC Board of Directors under trusteeship, pending an appropriate and urgently needed inquiry?

• (1450)

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the primary interest of the Government is to ensure that the financial situation is cleared up. The Hon. Member may want to make his representation with regard to personnel directly to the Minister.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION DECISION ORDERING REIMBURSEMENT OF BELL CANADA SUBSCRIBERS—THREAT OF APPEAL

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Communications I will direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Bell Canada has threatened to retaliate against consumers, its own telephone subscribers, as a result of the CRTC decision. Will the Minister tell us what action the Government will take to protect consumers if Bell Canada follows through with this threat?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that question most probably should be directed to the Minister of Communications who is responsible for the CRTC which, in turn, is responsible to ensure that consumers of telephone services are protected from any such action.

TELEPHONE CHARGE ROLLBACKS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I will direct a supplementary question to the same Minister who does have responsibility for consumer affairs. Will the Government at least undertake not to cancel the rollbacks in telephone charges which the CRTC announced, irrespective of whether Bell Canada appeals to the courts? Will the Government at least undertake that it will not cancel the decision made by the CRTC on Tuesday?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member will allow due process to proceed. It would be most improper to decide the matter in advance of an appeal to the courts. That would be to say, in effect, that we do not care what the courts do with this appeal, that we will make our judgment regardless. I do not think that would be responsible on our part. I can assure you that I share concerns for consumers which are at least as genuine as those of the Hon. Member.

BANKS AND BANKING

TAKEOVER OF CONTINENTAL BANK

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance and concerns the takeover of the Continental Bank by British-owned Lloyd's Bank by a method which avoided the need for parliamentary approval. Since the Government was involved in all the negotiations will the Minister tell the House if he advised the bank to bypass Parliament?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we all know that Lloyd's is a world-class bank. It has substantial resources and has the intention to pay off the Bank of Canada. All of this was very good news for the people of Canada. I will be explaining, as much as I can, the point of view of the Government in the committee which will be reviewing this issue in a couple of weeks.

REPAYMENT OF BANK OF CANADA ADVANCES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, although the purchase agreement calls for repayment in full of Bank of Canada advances of $2.5 billion on the closing date, October 31, a bank spokesman has said that in fact paper will be issued on October 31 to pay off the amount in the next few months. Did the Minister approve this arrangement?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the fashion in which the line of credit with the Bank of Canada will be paid back is subject to negotiation. It will be decided in the next few weeks.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

EMPLOYMENT OF FRANCOPHONES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. There is a report in the press today that the Government has approved the lowering of the percentage of Francophones for the RCMP. Is that allegation correct?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I just want to inform the House that today's newspaper reports do not in any way reflect a Government decision. Apparently, there was some discussion on the subject among officials, but the circular issued by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police certainly did not have the approval of Treasury Board.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORTED DELAY IN PAYMENT TO CREE OF QUEBEC

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in a letter to the Cree of Quebec, stated last week that it could not make the final payment due under the Cree-Neskapi Act giving as justification the fact that Supplementary Estimates have not been passed and that another agreement had used up existing funds.

Is it satisfactory to the President of the Treasury Board that signed legal agreements of the Government of Canada are allowed to be dependent upon the passing of Supplementary Estimates?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for having sent me notice of the substance of his question a few minutes ago. I would be very happy to look into the allegations and discuss them with my colleague, the Minister responsible, and I will endeavour to have an answer for the Member in the very near future.

GOVERNMENT'S OBLIGATIONS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, is the President of the Treasury Board considering the institution of a unit which will ensure that all signed legal agreements of the Government of Canada are paid when due, in full and on time?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very well known that this Government, the only Government for which I can speak, has always respected its engagements and will continue to do so.

REDUCTION OF FRANCOPHONE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to get back to the matter of the RCMP and direct my question to the Solicitor General, the responsible Minister.

In a publication called Pony Express, it was made very clear that the RCMP has adopted a policy of reducing the number of Francophones within the corps.

Was the Government consulted? Did it give instructions to the RCMP about this policy to reduce the percentage of Francophones from 20 to 14 per cent?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there were some discussions between officials of the RCMP and officials of Treasury Board. The circular to which the Hon. Member referred appeared following these discussions, discussions that never received the approval of the Treasury Board or Cabinet. It is to be regretted that the directive was issued, but it is certainly not Government policy.

POLICY RELATING TO OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I can therefore assume that the Government rejects the document and that the present 20 per cent will be maintained.

Could I ask the Solicitor General who can use his executive powers to inform the RCMP that we have no inclination of starting discussions of this kind at a time when a review of the official languages policy is imminent?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister responsible for the application of the Official Languages Act in the Public Service, I can inform the Hon. Member that we review the proposals from each department, which must be submitted to Treasury Board and approved by Treasury Board before being approved as Government policy. And that is exactly what is going to be done in this case. The same procedure will be followed.

USE OF ARABLE LAND IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Friday last the NDP asked if the Government was giving up on prairie grain farming through a LIFT type program. In the meantime the NDP leader in Saskatchewan was quoted as saying, "If we were far-sighted and able to do it, we would be taking land out of production".

Would the Deputy Prime Minister leave the land in production as requested by the Member for Yorkton—Melville, or would he take it out of production as requested by Mr. Blakeney?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for being very observant. That is a very incisive question. It is certainly the New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan, and Mr. Blakeney in particular, that has talked about taking land out of production, land banks, and government ownership of land. We in this Party choose to support the production efforts of farmers and that is what we are in the process of doing.

REPLACEMENT OF ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Canadians have been waiting for years through two Governments to hear whether we are going to get replacements for the ancient VIA Rail rolling stock. Can the Minister advise this House whether he has finally obtained funds from Cabinet for the replacement of that VIA Rail stock?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was asked a similar question the other day by the transportation critic for the hon. gentleman's Party. I gave him a succinct and, if I might say so, brilliant answer at that time.

TIMING OF GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister can advise us and all the people of Canada exactly when a decision will be made, or do we have to go through this like a long-running epic which is years in the making and costs billions?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have that matter before my confrères now and, before too many suns or moons have passed, I hope to have an answer for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre. One question, please.

THE JUDICIARY

NEWFOUNDLAND SUPREME COURT VACANCIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Justice. What possible excuse is there for allowing a 20 per cent vacancy in the Supreme Court in Newfoundland? The Government should be appointing judges because 20 per cent of the spaces are vacant. There is a backlog of cases. What is the excuse for that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the backlog of cases has nothing to do with any shortage of judges. Newfoundland amended its legislation in the past year to require the appointment of three more persons to the Court of Appeal. The present Court of Appeal already has four and is in perfect order to function. Newfoundland passed legislation to provide for two more District Court judges. They have now been amalgamated with the Supreme Court. There is no emergency at the moment with respect to the number of judges in Newfoundland and we are considering, long and well, who we appoint to ensure that people of the highest quality are appointed to those positions.

PRIVILEGE

QUESTION PERIOD—ALLEGED PRACTICE OF IMPUTING MOTIVES AND CASTING ASPERSIONS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise on a brief question of privilege. I noted in the media this morning that Members of Parliament on all sides of the House are approaching Question Period on a different basis and I think we are providing a better product and, for the Opposition and the Government, a better Question Period.

There were certain aspects of Question Period today which caused me concern and I want to raise a brief question of privilege so that you might take the time to review the "blues" and see if you are in agreement with my point.

I am concerned about offences against Beauchesne Citation 359(7) with respect to Members of Parliament imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it. I am speaking specifically with respect to appointments to the Human Rights Commission. The Government has taken great strides, with the co-operation of the Opposition, to make sure that appointments are reviewed by standing committees of Parliament. It does this House no good and does the appointees no good to have their reputations slandered in the House by Members, whether inadvertently or not. I would ask you to review that citation in Beauchesne and take what happened today into account.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to your attention, and particularly to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis), that Citation 359 in Beauchesne are only the guidelines that were set down some ten years ago by a previous Speaker who described to the House how that Speaker would use his discretion during Question Period. These guidelines have been superseded by others, most recently the guidelines set down by the previous Speaker, the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley).

I suggest, with the utmost respect, that Citation 359 is not a citation that is binding on the House or on Mr. Speaker. In any event, whatever this citation says, the kinds of questions about which the Parliamentary Secretary complains were asked over and over again, without complaint, by his own Members when they were in opposition.

I repeat what I said before, when we saw an attempt by the Government to impugn the efforts of the current Speaker to do his duty, that it does not sit well for Members on the government side to make this kind of comment when they refused to follow this course of action when they were in opposition.

The facts speak for themselves. Mr. Speaker, I leave this matter in your hands.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I believe in keeping with the attempt to reform the House of Commons, that these issues should not be brought up at the end of Question Period. I think there has been an honest attempt by all Parties in the House to try to resolve these differences. Question Period has been going much smoother. In future, I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary would bring these issues to the opposition Parties, if he has any legitimate concerns.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis), the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) for their interventions. Of course, I will review the "blues" and report back to the House when it is appropriate.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the customary question of the Government House Leader as to the business he intends to call for the balance of the week, which I trust will not contain the kinds of questionable points of order raised by his Parliamentary Secretary today.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member might find a point of order about the order of business which he can raise if he so wishes.

Today we will be continuing with Bill C-11, as well as tomorrow. There seems to be much interest in this Bill. It is very popular and we will continue with it.

On Monday we will proceed with Bill C-11 if it is not completed. Once completed, it will be followed by Bill C-4 standing in the name of the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald). If time permits, we will call Bill C-2 in the name of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

On Tuesday we propose to introduce second reading of the Bill standing in the name of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) concerning the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

I expect that Wednesday will be designated as an allotted day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) has the floor. I want to advise the House and the Hon. Member that he has five minutes remaining in his speech.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, in my final comments on Bill C-11 I want to address the need for substantial action in the area of family benefits. The decision to prepay the child tax credit partially has been generally supported in the House, including myself. However, there are aspects of the child tax credit which, in future, will all too much resemble many other government programs, specifically the partial indexing of the cost of living after 1989. It resembles the gradual decreasing value of the family allowance which was deindexed last year and has the effect of gradually reducing the amount of real income for people for supporting their families. As well, the expenses which families must pay are not only affected by the normal inflationary aspect which tends to prevail in the business community, which is used to match costs and increase the profits of enterprises; they are affected by the various tax changes imposed by Government.

I focus particularly on the increase in sales taxes which the Conservative Government has, in several steps, increased very much. I think of the tax on construction materials which was increased by a percentage point, increased once more to 7 per cent in the fall of 1984, with an additional percentage point being put on. In this respect, we are seeing a 50 per cent increase in taxes.

While it is true that an increase of two or three percentage points on higher taxes is proportionately less, the cumulative effect of these sales and excise taxes is increased costs which are borne by all, including the poorest families in the middle range of income and the wealthy. Of course, it is the poorest and those in the middle-income range who experience the effects of these taxes most seriously. Their incomes are smaller and they must pay as much per purchase as someone with a far larger income. These various effects have been recognized by the Government in part because there was a provision in last spring's Budget, which we shall be legislating one of these days, for a refundable sales tax credit. That offsets it to some extent, but the fact remains that families in the middle range of income, average Canadians, are paying more for less as these taxes take effect. They find the refundable sales tax credit and the child tax credit doing very little, if anything, for them.

What is most serious is that there are more and more Canadians who find themselves in those situations. The skilled workers in Collingwood who lost their jobs with the closure of the Collingwood shipyard a month ago are sad examples of those Canadians who had good incomes and did not have to worry too much about these increases but who found themselves, when pushed out of work, looking for jobs in Lord knows what areas. The difficulty employers have finding employees in retail and service areas must surely be because the kinds of incomes people earn there are simply not adequate. That is where the decision of the Government to put some money towards the neediest does nothing for these people. They are paying money in taxes, losing income and seeing no effort on the part of the Government to offset that. There is the challenge to the Government to do something far beyond a prepayment of the child tax credit to ensure that families have the kinds of incomes they need.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member, since I know his personal commitment to the health of families and family benefits—and if we extend the money paid, we have to find a way of paying for the extra expense—if he has any suggestions from the point of view of tax reform or any other measures which would justify the Government giving more priority to support for families?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), whose dedication to the cause of families and concern that their needs are met is highest of all in our caucus and, I believe, in this House.

The answer to what could be done in the way of tax reform to provide the resources to meet those needs is very important. A cartoon was published in the daily paper in Thunder Bay on Tuesday. It probably ran in other papers as well. It portrays two bedraggled men talking. One is tempted to use other terms given the stereotypes suggested in the cartoon. However, one bedraggled man is saying to the other: "The thing that really worries me is that the national finances are in even worse shape than we are". In that particular cartoon is one of the deadliest suggestions which could be made about our national social and economic policy.

The decisions of Governments in years past to use various tax inducements in order to produce prosperity has clearly not worked. The result of all those tax breaks has been an increase in deficit to a very significant amount. That high level of deficit, of course, is the utter preoccupation of the Minister of Finance whose review of social programs is surely designed to do one thing, and that is, to reduce the amount which actually goes out.

It is imperative that we have tax reform which ensures the tax system is fair, and that means ultimately achieving a far better balance between individuals paying income, sales and excise taxes and other sources of revenue. It is clear from statistics on corporate profit-making that there are very successful enterprises which do nothing to support the Government directly in maintaining social programs. That is the imperative need.

The Speech from the Throne talks about achieving a better balance between personal income and other taxes. I am really concerned that what we are going to see is an increased burden, or at least no lightening of the burden on individuals, because there will be a business transfer tax, I fear, used to replace the existing sales taxes. That will be used to reduce the income tax somewhat, but what that will do is to make the tax system even more regressive, even worse for the low and middle-income range income earners. The result will be no improvement at all. It would be a worsening of their lot.

What we need is a return to the progressive principle applied to both corporate and personal income taxes in order to ensure that the Government is taxing fairly and has the resources it requires. Having done that, we would then have the resources to maintain social programs and to bring child benefits up to the level at which they should be.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there are no further questions and comments, I will recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Browes).

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Environment): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to be recognized today as the Parliamentary Secretary. Thank you. It also gives me a great deal of pleasure to participate in this very important debate on Bill C-11 and to speak once again on the improvements made by this Government in Canada's system of child benefits.

The last time I had an opportunity to discuss the child tax credit was some 10 months ago. I noted then that the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) agreed that our child benefit measures provide great assistance to low-income families. The Leader of the New Democratic Party said: "If one looks at the specific changes the Government is making, there is improvement". The Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador added his Party's support by reluctantly admitting: "It may be true that for a while there is going to be some sort of net benefit". Both Hon. Members of the opposition Parties recognized the tremendous benefit the increase in the child tax credit has on low-income families. Both Hon. Members, as well as all government Members, recognize the justice in decreasing the child tax exemption which proved to be more of a benefit to upper-income Canadians.

When the Government came into office over two years ago we committed ourselves to expanding and enhancing Canada's system of social benefits. We were not prepared to continue social assistance measures which actually offered greater assistance to upper-income earners. We were not prepared to introduce more inefficiency or complexity into federal social policies. What we have resolved to accomplish and, indeed, what we are accomplishing is to direct more assistance to those in our society who most need it. It is not just for the sake of economic efficiency but to truly help those in need.

Improvements to the child tax credit represent one example of the measures we are taking to fulfil this commitment. The child tax credit provides direct financial help to nearly three million low-income families. It is a simple, effective and important form of social assistance.

The Government has acted to improve the child tax credit in several key ways. First, it has been increased. This year the child tax credit has been increased by $70. It will go up by another $70 in the next two years, and by 1988, the maximum amount to be received will be $524 per child. We also decreased the child tax exemption which, until we acted, actually provided more assistance to upper-income families.

Second, we addressed the problem of tax discounting. Tax discounting has literally robbed thousands of low-income families of their child tax credit benefits. In fact, in 1984, nearly one-half of all money retained by tax discounters was made up of child tax credit payments. Furthermore, one in five single mothers with an income below $2,000 and claiming the child tax credit used the services of a tax discounter. The Government acted to decrease the amount of money discounters could collect. Bill C-83, which was passed in the first session of this Parliament, capped the maximum discounter charge at 5 per cent on any amount over $300.

These actions represent the importance the Government attaches to improving family benefits. They also fulfil the commitment we made in the Throne Speech to defend and strengthen the institution of the Canadian family. Improvements to the child tax credit provide the kind of family support the Government is proud to initiate.

I think all Hon. Members would agree on the importance of the family unit in our society. Indeed, it has been said that if things go well with the family, life is worth living; when the family falters, life falls apart.

I was pleased to be a member of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs when it reviewed the issue of child benefits. The committee's report of April, 1985 recommended a prepayment of the child tax credit, and I know that all members of the committee are pleased to see that the Government has taken action on that recommendation. Bill C-11 offers effective and needed help to low-income families. It also furthers the positive social justice measures the Government is taking to benefit all Canadians.

Yesterday in debate, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) called the increase in the child tax credit a token. I can assure the Hon. Member that low-income families from my riding of Scarborough Centre do not consider $140 per child in extra benefits to be a token amount. I can also assure the Hon. Member that low-income families in my riding do not regard the new sales tax credit, the extension of the spouse's allowance or the increase in the disability deduction as being token gestures.

Together with improving the social safety net, the Government is offering low-income families new hope through a more dynamic economy and through meaningful job-creation programs. Low unemployment, low interest rates and low inflation all benefit underprivileged Canadians and offer new opportunities for full participation in the economy by all Canadians.

I think it is important to point out that as a result of this legislation introduced by the Government, total spending on income-security programs will go up substantially. This includes some $200 million in extra benefits as a result of the extension of the spouse's allowance. The Government's family benefits policy reflects the commitment we have made to strengthen our social safety net and to encourage new economic opportunities for low-income Canadians.

On behalf of the families of Canada, I am proud of the excellent initiatives in this Bill. I applaud both opposition Parties for resolving to pass Bill C-11 in good time.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to applaud the Hon. Member for the majority of her comments. Obviously the existence of a child tax credit is a positive move for low-income families.

I wonder how the Hon. Member squares the move on the part of the Government to have a child tax credit and give money through the tax system to low-income families with the over-all nature of the tax system in Canada which is generally conceded to be regressive. Over the last 20 years, the taxation burden has moved from corporations to individuals so that individuals are paying more by way of taxes. As well, the ideal that those who earn more must pay more has been eroded over the past 20 years. How does the Hon. Member square the fact that, on the one hand, the Government takes some positive actions in terms of the child tax credit while, on the other hand, it has left the over-all taxation system with low-income families having to continue to bear an unfair share of the burden?

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and also for recognizing the positive aspects of this legislation. He joins with the Leader of his Party in publicly endorsing in this Chamber the positive effect of this initiative on Canadian families.

In the social envelope, we have made some savings in those areas dealing with people with higher incomes. We have directed those amounts of money to those people who need it the most. By the end of this year, there will be an additional $200 million put into the social envelope for the social benefits we are directing to those persons who need it the most.

I believe that the comments made by the Hon. Member concerning the tax burden are valid ones. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) recognized this some months ago when he stated the need for the review of the entire tax system. We are awaiting the White Paper the Minister of Finance will be submitting to the House for discussion with the public so that we may look at those aspects of tax reform that are recognized and required.

Mr. Keeper: A child tax credit gives more money to people who have low income rather than people who have a high income. Does the Hon. Member see the contradiction between the Government supporting a child tax credit and supporting the $500,000 exemption for capital gains? Does the Hon. Member see the contradiction between giving a large tax gift to wealthy people in this country and at the same time having a progressive tax measure which helps the poor? Would she not recommend to her own Government that it eliminate the $500,000 tax gift to the upper-income people?

Mrs. Browes: Let me begin by saying that the buoyancy of the economy and the confidence of Canadians right across the country will help all Canadians at all levels of the economy. Some months ago I put forth a questionnaire to businesses in the riding of Scarborough Centre asking them if in the next 12 months they were planning to increase, decrease, or keep the number of employees at the same level. Ninety per cent of the businesses in the riding of Scarborough Centre responded that they intended to increase the number of employees in their businesses and manufacturing companies. That speaks mountains for prosperity in the country, particularly in this riding, but it is catching on across this country. I believe with those kinds of initiatives taking place more people will be working, more people will be paying taxes, and that buoyancy in the economy will be very good for low-income families. It will make a great contribution.

Let me just mention the child tax credit in particular. This Bill is going to be very helpful, especially to single parent families. Having $300 per child available in the latter part of this year; just before Christmas, just before snow suits and boots, and all of those things that are so much required for children, is going to be a very positive aspect, and families will be very appreciative. I applaud the Minister for bringing this forth so quickly so that we might be able to get those cheques in the families' pockets to help the children of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I am pleased to have this opportunity to ask the Hon. Member what effect she thinks will be the effect of this Act on her constituents.

Mrs. Browes: Thank you for that question. My background has been in working with the Department of Health for the City of Scarborough as Chairman of the Public Health Board. I have had the opportunity of going into subsidized housing and areas of low incomes to work with single-parent families. This initiative is one that is welcomed and praised. When the Christmas tree is lighted, the children are around that Christmas tree, the parents are happy, the gifts and snow suits are there, and they are going to say, this is a great Government that we have in Ottawa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I think there would be a disposition on the part of all Members of the House to seek unanimous consent to revert to Statements by Ministers so that the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) can make a statement relative to the softwood lumber issue.

Mr. Murphy: It certainly is our intention, because of the importance of this particular issue, to agree to reverting to Statements by Ministers. I assume we will follow the usual rule that a Member from each of the Parties will have the opportunity to respond. I assume also that the time will not count, or will count, after six o'clock in respect to Government business?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): There have been consultations and, as I said during those consultations, we will be happy to revert to Statements by Ministers to hear the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). I would also like to confirm that the rules of the House pertaining to Statements by Ministers will be in application for this particular purpose.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Am I then to assume that we will have a statement by the Minister, a response by the Opposition, a response by the NDP Party, and that there will be no extra time tacked on this evening?

Some Hon. Members: We don't need extra time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All right. I agree that we do not need extra time.

TRADE

U.S. COUNTERVAILING DUTY ON EXPORTS OF CANADIAN SOFTWOOD

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): The U.S. Department of Commerce has just announced that it has made a preliminary subsidy determination which could result eventually in the imposition of a countervailing duty on exports of softwood lumber from Canada. The preliminary determination is a 15 per cent subsidy.

I deplore the measures taken today by the United States. We believe it was not the right decision to make.

[English]

This decision cannot be justified either under U.S. law or GATT rules. I am deeply disappointed that Secretary of Commerce Baldrige has decided to reverse the decision he made in 1983 in the previous countervailing duty investigation involving softwood lumber. Stumpage does not provide a subsidy to Canadian lumber producers. We are going to fight this all the way.

Miss Carney: Political leaders cannot stop the process of industries petitioning to restrict imports under existing U.S. trade laws. This is why it is so important that we pursue our bilateral trade talks with the United States. Today's decision is a graphic illustration of how protectionist pressures in the United States impact on Canadians and Canadian jobs. That is why we are at the table. Canadians need a trade agreement with the U.S. to secure our access to U.S. markets and to deal with trade disputes. This Government is vigorously pursuing these objectives because it is in Canada's best interest to do so. That is why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) launched this historic initiative a year ago.

I want to emphasize that today's decision is not the end of the road, it is a preliminary decision. It is just another step in a long quasi-judicial process. We will pursue all avenues available to us to argue against this determination. We have already invoked GATT dispute settlement procedures. The U.S. Commerce Department must now verify its determination and make a final decision by late December. Even if the preliminary decision is confirmed, countervailing duties would not be applied unless the United States International Trade Commission finds injury in its final determination due in mid-February. If either of these rulings is in Canada's favour the case is terminated. In addition, both sides have the right to appeal the outcome in the U.S. courts.

It is important to note that today's preliminary determination does not result in any duty being imposed on Canadian lumber. Canadian exporters will be required to post bonds until there is a final disposition of the case. This will be a burden to Canadian softwood lumber exporters and represents a potential liability. Today it is lumber; tomorrow it could be any number of issues. Uncertainty prevails. This is not the way to conduct business between the world's largest trading partners. There must be a better way. We must change the rules in order to stop the harassment of U.S. interest groups against competitive and fairly traded Canadian exports.

We have worked closely with the provinces, industry, and labour throughout this investigation. Early next week we will be meeting to review in detail the basis on which Secretary Baldrige has reversed his earlier decision and to plan our strategy for the next phase of this investigation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for making a prompt statement to the House. On behalf of, I expect, everyone on both sides of the Chamber, I say that this is a sad and tragic day for the Canadian economy, particularly for the forest industry which is a supplier of so many jobs.

[Translation]

The consequences are many and far-reaching. In the short term, this will create instability in the forestry industry, the existence of smaller businesses will be threatened and consumers and industry will have to absorb substantial costs.

[English]

There is an old saying—I told you so. Last spring when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) rose and said that there was a clean launch and that there were no attachments to his grand design for free trade negotiations, we said that there was a price to be paid. Today we know what the price is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: It is 15 per cent on our forest products. It is a $600 million additional cost to the Canadian industry. That is the price this Government is forcing Canadian industry to pay.

Miss Carney: This Government?

Mr. Axworthy: There was no clean launch. The fix was in at that time, and now we know what is the cost to Canadians. There is no way that the Government can evade that responsibility. That is the cost we have to pay and the bill is now being put on the table. The bungling or mismanagement of trade negotiations which we have seen in the last several months is deplorable. The Government cannot manage its way out of this Chamber, let alone into difficult negotiations with the United States.

It is incredible to think that now the Minister will say "we will fight in every avenue" when only three weeks ago she was prepared to surrender and to try to make a deal which would have provided even more serious consequences for the Canadian industry. It is no wonder that they made a decision when we telegraphed a message weeks ago that we were not prepared to give in. It is no wonder that our case before that tribunal was compromised. The Canadian Government was already backtracking for days and weeks and saying: "Please accept it; we will try to work something out". If it is a quasi-judicial process, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said last spring, why did the Minister change her mind and change the position of the Government and thereby weaken our position?

The fact of the matter is that this decision goes far beyond the implication of immediate cost. That is bad enough. There is no doubt that the addition of a 15 per cent import duty is a very severe blow. As a spokesman for the industry said in a recent report, 20 per cent would be a disaster. I can say that 15 per cent is just short of a disaster. It will have a crippling effect upon the economic capacity of the industry. However, far more important, the United States is now establishing a very dangerous principle of international trade. It is saying that it now has the right to determine the prices of natural resources in other countries. That is contrary to every international rule of trade, that is contrary to the spirit of the Quebec Summit meeting, and that is contrary to every rule we have followed in dealing with that country.

Unless the Government is prepared, at least for once, to stand up to the United States and say very clearly that it can go no further, that kind of precedent will be used on sulphur, potash, and other lumber products, to the point where our natural resource industries will be threatened across the board. Lumber is just the beginning. The Americans know that they have us on the run on this one because the Government has caved in so often in the past.

The initial statement and initial reaction by the Government and by all Canadians must be that we will not accept this decision, that we will not only fight them in their own courts but take it to the international body—

Some Hon. Members: We have already done it.

Mr. Axworthy: —which they have undermined and weakened up to now. They have undermined the international process. They have undermined our position in GATT by temporizing and compromising up to this point in time. However we must continue that fight. Furthermore, before any further decision, we request at this point in time a proper and full debate in the House so that we know exactly what the Government will do, so that it will not make decisions behind closed doors, so that all Canadians and all members of this Chamber will have an opportunity to say what our trade policy should be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, there are perhaps 20,000 jobs across the country threatened by this decision. That threat hurts people, communities, the future of small businesses, and the whole fabric of society, especially in British Columbia.

[Translation]

It is a decision that is very problematic for the entire country. It is problematic for Quebec, for Ontario and for the other provinces.

[English]

I have to say that it is something which I personally feared very much when the decision came from the Senate finance committee last spring. Hon. Members may remember that I predicted at that time that the first price we would pay would be a cost on our lumber in the order of 15 per cent to 20 per cent. Fortunately it is 15 per cent, not 20 per cent. As the Minister said, this is a preliminary decision. Unfortunately with preliminary decisions, they can go up as well as go down.

I think the entire House feels a sense of regret, of unhappiness, and of having been badly used by the process in the United States. That process does not even permit lumber producers in the United States to have the subsidies they receive assessed against any subsidies which they claim we receive. I think I speak for the House when I say that that process is simply unacceptable. In respect of the Government's own approach to the issue, I must say that we have had a series of missteps, a series of mistakes, a series of ridiculous turnarounds which have badly damaged our case up to now and which I fear will badly damage our case in the future. For instance, we finally heard the statement from the Minister today that we would fight this all the way and that stumpage does not provide a subsidy to Canadian lumber producers, coming just two weeks after the same Minister in fact took a public position which completely undermined our position in respect of the very points she is now making.

We have to look as well at this bizarre, ridiculous attempt to justify the U.S. free trade talks on the basis of yet one more disaster into which these trade talks have led us. We were promised in the special committee that the free trade talks would keep us secure from American retaliation. In fact, since then we have been attacked on issue after issue, whether it be fish, shakes and shingles, lumber, possibly potash, brass or possibly steel. This has happened since September when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said he was going to take us into free trade, and that was going to be our protection. Instead we have been hammered again and again. That hammering has today reached the final stage with this heavy 15 cent tariff on our lumber.

My last point is to say that the Minister should surely, as her office was suggesting earlier this week, have come to the House today with suggestions of what the Government intended to do about it. Instead the Government intends to sit and to talk, a final ignominy, of which I think this Government should be ashamed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to advise that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Am I to assume that the 14 minutes will not be tacked on this evening and we will just carry on with Orders of the Day? Is there unanimous consent for that to occur?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it seems, I suppose in some small measure that rather than a diversion we have had a statement by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), which has come not as a shock to a lot of us, but it has certainly taken our minds off the main issue for discussion today, the issue of the child tax credit. I would like to take a few moments to address some of the Government's arguments in trying to move this Bill quickly through the House.

We have heard a number of government speakers on the issue of the child tax credit say that it is important for us to move very quickly because we are getting money into the hands of those people who need it most, those with an income of $15,000 a year or less. On the surface we in the Opposition definitely agree with that position. We agree that any move that can appease the level of poverty facing people and those families living on and earning $15,000 a year or less should be taken. But in the process I do not think we should be hoodwinked. I do not think we should be bamboozled by a Government which on the one hand giveth and on the other hand taketh away. It is giving in the form of a refundable tax credit, not the full amount of the child tax credit but merely a portion thereof. We will be introducing some amendments that will address certain inequities.

While the Government is saying to the poor people: "We are going to give you an immediate child tax credit rebate of $300 before you actually have to file your income tax return", it is wreaking havoc in the pocket-books of poor and middle-income Canadians because of its tax grabs. According to the Canadian Council of Welfare, for the first time this year we will see people in the $15,000 income group paying taxes. That tax burden will increase over the next four years as we see the effect of the Wilson Budget on low-income Canadians in particular. Only six years ago, in 1980, a two-earner couple with two children living at the poverty line were paying just under $1,000 in tax. That was already too much, but they were paying $1,000. From 1984, that tax load, which was under $1,000 in 1980, was increased to reach $1,600 in 1986. By the year 1990 a two-earner family living at the poverty line will be paying almost $2,000 in tax, amounting to an increase in tax of over 70 per cent in only one decade.

I do not think the Government can take much solace from the fact that today it is asking all Members of Parliament to pass the child tax credit bill which will put $300 quickly into the hands of families, which we support, when at the same time the same Government which is preaching equality, self-sufficiency and talking about getting people out of poverty will be taxing people at the poverty level almost $2,000 by the year 1990. The situation is equally dismal for the family earning about $20,000.

Those of us who have constituents in our ridings will know that for a family in 1986-87, $20,000 in annual family income is not a large amount. Those families are struggling to make ends meet. The family living at the poverty line will pay over 70 per cent more taxes in 1990 than in 1980. The family that earned $20,000 in 1980 will be paying 40 per cent more taxes over the next decade and the family that earned $30,000 will be paying 25 per cent more in income tax. The moot point and the point this Government has failed to address is that a family earning $50,000 will be paying only 17 per cent more in taxes. A family, however, that earns $80,000, which can best be described as living in the lap of luxury, will pay only 7 per cent more in taxes.

What has gone wrong with the system which says to a family living at the poverty level that its tax burden will go up by 70 per cent while it tells a family earning $80,000 that its tax burden will rise by only 7 per cent? Is this the equity which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was talking about when he said he wanted to re-establish tax reform? Is this the kind of equity that the Government has been talking about in Throne Speeches in which it says the child tax credit is a great progressive measure and that this Bill should be passed? Of course this Bill should be passed, Mr. Speaker. This Bill is a good piece of legislation, but it does not go far enough. There are a number of shortcomings and I would like to take a few moments to outline those shortcomings.

About the $15,000 level, Mr. Speaker, in 1986, a family with an income of $15,000 and living in Toronto or Montreal is already $5,000 or $6,000 below the poverty line. I am thinking of a Liberal amendment that would raise the cutoff point for the child tax credit to $22,000 or $23,000. This would be acceptable, because if, for instance, the cutoff point is raised to $23,000 as we in the Liberal Party are suggesting, at least we will be taking in everyone living below the poverty line in Canada. If the $15,000 is maintained, there are still thousands of single-parent families, and thousands of families with two parents who both work, that cannot live on an income of $15,000 to $23,000. Mr. Speaker, that is why one of our amendments proposes to raise the cutoff point for the child tax credit from $15,000 to $23,000.

Another problem, Mr. Speaker, and Canadians who receive the child tax credit know, they know that if they have no other income, the tax credit this year will be about $454. This means that Canadians without sufficient income from other sources will receive a cheque for $454 for each child.

In the Bill, the Government proposes to give an advance payment of $300 to each family, per child, which leaves $154 to be given when income tax returns are filed.

Mr. Speaker, instead of leaving it up to the Department of National Revenue to pay the difference, the $154 to these families, in other words, instead of bringing in legislation to provide for advance payment of $300 this year, why not give the whole $454, and say: You are entitled to advance payment of the full child tax credit, and should changes be required, they can be made subsequently.

Mr. Speaker, what happens with this kind of Bill is that it adds to the bureaucratic process which has to produce two cheques instead of one, while single-parent families and poor families have to apply for the $154 that should have been included with the first cheque.

• (1600)

We are proposing a number of serious amendments which we believe would improve this Bill. One amendment is that, in order to be fair to all Canadians living below the poverty line, all families with an income below $23,500 should be covered under this Bill. As Members of Parliament we know there are many families scraping to make ends meet on incomes which fall in that grey area between $15,000 and $23,500. That is one of our amendments and it is a good and supportable amendment.

The second amendment deals with the bureaucracy involved. The Government came to power suggesting that it was going to clean up a bureaucratic mess. Most of the families covered under this Bill, those with $15,000 or less in annual income, will be eligible for the full tax credit of $454. Why has the Government decided to send out one cheque for $300 and then another cheque for $154 when the appropriate papers are filled out? This doubles the bureaucratic paperwork. It would be far easier to say to these people, we know you need the money before Christmas, we know you do not want to be taken advantage of by tax discounters, so we will send you the full amount of $454 before Christmas. Those families with incomes above the level of $15,000 or $23,500 can apply in the normal way. To do otherwise is to duplicate the bureaucratic effort.

As well, the provisions covering an overpayment are extremely complicated, as you know. If by accident the Government sends Mrs. Jane Doe a cheque for $300 and she was only eligible for $200, then after Christmas, when she has spent the money on presents or winter clothes or necessities for her children, or even food for the table, she is going to hear a knock on the door from the taxman who will say we sent you $300 but it was an accident. We were only supposed to send you $200. Could you please give us $100 plus interest. All Hon. Members who work in their constituency offices will know what getting an unexpected bill for $100 means to a family with an income of $15,000 a year or less. What does it mean to a Member of Parliament to get a bill for $100? I do not think it is going to send us to bankruptcy court. However, when a family trying to support a couple of kids, perhaps a single-parent family, gets a bill for $100, money they have already spent, they are going to be put in a very difficult position.

We also suggest that no interest should be charged on overpayments, but we could simplify matters by simply sending out the $454 in total. However, we are very concerned about the overpayments which will put poor families in a very difficult position, and we think that only the excess should be recovered and it should not be subject to interest.

As I mentioned before, we do support the motion, but we feel the $300 payment is not sufficient, it should be $454. The ceiling for eligiblity should be raised from $15,000 to $23,500, to better reflect the reality of Canadians living in poverty. However, I do not think we can agree with the Government's premise, as we have heard in speech after speech after speech in the House, that it is somehow knocking itself out to help poor and needy families. Frankly, this is a pittance, a crumb; a very shallow measure in the fight against poverty. That is particularly so when you consider the figures of the National Council on Welfare which outline the increasing tax burden on families, the working poor, and those families earning less than $30,000 a year. All the tax measures introduced by the Conservative Party since 1984 show that families with two children earning only $15,000 are going to be paying $355 more in taxes. We have Santa Claus Mulroney and his friends dropping $300 in the basket of the poor and needy in November of this year, but when the taxman cometh next April, that same family is going to have to pay $355 more in taxes which leaves them with a net loss of $55.

Our figures show that the percentage tax increase for families earning $15,000 is the same as for families with two children earning $100,000. The Government talks about sharing the tax burden fairly, so I ask is that fair? I think all Canadians would agree that when it comes time to increase taxes, those increases should be paid by those who can most afford to pay, not those who can least afford to pay.

One of the things which has made us unique as a society is that all political parties have the philosophy of helping those who are least able to help themselves. Unfortunately, the reality of Conservative policy is reflected, on the one hand, in the giving of the $300 child tax credit, which is laudable and should be appreciated, but on the other hand taking $355 away this year alone in tax increases. As well, that increase is cumulative and over the next four years that same family will experience a tax increase involving hundreds, if not thousands, of dollars.

We should also be aware of one other issue. I am not sure how much time I have left to address that, in that we have had such a long break—I am losing my voice, heaven forbid. In any case, I think what prompted the Government to introduce this legislation in the first place was our desire to prevent the gouging which often occurs when people with very modest incomes need money for the purchase of winter clothes or major appliances and they end up going to a tax discounter. As we know, that service will cost them 15 per cent of the first $300 and 5 per cent on anything over $300. I think the facts will bear out that most people who use tax discounters are classified as either working poor or people of very modest means. In 1985 half a million Canadians who sold their child tax credits to tax discounters had incomes of less than $8,000. It is quite clear that the tax discount business has been directed toward those people who are least likely to be in a position to come up with ready cash flow. According to government estimators, discounters received over $20 million in child tax credits in 1984 and they kept more than $41 million of the 1984 tax refunds in general.

One way of dealing with the issue is by giving part or all of the money in advance, as is being suggested in this legislation. There is another method which I think we should look at for the longer term, that is to specifically prohibit the sale of child tax credit returns to discounting companies. We have done that with old age pension cheques and family allowances because we do not think that poor people should be penalized by 15 per cent or 5 per cent on money which should be going to them alone. The Government does not pay these benefits to make the coffers of tax discounters swell by $20 million or $40 million, depending upon which figures you use.

One way of dealing with the problem of tax discounting would be for the Government to introduce specific legislation to prohibit the sale of child tax credit refund applications to tax discounters. This is one way of dealing with the problem. I urge all Hon. Members to consider, as a bare minimum, the two Liberal amendments. One deals with increasing the ceiling of eligibility from $15,000 to $23,500 in order to keep pace with the level of poverty in Canada. The second amendment says that the people receiving the tax benefit should not receive only the $300, which is only a portion of the tax credit, but should get the full amount. The $454 should be mailed out to them before this Christmas so they can get the paperwork over with and do not have to worry about the bureaucracy. That would simplify it. It is a better system and I think it is supportable. As I know how much the Conservatives talk about the simplification of the tax system, I urge them to support this amendment.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about the statements which this speaker just made. I think she was attempting to cause concern for the very people who are going to benefit by $300 per child by mentioning that there will be interest charged. There certainly will not be interest charged on those funds unless income tax returns are filed late next year. The point which she raised causes concern, and I want to ensure that it is clear on the record that that is not the case. I cannot help but think that it is talking out of both sides of one's mouth to say that some people may be overpaid. I suppose that could happen in some cases, but I am sure that if you asked the people whether they would want to receive those moneys with the possibility of having to send some back if their income increases dramatically from the previous year they would opt for the provisions of this Bill.

The previous speaker also spoke of prepayment. I do not recall that the past Government initiated a prepayment proposal. I think the Hon. Member has sincere concern for the poor people of our country. However, I do not think she should be causing them concern. They could very well use the $300, $600, $900 or $1200 in November for snowsuits or Christmas. I hope she does not mean to take away from this very important development in Canadian history. The Government, hopefully with the support of the Opposition, wants to put money in the hands of the people who need it most in our country today.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if the Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) misunderstood my comments. I think I specifically referred to the fact that, according to the legislation as it is currently tabled, if an overpayment was assessed the full amount of it plus interest would be charged back to the family from the date that the overpayment was received. One of the amendments proposed by the Liberal Party suggests that if there is an overpayment through a change of circumstances, or simply an administrative foul-up, the amount to be repaid should be restricted to the amount of the overpayment and that any interest to be charged should be calculated only 60 days following the receipt of the notice of overpayment.

I do not want Canadian women to be in a situation next April of receiving a notice from the tax department that they accidentally received $300 extra which they have to repay and that they are being charged interest on the amount of the overpayment retroactive to the date of receipt of the money they have already spent, not knowing that it was an overpayment. That is the intent of the Liberal amendment. I think it is quite clear and I hope the Member will support it.

With regard to the historic step which the Member mentioned, I will only say that for the $300 which will be paid out in advance to poorer taxpayers this year the Government will collect about $354 through the tax system, so they are still in a net loss position of $54.

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, I listened very closely to the argumentation of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East who, I am sure, is genuinely interested in the well-being of destitute families in her riding, just as are all Members of the House.

Still I noticed a certain inconsistency in her presentation. On one hand she does not seem to be overly enthusiastic about this outstanding piece of legislation we have introduced, on the other hand she blames discounters for taking advantage of the situation in the past.

That is precisely what we seek to avoid through Bill C-11. The fact is that those families which are in dire need of their money at a certain time of the year are forced to deal with discounters.

Now then, why does your Party blame us today, and why in those days—you were not here, but the others were—did the Liberal Party fail to take that step, namely pass legislation as we did with Bill C-83 to set a ceiling on the interest which discounters are allowed to charge and, at the same time, give such advance payments to families as advocated in Bill C-11?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think I did say at the outset that it was a good Bill, that I agreed with it, and that I would support it. I said so in the House. I said that the Bill as drafted might be amended, for instance to provide for a payment of $454 instead of $300, which would still not be the total tax credit. Other changes might include raising the ceiling for people eligible for payments, families with an income ranging from $15,000 to $23,000. Such adjustments would improve this measure which is good to begin with.

The Bill as drafted is good. One thing I should like to point out to the House and to all Canadians is that at the same time as we introduce this good Bill which will allow Canadian families to get $300, the taxman will recoup $354. It is said in the Bible that what the right hand gives the left hand takes away. You represent the right hand, you give $300 to families, but your tax department and Mr. Wilson represent the left hand. Unfortunately, they are the ones who will take away the $354.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to clarify something to which the Hon. Member alluded that caused me some concern. She seemed to imply that if there was an overpayment because the mother or family had earned more than $15,000, the family would have to repay that amount with interest. She talked about people knocking on doors and I want to assure her that that is not the case. People will not be knocking on doors. In fact, if there should be an overpayment there would be no interest charged until after April 30 of the following year.

When people file their income tax and find that they have earned over that amount, they would have to send it back, but there would be no interest charged unless they were late in filing the income tax return itself. I believe it is important to make that point, because we certainly do not want people to be fearful that if the amount they are receiving is not quite right they will have to pay it back plus interest. That certainly is not the case and I want to draw that to her attention.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think we could probably get some of the details from the Parliamentary Secretary. However, it is the impression of the Liberal Party that the interest which will be accruing will be from the date of the delivery of the cheque, as opposed to April.

There is another difficulty that may be considered. I remember filing my income tax return at the beginning of March. After yelling and screaming loud enough for my return, I finally received it in September of this year. If I had been a recipient of a child tax credit—although obviously I am in a position where I am not receiving a child tax credit—some months would have elapsed from the time at which I would have been responsible for repaying that amount, even though I had filed within the required time and the Government was just slow in processing the income tax return.

Mrs. Collins: I want to assure the Hon. Member that with the tremendous changes that have taken place in the last two years—

Ms. Copps: It was this year.

Mrs. Collins: —since the Government has come to power the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) has made changes so that people are getting their income tax returns very quickly. I really do not think that it will be a problem at all.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have a very quick reply because I know that my time has lapsed. My nightmare with the Income Tax Department was this year. It related to the fiscal year 1985, so I think the Government can beat its breast quite a bit, but there are still many Canadians who must wait a long time to get their returns.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) have a short question?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): I have a short question for the Hon. Member. I appreciate her view that this is basically a good Bill. I wonder about the purpose of the amendment she has suggested which would increase the threshold to $23,500. In fact, this means that all of those people who might potentially receive the child tax credit ought to receive the prepayment. By so doing, would this not complicate matters to the point where indeed the potential for overpayment and the problems of collection would be drastically increased? I do not think the concern is so much a matter of interest, but of getting the original money back. I can envisage that there would be many problems in collecting money where it has gone out perhaps erroneously or accidentally. Would the Hon. Member not reconsider that amendment, seeing that perhaps it might cause more problems than it is worth?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is no doubt aware that there is a partial tax credit that also goes to families with incomes between $23,500 and $31,600. While the Government has used $15,000 as an arbitrary cut-off point, the reason we feel it should be raised to $23,500 is that if one takes most norms for establishing poverty into consideration, including the Senate Report on Poverty, Statistics Canada and the various national indicators of poverty, $23,500 is the figure at which every Canadian family living in poverty will be entitled to the tax credit in advance. Those people living above the line of poverty but still receiving the tax credit will wait for the child tax credit income tax return in the normal course.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 66, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine)—Agriculture—Creation of national marketing board for incubated eggs—Government position; the Hon. Member for Eglington—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille)—Education—Post-secondary education—(a) Statement attributed to British Columbia Minister (b) Funding of student loan program.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part today in the debate on this excellent initiative to provide for the prepayment of the child tax credit to help low-income Canadians. This initiative is part of the changes made last year to the child benefit system.

Hon. Members will recall that, last year, to provide more assistance to low-income families, our Government undertook a restructuration of child benefits. First, we amended the indexing formula for family allowances. This measure, which came into effect in January 1986, provides that family allowances will be indexed only by the amount of the yearly increase in the Consumer Price Index which exceeds 3 per cent. Any increase over 3 per cent of the inflation rate is fully compensated by indexing.

I feel compelled to point out that, in spite of the scarcity of our resources, we have maintained the universal character of family allowances. We have also enhanced the child tax credit provided selectively to low-income families. For this year, the maximum child tax credit payable in the spring of 1987 will amount to $454 compared with $384 in 1985. This represents an increase of $70. The child tax credit will continue to increase by $35 both in 1987 and in 1988 to reach $524 per child in the 1988 fiscal year. On the other hand, the point at which the child tax credit begins to decrease has been brought down this year to a family income of $23,500 from the 1985 level of $26,330. This new ceiling will also be indexed annually on the basis of any increase in the Consumer Price Index over 3 per cent.

Finally, the exemption for dependent children will be reduced over three years beginning in 1987 to reach a level equivalent to family allowances in 1989.

Mr. Speaker, the initiatives I have just described will allow us not only to improve the equity of our child benefit system, but also to focus our resources better in this area. The May 1985 Budget increased the child tax credit and improved the position of low income families. The Budget of last February provides for the prepayment of the child tax credit and it is in this regard that this Bill innovates. Prepayment of the child tax credit will allow eligible families to shorten by several months the waiting period for receiving their money as well as avoid the need for them to go to the tax discounters. In 1986, the prepayment of child tax credit will amount to $300 per child and will be made in late November or early December to eligible people whose family income was $15,000 or less in 1985. The prepayment represents approximately two-thirds of the $454 maximum credit which otherwise would be payable only in early 1987, after the beneficiary has submitted his income tax return.

Mr. Speaker, I hope sincerely that through the co-operation of all Hon. Members, some 725,000 Canadian families will benefit from this prepayment. From now on, these families will no longer have to use the services of tax discounters who, more often than not, greatly abused these families' precarious financial situation.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that this program is directed only to the families whose income in 1985 amounted to $15,000 or less. The reason we have limited this program's eligibility stems from the fact that these very low-income families are more likely to use the services of tax discounters. Moreoever, because of the limited financial resources of the State, the Government must strive above all to improve the situation of the most needy in our society.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize that, contrary to what the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has stated on a few occasions, and also the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), the people who are not eligible to prepayment of the child tax credit are not penalized. As in the past, these people will get their child tax credit when filing their income tax return. I stress the fact, Mr. Speaker, that those people will not be subject to any reduction in the child tax credit they are entitled to, they will not be subject to any penalty.

I am also happy about another proposal contained in Bill C-11, which is to extend the child tax credit in respect of a child deceased in 1986 but who would have been eligible for family allowances in 1987, had he lived. Currently, no child tax credit is paid for the year in which the child has died. According to my information, some 3,000 families would benefit from that proposal.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, from October 6 to October 10, for the second year in a row the National Family Week was held. During that week dozens of organizations and agencies from all across Canada joined their efforts and pooled their ideas to make the public aware of the importance of the family cell in our Canadian society. Let me take this opportunity to commend Family Services Canada for that initiative.

While recalling a wide range of happy social events usually experienced by people who live together, such as births, birthdays, marriages, these social partners do not forget that there are other day to day events of a painful nature. Family life sometimes involves disappointments and sorrows, and difficulty to make ends meet. This Government, and especially our Prime Minister, are well aware of those facts, that is on the one hand the importance of the family in our society and the other hand our social commitment to them.

In his first Christmas message to the Canadian people, in December 1984, the Prime Minister said the following, and I quote:

> To me, the family is, and shall always remain, the primary source of unity in our society. It forms the basis for all the elements that bring us together, including national unity.
> However, as is the case for so many of the benefits we enjoy, we may be too inclined to take our family ties for granted and not be as aware as we should of the pressures to which they can be exposed. These pressures are a threat to the continued existence of the family unit as the foundation of our society.
> In recent years, governments have taken a number of measures, both legislative and otherwise, to try and attenuate the consequences of family break-up.
> However, the question arises whether we have directed as much energy and concern toward ensuring that the family unit remains the cornerstone of our society.

And last week, during the National Family Week, the Prime Minister said:

> The family is such an intimate part of our existence that sometimes we hardly realize how enormously it influences our lives.
> It is the crucible in which our most basic values are formed, a source of confidence and support that gives meaning to our existence.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when demographers, social workers and parents are thinking about problems such as the falling birthrate, the structure of our tax system, poverty, broken relationships and unemployment, it is imperative that the Government play a major role in helping to remedy the situation. However, that does not mean society as a whole can afford to shirk its responsibility.

I felt these comments were particularly apt, considering the Bill before the House today, a measure designed to provide some financial remedy to our neediest families. They are the ones that need help first of all, and that is indeed the purpose of this legislation. Too often, as past experience has shown, parents who were short of money or wanted to be able to make some major purchase would rush to the tax discounter, to get their cheques in advance. Now, 725,000 families in Canada will receive their advance payments around the end of November or the beginning of December, without having to pay the exorbitant interest they were charged in the past.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I would like to say again how delighted I am that the 725,000 Canadian families who are to benefit under this legislation will include some 1,400 families in my riding who will be able to take advantage of Bill C-11, a positive step towards re-structuring our social policies.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Government for its decision to allow families who have lost a child to receive the child tax credit for the year during which the child died.

I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether her Department has forecasts about the amount of tax credit discounting reduction which will occur thanks to the prepayment amendment.

Mrs. Bertrand: I have not checked yet, Mr. Speaker, but I could do so within the next few minutes and reply to my hon. friend in a little while. But something is sure, and it is that tax discounters were asking a 15 per cent interest on the amount borrowed, which was enormous for low-income families.

[English]

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to rise and comment on Bill C-11. It is an exceptional Bill and certainly indicates the direction in which the Government is going in tax reform, which is something all our constituents, indeed all Canadians are looking forward to.

As outlined in the Speech from the Throne, fairness will be one of the guiding principles in all reform we make in taxation. This has to be considered as very fair. From the comments made by Opposition Members today and yesterday I am sure they also believe it is very fair and that it is a measure which all Canadians will welcome. Low-income earners in Canada deserve assistance and this is one way the Government can provide that assistance and at the same time correct inequity in our tax system. Consistent with the reform of the tax system involving lower personal tax rates, this is another measure which will be effective. Changes in the tax system of the United States have made it mandatory for us to rely less on personal income tax and look toward other areas of corporate income tax and sales tax to bring in revenues.

The child tax credit is very timely. The payment will come before Christmas at a time when families will require the money most.

Some 1.3 million children will be affected by this new Bill. The $300 per child will be very useful for people with lower incomes and will assist them at a time when requirements for money for clothing will be the greatest.

I have already received some calls from my constituents indicating that they are very supportive of what we are doing. Of course, they look forward to receiving that cheque in November. I am sure as all Canadians become aware of this legislation, they too will be anticipating that cheque in the mail which will assist them in the shopping they normally do at that time of the year.

The elimination of the need for tax discounting services is also very positive. Many people were losing a substantial portion of their tax refund and, of course, the requirement for the services of a tax discounter will now be not nearly so great as it was in the past.

This Bill is just the beginning. There will be more tax reform legislation which the House will be reviewing in the upcoming months. The Finance Committee will have a very busy year. We not only anticipate a large number of Bills from the Department of Finance, we anticipate a very busy year as tax reform becomes much more of a concern for us.

Tax reform in the United States has had a considerable impact on the American personal income tax system and we must continue to remain competitive with the United States, our very close neighbour. Workers have a certain amount of mobility in that they are able to move back and forth between Canada and the United States. Particularly for those at higher income levels, a great imbalance in the tax system might sway professionals and highly paid people to move to areas with lower personal income taxes. The Finance Committee looks forward to dealing with this problem in much more detail.

In the spring we looked at tax expenditures, a fairly complex area. We found that many of the tax expenditures did serve a good purpose but at the same time added to the complexity of the Income Tax Act.

As we strive toward fairness in the tax system, unfortunately we create a more difficult tax Act. At the present time, the tax act is so difficult that very few people can actually understand it in its entirety. As we move along with tax reform, we will look not only at fairness but hopefully at ending up with a much simpler, less complicated and less involved Act, with less need for tax advisers, tax discounters and many of the people who make a living off the complexity of the tax Act. Perhaps these people will be better employed in more productive areas.

I mentioned earlier the importance of the reform of the personal income tax system in the United States. This is something we have to monitor and study carefully, because many of the initiatives that have been taken there will have to be considered here. One area where the Americans found substantial revenue was in the area of tax expenditures. They eliminated quite a few things with which we may have problems in Canada.

Fairly soon the Auditor General will be bringing out his report. It is expected that he will have comments to make on tax expenditures, comments which could prove to be quite interesting to the Finance Committee, the Department of Finance and all those who will be reviewing the tax Act with the idea of a fairer, more useful tax system which will still provide for initiatives that will allow regional development and assistance for communities that have been provided initiatives through the tax Act.

There are many factors involved in reviewing a tax Act. We want to have something that is fairly simple and understood by a great many people. As well, we want a system which will work for all Canadians. I am quite pleased that this particular piece of legislation is very fair and targets those who need assistance most.

I am sure all Members of the House will join with the Government in supporting the Bill. I know that all Canadians who will be recipients of the $300 per child will be very thankful when they receive their cheques in November.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas (Mr. Warner) represents a sizeable rural community. I wonder what effect he thinks this new tax change will have on the rural area he represents.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I am sure it will be very well received in all the rural areas across Canada. At the present time, as the Hon. Member knows, many rural constituents have experienced considerable problems, particularly farmers who have been very badly hurt by the drop in commodity prices and the very difficult times they are now facing. They would certainly appreciate receiving that cheque at a very timely moment next November.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas (Mr. Warner), on his very excellent contribution to today's debate. The Hon. Member has listened, as I am sure have other Members to the debate today, and has heard comments by members of the Opposition along the lines that this is a good Bill and basically worthy of support, but that the Government should be doing more for those disadvantaged in our society. I am sure the Hon. Member shares our desire to be able to do more. Considering the kind of financial inheritance this Government received from its precedessors, I am wondering how the Hon. Member would propose to better assist the needy in this country without raising taxes or getting rid of programs. Does the Hon. Member have any ideas along those lines?

Mr. Warner: Thank you very much for the question. Yes, there is a way, and it is something that should be shared by all Members of this House, namely, the creation of new jobs. Fortunately, in Stormont—Dundas the small businesses and the employers have been able to create in excess of a thousand jobs in the last two years, and this trend continues. Traditionally and historically we have been an area of high unemployment. It is very gratifying to see companies locating in our area and continuing to locate in our area. What this Government has done in stabilizing our economy, in making efforts to deal with the deficit, and indicating to the international financial community that we have a stable economy and that we are going to deal with our deficit, has allowed us to have lower interest rates, which in turn has stimulated our business and industrial community, and created a considerable boom in home building in our area.

In dealing with our economic problems and problems facing the Government, job creation is one other area which we can all work at and deal with very successfully. I hope the trend will continue in my area and will spread throughout Canada into some of the areas that have been less fortunate than Stormont—Dundas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no further questions or comments, I recognize the next speaker.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): As did my colleague, I would like to say how welcome this Bill will be in British Columbia. I would like to commend the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) for introducing this measure so quickly in this new parliamentary session. This particular measure is certainly in accordance with the four pillars which form the basis of our Government's policy, particularly the one of promoting social justice.

When I had the opportunity of speaking in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I talked about the goal of this Government. We want to enlist all Canadians in the pursuit of this common goal of a modern, tolerant, and caring nation in which our citizens are secure and prosperous. The measure that we are discussing today, Bill C-11, is certainly an important step toward achieving that goal. It shows that we are a modern society, that we have the technology which enables us to send out these payments in advance. It shows that we are a caring nation, and that we certainly care about that part of our society which needs help the most and that we are going to make every effort to ensure that they are well looked after. Ultimately, we want our citizens to be secure and prosperous. As much as possible we want them to have the opportunity for employment. But certainly at the minimum we want to ensure in every way we can that we provide economic security. The prepayment of the child tax credit will certainly move a very large segment of our society toward a greater sense of security.

This legislation is one further step in helping those in our society most in need. The measure promised in the February Budget earlier this year puts money in the pockets of those who need it when they need it. It is such a simple concept I find it amazing that no one ever did it before. Perhaps they did not have the technology. But we have it now and we are going to use that technology to meet those needs.

As we have heard already, this measure will provide for the interim payment of $300 per child in November this year to those families who are eligible. It will be two-thirds of the total child tax credit which amounts to $454 for 1986. They will receive the $300 by cheque in the mail in November of this year.

As my hon. colleague from Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes) discussed earlier today, at this time of year with the onset of winter—I know as a mother of three children myself—we are aware of some of the costs that are associated with the onset of winter. The way kids grow these days, they need new winter boots, new winter coats, and there is Christmas. We all want to be able to do something special for our children around Christmas time. This payment will really be welcome because it coincides with a time of year when expenses are often a little higher than normal.

Canadian society is a dynamic society. It is also changing very rapidly. One way it is changing is in the family structure. Our challenge as a Government is to take into consideration these changes and to formulate social policy to respond to them and to help those who need it.

We are aware of the rising divorce rates, the sad fact of desertion, and the great number of single parents with a lot less support than that received by extended families which perhaps existed to a greater extent in our society in the past. As a result there is a growing number of single mothers who are single-handedly raising their children, often without any other kind of financial support. One of the very sad facts still in our Canadian society is that many of these families are poor. In fact, 42 per cent of families with a female head live below the poverty line. This legislation recognizes the plight of those low-income families and provides them with money at a time when it is needed the most. Seven hundred thousand recipients will be eligible for this prepayment. In my own Province of British Columbia we estimate there will be 67,000 families with a total of 119,300 children. That is a lot of children. The average prepayment of $535 will go a long way in helping them to meet their needs over the next few months.

One of the other facets of this Bill that has been discussed and I think it is very important given the discussion we had in this Chamber earlier this year, is that it is going to reduce the attractiveness of the services of the tax rebate discounters. Child tax credit recipients account for half the clientele of the tax rebate discounters. With the prepayment of $300 of the child tax credit in November, parents will no longer have to seek out tax rebaters to cash in on their forthcoming tax credits. That service has a cost. This innovative move will put money directly into the hands of a parent at the time when they need it. They will no longer have to wait for the money or pay a higher interest rate for the early use of this money. I should add that Bill C-11 complements our Government's tougher controls on tax discounters. What is important is that in addition to those tougher controls, we are going to do away with the need for a very large part of their services, particularly on the part of those we feel can least afford to pay for those services.

Another interesting aspect of this program is that it is in accordance with the Government's commitment to eliminate and reduce red tape. That was also part of our commitment in the Throne Speech. People do not have to apply for this payment, they will not have to fill out application forms, and we will not have to hire more people to process forms. This year it will be sent automatically and will be based upon the 1985 tax return. By paying out the child tax credit to families with incomes below $15,000, we are getting the money to those who need it in the fastest and most efficient way.

The advance payments will be made to the recipients of family allowances who in most cases are the mothers. A mother of three children who is eligible for prepayment will receive $300 per child for a total of $900.

There was a point raised earlier in the debate by an Hon. Member across the floor. I should like to point out again that obviously in some cases there will perhaps be some discrepancies between the amount of money a family might have earned in 1985 and what they might earn in 1986. There may be some overpayments in some cases. They may receive the $300 and, based upon their income tax, they perhaps are not eligible for it. In that case, when they file their 1986 income tax return, in March or April of next year, they will have to deduct the overpayment. There will be no interest on the overpayment until the end of April of next year. If they file their income tax returns on time, in compliance with the law, there will be no interest payable. For the interest of Hon. Members opposite, I point out that that is based upon Section 164.1(3).

We cannot look at Bill C-11 in isolation. It is really part of a total package of programs we have put forward during the past two years and will put forward in the coming two years, to help those most in need, particularly women. I look back on the work we did in the Enforcement of Maintenance Act in conjunction with the Divorce Act. The House will recall that new measures were brought forward which created for the first time a national system to track down and try to ensure that a spouse who owed money on behalf of an estranged spouse or divorced spouse and dependent children paid that money. We all know of the horrible history of the past. I think up to 80 per cent of spouses were in default of maintenance and support payments. That measure will also help to ensure that many of these same families—and in most cases women lead these families—will have access to greater economic security.

Of course we are aware of the increases in the child tax credit. They will be increasing each year as well. Our commitment does not end with social programs. Hand in hand with these programs are policies which promote economic renewal. I am sure Hon. Members opposite will agree that an excellent way to ensure fairness and to break the cycle of poverty for low-income families is to provide them with meaningful job opportunities.

Since the election—and we have heard these figures often—595,000 jobs have been created, with 271,000 having been created in the past year. The unemployment rate in September was 9.5 per cent, compared with 11.7 per cent in September, 1984. More than 75 per cent of the jobs which have been created are full time. It is an impressive record. Since women are the bread-winners for a considerable portion of single-parent families, I believe it would be enlightening to provide the House with a breakdown of statistics which indicates the Government's record in respect of job creation for women. There are 328,000 more women working today than there were in 1984. The unemployment rate for women has fallen by 2.3 per cent since the election, from 12 per cent to 9.7 per cent. As a result of the economic policies pursued by the Government, there have been instances across the country where single mothers have been able to obtain meaningful employment and many other cases where mothers in two-parent families have been able to go to work to add to the family's income. This has had the effect of breaking the cycle of poverty for many Canadian families and has provided them with opportunities of which they could only have dreamed a few short years ago.

As well, under our job training programs, I know from my own experience in my riding of Capilano, some exciting and exhilarating results have occurred for women. I should like to cite one—a project carried out by North Shore Continuing Education under the Job Re-entry Program which is part of the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program. It involved a number of single women who were out of the workforce. Many of them were on social assistance, many of the women we will be targeting with the child tax credit prepayment. They had the opportunity of an 11-month period of training, partly in the class-room and partly on the job training with a variety of employers. I visited those women during the first week of the program, and again about half way through. I also had the honour of being invited to their graduation. A tremendous change had occurred in those few short months. Women whose outlook was of hopelessness, who saw themselves with no future, who had little sense of self-respect, had turned into women of spirit, high regard, and optimism. Almost all of them already had job offers at the time of graduation. I checked again recently and found that about 80 per cent are still in those first jobs and that many of them have even started their own businesses.

Those are the kinds of programs and commitments which the Government is undertaking. They are helping women from Capilano right across to Newfoundland. A tremendous change is occurring in the country.

The Government will continue to foster policies which will help with economic renewal, just as it will continue to implement policies that further social justice. We are looking forward to the report of the Special Committee on Child Care because its input will be important to Canadian women and Canadian families. We are a compassionate, caring Government. When we see an opportunity to improve one of our social programs so that it better addresses the needs of Canadians, we act on it.

In respect of Bill C-11, we are improving the delivery mechanism of the child tax credit so that money is put into the hands of Canadian parents at a time of the year when they need it most. I believe this is a measure which Hon. Members on both sides of the House will support and applaud. It will certainly have a tremendous impact upon 700,000 families in November of this year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Hon. Member who described her Government as being compassionate and concerned about low-income people. How can she square the action being taken by the Government in terms of the prepayment of child tax credits with the continuation of the $500,000 capital gains exemption which gives a tax gift to the very wealthiest people in the country? If the Government were to rescind that tax giveaway, could it not then increase benefits such as the child tax credit for people with low incomes? If the Government is really compassionate, why does it not take this further step?

• (1710)

Mrs. Collins: I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's comment. It concerns me somewhat that there has not been enough discussion about the measure on capital gains, introduced some time ago. I think it is totally consistent with the four pillars of our Government of economic renewal and social justice. I might just remind the Hon. Member that people talk about the measure being up to $500,000, meaning you have to be wealthy to take advantage of it. But this measure also applies to many middle, even lower-middle class people who have small investments and who buy a few shares in a company. If they get a little gain, they will be able to keep that gain tax free. The measure is certainly helping many people that I know in the middle-income level with a piece of property. They are encouraged to buy some property because they know they can get the benefit. This is the very measure that we feel is helping to create a positive environment for individuals to take risks and create wealth. It encourages investment, particularly in Canadian companies across the land. I just wish more Canadians would invest. I think the possibility that they can make a capital gain without it being taxed is just the kind of incentive they need. We need to talk about this more to encourage people to take advantage of the opportunity. What we are doing is providing opportunities for Canadians to participate in the growth and the wealth of Canada.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to take a longer term look at child benefits and compare them with the present measure which, as I and my Party have said, is one that we support. Will she compare the impact of this prepayment with the erosion to the real value of child benefits which will occur if the 3 per cent peg is kept in place, the peg which the Government has instituted?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the amount of child tax benefits will be increasing each year. Given the excellent economic policies of the Government, we have also been able to keep inflation at a very low level, so there will be some growth, certainly in the benefit received by families, in the child tax payments which are planned over the coming years. There is a good sense of proportion there.

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I have just a comment or two on my colleague's statements, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). The thing that perhaps excites me the most is that this measure it takes away the unsavoury side we saw accompanying the child tax credit, namely, the tax rebate discounters. When families have a limited amount of money, and certainly these families do, it is encouraging to see the Government taking action which will keep as much of that money as possible in the hands of the recipients.

The Member's comments with regard to British Columbia would also apply to my constituents and other constituents throughout the Province of New Brunswick. We would have proportionately a larger number of people in that income group affected positively by the change. I want to echo the same comments from the East Coast that my friend has echoed from the West Coast, that this measure is beneficial to all Canadians.

I too have seen some of the effects of our caring Government and some of the positive effects of the Job Entry Program. Once again I would like to add to what the Hon. Member has said in that it has changed attitudes of people who have had the opportunity to take part in these courses. Personally I have gone to six graduations, and over 80 per cent of the graduates have found work in our communities as a result of the extra experience and work-related activities they have enjoyed through that program. It is not just a West Coast phenomena, the effect will be enjoyed by Canadians across the country. On behalf of my constituents I am most excited and enthusiastic about the initiative taken by the Government in Bill C-11.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a very brief question of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). I know of her concern regarding women's and children's issues. I was pleased to hear her say that she felt this move by the Government would cut down on the number of tax discounters now in operation. Does she feel that tax discounters will be on their way out or will there simply be fewer in number? Is there any possible way that tax discounters could get hold of this money?

Mrs. Collins: They are not going to be able to get hold of this money, Mr. Speaker. This money will go in a cheque directly to the recipient delivered by Canada Post. There is no problem about that part. We looked at this issue of the future of tax discounters last year. We discussed whether they should be outlawed entirely, but we are a free society. If there is a demand for certain services, I am not sure we should be saying they are not allowed if people want to use that service and are prepared to pay for it. As the Member will recall, we have limited the rates they can charge so the rates cannot be usurious. I think Members will find, as I mentioned, that about 50 per cent of tax discounters' business in the past has been dealing with this child tax credit. Obviously that business will decline. Some may not stay in business at all. Many are also involved in helping to prepare income tax returns. Probably those that are well respected in their communities and are providing a service in some other areas will continue in business. Others may not be able to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any other questions or comments? Does the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) have a question?

Mr. Keeper: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was just curious as to whether the Chair preferred a question to a speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I always look forward to the Hon. Member's speech.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: I welcome the opportunity to address this legislation. I must begin by saying that I think the notion of prepaying the child tax credit is worthwhile. I think it will have some beneficial impact and the Government deserves credit for taking the action that it is taking.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: The problem with the action the Government is taking though is that it does not quite go far enough. While this prepayment of the child tax credit reduces the problem, it leaves in place the practice of tax discounters. I wonder why the Government wants to take this meliorated action to reduce the problem but does not go all the way. Why not eliminate the problem? Why not have a ban on tax discounters? Has the Government given serious consideration to that proposal?

Mrs. Sparrow: This is a democracy.

Mr. Keeper: I hear someone on my right saying that this is a democracy. I guess the implication is that if we do not allow poor people to be ripped off by large tax discounters we are somehow undermining the basic notions of democracy. I would point out that tax discounting is banned in the U.S. Surely members of the Conservative Party would not want to imply that the American system of government is anything but democratic.

I ask why the Government does not go all the way and simply ban tax discounting. I have to speculate that the reason has to do with the ideological commitments of the Conservative Party. The Conservatives are wedded to the notion of a free market and therefore find themselves unable to take effective action in this area. They are unable to bring themselves to say that tax discounting is immoral, wrong, a rip-off and should not be allowed, because tax discounters are private business people and the Conservatives are committed to the free market. That is a narrow point of view and a sad misapplication of Conservative philosophy.

I also have to believe that the Government has chosen to put in place a prepayment of the child tax credit rather than banning discounting because they were lobbied by the tax discounters. It is a lucrative business and these people have obviously been able to gain the ear of the Government. Certainly much more so than those who are concerned about the continued existence of tax discounting and the rip-off of the poor which it implies.

Perhaps some elaboration on just what exactly tax discounting is would be of assistance. Let us say that you file your income tax return and you expect a refund. Since it takes so long for Revenue Canada to process refunds, people in need of the money will go to a tax discounter and in effect sell their refund at a discount so they can get the cash in their hands right away. Two-thirds of those who use tax discounters have incomes of less than $8,000. Clearly it is those who live below the poverty line, the poorest in our society, who use discounters and are in turn exploited by them.

With specific reference to this legislation before us today, it is worth noting that the amount of money from child tax credits which has gone into the hands of tax discounters, rather than into the hands of the poor for which the money was originally intended and allocated by the taxpayers and Parliament, was in the order of $20 million. These companies are actually benefiting from the existence of poverty and the compassion of Canadians. Canadians, because they care for their fellow countrymen, have put in place policies to aid the poor. These tax discounters come in like wolves and ravage the poor.

My point is that while what the Government is doing today is worthwhile and deserving of credit, I really must question again why the Government did not go all the way and ban tax discounting. It is already banned in the United States, a country dedicated to the free enterprise system and headed by a man who is the darling of the private sector.

Another approach the Government might take to cut discounting would be to ensure an effective and timely administration of tax refunds. Why should it take months to receive a tax refund? If Revenue Canada were organized in an efficient way there would be no reason for people to use tax discounters.

We have this legislation before us not only because of tax discounters, but because we have a large number of poor people in Canada. It is before us because of the existence of poverty. While this measure will deal with one specific problem from which poor people suffer, I must say that I hope to see the Government do more for the poor, do more to see that their basic human needs are met, do more to reduce if not eradicate the existence of poverty in this wealthy land. I have heard statistics over the last few months which indicate that the gap between the rich and the poor is growing, that the number of people living in poverty is increasing. A great percentage of those who are poor are women. They are often single parents and have to stay home to look after the children. As a result of the loss of the other parent and the loss of income, they end up in poverty. If the Government were concerned about poverty, it would look at the situation in which poor single parents find themselves. The Government would see that it is possible to move people from poverty to a decent standard of living. Many of these women, given training, the opportunity for job experience and social support, could move from below the poverty line to a reasonable standard of living. This has been demonstrated through special training programs which offer the income support, counselling and social support people need to make a success of the training programs.

I call upon the Government to take significant action in the area of policy which affects poverty in the country. The Government should consider the notion of a guaranteed annual income. A guaranteed annual income assures people that they will have the income to meet their basic human needs of food, clothing and shelter. It also encourages people to work. A guaranteed annual income is structured in such a way that if you had a job and made some money you would not lose that income by having it deducted from your income support. You would be able to keep a significant portion of it. This gives people an incentive to work because the money they earn will not be deducted from their social support.

It is time that Canadian governments took a serious look at a guaranteed annual income. Perhaps as part of that re-examination we could find a new name for the policy. Guaranteed annual income has a ring that leaves some people with the impression that it just encourages people to be lazy, or that people do not have to contribute to society. Perhaps we need a new label for this policy.

Rather than bringing in piecemeal, band-aid measures, why does the Government not bring in a significant measure that would have a real impact on poverty? The other way in which the Government could have such an impact is through the pursuit of a full employment policy. One of the reasons we have increasing levels of poverty in the country is that there are more and more people unemployed. According to official statistics, over one million people in the country are unemployed. Such a high level of unemployment naturally leads to an increase in poverty and suffering.

We need a serious commitment by the Government to put in place a network of policies with employment its highest priority. All citizens should have the right and opportunity to work. All citizens need the opportunity to contribute to society and to have a reasonable income to meet their needs in order to enjoy life and be a part of our community. While I applaud the Government for having taken a worthwhile step today, I think the step should be seen in the larger context of the level of poverty in the country and the alternative measures which the Government could be undertaking in order to demonstrate to Canadians its compassion and concern about the disadvantaged and poor people.

Tax discounting raises an issue regarding the way in which our tax system is administered. We have created the child tax credit, a system of taxation which benefits poor people more than those who are affluent, which is a good social policy. Then along come some wolves who seek to take advantage of the social policies. While the child tax credit does benefit the poor and adds to the progressiveness of the income tax system, if you stand back and get a wider view of the situation the inequities stand out. Today we are trying to enforce some of the equitable aspects of our tax system. We are trying to salvage a good tax policy.

While the Government deserves some credit for taking a worthwhile step, we must ask why it did not go further.

[Translation]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the Government has done something good today. But if it really cares about poor people, I suggest it could do more. Other things must be done, and the measure we are dealing with today is good, but the gouvernment must do more.

[English]

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I must first applaud the Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) for complimenting the Government on its move in Bill C-11. I join with him in that. I think it is a great piece of legislation. In particular, it demonstrates that the Government is not only fiscally responsible but also very compassionate. I say that because the NDP tends to think it has the exclusive right to compassion in the country. The Government, through this and many other pieces of legislation, is showing that it too cares about the people who are having a difficult time, whether they be single women or families with young children who, not necessarily through their own fault, need a helping hand. I recognize this need in my constituency of Saskatoon East; all of my Conservative colleagues recognize that need throughout the country. I think this is a good piece of legislation and the Member for Winnipeg North Centre certainly agrees with it.

The NDP is trying to grab a piece of the action on tax reform. The message to come down from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) very soon will demonstrate to that Party that this is a priority with the Conservative Government and that it will be taking the lead on that issue. These are things which the Liberals did not attempt in the last 20 years. There are new initiatives which can be taken in order to broaden the tax base and reach the people who are having difficulty in the country today.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have never claimed that New Democrats have a patent on compassion. However, I believe that this Party seeks to speak out for fairness in Canadian society. I would claim as well that we have a history of speaking out in the interests of ordinary people. The Hon. Member indicates that his party is a compassionate party. I ask him why his compassionate party, in the last two Budgets, increased taxes for ordinary Canadian families by approximately $1,000? He talks about tax reform. We have been pushing for tax reform.

The Government mentioned in the Throne Speech that it would lower the rate of income tax. I would caution him that if on the one hand the Government moves to lower the rate of income tax, while on the other hand increases taxes by way of a hidden taxes, I will want to look at the bottom line to see whether taxes have gone down or have increased. I would hope that a compassionate party and a compassionate Government would not, in the name of tax reform, end up increasing taxes even more for ordinary families in this country.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a supplementary comment. I know that we are not here to ask each other questions, but I want to make a statement concerning increased taxes, and it relates to that old expression we have heard a thousand times in the House and throughout the country, that there is no such thing as a free lunch. In other words, after one has given away so much, as the previous administration did over the last 12 to 15 years, there comes a time to face up to the debt. That is precisely what we are trying to do. I get very frustrated when members of the New Democratic Party fail to realize that perhaps it is necessary to face up to the debt, that we just cannot continue to send out blank cheques. Taxes are not raised because people get a kick out of raising taxes. They are raised because somebody has to meet the expenditure of the Government today, whether it is for social programs or economic programs. I am stating the obvious. I just have to say that I get a little tired of continually hearing about how the Government has raised taxes. I think somebody should be standing up to say that the Government finally had enough guts to face up to the issues in this country.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned that he and his party do not get a kick out of raising taxes. I am sure they did not get a kick out of raising taxes, but something they will get from it is the boot. Canadians will boot them out of office because they continue to raise taxes on ordinary families in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments have terminated. Debate.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity to speak in the second session of this Parliament and I want to take the opportunity to congratulate you on your reappointment to your duties as the Deputy Chairman, as well as to congratulate you for a record that you and I hold. Each time I have spoken in the House you have been in the chair. I saw you rush back with wild anticipation to make sure that you did not break that record.

I also know that my good friend, the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish), has been waiting patiently all day. The hour is getting late, so I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak in support of this Bill.

I sat on the Legislative Committee that dealt with the tax discounters legislation and had the opportunity to become interested in this Bill. The Government stated in the Throne Speech that it is committed to the preservation and reinforcement of the family institution. This Bill is part of that program, because bringing forward the child tax credit at this time will help to strengthen families and lessen economic problems in low-income families. In addition, it follows our theme that social justice demands that those in the greatest need should be helped the most. Both of those themes are being followed in this Bill. It is important that the Government has decided to put forward $300 per child for low-income families earning less than $15,000 a year.

When I was on the committee dealing with Bill C-83, the Consumers' Association of Canada made a presentation which clearly describes the impact this Bill will have on tax discounters. They state that the statistics reported in chart 5 of the consultation paper indicate that almost two-thirds of the discountees reported an annual income below $8,000, and that 84 per cent of the female discountees claimed a child tax credit. This Bill will eliminate the majority of these instances with tax discounters and will put the money into the pockets of the families in need. I have always believed that it is far greater to have the family bread-winner working than throwing his or her hands up in disgust and saying: "I am going to go on welfare". The approach we have taken with the child tax credit for those in need follows one of my beliefs.

I might say that when I was Minister of Community Services in the Province of Manitoba I had the opportunity to institute a program that follows the belief that we should keep the family together by having the bread-winner working rather than on social assistance. I introduced a program called the child-related income support payment that gives $30 a month per child to low-income families in Manitoba. That program has worked very well. I am pleased that the Government is following this approach to provide funding to those families in the greatest need.

What does Bill C-11 mean to Manitoba? When we consider that over 700,000 families will benefit from a payment of $300 per child in November, we are probably talking about 30,000 families in Manitoba who will benefit from this Bill. I represent a cosmopolitan type of riding, Winnipeg—St. James, with part of the riding in the core area of Winnipeg. I know that many low-income families will benefit from the Bill we are discussing today.

I also believe that the time of year we are providing this prepayment is important. While the weather may not be the same in Vancouver, those who live on the Prairies, in Newfoundland and other parts of Canada and experience extreme winters know the cost of providing clothes for children, particularly when they are growing rapidly at certain stages in life.

Another fact in Manitoba that probably increased the use of tax discounters in the past is that the auto insurance payment comes due in February. That is approximately the time when tax discounters would be approached under the old system to see if a family could borrow money to pay for the insurance, if they owned a car. Again, the time of this prepayment is very important.

I believe the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) said that we should eliminate tax discounters. I can tell the Hon. Member that the changes in the tax discounters act has greatly affected the opportunity for people in that business to get access to this money from the child tax rebate system. We have changed that considerably so that a portion of that money that would have gone to tax discounters will never be received by them. I compliment the Government for taking this approach in the Bill and for the timely manner in which it has done so.

I have heard it said, particularly by the New Democratic Party, that we should give more hand-outs and provide more social services. Unfortunately, those Hon. Members do not have to try to balance the books. Whether or not they are aware of it, right now when we pay personal income tax federally, $80 out of every $100 collected goes to pay just interest on the outstanding debt. If we did everything the NDP would like us to do, I am sure that in no time 100 per cent of our tax dollars, not 80 per cent, would go to pay the interest on the national debt. I think Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party should be reminded that money does not grow on trees. Governments do not have their own money. Governments get their money from businesses, through sales tax and from the people.

I would like to comment on the approach we have taken for economic renewal. I have always believed that if one wants to reinforce the family unit, the best way to do it is to have the father and mother working and bringing money into the house. There is then pride in the mother and father and that pride grows, builds the family unit and keeps them together. I think the approach we have taken to try and create jobs and economic growth is as important as the provision of services about which we are talking today. I believe the heads of families feel much more proud to be out working and receiving benefits from these other programs than receiving social assistance. I hope this Bill will be passed without delay so we can get this money into the hands of the low-income families in order that they can benefit from it this coming winter at Christmastime.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) would correct some information I gathered from the previous speaker who indicated the unemployment situation in the Hon. Member's riding and in Canada was getting worse. In my area unemployment has dropped from somewhere around 11 per cent in 1984 to around 5 per cent. Are things getting worse in the Winnipeg area? Are our programs not working in the Hon. Member's area?

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I think I am correct in saying that Manitoba, not just my particular riding, is one of the lowest in terms of unemployment in Canada. I believe unemployment dropped by .6 per cent this last month. So I believe our economic programs to create jobs are working very well in Manitoba. I cannot be precise about certain parts of my riding, but I would presume, because it is a cosmopolitan kind of riding, that if unemployment has dropped within the province it would have dropped within my riding as well. I am encouraged that what we are doing in trying to create jobs and pride, getting people to work with the tax incentives we have given small business, is working very well.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) for his excellent statistics. He is quite right in stating that the federal Government's job-creation plans for Manitoba have really paid off. They are worthwhile projects, not like the projects of the previous Government, paying people to learn karate in church basements and that sort of thing. I would like to point out that there are more jobs available in Canada today than there have ever been at any other time. One just has to look at any major newspaper to see pages and pages of help wanted advertisements. We know the Liberal Party when it was in government destroyed the work ethic in this country with the ridiculous unemployment insurance scheme it introduced in the early 1970s. We are taking positive action to deal with it. Our Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has introduced the increased interview activity plan. From the information I have to date, 75,000 unemployed have been called in so far to find out why they are not taking jobs which are available. We have found jobs for 25,000 of them already. I understand that many of the people who are called in for the interviews are not showing up because they know we are calling them to find them a job.

I have written to the Minister of Employment and Immigration today asking him to have his UIC officials go to these missions which have soup kitchens and are feeding the unemployed and discuss with these people the reasons they cannot find a job. Perhaps we can assist them in that regard. I am not saying this is the case in every part of Canada. However, it certainly is the case in Ontario. In British Columbia which has a 15 per cent unemployment rate, it was interesting that they could not find enough census takers to do the recent census. They were being offered $7.50 an hour.

There is another serious problem in this country. The head of the Labour Congress in the Province of Alberta has told the unemployed not to take the jobs, to stay on unemployment insurance benefits or welfare. Is that not a great attitude to take?

The Government is taking positive action to try to restore the work ethic which was destroyed by the Liberal Party. We have a pretty good record to date. We will be interviewing a million persons across Canada and I am sure we will find work for a lot more Canadians in the future.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to test your interpretation of the rule of relevance to discover what connection there is between the vicious verbal assaults on the unemployed we just heard and the terms of Bill C-11.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) has the floor.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my good friend and neighbour, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-

Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), for his comments. I think what the Hon. Member was indicating is that there is work out there for the potential breadwinners of families which was not there before. The Hon. Member's comments link very closely to my remarks, that we must get the breadwinner working and bringing income in. If that income is not adequate, the Government and the taxpayers can help. If we can keep him or her working, we have a good thing going. I believe the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine was showing that there is potential for someone to go out and get a job as the breadwinner of the family.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—CREATION OF NATIONAL MARKETING BOARD FOR INCUBATED EGGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in this House I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) for details on the official recognition of a national marketing board for incubated eggs.

I would like to bring forth additional information on that issue of major importance to Canadians in general and to people in my constituency in particular. I would like to remind the Minister how important it is that a decision be made soon by Cabinet, because what is involved is a very important proclamation, in view of the fact that the market is gradually desintegrating under the feet of our incubated egg producers. It must also be emphasized, Mr. Speaker, that producers of incubated eggs employ some 2,000 people here in Canada, either directly or indirectly.

This industry has a turnover of well over $100 million and, in addition, it provides the chick producers of Quebec with the eggs they require for their final production.

I feel I should also include details as to the status of that industry in Quebec, where some 30 per cent of all incubated eggs are produced.

Quebec producers get 80 per cent of their supplies from eggs incubated in Quebec. The industry is very seriously threatened by American competition, and I must stress that between 1983 and 1985 there have been alarming increases in the levels of American egg and chick imports. They have increased by 59 and 829 per cent respectively, going from 39.6 to 63.3 million eggs and from 2.1 to 19.8 million chicks. Those data, illustrating as they do the trend in our Canadian incubated egg production, is a very bad omen indeed, and it is urgent that we take steps to stop that trend. Our producers will find it increasingly hard to survive and hold their own on a competitive market where inequality and inadequate organization would prove very costly to Canadian producers. Canadian producers do not expect preferential treatment from the Government, they are simply asking for a specific measure which is consistent with the existing law, namely that their marketing board be duly acknowledged. They do not advocate the expenditure of public funds. The producers are seeking a formal structure so that they will be able to exercise self-discipline and avail themselves of existing provisions in Canadian law. They did not spare any effort and were in regular contact with the office of the Minister of Agriculture who, last August 13, brought the issue of incubated eggs to the attention of his Cabinet colleagues. Their decision was to refer the matter to the trade relations departmental sub-committee for an assessment of the impact which the creation of a new board might have on the Canada-U.S. bilateral discussions on freer trade. The producers are worried about possible delays and they would like the Government and the Department of Agriculture to set a deadline in the near future just so they can be sure their marketing board will become operative. It is in that sense that I urge the Minister of Agriculture to intervene and establish the marketing board. I am asking this because it is important to Canadian producers, including those in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, first because it means a lot to most incubated egg producers in my riding, and a large number of industries are related to chicken farming, egg production, and so on. I hope that the Minister of Agriculture will be able to provide an appropriate answer and I know that he will be well represented in this House by his new Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne), whom I wish to congratulate on his appointment as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, which appointment he certainly owes to his active interest in the fields of agriculture and wheat transport in relation with the Crow rate. Today, the Hon. Member for Champlain has an opportunity to assert officially his desire to help Quebec producers.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to say that it is a pleasure to see our Quebec colleagues, such as the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), take an active interest in agriculture, particularly as concerns an issue which has been the subject of special attention these last few months and weeks.

First, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act allows for the establishment of an agency when there is a certainty that the majority of producers of a farm product or of each farm product in Canada are in favour of creating such an agency.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, in recent years, the Canadian Association of Egg Producers has worked to establish the provincial organizations required to create a national supply management agency.

Mr. Speaker, what I would like to impress upon the Hon. Member for Lévis is that in 1976, and to quote from the answer given yesterday by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to the question raised by the Hon. Member in this House:

> However, let me indicate to the Hon. Member that it has been the position of this Party since 1976, is the position of this Party today, and will remain its position, that the producers themselves will determine what system of marketing best suits their own needs.

I think the position of the Minister of Agriculture on that matter is direct, clear, and unequivocal. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, when reference is made to putting in place a system as imposing as the one now being proposed, it involves discussions and negotiations, and of course when the matter comes before Cabinet, the latter must consider some of the recommendations and look at the situation as it exists in that industry.

This is why I am telling all incubated egg producers in Quebec and Canada—and I referred to Quebec because my colleague for Lévis raised the issue, knowing full well that the Vice President of the Canadian Incubated Egg Association comes from his constituency— what I would like to emphasize to the Hon. Member is that the matter is proceeding. And the matter is proceeding because it has come before Cabinet, and since a Cabinet decision is to be taken in the coming days or weeks, it is my view that the Hon. Member for Lévis can tell his constituents that the matter is proceeding and going forward and that, as stated by the Minister of Agriculture, we will provide the majority of egg producers with the marketing boards, the systems of marketing they will want to have established.

EDUCATION—POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO BRITISH COLUMBIA MINISTER (B) FUNDING OF STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last, October 10, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) what the Government is going to do about the appalling situation many young people are facing in getting post-secondary education. I called to his attention the fact that the Minister of Education for British Columbia had the audacity to advise young people that they should "re-examine their priorities and consider putting off their post-secondary education if they are unable to afford it".

I asked the Prime Minister what he will do about this tragic situation. Specifically, I asked if he would end the freeze on the level of student loans which, because of inflation, jeopardizes the future of students who do not come from wealthy families. The Prime Minister did not answer that question. In fact, I suggest he did not give the reply that it deserves. What he did volunteer was that his Government is committed to investing in the youth of our country, evidenced, he said, by the increase of some $25 billion directed to those areas over the next five years.

He knows, and I believe every Member of this House knows, that the $25 billion of which he speaks refers to federal transfer payments to the provinces, and will over five years only barely equalize inflation at 5 per cent, which is not a real increase at all. In fact, it amounts to a cut-back on the promises which the Prime Minister made to the people of Canada as to what the formula would be for the actual increases which are needed to maintain our educational system. All in all, he knows that in other areas of support for post-secondary education his Government is financially cutting back and strangling our colleges and universities, more particularly our students and faculty members.

One must ask why the Government has twice changed those individuals responsible for post-secondary education over the past two years. We now have our third Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) and our third Deputy Minister in two years. Is it because they were all incompetent? Was it because those Ministers and Deputy Ministers were embarrassed by the Government's betrayal of our youth and our country's future and, in the face of this grave crisis, were humiliated by their impotence and had to be replaced?

The crisis in Canada grows daily more acute for our universities and colleges. University presidents in British Columbia resigned last year in sorrow and in protest. They knew they could not deliver, and they did not want to deceive anyone. Students have held rallies across the country. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada dared to comment, so grave is this crisis, and called upon the Governments of Canada to do something about it. Just today, universities and colleges in Toronto were closed down in protest by administrators, faculty members, and students alike.

Our national task force on post-secondary education, appointed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), is going across Canada for the next three weeks to pinpoint immediate steps the federal Government could take to rectify the grave crisis in the field of post-secondary education.

Does the Government have anything creative to offer to the more than one million students and teachers in our colleges and universities other than cuts to the transfer payments formula, 40 per cent cuts in community colleges seats for training, a freeze on the level of student loans, savaging the budget of the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) to a point where it is now nothing more than a ceremonial office, and proposing to call yet another conference to stall off federal action? I suggest that this reply by the Government of yet another conference, of calling people together, is not action in the face of a grave crisis which has been ongoing for two years.

I hope that tonight the Parliamentary Secretary will give a reply which indicates some kind of action. What does this Government, devoid of creativity or initiative, have to offer? It cannot act or in this case even react in time to save our post-secondary educational infrastructure.

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, I wish also to congragulate you, because it is the first time I have risen in the House since our return for this second session of the 33rd Parliament as the new Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism, as announced yesterday by the Prime Minister.

I want to congratulate you also for your good performance at the time the House elected its Speaker, as well as your appointment as Deputy Chairman of the Committees of the Whole House.

A few days ago, Mr. Speaker, and again tonight, the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) expressed his concerns about the ability for young Canadian men and women to have access to post-secondary education and wondered about the Government's intention concerning young people's access to college and university education, whatever their financial status.

The Prime Minister indicated then in the House the Government's intention in this area by emphasizing the principles indicated in the Speech from the Throne and mentioning the increased contribution of the Federal Government to this area.

If I may, I should like tonight to give the House some indications concerning the access to post-secondary education for young Canadians and remind the House of some very concrete steps the Government has taken.

I suggest it would be improper to try and make political gains on the future of our young people, because what we are doing for our young men and women is for the future of the country. There is a principle with which not only this Government, but all concerned parties and the Canadian society as a whole agree, namely, that all students with the necessary qualifications should have access to post-secondary education. It is in the light of this universally accepted principle that the Government is directing its efforts, taking into account the fact that education is a provincial area of competence.

When we refer to the education of young people, we are not thinking only of the rich, those whose parents can afford to pay, but all young people who have talents to develop and want to study, including those who are handicapped or are financially disadvantaged. That is why the Government is putting so much emphasis on this aspect of the question.

First, as concerns education and health, the Government will be making available to the provinces during the next five years an additional amount of over $25 billion to allow them to live up fully to their responsibilities. This represents an annual increase of about 5 per cent in the federal contribution.

The expenditures of the federal Government in relation with the student loans program will increase from $285.5 million in 1984-85 to $304.2 million this year, in 1986-87. Moreover, the number of students who benefit under this program has increased from 226,000 to 235,000 over the same period. More Canadian students benefit from this program than before.

Do I have to remind you that this program is meant to help, with the co-operation of the provinces, qualified but needy students undertake post-secondary studies.

It is a good thing to review periodically the aid given in that area. You are aware of the fact that the Council of Ministers of Education has recently agreed to set up a federal-provincial advisory committee whose task it will be to review some of the programs and to suggest means to strengthen the co-operation between both levels of Government.

As for the handicapped, I should like to remind this House that last year the Government set up a $16-million fund to improve the condition of handicapped people.

Beside this fund, there are particular programs that, unfortunately, I cannot review in detail. I wanted to give this information to my colleague, Mr. Speaker, because it shows that we are successful in our efforts to give young Canadian men and women, whether they are physically or financially handicapped, better access to post-secondary education.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.19 p.m.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN ON TIME

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the St. Lawrence Seaway, and the Welland Canal in particular, have been receiving some negative attention as a result of the grain handlers' strike in Thunder Bay. I would like to dispel some of the rumours. Every ship available, including ships that have been out of service for over a year, have been called into service to meet the requirements of the Canadian Wheat Board. One hundred and fifty to 200 ships are needed to move the grain. I have the assurance of Mr. Bruce McLeod, Vice-President of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, Western Region, in my riding of Welland, that customers will be very satisfied with the Seaway's handling of the additional traffic. There are no bottle-necks along the Seaway as a result of the strike. The wheat will be delivered on time.

REDUCTION OF FRANCOPHONE EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, according to an article in The Globe and Mail, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police intended to put a ceiling on the number of Canadian men and women, whose official language is French, to be allowed in its regular forces.

According to the article, the RCMP even received the Conservative Government's approval for reducing representation in the RCMP of Canadians whose official language is French from 20.8 per cent to 14.1 per cent.

How can the Government approve this unfair decision which goes entirely against the official languages policy, and does it feel no embarrassment about this policy that will affect nearly 800 Canadian men and women? At a time when this Parliament is preparing to amend the Official Languages Act—a formal commitment was made by the Government in the Speech from Throne—why doesn't the Government show some real leadership with respect to official languages and give clear and specific directives to the RCMP, to the effect that it is not to change the rules of the game before the Parliament of Canada has decided on the amendments to be made to the Official Languages Act?

PERSONS AWARDS RECIPIENTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on the fifty-seventh anniversary of Persons' Day I take great pleasure in standing to honour Elizabeth Carr, Hon. Muriel McQueen Fergusson, Denyse Bélanger Rochon, Berenice Sisler and Helen Yeo. We thank them for their tireless efforts on behalf of equality for women.

This year I would also like to recognize many other brave women who are struggling to survive, the women who live the inequities that this year's Persons Awards recipients are trying so hard to correct. These are the single parent mothers raising their children on incomes below the poverty line, the women working for 60-cent dollars and no benefits in the female job ghettos, and the older women left in poverty after a lifetime of service in the home and in the paid labour force.

On behalf of these women, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to take concrete action to close the male-female gap, to enact mandatory enforcement of affirmative action, and to ensure prorated benefits for part-time workers.

ENVIRONMENT CANADA

SIZE OF DEPARTMENT'S BUDGET

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the 1984 estimates of Environment Canada, the budget was $886 million. In 1986 the budget of Environment Canada is $745 million, a reduction of $141 million or about 16 per cent with respect to 1984. In addition, because of the loss in purchasing power caused by inflation, in the order of 4.2 per cent per year, the 1984 budget should have increased by $37 million in 1985 and by $38 million in 1986 to a total of $962 million. At a time when Canadians are expecting a stronger role from government in the environment, Environment Canada has suffered over the past two years, due to inflation and the deficit reduction policies of the Government, a total loss of $217 million.

In the House of Commons on October 10, 1986, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), as reported at page 289 of Hansard said:

> Indeed, instead of slashing the budget of Environment Canada, the Government has in fact increased it.

How can the Minister say that? How can he claim to be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Matapédia—Matane (Mr. Joncas).

MATAPÉDIA—MATANE CONSTITUENCY

PROPOSED BOUNDARY READJUSTMENT

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, with respect, I would like to point out to the House that the proposed revision of the electoral boundaries of the electoral district of Matapédia—Matane, which I represent, is seen by the people concerned as irresponsible and unthinking.

I realize it is only a proposal, Mr. Speaker. Nevertheless, before this proposal acquires a more formal and imperative character, the brains behind the proposed revision would do well to re-think this operation, because today, it is clearly seen as an unprededecedented carving up of the electoral map, by both the communities that will be included in the riding and those that are being rather unceremoniously displaced.

I can only hope, Mr. Speaker, that at the next decision-making session, common sense will be allowed to prevail. The people concerned will see this at least as proof of the Government's civility and intelligence, if not as a token of its respect.

FINANCE

NON-PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY SCOTT PAPER COMPANY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, to underline the need for an equitable, just, and fair tax system for everyone in Canada, the winner today of the great untaxed corporation award is Scott Paper. This is the fifth company in as many days to receive this award. This company has earned this award because successive Liberal and Conservative tax measures have given Scott Paper Company the right to pay no taxes and, in fact, to receive tax credits in 1982, 1983, and 1984 on profits in excess of $28 million.

Had our tax system been fair and had Scott Paper been required to pay a tax rate of 25 per cent on its profits of $28 million, average Canadians would have paid $7 million less in tax because of this one company. We ask the Conservative Government to take serious and immediate action to provide genuine tax reform.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, four months ago Canadian forest producers were subjected to a five-year, 35 per cent duty on cedar shakes and shingles by the U.S. For the most part, however, the industry has been able to overcome this horrendous trade barrier and is getting back on its feet. Yesterday's announcement of a 15 per cent duty on softwood lumber clearly is an offensive abuse of U.S. countervailing duty powers under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. This so-called "win" by U.S. lumber producers was at a very high cost with respect to the principles upon which everyone's prosperity depends.

Three years ago Canada successfully defended itself against charges of unfair competition in lumber before the same U.S. tribunal. Today we have a challenge which must be met by various responses. More than ever, yesterday's action indicates that political leaders cannot stop the process of industries petitioning to restrict imports under U.S. trade laws. That is why it is so important for us to pursue our bilateral trade talks with the U.S. One would certainly hope that those talks continue and that a satisfactory arrangement can be concluded.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have been treated to the Conservative Government's real philosophy concerning multiculturalism and immigration policies. In two leaked reports, one prepared by Toronto Conservative MPs and the other by the Vice-Chairman of the Canadian Multicultural Council, we witnessed scandalous partisan attempts to manipulate these programs for the political benefit of the Conservative Party. That is an immoral and uncaring display of Tory indifference and confirms the deep suspicion harboured by many Canadians, particularly those from Canada's multicultural community, about the Conservatives' attitude toward this sector of Canadian society.

The Government has to learn that our multicultural community is not for sale. Those people are not pawns to be used in a Tory chess game. As Canadians, they have real and significant concerns which must be urgently addressed. There are important issues which can only be solved by a serious and strong multicultural and immigration policy which must have as its first priority the welfare and enhancement of all Canadians regardless of their cultural origins. It is a lesson which the Tory Government, sadly, has yet to learn and, regrettably, may never learn.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SASKATCHEWAN POLL FAVOURING SALE OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the CBC in Saskatchewan recently conducted a comprehensive survey. One of the questions asked of 1,400 people was whether or not the Government is justified in selling Crown corporations. Understandably so, 53 per cent were in favour of this policy, while 30 per cent disagreed. This is an indication that the people of Saskatchwan support the Government's initiatives to privatize Crown corporations. The previous Saskatchewan Government purchased potash mines and pulp mills which have not been an economic success. A Government cannot expect to tie its hands in managing these companies at the risk of economic failure.

The previous Liberal Government in Ottawa gave only lip service to privatizing corporations. You can be sure this Government is not taking the same lackadaisical approach, as it is obvious there is a consensus among Canadians opposing government ownership of Crown corporations. However, our object is not to maximize the sale price because we have an obligation to maximize the economic and social benefits of each sale for all Canadians.

The federal Minister responsible for privatization is taking many steps to create the best possible future for these companies and their employees. Clearly we are not solving sorry mistakes of the past but—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Sixty seconds.

PORTS

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH THUNDER BAY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, seven days ago the Port of Thunder Bay went back to work. During those seven days more grain was moved than has ever been moved through that port or any other port in North America, if not the world. Yes, we in Thunder Bay have proven once again that our port is the most efficient grain-handling operation in the world. Nearly 900,000 tonnes of grain were moved in only seven days. That record was set because everyone pulled together: grain handlers and grain companies; railroaders and railroad companies; inspectors and weighers; ship crews and shipping companies; the Lake Shippers' Clearance Association and the Grain Transportation Agency. They all deserve our thanks for a job well done.

The one month strike/lock-out we endured demonstrated clearly just how important Thunder Bay is to the economy of the Prairies, Ontario, Quebec, indeed of Canada as a whole. It also showed that no matter what was tried there was no realistic and economical way of by-passing that port. What we must do now is reduce the barriers to using the Port of Thunder Bay and the St. Lawrence Seaway. Discriminatory rail rates must be changed. User tolls and fees must be abandoned. Let us keep the Port of Thunder Bay moving. It is important to all of us.

LIBERAL PARTY

USE OF FUNDS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, to show my open-mindedness and my solidarity with my Liberal colleagues in this House, today, officially, I want to give my moral support to the Hon. Members for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), who are justifiably concerned about the disastrous financial position of the Liberal Party of Canada. Understandably, my colleagues have some serious questions about how the funds of the Liberal Party are being used. For instance, there is the annual salary of $80,000 given to Judd Buchanan, bagman of the Liberal Party of Canada, and this is not his only source of income, Mr. Speaker.

Yes, we want to help our Liberal colleagues put some order in their financial affairs, because for all practical purposes, nearly 75 per cent of the money they are wasting comes from the Canadian taxpayers.

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION OF ATLANTIC REGION RESIDENTS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) went yesterday to New Brunswick to attend the opening of a paper mill which will create some 160 jobs.

This time, the workers did not throw their hard hats at him because they are proud of this project which was launched and implemented by the previous Liberal Government.

Following the speech of the Prime Minister, today's newspapers had the headline: "The Maritimes must fend for themselves". This is what the Prime Minister said.

This confirms what we already knew, namely that the Conservative Government has no regional development policy. The Conservative Government is simply abandoning the Atlantic region.

The Prime Minister has confirmed the comments made by his Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to the effect that the people of the Atlantic region cannot have the same aspirations as other Canadians. They are to be compared with people in the third world, not in to the rest of Canada. Such an attitude by the Prime Minister and his Minister of Transport is not good enough.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSED PENSION CHANGES—EFFECT ON EMPLOYEES IN NORTH

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, many northern public servants have fears over possible changes to the Public Service Superannuation Act which might mandate a locking in of contributions after two years—instead of the present ten year plus age 45 provision—similar to the rules for private pensions plans laid out in Bill C-90 passed last session.

While these proposed changes might be popular in the South, not too many northerners contemplate a lifetime career in the Public Service. Rather, they plan to work for five or ten years, then withdraw their superannuation contributions as a lump sum to buy a house or use for some other purpose. If a two-year lock-in is legislated, many intend to quit rather than lose the opportunity for a lump sum withdrawal.

Therefore, if changes are made to the Public Service Superannuation Act lock-in, opting-out provisions ought to be incorporated, at least for current employees who have made their life plans under the old rules.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I suppose my first question, after looking at the benches opposite, should be whether someone has declared a new government holiday.

Mr. Waddell: They're all in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Axworthy: Instead, I would like to direct my first question to the Minister of International Trade. It is a very simple question. How can anyone believe the Government? Last spring the Government went along with President Reagan's sell-out to the U.S. Senators on the lumber issue. Only three weeks ago we compromised our position by trying to plea bargain our case on the trade issue before a U.S. judge. Now the Government says it will fight to the very last step.

How can we have any trust that the Government will not cave in again, that there is not some kind of sweetheart deal in the making with the U.S. administration on the U.S. lumber duty?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will first advise the House that the Prime Minister is in New Brunswick where he is having a very successful tour.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question as to who believes the Government, I will list just some of those who believe the Government on the stand it has taken. The Hon. Pierre MacDonald, Liberal Minister of Resources of Quebec, Mr. McCambly of the Canadian Federation of Labour, Jack Munro of the IWA, Premier Vander Zalm of the B. C. Social Credit Government, Premier Hatfield, the Conservative Premier of New Brunswick, and Mike Apsey who represents the industry. All agree with our position. All of the parties affected in this dispute support the position of the Government of Canada. I am ashamed of the fact that the Liberal Opposition does not.

• (1120)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: What I should make clear to the Minister is that the Liberal Opposition stands for standing up for Canada and not caving in as you have been doing.

CONTINUATION OF CANADA—UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister said that the reason for continuing the free trade talks is to "change the rules in order to stop harassment by U.S. interest groups". How can she make that statement when she knows full well that President Reagan, in his April 24 letter to Senator Packwood, said that the U.S. countervail laws would not be altered by any free trade negotiations? Why does she continue this farce and fantasy? Why does she continue to try to fool the Canadian public—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the exchange so far illustrates the difficulty we get into when perhaps not as much constraint is used in the language as is appropriate. The Hon. Member had put his question. I think it will be noted by all Hon. Members that, after having put the question, he went on to argue it. I would ask Hon. Members to please restrain themselves if they find they are impelled to proceed in that fashion.

By the same token, I would ask Hon. Ministers to concentrate their minds on the question and concentrate their answers on that question. Thank you.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will repeat my question since the Minister apparently did not hear. Why does she continue making those statements when it clearly has been stated by the President of the United States that the countervail laws of the United States are not part of the free trade negotiations?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is trying to allege that there is a fix in and that the Government of the United States is in some way corrupt, he should say so in this Chamber. That is not our position. Our position is that we are negotiating a free trade agreement with the United States which will deal with measures to give us some long-term security of market access and long-term security of jobs. That position has wide support. That is the position we are advancing at the negotiation table. To suggest that we walk away from the talks because times are tough is the action and the mentality of a wimp.

Mr. Axworthy: To use the old cliche: "It takes one to know one".

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Yesterday the Minister said again that the Government does not intend to take any retaliatory action because it is not allowble under GATT. Article 23 of the GATT rules clearly allow retaliatory action when a foreign Government uses unfair countervailing powers. Why has the Government forgone the use of a very important tool? Why are we not continuing to stand up for this particular area and removing what could be a very important standard that we could raise against this unfair action by the United States?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should surely be aware by now that we have taken this action to GATT in accordance with GATT rules. A meeting on it has already been held.

INQUIRY WHETHER PROMISES OF U.S. PRESIDENT WERE PART OF SECRET AGREEMENT CONCERNING FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in order to prevail upon the American Senate to enter into free trade negotiations with Canada, the American chief negotiator Mr. Yeutter wrote the following to Senator David Pryor on April 17, 1986, and I quote: "We will get timber fixed", in other words, we will solve the lumber problem.

On May 8, the President of the United States, in a letter to Senator Packwood, stated:

[English]

"I intend to press for an expedited resolution of this problem independent of the comprehensive negotiations".

My question to the Minister is this: Were the promises made by the President of the United States and by Mr. Yeutter, to settle the issue of Canadian lumber exports to the United States, part of a secret agreement with the Canadian Government to enter into free trade negotiations?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): No, Mr. Speaker.

MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, how can the Hon. Minister answer so curtly, when it was clearly stated in the letter that the lumber problem would be settled independant of free trade negotiations? How can the Minister explain that today? One thing is sure, thousands of jobs are involved in Quebec.

I would ask the Minister what she now intends to do. There are 25,000 jobs involved in Quebec, tens of thousands in Canada. What does the Minister intend to do to solve that problem, to help workers in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada?

• (1125)

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, a long question is not necessarily more truthful than a short answer.

Mr. Garneau: But you didn't answer it at all.

Mr. Gauthier: That is arrogance, boy oh boy!

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON STUMPAGE FEES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the most Alice in Wonderland part of the Minister's statement yesterday was: "Stumpage does not provide a subsidy to Canadian lumber producers". If the Minister truly believes this, why did she suggest stumpage was a subsidy by admitting guilt and offering publicly to raise those fees just two short weeks previously?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, because the affected parties, the Governments of Ontario, Quebec, Alberta, and British Columbia, the IWA and the forest industry asked me to do so.

Mr. Langdon: Well, there is a Minister for International Trade. The Minister should look in the mirror. She has some responsibility, too.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Is the Minister blaming the provinces, the unions, and industry for what she now recognizes was a foolish public step to have taken?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I don't think the Hon. Member understands what a grave situation Canada and the forest industry are in by asking that question. We took the opportunity provided for under the countervailing procedure to stop the clock and attempt an out-of- court settlement. That is provided for in the procedure. Unfortunately, we were not successful, although the resulting tariff was very close to our offer. What I am surprised about is if the Hon. Member had read the decision handed down on the subsidy issue, he would be just as shocked as we are.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I thinks it takes tremendous gall to say that we don't recognize what a grave situation it is when it is the incompetence of the Government which has gotten us into this situation.

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Will the Minister herself through her Government not take responsibility for her own decision, which she announced and which she must now admit failed dismally?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, whether or not it failed is a matter of conjecture considering the fact that the tariff was 15 per cent in the preliminary determination. But in terms of taking responsibility, may I remind the Hon. Member that we took the responsibility of attempting an out-of-court settlement. We have taken the responsibility to fight this action which may affect other industries in Canada.

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES ACTION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Speaking of wimps, we should remember it was only a few weeks ago that the Minister in effect stood before you, Mr. Speaker, as judge, and said: "I am innocent. I didn't do it. But I am willing to serve 10 years". I know she is shocked at being sentenced to 15.

Does the Minister realize that her incompetence, and the incompetence of the Canadian Government, have established a regime whereby the United States, if allowed, will set prices for Canadian natural resources like lumber, newsprint, potash, fish, steel, and farm products?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the issue of incompetence, I think, is incredible when raised by that former Government, that opposition Party, on this issue.

Mr. Berger: Look at the polls.

Mr. Axworthy: Who won the case in 1983? We didn't get a tariff in 1983.

Mr. Berger: Look at what the Canadians are saying.

NEWSPRINT EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should realize that Canada's newsprint industry exported seven million tonness of newsprint to the United States last year for a value of $4.7 billion. That represents 85 per cent of our export market in newsprint. Is the Minister aware that using exactly the same stumpage system as a basis for complaint, the Americans, if they are allowed to succeed, are now in a position to set a 15 per cent tariff against newsprint, a tariff that could cost that industry over $700 million?

• (1130)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely why the Government is seeking a long-term binding treaty with the U.S., to protect Canadian industry and Canadian workers from this type of trade harassment. I have said that consistently. That is what the Prime Minister has said. That is now what the opposition Party is supporting.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister for International Trade. I would like her to clarify her position. Is the Minister really saying that Premier Vander Zalm and the other people whom she named are to blame for this so-called compromise settlement which puts Canada's sovereignty in jeopardy and which undermines Canada's whole case?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the Hon. Member's reference to a compromise settlement. There has been no settlement with the U.S. on this issue. That is why we are faced with a preliminary decision. I fail to understand what this compromise position is about which the Hon. Member speaks.

What I have said before, and I will say it again, is that the situation we have experienced as a result of this decision is the reason why the Government feels we must pursue to the utmost comprehensive trade talks with the U.S. to protect Canadian industry, Canadian workers, and secure market access to the U.S.

If we do not have that type of a long-term treaty then, under the existing rules of the game, we will be exposed to this type of harassment in a number of industries.

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN WORKERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister which perhaps the woodworkers who occasionally drink in the Cecil Hotel in the Minister's riding would put. What will she do to protect their jobs which they will now lose? What will the Minister do to get their jobs back? What type of retaliation will the Minister take against the Americans who are pushing British Columbia workers around, many of whom live in the Minister's riding as well as in my riding?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member obviously knows more about the Cecil Hotel than I.

What we are doing to protect the jobs of workers is to strive for a long-term agreement with the United States to protect those jobs. That is what the Government is doing.

UNITED STATES DUTY—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister for International Trade. We know that the Minister left the energy sector in chaos—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: —with tens of thousands of unemployed. Having listened to the questions asked this morning and the answers of the Minister it is inconceivable—impossible—to believe that the conduct of these negotiations by the Minister and her colleagues in Government could be as incompetent as they appear to be. My question is simply—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think all Hon. Members are aware that there is a great deal of room for argument on this issue. However, that is properly a matter for debate. I ask that questions be put as directly as the Hon. Member asking them can put them. I think all Hon. Members are aware that the issue that forms the subject matter of questions this morning is a very serious one for the entire country. I ask that the questions be clear and direct and that the answers correspond accordingly.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, despite the bluster and feigned outrage, was a deal cut behind the scenes at 15 per cent?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): No, Mr. Speaker.

MINISTER'S AWARENESS OF DUTY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, we heard the Prime Minister say, "Watch her carry the ball". She makes Chuck Hunsinger look good. The Minister remembers Chuck Hunsinger, and so do we.

When did the Minister first learn that a 15 per cent duty might be decided upon?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, at approximately 2.07 yesterday afternoon.

OFFER OF CANADIAN TARIFF

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister. I think it is obvious that the Minister undermined her position that stumpage is not a subsidy by offering a 10 per cent tariff to the Americans. In retrospect, does the Minister now regret that she responded to pressures from Premier Bill Vander Zalm in the heat of an election with an action that undermined tough negotiations for Canada? Is this the approach that we can expect in future trade negotiations?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can only assure the House that the actions of Premier Vander Zalm, all the other Premiers concerned, and the actions of the industry and the union involved were very helpful to me. They have been very supportive.

I am glad to see that the tariff is less than the 32 per cent which was asked for by the U.S. producers and that it is close to our offer. But that is not the issue. The problem we have before us is that the nature of the decision which has been brought down in this case, and which reverses an earlier decision on a whole different set of rules and regulations, can place other Canadian industries in jeopardy. The only way we can deal with this issue is to sit down at the trade talks table and negotiate a long-term treaty that will prevent these types of flip-flops.

MINISTER'S APPROACH TO NEGOTIATIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the tariff may well be increased beyond 15 per cent, which is on top of the 35 per cent that is already in place on shakes and shingles, and which is making people in her province suffer.

Since Premier Vander Zalm said, "We went hat in hand to Washington," does the Minister think that Americans respect this type of humble approach? How can she now be tough in future negotiations on behalf of Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Hon. Member was addressing the issue before us. We have said that this is a deplorable action.

We have said that we will fight it on the basis of the decision—and I want to be clear here—even if the provinces decide to settle this issue as they are allowed to do, to take the money and run. The problems that the decision gives Canada, Canadian industry and workers, will still be with us. We have to sit down at the table. I urge the Hon. Member to read the decision which will enable her to understand my concern. We have to sit down at the table and draw up a new set of rules to protect Canadian industry, workers and citizens from this type of trade harassment.

FUNDING OF UNIVERSITY RESEARCH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Science and Technology I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, in a feeble attempt to defend his savaging of the National Research Council, the Minister of State for Science and Technology said that the Government was putting $1 billion more into university research over the next five years. Will the Minister of Finance not admit that the Government is putting up less than $700 million, and only if it is matched by the private sector? Will he admit that there is no commitment from the Government to put up $1 billion?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member has understood the clear philosophy of the Government which is to involve the private sector to a greater extent in research and development efforts. What we are trying to do with this new proposal which I announced in the last Budget is to bring a greater degree of integration into a matching grant formula so that the projects which are brought forward in research and development by the private sector, in partnership with the public sector, will be much closer to the needs of the market-place. Surely that is the direction in which we should be going in terms of research and development.

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Science and Technology misled the House yesterday. I am asking the Minister of Finance to correct—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Member did not mean to put his concern in quite the words he used. I invite the Hon. Member to rephrase his question in such a way that there is not an implication of intentional misleading.

• (1140)

Mr. Berger: Whom does the Finance Minister think he is fooling with this phantom $1 billion? Would he table the document which shows that the Government is putting $1 billion into university research? Where is it? Would he show it to the House and to Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear what we have said. We have put forward a proposal to the private sector whereby we will match grants to the initiatives taken by them, in consultation and in co-operation with the public sector, the result of which will be $1 billion new financing for research and development projects. This will be done in a way which will produce projects that will be much more applicable to commercial reality. That is the direction in which we want to go in research and development. The Hon. Member should know that it will be very, very effective.

TRADE

FREE TRADE—MEASURE TAKEN BY UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of International Trade.

If the Minister did not even blink when she heard of the American position, how is she going to react to the statement made by the head of the Quebec Wood Manufacturers Association who has come to realize that the tariff represents an amount greater than the profit margin of the whole industry? Is that not provocation enough to terminate these discussions on free trade?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not sufficient provocation to end these discussions. If we walk away from the table, we simply expose other sectors of that industry to the same kind of attack. That is the point I am trying to make. So long as we have the existing system which allows the U.S. to reverse its decision on important trade items like softwood lumber, our industries are put at risk. We need to get new rules in a new treaty which is binding and will resolve our problem over the long term. Walking away or running away will not solve anything.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A BILATERAL COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. If the Minister will not stop playing Russian roulette with jobs not only in the lumber industry, but also in a whole series of other industries, will she tell the Americans that the only point remaining on the agenda for these discussions is the establishment of a bilateral commission to solve such problems, deal with such programs, and stop such harassment of Canadian producers?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's suggestion, but I would point out that it would be a very, very narrow view of a trade talk to deal only with the establishment of a bilateral commission. Not even the Canadian Federation of Labour, which has suggested such a commission, would restrict it to that item. The Canadian Federation of Labour has proposed a whole range of items, including adjustment assistance to affected workers, which should be part of any trade deal between Canada and the U.S. If the Hon. Member thinks through his position, he will see that, while it is helpful, it is too narrow an approach for us to take.

PREPARATION OF POLICY TO HELP RESEARCH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Deputy Prime Minister deals with scientific research financing.

If the government policy in the area of research support is so good, why has Nobel Prize winner Polanyi just stated, and I quote: "Since the announcement of the government policy, I would not advise a young scientist to make a career in Canada"?

Why does the Ottawa Citizen consider this policy as suicidal, while the Montreal Gazette describes it as government folly?

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Would he order the Minister of State for Science and Technology to go back to the drawing board and prepare a research support policy which, this time, would not make the whole Canadian scientific community sick?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Minister being absent from the House on official business, Mr. Speaker, I take note of the Hon. Member's representations and will convey them to the Minister who will certainly give them the attention they deserve.

REQUEST THAT DEPUTY MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): As an engineer, Mr. Speaker, I am sometimes ashamed to sit in a Parliament facing a government which treats science in such fashion. But to return to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is he not prepared to order a change of policy to prevent the brain drain which would certainly result from the current policy. Is he prepared to stand up and take the necessary action?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister responsible answered this question very well yesterday. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that in the past the Government has not, nor will it in the future, take policy direction from The Ottawa Citizen.

MINES AND MINING

FLOW THROUGH SHARE PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The mining industry in Canada makes an enormous contribution to the Canadian economy. This industry has been suffering from depressed metal prices since 1981. One of the successful programs for that industry has been the Flow Through Share Program which the Government has strengthened. Is the Minister actively considering the withdrawal of this successful program?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member indicated, this program has been in place for a number of years. It has been used by a number of companies and individuals in the mining industry. It is part of the broad review which we are undertaking right now on tax policy. I have no real comments to make on it at this time. We have to wait until we see the results of the tax reform review which we are undertaking right now.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER—EFFECT ON ONTARIO

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. In a previous answer the Minister indicated that the Premier of Ontario was a supporter in this approach of the federal Government. Industry people in northwestern Ontario indicate that as many as 1,500 job losses in Thunder Bay and 2,000 more in northwestern Ontario will result from the interim action. Is she saying that it is David Peterson's fault that this is happening?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have made very clear that the decisions being taken are being taken by all the provinces, the industry, the union, and the federal Government. We all work out solutions, we all take positions, and we all share responsibility. That is what our Confederation is all about. This is why we will be meeting, at the beginning of next week, with the same affected groups to discuss our position, to discuss our strategy, and to implement it. This has been a joint non-political action by a whole range of Governments of different Parties to save jobs in Canada, and I am surprised that the NDP opposes that.

Mr. Angus: The Minister knows full well that not all provinces support the action of the federal Government.

EFFECT ON WORKERS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the same Minister a follow-up question on interim support for the workers who will be laid off. In answer to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, she inferred that there would be no assistance whatsoever. Will the Minister confirm that her Government will not take any action whatsoever in the interim to help ensure that those jobs remain in place?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if you check the record, I think you will find that I said no such thing. It is hard to answer a question when the allegation is false. Let me again address what I think the Hon. Member is trying to deal with, that is, the job losses which will arise from the imposition of any U.S. tariff. Of course that concerns us. Of course we are worried about that. That is why we all tried to seek an out-of-court settlement. That is why we will fight this decision. That is why we are meeting on Monday to plan our strategy.

REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister is aware that there was a surplus of $150 million in the Unemployment Insurance Fund for 1985.

The Minister is also aware that the Forget Commission is recommending that retirees be reimbursed retroactively for the benefits they lost as a result of changes introduced last year by his Government.

Will the Minister tell Canada's 50,000 early retirees that the Government is going to pay back the $30 million it stole from them?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall ignore the last part of the question. I just want to inform the Hon. Member there is no Forget Report yet. I believe that the Hon. Member is referring to the extracts from certain documents reproduced by the Globe and Mail and the Canadian press. In fact, I believe these documents confirm what I said yesterday and the day before. There has been an attempt to scare people, but today, these documents, which might well turn out to be the Forget Report's recommendations, project a far more positive view than what you have been giving us for the last two or three days. In any case, we have always said that as soon as the recommendation on the pensions issue was tabled, the Government will be quick to respond, either positively or negatively, but it will respond to the report's recommendation.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the important thing is, we now know there was a surplus of $150 million, and normally the Minister should know this. If that is not the case, he might as well resign, for all the good he is doing. Meanwhile, this Government has cut $30 million, so there is no need to wait for the Forget Commission's report. Will the Minister announce, without further delay, to the 50,000 people who have decided to go to the Supreme Court, that their expenses will be paid, and will he give these people the assurance that the Government is going to consider the Forget Report's recommendations? Is the Government going to treat these people as human beings and refund the money it stole from Canada's early retirees? Yes or no?

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie can get carried away but he cannot alter the fact that where the administration of the Government is concerned, and especially when we are talking about the Unemployment Insurance Commission, surplus funds are managed by a commission on which both labour and management are represented, and all decisions are made at that level.

Again, whatever you may say, it does not alter the fact that we are waiting for recommendations—

Mr. Malépart: There are people who are hungry. You have a limousine—

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, they have—

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of any of the farm spokesmen, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture have said that any proposed farm aid package would be new money and would not come out of existing programs. Does that mean that such payments, when and if they are made, would not be calculated as grain income since that would reduce future pay-outs under the Western Grain Stabilization Act for western farmers and under the general Agricultural Stabilization Act for the rest of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture have indicated that this would be new money in the pockets of farmers to help support them in this very serious time of difficulty. I am advised by the Minister of Agriculture that he met with farm leaders yesterday. They had an excellent and very productive meeting. The farmers' spokesmen recognized the magnitude of the problem. They are very supportive of the initiatives taken by the federal Government and very supportive of the fact that the Government is not acting unilaterally and is recognizing the complexity of the issue. These discussions are to go on. The program will be developed in consultation with the producer groups, something that is very new and something which they welcome very much.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in retrospect can the Minister explain why the Government cut initial prices last spring by $30 a tonne because at that time it argued it could not afford something like the $800 million that that would have cost, but can now in the midst of provincial elections in Saskatchewan and British Columbia promise a billion dollars?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Hon. Member had some knowledge about the farm problems in this country and I thought he also had some knowledge about the way the Canadian Wheat Board functions. The Canadian Wheat Board sets the initial prices and, if he has any argument with that, he should take it up with the Canadian Wheat Board because those prices reflect the reality of the market-place, and the Member knows it.

Mr. Althouse: The Cabinet guarantees those prices.

FISHERIES

ACCESS TO GEORGES BANK SCALLOP STOCKS

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. The Minister will know that there have been extensive and intense industry negotiations regarding the issue of inshore access to the Georges Bank scallop stocks. Has the Minister had the opportunity to review the proposal which the industry recently worked out, and if so, would he comment?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to respond to my colleague, the Hon. Member for South West Nova, who has been so instrumental in proposing over the past two months that we get the affected parties of scallop fishermen together to work out a compromise arrangement and management plan for fishing those very lucrative scallop resources in the Bay of Fundy and off Georges Bank. I am reviewing a tentative agreement to which all parties have agreed which would never have been reached had I accepted the advice of my officials but was reached because I accepted the advice of the Hon. Member to approach all parties to seek a negotiated agreement.

FORGET COMMISSION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in response to questions regarding the Forget Commission, the Minister of Transport said in Newfoundland:

> As far as people's income is concerned—there won't be any changes, the only kind of change there would is if it was replaced by something better. That will be my position.

I ask the Minister of Employment, who has refused to give an opinion in this House about the Commission, since that is the stated position of the Minister of Transport, what then is his position?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate was not here earlier this week. That is unfortunate because we explained several times the position of the Minister of Finance, which is that nothing will be done which could harm the unemployed. I shall go a bit further today and say that, whatever the Commission recommends, all changes made to the Unemployment Insurance Plan will have to aim at improving existing programs and at making them better suited to meet the needs of the unemployed. That has always been our objective. The Commission was established to evaluate possible solutions, but once more, I am in perfect agreement with the position of the Minister of Transport, the Member from Newfoundland.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport also said:

As far as I am concerned, unless there are improvements to help lower income people, or people whose jobs are very uncertain, I certainly can't support it.

In the absence of the Prime Minister, I ask the Acting Prime Minister if these rumours of cuts are substantiated in the presentation of the report, is the Government prepared to forget Forget?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is an expert in peddling and perpetrating rumours. Today is no exception. I know that he would want us to receive the report first, to analyse it, and then take a position on it.

So far as the stated objectives of this Government are concerned, in terms of unemployment insurance or any other programs that affect the disadvantaged regions of this country, it has always been the intention to make the programs better and more effective so that the benefits can accrue to the larger number of people. What we are looking for is a better system, an improved and more effective system rather than the system toward which the Hon. Member has alleged we are working.

PRESS REPORTS OF INCREASED CHARGES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, would the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that the Government has approved an increase in Canada Post's first class mail from 34 cents to 36 cents? Can he confirm also reports in the press today that, indeed, the Government has approved extra charges for postal services to people who do not get door-to-door delivery but who want it and who are now enjoying service through the postal community boxes? Can the Deputy Minister confirm those two points?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that. I am not aware of any such initiative. I will certainly check and get back to the Hon. Member.

FISHERIES

FRASER RIVER FISH STOCKS—INDIAN PEOPLE'S ANXIETY

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. The native leaders who live in the Fraser Valley have grave concerns as to the allocation of the fish stocks going up the Fraser River. When will the natives have an opportunity of presenting their concerns as to how the fishery is being managed?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for stepping out for a moment. Could the Hon. Member repeat the question?

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. The native leadership of the Fraser Valley have grave concerns on how the fishery is being managed, in particular the allocation of fish for the natives. When will they have an opportunity to make their advice known to the Minister on how this can be improved?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, there are certain matters affecting members of some of the subject bands which are now before the courts. Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill, one question.

BENEFITS PAID IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is the Minister of Transport speaking for the Government when he says there will be no cut-backs in unemployment insurance programs for Atlantic Canada? Or is the Government willing to state that any decision it will make will do nothing to reduce the amount of money going to that region?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, once more, what the Minister of Finance said, what the Government believes and what we are going to continue to believe is simply that we must ensure that the program analysis will not victimize the unemployed.

As I said earlier, we also have to consider the objective, and as the Minister of Transport indicated yesterday, anything which can improve the quality of our unemployment insurance services will be viewed as acceptable and will certainly receive our support.

DEPARTMENTAL ADMINISTRATION CHANGES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State and the Prime Minister, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Universities and colleges in Toronto closed down yesterday in a protest by administrators, faculty members and students alike. A Liberal Party task force is going across the country in the next three weeks to find out what can be done about this grave crisis. I therefore ask why the Government has twice replaced the individuals responsible for post-secondary education over the past two years? We now have our third Secretary of State and third Deputy Minister. Is it because they were incompetent, or because they were so embarrassed because they feel the Government has betrayed the cause of young people?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without agreeing with the premise of the Hon. Member's question, I will take that as a representation and ensure that the responsible Minister receives it, and perhaps he can reply next week.

PRIVILEGE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING AN ANSWER GIVEN DURING ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would not want the Minister to mislead the House and I do not think that such is his intention. However, he stated in reply to one of my questions that the commissioners could decide to reimburse the $30 million to those who have taken an early retirement. I say that such is not the case because it was the Government that decided to take away these $30 million.

I would like the situation to be clearly explained because the public could get the wrong idea.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, if that is what the Hon. Member understood, he is indeed right in saying that it is not what I meant. Naturally, I said that, as concerns the management of the unemployment insurance programs, a number of people at the Commission were involved, but when you said that the Commission had a surplus of $150 million and had only to take the $30 million in question, I replied that this was a matter of administrative management and that we had to take everything into consideration. If you are saying—

Mr. Malépart: The $30 million were taken away by Minister Wilson!

Mr. Bouchard: No, no. That is another matter.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today the final few Orders in Council concerning appointments which had not been clerically processed to be forwarded to committee chairman by the time I tabled the long list of appointees yesterday. This completes the number we should have tabled.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, according to the Standing Orders our committees have 30 days in which to review these appointments. Because the House was prorogued the committees have not all been constituted. Is it possible for the 30 days to commence when the committes are actually constituted?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, there is clear authority for the committees to be reconstituted. That was given this last week and that is precisely why the delay in the tabling took place, so that the full 30 days would be provided. My understanding is that most committees are in the process of being reconstituted.

CRIMINAL CODE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-226, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce this Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, this Bill can be summarized in this way. At the present time, a woman who wants to terminate her pregnancy must submit an application to an hospital and wait until a committee, which comprises generally three to ten persons, grants authorization.

The purpose of my Bill is simply to allow this decision, instead of being made by a committee, to be made by the patient, her physician, and approved by another physician.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is an attempt to provide orderly marketing for potatoes across the country. CANADIAN POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION COUNCIL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-228, an Act to provide for a Canadian Post-secondary Education Council.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, this Bill calls for the establishment of a National Advisory Council on post-secondary education for advising the Government and also for creating, over a period of years, a national strategy for post-secondary education in the country. As this was mentioned in the Throne Speech, I hope that the Bill will receive support from both sides of the House.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29(1)

TRADE—ACCESS TO U.S. MARKET—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN LUMBER AND OTHER NATURAL RESOURCE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask for leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 29 for the purpose of discussing a specific and urgent motion requiring consideration, namely:

That this House condemn the Government for its failure to protect the interests of the Canadian lumber industry in its conduct of comprehensive trade negotiations with the United States, and specifically that the Government has undermined its own case for secure access to U.S. markets in lumber by conceding the U.S. argument before the preliminary determination and, further, has compromised Canada's case for control of our own natural resource pricing in negotiations with the U.S. and before the GATT.

I have written to you as the rules require, Mr. Speaker, and I hope I have done so in sufficient time. I would like to indicate briefly why this appears to be a matter of urgent and important interest.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure Hon. Members will agree that the better practice is for the Hon. Member simply to state his motion. I ask the Hon. Member to conclude his remarks very quickly. I did receive a letter from the Hon. Member. I can tell the Hon. Member that I choose not to see the clock so time will not be an issue in whatever determination I make. I propose to postpone my decision for an hour or so. Therefore, the Hon. Member may wish to say a word or two more and we will resume consideration of this a little later.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, first, serious economic losses are involved in the tariff which was levied yesterday. Second, no government proposals have been brought to us for reaction as yet, nor indeed have they been contemplated. Third, as far as we can tell we do not have Throne Speech days available to discuss this matter. Four, clearly that the issue dominated Question Period today is a demonstration of its significance to the country. Finally, since today we are at a stage between two parts of the free trade negotiations; the first phase has finished and the second phase is not to begin until the Government makes its assessment of the first phase, it seems to me that a thorough debate of this very important decision at this time would be crucial, necessary and of the utmost urgency.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention and the concise presentation of his remarks. As I said, I will make a decision on this shortly, but not before one hour has elapsed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I ask, Mr. Speaker, that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed from Thursday, October 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in this session that I have had an opportunity to address this House. It is, therefore, my first opportunity to congratulate you on your reappointment as Deputy Speaker. I have spoken many times in this House, but this is the first time I have had the opportunity of speaking to the House from beside the Speaker's chair rather than before it. Nonetheless, I hope the Speaker will hear me just as well from the position from which I now speak as he did when I was out in centre field as it were.

It gives me a great deal of pleasure to speak on Bill C-11 today. It is a very small but very important Bill. I would characterize it as a "good news" Bill. It is good news because it provides money to people who need it. Later in my remarks I will speak about other good news legislation which the Government has brought forward and some that it will probably bring forward in the future. For the moment I wish to speak specifically about Bill C-11.

This is an Act to amend the Income Tax Act. In the debate which has been ongoing for a day or so it has been said that this Bill puts money in the hands of those who need it most. It has been said on the other side of the House that this is not new money, that it is money these people would get anyway. I say it is new money because these people will get this money several months earlier than they would normally receive it. Anyone will tell you that that is additional funds over and above those which they would receive in the following year.

The Bill provides a child tax credit of $300 per child to any family which received income in the past taxation year of $15,000 or less. Even the Opposition has had to concede that this legislation is good news. That is why few opposition Members have risen to speak to the Bill. As a matter of fact, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) congratulated the Government for having the foresight and humanity to move this good legislation. Obviously the Opposition must tone down its praise, so the remainder of the Hon. Member's speech concerned the horrible practice of tax discounting. I can assure the House that this Bill will almost eliminate tax discounting with respect to child tax credits.

There has been some criticism that the money received in November of this year may confuse some families. They may be concerned about the purpose of these cheques and whether they should accept them. Let me assure the House that the Government will go to great lengths to make sure that these families understand what is happening.

Let me read from the information that will accompany the cheques when they are delivered to qualified families. It will state: "This is your child tax credit payment. The enclosed cheque is advance payment of the child tax credit for the 1986 taxation year".

It goes on to explain why. It states that these families qualify for this advanced payment because: one, they received a child tax credit for the 1985 tax year; two, their family income in 1985 was $15,000 or less; three, they receive or are eligible to receive family allowance for a child or children who will be under 18 years of age at the end of 1986.

The pamphlet goes on to say that the amount shown on the cheque is based on the latest information available from the Department of National Health and Welfare. It is $300 of the maximum child tax credit of $454 per eligible child for 1986.

Finally, it states that the recipient must file a 1986 tax return to establish, first, the amount of the child tax credit for 1986 and, second, the eligibility to receive a child tax credit payment in 1987. The pamphlet provides an address to which to write with any concerns.

A further explanation of the child tax credit prepayment will accompany the normal family allowance cheque. The letter sets out in great detail what will happen and I commend the Government for ensuring that this program will be understood. I am sure it will be well accepted.

Unfortunately, in spite of the great strides the Government has made to increase the economic income of most Canadians, there are many people who, particularly since the recession in 1982, still live at or below the poverty line. It has been estimated that between 700,000 and one million families will receive this payment. There are over 10,000 families in my riding who will participate in this program.

The payment will be made in November, at a time when these families experience a great deal of additional costs. While the weather in my riding is rather nice, these families must still clothe their children for the winter. Families in other ridings must outfit their children in winter clothing and this payment in November is essential. We should not overlook the added expense of Christmas. These families will find this payment a great benefit and certainly much better than receiving it at the end of the tax year.

My riding is experiencing difficulties. It is true that many areas of the country are undergoing economic growth, but, as was pointed out in the Throne Speech, the economic turnaround has not been directed evenly among all parts of Canada. There are certain sectors which have and are still suffering severely. Unfortunately, one of those is my riding of Okanagan North. I can assure the House that those qualified families in my riding will welcome the child tax credit prepayment with open arms.

The forest industry which accounts for 60 cents of every dollar in my riding has been on strike for four weeks. Consequently, the lack of money being circulated has left many small businesses in difficulty and this legislation is important to those families who run those small businesses.

Last month the unemployment rate in my constituency was 14.7 per cent and it is expected to increase to 14.9 per cent this month, compared to an unemployment rate of 10 per cent last year. Unemployment claims in Okanagan North totalled $3.4 million last year while this year those claims totalled $4.2 million. Not only are we not holding our own, we are going backwards. Through this legislation, the money that we can afford to give back to people goes to those who need it the most. In my view, people in my riding will greet this legislation with open arms because they need the money.

We now have a threat of a 15 per cent countervailing duty on the lumber industry which cannot but have an adverse effect on my riding. Therefore, it is most important that the Government carry out its intention to diversify and ensure that those regions which have not fared so well under the Government's recovery program will be able to do so. Certainly, economic diversification of western Canada is high on the Government's list of priorities. It is a major concern to all westerners because we believe that we have been the engine of growth for this country in the past.

British Columbia is a particularly resource-based province, with coal, wood and precious metals. There is a surplus of these resources around the world, which means we are feeling the burden of having to bear the impact of a decrease in demand and price for natural resources. That is why I commend the Government for this program and its intention to diversify the economy in the future. Indeed, the past performance of the Government has indicated that it will do exactly that. The $1 billion that it promised to western farmers certainly should be of great benefit.

The fruit industry in my riding has been in difficulty. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King), can confirm this because he has led the fight in the House and in our Party for that industry. We have received a great deal of encouragement and help with diversification programs, such as the grape program. I am sure we will continue to get the necessary funds from the Government to ensure that our province continues to thrive economically.

The only reason we are able to offer programs such as this "good news" legislation, which offers this money to people who need it, is that the Government right from the beginning has attempted to set a path which would solve, not all of the problems but most of the main problems left to us by the previous Government. We in effect have done that, although one would not know it from the reports of the Parliamentary Press Gallery in this city. However, there are other authorities who have assessed the performance of our Government and I think it is important that we hear what they have to say.

The C. D. Howe Institute, a well recognized and respected institution which has no axe to grind, said:

> The Government's policies, therefore, should be assessed in terms of their contribution to achieving the country's long-term growth objectives. Judged in those terms, says Peter Bartha, the institute's Fellow-in-Residence, the Government has made a good start in dealing with Canada's priority economic issues. The fiscal plan, the trade talks, tax reform, and the Government's search for more effective approaches in regional policies all zero in on areas where action is needed.

I say "Amen" to that. I feel that is the kind of message this good news legislation before us today should carry across the country.

The latest issue of "How Ottawa Spends", the publication of Carleton University's School of Public Administration, another institution which has no axe to grind, said:

> Absolutely the most important element in the Tory strategy for economic renewal is to stop and then reverse the growth of annual federal deficits.

Is that not exactly what we have been doing? Is that not exactly what the Speech from the Throne tells us we are going to continue to do? I say to you, Mr. Speaker, with those kinds of policies, we can assure the people of Canada that we will continue to bring forward legislation such as Bill C-11, the kinds of tax measures which help the people who need it.

That is not the only good news legislation the Government has brought forward. Certainly, there are many more areas the Government has addressed. We have improved the whole retirement scheme for Canada. It has probably gone unnoticed, but in fact that is one of the biggest social changes this country has seen for many years. It will again target the money the Government has for people who need it the most.

We have introduced major changes in the law governing minimum standards for private pension plans under federal jurisdiction. These changes will be particularly beneficial for part-time workers, the people who have the most difficulty getting secured pensions. Our legislation will change all that. It will also benefit the women in the workforce and the spouses of workers with pension plans.

These changes to target help for the people who need it most will take effect in 1987. That has been a consistent policy of the Government. We strengthened Canada's basic income support program by extending the spouse allowance to all widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 years. That was something the people had asked for for many years. Thousands of people in the low income brackets will be helped. That has been a general thrust of the Government.

The Government inherited an economic mess which it has had to overcome. I have read articles which indicate the Government is succeeding in creating an economic climate in which the economy can recover and the social net which is in place can be strengthened. We are not increasing the deficit by doing that, as did the previous Government. We are accomplishing it by targeting those areas which need help the most, and we shall continue to do that.

I congratulate the Government for bringing forward this tax amendment, Bill C-11. I am sure the people of Canada will recognize what we are trying to do and will understand that we intend to continue to do it.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member who just concluded his speech referred to the deficit, I simply would like to ask him a question since he had so much praise for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). My question is: Will the Government honour its deficit predictions this year, and if so, by how much below or above the figure stated by the Minister in his February budget? Could he be specific as to what will happen to the deficit?

[English]

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. He will know that the first budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was the only Budget in the last 40 years to come in on target. The Hon. Member will also know that the target was perhaps missed in the last Budget for very good reasons, for example, the dramatic drop in oil revenues and difficulties with some of our major exports. However, the commitment of the Minister of Finance is clear. He intends to pursue his attack on the deficit and, because of his past record, I can assure the Hon. Member that his goals will be more closely reached than those of any Minister of Finance we have ever had in this country.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak today on Bill C-11, the child tax credit Bill. I would like to comment on the speech of the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer). I think he did this Chamber proud by giving us that wonderful speech. He reminded us that there will be 10,000 families in his riding who will benefit as a result of this legislation. That is the kind of message that Hon. Members in this Chamber, not just those on the Government side but those who sit in the opposition benches, should be sending out to their own constituents, because this is indeed good news.

We are living in an extremely negative world. The news media want to report that which is negative, the catastrophies, the earthquakes and other calamities, those bad things which happen to people. If it is negative, it will capture the headlines. But we have here something which will not appear in the headlines of The Ottawa Citizen or the Toronto Star tomorrow. We have good news for our constituents back home. I believe Hon. Members opposite should applaud the efforts of the Government. I almost caught a couple of Members of the Opposition nodding in agreement—almost. They wanted to and their heads just started to nod before they caught themselves.

At a time when every penny counts for many hard-working Canadians, we are on an economic tightrope which the Government inherited from its predecessors. However, in the face of reality, I would like to recite a few things we have done. The Government has slashed Government expenditures. We are bringing some financial and fiscal responsibility to this office.

I wish to cite just one to Hon. Members. I refer to FIRA. The name itself almost scares the living daylights out of people; it is something of which to be afraid. Investors were afraid of it. They stayed away from our shores in droves, not providing the billions of dollars which we so desperately need for investment purposes. In turn, these investment dollars can create jobs and wealth. If we are to help people we have to create wealth first. I suppose that is in opposition to the philosophy of some of our socialist friends across the way who do not understand that type of thinking.

It is refreshing to note that in a short time we will be passing legislation which will prepare the way for an early payment of the child tax credit. This is a measure directed to those who need it most, to those who will clearly benefit as a result of its enactment. I am referring to those over 750,000 Canadians—some three-quarters of a million people—whose incomes are equal to or less than $15,000 a year. As my colleagues have previously mentioned, the child tax credit currently provides low and middle-income families with a tax credit of $454 per child. Through financial belt tightening we have continued to show since 1984 that our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), our Cabinet and Members on the government side care. That is why we are here. That is why we were elected. That is why the Hon. Member for Okanagan North who just spoke so capably invests his time here. We want to show collectively that we care—and we do. I know that Hon. Members want to applaud my comments but time does not permit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fretz: Previously, recipients have had to wait for their benefits until after the filing of their income tax returns in the spring. They have had to wait for months and months. We simply decided that we would change that. We decided that we would introduce legislation to change it. In the near future families will receive the $300 tax credit. Payment will start in November of this year. That is great news. Apart from the financial assistance it will provide to low-income families there will be no red tape. In fact, there will not even be any blue tape. These families will not have to wait. There will be no fuss, no muss, no bother. It is a simple formula. There will be no need for these families to register. They will not have to get into a big lineup to register for these payments. The payments will be forwarded to the recipients of the family allowance. It will be done before Christmas. Is that not great? Who could not use some hard, cold cash at that time of the year?

I ask Hon. Members to imagine just what this windfall will do for some people. I know there are all kinds of pictures being conjured up in the minds of Hon. Members. Perhaps I could illustrate a few for the House. One consists of presents under the Christmas tree, or in a stocking that hangs from the mantle. This payment will enable the purchase of new winter clothes that are so desperately needed, or perhaps a nice juicy, plump turkey. In the winter there are extra heating bills and the kids sometimes need new shoes. My kids are grown up but I do have five grandchildren. My wife just gave a cheque to our daughter-in-law to buy a new pair of shoes for one of our grandchildren. I know how much shoes cost. So this $300 will go a long way. Perhaps some of the money can be used to purchase a new set of tires for the old heap out in the garage.

What we are doing is filling needs for the people of Canada. Not only will we fill needs, but this measure will plough cash back into the economy. This will create a spinoff which continues to help the economy.

Why do we do this? Why would we do this? We do not have to do this. I am sure Hon. Members have other things they can do. The Minister did not have to bring in this measure. We did it simply because we care, because we are compassionate and because we have big hearts. There is no doubt that the family whose gross income is less than $15,000 a year is continually hard pressed to make ends meet. It is difficult to meet all of the needs. The cost of raising a child to the age of 18 has risen dramatically, as precious as they are to us. I know how much I appreciate my family. I have three grown sons who are married and who have given me five grandchildren. I love them all. Those of us who are parents are fortunate.

Aside from daycare costs, which I am sure low and middle-income families cannot afford, the costs of raising children are skyrocketing. The final financial tally amounts to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $70,000. That is a lot of dough in any person's language. I have drawn these figures from a study done in 1984. Three years prior to that, that is, 1981, the costs had increased by $10,000 for items such as clothing, food and housing, which placed pressing demands on household finances. Thus, the early payment of the child tax credit will help to alleviate a little of this burden.

Moreoever, I am pleased to point out that in 1987 the child tax credit will be increased to $489. In 1987 it will be increased to $524. This will amount to savings right on up the line.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fretz: The Government has committed itself to improving and assisting the financial condition of low and middle-income families. I am pleased to see the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) in the House today. When I first came to this place in 1979 the man who put his hand on my shoulder and said, "Girve, we want to welcome you into the House of Commons," was the present Deputy Prime Minister. He helped me greatly. I have looked up to him since because of the fine person that he is. It is because of people like him that we have responsible legislation today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fretz: I wish to outline to Hon. Members the results of some measures we have undertaken. Through the continual efforts of the Prime Minister and of the Cabinet we now have lower unemployment in our country. This means that hundreds of thousands of jobs have been created. This means that men and women who have not worked for years and years are back to work. That is important. This means that there will be lower interest rates. What does that mean to the average person? It means lower priced homes. It means fewer dollars are being paid for mortgage interest. It means lower costs for capital equipment and investment by companies which wish to invest in their firms. This means lower inflation. It follows, then, that food costs will be lower, as will the costs of all consumer items. Everyone can appreciate that. This also means that there will be more housing starts. In some places not only is the housing industry flourishing but it is virtually booming. Such a boom creates jobs for the trades people who work in homes. I refer to carpenters, roofers, bricklayers, plumbers, electricians, furniture manufacturers, and the list goes on and on. These people are now working.

There have been strong and forceful measures to ensure that the debilitating debt of billions of dollars faced by our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) can be brought under some control. I am pleased to see that the Minister of Finance is in the Chamber today to listen to my speech. This debt was caused by the free-wheeling expenditures over the past 16 years our socialist friends across the way. Why would we bring in legislation such as this? We do it in order to establish further programs such as the early payment of the child tax credit. Just watch, there will be more legislation like this which will put smiles on the faces of Canadians. This legislation will be a boon to Canadians regardless of their political stripe, even if they are not associated with any political Party.

I am astounded and amazed that the Opposition would want to slow down this legislation, or that they would even take part in the debate other than to say this is one of the finest Bills that has come across our their in this Chamber. They should be applauding our efforts. It is their constituents who will be benefiting from this legislation. In fact, the House Leaders of the opposition Parties should be meeting with our House Leader and determining how quickly this legislation can be passed. We want to get it through, because we want to get the money into the hands and pockets of the people as quickly as possible.

Mr. Gauthier: We are not speaking on the subject, it's the Government. Let's get on with this.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is very grateful for the intervention of the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member will continue debate.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for that interjection. I think it is wonderful to hear from the Opposition that they want to see this legislation move through quickly. I will wind up my speech in another minute or two. We wish to have this Bill passed and moved through swiftly so we can get the money into the hands of the people.

I would like to conclude, because the Hon. Member reminded me we should move this legislation through quickly, by saying that this proves again that our Minister of Finance has a heart, that we are compassionate.

Mr. Gauthier: It's right in the centre; it should be left of centre.

Mr. Fretz: It has been levelled, it has been charged that we are the people of big business. We are the people of little business, too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fretz: We want to help the little business people. We want to help all business people so that we can plough these tax dollars back into the economy, and help people with legislation like this.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29(1)

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I indicated to the House that I would try not to delay, overly long, giving a ruling on the application of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) under Standing Order 29 for an emergency debate relating to the ruling of an American agency with respect to the Canadian forest industry exports.

I also indicated that while I did not receive the minimum notice required by Standing Order 29, there is, in important matters, a discretion allowed the Chair to not see the clock. I extended that courtesy to the Hon. Member, and I am sure that the House would approve that that discretion be used sparingly perhaps, but under the appropriate circumstances.

In considering an application of this kind, the Chair must take three factors into account. The issue raised must constitute a genuine emergency. The Chair used that word in the sense that it is something which is of such urgency that it calls immediately for something to be done about it. It is not enough—and I would ask that the Hon. Members understand this—that it be a matter of great importance. It is the view of the Chair that the issue is of great importance, but the issue must call for immediate and urgent consideration. The Chair must also take into consideration whether or not there will be other opportunities to debate the matter, and other opportunities within a reasonable period of time.

Under all the circumstances, while the Chair does recognize the great importance to Canada of this matter, the Chair must find that the application does not meet the requirements of the Standing Order.

I do want to thank the Hon. Member for proposing the motion and for expressing in explicit terms the reasons for that motion. I thank Hon. Members for patiently hearing the Chair's response, and also for patiently listening to the Hon. Member who presented the application.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Because it is Friday the House might observe that the Hon. Member ought to be extremely pleased with the Chair's intervention.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): In the spirit of trying to get this legislation through, and knowing that at two o'clock we will have the Minister in the House, may I call it one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. The legislation before the House today, Bill C-11, is strictly a housekeeping measure, and I do not think we will have much trouble adopting this Bill. First of all, it does not involve any new expenditures on the part of the Government and second, it changes almost nothing in the program introduced by the Liberals, and I am referring to the child tax credit, which since 1978 has been used to help our neediest families. This assistance is provided to help pay the cost of educating dependent children. As we know, the tax credit is paid annually and as part of the regular programs has been much appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I have only one comment to make, and then I think we can proceed with Committee of the Whole. I just wanted to say that in the riding of Ottawa—Vanier, and I feel it must be said, we have a considerable number of single-parent families. I think this riding has been particularly affected by the rising incidence of divorce and family break-up generally, and as a result, about one-fifth of our families are single-parent families with dependent children. Most of these single parents are women with very low incomes, often below the poverty line. I would say that 20 per cent of the people in my riding are single-parent families, and these are the people who have to live on very low incomes. I would have thought the Government could have dealt with this problem by increasing the tax credit, by giving more money. I think that some day we will have to realize that our target, our programs will have to be aimed at increasing the incomes of these people who are the neediest in our society.

Mr. Speaker, one thing we absolutely must do is put a stop to the practice of discounting federal cheques and letting incredible sums totalling around $20 million annually go to the tax discounters. I think the easiest way to keep our neediest families from going to the tax discounters would be to abolish this practice, so that the 500,000 Canadians who sold their child tax credits to tax discounters last year—two thirds of whom were earning less than $8,000—so that these people can then enjoy the full benefit of what they receive from the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I will not hold up debate any further. As I said before, we see this as a housekeeping Bill which does not make any major changes or involve additional expenditures, and we are therefore prepared to expedite the passage of this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the two opposition Parties, and I think there would be a disposition to move Bill C-11 into Committee of the Whole and thereafter move it into third reading if we dispose of committee of the whole consideration today.

If Your Honour sought unanimous consent in that regard, I believe it would be granted, and we could then get on with further progress.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Eligible child

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I should like to propose an amendment to Clause 1. I move:

That Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 1:

(a) by striking out line 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"whom the individual was entitled to receive"; and (b) by striking out lines 12 to 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"be entitled to receive a family allowance under the Family Allowances Act, 1973 for the greater part of the taxation year".

Very simply, the purpose of this motion is to ensure that the person who had the primary care and maintenance of the child receives the child tax credit. The guardian of the child could change during the year or during the two periods mentioned in the Act. The way it is now, the person who collected the family allowance for the month of January of the taxation year is eligible for the child tax credit. Bill C-11 changes this to read that the person who it is anticipated will be collecting the family allowance in January of the following taxation year will be issued the pre-payment.

The inequity which the amendment addresses is that it is still possible for the primary care giver of the child to be denied the child tax credit simply because for some reason he or she was not in receipt of the family allowance for the particular month of January.

Although the incidence of this inequity actually happening is not widespread, it does in fact happen. When it does happen, the appeal procedure is through the Department of National Revenue. In order to have a legitimate case for appeal, an individual must have been the recipient of the family allowance for January and must not have had income in excess of the regulated amount, which is up to $23,500 for the full child tax credit. This is to say that an appeal on the basis of the inequity which this amendment attempts to correct is non-existent. There really is no appeal under these exceptional circumstances.

It is not the purpose of this amendment to complicate the administrative procedure for the Department of National Revenue and the Department of National Health and Welfare. It must be pointed out that eligibility for the family allowance can be changed from month to month, and that the loss of one month's family allowance for one child is a matter of $31.58. The amount of the child tax credit is now $454 per child, a very considerable amount, especially for a low income family or a single parent mother.

Most people have no idea that eligibility for the child tax credit hinges upon collecting the family allowance for the month of January, that is, next January. In the previous legislation it was the past January, quite a different circumstance.

• (1410)

We suggest that it should not be a terribly complicated or expensive procedure for the Department of Health and Welfare to exchange data with the Department of National Revenue indicating who has been the primary recipient of the family allowance for the accounting period between the beginning of the taxation year in January until preparations must begin to prepare pre-payment cheques. The child tax credit will be prepaid in November so at minimum there is a period of nine months and at maximum 10 months which could be used.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the constructive suggestion of the Hon. Member. I think the concern that she is showing is relevant to the Bill, and I would like to set her at ease.

The family allowance and child tax credit files are constantly being updated. Custody updates are being done on a regular basis by National Revenue. Therefore, the pre-payment will go to the parent who cared for the child up to the pre-payment because the records are kept up to date. Therefore, the concern which the Hon. Member rightly addressed will not arise. If there is a change in custody, the new supporter of the child will get the balance which reflects his or her portion of the care. I ask the Hon. Member to trust the fact that the records are being updated and being kept updated so that these pre-payments will go to the proper person. That is what we are told is the case.

Mr. Chairman: I would like to advise the Hon. Member for Vancouver East that I have not ruled yet whether the proposed amendment is in order. Nonetheless, I will allow the Member to speak on it.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I am just asking for clarification of the point. My understanding is that the change of criteria in this Bill as to who is the care giver and who is entitled to get this money makes it the person who is the official guardian as of next January, not last January. Even if the records are up to date, they do not really know in advance who that is going to be. That is pretty loose kind of criteria it seems to me.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, I have trouble understanding how we could have the slippage to which the Hon. Member is referring. If we are up to date with these custody files and family allowance files, I cannot understand how we could have the gap that the Member is identifying.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister how he can explain the substitution of the word "is" for the word "was" and why this was done?

[English]

—was or is. In the former clause of the same Bill we were using the word "was" in "was entitled". Now we are using the word "is" in "is entitled". Is there a particular reason for that?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. The word "was" refers to "was entitled in 1985". That is why it reads that way. We have to initiate this Bill at some calendar year. The "was" refers to 1985. The cheque people are going to get shortly is based on that "was", which was 1985.

Mr. Garneau: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The Chair is now ready to rule on the proposed amendment of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway. In the opinion of the Chair, the proposed amendment goes beyond the scope of the Royal Recommendation of the Bill. We would need an amended Royal Recommendation, which we do not have. Therefore, the proposed amendment is ruled out of order.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Would you reconsider that? I fail to understand, after looking at the amendment and having heard the explanations, that any more money will be expended. It will simply direct the money to the people who are looking after the child at the time. Since it specified for the whole of the year, those over-all global expenditures would have been made in any case. What it may do, as I understood the explanation, is divert the money from someone who is no longer the guardian of the child to the current guardian of the child—

Mr. Mazankowski: It changes the intent of the Bill.

Mr. Althouse: —which does not change the over-all amount of money that was to be put forward and it does not change the Royal Recommendation therefor.

The Chairman: I thank the Hon. Member for his comments on the matter. The Chair upholds the ruling and rules the amendment out of order.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clause 3 - Where excess refunded:

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Chairman, in spite of all my efforts to grasp the meaning of Section 160.1, more especially as it relates to the payment of interest, I am at a loss to understand that sub-section. Subsection (2) reads as follows:

"(2) Where an individual resided at the end of a taxation year with a person who was a supporting person (within the meaning assigned by subsection 122.2(2)) of an eligible child of the individual for that year, the individual and that person are jointly and severally liable to pay any excess described in subsection (1) that was refunded to the individual in respect of the year as a consequence of the operation of section 122.2 or 164.1 and interest on such excess, but nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to limit the liability of any person under any other provision of this Act."

I would like to ask the Minister to explain the exact intent of that clause. Since it could be said that a pre-payment of $300 in the case stated in the Bill to a family with a child in 1986, such a $300 payment will be made in November or at the beginning of December and if at the end of the year, at the time the taxpayer files his income tax return, such a taxpayer instead of earning $15,000 in the year, as stated later in the Bill, will have earned $16,000 . . . Therefore, he would not be entitled to a $300 child tax credit, he would not be entitled to that pre-payment provided by the legislation now in effect.

I wonder if that clause means that the taxpayer should be paying interest on that pre-payment, and if not, I should like to know the meaning of that addition and of such interests on the surplus and how it is consistent with the other sections of the Income Tax Act which provide that interest on income tax is payable after April 30 of the year following the filing of the income tax return.

[English]

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, the question was raised yesterday. It is an important one. First, I would like to give my answer and, second, give the point where it is plain in the Bill. The answer is that interest would not be charged for the period between receipt of the payment, let us say that was December 1, until you file your income tax on April 30. In essence, this can be looked upon as an interest-free loan until April 30. That is when the meter starts to run, not before. I will endeavour to make sure that this point is made clear in the enclosure that goes with the pre-payment.

It is also made plain in Section 164.1(3) where it says:

Where the aggregate of all amounts paid under subsection (1) to or applied under subsection (4) in respect of an individual for a taxation year exceeds the amount deemed by subsection 122.2(1) to have been paid by him for the year, the excess shall be deemed to have been refunded to him on account of his tax under this Part for the year on the day on or before which his return of income under this Part for the year is required to be filed—

That substantiates what I said before.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Chairman, in the technical note to the Bill it says the taxpayer is required to repay the excess in addition to any interest computed from the date the excess amount was paid to the taxpayer. Is the Minister telling me that this excess amount does not refer in any way to the pre-payment we are discussing in this Bill?

Mr. Hockin: The excess amount referred to here is the pre-payment less the entitlement. That is different than just viewing it as the pre-payment.

Mr. Garneau: I am not sure if I understood what he just said, because the technical note refers to the date the excess amount was paid. Previously no amount was payable until the taxpayer filed his return. When the Bill refers to the date the excess amount was paid to the taxpayer, do we understand that date to be April 30?

Mr. Hockin: The answer is yes. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member is looking at Section 160.1(1) instead of Section 161.4. That is the basis on which I say yes to his question.

Mr. Garneau: Section 160.1(1) covers just the amount that would have to be reimbursed by the taxpayer. Subsection 2 of that paragraph refers to the interest. Is the Minister saying that interest, if any, will be paid after April 30 of the following year? If the answer to that question is yes, that is all right with me.

Mr. Hockin: Section 160 is a joint and several liability section. It has to be read in conjunction with Section 161.4(3) in order to answer his question. When that is done, it is clear that no interest will be paid before April 30. The meter starts to run after that.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, people in the financial field have a way of saying things that I sometimes miss. A person earns $16,000 in the current year, but in the previous year earned $15,000 which would have triggered this anticipated payment. On April 30, the final date for filing his return, he files saying he made $16,000, therefore he was not eligible for the $300 given to him in November of the previous year. Will there be interest charged to that individual on the $300 if, for example, it takes six, eight or ten weeks to process?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, the answer is yes, there would be interest from April 30 on, but not before.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: I am disappointed because in fact this person, Mr. Speaker, was entitled to $454 on April 30. And as the Minister just told me, because he received a pre-payment in November and earned $16,000, which is still below the $23,500 level for eligibility to the income tax credit, the Minister just told me that taxpayer will be paying interest starting from April 30 until he receives notice from Revenue Canada that his income tax return has been accepted. Did I understand the Minister correctly?

[English]

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing different here from the way the Income Tax Act ordinarily operates. When he files he will be able to tell immediately whether the amount was excessive or not. As a matter of fact, if he keeps his records, he will know at the end of December, the calendar year, whether the amount was in excess. So there is nothing new. That is true of all tax returns, and it is true for other matters of this type. It seems to me that the truth will not be hidden from him. He will probably know on January 1 and he will certainly know when he does his return on April 30.

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister misses my point. From the total $454 to which that person was entitled will be deducted the interest payment, therefore he will get less than the $454, yes or no, depending upon when he pays?

Mr. Hockin: Depending upon what, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Gauthier: Depending upon when he pays his income tax.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, if he is entitled to his $454 credit, there is no reason why he would have this deducted from it. This is his credit.

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister just told me there would be no deductions if the taxpayer is eligible for that $454, even though the eligible amount of $15,000 was set, rather than the $23,500 which the program allows, and the fact that he earned anything over $15,000 would not in any way prejudice the $454 which he would receive? He would not have any interest deducted from that amount for having earned over the $15,000 ceiling?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to interrupt my hon. friend, but both gentlemen who have been speaking have constantly referred to "he" as does the Bill in reference to the people who will be recipients of the child tax credit. It is usually the mother who is the recipient. I am serious about this. I have asked in the House before, and I ask again now, that this kind of sexist language be removed from our legislation. How can this be done, Mr. Chairman? It is long overdue. It is offensive to me to read this in the Bill and to hear this pronoun being used when it is inappropriate.

The Chairman: I am sure all Members will take note of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I understand the point. It is difficult for me to say "it" but I believe that "person" or "individual" could refer to either a she or a he.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On Clause 4 -Prepayment of child tax credit

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, Clause 4 amends Section 164(1) of the Income Tax Act, to provide for the pre-payment, in respect of every eligible child, of $300 or such greater amount as prescribed by the Minister, as described in clause passed earlier, and for the $300 to be prepaid to the taxpayer in charge of the dependent child who earned less than $15,000 during the previous year, which means that the payment to be made in 1986 would be based on the family income for 1985.

Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the Government's way of reasoning. We have been hearing a lot of rhetoric from the Government side about those tremendous benefits. I know your neutral position has prevented you from doing so, but from the Government side we heard so much rhetoric implying that this was new money, new legislation. Fortunately, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) said at the end of his remarks that this would not cost the Government one penny because otherwise we would have asked where they got the funds needed to pay such amounts. Something I cannot understand is how this Government came to that $300 figure, when the child tax credit is $454, at least as I understood it would be for this year? Why is the Government legislating piecemeal? I suppose that where a family earns $15,000, especially since that is the maximum income for entitlement to the pre-payment, why not prepay to that needy family the whole of the $454 child tax credit?

It has been stated that the basic reason for this legislation was to somehow stave off tax refund discounters. If there is a $154 balance left in the case of a family earning less than $15,000, with two or three dependent children, this will amount to $154 times three or four, and that is a lot of money. Do you think a family in the habit of using discounter services would stop doing so for that $154 balance? Statistics that have been compiled show that it is mainly families below that approximate level of income who use discounters. Those families will still earn less than the minimum at which tax discounters are used. Why did the Minister not provide for $454 rather than $300?

And to use the Minister's own terms, Mr. Speaker, since we have been told this legislation would not cost the Government a single penny because the total payment is $454, I would like in the same spirit to bring forth an amendment to that clause by saying this before reading it: you may say this involves an expenditure of money, something Opposition Members may not properly move. However, since the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) told us in his speech that Bill C-11 would not cost the Government anything and since the maximum amount of the child tax credit is $454, I would like to move an amendment which does not represent an additional expenditure and which therefore comes within the scope of the Bill. If it is accepted, this motion would amend Bill C-11 in clause 4 by striking out lines 16 to 19 on page 3 and by substituting therefor:

"individual amounts, the agregate of which does not exceed $454 for the taxation year 1986, $489 for the taxation year 1987, $524 for the taxation year 1988, and for any subsequent taxation year, the amount of $524 indexed on the annual increase in the Consumer Price Index, in respect"

The rest of the clause remains the same.

This amendment, in French and in English, is seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

[English]

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, the Member has alleged that I said this program will not cost us a cent. I did not say that, and I cannot say it because, as the Hon. Member knows, we have altered the cash flow. Due to the huge deficit which was left to the Government we have to borrow money to pay money. This is speeding up the payments by six months. It will not affect the 1985 tax year, but it certainly does affect the fiscal plan and extra expenditures are incurred by the Government to make a pre-payment six months early on such a huge amount of money. I do not believe we ever said that it will not cost a cent, and it would not be accurate to say that because there are extra expenditures involved in prepaying.

The Member asked why we do not send the entire amount of $454 instead of $300. I think that question was answered clearly yesterday. To reiterate, we want to encourage recipients to file tax returns. If there is still $154 outstanding, it will encourage them to file tax returns. As well, there will be a balance of $154 left for reconciliation. Therefore, if someone is overpaid the chance of them having to send the Government a cheque will be minimized because part of the amount has been kept back from the pre-payment. I think this is a rather novel and intelligent way to begin making pre-payments of credits like this.

With regard to the continuing existence of tax discounters, I would remind the Hon. Member that I served on the committee which examined tax discounting and I share his concern about this. However the tax discounter now has only $154 to get at. That is a very trivial amount compared to $454. I think it is hardly worth the time of a tax discounter to discount $154. We have taken $300 right out of play.

This clause answers very well the major issues raised about reconciliation, about encouraging people to file tax returns and also about tax discounters.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, we fully support this amendment. The National Anti-Poverty Organization which has many affiliates across the country has studied the matter of tax discounters at great length, because they are the people who are the victims of the tax discounters. They have asked repeatedly that the full amount be retained and paid at one time. This is very important in their life circumstances because they simply have no credit or block sum of money for the more expensive household items that are required. They have asked that the full amount be paid.

With respect to tax discounters, I really do not see how this will prevent it. It simply means that next fall the tax discounters will know that $300 is coming and they will speed up and be into operation next fall. What we have called for over and over again, as has NAPO, is legislation to actually ban tax discounting of the child tax credit. This was done for the old age pension. If this was done for the child tax credit as well, we would not need this.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure if you have made a ruling on whether this clause is in order. I believe it is out of order because it has asked for inflation to be added. That obviously means the expenditure of more money.

The Chairman: I am about to rule on it, possibly along that line of thought.

Mr. Gauthier: You should not look to him for inspiration, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I simply want to point out to the Minister that we did hear and read his speech of October 15. We may have misunderstood it, but on page 381 of Hansard for October 15, we find that the Minister said the following in his speech on Bill C-11:

—it is important that we find ways to deliver benefits to those entitled without increasing expenditures—

In our opinion, the words "without increasing expenditures" clearly indicate that the Government was not increasing its expenditures.

This is why we thought that, if it was possible to make a $300 payment when the program provided for $454, it would probably be as useful and perhaps preferable to avoid all the problems that this would cause by increasing the amount of the payment from $300 to $454. It is with this in mind that we proposed this amendment.

[English]

I am preoccupied with the question of tax discounters. I know that we have had a committee and that the Minister was a member of that committee. We faced two alternatives. We could have banned tax discounting as was done by the Americans. The argument that this would be interfering with small business was not very valid or very serious.

The other alternative, as suggested a few minutes ago, was to prohibit the sale of a child tax credit cheque, as we did with family allowances and old age pensions. It would seem to us that this measure is targeted at a group of Canadians who need that extra help and that we should assist them by prohibiting the sale of those cheques to tax discounters, as we did with old age pensions and family allowances. The House knows the discounters make a lot of money.

Mr. Dick: Does this concern the amendment?

Mr. Gauthier: It all deals with that amendment, Paul. Stick around and you will understand.

Mr. Dick: I am listening.

Mr. Gauthier: The Government says that it does not cost any more to have this measure because it is an administrative measure which gives a payment in advance to people who need the money. Why not give the whole amount? You say it is an insignificant amount of $150. It could be substantial to the families who have two, three or four children, when one multiplies the number of eligible children times $150.

It is possible for the Minister to accept this and increase it to $454, which is the amount to which people are entitled. Why not do that and be generous?

Why be stingy and give only $300, why not give $454?

The Chairman: I am now ready to rule on the amendment moved by Mr. Garneau and seconded by Mr. Gauthier, the effect of which would be to amend Bill C-11 in clause 4 by striking out line 16 to 19 on page 3 and by substituting the following therefor:

"individual amounts, the agregate of which does not exceed $454 for the taxation year 1986, $489 for the taxation year 1987, $524 for the taxation year 1988, and for any subsequent taxation year, the amount of $524 indexed on the annual increase in the Consumer Price Index, in respect"

In my opinion, this amendment would result in additional spending for the Government and, therefore—

[English]

The amendment, according to the Chair, is beyond the scope of the Royal Recommendation.

I must therefore declare the amendment as proposed out of order.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Chairman, we must accept your decision. I wish the Minister himself had decided to support this amendment, so that Your Honour could have ruled it in order because it would have come from the Government benches.

In view of the fact the Government will not itself move an amendment which would make it possible for families earning less than $15,000 to get the full amount of the child tax credit to which they would be entitled, that is $454 per child, in view of the fact that they will have to be satisfied with $300, I should like the Minister to explain to me why clause 4 limits the benefit of this pre-payment to families earning only $15,000 or less, for I just do not understand.

People are aware that under this legislation, following the Government's decision, the previous ceiling of $26,000 and some hundred dollars from which the child tax credit gradually diminishes has been reduced by this Conservative Government to $23,500. Because of this, several families will not be able to benefit from the child tax credit; those families earning more than $23,000 and who have three, four or five children will be especially penalized.

Mr. Chairman, I want the House to know that we do not agree with this $15,000 maximum income triggering the pre-payment. I want to ask the Minister whether he would accept, without being the sponsor, the amendment which I am about to move before you rule on this amendment Mr. Chairman. I am sure that if the Minister made it his own, it would be ruled in order. I move therefore that Bill C-11 be amended in clause 4 by deleting line 30 on page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"of the individual did not exceed $23,500 for the taxation year 1986 and did not exceed for any subsequent taxation year the amount of $23,500 indexed on the annual increase in the Consumer Price Index."

Mr. Chairman, I should like to move this amendment in both official languages.

[English]

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the suggested amendment would need a Royal Recommendation. I would ask the Chair to rule on that.

The Chairman: The proposed amendment by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides is the following:

That Bill C-11 be amended in clause 4 by deleting line 30 on page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"of the individual did not exceed $23,500 for the taxation year 1986 and did not exceed for any subsequent taxation year the amount of $23,500 indexed on the annual increase in the Consumer Price Index."

The Chair does in fact rule that this amendment would bring an additional financial burden on the Government and therefore is beyond the scope of the Royal Recommendation. I must rule it out of order.

Mr. Garneau: Would the Minister table this amendment himself, with the support of the Government? Until now he has hidden behind the decision of the Chair. Would he be prepared to support this idea and increase the amount from $15,000 to $23,500? I would like to know if the Government is serious. I would prefer to hear the Minister say that he refuses that type of amendment.

Mr. Hockin: The suggestion of the Hon. Member would change the very principle of the Bill. That, too, would be ruled out of order. However, I want to make some general comments based on this foray of suggestions we are getting from across the aisle. First, I want to say, by way of encouragement to the Hon. Member, that the $300 amount of pre-payment in the Bill can be changed without an amendment. We are going to monitor that closely. The reason it is not the full $454 is that we want to make sure we are not incorrectly prepaying too many people, because it is a very awkward situation when people have to send money back. We also want to encourage them to file tax returns.

We are going to monitor this because it seems to me that when we move to the $15,000 threshold, to which the Hon. Member referred, the higher threshold increases the likelihood of an incorrect payment. We are going to monitor it, though, and it could be that we can move it up. I am sympathetic in looking at it, as I know the Government is. Based upon the comments of the Hon. Member, I am sure he would be sympathetic. We will monitor it carefully. There is nothing to prevent us from doing that. I thank the Hon. Member for his suggestion.

Mr. Gauthier: I wonder if I heard the Minister properly when I heard him say we could, or the Government could, change the $300 at any time. I refer the Minister to the Bill, Clause 3, Section 164.1(1), which states:

—the Minister may, after the beginning of a taxation year and without application therefor, pay to an individual for the year one or more amounts, the aggregate of which does not exceed $300 or such greater amount as may be prescribed for the year—

How will this operate? Will the Minister announce his intention ahead of time? Can the Minister give us some indication of how this will operate? Will there be a bureaucratic decision made by God knows who?

Mr. Hockin: It means it will be changed by regulation, and a pre-payment of something this important, as the Hon. Member knows, will be a decision that will have to be made, not by techicians but by people who make these major decisions. As I have said to the Hon. Member's colleague, we will monitor very carefully this level to see if it can be increased in the future, and it can be done by regulation.

Mr. Gauthier: I have the assurance of the Minister that this will be a budgetary item? In other words, it will be in the Budget for the coming year and we will be able to discuss that at the time of the Estimates, and the House of Commons will be called upon to pass judgment as to whether the amount is sufficient or not?

Mr. Hockin: I thank the Hon. Member for the lesson in the ins and outs of budgets and so on. However, this clearly can be done through Order in Council. There is no need for this to be part of a Budget.

Mr. Gauthier: That is what I feared. That is exactly what I did not want to hear. I guess that is the interpretation the Minister attaches to that clause. We could ask then, if it is going to be done by regulation, will it in any way be available to Parliamentarians, per se, to review that regulation at appropriate times? If so, how do we review these regulations?

Mr. Hockin: My understanding, Mr. Chairman, is that all regulations, of which this is typical, are part of the statutory instruments which are referred by committee and by Parliament.

Clause 4 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Garneau: May I ask the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) or perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), if we agree on third reading, is there an intent to have a very long debate on it or can we agree to—

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that there are a couple of Hon. Members on our side who want to make a few comments, but it will be fairly short.

Mr. Prud'homme: As long as they are not provocative.

Mr. Mazankowski: They will not be provocative. Our Members are very rarely provocative unless they are provoked.

Mr. Gauthier: Just so I understand all these negotiations, I take it, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous agreement we will pass to third reading of this Bill and that the Government will not introduce any further legislation today? When this Bill has received appropriate debate, it will then be for us to decide what hour of the day it is, to see the clock, in other words?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I did indicate to the House we were going to be going on to another Bill, Bill C-4. It was my intention to call that Bill which would be consistent with the pronouncement I made yesterday.

Mr. Prud'homme: But we could relieve you of that.

Mr. Dick: They could talk forever on this.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the same point, we are certainly willing to let the legislation pass. From what I understand, the Government has two speakers. We have one or two speakers each from our caucuses. But we would really hate to see a piece of legislation introduced at 4.30 or 4.45 p.m. I think it would be in the best interests of serious study if we finished this legislation and called it five o'clock.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, assuming that this would take us to a 4.40 or 4.45 p.m., I think there would be a disposition to accommodate the Hon. Member. I was assuming we might get through this Bill sooner than that. If that were the case; if we were to get through this by 3.30 or 4 p.m., I think we would be viewed as being somewhat wasteful in not moving on to other important pieces of legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the third time and passed.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on the same point of order.

Mr. Hockin moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, we have agreed to support this housekeeping measure proposed by the Government so that the child tax credit can be paid in November instead of February or March.

Mr. Speaker, we regret, however, that amendments we proposed and which would have made it possible to improve this legislation were turned down systematically by the Government. That is typical of Conservative policy. We saw it with unemployment insurance. We saw it with Old Age Security pensions, where the Government wanted to partially de-index Old Age Security pensions. We saw it when family allowances were partially de-indexed. We also saw that because of decisions made by the Conservative Government, the cutoff point for entitlement to the child tax credit was brought down from $26,000 to $23,500. We see that this Government's social policies do not in any way reflect commitments made by the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Canada, during the 1984 election campaign, when he said that social programs were a sacred trust that would not be tampered with.

Unfortunately, after the Conservatives came to power, we saw how month after month and from one session to the next, the Prime Minister of Canada failed to keep the solemn commitment he made before the Canadian people during the 1984 campaign.

As for Bill C-11, it is a housekeeping measure that has certain advantages but also reflects the character of the Conservative Party. In other words, it is a measure that is less than generous in its application. Why won't the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) give the full child tax credit to a family earning only $15,000 a year, his excuse being that the Government might have trouble getting the money back?

In any case, there is a wide enough margin between $15,000 and $23,500 for the Minister of Finance to be certain that there would be very few cases where the Department of National Revenue would have had more difficulty in collecting the taxes due. In addition, if a family with a previous annual income of $15,000 found itself with a $27,000, $28,000 or $30,000 income another year, it seems to me that it would be much easier to pay back if necessary the amount of the pre-payment received in excess of their entitlement if this amount were interest-free. In any case, there would still be the rest of the taxes due to protect the amount of the pre-payment.

We regret this meanness on the part of the Government as well as the fact that the Government did not accept to offer a pre-payment to all the families entitled to the child tax credit, that is families with an income under $23,500.

The Conservative Government has already lowered by several thousand dollars the cutoff point for the child tax credit. Previously, this cutoff point was $26,500, but it will now be lowered to $23,500. The amount of the child tax credit will therefore be reduced for all the families earning between $23,500 and $27,000. I find it hard to believe that the Conservative Government could be so mean with its family benefits. When we asked the Government why . . . I accept the ruling made earlier by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole since my amendment may have dealt with a financial matter, but the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) or the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) could have moved the same amendment on behalf of the Government and obtained the required ministerial consent so that families with four or five children and an income under $23,500 could have benefited.

This is not a new benefit, but simply an amount which is due to these families and which, instead of being paid in March or February of next year, will be paid in November, three or four months earlier. It is typical of the Conservative Government to be so mean in its social policies. These same low-income families must often rely on unemployment insurance, and we have now learned in all the newspapers that the Government is on the point of decreasing brutally—

Mr. Prud'homme: Shamefully!

Mr. Garneau: Or at the very least shamefully, the UIC benefits of the unemployed in Quebec, the Atlantic and all other regions in Canada by hundreds of millions of dollars.

I raise this point, Mr. Speaker, to put Bill C-11 in the context of the social philosophy of this Government, which Government has not only failed to keep the commitments made during the 1984 electoral campaign, but has also decided to hack away at our social programs, which are essential to ensure a more equitable distribution of wealth in Canada.

When we see what is going on with family allowances and even more so with the child tax credit, whereby the maximum allowed declines from $26,000 to $23,000, social benefits are reduced, and since the Government is getting ready to slash unemployment insurance programs, there is cause for alarm, Mr. Speaker. I would urge the Minister of State for Finance, who is new in the Cabinet and certainly knows what it means to meet his constituents every weekend, or Mondays or Fridays in his constituency office when he can be there, he is certainly aware of the social problems faced by many of our constituents, to take advantage of his situation as a new member of the Cabinet with new ideas, to remind his colleague, the Minister of Finance, and more so his Prime Minister of the firm, formal and most serious commitment he made on television when he stated that social programs were a sacred trust.

I hope the young Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) with his understanding of social programs—still fresh in his mind since he has had the experience of being an MP before becoming a Minister with a chauffeur, limousine and other perks and that he still remembers what it means to live as an average Canadian—will urge his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to honour the commitments made during the election campaign and not merely reinstate the child tax credit to a $26,000 income maximum, but see to it that in co-operation with his colleague, the Minister of Finance he is instrumental in thwarting the plans of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to cut back unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to speak in the third reading debate on Bill C-11 for two or three reasons. First, the reality of poverty in our country has to be given more emphasis in the House of Commons than has commonly been the case since I arrived here.

I was struck, as I suspect were many Members, by the Thanksgiving edition of The Globe and Mail which contained very touching stories of people across the country in circumstances much less advantageous than those which we as parliamentarians and many of our constituents face. There is a reality developing in the country which is far too easy to escape and overlook. It is a reality that shows up in soup kitchens and food banks. It shows up in food lines across our country, a country which should, with its present wealth, not have the type of inequities that cause this type of poverty to exist.

I was most struck by the fact that the food lines and food banks have spread to western Canada, particularly to Alberta and British Columbia. These are areas which we in central Canada have previously thought of as some type of nirvana, some paradise beyond the mountains to which we look in terms of our retirement. The discovery that poverty exists in the inner cities of Vancouver and Edmonton was a shock for many of us. It has caused us to have another look at the country as a whole. I think if one has a look of that sort at our country one will see some bleak and sad realities.

I had lunch in the Parliamentary Restaurant, ironically,with Dennis Drainville. He is an Anglican priest who has worked closely with the poor in Toronto. He sees the world and our country in 1986 as being no longer a place of smug complacency. It is not the land flowing with milk and honey that so many members of the Conservative Party, and indeed the Liberal Party, too, sometimes seem to see in this country. Rather, we have a country with some tragedies which have to be recognized. Some are human. Some tragedies are worse because they affect children. These children often face very grim circumstances and a future which is not something that they can look forward to with the same sense of opportunity and optimism which my 11-year-old son can have. That kind of reality in 1986 in Canada is something that should outrage us all. It is not something which we as a Parliament should be prepared to accept, to see calmly as being inevitable. It is something that must be tackled, and tackled with urgency.

I have no great objections to this Bill in front of us. I hate to tell some of my Conservative colleagues on the other side of the House, but this Bill embodies a principle that I talked about during my election campaign. It said to women who were receiving the child tax credit that it would make more sense for that child tax credit to be paid out on a basis where it could be used throughout the year. Therefore, it is a Bill which I do not want to criticize or unduly delay.

I heard my colleague across the aisle say that this Bill showed that the Conservative Party had heart. When we saw the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) demonstrating palpably that he had heart, I must say that it brought to me the expression, as with the chicken, "Some heart. Not much. Not much at all".

In the face of the poverty in the country this Bill is something that shames all of us as human beings, as Canadians. As we sit here on a Friday afternoon in the House of Commons with this poverty facing us, the very best that we can do is to divide up the meagre, miniscule child tax credit into two parts. That is simply not good enough for the millions of people in our country who face a future which is simply not a Canadian future that I am sure all of us in this House would like to see.

We have argued strongly, and I make the case again at third reading, that it was possible to do so much more with this Bill. This is a Bill to amend the Income Tax Act. It is a Bill, frankly, which deals with child policy in this country. Consequently, it could have taken on some of the most dramatic and exciting potential changes to put the young people of our country into a fair position to benefit equally in the future in Canada.

For instance, it could have done very simple things such as those mentioned earlier by my colleague, the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). It could have done away with the tax rebate discounting which takes that meagre amount presently provided and reduces it even further. It could have been more ambitious. For instance, it could have maintained the universality of family allowance in a way that would exercise reindexing.

As it now stands, in 1990-91 there will be over $600 million withdrawn in real dollar terms from child benefits in this country. That is not right. It is not right to treat the children of Canada in that way. Yet, through the paralysis, the over-concern with deficit financing that the Government seems to be dominated by, that is going to be the consequence by 1990. If we project 20 years into the future, the family allowance will be $18 a month compared to $31.27 today. The child tax credit, if there is not to be a change—perhaps there will be a change, because I recognize there is some small heart palpably beating in the chest of the Minister of Finance—will be reduced by that period.

I ask this Government why it would not adopt a social policy which reindexed the family allowance and took the child tax credit and made it something real and significant to the women and single-headed families who receive it. At its present level it is helpful and it will be more helpful to receive it in different amounts rather than all at once, but it could be so much more helpful.

For instance, it could replace the regressive child tax exemption with an 80 per cent increase which would consequently be possible in the child tax credit. It could also increase the number of families receiving child tax credit if the Government had the will to eliminate tax exemptions for children of very well off families. In short, there could have been a serious effort in this Bill to move toward child based tax reform aimed at getting rid of poverty in Canada to a much greater extent than we presently have with this sadly inadequate piece of legislation before us this afternoon.

We have gone through second reading debate and clause by clause consideration in Committee of the Whole. It will not change. However, I strongly urge the Government to look in the future at a serious set of changes which would provide child tax credits that would be a credit to our society. I am referring to child tax credits which do something serious for young children in society. It could give them a significant level of support when their families are unable to provide it for them, not the very limited level of this year.

We in the New Democratic Party have called for this kind of tax reform for years. We continue to call for it. We continue to point out the serious gaps which exist in the tax system, gaps which leave hundreds of corporations untaxed despite the fact that they are profitable. As well, thousands of individuals are untaxed at this stage. If we moved on the child tax credit area with urgency, imagination, and some seriousness, we would have before us a tremendous advance forward for poor people, not this second rate piece of legislation. On this Friday afternoon I think all of us would be much prouder in that case.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise this afternoon on behalf of my constituents in Nepean—Carleton and share some of my thoughts about the legislation before us.

Bill C-11 is an Act to amend the Income Tx Act and it relates to an advance payment under the child tax credit program. I congratulate the Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) on the first piece of legislation he has introduced into the House. It is a remarkably welcome piece of legislation, not only to my constituents but to all Canadians.

It is interesting for me to follow the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) this afternoon in participating in the debate. Not only he but the Party which he represents advocated just this type of legislation. I was disappointed in many respects to hear him refer to Bill C-11 as second-class legislation. In fact, I was terribly disappointed. I hope that this is not an indication of the position of his Party on the types of programs the Government is introducing to assist the needy.

Also, it is interesting for all of us in the House to recognize that the Conservative Government has introduced social legislation, which I hope will be supported by the NDP, to help the needy, not only in my constituency but in eastern Ontario and throughout the rest of Canada.

This piece of legislation builds upon what the Government has done for spouses by lowering the age at which they qualify for support from 65 to 64 and for veterans and their families. I could also refer to other accomplishments. It builds upon Bill C-84 which increased the child tax credit from $70 to $454 this year. It will be increased further so that in 1988 it will amount to $524 per year. It was very progressive legislation. It also builds upon Bill C-83 which restricted the amount of tax refunding that could be associated with discounting, an activity which deprived many needy families, especially single parent families, of funds and income which they so richly deserved. On top of that, it builds upon the Government's Budget indicating its intention to introduce into the House this fall legislation to increase or provide a refundable sales tax credit of $50 per person and $25 per child for families with annual incomes under $15,000. This is part of a process by which the Government is attempting to meet the needs of our constituents, the needs of the needy in society. I am proud to be part of a Government which has a soul, a heart, and a willingness to proceed with this type of program.

We in the Chamber are very sensitive in this regard because we become perhaps more familiar with the needs of the needy in our local communities than others who may be sheltered from them. In our day to day lives of working with constituents, hearing their concerns, meeting with them in their homes, and knowing their problems firsthand, we readily grasp the need to reach out and help them. That is what this piece of legislation is doing. I am proud to be part of a process which allows us to do that. My constituents are no different from others.

As the program goes forward, it will provide a payment of $300 or two-thirds of the total payment for every child in the country. It will reach out to nearly three quarters of a million families across the land. It will apply to about 1.3 million children and families with incomes under $15,000. More important, it will come at the onset of winter when the needy require winter clothes and boots and a variety of things to prepare themselves for the coming season. This pre-payment is going automatically to all of those families whose income is under $15,000 a year, and in a pro-rated way to those families whose income is slightly greater than that.

I am delighted to rise in the House this afternoon to support this legislation and in so doing help my constituents.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I want to make a few comments and although it may seem funny to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) this is in fact a measure we have supported.

I would like first to commend the Minister who sponsored the bill. This is his first legislation, and I think he did a very good job.

Mr. Speaker, this is a housekeeping bill which in fact does not change things much. It will be remembered that the child tax credit was established in this House in 1978, when the then liberal Government was looking for a way to help low-income families with what we call in French "un crédit d'impôt-enfant."

The litteral English translation "Tax Credit" raises some difficulty. It is not necessary a credit for tax paid, but a tax credit paid in respect of children. Without getting involved in semantics, I think we must be clear that any parent whose income is below $23,500 is entitled to the maximum child tax credit, which for this year is $454.

What the Government is doing with Bill C-11 is to propose that we prepay the benefits recipients have a right to receive but for which they had to wait until April next after the filing of their income tax returns. This is therefore a legislation which we support, because it meets in part the needs of these families who, as winter is approaching, will need that money to feed and clothe their children, and see that those attending school have warm clothes to cope with our long winter.

As the families will receive these $454 through our income tax system, Mr. Speaker, each and everyone of them should make sure to file its income tax return before April 30, 1987. As we know, this amount decreases according to the family income. If their income does not exceed $23,500 families are entitled to the full $454 child tax credit, and a decreasing scale is provided for incomes exceeding that $23,500 ceiling.

Mr. Speaker, at the Committee stage, we would have liked the Government to have accepted to generously provide the full $454 child tax credit. It has refused to do so, and we are very disappointed, because it has decided arbitrarily on this amount of $300, which is nearly two-thirds of the amount payable, and set the eligible amount at $15,000, which in our opinion is a somewhat discriminatory and perhaps very arbitrary approach.

We wanted the $300 to be increased to $454. The Minister told us: Don't worry, I am listening and there is a provision in the Bill. The amount will increase over the years.

As to the $15,000, that is a different story. This amount, that triggers prepayment of the child tax credit, will not change. The Bill does not provide for any flexibility. Section 164.1 provides that the total income of an individual, based on the various paragraphs, will not exceed $15,000. There will be no discretion and no regulation: that $15,000 ceiling will not change.

In view of inflation and the ever growing needs of families with children this creates a burden which is far too heavy for them; I wish the Government had shown more flexibility and made it possible to increase the $15,000 amount which triggers the pre-payment program.

Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons why we supported this total payment of $454 was to put an end to the tax discounting practice. Nearly 500,000 Canadians—that is a lot of people—have sold their cheques to these tax discounters who, largely because of a legislation passed by this House, cannot charge them more than 15 per cent; just the same, it is 15 per cent of their tax credit cheque. This will clearly not apply to the pre-payment of $300, but there will still be $154 outstanding. I can tell you that in my own riding, there are poor families with many children who will use that $154, multiplied by the number of children, and who will have to go to these tax discounters to get the money they will need in February, March or April of next year.

That is why I would have thought that the Government would have listened a little more carefully and would have been more sensitive to our request, even if it does not want to abolish completely the present situation, the business which goes on between tax discounters and some individuals, even if it does not want to abolish that practise, like the Americans did, and prohibit completely the sale of these cheques to tax discounters because, as we know, they often are an important source of family income.

I would like to remind the House, Mr. Speaker, that discounting is not allowed on Family Allowance and Old Age Security payments. I would have liked to have seen the child tax credit also included, to ensure that the money provided by Canadian taxpayers to poor people is really used to fulfill some of their needs which, at times, are very large.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to go on much longer, but I wish to say that I found this debate interesting, although a bit dull; I was going to say mean. My friend from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) tells me that the word is very appropriate in this case. Yes, it is fitting, because we should not forget, Mr. Speaker, that this Government is not really concerned with the plight of the less well-to-do. However, it is concerned, even obsessed, with the large deficit. It wants to reduce that deficit and it is just too bad if people in need suffer from it or require assistance. I think that this attitude is mean and that we are lacking sensitivity toward poor families.

All we have to do is look at the statistics. I have got some, Mr. Speaker, and I could recite them for the whole afternoon. At the present time, the disposable income, that is the money we are really free to spend, is shrinking every day. Savings are down too. Canadians are saving less than they used to, and God knows the tax system, the famous measures in the last Budget, has added to their burden. I could give you figures showing clearly that poor families and low-income families are paying more taxes today, more direct taxes than they did two years ago, to a large extent as a result of that obsession, of that inability of this Government to sympathize with the needs of those families.

Mr. Speaker, I shall return later to economic matters, but let me simply say that we have supported the Bill introduced by the Government because it is at least a small step in the right direction. We would have liked them to have taken a big step, to make a strong statement—

An Hon. Member: They are Conservatives!

Mr. Gauthier: —but they are Conservatives, Mr. Speaker, as we know, and Conservatives are people who are overly cautious and who almost have to be pushed before they make a move.

So we are going to push the Government again, we are going to try and push them in the right direction and let us hope, Mr. Speaker, as Liberals with a sense of optimism, that someday we will get a chance to implement programs that will truly meet the needs of the Canadian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. Resuming debate. The Honourable Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer).

• (1540)

[English]

Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add a few comments to the debate on third reading of this Bill. I would like to begin by reviewing a few of its very specific proposals.

The Bill provides for a pre-payment of $300 per child for families with a net income of $15,000 or less, based on information provided in the 1985 tax return. This measure will help some 700,000 families across Canada, and some 1,500 to 2,000 families in my riding. Fortunately it will not affect as many in my riding as it might in some others because over the past six months we have had either the lowest or second lowest unemployment rate of any riding in Canada.

The pre-payment will take place in November. That is an excellent time because it arrives just before winter and Christmas when, obviously, parents want to provide some extras for the children. The $300 payment represents about two-thirds of the maximum child tax credit available to these families for 1986.

Another very good feature of this measure is that the people affected will not have to make application for the pre-payment, thereby avoiding a possible bureaucratic delay so they can get it into their hands and make use of it. Of course, they will receive the remaining one-third of the child tax credit when they file their 1986 return. Therefore, when we look at the Bill and those it will help, obviously it is a very good and responsible action on the part of this Government.

Let us look at the Bill in the context of what the Government has done since it came into office in 1984 concerning the family allowance, the child tax credit and the federal sales tax credit. I heard the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) trying to paint a picture of a reduced family allowance payment. That is not correct. We have in fact brought in a lower increase to the family allowance but we have not cut it. If inflation is running at 4 per cent, as it currently is, the first 3 per cent will not be covered. Only the amount beyond 3 per cent. At present that would mean an increase of 1 per cent. In 1985, the family allowance amounted to $31.27 per child. Assuming an inflation rate of 4 per cent and adding 1 per cent per year, the family allowance in 1988 would be $32.22, an increase of 95 cents. If we had retained indexation, it would have increased to $35.15 in 1988, or an increase of $3.88. In both cases it is an increase, not an decrease as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier was trying to suggest.

We have to look at the action taken by this Government on family allowances in the context of what it did with the child tax credit. In 1986, we increased the payment per child under the child tax credit by $70. In 1987, there will be an increase of $35, and the same in 1988. Taken together, these two measures mean an increase in money to the people who need it most when compared to what would have happened had we simply stayed with the indexation which the Opposition talks so much about. We are in fact adding $140 over those years to the child tax credit. The net gain for these families is $93.44. Obviously, we should give all of the facts and put them in their proper perspective.

Another action we took in the 1986 Budget was to recognize that the increase in the federal sales tax in the 1985 Budget and the 1986 Budget would adversely affect those earning less than $15,000 annually. We took that into account and brought in what is called the federal sales tax credit which would again provide to this same family $50 per adult and $25 per child. For a family of four the federal sales tax credit would amount to $150.

I submit that if we take these three actions together, we have more than compensated for what we did through deindexation. If members of the Opposition want to address these issues, they have to address all three of them together.

This action demonstrates that we have a Government which, while restoring fiscal responsibility, cutting spending and reducing the deficit, has at the same time not forgotten those in need. In fact, the total impact of all of our policies has resulted in some very important and positive benefits.

When we listen to some members of the Opposition it is really a matter of hearing faint praise. They get up and say this is not a bad measure, there is some good in it, and then for the next 15 minutes they talk about all the bad things in it, or the things we could have done. All of us agree we would like to do more. However, there are limits to how far you can go given the terrible economic situation we inherited from those people across the way. We have to keep that in perspective. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier said we are giving people their own money. Yes, that is true. This money can be claimed on their income tax return and they will receive it sometime in, say, late February through to April if they file on time. However, we are giving it to them now when the need is greater. That is the significance of this action. We are also giving it to them with no penalty or interest charge whatsoever. That is a measure which the Opposition should applaud.

Second, we have humanized the process through an unprecedented payment of $300 per child when the money is needed most. Third, we have done this while beginning to correct the terrible burden of the debt left by the former Liberal administration. None of the serious economic measures which were announced in the Economic Statement or the 1985 or 1986 Budgets will in any way adversely affect those with annual incomes of less than $15,000 because these three measures have been brought in as a package. We must remember that.

We should also remember that the best social policy for every Canadian is a job. The best social policy for those with jobs is a government which carries on fiscal responsibility and starts to bring order to this country which had none prior to 1984. We can strengthen our economy and offer a tremendous benefit package of social policies to people if we can begin to tackle the huge and unconscionable deficit left to us by the profligate and irresponsible spending of the former administration. Opposition Members ask why we do not give more. They should know why we cannot. They are the ones who created this debt. They should be telling us how to deal with the debt at the same time as helping these people. We have set the example and I expect them to give us a little more support on this issue.

In conclusion, the bottom line of Bill C-11 is good news for the most needy of Canadians. Even with the sound policy of partial deindexation the Government has ensured a net gain for these families. The concept of prepaying a tax refund is an unprecedented measure to assist destitute Canadians when they require help the most, when they face the additional costs of winter and Christmas. This is further evidence that the Conservative Government is fulfilling its promises of the election of 1984 and the promises and commitments made in the two Throne Speeches which we have had to date. It is further evidence that the Government is willing to tackle both problems at the same time, the need for fiscal responsibility and the need for social responsibility. I commend this Bill to all Members of the House.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I suspect that this was the Member's Throne Speech address. However, he did mention the Bill once in a while. He also mentioned that there was no way the Government was reducing the child tax credit. If that is the case, why is it that in 1989 and the years following the child tax credit will be partially deindexed? Why is the Government guaranteeing that in the future the increase in the child tax credit will not fully cover the increase in inflation?

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I referred to the fact that rather than the family allowance being decreased, the increase will be lesser. The Member is going beyond the actions which we have taken up to 1988 with regard to the child tax credit. He is getting into the hypothetical. I believe we should stay with what we know.

Mr. Murphy: I am not being hypothetical at all. I am telling the Member through you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government has said that in 1989 it will take away the full indexation protection for the child tax credit as well as taking it away immediately with regard to the family allowance. The Member should not say that I am speaking hypothetically. His Government has publicly declared that it will not provide full indexation protection for the child tax credit.

Mr. Dick: Is it the law?

Mr. Murphy: One of the new Ministers asks, "Is that the law?" I ask him whether we can trust the word of the Government that it is indeed the fact. However, I am addressing my comments to the Member who just spoke. Will he get up and clarify what he just said? Will he not admit that the Government is not going to provide full protection from cost of living increases for the child tax credit commencing in 1989?

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, the Member knows full well what we have announced with regard to the child tax credit for 1986, 1987, and 1988. He also knows exactly what we have done with the family allowance and the federal sales tax credit up to and including 1988. Therefore, we should deal with that which we have before us, that being what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has done up to and including 1988. To go beyond that would be to get into the hypothetical. I am sorry to have to remind the Hon. Member that we are getting into something we do not know.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to me in his speech quite often. I thank him for those references. It will be interesting to see how it reads.

The Member indicated that some of my remarks were somewhat pejorative in that I was imputing motives or certain other things to the Government. I hope those were clear. I do believe that the Government is insensitive to the needs of the families of the country.

Is the Member aware that the last two Budgets have added an extreme burden to single families? Twenty per cent of the families in my riding of Ottawa—Vanier are single parent families. Eighty to 85 per cent of them are women and most of them live below the poverty line. Is the Member aware that a lone parent family with two children earning $20,000 has added obligations of $420 in direct taxes to pay since the Government took office two years ago? Is he aware that those earning $15,000 have to pay $255 more in taxes today than they paid in 1984? One earner couples with two children earning $30,000 pay $630 more, and those earning $50,000 pay $575 more. This is what we are talking about when we say that the Government is insensitive to the needs of the poor and modest income families.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his remarks. In order for me to respond to his figures he will have to go over them with me to ensure that we are both talking the same language. I respect the fact that he has done his work and come up with these figures, but I would like to go over them with him to ensure that we agree on them. Until we do that, I believe I should reserve comment on them.

I think the Member was allowing his ideological convictions to get ahead of him. He wanted to attack Conservatives and he said that they are always insensitive. I think the legislation which is before us today proves the reverse. It proves that while bringing in fiscal responsibility to address the problems left to us by the Government of which he was a member, the Conservatives have remembered those who are in greatest need. We have done this through this legislation by giving this money to these people when they need it most and without any penalty or interest. It also provides for an increased child tax credit and a refundable sales tax credit. I believe we have more than compensated for the measures which we brought in to restore fiscal responsibility to ensure that these people will not suffer.

Mr. Gauthier: The Member wonders what the source of my figures is. I would remind him of the November 1984 Economic Statement and the 1985 Budget and the February 1986 Budget. I can list 14 items, if he so wishes. They include a 3 per cent surtax in 1986, a refundable sales tax credit, and up to a 1 per cent increase in sales tax rates. That alone costs Canadians $815 million. I do not believe we should shy away from taxes on alcohol and tobacco, of course. However, there is modified indexing, a 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtax, and the elimination of the 1973 federal tax reduction.

There is the modification of child benefits and the deindexing of the family allowance and deindexing of the old age pensions. There is the 1 per cent increase in sales tax rates in 1984 and a 1 per cent increase in sales tax rates in May, 1985. The Hon. Member knows these very well. I did not invent them, they are his Government's Budgets which came in with a heavy tax load on Canadians.

He is trying to tell me that they have had an effect on the deficit. I would refer him to the anticipated deficit today. It will be about the same as when his Government took over. The Government has not changed a thing except to add an immense amount in taxes on Canadians. You have not affected the deficit because it has not moved.

I will sit down with my colleague at the end of the year and show him that the deficit when his Party took over and the deficit today is just about the same, except that Canadians have to pay a hell of a lot more in taxes than they did in those days.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is raising at least three different questions. He referred to different tax measures in the Budget. There is the federal sales tax of 3 per cent in one Budget and 1 per cent in the other Budget. However, we took into consideration the group we are talking about today, those who make less than $15,000 annually, by bringing in the refundable sales tax credit. We brought in those tax measures because of the terrible debt while at the same time implementing the sales tax credit for those people who would be in need.

Second, the Hon. Member mentioned the modified indexation. I said that it is true that we took this step, but it should be coupled with the child tax credit and the increases of $70, $35 and $35 for a total of $140 which more than makes up the loss.

The Hon. Member's third point was that all of our actions to date have not really affected the deficit. I do not understand his reason for making that statement because we have begun to see some impact upon the deficit as a result of the last two Budgets.

It has nothing to do with what the Hon. Member's Party did prior to that. One need only imagine what the graph would show if we had taken no action and left their programs in place. If the Hon. Member were to take into consideration our reductions and what the deficit would be if his Party were still in power, he would see that it would be a reduction of more than $10 billion. That is what he should do to get the answer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, as usual, I have been listening with great interest to the various speakers. However, I would like to take a few moments to, first of all, praise the excellent work done previously in this House by the former Minister of National Health and Welfare who initiated a similar plan, although I do admit the present Government has improved on it. In any case, the concept of providing a tax credit for our neediest families was, as the House will recall, introduced by the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, Miss Monique Bégin. I think it is only appropriate that Members who were sitting at the time and who had the pleasure of working with Miss Bégin should have an opportunity to praise the truly exceptional work done by that Minister of National Health and Welfare when she introduced her Bill in the House to help the neediest people in this country. The House will recall that at the time, the child tax credit was $343 per child for families whose annual income did not exceed $26,330. So what I think is rather extraordinary, and I think my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr.

Gauthier) said so with great incisiveness a few moments ago—if I had his notes, I would like to complete them—when he said that first of all, and I think it is very important to have this put on the record—

It is true that the present Government has tabled legislation that we are going to vote for. So I think we might as well say right now it is a Bill we can live with and that we intend to vote for this Bill. Suggesting improvements is not criticism. I don't think we are being negative when we say that the Government could have taken the extra trouble and been consistent all the way through. We are of course concerned. We regret that the Minister rejected the amendment since, as Hon. Members are aware, although the tax credit has been increased, the cutoff point has been set at $23,500, while at the time it was $26,330. After all, the cost of living is not going down. The cost of living is going up, but just the same, they want to reduce what Canadians had come to expect in terms of tax credits.

Bill C-11 will enable people to receive a little sooner a sum of money to which, as the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) pointed out, they are entitled. So I think we should have the wisdom and the spirit of fair play to recognize the admirable purpose of this Bill.

However, I do regret that the Government, in addition to reducing the cutoff point from $26,330 to $23,500, has decided that only Canadians with an income of $15,000 will be able to take advantage of these advance payments. So first of all, for the sake of clarity, there was a reduction to $23,500 from $26,300, several years after an excellent measure was brought in, as I said before, by the Hon. Monique Bégin, former Minister of National Health and Welfare. Today, several years later, the Government decides to go from $25,000 to $23,000. In other words, a step backward.

In a spirit of generosity, the Government decides to increase the credit to $454, but then it says: You will not be able to receive more than $300 immediately, and even then, this is not for people with an income of $23,500, but only for those with an income of $15,000. This can only be a step back. What I find, and I cannot overemphasize it, is that, on one hand, the Government is showing a little generosity—

Mr. Gauthier: Lukewarm.

Mr. Prud'homme: Very lukewarm, as noted by my colleague for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), since this money is due to them. It is not generosity. Indeed, the role of any Government, whether it be this one or the previous Liberal Government, is not to be generous, but to ensure a better distribution of tax revenues. What I find striking in the case of this Government is that it seems to be what I would call an Indian-giver, what we would describe as a "donne, dédonne" Government in French. I know that the Quebecers will understand exactly what I mean by this. On one hand, the ceiling is being lowered from $26,330 to $23,500, and on the other hand, the Government says: Yes, families with an income of $23,500 will be entitled to a certain amount; but this is not for families with an income of $20,000 or $18,000, but only for those with an income of $15,000, and not only will you not be entitled to your $454, but you will receive only $300 of the amount due. If your economic situation has unfortunately improved since last year, that is too bad because you will have to pay interests on the excess payment you have received on money which is due to you anyway.

We saw how quickly the Government came to the assistance of the bankers. The Hon. Member and all of us in the House remember with what haste and urgency the Government said: The banks are bankrupt and we have to reimburse all those who lost money, but we shall not tell you who they are, and we do not know whether it will cost $1 billion, $800 million or $1.2 billion.

That is not important. What is important is that, for you Canadians who have the misfortune not to have as much money as those who can afford bank deposits, we are going to take each penny into account. The Government is being very mean. As I was telling the Minister of Employment and Immigration earlier, this Government is being mean because it is counting every last penny for Canadian families while, in the case of the bank bills, it acted with a generosity of which we do not even know the extent.

I have always found this strange. I imagine that it reflects the philosophy of the new Conservative Government.

When I was young, we used to say, which is probably an oversimplification, that a Conservative Government was for the big guys and a Liberal Government was for those with a social conscience. I thought that the situation had changed since my youth, but I can see that it has not and that everything is still the same.

My distinguished colleague who is our communications critic is very familiar with the history of the two main parties, and the members of the third party can speak for themselves. This Government is for the big guys. If the banks go bankrupt, there is nothing to worry about. My colleague is a woman with a very well-developed social conscience. She has given us proof of it in the past because she has been very active in Quebec affairs. I congratulate her and thank her for remaining in the House on a Friday afternoon.

My colleague for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) described quite well the problems faced by the people involved. I believe that in his riding up to 20 per cent of his constituents are child tax credit recipients.

I am sure Mr. Minister, you are not in the same position as these people. With all due respect you are a Conservative, at least I hope you are, and therefore, one of those who do not need that kind of money—

An Hon. Member: He is a Liberal!

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, I know very well the Minister is a Liberal, but be patient, he will find himself someday.

But I think the point made by my colleague for Ottawa—Vanier is very well taken. In that riding there are people with three or four children—I know it for a fact that because I have lived there for a long time first as a student and now still. Those people with three or four children expect to receive—perhaps the hon. Member will correct me if I am wrong because I would not want to mislead anyone—three or four times the amount of $454. And they will if their income is below the $15,000 level, but above that level they will only receive $300 per child. Which means that depending whether they have three or four children, the advance payment will be either $900 or $1,200. Even with three children, who would entitle them to receive $454 for each, over $450 would be paid to them later. So they will still go to these discounters, and that is the point and the problem. If they know that a small cheque for about $450 will soon be coming, and my colleague will correct me if I am wrong, then they will go to the discounters just the same, I am pretty sure of it. They will say: "Look, I was entitled to $454, I only got $300, which leaves a balance of $154. I need money now. Can you give it to me right away? Can you advance me $154 and I will pay you 15 per cent." I think that is about what the discounters charge, 15 per cent.

Well, what do you want? When your philosophy is to help the big guys, the bankers and the oil companies, you can imagine what 15 per cent of $150 means. A sum of $22.50 is not much for some people who remain insensitive, but it is very important.

Therefore, the Government would perhaps agree until the Senate—they could introduce an amendment which would be quite appropriate. We will surely vote for that Bill. This is not a very negative criticism but a finding and I think that we are doing the honourable thing this afternoon with the co-operation of every party.

Monique Bégin had advocated such a philosophy, so this is nothing new. It is a bill which improves on a very Liberal philosophy developed by Monique Bégin, and I say this as I know that many of my colleagues here have known that very worthy, resolute and passionate woman who could take a stand against her own party, mine, that is, when social programs were involved.

To tamper with social programs under Mr. Trudeau, one had to tackle in the first place Monique Bégin. And I can tell you that those who knew Monique Bégin did not dare to challenge her in the caucus when her projects were involved. Some tried but they were completely defeated because Monique Bégin thought that her programs were something sacred, untouchable.

Now, by the way, I wanted—

• (1610)

[English]

I just wanted to say some good words about Monique Bégin, who conceived this new kind of approach of giving what we used to call the No. 13 cheque—

Cheque No. 13, the supplementary cheque.

[English]

The Government has taken a step forward but since it has taken that step, why does it not go all the way? It has already been diminished from $26,330 to $23,500. That is a little step backward. But each one has its own approach in politics. That is the Government's decision. It is making its bed and it must lie in it. But the Government is already cutting off close to $3,000 and is saying that not only will these people not touch their $300 of $454, but only if one is making $15,000. On top of that, if one happens to have received a little more, perhaps the Government would render it to itself since it would believe things are improving. If it is true that things are improving, the Government is penalizing the people because it says that if one made $15,000 last year and makes more this year, and one touches $300, the little supplementary, the Government will charge that person. It is pennies, a few dollars, and I don't think that is in the spirit of a good social legislation, especially if we compare that legislation with the legislation we were forced to vote on so hurriedly and with such rapidity. When it came time to vote the $1 billion, the $900 million—we still do not know the exact amount—the Government was immediately present in the House of Commons to help these rich people who were about to lose the money they had invested in the banks. We did not know how much money. We will never know who got the money, but that is irrelevant because it was something the Government cared about.

I say to the Government and to my two esteemed colleagues and Ministers opposite that I know they have a good social conscience. They should try to convince their colleagues to go all the way in a good project and make it totally and absolutely perfect by allowing this to everyone earning under $23,500. That would be a way to repair some of the immense taxation these people have had to face since the Budgets of November, 1984, May, 1985 and February, 1986. They are going to receive some money, almost the same amount as in the past, but earlier, yet the Government must remember that everyone has essential needs and all those essential needs have been taxed over the last two years. It is not because one is extremely rich that one buys more soap or more pharmaceutical products. Everyone buys the essentials and all the essentials were subject to a new taxation of 1 per cent in November, 1984 and 1 per cent in May, 1985.

As for taxes on alcohol and tobacco, I owe my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), $5 because he caught me smoking one cigarette today. That is my way of getting rid of this bad habit of smoking three packs a day. I am speaking to the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) and to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). I ask them to use their great social consciences which I know they possess. I ask them to go all the way and not to be mean. I ask them just to make a completely good, new law. Do not be, as I said earlier——as we say in French a government who "donne" and "dédonne".

• (1620)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I think he gave an excellent speech. Because he was unable to be here earlier I believe there are one or two matters he missed in the debate. I would like to hear his comments on some of the remarks made earlier. I do not think the Hon. Member will find it that difficult.

One thing that has been said by other Members is that they believe that this legislation should have included in it a clause to prevent tax discounters, those rip-off artists, from making use of the money that comes from the child tax credit. That is one omission in the legislation which is before us. I would like to hear the Hon. Member's valuable opinion on that point.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am pleasantly surprised by the tone of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). I remember when we used to exchange very rough comments in debate. I realize, now that we know each other better, that we have toned down the questions we ask of one another.

The Hon. Member makes an excellent suggestion. Perhaps the Hon. Member would join with me in sponsoring a private Member's Bill which would undertake what he suggests. After all, who is making the money? I think the Hon. Member has put forward a new approach which shows that Liberals and Liberals in a hurry can sometimes see eye to eye.

The fact is that in 1985, 500,000 Canadians sold their cheques to tax discounters. These people stood in line at some point in their lives to sell to a tax discounter that which may have been coming back to them some other day. I look at the Minister who knows I am sincere on this point since he is also interested in ameliorating legislation and using the approach put forward by my esteemed colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill. I think the Hon. Member and I should commence deliberations, perhaps with the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) in order to make the discussions non-partisan, with respect to sponsoring a private Member's Bill to stop these discounters. There is an element of sadness in seeing people in my riding line up at income tax time to sell their returns.

I have just returned from an International Parliamentary Union meeting which was held in Argentina. On my way back to Canada I stopped in Brazil. At 5.30 in the morning in Rio, where I was one morning changing planes, I saw thousands and thousands of people in line to obtain meat. Meat, eggs and butter have been rationed in Brazil. However, I only saw the poor people in the lines. It seems that the rich always find a way not to stand in line. The lines in Brazil reminded me of the lines which I have seen in my riding in Montreal. Perhaps it is not the same in all ridings. I look to the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier), who is the new Assistant Whip. Maybe the situation is not as crucial in his riding. However, when I am in downtown Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver and see people standing in line in order to obtain a few dollars which may be coming back to them, I find it very sad. These tax discounters are giving perhaps 15 per cent to these people so that they can have money immediately as opposed to waiting for it. I would highly welcome a law which would rid us of these tax discounters.

I thank my friend and colleague from Churchill for having asked me the question which he asked.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make some observations and to ask my colleague a question. The measure before us is a good measure. It will meet some of the needs that are crying out to be met in today's society. The Hon. Member brought to our attention that this whole concept was conceived by the Hon. Monique Bégin. It is an administrative change and one which is very important. I join in the concerns expressed recently with regard to the tax discounting procedure and the fact that discounters are allowed to remain in business in this country under certain provisions of the law. There is in the United States a prohibition against all tax discounters. We could have in place in our country such a prohibition against the sale of child tax credits to tax discounters. Since that is already the practice with respect to family allowance cheques and old age pension cheques, it would be a normal procedure. I would like to see the Government abolish tax discounting.

The first question I have to ask of the Hon. Member relates to the fact that the payment will be only $300 of the $454 due to those eligible to receive the child tax credit. Some part of the $300 might be taxable.

My second concern is with respect to the fact that one has to file for the balance of the $454. Many recipients of the child tax credit do not even file income tax returns. I am concerned about their being able to pick up the remaining $154 which is their due. I would prefer it if they were to receive the entire sum in one payment.

I ask my colleague whether or not he sees the differential cut at $15,000 instead of $23,000 as something which is very punitive. Does the Hon. Member think that the $15,000 mark is the proper place to draw the poverty line? The information I have is that $15,000 is $6,000 below the actual poverty line, which is approximately $21,000 in the Hon. Member's riding and in my riding. What does the Hon. Member think of the discrimination against one who earns $15,000 and one who earns $21,000?

Mr. Prud'homme: I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

I mean it in all sincerity. My colleague has put forward a good question. I agree with what she has to say, the situation is discriminatory. I do not know if that is because the two Ministers responsible for the Bill are from two of the richest ridings in Canada or not. A fact like that always has some type of influence. One of the Ministers comes from London, Ontario. Everyone knows that, per capita, London is the home of the richest group of people in the country. I am not trying to divide the rich and the poor at this point. I think that is démagogie. It is a fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) happens to be more at ease in financial circles. I doubt very much if he knows what a discounter is. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and myself are more aware of this situation because we live where we live. We live right in the heart of it. In my district there are tax discounters and food banks. I am sure many of my esteemed colleagues in the House are not aware of what exactly a food bank is. They are also totally unaware of what a tax discounter is because they have never seen one.

The inspiration for the legislation before us has come from the two Ministers whom I mentioned previously. In this respect I believe they would say to me, "Yes, Marcel, we think you have a point. Are you happy with the Bill, Marcel?" I would reply "Yes, I will vote for it". I am Marcel, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis. I wish that we could call each other by our first names. Perhaps we will be able to do that someday, perhaps after the next reform of Parliament. The last reform did not live up to my expectations; however, I will be careful.

I would like to say to my colleague that the recent taxation statistics show that approximately 800,000 families, and not 1 million as the Government claims, would receive the pre-payment. This is a little more than half of the 1.5 million who qualify for the child tax credit. I would like to put the following on the record, just to underline what the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) was saying. According to Government estimates, not Liberal or NDP estimates, discounters received almost as much as we will give to many people under the very low level. According to government estimates, discounters received over $20 million of the child tax credit in 1984. Discounters kept more than $41 million of the 1984 tax credit. To go back not only to the questions of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal and the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), you are right that something should be done. The tax discounters took away $61 million in one year. They did not take it away from people who lost money in the bank that we reimbursed so rapidly. They took it away willingly out of the despair of people who need so many dollars and cents that they had to go to a discounter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now terminated. Is the House ready for the question? On debate.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): It is not my intention to speak for a long time, but I do think there are some things that have to be put on the record with regard to this legislation.

I do want to say some words with regard to the fact that this legislation does not deal with the problem we face with tax discounters. As a result of this legislation, there will be very large sums of money going to some families through the child tax credit. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) on behalf of our caucus has expressed our agreement with the idea that these people should be getting the money as soon as possible. However, there is a danger within that. There are tax discounters in all parts of this country and they are allowed to charge very high, unreasonable rates of interest. Because of the need of the people that receive the child tax credit, the fact that they do not have a lot of cash since they have expenditures which are quite often equal to their total income, the Government has recognized they need this money. It is quite obvious that they do have a cash flow problem. Because of that these tax discounters are allowed to run rampant in this country.

The United States does not allow these tax discounters to operate. When this legislation was introduced, for the most part it was supported by all Members in the House. It could have included a clause to ensure that tax discounters would be forbidden from touching this money, and the money would have ended up going to the mother and the children for the necessities of life. A percentage of that money was being lost because it was going into the hands of what I quite rightly call tax discounters, "rip-off artists". There was a fundamental flaw in the legislation.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) mentioned that in 1985 there were 500,000 cheques cashed in this manner. A lot of money was not going to people who needed it most. With those types of statistics and figures, why has the Government refused to act? I would not make the political, partisan remark that tax discounters are supporters of the Conservative Party. I do not think there is any Party that would go on record or want to be connected with them. I do not believe that is the reason. What is the reason? Some of the Conservative back-benchers in the last couple of days have said that there are people who need tax discounters. If that is the case, then the Government should be getting the money to the people faster. I do not believe that we should allow a situation to exist where, because people need the money, tax discounters are allowed to operate. That is exactly the opposite approach to what we should be taking.

Some Conservative Members say or imply that there are people who need the money, so we should allow tax discounters to operate. They say that this is a freedom for people who need the child tax credit. That is not a freedom. That is not a choice that these people are making. Certainly, they are making a choice but the choice is strictly out of necessity, and that is not the right approach. That is a fundamental flaw in this legislation and it is high time the Government took some action on this matter.

There are other problems with regard to the legislation, but I am not going to oppose it because I believe it will provide some help for some people. As I mentioned earlier in asking a question of a Conservative Member, we must face the fact that in the long run, from 1989 onward, the child tax credit will come under the partial deindexation program of the Government.

The Conservatives a year and a half ago tried to deindex the old age pension partially. After a massive campaign by seniors in all parts of the country, by their grandchildren, and by others who supported them, they back-tracked on that particular issue. They said that they would throw in the towel on this one, that seniors had a lot of clout, and that they made a mistake. However, they did not retreat when it came to deindexing the family allowance partially. In the House of Commons they said that they would make up for it with the child tax credit and all other measures to help those people who receive the family allowance. Presumably people who are in most need would benefit from legislation such as the child tax credit and the way it has been changed.

However, in a situation which is so typical of Government, it gave with one hand and took away with the other hand. We know that from 1989 onward the child tax credit will be partially deindexed. In other words, if inflation goes up 3 per cent per year, people will not receive the full increase of the cost of living. Obviously, if that continues over any length of time, the value of the child tax credit will diminish significantly. That is a real problem. We can tie that into the fact that the same thing has been done with the family allowance. There is no full protection from inflation as a result of increases in the cost of living. Both these measures are very important to families in need, basically to mothers and especially to single mothers and their children. These moneys will provide for less and less with the passage of time.

That is what I was trying to get the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) to admit when I questioned him. They should not talk about the next three years and pretend that the Government has not said what it will do after 1989. Many people in the country have indicated that politicians do not say much and what happens in Parliament cannot mean very much because politicians do not tell the whole truth. I am not accusing the Hon. Member or imputing a motive, but I think it would have been much more valuable for his constituents and mine, as well as other people who may have listened to the broadcast of our proceedings this afternoon, if the Hon. Member had explained or admitted that the partial deindexation would apply in 1989 and in subsequent years. It is stated government intention, and no government Member can deny it. As I said earlier, obviously as a result there will be less money for people who need it.

Let us look at that and at the other measures the Government has introduced over the last two years. Not only will those people who are most in need find things more difficult in the future, but so will those people who are middle income earners. The information released by Statistics Canada in the last month was very interesting. It indicated that the real disposable income of Canadians was being reduced.

Why is it being reduced? It is being reduced by the bigger tax bite on the part of the federal Government. Despite the speeches of government Members in the House of Commons and the comments of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on his little campaigns, the figures of Statistics Canada are proving that the actual take-home pay or disposable money of Canadians is decreasing with the passage of time as a direct result of the tax measures introduced in the last few years of the Liberal Government regime and in the last two years of the Conservative Government regime.

When we speak in the House we should tell the truth for people throughout the country. It is the Government's decision to fight the deficit. I think that is a noble cause, but they should realize there are groups in society who are paying more taxes than others. There are people who will not receive the the child tax credit and the family allowance because of the Government's decision to target them; they are the ones who will pay in the battle to fight the deficit. If we can believe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), I do not think the Government is succeeding in that battle. He has indicated that the deficit will increase by $2.5 billion more than he predicted.

The Government has refused to come to terms with tax reform. It has allowed for a $500,000 capital gains exemption. It will continue the policy of the Liberal regime of letting profitable corporations get away with paying no tax whatsoever.

Hon. Members have heard my NDP colleagues rise every day for the last five days to present an award to corporations which have not paid a cent of taxes on $28 million, $38 million, and even $100 million of profits. This morning I rose and talked about the Scott company and the fact that it had made $28 million in one year. Not only did that company not pay any tax, but it received tax credits for three successive years.

We recognize that in the long run this piece of legislation will hurt those people who receive the child tax credit. I think that should be acknowledged. Also it should be acknowledged how unfair the system has become. We are not taxing those people who can afford it. The Government is providing for a $500,000 capital gains exemption, which is a hell of a lot of money. It still allows corporations with fantastic profits not to pay any taxes. It also gives tax credits to those same corporations.

Why can we not provide full protection for those who are receiving the family allowance? Why can the Government not say that those people who receive the child tax credit will also receive full protection from any increase in the cost of living, not just for the next one or two years, but from 1989 onward?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau on a question or comment.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one comment first and then put a question. It gives me great pleasure that my colleague the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) said that fighting the deficit was a noble cause, and that he linked this deficit and the welfare of our fellow citizens, especially those with lesser incomes, because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, inflation is indeed a scourge which hurts people at the bottom of the scale far more than those at the top. I am therefore very pleased that although he belongs to a political group with a different perspective on political policies, he agrees with me that reducing the deficit is of paramount importance. This is why I would like to ask him a question. Is he not contradicting himself when he says that reducing the deficit is a noble cause, in other words, reducing inflation too, but on the other end he was against us when we passed a piece of legislation to try and curb that sort of inflationary trend in our economy, when for instance the local shopkeeper was so used to see the prices go up with inflation that everytime he would hear about an increase in the rate of inflation, he would automatically add 1 or 2 cents to the price of a can of food or package or service, and we tried to curb that inflationary mentality by de-indexing down to a minimum of 3 per cent, to reverse that trend in suppliers and in our economy as a whole?

Also, although he would agree with our colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) when he said that it was a sad thing that a family with four children which was to receive 454 $ of child tax credit per child, would only get an advanced payment of 300 $, would he not agree however that it is four times $300 that will not fall in the hands of tax discounters, those who take advantage of poor people; would he not agree that receiving $1,200 just before Chirstmas, just before the beginning of the cold season means a lot for a family, and that we deserve some credit for that?

Let me also tell the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, that I had specifically asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to take that step because in my constituency of Gatineau, there are a lot of families which used to pay those people $45, $50, $100 out of their expected tax credit every winter, and those are the people who will be receiving the $1,200 for a family with four children. Does he not think that he is contradicting himself when he says that fighting inflationary pressures is not as noble a cause as fighting the deficit?

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the Hon. Member rose to ask a question. I thought she was anxious for me to wind up my speech so that she could speak on the next piece of legislation. However, since she raised a controversial issue, I am willing to use the rest of my time to respond to it.

I agree that the deficit is not a problem we can afford to ignore. No matter which Party is in government, whether it be here in Ottawa or in any of the provinces, they are all faced with the following problems—the deficit and the state of the economy. Regardless of whether it is a Liberal Government in the Province of Ontario, a Liberal Government in the Province of Quebec, an NDP Government in the Province of Manitoba, or the Conservative Government in Ottawa, they all have to face the economic facts. Also they recognize that there are problems in terms of how much Governments can spend and how much Governments can raise. All Governments have to make choices, and they make them.

I should like to refer to the example raised by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). If the Government does not do something about partially deindexing the child tax credit or the family allowance, somehow it will make the cost of goods go up. That is what I understood from what the Member said. The very nature of fighting inflation by fighting it on the backs of those who need the money the most is wrong.

The legislation with which we are dealing today, the child tax credit, is for those people who need the money the most. For the Government to say we will give them this money but we will not provide them with the full protection from inflation, from the increase in the cost of living, is wrong. Obviously they are not the people in this society who are driving up prices. They do not control rents. They do not set the prices in the corner store. They are the people who are paying rent because they have to have a place to stay. They are the people who are buying the groceries to which the Hon. Member referred, because they have to eat. For the Government to say that those people do not need full protection against the cost of living year after year means that, in the long run, the value of the child tax credit reduces significantly. When you tie that in with the fact that the family allowance is also being partially deindexed, it means the money those families receive from the family allowance or the child tax credit will be significantly less. It does not take much of a mathematician to realize that if you are not getting 3 per cent one year and 3 per cent the next year and the year after that and so on, and each year the 3 per cent you are not getting is compounded, then in the long run the child tax credit becomes valueless. It becomes worth half of what it is today, a quarter of what it is today, and it becomes meaningless.

For the Government to announce in its legislation and in its budgets that it is going to deindex the child tax credit partially means it will not provide the protection which the Government presumably wants to provide by introducing a child tax credit in the first place. If the Government thinks that the child tax credit is worth continuing and that it is worthwhile then let it not partially deindex it.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I must say I am appalled and shaken by the comments made by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). One can see that this Hon. Member—and her opinion is probably shared by all the Hon. Members of her party, the Conservative Party, who understood nothing at all—

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Order please. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has risen on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I require your guidance since, in my mind, the comment and question should apply to the speech made by our colleague from Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and not to my comment and question.

The Acting Speaker: Order! The comment was interrupted, I believe. The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thought that this was a debate between both sides of this House in which we could refer to what had been said by other Hon. Members. One need not live in a vacuum as does the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

As I was saying, she shows her total lack of understanding by insisting on waging the inflation battle on the backs of pensioners—

The Acting Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member's point was well taken. I would ask the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) to ask his question or make his comment on the speech by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, you have certainly noticed that I have shown much more patience than the Hon. Member when, in a comment to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), she referred to everything I had said.

Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) had waited until I had finished before commenting on my remarks. You have also noticed, I am sure, how cleverly she went about it. She did not reply to anything I had said, preferring to wait and comment on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and involving the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis on the side. I remained calm, it being 4.55 p.m. on a Friday afternoon, and decided to be a good sport and let her get away with it.

But if she insists, I will insist too and let her know what I think of her comments. Then, Mr. Speaker, you would be completely lost. That is why I appeal to her, for goodness sake, to let our colleage the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) complete his comment on the remarks which have been made during the day.

Mrs. Mailly: I want this Bill to be adopted.

Mr. Prud'homme: We have an agreement, Madam, the Bill will be adopted; don't worry. Be calm.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laurier has the floor.

Mr. Berger: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That was exactly the question I meant to ask the Hon. Member for Churchill, but considering the attitude of the Hon. Member for Gatineau, which is typically conservative—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to have to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the questions and comments period is now over. Debate.

[English]

There have been three minutes on points of order. We had 13 minutes in the questions and comments period. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood in discussions held at about two o'clock that prior to calling it five o'clock a vote would be taken to conclude this piece of legislation. I believe there was consensus and it was understood.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Minister in the House that we have no intentions of not passing the Bill. If the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) will keep quiet for a while, we will get the Bill out of here within the next two minutes.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a comment. The Government almost lost the Bill today because of the Member for Gatineau.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, you only have to pick up the papers any day of the week to see where the credibility of the Government lies. I have here an article from The Ottawa Citizen. John Ferguson talks about the new RRSP rules which go in exactly the same direction as the family policies of the Government. The Government, as you know, Mr. Speaker, has introduced new rules regarding RRSPs. Who gets the biggest benefits from these rules? You guessed it. Those with the biggest incomes. Mr. Ferguson gives the example of an individual earning $100,000 who makes the maximum $15,500 contribution to an RRSP. He would save about $8,300 in federal and provincial income taxes. The state would be paying for more than half of the contribution to his RRSP. On the other hand, someone earning $20,000 is allowed a maximum contribution of only $3,600 to an RRSP and would save only about $1,050 in tax. The state would be paying less than one-third of that person's RRSP. For the rich the state pays for more than half of the RRSP and for the poor the state pays only one-third of the RRSP. This is compounded and this is the exact kind of policy we see here in the family allowance where the Government is giving a refundable tax credit, but people who earn only $15,000 have seen their percentage in taxes increased by 1.7 per cent since this Government came to office.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

TABLING OF MEMBERSHIP OF CABINET COMMITTEES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the list of the membership of the Committees of Cabinet. I would ask to have it appended to today's edition of Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent for the request of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[EDITOR'S NOTE: For list referred to above, see Appendix A.]

TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL DESIGNATING ACTING MINISTERS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to table a list of the Acting Ministers and have it appended to today's edition of Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent for the request of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—DATE OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, apropos statements by Ministers, since this is the first day back in the House for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) since the Reykjavik Summit, I wonder whether he will be making a statement at the earliest possibility to inform us of the deliberations, and particularly the impact upon the ABM Treaty in which we are all very interested.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it would be the intention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to make a statement today, but I think the Hon. Member can contemplate one in the next few days.

Introduction of Bills

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT, CANADA LABOUR CODE, PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act, the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Employment Act (whistleblowing).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Vankoughnet: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to provide appropriate sanctions against retaliatory discharges by public sector employers of employees who report or "blow the whistle" on serious misconduct of their employers. In protecting employees acting in good faith, this Bill would recognize that there are times when it is in the public interest to encourage employee whistleblowing, particularly when the public health and safety are at issue.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps as a note of information the Chair might make it clear to the House that it is the obligation of the Chair first to announce that leave to introduce a Bill has been prayed for. When that has been completed and agreed, an Hon. Member has an opportunity to make a short statement and then we follow on. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) will be heard in just a moment.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-230, an Act to amend the Criminal Code.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to provide for the presence of legal counsel for unborn children at a meeting of therapeutic abortion committees in hospitals across the country.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC EMPLOYEES POLITICAL RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-231, an Act to provide for the political rights of public employees.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is in fulfillment of a promise I made in the 1984 election. It also seeks to fulfil a promise made by the Government at the same time. It would ensure that in addition to the existing rights to vote and to make financial contributions to a political party, the people working for the Public Service of Canada and for Crown corporations would also be guaranteed the right to support actively a political party or candidate, to solicit or collect funds for a political party or candidate, to be a member of a political party and to exercise the usual rights and privileges thereof and to express views or to engage in activities in relation to matters that form part of the platform of a political party or in relation to other issues of public interest.

This Bill is designed to take away the shackles on political activity by public servants. In order to maintain the neutrality of the Public Service, however, these rights would not extend to deputy ministers or senior managers in the Government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

AGRICULTURE—GOVERNMENT FUNDING—CORRECTION TO ANSWER

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to correct what may have been a false impression that

I left with the House in response to a question last Friday as is reported at page 463 of Hansard. The question was asked by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). It had to do with the establishment of initial grain prices. I said in my response:

> The Canadian Wheat Board sets the initial prices and, if he has any argument with that, he should take it up with the Canadian Wheat Board because those prices reflect the reality of the market-place—

In a practical sense, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board does establish the price by recommending to the Government that such prices be established. In a truly technical and legal sense it is the Government of Canada that sets the prices on the recommendation of the Canadian Wheat Board because the Canadian Wheat Board is the marketing agency and does have the facility of monitoring markets and is in a better position than the Government of the day to determine what the actual prices should be. If I did leave the wrong impression, I apologize to the Hon. Member and to the House.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Minister for making the correction that he made and for keeping the record straight. This augurs well for this session of the House.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I do want to make it clear that this situation can occur every day to any of us in the House. It has been our practice to avoid correcting Hansard in this way because it would lead to a very prolonged debate, and it is debate.

I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, if we could continue with the practice of correcting Hansard as we did in prior times rather than reverting to these statements and debating points that one can make following the speech that one has made in the House, or that a Minister has made for that matter. If the next day we are going to debate whether the Minister was right or wrong or whether I was right or wrong in saying something, we could go on for several hours debating such questions. If it is a question of fact that a Minister did not record properly, I would agree, but this was not fact. This was debate. It is a grey area and it is sometimes difficult for one to make clear in debate exactly what one means. I would shy away from this practice of encouraging people to make corrections to Hansard the next day in respect of statements they feel may have been misunderstood.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying. I think it has been the usual practice that if there is an error in a statement or a word or a number there is a procedure for that. After reading Hansard this morning I felt that I may have left the wrong impression and I wanted to correct that. This would certainly be in the interests of all Members in the House. I regret having had to do it and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, I do not like having to do it very often. This is different than simply an error in the recording. I think there is a differentiation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

RAILWAY ACT

Hon. George Hees, for the Minister of Communications, moved that Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Railway Act, be now read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, today I have the honour of introducing the second reading stage of Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Railway Act. This Bill, Mr. Speaker, arises from the November 1984 economic statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and more especially from his May 1985 Budget. Its purpose is to recover the administration costs incurred by the CRTC in regulating the telecommunications carrier industry. Costs will be recovered from the carriers themselves, not the taxpayers, as was the case until now.

Mr. Speaker, why recover administration costs and especially, why does the CRTC regulate this industry, which is why we are asking this House to authorize recovery of these costs? Since our Government was elected, Mr. Speaker, we have emphasized economic recovery. During the election campaign, we told Canadians that the ills besetting our economy were inflation, high interest rates—those brutally high interest rates that were putting families out of house and home, making breadwinners jobless and causing small entrepreneurs to lose their businesses—and the scourge of unemployment affecting our families and especially young people. We said at the time that a remedy would have to be found and that we would start by cleaning up our public finances. This Bill is part of that process. To put our public finances on a sound footing, we must control our expenditures and then reduce them.

Reducing the deficit is a Sisyphean undertaking, as you know, Mr. Speaker. As soon as the Minister of Finance manages to cut spending so we can get our economy rolling in the right direction again, we must make every effort to get our economy to the point where we will finally be able to reduce this deficit. My point is that any effort, no matter how small, is of tremendous importance in this fight against the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, we also wanted to create a climate that was favourable to economic growth and prosperity in Canada.

As part of this process, we must put our tax system in order, contain our enormous cumulative public debt and eventually reduce that debt. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to allow the Government to recover the cost of regulating the telecommunications industry, and it is therefore part of this Government's general efforts to recover government administration costs.

The May Budget stressed the Government's intention to introduce new cost recovery methods to reduce the federal deficit. More specifically, the May Budget announced that starting in 1986-87, new cost recovery measures at the Department of Communications will include the recovery of costs incurred by the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission in regulating telecommunications carriers under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, we have therefore been consistent. We announced that it was necessary to put public finances on a sound footing, we suggested how this could be done, we were elected on a platform that included those suggestions and now we are trying to implement them, with the authority of the House. As is the case with other public services, the telecommunications industry has been subject to regulations almost since its inception, and the plethora of regulations indicates these services are essential to the social and economic well-being of Canadians. In recent years, certain areas of telecommunications have been given an opportunity to compete with each other, and I am sure this trend will continue with our new technology. However, I believe I am right in saying that for the time being, services such as basic local telephone services will continue to be provided under a monopoly system.

Mr. Speaker, the Government must therefore be vigilant. The Minister must protect the consumer while allowing telecommunications carriers to develop and expand. Consequently, although the Government fully expects that telecommunication services which may be offered on a competitive basis will eventually be deregulated, it does intend to recover from the industry the cost of regulating services provided by a monopoly.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill introduced today will amend the Railway Act to enable the CRTC to set fees and collect them from carriers under its jurisdiction. Once the Bill becomes law the CRTC, as usual with the approval of the Treasury Board, will then be in a position to impose a fee schedule to telecommunication carriers regulated by the federal Government. Such fees will make it possible to recover costs directly related to the regulations.

[English]

The collection of these fees will not have a significant financial impact on the industry. For example, a levy of less than 1/4 of 1 per cent, which this Bill would impose, on the 1984 operating revenues of these industries would have yielded around $15 million. As we know, the telecommunications industry is a multimillion if not multibillion dollar industry. At present, the CRTC collects licence fees from Canadian broadcasters and cable operators. These fees, which are collected pursuant to the Broadcasting Act, are sufficient to cover costs incurred in the regulation of the broadcasting industry.

One result of Bill C-4 will be to place federally-regulated telecommunications carriers on the same footing as the broadcasting industry. Therefore—

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is a question of equity as well.

[English]

The legislation will permit the Government to recover approximately $6 million in revenue annually beginning in 1986-87. There are six telecommunications carriers regulated by the CRTC under the Railway Act. Those companies are Bell Canada, the British Columbia Telephone Company, CNCP Telecommunications, Telesat Canada, NorthwestTel and Terra Nova Tel. Together they account for more than 70 per cent of Canadian telecommunications assets, revenues and subscribers. The $6 million to be recovered in 1986-87 therefore represents less than .1 per cent of the annual operating revenue of the six carriers.

So, Mr. Speaker, the CRTC will consult the public and the industry with a view to ensuring equitable fees and establishing a fair formula to set the fees to be paid by each company. Both the formula and the fee schedule will require prior CRTC approval.

This cost recovery measure is similar to the one which several Canadian provinces have already implemented. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this is nothing new, but for the federal Government it amounts to a major step towards sounder national finances. As I said earlier, both the formula and the fee schedule are subject to Treasury Board approval, and they will shift the cost of regulations from the Canadian taxpayer to the company involved.

Mr. Speaker, we know full well that Canadian taxpayers are carrying a heavy burden and that middle-income earners are particularly hard hit. Indeed these are the people who create jobs because, fortunately for them, they are the ones who perhaps are in a better position to invest in job-creating projects. As we have heard, Mr. Speaker, in the past three years small- and medium-sized businesses created almost 70 per cent of all new jobs in Canada.

We also know that major companies have to deal with structural problems and, in some cases, international marketing difficulties. They are no longer in the best position to create the jobs we need to reduce unemployment even further. The unemployment rate is going down, Mr. Speaker, but unfortunately not fast enough to create a sufficient number of job opportunities for our growing labour force.

The CRTC was established by Parliament in 1968 under the Broadcasting Act and, on April 1, 1976, the power to regulate telecommunication companies was transferred from the Canadian Transport Commission to the CRTC. It was on that date that the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission Act—the CRTC as the agency is commonly called—was used to transfer the Canadian Transport Commission authority over telecommunications to the CRTC.

In the case of telecommunication carriers, the CRTC receives to a great extent its regulatory powers from subsections 321(1) and 321(2) of the Railway Act. This is why we are now asking for an amendment to this Act.

Under the Act, the CRTC must ensure that the rates imposed by telecommunication carriers are just and reasonable and that there is no unjust discrimination. The prohibition against unjust discrimination therefore applies equally to customers and competitors.

The major part of the work of the CRTC consists in examining the rates charged. The purpose of this examination is to ensure that the rates charged to customers remain just and reasonable and that the profits of the industry are not excessive.

Just a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, the CRTC ordered Bell Canada to reduce its rates for all its customers.

The CRTC has also undertaken important proceedings on complex economic and social matters such as the interconnection request from CNCP to provide long distance telephone services and phase III of the investigation on the cost of existing services.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the CRTC is engaged in very important activities to protect the consumer, to relieve the taxpayer if we are allowed to recover these costs, and also to promote economic development of this country.

The purpose of the investigation on the cost of existing services was to determine the cost of the types of services provided by the telecommunication carriers under the jurisdiction of the federal Government, and this was an important step in developing a more effective and less costly regulatory process.

• (1130)

This Bill is introduced consistent with the procedures of this House. It was announced in an economic statement. It was set in the Budget of 1985 and today it was introduced for second reading. We are hopeful that the House will allow the CRTC to recover these fees.

There are a number of Bills which are either already before the House or will come before the House that also have to do with the communications sector of our government policy. I am hoping that Members on all sides of the House will help us by improving this legislation if they find that there is something which does not answer the needs or the potential of these industries, or by passing these Bills swiftly if they meet their requirements.

Within these Bills is enabling legislation that will allow the CRTC to look into the operations of very large companies, such as Bell Canada, to ensure that they are administered in a way which takes into consideration the consumer as well as the future of our telecommunications industry in Canada. As we know, there is a great deal of competition from the United States and Europe in the various industries that are part of the communications field. We must have modern legislation and modern methods to ensure that we can continue to compete and become leaders in the world in some of the areas of these high tech industries.

In summary, Bill C-4 reflects the intention announced by this Government of implementing new cost recovery measures to reduce the federal deficit. Approval of this Bill will enable the CRTC to recover the costs incurred in regulating telecommunication carriers. The CRTC will transfer these costs to the carriers themselves rather than to the taxpayers. The CRTC will therefore be relieving taxpayers to the limit of its modest resources.

Moreover, the telecommunications sector will thus be treated just like the broadcasting industry, which now pays licensing fees. The CRTC will therefore be able to play its role by providing a just and equitable service, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to have congratulated the Minister on her first piece of legislation in this House. I take this opportunity to welcome my colleague as the new Parliamentary Secretary. I wish her a lot of pleasure as we face some very complicated and exciting legislation in the field of communications and culture.

That being said, I am pleased to rise and speak to Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Railway Act. This Bill pertains to the telecommunications industry and the Parliamentary Secretary has linked it rather closely to the broadcasting industry with respect to its application for supervision and regulation by the CRTC. The Bill was introduced originally by the Minister of Commmunications (Miss MacDonald) and received first reading in this House on October 3, 1986. It is noteworthy, however, that this is not the first time that this particular amendment to the Railway Act has been introduced. During the last session of Parliament, that is the First Session of the Thirty-third Parliament, the previous Minister of Communications introduced for first reading into this House an identical Bill to amend Section 321 of the Railway Act. That Bill received first reading as Bill C-125 on June 26, 1986.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that June 26, 1986, was virtually the final day of the session prior to the summer recess and that Bill C-25 died on the Order Paper when the Government decided to prorogue the session. Why would the Government choose to introduce a Bill and prorogue the House the next day? The only logical answer to this seemingly illogical action on the part of the Government is that the Government lacks a sense of timing and direction in its legislative agenda.

What is the purpose of this Bill to amend the Railway Act and why has the Government introduced it a second time as Bill C-4? I would like to take this opportunity to examine the rationale of this Bill. In other words, what is the purpose of introducing it and what is meant to be achieved? The Parliamentary Secretary informed us that this Bill is to bring equity to the the telecommmunications industry on the same basis as it exists in the broadcasting industry. I would like to point out that that may not really be the case. If that were the case, I think we would be facing some serious difficulties in both industries. I refer to the news release by the former Minister of Communications, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), on June 26, 1986, when the first Bill was introduced in the House. It states that the amendment to the Railway Act would allow the recovery of costs associated with the Government of Canada's regulation of the telecommunications carrier industry. The news release goes on to demonstrate how the telecommunications regulatory authority, the CRTC, will recoup with the aid of this Bill sufficient revenues to cover the costs incurred by the CRTC in regulating the telecommunications industry, namely, Bell Canada, British Columbia Telephone Company, CNCP Telecommunications, Telesat Canada, NorthwestTel and Terra Nova Tel.

However, I bring to the attention of the House Clause 1 of the Bill which would amend Section 321 of the Railway Act by adding the following:

> 321.1(1) Subject to the approval of the Treasury Board, the Canadian Radiotelevision and Telecommunications Commission may make regulations imposing fees, levies or charges on any company within the meaning of Section 320 and providing for the manner of calculating the fees, levies or charges in respect of the company and the payment thereof to the Commission.

There is no indication in this regard that it is strictly to recover the cost of operation. It simply indicates that the CRTC shall have a certain mandate subject to the approval of Treasury Board.

Let me point out another matter which I think the Minister of Communications might find rather disturbing. I quoted from an official document released by the Department of Communications on June 26, 1986. I bring to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Mailly), to the Minister of Communications, and to the House that I received in my office on October 17, 1986, a piece of misinformation from the office of the Minister. It was sent to me on PC caucus services stationery with the heading "PC INFO". It outlined the content of the Bill.

This was not an official communication from the Minister of Communications but a communication which I suppose was sent to the caucus of the PC Party. I do not believe it is the kind of information that I as a member of the Opposition Party expected to receive in order to guide and counsel me on this particular Bill.

That being said, it was noted in this PC Information document which is a précis of the Bill to amend the Railway Act, that:

> The legislation would permit the government to recover approximately $6 million in revenue annually, beginning in 1986-87. The amount collected from the carriers will correspond directly to the costs incurred by the CRTC in regulating the telecommunications industry.

I find it rather sad that I would be receiving a directive from the PC caucus instead of the Minister of Communications, who I presently welcome.

The purpose of the Bill is to allow the CRTC to levy fees. The reason the Minister introduced the Bill, according to the memo which I received from the PC caucus, is to allow the CRTC to recover the costs which it incurs. Therefore, one would assume that the CRTC is presently not bringing in sufficient revenue to cover the costs of its operations. However, when I looked into the figures I found that the CRTC is in fact bringing in enough revenues, through licence fees and the like, to cover all the costs of its operations, including salaries, hearings and administrative costs. Not only is the CRTC currently generating enough revenue to cover all the costs it incurred in regulating both the broadcasting and telecommunications industry, it is generating a huge surplus.

My statement is borne out by the Chairman of the CRTC, Mr. André Bureau who, on April 10, 1986, appeared before our Standing Committee on Communications and Culture and made a statement about the CRTC finances. On pages 40 and 41 of the minutes of the proceedings of that Standing Committee, Mr. Bureau is quoted as saying that he estimates that the CRTC will incur total operating costs of $25.7 million in 1986-87. He further states that he estimates that the CRTC will bring in revenues to the Government of Canada's Consolidated Revenue Fund, through licence fees and the like of $54 million during the same period. This is more than double the costs incurred by the CRTC, so it would seem to me that it is certainly covering its costs.

Mr. Bureau summed up the situation to our Standing Committee as follows:

[Translation]

"I should point out that the CRTC is a net revenue generator for the federal government. In this fiscal year, as I mentioned, estimated revenues amount to $54 million, which is more than twice our allocated resources."

[English]

If the goal of the Minister, the Ministry and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is to recover costs, I would suggest that this is not the area where they will recover costs. It already has a fine profit of $54 million.

While the Government purports to introduce Bill C-4 to allow the CRTC to cover its costs, it will be apparent from what Mr. Bureau has said that the CRTC operates at a large surplus of $54 million. In fact, the CRTC is probably the envy of every other administrative body and agency because it is so highly profitable. The CRTC is not a drain on the federal treasury. In fact, it returns excess revenues to the treasury. It is not a drain on the consumers or the constituency that it serves. We see that Government's regulatory agency as being productive, efficient and obviously well managed. However, I do not see why it should become a cash cow to fill the coffers of the government Treasury at a hidden cost to the Canadian consumers. Its role is to regulate, not to print money. If the Government wanted to print money I think it should have stated that and perhaps changed the mandate of the CRTC.

If the Government sees this as a valid instrument to further reduce the deficit—which I agree must be addressed—through indirectly taxing large corporations, that is fine. The Government should openly state its intentions.

In his Budget Speech of May, 1985, the Minister of Finance announced the Government's intention to ensure that costs incurred by regulatory authorities were paid for by the regulated industries themselves. It is one thing for the Minister of Finance to recover the costs of regulation for the CRTC; it is quite another for the Government to enrich federal coffers and not the CRTC by introducing Bill C-4 without fully stating its case.

I have already pointed out that the CRTC is highly profitable and does not need to generate new sources of revenue. If it must redistribute those costs with respect to broadcasting and telecommunications, then I believe it is like comparing apples and oranges because the costs are different and their calculations are different. If, in reality, the intention of the Government is to raise revenues from new sources which will go directly toward the reduction of the federal deficit, why has it not come right out and said so? Instead, the Government has introduced Bill C-4 in the guise of generating new revenues for the CRTC to cover costs which are non-existent operating costs with respect to its over-all operation. It is another hidden method to enrich the Government's coffers without letting the population know exactly what it is doing.

If the Government wants to reduce its deficit, I repeat that there are other open methods which it could use. Incidentally, at whose costs will the non-existent deficit of the CRTC be reduced? Ultimately it will be the consumer because we are talking about television viewers, radio broadcast listeners and telephone subscribers when we are talking about regulating through the CRTC. As I listened to the Parliamentary Secretary lauding the Government's efforts in managing the economy and moving toward greater fiscal control, I could not help but stop to think about what is happening to Canadians in today's society and to their disposable income. If we consider the November statement of 1984 and the Budgets of May 1985 and February 1986, I think we will see a somewhat different picture emerge from that which the Parliamentary Secretary would have us believe. There are the increased federal taxes, the deindexation and the surtaxes and in the end the disposable income of many families, particularly those at the low and middle income range, is detrimentally affected.

I would like to give a few figures so that Hon. Members in the House and those who are listening can make some enlightened decisions for themselves. The tax measures introduced by the Government in the November 1984 Statement and the May 1985 and February 1986 Budgets, are affecting the personal income taxes of individuals in a considerable way, and reducing their purchasing capacity and their cash-in-pocket situation. We will have $570 million less to spend because of the modified indexation measures, that is, the 3 per cent reduction in the tax tables for everyone throughout Canada. A second example is the elimination in May of 1985 of the federal tax reduction. That will cost Canadians $490 million. A third example is the 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtaxes on our basic federal tax which was introduced in May of 1985. Because of those surtaxes, average consumers are being soaked an additional $550 million. When we consider the deductions which are now not allowed under the Registered Homeownership Savings Plan, we see an another $80 million which Canadians cannot put aside as a saving. The 3 per cent surtax on personal income tax, introduced in February of this year, has meant an additional $560 million which is not available and in circulation for the Canadian consumer.

When we consider the effects of sales taxes and excise taxes, some of which are visible and some of which are not, we see some rather staggering amounts which no longer are available to the Canadian consumer, particularly those in the low and middle income range, but obviously this affects all of us. The broadening of the sales tax base as a result of the 1986 Budget has meant that $510 million is no longer available to average Canadian consumers. The 1 per cent sales tax increase alone in May 1985 has meant $990 million is no longer available to us. The additional 1 per cent increase in sales tax which was introduced in February of this year has meant an additional $815 million cleverly soaked up, with very little political impact—although that will eventually happen—because it is virtually a hidden tax which no one can see at the moment of purchase.

The excise taxes of various kinds introduced in the Financial Statement of November 1984, and the Budgets of 1985 and 1986, amount to some $3 billion being taken out of the taxpayers' pockets. We can see from a personal income tax point of view that that is an incredible reduction of available cash.

The total cost of all this to low and middle income consumers is $2.695 billion. I would like to suggest that it is a very sad situation, indeed. Close to $3 billion is being taken out of our pockets. The move on the part of the Conservatives to implement something of what they call good social policy, such as the modification to the family package which includes the child tax credit, the child exemption and the family allowance, looks good on paper. It is going to cost $35 million in 1986-87. But it is really not as good as it would seem because it is a deindexation policy and changes thresholds so less and less people are going to have less and less money at their disposal.

The other issue is the increase in the RRSP limits. At this point it is at the $7,500 level but will be moving up to $15,500. That is very nice for those who can afford it. It will cost the Treasury $40 million this year.

With respect to the capital gains exemption, I think we have said plenty in this House about boats and so on, and how the wealthy can get wealthier and protect their income at a cost to our Treasury of $600 million. If we look at the refundable sales tax credit, we see that as perhaps the only good measure brought in to date. We are talking there about returning $200 million to those people who earn the very low income of $15,000 or less, but the poverty line is at $23,000, so I would suggest that is not as good as it would seem on paper. Some $3 billion is going out and less than $1 billion is coming in. I would suggest that that is not equity.

I would like to draw your attention, Madam Speaker, to the news release of June 26, 1986 when this same amendment to the Railway Act was first introduced. That news release states:

> The amount collected from carriers regulated by the Government of Canada will (under this Bill) correspond directly to the costs incurred by the CRTC in regulating the telecommunications industry.

I have read Bill C-4 very carefully and there is nothing in it which in any way states that the amount of money collected from carriers will correspond directly to the costs incurred by the CRTC in regulating the telecommunications industry. Rather, a reading of Bill C-4, and in particular, the added Section 321.1(1) to the Railway Act, discloses that the CRTC is given the power to make regulations, imposing the fees to be charged to the telecommunication carriers such as Bell Canada and B.C. Telephone. Nowhere in this Section or in the Act is it stated that the regulations eventually put out by the CRTC must set fees which will correspond to the costs incurred by it in regulating the telecommunications industry. In other words, if the costs incurred by the CRTC in regulating telecommunication companies is to be a total of $6 million, Bill C-4 completely fails to require the CRTC to set the fees it will charge those telecommunication companies at that same amount. The Act could readily have provided for this but has failed to do so.

The amount looks small in terms of dollars right now, but there is nothing in the legislation to confine it to that amount of money, and if one is operating the CRTC on the basis of the Broadcasting Act, as indicated by the Parliamentary Secretary, we might then be looking at another potential way of raising over $54 million.

Since Bill C-4 fails to direct the CRTC, or give any guidance to the CRTC as to the amount of the fees to be levied, or the basis upon which these fees are to be determined, is it the intention of the Minister of Communications to issue directives to the CRTC so as to ensure that the fees charged in a given year will at least correspond to the costs of regulating the telecommunication industries? Or will she direct the rate of return for the telecommunciations corporations or the CRTC? The Minister should make known her intentions in this matter as soon as possible, and I would suggest that she will have to consult with Treasury Board as it seems to be empowered, from the first line of this amendment, to veto or to direct the CRTC's decisions. Who will be making the decisions, Madam Speaker, the Department of Communications, the Treasury Board or the CRTC, or will there be enlightened discussions between all three? It is far from clear.

When I read Bill C-4 I find that the proposed Section 321.1(4) would enable the CRTC to assess these new fees to telecommunication companies on a retroactive basis. I have a number of concerns with this clause. First, retroactive provisions should always be carefully scrutinized, for such provisions have the effect of changing the rules of the industry in the middle of the game. Has the Government demonstrated that such retroactivity is absolutely necessary? Why should the Bill allow for retroactive fees to be charged by the CRTC when the CRTC is already operating on a highly profitable basis? Why the sudden need for retroactive fees to be assessed? If the Government was of the view that the telecommunications industry was not paying its fair share to the CRTC in past years, then why did it not ensure the Bill's passage last year? Had this been done there would be no need for the Bill before us to allow for a retroactive application.

Furthermore, if the Bill is passed and the CRTC assesses fees to companies such as Bell Canada on a retroactive basis, then Bell's shareholder, Bell Canada Enterprises, and ultimately the individual shareholders of Bell Canada Enterprises, will likely have to absorb those fees. In other words, Bell may not be in a position to ask for a rate increase to allow it to recoup from telephone subscribers those fees assessed on a retroactive basis. This may not be an objectionable result. I raise it so that the Government will be in a better position to appreciate all the consequences which would flow from a retroactivity clause.

In my view the question of absorbing the costs implicit in the application of this Bill involves new dollars which should be borne by the shareholder as a cost of enjoying the privileges of ownership of a public monopoly utility, and not a hidden potential increased cost to the subscriber.

Furthermore, with respect to the subject of retroactivity, the addition of Section 321.1(4) to the Railway Act does not absolutely require that fees be assessed against the telecommunications industry on a retroactive basis. Rather, it provides that the fees will only have retroactive effect if the regulations eventually established by the CRTC "so provide". These regulations are subject to the approval of Treasury Board. In other words, the Government has left it to the CRTC to decide whether or not fees should be assessed retroactively, but gives it no final authority or decision-making power. The Government should make clear to the House why it felt the need to leave the question of retroactivity unclear.

What guidelines does the Government expect the CRTC to employ in making its recommendations on this point? Will the Treasury Board be setting the guidelines pursuant to the powers granted to it under the proposed Section 321.1(1)? If the CRTC is to follow the intentions expressed by the Minister of Finance in his May, 1985 Budget, to recoup for the CRTC the full cost of regulation, then there will be no need for the CRTC to charge retroactive fees, since the CRTC already recovers revenues which far exceed its costs of operations.

Further, the retroactivity date is March 31, 1986. It will take at least a year, at breakneck speed, for all the normal administrative procedures and notices of motion by the CRTC to be acted upon before we will begin to see the application of this recommendation with respect to the fee assessment. That means not before 1988. This could mean big dollars, and for whom?

The Government seems to expect that Bill C-4 would allow the CRTC to recover at least its operating costs of $6 million beginning in 1986-87 by assessing fees against telecommunication companies such as Bell Canada, B.C. Telephone, CNCP Telecommunications, Telesat and others.

The critical question is, what will companies such as Bell Canada do if it is assessed large fees in future years pursuant to the authority of this legislation? I expect that Bell will contend that such fees increase its operating costs. I would not be surprised if Bell then applied to the CRTC for a rate increase with respect to the sums it charges for telephone services. And who will be asked to pay any such rate increase? It goes without saying that it will be the telephone subscriber. This will be so whether the subscriber is an individual or a business, in particular a small business. The fees to be levied by the CRTC on companies such as Bell will eventually be paid for out of the pocket of telephone subscribers. These are the results that are almost sure to follow if Bill C-4 is passed in its present form.

What does the Government expect me to say to the many senior citizens living in my riding on fixed incomes when they ask me why their monthly telephone charges have been increased? Does the Government expect me to tell these citizens that they are being charged more for telephone services because the CRTC needs more money? I have already demonstrated today that the CRTC does not need more money. Does the Government want me to tell these people to do without a telephone if they cannot afford to pay the charges? Surely the Government must realize that in our modern world a telephone is no longer a luxury but a necessity. Once again, I must ask whether the Government has fully thought through the consequences that could flow directly from the enactment of this Bill? I for one am not sure that it has.

Only a few days ago telephone subscribers received relief from the CRTC in the form of an order that Bell Canada refund to subscribers two months' worth of basic charges and provide lower long distance rates in the future. This decision was welcomed by the Minister and by everyone in the House. It was certainly welcomed by my Party and by consumers who have long yearned for lower telephone rates. We now find that what the CRTC gave telephone subscribers with one hand the Government looks to take away with another through Bill C-4. The Bill may ultimately result in increased telephone rates. It seems that the Government will not give consumers a break. It intends to pour cold water on the heads of telephone subscribers. How does the Government spell relief? Is it through Bill C-4, which could be subtitled "a Bill to enrich the treasury"?

There are many telephone subscribers in the country who are served by provincially-owned telephone companies not regulated by the CRTC, such as the Manitoba Telephone System, Sask Tel, and Alberta Government Telephones. Therefore, since the CRTC would be unable to levy fees or charges against a company such as the Manitoba Telephone System, telephone subscribers in Manitoba will think themselves immune from the higher telephone bills which could flow from this Bill. These telephone subscribers may be mistaken. We will have to wait and see what the court decision involving AGT, the provincially-owned telephone company in Alberta, may suggest with respect to CRTC regulation.

I point out to Members of the House that this Bill could also allow the CRTC to assess new fees against CNCP Telecommunications. We will want to know whether these fees will be passed on by CNCP to consumers in the form of higher telex and telegram rates. I do not know if they will be touched or not; but it is certainly something worthy of examination.

I have outlined the serious reservations which my Party has with respect to Bill C-4. These reservations include the retroactivity provision; the question of whether the CRTC really needs the new fees to be levied under the authority of Bill C-4; whether the subscriber or the shareholder will bear the burden of the costs; and whether we really need to raise new moneys in this manner. Perhaps we should be looking at a method of redistribution in some way.

Our most serious reservation is that any such fees levied by the CRTC against the telephone companies could very well be passed on to telephone subscribers by way of increased rates. I outlined the tremendous burden which is now being borne, particularly by middle and low income Canadians, due to the last two Budgets and the November, 1984 statement. I hope we will find no new hidden ways to increase costs to subscribers and, therefore, to consumers.

My Party insists that the entire Bill—its three paragraphs—be referred, preferably to the standing committee but, if not, to a legislative committee for review and amendment. I would insist that the committee afford the telecommunication companies and the consumer groups a full right of hearing. While the Bill is in committee, my Party will attempt to ensure that the amendments which are made will prevent the telecommunication companies from passing on any portion of these new fees to telephone subscribers.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I am indeed pleased to see you in the chair today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, Bill C-4 is an Act to amend the Railway Act. It is an Act which would permit the CRTC to collect fees from the telecommunications industry for its services in regulating this industry.

We have been told that the Government's purpose in introducing this legislation is to reduce the deficit. Let us be very clear. The amounts of money that are expected to be collected are certainly not going to do very much about reducing the deficit. It is estimated that it would take $6 million per year to recover the costs of regulation of telecommunications.

Let us be very clear from the beginning that the Government is not reducing the deficit. It is attempting to reduce the rate of increase in the deficit but the deficit itself is still accumulating. We have an enormous accumulated deficit which is still increasing.

If we want to talk about decreasing the deficit, we should look to the example of the Tommy Douglas Government in Saskatchewan. That CCF Government actually decreased the deficit which had been accumulated by previous Liberal Governments. At the same time, that Government spent the taxpayers' money so wisely that it pioneered the social programs of Canada. This Bill is not in the same league as legislation by Tommy Douglas and the CCF/NDP, I am very sorry to say.

This Government wants to reduce the increase in the deficit and do it by collecting fees from the telecommunications industry through the CRTC. The principle of cost recovery itself is a reasonable one. It is employed in other industries. For example, farmers who benefit from the regulation of farm marketing products pay for this service. That is certainly fair and I believe the model we have here is appropriate as well. I do not object to the principle of cost recovery in the Bill, but I certainly do have a number of reservations about it.

We have seen a very bad example of cost recovery in the Forget inquiry. The unemployed are expected to bear the costs of a $6-million inquiry. Rather than having the Government take the cost of this inquiry from general revenues, it is coming out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund. That is a most inappropriate example of user-pay.

In principle, user-pay in this Bill is all right. However, let us be clear. This is an industry that makes a great deal of money. If the Government really wanted to tackle the deficit, it would look far more broadly to corporate taxation. The Parliamentary Secretary said that the way to attack the deficit is by cleaning up the public sector. I think the way to attack the deficit is by collecting taxes from those who can pay them. There are 79,000 wealthy corporations that show profits but do not pay a dime in taxes. If we were really serious about deficit reduction and about fairness, we would be going after those corporations and not after telephone subscribers.

If the CRTC is correct, it would take about $6 million to recover these costs. The CRTC is already making its so-called profit by collecting from the broadcasting sector. It takes roughly $19 million to administer the broadcasting sector and the CRTC collects about $25 million per year. Collecting $6 million from the telecommunications sector would be fair. If the broadcasting sector is paying for its regulatory fees, why should it subsidize the telecommunications sector? However, it is true that the CRTC is collecting more money than it costs to operate. In a sense, this is a way of collecting taxes in an indirect fashion. I do not think that is a healthy thing to do.

Corporations could be paying more taxes. This $6 million that will be received from the telecommunications industry is not a large amount of money. Bell Canada's profits alone are in the order of $1 billion per year.

I believe the Liberal spokesperson was unduly alarmist about how these costs would be passed on to the consumers. Even if they were passed on to the consumers, the cost would be practically incalculable. Of course, there is no reason the costs should be passed on to consumers and I do not think the CRTC should permit that. That would be unreasonable. Profits in that sector are very substantial. This is a monopoly utility and there is no reason for the consumers to pay these additional costs.

The legislation is not clear about companies being assessed only what it costs to regulate them. The Government has stated that this is a cost-recovery measure, but the legislation does not say that. Perhaps the legislation should be absolutely clear on that point.

There is also provision in the legislation for retroactive collection. I do not want to be alarmist about this, because the amounts are so small relative to this industry, but the retroactive principle is not a good one. It is one at which we should certainly take a look.

I have another reservation about the requirement for Treasury Board approval. According to the Bill, the CRTC may make regulations imposing fees, levies or charges subject to the approval of the Treasury Board. What should the role of the Treasury Board be? If we believe that the CRTC should be at arm's length, why should the Treasury Board be active in this capacity?

Why should the legislation not be absolutely clear as to how much will be collected, not in terms of dollar amounts but in terms of the criteria by which it would be collected? The legislation is not clear about whether or not this collection is, strictly speaking, cost recovery. In the case of broadcasting, it is not simply cost recovery but is actually profit making. It is ironic that the CRTC makes a profit from the broadcasting sector. The CRTC does not earn its pay from the public purse because it regulates the broadcasting sector so very poorly. It has let down the public on matters like portrayal of women, Canadian content and the creation of jobs for Canadian playwrights, writers, actors and the like.

In the case of the telecommunications sector, Bill C-4 is very well timed. It is being brought in at a time when the CRTC has just come up with an excellent decision regarding the telecommunications industry. All of Canada is pleased to see that the public interest and consumers are being served by this decision. The CRTC has actually done a good job, yet it is a job on which it has not made a dime. It does, however, make its money from a sector for which it does not do its job adequately at all.

The companies that would be affected by this legislation include the largest of the communications companies, Bell Canada, as well as B.C. Telephone and smaller communications companies such as Terra Nova Tel, NorthwestTel, CNCP Telecommunications and Telesat Canada.

A substantial number of companies will be affected by the legislation. Bell Canada has enormous profits. B.C. Telephone is not quite as large but it is also a pretty substantial company. Last year its operating revenues were $1.4 billion and it had after-tax profits of nearly $100 million. That is the kind of money out there in the industry. If the Government collected corporate taxes with the same vigour it pursues personal taxes, we would not be worried about getting an extra $6 million. In effect this is a tax increase for corporations. However, it is a small increase; it is under 1 per cent.

Let us look at the tax increase average Canadians have faced over the last couple of years. Of course they have been enormous. As well, there has been a deindexation of the family allowance, tax increases in personal income tax, and increases in sales tax and excise tax—the hidden taxes. We must be concerned about the way the Government is collecting taxes through sales tax and excise tax. The use of hidden taxes is not a very healthy way to collect money. Individual taxpayers are being soaked. However this is a tax increase, as long as the CRTC does not allow companies to pass it on to subscribers. As I said, it is a very small tax increase for companies which are doing extremely well with their monopolies.

The CRTC did its job properly on Bell Canada last week. It was a record-making decision. Over $200 million will be rolled back and there will be a reduction in long distance charges as of January 1. It is an extremely important decision, worth over $200 million to consumers. We must ensure that there is not a reversal of this decision with the $6 million and that the decision actually takes effect. I hope the Government has given the decision some thought. I also hope that we will have a firm commitment from the Government that it will not reverse the CRTC decision. Of course Bell Canada is entitled to go to the courts. The Government of Canada cannot stop Bell Canada from going to the courts, but at this point it could at least say that it will not reverse the CRTC decision. That would be a very important statement. At least that commitment could be given.

Bill C-4 before us today poses the risk that consumers will be charged more, depending on what is done by the CRTC. At the very least, the Government should come clean with taxpayers and subscribers and say that it will defend the CRTC decision. It should ensure that the $6 million will not be passed on to consumers and that the $200 million will stand as it is.

In conclusion, I have some reservations about parts of the Bill. Certainly matters can be looked at in committee, such as the retroactive question or, being very specific, or the purpose of the Bill in terms of cost recovery. We do not want to see it as simply another way of raising taxes indirectly, which is not the way taxes should be raised. Aside from the very particular points which can be addressed, I think cost recovery is appropriate in this area.

I am sorry the Government is not more frank about its role in life. I am sorry it is trying to parade this past us as a measure which will do a lot more than in fact it can do. It will not reduce the deficit. Even if it were a larger amount, it would not reduce the deficit. It is a very modest measure. I do not object to the direction in which it is going, but let us not pretend that this increase to, a very small tax for very wealthy corporations will put Canada's financial house in order and address the deficit. Certainly this bashing of the public sector, that somehow if we clean up the public sector and forget about the fact that corporations are not paying their fair share, will not wash. The Government could have presented this piece of legislation in a fairer or straighter way to the Canadian public, but its substance in terms of cost recovery is appropriate.

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Madam Speaker, I should first like to congratulate you on your new position. Certainly it is good to see one woman in the chair and one man about to speak on the Bill this morning. Indeed it is a pleasure to address Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Railway Act. It supports a basic principle of the Government to establish a business-like approach in the conduct of its own operations.

Before addressing the Bill directly, I should like to raise a couple of comments concerning those of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) who indicated that there are more poor people in Canada now than there were before the Government took over. Since the Government has taken over, the number of Canadians living below the poverty line fell by 300,000 last year, the first such decline since 1981. Real family income increased last year for the first time since 1980. I just wanted to ensure that the record was straight in that regard so that Canadians understand that the Government is getting people off the welfare rolls.

Mrs. Finestone: The record should show that I talked about disposable income, not about the level of poverty.

Mr. Caldwell: Since the Government has come into power, some 600,000 jobs have been created and 328,000 jobs have been for women, which should please the Hon. Member for Mount Royal. I could go on, but I know that I must deal with the topic at hand.

I should like to revert a little and deal with the cultural field. The Hon. Member did not mention some of the initiatives taken by the Government, very recently as a matter of fact. The Government is in every way supporting the cultural and communications industry like no other Government has for many years. Of course the CBC was brought into operation by a Conservative Government and has been supported throughout the years by this Government and others. The amount of $75 million was announced in the February 26 Budget for 1986-87 and $375 million over five years, an increase of 6 per cent for cultural industries. For the film and video industry, $33 million in 1986-87 and $165 million over five years, was announced on July 17, 1986. For book publishing, $13 million in 1986-87 and $65 million over five years. That is an increase of 25 per cent announced on June 18, 1986. It included an additional $4.8 million for the Canada Council over two years for publishing. The list goes on. For music and recording, $5 million in 1986-87 and $25 million over five years was announced on September 26, 1986, just a few weeks ago. These figures indicate that the Government certainly cares about the communications and cultural industry, which will continue to grow and prosper under us.

I should like to address the Bill before us. Canada is a big country. We are talking about a change in the Railway Act. I am sure some people wonder what that has to do with the communications industry, why we have to legislate through the Railway Act. There might even be those people who would say that we should be introducing a Bill to make some changes in our railroads. That may well come too.

However, while we are debating a change to the Railway Act, we are debating a Bill which originally concerned the communications system of the railways. Most of us are aware of the telegraph poles along railway lines. Of course today the communications industry operates on a much different scale with microwaves and satellite receivers.

I do not think many of us realize the necessity of the telephone today. Perhaps we have come to take it for granted in many cases. Certainly many of us would find our lives a lot different if we did not have a telephone system. In our vast country communications represent an essential link between all people. Canada's very existence as a country depends upon reliable and efficient communications. This is why we identify communications and telecommunications, particularly the telephone service about which we are talking today, as services that should be available to all Canadians at a reasonable cost.

Canadian industry has been very responsive to the needs of the country. Our needs have been met and continue to be met with innovative solutions that are among the best in the world. The quality and affordability of our telecommunication services are world class. Statistics show that Canada has one of the highest rates of access per capita in the world. More than 98 per cent of Canadian homes have at least one telephone. We also have the distinction of being known as the people who talk the most on the telephone. We have achieved a telecommunication system to be proud of through the strengths of our telecommunications industry working in concert with government regulators.

The regulatory process itself has played an essential role by maintaining a careful balance between the revenue requirements of the industry and the essential social goal of making universal telephone service available at affordable prices. And, as the CRTC demonstrated not too long ago, the regulatory process does work. In the period from 1979 to 1984 when inflation was rampant the telephone companies were granted regular rate increases. Since this Government was elected, the process of economic renewal has begun, inflation has been tamed and the CRTC has acted accordingly in ordering rebates and rate reductions to take into account Bell Canada's improved financial situation. These rate reductions should further stimulate economic growth, and both business users and residential subscribers will benefit directly from them.

In recent years we have seen the introduction of an element of competition in telecommunications and this trend is likely to continue. We also recognize that to be viable and prosperous our industries must be competitive in the world market and we support their endeavours. In keeping with this new environment, the Government is committed to reducing the regulatory burden on industry. The market must be allowed to operate if Canadian entrepreneurs are to maintain and augment their competitive edge in an increasingly unified North American market. However, as long as local telephone service and other essential services continue to be provided on a monopoly basis, the public interest must be protected. The Government must remain vigilant about possible negative impacts. Affordable, accessible, universal service must be maintained and the interests of consumers upheld, even as entrepreneurial development is encouraged.

As more and more services are deregulated, it is certain that the cost of regulating will decline. However, new problems are likely to arise making it more than ever necessary to maintain an effective regulatory process. The regulator must have the means to ensure that monopoly profits are not used to subsidize the competitive activities of the company. Without such safeguards, Madam Speaker, the interests of the telephone subscriber could be endangered, as could the principle of fair and equitable competition.

Bill C-4 respects these goals. On the one hand it establishes the regulation of the industry on a full cost recovery basis. On the other hand, it ensures that the quality of regulation can be rendered immune from cost cutting. Placing the regulation of telecommunications on a cost-recovery basis will provide a powerful incentive for the CRTC to keep tight control over expenses, because regulation is an open and public process. With the passage of Bill C-4, the costs associated with the activities of the CRTC will be recovered directly from the industry rather than forming part of the Government's over-all fiscal framework.

This element of public accountability, which could make the cost of regulation an issue at public rate hearings, is an incentive to achieve a regulatory process which is both efficient and cost effective. The amounts that this Bill will recover from the industry may seem rather small in comparison with the massive federal deficit that our Government inherited from the previous administration. However, the ramifications of this measure encompass much more than the moneys cited.

When the Government is presented with an alternative which can render a public service more responsive to the needs of those served while at the same time reducing the burden on the taxpayer, I think we would all agree that it is the duty of the Government to assume such a measure. The implementation of such a measure will serve as an effective demonstration of the Government's resolve to place many of its operations on a full cost-recovery basis, and this in itself is part of the larger task of restoring financial responsibility in the country. I believe that Bill C-4 has much merit and that it deserves the full consideration and support of the House.

As I pointed out at the beginning of my speech, many people may not quite understand exactly why we are doing what we are doing at this time and why the measure is under the Railway Act. Let me point out that Canada has something of which to be very proud in the telecommunications industry. We have been the leaders in the telecommunications field and I am sure we will continue to be. We must also make sure that consumers are protected. I would like nothing better than not to have any regulations at all in some of these areas and to let the free enterprise system take its course. Whether the telephone system is an essential service or not is debatable, but I think many of us consider today that it is. We have to remember that the telephone system has to be available to the citizens of Canada, and we want to make sure it stays that way. That is why our Government will be taking steps from time to time to make sure that monopolies, such as the telephone systems, are regulated and that people will have an opportunity through the regulatory process to make sure they have their say about the operations of the monopolies.

I think we all realize that the telephone system was inaugurated in Canada, although the Americans sometimes like to take that credit away from us. It has been a great service to us at a reasonable cost. Under this Bill consumers will have the opportunity to hear from the CRTC, and if it opposes the regulations how the formula for rates will be worked out.

As I mentioned, the $6 million that we will recover under this Bill may not seem like much with the deficit that we have, but the deficit is heading in the right direction. You may recall, Madam Speaker, that when our Government took over the deficit was running at an extremely high level. We have been able to bring it down to the neighbourhood of $32.5 billion through a tremendous effort on behalf of our Government. We should be applauding Canadians in many areas for their help. We have asked the farmers to help with cost recovery. We have asked the voters to help with cost recovery. Now we are asking the regulators of the telephone service to be involved in cost recovery. I think that is only fair. Those are just some of things we are trying to do.

Let me add that we can telephone from our homes to almost anyplace in the world. Most of us can dial directly, although in some places we still have to use operators. It is a marvel how the system works. I do not understand how it works. Maybe some other Hon. Members know more about how the system works, but it certainly works. Other countries do not have a telephone system that works as well as ours. We are very proud of our telephone system in Canada and we should remain proud of it.

Our Government will continue to watch the purse strings, making sure we are getting our fair share of revenue, but not forgetting those people who have to use the telephone service on a regular basis. As Members of Parliament we hear from our constituents often about the telephone system, the Post Office and many other problem areas that exist today. I do not think we hear as many complaints about the telephone system as we do about other agencies. The system in operation in Canada today is one of the best in the world and people recognize that. We do not have that many problems with the telephone service, at least not where I live in the beautiful area of Essex-Kent. We still have some services which are not part of the Bell Canada system: one of the few left in the area. We still have a central—

An Hon. Member: Do you still have the crank?

Mr. Caldwell: Yes, we still have the crank on the phone; one long, three short. Perhaps in Vancouver they still have the central operators where one long and three short means something. That was our old phone number many years ago.

I do want to say that I hope we have the support of the House. We would like to get this Bill through. It is not a Bill which will shake the rafters of the country, but it is an important step in this Government's effort to make sure people know where we are going in communications, and I hope we get quick passage.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments?

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, in light of my colleague's comments, I want to tell you that I still have a country phone with one long and two short. The Hon. Member made some remarks with respect to the pride he feels as a Conservative in that his Party founded the CBC. I would be anxious to hear his reaction to the remarks of the well-known, highly-respected journalist and broadcaster who has given so much to our country, both in its oral and written history, someone we all respect and admire. I refer to Pierre Berton. I would like to quote from an article in The Sunday Herald of October 19, and I would then like a response from my hon. friend. The article says:

Tories killing CBC: Berton

The Conservatives are slowly but surely killing the CBC and other cultural agencies that spawned a strong Canadian culture in the last 30 years, says author-broadcaster Pierre Berton.

"Television is our most important Canadian institution because it provides the glue that holds us together," he said Friday.

"It's our new national dream just as the railroad once was."

Berton and other prominent Canadians are featured speakers at the Council of Canadians, a nationalist organization holding its second annual meeting in Ottawa.

"But the Conservatives don't understand that. In my opinion, the Conservative caucus wants to destroy the CBC. But they know they can't do that or sell it to their friend John Bassett. So they are doing it by attrition, by cutting the budget every year."

Berton said proposals for a further $50 million cut in the CBC budget on top of the $133 million in cuts the Conservatives have already ordered are monstrous especially after a federal task force called for stronger public broadcasting in Canada.

I would like an enlighted response from my hon. friend. Do you agree with Pierre Berton or do you not?

Mr. Caldwell: Madam Speaker, I must say that certainly Pierre Berton is a very respected author and broadcaster in this country and he is entitled to his views. I do not believe this Government is strangling the CBC, or whatever word he happened to use. It is my understanding that the CBC has had one of its most successful seasons. They had many enjoyable programs, including Mr. Berton's, on the air last year. We have asked the CBC to tighten up a little bit on its operating expenses and get itself in line, but it has known about that since 1984. A cut was made at that time but there have not been any cuts since then. We have asked the CBC to live within its budget.

As I pointed out, and I should not have to repeat this, our commitment to the cultural industry has been unprecedented over the past two years. As I pointed out, there was an increase of $375 million over five years in support of cultural industries. That is unprecedented. For the film and video industry there has been $33 million for 1986-87, and $165 million over the next five years. The Minister announced that on July 17. There was $13 million in 1986-87 for the book publishing industry, and $65 million over five years, an increase of 25 per cent.

The Hon. Member and Mr. Berton talk about us cutting back on funds to our cultural industries. I see no indication of that at all. I do not think any Members here could possibly read that into these figures. There was $5 million in 1986-87 for the music and recording industry. I am sure Mr. Berton and others like to enjoy recorded music by Canadians, as do I, as do you and as the Hon. Member does. That amounts to some $25 million over the next five years.

Mr. Berton says the Conservative caucus is trying to destroy the CBC. I know we are not supposed to talk about things that happen in caucus, but I do not recall the CBC being debated in caucus. Not when I was there. The Hon. Member knows that my ears perk up when I hear about the CBC, having spent several years with that organization. I think I know whether it was discussed and whether the Tory caucus is trying to destroy it. If anything, we are bolstering the CBC. As a matter of fact, over the last two years the CBC has done some tremendous work. Some tremendous programs have been produced. It may not be the old CBC, the way it used to be, but things have to change. I think they have changed for the better.

Do I agree with Mr. Berton? I certainly do not.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has been very misleading in his remarks. It is easy to get up and refer to an increase here, an increase there, a percentage here and a dollar there. He has not looked at the total picture. The total picture is of a net decrease. There has not been so much as a cost of living increase, as promised to people in the cultural community, a promise made by the Conservatives over the course of the 1984 election campaign. Yes, there is an increase here and an increase there—

Miss MacDonald: They add up.

Ms. McDonald: —but the decreases are greater than the increases. In the case of book publishing, where the Hon. Member refers to an increase, that increase is not as great as the amount of money taken out of book publishing by the new tariff. It is entirely misleading to talk about an increase because it is a net decrease.

The Conservatives practised this kind of obfuscation with regard to the family allowances and child tax credit. Instead of slashing everything at once, they increased the child tax credit while they decreased the family allowance and now plan to decrease the child tax credit later. They have everybody bamboozled. They can go around saying, we have increased support for families, and they are doing precisely the same thing in the cultural industry. In fact the decreases have been greater than the increases even in specific areas.

Mr. Caldwell: Madam Speaker, that was very much the same question and I do not want to go through the same answer again. I just want to assure the Canadian people that certainly this Government has every intention of supporting the cultural and communications industry.

I just want to take this opportunity to congratulate the new Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) on her appointment, and I am sure we can expect greater things over the next two, four, six or eight years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I would really like my friend to be precise. I will take up from where the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) left off. Let us just talk about the CBC, as you were a staff member there and are proud of the CBC. I am sure you were not particularly pleased with the—

Mr. McKinnon: Order!

Mrs. Finestone: Who is calling "order"?

Mr. McKinnon: I am.

Mrs. Finestone: Why?

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, it is not customary for Members to be addressed by the personal pronoun. The Hon. Member has been here long enough to know that she should refer to the gentleman's constituency when she is speaking about him in the House of Commons.

Mr. Rossi: That is what she did.

Mrs. Finestone: I referred to my hon. friend, I did not refer to his riding.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) knows that she should refer to the Hon. Member by his riding and not necessarily by his former employment. Please continue.

• (1250)

Mrs. Finestone: Could the Hon. Member tell me whether the CBC suffered a cut of $50 million in addition to the $133 million cut?

Mr. Caldwell: Madam Speaker, I do not want to go through this again. In the November, 1984 statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced a $70 million cut in the CBC budget.

Mrs. Finestone: Seventy-five million dollars.

Mr. Caldwell: Okay, a $75 million cut. There has been no cut since that time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Miss MacDonald seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moved that Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Railway Act, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I rise on second reading of Bill C-2, an Act to repeal the Canagrex Act and to dissolve the Crown corporation. I am sure the reasons for this Bill are well known. In his November, 1984, economic statement, my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), announced the Government's intention to phase out Canagrex by April of 1985. The initiative was aimed at reducing government spending. However, there was more to it than that. We also believed that Canagrex was not going to achieve the targets set out for it as a corporation. Certainly the industry was not going to use the Crown corporation in the manner planned.

As Members familiar with the corporation know, Canagrex was to identify new markets, to promote exports of Canadian products, to participate in state-to-state trading, to provide export counselling to the industry, to make available grants, contributions, loans, and loan guarantees and to import, export, buy and sell. I am sure that you, Madam Speaker, and all members of the House would agree that these are all very worthy goals. However, when we undertook to phase out Canagrex we believed that existing government departments could co-operate with the private sector to pursue these trade goals more effectively. Indeed, that has proven to be the case.

The Agricultural Products Board, External Affairs, the Export Development Corporation and, of course, my Department, Agriculture Canada, are the key federal players. The Agricultural Products Board has the power to buy and sell if necessary, and it does so. The Export Development Corporation provides insurance, loans and guarantees. About a year ago the EDC introduced a credit insurance program for exporters of up to 360 days for bulk agricultural products. This followed the work of an interdepartmental task force. In January of this year the EDC introduced another credit insurance program of up to three years. The programs cover grains, oil seeds, pulse, tobacco, animal products, seeds and genetic material. These important initiatives by the EDC have succeeded in putting our agricultural exporters in a much better competitive position. In fact, we expect that about $200 million worth of product will have moved under these programs by the end of the year.

The Department of External Affairs plays an important role in the development of markets for our agricultural products. In particular, its program for export market development supports both outgoing and incoming trade missions. It also provides grants and contributions for exporters who are pursuing sales abroad.

My Department, Agriculture Canada, and External Affairs have developed a very close and effective working relationship in order to improve the environment for agricultural exporters. There are numerous examples of our co-operative efforts which are working to the great advantage of Canadian agricultural producers from coast to coast. Agriculture Canada and External Affairs work together on analysing markets and identifying new ones. We also co-operate in technical and promotional activities, seminars and trade fairs. Together these two departments are developing a service called the Export Market Information System. This system will provide up-to-date information on agricultural markets throughout the world. We have established a joint committee on international agri-food trade development. This committee ensures that the services of our two departments in the field of agricultural export development are not being duplicated. It also ensures that we are combining our resources, wherever possible, in order to pinpoint new market opportunities and help the private sector take advantage of these international market opportunities.

Not only is interdepartment co-operation vital to the success of trade development, but co-operation in the private sector is also essential. That is why my Department is involved in providing export counselling and in co-ordinating private sector trade initiatives. Agriculture Canada staff also works with the private sector to help identify and overcome technical problems in the export market. Together we have been able to establish animal health agreements which, in turn, have opened the door to many new trade opportunities. Only last year Canada and China signed five animal health agreements covering a range of agricultural commodities. As a result, Canada has been able to make shipments of live cattle and swine into this very important export market.

My Department has been actively involved with the private sector in trade missions and seminars abroad. For instance, in recent months we sponsored a dairy seminar in Equador and one in Peru. With the help of the industry we produced an export promotion bulletin on alfalfa pellets for farm livestock and we expect to produce more bulletins in the future. We organized a dairy seminar this month in China and are organizing others in Portugal and Spain as well. We participated with other federal Departments in Food Pacific 86 which was a tremendous success in Vancouver this year. In co-operation with the private sector we are organizing a strong presence for Canada at this year's Ag China Show, just as we did last year.

Madam Speaker, I recognize that the Sergeant-at-Arms has noticed the clock, as have you and I. I think it would be appropriate for me to call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagnes): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock later this day.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

FRONTIERS FOUNDATION—CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF FUNDING

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, safer, warmer houses for needy Canadians are a goal which is worthy of government support, especially when those houses can be provided in a way which will actually save the Government money. Yet the Government is turning its back on a national charitable organization which provides just such a service.

Frontiers Foundation has worked for two decades to provide better housing and living conditions in low-income native and non-native communities. Since 1964 it has helped to build or renovate more than 1,000 homes in disadvantaged areas.

The use of volunteers means more money can be spent on building materials. Instead of supporting this worthy organization, the federal Government has cut back its assistance to the point where there is nothing so far this year. With Frontiers Foundation, the Government gets value for money. Funding, therefore, should be reinstated.

POLITICAL PARTIES

HOMOSEXUAL AND LESBIAN POLICE RECRUITS—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party is urging the Government to compel the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to accept lesbians and gays. Can you feature a fairy RCMP constable trying to arrest a lumberjack with a powder puff? Can you imagine a lesbian RCMP fairy at the scene of an armed robbery screaming: "Stop, surrender, or I will hit you over the head with my purse"? If fairies were not hired, they would cry discrimination. The RCMP—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask that the Hon. Member perhaps examine some of the words in his statement which might very well be very offensive to a great number of Canadians and might cause a question of privilege or point of order in the Chamber.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the RCMP is an excellent police force because it recruits men and women who meet its high standards and who can do the job required. If we compel the RCMP to accept recruits from certain groups, thus giving such groups special consideration, we will not only weaken the force but, more than that, we will discriminate against better qualified Canadians and, indeed, against the people of Canada.

The RCMP is now the finest police force in the world. Let us keep it that way. Viva the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

MULTICULTURALISM

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, events of the last days increase our concern about the Conservative Government's multicultural policy.

The Vice-Chairman of the Canadian Multicultural Council has described his colleagues proudly as committed supporters of the Conservative Party. This advisory body was presumably responsible for the policies that the first two multiculturalism Ministers expressed in the slogans "Mainstreaming multiculturalism" and "Multiculturalism means business".

Members of many ethnocultural communities expressed their dissatisfaction with such ideas and asked the Government to support the cultivation of culture and language. Conservative Members of Parliament from the Toronto area have recently called upon the Government to take stronger and wiser action in the area of multiculturalism.

I would urge the new Minister responsible for multiculturalism to seek advice from the communities and not just from Conservative partisans. I would urge him to develop multicultural policy by fostering the diversity of Canada as well as encouraging participation in national life.

I would urge him to remember that multiculturalism should not be political football played for partisan advantage.

THE ECONOMY

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA—REPORT STRESSING IMPORTANCE OF CANADA—UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, in the Economic Council of Canada's report Changing Times, the Economic Council has indicated to us once again how important negotiating free trade with the United States is to the viability of Canada, to job-creation, to economic future, and to the prosperity for ourselves and our children.

More important, the Economic Council indicates what would happen to us if trade arrangements with the United States continue to deteriorate. It points out very clearly how much damage there would be to employment and growth from measures restricting our access to American markets.

The annual report of the revitalized Economic Council under the chairmanship of Judith Maxwell comes to grips with the real essential problems of our time and should be compulsory reading for all Members. We are in changing times. In its report the Economic Council of Canada gives direction to these changing times.

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

EFFECT OF LEAD IN THE ENVIRONMENT—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, lead has now been added to a long list of hazardous products. The Royal Society of Canada's commission, which was formed to study the effect of lead in the environment, has just published its report.

The situation is an alarming one for Canada. Four American scientists have identified lead as causing high blood pressure, diminished intelligence and unusual behaviour in some children.

Canada continues to recycle lead from about 15,000 automobile batteries daily, and that number is rising steadily, although 1982 statistics show that 73,000 tons of lead were dumped in the environment.

Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of future generations, I ask the Government to take immediate steps to remedy this hazardous situation.

OPPOSITION TO POSSIBLE POSTAL RATE INCREASE

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, it is being reported in the media that Canada Post intends to ask Parliament for permission to increase the rate for letters from 34 cents to 36 cents. On June 14 last year I stated in the House that, once the efficiency and service of the Post Office improved to an acceptable level, I would support a rate increase to tackle its financial difficulties. Unfortunately, neither the service nor the efficiency of Canada Post has improved enough to justify a rate increase.

Absenteeism of Canada Post workers is twice the national average and, according to officials of Canada Post, this problem alone costs the corporation $70 million a year. In Etobicoke North I continue to receive numerous calls and letters from constituents who are clearly not satisfied with the service. The main problem remains the consistency in mail delivery. This is one Tory MP who would not support a rate increase.

DISASTERS

DEATH OF MOZAMBIQUE PRESIDENT IN PLANE CRASH

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the conflicting statements by the South African Government that his plane crashed because of bad weather, and by the plane's pilot that he was shot down by South African forces, will only be resolved with time. For Mozambique, one fact is tragically clear; Samora Machel, its President and father of its independence, has been killed, along with other important government officials.

We express here our sorrow and condolences to a nation and to the survivors of the deceased for their loss. But we must also note that Machel's death will bring the instability so assiduously sought by South Africa to the point of crisis, a crisis that emphasizes the need for an urgent Canadian Government response to the call by two parliamentary committees, the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations and the Human Rights Committee, for an international effort to provide financial and other aid to the front line states in their resistance to the destabilization campaign by a racist and imperialist South Africa.

DISASTERS

EXPRESSION OF CONDOLENCES TO FAMILIES OF PERSONS KILLED IN SAINTE-ANNE-DES-MONTS, AND OF GOOD WISHES TO INJURED

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, following the passage of Bill C-11 by the House of Commons, more than 750,000 low-income families in Canada, including 10,000 families in the Gaspé, will enjoy a tax credit of up to $454 per child, of which $300 is to be paid shortly as an advance payment. This is very good news for needy Canadian families.

However, Mr. Speaker, my initial pleasure in being able to announce this news to our families in the Gaspé was overshadowed by the disastrous occurence that took the lives of six people, including three children, in my riding yesterday at Sainte-Anne-des-Monts. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that Hon. Members and you yourself will want to join me in extending to the bereaved families our sincere condolences and to those who were injured our best wishes for a speedy recovery.

SMALL BUSINESS

CONSEQUENCES OF POSSIBLE POSTAL RATE INCREASE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, October 19 to 25 is Small Business Week. Small businesses depend on Canada Post and are hard hit by reduced services and higher rates.

Last Friday we learned that Canada Post is again seeking an increase of 2 cents a letter. Must this industry, this sector which creates most of our new jobs always be the scapegoat and pick up the tab for a Government which is shirking its responsibilities?

It is a mill that will create 165 new jobs and maintain 1,400 others in the forest and supply sectors.

• (1410)

The mill owner, Mr. George Petty, paid recognition to the Prime Minister's personal intervention after the election in 1984 that helped secure financing for the mill. Now, for the first time in almost 100 years, raw forest products are being manufactured into finished products on the Miramichi.

The Prime Minister's visit was a total success. The people greeted his return to a place he once called home, with love and affection. This Prime Minister cares about small-town Canada.

FINANCE

NON-PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY STANDARD TRUSTCO LIMITED

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, today we wish to announce the sixth winner of the great untaxed corporation award which goes to Standard Trustco Limited.

Successive Liberal and Conservative Governments slavishly following the same ideology have provided so many tax concessions that Standard Trustco paid no tax in 1981, 1982, and 1985 on millions of dollars of profit. In 1979 and 1980 its tax bill was so small that the rate amounted to only 0.2 per cent. In 1983 and 1984 its effective rate was no higher than 5 per cent.

If we had an equitable and fair tax system, and had Standard Trustco been required to pay a tax rate of 25 per cent on its profits, average Canadians would have paid $4 million less in tax because of this one company alone. On behalf of all Canadian taxpayers I announce today's award to highlight the need for real and substantive tax reform to end the give-aways perpetuated by successive Liberal and Progressive Conservative Governments.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of Persons Day, tribute is properly being paid to the five Alberta women who led the fight for women's recognition as persons in 1929. On October 18 of that year women in Canada won the legal right to be recognized as persons, thus giving Canadian women the right to become Senators. This victory was through the efforts of the five famous Alberta women: Emily Murphy, Louise McKinney, Nellie McClung, Irene Parlby, and Henriette Muir Edwards.

The five women to be honoured by the Governor General on October 22 with the Persons Award represent the diverse talents of women across Canada. They are: Elizabeth Carr, the Hon. Muriel McQueen Ferguson, Denyse Belanger Rochon, Berenice Sisler, and Helen Yeo. They are worthy successors to the standard of commitment set by Emily Murphy and her courageous group 56 years ago.

EXCISE TAX

PROTEST AGAINST TAX ON IMPORTED BOOKS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, today marks the beginning of Freedom to Read Week in Canada. However, the Government's 10 per cent retaliatory tariff on English-language books has broken a long-standing practice of all Governments exempting books from sales and excise taxes. Not even the Soviet Union and South Africa have such strong measures.

More than 80,000 postcards of protest have been sent to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) by Canadian readers. Booksellers report increasing resistance to the higher prices. Publishers are cancelling co-publishing ventures, resulting in fewer book options and potential job losses. The European Community has launched a protest against the tariff, as has the British Publishers' Association, and both are considering retaliatory measures.

The Minister of Finance proudly announced a $13 million support program for book publishing but then taxed $36 million for his Treasury. Is this a coherent Conservative policy in support of Canadian culture?

The Christmas season marks the peak period of book sales. I ask the Government once more to remove this poorly planned, ill-conceived tariff before irreversible damage is done to Canada's book publishing industry.

SMALL BUSINESS

SUPPORT URGED FOR WOMEN ENTREPRENEURS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, this week we celebrate Small Business Week and honour the 750,000 Canadian men and women who create, own, and operate small businesses in all regions of the country. I am particularly pleased by the increased emphasis within the native community on developing economic self-reliance through entrepreneurship and, as well, by the growing number of women involved in small business. Indeed, in British Columbia women are starting up their own businesses twice as often as their male counterparts. The biggest single problem they face is obtaining funding. I urge the Minister to work with financial institutions to facilitate credit for women entrepreneurs.

The Government's record of support of small business and of the three million Canadians who work in this sector is clear. It can be evidenced by our efforts to reduce the tax burden on small businesses, increase by $1 billion funding for loan guarantees, free up pension funds for investment and, most important, create a climate of confidence that has led to increased investments and lower interest rates, something which is of major benefit to small businesses in Canada.

CRITICISM OF OPPOSITION'S TACTICS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask that Liberal and NDP Members discontinue scare tactics directed at UIC claimants. Surely these claimants have enough to worry about.

Why would the Opposition make these charges about the Forget Commission report before the report has been released and before it has been made available in total to Members of Parliament and the public? This is shameful politicking.

The Forget Royal Commission Report is just that—a report. To say that it is government policy just to achieve perceived political gains is to put politics before people.

TRADE

UNITED STATES CONGRESS—LEGISLATION IMPOSING SURTAX ON IMPORTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose my question to the Minister for International Trade. Once again a major blow has been applied to Canada by the United States. Once again the Canadian Government has acted too little and too late. Once again there has been a total rejection by the United States Government of any requests for proper consultation.

Considering that a U.S. spokesman for the White House has already rejected calls for a veto, what steps will the Government of Canada now take to roll back what is clearly an illegal act on the part of the United States Congress and the President, the imposition of a surtax on all imports? Will we use all measures available to us through the international trading system?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be aware that the Government's opposition to this measure has been a matter of record since September. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said on the weekend that we consider this matter to be offensive and that we think it is wrong. Today we registered our opposition with the White House by sending a letter to Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, urging the administration to oppose the enactment of this legislation.

CANADIAN RESPONSE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that when the question was posed two weeks ago, the Government said it would not ask President Reagan to impose a veto? Second, the White House has already rejected the notion of vetoing that legislation. What steps will the Government take to oppose what the White House itself admits is a marginally illegal act? Will we go to GATT and will we be prepared to take all steps available to us to ensure that that measure is rolled back?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member correctly points out that this move on the part of the United States is contrary to its GATT obligations and also to its public commitments made in Punta del Este and elsewhere. As the Hon. Member said, we only have the word of a White House spokesman, but if the measure does go ahead the Government will take appropriate action.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately we know what "appropriate action" is. It is usually no action at all.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, under Article II of the Canadian-U.S. auto agreement, it is very clear that the signatories to the agreement cannot impose any additional surtaxes or duties. Considering that this is a direct transgression of the Auto Pact agreement, will we take legal recourse to bring the United States into line with that agreement, and will we make that intention known today so that the President of the United States will know what the consequences are before he signs that appropriation Bill?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is being very helpful by identifying the areas of our concern over this move by the United States. As he has pointed out, it is a major protectionist move. It is against the obligations of the United States and I have said that we will be taking appropriate action. We have already registered our concern in this morning's letter to the White House.

NEWSPRINT EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the world has changed. A few months ago when the cedar shakes and shingles matter arose, the Prime Minister called the U.S. President bizarre. Now we are writing letters to the White House.

• (1420)

Last Friday I pointed out to the Minister for International Trade that the stumpage system in Canada which produces softwood lumber is the same stumpage system which produces the raw material for newsprint. What assurances does the Minister have that the U.S. newsprint industry will not seek and receive from the U.S. Department of Commerce, based upon the same stumpage system, a 15 per cent countervail against the Canadian newsprint industry, an industry worth $4.4 billion in exports to the U.S. and, if countervailed, will cost the Canadian newsprint industry $700 million?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have said time and again in this House that the assurance we seek to stop this kind of action is a bilateral trade treaty between the United States and Canada.

PROPOSED GENERIC DRUGS LEGISLATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, that begs the question that if a bilateral free treaty were useful, why are softwood lumber, newsprint, potash, and fish not on the free trade table? One cannot have it both ways. Is the Minister prepared to commit, today in the House of Commons, that the Government will not proceed with legislation on generic drugs which it admits will cost Canadian consumers at least an additional $100 million, as long as these so-called irritants remain unresolved—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member has put his question.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have also said time and again that what is on the negotiating table are the issues which are important in a long-term binding trade treaty with the U.S. The negotiation is about those issues which will help us develop a secure, transparent, so that we can understand them, clear trade agreement with the U.S. Then all the subjects the Hon. Member has raised which are trade irritants can be resolved in a peaceful way.

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES ACTIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister for International Trade. Since the Government began trade talks with the United States, the U.S. has taken action against our shakes and shingles, East Coast fishery, tube steel, and softwood. Just before the weekend it imposed another surtax, which the White House admitted is marginally illegal, goes against GATT, and goes against the Auto Pact. My question for the Minister is simple. How much abuse is the Government prepared to take before it tells the U.S. Government to take a hike on the trade talks?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has identified some of the trade issues which are in dispute between us. He has not identified about 10 issues which we have recently won in negotiations and discussions with the U.S., the 10 issues that were in Congress in a protectionist air of poison and did not make it through because of the efforts of this Government.

Mr. Broadbent: Talk about Alice in Wonderland.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government is negotiating with the American government with a view to signing a free trade agreement and, at the same time, the U.S. Governement imposes this surtax.

Does the Minister agree that such action clearly reflects the hypocrisy of the American Government?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I might comment that I would rather be Alice in Wonderland than the Red Queen, running around crying: "Off with their heads".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: No reply.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I knew you would bring us back from fantasy to the real world.

May I respond to the Hon. Member's question by saying that we have already stated that we oppose this action by the Americans. It is against all their trading partners. Its impact is inconsistent with GATT. It is inconsistent with their own commitments. We will take appropriate action.

• (1425)

REQUEST THAT TRADE NEGOTIATIONS BE SUSPENDED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's last answer is right. It is inconsistent with GATT. It is inconsistent with the Auto Pact. It violates the understanding with the Government of Canada. The Government was opposed to all these actions in the past and has got nowhere.

Simply, if the Americans do not reverse this tax, is the Government at last prepared to say to the Americans that they are not demonstrating good faith in free trade talks and is the Government prepared to tell them that the talks, are over until they come to their senses and start treating us in a fair manner?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have attempted to explain to the Opposition that running away, turning our backs, or walking away from the table, does not help overcome this kind of harassment from the United States. The only thing that will overcome it is to sit down and conclude a free trade agreement between Canada and the U.S. which we could have in place in about 18 months.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade in response to the recently imposed tariff said: "All the more reason to continue trade talks". Yet experts on both sides of the border, and the President of the United States in his letter to Mr. Packwood have said that the U.S. would never give up the right to countervail—

Mr. Crosbie: Is this method acting, George?

Mr. Baker: —regardless of any trade talks. My question is for the Prime Minister. How does the Prime Minister explain this completely contradictory situation and a glaring contradiction on the part of the Minister?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Economic Council has explained the benefits of freer trade arrangements with the United States by saying a free trade agreement could lead to 376,000 new jobs.

ATTITUDE TOWARD UNITED STATES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will this Government sign an agreement with the Americans under which they will be free to impose duties—a duty here, a duty there, duties everywhere!

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): By God, Mr. Speaker, it is time for Turner really to worry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I commend my colleague for asking such a relevant question. I think that the Minister has already pointed out the benefits and problems which, of course, flow from such a complex negotiation—$150 billion a year between two partners is bound to create serious and complex problems. However the Economic Council of Canada released today a very comprehensive report entitled "Changing Times" in which it explains that the benefits for Canadians may turn out to be the creation of hundreds of thousands of new jobs.

I should think that, notwithstanding the temporary setbacks, my colleague will agree with me that these jobs are justification enough for us to remain at the bargaining table to conclude a comprehensive agreement with the Americans because it is in the national interest of Canada.

QUEBEC SUMMIT MEETING

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister not feel at this stage, with each of these attacks which has hit this country and with each of these assaults which has hit our commerce, that the agreement he had personally with Ronald Reagan has been definitely transgressed? Does the Prime Minister not feel that the good faith which lay behind that has now been destroyed?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member is ignoring the reality of the situation. There was nothing in the Shamrock Summit that said U.S. laws, or Canadian laws, must be immediately ruled out. It was very clear that the U.S. system in place and the Canadian system in place must continue. Their legislation must continue until such time as it is replaced with a trade treaty that will provide for the kind of remedies the Member is discussing.

• (1430)

ONTARIO POSITION ON LUMBER NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Shamrock Summit committed both countries to respecting the other as fully as possible and to working as strongly as possible against protectionist moves. The Minister knows that.

My supplementary question to the Minister, since she chooses to answer in these cases, is, how does she intend to continue negotiations on the softwood lumber case since the Province of Ontario has decided that it will not participate in those negotiations?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the provinces are the owners of the resource in this case. The Government of Ontario has participated in these discussions because it owns the resource. I have been advised that officials are meeting tonight to discuss what strategy is open to us, and to analyse the decision. Members of the U.S. Commerce Department are here today discussing this issue, and officials from all Governments, I am advised, are meeting tonight to discuss it.

FORGET COMMISSION—FINANCING OF OPERATIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As the person responsible for the Government, will he tell this House if it is correct that the Forget Commission has been financed from the unemployment insurance account in the amount of $5.8 million so far? If so, who approved this highly irregular expenditure of moneys destined for the unemployed, and under what authority?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Forget Commission was a commission Canadians generally had been waiting for to assess the system, and I think it is perfectly normal Canadians should assume responsibility for the costs of this commission. Perhaps the Hon. Member will recall that in 1981, the Gersberg Task Force on Unemployment Insurance, chaired by Mr. Gersberg and under a Government the Hon. Member has known quite well, was basically financed in exactly the same way.

[English]

RESPONSIBILITY FOR FINANCING

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not answered the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: That was an internal committee and quite different from a commission recommending the cutting of benefits for the unemployed. Does the Minister think it proper that a fund contributed to by workers and employers for the unemployed should be used to finance a commission like this? As well, has he checked on the legality of such an expenditure in light of Section 135 of the Unemployment Insurance Act?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the financing application was filed with Treasury Board, and I think it is that Department's role to ascertain the legal propriety of commission financing. Whatever your assessment may be, and I think it is a rather hasty one because the Commission has yet to submit its report, I think the entire procedure was perfectly normal and it is normal that Canadians who contribute to an insurance fund should help to assess the system with a view to approving it. I think that is perfectly normal.

[English]

RATIONALE FOR DECISION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister on the same subject. How can the Government justify spending in this fashion money which would otherwise go to the unemployed? Is this not like asking the lambs to pay for the slaughter?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is entirely beside the point. The unemployment insurance benefits of recipients are in no way concerned here. There is no question of reducing in any way what these people have received. There is no connection whatsoever.

[English]

REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are very upset by the use of that money in this fashion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. McDonald: Since these objections have been raised by the unemployed themselves, will he reimburse the fund so that no unemployed person will be injured by the Forget Commission, as the Government itself promised?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said earlier. Canadians agree that we should assess the unemployment insurance system and make the necessary improvements. It is quite normal that Canadians as a whole should contribute to this fund. I think this is perfectly acceptable and generally accepted.

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—ECONOMIC COUNCIL'S PROJECTION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. As indicated by the Prime Minister, the Economic Council of Canada stated that if we enter into a trade agreement with the U.S. it could very well result in a gross increase of some 375,000 jobs by 1995. Will the Minister advise the House if, according to the Government's own calculations, there will be a net increase or net decrease in employment and, if so, by how much?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the report was just released today. I have not had a chance to examine it in any great depth so I cannot respond directly to the Hon. Member's question. I would like to point out that the report indicates that Canada's future lies in such trade talks, and maintains that it would benefit all sectors of the economy.

CANADIAN CHEMICAL SOCIETY'S REQUEST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. In a telegram to the Prime Minister the Canadian Chemical Society states, and I quote, that "there will never be another Nobel Prize awarded in Canada if the Prime Minister goes ahead and tears down the scientific foundation which was built up over decades". So my question to the Prime Minister is this: Will he promise to agree to the request made to him by this society, namely to save the agency which has contributed to the training of Nobel Prize laureate John Polanyi?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out to the House on Thursday, Dr. Polanyi did the work which led to his Nobel Prize at a university which will be one of the main beneficiaries of a program we have put in place which will produce $1 billion of new funding over the next five years.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, where is the Prime Minister hiding? Why does he not answer a question that was directed to him, not to one of his lackeys?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. Members know that the Prime Minister may answer a question, may not answer a question, or allow a Minister to answer a question. A proper supplementary is to assist the question to be asked, not to engage in argument about who answered the last question. Will the Hon. Member put his question?

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I will try another one on him. In his book in 1983 the Prime Minister promised to increase funding for the National Research Council by 20 per cent. Why has he broken this firm promise? Why has he cut the budget of the NRC by some 30 per cent since he took office a sorry two years ago?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, again I wish to ask the Hon. Member why he insists so seriously on destroying the morale of the NRC.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: There has not been a 30 per cent cut. The NRC will experience a net increase, not only of funding but of person-years, in line with the new priorities assigned to it over the next five years.

INQUIRY WHY UNEMPLOYED RECEIVING BENEFITS MUST PAY FOR FORGET COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We already know that the Forget Commission will recommend cutbacks of $620 million in benefits to the unemployed in the Maritime Provinces, $930 million in Quebec and $400 million in British Columbia. Can the Minister explain why the unemployed who are receiving benefits must pay for the Forget report? Is this not tantamount to asking a condemned man to pay before going to the gallows?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As one can see, Mr. Speaker, any story can be made up. There is no connection at all between the Forget report recommendations and the second part of the Hon. Member's question. I can only repeat what I said earlier. When we want to improve a system, it is altogether normal to appoint a royal commission of inquiry and this is not the first time it has been done in this country, but it is paid for by all the people who contribute to the unemployment insurance fund. And this time we only did what has been done in the past, as I said.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if the Liberals did this before the Conservatives, they were both wrong.

REQUEST THAT COMMISSION BE FINANCED FROM GENERAL REVENUES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): This report is going to be the toughest blow to unemployed people since unemployment insurance was set up 40 years ago. Therefore, will the Minister now guarantee that he will withdraw that charge from the Unemployment Insurance Fund and have it paid out of general government revenues?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have no commitment to make in that respect today.

SERVICE CUTS—RATE INCREASE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On August 14, 1984, the then Leader of the Opposition, the present Prime Minister, stated: "The Progressive Conservative Party feels that Canada Post's current program of rapid debt reduction is unrealistic, and is the underlying cause of problems with regard to both declining postal service and ventures into ill-conceived schemes to generate greater revenue".

Will the Prime Minister now explain why he is allowing Canada Post to slash service in every community in Canada while there has been a four-cent per letter increase since his Party has formed the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I just want to repeat, for the benefit of the Hon. Member, that this Government's continuing concern for the needs of all Canadians is reflected in the recommendations of the Marchment Committee which consulted with Canadians across this country. The Government wants to ensure that we can have better service at a lower cost, and of course the Canada Post Corporation is preparing a plan to that effect, a plan that the Government has under consideration. When we are ready, we will make the plan public, as soon as possible.

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL TABLE PLAN PROMISED TWO YEARS AGO

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

We have been promised a plan to deal with the situation at Canada Post for two years now, and a second increase in the price of postage stamps has already been announced, which makes four cents altogether. When will the Government keep its promises and table the business plan they have been promising us for two years?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat taken aback by my colleague's impatience. First of all, there has been no confirmation of an increase in postal rates, and second, I may remind the Hon. Member that the previous administration seemed to have as little regard for the impact of reducing the deficit at Canada Post as it did for improving postal services.

ABORTION

COLLECTION OF STATISTICS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Recently Statistics Canada decided to stop gathering statistics on abortion. As a result, the Department of National Health and Welfare indicated that it may continue to gather the abortion statistics. Would it not be more effective and cost-efficient to let Statistics Canada continue to gather these abortion statistics since it has the necessary mechanisms in place? Will the Minister rescind the previous stop order issued in August?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me a chance to inform the House about a situation I think is very important. Two meetings have been held by officials from my Department with the Department of National Health and Welfare, and I am waiting for their report. Mr. Speaker, I can give the House the assurance that both as a woman and as a Member of this Government, I am anxious to introduce a program that faithfully reflects the situation existing today in Canada with respect to therapeutic abortions. I shall therefore be watching developments very closely.

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED SERVICE PRIOR TO POSTAL RATE INCREASES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Would the Minister be prepared to assure Canadians that he will improve postal service before he approves increases in postal rates?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the Government intends to deal with the concerns of Canadians by improving service while reducing the Corporation's deficit. We will try to deal with that in the way which we feel is best. We will make it public as soon as we are ready.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister relates to my first question. Will he not assure Canadians that before he approves any postal rate increases or any other increases in costs for Canadians with regard to postal delivery he will improve the service?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the same question as I answered previously for my other colleague. I would like to reassure my hon. friend that we have received the corporate plan. It is under examination and, as soon as we are ready, we will make the proper announcement.

FISHERIES

ALLEGED ILLEGAL FISH LANDINGS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On Friday, October 17, The Chronicle Herald of Halifax reported:

> As much as half of the fish landed in Nova Scotia is taken illegally in a massive black market fishery that could net fishermen between $40 and $65 million this year in unreported catches—

This report has been confirmed by the Minister of Fisheries in Nova Scotia and also by the industry. What immediate action does the Government plan to take to investigate these most serious allegations?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is away on government business today. I will certainly bring the question to his attention. I know that the matter is being looked at now. He will have full information when he gets back to the House.

REQUEST FOR INCREASED DEPARTMENTAL RESOURCES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in light of those allegations will the Minister now admit that the Government is heading in the wrong direction in fisheries management? There have been cuts on the scientific side, the biological side, and in enforcement, protection and management. Will the Government change direction by increasing personnel in those areas in order that proper quotas will be set and adhered to in the future?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what world the hon. gentleman is living in. I can assure you that it is not the real world.

Mr. Henderson: Tweedledee and Tweedledum.

Mr. Crosbie: If you want to shout me down, I am a gentle soul and you can do it. The Hon. Minister of Fisheries announced within the last two weeks increased resources for scientific and research purposes in eastern Canada—

Mr. Tobin: How about enforcement?

Mr. Crosbie: —including the fishing district of Newfoundland and, in particular, St. John's.

FUTURE OF PERSONNEL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The NRC is telling the 200 employees who have been given their notices that there will only be 40 to 80 jobs in the expanded space program which the NRC will be operating, and no new jobs in biotechnology. Will the Minister tell the House what plans he has for those people who have been laid off and will not find jobs in the space program? Can the country afford to lose the work of these highly trained and skilled people?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I have told the House before, the reallocations will not come into effect until the fiscal year 1987-88. I am very confident that none of these people will be laid off. There have not been any lay-off notices as the Hon. Member wishes to imply. I am totally confident that, due to the techniques which have been put in place by the Government, there will not be any lay-offs, that most of the people will be reassigned. As you know, an early retirement option has been offered and a number of people are considering it very seriously. I am confident that there will be no lay-off notices issued.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in answer to earlier questions the Minister said that he would suspend cuts in programs which have to do with safety because of the importance of safety. Would the Minister consider suspending all the cuts and referring the entire question of funding of the NRC to the Standing Committee in order that it can hear witnesses and discuss the whole thrust of the Government's proposals?

• (1450)

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in line with new national priorities, the Government is reorganizing all of its assets. As the Hon. Member knows, the National Research Council represents roughly 10 per cent of the total government effort of $4.2 billion of research and development and science related activity.

I am confident that the integrity of the programs that he has outlined in his question will be preserved. If the safety and health of Canadians are involved, unless there is another agency of the Government that can perform that work, I have undertaken to review that decision. However, I am not inclined to overrule the Board in the manner that he has suggested.

MULTICULTURALISM

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM COUNCIL—REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF VICE-CHAIRMAN

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for multiculturalism I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. It concerns the confidential McCreath report which basically concludes that the Canadian Multiculturalism Council is nothing more than an appendix of the Conservative Party of Canada. The Government has surely read the report. Therefore, will the Prime Minister assure the House that he will seek the immediate resignation of the Vice-Chairman of that Council, Mr. McCreath, and order an immediate and full investigation into the affairs of the Council so that the credibility and the integrity of this national advisory board can be quickly restored to enable it to do its work on behalf of the ethnocultural communities from the Pacific to the Atlantic?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism is not in the House, we will inform him of the question, and he will give the Hon. Member a reply as soon as he comes back.

[English]

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is good at making speeches about ethnocultural Canadians across the country but when it comes time to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member knows that the Minister to whom he has directed a question is not in the House. I think it is appropriate for a short supplementary, and a pointed one.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I ask him once again if he will come to the defence of Canada's multiculturalism policy by seeking a clear and immediate resignation from the Vice-Chairman of this Council, and instruct his officials to conduct a full investigation so that the reputation of the Council can be fully restored and protected.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Miniser of Employmment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism answered this question last week, and I think if he were in the House now, his answer would be the same.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DETROIT INCINERATOR—POLLUTION CONTROL DEVICES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the United States Environmental Protection Agency's incompetent bungling of its responsibilities with respect to the installation of decent pollution control devices on the giant Detroit incinerator, what specific representations has the Department of External Affairs made to the United States Government to do something about this serious threat to the health of the citizens of Windsor?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have made several representations. The Hon. Member asks for a specific indication of those representations. He will understand that I will have to inquire to get that kind of specific detail, which I will do and present it to him.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, is the Secretary of State prepared to ask the United States Government for a joint reference to the IJC and, perhaps more usefully, following the recommendations coming out of the Shamrock agreement on air pollution, to ask the President to intervene personally to overcome this $17 million barrier to decent pollution safety on a $400 million incinerator, or will the Prime Minister be singing at the next Shamrock meeting: "When Irish eyes are tearing, sure the pollution steals your breath away."?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House consider that and other environmental questions to be very serious.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): So do we.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They are not subject to trivializing verse.

Mr. Murphy: Are you insulting poets?

Mr. Crosbie: The NDP are no better when they rhyme.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the Minister please give the answer, and would Members on the other side ensure that he can give that answer.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, if it turns out that the best way to get a speedy solution to this question would be to refer it to the IJC, of course we would agree to that. If it turns out that another route would yield a better result, we will do that. I need not remind the House of Commons that this Government, through its representations on acid rain and other environmental questions, has already made more progress in our discussions with the United States than previous Governments did in several years.

FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Last week the Auditor General claimed that he could not offer a comment on the CBC's financial situation because of the deplorable state of its books and the loss of $57 million. Since this is the first time that an Auditor General has been unable to report on the financial statement of a Crown corporation, will the Minister advise the House what initiatives she has taken or intends to take to investigate this apparent incompetency of the CBC management, above and beyond the audit which the CBC management itself has commissioned?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, concern about the new financial management system of the CBC has been expressed by the Auditor General, by the Chairman of the CRTC, and indeed by others. I share those concerns. As the House will know, a task force of accountants and financial analysts, headed by Marcel Caron of Montreal, has been appointed to look into the CBC's new financial management system to determine what is wrong with it, whether or not it can be fixed, and what are appropriate solutions. The answers to those questions will help to determine if there is, or if there can be, the necessary public confidence in the financial management of the CBC. That report will be forthcoming in November.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PHASING OUT OF LEAD IN GASOLINE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What criteria did his Government adopt in delaying the phase out of lead in gasoline until the end of 1992 despite the urging of many groups across the country that this would be damaging to the health of Canadians?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member said, the Minister of the Environment has taken a leading role in this issue and has clearly stated the period by which lead in gasoline would be removed. If the Member looks at that record I think that he will find it is well within the criteria that he also used when he was in government.

Mr. Caccia: If one looks at that record one really finds it very difficult to understand the decision.

ROYAL SOCIETY'S REPORT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Is he aware that the Royal Society points out, on page 111 of its report, that the phasing out of lead from gasoline can be achieved within three years? Why the delay until the end of 1992, which is against the public health interest of the nation?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the final report of the Royal Society of Canada's commission on lead was released on October 15 of this year. The Hon. Member should know that there were a number of recommendations, one of which he has mentioned here. For instance, there were 30 recommendations, a number of which apply to my Department. Among those issues, we are looking at lead in canned foods and how we can relate this to the industry. This goes back to 1975. When I look at that long period of time, we have been moving much faster in two years than the previous Government did since 1975.

DISARMAMENT

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week the Prime Minister said that the Government told President Reagan before the Rejkavik Summit that Canada stood by the Secretary of State for External Affairs' January 23 statement that: "Our stance toward SDI research is rooted in the need to conform strictly with the provisions of the ABM treaty". In his meeting following Rejkavik, did the Secretary of State support the American position on star wars or did he stand by his Government's position that development outside the laboratory violates the ABM treaty?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is positing a distinction that does not exist. As he may know, I will be making a statement to the House tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock. Copies will be made available to his Party by nine o'clock in the morning. As he knows, this is a highly important and complex field. I look forward to there being an opportunity for the kind of informed and calm discussion on this question that has characterized the approach of this Parliament to these questions for most of the last two years.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I wish the Secretary of State had answered my first question.

ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILE TREATY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, does the Secretary of State for External Affairs want a superpower compromise that would allow ABM development or does he stand by his January 23 statement that: "To deviate from a policy of full compliance is to threaten the credibility and hence the viability of arms control"?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we believe the ABM Treaty should be strictly complied with. There should be no doubt about that. As the Hon. Member will know, being a close student of these matters, there is some question as to what precisely the ABM Treaty provides. That is a matter to which I will be referring tomorrow and I look forward to the participation of the Hon. Member, or representatives of his Party, on this very important and complex question.

PANEL OF CHAIRMEN

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise the House at this time that, pursuant to Section 5 of Standing Order 92, the Members appointed to compose the panel of Chairmen of Legislative Committees, together with the Deputy Speaker and Chairmen of Committees of the Whole, the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole and the Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole, shall be as follows: Lise Bourgault, Howard Crosby, J. Robert Howie, Fred King, Arnold Malone, Allan McKinnon, John Parry, Gordon Taylor and Marcel R. Tremblay.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED MISLEADING OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier in Question Period when the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) answered my question, he misled the House in that he compared the Gersberg Inquiry to the Forget Royal Commission. Gersberg was a public servant working in the Department of Employment and Immigration and conducted an internal inquiry at the request of the Minister. The Forget Commission was appointed under the Inquiries Act and it is not and was not normal that it should be financed through the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: The Minister has misled the House in answering my question. He is a public servant.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has really raised a question of debate. I do not think it is a question of privilege. I listened carefully and the Hon. Member was very careful not to say there had been any intentional misleading of the House.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m., the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) had the floor.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock earlier today I was pretty well along in my remarks on Bill C-2, which is an Act to wind down the Crown corporation known as Canagrex. I had indicated we were of the firm opinion that the corporation would not have delivered in the manner in which it was originally intended and that the Government had taken some very significant steps in the interim to provide the extra support and assistance to our agricultural industry in Canada, primarily the changes with the Export Development Corporation and extending the loan guarantee for one year. In addition, the export credit would be extended to up to three years.

I indicated as well that in a short period of time we expected that some $200 million worth of trade would have taken advantage of these additional credit support programs and that we were actively seeking additional activity in trade missions, providing help and financial support, not only for trade missions which were formed within Canada to travel into the international market-place, but also we were actively encouraging trade missions from other countries to come to Canada to look at the commercial activities which could be developed.

I also indicated that Agriculture Canada, in close co-operation with the Department of External Affairs, had developed an export market information system. We would have clear identification within the two departments for the private sector to seek help and advice from both departments.

To be successful in expanding our trade horizons, I believe we must consult with industry, not just on trade matters but as a part of our over-all planning process. That is why my department is now involved with the industry in charting a course for the future of the major agricultural commodities which Canada produces. Six commodity groups have been established at Agriculture Canada, one for each of the major commodity areas, grains and oil seeds, red meat, poultry, dairy, horticultural and special crops. Teams involving both Government and industry are working together to create development plans for each commodity group. These plans will give Agriculture Canada and the industry a shared vision of where we are going and what we have to do to get there. By planning together, we are ensuring that resources in my department for research, market development, trade policy, or whatever, are in line with the plans of each commodity group. In this way, our resources will be targeted more effectively and more efficiently.

Time and time again the Government of Canada has demonstrated its high priority commitment to trade. As was said in the Speech from the Throne, our future is trade. The Government has faith that, given the proper environment, Canadian industry can compete abroad and can tap new trade opportunities. That is why we have targeted the Pacific Rim as a key region of the world for trade development.

This past April, my department, together with the Canadian International Development Agency and the Department of External Affairs, co-sponsored the China Challenge Meeting here in Ottawa. The seminar brought together federal and provincial government people with representatives of agriculture and the food industry to share information about trade development in that very large country with its very large potential market. My department, together with other government departments, and the private sector, has taken numerous steps to build on Canada's potential as an agricultural trader. We have demonstrated in tangible terms that the key to agricultural trade development is not necessarily through the creation of new Crown corporations or new agencies. Rather, it is through the creation of a positive environment for exporters, through a stronger commitment to interdepartmental co-operation and through closer working relations with the private sector.

In retrospect, it is clear that the initiative announced two years ago to dissolve Canagrex was indeed a sound and responsible initiative, one which was in the best interests of Canadian agriculture. I would, therefore, urge all Members of the House to support the Bill which is presently before us.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am not very happy to see this Bill before the House again today. However, I am glad to respond to the comments made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). Bill C-2 is essentially a plan to disband the Canagrex organization, to drive a few more nails into the organization so as to complete the work the Government started on black Thursday, November 8, 1984 when it cut all the funding to Canagrex. The Minister went into great detail with respect to what a great job he is doing, especially in terms of cuts.

When the Estimates regarding Canagrex were before the committee he told us he would outline in great detail how much funding there would be and how the Department would compensate for the loss of Canagrex. If one looks at the Estimates for the Department of Agriculture one is hard-pressed to find any mention about additional funding for agricultural commodity exports. In fact, the Government proposes to cut some $50 million per year, as well as deindex department funding. I will never understand how agriculture, which is facing the most difficult times since the 1930s, can survive and regain its equilibrium with a Government that is constantly cutting to the bone the funds and resources of the Department of Agriculture. For instance, this year some $23 million will be cut from the research budget. In 1984 the Farm Credit Corporation had something in the order of $825 million in its budget for agriculture loans. This year that figure will be reduced to around $200 million.

We have a Government which is hell-bent on assisting something in the order of 25 per cent of farmers get out of farming, and it brags about it. It is incomprehensible for me to understand how the Minister can face farm organizations and act as if he is really doing something for farming when in fact his motto is cut, cut, cut. Our agriculture economy faces incredible difficulties in terms of the grain sector, the farm debt crisis and the cost-price squeeze. It seems to me that the Government has its priorities mixed up when it puts at the top of its list in a new session of Parliament the destruction of Canagrex, when some two years ago the money was already removed from it.

Canagrex was designed to provide and assist the export by producers of relatively small quantities of agricultural commodities into the international market. Nowhere in the Government's manifesto of 1984 is there a comment about destroying Canagrex. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked about making Canada a superpower in terms of agriculture exports. Yet the Bill before us would destroy Canagrex. It is like many other promises made by the Government at the time of the 1984 general election.

For instance, at that time members of the Government said they would allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer agri-bonds so that farmers could have access to reasonably priced funds. That promise was never kept. They also promised to revise Section 31 of the Income Tax Act to reflect the principles of equity. That promise was never kept. They promised to expand agriculture research and development by providing greater assistance to agriculture colleges to amend tax policy to encourage private sector investment. Those promises were never kept.

It was promised that a board of authority would be established to control tobacco production and prices. That promise was never kept. Members of the Government promised to expand the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act into a national farm and forest rehabilitation Act. That promise was never kept. They promised to allocate the necessary funding to assist producers in refinancing their loans at prevailing rates. That promise was never kept. They promised to impose an effective fast-track tariff policy so that responsive action could be taken to protect producers by imposing import restrictions when necessary. That promise was never kept. One need only ask the Canadian Cattlemen's Association in respect to that promise. Increased exports and stimulated production to meet those export demands were also promised. The Government's answer to that seems to be to destroy Canagrex, an agency designed to assist those producers of agriculture commodities which form a large magnitude of exports sales.

If Canagrex were operating today, and if the money had not been cut off two years ago by the Tory Government, the domestic and export sales of agricultural commodities would be promoted. Market analysis would be under-way in foreign countries. In fact, I think that in the five months that the entity was in operation it conducted analyses in some 17 countries. The markets were looked at to see how our agriculture commodities would have to be adapted, packaged, processed or delivered in order to make those sales.

Mr. Malone: How many silos did it build?

Mr. Foster: I would be glad to get to that, if the Hon. Member would listen.

If Canagrex were in operation today it would be working with producers in terms of group shipments for smaller volumes of commodities which are not practical to ship individually but where several sales from across the country could be co-ordinated and assisted. If Canagrex were in operation the Government would be working in joint ventures with producer groups. The organization had the authority and power to provide insurance arrangements in working with 150 different countries. Obviously, such arrangements vary from country to country, and the Minister talks about the Department of Agriculture doing this. He does not know the capacity in the Department for making those types of insurance arrangements. Canagrex would have been able to provide assistance for various commodities in terms of storage arrangements, market development and promotion in other countries.

Canagrex had worked with many producer groups. Often the work was parallel type work, but it was not always co-ordinated. For instance, we heard tell of various provincial pork marketing boards being in place in various countries at the same time. Canagrex would have been able to assist in the co-ordination of that type of activity. It would certainly have been of great assistance to agriculture commodities in smaller volumes.

Although we are a free enterprise society and believe it is the best and most successful way to make an economy operate, much of the world is controlled by communist governments or other non-democratic forms of government which want to deal state-to-state. Canagrex would have given us an opportunity to have a Crown corporation act on behalf of the state in dealing state-to-state. This certainly takes place now in terms of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is also in place in terms of the Canadian Dairy Commission. However, there are dozens and dozens of other commodities for which there are not big national and international agencies to co-ordinate sales. That is what Canagrex would have been able to do. There is an endless list of items in terms of grain, corn and other commodities in that range, as well as in poultry, livestock, red meat, some dairy items and horticultural products in which there would have been an opportunity for Canagrex to make a tremendous contribution to agricultural exports.

We know that every country in the world is becoming more and more aggressive in marketing, whether it be by providing subsidization, loan guarantees, insurance or help in market penetration techniques. Clearly Canagrex was the instrument chosen by the Parliament of Canada to do that kind of export development.

In the United States, the GSM 102 legislation provides assistance for export sales. We are very conscious of the fact that the United States is providing something like one bushel in every three or four to promote export sales. In that regard, we do have the Canadian Wheat Board which does not have that kind of subsidizing capacity, at least not at this stage, but for many other commodities which do not benefit from big national marketing agencies like the Wheat Board or the Canadian Dairy Commission, Canagrex was the agency that could have been used.

Practically every other country has an agency like Canagrex. France has the SOPEX export development agency and Germany has the CMA agency, which is a joint venture between the Government of the Federal German Republic and the wholesale producers and processors. Australia has its Economic Development Council and Britain has the British Export Council. Israel has the Israeli Export Institute. It goes on and on, yet this Government chose to destroy Canagrex by cutting off its funds almost two years ago.

In the few short months the agency did operate, much of its time was spent meeting the requirements of the Treasury Board for its terms of reference. In spite of that, it assisted in the sale of some $80 million worth of produce and was negotiating for another $100 million worth of sales. It had completed some 15 studies on the market potential of various countries around the world, it had handled some 300 requests from within and without the country, it had helped some groups in completing lines of credit and it had promoted some pork sales in the Pacific Rim. It had promoted canola sales in eastern Europe and Latin America and had promoted sales of white beans in Cuba and several Latin American countries. It had promoted and assisted in sales of bull semen in China and eastern European countries. It had assisted in promoting sales in Central America and was dealing with the honey producers of Canada for sales in Europe. It had completed some preliminary discussions with regard to oats and barley for feed grains in the Eastern Bloc country of Bulgaria and had promoted the sale of soya bean meal to countries like Cuba, Kenya, Tonga and the Ivory Coast.

Canagrex was a Crown corporation which was really gaining momentum when the Government decided to destroy it. When the President of the Crown corporation appeared before the Agriculture Committee, he told us that the Minister of Agriculture was very sorry that the Government had unilaterally taken this decision. I believe that most farm organizations across Canada were very disappointed as well.

It seems like the Government is bound and determined to put the screws on the small producers. It does not want to see the producers of relatively smaller volume farm commodities having the same advantages as those who use the services of massive national agencies like the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission, agencies which promote the international sales of products. It is clear that the Government is working as the agent of big business. It has knuckled under to the pressure of the big international grain and commodity traders and has decided to destroy this small Crown corporation which would have been so beneficial to so many countries.

Instead of dealing with the major issues that face agriculture today, issues like whether or not the Government will provide a deficiency payment for western grain and eastern grain and corn producers, we are dealing with a government Bill designed to destroy a Crown corporation that helped and encouraged Canadian farmers. We hope that the Prime Minister's allusions to negotiating something with the Premier of Saskatchewan will not be as phoney as the announcement he made last April 30. At that time, the Prime Minister announced that he would give major help to Canadian producers amounting to some $300 million or $400 million.

When examining the details of that major announcement the Prime Minister made before he flew over the heads of western agriculture producers and landed in Vancouver, we find that essentially he was stopping the theft and larceny that had taken place for almost eight or nine months by removing the excise tax of two cents per litre that was imposed last September, just in time to catch western grain producers when they were taking off their crops. He kept the excise tax on until all the fuel tanks were full in April and May and then removed it in the spring. He was able to pick up almost an entire year's worth of the two-cents per litre excise tax, amounting to some $50 million or $60 million. When he announced that he would take off this excise tax, thus saving Canadian farmers some $150 million, he should have instead apologized for ever imposing it in the fall of 1985, a time when Canadian agriculture was facing one of its most difficult periods. As well, he should have made the removal of the tax retroactive to last September. There was certainly no justification for the imposition of that excise tax at that time.

The second part of the Prime Minister's announcement was that he was going to freeze the freight rates. He made this announcement in his grand style, making headlines, but the substance of it really had no bearing in reality. Usually the national press write this stuff, whether it is true or not. Within 24 hours, the announcement that the Prime Minister would freeze the freight rates was exploded when it became clear that all he had done was ask the Department of Transport and the transport agencies to recalculate the volume of grain that was to be shipped. They found out that it would be reduced from some 31 million tonnes to around 28.5 million tonnes, so in fact there would not be any justification for a freight rate increase in any event.

The third part of the Prime Minister's announcement was that he would increase the range of the domestic price of wheat. This was to benefit farmers by some $250 million to $300 million. He announced several times that the range would be increased. In fact there was another such announcement in July. It is one thing to increase the range but it is another thing to increase the actual domestic price of wheat. The announcement of several hundred millions of dollars was supposedly to help farmers but it has borne very little fruit for Canadian farmers who face the worst financial crisis since the 1930s.

We are awaiting the deficiency payment about which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture have been talking. Is it another smoke and mirrors exercise, or will it in fact provide some additional cash benefit? Farmers do not need smoke and mirrors; they need cash.

Likewise there was the announcement in the February Budget wherein the Government was to provide some $730 million at 6 per cent to farmers under something called the commodity based mortgage. When the officials of the Farm Credit Corporation appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture, we found that the $730 million at 6 per cent was not quite as good as it sounded and that in fact the $730 million was over a two-year period. Therefore the amount of assistance is about half the $730 million each year. Also we found that the 6 per cent only applied to certain producers. Others will pay as high as 9 per cent. As the value of their commodity rises, they will pay 2 per cent more than any regular FCC mortgage over the 10-year life of any commodity based mortgage. The announcement makes great headlines, but it helps only a couple of thousand farmers per year for two years. It helps only those farmers who already have FCC loans. In fact there is no new principal or capital money for farmers. As the value of a commodity rises, the individual farm producer may well pay more than what he would pay under a regular FCC mortgage.

I hope the Minister will get around to announcing whatever he will do on a deficiency payment. He has never used the term "deficiency payment", so that is why we are suspicious. It might be something other than a deficiency payment, but we hope that it will be real money, not a smoke and mirrors slide show such as we saw on two or three items.

One of the greatest concerns of Canadian producers is that the Government, in its desire to establish a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States, will bargain away our marketing and stabilization systems in return for advantages which some industry other than Canadian agriculture will receive. Our national marketing programs are imperfect instruments for providing farmers with adequate incomes. In my opinion they are certainly better than the mechanisms which are being used in the United States or in the EEC. In fact, I understand EEC is already looking at the supply and management regimes for our dairy industry.

Another concern faced by agricultural producers is just exactly what the Government plans to do in the free trade negotiations. It seems prepared to continue regardless of how many countervail duties, surcharges, or other instruments are put into place. There is great concern in the agricultural community about the Government's commitment to agriculture. At a time when agriculture is facing the most difficult time in our history, we have received very minute assistance programs in the farm debt crisis.

We saw the Government dither for almost a year in the establishment of Farm Debt Review Boards. In the case of Ontario, as far as we can determine, over 100 people have applied for farm debt review but not a single case has been heard by a farm debt review board panel, although the Opposition co-operated last June to see the legislation passed in two sittings of the House, including consideration in Committee of the Whole. There is great concern in many parts of the country—and certainly it is the case in Ontario—with regard to the operations of Farm Debt Review Boards. Will the Government make them operational? So far it has only appointed three of the ten board members. When will they actually start to assist farmers facing serious financial difficulties?

We are disappointed that the Government brought back this Bill. We believe that this Crown corporation has a valuable place in our agricultural export promotional scheme. We do not believe that the massive committee structures about which the Minister has talked are nearly as flexible, given the variety of assistance required to meet the complex situations involved in agricultural commodity exports in a world which is increasingly competitive. There is much pressure from countries around the world with flexible, effective organizations and instruments for handling agricultural exports.

We oppose the Bill. We hope the Government will make up its mind not to pass it and to leave the Canagrex organization and the legislation in place to be used at an appropriate time. It has a useful role to play in Canadian agriculture and in Canadian agricultural exports.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, as a lead-in to agri-food week this is a rather pathetic effort on the part of the Government. However, I will attempt to address the Bill before us.

I am somewhat at a loss. Having listened to some Members who are now on the government side of the House, and knowing what they thought about the Canagrex legislation, I point out that we are not dealing with a piece of legislative nicety today; we are not cleaning up the books on the racks, so to speak. More of something in the nature of an Irish wake is what the government members have in mind. I do not really know how to behave at a wake having come from a central and northern European background, Madam Speaker. I have not had any experience on how to conduct myself at wakes or even what is expected at a wake. Yet I perceive, on listening to statements made by government Members in and out of the House, that what they see in their mind's eye with this piece of legislation is Canagrex draped in some great box in the middle of the Chamber. I think some of them even see Canagrex as a rather large Irish pixie or elf with a scowl on his face and his hands crossed over his chest covered by a great green stetson hat. They are hoping to bury this particular apparition and set it out Lord knows where.

• (1540)

Because we do not know where the Government is intending to take us or what it is proposing to do, it seems ironic that for agri-food week one of the first and perhaps the only thing that will be done, initiated by the Government, is to put to rest a corpse that became a corpse on November 8, 1984 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stood in this House and announced unbeknownst to the Canagrex board, staff or the farming community that it would no longer be alive after that date.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: The Member says hear, hear. That is part of the mentality with which the House, the country and the farming community have had to contend on this issue. Despite the presentation of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) today, I think there were a number of things, with the activity the Government took with regard to Canagrex, that showed all too clearly from where this Government was coming. After telling the country for months that it was a caring Government, that it was going to be a consultative and a responsible Government, this little agency, fledgling that it was, a little furry monster maybe a few months old, was unceremoniously clubbed to death on November 8. There was no meeting of the Minister with the board, no announcement to the directors or to the staff. There was no discussion as to what Canagrex had done. The Minister and his ministry have not even done an assessment of the organization. It was simply decided apparently in the Ministry of Finance that Canagrex would no longer live, and so it died. Today we are being asked to bury the remains and forget that farmers need, in spite of the death of Canagrex, many of the facilities and services this agency was designed to provide.

The Minister in his speech pointed out that he has continued to use External Affairs to make inquiries about the potential for agricultural trade. He has continued to use the Export Development Corporation which is able to provide grants and contributions for agricultural exports, something very difficult to get before. We assume that this is an improvement. He is saying that within his own Department he now has an export information centre for those groups, individuals and agencies that are interested in attempting to export some of their product. He is telling us that he hopes that his Department of Agriculture will co-ordinate and co-operate in the development of trade in agricultural products.

Without going over the same ground, I think we did hear very much the same speech from a previous Minister of Agriculture, whose ghost I think we are trying to bury today, when he talked about Canagrex. There was a very real problem in getting the various Departments and branches of Government together when a farmer or group of farmers wanted to get together a product for export to another country. They had to work through three different Departments of Government. These groups, usually fledgling themselves, had to find a market for a product fairly new to them, but they did not have the kind of financing and background by way of experience to carry it off quickly. Canagrex was supposed to be a gathering point, a listening post and a point where producers, through their co-operatives, their growers' associations, as individuals or processors, could say: "Here, we are expecting to have X number of tonnes of product for surplus to be sold out of the country in the next year or two, where are we likely to sell it? Where can we get the kind of technical information needed for shipping, financing, insurance and export guarantees that we will need in order to make these operations viable so we can expand the growing of peas and blueberries and the production of maple syrup and of honey? This whole host of products that in the scheme of things, in the over-all accounts of Canada, do not amount to much in billions and billions of dollars but they are important to a great many of the small farmers in Canada. They are produced in relatively small amounts in many provinces. As a result of that, producers do not have an opportunity to put all their production together under one roof through one warehouse to know how much they have to export.

The various provinces, being in control as they are of production and marketing by our Constitution, have agencies, many of them with exactly the same powers that Canagrex has except that they can only operate within the small confines of the area of a particular province. They can take the product outside, but if these agencies are only producing a small amount of products not produced in great volumes, such as the ones I have mentioned, to be a legitimate marketing effort they would have to combine with other provinces. There is no methodology for them to do this, and that was the reason for Canagrex.

However, it was very quickly decided, before Canagrex could become useful and competent, that that was not the vision of the future this Government saw. These dreams of becoming exporters of commodities from Canada that are not now well known to importers around the world were, in the opinion of this Government, doomed to failure and have been left as dreams in the minds of small farmers scattered here and there across the country who still attempt to grow peas, blueberries, alfalfa seeds, grass seeds and still attempt to produce maple sugar, syrup and honey. They have no way of combining their production under one agency that can offer them to the best advantage. We have repeated here very early in the mandate of this Government the kind of smashing of dreams that went on in the high-tech industry under the previous Conservative Government when it decided to do away with the Avro Arrow. That plane was very close to being finished, ready to be put into production, but the Government smashed it before it could show a return.

I am not sure that the Members who applauded the killing of Canagrex have much understanding of how long it takes to set up an export agency and get it going. Any exporter could have told them quite clearly that you cannot in a few months put together a crew, record large sales figures and a final balance in the black. That is just not the real world. It may be the mythology which members of the Government are trying to pass around, but it does not wash in the real world.

We had a series of myths being sold by government Members who were offering a series of arguments as to why this kind of facility should not exist in Canada at the national level. They raised the bogey of nationalization. They tried to leave the impression that Canagrex was going to be able to seize private property and take away the right of farmers and processors to own property. They misread all sorts of clauses in the Bill and used scare tactics right across the land. I do not think very many rational farmers were convinced by that, but it did create a momentum of its own and brought all sorts of strange philosophers out of the woodwork writing letters and calling phone-in radio shows and pointing to all sorts of things they feared from Canagrex. They had no reason to fear those things because they were not in the legislation. Yet it took on a life of its own, fear built upon fear, and pretty soon it came to the end on November 8, 1984, when the Minister of Finance decided that Canagrex would breathe no more. Agricultural producers, however, are still left with a lot of the problems they had before the attempt at putting Canagrex in place. They will continue to have them.

I draw to the attention of the House a recent report on farmers' incomes produced by the Agricultural Council of Ontario chaired by Del O'Brien. What they found is not a surprise to those of us who are close to agriculture, but it may have been a surprise to some of the economists and others who occasionally look at agriculture. They found that even though the value of agricultural products sold from some of these small farms was not great, when you looked at farms of any size and looked at farm families on an individual basis, you found that average income from very small farms right up to the extremely large farms does not vary that much. On those very small farms with sales of agricultural products between $2,500 and $20,000, which is a fairly small farm by commercial standards, and there are over 26,000 families on those kinds of farms in Ontario, the average family income was $25,131. When you look at the very largest farm in Ontario, those with sales of $150,000 and over, of which there are not quite 5,000, you find that the average family income was $27,472. There is very little difference.

One of my colleagues has just handed me a note to let me know, just for the benefit of government Members, that Del O'Brien was a Tory candidate in the elections of 1968 and 1974.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He has learned his lesson finally.

Mr. Cassidy: Two-time loser.

Mr. Althouse: What they discovered in Ontario—and I am sure we would find the same thing holding true in the rest of Canada—is that farm families must have a certain income and they earn that income most of the time by going off the farm to other jobs. They noted that even those very large farms that generate revenue in excess of $150,000 often have one or more family members working off the farms as well.

The reason I bring this up is to point out that many of these smaller farms are operated by people who want to become full-time farmers but, because of the pressure of economic forces, are forced to earn a considerable amount of their income off the farm. Yet they tend to be the kind of people who experiment, who produce experimental crops, who get into new areas of production which were not thought of 10 or 15 years ago, areas of production which do have an opportunity for expansion and which could be exploited in international trade terms. However, they are very small operators, as you will see,

Madam Speaker, from those kinds of incomes. They do not have a lot of money to go out and develop a market for a new product and catch the attention of the Chinese, the Taiwanese, the Filipinos, the Germans or the Austrians. They have to rely on an agency like Canagrex was seen to be, to provide some of this preliminary work. It could provide services in the language of the country they were targeting, do the initial spade work, use contacts throughout government agencies, and begin the process of finding a market for this new product.

These farmers are now back on their own little plot of ground dreaming their individual dreams, knowing that they can produce peas or honey or alfalfa seeds, those kinds of small products, efficiently and could increase their production four, five, six or maybe even 10 times, but there is no place for them to market the product. There is no agency in the private sector interested in these products unless they can make a profit. They are not willing to spend a year or two or three in market development so they can, in the long term, show a profit and expand the agricultural industry in this country. The private sector can only afford to work on very short-term solutions with products which they may trade in occasionally when there is a real shortage in the part of the world of which they have knowledge. They may run out then and offer some contracts for some peas, for instance, which is an occasionally popular crop in my particular corner of the country. Then, within two or three years, they are no longer interested in purchasing peas, and farmers who have built up their production capacity sit with the crop in their graneries wondering what to do with it.

Canagrex had a function to serve. Unfortunately it did not fit in with the philosophy of the current Government and so had to die the same death as the Avro Arrow had to suffer. Canagrex will be relegated to memory. Perhaps some people will maintain the memory and continue to think of ways of combining the products from various provinces to permit their export in sufficient volumes to sustain an exportable position. However, in the meantime the Government is determined to do away with the corpse of the creature it created two years ago.

At this wake we can only say that it showed great promise, its life was very short, and it had no opportunity to show what could be done or to prove that it was filling a niche which needed to be filled in Canadian agriculture. Its successors have yet to fill the holes which were left. There is very little opportunity for an agency to accumulate products from across provincial boundaries for export. The Ag Products Board can buy products, but usually it only operates when extreme surpluses of product hit the market. The Ag Products Board generally only takes those products off the market so that the price does not collapse even further. It is not set up to be exporters as such, but rather as part of the stabilization and pricing system of our agricultural industry, and it has nothing to do with agricultural exports.

The Minister says that his Department will spend more time assisting with the promotion of the export of Canadian agricultural and food products. We have not seen very many concrete results from this activity. The Minister did not give any examples today even though his Department has apparently been instructed to be involved in this for the past two years. We have not seen any of the agencies which the Minister named today entering into contracts with Canadian companies, co-operatives, marketing boards, associations or other Canadian enterprises or individuals who are carrying on business in Canada to act as their marketing representative in marketing agricultural products and food products or to provide managerial, technological, marketing or other counselling and consulting services to them, except for some of those products of which we are quite large producers at this time.

We do not have much direction with regard to the very small specialty crops and products which agriculture in this country is capable of producing. We tend to ignore such problems at the moment. There is no existing agency available to Canadian agricultural exporters which will do that which Canagrex was mandated to do, that is, to enter into joint ventures, at the request of Governments, with Canadian companies, co-operatives, marketing boards, etcetra, to carry on business inside as well as outside of Canada.

There has only been one attempt in this Parliament to get the various provincial marketing boards together. One of the first Bills which the Government introduced was to permit tobacco to be marketed under the Farm Products Marketing Council. The Government still insists that that legislation not be made available to producers under provincial marketing boards which want to expand their mandate across provincial borders. The Government has taken the position that only those products which the Government prefers to name may have that privilege. Producers of all products in the country have not been given the same rights of access to marketing across provincial boundaries or to set up a national marketing agency. That has been very strictly controlled by the Government which says that only those products which have been named, namely eggs, chicken, turkey, and now tobacco, can have such access to markets.

The Government has left red meat producers, fruit and vegetable producers, honey producers and seed producers, which trade on a much smaller basis, to fend for themselves. They are free to attempt to arrange a market with Japan, for example, but they cannot afford that kind of marketing with the small volumes generated within a province. For such marketing thrusts to be useful a multiprovince effort is required. That ability has been taken away by the Government through its restrictive approach to the National Products Marketing Act and through its attitude toward Canagrex, which was a much more flexible agency through which to handle such requirements.

I regret that the Government insists on bringing this back to the House. The agency has been closed down. The members of the board are not paid. They are in limbo. It does not cost anything to leave the paper sitting on the shelf. I do not think we are using the time of the House wisely or well by spending the onset of agri-food week by killing what could have been a very useful organization, just as the Avro Arrow could have been as very useful bit of technology for Canada. We have chosen to close our eyes to the future. We have once again, unfortunately, decided to cut ourselves off from potential markets in other parts of the world and to look instead within our own provincial borders where there is no solution to be found.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Pensions—Homemakers' pension inquiry; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Science and technology—(a) National Research Council's budget (b) Number of Council's employees; the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi)—Multiculturalism—(a) Funding of Toronto organizations (b) Government policy.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, by moving second reading of Bill C-2 on the dissolution of Canagrex, the Government fully acknowledges the efforts made by Government departments and agencies, both provincial and federal, and by the private sector to promote the exportation of Canadian products. In fact these departments and agencies have taken over the goals set for Canagrex and are well on their way to concluding several export projects.

Since we are implementing the Budget cut-backs made imperative by the financial mess left by our predecessors, it is appropriate to point out that the Government is ever more intent on reducing the duplication of services while at the same time offering quality service to producers interested in agricultural exports. It can achieve this—and it is the only way given the current situation—by altering and strengthening existing Government structures and programs.

Mrs. Speaker, whether we are talking about the Agricultural Products Board, the Department of External Affairs, the Export Development Corporation or Agriculture Canada itself, each agency and department specializes in one particular aspect of agricultural trade.

Trade is a complex area that requires close co-operation between the agencies and departments concerned and, of course, the private sector. In preparing trade transactions, it is very important to have information sessions with the private sector, followed by seminars in countries seen as potential markets.

This month, for instance, a delegation from Agriculture Canada, accompanied by experts from the private sector and the provincial governments, will go to the People's Republic of China. It will also travel to Spain and Portugal, to offer seminars on Canadian dairy cattle. These seminars are aimed at giving prospective buyers the benefit of the knowledge and, especially, the experience of our Canadian producers. The ultimate goal is to conquer new markets.

For instance, for more than two years Canadian pork has been actively promoted in Japan. Nearly 1,000 stores are selling our pork products today. Furthermore, a dozen Japanese trade missions have been invited to Canada since last fall to take a closer look at our pork production. We hope they will only examine the quality of our products and not succeed in imitating our truly exceptional production methods.

I represent a riding which, though not exclusively agricultural, does have a flourishing pork producing sector. For instance we know that we now have surplus production in Quebec precisely because of the quality and the sustained efforts made by our producers to market first rate products and boost productivity in the farming community.

Still on the international scene, in Algeria, we plan to promote the sale of seed potatoes, and eventually we will look for new markets. I repeat that even though I represent a North Shore riding where potatoes are not produced in significant quantities I am pleased to point out that we have one of Canada's leading potato research centres, certainly the best in the province. Climate considerations are of course the reason why colder regions such as mine are selected to avoid seed corruption, away from the pollution of major urban centres and possible contamination, and to carry out research on and produce top quality potatoes. For over ten years now this research has turned eastern Canada into a prime quality potato producer, where new products and better quality seed have been discovered. This is happening in Pointe-aux-Outardes, a small municipality near Baie-Comeau. People are really surprised when they hear that we have such a research center on the North Shore, but it is because of our climate, and we have a good personnel and outstanding researchers. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate all the men and women who work at this center which is now well-known throughout the province and even the country.

Canada also has a great export potential. We have more and more production surpluses and we are offering competitive and quality products. Even though I could have chosen those of representatives of Quebec agriculture, I would like to quote the words of the Chairman of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, Mr. Pelissero, who asked this shocking question in the October 14 issue of Farm & Country;

• (1610)

"Should Canada quit farming"?

[Translation]

The article referred to the somewhat pointless comments of some so-called experts who have had enough of agriculture, who consider that too much money is being spent on agriculture and who believe that all Canadian farmers are crybabies. Mr. Pelissero rightly said the following:

[English]

Let's make one thing clear. Our industry's problems are many. Their roots, however, can be traced not to the farmer, but to a world market and to an industry in a state of flux.

Should Canada quit farming?

Ask the suppliers and dealers who sell $14 billion worth of equipment, feed, seed, lumber and chemicals to Canada's farmers.

Ask Canadian consumers who spend the second lowest amount of money—as a share of personal disposable income—on food in the industrialized world, thanks to Canadian farmers' super-high productivity.

Ask the one Canadian in five whose job depends on the agri-food system, Canada's largest industry. Its foundation, of course, is the farmer.

[Translation]

This statement by the Chairman of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, who was obviously thinking about his own field of interest and the good of agriculture, illustrates the importance of this industry for Canada. At the end, he asked this question:

[English]

To this farmer, asking the question "Should Canada quit farming"? is asking the question "Should Canada quit"?

For him the answer is clear. No.

[Translation]

The situation is somewhat the same for this Government which seeks in difficult fiscal conditions, which leads me to talk about those government agencies that were created, unfortunately, with all the best intentions in the world, and as you know, the road to hell is paved with the best of intentions. Whenever for reasons that are generous, and marvelous—motherhood and apple pie—government corporations suddenly crop up, those so-called Crown corporations which very soon part from government to go their own way and enter with their bureaucracy into what I would call a life of positive homeostasis, an on-going tendency to self-fattening, and very soon strike off from their vocabulary the word productivity, or doing more with less, all things which they lack. And their by-products are supplementary estimates, special budgets, special projects, etc. All that is fine when the Government in power does not care a damn for the tax dollars of Canadian men and women. But when we are faced with a situation like ours, which is to manage budgetary decline, well, this creates a number of problems. And those government agencies that were set up with the best intentions in the world end up costing fortunes without fulfilling the purposes for which they were created. Also it is extremely difficult for the Government to back-track.

What we are doing is winding down Canagrex, which, as suggested by the previous speaker, was established with the best intentions in the world. Everyone is for motherhood, expansion, and of course for setting up all kinds of agencies to support agriculture.

But what we are asking is this: At what price? Do the producers, the farmers, the guy and his wife down there working the fields, benefit directly from this? That is exactly what we are doing when we are tapping the agencies that we have, the Department of External Affairs, the provincial Governments with their own agencies, the private industry which is involved in promotion.

As we were saying a while ago, the agri-food industry is one of the most important industries in Canada. The private sector itself is playing an increasingly important role and in order to foster its own expansion, it must also be involved in promotion, and that is what this Government is asking its agencies to do, achieving more with fewer resources, to question their own performance, to give agriculture a high priority in their programs and attitudes, and to keep in mind the significance of this industry when they are promoting Canada abroad.

So, what we must do with these organizations is to assume, assure and favour the promotion and development of new markets; to seek financial supports of every kind for potential exporters, and encourage the exchange of advice in a climate of co-operation, working hand in hand with the agri-food industry. Clearly, what has been shown, I think, and I heard my hon. friend refer to Canagrex's wake . . . You know, I do not think anybody here will cry over Canagrex's demise. Absolutely nobody. As far as I know, no producer, either in my own riding or elsewhere, has shed even crocodile tears over it. The producer is more interested in finding new markets for his products, new ways to sell our surpluses; he wants existing Government marketing agencies to land major sales contracts and every interested party to play a more effective role in this country.

With respect to most Crown corporations, the view of the Conservative Government is that the concept is not necessarily bad in itself, but they must indeed be a necessary evil if they have to be established.

Our main objective as a Government is to make sure that this country and its farming community will have as many opportunities as possible to market quality products which can really compete on the international scene, and that Canada will grow to become one of the world's best exporters of products. The way things are now we feel that the mandate of Canagrex has been assumed by other agencies and departments, that the Canadian farming community is adequately served by the existing structure, and that time has come to lay to rest a corporation which like so many others—and I hope this Government will have an opportunity to take action—which like so many others, as I was saying, probably no longer has its raison d'être.

• (1620)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, first let me say how glad I am to see you in your capacity as Acting Speaker in the Chair. We welcome you and wish you the best.

I find this debate very interesting because there is a strange mythology being created by some members of the Government who believe there is no role for the Government, or for the state, in promoting exports. I listened very carefully to the remarks of the previous speaker, my colleague from the government side, who tried to develop a reasoning for abandoning Canagrex. I must say that his reasoning in trying to convince us that this was really a good idea was pretty frail, to say the least. The more you consider it, the more you must conclude, with regret, that this decision is not really in the best interests of our agricultural communities and not the best thing for our economy, particularly in certain regions outside of Quebec and Ontario, whose well-being depends on our capacity to export. We do not ask the private sector to move citizens by VIA Rail. We do it by way of a Crown agency which is publicly owned. We do not ask the private sector to move citizens within our cities. We all rely on our respective transit systems whether they are in Toronto, Montreal or Ottawa.

Mr. Malone: Taxis.

Mr. Caccia: The Hon. Member draws my attention to taxis which do in fact exist to provide movement for a small number of citizens. That is the point I would like to make. For the real promotion of agricultural commodities in a highly competitive market we need to bring to bear the total knowledge of the Government through its listening posts abroad, and a grouping of skilled people into an agency, to achieve the objective of increasing our exports as we compete with other nations.

The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) made an excellent speech just about a year ago in which he drew to the attention of the House the fact that there are countries which have already organized themselves along these lines, namely, the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel, Mexico and Greece. There are probably other nations as well. France, I believe, has a very sophisticated institution called SOPEXA. The entire European community is operating on the same principle. First there is the realization that we have a very competitive international market and, second, there is the necessity of developing the instruments which are necessary to compete abroad. Canagrex was a terrific idea.

The Minister of Agriculture, the third preceding the present Minister, if I remember correctly, gave a fantastic speech on the subject at Harbour Castle in December, 1982. Imagine, Madam Speaker, he gave a speech on Canagrex in the heart of Toronto! He did not even go out to the rural ridings. He went to the heart of an urban centre to make his case. It was a very good speech. In a nutshell, the points he made were the following: Canagrex would provide market identification and intelligence, and promotion and information services. No one can object to that. It would provide loans and guarantees, which is not such a bad idea. I am sure that many Progressive Conservative back-benchers would not mind having such a measure available.

Mr. Hopkins: Particularly interest-free.

Mr. Caccia: The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) suggests that is so, particularly if they were interest-free.

Canagrex would enter into joint ventures with private companies, marketing boards and co-operatives upon request. Canagrex powers would include the acting as agent of the Crown in negotiating state-to-state contracts, which is a very interesting feature. Canagrex would also include in its powers the providing of grants and contributions to help accelerate product development, and the promotion or provision of infrastructures. That is not a bad thought at all. Finally, he indicated that nowhere is Canagrex given monopoly power over any commodity, either in exporting or importing.

In true Eugene Whelan fashion that was not his last point. He had some furthermores. He said that the majority of the 11-member board of directors would be selected from the private sector. He said that there would be an all-industry policy advisory committee formed to help guide and monitor Canagrex. He also said that the agency would operate from a three-year corporate plan and that each year it would be scrutinized by Parliament to ensure that it was carrying out its mandate. That is not a bad idea either. He also said that after five years Canagrex would be brought before the Standing Committee on Agriculture for a complete review and that there would be a provision for an annual comprehensive review by the Auditor General. He stated that the president would receive direction from the board of directors and that the legislation would clearly state that Canagrex would not get involved in the products handled by the Canadian Wheat Board and by the Canadian Dairy Commission. I thought that here was an outline in the modern state for an export agency that was not too bad at all.

In February of 1985, the Hon. Member for Algoma asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), among other things, whether or not, in view of the success of this corporation in the to a state corporation as contemplated by Canagrex? Could the Hon. Member not see that the private community that has marketed our products so well for over 100 years of Confederation could continue to sell Canadian goods where Canadian goods can be sold and could do so at a much lesser cost than the cost of a great big bureaucracy?

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I would be glad to attempt to answer that question because it points out the real intellectual problem the Hon. Member has. He feels that if something has worked well for the last 100 years, it will serve us for the next 100 years. That is where we part company.

Evidently, the Liberal Government of the day, through Eugene Whelan, felt that the time had arrived to adopt new techniques and new ways of competing with the reality of international markets. If the Hon. Member were to carry his logic to its ultimate conclusion, he would try to sell the Toronto Transit Commission to the private sector. I invite him to try to find someone who will provide that service as effectively, safely and well as a publicly owned agency does.

We know that the Hon. Member is biased against the presence of the state in the market-place. There is nothing wrong with the presence of the state in the market-place. We have had a mixed economy for decades. If we had not had a mixed economy, we would not have Air Canada and Canadian Pacific. We would not have the CBC and CTV.

Mr. Malone: What's that got to do with it?

Mr. Caccia: A broader principle is under discussion. If the Government of the day decided to create Canagrex, it was because it felt that it would be desirable and in the interest of promoting agricultural products in competition with other nations to have such an agency. That was the Liberal position which I outlined.

Mr. Whelan went one step beyond that and said that he wanted to have on the board of directors of Canagrex people from the private sector. I suppose this would please the Hon. Member because it would mean that there would be a mix. A publicly oriented institution would be run by private citizens. That was not such a bad idea.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, in light of the question that was just asked about the ability of the Canadian Commercial Corporation to make sales, I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment further. The member of the Opposition pointed out that the Canadian Commercial Corporation is able to make the sales, and I do not argue with that. I wonder, however, if the Hon. Member would care to comment on what agency or group is now available after the demise of Canagrex to gather the products from the various provinces and farmers and put them in position so the corporation could make sales. Is that not the vacuum that Canagrex was designed to fill?

Mr. Blenkarn: No, no, no.

Mr. Althouse: It is indeed. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) says that it was not. However, I read the objectives of Canagrex and they in fact included the ability to gather together products from within the country and to act with co-operatives, individuals, marketing boards and other corporations to gather products together so they will be in a position to be exported. Right now, we lack that kind of an agency. The Canadian Commercial Corporation can indeed make a sale on those very small products that are only grown in small amounts hither and yon across the country, but only if someone gathers them together so that the corporation may do so. Without Canagrex, there is no agency to do that.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, as usual, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) makes much more sense to me than the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, if indeed Canagrex were of great importance to the agricultural community, then I would assume that western Canadian agricultural and farm organizations would be supporting the Liberal Party in its attempt to prevent the abolition of it. Therefore, can the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) indicate to the House which western Canadian farm organizations other than the National Farmers Union are today opposing the abolition of Canagrex?

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, at the time of the announcement of the measure, a number of agricultural organizations came out in support of Canagrex.

Mr. Blenkarn: No, today.

Mr. Caccia: It is important to know that that support was there at the time the measure was announced. I would imagine that those organizations had good reasons to support Canagrex. There were a number of those organizations and I would gladly list them for the Hon. Member if I only had the time to find the list among the papers on my desk.

Across the country, support for Canagrex was there. There was support for it in the House of Commons. Canagrex generated very good sales in its first year. If some of those organizations have changed their minds, perhaps the Hon. Member will have the opportunity to make that point in his speech and to explain to us why they changed their views. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that at that time, support for Canagrex was very strong and came from many organizations.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I listened to a lot of diatribe from the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and I must say that those were most interesting comments coming from an Hon. Member who does not know a Hereford from a heifer. When it comes down to the whole question of whether or not Canagrex was an accepted organization, I can tell the Hon. Member that those Members of Parliament from the regions of Canada who will go home to first year—in which it sold over $16 million worth of farm products and with another $160 million under consideration—the Minister would be prepared to reconsider his decision. Evidently the Minister was already locked in and could not give a favourable reply, as much as his heart would have moved him in that direction.

The Hon. Member for Algoma also asked the Minister of Agriculture why it is that when the United States and the European Economic Community countries are more aggressive in marketing and selling agricultural commodities we are shutting down the one organization that was set up to sell our commodities abroad. That was a very good question and a very relevant one. I suppose the Hon. Member asked the question in the hope that somehow or other the Government might reconsider this measure. As is his custom, the Minister of Agriculture gave a very diplomatic answer. He said that he wanted to make it clear that the Government would follow very aggressively the export market for agricultural commodities. He went on to say that the Government was satisfied, given the very dismal record of Canagrex—words which come as a surprise to me in light of what the Hon. Member for Algoma reported to him—that it can be done far more successfully, efficiently and effectively with officials in his Department. That reply really floored me. It is obvious that one cannot be more effective and more efficient on the same budgetary basis without creating a separate agency that will promote a specific purpose. That is what we do in many walks of life, especially in terms of discharging other public responsibilities. I am sure that in a quiet hour the Minister of Agriculture would agree that it would be more effective to do this outside the Department. I say this not because there is something wrong with the Department. Evidently, if there is a task-oriented agency which focuses on exports it can produce much more than some agency buried on the sixteenth floor which is in competition with many other occupations. The fact is that the number of officials available in any given Department has suffered very badly under the Tory administration.

The logic of this move is very unconvincing. Therefore, the Bill before us to dissolve Canagrex is one that leaves us at a bit of a loss in terms of understanding what the main purpose of the Government is. Does it want to reduce the deficit? If so, I think that it is penny wise but pound foolish. In this move it is forgoing an opportunity. It is dismantling something that could be very useful in the long term.

Why do I say that? I am convinced that, in the pursuit of regional economic development, we have to ensure, among other things, that the products of the regions, outside Quebec and Ontario in particular, because that is where the development has to take place, and their ability to thrive is essential. No one will disagree with that. As a city slicker not very knowledgeable about the details of agriculture, but nevertheless capable of putting two and two together, it seems to me that one important way of promoting regional economy—in regions which need it—would be to put in place an effective agency that would help the export of certain products that are agricultural and regional at the edges of the country. I refer to potatoes in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, and tree fruit in British Columbia. I refer to lentils and peas in Alberta, canola oil in the Prairies and evaporated milk from I-don't-know-where. There is a long list of commodities that one could produce to make a very powerful case in favour of Canagrex, in favour of this specialized agency whose dismantling we are now debating.

To retain the services of Canagrex would help the task of strengthening the agricultural economies of these provinces. So it happens that a good idea which had already been put into initial practice is disappearing. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma, has already said, we on this side of the House express our regret at its passing. It is to the credit of Eugene Whelan that this idea was launched. It was my understanding that at that time the idea was supported by small, medium and large-sized agricultural producers in many parts of the country. The idea of opening a new chapter of endeavour to make Canada more competitive abroad in a highly and increasingly competitive market situation and to adopt certain models that have been proven to be successful in other nations are ideas that appeal to everyone. I regret to say that it seems to me that we are falling back and going into the past. We are not seizing an opportunity and are not moving with the times.

It would not have cost the Governmet very much to recognize a good idea. It has recognized many good ideas of ours. Quite rightly, it adopted all our measures dealing with acid rain. In the end, these measures will serve the public interest.

The Government should have realized that Canagrex makes sense. Government Members should have realized that Canagrex is something they would want to pursue in order to give more help to the economies of the poorer regions and to keep us competitive. Instead, they gave it up. That is most regrettable.

I join with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma, in expressing the views of the Official Opposition on this matter. We thought that Canagrex would have put Canada on the export markets map and would have given us an opportunity, in increasingly difficult trade times, to have an edge which we otherwise would not have.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member is really speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party and is indicating that the Liberal Party does not believe in the role of private enterprise in marketing products. Clearly the Canadian Commercial Corporation is a vehicle for marketing products to countries that believe in state ownership of the means of production and distribution. That corporation can handle that.

Is it the view of the Liberal Party that the only way we can properly market our products is by turning over the marketing make the claim that they had a part in dismantling it will go home to a hero's welcome.

• (1650)

It was unaccepted in the regions of the country for two reasons. First, they did not want the inefficiency which attaches itself to government structuring and organizations which only Liberal and NDP Members can envision as being fruitful. Second, Canagrex in and of itself was destroying by the buy-sell clause the very mentality of the farm community across Canada—the enterprising nature and spirit of those persons. It is on those two principles that this issue is following. It is those two issues which the Parties opposing the dismantling of Canagrex do not understand.

Mr. Althouse: Do you prefer that farmers give it away?

Mr. Malone: The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) should know that since we have taken the money away from Canagrex, Canada has increased its sales of agricultural products abroad. In the area of grain we have made more contracts, not less. In other markets we have moved in to sell more. The Hon. Member stands here trying to pretend, as would a member of the NDP, that if he sees a problem or thinks there is one, the thing to do is to build another government tower for another staff or another bureaucracy. They hope, as did the Liberals for 15 years or 20 years, that it will somehow be a symbol for the people. They think that the people can be given a building and a staff of bureaucrats and that somehow the problem will go away. The truth of the matter is that the Progressive Conservative Government and its caucus members believe that we have all the instruments within the Department and other Departments of Government to do effectively everything Canagrex is doing and save Canadian taxpayers $6 million.

Members of the Opposition would rather have spent the $6 million. They would rather have had a building so that they could say that the building and its bureaucrats would be out there trying in some way. We have had a rendition of Eugene Whelan's speeches to try to persuade us to retain Canagrex. That is its own unpersuasiveness. It was under that stubborn administration that the buy-sell clause could not be removed, and that buy-sell clause was offensive. In my province, and very particularly in my constituency, we would have lost $2 million with the buy-sell clause in the Canagrex organization in exports by the Alberta Swine Breeders Association to Mexico and the Pacific Rim.

The opposition Parties laud this wonderful organization. They say that it would have enhanced agricultural exports. It would have destroyed parts of the country with the buy-sell clause because it would have destroyed the private initiatives which could have taken place around the world.

Mr. Althouse: No.

Mr. Malone: I hear the groan of the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre. He thinks it would not have happened. I do not know why that Hon. Member, who lives in my constituency, flew down here. Surely he would have done enough research. Why have organizations in the Province of Alberta, with the exception of the NFU, been making representations day after day? Why would they do that and fly down here if there was no concern? In his speech the Hon. Member said there was no reason for concern. There was a reason for concern, and that is why it is going.

Mr. Althouse: Why didn't they kill the provincial agencies which had those powers?

Mr. Malone: Also the Hon. Member said in his speech that this was like a funeral or a wake. This is the happiest funeral I have ever been at. The "awake" will come when he goes home and his constituents find out that he tried to retain that national government organization which would make Canagrex sit at the desk with farmers as they arrange their management programs. He wanted a buy-sell clause which would ensure that everything was done through the Government of Canada rather than by independent entrepreneurs making farm decisions in the way farmers want.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). He tried to leave the impression that destroying Canagrex was the first thing that we as a Government had done for Canadian agriculture. There is not enough time in the rest of this week to outline what we have done for agriculture. More than 317 initiatives have been undertaken by the Progressive Conservative Government for some $5.6 billion. The best the Liberals could have done in a four-year period was $2 billion in agricultural assistance. We have a commitment for $1 billion more in payments which will go to farmers because of crop conditions this year, so the amount of assistance we have provided is approaching $7 billion. No Government in the history of Canada has made such a severe commitment to our grain producers.

I will not list all our achievements. When Hon. Members rise and defy the fact that there has been the removal of the farm fuel tax, the fact that there is a $500,000 capital gains exemption, the fact that amendments were made to the Western Grain Stabilization Act which put money into the hands of prairie farmers, and the fact that there have been some 317 different achievements, they are not being very frank with their constituents back home. However, that does not concern me so much because I know that in farm communities there is a recognition that while world conditions are very difficult, they have a Government which is sensitive and is trying to make agriculture work effectively for them.

Let us talk about the international market. The most important thing we can do is to make the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade accept the notion that what is happening universally is unfair to food producers. We would expect not to have the continual pretending of opposition Members that nothing is being done. We would expect them to shoulder the wheel in the interests of food producers. We would expect them to applaud the actions of the Prime Minister (Mr.

Mulroney) in Tokyo and the actions of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in Uruguay. For the first time in history agriculture will be a part of the discussions at GATT. No one should expect that in one negotiation with one set of signatures we will have the capacity to turn it around to the point where Europe will suddenly have zero agricultural subsidies. Such an expectation would be unrealistic. However, I am optimistic that we can turn the corner so that farmers on the basis of efficiency can compete in the international market, and it will not be a case of treasury against treasury as is the situation today. We would benefit from the assistance of the opposition Parties in that objective. If we had a full Canadian force, if we had the NDP and Liberal Members saying that we need those measures at GATT, it would be helpful to Canada and its farming community. Instead we get the pretence that nothing has taken place when they know otherwise. I submit that that is not a very responsible way to treat the agricultural community or to discuss the whole question of Canagrex.

I should like to refer to the remarks of the Hon. Minister today. He indicated that the success of agricultural trade did not necessarily depend upon the creation of another building. Too often in the past Governments have had the tendency to create special organizations and agencies to do a job when what was really needed was a greater drive and initiative on the part of Government.

The creation of Canagrex by the previous Government exemplifies that trend perfectly. The Hon. Minister stated earlier today and made it abundantly clear that Canagrex was created to do a job which could be done just as well within the existing agencies of the present Government, namely, the Agricultural Products Board, the Department of External Affairs, the Export Development Corporation and Agriculture Canada. For proof of this fact, Madam Speaker, you need only examine the record of the present Government since it came to power two years ago in the area of agricultural trade. The Government has made real progress in expanding foreign markets for Canada's agricultural goods and services and it has done so without Canagrex, without additional agencies, without additional millions of dollars and without wasteful duplication of services. Instead, the present Government has made efficient, effective use of existing resources and manpower, and I submit the taxpayers of Canada will applaud such an initiative. This was accomplished by improving co-operation and co-ordination between the federal agencies and the provincial Governments. That, I might add parenthetically, was quite a break from past traditions when the previous Government despised its role vis-à-vis the provinces. We met in our first year more times with provincial counterparts than the previous Government did in the four years of its existence. That whole relationship of making Canada work is dependent on making these joint jurisdictions work, and agriculture happens to be one of those.

The first commercial shipment of Canadian strawberry plants was sent to Spain on October 7 from two Nova Scotia nurseries. The sale of these plants was the direct result of private sector co-operation under the Canada-Nova Scotia Agri-Food Development Agreement. The shipments are Canada's first entry into the Spanish strawberry plant market and substantial additional sales are likely to follow.

In recent months, Maritime producers have found new customers for their hay in the United Kingdom and in the United States. With both federal and provincial assistance under the economic and regional development agreements as well as support from the federal Export Expansion Fund, this developing industry has been able to demonstrate to foreign buyers the quality and value of its product, particularly as a feed for racehorses. Canada's share of this highly specialized market is steadily expanding, with Ontario producers now servicing customers in Florida. Considerable potential remains for further growth.

Canada has recently gained a foothold into the lucrative Soviet markets for dairy breeding stock and semen. Working together with the assistance of the Export Expansion Fund, federal, provincial and industrial representatives have mounted a campaign which could eventually lead to tens of millions of dollars in sales for Canadian cattle producers. The Export Expansion Fund was also used to assist public and private sector agents in cracking markets for swine breeding stock and semen in South America. Again, the leverage gain today may well lead to larger sales in the future.

May I again add that in light of all the successes we are having in that regard, the Liberal and the New Democratic Parties would still like to build another highrise tower, fill it with bureaucrats and pretend somehow that in difficult times instead of getting present agencies to work together by holding up a symbol, that symbol might look good to the people back home and they could pretend that they are doing something. We would rather not pretend or live with symbols. We would rather look to the record and point out that we have success on paper and that success speaks for itself.

Agriculture Canada, again through the Export Expansion Fund, has entered into a very successful relationship with Canadian engineering firms specializing in agricultural and processing machinery. A number of foreign buyers have now made trial purchases of Canadian technology, and further sales are anticipated. Expansion in this industry would help promote the economic diversification to which the Government of Canada has long been committed. These sales involve a lot of differrent products and a lot of different countries, but in the end they all stem from the same thing; the skill and the imagination of industry, provincial and federal agents. This is what the agricultural producers and processes of Canada need today, not new agencies, not new buildings and bureaucracies but an innovative, aggressive approach to marketing that will allow us to fulfil our potential as an exporting nation without placing a further burden on our Treasury.

I might add, again parenthetically, Madam Speaker, that the success has also come about because of the will that is demonstrated by the Ministry to make those sales and to show leadership and a desire to knock on doors in the international markets. It is not going to be a case of developing a new agency, putting a name on it in neon lights and pretending for a moment that that in and of itself will guarantee some success. The Government has proven it can take that approach within available resources. I would emphasize that all the advances I have mentioned have been achieved within a framework of fiscal restraint.

The Government has applied that same initiative in the efforts to reduce trade restrictions and unreasonable export subsidies in the international market-place.

Through bilateral negotiations with the United States, our Government is attempting to remove trade barriers which restrict access to our largest export market. Agriculture is well represented in these negotiations through the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), who is a member of the federal Cabinet special subcommittee overseeing the talks; farm industry representatives on the International Trade Advisory Committee, the main link between negotiators and the private sector; and a sectoral advisory group on international trade devoted exclusively to agriculture, food and beverages. This body, which comprises some 30 members drawn from all branches of the agriculture sector, is the largest of all the special advisory committees dealing with those trade negotiations. The Government of Canada is actively pursuing the liberalization of agricultural trade at the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations.

I want for a moment to add one other aspect about freer trade and say that I am one who believes—and I know there are others who share this view—that had Canagrex been established in a large office tower staffed with people as an institution that may not have been the symbol the opposition Members wanted for greater trade, it may well have been the symbol that would have restricted trade vis-à-vis the United States, which is our largest market. That would have been held as one of the symbols that could have done us the greatest damage in the long run.

The Government of Canada is actively pursuing the liberalization of those trade negotiations, as Members will know from the Uruguay initiative. I commend the Government for its efforts to end the international trade war which is threatening the livelihood of our grain farmers. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pointed out in his address to the House on October 3, our farmers are being penalized through no fault of their own. They are being hurt and they have done nothing wrong.

As part of its deep commitment to agriculture, the Government is taking appropriate and effective action to end the injustices prevailing in global markets.

• (1710)

I hear the word "time", Madam Speaker, and I see my time has expired. Thank you very much for the opportunity to improve the mood and optimism of the Hon. Member for Davenport, the Hon. Member for Algoma, and the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre concerning farmers and their ability to run their farms without a large government bureaucracy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member seemed to be going off sort of half-cocked, not really knowing much about the Canagrex organization and the fact that it was operating for several months. It was able to do a great deal while it was allowed to operate. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) do not seem to think producers of smaller volume agricultural commodities should have the same kind of assistance that we see offered to producers of major commodities through organizations like the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian Dairy Commission. I would be interested in knowing why the Hon. Member is opposed to these national organizations. I am really hard put to understand why producers of these smaller volume commodities should not have the same kind of assistance in marketing. I just do not follow the logic. I am sure the Hon. Member is not suggesting we should get rid of the Canadian Dairy Commission or the Canadian Wheat Board.

Canagrex, of course, would operate as a small agency to assist the smaller volume producer. I would be interested in knowing why he feels the producer of those commodities should not have the same kind of assistance from a small and specialized unit like Canagrex as it was established and operating a couple of years ago.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member thought I went off half-cocked. I want him to know that I am fully cocked. The Hon. Member tries to make out these sales he talks about as being rather significant and large. I submit that any objective analysis will show they are quite insignificant and small. Moreover, there is virtually no data or logical reason to believe that the sales made by Canagrex with its $6 million budget, buildings and people, would not have been made anyway. Those sales would have been made regardless. That is on the record and easily understandable. Another fact is that the information Canagrex obtained, it obtained from the Department of Agriculture.

What the Hon. Member is talking about is $6 million now, and 10 years from now it would be an amount that would make $6 million look pretty small. This is just another example of the fact that we are in different political Parties and I, for one, am glad we are. He is simply saying that as a Liberal he would build more buildings, create more bureaucracy, hold up a symbol, and believe it will do some good.

He asks about the Wheat Board and the Dairy Commission, am I going to destroy them. That is the difference between a Progressive Conservative and a Liberal. If you are a Progressive Conservative you ask your farm organizations what they want to do. They wanted a dairy policy and they got one. Before that the farmers said they wanted a Canadian Wheat Board and they got one. I am proud to be in the Party that was responsible for that. However, the overwhelming evidence from farming organizations all across the country was that they did not want Canagrex. The Progressive Conservatives are in government now and most of those organizations are saying "thank goodness" because now they do not have to live with Canagrex.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member says that farms across the country did not want Canagrex. In fact they did. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the National Farmers Union and many other groups expressed grave concern when the Government destroyed Canagrex on black Thursday, November 8, 1984.

The Hon. Member says these crops are very small. I have a list of items from 1979 which might have benefited from Canagrex if it had been allowed to function. The list includes things like rapeseed oil and cake, $113 million worth of exports; soya bean cake and oil, $13 million; mustard seed and mustard flower, $21 million; animal feed, $168 million. The list goes on and on. In the horticultural field there are things, such as apples and apple juice, potatoes, peas, plus many other products, the sale of which could have been helped by an organization like Canagrex.

The Government seems bent mainly on reducing budgets. For example, the budget of the Department of Agriculture was reduced by some $50 million. The budget of the Farm Credit Corporation was reduced from about $825 million in 1984-85 to around $225 million this year. At the same time we see other Governments, such as the Ontario Government, increasing their budgets in these areas. The Liberal Government of Ontario has increased its budget in this area over the last 12 months by some 39 per cent. Yet the federal Government is cutting back at the very time when the world marketing of agricultural products is the toughest it has been since the 1930s.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I am not sure if this is going to be the easiest question or the hardest question I have ever answered. The Hon. Member reads off a long list of things which might have benefited from Canagrex if Canagrex had been around, along with a lot of other assumptions. The fact is that much of what the Hon. Member was reading off is what I referred to during my speech when I said we had achieved the sale of these products through existing agencies. That is not good enough for the Member for Algoma. He wants to spend $6 billion to build a building and then fill it full of bureaucrats. Today we essentially have one-stop shopping for agricultural sales into the international market. We have consolidated. There is a central area to which you can go which is working and effective. Had Canagrex proceeded we would still have the tripartite system of External Affairs, Agriculture, and Canagrex, and there would have been the continual government chase-around which was typical of the Liberal administration which confused everyone and was not making the export market work.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, as the Member for Essex—Windsor it is essential that I participate in this debate if for no other reason that out of friendliness to my next door neighbour. There is a tremendous contradiction in what the Conservatives are saying in this debate. It is obvious that they have not studied the question and sorted it out. When they talk about international trade they say it is necessary and crucial that we expand our trade. For example, the Joint Committee on International Affairs concluded last spring that above all as a trading country we must dramatically expand our capacity to export our commodities and manufactured goods and to explore new markets to find new customers and customers for new products.

Yet the first thing that the Government succeeds in doing after taking power is to do away with an agency which was established expressly and explicitly to achieve that new market penetration, that expansion of trade internationally and that development of new product interest by potential customers in other parts of the world in what we produce in Canada.

I fear that there is simply no way that the Conservative Party can escape the fact that it is totally, completely and foolishly contradicting itself. On the one hand it says that it wants expanded trade and will push as aggresssively as possible to get it, and on the other it is saying that it will destroy, demolish and do away with an agency which, in its early months of operation, was quite successful in doing precisely what they now say they want to do. That demonstrates to us that this is not a discussion about a particular agency. It is a conflict within a governing Party which, when you boil it down, believes in ideology.

The Government believes that the private sector must somehow, no matter what the situation, be exalted, buttressed and turned into government policy. This is in contrast to the approach of accepting that there are realities in the world which must be dealt with and confronted. Most times those realities can best be confronted by assisting the private sector, but that assistance to the private sector cannot become a holy grail, it cannot become something that is so enmeshed in the brain of the governing Party that it becomes an end in itself.

We must have the kind of pragmatism which recognizes that when it makes sense to use a government agency we should create such an agency to do the job. It made sense in the past in many cases to create and use such government agencies. They have been used successfully by our railroads and airlines. Simply to assume ideologically, as the previous speaker did, that because it is not the private sector selling the products of Canadian agriculture abroad somehow it is original sin, is to miss the facts of the history of our country.

When one looks objectively to see what Canagrex actually succeeded in doing, one sees that it was not the great fire-breathing dragon trying to get rid of the private sector as the previous Member suggested. It was, instead, a pragmatic, sensible agency meant to try to broaden our markets throughout the world and penetrate new markets which we had not previously succeeded in penetrating.

For instance, I quote from the comments of the President of Canagrex when he spoke before the Standing Committee on Agriculture in 1985. He described some of the things which Canagrex was actually carrying out. He said, "We were determined that we would leave the buying and selling to the private sector", which makes quite a mockery of the heart of the argument of the previous speaker who said that what was really devastatingly wrong with this dragon called Canagrex was that it was going to buy and sell. The head of Canagrex told us quite clearly and bluntly that it did not intend to buy and sell in the private sector. Instead, the objective of Canagrex was to "facilitate sales and provide information". What more common-sense, pragmatic approach could you possibly look for than that? I could go on with some of the actual facts which demonstrate what Canagrex was all about. I will continue to quote from the remarks of the President and Chief Executive Officer of Canagrex. He said:

> For example, we had a pork producer accompany our mission to Singapore. We had a potato producer travel with us to Cuba. We also had tobacco growers travel with our group to Egypt, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, where we initiated the negotiation process to assist in selling tobacco to these markets.

• (1730)

I might say that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) would have far less of a problem facing his constituents in Elgin if he could point to Canagrex and say that the Government managed to find new markets through Canagrex which have succeeded in expanding their potential market, despite the fact that tobacco consumption in Canada is declining so dramatically.

Mr. Story went on to say:

> We were in the process of building close relationships with central buying agencies and private buyers in these and many other markets. We also conducted similar market development programs in the Phillipines, Colombia, Panama and Venezuela. The valuable market information which we gathered was fed back to the Canadian industry.

It was not sent back to that building of bureaucrats which the Member who spoke previously held up as somehow being the symbol of Canagrex. Rather, the information was fed back to the Canadian industry itself where it could do a good job in opening up new markets and providing that industry with new potential.

I see the Minister ducking in and out behind the curtains because he is undoubtedly embarrassed by the fact that tobacco farmers in Elgin County could have gained so much more from a Canagrex that was carried forward in this common-sense, practical way.

I am certain that is why the Minister first supported the notion of Canagrex when it was brought before the House. It was only through the pressures from his colleagues from the west, who I believe have always perhaps taken too ideological an approach to the farmers in our country, that he was forced to change his mind. I believe we must recognize that this common-sense, practical agency had managed to build new markets and new potential for all of us. Let me also say as an economist that it had done so at a most remarkably cheap price.

The question was asked: What was the cost to the Government of all aspects in establishing Canagrex? I want the House to remember this price when we are given this image of a huge building full of bureaucrats. The total price in establishing Canagrex was $2.659 million. Let us compare that to the free trade negotiations which have cost the Canadian taxpayer almost $2 million and so far have brought us nothing but disaster. When I make that comparison I cannot expect that less than $3 million for Canagrex would have represented some kind of colossal expenditure which would bankrupt the Canadian taxpayer. It is exactly the contrary.

In addition to that very low cost we must recognize that this agency was also succeeding in expanding its activities considerably. We see the same answer from the Minister of Agriculture, which tells us quite clearly that we had total sales of $16 million which Canagrex carried out. In addition—noting that this is not the head of Canagrex but the Minister who is providing this answer—there were transactions in process worth a potential $100 million, expected to be finalized by March 31, 1985. This agency, which cost less than $3 million, established this dramatic record within the first year of its operation. It achieved a sales record of potentially close to $116 million.

We have the further testimony from the head of Canagrex itself, which suggests that this was very much underestimated. Speaking to the same Standing Committee on Agriculture, he suggested that as of March 11, 1985, Canagrex was involved in potential projects of approximately $162 million.

It seems to me, as trade critic for our Party, that this kind of trade expansion, the penetration of foreign markets, and tremendous thrusts into the rest of the world are exactly what we should be doing in the context of our agriculture. This expansion is being severely limited by the United States Farm Bill. I believe all of us in the House have expressed our regret about that Bill, but as one who went to Uruguay as an observer with the GATT negotiations which took place there, I must address the previous speaker's comments that, "We have worked as hard as we possibly can in order to reduce that pressure from the United States with respect to the U.S. Farm Bill". In fact, through the Cairns group in which we rather weakly participated, and through the GATT conference itself in Uruguay, we experienced a major defeat which should be recognized as such.

While it is quite true that the question of agriculture was put on the agenda, it was not taken on in such a way that it would have the kind of fast track urgency that all of us—observers and delegation members—wanted desperately carried forward in GATT. In fact, we were outmanoeuvred and outsmarted by the European Community. We did not play as forceful and strong a role within the Cairns group at GATT as we should have. Consequently, we did not get what we had hoped for in our attempts to improve world trade. So we have to look for other pragmatic, sensible ways to expand our trade world-wide. We cannot expect GATT to come to our rescue. Canagrex was one such approach. I have to express, if only for my neighbour in the green stetson, my sense of regret that the Government so ideologically did away with that institution at a time when in fact it could have contributed greatly to this country's agricultural exports.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) would be kind enough to explain some of the philosophy we heard in the House today since I know he is an expert in economic and political philosophies. Would he explain what seems to me to be a contradiction in some of the speeches we heard today, particularly the speech of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), wherein he said he had to oppose the Canagrex legislation. His constituents made him do it because of the powers which were listed in the Canagrex legislation, particularly those powers that permitted the agency on occasion to buy and sell.

Could the Hon. Member explain to us, out of his knowledge of economic and political philosophies, why it would be acceptable, and seems to be acceptable, for the Hon. Member for Crowfoot and his colleagues to accept those kinds of powers in provincial legislation, since virtually all of the provinces have identical or nearly identical provincial legislation permitting them to market, buy and sell and trade agricultural products, but not federal? Does this have something to do with a Conservative philosophy of federal and provincial rights, and so on, or is it simply something which is very hard to understand?

Mr. Langdon: I think, Madam Speaker, that the first answer to that is to say it is something which is simply very, very hard to understand. It is yet another contradiction in the whole series of contradictions which have been demonstrated today in the debate on this Bill. And not just today. This Canagrex Bill has ground its way slowly through the House of Commons for some years now. One hopes that eventually a more practical, common-sense approach to the promotion abroad of agricultural products could somehow be taken by Members opposite.

I would just like to speak about that for a moment, if I may, not from a somehow philosophic or econometric perspective but just from the perspective of farmers within my constituency. Hay producers, for instance, in my constituency, would like very much to have markets explored throughout the world for some of the output they produce. Soya bean producers are devastated by the prices they have to accept this year as a result of the Chicago market perambulations. Wheat producers are hit by the U.S. Farm Bill and the subsidized sales of U.S. wheat, which have reduced their prices devastatingly. There are the corn producers. One could continue the list ad infinitum. These farmers face a tremendous crisis, and I think it is very important for a government of any stripe, but especially a government which sees itself as more pragmatic and more sensible, as the Minister, I know, likes to think of himself, to look at how this agency could have helped such farmers and farmers in the Minister's own constituency to reach other markets. I think a lot of the opposition to Canagrex in fact was bureaucratic opposition from the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, and so on. I think those are the real culprits in Canagrex's death. But the Conservative Party is its pallbearer and it will have to bear the regrets of the country for what it has done.

Mr. Hopkins: I have a couple of questions for the Hon. Member, Madam Speaker. When the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) spoke, I am sure he succeeded in confusing some people because he started talking about the sale of grain. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the relationship between grain and Canagrex. When the Hon. Member for Crowfoot began his remarks he said that the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who had just spoken, would not know a Hereford from a heifer. I think he would agree that sometimes a heifer can be a Hereford.

Mr. Wise: And the reverse is true.

Mr. Hopkins: I really think that remark indicated he was accusing the Hon. Member for Davenport of something that he himself did not appear to know anything about. Would the Hon. Member enlarge upon the statement of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot concerning grain and Canagrex? I am sure that must have been rather confusing to some people.

Mr. Langdon: I would certainly not want to enter into a lengthy debate on the Hereford-heifer debate which faces us. In Essex County, unfortunately, the dairy industry has been badly reduced in recent years. I would say that the comments of the previous speaker entirely overlooked the fact that the Wheat Board would continue to be the most prominent agency by far for selling grain. That is as it should be because it has a fine record. Canagrex was not expected in any sense to replace or undercut the activities of the Wheat Board.

I think the only conclusion to which one can come is that in this issue, as in so many others, the Conservative Party is fundamentally confused and contradicts itself. It talks about providing leadership to the country but in fact it provides confusion. It cannot sort out the kind of approach to agriculture, to trade, to industry, or to the whole range of our economic problems that would give this country the very badly needed direction which is so desperately needed in Canada in the 1980s.

Mr. Hopkins: I have a second question, Madam Speaker. When the announcement was first made of the dissolving of Canagrex, the Government announced that resources would be made available to the Department of External Affairs to continue the work of Canagrex. However, it would appear that this has not been the case. An examination of the Estimates for 1985-86 reveals no commitment in this regard whatsoever. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot made a great uproar about the $6 million initial cost for Canagrex. In my view, $6 million is nothing but petty cash to the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). I cannot see why the Hon. Member would complain so much about that.

Is the Hon. Member aware of additional funds which have been made available to promote the sale of agricultural products from Canada to other countries, particularly Third World countries?

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, it is the case that in ministry after ministry cut-backs have occurred as opposed to expansions. This is true whether we talk about agriculture, external affairs or trade. It is simply not possible to see the expansion that the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) suggests took place. I think the Hon. Member's speech contained even more than the usual confusion which we so often hear from Conservative Members.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Madam Speaker, I too would like to congratulate you on taking the chair. I wish you every success in your new role. We in the House will try to do our best to make your life reasonably happy.

The debate today has been a very interesting one in that it has brought out the philosophy, particularly that of government Members, that anything sponsored by Government in the way of sales will never work. With respect to Canagrex as an instrument of sales it is interesting to note that its board of directors consisted in the majority of people from the private sector. That is almost tantamount to saying that once people from the private sector move into government they lose all their previous principles. I do not buy that. It is important to have people from the private sector in sales positions in government. It is important to have a good mix which will provide an ongoing experience to offer to them. In turn, those who are used to the business world will be very much aware of how to deal with the business community. I think this was an excellent arrangement for the management of Canagrex.

We heard from Members opposite about the tremendous job the Government has done in the field of agriculture. Some 317 points were mentioned but not listed. They sounded something like the 338 promises that we heard about a little over two years ago.

I would like to refer for a moment to the 1984 election campaign. In particular I would like to refer to the Tory candidate against whom I ran. In fact, some people say that I ran against two Tory candidates. One was the actual Tory candidate and the other was his twin brother, the Mayor of Brampton. It was not unusual for the Mayor of Brampton to visit my constituency for several days. It was difficult to tell one brother from the other. It was very handy to have the two of them roaming around the riding at once. So I feel I can say that I defeated two Tory candidates in the last election campaign, one being the Mayor of Brampton and the other the Tory candidate for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke. It is tough out there, Madam Speaker.

During the same election campaign, in a debate sponsored by the Federation of Agriculture, my opponent stated that if the people would only give the Conservatives two years they would solve the agricultural problems in Canada. Those two years are long gone, and what are the Conservatives doing today? They are paying farmers to get off the farms. They are trying to pay them in order to rid them of their problems. They are really in there pitching for these people. It seems to be the only policy they can find. They cannot find policies to keep farmers on the land so they pay them to get off the land.

Canagrex was never given a fair chance to prove itself. No one in the House can say with any validity that Canagrex could not have been just as successful in foreign markets as the Canadian Dairy Commission and the Canadian Wheat Board have been in operating under their mandates. Are government Members saying that because the Canadian Wheat Board is public sector it cannot perform a job? It has been performing a job. It is part of the public sector. The Canadian Dairy Commission has been performing an excellent job, and it is part of the public sector. To say that Canagrex would never work is not giving it a fair chance or a fair hearing. It just cannot be accepted as the truth.

It has been said that nothing in the public sector will work. Members opposite will ensure that it does not work. We have in place a Government which has slashed the budget of the National Research Council in half while at the same time saying that jobs are not being destroyed. Members opposite say that jobs are not being destroyed but, rather, that they are being transferred somewhere else. In terms of research the job is ongoing. One does not come along one day, disrupt the jobs, send the workers off in different directions and then believe that the same production will be achieved with ongoing programs.

I read an editorial on the weekend which stated that the NRC could drop its number of employees from 3,000 to 1,500 by the year 1988. That is disastrous. It is suggested that the same type of situation could occur with Atomic Energy of Canada. And Members opposite would have us destroy Canagrex today. They tried it in the last Parliament and it did not work.

When the Bill was before the House in 1982, approximately 26 per cent of our world market was in Third World countries. What is needed in Third World countries if one is to sell agricultural products there? Dock equipment, storage equipment and transportation equipment are necessary to move products to where they are needed. I ask Hon. Members to think what that would mean to the African continent today in light of what has taken place since 1982. Here is a major world market in which there is no infrastructure available to sell Canadian food properly. It is nothing new for food to be shipped to some countries in the world to rot on the docks before it ever gets delivered. Canagrex was specifically set up to deal with such circumstances. It was set up to sell aggressively. If one is to sell aggressively one has to be able to deliver one's product. To say that it would cost $6 million to set up Canagrex for major areas of the agricultural community when the Estimates project something in the order of $12.3 million over the first three years is like talking about peanuts to the Prime Minister and his Government. They keep that sum of money for petty cash. That would not even build an airport for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) but it is six o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

PENSIONS—HOMEMAKERS' PENSION INQUIRY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, tonight I want to tell you a little bit about a neighbour of mine. My neighbour is a very hard-working woman. She spends a good part of every day working around her home. She spends a good deal of time cleaning her home, dusting, polishing, vacuuming, sweeping and all of the other things that have to be done to keep a home or a building clean. If this neighbour of mine were to be doing these things outside of her own home, we would probably say that she was in the cleaning business.

This lady does a lot of other things as well. She spends a lot of time cooking for her entire family. She has to plan meals in advance, prepare those meals, serve them, collect the dishes afterward, wash the dishes, dry them and put them away. I venture to say that if she were doing that outside of her own home, you and I, Madam Speaker, would say that she was probably in the restaurant business.

In addition to that, she spends a lot of her time washing her own clothes and the clothes of members of her family. She hangs those clothes out to dry, brings them back in and gets them ironed, folded and put away. I suspect that if she were doing that outside of her own home, you and I, Madam Speaker, as well as other Canadians, would probably say that she was running a laundry business.

In addition to that, my neighbour has some children. She is kept pretty busy with those children. She has to make sure they get up in the morning in time to get to school. She makes sure they get fed, clothed and off to school. She has to be there when they come home for lunch and has to get them off to school again after lunch. She supervises their play and their homework and she engages in a little child psychology as well. I venture to say, Madam Speaker, that if she were doing this with other people's children, you and I would probably say that she was running a daycare centre.

My neighbour usually ends up dealing with crises around the home every day of the week. Sometimes she has to deal with a flooded drain, sometimes light bulbs go out. Sometimes her appliances go on the fritz and she has to make sure that they get repaired. If she were dealing with these things in someone else's home, you and I, Madam Speaker, would probably say that she was running a repair business, and because she has to call in other tradesmen, we might even call her a general contractor.

She does other things as well. She cuts the grass and hedges, applies fertilizer and shovels snow. If she were doing those things outside her own home, we would call her a gardener or a handyman.

In addition to all of those things, she is a community volunteer. When her neighbours are away, she looks after their homes and pets. If her neighbours are sick, she brings food for them. She is the person around our neighbourhood who collects for charities. She is the person who volunteers to help out. She is one of those people upon whom all of us depend on an unpaid basis to make our society continue to go around.

• (1805)

Who is this person? Some people call her a housewife. My wife would call her a household engineer. Other people would call her a homemaker. She is one of the hardest working people I know. Even though she works as hard as other workers, for some reason or another she is not entitled to a Canada pension. If she were divorced or separated, she might be entitled at some stage to the Canada pension credits of her spouse or former spouse. If she outlives her husband, she might be entitled to some of his Canada pension. However, she is not entitled to a Canada Pension Plan of her own.

Although our Party has promised her a Canada Pension Plan, a homemakers Canada Pension Plan, for some strange reason we have not yet delivered. I think it is time that we deliver. I hope the Minister will tell us tonight that the Government will be delivering very soon on a homemakers Canada pension. I also hope he will tell us the exact date when my neighbour and all other homemakers across the country can expect to get a homemakers pension.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, may I say at the outset that it is a pleasure to see you gracing this Chamber and the chair. It is a pleasure to make my intervention this evening under your guidance.

The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has put forward a very compelling case for the contribution of a homemaker in Canada. The innovative way in which he brought the matter to the attention of the House is to be commended. I must point out to him and to all Hon. Members that the Government has moved very dramatically on pension reform. It has brought about changes, for instance, in the PBSA. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought about changes in the last Budget regarding RRSPs. Also I am pleased to be associated with the changes to the Canada Pension Plan which will come into effect on January 1, 1987. It is an historic agreement.

It contains a number of changes, but in particular there is one regarding homemakers to whom the Hon. Member for York East referred. If there be a divorce or separation, a homemaker could possibly get some of the pension credits at the time of divorce. I think it is a good change.

A second one, which he possibly did not have time to mention, concerns Canada Pension Plan credits earned during marriage. They will be split between spouses at retirement if one of the spouses so requests. That is a second aspect in terms of homemakers who have not been in the paid labour force having a pension account of her own. In most cases it is "her own" as we know.

As well, CPP survivor benefits will no longer be withdrawn from widows or widowers who remarry, and benefits will be restored to those who lost them in the past. That affects approximately 35,000 people, most of whom are homemakers. On balance, some changes for homemakers have already been brought forward by the Government. I am sure the Hon. Member for York East not only recognizes that fact but applauds it.

Dealing with his specific question in respect of homemakers, a task force has been set up. It has already met six times, starting last July. It has been given one year in which to put forward a proposal for homemakers. As the Hon. Member knows, there is a need for provincial co-operation. However, I can tell him that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made statements relevant to homemakers. It remains an issue for him which he would like to see completed in this mandate. I can only reiterate his words that that is the approach we have taken. That is the reason for the task force, the time schedule, and work plan. I thank the Hon. Member for his representation.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL'S BUDGET (B) NUMBER OF COUNCIL'S EMPLOYEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I see the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) is here to answer some of the questions which I asked several days ago. It is unusual for a Minister to be here, but obviously he realizes that the information he is giving to the people of Canada with regard to the Government's science policy has not been accepted.

On October 9, I asked the Minister of State for Science and Technology two questions. First, how can the cuts to NRC research of $26 million be reconciled with the commitment of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to double research and development in Canada? Second, can the Government guarantee that the 3,100 jobs at the National Research Council that now exist will exist at the end of next year? Since that time a good deal of information has come to light both about the Government's policy of rationalizing research and about the cuts being implemented at the NRC.

First, on the matter of research commitments, it is obvious that we can no longer assume that the target to double research and development in Canada promised by the Conservatives when they were in opposition exists. In the Throne Speech debate on October 8, the Minister of State for Science and Technology said, as reported at page 202 of Hansard:

> With regard to a target, where we ought to be in terms of the Gross National Product, I chose to ask the Science Council to help me establish realistic funding targets by examining each sector of our industry and by comparing what they are doing in terms of science and technology with what their competitors are doing in other parts of the world.

Why does the Minister have to ask that question, Madam Speaker? We know that Canada's expenditures for research and development are about 1.5 per cent of the Gross National Product and other countries are spending twice as much. The Minister is asking a question the answer to which he should know.

Can the Minister give us an indication that a doubling of the Canadian research and development effort is still a target and a priority of his Government, and, if so, when will this target of 2.5 per cent of GNP be met? After all, it was promised for the first year of this Government's life. In dealing with this issue, the Government must realize that its credibility is at stake.

A host of articles and editorials appearing in all major newspapers of Canada make it clear that the writers assume the Government has dropped the objective of 2.5 per cent of GNP for scientific research and development as being unrealistic. Surely that is the issue in a nutshell.

The Throne Speech makes sweeping commitments to research and development and then these commitments are undercut by actions of the Government. The Government goes on to say how great research and development investments are being made with the universities and the granting councils, but when you look at the billion dollar price tag the Minister is talking about, you see there is very little, if any, new money available. What new money will be available by the Government is contingent on private sector participation, participation which has never been there up to now and is not likely to be there in the next year or two.

Let us look at the whole question of the lay-offs at the NRC. This is what we have learned. A list now exists at NRC of 150 persons whose jobs no longer exist. This number will grow to 200 shortly. These persons have been told that only 40 to 80 jobs in the space program will be open to them and there will be none in biotechnology. The options for many of these people are really quite unpalatable. They involve giving up a life's work in areas where they are recognized experts internationally or leaving the NRC and, in many cases, Canada to find equivalent work. What are the implications of this kind of decision making by the Government?

Research teams that are broken up are lost for perhaps a generation or longer. Those left behind have the job of picking up the pieces, trying to refashion research programs and units into coherent programs. The morale of staff is already much lower and the administration must try and sort out the chaos these cuts have precipitated. The Minister says the morale decline is our fault. Let him talk to people at the NRC and he will find out who they blame. People at the NRC are asking, with reason, if the Government is out to eliminate the NRC. This kind of procedure means a much less efficient research effort, again the exact opposite result the Minister says he wishes to have.

The Minister said that the work Dr. Polanyi did for which he got the Nobel prize was done at the University of Toronto. Of course it was. However, Dr. Polanyi came to Canada to work at the NRC. If the NRC was in the condition then that it is in today as a result of this Minister and his Government, the future Dr. Polanyis would stay away from the NRC and this country.

We say the Government should rescind those cuts. The Minister should at least let the committee dealing with science and technology meet immediately to hear from people at the NRC, and scientists in the community, and see what they really believe about what is going on regarding scientific research and development.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond briefly to the Hon. Member's inquiry because I very much share his concern for the future well-being and effectiveness of the NRC and the science community in general.

The combined budget of the NRC, roughly $400 million, is a fraction of the total expenditure by this Government on research and development and science-related activity. That amounts to roughly $4.2 billion. However, the NRC remains Canada's lead agency for scientific research. As the Hon. Member has indicated, there are a number of Departments and agencies now engaged in all kinds of fundamental and applied research. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, as well as our resource Departments dealing with forestry, agriculture and mining, as well as the Department of Communications, have major research facilities. Of course, much of the research affected by these reallocations is now done in universities.

Unlike the way it used to be before World War II and immediately after, a lot of the fundamental research is done in universities. This is where it ought to be because scientists have the responsibility of teaching our young people. That is one of the great priorities of our nation today. We have to develop the highly-qualified personnel we will need in the next century. That is why we introduced a program which will deliver to the universities $1 billion in additional funds for research over a five-year period. Yes, it does have to be matched by the private sector but, again, it is a critical priority for us to make sure that the research is done and the results are quickly applied and diffused.

There are linkages between the universities and the private sector and certainly the government laboratories and the private sector. The private sector is assuming more and more of its responsibility to do its own research in science-related activities. That is why we brought in such innovative tax measures. Some $500 million this year alone will be spent through tax incentives to encourage the private sector to do more of its research. As well, we are spending hundreds of millions of dollars in so-called subagreements with the provinces to channel scarce public resources through the provinces to the private sector for quick diffusion.

We live in a changing world. We are on the threshold of the dawning of a new age. All of us have to adjust to that. All of us have to recognize new priorities. Let me just identify three priorities which have come out of this painful process of consultation in which I have involved myself over the last two years. First there is highly-qualified personnel teaching our young people in the R and D and science-related effort we are making. Then we have the development of strategic technology. Then of course we have space, which will be the single largest repository of new knowledge and new technology.

There are some cuts in the NRC, but they will be offset immediately because they do not come into effect until the next fiscal year. They will be offset by the new tasks which have been assigned to the NRC. There will be 250 people in the biotechnology centre in Montreal. My friend says there is no new money. Eight hundred million dollars is being spent on space and the NRC will play a lead role in that.

I am hoping that the Hon. Member will help me to maintain and build on this great institution and to restore the morale that he and some of his colleagues have been attempting to destroy.

MULTICULTURALISM—FUNDING OF TORONTO ORGANIZATIONS (B) GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, congratulations on your appointment to the chair. I would like to refer to questions which I asked both the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie), responsible for multiculturalism and the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) during the last week. There is a crisis in multiculturalism as it affects this Conservative, Tory-blue Government. It emanates largely from the two reports which I tabled in the House. One of these reports was from a Tory group consisting of Members of Parliament and Senators from Toronto who suggested that the programs of immigration and multiculturalism should be manipulated to the advantage and political benefit of the Conservative Party of Canada. The report reads:

It was stressed that there should be nothing arbitrary about funding cuts or increases; Liberal funding patterns sould be disposed of—

—as if they exist—

—and a politically-intelligent PC pattern take their place. This may be accomplished by a gradual process of funding cuts and reallocations.

In very basic English, the Conservative Members and Senators from Toronto are saying that if the organization is Conservative, it will receive funding, but if it does not happen to share the philosophical bent of the Conservative Party of Canada, it will not receive funding. That is a shame. It is immoral, not only to think that, but to document it and to send it to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of the country.

The second report to which I refer was written by one Peter McCreath, the Vice-Chairman of the Canadian Multiculturalism Advisory Council, a body consisting of 60 men and women appointed to advise the Government on multiculturalism policies which is funded to the extent of $350,000. Of the Council and its members, Mr. McCreath said:

They are all committed supporters of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, the Government of the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, and the Minister of State for Multiculturalism—

He goes on to say:

Furthermore, our voluntary commitment to the Government, and our wish to see it survive beyond the next general election, together, give us the luxury of being able to assess the situation and present our recommendation solely in the context of what we truly believe is in the best interests of—the Government of the day.

He continues:

Whatever weakness may be inherent in any recommendations to Government from the CMC, they at least reflect informed advice and opinion from a selection of the Government's principal supporters from across Canada.

I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that both reports are repugnant. Both reports are trying to manipulate immigration and multiculturalism structures which are in place to serve the ethnocultural community, which is a special interest group in this society, as are the farmers, fishermen, businessmen, labour unions, students and young people. These programs have a specific use and are not to be used as part of a Tory chess game in which the pawns are moved around like chattels.

The Prime Minister refused to get up in his place and defend the very essence of multiculturalism. He and his wife go across the country making great speeches and grand pronouncements about how rich Canada is with respect to its multicultural plurality. However, when it comes down to a request for him to stand up and defend the integrity of multiculturalism, the intregity of the role of a Canadian multiculturalism council, and to protect the integrity of ministerial permits rather than be abused for political gain, he refuses to do so.

The Secretary of State responsible for multiculturalism, treats it as a joke and says that he has not seen nor read the report. I suggest that it is high time that the Minister responsible for multiculturalism, who is a decent man and very well respected as a politician and former Mayor of Toronto, come clean and begin to defend the interests of his Department and his national constituency which he represents as the Minister responsible for multiculturalism, rather than defending and hiding behind the interests of members of the Conservative Party, be they elected or appointed.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism (Mr. Della Noce), with his Italian background, I believe shares some of the sensitivity of some of these groups in a very real and profound way. I look forward to him rising in his place because I asked his boss, the Minister responsible for multiculturalism, to refute the Tory report, to distance himself from it and say very categorically that it does not reflect the programs of the Government. He has failed to do that.

As far as the McCreath Report is concerned, I asked two specific questions. First, will he ask for the resignation of Mr. McCreath immediately because he can no longer serve in a non-partisan, effective way? Second, will he conduct a full review into the affairs and budget of this council so that the motives that have been impugned by Mr. McCreath will be eliminated and its integrity and credibility restored so it may do the honourable job for which it was designed? I look forward to answers to these questions from the Parliamentary Secretary or we will have to go to the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism to ask for a full investigation.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism): Madam Speaker, this being the first time I have the pleasure of taking the floor while you occupy the Chair, I also want to congratulate you on your appointment.

Madam Speaker, I should like to respond to my colleague from York West (Mr. Marchi). I know he is dedicated to multiculturalism since we both share similar views, but I must tell you that our colleague the Hon. Member for York West is usually long on rhetoric and that oftentimes he has a tendency to blur the facts, especially with respect to the Toronto region. It is unfortunate that my colleague does not try to see things from a positive angle. He usually takes a rather negative approach. And I do not agree at all with what he said. During the little time I am allowed, not being as lucky as the Hon. Member who is allowed twice as much, I would like to start with the grants issue where I think the Hon. Member is not quite correct when he says that multicultural grants are strictly the preserve of Conservative Party members. Well, Madam Speaker, I can inform my hon. friend that the exact opposite happened when the Liberal Party was in power. And I could tell him about the Montreal area where I come from. He may not know about the situation there, but we are going to make sure he does, because—

Mr. Marchi: Prove it!

Mr. Della Noce: Yes, I'm going to, right now. It was during my election campaign. When I went to speak to the Italian community, I said all Italians would be treated the same. Not just the Liberal Italians, as when his party was in power. And I want to use this example, because this year, I divided the small piece we got for multiculturalism fairly and squarely, and I can assure you that in addition to the Italian-Canadian Association and Congress, to which you would have given the whole pie, I decided to give a fair share as well to a group with Conservative leanings which was receiving a grant for the first time. The Ethnic Congress of Laval and the Sons of Italy have been around for 20 years, and they never got a cent from the Liberal Party because they had Conservative leanings. Actually, one person was Conservative and the 62 others were Liberals. He should talk! He wants to give us a lesson in moral behaviour. I can give my hon. friend all the proof he wants.

When the Hon. Members says that multiculturalism is on the way out, I can inform him that multiculturalism has progressed by leaps and bounds since the Conservative Party came to power.

If anyone is declining here, it's the Liberal Party, not multiculturalism which now has a brilliant future, no thanks to the Liberal Party. I can tell you that everybody, all the different ethnic groups are treated the same, no matter how much money is available. I can guarantee, Madam Speaker, that multiculturalism has a brilliant future in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member's time has expired.

A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

APPENDIX B

THE CABINET
ORDER IN COUNCIL DESIGNATING ACTING MINISTERS

The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, advise:

1. that in the absence from the National Capital Region of the Prime Minister or in the event of his being unable to perform the functions of his office
   (a) the Deputy Prime Minister, the Honourable Donald Frank Mazankowski, or
   (b) in the absence from the National Capital Region of the Deputy Prime Minister, the Honourable Donald Frank Mazankowski or in the event of his being unable to perform the functions of the office of the Prime Minister, the next Minister named in order of priority in the list of Ministers set out in Schedule A who is in the National Capital Region and is able to perform the functions of the Office of the Prime Minister, be authorized to act for the Prime Minister;

2. that in the absence from the National Capital Region of a Minister whose name is set out in Column II of an item of the Schedule B, or in the event of that Minister being unable to perform the functions of his Office, the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of the item be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;
3. that in the absence from the National Capital Region of the Ministers named in Columns II and III of an item of the Schedule B, or in the event of both of those Ministers being unable to perform the functions of their Office, the Minister whose name is set out in Column IV of the item be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;
4. that in the absence from the National Capital Region of the Ministers named in Columns II, III and IV of an item of the Schedule B, or in the event of all those Ministers being unable to perform the functions of their Office,
   (a) the Prime Minister,
   (b) in the absence from the National Capital Region of the Prime Minister or in the event of the Prime Minister being unable to perform the functions of his Office, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Honourable Donald Frank Mazankowski, or
   (c) in the absence from the National Capital Region of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, the Honourable Frank Mazankowski, or in the event of both of them being unable to perform the functions of their Office, the next Minister named in order of priority in the list of Ministers set out in Schedule A, who is in Ottawa and is able to perform the said functions, be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of that item;

5. that, where an Office set out in Column I of an item of Schedule B is vacant, the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of that item be authorized to act in the Office of the Minister whose Office is set out in Column I of that item;
6. that, where an Office set out in Column I of an item of Schedule B is vacant, in the absence from the National Capital Region of the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of that item, or in the event of that Minister being unable to perform the functions of the Office set out in Column I of that item, the Minister whose name is set out in Column IV of that item be authorized to act in the Office of the Minister whose Office is set out in Column I of that item; and
7. that, where an Office set out in Column I of an item of Schedule B is vacant, in the absence from the National Capital Region of the Ministers named in Columns III and IV of that Schedule, or in the event of those Ministers being unable to perform the functions of their Office,
   (a) the Prime Minister,
   (b) in the absence from the National Capital Region of the Prime Minister or in the event of the Prime Minister being unable to perform the functions of his Office, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Honourable Donald Frank Mazankowski, or
   (c) in the absence from the National Capital Region of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, the Honourable Donald Frank Mazankowski, or in the event of both of them being unable to perform the functions of their Office, the next Minister named in order of priority in the list of Ministers set out in Schedule A, who is in Ottawa and is able to perform the said functions, be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of that item.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ARMS CONTROL AND INTERNATIONAL SECURITY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, over our Thanksgiving weekend, the eyes of the world were focused on Reykjavik. There, the Leaders of the United States and the Soviet Union met to reinvigorate the summit process begun last year in Geneva and to narrow some of the many differences which divide them. Their goal was to give the process impetus, and they succeeded.

Arms control and security are the central international issues of our time and the manner of their resolution will shape the global outlook for decades to come.

It is still too early to provide a final assessment of this latest meeting. The task now in Washington and in Moscow is to ensure that the progress which appears to have been made is not wasted. All Governments share in this responsibility and we in Canada must do our part.

Today, as a contribution to our own discussion and debate within this House, and in the country at large, I would like to make some brief observations about the nature of the Reykjavik meeting in the broad context of East-West relations.

[English]

First, Sir, it would be well to remember that Reykjavik was but one staging point in the difficult and unending process of managing the relations between East and West. During the meeting, both sides moved more than anyone had thought possible. Immediately after the meeting, both sides reflected their disappointment that the breakthrough that was so close did not occur. Now, reflecting on that progress, both sides agree that the proposals made in Iceland are still on the table, still in negotiation.

This process of building East-West relations has been proceeding with renewed intensity since January, 1985. Reykjavik was designed not to conclude new agreements but to lay the ground for them. Whether history will judge it a success depends entirely on the use that is made of the progress in Iceland.

The most notable aspect of the Reykjavik meeting is the extent to which both sides were able to reach understandings on the whole range of nuclear weapons and testing. They agreed provisionally to reduce by 50 per cent within five years the main components of their strategic nuclear arsenals: land-based missiles, submarine-launched ballistic missiles and strategic bombers. At one point in their discussion, they also agreed to eliminate ballistic missiles completely in 10 years.

On intermediate-range nuclear weapons, there was similar provisional agreement on their complete elimination from Europe within five years, with the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. each retaining only 100 warheads in Soviet Asia and the continential U.S.A. respectively. The U.S.A. and the Soviet Union also agreed on the need to negotiate reductions in short-range nuclear arsenals.

There was mutual acceptance of a step-by-step process for reducing nuclear tests, leading eventually to a complete cessation of tests once nuclear weapons had been abolished. There was a broad convergence of views on the verification procedures to be applied to the various measures.

The fact that such detailed discussions occurred and resulted in such wide-ranging, if tentative, agreement attests to the seriousness and dedication with which the two sides have been approaching their task. The main significance lies in the demonstration that major, negotiated reductions in nuclear arsenals need not be an impossible dream.

At Reykjavik three lessons were reinforced. The first two are: both sides are serious; and arms control is possible. But the third lesson is that arms control will not come easily. It is a deliberate and difficult process.

The more sobering element of reality as it has emerged from Reykjavik lies in the fact that the two sides remain far apart in their views on the future role of strategic defences. This is not a question of saying yes or no to SDI but of finding a way of managing the research on defensive weapons in which both sides are engaged.

A key issue between the two Governments is whether research is limited to the laboratory under the existing ABM Treaty. That, Sir, is a treaty with two signing parties: the United States and the Soviet Union. Its text does not refer directly to research, although the private negotiating record of either side may mention research. The agreement on what precisely is intended in that treaty is for these two Governments which are the parties to the agreement to work out.

It is important to note that this is a different issue from the debate we have seen in recent months over what is allowed by agreed statement "D" of the ABM treaty referring to ABM systems based on other physical principles. Our interest in Canada is to ensure strict adherence to that treaty, and continued respect by both sides for the integrity of this fundamental arms control document.

The situation today in no way represents a step backward from the situation as it existed prior to the Reykjavik meeting. Technological, political and legal uncertainties and disagreements have always characterized the debate on strategic defence. Even in this area, however, there has in our judgment been some movement toward better mutual understanding, in that the legitimacy of research related to strategic defence is now accepted by both sides. In a treaty that refers explicitly only to "development, testing and deployment", the issue has become, in effect, what are the limits of permissible research.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we ought not to allow ourselves to focus exclusively on nuclear and strategic arms questions as if they constituted the totality of East-West relations. True, these issues have inescapably become the central element of this relationship, but they should not be seen in isolation from the broader context. There are other areas of arms control, most notably in relation to chemical weapons, where there is ground for cautious optimism. Further, we understand that on human rights questions and on a range of bilateral matters, progress continues to be made.

Mr. Speaker, I should add that I was encouraged by my own talks on human Rights with Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze, when he visited Ottawa. Our discussion was frank and more open than I believe has been the case before. Canada believes progress here and on regional issues is essential to enable us to establish trust in each other's intentions. This process of building trust is far from finished.

Peace and security require patience and persistence. Emotional swings between exaggerated expectations and gloomy foreboding do not facilitate the necessarily careful and painstaking way in which difficult policy choices must be tackled.

As both the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and I have made clear, the USA and USSR have made remarkable progress on the central arms control and disarmament issues over the past months. They are still seriously engaged in the task of seeking compromise on remaining areas of disagreement.

• (1110)

We are encouraged by the public undertakings of both the President and the General Secretary to build on the progress which was achieved at Reykjavik. The resumption last Wednesday in Geneva of the nuclear and space negotiations can only be regarded as more good news.

[English]

The superpowers have succeeded in bringing a major arms control agreement tantalizingly close.

We cannot stop here. We have to move ahead. Arms control is a fragile process. Its environment must be protected. It is therefore doubly important that all actions be resisted which might be seen as weakening or unravelling the existing international framework on which East-West relations and arms control are built.

Much attention has been focused on SDI and the ABM Treaty. The Geneva negotiations will need to resolve the differences that continue to exist here. Progress in other areas should not be held hostage to the resolution of these difficulties. Our European allies are especially concerned with intermediate nuclear forces. Canada would like to see an agreement in this area as well as in the area of strategic weapons, which threaten us directly.

Canada believes firmly in the value of the confidential negotiating forum. It is, in the end, irreplaceable. But it can be aided through techniques such as special envoys and, as we have just seen, by summits. We would urge both superpowers to continue to use all these techniques, and not rely on negotiating in public.

If a summit in Washington this fall is now unlikely, setting a date for early next year could help maintain the impetus of the process.

Canada is involved in East-West relations as a member of the NATO alliance. That alliance is the foundation of our security. What happens at the negotiating table between the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. has a direct bearing on our own security. We are at the same time a nation dedicated to peace. Canadians have always worked for peace and international understanding. We have not, and will not, hesitate to make our views known: Publicly when that is appropriate; privately on a permanent basis.

But Canada's role is not simply to give advice. Many of the persisting obstacles to negotiating progress arise directly from a lack of trust. The priority attention Canada has given to verification issues in particular attacks this question directly. Arms control agreements alone do not produce security; confidence in compliance produces security. Verification justifies that confidence. Such an approach enhances the credibility of Canada's counsel.

Canada's participation as a western country in the process of building East-West relations will continue. The visit to Canada in the last month of Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze and the Czechoslovak Prime Minister were part of this process. Early next month I will travel to Vienna for the opening of the CSCE follow-up meeting which deals with East-West relations from the human rights, security, economic and human contact dimensions. It provides us with yet another opportunity to move the process ahead in an integrated comprehensive manner.

Our hopes for real progress in East-West relations were strengthened by the developments at Reykjavik. Canada has been in touch with both sides, before and since the meeting in Iceland. We will continue to use all our resources to help the United States and the Soviet Union build on what they began.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I should say at the outset that I have rather mixed feelings about the appearance here today of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the comments he has just made. I should also say at the outset that he had the courtesy to deliver to me a copy of his comments this morning so I have had an opportunity to look at them. I am pleased that he is here and using the House as a forum within which to advise the Canadian people and parliamentarians of the policy of the Government. However, I hope that when he appears before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade he will be somewhat more forthcoming and somewhat more courageous than he has been here today. It is not clear to me why this statement has been delivered in the House of Commons.

[Translation]

I must say I was very disappointed in the substance of what he just told us, Mr. Speaker. We have been offered nothing but generalities and clichés on disarmament and Canadian policy.

[English]

His comments are optimistic in the aftermath of the Reykjavik Summit meeting. He saw progress arising from that summit between Mr. Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev. To a degree I share that optimism. However, I must say it has been very much tempered by the outcome.

[Translation]

In my view, a historic opportunity was lost in Reykjavik. Will there be others? We can only hope so. Mr. Speaker, behind the clouds the sun continues to shine and for a few moments in Reykjavik, the clouds lifted.

[English]

Yet the clouds returned and, as I said, the opportunity was lost. It was lost because of the insistence of the United States on continuing to develop its star wars initiative, the Strategic Defence Initiative, beyond laboratory testing.

The Minister declared, and I read from his statement:

[Translation]

"Canadians have always worked for peace and international understanding. We have not hesitated, and will not hesitate to make our views known: Publicly when that is appropriate, privately on a permanent basis."

• (1120)

[English]

Canada has not made known its true views on the SDI initiative of the United States. The Secretary of State for External Affairs certainly did not do that this morning. In fact, if anything, the Minister's statement waffled on a very important issue. I am amazed at the extent to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has attempted not to speak out, having declared in the closing paragraphs of his remarks that Canada never hesitates to speak out.

The Minister referred to the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems Agreement which was adopted in May, 1972, between the superpowers. That ABM Treaty is very much at the heart, from a legal point of view, of the disputes surrounding the Strategic Defence Initiative. With respect to it the Secretary of State for External Affairs said:

The agreement on what precisely is intended in that treaty is for these two Governments who are the parties to the agreement to work out.

That sounds as though this were some sort of private contractual relationship between two individuals or two corporations. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself has said, this treaty goes to the very heart of world security, yet he refuses to offer the Government's view as to how the star wars initiative can be rationalized with the terms of that treaty.

I will read the most relevant article from the treaty. Article V reads:

1. Each Party undertakes not to develop, test, or deploy ABM systems or components which are sea-based, air-based, space-based, or mobile land-based.

2. Each Party undertakes not to develop, test, or deploy ABM launchers for launching more than one ABM interceptor missile at a time from each launcher, nor to modify deployed launchers to provide them with such a capability, nor to develop, test, or deploy automatic or semi-automatic or other similar systems for rapid reload of ABM launchers.

Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs not have a view on the application of Article V to the Strategic Defence Initiative of the United States? I suspect that he does have a view and has not yet disclosed it to us in the House. I hope he will before the committee.

My real point this morning is not to debate legalities, not to get into nitpicking legal argument as to whether something is or is not covered by Article V. The real issue is political will, the importance of world leaders exercising their respective judgments on behalf of the peoples they lead and not being the captives of nitpicking bureaucrats. That applies to the Soviet Union as it applies to the United States and the Minister. If I ever saw a statement which was prepared by nitpicking bureaucrats, it is the one which the Minister read to us this morning. When Pierre Elliott Trudeau put the nuclear accountants in their place he made the point that it is up to leaders to exercise their judgment. That is the only way in which progress is going to be made. That is the way in which progress must be made. There must be trust between the leaders.

I suggest to the Minister and my colleagues in the House that the Strategic Defence Initiative is, by definition, a statement of mistrust. We in our Party see it as much more than a statement of mistrust. We see it as destabilizing, as an escalation in the arms race and as an incredible waste of precious resources which could and should be applied to raising the quality of life on this planet, especially in the Third World. We all know that in the long term it is that growing economic disparity which poses the greatest threat to mankind.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has not spoken out. He has not revealed his true beliefs. Surely he saw Reykjavik as a unique opportunity for a major breakthrough in arms control and disarmament, and that major opportunity has been jeopardized. I know that as the Minister watched this scenario unfold he probably recalled the words of Shakespeare who said:

> There is a tide in the affairs of men,
> Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
> Omitted, all the voyage of their life
> Is bound in shallows and in miseries.

I ask the Minister to do his part, to speak out to the United States, the Soviet Union and the world to ensure that that tide is recaptured in the interest of international peace and security.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will begin my comments by agreeing with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that the whole world was indeed watching what was taking place at Reykjavik on Thanksgiving weekend. It watched with a great deal of hope that the two superpowers might reach an agreement, not simply on limiting weapons of one kind or another but on serious reductions of weapons. That was the hope, not only of Canadians but of people throughout the planet.

[Translation]

The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the superpowers have made progress. That is true. The Minister stressed that the two parties have agreed to put certain suggestions they discussed in Reykjavik on the table. They intend to continue their discussions, and I agree. We have seen progress at certain levels, but it is also true that the superpowers have lost an historic opportunity. I hope that this time, the loss will be only temporary, but the fact is there just the same.

[English]

They did lose what was almost within their grasp. It is with some sadness that the people of Canada and all the people of the world note this reality.

In this context we in this House have been rightly critical of the Soviet Union for many years, not only on internal arrangements about civil liberties, on which there is total agreement in this House, but in particular of the Soviet Union's reluctance to open itself to outside observers to ensure that agreements entered into were implemented. As I said, we have been rightly critical. Those of us who live in open societies have been trying to feel our way toward sensible proposals which could lead, not only to arms control but to disarmament. We have been critical of the Soviet's reluctance to open up.

• (1130)

A year ago last summer in Geneva I had occasion to have very serious discussions, back to back, with the principal Soviet negotiator Mr. Karpov on the one hand, and the principal American negotiator, Max Kampelman, on the other. Let me say, in the context of what took place at Reykjavik, that having had these conversations with these two key representatives of the two superpowers I certainly did not come away with any high degree of optimism. It seemed to me a year ago last summer that both the Soviet Union and the United States were locked into positions that made it almost impossible for an agreement to be reached. Neither side seemed willing to make key concessions.

I wish the Secretary of State for External Affairs had been open on this point.

If one looks at what was agreed to at Reykjavik in terms of the shifting of positions, I think it is clear that the Soviet Union made the major moves. There were half a dozen key positions, including verification procedures, to which they rigidly held. We saw them shift ground as they needed to shift ground. It seems to me that when we in the House and throughout western democratic society see that kind of move taking place, particularly under new leadership in the Soviet Union, which may now be challenged as a result of some shifts that have been taken, we ought to give credit where credit is due. I see the Secretary of State nodding his head in agreement with that point.

There were moves on both sides, but the major moves were taken by the Soviet Union. I think we must carefully look for the stumbling block that led to the breakdown of what could have been an historic agreement. I believe the evidence is very clear, if we do not blind ourselves to it. The stumbling block, as I see it and which, frankly, as disinterested observers in Europe and indeed the United States and our country see it, was in fact President Reagan's insistence on the United States' right to go ahead with the development of testing of star wars during the next 10 years and the right to deploy such a system at the end of the decade. I use those words with care and say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that such development, testing and deployment are in clear violation of Article V of the ABM Treaty.

I would have liked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to say that clearly in the House today. It is very important for us to understand as a nation, and very important for the world to understand that the stumbling block to reaching an agreement in terms of all the documents that have emerged and statements that have been made has been the United States' insistence in these discussions on its right to break the existing ABM Treaty. I believe that is the unvarnished reality.

The spokesperson for the Liberal Party has read Article V so I will not repeat it. However, not only is the U.S. proposal a violation of Article V, it is important to note that by pursuing this course of action at Reykjavik the United States in fact reversed Secretary of State Shultz's commitment to a "restrictive interpretation" of the treaty which is very precise in prohibiting testing and development of the star wars system.

In this context let me say that the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself cited Mr. Shultz on this point in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on December 4, 1985. He cited with approval Mr. Shultz's restrictive interpretation definition of the ABM Treaty. Furthermore, not only did our External Affairs Minister correctly stress the restrictive interpretation and correctly point out that Mr. Shultz, in disagreement with some other U.S. officials, had taken this restrictive interpretation, since the two key members of the U.S. delegation who in fact negotiated the ABM Treaty have confirmed that the intent and wording of the ABM Treaty was to exclude the development and testing of systems like star wars. Mr. Gerard Smith and Mr. John Rhinelander, two principals of the team that the Americans had negotiating the ABM Treaty, are saying that that treaty prohibits quite categorically the development and testing of a star wars type system. That is precisely what President Reagan was insisting upon as the United States, right at Reykjavik.

In today's statement the Secretary of State for External Affairs made no reference whatsoever to this crucial point, which is the nub of the issue. Why is the Secretary of State for External Affairs avoiding the central question? It is one matter to go and talk about the precise limits of research, but it is quite another to miss the key point, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has done.

Not many weeks ago he was quite happy to talk in specific reference to the ABM Treaty and a restrictive definition. Now he has shifted ground entirely and says that what is at issue and what must be talked about, according to the Secretary of State, are: "the limits on permissible research which now has become the issue". Surely such a narrow discussion as "the limits on permissible research" is now described as the issue only because the United States administration has refused to back away from insisting on its right to test and deploy the star wars system. Instead of forthrightly criticizing the Reagan administration for this, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is now helping them get the focus away from their desire to violate the ABM Treaty. I say to the Minister that this is unacceptable to the people of Canada and unacceptable to all those who want independent nations to work toward disarmament at this point in world history.

Surely Canada must show some real independence in this matter. We must be telling the Reagan administration that it is wrong. The Secretary of State for External Affairs says: "It is not a question of saying yes or no to SDI but of finding a way of managing the research on defensive systems in which both sides are engaged". With respect, I say to the Minister that he is wrong. It is a matter of saying no to SDI, whether it is developed in the Soviet Union or the United States. The ABM Treaty was quite specifically designed to avoid the development of new technologies for this kind of weapons system. It is time that we put an end to this kind of lunacy in the world and we have an oblilgation to say so.

What seems to be clearly involved in the pursuit of the Reagan administration—not the American people—is the scuttling of the ABM Treaty. The Minister talked about looking at these new grounds for discussion and new grounds for agreement. I ask him, what use can a new agreement be if we stand by and watch either one of the superpowers undermine existing agreements? We have now a rather fragile instrument in the world in this field and that is the ABM Treaty. We have an obligation as a nation not to stand back and let the superpowers do whatever they will. We must exercise our influence with dispassion, with care and with intelligence, and that means when one of them is clearly wrong we should say they are wrong. When one of them is taking steps which could seriously jeopardize the development of peace, we should be saying so.

I want to say in this context that the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau—despite all those other particular matters about which my Party and I disagreed with him—had an appropriate sense of the role that Canada could play. He, along with Olaf Palme, the Prime Minister of India and the President of Mexico, had shown remarkable independence in criticizing both the United States and the Soviet Union when they were wrong. I wish we had that kind of independent thought functioning in foreign policy, especially on disarmament, today.

I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to think carefully about what he has said, note that he missed the essence of the problem, reconsider his policy and start showing some independence which could have some concrete results leading to disarmament in this world of ours.

NATIONAL ANTHEM ACT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-232, an Act to amend the National Anthem Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, this Bill to amend the National Anthem Act remedies a situation which has existed in the words of our National Anthem "O Canada" since it was first approved by the Parliament of Canada, particularly the reference to "all our sons" which leaves out a very important sex in our society. This amendment would eliminate those words "all our sons" and replace them with the words "all of us", thereby eliminating the sexist reference in our National Anthem.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Introduction of Bills

CRIME VICTIMS ASSISTANCE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-233, an Act to provide assistance for victims of crime.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, this Bill enacts a new statute called the Crime Victims Assistance Act. Those who are familiar with the administration of justice in Canada will know that there is no recognition or status given in our system to the victims of crime. This legislation will remedy that situation and provide specific remedies for victims of crime. It is the kind of legislation which is long overdue.

It was referred in the last session of the House of Commons to the Committee on Justice for consideration.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MISSING CHILDREN SEARCH ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-234, an Act to require assistance in the search for missing children.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, this Bill would enact the Missing Children Search Act. There are some problems in society about which we can do little. One problem about which we can do much is the subject of missing children. This is one measure to assist in that problem and I hope it receives the favourable consideration of the House.

This Bill in the first session of this Parliament was considered by the special committee which considers Bills and rejected. With the wide interest there is in this Bill across Canada, I think that decision should be considered as the Bill comes again before the committee.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-235, an Act to amend the Federal Court Act, the Northwest Territories Act, the Supreme Court Act, the Tax Court of Canada Act and the Yukon Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, as you know, under the new rules of the House, all appointments that are made by the federal Government to federal boards and agencies are subject to review by Parliamentary Committee. That right does not apply when the federal Government appoints a judge to a federal court. This Bill would require after the appointment, or upon the appointment of judges by the federal Government, that the appointment be reviewed by a Parliamentary Committee.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBER ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-236, an Act respecting the use of Social Insurance numbers.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, the objective of this proposed legislation is to protect the privacy and freedom of the individual. Increasingly, the Social Insurance number has been employed as a kind of national identifier. It has been used by landlords, merchants, banks, credit agencies and insurance companies in a way which involves the potential invasion of the privacy of the individual, opening up to institutions and agencies information which should not be publicly available.

• (1150)

The intent of this Bill is to restrict the requirement of the Social Insurance Number only to those activities that are covered by Acts of Parliament and require the use of that number, which was the original intent of the SIN. My Bill would restore that practice.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, October 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 38 minutes beginning at one o'clock.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the last 48 hours I have had the opportunity to spend several periods of time talking with various agricultural organizations and groups in western Canada. It is hard to put into words the depth of concern and anxiety that they feel about the incredible crisis being felt in our commodity markets. Western Canada and, indeed, the entire agricultural sector of Canada know that they are in the fight of their lives, that many signs and portents are clearly apparent which point to a challenge and a threat to the basic underlying strength of this sector. I say this because of the actions by other countries to substantially increase the support and assistance they give to agricultural export markets.

The problem we face is one of basic over-supply of many of our basic commodities, particularly in the area of grain. We all know exactly how serious that is and how, at the present time, there is no apparent answer. I grant full well that the decision taken at the meetings in Uruguay to commence negotiations was a step in the right direction. However, it is a step that will take years to bring to fruition. In the meantime we are faced with the actions in the United States under the U.S. Farm Bill, which are not over. Those who think that the worst impacts of the U.S. Bill have been felt up until now are kidding themselves. It is clear that the discretion under that piece of U.S. legislation to continue to ratchet down prices and provide export subsidies will continue. The discussions I had with U.S. officials in Punta del Este, Uruguay, only confirmed that.

It is clear that the objective is basically to put a lot of us in the agricultural trade out of business. The high volume-low price theory is being emphasized. No mercy will be shown to any country. This clearly points out the necessity for an export strategy, a world-wide trade strategy specifically designated to assist our agricultural sector. We do not have this at the present time. There is no trade strategy on agriculture. There is but a series of ad hoc, capricious reactions to events. There has been a wide variety of attempted bail-outs, but there is nothing coherent, nothing that is able to provide any clear direction as to how we might meet the challenge we face.

I would like to give Hon. Members an example of this. At the negotiations undertaken in Uruguay to put agriculture on the table it was clear that many countries felt that Canada was not playing its role to the fullest, in essence, not pulling its fair share. I say this because one of the things we obviously avoided doing at those meetings was make any effort to introduce into the talks how we could substantially increase the earnings and incomes of many Third World countries which, as a group, have come to form our second-largest customer over the years.

The level of Canadian agricultural exports to Third World countries over the last five years has dropped by almost 40 per cent. No one can take satisfaction in that figure. One would think that it would be in the Canadian interest to put into place the type of measures or proposals which would give much stronger levels of assistance to those countries in order to increase their cash flows so that they might be able, once again, to come back in to the market and procure our various commodities. However, Canada took no such initiatives in that direction. I report to Members of the House that this inaction caused a great deal of regret on the part of many officials of other countries to whom I spoke who asked, "What is wrong with Canada?" I was asked why we were not out there leading in this particular area.

I see that the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) is in the House. I would like to repeat to him what his colleague from Argentina had to say about the performance at Cairns. It was not particularly complimentary. In other words, Canada did not achieve the type of stimulation in terms of a broad-based discussion of the areas we had to initiate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, Members opposite laugh. Out of deference to the sensitivities of the Minister I will not repeat the words that were used and printed in The Financial Post and other newspapers for all to see.

The fact of the matter is we do not have a clear strategy as to what we are attempting to achieve. To make matters worse, we now have legislation before us to dissolve Canagrex after some two years. Once again the Government has shown its dispatch in terms of dealing with these types of matters. The formation of Canagrex was designed to give Canada the opportunity to develop new markets around the world for a wide variety of agricultural products that are not covered by the Canadian Wheat Board. In a sense, Canagrex was the equivalent of the Canadian Wheat Board. It dealt with a range of alternate commodities. I only wish to point out what is apparent, that is, the illogic and inconsistency of Conservative Members of Parliament from western Canada who on any and almost all occasions stand up and swear by the sanctity of the Canadian Wheat Board, but who are not prepared to grant the same type of resources to other agricultural commodities. How is it logical to say that what is good for grains is not good for fruits, vegetables, honey and other products?

• (1200)

Mr. Malone: Because farm groups don't want it.

Mr. Axworthy: I hear a tinny voice from the background. Of course the farmers want it. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture supported it. Is that not a farm group? The last I heard, it represented a lot of farmers.

I suppose the Conservative Party no longer recognizes the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Tory Members have dismissed it. I want it put on the record that members of the Conservative Party no longer recognize the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. That will come as some news to the Federation. Now we know one of the reasons why the Government is getting rid of Canagrex. It refuses to recognize a large part of the Canadian agricultural sector. It says it does not exist. It is invisible to the eyes of Tory Members. Now I begin to understand. It is simply this kind of blindness on the part of Conservative Members that prevents us from keeping Canagrex.

What was Canagrex designed to do? Who is going to quarrel with me when I say that it was designed to do market development? A primary and essential requirement is to open up new markets for agricultural commodities. Anyone who is involved in international trade will say that it takes time and resources to develop a market. It is not developed overnight. There has to be investment, there has to be a cultivation of networks and there has to be promotion. It may take three or four years before sales begin and, as we well know, many producers do not have those kinds of resources. They do not have the staying power to go into a market and use their front-end investments to allow them over a period of years to develop the capacity to sell. Yet that is the only way to do it. Canagrex was designed to do that initial market promotion and development and to give it a chance to stick.

What was wrong with having an organization representing a number of commodity sectors doing market development and promotion on behalf of all commodity sectors and opening up those opportunities? We hear such brave words about the need to open up access to markets. As we all know, the Conservative Party virtually restricts itself to the United States of America. That is the only place about which it is concerned. For many of the other countries of the world where there is demand for our products it is not prepared to invest the time or money or to put the organizational skill to work to make that happen.

I can give you an example of this, Madam Speaker. Three or four years ago I went on a tour of refugee camps in Central America. I found to my delight that one of the major products we sold to that area was beans from Manitoba, a potential alternate crop that will pick up the slack that will occur as our grain markets are faced with a squeeze-play between the United States and the European Economic Community. There is an incredible opportunity to open up those markets in many of those countries. Again, those markets in Central America were opened up through very careful work which occurred over a long period of time. That example could be applied to a wide variety of nations throughout the world.

It is clear from all the testimony and evidence the committee heard that many Canadian farm groups and farm producers are not capable of mounting a long-term developmental investment. Therefore, we brought in Canagrex to make it happen, to allow those groups to find the markets and to invest in the promotion. That has now been taken away. Once again, these groups have been side-swiped by the great theology of the market-place: go forward on your own. However, that is not the way it works.

Certainly every other country including the great fountainhead of market-place theology, the United States, is making every effort to provide major support for various commodity sectors. We are not doing it, though. We are being too pristine and pure about it. God forbid that Canada should advance and expand its agricultural markets. That would run against the grand theology.

When looking at the figures, it is interesting to note how these markets have been shrinking in the last couple of years. Yet this brave new Government is eliminating one of the few major resources we had designed to offset that shrinkage. Furthermore, I think the Government can be properly accused of fooling and perhaps even misleading many of the farm organizations. The Government said it did not like Canagrex but that it would replace it with similar resources and similar efforts through other government organizations. It said that it did not want another Crown corporation because it already had enough, so it would use the Export Development Corporation and the trade offices of External Affairs. It said it would put new money in the Estimates of the External Affairs Trade Department in order to provide an effective alternative or replacement.

Where is that replacement? Can anyone find it? Is there anything in the Export Development Corporation that will provide an effective alternative to Canagrex? No. In fact, suggestions have been made by the press that the Tories want to get rid of the Export Development Corporation. They want to wipe it off the books and restrict its activities. Where is the new money for agriculture in the Estimates of the External Affairs Department for development and promotion of trade? Once again, there is nothing but a blank page. There is no alternative being provided.

At a crucial period in the life of Canadian agriculture, a time when it is fighting for its life to maintain markets around the world and to acquire new ones, the Canadian Government has made a clear and unmistakable decision to pull the props out, to retreat, to withdraw and to recede from those markets. It is absolutely incomprehensible. It defies logic, common sense and intelligence.

At a time when we face this incredible problem around the world, when we face the attack of the U.S. Farm Bill, when we see the kind of export promotion the European Economic Community is doing and when we face incredible pressure on grain trade, knowing that we have to find and develop new markets, why is the Ministry in full retreat? It is in retreat simply for reasons of ideological purity or theological precision. No one can understand the kind of curious motivation which works inside the heads of Tories. However, we do know that Canadian farmers are being left stranded in the international market with no support, no resources and no capacity to compete.

One can only say that eventually Tories will pay the price. We know what is happening in the farm sectors across Canada now. We are aware of the kind of protests that are being raised and of the kind of anger that is being shown. We are aware of the frustration that exists.

This Government came in with a pocketful of promises. Every time the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saw two farmers at a crossroads he had five more promises to make.

Mr. Boudria: Three hundred and thirty-eight altogether.

Mr. Axworthy: Three hundred and thirty-eight promises, and the count is still rising. Everywhere there was a promise: "I will do more. I will provide more. I will pay more." But when you get down to the hard reality, it is retreat, withdrawal, elimination.

• (1210)

It is very clear that one of the important elements in developing new international markets is research and development, to develop new products and new strains of commodities. Yet, once again what do we have from the Conservative Government when it comes to agricultural research and development? We have cut back, elimination, close down, shut off. Once again, there is a total contradiction between promise and performance.

We feel it is important to bring to the attention of Canadians the reason we oppose this Bill. This Government is guilty of indifference to the important issue of how Canadian farmers are going to be able to survive and grow in a very tough and competitive international trading environment.

Canagrex

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Foster: I was interested in the speech by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). He crystalized the whole down-grading which has taken place in agriculture commodities and sales.

If you look through the approximately 20 Tory promises in the 1984 election you will see that a lot of those promises have been broken. Try as you may, nowhere do you find in those Tory promises that they are going to destroy or take away Canagrex from the producers of the less volume commodities.

Clearly, when Canagrex was established there were a lot of commodity groups who looked for support and assistance from the Government. Now they are being dashed by this action to destroy Canagrex. If we look at the promises the Tories made in the 1984 election we see many things, but they certainly did not promise to take away Canagrex.

For instance, they promised to abandon Section 31 of the Income Tax Act to reflect the principles of equity. Even though that was referred to a standing committee, and that committee made a report, no action was taken in that regard. They promised to establish a board of authority to control tobacco production and prices. The passage of that legislation was expedited in one sitting of the House, but still the Government has not passed the necessary Order in Council. They promised to expand the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act into a national farm and forestry rehabilitation act. They have never carried out that promise.

It seems to me that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Fort—Garry has provided an excellent documentation of how the Government makes promises, but does not keep them, and how the Government talks about increasing export sales. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Prince Albert in July of 1984 said he was going to make Canada a superpower in agriculture commodity sales around the world. We only have to look at what his friend the President of the United States has done, and how he has responded, to see that Canadian farmers have never been put in a worse financial position in their lives. Not since R.B. Bennett was the Prime Minister has the situation been worse than the situation we have today under the present Government. The Hon. Member has made some excellent points. I would just ask him to respond to the questions I have raised.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I will be more than happy to go through the Hon. Member's recitation. What he is pointing out very clearly is that the problems that we face do require some very skillful and important forms of government legislation and initiative. It is not sufficient to withdraw the assistance of Government itself. We know full well that the export market in agricultural commodities is one that is shifting quite substantially. The danger posed to many of our agricultural products, because of the Canada-U.S. trade negotiations, is also very serious. Yet what we see happening on the domestic side, in terms of preparation by investing resources, investing in research, investing in a proper support system, investing in export assistance, is that none of that has taken place.

The proposals that we open up our access to markets seems to somehow preclude taking the appropriate action within our own domestic spirit. We are not helping to modernize the system, or provide for the innovation in the system, or the development of the markets in the system. That goes back to a fundamental flaw in the approach to trade, whether it is in agriculture or any other product. You cannot improve your capacity for trade unless you are also improving those products within your own domestic market-place, and the capacity to meet international demands and requirements.

Not only is it a question of promises not being fulfilled, but many of the important and constructive programs are being eliminated. How can a cut-back in agricultural research be justified? How can anyone in their right mind assume that we will be able to respond to new international competitive forces when we are cutting back on our research stations, or university programs on agricultural research? It simply begs logic and common sense to do that. Yet, that is what is going on. You only have to look at every resolution passed by every farm organization to say, "For God's sake, stop this insanity." At least in one area give us the capacity to keep our industry and commodities up to date and innovative. Nothing but a blind eye and a deaf ear has been turned to those pleas. As a result, we are substantially weakening the ability of our agricultural sector to compete and provide for the kind of forward-looking markets needed in the future.

Mr. Gauthier: I would like to ask my colleague for Winnipeg—Fort Garry a question relating to the last point he made. Indeed, we are playing into the hands of the Americans somewhat in destroying Canagrex and reducing the competitiveness of Canadian farm producers by not having a government corporation doing the marketing for those farmers. How does he see this having an impact on our commercial relations with the Americans? Does he see this as a move on the part of the Government to destroy Canagrex so that they will kowtow to the Americans a little better and make friends? Then they indeed can get the free trade deal back on track, so the Americans feel happy about it? Does he feel that there is any relationship between the free trade negotiations and the fact that the Government has destroyed Canagrex?

Mr. Axworthy: It has been quite apparent in the statements made by the trade negotiator for the United States, as well as other officials in the United States, and Members of Congress, that they do not like the way we do business in Canada. They think we should be like them. As a result, one of the threats that we face in the Canada-U.S. negotiations is a clear challenge to things like our marketing board system, our supply management system and our transportation support programs. They are clearly part of what is being challenged.

I might refer the Hon. Member to a study done by the Canada West Foundation which came out just this month. It points out that a number of key agricultural sectors in western Canada, such as the feather trades, egg, poultry, turkey, and others, and the vegetable and horticultural trades would be wiped out at a moment's notice: they would not last 24 hours under Canada-U.S. negotiation.

It is very clear that what this Government is doing right across the board is tailoring many of its own domestic responses and programs to suit what it thinks is a compatible appearance and perception by the Americans. As a result the Americans do not like the idea that we would use the constructive ability of government to assist in these areas, whether it be by marketing boards or trading corporations to try to develop those areas. I think the Hon. Member has made an important point. We cannot ignore the clear relationship between the obsession regarding Canada-U.S. trade and the unwillingness to go forward to help our commodity producers to develop new markets through an operation like Canagrex.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Is the House ready for the question? The question is as follows:—

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I was afraid for a moment that you had not seen me. I would not want to miss this opportunity to contribute to the debate on the destruction of Canagrex by the Tories.

I would like to begin my remarks by congratulating you on your new position in the Chair which I have not yet had the opportunity to do. I know that you will discharge your functions with utmost non-partisanship. I am sure you will excel in that way and I want to take this opportunity to offer you my personal congratulations.

I am going to speak a little bit about this measure of the Conservative Government to dissolve Canagrex, although the words should really be to destroy Canagrex. Why are the Conservatives so bent on getting rid of this organization? Is it merely a partisan gesture on their part? You, being the non-partisan person that you are, Madam Speaker, would know how partisan those Tories can be on occasion. But why destroy Canagrex? Why do it now?

Let me look into those two issues; first, the Bill. It is a very small piece of legislation with very few clauses. It has enormous ramifications as I see it on the agricultural industry of our country. The question that begs to be asked is, does this Bill have support in the farming community? It does not if we go back to the original group of people who supported the concept of having an international strategy through Canagrex in the first place. Let me list some of the people who advocated Canagrex and supported its establishment: the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Eastern Ontario Potato Producers Council, the New Brunswick Potato Agency, the National Farmers Union; l'Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec; the Ontario Bean Producers Marketing Board; the Canadian Pork Council; the Canadian Horticultural Council; the Ontario Flue Cured Tobacco Marketing Board; the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board and the Ontario Soybean Growers. I understand there were others who supported the original Bill to establish Canagrex provided that it had slight modifications. Those who supported that Bill were: the Canadian Food Processors Association; the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the Alberta Swine Breeders, the Manitoba Cattle Producers; the Alberta Cattle Feeders; the PEI Potato Marketing Board; the Alberta Beekeeper's Association and the Western Stock Growers.

For whom does the Government pretend it is speaking in trying to dissolve the Canagrex Corporation?

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, perhaps the inherent contradiction in professing to be both progressive and conservative is becoming ever more obvious. In light of its policy aimed at dismantling Canagrex, it looks as though their Party should be labelled regressive conservative instead of progressive conservative. Is it one of the basic tenets of the Conservative Party that the state should not interfere like this with market forces? Is this the real identity of the Conservative Party? Did the Party's right extremists pressure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and lobby to have Canagrex put to rest? I wish Conservative Members opposite would enlighten us because it is crystal clear that the farming community does not support the abolition of Canagrex.

Madam Speaker, in my mail this morning I received an invitation from Le regroupement agro-alimentaire de Prescott-Russell, a groups of constituents who would like me to attend a seminar on the marketing of farm products. Here we have this Conservative Government bent on annihilating a Government agency designed to promote the marketing of agricultural products, yet a group of people from my own riding—which you know quite well, Madam Speaker, since you have to travel through it every time you leave your own riding to come here on Parliament Hill—has set up this seminar for November 29 this year. Here is what they are asking me: "Immediately reserve Saturday November 29 to come and promote the agricultural food industry in our counties. Saturday the 29th will be set aside to inform, educate, enlighten and brief all seminar participants on the possibility of processing and selling more farm products." As you can see, Madam Speaker, my constituents—like those in all other agricultural ridings throughout Canada, I am sure—want to boost the sale of their products precisely when the Conservative Party is trying to destroy Canagrex, our very own national marketing agency.

[English]

Why is it important to have Canagrex, Madam Speaker? Why is it important to keep it, particularly now? First, we should look at the fact that the Progressive Conservative Party during the last election campaign promised the Canadian people that it would improve sales of agricultural products. I see a Conservative Member across the way from an agricultural area. I have something to read to him. I will read it slowly so that he can understand everything. The Conservative Party put out a press release dated July 5, 1984 entitled "Prince Albert Caucus Progressive Conservative Agenda for Government Policy Area: Agriculture". Here are some of the things the Tories said during the election campaign in that press release:

Canada can be a world superpower in agriculture. We have the land base, the climate, the technology and, most importantly, a strong and determined farm community.

Under Progressive Conservative Commitments, which is a euphemism for Tory promises we find:

We will work with all producers, whether they choose to establish a marketing board or another type of marketing sytem. Some commodities are sold and promoted by marketing boards and agencies; others are sold and promoted in different ways. A PC Government will respect any decision made by the producers.

I have just finished reading to you a list of producers who wanted to have a Canagrex agency, Madam Speaker.

• (1230)

I ask the Hon. Member, when he votes on this Bill will he respect the commitment made on July 5, 1984 by the Conservative Party? How will he reconcile his conscience with the way he votes? I suppose Tories can reconcile anything with their consciences. Let me read further:

A PC Government will respect any decision made by the producers. Our goal is to assist farmers and, through such systems, to develop greater sales and a greater return for their various products.

What happened to that?

Let me read further:

We have always recognized the valuable contribution of grain and oilseed exports to Canada's balance of payments. We will, therefore, work to increase exports and stimulate production to meet those export demands.

Another commitment:

A PC Government will develop a healthy Canadian agricultural industry by providing a strong agriculture research base through greater assistance for agricultural colleges, more funding for agricultural research and development and amending tax policy to encourage private sector investment.

I think all those promises I have read to you, Madam Speaker, have been broken in this Bill before us today. Every single one of them.

The next question is, why should we have a Canagrex, particularly now? The Member across the way who is heckling from behind the curtains should know that Canada is faced with a very grave situation in agriculture right now. This has been caused in large measure by an initiative outside of this country known as the U.S. Farm Bill. The official name is the Food Security Act of 1985 of the United States of America.

Mr. Malone: On what commodities?

Mr. Boudria: That Bill applies to a large variety of commodities, to answer the Hon. Member. Although he heckles a lot, he seems to be at least paying attention to my speech. The U.S. Farm Bill will affect everything from grain to milk to meat products, honey, and a variety of other commodities which will now be subsidized by the U.S. Government to a large and significant extent. The purpose is to displace foreign sales and replace them with U.S. sales. Some $70 billion U.S. will be injected into support programs to compete against Canadian products and others.

What are we doing as a country, as a Parliament, to ensure that we do not lose those sales? We are abolishing whatever small measures we have to help our agricultural industry. Some Tories across the way laugh at that. They are so partisan. Why can they not think for a minute about the agricultural community that sent them here? I guess they will have to reconcile that later, if not with their consciences at least with their voters. The agricultural community is not going to like this one bit.

Mr. Malone: I will take you on in any agricultural community anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Boudria: The agricultural community of my riding is very upset with this Government, and rightfully so.

Mr. Malone: Look at their Member.

Mr. Boudria: The agricultural community right across this country is displeased with the way this Conservative Government has failed to deliver on its promises.

Mr. Malone: What happened in Saskatchewan last night?

Mr. Boudria: I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in the House. I will remind him that he said on February 4, 1985, in this House, as recorded in Hansard at p. 1963:

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that this Government will very aggressively follow the export market for agricultural commodities.

Mr. Wise: And we have.

Mr. Boudria: He continued:

Our Department has already entered into negotiations—

Mr. Wise: And we did.

Mr. Boudria:

—and had discussions and that role will be carried on more effectively—

Mr. Wise: And the results are showing.

Mr. Boudria:

—and more successfully with the Export Development Corporation properly financed.

Mr. Wise: We have done that. We have made those changes.

Mr. Boudria: I ask the Minister what happened to that commitment?

Mr. Wise: It is being fulfilled.

Mr. Boudria: What happened to that commitment?

Mr. Wise: Look at the facts.

Mr. Boudria: The Minister of Agriculture made those statements in this House on February 4, 1985, and in December of the same year the U.S. Farm Bill was passed with hardly any lobbying by Canadian authorities to ensure that it would not pass.

Mr. Wise: Nonsense.

Mr. Boudria: I was in Washington; I spent three days looking at the U.S. Farm Bill.

Mr. Wise: Why did you not stay home? That is your problem.

Mr. Boudria: I asked the people in Washington what kind of lobbying—

Mr. Wise: They told me not to send you down again.

Mr. Boudria: —did the Government of Canada undertake in Washington to ensure that the U.S. Farm Bill would not pass? What was the name of the lobbying firm that was hired? After all, Canadians hired Michael Deaver for some other lobbying. I understand he lobbied very well but he was a rather controversial and expensive guy to have around.

Mr. Orlikow: They paid him pretty well.

Mr. Foster: Some $100,000.

Mr. Boudria: For acid rain we had Michael Deaver. We have hired lobbyists in the past for other things. Yet, when it came time to lobby for Canadian farmers what happened? I asked our embassy in Washington who was the lobbyist, how much time was spent and how much money was paid? Do you know what they said? None, no lobbyist was hired. We have one person working in agriculture in Washington and she did some lobbying on her own. That is what we had to offer to Canadian farmers concerning a Bill involving $70 billion U.S. aimed directly at stealing our customers. We failed miserably, and what are we going to do now? We are going to compound the failure by abolishing our national agency—

Mr. Wise: No, we are just trying to eliminate one of your many failures.

Mr. Boudria: —to provide the marketing. The Minister calls Canagrex a failure. That agency was supported by all the groups I mentioned, and I can repeat the list for the Minister's benefit, yet he calls it a failure. He has questioned the support of the agricultural community which I have just read for you, Madam Speaker. In so doing he is taking partisan shots, not at me but at all those agricultural organizations who wanted a Canagrex type of organization.

Mr. Malone: Have the courage to read the whole list.

Mr. Boudria: Worst of all, he never even allowed the agency to work. Yet I am not convinced that he, although it is his Bill, was in favour of abolishing Canagrex.

Mr. Foster: Certainly was not.

Mr. Boudria: Because I remember speeches he made in this House before the 1984 election when he liked the idea in the first place.

Mr. Horner: No one liked it.

Mr. Boudria: The Member from the agricultural riding of Mississauga North says no one liked it. I invite him to read Hansard. It is excellent material and he should try reading some of the speeches of the now Minister of Agriculture in his days in opposition.

I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), when he delivered his November 8, 1984, economic statement, chose randomly to abolish a number of things and left his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, to carry the can. That is when he cancelled a number of agricultural research projects, Canagrex, and a whole list of other good measures which the Minister had previously supported. The Minister of Agriculture was forced to carry the can, but he should not. He should not be here to apologize for the Minister of Finance. He should let him make his own mistakes. He should tell the Minister of Finance to introduce his own dissolution Bills. The Minister of Agriculture should have told the Minister of Finance that he would not put up with this, that the Minister must reinstate Canagrex or he would move back to the back benches and do his job there for the farmers of Canada. That is what he should have done. But instead he took the easy, partisan role. He sat in his place and defended actions which he did not believe in.

As I said before, I believe that this move is wrong, particularly at this time when there are international pressures on our agricultural commodities. Let us reinstate Canagrex, give it back personnel and make it work for the benefit of Canadian farmers.

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that he is the fifth Member from his Party to speak on this legislation. It has been made quite clear to us in this House that the Hon. Member and his Party oppose the legislation to wind up Canagrex. Is the Hon. Member aware that by continuing to put up speakers on this Bill he is delaying the opportunity of the House to deal with another very important piece of legislation relating to farmers, that is Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act which will provide Canadian farmers with more money now when there is such great concern for Canadian farmers?

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Redway: The Hon. Member indicated that he supports Canadian agriculture. Would it not make a lot of sense for him and his Party to wind up their discussion on this Bill and to move quickly to Bill C-12 in order to show that the Hon. Member and the Liberal Party support the provision of more money for farmers at this critical time in the life of Canadian agriculture?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, that is an excellent question. It is not very well thought out, but it is excellent nevertheless—probably by accident. I have consulted with my colleague, the official critic, and we are perfectly willing to give unanimous consent to move to the other Bill. We could give it passage within 15 or 20 minutes and then revert to the Canagrex Bill, if that is the wish of Members across the way. I am sure we could get consent of all Parties in order to do that.

Mr. Wise: You had better check with your House Leader if you have one today.

Mr. Boudria: I thank the Hon. Member from the vastly rural riding of York East for bringing this to my attention.

With regard to the fact that I am the fifth speaker on this issue, I have no moral lessons to take from Tories who delayed this House for one month for no reason other than to get Dalton Camp to write better speeches for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The only reason these Bills are taking longer to deal with is that the Government failed so miserably to bring the House back at the proper time. I am the deputy critic on agriculture for my Party. I represent 2,500 farmers and I am going to speak for them in this House, whether or not the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) or anyone else likes it.

Mr. Malone: Well, I sure don't like it.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I apologize to the Member for coming in a few minutes late. I missed part of his speech.

Mr. Wise: You're lucky, Dave.

Mr. Mayer: What a shame that was.

Mr. Orlikow: Could the Member help me by indicating which agricultural organizations support his proposal?

Mr. Boudria: That is an excellent question, Madam Speaker. I regret that he was not able, by his own admission, to listen to my entire speech. I could speak longer with the unanimous consent of the House.

I will review for the Member the organizations which had offered their support for the original Bill and those which had offered their support on the condition that slight modifications be made. The Member will understand that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is an umbrella group which represents 200,000 producers. It had offered its support on behalf of the agencies and organizations it represents. Other organizations which offered their total support to this Bill are the Eastern Canada Potato Producers Council, the New Brunswick Potato Agency, the National Farmers Union, the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec, the Ontario Bean

Producers Marketing Board, the Canadian Pork Council, the Canadian Horticultural Council, the Ontario Flue Cured Tobacco Marketing Board, the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board and the Ontario Soybean Growers.

Associations, which supported the Bill providing minor modifications were made, include the Canadian Food Processors Association, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the Alberta Swine Breeders, the Manitoba Cattle Producers, the Alberta Cattle Feeders, the P.E.I. Potato Marketing Board, the Alberta Beekeepers Association and the Western Stock Growers.

In direct response to the Member's question, not only large private corporations supported the deal, it was also supported by such groups as the Union des Producteurs Agricoles du Québec which represents practically every farmer in that province. It had very wide support, as I am sure the Hon. Member knows.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, it is imperative that that which is absolutely and totally false not be allowed to stand in the House of Commons. The Western Stock Growers Association adamantly opposed Canagrex, as does the Alberta Swine Growers Association. For political reasons the Member chooses to put on the record the initial reaction when the Bill was announced. Those reactions were reversed when the Bill was studied, and there was massive opposition from the organizations which the Member says support this Bill. They sent delegations to Ottawa to tell Canadian parliamentarians to oppose that Bill. What he refers to as insignificant and modest changes were changes in the buy-sell clause which was offensive and wrong and put the independence of Canadian agriculture under government control in Ottawa. He may call that small, but that is why the Canadian farm community reacted with the distaste and disgust with which it did. It is unfortunate that a Member would put on the record of the House of Commons things which he knows are absolutely false.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, had the Member listened instead of heckling, as he did for most of the time that I was speaking, he would have heard me list those organizations which indicated support at the time the original Bill was presented. If he spent more time listening and less time talking in this House he would have heard that. I invite him to review Hansard tomorrow and apologize later.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I am interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I think there is a deliberate move by the Government to do everything it can to hurt the agriculture industry. We need only look at the $23 million cut in the budget for agriculture research this year. It is clear that the Minister had the ground cut out from under him by the Prime Minister's office and the office of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on black Thursday, November 8, 1984. It was a decision by the Department of Finance and the Prime Minister's Office.

• (1250)

In his testimony before the Agriculture Committee, the Minister of Finance apologized for this decision being taken by the Government. He also phoned the President of Canagrex, Mr. Ed Story. Obviously, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) is screaming his view because the Tory caucus was very divided on this issue and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) was in opposition—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) but the time for questions and comments has terminated. Resuming debate.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Madam Speaker, let me congratulate you on your new position. I look forward to working with you in the House and I know you will do an excellent job.

Many things have been said this morning that I believe cannot go unchallenged. In many ways it is unfortunate that the Opposition chooses such a tone in this debate because, while there are problems in Canadian agriculture as everyone knows, I believe that any fair minded person would have to admit that the Government is making an effort to address those problems. I can give specific details of those efforts if the occasion rises.

However, when one hears the Opposition come on as strongly as it does, and indicate that nothing is being done in light of some very significant problems, surely it is not doing a service to Canadian farmers, to the House or to anyone who takes pride in being associated with this institution. I say that more in sorrow than in anger.

Let me suggest to Hon. Members opposite that they would serve the people whom they represent and would serve the House much better in debate if they were to talk about some of the things that the Government has done. While they may be critical of the Government, they should at least recognize some of our accomplishments.

For example, they can talk about what we are doing for our export markets internationally. Last year, there was good news as far as the export of Canadian agricultural products was concerned. Members of the Official Opposition should know that last year Canada's share of wheat exports actually rose.

Mr. Boudria: That was before the U.S. Farm Bill.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member should listen and put into practice some of the suggestions he makes for our side. That is after the U.S. BICEP Program and the Farm Bill had been in effect for about a year. We told the Americans when they were contemplating the U.S. Farm Bill that we did not think it would work, because a farmer's normal reaction to lower prices is to increase production and maintain revenue by having more volume at lower total revenue. That has in fact been borne out, because last year Canada's share of total wheat exports went up while the American share went down.

Any farmer in western Canada will say that they went into the crop year at the beginning of August with the lowest on-farm carry-over on record. It was approximately 800,000 tonnes, which is significant. No one in the Opposition pays any attention to that.

Let me put this in greater perspective. We faced the same situation in the early 1970s when there was a rather large surplus of grain around the world which was depressing the market. It is very similar to what is happening today, but our attitude today is that we will not let our farmers down. We will sell their grain and not see granaries full of unsold grain—even at low prices. We are much better off to sell at a lower price and keep the volume up than we are to do what the former Government did in the 1970s, which was to introduce a LIFT Program. I have the figures in front of me. Our exports went down from 18 million tonnes in 1969-70 to nine million tonnes in 1970-71. That was a direct result of a previous Liberal Government reacting to the farm community and not selling. We are not doing that. We are selling at record volumes.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that we will sell their grain, and that is what we are doing. This year we have prospects of increased export sales over last year, when our share of world markets went up.

Let me talk about specific customers. China bought less grain in total last year than it bought in the previous year, but it bought approximately the same amount from Canada. This means that our percentage of their requirements went up. That is not a failure, that is a success story. It would be useful if Hon. Members used some of those facts on the record to put their remarks in a better context.

Let me indicate what happened with exports. At the end of August and the beginning of September in Vancouver, this country hosted a food exhibition for the first time. It was called Food Pacific 86. Its purpose was to bring all the countries in the Pacific region together at an international exposition of food products to let the world know what we had to offer. It was an absolutely resounding success. We give a lot of credit to the British Columbia Government for initiating this exposition and a lot of credit to many people in the federal Government who worked very hard. Eighty-one countries, provinces and various forms of Governments were represented. There were over 800 exhibitors, and some 25,000 buyers attended in four days. Does that sound like a Government and country that is not concerned or doing anything about agricultural exports? Perhaps we can do more, but the Opposition does no service to anyone, above all the farmers who we are here to represent, when it suggests that we have been doing nothing.

I do not wish to prolong the debate, I simply want to put some facts on the record in order to balance the debate. We talk a lot about the U.S. Farm Bill. There is no doubt that we believe it causes problems, but I think the major problem is still with the European Community. No matter how one looks at it, they have increased their production in percentage terms more than anyone else. They have done this through continual subsidies, not only with respect to grain and oil seeds but with almost every agricultural product, including dairy products, pork, beef, wine, grain and sugar-beets.

I know it is fashionable for the Opposition to be anti-American, but if they want to be honest and consistent they must talk about the Europeans in context with the Americans. They should not continue to blame the United States. They should give credit to the Americans when they deserve it. While we may have disagreements with the Americans, they have offered to put their U.S. Farm Bill on the table if the Europeans will agree to do the same. We have yet to see such an offer come from the European Community. If the Europeans were willing to discuss the problem as openly as the Americans, we could make some progress.

We have expressed our doubts to the Americans that the U.S. Farm Bill is working. We told them that they will not get markets simply on the basis of price alone. This has been borne out by the BICEP Program since it was introduced in May, 1985. I can send Hon. Members opposite copies of speeches I have made in the United States in which I have pointed this out to them directly. However, I believe that the main culprit is still the Europeans. The average increase in wheat production by the Europeans since 1968-69 has been almost 20 per cent. They started with a larger base than Canada. The average increase in the United States is 13.3 per cent. This points out again that the major problem in cereal production world-wide is the European Community. Canada comes third with a 3.5 per cent increase since 1968-69, and Australia and Argentina increases are smaller than Canada's.

When we have a debate like this and talk about the very serious problems which face a very productive sector of our economy, I would very much like to have some balance. I think if we could have that balance we might get some useful suggestions from the opposition. We, as a Government, have shown a willingness to sit down and work with people and listen to ideas. If members of the Opposition have some useful ideas we would be more than happy to listen to them. I would like to suggest that if all the Opposition is going to do is take a one-sided, narrow, partisan and political approach, it will not be helpful to any of us, especially the farmers we represent.

Mr. Foster: I think this is an excellent opportunity now, Madam Speaker, to hear what the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board has to say. Of course, this Bill deals with practically all farm commodities besides those commodities handled by the Canadian Wheat Board, so the Minister was slightly off topic. But this is such a sterling opportunity to make some comments about the subject that I would not want to miss doing so.

The Minister talks about the great things he has done. He certainly did something last spring when he announced the initial price for wheat, which was $130 per tonne. That is the lowest wheat price since the 1930s in real dollars. He sort of skipped over that and told us about the wonderful meetings he held and about the meetings he tried to hold around the world. But he did not mention the grinding reality of wheat prices, the lowest since the 1930s. The response of the Government to that reality has been negligible, if not non-existent.

The Minister said he wanted some useful suggestions. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and I met with the presidents of the Prairie Wheat Pool in Regina in mid-May. We recommended that there be a deficiency payment. Every other farm organization I know of has also recommended a deficiency payment. We received a glancing kind of commitment from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), mostly aimed at assisting the Premier of Saskatchewan, in the Address and Reply to the Speech from the Throne, but we still do not have any specific commitment as to whether we are going to get a deficiency payment, some kind of aid program or some kind of guaranteed program, or whatever. We made that suggestion some five months ago. Every prairie premier and every farm organization has been suggesting it since then. But five months down the pipe we still have no specifics as to whether there will be a deficiency payment, whether there is going to be some loan guarantee or, indeed, anything is going to be provided in spite of the lowest grain prices in 50 years in real dollar terms.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I have just a few comments. The Minister said in his address to us today that we have criticized his Government unfairly, and perhaps upon occasion we are rather severe at criticizing the Government. However, I think it deserves a fair level of criticism because, of course, it gave itself the mandate it did; it made the 338 Tory promises which you and I, Madam Speaker, have had to listen to. Those promises are on PC logo letterhead and those promises are what I want to bring to the attention of the Minister today.

Perhaps to expect a Government to live up to its commitment is something that is beyond reality. However, that is not for us in opposition to decide. This is something the Government has created for itself and I think it owes it to Canadians to issue some kind of revised list of promises, telling Canadians that it has now decided that 229 of the 338 promises never should have been made and it apologizes for making them to start with. But as long as that list holds, it is our job to hold this Government accountable for what it said it would do, for what it is doing and for what it is not doing.

The Minister said to us today that the Government had done some things well and, in particular, in the year 1985 it had increased commodity sales. I pointed out to him, and I am sorry I interrupted him to do so that it was before the U.S. Farm Bill, but he said it was after. I would like the Minister to be a little more precise on that answer. If the U.S. Farm Bill was passed on December 23, 1985, and the Minister said those sales were for 1985 after the U.S. Farm Bill, were those sales between December 24 and December 31, because there were only seven days left in the year at the time the U.S. President signed his Bill into law?

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, I can certainly respond to that. The Hon. Member should know that the BISEP program, which is still the export enhancement arm of the U.S. Farm Bill, was introduced in June of 1985. That is over a year ago. This is October of 1986. The crop year that we base statistics on for our wheat exports starts on August 1, 1985, some two months after the BISEP program was introduced. So the crop year to which I was referring runs from August 1, 1985, to July 31, 1986, for which time—the full-time—the BISEP program was in effect. It was in effect two months prior to the beginning of the crop year for which I quoted the Hon. Members statistics. If the Hon. Member wants to do his homework, and be a little less willing to jump to conclusions which assume the worst, he would know that Canada has increased its exports of wheat in spite of some very massive amounts of money the U.S. Government has been spending to try to increase its market. We have been successful. No one has said prices are good. There is no room for joy as far as prices are concerned; we know that. We are attempting to address that on the international scene with discussions, with GATT, and so on. We have been successful in selling, which is entirely different from what happened in the early 1970s when the previous Government walked out on Canadian farmers. It told them not to grow. It introduced the LIFT program which hurt our exports and our reputation as a reliable supplier. We have no intention of seeing that happen this time around because we are going to do our very best to sell the grain Canadian farmers produce.

I should also say that when we talk about grain, it is genuinely a Canadian problem. Ontario is the third largest producer of grain in this country, following Saskatchewan and Alberta, and then my home Province of Manitoba. So it is a national issue and we are addressing it as such.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I thought the Minister might respond and make it clear whether there was going to be a deficiency payment for Canadian grain producers, exactly how much it will be and when it will be announced. The Saskatchewan election is over. The vagueness has been played out. It seems to me it is now up to the Government to announce clearly just what the deficiency payment will be, whether it will be cash, on what basis it will be paid, whether it will be on an acreage basis or delivery basis. I think it would be really helpful if the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board, since he is here and is asking for suggestions and ideas, could make that clear. He has talked about how there was no incentive in the early 1970s. I ask him now, where is the great incentive for grain producers in Canada today when grain prices are the lowest they have been since the 1930s? Grain is now being sold at $130 per tonne and today, on October 21, there are still no quotas for even one bushel of grain in most rural delivery points.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, with respect to the last comment of the Hon. Member, he should know that there is no question that quotas are slow in coming this year, for a couple of reasons. First, there were several quotas announced at the beginning of last week. Last Friday there were general quotas of approximately three bushels for the whole Wheat Board area. So there are some quotas.

Second, the Hon. Member should also know that there are some very good grain movements planned for between now and freeze-up in the St. Lawrence going east, and there are some heavy sales commitments that the Canadian Wheat Board and others have going out to the West Coast. So we look for some pretty substantial movement of grain between now and Christmas, which is certainly good news.

I would like to make it clear that there are quotas, admittedly longer in coming than any of us would have liked, but there are certainly quotas in place now.

With regard to the deficiency payment, I do not know what else I can say in this regard. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has talked about $1 billion. We have said that it will be additional money for agriculture and that no existing program will be cut. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has said it is not a loan guarantee.

In my view, there was no confusion in the minds of the Saskatchewan farmers who went to the polls yesterday and voted. Everyone understands that this Government has made a firm commitment and intends on following through with it in as fair and as equitable a fashion as we possibly can, and as quickly as we possibly can.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Next time when the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) wants a reply, perhaps he could make his question or comment a little shorter. This time I let the Minister reply, but we are about one minute over time. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make my contribution to the debate on Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex, and a piece of legislation which I personally find very regrettable.

We are often asked what the fundamental difference is between the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party. I think this is an excellent opportunity to demonstrate clearly the difference between the two major political parties. The Liberal Party has always taken the position that it is important to have Crown corporations in order to help our economy develop in certain areas where the private sector either does not have the will or the means or simply does not have an opportunity to be active. Consequently, Crown corporations are supposed to play a supplemental role in supporting the Canadian economy, acting as a complement to the private sector. It is clear that the Conservative Government has an entirely different philosophy. It is against Crown corporations. What it wants, and I cannot blame it for doing so, since during the last election campaign, the Conservatives clearly said they wanted to sell and dismantle a number of Crown corporations and let the private sector take over. However, I think this Bill is a mistake. I agree it is in line with the commitment made by the Conservatives to dismantle a Crown corporation. However, the question we must ask today is: Is the Government right to follow up that commitment?

We have just heard the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board make an excellent speech, explaining the work of the Board whose role is to sell Canadian wheat, mostly produced by farmers in western Canada, on foreign markets.

When the previous Liberal Government decided to create Canagrex, farmers in Eastern Canada, especially in my own province, the Province of Quebec, were very much in favour of this plan, because the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec was telling us at the time: Why do we have a Crown corporation that promotes the concerns of Western producers and sells western wheat throughout the world, while we have no corporation to market farm products from Quebec or the Maritimes or to bring the products of UPA members to international markets?

Canagrex was established by the former Liberal administration in a climate of open opposition. When the then Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Whelan, introduced the Bill the Conservative Party opposite government benches did indeed raise very strong objections. As you may recall, companies like Canada Packers with offices practically in every country around the world—not necessarily to sell Canadian products, but rather to promote their own interests—were adamant in their opposition to the creation of a corporation like Canagrex which in certain cases might step on the international scene and operate in a way which a company such as Canada Packers would not necessarily appreciate.

Still the majority of Members of Parliament endorsed the creation of this Crown corporation because they knew that many small farmers throughout Canada would at long last have an agency like Canagrex to defend their interests, and market and sell their products for them in foreign countries. As a matter of fact, a farmer from the riding of Rimouski, Montmagny or Drummond simply cannot go and sell his own products abroad, but another one from Weyburn, Moose Jaw or Manitoba can indeed expect an agency like the Canadian Wheat Board to sell his wheat overseas.

Why should an eastern Canada producer not be able to rely on a national agency or a Crown corporation to sell his products on foreign markets?

Obviously I am disappointed that the Conservative Members should be seeking to put the axe to this agency set up by the previous administration and losing all interest in providing fair service to all farmers anywhere in Canada through a Crown corporation whose mandate is unmistakable.

I can only conclude that Canagrex was never given a real chance to become operative: The moment this Government took office it did everything possible to get rid of the corporation, and this Bill is the best evidence of that.

The Government of Canada is not alone in trying to sell products abroad. I have only to quote what Minister Whelan said when Canagrex was established to remind the House that nearly every country has agencies or programs to assist farmers.

It is therefore regrettable that the Conservative Government would want to remove this tool from Canadian agricultural producers, especially the members of the Union des producteurs agricoles, who were relying on the assistance of Canagrex.

If I may quote what Minister Whelan said at the time:

• (1320)

[English]

The United States of America, with more than $36 billion in agricultural and food exports in 1979, has a number of tools, such as its Foreign Agriculture Service, the Co-operative Program, and the Commodity Credit Corporation—

Those are there to help the American farmer. It goes on:

You can see the other programs that other countries have by their different names.

France, for instance, has SOPEXA, Denmark, the Agriculture Marketing Board—Germany has the CMA; Britain, the British Overseas Trade Board; Australia, the Export Development Council Commodity Board; Israel, Agrexco; Mexico, Conasupo.

[Translation]

Naturally, all these Government agencies play a role to help farmers in their own countries. The previous Liberal Government believed that a national agency such as Canagrex could play a vital role in helping Canadian farm producers, to complement the role already played by certain private organizations. I find it regrettable that the Conservative Government now wants to rely only on private initiative to sell our farm products abroad, except for Canadian wheat.

I therefore close by asking this question: If it is now, has been in the past and will continue to be in the future a good thing to sell Canadian wheat abroad, why would a similar agency not be just as useful in selling other products, such as beef, poultry, fruits, and vegetables in other countries in the best interests of Canadian farmers?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

[English]

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. He will know that he is the sixth Member of his Party to speak on this particular piece of legislation. He and all of the other Members of his Party who spoke prior to him made quite clear the position of the Liberal Party with respect to this Bill. There is another piece of legislation designed to assist farmers, which is the next matter on the Order Paper for this morning and that, of course, is Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act to put more money into the hands of agriculture.

I know the Hon. Member represents an urban riding, as I do. In fact, the Hon. Member at one time was the Minister of Urban Affairs. I am sure he really does have the best interests of Canadian farmers at heart. I wonder if he would urge his colleagues to not put up any further speakers to filibuster this Bill but to get on with its quick passage so that we can deal with the next Bill to put money into the hands of Canadian farmers. I know the Hon. Member wants to do that.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know the Hon. Member to be reasonable, and a gentleman. I do not think he should be imputing motives or blaming us for filibustering the Bill. We are discussing an important Bill.

We did not impute motives to Conservative Members when we spent two days discussing Bill C-11 last week. We did not mind the Conservative Party putting up everyone it could find to have Throne Speech debates put on the record. We did not say that Conservative Members were filibustering Bill C-11. I cannot believe that the Hon. Member was serious when he said that we are filibustering the Canagrex Bill.

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) well knows, the rules of the House provide for a certain set time to debate the Speech from the Throne. Irrespective of whether the Government wants to proceed with legislation quickly or slowly, there is no way it can do so given the requirements of the Standing Orders of the House with respect to the debate on the Speech from the Throne. Of course, that does not apply to this Bill. That is why I am sure the Hon. Member would agree that his Party should get on with the next piece of legislation rather than filibuster this one.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Hon. Members have a right to debate this Bill. I think the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) knows that very well. It was not a point of order on his part.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I would like to reply to the Hon. Member who seems to find it surprising that six Liberal Members would take part in the debate on Bill C-2. Naturally, the Liberal Party, which created Canagrex under the previous administration is very sad to see it disappear, and I do not think that anyone in this House will blame us for expressing our disagreement, for reminding the Government of the reasons why this Crown Corporation was created, and, most important, for saying why we think that the Government should not go forward with this Bill. There is a saying that if you repeat something often enough, something might come of it. It seems obvious to me that on this matter government Members have their ears plugged, which means we have to repeat over and over again, and go on repeating if we are to get some sense into them, if we are to get them to make better decisions for Canadians.

So it is clear to me, Madam Speaker, that the Hon. Member is not aware how seriously involved I was with farm groups in the Province of Quebec. For 15 years I have been meeting periodically with representatives of the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec, and Madam Speaker would know full well that I often travelled to her constituency, because the Saint-Hyacinthe area has one of the major and more progressive farm producers' associations and our Government in the past has always been very sensitive to the recommendations and suggestions from the Union des producteurs agricoles, and in co-operation with them we have implemented things that were very important in the Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot area, to the benefit of farm producers.

I know that this debate is of great concern in many ways to thousands of farm producers, small farmers who hoped that a large corporation such as Canagrex could provide easier access to markets and, above all, since market forces would have it that if you are a corporation such as Canada Packers dealing with a small beef producer and you are probably the only domestic buyer, that farmer is at a tremendous disadvantage to sell his product. Which means in the final analysis that the seller has to accept the buyer's price. On the other hand, with a corporation like Canagrex that could have acted as a globetrotting agent or salesman for a multitude of small producers, it could have been a seller's price, rather than a buyer's, as it is often the case with a large multinational corporation, whose concern is far more for profits than for the survival of the Quebec farmer and farming industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions, comments? Debate.

I now recognize the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, as a few of my colleagues who have not yet risen in your presence, I would first like to congratulate you on your appointment to the Chair and offer our support in your difficult task, because working in the Chair is truly demanding. Having gone through two decades of Speakers, I can say, Madam Speaker, that you have the potential for being one of the best. Congratulations!

[English]

If the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) is right about the numbers, and he always is, I am the eighth Liberal to speak today on this debate on the dissolution of Canagrex. It is a very bad decision by the Government. As the Hon. Member knows, if eight of us are rising, that is certainly not enough to keep this important Crown corporation alive. The Conservative Government will have its way. The company will be dissolved. But, the Hon. Member should not begrudge us the opportunity, which is limited by our small numbers, to put on the record the great hopes that we and a very large constituency of Canadians, particularly in the agricultural sector, had for this corporation.

I do not want to belabour arguments, lists, and so on, that other Hon. Members have put forward. I hope the Hon. Member for York East was here when my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) read the large number of agricultural sector organizations that were in favour of Canagrex and felt that Canagrex could play a part in taking the products of Canada's agricultural sector to world markets. It was a very long list, including bee keepers, grain dealers, all types of livestock dealers. I had not heard that list before. I was impressed to hear that support for the Bill when it was brought forward by our former colleague, Eugene Whelan, when he was Minister of Agriculture, and that so many voices from the agricultural community were asking for exactly this type of a selling agent for their goods.

I am glad to see that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) are here. The experience of the Canadian Wheat Board ought to have demonstrated to the Conservatives that an agency like this can do the job. If the Government wanted to be consistent, it would be wanting to abolish the Wheat Board. The Government knows that an attempt to abolish the Wheat Board would meet resistance. If only it had the foresight to see that the potential of Canagrex is larger than the potential of the Canadian Wheat Board, it would support it. It is not their style to try and look ahead. The style of the Conservatives is to cut, cut, cut Government out of an ideology. This is not something that costs a great deal of money, but it is something that has a lot of potential. Yet, they want to cut it because of ideology. They will be going to the people in the next election with a list. There is a constituency out there that wants to see Government savaged, wants to see as much reduction as possible. Anything that the Government can discard, any responsibility that can be taken away from it, is to the good. We are dealing with a fringe of public opinion that feels that the less Government there is the better. Sometimes there is too much Government, but sometimes there is too little. In this area of world marketing of agricultural products I do not think there is enough. I think Canagrex is needed. It had the support, it had a role, and it was off to a good start. Good people were recruited to make it work. The Government wanted to add one more to the list in its ideological commitment of so-called achievements of demolition and destruction of vital organs that serve the Canadian people. Canagrex was so young it could be destroyed with less damage than the destruction of some other agencies that maybe are not doing such an important job, or maybe do not have the kind of potential that Canagrex had. The Government considered it an easy kill in the list of Crown corporations. The Liberals cannot let that pass. We came to the decision to establish Canagrex after a lot of thought and consultation.

I would like to remind the House what Canagrex was doing. It was to provide market identification and intelligence; to offer promotion and information services; to provide loans and guarantees; to enter into joint ventures with private companies, marketing boards and co-operatives; to act as an agent of the Crown in negotiating state-to-state contracts.

If I can stop in this long list of functions that was to be performed by Canagrex on that role of acting in the negotiation of state-to-state contracts, you will see the kind of function that this corporation of the Crown would have provided that cannot be provided by Canada Packers, Burns Brothers, or all of the different heavy hitters in agriculture. If those companies had seen the Government decision to estabish Canagrex in the proper terms, they could have been part of the promotion of Canagrex, and made money on it at the same time as farmers were benefiting from finding larger markets for their products.

Another important function of Canagrex was to provide grants and contributions to help accelerate product development, promotion, or the provision of needed infrastructure. A Crown corporation has a much longer horizon than a private company. It does not try to maximize profits in the short term, or consider itself responsible for the assets of which it holds the title. A Crown corporation takes a larger view of its responsibility in the economy and to the Canadian people. I remember when they were talking about cutting off—sorry, has my time expired?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with regret that I must interrupt the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) at this time. He will have 12 minutes when Government Orders are resumed.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to lay upon the Table the report of the Auditor General of Canada to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1986. I remind Hon. Members that, under Standing Order 96(3)(f), this report is deemed to have been permanently referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

ENVIRONMENT CANADA

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last, in a statement under Standing Order 21, on the budget of Environment Canada, I inadvertently neglected to deduct the budget of the Canadian Forestry Service transferred to Agriculture Canada in 1985. To take this transfer into account, the 1984 budget of Environment Canada should read $741 million, not $886 million. This year's Environment Canada's budget shows $745 million, $3.6 million more than the 1984 budget.

To avoid the erosion caused by inflation at 4.2 per cent per year, in 1985 there should have been an increase of $31 million in Environment Canada's budget amounting to $772 million, and again in 1986 an increase of $32 million amounting to $805 million. At a time when Canadians are asking the Government to play a stronger role in the environment, there is a slippage of $59.9 million over the past two years in Environment Canada's purchasing power, without counting budget cuts.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA PORTS DISPUTE OVER HANDLING OF CONTAINER CARGO

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I would remind Members of this House that the time clock is ticking for a negotiated settlement in the ports of British Columbia, particularly with regard to the container clause. When the clause was negotiated in 1970 it was expected that it would maximize work opportunities for longshoremen, but to some extent it has had the opposite effect. In 1980 containers bound for Canada via Seattle/Tacoma amounted to 30,000 units, and via Vancouver 55,313 units. By 1984 these figures were 79,600 units via Seattle/Tacoma, and for Vancouver 66,300 units, an increase of 165 per cent and 19.9 per cent respectively.

In the report of the Conciliation Commissioner, Donald Larson points out that were it not for the container clause a large number of the containers shipped through Seattle/Tacoma and then trans-shipped by truck to Vancouver would be shipped through the Port of Vancouver. He recommends the removal of article 26:05, the container clause, and suggests a guaranteed number of hours to cover this clause.

I urge both parties in their meetings to use the report's recommendations as the basis for settlement.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SUBCOMMITTEE'S REPORT ON PENSIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, soon it will be six months since the report of the subcommittee on CN pensions reported back to the House through the transport committee. The ball has been in the Government's court with respect to this issue now for almost half a year.

I want to take this opportunity to call on the Government to indicate to the House and to the many tens of thousands of CN pensioners just what it intends to do about this particular issue. It is an issue that has been long studied by the House. Great expectations were raised by the striking of the subcommittee. I know that not all pensioners were happy with every jot and tittle of the report. Nevertheless, it remains the case that a great many things were recommended by that subcommittee which, if implemented by the Government, would be to the great benefit of pensioners and people in active service at the CNR.

I call on the Government to act with respect to this issue that has been before the House for so long, and to indicate to pensioners and to railway workers just what the Tories intend to do about something that they very often said when in opposition they would do something about.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FINANCIAL NEEDS OF ELDERLY SINGLE WOMEN

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, the Government had made real progress toward the goal of ensuring that all Canadians enjoy a secure retirement. Pension plans are now more portable and we have made it easier for individuals to save for retirement through RRSPs. More than 50,000 older people, mostly women, have a higher income today because we made the spouse's allowance available to all financially needy widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64. Another 35,000 Canadians, again mostly women, have recovered the Canada Pension Plan survivor benefits they initially lost when they remarried.

• (1405)

The system is substantially better than it was but there is still room for improvement, particularly in the case of divorced or never married women who are therefore not eligible to receive the spouse's allowance. We must recognize the contribution which women make as individuals and provide a decent standard of living for all women regardless of their marital status. While their circumstances may be different from those of widows and widowers, the financial needs of older women who are divorced or who have never married are just as real.

REQUEST THAT EARLY RETIREES BE REIMBURSED RETROACTIVELY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it has now become quite clear that the Forget Commission is urging the Government to make retroactive payments to the 50,000 early retirees who were unfairly penalized by this Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to remember that these people were deprived of an annual income of about $10,000 to which they were entitled, simply because plant closings forced them to withdraw the pension funds they had accumulated with private sector employers.

Mr. Speaker, it is getting ever more shocking to see that the same Government should find it quite normal to finance the Forget Commission to the tune of $5.8 million taken directly from the unemployment insurance fund. In my view, all Members of the House—New Democrats, Liberals and Conservatives alike—must put pressure on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to announce this week that these 50,000 early retirees will indeed get refunds, including 15,000 in Quebec and others in the rest of Canada.

SMALL BUSINESS

OUTLOOK ON THE FUTURE

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business reveals that the number of small- and medium-sized businesses is growing at a 5-to-1 ratio, and that freer trade with the United States will have a positive impact on our business sector. Some 22,528 members were polled, which goes to show clearly that practically all small- and medium-sized businesses are not afraid to face American competition. As they do in Beauce, they stand ready, confident and quite optimistic to face this exciting challenge.

Our people take a very realistic approach to this question. However I would caution our negotiators, for we do have a very vulnerable sector—agriculture—where they must be careful not to bargain our vested interests away.

Indeed we have everything to gain by opening up our borders. Small- and medium-sized businesses are the cornerstone of the Canadian economy.

We must come up with challenging ideas and find new markets to create new wealth in Canada.

Good luck to small business in Beauce, Quebec, and the rest of Canada!

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—WITHDRAWAL BY GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to take note of the decision by General Motors to pull out of South Africa. GM, the largest U.S. operation in South Africa, took its decision essentially for three reasons: first, a disappointment with the pace of dismantling apartheid; secondly, the recent imposition of stricter U.S. trade sanctions against South Africa; thirdly, the adverse effect on domestic sales resulting from GM's presence in South Africa. It is also worth noting that this is a company from which originated the Sullivan principles dealing with codes of conduct.

The American people are to be congratulated for having mobilized an effective campaign against apartheid which, two weeks ago, forced the hand of a President and now that of the largest corporation in the world. There is a message in this for Canadians opposed to apartheid. When people join together to act according to their convictions, even the mighty will fall into line with what is right. The corporations of Canada should take note, as should the Government of Canada which should not weaken in its resolve to provide leadership in the struggle against apartheid.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS OF CANADA

NEW REPORTING FORMAT SUPPORTED

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the recently published Federal Government Reporting Study done jointly by the office of the Auditor General of Canada and the United States General Accounting office is a most useful document. The Public Sector Accounting and Auditing Committee of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants has, as have many parliamentarians, been advocating more useful, understandable, reliable and relevant financial reporting. The study, if implemented, will take us a long way toward these goals. In particular, the illustrative annual financial report of the Government of Canada, with its three consolidated statements of operations, financial requirements, and financial position, provides information in a useful, broad, and complete way. It is to be hoped that this new reporting format might be used on a continuing basis for part of the Public Accounts of Canada.

CONSEQUENCES OF BENEFITS REDUCTION OR LOSS FOR ATLANTIC REGION FISHING INDUSTRY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, today in New Brunswick, we find the following on the first page of the newspaper Le Matin:

> According to the Director General of the Economic Council of New Brunswick, the Prime Minister was unable to clarify the role of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

One wonders whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) knew what he was doing when he made the announcement in the Speech from the Throne. Maybe he just wanted to give us the impression he was going to give special attention to the Atlantic region.

Well, I hope the Prime Minister got the message when the fishermen showed they were not happy with the recommendations in the Forget report.

The message is clear: A reduction or the elimination altogether of benefits for persons working in the fishing industry would be a disaster for the region and raise angry reactions from the entire industry.

FORESTRY

PRELIMINARY U.S. DECISION TO IMPOSE COUNTERVAIL DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in the House to speak on behalf of the forestry industry and forestry workers in my region. On the weekend, I met a number of workers who expressed their grave concern following the preliminary decision by the U.S. Department of Commerce to impose a countervailing duty on our lumber exports.

Mr. Speaker, this decision is unjustified and unacceptable. The Government, together with the industry, the unions and the provinces, must express its displeasure in no uncertain terms and threaten the Americans with retaliatory action of a political and commercial nature if they do not reverse this unfortunate decision.

Mr. Speaker, I want to give my constituents the assurance that their Member will be watching developments very closely and the forestry industry in my region can count on my unstinted co-operation.

FINANCE

NON-PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY CREDIT FONCIER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to announce today the seventh winner of our great untaxed corporation award. Today's award goes to Credit Foncier. That company has been granted by successive Liberal and Conservative Governments, through tax concessions, the right to claim tax credits in 1979 and 1982 on millions of dollars of profits. In 1980, 1981, 1983 and 1984, when it did pay current corporation taxes, the tax rate was so low it was almost non-existent, only an average of 1.5 per cent.

Had the tax system been fair and had Credit Foncier been required to pay a tax rate of even 25 per cent on its more than $43 million in profits since 1979, taxpaying Canadians would have paid $10.3 million less in taxes because of this one company alone. We hope this reminder to the Government will result in an immediate, real, comprehensive tax reform.

COMMENTS ON GOVERNMENT'S FISCAL RESTRAINT POLICY

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, today the Auditor General tabled his report to Parliament. The report comments on the very positive progress that has been made by the Government. The Auditor General cautions readers: "I emphasize to readers that they should give special weight to those observations that are positive for while briefly stated they do indeed balance if not outweigh negative observations".

About last year's report he says: "In most instances positive action has been taken or is under way in response to the major recommendations". On the Government's policy of fiscal restraint he says: "This new approach seems to me a good sign of an imaginative initiative being brought to the whole area of spending taxpayers' money with increased prudence". In closing he stated: "Those responsible for spending taxpayers' money are doing so more carefully. I believe that MPs and the taxpayers of Canada should be heartened by the genuine improvements".

TRIBUTE TO GREAT QUEBECERS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, this week we are celebrating the anniversary of the Person Case, and I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to two Canadian women, two Québécoises, who passed away not long ago, namely, Mrs. Andrée Paradis, President of La Revue des arts and Mrs. Françoise Gaudet-Smet, a great educator and communicator.

With their commitment to social causes, their concern for perfection and their compassion, these women gave a vast audience access to information that opened up whole new vistas. Their dedication deserves special mention because they were instrumental in developing and enriching our social and cultural life in Canada and, especially, in Quebec.

On behalf of all Canadian men and women, I want to thank Mrs. Paradis and Mrs. Gaudet-Smet for the leading role they played in promoting the arts and social concern in this country.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

RE-ELECTION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT OF SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Government of Saskatchewan, under the excellent leadership of Premier Grant Devine, did it again by coming out victorious in the Saskatchewan provincial election yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1415)

Mr. Scowen: Premier Devine and his cabinet colleagues showed that our main industry, agriculture, is first and foremost in the economy of Saskatchewan, and rural Saskatchewan came out in full force and backed him up.

I am pleased to say that five Progressive Conservative provincial Members in my riding were re-elected with a substantial majority. Premier Devine has shown what federal-provincial co-operation can do for the country, and what happens when we have a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Ottawa who listens to and acts upon the many concerns of the people in provincial ridings.

My congratulations and best wishes to the re-elected majority Progressive Conservative Government in my home Province of Saskatchewan.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK STANDSTILL AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he deem it appropriate to tell the President of the United States that we will need a standstill agreement between the two countries to forestall any further unilateral harassment, like the action against lumber, if we are seriously going to continue trade negotiations with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been reading the comments on trade of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I note that he is not only in disagreement with the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, but also with himself. He would know that no kind of arrangement that would be the conclusion of a trade negotiation can be arranged before that negotiation is concluded.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The right hon. gentleman was here during the Throne Speech debate when I said that we in no way supported the initiative of the Prime Minister, himself, or of the Government on these trade negotiations, that he got this country into a mess and painted Canada into a corner, and where do we go from here?

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): But in any case, Mr. Speaker . . . If I may put another question to the Prime Minister? Why is he systematically refusing to try and reach a standstill agreement on duties with the President of the United States, so as to forestall unilateral harassment for the duration of our trade negotiations with the United States? I think it is a reasonable suggestion, even for the Prime Minister and his Minister.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade has transmitted the Canadian position to the U.S. Administration. In a trade relationship of the size that exists between our two countries, there will always be problems and obstacles. We must deal with these in a responsible manner, and that is what we are trying to do, because as the Economic Council of Canada pointed out yesterday in its report Changing Times: "—the increase in the number of jobs would be over 370,000 in 1995." Hundreds of thousands of jobs will become available to Canadians if we manage to conclude this kind of agreement. That is why the Government of Canada is working towards this goal.

UNITED STATES POWER TO IMPOSE COUNTERVAIL DUTIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a third question to the Prime Minister, or perhaps to the Secretary of State for External Affairs since he referred to the end result of negotiations as meeting the problem of countervail. How can the Government continue to say we need trade talks with the United States in order to reach an agreement to stop countervail when the President of the United States, in a letter he wrote on April 24 to the Senators he persuaded to adopt the fast track, said quite clearly that he will not negotiate the American right to countervail, and those instructions were given to their chief negotiator, Peter Murphy, by the Congressional Committee? What are we talking about here when the Americans said right at the outset, by the pen of the President, that countervail is not negotiable?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a negotiation in which a number of issues, including the capacity to countervail, are on the table, as they are in the GATT. We are also here talking about a response by a Government of Canada to a protectionist situation in the United States that dates well back to days when the former Liberal Government refused to accept its responsibilities to protect the Canadian interest. That kind of protectionist assault upon Canada would exist whether or not there were trade negotiations. The trade negotiations offer us an opportunity to stop that kind of assault and to protect Canadian interests. That is why we are pursuing them.

UNITED STATES SURTAX ON IMPORTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State. In posing my question I would only remind them that in 1983 we won a lumber decision in the United States. We did not have to back down.

In light of the statements made yesterday by the Minister for International Trade that all appropriate actions would be taken against the United States imposition of a surtax if the President refuses to veto the Bill, and in light of the statement by the presidential spokesman that he will not veto the Bill, would the Minister please tell us what appropriate action the Government now intends to take? Will we be going to GATT? Will we be talking to our allies? Will we be imposing a customs duty? Will the Minister tell us what we will now be doing?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that question was raised yesterday and the Minister for International Trade answered it and indicated we are looking at a wide range of responses, including going to the GATT, including action which might be open to us as a result of provisions in the Auto Pact, and including other measures.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): In addition to the imposition of a surtax on imports, the United States Congress has now passed a Bill which will put a tax on all cargo, loaded and unloaded, in U.S. ports, which once again will have a major impact on Canadian exporters and importers. Will the Government tell us what it is going to do about this additional harassment and trade restriction imposed on us by the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly can. As the Minister for International Trade indicated yesterday, we have lost some cases and have won some 10 cases protecting Canadian interests in the United States. The fact is we are dealing with a major protectionist pressure in that country which hits Canada as it hits other countries.

The opposition Parties, if it were left to them, would apparently have simply condemned the United States. What we are trying to do is put in place a negotiated arrangement which will protect Canadians better than they were protected under the system we inherited from the Liberal Party.

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN PORT-CARTIER—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. According to the Auditor General's report tabled today, the Minister and Treasury Board made the decision to build a new prison at Port-Cartier without considering the requirements of a new prison. My question is quite simple: Does the Minister agree with this incredible revelation?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have said on many occasions, this was a government decision. It was made to assist an economically depressed area. I would like to point out to Hon. Members that this is a statement confirmed by the Auditor General in his report and, I may say, using institutions to assist economically depressed areas is a view shared by my predecessor, the Solicitor General of the former Liberal Government.

TREASURY BOARD DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my next question is directed to the Prime Minister who has the responsibility for the administration of his Ministers. Considering that the Auditor General said that Treasury Board made a decision without even considering the report by Corrections Canada that there was no need for a prison, and considering that $41 million has been wasted, and considering that no tender was called, does the Prime Minister believe that this type of decision to locate this type of facility in his riding is consistent with good public administration?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to read from the Auditor General's Report paragraph 7.90 which states:

Our review of the related files indicated that the building of an institution at Port-Cartier was based on non-program-related considerations such as providing—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: If I may have the privilege of replying:

—such as providing economic benefits to a depressed area.

We make no apologies for that. It is the same as what we did when we scrapped the PGRT and when we gave $1 billion to assist farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Conservatives may cheer about the waste of $41 million, but I can tell them that the people of Canada will not be cheering when they see this.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I wish to ask the Prime Minister, who sits reading his notes, does he believe a decision to waste $41 million of public money was why the people of Canada elected him as Prime Minister? Will he answer that question?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should not get too exercised. If he reads the Auditor General's Report at paragraph 7.97 he will see that it states:

We conclude, therefore, that in the larger national interest of providing economic benefits to a depressed area, CSC was required to build an institution—

Mr. Broadbent: "CSC was required" by the Government to—

Mr. Mulroney: Of course. It was a government decision, in much the same way as the Government took a decision two weeks ago to put $1 billion into the hands of the western farmers, because of the same kind of considerations to help economically depressed areas. If the Hon. Member is opposed to it, then he should stand up and say that he is opposed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

TAX EXPENDITURES—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In his report tabled today the Auditor General points to the issue of inadequate government control over tax expenditures—estimated at about $28 billion a year—as being an extremely serious threat to control of the public purse. Will the Minister state what plans he has to improve controls over these expenditures?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the plans to improve control started some while ago when we started to eliminate a number of these tax expenditures, as my hon. friend well knows. In addition to that we issued in August, 1985, a book entitled Account of the Cost of Selective Tax Measures, another phrase for tax expenditures, as the Hon. Member well knows. I do not recall hearing any suggestions from the Hon. Member with respect to what tax expenditures in the report might be removed.

However, I point out to the Hon. Member that in the tax reform proposal on which I have been working there will be, and there is already under way, a vigorous review of all tax expenditures to see which ones we will be able to eliminate and, in so doing, reduce the level of tax rates as a whole.

MEASURES TO IMPROVE CONTROLS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question did not address the matter of removal of tax expenditures. I spoke of controls. At the present time the costs are buried. They do not appear in the fiscal plan, the Estimates, or the Public Accounts of Canada. Since this Government has been in power we have seen a retroactive change to legislation which was treated as part of a series of technical amendments to the Income Tax Act even though it was designed for one particular company. What is the Minister doing to improve controls and information to Parliament?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did comment quite specifically on the effect of the process of tax reform we are going through right now. It will involve a very, very rigorous review and evaluation of all of those tax expenditures to see which ones we can remove. I would hope that the Hon. Member would participate in this during the course of the work that is to be done involving Members of Parliament.

PENITENTIARIES

PORT-CARTIER MAXIMUM SECURITY PRISON—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister admit that he did not complete the sentence that he was reading from the Auditor General's Report? I am sure he would not want to mislead anyone about what the Auditor General had to say about a prison being built in the national interest. He said it was being built at a security level higher than the one at which the need existed.

Will the Prime Minister not concede that building a maximum security prison rather than a medium security prison costs the taxpayers, at a most conservative estimate according to the Auditor General, $32,000 per inmate, and that other estimates might be $100,000 per inmate? Will the Prime Minister admit that this excessive use of maximum security, whatever the so-called national interest is, is a very poor use of the taxpayers' money?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed in a response I referred to 7.97 and that indeed is the full quote. I pointed out the paragraph and obviously that is it. I also acknowledge that the one stated in the report is clearly the assessment of the Auditor General. The Auditor General exercises his good judgment in regard to public expenditures. We think he does a fine job and we commend him on his work.

Mr. Broadbent: But he said you wasted $41 million.

Mr. Mulroney: It is our responsibility as the elected Government of Canada to make decisions such as the one we made two weeks ago to put $1 billion into the hands of farmers, to eliminate the PGRT, to help Newfoundlanders, and to use federal instruments for purposes of regional economic development. That we have done and that we will continue to do.

FORECAST OF UNNEEDED CAPACITY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister not concede that the Auditor

General reports that by 1992 there will be 659 additional unneeded spaces in maximum security institutions although there is a shortage at medium security institutions, that most of these are in Quebec and, in short, that we are going to have at least two unneeded maximum security institutions in Canada? Will he concede that this is certainly not a good and productive use of the taxpayers' money?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Hon. Member that the shortage of beds to which she refers in the Auditor General's Report is—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We are not talking about hospitals.

Mr. Kelleher: —cells, is a projected shortage, not an existing shortage.

Mr. Broadbent: He said a surplus.

Mr. Kelleher: With the greatest of respect, the Auditor General has lumped together security institutions and protective institutions. The need was there for a protective institution. That is what we have built.

REQUEST THAT CONSTRUCTION BE HALTED

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is really unbelievable that the Prime Minister should continue to try to justify—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member not to start right off by being argumentative. Would the Hon. Member put a preamble in order to help him put his question, and would he then put his question?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, today the Auditor General confirmed what we have been saying for a number of months. He indicated that the cost of the decision to relocate the prison in Port-Cartier will cost Canadians an additional $41 million. The Auditor General also points out that there is no need for a protective custody prison at Port-Cartier.

In view of the Auditor General's investigation and his scathing attack on the Government's decision to relocate the prison to Port-Cartier, will the Prime Minister stop playing games with taxpayers' money, halt construction of the prison immediately, and refer the entire matter to the Public Accounts Committee for consideration?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have said on many occasions and as has been confirmed by the Auditor General, the site was selected for economic reasons. In his testimony before the Justice Department, the former Solicitor General said that "the site was chosen bearing in mind considerations of regional development as well as considerations of corrections and that in fact he thought that every Department of Government ought to take account of regional disparity in dealing with its own priorities". That is what we did, and that is a view confirmed by the former Solicitor General.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it is time that the Prime Minister stopped playing gigolo with his constituents at the taxpayers' expense.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

FINANCE

TAX EXPENDITURES—REQUEST FOR DISCLOSURE OF CORPORATE RECIPIENTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and arises out of the Auditor General's repeated confirmation that there has been an enormous loss of revenue. Some $28 billion was lost to Canadian taxpayers because of tax expenditures and the Auditor General said that these flowed without control, without accountability, and without adequate information to Parliament. Will the Government restore public confidence in the tax system by moving to change the Income Tax Act to provide that every corporation that receives more than $50,000 in tax expenditures from Canadian taxpayers will be reported by name to Parliament?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in response to the general point the Hon. Member has raised, the Department of Finance is in the process of developing an evaluation unit so that we can look more closely at tax expenditures. In the meantime we are evaluating these on a very rigorous basis in the process of tax reform, as I indicated in answer to the previous question.

On the question the Hon. Member has raised just now, I am not quite sure he understands exactly what he has requested. A tax expenditure has a very broad definition. Any company receiving the low tax rate for small business, any company receiving research and development credits, and any company taking deductions for capital cost allowances would be included in the definition the Hon. Member has just raised.

TAX REFORM POLICY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, rather than leaving this to be evaluated secretly in-house by the Finance Department, will the Minister move to ensure that the people of Canada, through Parliament, can evaluate the 80,000 companies that are profitable but do not pay any tax because of tax concessions or the $1 billion which fell out on the "Little Egypt" bump because of a tax loophole?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that we moved very quickly to cancel the so-called "Little Egypt" bump to which he has referred. I have yet to hear any commendation for that from the Hon. Member or any of his colleagues.

During the course of tax reform, we will review these in a very rigorous way. I throw back to the Hon. Member the challenge I threw back to his predecessor. We released a booklet entitled The Cost of Selective Tax Measures over a year ago, and I think I have received five recommendations from members of the New Democratic Party. Let them put some words behind the rhetoric, come up with some recommendations and participate in tax reform in a positive way.

FORGET COMMISSION—FINANCING OF COMMISSION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and deals with the Forget Commission. Yesterday the Minister misled the House when he tried to compare—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Allmand: —an internal inquiry conducted by a public servant at the request of his Minister with a Royal Commission appointed under the Inquiries Act by the Prime Minister. How can the Minister justify the expenditure of $5.6 million from the unemployment insurance account for the Forget Commission when Section 135 of the Unemployment Insurance Act says that these funds can only be used for unemployment insurance benefits and for the cost of administration of the Act? By what stretch of his imagination is this gutting of the Unemployment Insurance Program considered administration?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I maintain exactly what I said yesterday. To satisfy the Hon. Member, we checked with the Department, and Section 135 of the Unemployment Insurance Act is quite clear. It refers to the possibility of paying for the administrative expenses, research costs and the like of any commission.

As for the other reference, Mr. Speaker, it makes no difference whether the Commission was internal or external, since the exact same procedure was followed for the Forget Commission as for the first one. It makes no difference whether the Commission was headed by a public servant or was a royal commission of inquiry, since we followed the same procedure, and this is all quite normal and proper and legal, and, once again, Mr. Speaker, I did not mislead the House in any way.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SECURE LEGAL OPINION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister refer this matter to the Minister of Justice for a legal opinion to determine whether the use of these funds from the unemployment insurance account was legal considering Article 135? Would the Minister also tell us why this Royal Commission appointed by the Prime Minister was not financed out of the Privy Council Office like all other Royal Commissions under the Inquiries Act?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that we followed the normal procedure, and I think it is high time the Hon. Member stopped using these scare tactics. We are getting calls at our office from people who say we are going to cut benefits the day after the Forget report is published. You are responsible for spreading panic among Canadians.

TRADE

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES TARIFF ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Lumber forwarders and shippers say that they expect the new 15 per cent tariff to go on transport costs too, which will kill 1,500 handling jobs in Ontario alone. Could the Minister tell us what he is doing to prevent this further disaster to our economy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The most direct answer is that we are trying to put in place, by negotiation with the United States, a system which protects Canada from that very kind of exposure which the Member complains of day after day after day. He lives in some kind of dream world or he pretends that sitting back and crying foul will stop protectionist pressures in the United States. Obviously it won't. You have to act. We are accepting the responsibility to act.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, cancel the talks. Put the talks on hold.

Mr. McCurdy: Give the Canada Award for it too.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Minister is clearly not even aware that his own Ministry is making representations on this transport cost issue. Will the Minister commit himself to help the lumber forwarding and shipping industry save these jobs rather than just leaving it to a U.S. decision whether they live or die?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I not only know what my Department is doing, I know what my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, is doing. She is meeting today with provincial Ministers of Trade and of Forestry from across the country to continue a common approach based on practical actions open to Canada, and also to carry on the discussions of means by which we might protect Canada against this kind of protectionist surge that we are seeing in the United States. What is needed here is practical action, not ideological attacks upon a neighbour.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston on a short supplementary question.

LOCATION OF PRISON AT PORT-CARTIER—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of Paragraph 7.99 of the Auditor General's Report, can the President of the Treasury Board tell the House today whether, prior to making the decision to relocate the prison from Drummondville to Port-Cartier, he had at his disposal all the facts that were necessary in order to determine whether or not there was a need for a protective custody prison at Port-Cartier?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think it is generally known that the decision made in the case of the Port-Cartier prison was a Government policy that was referred to Treasury Board for preliminary approval, and as you know, Treasury Board is not a political committee. It is a committee that reviews decisions from a financial point of view. And yes, we had the information we needed to make that decision.

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—APPLICATION OF ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILE TREATY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said in his statement this morning that the issue has become, and I quote: "What are the limits on permissible research" for SDI under the ABM Treaty? What does the Government of Canada say are the limits for permissible research under the ABM Treaty?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Hon. Member was in the House today during the exchange on the question of arms control. If he were, he would know the issue that failed to be concluded at Iceland was precisely what those limits are—that is an issue, a disagreement between the two parties signatory to the ABM Treaty. He would also know that there is a written treaty that makes no reference to research, and he would know that there might be private documents in the hands of both the Soviet Union and the United States which might elaborate on other agreements that they made with respect to research. Only they can know that. All that we can ask is that the integrity of the ABM Treaty be respected and that there be a strict adherence to it. That is the position of the Government of Canada.

POSSIBLE RESEARCH UNDERTAKEN BY CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, Clause 5 of the ABM Treaty forbids testing in space. The Americans have indicated that they wish to change that, abrogate it, or rewrite the ABM Treaty. In view of the fact that Canada supports the private sector industries in joining in on the research for SDI, and in view of the fact that that research may indeed take SDI out of the lab and into space, is it not fair for us to ask the Government not to support that private research in case that private research does result in the abrogation of Clause 5 of the ABM Treaty?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am asked for an opinion as to whether or not such a request would be fair. My opinion is no.

JOB LOSS INQUIRY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In this House last Wednesday the Minister of State for Science and Technology said: "There will be no lay-offs at the NRC". Today we learned from the Vice-President of the National Research Council in charge of laboratories that 100 to 150 persons will lose their jobs as a result of the Minister's cuts. Why does the Minister say one thing, that there will be no lay-offs, and a Vice-President of the National Research Council say the direct opposite? Whom are Canadians to believe?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member has learned, he has learned from The Globe and Mail. Two hours ago I spoke with the President of the NRC who assured me once again that the NRC will honour the Government's request to make certain that every conceivable effort is made to minimize the impact on individuals who would have to be replaced or re-assigned to other duties, and that there will be no lay-offs and no pink slips in the current year particularly, and perhaps none at all even in subsequent years.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SUSPEND FUNDING DECISION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister could tell us how a 58 year-old reseacher, Dr. Basinski, who has devoted his whole life to a certain area, can be recycled at age 58?

[Translation]

If the Minister is right, would he be prepared to put his decision on hold so as to enable the parliamentary committee to make an in-depth study of it?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, again, the person to which the Hon. Member makes reference will not have his research position phased out or cancelled. It will remain intact. May I remind the Hon. Member that what happened at the NRC was not my decision or that of the Government. It was a decision of the board on which the Government relies to manage the affairs of the NRC.

FUNDING OF RESEARCH IN UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Can he assure my constituents associated with one of Canada's best research organizations, the University of Western Ontario, that new thrusts announced in the Throne Speech and the reallocation of NRC resources will mean more research will be done in universities across Canada with federal support, rather than being concentrated in government laboratories in Ottawa?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we are moving very decisively in two areas. The first is to revitalize in-house research capabilities, which includes the NRC and Ottawa laboratories. The second is to strengthen the capability and competence of universities to respond to a new set of national priorities, that is, the teaching of future scientists and permitting universities to play a role in strengthening our industrial competence in foreign markets.

FUNDING OF SPACE RESEARCH PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Science and Technology came close to reconciling the contradiction between the vice-president in charge of laboratories who should know what is going on, and himself, with respect to the lay-offs. When he answers this question I hope he will remember Pinocchio.

He claims that $800 million in new money is going to go into space research. Is it not true that one of the reasons we are having lay-offs at the NRC now is because the NRC is being savaged for that space program?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, let me tell the Hon. Member what is happening. What this Government has done is to allow the NRC to resume its work as Canada's principal research agency. Unlike the former Government, we do not believe you can advance the cause of science and technology through bricks and mortar. The NRC has carried on about $150 million in construction projects over the last three years. They are now completed and phased out; that is why there has been a major reduction in the budget of the NRC. We just do not think that is a proper way to advance the cause of science and technology.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the people involved are not made of bricks and mortar. Remember Pinocchio.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. McCurdy: Would you please reconcile your statement—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. McCurdy: —that $800 million in new money is going into the space program with the fact that money is being taken out of the NRC to pay for it? As well, would you reconcile your statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

An Hon. Member: How is your Mazda?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the Hon. Member to read the transcript of a committee meeting where he said that the comprehensive space program will perhaps be the single largest repository of new knowledge. He was totally in support of it. I make absolutely no apologies for identifying new priorities that will permit this country to stay in the fast current that will take us into the next century, with him or without him.

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Solicitor General has been quoting me to try to justify the traditon of combining Corrections' decisions with regional development policies. The Auditor General, in Section 1.90 of his report, points out that that cannot be done in this case because there is no Corrections' basis for the decision. Does the Prime Minister realize that he is damaging his own constituents by putting forward and relying on a Corrections' policy which will lead taxpayers to lose their confidence in regional development programs altogether?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have some difficulty with the question posed by the former Solicitor General because in his testimony before the Justice Committee in May of 1982 he said: "When a Ministry has a project that is required, and in this case we did require this institution or will require it in 1986, we took account of the economic conditions in the part of Canada where it was needed in deciding precisely where it would go. I do not think there is anything to apologize for there. I think the Canadian people broadly support that." To that I say amen, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good statement—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: —but it does not apply to a penitentiary that is not needed, which is the case here.

ROLE OF TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In light of that answer has it become the practice of the Treasury Board just to rubber-stamp decisions it gets from the Government? Or is it supposed to look at decisions on an economic basis? If so, how could it do that in this case where the Auditor General notes in Section 7.99 that the Treasury Board did not have the information it needed to make an independent decision?

[Translation]

It was just a matter of nodding assent.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure my colleague that the Treasury Board does indeed scrutinize all recommendations and submissions it receives and, hopefully, always makes the right decision.

HUMAN RIGHTS

VIOLATIONS IN U.S.S.R.

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As he will know, the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe will hold a review on compliance with the Helsinki Final Act in Vienna, beginning November 4. Can he assure the House that the Canadian delegation to the conference will bring to bear the full weight of Canada's influence in the international community to ensure that the Soviet Government is held to account for its obvious and numerous violations of basic human rights, particularly with respect to religious freedoms?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I know of his long-standing interest in these issues. I will be attending the follow-up conference of the CSC in Vienna. I can assure him that we will raise then, as we have consistently in the past, the questions to which he refers. I further invite him to make me aware of any particular cases he thinks it would be useful for me to pursue at Vienna.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I am sure he will know that last Friday was the anniversary of the meeting between himself and the U.S. EPA director, Lee Thomas, at which time Canada was promised a vigorous program to clean up the waste leaking into the Niagara River from the American side. Will the Minister take this opportunity to say why we do not have that concrete program yet and when he expects it to be forthcoming from the U.S?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, some solid achievements have been made by the U.S. and Canada in this connection. I will be meeting with Lee Thomas on October 28, one week hence, to review that progress with the hope of building on it. I am going to use the occasion of this meeting in Ottawa to share with the Hon. Member, other Members of the House, and the public our plans for the coming year.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Algoma, one question, please.

AIR CANADA

CANCELLATION OF SAULT STE. MARIE SERVICE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the plans of Air Canada to close down services in a number of cities in Ontario, including London and Sault Ste. Marie. The City of Sault Ste. Marie has already lost hundreds of jobs this year and I want to know if the Government is prepared to take action to stop the loss of these Air Canada jobs and the services of the national airline, and show some confidence in the city?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is late in his representation because the Solicitor General has been dealing with me on this matter now for many weeks.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): With no success.

Mr. Crosbie: Nevertheless, his representation, even if belated, is welcome.

We are doing what we can to assist in that situation. Air Canada does not wish to serve that city any longer. It has guaranteed that it will look after and deal fairly with the employees involved. Air Ontario, I believe, is going to operate the necessary services there. In the meantime we are looking at certain other problems which have arisen and we will do everything we can to see that Air Canada operates and treats everybody concerned, including the customers, fairly.

U.S.-U.S.S.R. SUMMIT—STATEMENT MADE BY NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY LEADER

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is with regard to the recent summit meeting at Reykjavik. There was a statement made this morning in this House by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. He stated that the Reykjavik meeting foundered because President Reagan was intent on scuttling the ABM treaty. Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs agree that this is really what prevented full agreement in Reykjavik?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party will have to choose between encouraging arms control and fabricating occasions for attacking the United States. The NDP Leader said today that the Americans were trying to scuttle the ABM Treaty. Quite the opposite occurred. The United States agreed at Reykjavik to respect that treaty for another 10 years. That is real progress.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): No, no.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Earlier today the New Democratic Party Leader congratulated the Soviet Union for having made some positive moves at Reykjavik. The Soviet Union did. So did the United States. The NDP should recognize that.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You're wrong.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1.38 o'clock p.m. there were 12 minutes remaining in the speech of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was just about to conclude my remarks before we adjourned for lunch. I simply wanted to indicate what a sad thing it is when a Government will force a decision on an important agricultural entity based on—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask Hon. Members please either to either take their seats or leave the Chamber. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has the floor and is continuing debate.

Mr. Kaplan: I was regretting that ideology is so important to the Government in connection with Crown corporations that it will not study what the Crown corporations want to do and then allow the good ones to continue while winding up or changing the mandate of the ones which are not worth while. In the case of Canagrex, the Government has an easy shot because, with it being so new, it has not yet had the oportunity to live up to its potential. My Party and I consider it very regrettable that the Government is not giving Canagrex the opportunity to live up to the expectations for it, or to fulfil the goals of the numerous constituencies in the agricultural community. In our view this is only one terrible mistake in a poor track record of a hopeless Government.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, during his comments the Hon. Member referred to the fact that he was the eighth speaker for the Liberal Party on this Bill. I have been listening very carefully to the comments of all eight members of the Liberal Party, including this Hon. Member. I have now heard the same comments, arguments and positions repeated close to eight times. Would the Hon. Member agree that it is time for the Liberal Party to end its filibuster of this Bill?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I simply reject the suggestion that this is a filibuster. We have strong views about this matter. Some of my colleagues fought very hard to establish Canagrex. They had to convince a lot of people who were at first of the opposite view. For Canagrex to go down just to give the Government one more check mark on its list of cuts is very hard for us to stomach. If 30 or 40 members of my caucus spoke about the dissolution of Canagrex, that would not be too many.

Mr. Foster: I think it is really out of spite and bitterness that the Government has destroyed this Crown corporation which was designed to help small agricultural commodity producers who do not have the strength or scope to have international marketing capabilities. This mean-minded Government withdrew the funds in November of 1984 to destroy Canagrex. The Government is so vain, weak, desperate and lacking in ability to help agriculture that the first item called in the new session of Parliament, with agriculture facing its most difficult time since the 1930s, is a Bill to destroy the marketing capacity which Canagrex would have given to those farmers of the country facing incredibly difficult times. Farmers are losing their farms, homes and income. They are facing the humiliation of moving into big cities where the jobs exist. This is a black day for Canadian agriculture and for the Government which is so bereft of innovation, ability and design that the first item it calls in this most desperate time in agricultural history is a Bill to destroy Canagrex, a trading corporation designed to help small farmers to market their commodities in an increasingly competitive international market-place. This is a sad commentary on the mentality and the ability of the Government to deal with the agricultural problems which face the country at this desperate time.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I have only one comment to make. The Bill before us is strictly a housekeeping Bill. The Government has already killed Canagrex by removing all of its funds. Many of us in the Liberal caucus feel strongly about this measure because Canagrex was a Liberal initiative about which we felt strongly. I take exception to Conservative Members of Parliament blaming us for delaying this Bill when last week during debate on Bill C-11, which was another administrative Bill, the Conservatives put on the record comments about how great and good they are. We are just trying to make the point that we feel badly about this measure. We will vote against it and we will now interrupt our debate to have the question put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is as follows: Mr. Wise, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moved that Bill C-2, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On division?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Wise), which was agreed to on the following division:

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act

(Division No. 13)

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)) moved that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that we face some very difficult times in the grain and oilseeds business, not only around the world, but especially in Canada. This Government has been attempting to respond to that situation in several ways.

We face some serious problems largely because of the subsidies offered by the European Economic Community, and the U.S. Farm Bill that has resulted in literally a trade war that has driven down the prices worldwide, and as a result has driven down the prices to our producers. This problem has been coming for some time. The only long-term solution to this problem is to have it addressed and looked at internationally. What the countries in the European Economic Community do within their own borders is entirely their own affair. However, when they are able to increase their production dramatically through subsidies, and on that basis become very competitive with us for some of the international markets that Canada has traditionally been able to supply, we have legitimate reason to make observations and to complain about that situation. That is precisely what has been happening.

Our farmers are very efficient. We have a good climate and soil and in many respects we enjoy significant competitive advantage, or comparative advantage, in economic terms. That allows us to produce a very high quality product that is in demand around the world. What is increasingly difficult for our farmers is to be able to compete with the treasuries of the European Economic Community and the United States.

I would like to give you a couple of examples as to why that is difficult. First of all, looking at the average income dollar that a Canadian farmer has, about 50 cents out of every dollar come from exports. Using these same criteria in the United States, about 25 cents of every income dollar that a farmer has come from exports. On that basis, exports are very important to the Canadian farmer. Looking at some of the specific commodities, grain and wheat, in Canada we export roughly 80 per cent of all the wheat that we grow. About 10 per cent is used in domestic consumption in bread, cookies and pastry. The remaining 10 per cent is used for seed, industrial use, feed, and those purposes. In the European Economic Community, the figure is almost exactly reversed. The European farmer is only reliant on exports for 20 per cent of his production. In other words, 80 per cent of the European farmer's production of wheat is consumed within the European Economic Community. On that basis, as far as wheat is concerned, in comparison to the European Economic Community, Canada is very dependent on exports.

Some of the subsidies that the Europeans currently have available to them are very large. In the southern Prairies we produce Durum wheat, which is second in quality to none in the world. It is as good as any. It is very high quality grain. Our farmers this year are receiving $130 per metric tonne as an initial payment. The European farmers are receiving $450 per metric tonne. On that basis, it then becomes very difficult for the Canadian farmer to deal with that. It is not because we are inefficient; it is because we have a smaller population on which to rely for a domestic market. Therefore, we are much more reliant on exports. That is why this Government has taken the lead in addressing some of these problems at the international level.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) visited Japan for the Tokyo Summit in May, he raised agricultural trade and subsidies as Canada's agenda item. That is the first time that had ever happened. A month later I had the opportunity to host the four other major wheat exporting countries. This was the first time ever that such a meeting had been held in Canada. It was held at Whistler, in British Columbia. The five major wheat exporting countries meet regularly to discuss problems at the bureaucratic level, but this was the first time such a meeting had been held at the political level. In August, Canada also participated in an international meeting at Cairns, Australia, prior to the agenda setting GATT at Uruguay, in which Canada played a major role. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) gave the lead-off speech and set the tone for the meeting. The result was that agriculture was included on the GATT agenda for the first time in the seven meetings that had been held. We are making some progress there. Unfortunately, that progress is slow and it will take time. In the meantime, our farmers need to have some support.

We have supported our farmers in many respects. We removed the tax on farm fuel. We froze freight rates this year. The grain commission froze the maximum tariffs under which the grain companies operate. We amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act to provide assistance at a more opportune time during the year. If there is going to be a triggering of a pay-out under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, the money is available prior to spring seeding when farmers need it the most. This amendment was put through the House in February of 1985. Many initiatives have been taken on the agricultural side in terms of supporting our producers, and especially our grain producers.

One of the other things that we are doing is to support the Canadian Wheat Board and the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board, plus private institutions that market our grain and oil seeds. The record shows that over the past crop year, Canada increased its sales over the previous crop year. In 1985-86 we exported over 2 million tonnes more than we did in the previous crop year. At the end of the crop year, which is on July 31, our farmers went into the new crop year with the lowest on-farm carry-over ever. That is a result of sales.

Canada now has long-term sales agreements that total more tonnes than any other wheat exporting country. We have a long-term grain sales with Egypt which runs for five years. That was signed in the spring of 1985. We concluded a three-year term with Brazil. Last month we renewed a major long-term sales agreement with the Soviet Union. That is certainly good news for Canadian farmers in these very difficult times. Again, just to emphasize, price is still a major problem and there is not a lot of room for optimism. On the volume side we did very well last year. We increased our share of world wheat markets. With the sales program that is in place for this crop year, if it holds up for the rest of the crop year, we have the potential to increase our grain sales this year and our percentage of world grain markets.

I have here a clipping from The Ottawa Citizen of October 3 that talks about the Soviet grain deal. It shows a picture of the Prime Minister and the Soviet Foreign Minister. The caption reads "U.S.S.R. Signs Five Year Grain Deal". Seeing a Prime Minister of Canada in a newspaper in conjunction with a long-term grain sales agreement is something I find refreshing after what we had from previous Governments, their attitudes about grain and how they approached the problem. This is an encouraging sign. To see the Prime Minister's picture in the paper seems entirely natural and appropriate based on the record of our Government in dealing with agricultural problems.

This brings me to the Bill at hand. It is a Bill to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. It is a Bill that was first introduced and passed by the Progressive Conservative Government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker in 1957. I see the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), a distinguished Member of this House and a distinguished former Minister of Agriculture here in the House. He is the one who was responsible for starting the wheat sales with the People's Republic of China. He has made a great contribution not only to this House but to Canadian agriculture in general. He informs me that the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act was one of the first pieces of legislation to be introduced by the Diefenbaker Government in 1957. It has served farmers very well and it is being used more and more.

We are introducing today some amendments to this Act to make it more responsive to farmer's needs to help them deal with their cash flow situation. Let me explain what this Bill does. When farmers harvest grain, it takes considerable time to market it. Depending on weather, harvest season lasts a month in the Wheat Board area. Farmers will harvest all their grain in a month and the grain will then be sold throughout the remainder of the year. The Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act provides a cash advance for grain which the farmers have already harvested and have in store against the day when they can sell it. It is a way for farmers to realize cash once they have harvested their grain before having the opportunity to sell it. The Government provides the cash advances interest-free. The interest charges are picked up and the Canadian Wheat Board administers the Act.

What we are doing today in giving this Bill second reading is streamlining it. Upon review of the Act the Government found that changes in the administration of this legislation should be made, changes that would make the program more timely and more responsive to the needs of those who are using the Bill. I will list what the proposed amendments will do, Madam Speaker.

One of the amendments will make the Act fairer in the sense that presently producers are able to acquire cash advances based on a quota factor or on the number of acres they farm. There is no consideration for how productive is each acre that that farmer farms relative to other farmers. We are introducing an amendment to allow the cash advance to be calculated on the amount of grain a farmer has in store as opposed to the number of quota acres that he has. That will assist many producers in being able to make better use of the cash advance in the sense that the farmer will be able to get a larger cash advance if he has the productivity to back it up.

We are also proposing to amend the Act in this Bill to allow producers who have been in a default position to have their interest rates adjusted on a regular basis. There are producers who have had problems repaying loans. The default ratio though has been minimal. When you are dealing with literally tens and hundreds of thousands of producers, roughly 140,000 permit books in the Wheat Board area, you can understand that producers have problems, Mr. Speaker. There are producers who have been in default, for four or five years. Once they are in default the interest rate is set at the level of interest at that time. People who have been in default for four or five years when interest rates were 15 per cent and 16 per cent are still paying interest rates on their defaulted loan at those levels. We are proposing to amend the interest rates charged on defaulted and prepaid loans to reflect the interest rates in effect at the present time.

One of the amendments is to make it easier for farmers who are tenants to obtain a loan. Now you require the landlord's signature as well as the tenant's signature. Sometimes that takes a period of days, weeks or months and it delays the time at which a farmer can obtain a cash advance. We propose to simplify that. Farmer tenants will now be able to sign affidavits to the effect that they have clear title to the grain grown on another's land. It will simplify things substantially and make it easier for producers to get cash advances.

Several regulations of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act must be amended each year even though these amendments are routinely and largely administrative in nature. This process takes time and in many cases too much time. We propose to remove these administrative hold-ups so that needless red tape does not come between the farmer and the advance payment.

The Canadian Wheat Board will be responsible for final approval of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act application form which changes little from year to year. Presently we have to go through an Order in Council every year to approve a form which does not vary very much from year to year. We are going to simplify that.

We are also going to simplify the emergency provisions under the Act whereby cash advances are made available for unthrashed grain after November 15 if there is a significant amount of grain that has not been harvested. Producers can obtain a cash advance against grain that is unharvested and still in the field. Producers are also eligible for cash advances to assist in drying costs. We want to improve the administration so that those things can be done without an Order in Council and so make the whole thing easier.

We are also introducing an amendment that will give producers equitable access to cash advances right across the country.

Another amendment that I think will be welcomed by producers is that as the Canadian Wheat Board administers the Act it will have greater latitude in dealing with producers who have defaulted but who can show that extraordinary circumstances prevented them from being able to deliver against their cash advances. You run into situations in the spring with a road or a bridge that is out, situations such as that. Presently the Act does not allow for any leniency or any interpretation in that respect. We are amending the Act to give the Canadian Wheat Board, the administrators, some latitude in dealing with extraordinary circumstances. I think that will be a very useful and welcome change as far as producers who use the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act are concerned. This would have been useful had we been able to have it in effect at the beginning of the crop year which started on August 1, Madam Speaker.

I hope the Opposition will look at this legislation very favourably and give it reasonably quick passage. There are a couple of provisions which, if we can pass this Bill without a lot of delay, can actually be of some use to producers this year. Most of the amendments will have to wait until next year before they will have full effect, but some amendments, if we can have reasonably quick passage of the Bill, will be of use to producers this year.

These amendments are being made by the Government to try to be as responsive as we possibly can to grain and oilseed producers in this very difficult time. With that, Madam Speaker, I want to conclude and thank Hon. Members in the House for their kind attention.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I have a few comments with regard to Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. Many of the amendments are technical and will be of great value to the agriculture producers in the west. Clearly the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) has suggested we have quick passage. As I think back to all the legislation which the Minister and the Government have brought in during the last two years, I see that the problem has never been to get quick passage, the problem has been to get legislation into the House.

I think back to the months and months and years when the Conservative Party fought the former Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Whelan, on every little amendment that he brought in to any Bill whether Canagrex or something else. Canagrex I think was in the works for some two years. That entity would have had an opportunity to get fully functional and prove itself, but the Conservative Party was bound and bent to ensure that any legislation which the former Minister brought in would be denied passage no matter how valuable it was to the agricultural community. Certainly every Bill the Government brought in has been passed in either one or two sittings of the House, even something as complicated and detailed as the legislation dealing with Farm Debt Review Boards. That should have been brought in a year ago, as the Minister promised in July of 1985. There should have been detailed discussions for several weeks, but it was belatedly brought in in about the third week of June. We passed it in two sittings of the House. Clearly the Opposition has co-operated in passing every piece of farm legislation brought before the House, whether it be the Western Grain Stabilization Act or the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. The Minister does not have to ask for quick passage of his legislation because he knows that every piece of legislation he has brought before the House has been passed expeditiously.

It seems to me that although many of the provisions in this legislation before the House today are of a technical nature, they will be very valuable. Farmers with very productive soil and who produce large volumes of wheat or barley on small acreages will now be able to get a cash advance based on the amount of grain they have in storage rather than on an acreage-based formula. The idea of a floating interest rate on cash advances which bear interest is a good idea. I am amazed that the Minister waited for two years to bring in that kind of provision because it is clearly a severe hardship for farmers to be paying 14 per cent or 15 per cent, which is what interest rates were in 1982 and 1983, and they are still paying them today. One of the election promises made by the Government was to provide adequate funding for current day interest rates.

I am also glad to see the amendment relating to cash advances being made available to people who lease or rent farms. It seems to me that the swearing of an affidavit by the producers concerned is adequate protection for the Government.

Then we have the emergency provisions. The Minister raised this with me last spring. He wanted to have simply an order by the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board in order to allow cash advances. I think that is a good decision. There is a provision which says that a farmer can only receive a $30,000 cash advance based on the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and the Agricultural Products Marketing Act in total. I would like to hear the details when the Minister is before the committee. It seems to me that the idea of an escape clause related to farmers in distress through an emergency situation and being unable to make a delivery is a good move as well.

I must say I was very struck with the Minister's comments regarding how rapidly the Government has responded to the agricultural emergency. Although he seems to believe that most of the problem lies with the European Economic Community, clearly the bottom fell out from under the grain prices when the U.S. Farm Bill was introduced. The Americans are determined to win back their share of the international market, both from us and from the EEC. Although both trading groups are probably equally at fault for falling grain prices, clearly the impact of the U.S. Farm Bill has been most dramatic for our farmers. Some economic forecasters say that net farm income will drop by 20 per cent as a result. If that is the case, it certainly will be the most Draconian measure ever used against the Canadian farm industry by any foreign Government.

I must say that I do not share the Minister's view that the Government is moving dramatically to help farmers. It seems to me that every responsible farm group in the country has been arguing for six or eight months now that there should be some kind of deficiency payment. We will be interested to see when the Government gets around to actually announcing that payment.

Mr. Mazankowski: Farmers in Saskatchewan do not hold that view.

Mr. Foster: I think the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is applauding himself on how skillfully the Government has been able to hoodwink the people of Saskatchewan into believing they are going to get $1 billion—

Mr. Mazankowski: They are a lot smarter than that.

Mr. Foster: When they find out that money is spread across Canada rather than just provided to the prairie provinces, they will find it is not very great. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced he was going to negotiate $1 billion worth of aid with Premier Grant Devine.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is not what he said and you know it.

Mr. Foster: That was during the Leaders' debate. Two days later he said he had to get emergency aid—

Mr. Mazankowski: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I know the Hon. Member would not want to misinterpret what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said. What he said was that he would be "working closely over the next month with Premier Devine and other provincial Governments to devise an effective financial assistance program to enhance the cash flow of Canadian farmers". That is consistent with the August 27 meeting held between the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the provincial Ministers of Agriculture where the formal request was made. I hope the Hon. Member might correct that false impression. The Prime Minister did not say he was going to negotiate a deal with Premier Devine.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I think the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) knows that this is not a point of order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): A point of debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is a good point for debate but not a point of order.

Mr. Foster: That was a very wise ruling, Madam Speaker. I want to compliment you not only on being appointed to such an important position as you hold in this House, but on the wisdom of your judgments. They are just excellent.

• (1620)

I must also compliment the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on his win in Pembina. Someone who attended his speeches there said that the Deputy Prime Minister told them how great it was and how great it was going to be. He said that all he could think of after the Deputy Prime Minister finished speaking was, if it is so great, why do I feel so bad?

When the Prime Minister spoke in the Leaders' day debate, for some reason he did not mention the Tory Premier of Alberta. Of course, perhaps he was shooting arrows at him that day. He certainly did not mention the NDP Premier of Manitoba. I would be interested to know his logic for referring to the Tory Premier of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Mazankowski: Because it was in the forefront.

Mr. Foster: On October 6 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke in the House in response to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). He referred to the desperate situation of prairie farmers. Later that afternoon outside the House the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said that this was an aid program rather than a deficiency payment, that it might be a loan guarantee or something else. The Prime Minister was certainly doing his best to talk about something that might have been interpreted in Saskatchewan as a deficiency payment. The Minister of Agriculture was backpeddling just as fast in the other direction.

The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) tries to tell us how great it is going to be. No one wants to be pessimistic. We all want to be optimistic. However, we do not see very much action by the Government. Everyone in the grain business says that there must be some kind of assistance. Probably less than 50 per cent of the grain this year will be No. 1 or No. 2. Our farmers cannot be producing grain for $3 a bushel while their friends and neighbours across the line in Montana and North Dakota are getting $6 a bushel. The difference is essentially a deficiency payment. The Government may have a deficiency payment, but it certainly will not talk about a deficiency payment. Government Members talk about farm aid and so on.

In the Auditor General's report I see a deficiency in the Western Grain Stabilization account of $100 million. That account was built up from 1979 to 1984 to almost $1 billion. Today it has a $100 million deficit. The Auditor General is calling upon the Western Grain Stabilization fund to brief the Minister fully on the financial implications of its interpretation of the method of calculating the stabilization payments to be made under the Western Grain Stabilization Act and to obtain specific approval to use this and any other interpretation.

It may be that $500 million or $600 million will be put into the Western Grain Stabilization fund in order that the interim payment can be approved next February or March. Similar payments may be made under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. That will simply be the deficiency funding which the Prime Minister has been promising for the benefit of the Saskatchewan election. I submit it would be very greatly misleading to the House if that were proposed. We have seen the Western Grain Stabilization fund drop over $1 billion in the last couple of years. If that is what he is doing, it is out and out deception. That would not be surprising.

I was really surprised that the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board dared to mention the Prime Minister's announcement of April 30. If there was ever a smoke and mirrors, shabby piece of work by a desperate Prime Minister, it was certainly that announcement of $200 million or $300 million which he made here in Ottawa. I hope that the $1 billion of aid for western grain producers which we are now talking about is more real than the phoney announcement the Prime Minister made on April 30 before leaving on his trip to Asia with his maid and butler. That $1 million could have well been spent for western agriculture.

That announcement had three elements. First, it announced an increase in the range of the domestic price of wheat from $7 to $11. Many people thought that farmers were going to get an increase from $7 to $11 a tonne for grain sold for domestic purposes. A $4 per bushel increase would have amounted to almost $300 million a year. The press release aggregated all these figures and said that farmers will get another $300 million increase in the domestic price of wheat. That is, of course, totally phoney. It is irresponsible. It did not fool the farmers for more than a day or so because it was quickly picked up. The Prime Minister got the headlines before he flew off on his trip to Asia, which may be good politics, but he did not fool the farmers for very long.

A recent poll showed that 70 per cent of Canadians are very concerned about the farm situation. The Prime Minister does a disservice to the rest of society, which consists of about 96 per cent of the population, because they think the farmers got $300 million through an increase in the domestic price of wheat which they did not get. The story was spun out a little bit longer. There was another announcement in July that the range was changing again. Of course, farmers never realized five cents out of it.

The second element of the Prime Minister's announcement of April 30 was that he was going to freeze the freight rates. He was going to show the railway companies and protect the agricultural community. It only took a couple of hours to check out that canard. We found that the Department of Transport had recalculated the volumes of grain to be shipped and there were going to be 28.5 million tonnes rather than 31 million tonnes. It was not really freezing the freight rates, but simply recalculating the volumes so that there did not have to be a freight rate increase. This is the kind of phoney announcement that is meant to suggest that the Prime Minister has done something great for agriculture. I believe the amount there was $42 million.

I hope the announcement of $1 billion in assistance will not be as phoney as the Prime Minister's announcement in April that he would remove the excise tax on farm fuels. He put on two cents a litre last September and was able to get the excise tax for the fall harvest. In Saskatchewan they called the tax imposed by the Prime Minister the harvest tax.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made that announcement on May 23, 1985, we pleaded with him to give an exemption. I asked the Minister in the House not to levy that excise tax. The Government did not want to put it on in the summer because it had so much trouble with the deindexation of the old age pension.

We pleaded with the Minister not to levy the tax because Canadian agriculture was in great difficulty, yet the Minister put on that tax just in time to pick up most of the revenues for the fall harvest. Lo and behold, in April, after everyone in western Canada had filled their fuel tanks, the Government announced it would remove that tax in May or June. He then had the audacity to announce that this would save Canadian farmers some $150 over two years. He did not say that it cost the farmers some $50 million or $60 million over the previous nine months.

If the Prime Minister really wanted to be honest with Canadians and western Canadian farmers, he would have apologized on April 30 for putting that excise tax on and then would have removed it retroactively to September 2, 1985 when he imposed it. It is pure larceny to impose such a tax.

We are waiting with bated breath to hear whether or not the Government will provide a deficiency payment or whether it will just replenish the Western Grain Stabilization Fund which the Auditor General's Report shows has a $100 million deficit today.

We are going through an incredibly difficult time in agricultural commodities in the world right now. The Government must reduce input costs as much as possible. We probably cannot provide the kind of deficiency payments that the EEC or the United States provide to their farmers. Export sales are more important to us than they are to the EEC or the United States proportionately and the Government, regardless of its right wing, reactionary and regressive policies, has a responsibility to try to maintain the industry in a survival position during the next three years that the U.S. seems hell-bent on subsidizing exports. For the Government to do less would be criminal. Hundreds of farms will be lost.

We have seen the Government dither on the question of the Farm Debt Review Board. It established a board that really has no powers except to forestall banks and credit institutions from foreclosing. Hopefully it will do some good, but the bankers got to the Minister and the Government and prevented it from providing the board with any real powers to reschedule debt.

The Minister talks about co-operation. He always has our corporation in passing good legislation. It has been four months since the legislation was passed, yet in Ontario only three members of the 10-person board have been appointed. Not one case has been heard before a debt review panel. The Government seems to move in slow motion.

However, when the banks went broke in Alberta there was immediately a back-up of $1 billion. When we talk about $1 billion for a deficiency payment for western Canada, which should be much more in order to cover the whole country, the process is dragged out for month after month. The only thing that seemed to trigger any action at all was the Saskatchewan election. Furthermore, that came only after the desperate phone call by the Premier saying: "I am going down the drain".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The election is over.

Mr. Foster: The election is over. Why not announce the program now? Maybe we can get the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to give us some details on that phone call, because he was probably one of those who received it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What phone call?

Mr. Foster: We will wait to see just how phoney that announcement of assistance will be, and whether it will be like the phantom assistance which was offered back in April.

It is very similar to the commodity-based mortgage. I am sure that every Canadian who listened to the Budget Speech believed that literally thousands and thousands of farmers would receive low-interest loans at 6 per cent. In fact, $730 million was going to be provided at 6 per cent interest. However, like the Prime Minister's phoney announcement on April 30, the fine print in those commodity-based mortgages reveal that many of the farmers will not get 6 per cent interest. Even those farmers who receive 6 per cent will probably ultimately pay 2 per cent more than the current Farm Credit Corporation rate, some 12.75 per cent interest in the end. If the commodity price goes up, the interest paid is not only higher, it goes 2 per cent above the standard Farm Credit Corporation rate.

The fact that there is no new money is also disquieting. The $730 million is the same $730 million that farmers have in FCC loans now. For instance, if a farmer has a $100,000 mortgage, he is given a $100,000 mortgage here at approximately 8 per cent or 9 per cent, or 6 per cent in some cases where the equity is low enough. However, as commodity prices rise—the price of hogs has risen by 25 per cent this year—the interest rates go up dramatically. Over the course of the 10-year mortgage the farmer pays 2 per cent more than the FCC rate. The only way to get out of that mortgage is to pay out the interest right through for the full ten years at 12.75 per cent or whatever the rate is at 2 per cent above the FCC rate.

The dishonest aspect of the announcement by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board is that there is no new money. It is essentially only exchanging one FCC loan for another. If you have a 12 per cent loan with the Bank of Commerce, the Bank of Nova Scotia or the Royal Bank, tough apples, there is nothing for you. The commitment of the Government to agriculture is really appalling. It throws out these figures of millions of dollars, but what it is talking about in every case is the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. That is a security program. The farmer pays a premium just like an insurance policy and if he has a loss he receives a benefit. It is the same with crop insurance. The Government talks about crop insurance with great benevolence, but the crop insurance program is a program where the farmer pays a premium and if he has a loss he receives the benefit.

The Government talks about the western transportation Crow benefit. In fact, I am told that the full amount of the $659 million Crow benefit has not even been paid to the railroads. In fact, they are about $75 million short on the last two crop years. But the Government has made the payments for which it is legally obligated, otherwise it could be charged for not doing so. What the Government has done with the farm debt crisis is pretty bloody poor. What it is doing is providing some interest rate set aside on some farm loans for the FCC, but if the value of the commodity goes up, the farmer will end up actually paying more than the FCC rate, and if he does not have an FCC loan, he does not get anything.

The Minister promised a year ago last July 10 that he was going to bring in a Farm Debt Review Board with real clout and power. It took him 11 months to bring in anything, and then of course its fangs were totally pulled. The Government's action with regard to the tremendous farm crisis we face in this country is pretty puny when compared with what is being done in the United States, in the European Economic Community, or even what is being done by most provincial Governments. The Government has cut back on the budget of the Department of Agriculture by some $50 million and also it deindexed the annual rates within the Department. The Farm Credit Corporation in the 1984-85 fiscal year had a budget of $825 million. Last year it was something less than $250 million. There is not very much help beyond those statutory programs which the Government is obligated to provide.

Another problem has arisen with the United States Farm Bill and the countervail it put on hogs, and the BISEP program where the United States has tried to steal our markets in Egypt, Syria and other countries. The Prime Minister sang "When Irish Eyes are Smiling" in Quebec City and I think a lot of people assumed Ronny was going to look after us, that all the Prime Minister had to do was to give the President a call and it would all be straightened out. But all they have to do to learn the truth is to look at the two or three torpedoes which have gone through the "free enterprise battleship" in this last week. The Americans have ripped holes about two feet across below the waterline. That is the assistance and help we are receiving from the programs of the United States Government, which it is adopting around the world. There is certainly no exclusion for Canadian agriculture producers.

As I indicated when I began to speak, I only had a couple of brief comments to make. I want to indicate our support for Bill C-12 because I think, although some of these amendments are technical, they will be very beneficial for the individual producers. We want to assist the Minister in expediting the passage of Bill C-12. There is a lot of detail which I would like to hear about when the Minister comes before the committee, but I would like to indicate our support in seeing the Prairie Farm Advance Payments Act amendments passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 66, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Environmental Affairs—Sewage treatment facilities. (b) Government policy; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Agriculture—Request for announcement of deficiency payment for farmers. (b) Situation of grain farmers; and the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Criminal Code—Gun control—Amendment of provisions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mayer that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-12 is a Bill to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, which is an Act which has been around, as the Minister said, since 1956, 1957. It is an integral part of the legislation which rules the prairie grain industry. As most Hon. Members in the House know, prairie grain has been sold under the Canadian Wheat Board in one form or another since 1935. It became a compulsory board in 1942, I believe, and began using the quota system to regulate deliveries shortly after that.

The quota system was originally based on the amount of acres a farmer had. Over the years it has varied. At some time it was based on the amount of acres which was seeded to a particular grain. Then the summer fallow and grass acres were added to the quota base. Now we have a fairly sophisticated calculation of the quota base for each farm, and the farmer decides what proportion of each of the crops he is growing to allocate to that quota base.

I will go through the changes I see in this particular Bill in a few moments, but right now I would like to speak a wee bit about the role the cash advance system plays in prairie agriculture. Because of the system of forwarding grain through the quota system, there are occasionally times when producers are not called upon to deliver any grain, and if they cannot deliver any grain, they do not have any money. One of those times is with us at the moment. There was not even a quota opening until just a few days ago, which meant that producers had gone on for over two months without the ability to deliver any grain from this year's crop. In the interim, farm families must live, so back in the 1950s, under the then Minister, who is now the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), the Act was introduced which permitted farmers to take an advance on the grain they had in storage on their farms. This provided interim financing and in later years made it possible for the Wheat Board to be more careful about how it called its grain forward. It tries to practice a system whereby when orders are completed, sales are made, and ships are expected, some five to six weeks before the ship is expected to be at the dock, the quota for that particular grade and type of grain is opened up. The farmers deliver it to the elevators. The elevator companies put it into the hopper cars which are transported by the railways to the terminals. The grain is cleaned and transloaded there and spouted into the waiting ship, usually with an amazing amount of efficiency and good timing when you consider all the people and active parties involved in the process.

I advise all Members of the House to consider paying an official call on the offices of the Canadian Wheat Board in order to watch its computer which shows the operations of the country's elevator and shipping system. Members will see how technicians in the Wheat Board keep track of where the grain is, how long it will be in transit, what ships are in need of loading, and so on. Such a visit will provide a better understanding of how the system operates. I recommend this visit not only to western Members but also to those who come from other parts of Canada.

The grain business in Canada is and always has been cyclical. It runs in cycles of seven to 10 years with a seven or eight-year down period and a seven or eight-year up period with some variations of a year or two either way. It is a cycle that Joseph noticed back in biblical days, and it has not changed a great deal in 2,000 or 3,000 years. Because of its cyclical nature the Canadian Government, at the urging of farmers and their organizations, has been actively involved in providing a certain number of protective mechanisms to help weather the inevitable storms. There is a tendency for production to build up in the world, which results in decreased demand and lowered prices. That is the type of situation we have seen in the last few years. A great deal of new technology has been applied in not only highly developed countries such as the European countries and the Americas but also in some developing countries such as China and India. In particular, China and India have succeeded in becoming self-sufficient in grains over the last number of years to the surprise of almost all the experts in the field. If any expert had looked at the productive capabilities of these two countries a few years ago I do not think it would have been predicted that China and India would be self-sufficient in the production of all grains today. In fact, they are now in the market-place as sellers of wheat and rice.

As a result, some countries have reacted in different ways. European countries have a long-standing program of agriculture subsidy which goes back to the fact that their citizens starved during the First and Second World Wars. The electorate remembers those days and therefore supports the type of system that has been put in place in which food imports are charged a high levy. The accumulated funds from these levies go to subsidize and encourage the production of the same food products in the European Economic Community. The system has worked almost too well. It has worked to the point where most of the food products produced inside the EEC are at or near a surplus level of production. This has resulted in fewer imports. Foreign exporters are no longer paying subsidies to keep the system running. The system is being paid for almost exclusively out of the pockets of the European taxpayer.

To give Hon. Members an idea of what sort of subsidies are involved in these countries I would like to compare the subsidies received by European farmers with the subsidies that American and Canadian farmers receive. The Canadian Wheat Board estimates that Canada will subsidize wheat producers in the period 1986-87, which is the current crop year, by 85 cents per bushel. This subsidy includes the so-called Crow benefit which is given to the railways, as a result of which farmers are supposed to reap lower railway charges. It also includes the western grain stabilization pay-outs that will be made this crop year, as well as the federal Government contributions to crop insurance claims which western farmers might have in case of hail or frost. While Canadian farmers receive 85 cents per bushel of wheat in subsidies, the United States pays its farmers approximately $2.63 Canadian per bushel while the Europeans pay about $3.13 Canadian per bushel.

In terms of barley, the Canadian subsidy is 33 cents per bushel while the Americans subsidize their barley growers at the rate of $1.05 per bushel. The Europeans subsidize at a rate of $3.11 per bushel. I could give statistics with respect to subsidies paid in other countries, in particular Japan. However, subsidy levels in that country are large and so scary that Members would think that I was exaggerating. In Japan, the level of subsidy approaches $20 per bushel for some grains, notably rapeseed. The figures are almost beyond belief. As a result of this situation, various countries have been attempting to reduce amounts of production in a preliminary fashion. These are moves taken in preparation of talks concerning the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. World production of grain has far exceeded demand over the last several years. This is the first year it appears that output will be slightly lower, although only marginally, than what the demand is expected to be next year. In part, this reduction in crops has been due to weather, although the Americans had in place an acreage reduction program as a result of which they paid their farmers not to seed grain. The Europeans had no particular program to discourage production, but as a result of hot and dry weather production decreased. The Australians faced a combination of reduced acreage and bad weather, as did the Soviets. Thus the over-all grain crop will be slightly less than world demand for the first time in some six years.

In this period of time some very frightening things have happened in terms of income for Canadian farmers. I make this point because the advance system which we have is designed to offset, in part, some of this problem. Although the system does not perform the job perfectly, it provides some income when sales are hard to make at the farm level. If we compare gross income figures generated by Canadian crops during the time the surplus began to build up back in the 1982-83 crop year with the current crop year, we will see what lowered prices have done to Canadian farmers. This will allow us to see what the response by Canadian farmers has been, given that we have very little in the way of subsidies to assist income.

This year, farmers on the Prairies are expected to produce what will probably be a record crop. They will produce somewhere in the neighbourhood of 52 million tonnes, one of the best crops that has ever been produced. In 1982-83, a crop of some 45.3 million tonnes was produced and that crop had an estimated value of $7.5 billion. This year, because prices were dropping, farmers tried for more output. This year, 52 million tonnes have been produced and that will have an estimated value of just over $6 billion. Fifteen per cent more crop has been produced on the Prairies, generating 18 per cent less in gross income. In terms of purchasing power from the larger crop, it will actually be down by 37 per cent from what it was in the 1982-83 crop year.

Financing for prairie farmers is crucial at the moment. Prairie farmers have compared the deficiency payments American farmers receive with those they receive and are trying to point out that Canadian farmers need the same kind of incomes as their American counterparts in order to remain competitive both technically and in the marketing sense as well. They have estimated that for wheat and barley grown on the Prairies, a deficiency payment of just about $2 billion would be required to keep them at the same income level as American farmers. Adding in the smaller crops like flax, rye and rapeseed, it would require an extra $1 billion in deficiency payments. A recent study, just made public this morning by a farm task force in Ontario which looked at income deficiency problems right across Canada, indicated that to meet the same level of income support as American farmers enjoy, Canadian farmers would need a deficiency payment in excess of $4 billion.

I put that on the record to show what is required. All we have before us at the moment is Bill C-12, a Bill which makes some minor changes to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. To some extent, it changes the administration of the Act, leaving some of the decisions with the Minister rather than with the entire Cabinet. The Governor in Council route has proven to be a rather slow, ponderous way of doing things. Sometimes farmers wait six, eight or even 10 weeks simply to receive the form that must be filled out in order to apply for a cash advance.

I might point out that these cash advances have a limit of $30,000 per customer so they do not constitute a huge loan. They are limited and are made available according to the type and grade of grain a farmer grows.

There will be a slight change regarding the grade of grain as well. Previously the grade was set at the same time as the forms were being produced. The amount of coverage will now be set out by the Minister and the Act itself will limit the coverage of the advance to two-thirds of the amount of the initial price for a grade of grain which the Minister may specify. The past practice has been for that to be based on No.

1 or No. 2 wheat or one feed barley. I assume that that will continue to be the practice, but we will have to find that out when the Minister comes before the legislative committee.

Through this Bill, the Minister announced some changes in the way defaults will be handled. We cannot be clear about what he has in mind from reading the Bill. Again, we will have to question him in committee.

The Minister is proposing to reduce the amount of interest payable by people who are in default. People who are in default are generally people who either misjudged or for some reason beyond their control were unable to deliver the amount of grain on which advances were taken. At times, there were no delivery opportunities for farmers to put grain into the elevator system so the advances were still outstanding at the end of the crop year.

As long as farmers have filled all the quotas that are available, the practice has been that they do not go into official default. However, if a grower does go into default during the year because he did not fill a quota that was opened on time and therefore missed the delivery opportunity, he is declared to be in default and is responsible for the interest payments at the rate established at the beginning of the year on the entirety of the advance, even if most of it has been paid off at the time of the default.

I hope that when the Minister speaks of taking the ability to deal with defaults into his own hands and the hands of the board, he is also speaking of some sort of clear direction as to how to handle these defaults. There are occasions when it has appeared as though things were not as fair as they might have been. A producer might have delivered 95 per cent of his crop but ended up defaulting at the very end with a mere 5 per cent still outstanding, but he will find that he is in fact by law responsible for paying interest on the whole of the cash advance for the whole period even though he had paid the greatest portion of it off before the default took place.

Through this Bill, the Minister is proposing changes to the method of deciding when advances should be made available for unthreshed grain. Again, rather than going to the Cabinet through the Governor in Council, the Minister will decide this, and that decision-making process should be much faster and less ponderous than has been the case. Likewise, as I understand the Bill, drying advances will now be initiated at the signature of the Minister rather than through the much slower process that I mentioned.

There are two other changes of which I wish to make mention. One of these changes is welcomed particularly by farmers who farm quite a bit of their own land but rent from one or several landlords, none of whom are contributing enough land to make up a very large per cent of the farmer's land base. The change proposed here is that rather than the current practice of being forced to go to every one of your landlords to get consent to apply for a $30,000 cash advance, you would be able to apply for a cash advance against your own grain, if you have more than $30,000 worth of grain on your own account. You could take the loan against your own grain. In this manner you would not have to bother hunting up the landlords, some of whom are several thousand miles away, and getting their signatures, accompanied by those of the proper witnesses, which are very hard to come by.

The last change that is being proposed here is one that will need quite a bit of explanation from the Minister when we get into the committee. He is proposing to take the base for the cash advance from "acres" to "grain in storage". At first blush, I have no particular problem with that concept. I am wondering if there will be some administrative problems that may arise with this approach. In this Act the advances seem to be applicable to those grains that are coming under the Wheat Board. It is possible to collect advances on open market grain as they go through quotas. But there are some deliveries of off-board grain that do not go through quotas: Direct sales to neighbours, feed mills, and so on. There will be situations where grain trickles outside the system and the advances are not reclaimed. How is the Minister hoping to collect these and keep track of them, or is he foreseeing the same problems with the one system using a bushel base rather than an acreage base? Have his officials worked through the calculations to find out whether people who are farming acreages that, due to high production, would put them up to the maximum qualification of $30,000 worth of loan, would get enough quota during these rather clogged years for them to clean up the advance? What sort of administrative abilities are going to be provided at the end of that crop year to carry that grain on further? Does the Minister then propose to carry on a program mentioned by the Wheat Board several years ago whereby farmers who produced very high volumes of grain on their acreages could assign their grain and thus be guaranteed delivery of it by signing contracts such as are now being experimented with for one more year with regard to barley?

These amendments, while they do not change by one iota the financial situation that was alluded to at the beginning of my speech, they do make it a little simpler for farmers to get quick action from the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). These requirements mean that he will no longer be required to sit and wait for the due process to take place, to get the forms, the applications, and the current set of regulations through Cabinet each and every year. This process has caused farmers to wait until November and December in many years for their cash advance applications.

We applaud those small improvements to the system. We do not see any extra money. Farmers will still only be able to borrow $30,000. Perhaps the Minister has decided that this is prudent, given the declining values of grain in the world markets and the fact that he has found himself reducing the initial prices at the beginning of the crop year by $30 a tonne.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is rather historic that we are debating this cash advance legislation almost 29 years to the day after the original Bill was passed. It has been mentioned by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). After the debate on the Speech from the Throne was over, the first item that came up was this cash advance legislation. It was in for one day, and the next day the old age security Bill was brought in and the amount was raised up to $55. Then we came back to this subject after that went through quickly.

The point I want to make today is not the matter of time, but the significance, not the significance to farmers, but to the people who serve the farmers, the merchants in the towns who are carrying the farmers all during the summer. This is a cash flow situation. I thought it would have been emphasized more by the Opposition, because these are the big beneficiaries of this. Why does the farmer like it? Because he likes sometimes to pay off his debts, particularly when they are to his friends in the town whom he depends on to service his equipment and provide him with all the other services. These communities in the rural areas of the Prairies are fighting a desperate battle to survive. This is very important legislation to them.

It would be wise for those in this House who are seriously interested in the reasons we brought in this legislation so quickly in 1957, to refer to Hansard of October 28, 1957, at page 477. You could read through the performances—and I remember them, of course, it was my maiden speech in the House—and follow a chap like the Right Hon. James Gardiner and a few others. On that Bill there were three names: Churchill, the Minister of Trade and Commerce; Harkness, the Minister of Agriculture; and my own name from Resources. The significance of that should not pass unnoticed. This was to help the whole national development picture, to get our agriculture moving and to take opportunities that then existed to spread our productive ability all over the world, instead of sitting around here and waiting for people to come and ask for it. That was the significance. You had to give to the farmer the cash flow, because under the system that we had, it was two years before he got full payment for that wheat. By speeding it up even to a partial extent, it allowed him to pay off a portion of his immediate debts. That is the economic significance of it. When you are writing your householder, ask the farmers out there to use it and to help their businessmen in the towns. The farmers will not be angry if you tell them. They know very well they should be doing this. Many of them in the south country—I know that is so in my constituency—do not take them. They look on that as something that is not a gift, it is their own money, and they get it deducted when they get payment. To many of the general people across the country when we talk about cash advances, when we talk about interim payment or initial payments on grains, when we talk about insurance, when we talk about stabilization, all these things are the farmers own money. This cleavage between the city people and the Province of Saskatchewan, at least, is disgraceful. The city people benefit in direct proportion, and double as much as the farmer, every time the farmer gets anything. If you want to revive the economy of any country, particularly the newly developing countries, you have to teach them that when you get wealth into the hands of the producer, whether it be lumber, fish or agriculture, the city guy always benefits. This is how you bring peace to these countries, and it should bring peace to us in Saskatchewan. When you help the other person, you help yourself and both sides benefit. I think I have made my point right off the bat.

I was disappointed in the speech given by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). He knows a great deal about the details of these things. He should know that it is the duty of the Opposition to bring out these important points. He should know that you gain nothing with farmers by trying to go off at some other angle. His speech on the credibility of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) helps us. Politically it is helping us as Conservatives. People know that for many, many decades the political activities of members of the Liberal Party, whenever the Conservative Party got a leader, were not to talk about policies but to tear the leader down. I am not talking about just one or two of them, I am talking about one of the most positive persons that I have ever met in policy making, namely, the Hon. George Drew. He was torn apart even before he got into an election. He was called "the man from Bay Street", "the Colonel", and all the rest of it. He was torn apart by the press and torn apart by the Liberal Party, and they succeeded. You break a man down, you get rid of him. I would think that, with the positive thoughts I know the Hon. Member for Algoma has, he should not be trying to hurt his Party, because the people of Canada are getting sick and tired of this tactic.

It used to be that all politicians were down the drain pretty far, but in the last couple of years I can sense a change in the feelings of the people. They are angry at the media now. They are still mad at us, and we deserve it too, but the media is shooting out its brains the same way as the Member for Algoma was shooting out the brains of the Liberal Party today. I have to thank him because I know he helps us politically, as the farmers and the business people of rural Saskatchewan showed yesterday. Every Liberal candidate in that election lost his deposit, except for one. He is a local character and Leader of the Party. The people stood by him in his area and he deserved to win.

As politicians we have to do our job. When it is clear that what we are doing is hurting our Parliament and hurting our country, I would think that one should see the cloud on the horizon before it dumps on you. I am sorry to see the same type of tactics being used by certain people in the Liberal Party against their own Leader. No matter what you think of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), he is an Hon. Member of this House and deserves to be treated as such.

I have no excuse for all these people trying to make a million bucks writing books on themselves. It is bad enough when the media do it, but when politicians get into the act, that is the nth degree of low level living. I think I have said enough on that.

I would suggest that if Hon. Members are interested in the basic problems facing the people of the Prairies in the period after the war, they should not only read my speech but read the debates of all the others as well. The Liberal Party and the NDP both supported this legislation and then spent most of the time in the House in that debate, as those who will read it will find out, trying to gut each other.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What has changed?

Mr. Hamilton: In those days members of the New Democratic Party were not pro Liberal, but they hurt themselves. I think the people of rural Canada are trying to tell politicians today to cut out this nonsense of making trivia of the main things that we talk about.

The number of things the Minister mentioned in his speech that have been done along this line show very rapid progress. I would think that the trouble may be that mistakes may be made by trying to go too fast. I think these things should be mentioned in good, constructive opposition. When you find something wrong that the Government has done, you let them have it.

I will conclude my remarks by saying that this Bill we have before us is part of a much wider program that was announced by the Prime Minister on August 30, 1958. I will not read the whole speech but I will read points from the speech. Diefenbaker was the Prime Minister. I will summarize his speech in six points. First, I will read the introduction. It was a sound, comprehensive and co-ordinated program to attack specific problems. In developing a national agricultural policy we have found it necessary to deal with specific regional problems. He listed things about the West. I think any person in this House seriously interested in finding the basic philosophy, which still holds today, should read that speech of the Prime Minister on August 30, 1958. It can be found in Hansard at page 4345.

These points are: First, accelerated export sales. What a difference between 1957 and 1986. Twenty-nine years have gone by. They could not even sell the 300 million bushels we had for sale at that time. Second, stabilization of price and income policies. That is what this is, part of the stabilization of income. Third, assistance to provinces for recurring drought needs. Everybody in the House knows that for 30 years now we have kept our eye on any part of agriculture in any part of this country on any type of product. All Parties have come through on that. Fourth, a modern system of farm credit. I am not so proud of that because they got turned backwards on that one. On the modern system of farm credit, we put in by statutory rule that the ceiling on interest rates for farmers for long-term loans was 5 per cent. On the Farm Improvement Loan Act we put in a maximum of 6 per cent. I sat in this Parliament and watched those interest rates take off. What protest did we get? This measure went through quietly. It turned the poor farmer into the tender hands of the banks and the interest rates set by these people in Finance and in the Bank of Canada who are using interest rates to fight inflation, rising costs. Interest rates were the inflation. Those dimwits who still pollute those offices are still at it. They are begrudgingly coming down. This Parliament in 1983, all the Parties, gave to the Government of the day the power to move on housing, agriculture, small business, and we sit here today knowing the Government has made an effort but it has not succeeded on the fiscal side because it forgot to read its own regulations. That is what Members of Parliament are here for. We have to read the small print. You can only lend money under this program to people in dire straits. That is still there.

The Government changed in 1984, so if you are talking about this general program of helping farmers, a good Opposition would be pointing out these things. Why do you have to leave it to a Member on this side of the House to do it? Come on, fellows, get the finger out or you are going to choke yourselves to death.

The final point concerns national conservation programs which are mainly concerned with clean water and clean air. Tremendous progress has been made in the last 30 years on the scientific and practical side. However, no Party in this House will ever tell you what these practical things are. The work we started in the 1950s was announced in this House in 1973 by a Liberal Minister. He was very proud that this revolutionary step forward had been taken concerning clean water. Revolutionary, he said, and it was. Two years later I asked the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Hon. Don MacDonald, who I knew read everything, is it not about time that he told Canada about operation CANWELL? Civil servants and scientists have worked hard in Ontario and Quebec to develop these techniques and make money out of cleaning up the air and water. What was his answer? "You tell them, not me". I am still trying to get it across. In that respect we have a lot to do, but if we use the philosophy in this legislation and apply it to all other types of legislation, then agriculture, including all the producing groups, is the main beneficiary.

This legislation is technical, it is true. The points made by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) are good. He missed the main point, that the revolutionary thing in this legislation is that you have taken the power out of the hands of Ottawa civil servants and put it in the hands of the Wheat Board. Ye gods, if you knew the time a Minister has to take to get something through in this system! It is good legislation, but try and see it in perspective. Try to see it for what it can do if we apply this reasoning to a lot of other things we have before us.

I am very proud to be able to stand up 29 years later and say I was responsible for drafting it, which is true. Do not blame the Liberals or the NDP for the time it takes. Poor Mr. Gardiner tried his level best to put the blame on Mr. Howe, his good friend. Really it was not Howe's fault or Gardiner's fault. The civil servants had decided it was not possible to do this kind of practical thing. I do not blame those people for getting up and trying to shift the blame, but the point I am trying to leave with Members of Parliament is that when you have practical, technical legislation like this going through, look into the background so you can see the future. We have to do this not only for grain farmers but for many forms of basic production. We have to have a stabilized income and stabilized costs. Move slowly but stabilize it.

I did not have time to say all the things I intended, but I think my point has been made. The philosophy of John Diefenbaker lives still. When we honoured him with that statue out there I had a feeling he was going to keep an eye on us here. I suspect a lot of us still feel his presence. The great things he did were never matched by all the Governments put together since Confederation, by quantitative analysis, and they should not just be remembered in a statue unveiling. They should be part of our actions.

I congratulate the Minister for bringing this forward and I hope there is a lot more coming from other Ministers as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I must say it has been a pleasure to listen for the last 20 minutes to the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). He has an honourable place in the development of economic policy in Canada and in the history of the Diefenbaker Government between 1957 and 1963. I must say, having practised as a Canadian historian, that I have been awaiting a speech by him and I am so very pleased I was in the House this afternoon to hear him speak.

The fact that he spoke broadly on a variety of things, some of them very interesting indeed, encourages me to wonder whether I might ask a question which takes us a bit beyond the Bill before us this afternoon, although I do not think it is unrelated. The Diefenbaker years were years of economic initiatives of enormous importance to prairie farmers, the prairie population generally, and to Atlantic Canada. Unfortunately, they ended up being years of very significant deficits as well. Perhaps this was a result of economic policy contradictions at the time. These days we face high deficits again, and this is the primary problem which the Government of the day seems to be concerned about. We certainly have not seen in these last days that kind of sharp and ready response to the needs of prairie farmers which I think characterized the Diefenbaker Government, as the hon. gentleman pointed out to us.

I wonder whether, in the contradictions between the Bank of Canada and the then Minister of Finance, and the Hon. Member's efforts as a Minister to put in place national development policies which would make Canada a better and richer country than it was when the Government he was part of took office, he would have any advice for us in our circumstances in the 1980s about how we might develop the country and get beyond the deficits which the Government finds so encumbering.

Mr. Hamilton: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The basic point he is coming to is that there are two ways of spending money by Governments. You hand it out as a labour of love, so to speak, or you spend it to make it. If you can spend money on agriculture and make more money as a result, that does not increase a deficit, it reduces it. If you do not have the tables, I will show them to you, but going back to the war years, the longest period of upward growth in our country started in 1963 and went to 1968, all without a recession. The Minister of Finance, the Hon. Walter Gordon, pointed that out in 1964. It was on that basis, because we were growing so fast, that they brought in this controlled budget on the Keynesian doctrine. We went on to pour money into the country like mad during the next few years. The economy began slowly rising in 1961, but that was not noticed until 1963-64. We saw a slight dipping in 1968 and we then kept on going.

That longest period of economic growth was caused by a Government spending money on positive things which yielded higher returns. When you get cash moving through the system, there is a multiplier effect and the big winners are Governments. However, to spend money for the sake of spending is very dubious.

One of the biggest problems for all the western countries today is our attitude toward social services. We think we should pour money out. However, we must do it in such a way as to get all your money back and make more. It is so simple to do. We have seen it done in a couple of places. I am simply saying that if you put your mind to finding positive ways of doing things, you will find them.

In response to the social welfare conundrum, I recommend that you look at the Clark Report of 1959. This report shows how to make money from social welfare programs while giving more and better service and helping the individuals in the programs. The crime of Members of Parliament for the last 25 to 28 years has been that we are not doing our job. We get held up for all kinds of reasons. It is not that the people in the civil service are against us; they simply point out all the difficulties. That is why this Act is important. This Minister has finally settled a few common sense difficulties and made something better than it was before.

In answer to the Member's question, he is quite right. The Diefenbaker Government was condemned for going into a deficit position during the two recessions in its term of office. We spent in a positive way to get out of those recessions. That was the basic reason for the quarrel between the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance. We wanted to get out of the recessions by doing things which made money. The bank said we should have a policy of restraint. The mess we are presently in is an entirely different situation than we had in those days, but the principles are the same as what I have enunciated.

There is no use spending to make money five years in the future if you are going broke now. We have to hang in there until we get this thing going. The economy is rising by two or three points a year. If we let it speed up for another couple of years we will pull out. We must make legislation to stop adding to programs which are non-remunerative.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for a very good answer. The concern he mentioned about the circumstances being different today reminded me of the arguments I have read about which R. B. Bennett made. He waited a little too long. Is it not possible, in circumstances which seem different, to do the things of which the Member spoke? Would it not be better to do them in 1986 than to wait and go down to defeat in 1989?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer is the same. If you are on a little raft and want to jump a long distance, you try to get more support around the raft before you jump. There is a point at which it is silly to talk about spending money to make money: (a) when you do not have it and, and (b) when you do not have the foundation from which to leap off. We did not have that situation from 1957 to 1959 because we had a pretty good period in the early 1950s. Money had flowed into this country like mad forcing our dollar up to around $1.07. We had to face all these problems.

The experts were advising restraint and paying our way slowly out of these difficulties. We had enough base to jump ahead on a few small things. We could take wheat sales to 10 communist countries rather than just one. We broke out and never lost a cent in the whole deal. All the banks were worrying that we would never repay them. The solution was to help them sell their goods in order to get enough money to pay for it. That is why I support freer trade. That is what I call my "peace through trade" policies.

I am in contact with 86 countries. They ask what they can do to make some money. I tell them what they can do. We do not give them money. They do not really want it. If you can show them ways in which to earn it themselves it is much better. The positive approach has weaknesses, of course, but the fact is that you must have that base. We are accumulating that base pretty effectively right now and it is about time to move.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to break in on this philosophical approach to the deficit, but I do want to say a few words on this Bill. If the Government agrees, I suggest that this Bill could be referred to committee at the end of this sitting. Many of the factors which led to the crisis in agriculture in Canada are still in place. I refer, of course, to things like the high interest rates in the 1970s and early 1980s, the declining value of farm assets and the annually rising costs of farm inputs such as fuel, fertilizer and chemicals. Perhaps the most important entity is the continuing decline of commodity prices. All of those factors have contributed to the current crisis in agriculture.

It is unclear whether the decline in agricultural income has bottomed out. We are not at all sure that the small rise which we have experienced in the prices of red meats and pork is going to continue. We do not even know whether the price of grain will continue to decline. I applaud the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) for putting in place a Bill which will allow cash advances for harvested grain to be more easily and readily available without the problems faced by farmers and the Wheat Board over the years. Consequently, we will be supporting this Bill. I suggest that it could go to the committee at the end of today's sitting.

Farmers face cash flow problems at almost any time. Most people who do not live in farming communities do not realize that it takes approximately two years before the farmer realizes a return on his initial investment. The farmer will buy the fertilizer, seed and other material in the fall but will not bring off the crop until two years later. He may still be selling the crop two years later. That is a long time for any business person to wait for a return, and if the business is declining and cash flow is small it is important that parliamentarians and the Government provide some relief and have a return in eight months rather than two years.

Bill C-12 is a worth-while effort to improve that relief process and we are pleased that the Minister has brought it forward. When the Bill goes to committee, we will question the Minister on a number of aspects that should be considered, not only in the Bill itself, but in the regulations attached to it. Cash advances are not the solution to the problem, as I know the Government recognizes. It is a band-aid solution to some extent, and farmers would be pleased to get along without cash advances. A much more global approach is needed to address the problems of agriculture.

There is a widespread concern within the agricultural community that the Government believes that one of the solutions to the problem facing farming is to have fewer farmers. The Government has contributed to this concern to some extent, as a result of doing what it believes is helpful to the farmer. The agricultural community sees the Government carrying out programs that may be beneficial but which also indicate that perhaps the Government is not interested in finding a total solution that will keep farmers farming for many years. It is important that we keep reminding the Government about this fear.

The Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) fuzzy approach in announcing a billion dollars in assistance for grain farmers has confused the farm community rather than provided it with some security. For example, we are not sure how much the assistance will be, how it will be paid, how much will be paid, or how it will be financed. We do not even know who is eligible for these payments.

The terms of this assistance are so nebulous that it is very difficult to know exactly how it will work. The farmers cannot say with certainty that they have an agreement by which they will get a certain price for their grain or a certain amount in assistance that they need. Consequently, the Government must develop in the next two years a global approach that will not include band-aid solutions. Although it is difficult to suggest that $1 billion in assistance is a band-aid solution, that is what it amounts to.

While the changes proposed in the Bill are beneficial, a number of the Wheat Board's and Ministers' responsibilities are not spelled out in the Bill. The present Act and the changes in the Bill do not clearly specify that inflexibility will not appear in the new structure so that farmers will still find themselves acquiring debts they should not have acquired because of the way in which the Act has been interpreted and used to collect money from the farmers. We will be discussing this area very thoroughly in the committee.

However, the changes in the Bill are worthwhile and I hope the Bill will receive speedy passage.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, first, may I take this opportunity to congratulate you on your reappointment to the chair. You did an excellent job in the previous session, as I am sure you will do this year.

I also want to commend the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). I do not think there is any time when the Hon. Member speaks that we do not enjoy listening to him because he has such a tremendous knowledge of the past. I recall the years when he was the Minister of Agriculture, when our granaries were jammed with wheat and we had no place to send it. The Hon. Member went to China and came back with an order that took a large volume of that wheat. He has a tremendous record and I want to thank him for what he has done for Canada and for agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member who, of course, will continue his speech when the Bill comes before the House again.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—SEWAGE TREATMENT FACILITIES. (B) GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on a question I put to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) on October 7 concerning the Governmment's inadequate funding of sewage treatment plants.

When I asked the Minister why, in spite of the grandiloquent rhetoric of the Speech from the Throne on environmental issues, he turned down requests from provincial Ministers for additional federal funds for building new and upgrading existing sewage treatment plants, he answered that the Government was already "up to its eyebrows" in such funding. But, when boasting about his Government's record, the Minister did not mention that the tens of millions of dollars he has committed to the provinces are actually small potatoes beside the $1.8 billion in loans and grants provided to the provinces for sewage treatment facilities through CMHC programs in the period from 1961 through 1980.

Nor did the Minister mention that of the $65 million he bragged about giving to Ontario, a mere $9.7 million remains available, and this was as a result of an agreement which may well go back to 1980, prior to the election of the Conservative Government.

The consequences of the Government's environmental irresponsiblity through continuing inaction are indeed grave. According to last year's federal inquiry into water policy, a disgraceful 43 per cent of Canada is not served by any form of sewage treatment facilities. Even where there are plants in operation, they are often inadequate to the task, causing leakages and overflows of raw sewage into Canadian waters. The almost annual closure of beaches in the St. Catharines region is a direct result of inadequate sewage facilities causing overflows.

The underfunding of sewage treatment plants is only one of many areas where the Government's failure to live up to its environmental responsibilities has led to the dangerous deterioration of Canada's water supplies. Be it sewage treatment, toxic wastes being dumped deliberately into our waters or pesticides draining off fields into our lakes and rivers, the Government so far has not been up to the challenge.

[Translation]

A tragic example of this lack of responsibility, Mr. Speaker, is the case of white whales in the St. Lawrence River. One hundred years ago there were 5,000 white whales in the St. Lawrence River; fifty years later there were only half as many as a result of commercial hunting. Today only 400 whales ply these waters, and pollution rather than hunters is the enemy.

Biologists who examine white whales which often beach themselves on the shores of the St. Lawrence River have been able to determine that their bodies contain all kinds of toxins, including PCBs. Where do these poisons come from? From Jonquière's Alcan plant, right next to the whale's habitat. They also come from pesticides dumped into the St. Lawrence, and they come from raw sewage.

When we hear about the problem of toxic chemicals in Canadian waters, invariably reference is made to the Great Lakes, the Niagara River and the St. Clair River. The sad story of white whales in the St. Lawrence River clearly indicates that the Government must also tackle the serious problem of polluted waters in the St. Lawrence River.

[English]

Greenpeace, which is currently campaigning to save the beluga whale, estimates that the beluga will be extinct in its St. Lawrence habitat by the year 2000. Urgent action is needed if we are to avert this tragedy. However, urgent action is never what we seem to get from the Government. Its response to the sewage treatment problem, "Look what we've done in the past", is all too typical of the Minister's response to environmental problems. He has been extremely light on action so far despite the great expectations which greeted his appointment as Minister of the Environment. He is very big on words which are full of sound and fury but signify nothing. We hope at some point that "nothing" will turn into something, and with respect to the St. Lawrence River, the Niagara River problem, acid rain, pesticides, and so many of the serious environmental problems facing this country, we will see action forthcoming from the Government.

• (1805)

I look forward to hearing just what type of action the Government has in mind from whoever has been designated to respond on behalf of the Minister. Perhaps this will be an occasion on which we will hear something new from the Government, something about which I can only hope.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to have an opportunity to reply to the Hon. Member's question about possible federal funding for the upgrading of municipal infrastructure facilities.

As Members of the House are aware, on October 2, 1986, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) met with his provincial counterparts at the annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers. During the frank and constructive discussion, the federal and provincial Environment Ministers agreed that the need for new and upgraded municipal and sewer waterworks is an issue of growing significance which will have to be addressed by all three levels of Government. The Ministers also agreed that the responsibility extends well beyond the mandate of Environment and Resource Ministers and must be addressed by First Ministers and Ministers of Finance.

To date, the debate has focused exclusively on the question of potential financing by federal and provincial Governments. While the financing question is important, it is the view of the federal and provincial Ministers that appropriate pricing of water services is the other side of the same coin and that appropriate pricing must be considered on a priority basis in parallel with the issue of subsidies. Canadians must look at the potential benefits of applying the user-pay principle to the provision of water supply and waste water treatment services to a greater degree than is currently being done.

In this regard the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers agreed to establish an advisory committee on water. The first task of this committee will be to oversee a study on the cost of delivering and treating water as one aspect of the fiscal dimension of the problem. We must also take into account other important considerations. Collectively, Canadians must search for new solutions. For example, Environment Canada officials are examining the potential for improved efficiencies in sewage treatment through technological innovation, and the Department of Health and Welfare is pursuing similar initiatives in relation to drinking water.

In addition to any study of methods to finance the upgrading of municipal infrastructure, the federal Government has signed with the various provinces a number of economic and regional development agreements respecting municipal infrastructure. The agreements cover matters such as provision of water supply, sewer and waste water treatment systems, as well as provision of drainage systems to assist with community and industrial development.

The problem is being addressed, and Canada is up to the challenge.

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENT FOR FARMERS. (B) SITUATION OF GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on October 3 I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) if the Government would provide a deficiency payment to Canadian grain producers who are facing the worst prices for grain since the 1930s. The Minister declined to respond to my question. I also pointed out that a few weeks ago the Government was able to find some $1.5 billion for the major 25 oil companies, most of them multinationals. I asked why the Government could find no assistance for the 140 grain farmers in western Canada, as well as the other grain farmers producing in Ontario and other provinces, as well as corn producers.

• (1810)

On the previous day, the Regina Leader-Post had pointed out how the Speech from the Throne had mentioned in only very general terms what the Government would do. An article which appeared in the Regina Leader-Post on October 2 reads as follows:

> The lack of detail on agriculture must be a particular concern in this province. True, agriculture rated mention near the beginning of the speech—not long after Sauve told us what she did this summer.
> Prairie grain farmers know what they did this summer: they produced a record crop—
> Many Saskatchewan ears therefore were tuned to hear whether a deficiency payment would be forthcoming from Ottawa.

About the time this comment appeared in an editorial in the Regina Leader-Post, there was a frantic phone call from Premier Grant Devine of Saskatchewan, supposedly to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) at 5.30 in the morning. As heard by a reporter, the Premier was demanding that the Government announce a deficiency payment.

The same day I asked my question, even though the Minister of Agriculture gave his usual blather containing no answer to my question, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), responding to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) in the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, made this statement to the House:

> I am pleased to announce today that we will be working closely over the next month with Premier Devine and other provincial Governments to devise an effective financial assistance program to enhance the cash flow of Canadian grain farmers. Initial estimates of the assistance required are that it will amount to approximately $1 billion.

That was very skillfully worded. He did not say anything about a deficiency payment. He did not say the Government would give $1 billion. He just said that there is a need for $1 billion. Everyone is aware that there is a need for probably $2 billion or $3 billion rather than the amount about which the Government is speaking.

During the Question Period of Monday, October 6, in reply to a question put by the Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister said that the Government must move forward with aid for farmers and made the comment that it must produce the information required to help western farmers. On the same day during Question Period, he talked about taking whatever action would be helpful to western farmers.

Outside the House that day, the Minister of Agriculture suddenly waded into the question and announced that actually the $1 billion would not just go to western grain farmers. In other words, if $2 billion was required across the country, only $.5 billion would go to western farmers. He was very careful not to say how much would be provided for western farmers. As a matter of fact, he did volunteer that the Atlantic Feed Grain Initiative Program might be increased from $30 million to $50 million, at least according to a press report.

According to another article of October 8, the Minister said that the aid might not be a deficiency payment, it might be a loan guarantee or it might be some other loan program. This was especially disturbing to farmers across Canada because most of them already have too much debt. They do not want any more loans. They do not want loan guarantees. They want a deficiency payment.

The Parliamentary Secretary who will be responding today represents an agricultural area which is facing difficult times. The tobacco farmers of southwestern Ontario are facing as difficult times as are the grain farmers and corn producers in southwestern Ontario and the grain farmers in western Canada. I hope that he will muster up his courage, stop the flim-flam, the obfuscations, the double-talk, and stop the headline hunting and reaching for the headlines, as the Prime Minister does all the time, but not reaching for the Government's pocket-book.

We have a very serious problem in agriculture today. The Government has known about this problem since it announced the initial price for wheat last April or May. Now is the time for the Parliamentary Secretary to come clean and announce what the terms and conditions will be; whether it will be a deficiency payment, how it will be paid and what amount for each region of the country. The Government can stop this situation of Canadians not knowing what is going to happen to our most important and vital industry.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour this evening to represent someone who has done so much in the last two years for farmers and has achieved so much for that same group of people, much more than anyone else for many a moon.

Since the question from the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) was first raised in the House, several steps have been taken to build on this Government's commitment to Canadian farmers. We have left no doubt about our intention to extend financial assistance to grain farmers who have become victims of the subsidy war between western Europe and the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been highly supportive of Canadian agriculture from day one of this Government. He once again demonstrated his commitment to our farmers on October 3 when he announced to this House that the federal Government will work with provincial governments to enhance the cash flow of Canadian grain farmers. Initial estimates of the assistance required are in the neighbourhood of $1 billion.

How can we make the assistance equitable? What kind of assistance package will do the most good? These are the questions we must answer. It is a national problem. The solution must also be national. It must be fair and it must be equitable.

That is why we are consulting with farm organizations and acting in concert with the provinces. Together, we will come up with a package that puts money into the hands of Canadian farmers as soon as possible, but also as effectively as possible.

Federal and provincial Governments have been working together for some time to find ways of assisting Canadian grain farmers. At a meeting in Victoria on August 27, the federal and provincial Ministers of Agriculture made a collective commitment to take action to support the agricultural sector and all the jobs it represents across Canada. On October 9 federal and provincial Deputy Ministers of Agriculture once again met in Ottawa to continue the work of defining an assistance package. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) met with farm leaders on October 16. All options are being examined. Assistance could take many forms, from enhancing the existing programs to developing new initiatives.

Three points are clear. First, we are talking about assistance beyond funds available under existing programs. Second, any assistance will be within the federal Government's fiscal framework. Third, no federal program of agriculture will be cut in order to finance this one.

The need for assistance is clear. This Government's commitment to take action is also clear. We intend to consult, then we intend to act fairly, equitably, and quickly.

CRIMINAL CODE—GUN CONTROL—AMENDMENT OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I know that you had a very busy and active summer. It would not surprise me at all if you did not have an opportunity to notice that in August the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police met in Winnipeg and passed some very important resolutions. I would like to bring on to your attention in the event that you did not have an opportunity to see it at the time. That resolution deals with firearms and gun control. It reads as follows:

WHEREAS the presence of restricted weapons particularly handguns in Canada is a concern to the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, and

WHEREAS the National Firearms Registry reports the annual average of first-time registration of these weapons is in excess of 30,000, and

WHEREAS there is presently a world-wide surplus of automatic and semi-automatic weapons primarily designed for purposes of warfare now finding their way into the Canadian market-place, and—

WHEREAS Canadian public opinion is critical of the American handgun experience, and

WHEREAS present gun control laws are in need of review;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Solicitor General of Canada now address these concerns in conjunction with his provincial counterparts and take the steps necessary to end this increase in available weapons.

• (1820)

I know that even if you missed hearing that resolution firsthand, Mr. Speaker, you were present in this House and you did hear me question the then Minister of Justice on the subject of gun control back in February of this year. You heard the then Minister of Justice indicate to me at that time that he was reviewing gun control policy. You also heard, and I am sure that you read in the papers in May of this year, of a report by one counsel from the Department of Justice, Mr. Michael Zigayer, who indicated that there would be gun control amendments to the Criminal Code ready for introduction in legislation this fall. Again, you will remember, Mr. Speaker, on October 14, 1986 that I asked the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) what was happening with this gun control legislation and amendments. He indicated that the matter was still under review.

It is now the fall and it is time for action. Canadians are looking to the Government to introduce amendments to the gun control legislation. It will not be easy to come up with amendments that satisfy everybody. I believe, as I am sure you do, Mr. Speaker, that by and large the vast majority of urban dwellers in Canada feel that there should be stricter gun control laws. There are exceptions, of course, in the target shooters, the hunters, and also a large number of rural dwellers and some experts who feel that our gun control laws are too strict now. Regardless, we have to address this problem. When we do, and I hope it will be very soon, I hope that the Department of Justice will take into account the recommendations made by the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department for amendments to the Criminal Code in this respect. These suggestions flow from the concern of the Metro Police relating to the fact that in 1985 in Toronto there were some 512 occurrences of bullets being discharged, resulting in 16 deaths.

There is a concern as well relating to the growing numbers of military firearms, fully automatic and semi-automatic weapons. I would like to summarize some of the recommendations. The Toronto Police Department recommends, first, that the definition of a prohibited weapon be changed to include "any firearm that is designed, altered or intended to fire bullets in rapid succession by any means other than a single shot for each movement of the trigger by a finger. Any device that is designed or intended to enable a firearm to fire bullets in rapid succession other than a single shot for each movement of the trigger by a finger".

Second, they would like to see the definition of a restricted weapon changed to include "any military surplus or military designed semi-automatic or single shot firearm, or a weapon of any kind, not being a prohibited weapon, that is declared by order of the Governor in Council to be a restricted weapon". That would include "any device, chamber, clip or magazine that allows temporary or permanent access to more than 10 rounds of ammunition to any firearm without physically reloading the firearm".

Third, they would like to see the Criminal Code amended "to require any recipient of ammunition to produce a valid Firearms Acquisition Certificate to the person distributing the ammunition". Fourth, they would like to see that peace officers have "the authority to seize a Firearms Acquisition Certificate." Finally, they would like to see the Criminal Code amended so that any person who is authorized to issue a Firearms Acquisition Certification would also have authority to revoke it.

Those are the recommendations of the Metropolitan Toronto Police with respect to amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with firearms and gun control. I firmly believe that they should be taken very seriously by the Department of Justice. They should be taken into account when considering the forthcoming amendments. I hope we will hear from the Parliamentary Secretary that that is happening and that we are going to have some further amendments to the Criminal Code with respect to gun control very shortly, I trust before Christmas. When I say that, I mean before Christmas, 1986.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for his question, since it gives me an opportunity to provide a brief overview of our firearms legislation. First of all, I must point out that our Constitution, unlike that in the United States, does not recognize the right of citizens to carry arms. And in fact, the provisions of the U.S. Constitution that are interpreted as conferring such a right are not perfectly clear. In Canada, federal and provincial legislation authorizes the possession of firearms for legitimate activities such as target shooting, maintaining a collection and hunting, while prohibiting or strictly regulating possession in other cases.

• (1825)

The present provisions of the Criminal Code relating to firearms were introduced by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977 (Bill C-51). The passage of this legislation was accompanied by lively debate both in the House and the Senate. Hunters and collectors maintained that the provisions in question would constitute an obstacle to legitimate activities, but would not prevent criminals from procuring firearms. Proponents of stricter regulations maintained, however, that the provisions did not go far enough.

The present regulations have therefore been in existence for nine years. While admittedly, the legislation has had a fairly satisfactory impact and is well received by Canadians, it would seem necessary to make some changes in the provisions introduced in 1977. These provisions have, in fact, given rise to a number of problems the legislators had not foreseen.

As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) stated in this House October 14 last, in answer to a question from the Hon. Member for York East, the Government has launched a review of Criminal Code provisions concerning firearms. The idea is to draft amendment which, without flying in the face of the principles underlying the legislation on firearms, would clear up certain points of the law to make enforcement easier. One of the objectives is to give people better protection by improving some of the legislative provisions. Another objective is to change certain provisions which cause problems to those who own firearms for legitimate purposes but still do not contribute to protecting the public.

As the Minister of Justice pointed out, he hopes the recommendations on this issue will be submitted in the near future, and this will eventually lead to the introduction of legislative measures in this House. We are pleased to note the representations of the Hon. Member for York East.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.29 p.m.

PENSIONS

NEED TO IMPROVE REGULATIONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Auditor General mentioned aspects of the auditing of private pension plans in Canada that have raised his concern.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General even said that of the bank failures, the situation is like a time bomb and that close monitoring is required. There are over 15,000 public pension plans in Canada. The federal Government is responsible for about 750 of these plans. Like Conrad Black did in Ontario, more and more businesses are using private pension plan surpluses to finance their activities and even to finance take-overs abroad. I think all Members of this House should support the Auditor General's request that the government provide a better mechanism for protecting the money of Canadian workers.

WOMEN

TRIBUTE TO MADAM DENYSE BÉLANGER-ROCHON OF MONTPELLIER, P.Q.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, today, the Persons Awards prize will be awarded to five Canadian women for their contribution to the advancement of the status of women in Canada. The House will recall that on October 18, 1929, the right of Canadian women to sit in the Senate was recognized, following a petition to give women the status of persons in the British North America Act.

This day is a very special one for my own riding in Argenteuil—Papineau, since one of the prize winners, Mrs. Denyse Bélanger-Rochon, comes from Montpellier, and she will be receiving her award shortly from the Governor General of Canada. Mrs. Rochon, former president of the Quebec Federation of Women, has pressured the federal Government and the Government of Québec to improve their record on such important issues as employment equity, impact of technological change on working women, pensions, daycare, and the like. Mrs. Rochon deserves our admiration, and we want to extend to her our sincere congratulations for her work in general and her contribution toward advancing the cause of Canadian women, and we also wish to congratulate the other prize winners.

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON IN PORT-CARTIER

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has defended its decision to build a maximum security institution in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding as an exercise in job creation. Phoney statistics have been cited to support the decision, but whether Manicouagan has higher unemployment than any other Quebec riding is not the point. Job-creation projects should be job-creation projects, placed where most needed to provide good, productive jobs. If the Government wants to justify a particular project it must demonstrate how many jobs will be created at what cost, and that its proposed measure would be more effective than other measures for job creation. The Government has not done this.

Prison construction should never be used as job creation anyway, and the fact that the Liberals were just as bad is no excuse. Decisions about prison placement should be made according to correctional principles and, on this, opinion is unanimous. Port-Cartier is totally inappropriate, as was Renous which was built by the Liberals according to the same reprehensible, opportunistic, and misguided motives as Port-Cartier.

"THINK CANADIAN" CAMPAIGN

SUPPORT FOR PURCHASE OF CANADIAN PRODUCTS

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, October and November have been designated by the Government of Canada as "Think Canadian" months, with a special emphasis on Canadian supermarkets. Canadians are being asked to buy Canadian-grown foods, not just because they are Canadian but because Canadian foods are second to none in quality and price.

If Canadians as a whole think Canadian when shopping, we will keep thousands of fellow Canadians working, create jobs for thousands more, and make it possible for the Canadian farmer to continue to do the job he loves and does so well. Every dollar spent on Canadian-made products contributes to a healthier economy and that is good for all of us.

Agriculture Canada asks Canadians when shopping always to check for the country of origin of any product and to ask retailers to show us Canadian-made products.

Think Canadian, and wear a "Think Canadian" button.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES AFFECTING UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my shock and dismay at the concerted attack of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and his Department on the unemployed of the country.

First, unemployed Canadians were hit with a $100 million cut in job-creation funds. Second, there were changes to unemployment insurance which negatively affected members of the Canadian Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Third, the Forget Commission has called on the Government to reduce assistance further to Canada's unemployed. Fourth, the Minister has said that there will be no short-term job-creation programs this year, programs which would have provided desperately needed assistance to many Canadians. Fifth, the Minister is now cutting back on the staff in his Department, staff which is badly needed to assist Canada's unemployed in finding work.

Canadians want a Government which does not attack the weakest and least fortunate segments of our society. They want a Government which is caring and is concerned about the unemployed and will provide long-term meaningful jobs to the thousands of Canadians across the country who desperately need employment.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CRITICISM OF OPPOSITION MEMBERS' ATTITUDE

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I wish to challenge the attitude of opposition Members who feel that regional development should not be a government priority. Their view is that if it costs more to do it in the regions of the country it should not be done.

As a Member from one of Canada's disadvantaged regions, I want to tell those critics that Canadians living in the regions strongly support the commitment of the Government of Canada to solving the problem of regional economic disparity. Incurring greater capital costs or operating expenses for the purpose of enhancing economic opportunities in the regions is surely far more constructive an approach than that which calls for continuation of social assistance and UIC payments, with no hope of employment for these needy Canadians. Those payments also amount to millions of dollars each year.

Regrettably, the Liberals and the NDP appear opposed to initiatives which will mean improved economic circumstances for Canadians living in the regions.

WELFARE

CALL FOR NEW PROGRAMS TO ASSIST POOR

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the National Council of Welfare reported that almost four million Canadians are presently living in poverty. Many of them are youngsters under 16 years of age. It is a disgrace that this situation exists in a country as wealthy as Canada. It is obvious that the system of welfare which was developed has broken down and no longer meets the needs of people whose needs are so great. I call upon the Government of Canada to work with the provinces, rethink the programs we have established, and to establish new programs which will meet the needs of our poor.

EMPLOYMENT

CHALLENGE PROGRAM

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): During the summer recess, Mr. Speaker, I took it upon myself to travel throughout my riding of East Québec and call on most businessmen who had availed themselves of the Challenge 86 summer employment program. In Québec East, Mr. Speaker, 82 businesses and community organizations joined this program under which 221 jobs were created and $327,158 invested in the future of our young people. All employers with whom I met were enthusiastic about the work done by students and stated that this Government program has been a great help to them.

As to the students themselves, they candidly admit that without this program they would have been hard pressed to find such remunerative employment related to their studies or prospective career. I was even able to ascertain that some of them changed their career plans after this experience because they came to the conclusion that the work they were asked to perform was not really what they had expected in the first place. Mr. Speaker, I can only echo the feelings expressed by many of them and hope that the Challenge program will continue for years to come.

POSSIBLE RATE INCREASES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): According to the Auditor General's report, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue has granted tax credits valued at $225 million more than the Post Canada deficit. Yet a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, we learned that Canada Post intends to boost first-class postage by 2 cents and slap charges on people who do not benefit from home delivery and others who receive special delivery items. In light of the Auditor General's report, Mr. Speaker, I should think that the Minister responsible for Canada Post ought to instruct Canada Post officials to stop forthwith any procedure aimed at increasing the cost of services to Canadians, and to restore full delivery service throughout the country.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INABILITY TO ACCOUNT FOR EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are deeply concerned about the Auditor General's reporting the unaccountability of $57 million by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Not only is this an unaccountability of CBC funds, but it is most importantly an unaccountability of Canadian taxpayers' money.

In a time of deficit reduction and curtailed spending this lack of accountancy organization exhibited by the CBC must be investigated. Parliament must be concerned with the lack of business organization demonstrated by the Corporation. I urge that a complete study of the Auditor General's reported inability to pass audit be commenced as soon as possible. Parliament must make every effort to make the CBC accountable and responsible.

THE FRANCHISE

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERMEN—INABILITY TO VOTE IN PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, 2,000 B.C. fishermen will be effectively disenfranchised from voting in today's B.C. election, because no arrangements were made by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the B.C. Elections Branch. The Department announced a fisheries opening in the Johnstone Strait on Monday. That meant fishermen from Vancouver to northern Vancouver Island had to leave their homes early this morning; therefore they cannot vote in today's provincial election. They did not have the opportunity to vote in the advance poll, because the opening was not announced until Monday, and the advance poll closed last week.

It is disturbing that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the B.C. Elections Branch were not able to arrange for voting to take place on the fishing grounds, or for earlier notice. Surely, at the very least, the Department could have provided the use of one of its ships for this purpose and taken the initiative of informing the Elections Branch accordingly. As it is, the Elections Branch is saying that no facilities could be provided. Democracy is more important than this kind of buck passing.

FORGET COMMISSION REPORT—LEAKS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express today in this House my deepest feeling of dissatisfaction concerning the current leaks about the Forget report scheduled to be tabled in late November. Over a year ago now, Mr. Speaker, our Government set up an inquiry commission to examine thoroughly the whole unemployment insurance scheme and the related legislation which goes back over 45 years. We asked the Forget Commission to submit a report, so that we might amend and improve the unemployment insurance scheme. Mr. Speaker, six qualified people have been mandated to report to the Government at a cost of some $5.6 million to Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge that members of a commission may disagree with the content of a report, but it is altogether a different story when leaking information results in creating confusion among the public, and this, even before the final report is tabled. The situation is such that one wonders what has happened to professional ethic.

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to share with the House a letter which was sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) by one of my constituents, Mr. David Villeneuve of Navan, Ontario. It reads:

I write in regard to the planned cuts at NRC.

An important and widely supported part of the Conservative election platform was to increase Canadian R&D to world levels, yet we have seen nothing but budget cuts and layoffs.

NRC has been hit three times, in November, 1984, in the government-wide cuts of November, 1985, and now the space station cuts. Surely that is enough.

All industrialized nations have national laboratories of some sort; ours is NRC. NRC maintains physical standards, provides national facilities for the use of industries, performs long term research in areas of national importance, and co-ordinates technology transfer to industry. Since Canadian industry is already doing very little innovative research, surely further cuts to NRC will only worsen the situation.

I urge the Prime Minister to listen to my constituent, Mr. Villeneuve.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF REASONS FOR CHOICE OF PORT-CARTIER AS LOCATION FOR NEW PRISON

Right Hon. John. N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. He claims to have been motivated by regional development considerations when he spent $41 million in public funds to build a prison in his riding. Does the Prime Minister know that, according to the same Statistics Canada documents on which he based his argument in support of building the prison in his own riding, Quebec has 680 communities and villages where the unemployment rate is higher than in his own riding?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as we have said on many, many occasions, there were two main reasons for locating the prison at Port-Cartier; first, there is a need for protective custody cells within the Province of Quebec. That is not disputed. Second, this was an economically depressed region and this would assist the region. This is something which was certainly approved by the former Solicitor General in the former Government. I am surprised to find that those Hon. Members have suddenly changed and now find it is not a good practice to assist regionally depressed areas of the country.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, if that argument were evenly applied, it would have more credibility.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Does the Prime Minister recognize that his argument for building the prison in Port-Cartier, based on regional development, is a bit of a farce in view of other statistics? Does he realize that 89 per cent of all the communities in Newfoundland have a higher unemployment rate than Port-Cartier? Does he know that 20 per cent of all the towns in Newfoundland have over double the rate of unemployment of Port-Cartier? Is that the way to spread the regional development of this country?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of respect to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, what we are discussing here is the forecast and need for prisons in the Province of Quebec. In Quebec there was a need for protective custody cells. That is borne out by the Auditor General's report. That is the need we are fulfilling and we are fulfilling it by putting the prison in an area which is regionally depressed.

Surely there is nothing wrong with that, and we make no apologies for it.

PAYMENT OF FUNDS TO ACCELERATE CONSTRUCTION OF PRISON—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Right Hon. John. N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister referred to the Auditor General's report where it is also stated that the Government had spent $11 million in surplus funds to build the prison, anxious as it was to complete the project before 1988, before the next general election, that is. Will the Conservative Party be billed for the $11 million in public funds wasted to speed up the project?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am increasingly amazed to see the Leader of the Opposition hounding the brave people of Port-Cartier, courageous people in the remote region of the North Shore who have been through severe hardships from 1975 to 1985.

The Governments of Quebec and Canada were asked to help people who were particularly hard hit by the economic crisis and, by taking this step, the Government of Canada came to the assistance of poor people, as it did in western Canada and in the depressed regions of Newfoundland. I am amazed that the Leader of the Opposition should harass courageous people who asked for and obtained help from the Canadian Government.

CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTING PROCEDURES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. It concerns the Auditor General's Report in relation to the Port-Cartier prison. The report states that in order to meet the deadline of September, 1988—presumably set by the Prime Minister himself—short-cuts had to be used in the normal contracting procedures and that sole source contracts were used. Will the Prime Minister tell the House what is wrong with public tenders? Why were they not used for this process?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to say to the Hon. Member that the usual call to tender procedure was followed in this case. There has not been the least abnormality or irregularity.

INQUIRY WHY SEPTEMBER, 1988, CHOSEN AS DATE FOR COMPLETION OF PROJECT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, we have to wonder why the Auditor General included paragraph 7.95 in his report in that case.

As a supplementary, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if I may why the date of completion of the project is September, 1988. Where did this date come from? Is it only for political reasons that the Prime Minister wants to open himself the prison located in his constituency? If there are other reasons, he should stand up and say what they are.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that, first of all, there was a need which is clearly identified in the report of the Auditor General, and instead of trying to confuse the public, the Hon. Member should refer to paragraph 7.51 which says that, even with the construction of a new prison in Port-Cartier, there will be a surplus of only 30—

An Hon. Member: Oh! Oh!

Mr. de Cotret: Yes, look at the right table. In the case of an institution with a useful life of 25 years, this simply shows good planning. There was a need and we have met this need. The site was chosen for socio-economic reasons and I have no excuse to make for trying to alleviate the regional disparities in Quebec.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

LONDON RESEARCH CENTRE—PURCHASE OF LAND

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Will the Minister confirm that Treasury Board made the decision to purchase the land for the London Research Centre from Donald Matthews, the co-chairman of the Prime Minister's committee at the PC leadership convention, before Treasury Board received adequate answers to questions which it posed to the Department of Agriculture?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to take the Hon. Member's question under advisement and obtain the relevant information. Honestly, on a specific issue such as that, I cannot be expected to have the answer at my fingertips.

QUERIES CONCERNING PURCHASE PRICE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. If he read the Auditor General's Report he would know the facts. Is the Minister prepared to confirm in this House that the questions raised by Treasury Board with the Department of Agriculture, to which the Auditor General said no appropriate responses were received, concerned the price of the land, the amount of the land, who the vendor was, and alternative properties?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Hon. Member gets so excited. In actual fact some 36 sites were identified by qualified people within the Research Branch of Agriculture Canada as appropriate sites. Four of them reached the short list; but only one of those sites met all the criteria—

Mr. Broadbent: And it was owned by a Conservative.

Mr. Wise: —criteria not laid down by the Hon. Member, not by myself, but by research scientists.

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF PORT-CARTIER PRISON

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General and the President of the Treasury Board have indicated today that there is a need, based on correctional considerations, for a protective custody prison at Port-Cartier. I would like to refer both Ministers, and indeed the Prime Minister, to Paragraph 7.89 of the Auditor General's Report in which the Auditor General has said that the decision to build at Port-Cartier cannot be justified on the basis of need.

He goes on to say in Paragraph 7.98 that at the time the decision to relocate the prison from Drummondville to Port-Cartier was made, there was a surplus capacity of 381 cells. Based on these facts that are outlined—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Put the question.

Mr. Nunziata: —in the Auditor General's report, can the Solicitor General provide us with figures that would substantiate the statement he made today that there is a need based on correctional considerations for the prison in the Prime Minister's riding?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am more than pleased to supply the answer to the Hon. Member. It is right in Paragraph 7.51 of the Auditor General's report dealing with capacity versus forecast. The Hon. Member will see that the actual surplus forecast for protective custody where the prison is being built in the Prime Minister's riding is only 30, and that for maximum security it is 381. However, that figure includes Drummondville 1 which, while it was built for maximum security, is being used for medium security. The actual maximum surplus is only 129.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: There is undoubtedly a need, and the reason this occurs is because—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, what we are seeing is maximum incompetence.

COST OF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Forty-one million dollars is a lot of money. Think about it: $41 million.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Nunziata: The Prime Minister has decided to fritter away $41 million of taxpayers' money, but does he realize that that money could have been used to send to each and every senior citizen in Canada who is living below the poverty line a cheque for $32, or it could have been used to send to—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to underline a fact of which the Members opposite seem unaware.

The new institution will replace the Laval institution which has to be closed. At this time, we have to spend $4 million in capital costs alone for an institution which is outdated.

When you deal with figures, you have to consider both the savings and the expenditures.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

PURCHASE OF LAND AT LONDON, ONT.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. I obtained this morning a copy of a Treasury Board minute of a decision made on November 30, 1984, when the Minister was President of the Treasury Board about the purchase of a certain piece of land near London, Ontario. Since he has offered to look into the matter, will he confirm that, while he was President of the Treasury Board, the Treasury Board agreed to purchase land with insufficient information about price, with insufficient information about from whom the land was being purchased, and with an unanswered query about why more than twice the amount of land that was stipulated as being necessary was being bought? In short, could the Minister tell us why a decision of such incredible wastefulness was made by the Government?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I indicated before that the assessment of need was done by research scientists from Agriculture Canada. In fact, if there is any suggestion of patronage, the Hon. Member might be interested to know that the research was done and indeed the decision in principle was made and announced by my predecessor, the Hon. Eugene Whelan, in London in July of 1984.

• (1430)

REASONS FOR PURCHASE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, to quote someone else, I want to say to the Minister that he had an option. He had a choice. His Government was elected to make certain changes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Oshawa has the floor.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the decision to purchase this land was made by the present Government. I have the Treasury Board minute dated November 30, 1984. The Conservatives, I remind the Minister, were in power, not the Liberals in November, 1984.

I want to ask the Prime Minister, who is smirking away about this additional waste of government money, does he agree that purchasing more than twice the amount of land required at almost double the price seen to be appropriate by the Auditor General is a sensible way to run a Government? Is that why he was elected?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated for the third time, I believe, the assessment and the criteria were laid down not by the Auditor General, not by the former Minister of Agriculture, not by this Minister of Agriculture, not by my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, but by qualified research scientists.

Mr. Blackburn: The butler did this one too.

Mr. Wise: Obviously my precedessor looked at the information. He evaluated it and followed the advice of the research scientists. We did have a choice. We did have an option. We exercised that option. It was the right option because the facts were there and it was the obvious place to build a research centre.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Minister, a man I respect, that in this case the facts were not there according to the Auditor General.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Prime Minister. According to the Auditor General and according to the Treasury Board minute that I have, more than twice the amount of land was purchased than was deemed necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member has referred fulsomely to the document and told the House what is in it. Would the Hon. Member put his question?

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is the Prime Minister who is responsible for his Ministers' decisions. Does the Prime Minister intend to continue this squandering of public funds?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's colleague was denouncing this decision a few minutes ago. The President of the Treasury Board said that he would look into it and respond to my hon. friend. I find it interesting that he was denouncing the decision apparently because Mr. Don Matthews is a co-chairman of the PC Canada Fund.

Mr. Broadbent: No, not so.

Mr. Mulroney: He is also the father-in-law of David Peterson.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: How does that answer it? That is a great answer. We will see how that flies.

PENSIONS

COMPANY USE OF PENSION FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, during a press conference, the Auditor General stated that in view of the failure of a number of banks, the issue of the auditing of pension funds could be compared to a time bomb. In his report, the Auditor General expressed concern about the increasing tendency of companies to use pension fund surpluses to finance their own activities.

Could the Minister of Finance tell us clearly what he intends to do immediately to protect workers' money against this increased tendency of companies to use their employees' pension fund surpluses?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for this opportunity to respond to that point raised in the Auditor General's Report. I know the Member will not want to be an alarmist because the Auditor General himself made it very explicit that he was not being an alarmist with regard to these pension plans. The purpose of his report, of course, is to flag possible problems in the future. The Department of Insurance has been studying this matter and will be making a report to me shortly on how it is further going to improve supervision of this matter. Speaking of the present, I do want to say that the management of federally registered pension plans has been extremely good. There have been almost no problems. Management has been so good that it is producing surpluses rather than problems.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Minister that the administration of banking institutions was fine until this Conservative Government came to power and two banks failed. We should not wait until something similar happens to pension plans.

REQUEST FOR STANDARDIZATION OF AUDITING PRACTICES FOR PENSION PLANS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister is well aware that there are over 15,000 pension plans in Canada and that the federal Government has jurisdiction over 750 of them. Is the Minister prepared to call a meeting of his provincial counterparts to standardize auditing practices for pension plans, both at the provincial and federal levels, to make sure that the $120 billion in employees' contributions are protected?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): That idea is among many that have been presented and I will be glad to have a look at it, Mr. Speaker.

AIR CANADA

PROVISION OF TRANSPORT FOR TOUR TO SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is a serious one and it is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What action does he intend to take in response to the effrontery of our national airline not only in ignoring our own Canadian sanctions but deliberately undermining U.S. sanctions by providing transportation for a tour to South Africa, which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has condemned himself quite vigorously?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question. I understand its seriousness and I share the concern of the Hon. Member. The matter has only recently come to my attention. It does appear that Air Canada, a Crown agency, is in effect acting in a way that would undermine sanctions introduced by another country against South Africa. This is a very difficult matter to monitor in terms of the final destination of passengers which Air Canada might be carrying. Nonetheless, I intend to have a very early meeting with officials of Air Canada to express my concern, and I assume the concern of the House on that matter, to see if there is some way we can resolve the problem.

Mr. Benjamin: Phone them and tell them to quit.

REQUEST THAT CROWN CORPORATIONS BE DIRECTED NOT TO DEAL WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Since, Mr. Speaker, this is one of a number of instances in which Crown corporations or government agencies have been dealing with the South African Government or its agencies, is it not about time, consistent with our sanctions, that the Government issued clear directives to all Crown corporations and government agencies not to have any truck or trade with South Africa, clearly and unequivocably?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has been in touch with the Crown corporations. To my knowledge there are perhaps three which have some kind of association with South Africa. The Air Canada link is new, and I have indicated what I hope to do about that. The CN matter was raised in the House the other day. I indicated that I had to make a decision with regard to participation in a conference. Eldorado is involved in a particular contract which was in place before our actions were introduced. We decided to respect the sanctity of the contract but to prevent any new contracts being entered into.

If any Member of the House has information about activities by any other Crown corporation, which are inconsistent with the policy of the Government respecting South Africa, I would certainly welcome hearing the details of that information.

WOMEN

WOMEN IN WORKFORCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin was reported by some of our large newspapers as stating that senior ministers in the Conservative Government were poisoning the Prime Minister with feminist ideas. Can the Prime Minister tell us how his Government intends to help women on the labour market when most Tory back-benchers favour sending women back to housework?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, one of the things which is quite evident in this House is where women sit on the front benches.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: In 25 years of Liberal Government in this country there was nothing done either for the deficit or for women. In this Government we have reduced the deficit. We have done things for women, like amend the Indian Act, improve the pension system, and provide employment equity. That is because of our Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

CONCEPTION OF WOMEN'S ROLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Does he not believe that this medieval concept of women's role that is described and shared by most Members in the Tory caucus—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Pépin: —would explain the Government's chronic weakness when it comes to establishing a decently funded daycare service network?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, let me first correct what is no doubt an error made inadvertently by the Hon. Member. It is a fact that we have an impressing number of women in senior Cabinet positions. It was my privilege to double—my figures are not recent but I think that is the ratio—the number of women deputy ministers in the Public Service. We have doubled the number of women appointed to senior positions within the Public Service. We have undertaken a number of initiatives to favour women in Canada, and it is my view that the status of women in Canada is much healthier since this Conservative Government was elected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FUNDING OF UNIVERSITY RESEARCH—PRIVATE SECTOR'S RESPONSE TO GOVERNMENT'S INITIATIVE

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Government's job strategy has placed clear responsibility on the business sector of Canada to work with government in creating jobs. I am happy to say that the private sector has responded in a very positive way. Could the Minister tell the House what the response of the private sector has been to the Government's initiative of matching dollar for dollar, up to a total of $1 billion, the contribution of those companies willing to invest in university research in Canada?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question provides me with an opportunity to point out that the program we initiated earlier this year was designed to forge important linkages between in-house and university research in the private sector. It is over-subscribed. The first three years of private sector contribution have already been secured.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

LONDON RESEARCH FACILITY—PURCHASE OF LAND

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. It concerns the London agricultural facility. The matter is not whether the Premier of Ontario is in some way connected, nor is it the fact that the seller of the land donated over $10,000 to the Conservative Party. I want to give the Minister a chance to answer my question. Why did Treasury Board approve the purchase of 67 acres of land before the four points raised in the Treasury Board memo were answered? Why was the decision made before it had that information?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member put a clear and specific question. I hope he would not feel that he has to repeat it.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the interest of saving time of the House, I believe I have fully and completely answered that question on three previous occasions in this particular Question Period.

TREASURY BOARD APPROVAL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, for four times or five times in a row the President of the Treasury Board has attempted to rise to answer my question. I should like to give him that opportunity. Will he explain why this decision was taken without having the full information before Treasury Board?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): First, Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated at the very outset of this line of questioning that I would look into it in detail and report back. Second, the Minister of Agriculture has already answered the question. Third, allegations have been made that somehow there was some wasteful spending of public funds. I should like to refer the Hon. Member to paragraph 1.9 of the Report of the Auditor General which reads in part:

> Another sign of hope that those responsible for spending taxpayers' dollars are doing so more carefully lies in the increased emphasis on a need for restraint in public expenditure.

It went on to talk about the very remarkable record of the Government under the leadership of the Prime Minister in constraining expenditures and ensuring that money is well spent.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

APPARENT CONTRADICTION IN GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue.

According to the General Auditor's Report, the Minister of National Revenue, on November 14, 1984, authorized income tax remittals for up to $225 million, a figure which exceeds Canada Post's total deficit.

Why such generosity, when the Government is asking Canadians to tighten their belts, is slashing pensions, and reducing home delivery of the mails and other services essential to Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken and if I heard correctly the question of my hon. colleague, he referred to November, 1984. Under the circumstances I can undertake that I will check into it, because I was not Minister at that time, and endeavour to give him a satisfactory answer.

APPARENT INEQUITIES CONCERNING POSTAL SERVICES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I referred to Note 4.44 of the General Auditor's Report and I would like to direct my supplementary to the Minister of Finance.

How can the Minister ask Canada Post to cut down on services in order to reduce the deficit, when Revenue Canada is giving away millions of dollars?

Will he instruct Canada Post not to increase rates and to have door-to-door mail delivery?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is referring to the whole question of tax expenditures, which I addressed very carefully and clearly in the House yesterday. We have taken steps to reduce and eliminate a number of the tax expenditures which were brought in over the past number of years by the previous Government, including limited partnerships, the scandalous scientific research tax credits, and the financing of yachts and hotels through tax gimmicks. We have reduced all these things in the interest of fairness and in the interest of utilizing taxpayers' dollars more effectively.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB-CREATION PROJECT—ESTABLISHMENT OF INDUSTRIAL PARK

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the proper use of scarce job-creation funds. According to the Auditor General, the federal Government signed an agreement in March, 1985, to create an industrial park in a Conservative riding. Will the Prime Minister explain why the contract was signed, given that according to the Auditor General "the project met none of the three eligibility criteria necessary, nor was there any justification of the need for the project"? This is case No. 1 in the Auditor General's report. Is this the kind of job-creation project he supports?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, this project was initially approved in December, 1983. The assessment was carried out with the provincial and municipal Governments. It was on that basis that the decision was taken to proceed with the purchase of the land and preparation of a site plan. Since then we now have the Canadian Jobs Strategy which has eliminated capital expenditures like this and replaced them with training programs that address more directly the needs of the unemployed.

REPLACEMENT OF COMMERCIAL SIGNS PROJECT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister explain why the Government proceeded with a modified agreement in another Conservative riding for the replacement of commercial signs? It was not demonstrated that any jobs would be created, and the companies in question were well able to replace their own signs. What assurance can he give us that scarce job-creation funds will not continue to be misused in this fashion? Should the unemployed not count in these job-creation schemes?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the former Minister of Employment and Immigration for creating the Canadian Jobs Strategy. She took over at a time when there were some 35 to 40 makeshift, constituency-oriented programs. We put into effect a program which provides real job training with real work experience.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He will know that the Minister of Supply and Services has confirmed that her Conservative predecessor intervened and changed the bidding process regarding the awarding of the CF-18 maintenance contract. Did the Prime Minister order this intervention? Was it the President of the Treasury Board? If so, why was this intervention ordered?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that the decision is now before the Treasury Board. It would perhaps be improper to add to the comments already made in this House. However, I can assure the Hon. Members that my predecessor and myself have acted with complete integrity and in full respect of democratic principles.

I should perhaps remind the House that Ministers and Members of Parliament are not here on an honorary basis. We are here to defend the interests of the Canadian Government, and that is what we are doing.

[English]

COMPETITIVE BIDDING PROCESS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the refusal of the Minister to provide details raises serious questions about the bidding process.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The refusal or otherwise by a Minister even to answer a question is not a proper subject for comment in a supplementary. I ask that Hon. Members get to their supplementaries as quickly and directly as possible.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister explain what she and the Government mean by the competitive bidding process? Will she comment on the various considerations being evaluated regarding this contract? The principle of merit and the integrity of the bidding process are in question.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to repeat that, whatever the decision is, it will be in the interest of Canada as a whole.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENT'S RESPONSIBILITIES—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He, together with the President of the Treasury Board, recently assured this House that the Government is living up to its signed agreements with Indian people. Between Section 11.104 and Section 11.113 of the Auditor General's Report he specifically indicts this Government and its Liberal predecessors with failure to file reports demanded by the Act, and obviously a failure to live up to the spirit if not the letter of the treaties as enshrined in the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreements.

Given that, will the Minister recommend to the Government that an agency or Ministry with the clout to ensure that the Government complies with its agreements takes over responsibility from his Department which, the Auditor General clearly states, cannot exert that much influence?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the statements by the Auditor General and we take them very seriously. We have taken action, indeed my predecessor had taken actions, to examine the workings of the Department prior to the Auditor General's Report. I will continue to build on those.

Specifically referring to the James Bay Agreement, I draw to the Hon. Member's attention that the 1982, 1983 and 1984 annual reports have not been filed. However, I can assure him, and he well knows the circumstances, that I will be tabling reports for those years when this Government was not in power.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River on a short supplementary.

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENTS TO NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's willingness to clear up the mess left by his Liberal predecessors. What action will this Government take to ensure that its commitments to the native people of Canada are kept?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that this Government has taken every action to meet its commitments under the treaties. We have gone to great lengths, as both he and the Indian leadership in Canada know, to discuss with the Indian leadership how we can better serve their goals and the goals of this Government.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

PENSION PLAN TAX RULES—PAYROLL PENSION CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On October 10, the day after he announced the new tax rules for pension plans including the immediate suspension of all additional voluntary contributions, I raised with him the undue hardship this would impose on tens of thousands of Canadians who save between $10 and $20 a week through payroll deductions. Will he now reinstate the right of employees to make additional voluntary current service pension contributions for at least the rest of this year, and preferably until the end of next year when the new pension tax system is fully operational?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member very much for his continuing interest in the question of pension reform. I want to confirm that the current contributions, not the past service contributions, can be made to these types of plans up to the end of next year, at which time the new rules will come into effect.

AIR CANADA

LINKS WITH SOUTH AFRICAN AIRLINES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the complicity of Air Canada in aiding and abetting the apartheid regime of South Africa. In response to a question from the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville the Minister said that "The matter only recently came to my attention". Can he then explain how, almost a year ago, the Chairman of Air Canada wrote a letter to the union which had been seeking tougher sanctions against doing business with South African airlines and said he was waiting for a directive? He had contacted the Department of External Affairs and was told there was no specific directive from that Department to cut this truck and trade with the South Africans.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will look into that and see if the Hon. Member has her facts right.

IMPORTS FROM SOUTH AFRICA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have further facts from Statistics Canada if the Minister does not believe the Chairman of Air Canada. They show that imports to Canada from South Africa during the first six months of 1986, the time when the Minister was speaking so strongly about this issue, increased over 20 per cent. Can he explain how in the first six months of 1986, supposedly during his Government's fight against apartheid, imports to this country from South Africa increased by over 20 per cent?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Hon. Member may believe she can fool some of the people some of the time, but she cannot get away with this sort of thing consistently. She knows full well that the figures she cites referred to import and export performance before the imposition on November 1 of this year of the measures we have been talking about. Of course they would not show up in the statistics gathered before those measures took effect. Of course they would not.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER EXPLAIN GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON CAPLAN-SAUVAGEAU REPORT

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Can the Minister tell the House when she intends to explain the position of the Government on the Caplan-Sauvageau Report?

[English]

In particular, can the Minister comment on the principal objections of the Canadian Cable Television Association that all cable companies must carry an omnibus Canadian channel but Canadians are not seriously worried about U.S. domination of cultural industries such as television?

• (1500)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Government is studying all the recommendations of the Caplan-Sauvageau report. It is my understanding that, as we are doing so, the Parliamentary Committee on Communications and Culture will be holding hearings to allow all the players in the industry, that is the private and public sectors, the broadcasters and the cable industry, to make their representations before the committee to provide their analyses of the Caplan-Sauvageau report. I am sure that it is in the interests of all of us here in Parliament and in the industry to do what we can to improve and strengthen all aspects of the Canadian broadcasting system.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—RESEARCH BRANCH'S ACTIVITIES—HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and is with regard to the comments of the Auditor General yesterday on the activities of the Research Branch of Agriculture Canada. According to the Auditor General, Agriculture Canada did not implement his recommendations with respect to hazardous wastes in 1982. Could the Minister tell us why the Department did not take care to implement those recommendatiions? What do the Minister and the Government intend to do to ensure that this kind of carelessness with respect to hazardous wastes stops here in the Ottawa region?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, because the impact of the observations relates to the environment, perhaps I could answer the question. Some of the observations made by the Auditor General are valid and have been well taken by my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, and myself. Both Departments are in the businesss of health and are committed to setting a good example for the private sector.

For that reason, in the last year in particular we have co-operated by improving our inventory control, by building storage facilities, by recruiting personnel for this and related purposes and, more generally, by ensuring that the storage of hazardous chemicals by the federal Government meets the highest and most rigorous environmental standards.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I beg the patience of the House. The Member who is supposed to speak is coming. I know he is on his way.

Mr. Speaker: I want the Hon. Member to know that I have sent for the Hon. Member and I am very pleased to hear that he is coming.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to inform the Chair that I am ready to speak.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I respectfully request that you take into account that there are still many Members leaving the House and carrying on conversations which seem to have arisen out of Question Period.

Mr. Jelinek: Not any more. They have all left.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Perhaps we can have your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, to suspend the sitting if necessary until the Member who is going to move our Opposition Day motion comes into the House and takes his seat.

Mr. Speaker: I think that at times Hon. Members ought to be considerate of each other. I am sure that Hon. Members would generously support me in allowing a moment or two to allow the Member who wishes to move the motion to come into the Chamber, which he has now done. I am sure that the generosity extended to the Hon. Member and his colleagues by Members in the Chamber will be reciprocated at an appropriate occasion.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier) moved:

That this House condemns the government for breaking its promise to double Canada's research and development effort to 2.5 per cent of GNP, and for the measures announced since September, 1984, which are undermining research and development, long term economic growth and the competitiveness of Canadian businesses in world markets, measures such as budget cuts made to the National Research Council, the funding freeze on university research, the reduction of federal transfers for post-secondary education, and cuts to government research programs in the areas of energy, environment, fisheries and agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Members of the House for extending to me the courtesy of waiting a moment or so as I made my way to the House.

Often statements made and questions asked by members of the Opposition are suspect. We are expected to criticize the Government. I imagine that people who hear members of the Opposition make statements or speak about failures of the Government are often inclined to discount what we have to say. In the minutes which I have here this afternoon I will try to do something a bit different. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to think of this House as a court room for the next few minutes. On trial is the Government's science and technology policy. More precisely, I submit that the Conservative Government is charged with breaking its promise to double Canada's research and development efforts to 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product. To borrow a phrase from a court room, I submit that the government's record since taking office borders on criminal negligence. I will be the Crown prosecutor and I plan to call witnesses today to provide the court with independent testimony. You will not be hearing what I have to say. You will be hearing what a number of independent witnesses have to say about this Government's record. The jury is looking through the television cameras and sitting in the public gallery. They will pronounce the verdict. They will determine the sentence. Perhaps, as a result of this exercise, we can fill the new prison in Baie-Comeau. There are a number of basic facts which are so widely known that they do not have to be proved. I would ask the court to take notice of these facts.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the total investment of Canada in research and development is much less than that of our trading competitors. Indeed, in 1979, Canada was last of all major OECD countries. The former Liberal Government had set as its target for 1985 a proportion of 1.5 per cent of the Gross National Product for research and development expenditures. Substantial progress was made between 1979 and 1985; real investment doubled and increased from $2.7 billion to $5.3 billion, which, in real terms based on the inflation rate, represents an increase of about 31 per cent.

• (1510)

[English]

The first pieces of evidence which I would like to introduce are documentary. First of all, I have an excerpt from a speech the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made to the Ottawa-Carleton Progressive Conservative Association on February 9, 1984 when he was Leader of the Opposition. I would like to quote what the Right Hon. gentleman said at that time. He said:

> The way to improve our dismal trade performance lies in increased Research and Development. We have to double our Research and Development commitment and triple our resolve to reach it.

I would ask that this statement be identified as Exhibit "A".

I also wish to read into the record a statement from the Prime Minister's book entitled Where I Stand which was published in 1983. The Prime Minister, who was running for the leadership of the Conservative Party at that time, said:

> The National Research Council, which acts as Canada's main research laboratory, needs a funding increase of at least 20 per cent—

I would ask that that excerpt from the Prime Minister's book be identified as Exhibit "B".

An Hon. Member: Carry on with the quote. Finish the sentence. Be fair. There is such a thing as perjury in court.

Mr. Berger: The Progressive Conservative campaign handbook said the following:

> A Progressive Conservative Government will make up the ground Canada has lost in technological research and development through:
> Doubling our national commitment to R & D from 1.3 per cent of Gross National Product (GNP) to 2.5 per cent of GNP within the first four years we are in office.

That is from the Progressive Conservative campaign handbook. I would ask that the court identify this excerpt as Exhibit "C".

You will agree, ladies and gentleman of the jury, that these pieces of evidence prove conclusively that the Conservative Government campaigned on a promise to increase research and development spending. Canadians were not imagining things.

What has happened since the Progressive Conservatives took office?

An Hon. Member: The country has gone down the tubes.

Mr. Berger: Preliminary figures from Statistics Canada show that research and development spending as a percentage of Gross National Product declined in the first part of 1986 to 1.3 per cent from the 1985 level of 1.34 per cent. This is the first time in 15 years, with the exception of the recession year of 1983, that Canada's R and D effort has declined. I would ask that these statistics which come from the "Science Statistics Service Bulletin" of Statistics Canada be identified as Exhibit "D".

As a final piece of documentary evidence, I would like to table an excerpt from the current issue of The Financial Post dated October 25, 1986. This is their special report on research and development, entitled "Industrial R & D Spending Slows". I would like to quote from the first two paragraphs of this special report. The writer states:

> After substantial increases in research and development budgets in 1985, Canadian companies will barely boost their spending this year.
> The Financial Post's exclusive annual survey shows total expenditure on industrial R & D is expected to rise by little more than 3 per cent, vs 14 per cent last year.

I would ask that that report from The Financial Post be identified as Exhibit "E".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as my first witness, I would ask that the Quebec Minister of Finance step into the box. I would ask him a few questions about the effect of Bill C-96 introduced by the Conservative Government to reduce transfer payments to the provinces for post-secondary education and health care.

I would ask the Quebec Minister of Finance to tell the court what the effect was of Bill C-96 introduced by the Conservative Government to reduce funds allocated to post-secondary education and health care.

What was the effect of this legislation, Mr. Minister? The reply of the Quebec Finance Minister appeared in The Globe and Mail on May 2, 1986, and was as follows: "Under the circumstances, the Government has no choice. It is obliged to resort to taxation to compensate for the shortfall resulting from federal cutbacks."

• (1520)

[English]

As my second witness, I would ask the President of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council to take the stand and to comment on the statements of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to the effect that a Government initiative will provide $1 billion in new money for university research. First, I would ask the president if he would provide the court and the jury with details of the financial situation of his council during 1985-1986. The president, if he were here today, would answer in the following fashion, and I am quoting from his report of 1985-86 to the Minister of State for Science and Technology:

The financial situation for NSERC during much of 1985-86 can be described as uncertain and difficult. Council was forced to operate during most of the year with a budget . . . almost 10 per cent less in real spending power—

That is, less than in the previous year. Never before had the Council been required to operate with a reduced funding level.

Second, I would like to ask the president of the Council to tell us the effect of the Government's funding decision which was announced in the Budget of February, 1986. Again, the answer may be found in the words of the President of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council:

The decision is far from the funding levels called for in the second five-year plan. The increased base level of support—will, by 1990, only hold NSERCs budget at a spending power equal to that of 1984-85—

The Budget, in other words, has been frozen, assuming a 4 per cent inflation rate.

I would finally like to ask the President how the members of Council feel about this decision. Again, the President of the Council, if he were here, would state the following, which may be read in his report:

The federal Government's response to the second five-year plan is naturally a disappointment to the Council. After eight years of effort to improve the R&D environment in Canada, Council has developed some very innovative, flexible and productive programs to strengthen Canadian graduate schools . . . However, Council is now having to stop the upward momentum that was premised on increasing real budgets and on an increasing percentage of the nation's Gross National Product.

I would now like to briefly deal with the recent cuts at the National Research Council. I would like to ask the President of the National Research Council to take the stand. My question is: Dr. Kerwin, what is the effect of the recent cuts at the National Research Council? Dr. Kerwin would answer, and I quote again from a recent news report:

I think we have to admit that it will weaken us further. The NRC has been very successful in helping high technology companies to get started. And we have helped to create tens and tens of thousands of jobs at a very reasonable cost and our ability to do this will obviously be impaired.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, another question, would be: If you want to describe the effect of these cutbacks in a few words, what would you say? Once more, Dr. Kerwin has already replied to this question. At his press conference a week ago, he said that these cutbacks are regrettable, tragic and even worse.

[English]

During the course of these few minutes I have tried to present to this House, this imaginary court, irrefutable evidence of the guilt of the accused, the guilt of the Government. If we in this courtroom open our ears we will all clearly hear the verdict from the jury, from those listening in the gallery, from those watching on television, from all Canadians because they recognize that without research and development we are jeopardizing our future, our children's future and Canada's position as a leading western democracy.

I hope the sentence which will be pronounced by the Canadian people in their communications with Members of the Government, in their letters to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of State for Science and Technology, and in their visits to the offices of their Members of Parliament, will shake the Government into recognizing the importance of the commitments made during the last election campaign so that it will change direction before our future is too seriously mortgaged.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The trial will continue with another lawyer, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis).

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

An Hon. Member: Cross examination.

Mr. Lewis: That was back in the days when I made real money.

I would first suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that no competent lawyer would ever suggest in court that a number of facts are so well known that they do not have to be proved. But that is not why I have risen today. I rise to suggest that there has been a contempt of court.

An. Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member introduced as evidence part of a sentence in the Prime Minister's book Where I Stand. He quoted this much: "The National Research Council, which acts as Canada's main research laboratory, needs a funding increase of at least 20 per cent—". If you check the "blues", Mr. Speaker, you will find he stopped there. He failed to complete the sentence which reads: "—to bring it up to approximately $400 million". I suggest to you, Sir, the Hon. Member misled the court. I suggest that in a real courtroom that would be contempt of court and would bring about a severe chastisement from the judge and the law society.

In fact, I can give the real figures for that period. In 1985-86, an expenditure of $434 million; in 1986-87, an estimated expenditure of $417 million; in 1987-88, an expenditure of $431 million. I suggest that the jury will wonder if my hon. colleague in fact knew those figures, and whether that is the reason he did not complete the sentence.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I really think the Hon. Member is once again trying to confuse the issue.

Mr. Lewis: I didn't misread the quote.

Mr. Berger: With respect to the figure of $400 million mentioned in the Prime Minister's book in 1983, I presume the candidate for the leadership of the Conservative Party at that time was referring to 1983 dollars. I invite the Hon. Member to look at the current estimates for 1986-87 of the National Research Council which is in 1986 dollars, taking into consideration the inflation which has occurred in the past few years. That will demonstrate that the Government's own estimates of the Council's budget for this fiscal year is $398 million. I would suggest to the Hon. Member, if he is not capable of understanding this basic arithmetic, to talk to any economist about the effects of inflation and about the difference between 1986 dollars and 1983 dollars, because I submit the point I made is essentially accurate. That is to say the Prime Minister promised an increase in the budget of the National Research Council of some 20 per cent, and we have seen the opposite since he took office. The budget of the Council has dropped from $530 million, which it was in 1984, to $400 million today, a decrease of 28 per cent.

• (1530)

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to the House. I do not talk in lawyers' jargon. I will try to make myself understood without resting my case on a lot of facts and figures.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member why it is that over a decade or more under the Government of which he was a part the national performance of science and technology did not increase by one nickel. In fact, it declined severely. Before the Minister rises to answer the question, I would point out that the whole purpose and thrust of the initiatives taken by my hon. colleague, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle), has been to improve the efficiency of our in-house scientific effort; to focus our research resources more effectively on the emerging areas of challenge in the new frontier world of science; to strengthen linkages with the private sector since we have never received a significant pay-off or return on our investment in government science in the market-place; and to accelerate and enhance the transfer of technology into the private sector where it creates permanent real employment. These initiatives are very much along the lines of the important report submitted by Dr. Doug Wright and his colleagues.

I suggest that the Hon. Member is not being honest with the House—not intentionally—when he says that the budget of the National Research Council was $530 million in 1984. He is giving the impression that somehow it is being reduced when, in fact, the Government of which he was a part built a number of brick and stone monstrosities around the country without ever budgeting for their capital operating requirements, or even setting aside the scientists and person-years to put in them. That is the problem which my colleague, the Minister of State for Science and Technology, wrestles with today.

The Minister did not point out—

Mr. Oberle: The "Member".

Mr. Siddon: The Member did not point out that there is a new bio-technology centre in his own city of Montreal which will require over 200 new person-years. The Hon. Member did not mention the new research institute in optics in Ste-Foy, Quebec. Nor did he mention the new research institute in Winnipeg. All of these institutions were built by the former Government with no provisions to operate them. That is the dilemma with which my colleague is faced.

I have one question in conclusion, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Hon. Member who is responsible for the motion before us to tell me very concisely what cuts were made to government research programs in the area of fisheries. What cuts were made? I would like some specific evidence of cuts that were made.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, first, I thank the Minister for referring to me as a Minister. His colleague, the Minister of State for Science and Technology, has made the same mistake. I think they are thinking ahead a few years.

The Minister referred to the Liberal record. I touched on that subject in my speech. Our Government did not set a goal which was unattainable. The Conservative Party set a goal of 2.5 per cent, a doubling of our spending on research and development. Countless experts, such as Gordon MacNabb, the former President of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, has said time and time again that we do not have the people, the students in high schools and universities in science courses today to reach that goal.

The second five-year plan of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council was designed to build upon the efforts of the Liberal Government, to get more young people into science and to have the infrastructure necessary to increase the scientific capability of Canada. That plan was rejected by the Conservative Government.

As far as our record is concerned, we set a goal of 1.5 per cent of Gross National Product in spending on research and development by 1985. There was a steady increase from the end of the 1970s to the mid-1980s in terms of reaching that goal. As I pointed out in my remarks, what we have seen in the first part of 1986 is that Canada is starting to fall away from that goal, thanks to the efforts of the Government.

As far as my assessment of what has taken place at the National Research Council and its funding levels is concerned, I will be happy to go into a detailed discussion of the figures at any time. The Government's Estimates clearly demonstrate the case. I have other figures which supplement the information that is contained in the Estimates, since the Estimates were tabled last February.

In assessing what has happened at the National Research Council, I would put my money any day of the week on the word of people such as Dr. Basinski or Dr. Larkin Kerwin, the President of the Council, who has said that these cuts are weakening an already frail structure and that they are regrettable and tragic. Even worse than that, I would put my money any day of the week on the assessment of Dr. Larkin Kerwin rather than on the word of these day-wonder Ministers who last in their portfolios about six seconds.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. In the years that we had a Liberal Government, and in the years in which the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) was a part of the Liberal caucus, all the organizations which take in the various scientific disciplines, such as the chemical, physics and biological institutes, made repeated representations to the then Government pointing out the fact that Canada was expending, as a percentage of the GNP, about one-half of what all other countries in the OECD, and Japan, were spending. In fact, it was pointed out that we were second from last, and that only Italy made less of an effort than Canada. In all those years their protestations were ignored and rejected by the Liberal Government.

The Hon. Member says that we were climbing. We never got anywhere near to 1.75 per cent when all other countries were spending from 2.25 per cent to 2.5 per cent and more of GNP. That is typical of the Liberals, the difference between Liberals when they form the Government and Liberals when they are in opposition.

What right does the Hon. Member have to expect the Canadian people to believe that a Liberal Government in the future—and God forbid that we ever have one again—would do any more, would make any greater efforts in the field of scientific research and development than it did in the past when it was in office for so many years?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my previous remarks, we were headed in the right direction. We were going up. The Hon. Member will recognize that we were heading in the right direction, which was up. That should be contrasted to the way we are going under the policies of this Government, which is down. Any examination of the reports of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and the National Research Council will demonstrate the truth of what I have just said.

• (1540)

As far as the future is concerned, I can only say to the Hon. Member that in due course we will present our ideas. The Canadian people will determine whether or not they have any merit.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by thanking the Hon. Member for providing the House with a rare opportunity to discuss what I consider to be the most important and critical issue that will face us as a society in the next 10 to 15 years. What we do collectively as a people in the field of science and technology over the next 10 to 15 years will certainly determine the role we will play in the next century among the community of nations.

It is within our grasp to position ourselves to be among the leaders in the world. It is within our grasp to respond to the challenges that are thrust upon us at such a relentless pace, brought about by this new technological revolution, and to respond to them in a positive, enthusiastic and confident fashion. As well, it is perhaps possible to be pushed out of the fast current that takes humankind into a new age, to be resigned to the backwaters of mediocrity, to be resigned to obscurity and insignificance.

This place never ceases to amaze me. It is interesting to hear how many different aspects of the truth some Hon. Members manage to put on the record. They defend their aspects of the truth with such conviction, sometimes even against their better judgment. If the Hon. Member who just spoke were in a courtroom, there would be no doubt in my mind at all that someone would charge him with perjury.

This debate is most timely because Hon. Members have, during the last two or three weeks, put so many different aspects of the truth on the record that it is extremely urgent for me to familiarize the House with some of the real facts today. Perhaps I should begin by setting the record straight regarding the aspersions that were cast in connection with the NRC.

There is no doubt that the National Research Council has been, is and will remain Canada's principal research establishment. However, the institute must continue as it has in the past to stay in tune with the times, to respond quickly and very effectively to new situations and new realities. One of these new realities is that much more research of the basic kind is today being performed in the private sector, and much more than ever before, research is being performed in universities. That shift has not occurred as a result of any deliberate policy of any Government. The reason for that shift is that it is becoming ever more critical that fundamental research be combined with the training of a future generation of scientists. That teaching happens to be best performed in universities.

In the period before World War II, there were 51 universities of which 19 were doing research that qualified for grants that the National Research Council gave to universities for research and training. In 1986, there are 82 universities in Canada of which 50 are receiving NSERC grants for the purpose of research and the training of future scientists. It is because of that that we have put an emphasis on university funding. The statement made by the Member that there is not a significant increase in university funding is literally untrue.

We have put in place a program which will deliver, over a five-year period, $1 billion of additional new money for university research and the training of future scientists. I make no apologies at all for the fact that some of this funding is tied to a matching formula which requires the private sector to respond. As a result, 50 cents of private sector investment will trigger a $2 world class research effort in our universities. That is not a bad record at all.

We need to boost our international competitiveness and we need to forge important linkages between the science community, our in-house government laboratories and the private sector. The deficit gap which is much too wide was created by a former Government. This gap must be closed.

However, let us look for a moment at these so-called cuts the Hon. Member said have occurred to the NRC over the last three or four years. The NRC breaks down its budgetary calculations into three different categories. The first category is the operating budget, the budget that pays for research, for management and for the operation of those things under the Council's responsibility. Then there is the so-called transfer budget. That is used to finance extramural laboratories such as TRIUMF in British Columbia and other outside research laboratories which are operating at arm's length but are partners with the Research Council.

This budget includes the IRAP program which the Hon. Member, over the last three weeks, consistently proclaimed had been drastically cut. Has he had the grace to apologize and to say that there were no cuts to the IRAP program? No. Again, perjury would be the charge in a courtroom.

Finally, there is the capital budget. This is the budget that the NRC uses to build buildings, to buy equipment and to do things which are normally done. It is in the capital budget where some of the cuts have occurred and I will tell the House why that is.

Unlike the former Government, we do not believe that the cause of science and technology is dramatically advanced by bricks and mortar, by building edifices, palaces and monuments all over the country. However, the former Government did believe that. It thought that the way to increase the government effort was to build buildings all over the place. There are three such buildings which the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) had mentioned. There is the Ocean Dynamics Laboratory in Newfoundland, the Biotechnology Centre in Montreal and the Industrial Technology Centre in Winnipeg. The cost of these three structures is $157 million. These buildings were built over the last four years; and a couple of them are already in operation and the other one will be commissioned in February. Obviously the budget of the NRC had to be increased by $157 million to pay for these buildings. Obviously, as these buildings are completed and are being commissioned, the budget of the NRC decreases in accordance with the completion of these buildings. Let me just tell the House what actually happened to the budget of the NRC.

Incidentally, the NRC budget was never at $520 million. Again, the Hon. Member has a selective memory. When he mentioned the peak figure of the NRC's budget, he conveniently added the supplementary income the NRC receives aside from government funding, income earned through charges for services and so on. In 1984-85, this income amounted to $40 million. The budget of the NRC in that year, the peak year, was not $520 million but $480 million. Then when the Hon. Member mentioned the low figure, this year's figure, he conveniently said that the budget is now $398 million, but he did not add the extra income. These are the kinds of dishonest games these people play when they make their points.

The fact is that the operating budget of the NRC has stayed consistent and level. I have a chart here. Perhaps the Hon. Member cannot read very well. I will send it over to him. It is a picture. Perhaps the Hon. Member could get a better assessment of it.

• (1550)

The operations budget of the NRC, which is the highest component, stays reasonably level. There has been no decrease. The transfer budget, of which I spoke, again is the green line. It stays level. There has been no decrease. When I look at the equipment and the building budget, of course, there is a sharp incline into 1984-85, and then a decrease as the construction programs were completed.

Please, Mr. Speaker, through you to the Hon. Member, let us have a little more honesty and integrity when one speaks about these important things. It has not been very helpful to the management of the NRC to maintain any kind of morale with this kind of gamesmanship. Incidentally, the Hon. Member is no stranger to the truth. He has been invited consistently to attend briefing meetings. He knows the truth. He plays games in the House of Commons. While he may have had a weekend headline and while he may have even succeeded in embarrassing the Government slightly with his stretching of the truth, he has destroyed to a great extent and has been personally responsible to a great extent for the destruction of the morale at the National Research Council, which has always been very high and which has now been severely damaged.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: I have consistently said that there would not be any pink slips this year at the NRC and that every effort will be made to ensure that the impact on individuals affected by this re-organization to new realities would be brought to a minimum and that positions would be found in other departments of government, perhaps in universities or even in the private sector. I have offered to intervene personally for the employees wherever I can, but I cannot give the same kind of assurance to some of the senior management who have fed the Hon. Member some of this information which is less than truthful.

Having set the record straight, permit me now to take us back just two short years ago to tell you what we found concerning a national strategy on science and technology when we arrived here and assumed the mantle of power.

Let me identify what we discovered about a national strategy which was shaped by 20 years of Liberal administration. We were asked in two years to undo the damage the Liberals have caused in 20 years. The Hon. Member said that there was a consistent increase in the over-all spending in terms of the Gross National Product. If you destroy the economy and the Gross National Product declines, you have a consistent increase in percentages in your R and D expenditures, and that is what happened.

We were as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, two years ago a nation in search of a modern image governed by a group of social engineers without any sense of fiscal responsibility or constraints. The previous administration was also looking for a modern industrial image for our country, an image which identified our traditional industries like agriculture, mining, forestry and fishing as unsophisticated rural occupations, something from which a nation in search of a modern industrial image must get away. Give that to the developing countries. Let us shape our image after perhaps Japan and Germany. Those were the models that were held out as a nation seeking a modern industrial image. That is what we were to emulate.

All we had to do to achieve that image was to spend as much in terms of the Gross National Product as Germany and Japan does, and everything would fall into place. It is true that we cannot fault the former Government for the sense of urgency that it brought to the mission. Money was absolutely no object. Using the indicators which were established by these other countries with which we were making comparisons, the former Government deducted accurately that the private sector was not doing its share. It was doing roughly half of what it normally should in research and development. To prove our in-house situation—about which I have already spoken—all we had to do was build modern world-class buildings, which we have. My compliments to the architects. But nobody thought of designing any programs to fit into these buildings. They called them world-class buildings and it is now my job to provide the programs. That is all that had to be done to improve the internal performance.

The former Government knew that action was required because we were chalking up a deficit in high-tech trade with other countries that was growing at a rate of 15 per cent a cent a year and had reached $10 billion a year by 1984. What did the former Liberal Government do, Mr. Speaker? It acted swiftly and with conviction to bring in the so-called scientific research tax credit. That was to stimulate private sector activity quickly. Indeed, it did. Did it ever stimulate private sector activity. There was a lot of activity in innovative tax accounting, but there was no innovative technology created.

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us how yours is going to work better.

Mr. Oberle: I will tell the Hon. Member what we did better. I will read something a little later on to show the Hon. Member. It was no coincidence that the CBC, our great friend, last night on The Fifth Estate program pointed out what some of these scientific tax credits paid for. There was a ship in Chile some place that was being refitted with $25 million of scientific tax credits which, incidentally, was counted in to R and D expenditures. It was $25 million for that project alone. The ship is still sitting in Chile. The Liberal Government recruited a number of young people. They all wore uniforms. The first task was to develop a universal language for the world.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): It was a disgrace.

Mr. Oberle: I was surprised that the cadet on the other side of the Chamber did not arrive here today with his uniform. I would have thought he would have had one of them. Those are the kinds of things the Liberals were doing.

Now, Sir, what have we done? First, it was very clear that even the Government with its potent instruments of power, the Tax Act, the Patent Act and all the potent instruments, would not be in a position alone to turn this ship around and to set the country off on a new course. That is why we set out on a process of consultation. We have federal-provincial meetings. We have a concept of co-operative federalism. We have round table discussions. We had a national forum in Winnipeg which produced a consensus of where we ought to go and a consensus on a new national strategy which has as its pillar the procurement of highly qualified personnel—

Mr. McCurdy: Outside of the country.

Mr. Oberle: —the development of the necessary strategic technologies needed to revitalize our resource industries to build on our national strength. The only thing we discovered that we have in common with Germany and Japan is we, like them, have our own strengths and weaknesses. We need to develop a program of science and technology to help us build on our inherent strength, to revitalize our resource industry. We need to use space technology, the bottom of the mines and the floor of our oceans and develop the regions in so doing.

What is it going to cost? What are the targets? Is 2.5 per cent enough? I do not know. Perhaps it needs to be 4 per cent. Whatever it takes, Mr. Speaker, it will be spent. I will guarantee that. Whatever it takes to set the country off on a new course will be done. We intend to have our youth on the new frontier and we will not have them shut out, as the former Government would have done, from the opportunities that lie ahead.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I must say I think it is unfortunate that the Minister engaged in the kind of personal attack in which he engaged during the course of his remarks. I even wonder whether a question of privilege could be raised as a result of those remarks. However, I will let them pass. As far as I am concerned, I can only say that the comments during the course of my speech were directed solely toward the policies and the record of the Government. You will forgive me, Mr. Speaker, if I perhaps engage in a treatment of the subject which is somewhat whimsical. However, there are times when one has to do that kind of thing to make one's point.

• (1600)

In my treatment of the matter, I continuously quoted from statements by people—and I think most Canadians would agree—who are authorities in their own right. I could talk about a person like Dr. Larkin Kerwin, the President of the National Research Council. If the Government is doing such good things for the NRC, I would expect its president to be a happy man today. I would expect him to be standing up and applauding the Government. However, the President of the NRC had to contain himself to try to avoid criticizing the Government. Despite his best efforts, he could not help but term what is taking place today as a tragedy, namely, the destruction of an important national institution by the Minister and by the Government. He could not help but term it as regrettable and very dangerous for the economic future of the country. I would be more apt to put my money, any day, on the assessment of a distinguished person like Dr. Larkin Kerwin than on the assessment coming out of the mouth of the Minister.

He accused me of destroying the morale of the National Research Council with some of the charges I have made. It is laughable. There are no words to describe how ridiculous is that suggestion. I cannot say that I would wish for that kind of ability. On the contrary, I do not pretend to have that ability. All I want to say to the Minister is that it is not speaking in the House of Commons of charges in a public forum—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but he has taken over five minutes of the question and comment period, and I have two other Members who wish to participate.

Mr. Berger: I would like to put a question to the Minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) on a point of order.

Mr. Fontaine: As Mr. Kerwin is a Liberal, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it would be normal not to name him. I should ask, therefore, the Hon. Member who has the floor to abstain from referring to Liberals—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret, this is not a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: This is serious—I find totally unacceptable that an Hon. Member should rise and accuse a senior official of showing partisanship in his job. I suggest that the position taken by the Hon. Member for Lévis is absolutely reprehensible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It had been ruled that it was not a point of order anyway. I ask the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) to please direct his question to the Minister immediately.

Mr. Gauthier: Besides, he is a Quebecer.

[English]

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister. Under what guise can he stand in the House and threaten senior management of the National Research Council? Under what authority can he use that kind of language to speak about people who work for an independent agency which does not report to the Government but to Parliament? I should also like to ask him—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. The Hon. Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle).

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond briefly to the Hon. Member. He chose to refer to things uttered by other people to sustain his argument. Let me refer to a letter dated October 14, 1986. It was directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister from CATA, the Canadian Advanced Technology Association, and was signed by its Chairman, Mr. Gordon W. Gow. In part it read:

> The efforts of your Ministers, together with your decision to become personally involved in the formation of national science and technology policy as outlined in the Speech from the Throne, are extremely encouraging initiatives to the advanced technology community across the country.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, I have not threatened anyone. I simply said that if the Hon. Member relates the evidence, which he adduced in debate in the House over the last two to three weeks, back to senior management at the NRC, and if he is factual about the interpretation he has received from them, I have no other choice but to say that he was misinformed by them. Senior management people should not misinform Members of Parliament.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to answer the Minister by saying that all the information—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Berger: It is a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could the Hon. Member explain to the Chair how it is a point of order?

Mr. Berger: The Minister raised a question about the source of my information. He seemed to allege that I received my information, perhaps on a confidential basis, from certain officers of the National Research Council. I simply want to correct that and state that all the information I used during the course of my remarks came from the public record—newspaper articles and public documents to which all Hon. Members of the House have access.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the "blues" before me, but I think I heard and noted correctly what the Minister said a few moments ago. I think he said that senior management of the National Research Council had not been telling the truth about what had been happening at the NRC. That is a very serious charge, and I think it is one the Minister should substantiate today. If he cannot substantiate it today, he owes it, not only to Members of the House but to senior management of the NRC, to agree to a very early meeting of the standing committee. In that event senior management of the NRC could appear before the committee and tell how they assess the kinds of decisions and policies upon which the Government decided and what they believe will be the effects upon the NRC. Would the Minister agree to that proposal?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, it was certainly not my intention to cast aspersions on the senior management of the NRC. All I said was that if the evidence adduced by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) over the last two weeks or three weeks in the House was evidence which he received from senior management of the NRC, the evidence is wrong.

As far as the NRC management appearing before the standing committee is concerned, a standing committee can call before it at any time, without my consent or the consent of our House Leader, officials of the NRC or anyone else who acts as a responsible agent of the Government. I would asume that the committee would take this liberty.

• (1610)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have a background in biology and therefore recognize the importance of research in our institutions, particularly the NRC and our universities. I have never witnessed since I have been in Parliament such falsehoods and hypocrisy from the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) concerning the issue we are debating today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to rephrase what he just said.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): I will rephrase it by saying we have been confused by facts from the Hon. Member who moved this motion for debate.

Mr. Berger: How can you be confused by facts?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): The Minister referred to charts, operating budgets, the capital budget, and I am concerned about job cuts because some of them affect my constituents. Does the Minister feel that the NRC should have cut more from its capital budget and less from the professional scientific job categories and made the reductions more equitable so as not to affect the professional quality and work being done at the NRC?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the reason for appointing a council to assist senior management of the NRC is to make certain that the money allocated by taxpayers is spent consistent with both national priorities and those of the research community. I would not wish to make an assessment of the reallocations, except to point out that the net person-year complement at the NRC will of course not decline. In this reorganization a number of new tasks have been assigned to the NRC. I would mention just one, the new biotechnology centre in Montreal. It will have a complement of 257 new positions. They will be allocated to the NRC. In addition to that there are new positions in the centre in Winnipeg, and quite a number of new positions which will permit the NRC to fulfil the mandate assigned to it as a result of the space users program. There is a reallocation and reorganization of the NRC personnel, but there is not a net decline. Rather, there is a significant increase in person-years at the NRC.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, perhaps no subject to reach the House in recent days is more topical and more important than this motion on the federal Government's role in research and development. The continuing cuts to the federal research effort, the ending of careers and programs at the NRC, which has been documented, not by Members of Parliament but by the press and radio and television, and the irony of the awarding of the Nobel prize for chemistry to Dr. Polanyi are all subjects which I will deal with shortly. However, in my view and that of many others I should begin at the beginning in order to contrast what this Government says it intends to do and what it actually does.

Let me begin with the year 1983 when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), not yet the Leader of the Conservative Party, wanted to tell the Canadian public of his intense concern over research and development. On page seven of his book Where I Stand he said "Research and development are the keys to our national well-being." He had an entire chapter on the subject of research and development and had scorn for the record of the Liberal Government. There is yet more irony in reading these words today, and I will cite just a few examples.

On page 39 of that book the Prime Minister castigated the Liberals for having "the nerve to set an R and D target of 1.5 per cent of the GNP." That was, in the Prime Minister's words, "playing the junior B circuit". He was not interested in such a token effort in 1983. Instead he wrote, again on page 39, "We must make a firm commitment to double the public and private funds allocated to research and development before 1985". He did not say that before we can do that we will have to cut the deficit. He said we have to double our effort. That was the goal and it was duly incorporated into the campaign material of the Conservative Party in 1984 in the form of a 2.5 per cent target for R and D.

What has happened since then? Do we have a goal of 2.5 per cent or even 2.2 per cent or 1.8 per cent, to give the Prime Minister every possible benefit of the doubt in setting a target? No, we have a spending level of about 1.3 per cent, or an amount, to again use the Prime Minister's words, which will ensure that Canada will, "during its entire lifetime play in the junior B circuit".

Mr. Blaikie: Junior B Government.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague gives the Government too high a grade.

Then we have the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) saying during the Throne Speech debate, in answer to me, that he "chose to ask the science council to help me establish realistic funding targets by examining each sector of our industry and by comparing what they are doing with what their competitors are doing in other parts of the world. We will establish realistic targets." More bafflegab and of course more delay. The reason we have not doubled our R and D expenditure to meet the Prime Minister's most insistent demand is that we must now find, to use the Minister's words, "realistic targets". In other words, we have to reduce the deficit and that is more important and comes before everything else.

The Prime Minister also insisted in 1983 that research and development must not be sacrificed to financial restraint. He knew then that there is no point in eating the seed corn which will produce a larger and more bountiful harvest ahead. He has forgotten about that. We are now back to cutting the deficit before we can invest in scientific research and development. He criticized the Liberals for applying the six and five restraints to public R and D. On page 40 of his book he said "The National Research Council, which acts as Canada's main research laboratory, needs a funding increase of at least 20 per cent to bring it up to $400 million." That was in 1983. On Friday we had the president of the NRC reported in The Ottawa Citizen as saying that his budget four years later was just $400 million, having been $520 million the year before.

As we know, the NRC is now wrestling with the tragic loss of programs, research teams, low staff morale and administrative chaos, all of which were caused by the further $20 million cut announced last week after the cuts made last year. I will return to that, and particularly to the inept and deceiving performance of the Minister throughout this most grevious of injuries to one of our most useful research institutions.

Let us now return to the Prime Minister. In his book he was so certain that he had found the way ahead for Canada that he described the chairman of the NRC as a "public servant who understands the problems of the real world and the frustrations that go with it". He quoted him as follows:

> If Canada implements something like this plan it will still have problems in the years ahead, but these will be the problems of excellence, the worries of the rich. They will probably include a scarcity of workers rather than unemployment, a surplus of affordable energy, much of it renewable, and so low a national debt that we may be pressured as Japan is now to limit our exports.

What was the plan that was to increase our national wealth and provide this passport to easy street from mean street? It was a long-range plan for research and development in Canada which has been rejected and, further, systematically undermined by the Government since it took office. If the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the successive Ministers of Science and Technology and the entire Cabinet wish to know why we have not attained the R and D target and the problems of wealth which go with it, they need only look in the mirror. Research has been a target for cuts by the Government rather than a national goal. Line departments, granting councils and research organizations such as the NRC have all been cut back.

Throughout these cuts from public bodies we have heard the Government's refrain that private sector research will increase and fill the gaps. We have some pretty realistic evidence on this today in this week's Financial Post which has a special section on R and D in the private sector. They say, "Industrial R and D spending slows, researchers will be on a stricter diet". They go on to analyse what was reported to them by the private sector and forecast a 3 per cent increase in R and D from sample companies compared to a 14 per cent increase last year. Only 9 of 80 of the largest R and D firms in the country said they were planning substantial increases in R and D budgets over the next three years.

The Government's rhetoric insists that private R and D play an increasing role in our entire research effort. That is a laudible goal, especially since only 3 per cent of Canadian companies of any size do any research, but it is not happening. In particular, it is not happening on anywhere near the scale the Prime Minister indicated it would when he wrote his book and the Conservatives were campaigning for office in 1984. That is probably not happening because so many of our largest companies are multinational corporations which prefer to do their R and D at home base rather than in Canada.

Just to emphasize that point, I want to compare our R and D figure of 1.3 per cent Gross National Product, which has not varied much under Liberal and Conservative Governments since 1983, with the 2.7 per cent invested in the United States, 2.61 per cent in Japan, 2.58 per cent in Germany, and 2.47 per cent in Sweden, a country much smaller in population than Canada. All these countries have research efforts of close to 100 per cent higher than Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: We are a Junior B team.

Mr. Orlikow: As my colleague points out, we are a Junior B team which the Prime Minister deplored when he was in Opposition.

In making this contrast I will relate it to what is happening to those persons who are charged with carrying out research in Canada. For them this R and D percentage is no abstract figure. It represents laboratories, equipment, research personnel and support and grants to carry out research and find its application. Those are lacking in Canada to a large extent because of the lack of adequate funding.

Canada has been fortunate in the awarding of the Nobel prize for distinguished achievement in chemistry to Dr. John Polanyi. Dr. Polanyi has brought considerable honour to Canada for his achievement and he has been extremely gracious in thanking this country for providing the means by which his discoveries in chemistry were made.

In one article Dr. Polanyi paid tribute to the NRC, the place where he began his post-doctoral research. He said it exuded "—an amazing spirit of liberality. It endeared the NRC and Canada to me. The spirit of co-operation was splendid. It was a great place to do science". You will note the past tense, Mr. Speaker. It is very important.

In another more recent interview Dr. Polanyi was asked this question: "Do you think if you were a graduate student today and in similar situations to the time when you actually were a graduate student that you would come to Canada? Do you think there's the same kind of opportunities for scientists in Canada today"? In response Dr. Polanyi said: "Well, honestly, no I don't think so. I think I would go to the U.S. And I think we have it in us not only to compete in every other way of comparable quality and excitement here. But we haven't chosen to do so".

Compare those observations by the Nobel prize winner, Dr. Polanyi, with the nonsense we hear from the Minister of Stae for Science and Technology. Out of such thoughtful assessment by persons who know is the brain-drain born and accelerated. Dr. Polanyi has not lost hope for Canada. Indeed, he wonders why we have not done better. He put it this way: "In a country where the rhetoric about science is so splendid, you know it's getting better all the time. In fact what is done is not really remotely commensurate". He went on to question why Canadians are not more science-minded and he hopes that we will develop "the taste and pride in that endeavour". He then adds the clincher: "Because it's important to us, not just as a nation, which is of course absolutely vital, but in addition it's very important to us, as everybody keeps saying in their marvelous speeches, as a base on which to rest the technology that we have to have".

It sounds as if he has been listening to the Prime Minister and the Minister of State for Science and Technology, but they don't seem to be listening to Dr. Polanyi. He means what he says but they just talk about it. They worry more about the deficit than they do about research and development.

According to the Minister, Dr. Polanyi did his work at the University of Toronto, not at the NRC. Therefore, I assume that according to the Minister we should not pay too much attention to what Dr. Polanyi says. All this conveniently forgets that if the NRC had not offered him a position when he was preparing to move from Great Britain he would have gone elsewhere rather than to Canada. People that good are never short of offers.

We can conclude from all this what might happen to the future of other scientists like Dr. Polanyi. They are being told by the Government that there is no place for them in Canada. Dr. Polanyi's lab at the NRC is being shut down. The NRC is being systematically gutted through funding cuts. No wonder distinguished professors are reluctantly concluding that their brightest students will do better by going elsewhere.

Perhaps the Government opposite believes that it is fooling Canadians with its talk of increased funding for research, but it really is not. Those who analyze the policies and those who have to live with the end results know that the dollars are not there. The companies surveyed by the Financial Post certainly know what is really happening. They know that the spending cap placed on transfers to the provinces for federal contributions to post-secondary education means hundreds of millions of dollars less to the year 1991. They know that the so-called billion dollars for the three granting councils of the federal Government, the NSERC, the SSHRC, and the MRC really means that their base funding has been frozen until 1991 and that any increase is entirely contingent on contributions from the private sector. They know that the so-called billion dollars for university research is not a billion dollars at all, but more like $300 million and will be only encouraging research which the private sector wants rather than what we really need.

They know that government research is in fact contracting. The NRC is on the ropes, its purposes distorted for the public relations gesture which the Government wants in space. Its own research, which has already been examined and approved by international panels, is simply ignored by the Government and shunted aside.

They know that line departments with significant research capabilities including agriculture, fisheries, the environment, forestry and mining, where most of the people who have jobs in the country are working and where most people will work in the next generation, have been substantially cut back. They know that Canada's is probably the only government in the western world with a forestry ministry which has no forestry research capability because the former Conservative Government, headed by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) sold the forestry labs. They know all this and they discount what the Government opposite is saying. Many persons who are knowledgeable in the science policy field are now speaking out about the shortcomings of this Government's policy. Gordon MacNabb, the retired President of NSERC said this about the failure of the Government to fund adequately a five-year research program:

My greatest frustration was having worked so long and hard on the logic of the plan. I don't mind losing a battle, but I've never had a chance to fight. No one really argued against our manpower projections, and what we said about the shortage of talented people we're going to have.

Surely that shows that this Government's mind is made up. It does not want to know about research, particularly about basic research, which the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) quaintly and mistakenly calls "curiosity research". It does not want anyone with ideas that may differ from its own. This is clearly a recipe for disaster. One aspect of that disaster is being played out this week with the Minister of State insisting that there were "no cuts" and "no programs lost" at the NRC as the evidence came out that whole divisions and programs were being wound up and there were more than 100 persons who could not be fitted into the various retraining and early retirement schemes. No wonder this Government has another credibility problem to add to all the others. It is regrettable, to say the least, that their statements about research and development do not match their actions. But it is far more serious than that. Progress is nowhere at the level that everyone recommends, including the Government. The research community is progressively more disheartened. Canada, a supposedly young country open to new ideas, is in reality lagging behind in every vital research area.

The conclusion is inescapable and despite the efforts of the Government to say the opposite, the reality is increasingly obvious to anyone who cares to look.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) earlier made reference to the new funding formula for universities as a formula that would have the result of freezing the university research funding budget. The program is designed not to be a ceiling but to be a floor and to give a clear indication to the universities what they will have in their A-base—unlike the way it used to be before, as the Hon. Member will recall—where there were certain amounts of money put into the Main Estimates and in September there would be a Supplementary Estimate and perhaps another one in February. When I assumed the portfolio, my first task was to add another $16 million to university research in the last year. I do not know what kind of planning had gone into spending that money from February until the end of March. There were three principles: Number one was to stabilize the funding and put the money in the A-base up front, so there could be forward and intelligent planning. Number two was to increase university funding significantly, which we did. Number three was to forge these industrial linkages.

I know that the Hon. Member is sincere in not being informed. But I would like him to know that there is nothing to stop the Minister or the Government from coming forward in March or the fall of any year and identifying new priorities and adding additional funding to the A-base. That has always been the case. This was not a freeze, but merely an attempt to stabilize university funding, which everyone recognized as a major priority.

Mr. Orlikow: It is not me or other Members of Parliament that the Hon. Minister has to convince that research funding at the universities has not and will not be cut further. It is the universities. I asked the Minister to stop reading his own press releases and to read the submissions made by the Association of Canadian Universities and Colleges and the Canadian Association of University Teachers. They document clearly the fact that cuts have been made and are being made by this Government, not just to research and development work at the university, but to all university funding. The reductions in the established finance programs automatically mean reductions for the universities. So much of what the Minister and the Government have promised in the way of increases for research and development depends upon increases in funding by the private sector.

The Minister and I do not agree on many things, but I am sure he will agree with me that The Financial Post is not some wild-eyed, woolly, socialist, impractical rag. The current issue of The Financial Post contains a special report regarding research and development with a headline reading "Industrial R & D spending slows". The sub-heading is "Researchers will be on a stricter diet". I would like to quote the following couple of sentences:

> After substantial increases in Research and Development budgets in 1985, Canadian companies will barely boost their spending this year. The Financial Post's exclusive annual survey shows total expenditure on industrial R & D is expected to rise by a little more than 3 per cent—
> The 76 private-sector firms that provided complete figures have allocated $1.43 billion to R & D in Canada this year, up 3.5 per cent from 1985's, $1.39 billion.
> The 10 Crown agencies providing complete data proposed to spend $327 million in Canada, up 2 per cent from 1985.

There are the facts as given to The Financial Post by the major companies that do research. They are talking about increases of 2 and 3 per cent on their research which was inadequate until now. Where is the tremendous increase in the private sector research on which the whole plan of the Minister and the Government is based, which is absolutely necessary and which is a corner-stone of the so-called plan and strategy of the Government? It is not there. The whole thing will collapse like a house of cards in the very near future.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) attended the press conference given by Dr. Kerwin last week. He heard what Dr. Kerwin had to say about lay-offs at the National Research Council. Dr. Kerwin said that in the past two years the NRC has had to deal with the loss of 400 positions. It used all the tools at its disposal to avoid lay-offs. It imposed a hiring freeze, did not fill vacancies, used early retirements, shifts within the National Research Council, and it was able to minimize the number of lay-offs so there were very few lay-offs. As I recall, he said that with the 200 positions that the Council will lose as a result of this government cut imposed last week, it will be difficult to avoid lay-offs because the fat has been cut out.

In the light of what Dr. Kerwin said last week, what does the Hon. Member have to say about the Minister's argument?

The Minister first said in this House: "There will be no lay-offs at the NRC". That was unequivocal. He now has said that there will be no lay-offs at the NRC this year. Then he has gone on to say that he will do everything in his power to place these people in the private sector or in universities. The question to the Hon. Member is: When people have to leave the NRC as a result of this budget cut but find employment at universities or in the private sector, does this constitute a lay-off in his mind, or the mind of the average Canadian?

• (1640)

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, as a loyal and competent senior public servant, Dr. Kerwin was very careful, walking on eggshells, in order not to have to criticize the Government publicly. However, if one had listened to Dr. Kerwin and if one had read The Ottawa Citizen since Dr. Kerwin had his press conference, one would know of actual cases such as that of the physicist with a world famous reputation who, at age 62, is taking early retirement because the Government said to him: "We will sweeten your retirement fund if you retire now so we will have a vacancy for a younger scientist whom we will not have to lay off". There is a similar story with respect to a senior chemist. There are dozens of stories like that. In no way can the NRC not make substantial reductions in its staff if it has to accept the budget which is being forced on it.

I hope the Chairman of the standing committee which is meeting tonight will agree that the committee should in the very near future invite senior officals of the NRC, and probably senior officials of the other granting councils, to come before committee and let them say what is really happening and what will happen. Let them answer with facts the kind of nonsense we have heard again and again from the Minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A short question from the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper).

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, I noticed that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), spent a great part of his presentation dealing with Dr. Polanyi. I think Dr. Polanyi, our great Nobel prizewinner, is proud to be a Canadian. He said that to me personally a few years ago. He appreciated the opportunity of being a professor at the University of Toronto. What is more important, we should note that, over the three years with which we are dealing now, Dr. Polanyi and his associates at the University of Toronto received $1.2 million through NSERC for the support of their research program. I think that tells us something about how well our university granting system is working.

Mr. McCurdy: You can't be serious.

Mr. Tupper: It tells us that it can recognize excellence in the system and identify people who are doing good work. That is the quality of what we are doing.

If the New Democratic Party had in this House this afternoon an opportunity to tell us what Canada should have as a science policy, what would it be?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, of course, no Government in Canada could move all at once from the miserable 1.3 per cent to 1.5 per cent of GNP devoted to research and development over the past number of years to the 2.5 per cent which all people who are knowledgeable say we should have. But I say to the Hon. Member that a New Democratic Party Government would have a target. We would not say we cannot do anything until we reduce the deficit. It would be our target that in three, four or five years we would be approaching 2.5 per cent.

I would also like to tell the Hon. Member that we have always been told in the past by the experts that a country should concentrate on those areas in which it has natural advantages. The natural advantages we have, and where the people of this country work, are forestry, the fisheries, agriculture and mining.

Mr. Oberle: That is what I said.

Mr. Orlikow: And that is where we should be concentrating our efforts. If we are going into space research, that should be on top of the efforts we make in those basic areas, not instead of, and that is what is happening.

Mr. Oberle: He is listening and he is learning.

Mr. Orlikow: We are going into space research instead of going into those areas. When we get the Estimates before the committee we will see that what I am saying is correct and what the Minister is saying is nonsense.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, before I start my speech, I would like to comment on the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Speaker, I think that every Member in this House would like to apologize to Mr. Larkin Kerwin for these offensive remarks on the part of a Conservative Member. As former Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and having met Mr. Kerwin, I can assure you, and I know the Minister agrees with me, that Mr. Kerwin cannot be accused of political partisanship. Not a man of his calibre, a President of Laval University. I asked for the "Who's Who", and what I found there, Mr. Speaker, is impressive. He is a man of integrity who does not deserve to have his name dragged through the mud as the Hon. Member for Lévis just did when he accused him of being partisan or favouring one political faction over another. I just want to say that I regret these comments made by the Hon. Member for Lévis, and I think Hon. Members will feel the same way. I hope the Minister will rise in the House and advise the Hon. Member for Lévis to refrain from such comments and to stick to the facts. The Minister has not done so, but I hope he will before the end of the day.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have this opportunity to speak to the Opposition motion condemning the Government's present policy on research and development, and I am taking part in this debate because something very important is at stake.

First of all, this is a matter of particular concern to me. For many years I have taken an active part in the work of the committee that examines the appropriations for various federal agencies involved in research and development. I am equally concerned about the Government's policy or desire to cut back on research in our universities, because in my riding, Mr. Speaker, in Ottawa—Vanier, we have the University of Ottawa, a university that is internationally known for the quality of its research. I am therefore distressed about the lack of concern for this very important issue. Mr. Speaker, I need hardly recall that the riding of Ottawa—Vanier also includes the headquarters of the National Research Council's Science and Engineering Centre.

I say this because this particular building is in my riding, there are many people who work there, and from the telephone calls I have been receiving in the past two or three days, these people are concerned, and they have good reason to be concerned, because their future, the future of this country and the future of our young people is at stake.

I say this with considerable emphasis because I have also received phone calls from university students and professors which were often about the need for increasing research and development in this country. Last Sunday, Mr. Speaker, I was attending a convocation ceremony at the University of Ottawa. It was held Sunday morning—one of my sons was receiving his diploma—and I was very, very impressed by the calibre of the students who were receiving their Master's degrees and Ph.D.s.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the people of my riding have a direct interest in research and development; I am personally interested because it affects at least 13,000 university students, because it affects the residents of my riding who work in this field, and as I said earlier because it also affects the science and engineering research centre about which my constituents are concerned since it has to do with their career.

Mr. Speaker, the Government's approach to this issue is deplorable and, unfortunately, we will have to live with the consequences for years to come. I am not unduly alarmed, far from it, but all one need do is read the press comments of the last few days to see to what extent public opinion is concerned about this issue. Indeed the Prime Minister himself said so in his many statements, and perhaps I might repeat the words of the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) who quoted straight from the Prime Minister's book, the Prime Minister's political credo. I quote:

[English]

"The National Research Council which acts as Canada's main research laboratory needs a funding increase of at least 20 per cent to bring it up to approximately $400 million".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, he said that in 1983, and we are now in 1986; if the level had been maintained in constant dollars, there would clearly have been a reduction, which would have been unfortunate. In his election platform, the Prime Minister had promised to double the funds available for research and development. What is he doing today? Exactly the opposite. He is slashing the budget of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council of Canada by forcing it to cut over $20 million, which could result in over 200 positions being lost, and he is reducing nearly by half, to only 1.3 per cent, his stated goal of increasing the funds available to 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product. In a way, we are getting used to seeing this Government cutting staffs, budgets, and funds available for research. It makes you wonder, the way this Government behaves: it is truly conservative and not very progressive.

We are now told about $20 million being cut and 200 jobs being lost. But Hon. Members should not forget that since the Progressive Conservative Party came to power, it is $120 million which have been cut and over 600 jobs which have been lost at the National Research Council alone.

The situation of research in universities is not any better. They are also severely affected by budget cuts. For instance, the authorities at Ottawa U. this year have seriously considered the possibility of eliminating research funds completely. Fortunately, they have managed to avoid making such a deplorable decision, but what will happen next year? When we know that 17,000 Canadians are getting funds from the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council of Canada, and that most Canadian universities are dependent on it for their necessary equipment, equipment they cannot do without, this is indeed disturbing. What does the Conservative Government want to do with our universities, if it cuts off their resources? Mr. Speaker, a university is not a secondary school. It is a centre for research. Canada's economic development depends on our ability to train competent researchers, engineers and technicians.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, our economy depends largely on our exports. In fact, among the OECD countries, only the Federal Republic of Germany ranks higher than Canada in its dependence on exports. Expressed in terms of a percentage of the Gross National Product, exports account for 30 per cent of the GNP in Germany and 28 per cent in our country.

In fact, yesterday the federal Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) said, I believe, at a press conference at the Development Centre of the Montreal School of Business Administration: "We must not forget that a loss of only 10 per cent of the jobs connected with our exports to the United States may mean that 250,000 Canadian jobs will disappear."

Mr. Speaker, if we look at how the present Government is behaving, we get the impression it is not conscious of these facts. They talk but they do not act. However, when the Minister compared Canada's rate of investment in research and development with that of our trading partners, the Prime Minister himself stated:

• (1650)

[English]

The governments of these other countries have understood—that the jobs of tomorrow, the pursuit of their high standard of living, the health of their economy, depend on the success or failure of their technologies.

[Translation]

And what does he do now, Mr. Speaker, now that he is in power? He introduces legislation, introduces Government measures that will sabotage the progress of technology and science in this country. In yesterday's Toronto Star, Mr. Speaker, we find an article in which the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) is reported as saying, and I quote the Toronto Star:

[English]

The minister, who has repeatedly said publicly that Canada is nearing a crisis because of its $12.5 billion trade deficit in high-tech products, said Canada is on its way to becoming a "banana republic by the year 2000" if it does not start adapting technology much more quickly in its traditional industries.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the President of Transduction Ltd., Mr. Stan Tyminski, who was offended by the Minister's remarks, said the following, and I quote:

[English]

"I was grossly insulted by that," Tyminski said in an interview.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what I wanted to say was that the solution which this Government has found to this problem has been to reduce the funds allocated to research and development and to weaken an institution which had a reputation as a world leader, with the result that Canada will have to rely even more on foreign input to meet its needs in the future.

However, Mr. Speaker, we should not be suprised by what the Conservative Government is doing about research. The Conservatives acted in a similar manner in the famous case of the Arrow, a scientific research and development program of the aeronautical industry which was abandoned and destroyed by a Conservative Government.

The Conservatives were also saying at the time that this program was too costly and that it was the result of an irresponsible decision. Afterwards, there was a serious outflow of human resources as scientists were forced to move to the United States, where they contributed to the creation of a modern and sophisticated industry. The exodus of these researchers, engineers and highly specialized workers . . . I was told this morning that it takes from 10 to 15 years to train one scientist with world-recognized qualifications and that it is very difficult to replace these people when there is no more work for them and they are forced to move to other countries.

Mr. Speaker, I was reminded this morning of a discussion I had with someone in applied research who works at the National Research Council. This person called me to say how irritated and angry he was at the reluctance of this Government to provide financial support for research. He gave me a list of names which I could repeat to the Hon. Member, but it would not serve much purpose.

I simply wanted to say that we have lost some important people, such as an expert in television and radio antennas and another one in the very important field of microscopy. We have lost researchers with years of training in many areas and it will take us more years to recover their potential.

Mr. Speaker, should this research sector ever disappear it would be because its foundation has been undermined. Again I want to get back to my main point which is to try to make Hon. Members understand that research, training, researchers' development and the capability of those universities and centres in development and scientific endeavours can only make Canada an acknowledged competitor on the international scene. I think this is the point I wanted to emphasize.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government does not seem to appreciate that these young Canadians, these university students must have faith in the future and be able to look forward to challenging careers, to the day when they will be able to work at home, here in Canada, in fields in which they are interested such as technology or contemporary sciences.

As I see it, this Government is about to make the same mistake as was made in the case of the Arrow, the unfortunate decision to let the Canadian aeronautical industry come crashing down. I think the only difference is that this time they want to act on a much wider scale: at stake is the research and development capability of Canada as a whole, not that of only one industry.

Let us examine the figures to illustrate the point and focus on the dangers we are facing as a result of this Government's policy of indifference.

As I just said, Mr. Speaker, research and development programs would be useless if it were not for researchers themselves. In light of the Conservative commitments, the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council had prepared a five-year plan designed to support and boost research throughout Canada. That plan would have enabled Canada to train the researchers who will be needed to meet the challenges of the future.

A study by the Canadian Association of University Teachers shows that when Tory promises are matched with the facts, two kinds of projections can be made. The five-year plan can be seen against this Government's promises either in an optimistic light, expecting the maximum impact of such promises, or in a slightly less optimistic or perhaps in a pessimistic light, assuming a minimum impact. In both cases the result is a net decrease in actual terms of research funding. Again, the result is a net decrease in actual terms of research funding. For instance, for the National Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the 1984-85 five-year plan, based on Conservative promises, forecast investments of $729.6 million for the year 1989-90.

With an optimistic view of the Government's plan, it will be receiving $321.1 million at that point, a net loss of $410 million in constant dollars.

Given the pessimistic assumption, there would be a $266 million budget, a $463 million loss.

Mr. Speaker, those are not my figures. Those figures come from the Association of University Teachers, which sent me a paper which I have read and which I consider to be to the point. It gives us all those figures and shows the serious impact of the reduction in actual dollars of credit funding.

Mr. Speaker, those figures are frightening. But the situation is no better where other agencies are concerned. The Medical Research Council of Canada will experience cuts of $44.9 million or $35.5 million from its intended 1987-88 budget, according to the assumption used, either optimistic or pessimistic. This represents a $194 million budget, plus 28 per cent of revenue loss. However, the situation is worse with respect to the social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. Of a budgeted $121.6 million for 1989-90, it will receive at best $65.6 million, and in the worst assumption $54.5 million. That, Mr. Speaker, is a 66 per cent budget cut. Imagine, 66 per cent!

Finally, when you examine those figures more thoroughly, you realize that what the Minister is proclaiming as huge investments in research and development is effectively a government exercise which will allow them in 1989 to reduce the budgets of the National Research Council and associated councils to less than the 1985-86 budget threshold. Four years from now, Mr. Speaker, we will be poorer than today as far as research is concerned. This is the progress that is being made by this Conservative Government. It's no big deal.

The Conservative Government is regressive and finds it difficult to be progressive. It is easy for them to fall back. Those figures hide a more disheartening fact, that the destruction of the research structure will jeopardize the future of our country. As I have just stated, jobs will be lost, industries as well as small- and medium-sized businesses will never see the light of day. There is another factor which I would like to point out to the House. It is the human factor. Researchers will lose their jobs. All those young people who are now getting post-secondary education and who have worked hard for years will see their career expectations in their own country dissolve into thin air. Such is the situation in Canada at this moment.

It is senseless. It is the opposite of what is being done by our trading partners who are members of the OECD. Meanwhile, in the United States, industry, as we know, is looking for more graduates, more Ph.D.s; there are more jobs available than applicants. In Canada, the opposite is true. The Conservative Government is doing away with existing jobs and is taking steps which will prevent the creation of new ones.

Mr. Speaker, I suppose the situation is rather difficult for post-graduate students in Canadian universities—they are not exactly living in the lap of luxury, and they find it very difficult to make ends meet and find jobs. I know, because I have met several people with PhDs who are looking for jobs. Because they are unable to find them in Canada, they are planning to move abroad, and we are going to lose forever these human resources we have spent a lot of money developing; education today, I reckon, is very expensive. Mr. Speaker, we must see to it that these people have a rewarding career in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude my remarks with the following comments: Students generally, at least in my riding, are not rich. They are not rolling in money. They need and seek help, and should get it. Universities have dated equipment. They need to be listened to attentively and sympathetically by the Government. They need money to update their equipment. Mr. Speaker, they need it to continue this research which is absolutely essential for the development of the healthy, progressive and modern economy which will make Canada a fine place to live in and the envy of almost every country in the world.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is this: The motion moved by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) condemns the Government for the cuts to research programs in the area of fisheries. What is the extent of these cuts to research programs in the area of fisheries? Please, explain.

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer the Minister to The Globe and Mail of October 18, 1986. In it, the Minister is taken to task for disbanding the Marine Ecology Laboratory at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography. I am sure he has read this letter to the editor signed by Sandy McCrea in which she said:

> Mr. Siddon's supposed saving of jobs by shifting staff from basic research sections to his "new priority" areas of policing fisheries only disguises the fact that he is transmuting Fisheries and Oceans from a functional research division of the Government into a decerebrate monster—all twitching limbs and no brain.

According to this news item, the federal Government has indeed succeeded in effectively crippling research and development. The Minister laughs, but he should take this seriously because Fisheries Research is something which has been with Canadians since 1898. I could read the entire article to the Minister, but I am sure he has read it. Surely he will react to it. His own Department of Fisheries and Oceans is not at this time beyond reproach and is certainly to be blamed for cutting off this very important marine ecology laboratory.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that I do not take my task from The Globe and Mail. I am rather surprised that that is where he does his research.

In fact, it is irresponsible to present in the language of this motion a suggestion that the Government and the Ministry for which I am responsible has in any way cut support for oceans science and research in the fishery. In fact, in February we announced the consolidation of all science programs under a new ADM Science.

We have launched at least two new hydrographic and scientific research vessels. We have continued support for the development of underseas submersible technologies by funding robotic development. The new Maurice Lamontagne Institute in Rimouski, a $45 million institute, is to be opened next June. There is a new aquaculture research institute in West Vancouver and technology transfer centres in Nanaimo and Dartmouth. The Atlantic Stock Assessment Centre represents the first time ever that we have had a proper and comprehensive scientific research capability in St. John's, Newfoundland. There has been the establishment of centres of disciplinary expertise in all of the regional laboratories across Canada. We are embarking on an expanded Arctic research program and have held an important oceans forum with a view to establishing a national policy on oceans science and research.

I suggest that the Hon. Member and his colleague, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), are way out in left field with their friends to their left. Once again, they are misleading the House by suggesting that cuts have occurred when indeed they have not.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, my only reply to the Minister is that indeed he does not understand the magnitude of the problem. I was addressing the problem of a lack of funding for university training. I was addressing the problem of proper funding for the purposes of training and developing the human capacity to man those so-called projects that the Minister has announced. Funds are being cut and are being threatened. As for support by this Government for research and development at the university level, some of the projects are being dismantled completely. There is no sense in the Minister giving me a long litany of labs. The Conservatives are good at talking but they are very poor at acting.

• (1710)

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). He doubtless heard me pose the question to the Minister yesterday, I believe, about who exactly it was among the scientific community, on the board of the NRC, among the industrial researchers, among universities, among the student organizations, what organization or what group of people with any familiarity with the problem of science and technology in Canada recommended that NRC or any other existing agency be savaged in order to fund the space program. Perhaps he knows, as the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) did not. From where did that sort of recommendation come? Did it come from NRC, which indicated clearly that it would not have approved the space program if it had realized that that money was to be taken from NRC or any other agency, particularly when the board advised the Minister that in all probability the space program would not require $800 million by 1990 but closer to double that amount if the pattern of such expenditures were mirrored in that project?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would you permit me to pass to the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) a quote I have here of the Hon. Member when he spoke on March 27, 1985 in the standing committee in support of the space program?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister could always send a note. He does not have a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: He can bootleg his remarks in and send them over by plane, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to add to what the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) just said by quoting from the 1985-86 report of the President of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council of Canada, which is the granting council as we all know. It states clearly on page 37:

> The federal government's response to the second Five-Year Plan is naturally a disappointment to the Council.

Mr. Gauthier: That is plain English.

Mr. Siddon: They cannot have everything.

Mr. Gauthier: The quote continues:

> However, Council is now having to stop an upward momentum that was premised on increasing real budgets and on an increasing percentage of the nation's gross national product.

That is what I meant when I told the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) that his Government was insensitive to training and development. Here we have the granting council, which is there to assist in new equipment needs of universities, trying to promote training and development in the scientific field, and on the same page the same council says:

> The decision is far from the funding levels called for in the second Five-Year Plan. The increased base level of support, plus the possible 6 per cent increment from the Government, will, by 1990, only hold NSERC's budget at a spending power equal to that of 1984-85, assuming a 4 per cent inflation rate.

That is the status quo. That is what Conservatives are all about. They remain in one spot. They never move. It is much too strong for them to understand. As I said in my speech, Mr. Speaker, we need action. We need it now. We need a 2.5 per cent increase in our research and development to reach that level in a few years.

Mr. Siddon: You never gave NSERC any security.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries since he brought up the question of fisheries research.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question should be addressed to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Berger: In reply to a comment, Mr. Speaker, made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr.

Gauthier), the Minister listed a series of initiatives designed to prove that the Government has done great things for fisheries. All the new initiatives had already been announced by the Liberal Government. I also understand that a Professor Mills of Dalhousie University, according to The Globe and Mail of September 12, accused the Government of decimating research in the fisheries area. What is the Minister so proud of? Is he proud that he has not cut these labs? Is he proud of Liberal initiatives that he is pursuing? How long does the Hon. Member think it will take the Minister to destroy anything good that we created? Will it take the Conservatives another year to get to it or will they get to it inside of the next year?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member can answer for the Minister.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I cannot speak for the Minister and I would not dare, but I can tell the House that I very often sat with the the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), who was a member of the committee. The point I was trying to make with the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) is that those laboratories need not only modern equipment, but also scientists, men and women capable of staying abreast of new developments in their scientific field.

What concerns me is, and I mentioned it in my speech, if we get at the base, by which I mean all the scientists, we will discourage them, take them out of the scientific field, and we are going to prevent Canada from playing its full role in scientific research. No one can expect the laboratories we Liberals built everywhere in the country, in Montréal, in Winnipeg and several in Ottawa, to be productive without experts, without male and female scientists whose future would be protected by a Government fully aware that pure and applied research requires financial assistance from the Governement.

Mr. Speaker, the minister informed us today that the private sector had already committed its support to his university research incentive program. This is news to me. We have seen no figures, no documents to show that the private sector had made any sort of contribution so far. He even said that there was a three-year committment. But I am expecting the minister to table these documents in this House—

Mr. Berger: It is less than what he had asked for.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, precisely—and to prove to us that this program is in fact operational. If it is, Mr. Speaker, so much the better, but I have serious doubts.

Mr. Berger: It is still less.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I now recognize the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) for debate.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today in my capacity of Deputy Chairman of the Committee on Science and Technology, and I must say I totally disagree with the comments of the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). Nor do I agree with his motion condemning the Government for its policy on science and technology. I do not agree, because the Hon. Member has confused the issue, both for the industry, the researchers and the universities.

• (1720)

Personally, I can inform the Hon. Member that I have some lingering doubts and a great many questions about the goodwill of Dr. Kerwin, since last week, when he gave his press conference, he did not bother to invite the Minister or the Government Members sitting on the Standing Committee on Science and Technology. On the other hand, the Hon. Member for Laurier and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) were both present.

Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising in the House today is to inform the House of the performance and positive achievements of this Government since it was elected. When my colleagues and I were elected two years ago, we announced our support for a broad movement towards national reconciliation. We wanted to create a new climate for this country, a climate of consultation, co-operation and solidarity, while focussing on common goals, a climate that would put an end to confrontation and the lack of openness that for too long had cast a shadow over federal-provincial relations. Our goal was to create a true partnership between the provinces and the territories and the federal Government, a partnership whose goal would be the economic and regional development of our country, the creation of new jobs and thus the well-being of all Canadians.

This Government has achieved some significant results and the progress made in science and technology is a concrete example. Our accomplishments cannot be denied. We realize that science and technology will make it possible for us to compete on an equal footing on international markets, which, together with economic growth, will bring about job security and help maintain our standard of living. We want to use the various applications of science and technology to meet the specific needs of the regions, not just by taking advantage of existing skills and expertise but also by helping to expand the industrial bases of specific regions.

Our provincial and territorial counterparts are committed to working together with the federal Government to ensure that Canada will have a strong economic future. Since it came to power, our Government has negotiated and concluded subsidiary agreements on regional economic development with three provinces: Quebec, British Columbia and, more recently, New Brunswick. These subsidiary agreements enable the provinces and the federal Government to finance jointly certain initiatives by enhancing the development of science and technology in the provinces, and they illustrate our desire to make the applications of science and technology available to industry and to the public.

The Canada-Quebec subsidiary agreement signed on June 10, 1985 provides a $100-million fund over five years and features three main components. The first has to do with research centres and includes the construction of Sainte-Foy's $34 million national optics institute, in my Quebec riding, a project of which I am very proud indeed. Considered as a non-profit corporation, the institute will be in a position to work closely with the private sector, and it will be administered by a board of directors selected from various sectors of activities and various regions of Canada. Construction will begin within a few weeks and the opening is scheduled for late 1987.

The agreement also provides for the construction of an electrochemical laboratory designed for state-of-the-art research and development in electrochemistry and electrotechnology in Shawinigan, in co-operation with Quebec Hydro, as well as funding for research projects in co-operation with the private sector. The total cost of this project is $26 million.

The second component is a technological development support program to finance feasibility studies, purchase scientific equipment, and stimulate private sector research and development initiatives.

Private business in Quebec has already reacted very enthusiastically to this $38 million program.

As a matter of fact, so far 85-odd projects have been submitted in such sectors as biotechnology, data processing, microelectronics and manufacturing processes.

Until now, about 15 projects estimated at $4 million have been funded.

The last component has to do with the coordination and integration of federal and provincial government science and technology policies and programs.

The July 8, 1985 Canada-British Columbia subsidiary agreement provides a $20 million funding over five years and meets British Columbia's priority objectives.

Under the terms of this agreement, funds are available for three projects.

The first one is aimed at strenghtening capabilities in computer science, applied mathematics, micro-electronics and robotics. In this context, we have announced recently the joint financing of the British Columbia Advanced Systems Institute, which is a first class research and education center in these areas.

The second initiative aims at promoting advances and commercial applications in the field of biotechnology. Under this program, we are financing the creation of a biotreatment centre to complement the British Columbia Biomedical Research Centre.

The purpose of the third initiative is to establish a liaison network between the industry and the universities. Under the terms of the agreement, the creation of three liaison offices has been financed in each of the three British Columbia universities and the technological transfer results have been very encouraging to date.

As for the Canada-New Brunswick subsidiary agreement on industrial innovations and technological development signed on May 28, 1986, and involving an outlay of $28.5 million over five years, it represents a crucial stage in the industrial development of that province. This agreement is designed to support and strenghten the high technology capacity of the province, to stimulate innovation and to propose support for private businesses, individuals and manufacturer's associations with activities in technological fields or problems which could be solved by technological means.

This agreement will be implemented at a Convention on Technology in New Brunswick which will be held in Saint John on October 29 and 30, 1986.

In addition, the Federal Government has made other non-financial bilateral agreements with eight provinces, namely Quebec, New Brunswick, British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

These memoranda of agreement promote official co-operation between the Federal Government and the provinces to harmonize policies and programs and define strategies to take advantage of the opportunities available.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) is convinced that bilateral agreements in science and technology are a major tool for co-operation with the provinces to stimulate regional economic development through research and development.

He therefore intends to continue his discussions with his counterparts, which will probably lead to additional subsidiary agreements in science and technology with other provinces.

I also feel compelled to mention some of our other major initiatives which illustrate the priority given to science and technology by this Government.

For the first time since 1978, the Federal and Provincial Ministers responsible for Science and Technology met in Calgary in February, 1985, to discuss matters of mutual interest.

All the Ministers stressed the important part to be played by science and technology in our economic renewal, and pledged to develop an over-all national policy on science and technology based on the economic capabilities and priorities of our provinces and territories.

Three basic priorities were identified to provide investment incentives, encourage technology transfers and applications, and support fundamental research that is important in the longer term in order to build up the scientific expertise and technical control of our country.

In September 1985, at Meech Lake, those same Ministers got further involved in preparing a national conference on science and technology in order to make sure that everyone involved, that is, Governments, universities, unions, the industry and related organizations be given an opportunity to discuss the urgent problems to be addressed by Canada.

• (1730)

The first national Conference on science and technology which was held in Winnipeg last June turned out to be a consultation exercise that brought us closer to our objective, that is to achieve a national consensus on science and technology policies. The conference emphasized the need for supervision and leadership from all government levels in science and technology. That meeting brought to the fore the need to develop a national policy that would allow Canada to remain competitive from an economic viewpoint and our industries to have a capability to break new ground in areas where science and technology are essential to Canada's economic strength.

The throne speech also brought to light the federal government's interest in playing a leading and counselling role in science and technology.

Mr. Speaker, the federal government, with full co-operation of the provinces, will aim at enhancing the level of excellence and expertise in technical training, development and innovations.

On the basis of discussions held at the national Conference and national policy developments between the provinces and the federal government, the latter intends to organize a national conference on technological innovations to help setting new goals for Canadian technology in the context of a federal strategy and a rational policy.

Several of our trading partners have undertaken concerted and coordinated efforts with a view to revitalizing existing industries and creating new high tech companies. We are actively pursuing this goal through national strategies and programs involving the technological, scientific and industrial infrastructures of those countries.

Canada cannot afford to take a back seat and be satisfied with an 11th, 12th, or 13th position. Canada needs to take the lead. Scientific and technological infrastructures must be better coordinated, more efficient, more up to date, and better adapted to the social consequences of technology. Therefore, we must enhance Canada's capabilities, Mr. Speaker, while focusing on regional disparities to make sure that all regions will benefit from this new challenge.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on a point that was raised by the Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis), who once again made disparaging remarks concerning the President of the National Research Council. She wondered why or how I could have attended last week's press conference. as the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) also did, while she did not attend because she did not know about it, having received no invitation from the President of the National Research Council.

I would like to tell her that to the best on my knowledge, I had no invitation either. I had no invitation either to that press conference given by the President of the National Research Council. But I heard about the press conference, and I very well recall it was the day before, through a reporter with whom I was discussing well-known events. For four or five days there had been references to a meeting on the coming Tuesday of the Executive Committee of the National Research Council. On that Tuesday, the day before the press conference, there were reports in almost every paper about that meeting of the NRC Executive Committee. There had been press reports the week before. So it was common knowledge that important decisions were to be taken at that meeting, and eventually there would be some public announcement.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, that press conference was announced on our closed-circuit TV system, that is available to every Member of this House. That the Hon. Member today has the gall to blame the President of the National Research Council, to imply that other Members were invited, and to ask why she was not, is beyond me. She should be embarrassed that she was not aware of the meeting and did not attend as she should have. I would ask her to withdraw her disparaging remarks concerning the President of the National Research Council of Canada.

I have another question for her before I sit down. She may be aware of a telegram that was sent by the Canadian Chemical Society to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Canadian Chemical Society was telling this to the Prime Minister of Canada, and I quote:

"We believe that if you"—the Prime Minister of Canada—"proceed with the dismantling of scientific foundations that were laid over decades, there will never again be Nobel Prizes in Canada."

And this Canadian Chemical Society asked the Prime Minister to save the scientific agency that helped train our Nobel Prize winner, Mr. John Polanyi. My question is very simple: Does the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert intend to fight in order to save the National Research Council of Canada, as requested by the Canadian Chemical Society, or will she remain silent, like the majority of Members over there, the majority of Government Members with the exception of one single Conservative Member who opposed the cuts within the National Research Council?

Mrs. Duplessis: In view of the critics formulated by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), Mr. Speaker, I want to tell him first of all that we do not administer this country on the basis of the stupidities one can read in the papers. In Quebec City, whenever there is a press conference, we always get a proper invitation, something we did not receive. We are not going to start watching the TV networks to know when press conferences are scheduled. If and when people want to have us, they are certainly able to write and send us invitations.

There is something I should like to tell Canadians concerning the famous five-year plan this Government granted to the National Research Council, something the previous Liberal Government had failed to do, because it preferred to pay out small ad hoc amounts now and then, not always regularly. For a long time the National Research Council had been seeking a five-year plan. We have granted them what they had been seeking. I am certainly pleased to refer to a statement made by the Council's Executive Board in 1985, and I quote: " Over the past 70 years, the NRC has consistently sought to meet the needs of its era. Over the years, it has been called upon to play various roles which it has assumed brilliantly. Today, the problems facing us are obvious. The Canadian economy is going through a difficult period. Practically all Canadian industries must rise to the challenge of technological change if they are to compete internationally. These requirements occur at a time when the federal deficit is increasing dramatically."

This infamous deficit which we have inherited from our predecessors and compels us to make cuts in all Government Departments and Agencies. Well, we have had enough of that. Since you are attacking us, Sir, I have not finished yet; you had better not rush standing up, because I still have much to say. When the President of the National Research Council mentions that cuts have been made, it is not because the funds—now that the facilities have been built, the money has been spent, there is no reduction. It is just the end of the construction stage.

The Canadian people must understand that. We have made no cut. There will be a reallocation of positions. Mr. Speaker, I think that should answer my friend, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

Mr. La Salle: Bravo, Suzanne!

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, clearly the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert can quote a statement from the National Research Council, but I ask her once more, as elected representative of Quebec City, to apologize to the former Dean of Laval University, Mr. Larkin Kerwin, a distinguished scholar born in Quebec City who is now head of the National Research Council of Canada. When will she apologize for the offending comments she made today in this House?

Mrs. Duplessis: I will apologize when Mr. Kerwin has himself apologized for not inviting me. Moreover, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) should all the more apologize for belonging to a party which has misled the people of Quebec. As for me, Sir, I have always risen in public forums to defend the interests of Quebec, and when the time comes I will rise again, you may be sure of that.

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I attach quite heavy significance to the debate this afternoon. While it is inevitable in this political Chamber that the debate be political, I thought we might have heard debate of a slightly higher level, both in terms of reasonableness and logic and of the temper of that debate. Instead, we heard an outburst of sound and fury moments ago which signified nothing. We heard the claim that for many people reallocation has not meant the loss of jobs. We heard the curious implication, by virtue of an assertion, that the recent Nobel prize winner, by virtue of $1.2 million over three years, has been extraordinarily heavily subsidized in his research by an effective government program in support of research.

The Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper) knows, as do I, that if a Nobel prize winner in the United States got as little as $50 million for three years of research he or she would probably be blushing. The most junior scientist in the United States would receive $1.2 million for a three-year grant.

Mr. McDermid: That's nonsense.

Mr. Siddon: That's an exaggeration.

Mr. McCurdy: Let us not kid ourselves. The absurdity of this debate is manifested by members of the Party in power.

Mr. Siddon: What about your own distortion?

Mr. McCurdy: Every Member knows that I am not saying that the United States is a superior country. I am saying that Canada has the necessary creativity and resources and ought to have the guts, foresight and intelligence to use that creativity in a way which will benefit our citizens, in terms of both economic pay-off and the ability to pay for our programs of social justice and the security of equality for the people of our country.

Mr. Siddon: That is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. McCurdy: As the Hon. Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) knows, the problem in this country is that we have until now been a resource-based nation. We have been fairly successful in that. By virtue of our exports we have been able to sustain a level of social justice which is unchallenged by most countries in the world. I think members of most political Parties would support that. The fact is that those resources are falling in price and are subject to increased competition from around the world and to substitution. They are, therefore, endangered.

We are faced with competition in a knowledge-based world. In such a world Canada will not be able to compete unless it does something about its ability to produce as a result of and on the basis of what we know. If our resources are to profit us they will do so only on the basis of an absolute national commitment to use research, science and technology to convert our resources to products available to nations around the world. We need a science and technology policy not directed to the enhancement of defence-linked expenditures, but rather to expenditures which will produce products demanded by a peaceful world.

We quite evidently have a need to take some bold initiatives to ensure the economic survival of this country. We need a strategy of linking research and science technology to industrial development plans. Instead of placing the kind of emphasis on that thrust which I think rational people would demand of an independent country run by a Government with a notion of how to secure that independence, we have a thrust for a free trade arrangement which could threaten the development of research and science technology in this country.

Mr. McDermid: What a crock.

Mr. McCurdy: As the Science Council pointed out, we are talking about competing, on a free trade basis, with a nation which spends huge amounts of money. The federal Government of that country spends 77 per cent of its research funds on defence. Comparable government expenditures in Canada run around 9 per cent. To open ourselves up without considerable preparation is going to put a great deal of our scientific and research community at risk. Indeed, it could be fairly argued that we should not even be talking about it until we have addressed the need.

There has been a great deal of comparison this afternoon between what the Liberals have done and what the Conservatives have done on science and research. We have heard vague allegations that those of us committed to social justice are somehow opposed to reasonable choices and decisions with respect to science. Let us be perfectly clear that we are in a sorry state. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recognized this in the book he wrote before becoming Prime Minister. To paraphrase, he said that we are in danger of becoming a Junior B team in the league of science. Of course, that is true. One point three per cent of the GNP is devoted to research, compared to 2.5 per cent in all the other leading industrial nations of the world. Among OECD countries we rank about tenth.

• (1750)

The Minister of State for Science and Technology has said, in justifying some of the changes with respect to government and scientific establishments, that our Government spends disproportionately on science as compared to industry. The fact is that we rank tenth among OECD countries in the amount of government expenditures on science. In the industrial sector we rank thirteenth. If we look at any of the other criteria for scientific and technological performance, we are in trouble. A $20 billion deficit in technological exports has already been cited. There was reason for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to say that we had better get on the starting line for the technological revolution.

We have heard members of the Liberal Party criticize this present Government. The Liberals have produced a sorry record regarding their policies with respect to science and technology. That is undoubtedly clear. It has already been pointed out that they failed to commit themselves to proper five-year funding plans for the granting agencies. Indeed, they interrupted the five-year plan that the Clark Government introduced in 1979. We all know about the scientific tax credit boondoggle. It is difficult to argue that any of the politicians in power in the last hundred years have had the commitment to research, science and technology that is appropriate to our future economic development. There is no doubt that the Liberals were bad.

When the Prime Minister said that we must become "major league" in the scientific enterprise, we had much to hope for. Some recent initiatives have been helpful. Some focus has been brought to bear on the issue of research, science and technology.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: I would submit that there has been more public discussion and debate about the issue in recent weeks than there has been in my memory. There have been some initiatives that in context have to be praised. The creation of a National Advisory Board with the Prime Minister as chairman has the potential to be a significant initiative.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: The promise of a national science and technology strategy is helpful in that it has been repeated, although it is slow in coming. But promises made in other forums, vague promises of more co-operative talking together, the other two parts of that four part program, are not helpful at all. At least there has been a salutary focus. The exaggerated rhetoric and the dangerous misleading of the public about what is being done is not helpful.

We have been told that there will be $800 million in new money for space-based research. That is not new money. There has been no net addition. We are having a debate now about reallocation from NRC in order to fund that. Why not at least be truthful? Why not present the facts to permit a reasonable informed analysis of what the Government is doing?

I would like to read the so-called contradiction identified by the Minister of State for Science and Technology in the question I asked him, which was: Who among the scientific community suggested that the NRC be savaged to support a space program. With respect to the space program, Howard McCurdy said on March 27, 1985 that I do support and would support scientifically and politically the involvement of Canada in a space station used for peaceful purposes. But not by savaging the NRC. Remember Pinocchio, Mr. Speaker. Early in the spring, we were all shocked, including the Minister, about the announcement that RRAP was to be cut by some $60 million. It has not been cut. There has been some scurrying around and instead we are going to have some reallocation within NRC. This reallocation is going to put people out of jobs. There is a certain accuracy but a certain lack of precision in the message being communicated about what this Government is doing. We are told that $1 billion is going into university research.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: The implication is that this is new money. If you look at the Minister's own figures, at the very best, $730 million of additional money will go into university research, if the industrial community contributes to the three granting councils 500 per cent more than it ever has in the last few years. Still there is a considerable gap of more than $250 million in what the Minister says he is going to do and what is actually being done. We have to remind ourselves of Pinocchio. In measuring the value of that exaggerated increase, we must remember that $738 million is exactly half of what NSERC alone indicated was required to meet the need—never mind MRC, never mind SSHRC. We were misled. What that will mean is that there will be under the most optimistic predictions a 2.9 per cent real increase in the amount of money going to the granting agencies.

What we need is honesty. We do need a rational science, research and technology policy. We do not expect the changes to occur overnight. We do not expect them to occur by virtue of the irrational attack on programs already existing to feed pie-in-the-sky notions of what is politically convenient.

There are some suggestions that could be made. The very essence of all of this is that one of the problems that this nation has must be addressed, that is, its orientation towards a resource based versus a knowledge-based society. That suggests that there should be some serious initiatives taken by the Government in the reform of university and secondary education generally in terms of our arrangements for funding the universities. In this commitment to science and technology, $2 billion has been cut from the expected increases in funding at the university level over the next five years. That is another action this Government has taken that could not possibly be consistent with a rational science and technology policy. There need to be some reforms in post-secondary, secondary, and primary eduction commensurate with our new thrust in science and technology. That should include more technical training. We have to recognize the basic importance of science, research and technology by placing the Minister of State for Science and Technology in the Priorities and Planning Committee of the Cabinet where he belongs. If you refer to the CAUTNT bulletin you will find some other useful suggestions that would serve to advise this Government on a policy it is struggling to achieve and which is necessary for this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 82(12) the proceedings on the motion have expired.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Friday, October 10, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order. Before the Minister starts his speech, may I point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) had the floor the last time the House discussed the matter of the Throne Speech. I think there are six minutes left in his speech and we would like to have him conclude his remarks.

Mr. Speaker: At that time the debate was on the amendment; we are now on the main motion. Under those circumstances it is appropriate for the House to hear the Minister.

• (1110)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in the debate on the Speech from the Throne. My colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) and I will be very shortly beginning a new round of pre-budget consultations.

I cannot overstate the importance that I accord to these meetings. The presentations by representatives of the business, labour, consumer, social and voluntary communities are invaluable to us. They make an indispensable contribution to the decision-making process by achieving better communication between the Government and Canadians, better understanding of the problems facing the country, and better solutions to these problems.

The forthcoming round of consultations will focus on the key elements of the Government's economic strategy. That strategy has had one overriding objective—the renewal and sustained growth of the economy and the creation of jobs for Canadians.

[Translation]

We are succeeding. The economic indicators attest to that. But most important, we have made significant progress in laying the foundation for a more productive, dynamic economy capable of sustaining growth.

[English]

Further progress depends on our continuing to build on the strong foundation that we put in place. Our consultation agenda reflects this vitally important continuity and consistency. I want to take this opportunity to set out the agenda for consultation, then I want to deal with tax reform, which is one of the main issues.

The first agenda item is fiscal responsibility. Sound, responsible management of the nation's finances continues to be crucial. If Canadians are to have the full benefit of a more productive and prosperous economy, we must get on with this job. As Members know, we are committed to a fiscal plan that reduces the deficit annually to the end of the decade. I will be seeking the views of Canadians on measures that should be considered to achieve this objective.

[Translation]

The second item on our consultations agenda is improving the climate for economic growth and job creation.

[English]

Our objective is to encourage and facilitate a continuing improvement in the competitive position of our economy. From the outset our renewal program has recognized the critical importance of a dynamic private sector. Past policies have often obstructed private sector initiative and stifled opportunities for economic development. We have been acting to identify and remove obstacles to private initiative, such as overbearing government regulation, inadequate and shortsighted provisions for training and skill development, and disincentives for investment. At the same time, we have sought opportunities to encourage entrepreneurial activity and to encourage the full participation of young people and women in Canadian economic life. We will continue these important thrusts.

In my last Budget I initiated a review of our major social transfer programs and related tax provisions. I set out four principles to guide that review. As we proceed with that review I will be seeking to develop measures that are consistent with the directions of comprehensive tax reform. In these and other areas, we are relying on the assistance of Canadians to help identify problems and offer solutions.

We will also welcome suggestions on where we might reallocate resources to higher priority areas in order to continue to address these challenges in a fiscally responsible way.

The third item on the consultations agenda is promoting trade and expanding foreign markets.

[Translation]

Ensuring Canada's stature as a superior world trader is a compelling national imperative. Our economic well-being derives largely from our ability to compete. We must also enhance our access to traditional markets and secure new ones. I am looking forward to the views of business and labour on matters that bear on our ability to compete.

[English]

The fourth item for consultation, one that I want to discuss in some detail, is tax reform. Members will recall that on July 18 of this year I announced the Government's intention to proceed with a review of options for comprehensive tax reform.

Tax reform itself is not a new initiative. In the 1984 agenda paper, the Government identified the tax system as an obstacle to growth. In a gradual and measured way over the past two years we have introduced a number of important improvements to the system.

In the area of corporate tax, we have taken steps to broaden the tax base, reduce tax rates, remove investment distorting incentives and simplify the system.

In the area of personal income tax, we have broadened the tax base by eliminating a number of tax avoidance techniques and introduced a minimum tax to ensure that high income people cannot avoid paying any tax.

[Translation]

And this year I began a detailed examination of a possible replacement for the outdated, unfair and inefficient federal sales tax.

[English]

We have made progress, but in considering the further progress we wish to make, and in light of the recent major changes in the United States, we decided that a broader approach to tax reform in Canada is required. Such an approach would consider the system as a whole. It would seek a better balance between personal, corporate and sales taxes, and would make complementary changes in a co-ordinated way. My July 18 announcement signalled that new approach.

Comprehensive tax reform offers Canada an important opportunity to make changes to meet today's realities and to gear up to meet the challenges of the decades to come. We have the opportunity to make the tax system simpler and fairer for all Canadians, to create a tax environment that more effectively encourages productive economic activity and support social justice, and to shape a tax system that meets the national need for a stable source of revenue to finance essential public services. These are the main objectives of tax reform.

The reform effort is being carried out within a number of specific guidelines. The first guideline is fairness. No characteristic of the tax system is more important in the minds of Canadians than fairness.

The Government has already made a start to enhancing the equity of the tax system. We have introduced a minimum personal income tax. We have curtailed tax shelter techniques and eliminated the use of limited partnerships to avoid tax. We halted the practice of income splitting through interest free loans between family members as a means of reducing tax. These are all steps in the right direction, but much more remains to be done.

Clearly, the tax system must ensure the fair sharing of the tax burden among taxpayers. People in similar circumstances should be treated by the tax system in the same way. High-income individuals and profitable corporations should all pay their fair share.

It is our intention to reduce sharply the special tax preferences for individuals and corporations. By doing so we will be able to reduce significantly the rates of personal income tax paid by Canadians, and that will mean higher take-home pay.

We will look at ways of further improving support for low-income Canadians through the tax system. We have already introduced a refundable sales tax credit and prepayment of the child tax credit. Tax reform offers the opportunity to build on these progressive measures.

Because the current federal sales tax treats similar products very differently, and because different rates of tax apply to various goods and services, an important part of the over-all tax burden is unevenly distributed through the economy. Similar products should bear the same rate of tax and the sales tax burden should be spread more equally across goods and services.

The second guideline is simplification. It is not difficult to believe that the word Canadians are most likely to associate with the tax system is "complex". The more complex the tax system is, the more likely it is to lose the respect and confidence of most Canadians and thereby to have its effectiveness diminished. A simpler tax system can be achieved on a number of fronts—simpler tax forms, improved tax policies, a broadened tax base and a simpler rate structure. These would result in less need for business and individuals to take tax considerations into account in business and financial decisions.

[Translation]

Tax reform will aim to make the system simpler for small businesses. And it will aim to make compliance easier for individual Canadians. By doing so we will strengthen the self-assessment principle that is the basis of our tax system.

Third, balance. One of the biggest problems in the present tax system is that the amount of personal income tax Canadians are paying is too high.

This excessive reliance on the personal income tax must be halted. The government believes that personal income taxes should be reduced to leave more money in the pockets of Canadians to spend or save as they see fit. This means we will be seeking higher revenues from the corporate and sales tax systems. This will be done in a balanced, fair way.

• (1120)

The fourth guideline is revenue stability. We must ensure that tax reform increases the certainty of achieving the revenue goals the Government sets. A stable and predictable source of revenue is essential to the Government's budgeting process. However, certain features of the corporate and sales tax systems contribute to revenue instability. Such instability makes it difficult to manage the nation's finances responsibly.

Revenue stability can be increased by limiting tax expenditures, reforming the federal sales tax and reducing the need for ad hoc changes in tax rules. Hon. Members are well aware of this Government's commitment to fiscal responsibility. It is the Government's intention to ensure, through a reform of the tax system, a sounder, more predictable revenue base. It is not our intention to take greater revenues. However, while tax reform is proceeding, I cannot preclude other tax action if such action is necessary to meet the goals of fiscal management and economic and social policy.

The fifth guideline is international competitiveness. Earlier I spoke of the necessity of keeping Canada competitive in world trade. The tax system should reinforce the ability of Canadians to compete. Given the major changes in the United States, particularly reduced corporate and personal tax rates, we in Canada must ensure that our tax system keeps in step where our competitive position is at stake. The corporate tax system must continue to be conducive to investment. This will maintain and enhance our job creating ability. Because the knowledge, skills and drive of people are the key to a successful modern economy, we must ensure that the tax system is not a deterrent to retaining and attracting key people.

Our sales tax system is also in need of reform to remove the serious competitive biases that currently put our exports at a disadvantage and favour imports.

[Translation]

Sixth, economic growth. Relatively high marginal rates, a narrow base and numerous selective write-offs, deductions and credits have reduced the role of business judgment in shaping investment decisions and made tax considerations far too influential. Such a system does not make for the most efficient allocation of capital.

[English]

In pursuing tax reform, we shall intensify our examination of the multitude of tax preferences which have built up over the years. Reducing the number of selected tax preferences, broadening the tax base and lowering tax rates will give market opportunities a greater role in investment decisions. This will result in better prospects for job-producing economic growth and will also mean that lower tax rates will result in a greater incentive for Canadians to work and invest.

A reformed tax system must also recognize distinctively Canadian priorities and values. Tax reform should assist in meeting national, social and economic needs. The tax system must be sensitive to our commitment to build greater regional equality. To help finance our large capital requirements, it must encourage domestic savings. It must continue to support affordable post-secondary education and medical insurance. It must reflect our commitment to social justice by providing effective ways to assist Canadians most in need.

The eighth guideline is measured transition. The implementation of tax reform should not leave Canadians in doubt about tax rules. The Government is committed to a measured transition so that businesses and investors will not need to suspend their long-term planning while changes in the tax system are being discussed. A measured transition will also allow Canadians time to understand the new system and to adjust to it.

A final important guideline is consultation. I reaffirmed at the outset my personal commitment to consultation. Consultation will be especially important for such a far-reaching initiative as comprehensive tax reform. I will be keenly interested in receiving the views of all Canadians in the course of the coming pre-budget consultations. I will also ask for the involvement of Hon. Members in this process and I will be referring the guidelines and directions set out in the document I am tabling today for review.

[Translation]

I will also consult extensively with my provincial colleagues in an effort to ensure harmonized tax systems across the country.

[English]

Fiscal responsibility and tax reform are clearly linked. The options for tax reform would be severely limited if we did not continue our commitment to reduce budget deficits and greater spending control. Through continued expenditure restraint we are creating considerably more flexibility for tax reform.

[Translation]

Today marks the beginning of my new round of pre-budget consultations. The issues I shall be discussing with Canadians are crucial to our nation's continuing ability to provide jobs and prosperity.

[English]

As the next step in the tax reform process, I intend to issue specific directions for change at the time of my next Budget. In my November 1984 Economic Statement I said we must address the causes of our economic problems and not just the symptoms. It is evident from our record of performance and our plans for building on that performance that we are indeed doing just that.

[Translation]

Comprehensive tax reform clearly presents an enormous opportunity and an equally major challenge. By reducing the number of tax breaks that benefit only a few, by ensuring that profitable corporations pay their fair share, and by relying more on corporate and sales tax revenues, we will be able to cut personal income tax rates. That means increased take-home pay for Canadians. And the overall result will be a simpler, fairer and more efficient tax system.

• (1130)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Minister but his time has expired. If there were unanimous consent he would be allowed to finish his remarks.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we will give unanimous consent so that the Minister will have the time required to complete his speech, provided that Members who want to offer comments and ask questions will have a similar consideration extended to them and be allowed to go on longer than the time that is customarily given for such comments and questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank Hon. Members for their consideration.

Comprehensive tax reform clearly represents an enormous opportunity, but at the same time an equally major challenge. By reducing the number of tax breaks that benefit only a few, by ensuring that profitable corporations pay their fair share and by relying more on corporate and sales tax revenues, we will be able to cut personal income tax rates. That means increased take-home pay for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The over-all result will be a simpler, more fair and more efficient tax system. That is our goal, a goal worthy of this nation and worthy of our dedicated efforts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In closing, I would like to table the documents to which I referred during the course of my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must have the unanimous consent of the House to allow the Minister to table these documents. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to offer some comments and raise some questions with respect to the Minister's remarks.

The Minister spoke of fairness as one of the Government's main objectives in tax reform. This is certainly a worthy goal. However, the actions of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) over the past two years strongly suggest that the Government's tax reform will be a sham reform and not a real one. After all, it was his Government which created the new capital gains tax exemption giving higher tax breaks to a handful of wealthy Canadians. On behalf of ordinary Canadians I ask: Is that fair? I think the answer is clear—it is not fair.

In its last two Budgets the Government increased taxes for ordinary Canadians to the point that this year a family with two children and one income-earner earning $30,000 a year will pay $630 more in taxes. I ask again: Is that fair? I think the answer is clear—it is not fair. The Government talks about fairness but its actions have proven that it is moving and will likely continue to move in the opposite direction. One question springs to mind: Will the Government do as the United States has decided to do in its tax reform and fully tax capital gains?

The Minister says in his statement that he wants to ensure that "profitable corporations pay their fair share". But how does the Minister and the Government intend to define "profits"? The Government could define them in such a way that many corporations would still escape from paying their fair share of taxes. So I ask the Government: Will it create a minimum tax for corporations?

The Government talks about relying more on sales tax revenues, broadening the sales tax base and cutting personal tax rates so that there will be increased take-home pay for Canadians. Who ultimately pays sales taxes? It is the individual Canadian without regard to level of income and ability to pay. It is clear and well understood that sales taxes are regressive. They are a heavier burden on lower income people. The Government sounds as if it were intending to raise sales tax rates or impose new sales taxes, perhaps called by another name, on goods and transactions, such as the sales of services which are now exempt from sales taxes. If that is what the Government intends to do—and it is giving a very strong signal that it is when it talks about broadening the base for sales taxes—then it is creating a cruel illusion for ordinary Canadians by seeming to put more money into their pockets through the lowering of personal tax rates and then taking money out of those same pockets by making ordinary Canadians pay higher sales taxes. If this happens, and the signal is there in the Minister's speech, then the new Tory tax reform will be nothing but a sham. In fact, if I may say so, it will be nothing but a fraud perpetrated on ordinary Canadians.

The Minister talked about stability as one of his goals. He talked about stability by saying that "raising more total tax revenue is not an objective of tax reform but that it should increase the certainty of achieving the revenue goals that the Government has set for itself". I ask the Government: Will it be making a commitment right now to rule out any efforts to raise more money through its so-called tax reform? If it does raise more money through this tax reform, will it commit itself to returning the revenues to Canadians through lower taxes? If the Government cannot guarantee that the total net effect of all the tax changes it will bring about through its so-called tax reform will not mean that ordinary Canadians will pay more in total taxes than they do at present, or for that matter more than they were paying before the last two Budgets, then I say that the Government will be exposed as having as its real purpose, its hidden agenda, another massive tax grab from ordinary Canadians.

Canadians will welcome real tax reform. However, ordinary Canadians are looking for less of a total tax burden, not just some type of Tory shell game in which the peas are moved around from one shell to the other giving an illusion of lower taxes through lower personal tax rates. Instead it will be an over-all heavier tax burden as a result of other types of taxes such as sales taxes. The signal is clearly there in the Minister's statement.

I wish to conclude by saying that, yes, Canadians want to have real tax reform of the kind I mentioned. However, on the basis of this Government's track record over the last two years, there is little—in fact nothing—on the basis of which Canadians can have confidence that the Government will provide real tax reform and will help them rather than create another massive tax grab.

I wish to say that the Liberals, the Official Opposition, will be fighting very strongly for individual Canadians to make sure that they have real tax reform in spite of the reality caused by what has happened before by this Government. Instead of a real tax reform there is nothing more in store for ordinary Canadians than one more massive tax grab.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and delighted that the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) got to his feet. I thought he would be congratulating us on our economic performance. With respect to our economic record, as the Hon. Member knows, the unemployment rate in Windsor is down to 5 per cent. Housing starts are up well over the rate of increase in the national average. I am sure the Hon. Member would wish to support the economic record of the Government of Canada.

The Hon. Member has raised a number of issues, but as has been the case in a number of his interventions, he has his blinkers on. He only sees what he wants to see. He has talked about the tax record of the Government. He has ignored the fact that we have increased the child tax credit, accelerated the payment of the child tax credit and introduced a very innovative low-income refundable sales tax credit which helps those most in need. He has ignored the fact that we will have eliminated income splitting as of next year, we introduced a minimum tax, we removed the financing gimmicks for yachts and motels, we removed the scientific research tax credit, we very much limited the scope of limited partnerships, we reduced the investment tax credit and we eliminated the inventory allowance. All of these measures are designed to create a fairer, more equitable and more balanced tax system. That is the direction we will continue to take in tax reform.

I would ask the Hon. Member to look not only at certain elements of what has happened in the past but at the broad record of tax reform that we initiated immediately after we came into office. We were presented with such a mess which was built up by the previous Government since 1971 that something had to be done and something had to be done fast.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that after the Government has been talking about tax reform for two years, it has now been announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that there will be a further period of consultation and that there will be some announcements in the Budget of February or March of next year followed by possible legislation or further consultation. Effectively, therefore, major elements of real tax reform, if it does take place at all, will not be put in place until 1988 or 1989.

I do not believe that the tax system can be called fair when total tax freedom is given to people with capital gains of up to half a million dollars. I do not believe that the tax system can be called fair when it has increased the taxes payable by ordinary Canadian families by $1,300 just in the course of the first two years of the Conservative Government. I do not believe the tax system can be called fair when it gives enormous tax concessions to pension contributions made by high-income Canadians who have incomes four or five times the income of the average Canadian worker. I do not think the tax system can be called fair when the situation which the Minister himself finally recognized in his speech exists in which some 80,000 profitable Canadian corporations do not pay any taxes at all every year despite having profits that total perhaps $12 billion or $13 billion.

If the Minister wanted to convince Canadians that he was serious about tax reform, he would have come to grips with those problems which have been created by his Government. He would also have come to grips with those problems which were created by a former Minister of Finance and his successors, the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), who started us on this slippery slope of concessions and loopholes for the corporate sector which is forcing us to reconsider the tax system.

I fear that what the Minister is announcing—

[Translation]

I am afraid that what the Minister announced means that he is going to put pennies in the average Canadian's front pocket and take the dollars out of his back pocket, through the sales tax. That is what he intends to do with tax reform, especially with the increased revenue expected under the proposed sales tax system which has now been announced by the Minister. There is no indication, however, that tax remissions will be allowed so as to make this tax a progressive, not a regressive tax for the average Canadian family.

[English]

In looking to fairness, the Minister does not appear to have recognized at all that his plans to increase the sales tax will have an enormous impact on ordinary Canadian families. As a consequence, we are talking about a system which will put nickels and dimes back into people's front pockets while taking $1 bills and $5 bills out of their back pockets. These changes in the sales tax are designed to broaden the tax, to impose it on services and to impose it on many essential goods and services which are now tax exempt. It seems to me that that is part of what the Minister announced just now.

While we in this Party can take credit for the fact that the Minister is finally talking about profitable corporations that do not pay taxes, my Party feels that in order to be really serious about this issue, we must have more specifics rather than the vague generalities which have just been put forward. Are ordinary Canadians in favour of reducing personal income taxes? Yes, of course they are. Are ordinary Canadians, on the other hand, in favour of the reduction in personal income taxes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the only comment I would make is that I appreciate the support the Hon. Member will obviously give us in tax reform. The Hon. Member made a comment that I believe he will find incorrect when he sees the proposals as they develop.

I would like to draw his attention to the impact of the changes in federal sales taxes. They have to be seen as an integral part of another element of tax reform and that is the low-income refundable sales tax credit. We believe that this is integral because it will provide for a distinct change in the impact of sales tax in that the sales tax will not be regressive as a result of the use of this very innovative tax reform technique, the low-income refundable sales tax credit.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate you and tell you how very pleased I am to see you back in the Chair. I also take this opportunity to assure you and your colleagues who will be acting in your stead that I am prepared to co-operate fully towards ensuring orderly and especially very constructive debates in this House. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, the atmosphere in the House would be more enlightening if we were always debating positive and progressive issues. But such is not the case, certainly not when it comes to the Speech from the Throne.

At first blush, the speech has something for all groups and all sectors, for everybody in fact. However closer scrutiny reveals that it does not offer much to anybody, a seemingly contradictory statement. Quite simply, the first impression we get is that it is full of wishful thinking and promises which are not followed up by concrete programs.

We in Atlantic Canada did expect to hear about constructive regional development measures, we thought the Government would give special consideration to this problem which explains why the Atlantic region is lagging so far behind the rest of Canada. We expected more because we were led to believe there would be a lot more. Mr. Speaker, none other than the Prime Minister himself had this to say in St. John's, Newfoundland:

[English]

"The fact of the matter is yes, there has been a substantial economic comeback in Canada over the last two years—but that wealth is not being fairly shared and evenly distributed across the country.

So we have got to re-examine fundamentally some programs and attitudes because Canada is capable of generating tremendous wealth and prosperity.

But opportunities must be fairly and properly distributed and they are not being right now.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in the Atlantic region, but how have those fine words been translated in the Speech from the Throne?

This is what we find in the Throne Speech:

Building on the human and natural resource strengths of the regions, a renewed co-operative effort will lead to a new development agenda.

As a first step in achieving improved results from this sustained national approach, an Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be constituted to facilitate and coordinate all federal development initiatives in the area.

What do all those fine words mean, Mr. Speaker? We now know that they do not mean much, especially after the visit of the Right Hon. Prime Minister to Moncton. Indeed, in his speech the Prime Minister was unable to explain to the New Brunswick Economic Council the role of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency except to say that the Agency would be set up in the near future, by next spring. For the moment, that simply means a reshuffling of bureaucrats and a few changes to bring in an additional level of bureaucracy. I fervently hope that it will not happen.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, businessmen find that there is already much too much bureaucracy. We can also ask the question: Why a new bureaucracy? Certainly not to administer new development programs with new money. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the last two budgets took away hundreds of millions of dollars from the funds allocated to regional development. How can there be regional development if the money required is not there? How can we eliminate regional disparities if the outlying regions are treated exactly the same as the wealthy regions in central Canada?

The Prime Minister was not alone in suggesting that the Speech from the Throne would pay special attention to regional development. Last September, the Atlantic Ministers arrived in Moncton for a conference called "Focus on the Atlantic". They had come to hear the views of the residents and business people of the Atlantic region and to assess the situation. These people gave the Minister the same message as they had given the Prime Minister the week before in Fredericton. I am sure that you recall the visit of the Prime Minister to Fredericton. That was where the workers threw their hard hats before the Prime Minister. Afterwards, the Prime Minister promised the workers that the Atlantic Ministers would listen to the representations of the CN workshop employees in Moncton.

This is what they did. The Ministers took a few minutes to listen to the representations of the workers.

However, Mr. Speaker, while they may have listened, they did not hear anything. On that same day, there was a demonstration bigger than anything people had ever seen in Moncton in front of City Hall. This demonstration was significant because the workers wanted to show their dissatisfaction not only with the way the CN workshops were being dealt with, but also with the attitude of this Government to the problems of the Atlantic.

In spite of this demonstration, the Ministers failed to understand the situation. Two weeks later, there came the announcement of a program which is nothing but a joke, and even an insult.

How can we, in the Atlantic region, believe this Government really wants to help the disadvantaged regions?

What is even worse is that we are being compared to the Third World, to countries such as Bangladesh.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall another example of the indifference of this Government, this time in relation with the jobs strategy. Here again, there have been cutbacks. There is much less money in this program than before. What is even stranger is that the changes made to the program favour the regions where the private sector plays a major role in job creation, which is not the case of our own region because our private sector is quite weak.

Let us turn now to fisheries, an industry which is most important for the Atlantic area and especially for my constituency of Westmorland—Kent. If you read that part of the Throne Speech that is written in French, you could believe in this Government's good intentions, Mr. Speaker. Listen carefully.

"La pêche est une activité économique d'une importance fondamentale au Canada. Afin d'assurer une plus grande sécurité à nos pêcheurs et de protéger leurs investissements, mon gouvernement accordera une attention particulière à l'amélioration des ports pour petits bateaux dans toutes les zones de pêche." That was all very good. One would believe that they had the best intentions in the world and that they were going to do something. But reading the English text:

• (1150)

[English]

To provide increased safety for our fishermen and to protect their material investments, my government will place special emphasis on improving the management of small craft harbours in all fishing areas.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as seen by the people of the Atlantic area, the English text is much more accurate and better reflects this Government's actual intentions.

[English]

The intention of this Government is "make believe that you are going to do something".

The lobster fishermen in New Brunswick are worried about the increase in poaching activity. The fishermen would like to see the Department of Fisheries and Oceans put more effort towards the protection of the lobster stocks in particular. The budget of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has been reduced to such a level that patrol boats worth $200,000 to $300,000 can only afford fuel for two to three days of the week.

[Translation]

It's absolutely shocking.

[English]

Enforcement officers cannot work extra hours and furthermore, they are tied to their desks because they have no fuel to run their patrol vehicles.

[Translation]

How can one believe this Government is sincere! The other primary sectors, like farming and the forest industry, are very briefly mentioned although they are of the utmost importance to the development of our communities.

Let us turn to tourism. As we know, Mr. Speaker, the tourist industry is an important job provider in the Canadian economy, in the Atlantic and throughout the country. Indeed, it accounts for 600,000 jobs in Canada and its growth potential is tremendous. This is an industry that can create the greatest number of jobs in the shortest time frame. In spite of that potential, its growth is only 8 per cent in Canada, as compared with a 13 per cent growth rate on the international level.

It is clear, yes abundantly clear, that the vast number of taxes introduced by this Government since it was elected certainly did not help the tourist industry.

Mr. Speaker, in the last two years I have been listening to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism brag about this Government's concern for the industry. The Government has bragged about having created an independent portfolio for tourism, but what happened to the Department of Tourism in the last Cabinet shuffle? In June last, the Prime Minister simply struck it off. The Department of Tourism is no more. We now have a Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism.

• (1200)

TIAC Chairman, Walter Tilden, expressed his disappointment by saying that it would appear the Government does not know what to do with tourism. The Executive Director of TIAC, John Lawson, also expressed disappointment by saying:

> We're back to a combined ministry. That's a clear sign that tourism is once again relegated to a back room.

Just think how disappointed these people must be after reading the Speech from the Throne. Nowhere in the Throne Speech is the word "tourism" mentioned. The Government has forgotten all about tourism.

One of the best years for tourism was 1986. Expo 86 was a prime contributor to this success. We should have taken advantage of the situation to consolidate our position in the international tourism industry. However, the Government has refused to increase its level of marketing abroad. Because of inflation and the devaluation of the Canadian dollar, the marketing budget has been considerably eroded. It is not putting as much money as it should be into that marketing strategy. The Government just chose to forget the industry. It has broken all the promises made during the 1984 campaign.

[Translation]

What else should I say, Mr. Speaker? I could go on and on. I have not dealt with all the industries, but as seen from Atlantic Canada, the Throne Speech points to more difficult times ahead, because this Government does not seem to care about outlying regions. The more so because this Government did not succeed in gaining public confidence.

What about the answers given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), who will not take a stand and oppose the recommendations that would jeopardize the whole unemployment insurance scheme—the Forget report recommendations. He simply would not take a position. That is very disquieting!

Mr. Speaker, it is to be hoped that the Prime Minister understood the message the fishermen delivered to him when he visited Moncton, for they were anxious to express their dissatisfaction and concern in connection with the Forget report recommendations.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, may I add that I hope this Government will wake up in time, especially to prevent the Atlantic region to suffer a setback vis-à-vis the other Canadian regions. This Government must announce concrete programs and measures to develop primary industries and reduce regional inequalities.

[English]

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member comes from a province in which parks play a role. I noticed the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) was in the House until a couple of minutes ago. However, I should like to ask the Hon. Member for his comments.

After being in power for two years, the Government has not yet introduced any amendment to the National Parks Act. These amendments were drafted by the previous Government and are badly needed in order to update the functioning, the use, the validity, and the long-term value of parks for Canadians, for the protection of wildlife, and for the protection of our ecological heritage in his province as well as in other parts of the country.

Would he care to comment on the fact that the Minister of the Environment is boasting about a $3 million increase in the budget of that Department? Actually the Department has lost in purchasing power, because of 4 per cent inflation over each of the past two years, a sum of some $59 million. It is sheer erosion and an inability on the part of the Department to keep the purchasing power it used to have in 1984 at the same level.

Also I should like to ask him whether he would care to comment on the fact that the present Government is making some statements on the question of contaminants and on the necessity of introducing an Act to amend the existing one. It has pulled the rug from underneath research in toxic chemicals by not making a commitment, as it should have done, on the establishment of a joint toxicology centre at the University of Toronto and the University of Guelph. There is a need for this centre because of the present situation.

Finally, would he like to comment about the fact that the Government has been in power for two years and we are being asked to wait another year for any progress along the Niagara River? We should come to grips with the contamination caused by dumpsites along the Niagara River. We are being asked to wait another four years for any action or movement of any kind on acid rain—and I know that affects the Province of New Brunswick as well—because of the agreement between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan, which left the initiative in the hands of polluters in terms of coming up with some research and development control methods over the next five years. This makes us conclude that on both these fronts—and I am referring to toxic chemicals as well as to acid rain—there has been no tangible action to speak of in the two years it has been in government. Would the Hon. Member care to comment?

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to my hon. colleague. Over the past two years, this Government has made all sorts of fine promises and tried to impress people with beautiful statements and empty speeches. As evidence of this and of what my hon. colleague was saying concerning the environment, one need only consider what is happening in the Atlantic region in connection with the Atlantic Development Board. Certainly, over the past two years, the Government could not help noticing the unemployment problem we are facing because of the jobs which were lost in the CN shops in Moncton; yet, all the Prime Minister has been able to announce recently was the creation of a board. Words, words, nothing but words. The board will be in operation next spring. What is it going to do? He just could not say. It is the same situation everywhere in Atlantic Canada, as far as regional development or environment are concerned. We can hear a great many fine promises, but see hardly any concrete action.

• (1210)

[English]

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member and my colleague might want to comment on the fact that budgets of important Departments such as that of the Environment, and I suppose also that of Tourism in which the Member is particularly interested, are suffering because in their allocation of funds no provision is made to protect purchasing power. As a result, these Departments are losing badly to inflation every year.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, that is indeed exactly what is happening in the Ministry of Tourism and its budget, more specifically that of the marketing program. The Minister is bragging about the special effort they have made marketing tourism in the United States, but the credits affected to marketing are exactly the same as in past years. Which means that in view of inflation and the devaluation of our dollar, we are getting much less services than we used to. I really feel that the Minister has failed in his responsibility, that he should have argued his case with a little more energy to convince his Cabinet colleagues to grant him more funds to make this tourism marketing program a really valuable one.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) in debate.

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to congratulate you on your reappointment to the position of Assistant Speaker.

It is an honour for me to have the opportunity to respond today to the Throne Speech and to talk on a subject relevant to my part of Canada, that of regional industrial expansion. I wish to explain to the House that Atlantic Canadians, the so-called poor cousins of Confederation, are the people best suited to tackle their own problems. Given the chance, we will demonstrate to other Canadians that we are again capable of regaining our place as a world leader. As has often been quoted; "Those who do not know and understand their history are doomed to repeat it". To demonstrate the requirements of the Atlantic provinces better I will use my riding as an example.

South West Nova is the oldest settled part of Canada. Although generally typical of many parts of the Maritimes, it is also very unique. The first permanent European settlement in North America began at Port Royal when a French nobleman, Sieur de Monts, established a "habitation" from which to base his trade in fisheries and furs. He brought with him the first resident geographer, Samuel de Champlain, the first pharmacist, the first surgeon, the first poet, playwright and lawyer, Marc Lescarbot, and a few years later the first European woman to be resident in Canada.

The first highway in Canada was built at Port Royal in 1606 and the first successful agriculture development took place there. The first water-powered mill was erected at this site and the first ships to be built in North America were soon sailing from the Annapolis Basin. The first conversion of a native Canadian to Christianity took place in 1606 when Membertou, Chief of the Micmac Indians, was baptized. The first social club in North America, the Order of Good Time, was founded by Champlain to make the people's stay more enjoyable.

In 1621, King James of Scotland and England granted Nova Scotia, Latin for New Scotland, to Sir William Alexander, and an original manuscript copy of this charter will soon be deposited at the Fort Anne museum.

In 1629, the first Scottish settlement in the new world began at Fair Haven near the site of the French colony. At this time, Nova Scotia was granted its own flag and coat of arms, the first in North America.

As time went by, many battles were fought over the ownership of Acadia or Nova Scotia and most took place within the boundaries of my riding.

[Translation]

Over the years, the ownership of Acadia or Nova Scotia led to many fights and, as I said, most of them took place within my own riding. In the end a peaceful climate was restored in Nova Scotia, but not before quite a few Acadians were uprooted from their homes and exiled to Europe, the West Indies and New England.

Mr. Speaker, the best way to show how tenacious those people were is to recall that hundreds and hundreds of them walked thousands of miles through forests and across rivers to find their homeland. As it happens, Mr. Speaker, I am a direct descendant of these remarkable people and living proof of the love—sometimes unfathomable to foreigners—that we the residents of the Maritime Provinces have for our land and our way of life.

Other Canadians simply cannot appreciate this heartfelt sentiment which binds us to our homeland and our heritage and which makes it impossible for us to forsake them. If they cannot understand that, Mr. Speaker, what more can I say?

[English]

Immigration into the Maritimes had pretty well ceased by about 1850. The New England planters in the 1760s, the United Empire Loyalists in 1770s and 1780s, the freed slaves from the United States and the displaced farmers and crofters from Scotland, Ireland and England who came afterward had taken up most of the available land by then. This was at a time when half of Canada had hardly seen a settler. It is no wonder that we in Nova Scotia look upon the western provinces as being relative youngsters.

The sea has always been an integral part of the life of the Maritimes. I wonder whether those Canadians who belittle our former prosperity know that in the Maritimes at the time of Confederation we had the fourth largest merchant fleet in the world. It may seem hard to believe, but it is true nevertheless. With a population of perhaps one million people at most, we were competing on an equal footing with Great Britain, France, the United States, Russia, Spain, Germany and Japan. The Town of Yarmouth in my riding had more ships registered than any port in the world, more than London, Portsmouth, Calais, Amsterdam or Boston. Where did this prosperity go, you may ask, Mr. Speaker. When Nova Scotia was dragged into Confederation, kicking and screaming, I should add, the trade policies of central Canada took the prosperity up the St. Lawrence River to Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor and many other such communities. That prosperity has never returned. We have been reduced to the embarrassing dilemma of coming to Ottawa hat in hand looking for assistance.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in his speech the other day, it is not more dollars that we need in Atlantic Canada as much as the ability to make the decisions as to how the dollars that we have will be spent.

Ever since Confederation people in Ottawa have been telling Maritimers what is good for them. But really, Mr. Speaker, they have been looking east with blinkers on. They only see what they want to see. That will not help us regain our prosperity.

The Atlantic provinces must be allowed to run their own affairs and make their own decisions. One hundred and twenty years of simulated indulgence from central Canada has left us relatively worse off than when we started.

I am sure that those remarks will have some of our detractors question our patriotism. The patriotism of the people of Nova Scotia can never be questioned. We have defended our country in her time of need with no hesitation. People of all heritages, Indians, French, English, Irish, Scottish, African, and others, have willingly answered the call. In my riding of South West Nova we have the West Nova Scotia Regiment, successor to the first English regiment in Canada, Phillip's 40th Foot, first raised from among the citizens of the Annapolis Valley in 1717.

• (1220)

I personally know many veterans who fought to keep our country free. If I may digress for a moment, I am extremely pleased with the Department of Veterans Affairs under the capable direction of the present Minister who has vastly improved the direction of programs and their delivery to our many worthy veterans. In the town of Middleton in my riding we have Royal Canadian Legion Branch No. 1. I do not think anyone need question our patriotism in the Annapolis Valley.

[Translation]

Let us get back to the topic of my remarks. We residents of the riding of South West Nova have a diversified way of life. Industries based on the development of resources such as forestry and agriculture are often interconnected with one another or with the fishing industry. It is not exceptional to see a farmer doing some fishing, or a fisherman felling trees to earn a few extra dollars.

Given the kind of land and geography we have, a worker may indeed have two or three different sources of income. In winter, when farming and fishing activities are practically non-existent, many of my constituents would like to work their woodlands. Current forest development programs—locally administered, I would point out—offer them this kind of opportunity. Perhaps this might serve as an example.

[English]

The people of my riding are adaptable and versatile. Our agricultural industry includes everything from dairy production to grain growing to hog ranching and fur farming. Some farmers combine two or three aspects of farming in order to best compete in the market-place. One might say that we do not put all of our eggs in one basket.

The federal Government is also a big employer in my riding. We have several national parks, including the first national historic park in Canada, Fort Anne. We have the Canadian Forces basic training establishment at CFB Cornwallis, and many of my constituents are employed by CFB Greenwood, the air base just outside of my riding. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans provides employment for many others. As well, we have the largest tin mine in North America.

[Translation]

We also contribute substantially to the textile industry and as you can imagine, shipbuilding represents an important area of employment. Our plant used for the manufacturing of ambulances and mobile operating rooms to be sold abroad show that we have the capacity to compete on the international level.

Because of Canada's geography, it is often easier for us to meet competition abroad than in Canada. Year after year Nova Scotia sells Christmas trees in the United States for a total of $30 million. Of course, such an operation only provides part-time jobs for many people, but it is an essential source of additional revenues.

[English]

Economists will advise that regional development must be based on comparative advantage. Atlantic Canadians have long known that the emphasis must be on what a region does well. Historically, since the earliest days of European settlement, much of Nova Scotia's economy was based upon shipping and international trade. This led to the development within the province of considerable expertise in serving diverse world markets, and to the establishment of sophisticated transportation networks to facilitate this activity. Those historic skills and patterns have continued to the present day.

Foreign exports of Nova Scotian goods in 1983 were valued at $1.1 billion. The largest item of export from the province is fish products which account for 38 per cent of total exports, valued at approximately $418 million. Nova Scotia is ideally suited to harvest the rich resources of the northwest Atlantic. The province has developed an impressive on-shore fish processing industry. South West Nova alone has 90 of the 160 Nova Scotia fish processing plants. Canada is the world's largest exporter of sea food products, and all indications are that the richness of its fisheries resource will enable it to maintain its position.

In both landed value and weight, Nova Scotia is a leader in Canada, contributing 28 per cent of the total Canadian fishery products export value. Nova Scotia is located adjacent to some of the world's best fishing grounds. It is also situated directly on the major trading route between North America and Europe. Shipping fish products can be done very efficiently. Ferries operate daily between Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, and Bar Harbour, Maine, and between Digby, Nova Scotia, and Saint John, New Brunswick, carrying refrigerated trailerloads of fresh fish products to markets in Canada and the northeastern U.S. My riding alone accounted for 8.7 per cent of the 1983 landed value of fish for all of Canada. To put this in perspective, my riding alone had more land value than the whole Province of Quebec. My riding alone had nearly twice the landed value of the whole province of P.E.I. My riding of South West Nova had approximately the same landed value as the whole Province of New Brunswick.

In 1981, the fishing industry in my riding accounted for 4,560 direct jobs. However, listen to this. A 1985 study undertaken by the Gorsebrook Institute for Atlantic Canada Studies, found that the independent fish processors are misunderstood by both government and economists. The 1983 Kirby Report on the East Coast fishery had done little to explain the operations or to address the problems facing the Nova Scotia independent processing sector and the thousands of fish plant workers who depend on this vital industry. The Kirby Report had focused primarily on the economic problems of Atlantic Canada's giant fish processing firms. Our independent operators survived the difficulties of the early 1980s and were able to maintain the thousands of jobs they provide in rural Nova Scotia. They did this without millions of bail-out dollars from the taxpayer.

The role of the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans is central to the concerns of fish processors in Nova Scotia. Although there is some respect for DFOs efforts to preserve and regulate access to fish stocks, the general tenor of processors' comments is quite critical of government performance, the report says. This dissatisfaction during the summer of 1984 focused on regulatory activity at the individual plant level and on anticipated negative effects of the refinancing of the large Atlantic processors. Small and intermediate size plant owners are convinced that the restructured companies will have to to turn to Government and seek additional support within the next five years.

The success of independently owned fish plants still lies in their ability to react more quickly in their communications and decision-making, and they are more likely to provide the direct supervision necessary to run a profitable company in a labour-intensive industry.

The misunderstanding is still there in many parts of the Ottawa decision-making process. This is why the factory freezer trawler decision was greeted with such suspicion and apprehension. The ongoing problems of small craft harbours has preoccupied the fishing industry for many years now and the decision-makers in Ottawa will have to deal with this issue.

[Translation]

No government activity is more important than transportation for the Atlantic Provinces. As it is necessary to ensure that businesses in the Atlantic area overcome the geographic obstacle to compete on national as well as on international markets, the constant presence of the Government in the transportation system is mainly justified. As a result of subsidies and various regulations, the transportation system has become an efficient tool for economic development.

On the whole, the general direction of transportation reform will contribute to increase the efficiency and productivity of the transportation system. However, this market-oriented approach is giving rise to a deep concern, because we have to determine how communities will be attracted by the setting up of a freight and passenger service.

The importance of transportation for the citizens of South West Nova was clearly shown last year when federal decision makers tried to abolish the wintertime service of the M.V. Bluenose. The people considered such a move as an attack against the basis of their economy.

• (1230)

[English]

As pointed out earlier, Atlantic Canada has relied on international trade for almost 400 years. We have learned to compete with the best in the world. Atlantic Canadians have much to gain from successful bilateral trade talks. We recognize that the security of markets must be assured.

Atlantic Canada has felt the effect and the damage of countervail actions which are being advocated by the U.S. protectionists. Security of access to markets offers the stability needed to plan investment and production decisions.

The doom and gloomers who fear that we will lose our national culture by competing with U.S. companies must reassess their views of Canada. Their lack of confidence in Canada's ability to compete is a national disgrace.

The opposition Parties have taken to talking about what they call "new money". They do not seem to understand that printing money and throwing it at problems is not the way to solve these problems. A great deal can be accomplished by spending the money more wisely and by removing the barriers of red tape which simply discourage investors.

The Speech from the Throne announced the creation of an Atlantic agency to co-ordinate regional industrial expansion in Atlantic Canada. I welcome this initiative.

It is my hope that this agency will direct and monitor a new over-all industrial strategy for regional economic growth and that decisions will not be made by Ottawa-based bureaucrats. This agency should seek the participation of the private sector, labour, and both senior levels of Government. Finally, the agency should seek to reduce bureaucratic red tape which restricts growth.

Before concluding let me say that I am sure you have heard about the giant Bay of Fundy tides, the highest in the world. I want to end with a quote from the famous Nova Scotian statesman, Joseph Howe, who said:

> Brag about your country, boys. When I'm abroad, I brag about everything that Nova Scotia is, has, or can be, and if they top me at everything else, I can always turn around and stump them when I say "And how high do your tides rise?"

These tides are still rising, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I think everyone would agree that one of the benefits of the Throne Speech debate is that we have an opportunity to hear about other areas of Canada. Many of us may not have travelled as extensively as other Members who have been in the House for some time, and we like to hear about these areas.

I was interested to hear the speech by the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau), in which he outlined activities in his area. I might point out that in my area the tides do not rise but the water is getting very high.

I was also interested in his remarks regarding the fishing industry. The Hon. Member may have a large saltwater fishing industry in his riding, but I can boast that the biggest freshwater fishery in the world is located in my riding. There are some 2,000 people who make their living from the freshwater fishing industry in my area.

Let me also say that I am pleased that he is the new Chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans. I am sure he will bring a wealth of knowledge to that committee.

The fishing industry in our area operates under provincial jurisdiction and it has basically prospered under the quota system for the boats. What does the Hon. Member believe could be done to return some prosperity to the saltwater fishing industry in his area and to the East Coast of Canada? What direction would he like the committee to take and what programs would he like to pursue?

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question. We have had some discussions regarding the size of his freshwater fishery and the fact that it is the largest in the world, I believe. I congratulate him for his continuing interest in promoting this fishery, as he never misses an opportunity to discuss it with me as a member of the Fisheries Committee.

The Hon. Member asked what I would like to see in the fishery. In the past few months there has been a rather major problem with the allocation of scallop stocks off the lucrative Georges Banks. Rather than imposing a decision on the allocation of these stocks, the industry was brought together at the insistence of the Minister and myself and was able to meet for some time so that an industry decision rather than one imposed by Ottawa was reached. I understand that the proposal has been submitted to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) which I hope he will accept.

That is the direction in which I would like to go, to have the industry make its own decisions.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) on his excellent speech as well as on his selection as Chairman of the Fisheries Committee. I have worked with Mr. Comeau for the past two years and know of his intense interest and expertise in the area of fisheries. It seems most appropriate, given that he represents a constituency with the greatest landed value of any constituency in Canada. I know that Mr. Comeau will continue to represent aggressively the interests of his constituents and the fishing industry in particular.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I just want to remind the Hon. Member that he should refer to the Hon. Member for South West Nova by his riding. He should not refer to the Hon. Member by name.

Mr. O'Neil: I apologize to the Hon. Memer for my familiarity.

Perhaps the Hon. Member could give us his thoughts on the question of quota problems being experienced for VSW in the Scotia-Fundy region.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, let me take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil) for his appointment as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Regional Industrial Expansion. I hope I am not jumping the gun.

I have also had lengthy discussions with the Member about his major concerns. The Hon. Member referred to quota problems in the Scotia region. I imagine that he is referring to some of the comments that have appeared in the press recently, in which it was noted that there was a large amount of illegal overfishing. I suggest that the Hon. Member check with the Minister further, but I have reason to question some of the allegations that have been made in the press. I question the manner in which the figures were calculated.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) for his speech. I think it is a tradition in this House that a Member rise on the Throne Speech. I also think that he has very aptly outlined the history of his constituency and I congratulate him for it.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask him a question as a Member from Eastern Canada and the new Chairman of the Fisheries and Oceans Committee. We know that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has, let us say, snuffed out the marine environment laboratory at the Bedford Oceanography Institute, and the Hon. Member certainly knows the importance of research and development to fisheries and oceans. Is he now ready to tell the House what his position will be as Chairman of that Committee? Will he recommend to the Minister that the Government reinstate that research and development component in the area of fisheries and oceans at Bedford, in order that the laboratory be reinstated to its full capacity?

[English]

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question and the opportunity it gives me to say that I am quite pleased with the Minister's approach, which is to concentrate more effort on the understanding of fish stocks off the East Coast and to combine the various sectors within the scientific branches which previously were heading in many directions. Now the concentration will be on science and a greater knowledge of the stocks, their location and their future on the East Coast.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has terminated. Debate.

• (1240)

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to participate in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. It is my intention to focus on two areas of concern, that of jobs and service. I want first to touch briefly on the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the House today as part of his contribution to the debate on the Speech from the Throne. In his address he indicated that it is his intention to bring about a reduction in income tax for, I believe, the majority of Canadians. We, of course, welcome that reduction. However, what concerns us is that at the same time he has pretty well guaranteed there will be in some way an increase in the sales tax collected from the average Canadian. That increase would be on top of an increase of 3 per cent which has been in place since the Conservative Government took over in September of 1984. This is a tax which has extracted over $1,300 from the pockets of Canadian families. There is no guarantee that this tax reform about which the Minister of Finance talks, while it may end up putting a few pennies in the pockets of average Canadians, will not steal dollars from their backpockets through the imposition of new sales tax approaches.

I am also a bit concerned that the Minister of Finance is waiting yet another two years for another review and even further consultation on tax reform when he already knows that 79,000 Canadian companies with annual profits of $13 billion or more pay nothing to the federal Treasury. They pay nothing to help run the country and to provide the services we feel are appropriate to our society.

Let me now focus on the area of service. I think the attitude of the Conservative Government regarding service to Canadians is best exemplified through its handling of Canada Post. There is clearly a campaign in place to reduce the level of service to Canadians. It is being done under the guise of deficit reduction both for Canada Post and for the Government as a whole. What it actually is, though, is a threat to existing services.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: I hear some support for the Government's position, and I am not surprised. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, the kinds of things that are happening.

Mr. Malone: One dollar out of $3 to pay off the debt.

Mr. Angus: Fifty rural routes in Canada have been dropped. Fifty areas where people live miles and miles and miles away from urban centres, have lost their postal service. These people now have to travel 20, 30, 40 and 50 kilometres to pick up their mail. Seventy-two rural post offices have already been closed as a means to reduce the deficit, and in consequence service has been reduced. New subdivisions are springing up all over the country and, by and large, the majority are not being serviced. They are certainly not being serviced to the same level I receive in my own community when a letter carrier walks up my driveway five days a week and plops a few bills in my mailbox. We are establishing a variety of levels of service and by so doing we are establishing a variety of levels of class of citizens.

In my constituency there is great concern over the potential to eliminate rural routes. We fought off the elimination of three rural routes last spring and we are keeping a watchful eye on things to make sure they do not try the same thing this fall. There is a fear that some of the rural post offices will be closed, and that fear has been encouraged by Canada Post through its actions.

The hours of operation of some of the rural post offices have been cut back. They are now open from Monday to Friday from eight o'clock in the morning to 2.30 in the afternoon. In the case of the Nolalu Post Office and the Gillies Post Office, which are located approximately 30 miles from the urban centre of Thunder Bay, the individuals who live in that rural area and who commute to Thunder Bay, which is the primary place of employment, have been disenfranchised. In order to reach a job at 8 a.m., they have to leave at 7 a.m. or earlier. To reach a job at 9 a.m., they have to leave at 8 a.m. or earlier. They do not get home until 5 p.m., 6 p.m. or 7 p.m. Therefore, they do not have access to their post office. The post office is closed on Saturday so they do not have that option. The postmasters and postmistresses in these communities went to their bosses and said: "Listen. We believe strongly in service. You talked about not wanting to hurt service. We are prepared to offer flexible hours". In fact, they said they were prepared to open for an hour or so in the evening so that citizens who lived around those post offices, who depend on them for communication, could have access. The answer was: "No. Those are the hours".

Mr. Malone: The union said no.

Mr. Angus: The Hon. Member said the union said no. That is not true at all, Mr. Speaker. The individuals involved, with permission of the unions, said quite clearly they would be prepared to provide those services. The Government's answer was, no, because the Government is trying to reduce service, and it is doing it on the backs of the rural residents, in particular.

One of the fears people in the rural area have because of this attitude and because of the decision by Canada Post to restrict the hours of operation, is that Canada Post wants those post offices to fail. It wants to see the level of revenue reduced to the point where anyone can see it is not efficient to keep the post office open. That is the feeling of the people in the rural area of my riding as to what is about to happen to them.

The Minister, I gather, has been receiving mail from citizens. The Canadian Labour Congress, in co-operation with the postal unions, has put advertisements in newspapers and has circulated pamphlets to citizens in postal walks, and the pamphlets are being mailed to a variety of individuals. In order to assist Members of Parliament, the Minister kindly wrote to us and gave us a suggested way in which we could respond. I would like to quote from that suggested response:

> I have noted the comments about providing door-to-door delivery for all urban addresses. As you are no doubt aware, Canada's urban population is growing rapidly, and the cost of providing door-to-door delivery to new addresses is so great that to finance it would require either major increases in postal rates or greater dependence on taxpayers' dollars. The Government and Canada Post find those options unacceptable.

Further along it reads:

> I am confident that Canada Post will balance its budget within the next two years—

Clearly, the Government has a fixation about deficit reduction regardless of its impact on service to Canadians. If we follow this strange logic further, we will see the day when the Conservatives will be suggesting we eliminate mail service to those northern remote communities which depend on it for food, dry goods and other products because it costs so much to get it there. Or they will be charged more. We already have a separate fee service to send mail to the United States. Perhaps we will have to pay more to send mail to the North. That is one of the dangers of the route the Government is taking.

Let me now turn to jobs. The Speech from the Throne, quite clearly had a target in it for deficit reduction. What it sadly lacked was a target for an increase in employment or a decrease in the number of unemployed, a concrete projection to which the Government would make a commitment. We all know it is not simple. Jobs cannot be created overnight. A plan must be in place to create them. However, we were not even given an indication that there was a plan in place with some figures attached to it.

There are things we can do to create jobs in Canada and, quite frankly, to create jobs in the community of Thunder Bay and the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan. Some of them are not in disagreement with the Government in either a philosophical or a technical way. The question of replacement of the rolling stock for VIA Rail is one such example, something the Liberals promised when they were in office and something the Conservatives promised during the election campaign. It is something for which the former Minister of Transport indicated his clear support since the last election. There are indications from the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) that he supports the concept as well.

Over the last two years people have been working toward the attainment of the decision to replace the rolling stock. The Government in its widsom, and I compliment it on it, decided that it would go the route of a consortium. It was decided that it would ask Bombardier and UTDC, the Urban Transit Development Corporation which owns Can-Car Rail in Thunder Bay, to put together a joint package for VIA Rail. This was done because the Government clearly wanted to have the cars produced in Canada in order to ensure that the employment opportunities regarding the replacement of those cars would be spread reasonably well throughout the system.

We have only two passenger rail car manufacturing facilities in Canada. While my constituents and I would have liked to have the whole package we recognize that there is a need to share these jobs.

The process did not go all that smoothly. Design problems were encountered, which prevented the plan from moving forward as fast as it could in terms of the cost estimates. However, those problems were solved. A solution was reached with respect to getting these two double-decker trains to pass each other without a fear of their colliding at the top. After that was solved there came the question of money.

During last winter and into the spring and summer of this year VIA Rail sat down with the consortium to work out the dollars and cents, as well as the design aspects involved. This summer an agreement was reached. The parties involved met with the newly-appointed Minister of Transport. We all appreciate that he was new to that portfolio and that he needed some time to understand not only the process to date but the process that would occur. Quite frankly, the Minister and his cabinet colleagues will have to determine whether or not the Government is prepared to pay the price which VIA and the consortium came up with.

For the last two weeks in the House my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), and I have raised the matter with the Minister. We are clearly in support of it. I met with over 1,000 workers at Can-Car Rail just one week ago. They asked me to bring back a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in support of the project. I would like to read it into the record for Hon. Members. It states:

> Dear Mr. Prime Minister,
> This letter has been circulated on the shop floor of Can-Car Rail in Thunder Bay. The workers at this plant have been waiting now for many months for confirmation from your government that the contract for the construction of double-decker rail cars to replace VIA Rail's antiquated rolling stock will be awarded, in part, to us.
> I am sure you can understand that the release last week of a document showing that VIA is in serious financial trouble has caused us a great deal of concern about our own future. We want to say, Mr. Prime Minister, that we believe our future in this industry is largely dependent upon Can-Car Rail securing this contract.
> As Canadians, we believe that a viable national rail transportation system is a fundamental and necessary aspect of nationhood in Canada, and we believe that the upgrading of VIA's equipment, particularly the rolling stock, is necessary to maintain an effective and viable system.
> Therefore we are working along with our Member of Parliament, Ian Angus, to ensure that the contract we have been counting on for so long will soon be forthcoming. We ask that you make a public commitment to this effect as soon as posible.

Copies of this letter were delivered to the Prime Minister last week. I took the opportunity of asking the Minister in the House either what decision had been made or when it would be made. His response was that before too many suns and moons have passed he hoped to have an answer for me. Well, about seven suns have passed and perhaps a quarter of a moon. I encourage the Minister of Transport, who is here in the House today, to take the opportunity to ask me a question at the end of my remarks in which he can indicate that, yes, his cabinet colleagues have agreed and the announcement is forthcoming.

The last area I would like to delve into is with respect to a report commissioned by the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) along with his colleagues in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario. It is a report entitled Western Canadian Low Sulphur Coal, Its Expanded Use in Ontario. When the report was released the Minister of Transport had some very positive things to say about the recommendations which it contained. For example, he said that it could result in significant benefits to the Canadian railways, Great Lakes marine carriers and transfer terminal operations. He said that the increased volume in coal traffic would stimulate rail efficiency which would lead to lower rail costs. He also indicated that any reasonable measure that can be taken to improve the competitiveness of western Canadian coal has his support.

When I finally had the opportunity to read the report I became very excited. I became excited for a number of reasons. The report was undertaken initially to see if one of the answers to our acid rain problem in Ontario, basically, and part of Quebec, was through the use of western Canadian low-sulphur coal. This is why the task force was put together and why a great deal of money and a great deal of time was spent doing research. The answer which the task force came up with was that, yes, it is one of the ways in which we can reduce acid emissions. Over and above that what I find exciting are the benefits which will flow to a large part of Canada as a result of adopting the recommendations in this report. I would like to give Hon. Members some examples in this regard.

If low sulphur western Canadian coal is used instead of installing scrubbers in Ontario Hydro plants and we continue to import at the same high levels—in fact even higher levels—high sulphur American coal, then we can create twice as many jobs in Canada. We will be able to bring in more than twice as much revenue to Canadians, with benefits reaching from British Columbia right through to Ontario and even into Quebec.

I would like to mention some specifics. Over-all, 101,000 person-years of employment would be created over the next 15 years which would bring in total incomes of $1.6 billion. In terms of British Columbia, from where the bulk of the coal will come, 28,000 person-years will be created with $444 million of revenue. In Alberta, 39,000 person-years will be created with revenue of $671 million. In terms of Saskatchewan, where there is a lower figure because of the type of coal there, there will be only 1,000 person-years with $12 million in income. For the Province of Ontario there will be created 14,000 person-years for incomes of $301 million.

I would like to wind up this part of my remarks by saying that it is an area that we have to look at because we in Canada will receive the benefits. We will have more people working. We will have more people paying taxes. Therefore it will be a revenue generator.

S.O. 21

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I leave the Chair I would like to say that the Hon. Member's time with respect to debate has now terminated. He will have 10 minutes devoted to questions and comments when Orders of the Day are resumed after the Oral Question Period, if he is in the House.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

RICK HANSEN'S GLOBAL JOURNEY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, last Sunday I met and welcomed our roving, rolling ambassador extraordinaire, Rick Hansen, in Montreal. Shaking his gloved hand, I could sense Rick's strength and the tenacity of purpose that has propelled him over 24,900 miles around our globe. I shared in his enthusiastic determination to raise public sensitivities and awareness to the potential of the disabled. His goal to establish a $10-million international trust fund for spinal cord research seems to be closer to reality today than when I visited with him and wished him good luck and farewell in Vancouver just two years ago.

Barriers are continually being challenged and overcome by wheelchair users. Physical access to buildings is improving. However, better psychological access to society through attitudinal change is needed as well. Too many people are still more conscious of the wheelchair than of the person in it.

The next few months of battling the Prairies in winter are going to be rough, but Rick Hansen is tough. Our prayers and thoughts will be with you, Rick, and we look forward to your arrival in Ottawa this weekend.

HISTORIC EVENTS

THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF HUNGARIAN REVOLUTION

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, today solemn services are being held in various communities across Canada to mark the 30th anniversary of the Hungarian Revolution and to remember those who lost their lives in that historic struggle for freedom. On October 23, 1956, the years of oppression by the communist regime culminated in an uprising and alerted the free world to the courageous struggle of the Hungarian people against totalitarianism and the suppression of freedom. The revolution was finally crushed by the Soviet army less than one month later on November 4.

In 13 days, between October 23 and November 4, thousands of citizens were killed while some 200,000 refugees left their homeland. Of these, 37,000 came to Canada to enrich our culture and to contribute to the greatness of our country. Canada, a country whose signpost is freedom, recalls this struggle today and joins in this very special remembrance.

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

ELECTION OF EAST INDIAN CANADIAN TO BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATURE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Mr. Moe Sihota was elected to the B.C. Legislature. Mr. Sihota is, I believe, the first Canadian of Indo-Pakistani origin to be elected to any Legislature in Canada.

The peoples of South Asia have come a long way in Canada since the Komagatu Maru with a shipload of would-be Indian immigrants was turned back from Vancouver Harbour in 1914 by a country with then clearly racist immigration laws. There are now 200,000 Canadians of East Indian origin living in Canada.

Mr. Sihota is a lawyer. Although he is only 31 years old, he has degrees in social work and in law. He was formerly a member of the UBC Board of Governors and ombudsman at UBC. He was formerly the President of the B.C. Young New Democrats. He is currently a member of the Esquimalt Municipal Council, and by yesterday's vote of 13,603 to 10,639 he is a member of the New Democrat caucus in the B.C. Legislature.

AIR CANADA

DISCONTINUANCE OF DIRECT EDMONTON-OTTAWA SERVICE

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House a regressive and unacceptable decision which was taken by Air Canada. The airline is slashing direct flight service between Edmonton and Ottawa, thus relegating the City of Edmonton to second-class status. What was once a four-hour direct flight can now be an exhausting and time-consuming seven-hour marathon which stops not only in Toronto but also in, God bless us, Calgary.

Transportation and communication links lead to economic activity, they do not follow it. Thus, Air Canada, by this totally unwarranted act is dealing another body blow to an already struggling Alberta economy.

How does Air Canada defend this insensitive and needless decision? It does so by claiming that this will lead to better use of its aircraft. My direct observation is that these flights have nearly always been fully booked. Indeed, at times it is difficult to get on a flight.

By arranging its flights to suit its own convenience rather than placing its customers first, Air Canada is being irresponsible. As for myself, I will now fly Air Canada only as a last, unavoidable resort. I have strongly urged others to boycott the airline until this reprehensible decision has been reversed.

WELFARE

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON WELFARE'S REPORT ON POVERTY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): The report by the National Council on Welfare has provided further evidence of the growing disparity between the rich and poor in Canada. The report outlined that there were close to 4 million Canadians, or 16 per cent of our population, living in poverty. This is more than in 1980. The results also showed that one child in five is growing up in poverty; that single mothers are five times more likely to be poor than families with two parents; and that 60 per cent of female single-parent families are poor.

• (1405)

The Tories continue to peddle the myth that all is well in the land, and that the economic tide is propping up everyone's boat equally. Brutal statistics tell a tale of two cities, a tale of two Canadas, a tale where food banks are on the rise and the line-ups are getting longer. There is nothing more humiliating and degrading to a human being than to stand in line for a daily piece of bread. Regrettably, this is a reality. The sooner the Government recognizes it, the closer we will be to successfully combating poverty across all regions.

NATIONAL SMALL BUSINESS WEEK

DYNAMISM OF ENTREPRENEURS IN LOTBINIÈRE CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): This being Small Business Week in Canada, Mr. Speaker, I should like to lay special emphasis of the dynamic spirit of our entrepreneurs in the riding of Lotbinière. Their significant contribution to regional economic development and job creation being essential, their achievements deserve praise.

First and foremost, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that Small Business Week will not go unnoticed in Lotbinière. For starters, the Bois-Franc Chamber of Commerce will hold a one-day convention and play host to businessmen. In addition, the regional economic organizations in the riding are taking this opportunity to compile a survey of the activities of our entrepreneurs. Among other things, the territory covered by the Bois-Franc Economic Development Corporation reported an increase of 411 jobs over last year and was instrumental in the establishment of 24 new business concerns. For its part the territory covered by the Lotbinière MRC added eight new companies to its list and thus created 223 new jobs, not to mention the expansion of existing businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to tell the House about the constructive achievements of small business in Lotbinière, and I can only encourage their representatives to keep up the good work, and to assure them of my full support.

FINANCE

NON-PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY ARGUS AND POWER CORPORATIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, today Argus and Power Corporations are the recipients of the eighth and ninth great untaxed corporation awards. Generous Liberal and Conservative tax expenditures allowed Argus the right to receive tax credits instead of paying taxes in 1983, 1984, and 1985, on profits totalling tens of millions of dollars.

An Hon. Member: Shame, shame!

Mr. de Jong: Power Corporation received generous tax credits in 1981, 1982, and 1985, and was allowed to pay no taxes in 1983 and 1984 on hundreds of millions of dollars of profits. Had the tax system been fair and equitable and these two companies been required to pay a tax rate of 25 per cent on their profits, Canadian taxpayers would have had their tax bill reduced by $118.7 million because of these two companies alone.

REMOVAL OF MAILBOXES FROM TORONTO STREETS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post has once more earned the wrath of the customers it is supposed to serve. Residents of Parkdale—High Park are furious over the removal of mailboxes from their neighbourhoods. Across Toronto 700 mailboxes have been removed and the increased distance between post-boxes is creating both inconvenience and frustration. This high-handed action on the part of Canada Post is further evidence of the lack of regard the Corporation has for its customers.

The Canadian public is entitled to fast, efficient service. What we see are rate increases, service cuts, deficits and excuses. Proposals to cut mail delivery and pick-up services are infuriating Canada Post's customers and time is running out on their patience for footing the bills while getting the boot. I call on Canada Post to return the mailboxes to Parkdale—High Park and get on with the job of serving the Canadian public.

PENITENTIARIES

COST OF CONSTRUCTING PRISON IN MANICOUAGAN RIDING

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, $41 million—think about it for a minute, Mr. Speaker—is the amount of taxpayers' dollars that are literally being frittered away because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wants to play sugar-daddy to his constituents in Manicouagan.

• (1410)

The Auditor General pointed out yesterday that there was absolutely no need for a protective custody prison in Baie Comeau or, for that matter, anywhere in Quebec. Yet the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) rose yesterday and directly contradicted the Auditor General. Other Ministers of the Crown have attacked the integrity, impartiality, and objectivity of the Auditor General. It is inexcusable that that should be done.

It was also revealed today by the Auditor General that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had a member of his own staff sitting on the construction task force to oversee the construction of the Port-Cartier prison. It is obvious why that individual is there—to further the goals of the Prime Minister to continue to porkbarrel in his own riding and to ensure that contracts are given to his friends.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

IMPROVEMENT IN MANAGEMENT OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, glancing through the report tabled yesterday by the Auditor General, I was pleased to see that he is aware of the Conservative Government's resolve to reduce public outlays even more.

Although he was careful not to comment on specific political programs or trends, he did say he was particularly pleased to receive the February 1986 note concerning tighter resources management which was sent to all deputy ministers and heads of agencies.

He went on to say that the course steered by the Government with respect to resources management is along the line of his earlier recommendations.

Yesterday Mr. Dye expressed satisfaction with our commitment towards improved accountability and better management.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the Government firmly intends to stabilize the management of public funds, and I am pleased that the Auditor General has publicly acknowledged our initiative. All economic indicators are positive and at last we can see the light at the end of the tunnel.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I am making this statement today on behalf of the Liberal trade critic. It is what he would like to say to his Leader but cannot: "Please, please, tell me what is going on. On Monday I called for the suspension of free trade talks after the U.S. lumber tariff. Yet, on the same day, you said that to walk away from the talks now may unleash damaging countervailing action against us. It was bad enough when the Liberal spokesperson for External Affairs wrote an article in The Gazette of Montreal late last year endorsing the Macdonald Commission, but now the confusion is complete. That leaves us with a policy for everybody—pro, con, and in the middle—but it also leaves us looking exceedingly foolish".

INCOME TAX

AUDITOR GENERAL'S CONCERN FOR SYSTEM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in his report released earlier this week the Auditor General pointed out his concern for the integrity, fairness, and credibility of our income tax system.

The Government takes these concerns very seriously. During the past two years it has ended tax loopholes such as the scientific research tax credit, hotel and recreational vehicle tax shelters, carve-outs, and income splitting. In addition, the Government is phasing out the investment tax credit and the inventory allowance.

This past July the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced a comprehensive tax reform review, upon which he expanded this morning. It is aimed at eliminating corporate tax expenditures and reducing personal income tax rates.

These quick and positive actions clearly demonstrate the Government's concern with fair and effective control of taxpayers' dollars.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express concern with regard to the awarding of the CF-18 contract by the Department of Supply and Services. Yesterday I raised in the House the fact that the former Minister of Supply and Services interfered in the bidding process of the Department of Supply and Services, thereby changing the established programs of that particular Department.

I raise this point because the Minister who represents Atlantic Canada has abdicated his responsibilities, not only to his constituents in Halifax but to all constituents in Atlantic Canada. This particular Minister, on orders from either above or from various other Ministers, has changed the process. It is very clear that the bidding process, the integrity of the bidding process and, indeed, the merit principle which has been so much applicable, if you will, to the Department of Supply and Services, has now been done away with. It is blatant, political porkbarreling by the Government of Canada to award its friends, to the detriment of regions less fortunate, like those in Atlantic Canada.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

AUDITOR GENERAL'S OBJECTIVES

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, as Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the positive elements in the Auditor General's sixth report.

As you know, the criticism voiced in this report was both judicious and appropriate. We realize what has to be done and we are convinced the Government intends to pursue even further the objectives set by the Auditor General. We have been submitted a program and we all intend to act on that program as responsibly as we have done so many times in the past.

I may point out that this Government has even made considerable progress in controlling the public accounts. It has made sure that past audits are followed up. In fact, the Auditor General praised the present Government's philosophy which centres on the need for tighter resource management.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians voted for a change on September 4, 1984.

• (1415)

Canadians asked for a significant change, Mr. Speaker, and significant changes are in the report.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

AUDITOR GENERAL

COMPETENCE OF OFFICE HOLDER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Three Ministers have challenged the accuracy and competence of the Auditor General with respect to the prison in Port-Cartier.

Both the Solicitor General and the President of the Treasury Board have denied factual statements made by the Auditor General, and the Minister of State, the Deputy Prime Minister's neighbour, even said that he had grave doubts as to his competence.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with his three colleagues who challenged the objectivity and integrity of the Auditor General, who is directly accountable to Parliament?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we never challenged the Auditor General's comments. What we challenged was the false interpretation the Opposition gave of many of the tables, comments, figures and data presented in the otherwise excellent report by the Auditor General.

[English]

ROLE OF AUDITOR GENERAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we understood that when the Prime Minister was not here, and we understand why he is not, that the Deputy Prime Minister would be the chief operating officer and I hoped he would respond to these questions. I will leave it to Maz., Mr. Speaker.

The Auditor General has caught the Prime Minister with his hand in the cookie jar.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The response of the Government is to have three Ministers attack the credibility of the Auditor General. This is just not another public servant whom the Government can malign. This is an officer of Parliament, responsible to the taxpayers of the country through Parliament, and I want an answer from the Deputy Prime Minister as to what is in line here. Are we trying to undermine one of the parliamentary officers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, when a Government has competent Ministers, the Prime Minister or a Deputy Prime Minister does not have to act on their behalf. We have competent Ministers. They speak out, and they speak out with clarity.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: What we are dealing with here, and simply to back up the President of the Treasury Board, is more Liberal distortion.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF MINISTERS' STATEMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, not at all. We have the Auditor General saying that the Prime Minister wasted $41 million of the taxpayers' money, and the response of the Government is to attack the Auditor General.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is a falsehood.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want the Deputy Prime Minister, on behalf of the Government, to say that he wants those three Ministers to withdraw the statements attacking the Auditor General.

• (1420)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I suppose we could talk about the swashbuckling style of the Liberals which provoked the Auditor General's ire as well. That is why we suggest he has made a comprehensive and objective report. We certainly do not find any difficulty with that. We do find difficulty with the distorting and twisting kind of interpretation that some Liberal Members are putting on the report.

CONSTRUCTION TASK FORCE—REPORTED PARTICIPATION OF PMO STAFF MEMBER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the Prime Minister's prison. It was revealed today that a member of the Prime Minister's staff has been sitting on a task force overseeing construction of the Port-Cartier penitentiary. Can he confirm that, and indicate that person's function on the task force? Would he also not agree that this is further evidence of political interference by the Conservative Government?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that apparently the Auditor General was referring to a planning implementation committee set up in accordance with the requirements of Chapter 140 of the Administrative Policy Manual of the Treasury Board. I might add that the committee was set up several months after approval of the Port-Cartier project.

NEED FOR PRISON—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of his conversation with the Auditor General last evening, is he now prepared to admit that the Auditor General is right when he says there is no need for a protective custody prison at Port-Cartier?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that is quite correct, the Auditor General did call me. I did not call him. Mr. Dye and I agree with the figures contained in his report at paragraph 7.51. That shows a surplus of 30 protective custody beds. That figure includes the 250 protective custody beds to be built at Port-Cartier. If you do not build Port-Cartier you are going to have a deficit of 220 protective custody beds, so obviously there is a need for that prison.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

NON-PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY CORPORATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will be aware of the information we brought to the House a few weeks ago that 64 Canadian companies with profits of over $25 million per annum paid no income tax in 1983. We have new information today that in that year there were only 252 Canadian companies with profits in that range.

Given the evidence that one in four Canadian companies having more than $25 million in profits paid no corporate income tax, can the Minister tell us why he simply announces more consultations on tax reform rather than undertaking to bring in measures in next February's Budget which will ensure that those corporations pay their fair share in taxes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anyone in this country who would criticize the Government for consulting about something as large and comprehensive as tax reform. I again draw the attention of the Hon. Member to what I have said to him time and time again, and it has not got through his head, that we have acted. We acted in October, 1984, to change the rules on limited partnerships. We changed the rules on the scientific research tax credits and subsequently eliminated them. In the last Budget we eliminated the inventory allowance and changed the investment tax credit. Those four items are contributing factors to the figures which the Hon. Member has mentioned in the course of his question. We have acted in these areas and we are going to act again in the future.

NEED FOR TAX REFORM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Could the Minister of Finance explain why he is not prepared to take measures with respect to companies that are making profits—and there are 80,000 of them—and why he is not prepared to promise there will be some action in his next budget in February, instead of following his party's policy of deferment? Both the Auditor General and Canadian taxpayers agree on the need for immediate tax reform.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member put his question without having listened to the answer I gave to his first question.

• (1425)

He did not listen. He is not listening. I have said time and time again that we have acted and addressed, in part, the problems that he has raised. We have introduced this comprehensive tax reform proposal to continue the good work we have already been doing.

Mr. Gauthier: Raising taxes mostly.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Members on the other side are critical of the good work we have been doing—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

BUSINESS TRANSFER TAX INQUIRY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister all but announced that the Government will introduce a new form of sales tax which he calls the Business Transfer Tax. Canadians can expect to pay a major increase in sales tax through that new tax. What is the use of putting a few pennies into their front pockets by reducing personal income tax if you are going to take a lot more out of their back pockets by means of this new sales tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I guess we will have to get used to this distortion. When we have something as complex and as comprehensive as tax reform, it is very easy to pick and choose, to cherrypick those things which are going to distort the whole purpose of tax reform. I said in my comments this morning that we are going to increase the tax load on corporations. I also said that we are going to expand on the very progressive element of tax reform that we announced in the last Budget, namely, the refundable low-income sales tax credit. Those are very important parts of tax reform and I ask the Hon. Member not to distort the issue by ignoring those very positive elements.

PORT-CARTIER PRISON CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It concerns the awarding of contracts at Port-Cartier. Yesterday in the House the Minister said: "The usual call to tender procedure was followed in this case". In view of the fact that the Treasury Board guideline, Article 310, Section 8, very clearly states that sole source contracts can only be given where there is a pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, will the Minister now retract his statement of yesterday and admit that no tender was issued in the case of property management and the preliminary site plan, and admit to the House that the rules were not followed as required by Treasury Board?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of withdrawing what I said yesterday. In fact, I may inform Hon. Members that to the best of my knowledge, all the criteria set by Treasury Board were met in awarding contracts for the Port-Cartier prison.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER WITHDRAW STATEMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, since this morning the Auditor General said publicly that he did not think there was a pressing emergency, in referring to the construction of a prison at Port-Cartier, will the Minister finally admit that the action taken by him and his colleagues goes against the rules of his Department and decide to withdraw what he said yesterday in this House, since there has been a very clear breach of the rules?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly, I was asked three questions. The answers are as follows: No, no and no!

FINANCE

PAYMENT OF TAXES BY CORPORATIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On repeated occasions the Minister has taken great credit for how the Government has plugged up the various tax loopholes. Will he give us assurances that one-quarter of the most profitable companies in Canada today are paying their fair share in taxes, instead of paying no taxes at all, like in 1983? Are they paying taxes today?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can read the statistics as well as I can. We have said that one of the key objectives of this tax reform is to make sure that profitable corporations are paying their fair share of tax. I look forward to the support of the Hon. Member in that objective.

REQUEST FOR EARLY LEGISLATION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I will give the Minister the assurance and total support if he brings in legislation in his next Budget. Why wait for 1988 and 1989? Why not introduce such measures in the next Budget to make certain that all corporations making more than $25 million in profit a year pay their fair share? I will give him that assurance. Why not bring it down in his next Budget rather than wait for 1988?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member listened to the answer that I gave twice to his colleague. We have already acted. We acted in October of 1984, in May of 1985, in July of 1985, in February of 1986, and I think it was July of 1986. Surely the Hon. Member can recognize that steps have been taken to deal with the problem we inherited from the previous Government. We have taken action and the results will show up very clearly.

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Minister in answering questions put by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston continues to contradict and challenge the competence of the Auditor General of Canada. Does the Minister not realize that, as recently as this morning, the Auditor General reconfirmed the finding contained in his report where he said that the decision to build the institution at Port-Cartier, instead of at Drummondville, cannot be justified on the basis of need?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is the question?

Mr. La Salle: It's the same question.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am a little at a loss. I would like to know what the question is.

An Hon. Member: There was no question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to repeat my first question since the Minister was not listening.

Mr. Dingwall: Typical of the Tories—

Mr. Tobin: Does the Minister not realize—

Mr. Dingwall: And the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Tobin: —that in answering questions put by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston he continues today to challenge and contradict the competence of the Auditor General, who, as recently as this morning, reconfirmed his—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member put his question? The Minister has asked that the Hon. Member put his question again. Would the Hon. Member put the question?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister could not understand my question when I put it fully last time. I thought I had to repeat it fully.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Come on. Order.

Mr. Crosbie: Ask the question, if you have one.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Tobin: How can the Minister say—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What's the question?

Mr. Tobin: —he is not contradicting the Auditor General—

An Hon. Member: Joe who?

Mr. Tobin: —when the Auditor General again today said the decision to build the institution at Port-Cartier cannot be justified on the basis of need?

An Hon. Member: Joe who?

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, I can give a very short and simple answer to my hon. friend. I am not contradicting the Auditor General, I never have, and I am not, here today. I am accepting the report he gave—

Mr. Gauthier: Sit down while you're ahead.

Mr. Kelleher: —in which he showed a surplus of 30 protective custody beds.

Ms. Copps: You are gone.

Mr. Gauthier: Going.

An Hon. Member: Gone.

Mr. Kelleher: I agree with that. But it includes Port-Cartier. If you take that away, there is a very large deficit, hence the need for Port-Cartier.

Mr. Tobin: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: My question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

Mr. Tobin: If the Minister is asleep and not here today, do I have to suffer? He should take a wake-up pill.

TRADE

UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SURTAX

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): The Government claims that a U.S. free trade agreement will solve problems like the new customs surtax which has been imposed on us. Is the Minister aware that the only country to have a free trade agreement with the United States, that is, Israel, has also been zapped with this tax? Does that not completely demolish the Minister's arguments?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that it reinforces our argument, particularly since we are each other's largest trading partner. I may point out, as the Hon. Member has himself, that this move by the U.S. affects all U.S. trading partners. That is why we are taking it to the GATT Council on Monday.

CANADIAN RESPONSE TO LUMBER TARIFF

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister go to Boston and say the lumber attack, the tariff on lumber, is an attack on our sovereignty and yet take action only through the U.S. courts and the U.S. appeal system? Why are there no strong Canadian moves to try to counter this tariff?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I have not had a chance—and I welcome the opportunity the Hon. Member has given me—to point out that the stand taken to fight the softwood lumber tariff was a stand decided on by all 10 Canadian provinces, including the four provinces affected, by the IWA, who had representation at our meeting this week, by the industry spokesman, and by the federal Government. So the answer to the Hon. Member's question is simply that the stance we have chosen to adopt is supported 100 per cent by all the parties involved.

FINANCE

SALES TAXES—EFFECT ON DISPOSABLE INCOME

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This morning the Minister spoke of relying more on sales tax revenue in order to reduce personal income tax rates. Since the Government has raised sales taxes three times in 18 months and Canadians are paying $3.5 billion more a year in sales taxes as a result, will the Minister tell the House why Canadians should look forward to lower income tax rates and more take home pay if it only means the Government is going to tax away their disposable income through higher sales tax and a broader sales tax base?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the question the Hon. Member has just put is almost identical to one which was just asked by the real Opposition, the New Democratic Party.

What I would ask the Hon. Member to consider when she asks the question, is the importance of the low income refundable sales tax credit which is an integral part of the reform of the sales tax itself.

PERSONAL TAXES—REQUEST FOR ROLLBACK

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister speaks of low-income Canadians whose personal taxes will be rising 27 per cent over the next two years as a result of his last two Budgets. Does the Minister intend to roll back those increases? Is that included in the concept of fairness he spoke of this morning?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I include in my concept of fairness is the increase in the child tax credit, the acceleration of the payment of the child tax credit, the introduction of the low income sales tax credit to which I just referred, the movement of $100 million to help people who are on welfare now to get back into the job market. All of these questions related to taxation are going to be included in the review because it is comprehensive tax reform. We are not going to pick and choose. We are not going to identify just those areas the Hon. Member would like to pick out and try to embarrass us on.

The whole point is to look at the broad question of tax reform and the balance. It is the balance which is important here.

INSURANCE

LIABILITY INSURANCE—REQUEST REINSURANCE MARKET BE ORGANIZED

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Although insurance is primarily a provincial responsiblity, there is a liability insurance crisis facing Canadians and all of us are concerned. Will the Minister agree to take a leadership role in solving this problem and help to organize a reinsurance market in Canada?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for raising this very important issue. I sympathize with the problem. I want to say that I feel it is very important that all Canadians have affordable insurance.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Hurrah!

Mr. Cassidy: What is the Government's position?

Mr. Hockin: Not only do we have Bill C-8 before the House, which is in place to strengthen the solvency of the industry in the long term, but in the short term—yesterday, for example, and today at noon—I have been meeting constantly with members of the industry—

Ms. Copps: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

UNITED STATES IMPORT SURTAX—PROVISIONS OF EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT ACT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. When the United States last imposed protectionist laws against Canada in 1971, this country passed an act called the Employment Support Act which at that time safeguarded 22,000 jobs against U.S. import surcharges. Will the Minister now use this law to protect the workers who are about to be laid off in Canada's lumber industry?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I undertake to examine the law in question to see if it is appropriate.

LUMBER INDUSTRY LAY-OFFS AT THUNDER BAY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister could tell the House and the workers in the lumber industry what specifically the Minister is going to do to assist, for example, the 20 per cent of the workforce in Thunder Bay in the lumber industry who are to be laid off on November 3. What action will the Minister and the Government be taking on their behalf?

• (1440)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Government is taking action in concert with the provinces, the industry, and the union to seek to reverse this preliminary decision. It is a preliminary decision. The process allows for verification of the facts as presented. All the parties to the dispute have decided to seek to reverse the decision when it is finally handed down some time in December.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT EXISTS TO REDUCE NUMBER OF FRANCOPHONE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board and concerns the decision of the RCMP to lower the percentage of French-speaking officers from 20 to 14 per cent. In his reply on October 16, the Minister said the following, as reported on page 428 of Hansard:

—discussions that never received the approval of the Treasury Board or Cabinet.

Does the Minister know whether there has been an agreement in principle between the management of the RCMP and the Secretariat of the Treasury Board on this policy to reduce the proportion of French-speaking personnel from 20 to 14 per cent?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has said, and I believe that he quoted accurately what I said a few days ago, there have been discussions between officials of the RCMP and officials of my Department to try to agree on lowering the target for francophone members of the RCMP. As I said at the time, this agreement or discussion between officials has not received the approval of the Treasury Board required for it to become Government policy. I can assure the House that we shall want to review such a decision very closely because we have no intention of relaxing our efforts to strengthen the francophone presence in the Canadian Public Service.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATIONS CONCERNING LETTER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, if there has been no agreement in principle, and the Minister used the words "agreement" and "discussion", I think that we should have a clarification of the terms employed. How can the Minister explain the correspondence exchanged June 13 between the Commissioner of the RCMP, Mr. Simmonds, and the Special Advisor of the Treasury Board, Mr. Aquilina, in which the following was said:

[English]

Since it was agreed, at the January 10th meeting, that it would be to our mutual advantage to formalize the agreements reached—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this looks like a rather firm agreement in principle to me. How can the Minister explain this letter?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Very simply, Mr. Speaker. There are discussions daily between the officials of various Departments. If the Hon. Member wants to have an answer, he should at least give me an opportunity to reply. Such decisions and discussions occur regularly, but they are not discussions among elected representatives in a position to make Government decisions. There has been no Government decision which could weaken the efforts of this Government as concerns official languages.

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES LEGISLATION ON CANADIAN GRAIN GROWERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister of Agriculture. The Institute of Agrologists in its farm task force report in Ontario has estimated that the harm done to Canadian grain growers due to the U.S. Farm Bill will be in excess of $4 billion this year, a figure similar to that which was arrived at a month or so ago by the Prairie Pools. Given the Government's stated policy of consultation with farm groups and provincial Governments on emergency aid, why has the Government arbitrarily picked the $1 billion figure as a limit to which it will go in terms of assistance when it knows that more than $4 billion will be required?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the study to which the Hon. Member refers. Indeed, I have seen two or three other studies and calculations. We do not run over a cliff or head off into the sunset by $3 billion or $4 billion. The $4 billion figure was arrived at by making a direct comparison of the support American farmers receive from Washington with the support Canadian farmers receive from both federal and provincial sources.

As I have said before, the fact of the matter is that it would be totally and completely irresponsible for any elected public official, regardless at what level of government he or she may be in, to suggest—indeed, to mislead—Canadian farmers to believe that we in Canada have the financial resources to take on Washington. The truth of the matter is we do not. Farmers understand that.

COMPENSATION FOR FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since bank depositors with over $60,000 were given 100 per cent compensation about a year ago by the Government, can the Minister explain why farmers are only being given about one-quarter of what their sustained losses will be?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will say again that if the Hon. Member were to examine the record he would see that this is the largest single farm-aid package ever delivered by any Government in the history of our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: We have to recognize that agriculture is a joint and shared responsibility. I want to compliment the provinces for the contributions they have made. I hope that when they establish their priorities they will be in a position to add supplementary funds to this contribution.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

SENIOR MANAGEMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology who, in the House yesterday, threatened and questioned the integrity of senior management of the National Research Council by saying:

> I have offered to intervene personally for the employees wherever I can, but I cannot give the same kind of assurance to some of the senior management who have fed the Hon. Member some of this information which is less than truthful.

I ask the Minister to withdraw immediately this threat, and confirm that he has complete confidence in the integrity and ability of senior management of the National Research Council.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Hon. Member admitted that some of the testimony he adduced in the House did not coincide with the facts. What he is telling me now is that perhaps he twisted the facts and that he received accurate information.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER APOLOGIZE TO MANAGEMENT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I again ask the Minister to apologize to the senior management of the National Research Council and to withdraw the threat and the comments that he made yesterday regarding the integrity of senior management of the NRC. Can the Minister unequivocally confirm that public servants have the duty to provide all Members of Parliament with factual information about the activities of government?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is precisely what I had in mind when I made comments about the testimony that had been adduced in the debate. I will review what I said yesterday. If I said anything that could be harmful or that could impugn the motives of the senior management of the NRC then, of course, I will apologize.

FISHERIES

ALLEGATIONS OF ILLEGAL BLACK MARKET FISHERY IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Allegations have been made that thousands of tonnes of groundfish—between 30 per cent and 50 per cent above and beyond federal quota—have been caught, landed, processed, and sold in the U.S. market. Can the Minister confirm whether such a black market fishery exists and is threatening the health of the stocks?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I tell the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso that there is no evidence of any black market fishery in the Province of Nova Scotia. I have examined the basis of calculation on which the provincial Department of Fisheries makes this allegation and I find that it is seriously in error. While there will always be some modest degree of misreporting in the fishery, most fishermen do report their landings accurately since they know that this is the ticket to their own future. Furthermore, they know that the law requires accurate reporting.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING TEST RANGE IN QUEBEC—IMPACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): The Minister of National Defence being absent, Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Acting Minister.

Is the Minister aware that the people in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean region have been trying for the past three and a half years to express to the Government their concern about the setting-up in their region of a test range for F-18 aircrafts?

Does the Minister realize that the impact study carried out by the Department of National Defence has totally ignored the social and economic criteria raised by the citizens of that region?

What is the Government planning to do to meet the concerns of these people?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question as notice and bring it to the attention of the Minister of National Defence. From my previous incarnation, I can say that we had a process in place of working very closely with the people of that region. I know that the Member of Parliament from that region was very closely involved and things were going along smoothly. I am surprised to hear the representation of the Hon. Member but I will ensure that my colleague is made aware of it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood. One short supplementary.

QUESTIONS RAISED BY LOCAL RESIDENTS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, why has the Government failed to respond to the questions raised by the people in the area since last April, questions brought to the Government by the Quebec Inter-Ministerial Committee, on the test range? Will the Government stop the tests until—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Ms. McDonald: —the coming inquiry—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, I will bring the representation of the Hon. Member to the attention of the Minister. From my experience, I think the tone indicated by the Hon. Member is inappropriate. There is a great deal of co-operation, and the people in the region are in fact enthusiastic about having that test range there because of the jobs and economic benefit it brings.

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree that when the Minister of State and former Minister of Public Works said of the Auditor General that he doubts his capacity, the Minister in fact called into question the competence and integrity of the Auditor General of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not calling into question the competence of the Auditor General. What is creating a haze over the integrity of the Auditor General is the jargon and distortion that we are getting from that side of the House.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SERPENT RIVER BAND—CHEMICAL CONTAMINATION OF RESERVE LANDS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the Minister knows, the Auditor General's Report criticized severely the capacities of his Department in the area of land management. I would like to refer the Minister to a specific example, that of the Serpent River Band. For 23 years this band has had a chemical soup brewing on its reserve because no clean-up clause was included. Will the Minister guarantee to the band that the clean up of that 25-year-old problem will begin next spring?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to inform the Hon. Member that something that has gone on as long as the chemical waste disposal on the Serpent River Band land is now under discussion with the leadership of the band. I have had discussions with the leadership as well as with Rio Algom. I have had discussions with the operating Vice-President of Rio Algom, and discussions between Rio Algom and the band are taking place now on the use of Rio Algom for a dump site. These discussions are ongoing.

START OF CLEAN-UP OPERATION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that assurance, however limited. Will the cleanup begin next year and will the Minister guarantee that the funds for the cleanup will not be taken from other accounts designed to benefit the Indian people of Ontario?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that there are dollars allocated within a region. I will have to review that, but before a commitment can be made we must have the agreement of Rio Algom to use its site for disposal.

DISASTERS

CHERNOBYL REACTOR ACCIDENT—DISPERSAL OF CESIUM

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Recent American laboratory studies show that the Chernobyl nuclear accident emitted as much long-term radiation in the form of cesium into the world's air, topsoil, and water, as all the nuclear atmospheric tests and bombs ever exploded. What is the Government doing to monitor and protect the people of Canada from this potential danger?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, regarding the testing done by the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in California, it is the Department's assessment that that is a credible laboratory. In terms of the study, we have not assessed whether or not that release would be on site at source or would be affecting Canada, but I can tell the Hon. Member what is happening in Canada. Monitoring is taking place continuously. I can assure the Hon. Member and all Canadians that, as recently as this week, our monitoring showed that we do not have any reason to believe that the fallout in Canada is not within acceptable levels as we indicated earlier closer to the time of the Chernobyl accident.

ENERGY

INDUSTRY'S LOSS OF JOBS IN ALBERTA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and concerns the desperate situation of the petroleum industry. Almost 50,000 jobs have already been lost in the industry this year and it is projected that 20,000 more jobs will be lost this winter. The Minister has refused to participate with Alberta in a cash flow stabilization program for the industry and particularly for small producers. Could the Minister indicate how many more thousands of jobs have to be lost before the federal Government will act by assisting Alberta in establishing such a program?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the employment related problems which Canadians are experiencing in the energy industry, especially in Alberta, and I sympathize with them.

However, there can be no solution to the energy crisis without a stabilization of the market as such. The problem is resulting from an oil glut which affects prices. The Government has already provided this industry with billions of dollars in tax money, something for which the industry has commended the Government.

[English]

SYNCRUDE APPLICATION FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could be a little more specific. Syncrude has asked the federal Government to provide a guarantee agreement of $175 million to see a 20,000-barrel-per-day increase in production. Is the Government considering this, and is it willing to provide this assistance in view of the increased production and thousands of jobs it would create?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have ongoing discussions with the provinces, especially Alberta, concerning the energy issues. Last Monday, I met personally with the Alberta Minister; although we have not addressed directly these issues, they are part of the discussions we are pursuing with the provinces.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

DOMESTIC PRICE OF WHEAT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board.

Early in August the Cabinet set a new price range for domestically consumed wheat. At present the price being paid is at the minimum of that range. Can the Minister inform the House when the new domestic price will be set and if it will be set at the $10 level which was unanimously recommended by the special committee of the House?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Government presently has the recommendations of the committee under consideration. The Hon. Member will know that the price range that is presently being charged for wheat used domestically is the new price range. When the Government reaches a decision on what adjustments will be made, we will make the announcement.

RECOMMENDATION THAT PRICE OF BREAD BE MONITORED

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, when the increase recommended by the committee which the Government has suggested it would follow is put into place, will the Government or Consumer Affairs monitor the price of bread, cake and so on, as was also recommended by the special committee?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that that was one of the things recommended by the parliamentary committee. The Hon. Member should also know that this is a very complex issue and that the Government is considering all factors, including how best to treat not only producers but consumers and processors as well. There are many jobs at stake and that is also a major consideration of the Government.

ENERGY

EFFECT OF NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM ON ALBERTA

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I would like him to inform the House if it were the case that the National Energy Program had never been put in place, Alberta would have some $56 billion more, there would be no need for a stabilization fund, and the unemployment experienced today would not in fact be taking place?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have here a similar statement from the Vice President of Texaco Canada Resources. I do not want to read this statement, but I think the Opposition would be well advised to do so; the statement is along the same lines. The Government policy meets the needs of the oil industry.

EMPLOYMENT

ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM FOR OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. On February 26 in the Budget of the Minister of Finance, it was announced that a program for older worker adjustments would be put in place to replace the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. The Minister informed the House which provinces had consummated a deal with the Government of Canada. Would the Minister inform the House what plans he has for the remaining provinces in order to get them onside?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as all Hon. Members know, this program was announced in the February Budget. The sum of $125 million was put toward this particular program. Negotiations are ongoing with all provinces. Personally, I have met with all my provincial colleagues, and officials are still fine-tuning the agreements that will hopefully be signed soon.

POSITION OF PROVINCES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): My brief supplementary is to the same Minister. I certainly do not doubt his sincerity. Would the Minister confirm that the reason for the rejection by the various provinces across the country and the delay that they are taking is as a result of the Government of Canada's wishes that the provincial legislators pay the lion's share of the money with regard to the older workers' program? If not, would he explain to the House what plans he specifically has in place to establish a national program for older workers' adjustment?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): There has been no rejection by any province as yet, and I do not expect that there will be any rejection. We are still negotiating.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PRIVATIZATION INQUIRY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Privatization. Could she tell us whether her Department, any other Department of the Government, branch, or Crown corporation, has commissioned a survey to be made across Canada about the privatization and the selling of shares of Air Canada and Canadian National Railways? I urge the Minister to be careful about her answer.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the question has to do with polling on privatization of Crown corporations. To my knowledge, there may have been some polling done but I cannot think off-hand of any recent surveys of the kind the Hon. Member is describing.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), one question please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CF-18 MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR FULL DISCLOSURE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister the following question: In view of rumours that have been around that tenders for the CF-18 maintenance contract have been tampered with, could the Deputy Prime Minister give us the assurance that when the awarding of the contract is announced, the whole matter will be cleared up, that all information will be given as to how tenders were processed?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that tenders have absolutely not been tampered with. The tender now before Treasury Board is identical in every respect other than the extension of the tendering date from August 31st to October 31st. That is the only change, but the tender itself is identical to the original one submitted to Treasury Board, and it is on that basis that a decision will be made. Moreover, when that decision is made, I will be very pleased to explain the Government's reasons, why that decision was taken in Canada's best interest.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY REMARK

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises from a remark by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) during Question Period. I do not have the "blues" in front of me. If I understood him correctly, the Minister of Finance said that I had asked my question in order to embarrass him. Imputing motives has long been considered unparliamentary. I hope that the Minister would see fit to withdraw his remark.

In view of the very positive remarks that were made at the beginning of this session by Hon. Members on both sides about wanting to have an improvement in civilized behaviour in the House, I do not think it fits in with that spirit when a serious question from an Hon. Member is treated in this fashion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had to leave the Chamber. I will certainly check the statement and consult with the Hon. Minister. If there is a correction, or a point of order to be made, I am sure that he will do it, being the gentleman that he is and having the respect that he has for this institution.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he will give us the statement of business he intends to call for the rest of this week and for the coming week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): We will continue this afternoon with the seventh appointed day for the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Friday will be the eighth and final day of the Address in Reply. Monday has been designated as an allotted day. On Tuesday we will continue with Bill C-12, the amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise Hon. Members that there is now a ten minute question and comment period on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, during his speech, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) indicated his excitement about the recent coal report and pointed out the values that would be rendered to Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Ontario. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he can give us some indication of what will be the cost to the hydro consumers of Ontario if the coal report is put into effect.

Mr. Angus: I would like to thank my colleague for his question. In terms of the consumer in Ontario, assuming that the cost of either using western Canadian coal or the scrubber option with the United States coal is applied totally to Ontario Hydro's consumers, then we can see that with the scrubber option, the additional annual costs will be $39 per household. With the western Canadian coal, it will be $79 per household. That is predicated on the consumer alone picking up the tab. Hon. Members who were here this morning will remember that I pointed out the economic benefits to a large part of Canada, for example, $444 million of new income to the Province of British Columbia; $671 million more for the Province of Alberta; $12 million more for the Province of Saskatchewan; $301 million for the Province of Ontario.

• (1510)

Because of the wide-ranging benefits of the Province of Ontario and Ontario Hydro deciding to use western Canadian coal, I believe there is a legitimate argument that the federal Government, as the single clearing house for all provinces, should participate financially. The increased cost to Ontario Hydro customers would be less than it would otherwise be, at the very least, or in fact would be negated by such assistance.

Eastern Canadian provinces will benefit from reduced acid rain emissions. In that event we would not see the destruction of forests in Quebec and in Atlantic Canada which we are now experiencing. From the long-term point of view it makes sense for the federal Government to participate financially in this project.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) that I appreciated his comments in respect of the use of low-sulphur coal. He and I share a common objective which I am sure is shared by many other parliamentarians. It would be to the advantage of all Canadians, our balance of payments, western Canada, and our environment to use it in central Canadian industrial regions.

I was not perplexed with the latter part of the Hon. Member's speech. In fact I agreed considerably with it. However, I was perplexed with the earlier part of his speech when he said that the government Party was preoccupied with debt. He indicated that we needed more postal services and better VIA Rail services, both of which are desirable objectives. Does he not see anything wrong with a situation where we pay $1 out of every $3 in taxes to pay the interest on the present debt? Is the debt of no concern to the New Democratic Party? Can we just allow it to grow and grow, bearing in mind that today the payment on that debt is the largest single cost to Government?

It is correct that we all have wish lists. There are more things about which we can dream and want to do. However, is there a belief that when one is in debt, one borrows one's way out of it? How can the New Democratic Party take a position that we do not have to be concerned about the debt, that we can just borrow more money? How can the Hon. Member say that there is no economic accountability in that regard? How does he justify that?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments relating to the coal question and his question relating to the deficit. It is important for me to acknowledge today the work of one of my predecessors, the former Hon. Member for Kootenay East—Revelstoke, Sid Parker. He worked very hard to focus attention on the need to use western Canadian coal in eastern Canadian markets.

I take the Hon. Member's question concerning the debt in all seriousness. I will use the example of VIA. Currently taxpayers are spending somewhere in the neighbourhood of $500 million per year trying to keep that ancient rolling-stock working. The Hon. Member knows that it freezes up in the winter in his part of the country just as much as it does in mine.

The reports of respected people in the field indicate that there will be a pay-back in five years to seven years of the expenditure for new rolling-stock. If we make such an expenditure, it is not a giveaway or a pet project. It is an investment in a revitalized VIA system. It is also an investment in jobs in a number of parts of the country. Both investments will have ongoing returns for taxpayers or the Treasury of the country. By building or purchasing those cars, we will not have a half billion dollar burden each year on the federal Treasury in five years to seven years.

There are more ways to look at the matter than just at the expenditure of public funds. We on this side of the House look at it as an investment, particularly an investment in human resources of which there is an abundance in the country.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan made a good point. He talked about an investment in VIA Rail as something which may make money in the future.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It will.

Mr. Malone: I hear the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). I agree that there are many things which can be done, but surely when a business principle is applied, be it on a farm, a small business, or any other business in Canada, innumerable investments can be made which will return money to the business or to the country. However, a business would go broke if it borrowed on every one of its investments and got its debt load out of balance with its capacity for a return. It is an investment, but our present debt is such that it now takes $1 out of every $3 in taxes to pay the interest on the debt; it does not buy down the debt.

How does the Hon. Member square that with the notion that it does not matter how fast we run with the debt or that we can borrow on anything?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is reading into my comments a number of things which I did not say. Nevertheless, let me respond to how he sees my attitude and the attitude of my Party regarding the debt. We recognize—and I will use a business phrase—that one has to spend money to make money. There is the economic generator of public spending; there is no question about it. When we invest by creating jobs to get more people to work, we have more people making a decent living and more people paying taxes. If we add to that the corporations about which we have been talking today that have been ripping off society by not paying their fair share, it is one darn good way to reduce the deficit. We should get them to start paying their fair share of running the country.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to ask the Hon. Member a question relating to western coal. Ever since I was 10 years old living in the coal-mining district of Drumheller, I have heard talk about attempts to get low-sulphur western Canadian coal into the Ontario market. I realize the difficulties. It does involve hundreds of miles of travel. I also remember the late Jesse Gouge, a prominent coal operator in Drumheller. In fact, he opened some of its first mines. He advocated the use of unit trains to get coal into the Ontario market.

In adding up the costs and the benefits, I wonder whether we are forgetting about two major items. If the low-sulphur coal fields of Alberta were opened, hundreds of jobs would be created in those coal-mines. As well, scores of jobs would be created in the railways to bring the coal to Ontario. All of these people would be paying taxes in that event.

In addition, one of the costs we are paying, because we use high sulphur American coal, is the thousands of dollars to clean up acid rain which would not exist if we had used low sulphur western coal for the last 20 years or 25 years. That is an important item. We should use Canadian coal and save the country from the acid rain caused by high-sulphur American coal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) on a short rebuttal, please.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, there is no rebuttal to the Hon. Member. Once again I find myself in the position of agreeing with him. We sit together on the Standing Committee on Transport, and I am sure we will work very hard on this particular project.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take part in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Three weeks ago, the Government set forth its broad objectives for future action, and four fundamental factors will form the basis for its action. First, the imperative need to maintain among Canadians the same spirit of reconciliation that has pervaded our Government's relation with the provinces; second, the continuing pursuit of economic renewal, without which no major national projects can be realized; third, expanding Canada's international role which should be a reflection of our development as a nation, and finally, the advent of greater social justice which is both the precondition for, and the logical result of, an enlightened democracy.

As the Minister for External Relations, I am responsible for integrating these objectives in our development assistance policy and our relations with other countries.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I believe that durable national reconciliation cannot be achieved by intergovernmental exchanges alone. It will be achieved by Canadians all over this country, working together to improve the well-being of the community, both here and abroad. And I am convinced, and it is one of my priorities as the Minister responsible for the Canadian International Development Agency, that we could involve even more Canadians in our international activities. This implies, first of all, that we make CIDA better known here in Canada, by expanding our information and public involvement programs and also by making the effort to meet people in their own communities.

Recently, I started on a round of visits across Canada, and I intend to meet as many groups as I can that might be interested in our humanitarian activities.

• (1520)

[English]

I recently visited the Province of Saskatchewan where I was delighted to find that the leadership role historically assumed by that province in international development is still a reality. As I progress across Canada I will be comforted to know that even in those regions where difficult economic circumstances, such as agricultural prices in Saskatchewan weigh heavily on the livelihood of our citizens, the traditional generosity of Canadians remains one of the basic virtues.

I was in Toronto at the beginning of this week where I had the pleasure of meeting representatives of the Canadian Filipino community to explain CIDA's important new commitments in favour of the Government of Corazon Aquino.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadians have a right to know how international development funds are used, and I intend to give them that information in the clearest possible terms. But I also want to make CIDA better known to Canadians and thus attract new recruits who will share our commitment to development assistance for the Third World. To the question: Have we done eveything we could to recruit the maximum number of Canadians and obtain the maximum amount of resources to help three-quarters of the population of this earth in its fight against poverty? I think the answer must be: No.

Granted, the generosity of Canadians is well known, and our efforts to help the hungry in Africa are a recent example.

Before the General Assembly of the United Nations yesterday, I described the ambitious program developed by Canada for helping Africa. I stated, in no uncertain terms, our desire to see the international community stop talking and start taking action. Nevertheless, I remain convinced, and this will be my second priority at CIDA, that we can recruit more allies for our war against underdevelopment.

It is the only way to come to grips with new emergencies as they occur. Excessive urbanization would be an example.

Among the groups which have not always been given their rightful place I would single out women and young people. The integration of women in all our assistance projects is a matter of social justice in the Third World, just as it is here. In the Third World it happens to be a basic requisite for the development of many societies where women are the unacknowledged or ridiculed driving force behind community progress.

We also seek to establish closer links with another sector of our population which has not always enjoyed full freedom to play an important role, and I am referring to young people. My colleague the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) and I will work together to set up new programs under which young people will find it easier to participate in our endeavours to help Third World countries and to promote the interests of Francophones.

Our commitment to strive for a more egalitarian society in this country stems from the premise that, without adopting a paternalistic and dogmatic approach, we must first show full respect for our basic values among those we want to help. Canada's development effort must continue to be inspired by respect for human rights, so that our assistance may never contribute to perpetuating elsewhere the kind of injustices we do not tolerate here.

As well, Mr. Speaker, we will try to find new ways to co-operate with business. For example, our private sector may indeed have a definite and constructive impact on the private sector in developing countries. Nor should we underestimate the dynamism of the private sector and the significance of its innovative contribution.

As always, non-government organizations play a support role in CIDA, so central that they can hardly be considered as new partners. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, we rank first among donor countries with respect to the NGO participation rate. Our NGOs have been given responsibility for implementing major programs. Just recently, for instance, we asked one of them to manage the Canadian universal immunization program designed for developing countries of the Commonwealth and those of the French-speaking nations. Our NGOs will also play a leading role in the new aid program for the Philippines which I unveiled in Toronto on Monday.

When it comes to bilateral assistance, we co-operate with the various NGOs even more closely than before. There has been noticeable improvement in this respect since we first came to office.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced, and I am determined to prove, that we can extend even more the contribution of non-government organizations and all voluntary associations to our activities. We shall also ask for the participation of organized agencies which have not yet used their abilities to provide assistance to the Third World, such as the municipalities. In other words, we shall explore every avenue of co-operation because Governments alone will never be able to solve the problem of under-development.

We can however hope that concerted action by all sectors of industrialized societies will have a major impact on the tragic situation which still exists in the Third World.

We shall never forget that our major partners in the fight against under-development are those we want to help, and they should be able to become, with our assistance, the artisans of their own economic development.

[English]

It is also my belief, Mr. Speaker, that now is the time to take stock of our foreign aid programs. CIDA will be 20 years old soon. The last comprehensive review of development assistance programs was done in 1975. Since then, the world has not been sitting still. On the contrary, it has changed at a quickening pace.

• (1530)

I am convinced that it is high time we take a fresh look at the policies shaping our foreign aid program so we can maximize their efficiency. At the end of the last session the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations tabled its report. The Government will be responding shortly to its recommendations. The Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will also be submitting an important report on the international financial system and the difficult problems for developing countries concerning debt repayment. The Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade is presently conducting an extensive study of our foreign aid. I will of course give the fullest consideration to the conclusions of these parliamentary committees. It is also my intention to seek advice beyond the precincts of Parliament and to elicit the largest possible contribution to our reflections from the Canadian public.

This exercise must not be seen as just administrative housecleaning. It is our imperative duty in the light of human suffering to achieve the greatest possible efficiency in delivering aid.

[Translation]

During this Parliamentary session, Mr. Speaker, Canada will have an opportunity unique in its history to enhance its international influence.

Indeed, our country will successively host the Summit of francophone countries, the Summit of the Commonwealth and the Summit of industrialized countries.

If I may, I would like to speak further about the Francophone Summit where I had the honour of representing Canada with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in my capacity as Minister for External Relations.

I am indeed especially proud to remind this House that, had it not been for the historic vision and enlightened policies of our Prime Minister, this Summit would perhaps never have taken place.

As far as I am concerned, this is one of the best results of our initiatives to promote national reconciliation. Could anyone have imagined a few years ago that the Canadian and Quebec Governments would be able to organize jointly on our territory a meeting of the countries that have French as a common language, and that the First Ministers of Canada, Quebec and New Brunswick would agree on a harmonious Canadian participation in this new international forum?

The major role played by Canada at the first Francophone Summit last February in Paris is also the result of a judicious definition of our potential participation and of our expectations from this francophone forum. First of all, we want these meetings to provide an opportunity to exchange practical and profitable projects. For us, the Summit is not a dream come true. It is already a meeting of collaborators. We shall bring to it our share of precious knowledge and we expect to gain in return an enriching experience.

[English]

It is a happy coincidence that the meeting of the Commonwealth heads of state and government will also take place in Canada during the life of this Parliament. By hosting both the Francophone and Commonwealth Summits, Canada implicitly says something about the very special role it can play in today's world and tomorrow's. We are the only industrialized country that belongs to both of these important groups. Our recent strides toward national reconciliation are helping us to play a vigorous role in la Francophonie, and within the venerable Commonwealth we have recently shown new leadership, notably in the urgent matter of South Africa.

Canada's history owes a lot to France and England. How fitting it is that it is now recognized in the French-speaking and English-speaking countries of the world as a unique bridge between these two large families of nations.

[Translation]

As you see, Mr. Speaker, the coming year will be a great year for Canada on the international scene. I for one am very pleased that Canadians will have an opportunity, because of the three summits that will be held here, the Francophonie, the Commonwealth and the Industrialized Nations, to measure the full extent of this country's role within the world community.

I also welcome the coming opportunity to play host to our African friends, whether through the Francophonie or the Commonwealth meetings. As I said once again before the United Nations yesterday, our Government, after having responded positively to the critical situation in Africa last year, has no intention of reducing its help to that continent now that other subjects are making the headlines.

I have already said, Mr. Speaker, that I also want this new parliamentary session to give us an opportunity to refine our strategy for development assistance. So, to conclude, Mr. Speaker, let me assure this House that I will make every effort to develop the most effective assistance program possible and to conduct external relations that bring tangible results.

Canada's prestige is at stake, but more important still, millions of human beings in need are looking forward to it.

[English]

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister on her speech this afternoon. It touches many areas of real interest to me. I want to say how pleased I am with her announcement of special assistance for the Philippines. Having had the opportunity of visiting there earlier this year, I was certainly made very aware of the difficulties that country faces and how much they appreciated Canada's involvement and what the support our country can give them will mean to the new government of Mrs. Aquino. I know as well how it will be welcomed by the Filipino-Canadian community. Over the summer I had the opportunity of meeting with representatives of that community in Vancouver and they were really anxious to become involved and were eagerly looking forward to the announcement which the Minister made this week.

I want to come back to that in a moment, but I also want to say I was so pleased with the Minister's comments at the UN yesterday with respect to our involvement in Africa. Again having a special interest in that area, I am pleased to see that the Africa 2000 program is well under way. Of course, the third area is the focus on women and development. As I have had the opportunity of either travelling to some of the countries with which we are involved, or during the summer welcoming representatives from those countries at Expo, I have heard over and over again just how important that is. It is women in so many of the lesser-developed countries who are bearing the burden of poverty. If they are going to make advances in their economy, it is going to be so often the women who are going to do it. Whatever we can do to strengthen their role in these countries is vitally important.

With respect to Africa 2000, I still find that across the country there is a lack of understanding about what we are trying to do in Africa. I think it is important that there be some component of that program directed toward public education. I wonder if the Minister might comment on that and advise the House if there would be programs in this respect.

As to the Filipino assistance program, can she advise the House how Filipino-Canadians can become involved in the new program and what might be the appropriate kinds of assistance they could provide and what the next steps are going to be in the development and delivery of the new assistance program for the Philippines?

[Translation]

Mrs. Landry: Mr. Speaker, I sincerely thank the Hon. Member for her concern for the cause of development and also for her reference to the announcement I was pleased to make Monday in Toronto concerning the Philippines, for her concern for the Philippines community. I feel the Government's commitment was a gesture of support to Mrs. Aquino's new government, which has shown a positive commitment to her country's social and economic recovery. So the announcement we made was aimed at supporting Mrs. Aquino's policy.

• (1540)

The Canadian Philippine community was very pleased with our announcement. I told them that of course the program orientation was decided upon after a planning mission was sent to the Philippines in September, with a delegation made up of CIDA officials and representatives from the Philippine-Canadian community who met the Government, the NGO's and everyone concerned with the development of the Philippines. These people came back with certain priorities with which we will try to deal as quickly as possible.

We are conscious that at present the Philippines need some short-term assistance and we are therefore considering short-term and eventually long-term programs. We rely greatly of course on the support and contribution of Canadian groups of Philippine origin. We told them that we will keep in contact with them, that they can apply to the organization, to CIDA and that we would be pleased to develop jointly with them, and of course with the Philippine authorities programs, which will meet our commitments to the Philippines.

Therefore, I am quite pleased to indicate to this House today that we greatly rely on the contribution of the Canadian community of Philippine origin.

My dear colleague's second concern was related, I believe, to the Africa 2000 program. Africa 2000 is a program which we announced last spring and which was an additional commitment of our Government to Africa. This was a $150-million commitment for a 5-year period and we have asked more specifically for the assistance of the NGO's. A slice of $75 million has been allocated to the non-governmental organizations which are to develop and submit to us programs designed in keeping with our commitments to the needs of Africa.

Also, there is a whole development assistance program to foster women's integration.

My hon. colleague has also indicated her interests in the community of women; I am pleased therefore to repeat that within the framework of the Africa 2000 program, we have allocated an envelope of $25 million for the integration of women in the development. I should like to mention some of the commitments: $10 million to finance health-related projects; $2 million for the assistance program with the United Nations; $6 million for studies aimed at promoting university education among women. I think, therefore, that the Canadian Government has committed itself not only in words, but also in deeds by taking steps to favour the integration of women in the development.

Of course, you mentioned also how the program is and should be promoted throughout Canada. As I indicated a while ago, I am anxious, during my travelling from coast to coast, to inform the public about the Canadian International Development Agency. I refer to the various projects in which Canadians can participate, and I hope, through this initiative, to recruit new partners to help us develop our projects for Africa, in order to meet even more efficiently the urgent needs of Africans.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allocated for questions and comments is over. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) has the floor.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for allowing me to take part in this debate on the Speech from the Throne. Not long ago, on the afternoon of October 1, 1986, several experts used the expression "déjà-vu" to describe the last Throne Speech. Personally, I feel that the term "rehashed" fits better. Why? Because the Prime Minister had delayed by as much as a whole month the opening of the session to give his new Ministers the time to make their contributions to the Throne Speech. Yet, we have been hearing the same platitudes as in November 1984, at the opening of the first session, when we heard the promises made during the election campaign of the preceding summer. Today, Mr. Speaker, we can rightfully conclude that the more it changes, the more it is the same.

Mr. Speaker, we find in this nice little booklet, the Speech from the Throne opening the second session of the 33rd Parliament, an item which is not altogether new. One should not forget the Blue Paper of November 5, 1984, dealing with a new direction for economic recovery. The time has come for us to assess this economic recovery the Government keeps harping about in its Throne Speeches. In assessing those results, I would like to quote an article by Alain Dubuc in the September 6, 1986 issue of La Presse. This is what he says appropriately of those two years of Conservative administration:

> The same thing all over again. Economic growth: it is the best way of determining if the growth of the economy is adequate. Our economy grew by 3.3 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984, the last two years of the Liberal administration. In 1985, the growth rate slowed down to 4.5 per cent and should not exceed 3 per cent this year, as we are entering a slowdown phase. There has been no progress on that account.

This is Mr. Alain Dubuc, from La Presse, not me, speaking. And it is quite clear. In this economic renewal process, our economic growth is not going forward, but backward. Obviously, there is no progress.

But there is more, Mr. Speaker. In the same assessment, in that article of September 6, 1986, Mr. Dubuc writes, and I quote:

Inflation: Price increases had already been slowed down to 4 per cent in the Summer of 1984 when the Liberals were defeated. And no progress has been recorded since. Dollar: Our currency was worth 77.14 US cents in August 1984. It is now worth only 72 cents, after falling below 70 cents in last February.

I think, Mr. Speaker, you will correct me if I am wrong, but I think that presently it is below 72 cents, around 71½ cents.

Purchasing power: This is the measure of consumer prosperity. However, in 1985, while inflation increased by 4 per cent, salaries increased only by 3.5 per cent. The same trend seems to be prevailing this year. And while the purchasing power will therefore have decreased by 1 per cent, the tax burden imposed by the Federal Government will have increased by 23 per cent.

That is what the Conservative Government means by economic renewal, Mr. Speaker. Reducing the purchasing power of consumers.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has been boasting about massive investments since they took power. Let us see what Mr. Alain Dubuc says, and I quote:

Investments: Renewed confidence in businesses was going to be the key to the Conservative success. This excitement is usually reflected in the investments of the private sector.

Now they will increase by a mere 2.8 per cent this year, that is at a slower pace than the economy generally.

In the export field, Mr. Speaker, we know quite well that for several months our governments have been discussing free trade with the United States. And let me quote again from that report:

Exports: This other source of vitality for the Canadian economy, or foreign trade has also decreased. In 1984, our Canadian exports exceeded our imports by $20 billion. This year, that excess will be reduced to around $12 billion. As a result the balance of payment surplus which amounted to $2.5 billion two years ago could turn into a record deficit of $8 to $9 billion this year.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, the other very important factor of economic renewal in which the Conservative Government takes pride and for which it takes credit is job creation. Of course we have been told so many times in this House about the 500,000 jobs that have been created. That is the fact, and Mr. Dubuc indeed is not overlooking it. I quote him:

Job creation—This is where the Mulroney Government put its pride. From August 1984 to August 1986, 569 000 jobs have been created in Canada. However the figures seem to indicate this was done in one shot. Since the beginning of 1986, not one job has been created in Canada. There were 11,632,000 jobs in January; there are now 11,615,000, or 17,000 less than at the beginning of the year.

Mr. Speaker, that is the score, and I would like to add this to what Mr. Alain Dubuc stated on the matter of job creation, concerning the 569,000 jobs. Mr. Speaker—how could the Conservative Government create those 569,000 jobs? Mr. Speaker, the truth should be stated once and for all. How could they? We are all aware that before the Conservatives came to power, we Liberals had an employment program called Works Canada. It was a 52-week employment program. As a matter of course the Conservative Government abolished that program and created 26-week job creation programs. This means the same programs that used to create one job now created two. There are the figures. That is how they play with statistics, Mr. Speaker.

But in the end, after a year and a half, we see those programs no longer have the rollover needed, there are no new jobs created anymore. On the contrary, we have lost 17,000 during the first six months of 1986. That is the truth, Mr. Speaker.

And once again, on October 1st they come up with a speech on economic renewal. Mr. Speaker, I would not like to miss this opportunity, since this is Small Business Week in Canada. Last summer, I had the pleasure of travelling across the land, from Vancouver to Halifax, and meeting with people, businessmen and women who were concerned about small business development in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, during all that time, during those meetings, I was leading that Liberal task force on small businesses. People submitted that the time had come for the Government of whatever stripe, red, blue or green to stop the rhetoric on small business, to stop putting people to sleep with the suggestion that small business is the most wonderful thing in the world, and to start helping those who really need it.

I should like to tell Hon. Members how a Cornwall businessman defined small business when he appeared before our task force. I should like to quote him, if I may. This will take a few minutes, but I suggest we ought to reflect upon this definition of what is a real Canadian entrepreneur.

• (1550)

[English]

Today's small businessman is faced with overwhelming odds. He is faced with "Big Government" who legislate laws that govern every decision he makes and every action he takes. He has to know about labour laws, corporate laws, workmen's compensation laws, tax laws and I could go on and on. He is swamped by paper work, in order to satisfy the whims of every bureaucrat who administers and enforces these laws.

He also has to run his business, buy the products, wheel and deal prices, sell his product or service at a profit, meet ever increasing competition from larger big businesses, satisfy his bank manager, work long hours and all too often with very little left for himself. He is the head office, the bookkeeper, the buyer, the salesman. He is also on the front line, accessible to all, not only customers, but also the target of every charitable organization, sports club or service club who wish a sponsorship or a donation. Yet, you will find him coaching a minor hockey team, leading a charity drive, attending a service club or merchants' meeting and serving on a church or civic committee.

This is our average Canadian businessman or businesswoman and what are we doing for them today?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne contains one paragraph about small business, just one, and I want to quote it so everybody will remember it:

My Ministers will introduce programs to promote small business and entrepreneurial values. Included will be measures to improve procurement procedures, to strengthen the unsolicited proposals program for small companies and entrepreneurs, to increase technology tranfer from government laboratories, and to develop new initiatives to promote entrepreneurship among youth.

Here we go again, Mr. Speaker, words, more words, nothing but words! What a beautiful speech! But the Progressive Conservatives have been in office for two years now, so when are they going to start practicing what they preach? Hopefully they will not tell me that the capital gains tax exemption was meant for small business. It is not quite true, and statistics will bear me out, Mr. Speaker. It is happening in major cities, nothing but real estate speculation. If you are on the market for a house, the price has almost doubled. Why? Because of the capital tax exemption. How many jobs has this created? How many times did we point this out in the House?

Now, they are bragging about another pension reform involving the investment of pension funds in small business. Yet, at the same time, they announce that businessmen cannot invest their pension fund in their own business. Mr. Speaker, where is the logic in that? I have just given a definition of what is a small businessman in Canada. How could a municipal pension fund, administered by a board of directors, be invested in a convenience store when no control structure has been provided? That fund is the businessman. When he is gone, there is no business.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if he were allowed to use his pension fund, he could lower his bank loan, pay less interest and therefore expand and enlarge his business which would be less encumbered. But no. That request was made to the Minister of Finance on a number of times. He refuses because he fears that someone might take advantage of the situation and starts playing around. But how? He fears small business which creates the majority of jobs, and this was acknowledged yesterday in the Auditor General's report—actually it was just a press release Mr. Speaker, where it said: 'A tax credit of 225 millions dollars granted by Revenue Canada'. This means, Mr. Speaker, that through the Income Tax Act, tax credits are made legal. And they worry about the fact that small businessmen might invest their pension fund in their own business to create jobs. They refuse, they do not trust these businessmen; who knows they might try to play around with their income tax. It is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. It indicates that the Government does not trust Canadian men and women who are working an average of 16 or 18 hours a day on their business to earn a living, while paying out to large corporations millions of dollars in subsidies. Those are the facts. That is the economic recovery the Progressive Conservative Party has been talking about.

When I travelled this past summer with the Liberal task force on small businesses throughout Canada, I received a great many recommendations. I can assure the House that by the end of November, we will have prepared a preliminary report on this issue, contrary to this Government. We should remember that, Mr. Speaker. In January or February 1985, or in the spring of 1985, the previous Minister of State for Small Businesses announced a consultation from coast to coast. He travelled everywhere in this country to learn, because nowadays, we must pay our Ministers for them to learn. A Minister must be well educated and well prepared to administer his Department and suggest policies and programs to help the constituency of his Department. But for the past two years, Ministers have been learning. They have been learning every day. They set up commissions and task forces. As I was saying, he was travelling from coast to coast with an army of his officials, paid with taxpayers money, to find out what was the problem with small businesses and what would be the solution before suggesting policies. This is October, 1986. We have not yet received a report, preliminary, final or otherwise, on this ministerial task force, Mr. Speaker.

As for us, we did it without any budget nor public servant. We toured the country on our own money, and in late November we will publish a report and will put forward to Canadians some policies for small businesses.

That's the difference, Mr. Speaker, between the Conservatives and the Liberals. The Conservatives, after 20 years in opposition, came to power without any program, without any knowledge, without any vision, nothing, Mr. Speaker. And today Canadians are suffering the consequences. Some wonder why Canadians have lost confidence in this Government; the answer is very simple, Mr. Speaker. This Governement has no vision. It does not know where to go, as was evidenced today by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). For two years now he has been changing his mind with the weather, considering a value added tax, or a transfer tax, or a tax reform, or increasing personal income tax and reducing corporate tax. Today he is proposing to increase corporate tax and reduce personal income tax. Now, Mr. Speaker, when will that nonsense stop? How much must Canadians pay for that nonsense from this Conservative Governement?

You are indicating that my time is up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. Debate.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this oppportunity to speak today. Many Members will recognize that although the election is some two years past, when we were chosen to lead the country toward the changes it needs, Ministers of the Crown have few occasions to express themselves in debate in the House. I found myself in that position as Minister of State for Mines, so it is with a great deal of pleasure and anticipation that I share a few thoughts with Hon. Members today.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my congratulations and sincere best wishes to you and your elected and appointed colleagues who together serve the House of Commons. Our election process at the beginning of this second session of Canada's Thirty-third Parliament was, for all who participated awkward and arduous, but in its final result a most democratically successful and satisfying exercise of Member power. Let us all hope that Member power, that admirable, even essential, goal of the parliamentary reform process, initiated by the Government, will be reinforced by our future actions and decisions together.

[Translation]

I would also like, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) and the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Girard) for their exemplary contribution at the onset of this Throne Speech debate. They grasped and stressed the positive and constructive elements of our Progressive Conservative government's political program. Their example and the quality of their speeches did serve well those who followed. But finally it was the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, who once again reminded us that our mission, our main mandate, is to introduce and maintain a responsible and stable system of government in order to ensure confidence in ourselves and in the future of our great country.

Areas of progress up till now are not difficult to enumerate and record. It has been done by many others. But that is not enough. We have to show our intentions to follow through, to reduce crippling deficits and ensuing interest rates in order to secure investments and jobs. You can rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that we are committed to keep the promises we made.

[English]

I am particularly proud to participate in the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne debate because it gives me an opportunity to share some thoughts and, perhaps, feelings about my riding of Lachine with its key role in the historic and economic development of Canada, and its key role today in the economic renewal of the Montreal region. The federal riding of Lachine, which I am proud to represent, is comprised of the four cities which developed along Lac Saint-Louis to the southwest of Montreal. These cities are Beaconsfield, Pointe-Claire, Dorval and the southwest section of Lachine. Not known to many, other than the 57 families who, along with my own, live there for six to seven months of the year, Lachine riding also includes the car-free and carefree municipality of the Island of Dorval.

[Translation]

Historically, Lachine was established as a relay post for the celebrated voyageurs, a trading station where those travelling in canoes and those travelling in larger boats could barter wares for pelts and furs. Lachine is where I believe our trade originated without all the intricacies of today. In spite of the changes in means of transportation, communications and technology since the 17th century, the riding of Lachine, with its highways, its railways and its Dorval Airport, still remains the relay point between the economic centre of Montreal and the rest of Canada.

[English]

Thus I would like to address very briefly some of the concerns raised by the electors in my riding of Lachine. My neighbours in these lakeshore communities voted overwhelmingly for change in September of 1984. They shared, with a majority of Canadians, the concern that continuing down the road of unlimited government spending would lead to higher inflation and debts that could never be sustained let alone repaid. I believe they support the direction that our Government has taken, but are disappointed that progress is slow and at times intermittent. It would be their wish that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would, in nautical terms, "stay the course" so that a stable, fair and promising future would be the inheritance of all Canadians.

• (1610)

Paralleling this concern for fiscal responsibility and responsible management in Government, there is a frequently raised concern for equity and simplicity in the tax system. My constituents will welcome tax reform as it was announced in this House this morning by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) with its encouragement for and protection of personal savings. Many have expressed disappointment with current regulations that tax and restrict the use of savings and compromise those who accept early retirement packages leaving their long-held jobs open to younger workers.

The business leaders of my constituency warmly support the steps taken by the Government to encourage initiative and reward success. However, they are looking for equal opportunity and uncomplicated access to government Supply and Services contracts and to internationally competitive regulations on research investments and trade activities. They ask simply for the level playing field, that often obscured goal of our trade negotiations, and of course for a chance to get into the game.

My community has been home to many for most of their lives. Families have been raised, schools and churches have been built. Most of my neighbours are looking to the Government to maintain conditions that permit them to continue to live where they are. In recent years, heavy industries located in the east end of the Lachine riding have been particularly affected by the international economic slowdown and recession. Many large companies have either closed down or cut back their operations with the result that jobs and job opportunities have been greatly reduced. One group which has been particularly hard hit by these changes is that consisting of managers and executives over the age of 45 who have, in many cases, been released after many years of service and are unable to find other employment. However, with the enlightened leadership that has characterized the public administration of our municipalities over the years, other interests including the modern technologies of biochemistry, electronics and aerospace have been encouraged to establish and develop operations in our area with its access to transportation, to highly trained human resources and to excellent living conditions. These are the key factors in executive decisions.

Lake St. Louis is a lovely natural playground. However, the absence until recently of industrial and municipal waste treatment systems has cast a cloud of uncertainty on its use for bathing and other aquatic sports like water-skiing and windsurfing. Now, with the combined efforts of all concerned—and I am glad the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is with us today—and with the putting in operation of the vast Montreal urban community sewage collection system, it is hoped and expected that this beautiful waterfront with parks and beaches will be accessible and totally safe to one and all. A population of close to two million Canadians will be able to enjoy it. I believe that all Governments share in the responsibility to develop and preserve these precious natural resources.

[Translation]

And more generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, city residents in my riding belong to the Montreal urban community. We are deeply worried about what is happening in Montreal. For many various reasons, our region did not share in the economic renewal experienced by other areas in 1984 and 1985. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, particularly in the eastern part of the region, but confronted to that problem, the Prime Minister established ten months ago a ministerial committee of which I was a member, under the leadership of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). Its terms of reference were to study the situation and bring forward long-term solutions to ensure Montreal its rightful place in the future.

To help us, our ministerial committee asked a few Montrealers, among the leaders or most informed or experienced people in various fields, to form an advisory committee.

After studying the preliminary report, and a few months ago, the orientation report, the ministerial committee is now preparing specific and practical recommendations to be implemented by the government. Some have already been announced, including the establishment in Montreal of an international banking centre and a high technology centre for aviation and aerospace industry, bio-technology, telecommunications, transportation and engineering services.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that if those great orientation projects are pursued Montreal will rank among the firsts as an economic and cultural activity centre. In fact, high technology that is tied to the CF-18 maintenance contract is a very important part of those projects and I hope all ministers responsible for the final decision in that matter will keep it in mind.

[English]

Our concerns for the future of Montreal as an economic force in Quebec and as a cultural development centre for Canada find expression also in the arguments being advanced to resolve the problem of the two airports in Montreal. When forecasts of passenger and air-freight traffic indicated in the 1960s that the traffic would soon surpass the ultimate capacity of Montreal's airport at Dorval, the Government of the day decided on a site considerably removed from the centre of the city. Alternative sites near Drummondville to better serve central and eastern Quebec and near Vaudreuil to better serve Ottawa, eastern Ontario and the northern United States were set aside, according to reports, because the chosen site at Mirabel had a lower incidence of fog. Fog was what surrounded and continues to surround the Grits.

Be that as it may, the markets never developed and the hundreds of millions of dollars invested in land acquisition, buildings and infrastructure at Mirabel have never been fully utilized. Having inherited this problem after years of inaction, the Government undertook to resolve the issue first with the farmers whose land had been unnecessarily expropriated. This past year, the Government has completed extensive studies on the best way to serve the air travel market in the Montreal region.

Convenience, cost, access, time and interconnection opportunities are all factors considered by the travelling public. Tens of thousands of jobs and hundreds of millions of dollars in new investments will be directly affected by the decision on the Montreal airports when it is taken.

The Government has received opinions from the airlines, the business community and the provincial and municipal administrations directly and indirectly affected. I am confident that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and all responsible will adopt a solution that best responds to these interests and that Dorval airport in the riding of Lachine will continue its 300-year-old role as the gateway from Montreal to North America.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude with a brief comment on the Constitution and the negotiations between the federal government, the signatory provinces and the nice province of Quebec.

At the outset, I would like to state that most Quebecers are first and foremost Canadians, that we are proud to be Canadians and ready to play our part and accept our share of responsibilities as citizens of this great and beautiful land.

Canada without the province of Quebec is unthinkable! It is obvious that the signing of an agreement with the Quebec government must be an important and urgent priority of our government. I hope as well that our concerted efforts will bring about a fair and lasting success.

• (1620)

[English]

One particularly delicate element of the constitutional negotiations will be the freedom of all Canadians to live and work together in both of Canada's official languages. Great progress has been made in developing linguistic skills among Canadians, particularly those attending schools in the last 10 or 15 years. Job opportunities in our governments, institutions and business concerns should be equalized as must access to government services and information in either language. I hope that during negotiations the necessary assurances will be found to allow the natural goodwill of Canadians to be applied to the language issues everywhere in Canada. Canada deserves our best effort. Let us be sure we give it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. Since the election of his Government in 1984 we have seen the closing up or the sharp reduction in activities of a number of companies which operated in basic industries in the east end of Montreal. I am not saying that they closed up or cut back because of the Government, but this is in fact what happened.

For many years, for generations, the Canadian National Railway operated shops in the City of Moncton, in his City of Montreal and in my City of Winnipeg. Now the CNR has already made arrangements to close the shops in Moncton, turning over the facilities to Canadian General Electric. About 700 workers who have worked for years at the Moncton shops will be out of work. The CNR has announced that it proposes to close up its railway shops in Montreal. If they continue to operate, they will simply operate by way of contract work for other companies.

We heard a message from the Hon. Member about the great things that the present Government is doing for Montreal and Quebec. What advice would the Hon. Member give to those workers who have worked for so many years in the Point St. Charles shops of the CNR and who are facing unemployment in the very near future?

Mr. Layton: I am happy to have the comment and also the question from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). It is true that Winnipeg, Montreal, and Moncton were the principal centres where the railways chose to build their original service and fabrication centres. It is also true that the railway systems of those days have gone through great changes, not only in the service that they render but also in the equipment that they use to render that service. There has been considerable effort made to rationalize the cost of maintaining our railroad systems. Without it, the railroads would not have the capacity to compete with the other modes of transport. Highway trucking services are very flexible. There is a great deal of competition in rates and service in the market. I am a believer that the railways are a basic form of transport for Canadians and our goods. VIA Rail, CN, and CP organizations are going through a process to create and maintain that degree and quality of maintenance in their centres, and to compete not only nationally but also internationally, as so much of our transport now travels back and forth across the border. The Montreal community had been selected as one of the major service centres on our short term service type role for the VIA operations. Many of these decisions are under review.

As a Montrealer, but more particularly as the Member for Lachine, which is a west end component of that great Montreal region, let me say that we have suffered from the loss of heavy industry jobs at Dominion Bridge, Dominion Engineering and Allis-Chalmers. These jobs are the ones being replaced by a capacity which uses a lot more of our trained minds.

During the last weeks of summer, I had the privilege of visiting a number of very advanced technological centres in the west end of Montreal. I also share with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr.Cadieux) a great interest in the biotechnologies. This has become one of the major future industries for Canada, and certainly for the region of Montreal. We look forward to this continuing to be an opportunity for those trained minds that we all know the country will depend on to find an outlet for their skills.

Mr. Hicks: I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton) on what was his maiden speech. During that speech he stressed the great necessity for everyone and every province to function in both of Canada's official languages. I would like to commend the Hon. Member further for his enviable command of both of Canada's official languages.

His riding of Lachine and my riding of Scarborough East have many similarities. Both ridings are suburbs. My hon. friend has Lac Saint-Louis to the south of his riding, and I have Lake Ontario to the south of my riding. Scarborough East does not have the heavy industry that the riding of Lachine has, however, I would hazard a guess that both ridings have comparable problems.

My question to the Hon. Member for Lachine is, does he have the feeling that perhaps these comparable problems will be solved by comparable solutions, guided by the direction that this Government seems to be taking right now?

[Translation]

Mr. Layton: I extend my sincere thanks to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Hicks). It is a privilege for everyone to be able to speak in both languages and I have found, over the last two years that we have all worked together, that practice is the sure way to master a second language.

[English]

I am very happy to have the comments of my colleague from Scarborough East (Mr. Hicks). If we share one thing in common with regard to the initiatives of this Government, it is that we are back to having confidence in our own capability to invest and have a success. I have lived through, with all of my colleagues in the House, all of those cycles where there was a very real need or concern that this might not be the right time to take a dive, move ahead, take a chance, invest. But I do not find that in the community I am part of now. There seems to be more initiative, more readiness to succeed and to achieve. It is evident in our young people, but it is also even coming back to those of us of a third age.

Mr. Orlikow: I would like to come back to the comment from the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton). I had used as an illustration the difficulties that workers in their forties and fifties were facing because of new technologies or cutbacks. The Hon. Member added several other companies such as Dominion Bridge, Allis-Chalmers, and so on. In CN and CP, for example, there are workers for whom working for the railway was a way of life. Very often a grandfather of a worker first started working for the railway. Many of the workers who are now losing their jobs are in the age group from 45 years to 55 years and have worked for the company for anywhere from 20 years to 30 years.

What advice can the Hon. Member give such workers? What retraining is possible? What are their chances at obtaining jobs, when they are in that age group and with their background and experience, in new highly technological industries such as biotechnology?

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the intervention of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). There is a very special need for concern on the part of all of us for those people he identified as having a special problem as a result of fast changes. People between the ages of 45 and 55 who suddenly find themselves out of work face a very real and desperate problem.

I like the self-initiative which has been demonstrated by a number of groups in this area. I believe the Government has an opportunity to follow and support the initiative being taken by these self-help groups. One such group has been particularly active in the west end of Montreal Island, Executives Available. They maintain themselves without government aid. I am somewhat disappointed that some of our retraining programs do not recognize these special opportunities to support those initiatives.

A little earlier this afternoon I listened to the Minister responsible for external aid. CIDA is constantly looking for new ways to be more efficient in transferring our technology and support to developing nations. One such way is through the use of NGOs. CIDA has found out that NGOs are becoming the most efficient way of getting our aid and support across. I feel the same applies to the senior workers which the Hon. Member brought to our attention.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne which we are considering today represents the Speech from the Throne at mid-term of the Conservative Government. It has been in office for two years. Of course the Throne Speech reveals a certain amount of tiredness. It seems that the Government has run out of steam. It is in drift right now.

Canadians hoped to see concrete measures for action, especially in the area of job creation. They were hoping to see some very specific measures for tax reform, equality for women, cultural policy, and environmental protection, all of which are very important public policy questions. However, we only see pretty vague statements. As I said, there is drift. There is no vision in the Speech from the Throne.

There are high-sounding phrases. There is talk about national reconciliation, economic renewal, and social justice. Who could disagree with these as objectives? However, there is precious little to achieve any of them. There is talk about families, and the importance of the family is recognized in the words. However, this is the Government which cut the family allowance and is cutting the child tax credit. How can we believe that it has the interest of Canadian families at heart?

I note that action was promised for victims of child sexual abuse, child prostitution, and violent pornography against women and children. It is about time. These issues have become far worse in recent years. There were unanimous recommendations on child prostitution as long ago as 1983 by the justice committee. The Badgley Commission made extensive recommendations in the area of child sexual abuse, including child prostitution and child pornography. These recommendations have been available since the summer of 1984, and we have not had action on them.

The Throne Speech mentioned a campaign against illicit drugs, but it failed to mention that the great killer drugs are alcohol, which kills 12,000 Canadians per year, and tobacco, which kills 35,000 Canadians per year. These are the licit drugs, and they create a far worse problem in terms of health, damage, loss, and destruction of families. They are not glamorous enough for the Government. It would rather follow

Ronald Reagan and go after the illicit drugs which certainly pose problems. There is no doubt about that, but they are not remotely on the scale of the illness, death, and harm caused by other drugs. The Government's priorities are wrong. It is going after issues which it thinks will give it some credibility with the public, but they are not the issues that really count.

The Government talks about economic renewal, but there is very little about job creation in the Speech from the Throne. There is a vague statement about investor and consumer confidence. The Government hopes that somehow this will mysteriously develop and be the solution to the problem of continuing high structural unemployment. Youth was scarcely mentioned although the unemployment rate among young people is even higher than the rate among older Canadians. The educational opportunities of young people have been cut back by the Government in its cuts to Established Programs Financing for post-secondary universities and colleges. These were cut last spring, yet the Government makes vague promises to youth.

I note the promise of the establishment of a new agency to promote economic opportunity in Atlantic Canada. Certainly job creation is needed in Atlantic Canada, but I question the establishment of a new agency. We already have a government Department, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. Will we now have two? Will they send memos to each other? Will the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion get out of job development in Atlantic Canada? Certainly these questions are not addressed in the Speech from the Throne. One reason the Government is not very specific about job creation is that it does not have a good idea. It is very misguided on the subject.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had a prison plan for an area where it was not needed. He moved it into his riding where it certainly is not needed, at an expense of more than $60 million. He justifies it on the grounds of job creation. If he wanted job creation, he should have considered that misguided project against other possible ones which would do a better job at creating good productive employment, long-term jobs. We simply do not see that in the Speech from the Throne. Instead we see very opportunistic schemes being used for political purposes which do not serve the public very well in terms of getting the unemployed back to work.

I was pleased to see the down playing of free trade in the Speech from the Throne. In fact the Government sounds almost like the NDP in how it is now treating free trade. It talks about trade with all parts of the world. It especially mentioned the Pacific Rim, an area in which we can certainly expect to expand our trade. It talks about mutually advantageous trade with the United States instead of a free trade agreement which would probably lose us a lot of jobs and certainly risk our political and cultural sovereignty. Whether the Government has stepped backward for the right motives or the wrong ones, whether it has just been reading the poles, or whether it has been convinced that the interests of Canadians will not be well served, I do not know. However I am pleased to see this more cautious approach to free trade. It was never a panacea for our economic ills. I am glad to see it not being touted quite as enthusiastically in the Speech from the Throne as it was in the past.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne refers to national reconciliation, social justice and economic renewal. Yet, nothing impressive is planned to meet these objectives, however worthy they may be. There is even a step back in the Government policy on national reconciliation. The previous Speech from the Throne was stronger in this regard. The latest Throne Speech recognizes that the Charter of Rights and Freedom and the Canadian Constitution remain incomplete without the assent of Quebec. That is the least that can be said. What the Government undertakes is vague and weak, and I quote:

> Should there appear reasonable prospects for agreement, formal negotiations will proceed in the expectation that Quebec will take its rightful place as a full partner in the Canadian Constitution.

That is very little. We have to wait for reasonable prospects, but where will they come from? We should instead be creating prospects for an agreement.

In relation with social justice, the Government talks about building a modern, tolerant and caring nation in which its citizens are secure and prosperous. This is obviously a wonderful thought. However, what has this Government done? The Conservative Government was the one that attempted to reduce old age security pensions through deindexation.

This is the Government that deindexed family allowances and that now wants to deindex the child tax credit. This is the Government that increased the sales tax for ordinary families in Canada.

What the Speech from the Throne says is not reassuring, and I quote:

> Canadians would want their governments to give the highest priority in social policy to those who are in greatest need.

We agree up to a point. However, I am afraid that there is another message that can be found in the Speech from the Throne: that there will be an attack on universal social programs. Unfortunately, this is an objective of this Government, even though the Conservatives promised during the electoral campaign not to touch universal programs. They started doing so. Fortunately, under the pressure of Canadian men and women all over the country, the Government had to back down with respect to old age security pensions. Unfortunately, in spite of the efforts of women's groups, churches, unions, citizens all over the place, the pressure was not enough and the Government deindexed family allowances.

We in the NDP believe that we need universal programs. They should be the cornerstone of our system. Non universal programs are also most important, but we should not rely solely on those programs to ensure a decent living for Canadian families.

[English]

Canadians want to see action on jobs. They want to see action on fair taxes, but we do not get action in this Speech from the Throne. The speech has high sounding phrases but we do not see specific promises that Canadians would like to have heard, such as, the Government is not going to appoint its friends to high places anymore. That kind of promise for real highness in action we do not see in the Speech from the Throne. There is rhetoric on tax reform, but I will believe it when I see it. Meanwhile, the shift to individual taxes from corporate taxes is continuing. We know that 79,000 corporations made a profit in Canada in 1985 but did not pay a dime in tax. There is nothing about that. There is nothing about seriously closing tax loopholes. We need specific action. Instead we have only a vague statement of achieving a better equilibrium between income tax and "other forms" of tax. What other forms, Mr. Speaker—sales taxes, excise taxes or corporate taxes?

[Translation]

We have to realize that tax loopholes are the main reason for the present deficit. If corporations had paid their fair share of taxes, we would have had sufficient funds for government spending. It is therefore vitally important to plug those loopholes if we want to come to grips with the accrued deficit.

The Speech from the Throne mentioned a reduction in the deficit. We should be aware, however, that it is only a reduction in the rate of growth of that deficit. It is not an absolute reduction. Our deficit has increased more under the present Government than under the previous one.

The Speech from the Throne proposes a forum on post-secondary education. No one can find fault with such an initiative, but we have to say that it is not good enough. Last spring, this same Government slashed the budgets of post-secondary education without consulting the provinces. The cuts made in post-secondary education budgets on that occasion are just the opposite of what the Conservatives promised during the election campaign when they pledged to increase the budgets of post-secondary education. Provinces and universities and colleges are expecting this Government to roll back its unilaterally imposed reductions.

There is at least one good thing for which I could congratulate the Government, the priority given to science and technology in the Speech from the Throne. That speech announced the appointment of a national advisory board for industrial technology, to be chaired by the Prime Minister himself.

The Speech from the Throne also mentions a billion dollars for scientific research. However, contrary to what the Speech says, it is not new money, but the same already announced in the spring, in a program condemned by scientists themselves as being impractical. This program to assist universities has—according to scientists, that I am inclined to believe—very little chance of success. It requires private enterprise to provide funds to universities. However, there are no incentives for the companies to do so.

[English]

I would like to add that this encouragement of research is only in the field of the natural sciences and it excludes completely the social sciences and the humanities. They are part of Canada, an important part of the universities and colleges and an important part of Canadian life. They have been neglected in this Speech from the Throne.

[Translation]

This Speech from the Throne gave more space and more interest than usual to cultural matters, and this is also to the credit of the Government. It promises to strengthen our cultural institutions, and especially the broadcasting system. It makes a commitment to Canadian cultural values. But, this costs money. It is not possible to broadcast more Canadian programs without increasing the budget of the CBC. The Caplan-Sauvageau report is excellent and full of concrete recommandations to promote Canadian programmming. But, again, implementing these recommandations would cost money. The private sector has its own responsibilities, but we, in Parliament, are responsible for the CBC. We will have to provide more money if we want to achieve this goal of more Canadian programming.

[English]

This speech from the Throne includes some measures that are old, some that are new, some that are borrowed, some that are recycled—

Mr. Friesen: And they are all blue.

Ms. McDonald: Some of them are blue, indeed. Some of this Speech distinctly gave me that impression as I sat listening to it. Some measures represent reversals. I am pleased to see some of those that go backwards because they should not have been entered into in the first place.

When we add together all of these different kinds of measures in the Speech from the Throne, what do we get, Mr. Speaker? We have a speech with a lot of rhetoric, a lot of Tory objectives for the most part, and even where there is something questionable in the Speech from the Throne, such as, what I think is a veiled attack on the universal programs, it is very gently and civily put. It is not a direct attack on the social programs but a statement that something else should be done instead. This is a very civil Speech from the Throne. Nonetheless, it is not a good Speech from the Throne. It is not an effective Speech from the Throne. There are not enough concrete measures. It is not specific enough. There is no action in the Speech from the Throne. There is a false diagnosis of our problems and so there are false solutions to those problems.

• (1650)

My final remark would simply be that it is a disappointing Speech from the Throne. It is not the one Canadians hoped to get, and it will not give the country what it needs at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned the problem of smoking and alcohol and I share her concerns, as she knows. I wonder what she would specifically propose that the Government do about the heroin problem which is so severe in the province in which she was born, British Columbia, and about the question of other illegal drugs. What specifically would she like to see the Government do concerning an industry which, as she knows, amounts to $9 billion or $10 billion a year in illegal sales to Canadians, particularly young people.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question. It is a subject on which I used to do some work. I was a research associate for the inquiry into the non-medical use of drugs some years ago and certainly the heroin question was very important. At that time there was considerable debate and it is ongoing. There are no answers with unanimous support from scientists or practitioners who work in this area. Methadone maintenance was certainly the fashionable solution at that time. It has had some success in Britain and it has certainly had some effect in cutting down on the black market. I do not know how appropriate a solution it is for Canada. There has also been the problem of that drug finding its way on to the streets. It is then perhaps the substitution of a less serious problem for a more serious problem, but it is not a solution in and of itself.

I would just say that we need to look at this question in a very broad context. Studies done for the Le Dain Commission showed, and they continue to be borne out, that the drug culture goes past legal and illegal boundaries. Anyone who uses one drug is more likely to use another drug. The more drugs one uses, even if they are legal drugs, even including tea or coffee, the more likely one is to use other drugs. That is not to say that people necessarily move all the way up the scale, but there is something of a drug culture and when people get into it and drugs become a solution for what is probably a human problem, then people are more likely to seek that out in other ways. I think we have to attack the idea that there is a chemical solution to human problems, and that is the way I would go after it.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member with considerable care. I suppose it is inevitable that a member of the Opposition, after a Throne Speech is brought down, would attack it for being general and vague and pious and platitudinous, lacking in specifics and lacking in details. That is the formula response from an opposition Party. I suppose if the truth be known, when this Party was in Opposition we trotted out the same formula rhetoric.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We remember it.

Mr. McMillan: That does not make it any more valid and its repetition this afternoon does not add any veracity to it.

I wonder if the Hon. Member appreciates what a Throne Speech is. It is not legislation. It is not a Budget. It is not an economic statement. It is an indication from the Government, through the voice of the Crown, of the path the Government intends to follow. It is not, to use the metaphore, a detailed road map.

She will know, since she read the Throne Speech carefully, that in the environmental field there were several iniatives which go well beyond the platitudinous. There was a firm commitment to bring in early, as a government-wide priority, a new Environmental Protection Act which will focus on toxic chemicals. Earlier this week in Ottawa I released some of the details of that Act, and before very long, in Parliament and outside, I will be sharing with the House and the public at large the legislation itself in draft form as a consultative tool.

The Throne Speech also makes a commitment to bring in the first major set of reforms to the National Parks Act since it was devised in 1930, some 56 years ago. That is a firm commitment, not just piety and not just platitudes.

I do not think the Hon. Member would have expected the Throne Speech to give chapter and verse about the Environmental Protection Act or the National Parks amendments, otherwise we would still be sitting in the Senate Chamber listening to Her Excellency reading the document. In so many areas touched upon in the Throne Speech we indicated where we are going and how we intend to get there, but obviously there was not room in such an institution as the Throne Speech to dot all the 'i's and cross all the 't's.

I am just wondering if the Hon. Member is appreciative of what a Throne Speech is. She indicated, I am sure unintentionally, that she had another vision of the institution than that which I have just described.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I did not indicate that I had another vision, although I do in fact have one. I said I thought this was a Throne Speech without vision. Where it deals with the environment, I would commend the Minister. I think there are relatively concrete, relatively specific measures in the Throne Speech. The Minister will also know that in the time allotted to a Member, apart from the first three speakers, that being 20 minutes, it is not possible to deal with every aspect of the speech. The part dealing with the environment is one of the better parts of the speech. It takes us further from where we are now.

As to how specific the Speech from the Throne should be, that is a question of degree. Obviously it cannot include a detailed analysis of proposed legislation. No one would suggest that. I was simply expressing a disappointment that it was not more precise in stating what measures would be taken. I was disappointed that quite a bit of space was given to what I would call rhetoric. There were nice sounding phrases but no real content whatsoever. A Speech from the Throne cannot be highly detailed, but I think in the time constraints that the Governor General has in that formal situation it would have been possible to put more content into that speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak in the House for the first time not only on the Throne Speech but in this new session. I want to congratulate you on your reappointment as Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. It is nice to see you back in the Chair.

I want to focus on the theme of science and technology as it relates to the Throne Speech. The riding I represent is a thriving technological community as well as having one of the leading educational and research institutions in North America, the University of Saskatchewan, in Saskatoon. I am delighted that this Government has demonstrated once again through a strong commitment that this issue is a priority. Having said that, I would like to commend the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) for his superb efforts in staying the course and fighting for scarce financial resources around the cabinet table.

I would first like to talk about the high technology community since that is an industrial sector which has had considerable impact on Saskatoon and whose success has been recognized in the Speech from the Throne. In Saskatchewan there is a clear recognition that industry is the driving force which pulls technology out of the labratory and launches it into the market-place. That is probably best demonstrated by the University of Saskatchewan and the private sector in Saskatoon which have been at the game of technology transfer now for probably 15 to 20 years, and I will expand on that in a few moments.

The City of Saskatoon, and my province in general, are well known for their creative and innovative entrepreneurs. To date, there are 164 high technology companies in Saskatchewan, which is an increase of 40 firms since 1982. There are over 90 technology firms in Saskatoon alone. This new development means the creation of hundreds of jobs. Saskatchewan technology firms have expanded their own sales substantially. For example, Develcon Electronics had $5 million worth of sales to NASA in one year and $4 million in sales to Lockheed Aircraft Corporation. SED Systems, which grew out of the University of Saskatchewan, had $19 million in sales of earth stations to Brazil. It had $26 million in sales on the Canadian Frigate Program. SCI-TEC, another company, had sales to Germany, India and the United Kingdom. Northern Telecom has its world fibre optics production and sales operation in Saskatoon, marketing that unique technology around the globe.

These people put new ideas to work, turn advanced technology into new products or processes and convert these into wealth through aggressive selling in very competitive markets. This can be done in an area of high cost. There is a great deal of financial risk in building an advanced technology business, but risk is what free enterprise is all about. The Government of Saskatchewan is a supportive partner of such entrepreneurs and shares in the financial risk of such ventures. That partnership between business and Government has rapidly made my province one of this continent's most attractive, advanced technology locations for innovators and investors.

Perhaps some people are wondering why I am not talking about our wheat and potash in Saskatchewan. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that things have changed in our province, thanks to some good leadership from Grant Devine's Government and thanks to a lot of people at the University of Saskatchewan and entrepreneurs who saw the challenge and certainly accepted it.

Communication is the key to implementing this partnership, especially in federal-provincial relations. For example, the new technology steering committee is responsible for the over-all co-operation of science and technology activities in Saskatchewan by the federal and provincial Governments. This is a positive enforcement that federal and provincial growth can be achieved by working together. I look forward to working with the re-elected Government of Grant Devine in the Province of Saskatchewan in the next four to five years. This committee was instrumental in co-ordinating and promoting funding decisions for research and infrastructure such as the CadCam Centre at the Saskatchewan Research Council, a proposed potash research centre, a microelectronics centre and others. Under the auspices of the committee, science and technology and DRIE have worked together to develop the ERDA subagreement on advanced technology which was signed in 1984. Again, this was the first one in Canada. The agreement will deliver $33.2 million over five years to accelerate the growth of Saskatchwan's advanced technology industries. Indeed, this is support to industrial and technological development and diversification in the west. It is an excellent vehicle for growth and development in the field of science and technology.

A new research infrastructure has been established to support advanced technology development in Saskatchewan through federal and provincial funding. Let me name a few key achievements. There is the Canadian Centre of Instrumentation which has allocated $1 million over the next five years to the Saskatchewan Research Council. The National Plant Biotechnology Centre recently opened a capital project of $6 million, with $2.4 million of operating funding. This is located in Saskatoon and is the only centre in the country that is doing research in the area of agricultural biotechnology which probably holds some of the new technology that will lead us into diversification of our current wheat and barley crops. There is the western Centre of Toxicology, with a $2 million capital expansion at the University of Saskatchewan. There is the Linear Accelerator Laboratory expansion at the University of Saskatchewan for just under $6 million. There is the National Centre of Hydrology which I had the pleasure of opening on behalf of the Minister just a matter of weeks ago. This is a $17 million facility that was built on the campus of the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon. Many exciting things are happening in this area thanks to the co-operative efforts of this Government and the Province of Saskatchewan.

For more years than I can imagine, businessmen have continued to look, not to the provinces but to Ottawa for leadership in science and technology development, and for support in creating an environment that is conducive to success in R and D. Deaf ears were turned to such enterprises prior to September, 1984 but, as the Speech from the Throne confirms, now Canada has a Government and a Prime Minister committed to scientific and technological development.

In addition, the Government supports science and technology through activities such as tax incentives for industrial research and development amounting to some $500 million annually, federal-provincial sub-agreements on science and technology amounting to $100 million over the next five years, and other sub-agreements with science and technology content amounting to $327 million over the next few years.

The Conservative Government used its common sense when it eliminated the Scientific Research Tax Credit in the May, 1985 Budget. Indeed, the Liberals introduced the SRTC in 1973 to encourage scientific research. It proved to be an expensive program characterized by abuse because research was so ill defined. The Liberals failed to establish a pre-audit or approval process. Without built in security measures, the program was open for this kind of abuse.

The Government is acting in other areas to improve the fairness and effectiveness of the tax system to safeguard and ensure that tax rules are not used in inappropriate ways to avoid taxes. Instead of abusing the system, the Government introduced more effective and better targeted provisions to support research and development.

The federal Government is the single largest financial contributor to science and technology in Canada. The Government has announced in the Throne Speech an initiative that will provide $1 billion in new funding for science research over the next five years. This funding will focus on many things, including research and co-ordination between universities and the private sector. I can assure you that the University of Saskatchewan and the many small scientific research companies will look forward to sharing in some of that funding.

We spent $4.2 billion on science and technology in 1985-86. These activities support a number of objectives, including industrial development, protection of the environment, health and safety of Canadians, national security, and basic scientific research. These are all positive steps to strengthen science and technology's role in creating jobs and improving the quality of life for Canadians. That is what I call a commitment.

Those are not just my sentiments, Mr. Speaker, they are the feelings of a number of journalists and high technology experts. For example, our great newspaper friends at the Toronto Star have written: "No Canadian Prime Minister has ever made this kind of personal commitment to promoting high technology development". Roy MacGregor of The Ottawa Citizen called the Throne Speech: "An imaginative and welcome announcement that this country now agrees with the rest of the world in acknowledging the value of research and development".

I want to indicate that approximately a year ago I was invited with a number of my colleagues from the science and technology caucus committee to attend a dinner at one of the larger embassies in Ottawa. After completing our meal we were asked to discuss Canada's science and technology policy. I must say that it was embarrassing for us to say that the previous Government had not really developed a policy and that we were just in the process of developing one in the next couple of years.

In general, Canada's high technology industry reacted favourably to the four point platform increasing support to science and technology. A national advisory board for industrial technology, chaired by the Prime Minister—a first for any Government—and composed of some of Canada's leading industrialists and scientists will definitely raise the profile of leading technology initiatives. This committee will assess national science and technology goals and policies, and their application to Canada's economy. The Government will seek to achieve high standards of excellence in education, technology development, and innovation. The introduction of a new federal science and technology strategy, building on the initiatives undertaken to date, will encourage necessary reforms within federal administration to promote Canada's international competitiveness. For example, international exchanges have been initiated with a number of countries, including Japan, the United States, China, Australia, and western European countries.

• (1710)

The Government will also convene a national conference on techology and innovation to assist Canada to define new technology goals. This is what I call leadership. Research has always been intact but the development end has been lacking in the past. That point was well put to me at a dinner I attended in Saskatoon recently. A number of people from the business sector did not complain so much about research and development; they said the research was being done, but we were not spending enough money on the development side of the equation. It is all a matter of marketing and manufacturing our technology, getting the research off the shelf.

Canadians should be proud of our technological goals and achievement which this Government is committed to development. The Canadian Advanced Technology Association applauded the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for "committing his own time to assessing and setting national policy".

However, Mr. Speaker, even a group of high technology experts like those in the Canadian Advanced Technology Association will admit that industry cannot be driven by Government alone. Success in such a competitive field depends on a number of factors, but especially on a strong and vibrant university research community. Without such a community, much of the pure research which eventually results in marketable products and processes would never occur. I know as well from my experience in Saskatoon that without universities, industry would never have a steady group of highly qualified young men and women to fulfil its personal requirements.

University research has been a priority of this Government and also a priority of the Progressive Conservative Government which was led by the now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). In 1979, the Clark Government gave stability and consistency to the budgets of the three university research granting councils. Not surprisingly, this commitment was forgotten by the Liberal Government which followed, which continues to press the Government today for policies that it never thought of initiating in its own 20 years in office.

In February of this year the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) restored that principle and established a five-year plan of consistent funding for these granting councils. No previous Government has given the granting councils such a solid commitment. Not only that, the Minister also committed the federal Government to matching the private sector's funding of university research on a dollar-for-dollar basis up until 1991. This will mean up to $.75 billion of increased research funding for Canada's universities.

This strong commitment to research and development is a clear and positive signal for Canada's university community. It is a plan which provides much needed new funds for university research and also builds a bridge between the demands of industry and the skills of university students and professors. No longer will a potentially lucrative mechanism or process sit on the shelf of a university or Government research laboratory. Technology will now be defused and applied to industrial needs in a way which is mutually lucrative and supportive without hindering the advancement of basic science.

The Government firmly believes that putting more money into R and D at the university level is an investment in the future of Canada. The University of Saskatchewan has previously been a leader in establishing partnerships with the local high technology sector. As I mentioned earlier, SED Systems in Saskatoon is probably one of the best examples. It employs hundreds and hundreds of people and is involved in some very interesting programs, including space research.

The Government's initiative will only serve to augment the university's efforts. I am sure other Hon. Members who are fortunate to have universities in their ridings will find this to be the case as well. The matching formula, coupled with the initiatives noted in the Speech from the Throne, is a clear demonstration of the Government's commitment to research and its sensitivity to technological change. Technological change is pertinent to our survival and illustrates progress in our record of economic renewal.

A healthy economic future has been initiated throughout the country. In particular, our Government has enhanced job opportunities for our youth. There is a decline in youth unemployment. The task is by no means completed. There is still much to do in the area of youth unemployment. But it is encouraging to see that youth unemployment has dropped almost three points since we have come to office. More programs will be introduced to promote entreneurship amongst our youth.

All these commitments to R and D, linking job promotion for youth, are stepping stones to improve employment prospects as well as our standard of living. Once again, this is leadership through commitment, consultation and co-operation; indeed, a process for growth. In these steps to restructure our economy, we must all work together. The Government has clearly demonstrated its ability to work in co-operation with industry, universities and provinces in enhancing Canada's industrial strength in partnership with our young Canadian researchers.

In closing, I would like to say that these benefits can be shared by all Canadians. When we talk about research and development, we are not just talking about scientists and technicians. We are talking about all the jobs which spin off, from secretaries to people in the service industries. I think it is important that we understand that this is something which has value for every Canadian, union people, non-union people, technicians and scientists. This partnership can only mean a healthy economic future for all of my constituents in Saskatoon and for the country in general.

Mr. Hicks: Mr. Speaker, my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis), made reference a few moments ago to the Scientific Research Tax Credit Program which was introduced, I believe, in the year 1983 by the Liberal Government. I am not overly familiar with it and I wonder if my hon. colleague could elaborate for the House some of the reasons he thinks this program failed?

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I will begin by being very fair to the previous Government because I think it recognized that research and development is a very important building block. It is essential, if we are going to talk about economic recovery. As I mentioned, it was unfortunate that a well intended program dealing with research in universities and in the private sector, was so ill defined and had so few guidelines or safeguards attached to it that it was abused to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars. In actual fact, it is probably going to cost the taxpayers very close to $1 billion in terms of tax credits which in fact did not achieve any research.

When I talk about poorly defined research, I am alluding to a definition which permitted things like fancy research parks, fancy office buildings, and people who abused the program to such an extent that they put money into fancy cars. Many of those people have now fled the country. In all fairness to the previous Liberal Government, while it really wanted to achieve many of the same goals we are achieving today, the safeguards were not put in place. An election was coming and the Liberals wanted to get this program out to show the private sector that it really wanted to address this problem, and perhaps in all good faith it hoped the program would work, thinking it might cost Canadians about $200 million. The program got off the rails and, unfortunately, it turned out to be a disaster. I think that is something this country will have to pay for for many years to come.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to listen to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis). I know of his commitment to the universities and to the research and development sector in Canada.

I was particularly pleased to hear in the Speech from the Throne a renewed commitment to post-secondary education with the announcement of a forum on post-secondary education which will be held in the coming year. From my own point of view, I think it is important that there is a national focus and emphasis on post-secondary education so we all really get behind it. That is so important. As my colleague, who has a university in his constitutency, indicated, our future resources really are human resources. We are not going to have the accomplishments in the industrial sector unless we have young people who are highly trained and educated and who can compete internationally around the world. I feel we really have to put some renewed focus and effort into the development of our whole post-secondary system. I know the Hon. Member shares that commitment as well.

I agree with him that the kind of initiatives outlined in the Speech from the Throne with respect to research and development are certainly long overdue. I look forward to the emphasis being placed on the private sector in working with universities to develop a great many research programs. I know that in British Columbia we have had a very positive response to such an initiative.

Does the Hon. Member have some comments with respect to the fact that two years ago when we formed the Government there was a great deal of interest in research and development and yet it has taken all of those two years to achieve the focus that we now see in the Speech from the Throne and other specific initiatives which have been taken? Will the Hon. Member comment on why it has taken this long? How long will it really take to implement some of these new initiatives?

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I certainly wish to address the issue raised by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). She has many professors and staff members from the University of British Columbia and Simon Fraser University living in her riding. These people have a very keen interest in this issue. In all fairness, the Government could have come in with a science and technology policy or a change in that regard in September of 1984. In other words, let us not look at what the problem is and how serious it is, let us just act on it. Rather than doing that, the Government decided it wanted to try to reach some consensus out there in the country, because there was a fear that there was a great deal of duplication, as there so often is when federal flags and provincial flags are being waved. In many cases we are stepping on each other's toes.

In the development of this consensus I have seen the present Minister and the previous Minister assemble a great many people from across the country, including union leaders, university professors, people from the private sector as well as provincial Ministers. They have sat down to arrive at a consensus, which I think is so important. The area of science and technology is a very complex area. In the process of reaching this consensus we have been able to establish some priorities. We have been able to find out what each one of the sectors is saying. We have been able to establish sort of a nation-wide consensus. In particular, the meeting held in Winnipeg last year provided a forum for 200 people to sit down and grapple with future policy. There was talk of a White Paper on science and technology being brought down in the House this fall. I think that all of the meetings and consultations that have been held in this regard go to prove that it was time well spent.

One other subject I would like to elaborate on is that the establishment of a Standing Committee on Science and Technology has been beneficial to Members of the House of Commons. This is the first time that the subject has been given such priority.

To conclude, the Hon. Member asked me how long I think it will take. I think we are very close. I think we are possibly as close as four to six months in terms of coming out with a policy which will recognize all of the talking and consulting that has gone on in the country over the last two years.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to say that I missed the beginning of the hon. gentleman's speech. However, I caught the last ten minutes of it. In those ten minutes I heard the Hon. Member say something about improved, continuing and enlarged assistance for basic research at universities. I presume he includes the National Research Council in that remark. He talked about developmental aid after basic research has been done. I would like to ask the Hon. Member whatever happened to the free market private enterprise principle which says that it does its own development and then markets that development. Does the Hon. Member say that the private sector cannot function by itself and that it has to have governmental assistance on development after basic research is done?

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's question. He certainly knows about all of the activity that has taken place in Saskatchewan over the last four years in terms of science and technology. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that at the beginning of my speech, the part that he missed, I mentioned the fact that 140 private sector companies have flourished in Saskatchewan as a result of assistance from the University of Saskatchewan and the University of Regina. I might add that this has been as a result of technological assistance and expertise that has come from the universities. In many cases university professors and technicians who have left the universities have gone out into the private sector to start companies of their own. In some of these cases there was assistance from the Government.

Let me return to the more important question of development aid. I do not know if the Hon. Member appreciates that we have millions of dollars worth of research sitting on shelves in government and university laboratories across the country. This is research that was done and yet nothing has been done with it. This is mainly because the mandate of government laboratories and university researchers is not to start manufacturing widgets and then sell them abroad. Their mandate is to perform the research. What the Government now recognizes is that if we can transfer some of this technology off the shelves then it will be useful.

I would like to give the Hon. Member a prime example of such a move in terms of what is happening in Saskatoon right now. At the moment a small company is taking some research from an agricultural laboratory which deals with biotechnology. This company is developing that research in its private sector laboratory and putting the products of that research into the market-place. That is precisely what we want to do. By the way, this company signed one of the first agreements in Canada to do with technology transfers.

I think the private sector is alive and well in Saskatchewan. Yes, there is some assistance, but if these people are given some of the research off the shelves we will see that they will do extremely well in developing that research into many jobs for our private sector.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the basic research on the shelves at universities and at the National Research Council is public property. I repeat my question to the hon. gentleman. Where is the private sector when it comes to development, marketing and manufacturing? Why would the Hon. Member even remotely suggest that there also needs to be assistance in the developmental area? Where the heck is the private sector? Where is the free enterprise system? It seems that those in the private sector want the taxpayer's help all the way through the game, I presume, to help sell their widgets.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks where is the private sector. I hope the Hon. Member for Regina West recognizes that research that takes place at universities in Saskatchewan, or in any other province for that matter, is the proper place for research. That is what these places are all about. I think that the private sector is doing a great deal of research. As a matter of fact, there are thousands of examples which illustrate efforts that have been taken to market research that have never seen a government laboratory or university. Such research has certainly seen the graduates from these facilities.

Mr. Benjamin: They come up from the United States.

Mr. Ravis: Perhaps they do. Another important point which I think I should tell the Hon. Member about research that was done in the public sector and is now being developed in Saskatoon is the fact that a royalty will be paid to the Government of Canada where the research was developed. In other words, public sector research will now receive full recognition by the private sector which will do the development. Personally, I do not see anything wrong with that. I think it is the type of co-operation that the Government is talking about in its Speech from the Throne, in that we can begin to harness our universities and the private sector through a more co-operative approach.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) for a very excellent address splendidly delivered. While the Hon. Member spoke about research, I could not help but think of the time when I was Chairman of the Alberta Research Council. One of the things that Council attempted to do was to make sure there was no duplication. For the benefit of the Hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), we would contact free enterprisers and the government Departments to work out who would pay the cost of the research that would benefit everyone. Free enterprise played a very important part in this.

• (1730)

As a matter of fact, in my own Department of Highways, I decided that at least 5 per cent of the Budget for construction of bridges would go into research. We co-operated with the contractors. Because of that research we were able to save the people of Alberta thousands of dollars when constructing bridges. We found that for years piers were being placed deeper than necessary. There was co-operation between free enterprise and the Department of Highways, each paying their proper share. The people benefited and that is the way it should be.

I would appreciate hearing the comments of the Hon. Member. I thought I should mention that because it is right in line with what he was advocating.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now completed.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in the House to speak to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. First of all, I want to congratulate the Speaker and all other Members who will have the honour of sitting in the Chair during this session. I also would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to greet the people of the beautiful riding of Bourassa, and a special greeting to the people of Montreal North.

Mr. Speaker, the second session of the 33rd Parliament started with the customary Speech from the Throne, which contains the new objectives of the Government of the day. But does it? Is this an original, brand-new Speech from the Throne? Or is it a Speech from the Throne full of recycled leftovers, reflecting the true nature and substance of a Conservative Government in its decline?

The Conservative Government has declined to the point that it needed a whole month to recycle the contents of its 1984 election platform. We recall, and all Canadians will recall, those pretty speeches and the 300 or so promises they made during the election campaign. What became of them? The people of Canada are not easily fooled. They can see through the tricks and trumpery of the Government opposite. And that is why the people in the riding of Bourassa and the people of Canada are wondering what will happen to the promises made in this Throne Speech.

Mr. Speaker, this Speech from the Throne mentions social justice. How can they talk about social justice? How can they talk about their social policy? Does this Government really think Canadians believe the Conservatives when they claim to be the party of social justice?

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are not easily fooled. A Government that has managed to reduce indexation of family allowances, cut back on the increases for transfer payments made to the provinces for education and health care, cut unemployment insurance benefits for thousands of Canadians who receive severance pay or early retirement pensions and who are still looking for employment, a Government that attempted to de-index Old Age Security pensions—and they call that social justice, Mr. Speaker, when they want to de-index Old Age Security pensions?

And speaking of Old Age Security pensions, Mr. Speaker, my riding of Montreal—Bourassa has large population of senior citizens. I am constantly fighting to defend their rights and I will continue to do so. Many senior citizens in Montreal North know how I respect and sympathize with them. Other people have tried to get at the senior citizens, but I won't name names in the House. The people who wanted to disturb the tranquility and peace of mind of these senior citizens know to whom I am referring and I don't have to name them in these precincts.

Mr. Speaker, this kind of Government cannot claim to be a Government that promotes social justice. It is a Government that takes from the poor and gives to the rich. When I say it takes from the poor and gives to the rich, I think a good example is non-taxable capital gains. This Government cannot afford to talk about economic justice, and Canadians know this only too well. They no longer have any confidence in this Government, after only two years in power.

Mr. Speaker, this Government is synonymous with wasting money and wasting time. Canadians have seen through the tricks of the Conservative Government, as indicated by the polls they are so fond of quoting. Take the results of the last poll published on October 6, which inform us that the majority of Canadians no longer have any confidence in the Government opposite. According to this poll, about 52 per cent of Canadians do not approve of the Conservative Government's policies. Not only has every Canadian or just about lost all confidence in this Conservative Government, Mr. Speaker, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has also lost all credibility in this great country of Canada. I think that this is a rather serious matter, Mr. Speaker.

However, how could it be otherwise? The Conservative Party and this Government are without meaning and without any substance. The Speech from the Throne is a perfect example of a speech where appearances are more important than the substance, if there is any substance, a speech full of illusions which could become real only in a dreamworld.

Mr. Speaker, we Canadians live in a real world, in a country with problems which require real and practical solutions, but this Conservative Government is unable to understand this, let alone find these solutions.

Each day, the Members opposite ask us: What would you do? What would you do in such or such a case? However, it is you, Government Members, who must say what you would do, not us.

The Speech from the Throne is the proof that this Government has no action plan, that it is interested only in short term political and economic problems and that it cannot take its responsibilities and try to provide a clear direction for this country. Mr. Speaker, Canadians have had enough of Conservatives who can only make irresponsible promises, of actions which most often result in scandals, ministerial resignations and broken promises. As evidence, we have only to look at the bank failures under a Conservative Government.

• (1740)

We are telling this Government that Canadians no longer have any confidence in the Progressive Conservative Party. As I said earlier, Canadians no longer believe their high-flown and irresponsible promises. Canadians no longer believe that this Government has the authority, the respect and the ability required to govern Canada as it deserves.

Mr. Speaker, there are in my riding a great many senior citizens who are worried and concerned about the promises made by this Conservative Government and their decisions which are, as everybody knows, totally contradictory. They certainly remember and will remember, come election time, everything which could have happened to them. They have been duped. They have been deceived by this Government which would have them believe that this Throne Speech is better than that of 1984. It is not. One need only check what happened in 1985-86 to the unemployment insurance benefits for people on early retirement.

Why has the Government not accepted the proposal made by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner)? Why has not the Government entertained an adequate and realistic policy for golden agers in the areas of health care, shelters, long-term care, community homes, lodging subsidies, as well as a home services scheme?

Mr. Speaker, senior citizens are a political force in Canada, as the Conservative Party painfully realized in 1982 and will painfully realize again come election time.

Mr. Speaker, there were by-elections in Saint-Maurice and Pembina recently. If they have made an objective analysis of these by-election results, Members of the Progressive Conservative Party certainly realize that they have lost a major part of their electoral support. Mr. Speaker, these results have been brought about by two years of inconsistency in power and foolish promises.

For that matter, the Prime Minister's decision to transfer the construction of a prison from Drummondville to his own riding will do nothing to improve this Government's credibility. His decision will certainly not change the opinion of the Drummondville people.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) would not speak out and oppose the Prime Minister's decision to move this prison from his riding of Drummondville to the riding of the Prime Minister?

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Drummondville had originally been selected as the site for that prison. It met with the criteria, and it was meant to complete the existing institution.

How much will this cost Canadians, Mr. Speaker? It will cost them $16 million more, $16 million to boost the image and popularity of this Prime Minister who has lost all credibility. Canadians are finding this a little expensive. Would it be in order to boost his prestige with the people in Schefferville? Why is that prison built in Port-Cartier, Mr. Speaker? Would it be to somehow repair the damage? How can the Prime Minister try to have people gobble that one up, Mr. Speaker? By dangling those 37 or 38 per cent unemployment figures in Port-Cartier. But all Hon. Members in this House know very well that is false, utterly false. The unemployment rate in Port-Cartier is around 15 per cent.

And please do not try to convince the people in Port-Cartier that this will be creating prison guards' jobs in that great prison which will be built in Port-Cartier. Let people in Port-Cartier come and tell me how many guards' jobs this will create in their constituency. Let them also come and tell me how many guards were transferred from another prison to go to Port-Cartier. Do not fool yourselves, people of Port-Cartier. Do not fool yourselves. That will be no job creation exercise. Do come and tell me the number of guards who will be hired from the constituency of Port-Cartier for service in that prison. I am telling you, it is my humble belief that guards will be transferred from other prisons in the Province of Quebec to Port-Cartier, rather than new jobs being created. Do not be fooled by the Prime Minister.

And before this goes on, I would like the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault), the Member for Drummond who rises more often than not to speak about everything but real issues to rise and uphold his rights. Now is the time, Mr. Member for Drummond, to fight for your people in Drummondville. Now is the time, Mr. Member for Drummond, to bring spin-offs if any to your constituency. Now is the time to get a move on. Now is the time to speak to your Prime Minister. Now is the time to rise in this House.

This might be an entertaining scenario, Mr. Speaker, but when we remember these are the kind of people who are at the helm, it is enough to make you cry.

By its very nature, Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne is an important document which should reflect the Government's social, political and economic policies, and indicate how they are going to be achieved. No, Sir, I think we have here a text of great literary value which does not spell anything out, which fails to advocate political solutions, all told a document totally devoid of meaning, vigour and realism. As we happen to know the authors, Mr. Speaker, we should not be surprised.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am a Liberal, I belong to the Official Opposition. I am the elected representative of the constituency of Bourassa and, as such, I urge the Prime Minister and his colleagues to change their attitute towards Canadians and not take them as the average Joes on which to try various policies for size, as the Government may see fit.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are very serious and responsible people, and when they realize they are being led by an irresponsible Government they have every right to feel they have been let down and led astray, so they react.

Witness their reaction to the recent by-elections, and there will be more of the same next time around.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, talking about the next election, a moment ago I was listening to my colleague from Lachine (Mr. Layton) who was saying that, before the 1984 election, the people of Lachine wanted a change, and the sooner the better. All I can say to the Hon. Member is that he ought to travel around a bit, not only in his riding of Lachine but throughout the 282 constituencies of this beautiful country and he will see just how much Canadians want a change, a real change this time.

[English]

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to many of the comments during the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne I was thinking of the public musings of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) of not many days ago, that the problem with a Throne Speech is that by its nature it is given to general statements. Perhaps he was somewhat on the mark. The criticism I have been hearing of the Government's program, policy, and action to date, based upon the Throne Speech and the comments coming from the other side of the House, is that it is all too vague and too general.

For example, in her remarks this afternoon the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) down played the Government's statement in the Throne Speech dealing with the drug crisis. Yet, several days after the Throne Speech, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) rose in the House and outlined in great detail very concrete steps which would be taken. Similarly, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) talked about ways in which the Government would enact legislation to see that the profits now being made in Canada through illicit drug trafficking, some $7 billion to $10 billion each year, would be recoverable by the Crown. These are very significant steps. They are part of a positive response to the issues.

It is folly to think that general statements contained in a Throne Speech to outline the general thrust of the Government are the be-all and end-all of the program. The criticism which has been coming at the Government based upon the Throne Speech is falling far short of the mark. It does not accurately and reasonably deal with the broad course upon which the Government has set itself.

When I talk about the broad course, perhaps I would be permitted a moment or two to say what I think it involves. In 1984, when Canadians decided to change the Government in Ottawa, those of us who came to form and support the new Government found that there were two really deep-seated problems in Ottawa. One of them was that financially the Government of Canada was running out of control. It was like a locomotive with a full head of steam that had somehow come off the rails. We have talked about the deficit. Every debate in the House has had a lot of content relating to deficit reduction, whether cuts or reductions which were being proposed were appropriate. Very often we heard Hon. Members opposite bemoaning cuts and efforts to get the deficit under control, even though there is no alternative.

However, dealing with the deficit was only one of two very basic problems. I submit that in fact there was another major problem, equally deep-seated, concerning the philosophy which had developed in Ottawa over the previous 10 years to 20 years. Let us call it the "Ottawa mind-set". What did the Ottawa mind-set or the Ottawa philosophy hold? This attitude permeated not only the Cabinet of the previous Government but right down through the Public Service.

I think we can perhaps see three elements in the Ottawa mind-set. First, it said that Ottawa knows best, that the banks of the Rideau River and of the Ottawa River are where the great wisdom of Canada is reposited. That is why, for example, it was never possible for resources offshore Newfoundland to be developed in a way that was important for Newfoundlanders—Ottawa knew best.

The second component of the mind-set was that the problems of the country could be solved by throwing money at them or by spending money. Of course that was a contributing factor to the large debt with which the country is still saddled.

The third component of the Ottawa mind-set was that if we could not solve a problem by throwing money at it, we could solve it by regulating it, by establishing a board or commission, by enacting further requlations, or by bringing about the kinds of things we saw in the National Energy Program, for example. Those were the three components—Ottawa knows best, solve the problems by throwing money at them or, if that failed to work, regulate it.

Those three ideas formed a philosophy, attitude, or approach which so permeated the operations of the federal Government that we have had a very serious problem over the past two years, since coming here as a new Government, to try to effect the change Canadians clearly want in overcoming that fundamental hurdle. It is far more difficult than the deficit because it is much harder to deal with the ideas which people carry in their minds. We are dealing with nothing less than a matter of changing attitudes.

I should like to note that in The Gazette of Montreal today, the editors provided two cheers for the Conservative Government. No editorial board would ever give three cheers for a Government, or there would be something totally wrong with them. It reads:

> Two cheers to the Mulroney Government for earning praise from Auditor General Kenneth Dye after his sharp-pencilled review of the first full year of the Government's operations.
> The Auditor General, an habitual scourge of government management, hailed the present Government for "bringing a sense of better management to the Public Service." Changing Ottawa's psychology of spending is a large Tory achievement.

Those were not the comments of a Member on the government side of the House. Those were the comments of the editorial board of The Gazette. They referred to "changing Ottawa's psychology of spending". It is evidence of what I am talking about when I say that the big battle before us is changing attitudes which are entrenched here.

I should like to refer to another problem. In dealing with many issues, Hon. Members opposite have been particularly interested in focusing on what I would call the small details or trivial matters. For example, the recent trip of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to Asia saw major accomplishments—the admission of Canada to the Group of Seven, agricultural issues being placed on the agenda for the first time, and significant developments in trade with China and other Pacific Rim countries. What have we heard about from the Opposition on those matters? They asked the following questions. What did the butler do? Did the butler do it? They went from the sublime to the ridiculous. Some members of the Liberal caucus might want to write a book on, did the butler do it? The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is no longer as much the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition as he is chairman of the Book-of-the-Month Club. The Liberal caucus is spewing out books at an incredible rate. Some of them are fine reading. I am sure the next book to come out will be called "Opposition Members Handbook to the Game of Trivial Pursuit". There has been so much noisy and disputatious comment coming from across the way that Canadians have had their attention diverted from some of the more serious matters affecting the Government.

In conclusion, there are four great areas in which the Government has set long-term action. There is the possibility of a new bilateral trade treaty with the United States. Reform of the tax system is now under way. The Government is dealing with regional development and disparities in a broad fashion and is generally dealing with the whole question of deficit reduction. Those four broad areas have set us on the right course.

I am happy to have had a chance to put my views on the record during this debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before proceeding to the Adjournment Debate, I should like to advise the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) that he has 10 minutes remaining in his speech, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments, after Question Period tomorrow.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, there are so many other Hon. Members who have important things to say that I will waive any further time I have so that they might be heard from.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

BANKS AND BANKING—TAKEOVER OF CONTINENTAL BANK. (B) REPAYMENT OF BANK OF CANADA ADVANCES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on October 9 and 16 I asked questions about the Government's approval of the takeover of the Continental Bank, which is a Canadian bank, by Lloyd's Bank, which is British owned. This takeover was unprecedented. As Members will know, it was not an outright takeover but an exchange of assets and liabilities in accordance with existing provisions of the Bank Act. My concern is not specifically with the details of this transaction. I am more concerned with the fact that yet again the Government has put itself in the position of having to make important, precedent-setting decisions involving financial institutions without the benefit of a policy framework.

For two years now, we have been hearing that the Government considers it a priority to update the legislation regulating banks, trust companies, insurance companies and the securities industry. There is no disagreement that new legislation is badly needed. Yet, after two years of Conservative Government, we are awash in studies and really no further ahead in terms of legislation in place than we were two years ago.

Concern has grown as over the past two years banks and trust companies have failed, a major non-financial corporation took control of Canada's largest trust company, a foreign-owned bank acquired ownership of a Canadian bank, and, in every instance, the Government was forced to act in an ad hoc way, flying by the seat of its pants because it did not have legislation in place to deal with the situation.

What is even more worrisome is that the longer the Government delays in bringing forward its proposals for legislation, the fewer options it will have. By delaying and allowing the industry and provincial Governments to take the lead, the Government is reducing its room to manoeuvre and is fast running out of policy options and time. All Canadians have an interest in how their financial institutions are regulated by government. Whether we speak of entrepreneurs and business people looking for capital investment, people looking to take out a mortgage or renew a mortgage, anyone shopping for a loan, or anyone with money in a savings account or RRSP, we all have an interest in knowing that the Government is acting to ensure that the rapid evolution in the financial services industry works for Canada and Canadians. Right now we do not have that assurance because we do not have legislation to give the Government any kind of a handle on the situation.

The question of ownership of financial institutions, for example, has come up with some regularity. Earlier this year the Government approved the industrial giant Imasco's takeover of Genstar Corporation, which owned Canada's largest trust company. At that time, the former Minister of State for Finance was quoted in The Financial Times as having said that:

—she had no difficulty with industrial groups controlling financial institutions.

That, Mr. Speaker, was April 5, 1986. Now there is a new Minister, and this Minister is quoted as having said:

I have great problems with the notion of non-financial institutions controlling financial institutions.

That is from The Financial Post of September 20, 1986. So there is really no telling where the Government stands on the issue of ownership. We just have to wait for the legislation which, as I am sure we are about to be told, will be introduced very shortly. That statement would carry a great more impact if we had not heard it so often in the last two years.

• (1805)

Tomorrow the Government will be tabling the report of the Estey Commission on bank failures and the regulation of the banking industry. I look forward to seeing that report and debating the legislation which I hope will follow before the Government is further overtaken either by events in the industry or the regulatory initiatives of other governments.

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, after several months of negotiations, the Continental Bank of Canada and the Lloyds Bank of London announced on October 2 that they had come to an agreement under which the Lloyds Bank of Canada, the Canadian subsidiary of the London bank, would acquire the majority of the assets of the Continental Bank and take over the majority of its liabilities.

This agreement was the result of the efforts made by the Continental these last few months to find a major banking institution with which to merge. One year ago, following the closing of the two Western Canadian banks, the Continental Bank unfortunately had to face substantial fund withdrawals by commercial and institutional depositors even though it was financially healthy.

The bank had to rely to a great extent on the Bank of Canada and the mechanisms offered by the major banks to replace the lost deposits. While the Continental was making progress in re-establishing the confidence of depositors and reducing its need for advances from the Bank of Canada, as the Hon. Member probably knows, its management was aware that a complete recovery would take a lot of time. To ensure that the operations of the bank could be carried out in the future in the best interests of its customers, depositors and employees, the management decided that the best solution was to join forces with a major international bank such as Lloyds.

While the Government was kept informed of the progress made in the negotiations and while it supported the efforts made by the Continental to come to an agreement, the Government itself did not initiate the negotiations. The agreement is strictly an initiative of the private sector. I repeat to the Hon. Member that the agreement is strictly an initiative of the private sector.

The transaction complies fully with the banking legislation, and as far as possible, all available information has been provided to Parliament and the public. The Minister of State for Finance has already appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to answer questions on the transaction.

As for the question about the advances, I would like to emphasize that, to ensure a harmonious transfer of the operations of the Continental Bank, the advances granted to the Continental by the Bank of Canada will be replaced by advances to Lloyds. Lloyds has agreed to reimburse the Bank of Canada within a reasonably short period, that is no longer than three months after completing its transaction with the Continental. This extension should help Lloyds find proper funding in an orderly fashion and lessen possible disturbances on monetary markets. Finally, I should like to take this opportunity to repeat the firm commitment made by the Government to amend the regulations applying to the financial sector. Our aim is to ensure consumer protection and enhance the integrity of the Canadian financial system which, as it should be noted, is one of the best in the world. The financial sector reform is a high priority for this Government and new legislation will be introduced as soon as possible.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—DEPARTMENTAL ADMINISTRATION—REQUEST FOR REFORM. (B) REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the House briefly on the subject of mismanagement and maladministration in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Many shocking revelations have come to light recently with respect to the operations and functions of that Department within the region of Manitoba. So bad was the situation of the Department's activities in that region that the Government felt obliged to take action.

The former Minister called for an outside audit, which resulted in the Currie Report. The Currie Report confirmed the allegations of the southern chiefs that the Manitoba region was maladministered and that the bands were paying a very heavy price in terms of the quality of services they were able to deliver to their people. These responsibilities had been transferred to them, but they lacked the wherewithal to provide a level of service that would be regarded as acceptable.

Further allegations and charges from the Manitoba region led the present Minister to call for an investigation by the RCMP into the activities of the Manitoba region. This was serious business. Further allegations followed that and, in answer to questions that I raised in the House, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said that Treasury Board would undertake a financial review of the Manitoba region of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

We have had some action but, meanwhile, a large number of bands—some 30 or more—are in debt and are unable to serve their people.

I have argued consistently that the problem within the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is not merely a problem in the Manitoba region. If it were just an isolated problem, then everything that the previous Minister and the present Minister are doing would probably be acceptable, provided that those bands could somehow be helped out of their indebtedness. However, the problem is more widespread.

This problem exists throughout the country, in every region, in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I suggest that right here in the headquarters in Ottawa there is also serious mismanagement and maladministration. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that recently a former employee of that Department revealed that he worked in a division known as the Audit Division? There were 17 so-called auditors in that division and seven support staff. The total payroll of that little group was $900,000, or almost $1 million. The surprising fact is that they do not do any auditing.

What do they do? They seek auditors in the private sector auditors who will take on contracts to audit some particular project under the administration of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. These 17 people, many of whom are not qualified to be auditors, occasionally break away from their crossword puzzles or articles from the library to phone the private contractor who has been hired to do a certain audit to ask how it is going, if progress is being made and whether they can expect to hear something soon. In one year, 1985 to the present time, more than $2 million worth of auditing business from that Audit Division has been given to the private sector. These 17 people are only responsible for letting these contracts. That is maladministration.

If these charges were simply made by former employees of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, or if these charges were simply made by this little band of Opposition Members who are valiantly fighting for good government, and that was as far as it went, perhaps the Government would be able to say that is what it expects to hear.

• (1815)

Recently we had confirmation of this charge of mismanagement and maladministration from no less a person than the most important servant of Parliament, the Auditor General. He has revealed in his recent report that the Department of Indian Affairs is a hopeless wasteland of confusion. It lacks clear policies and directions. The Department is torn between an antiquated and authoritarian statute of this House called the Indian Act on the one hand and on the other hand, there is the pull and attraction of leaders from the indigenous communities who are saying there has to be a better way. There has to be some way in which they can establish a new kind of working relationship with the Government of Canada. There has to be some way in which nearly half a million people can once and for all cease being depressed, colonized and dealt with as if they had no intelligence or capability to look after their own day-to-day affairs in their communities.

These people want to become partners in Confederation. They are sick unto death, Sir, of being pushed to the outer fringes of society and maltreated by Government after Government. This is not just a condemnation of the present Government because this has been going on for a very long period of time.

In response to what the Auditor General has revealed, the Minister has called for a major review of the Department's management of lands, revenues and trust functions. I have no argument with the Minister in what he is doing, but it does not go far enough. We have to go much further.

The answer to what we have to do lies in the meetings of the First Ministers in April of next year when we write into the Constitution of this country the right of Indian people and indigenous people to manage, govern and control their own affairs. Then we begin to negotiate bilaterally arrangements and agreements for carrying out the responsibilities, and these we will honour. We will keep our word and break the pattern of broken promises, broken treaties and failing the first citizens of the first nations of our country.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the honesty of the Hon. Member in saying this problem has been going on for a long, long time. In answer to the Hon. Member's question, let us recall the chronology of events in Manitoba which have led to the current allegations in the press of mismanagement and the response of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight).

In March of 1986, the then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development commissioned a special investigation because of allegations made by the Brotherhood of First Nations. The Ward Mallette report was submitted on June 9, 1986. A departmental response was released on August 20, 1986. It responded in detail to the findings contained in the Ward Mallette special investigation.

On October 8, 1986, the Director of Finance for the Manitoba region resigned and took with him documents which he alleges support the Indians' concerns regarding underfunding, mismanagement and misleading of Parliament. He also alleged that activities of a criminal nature were taking place.

On October 9, 1986, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development asked the RCMP to investigate the allegations of wrongdoing referred to by Mr. MacPhee. Further, on October 15, 1986, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to undertake a comprehensive review of the financial operations of the Department's regional office in Manitoba. Detailed departmental action plans have been developed and are being implemented to remedy those issues identified in the Manitoba special investigation.

In order to improve communications, the Minister has also agreed to meet with Chiefs on a periodic basis to discuss their concerns face-to-face in a business-like way. He recently signed a memorandum of understanding with 40 bands in northern Manitoba establishing such a process.

On August 27, 1986, in Winnipeg, the Minister made a commitment to the southern Chiefs of Manitoba that departmental officials were prepared to meet with bands on a case-by-case basis, if necessary, to discuss individual band indebtedness problems. As of this date, 39 of Manitoba's 60 bands have debts that require debt-recovery plans.

The Minister has asked that documents or evidence showing that contractual commitments have not been met should be presented to him. The Minister has also said unequivocally that where mistakes have been made, they will be corrected; where financial commitments have been entered into, they will be honoured.

With respect to the issue of under-funding, expenditures in the Manitoba region for Indian programs and services have increased substantially over the past 10 years—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary but his time has more than expired.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—(A) REDUCTION OF FRANCOPHONE EMPLOYEES (B) POLICY RELATING TO OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the question I put to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) on October 16 of this year, which concerned a publication called Pony Express, published by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, where we read that the policy to reduce the number of Francophones within the RCMP is an official policy, and I wanted to know whether the Minister and his Government had approved or supported this position.

To situate the issue, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the need to protect language rights at the RCMP is nothing new. I certainly did not make it up since, in his 1985 report, the Commissioner of Official Languages remarked, and I quote:

"Where official languages are concerned, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has a long way to go before its troubles are over. Its review of language policy threatens to slow the current pace of reform even further."

This was back in 1985, Mr. Speaker, so the Commissioner of Official Languages was predicting what might happen at the RCMP.

And that is exactly what we are seeing today, Mr. Speaker, if we are to believe the press and if we listen carefully to what the Minister says. In The Globe and Mail of October 16, we read that it is officially accepted policy that the percentage of Francophones within the RCMP will be reduced from 20.8 per cent to 14.1 per cent. And in the same article we read that Mr. William Spring, assigned to the Official Languages Program with the RCMP, wrote, and I quote:

[English]

The 14 per cent Francophone ratio is a more realistic policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this statement was made by the officer responsible for official languages, following a series of discussions between Treasury Board and the RCMP. I imagine it has a measure of credibility, because there was an exchange of correspondence which we have here today and to which I have referred in the House, where we can read . . . and I want to quote the last paragraph of a letter signed by Mr. Aquilina, not just anybody, who was responsible for official languages at Treasury Board, and I quote verbatim:

[English]

Finally, I would like to suggest, given the importance of the proposed changes, that we proceed on the understanding that a re-assessment of the situation could be made after two years or so. Since it was agreed, at the January 10th meeting, that it would be to our mutual advantage to formalize the agreements reached—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it looks like a firm agreement in principle was finalized.

The Commissioner of Official Languages said in his 1985 report, and I quote: " The high percentage of Anglophone officers can be explained by the fact that nearly 85% work in the West." However, he qualifies these remarks, Mr. Speaker, and I quote again: "However, the question of geographical distribution should not make the RCMP lose sight of the fact that it is a national agency which should reflect the linguistic duality of Canada."

Mr. Speaker, "to reflect the fact that the RCMP is a national agency", I think the target of 20.8 per cent Francophones within the corps, the regular constabulary of the RCMP, would seem an acceptable minimum. And that was in fact the target agreed upon between the parties at the time, that is, the Liberal Government, the RCMP and Treasury Board.

So what is the Conservative Government doing with this problem? He says that there have been discussions, that these were unsatisfactory and that no official decision has been made. Again today the Minister told me there is no formal agreement, that if things do change he and his Government will continue to promote both official languages in the public service, and that he will make sure no attempt is made at reducing staff.

But, Mr. Speaker, it seems this is what they want to do through the back door. I do not care much for this because the House is about to consider serious amendments to the Official Languages Act which was adopted by the House in 1969 and which has not been amended in a significant way in almost 18 years.

When we ask the Minister what is going on with respect to the official languages we are told to be patient. When we ask the Minister to provide explanations about such important news as that mentioned in the RCMP Pony Express we are told there are discussions among civil servants. My God! Mr. Speaker, what are civil servants doing other than implementing the policies of this Government? What do civil servants do? Do they get a kick exchanging letters and documents, when they should be busy following up on the policies of the Government and advising its officials on how to proceed? I am somewhat concerned to hear the Government say: No, no, no. We wash our hands off. Like Pontius Pilate. We have nothing to do with this. Then in turn the civil servants say: Yes! Negotiations are under way and serious recommendations have been made.

Mr. Speaker, this evening I direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary, in the hope that the Government will clear up the air and tell us in no uncertain terms: No! There is no policy aimed at cutting down the staff. No! We do not support this policy under which the RCMP francophone staff would be reduced from 20.8 to 14.1 per cent.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board, the Hon. Robert de Cotret, has asked me to clear up the issue of Francophone and Anglophone membership in our great Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

I would first like to repeat what the President of the Treasury Board said last Thursday in this House, specifically that policy changes proposed by the RCMP have not yet been submitted to his Treasury Board colleagues nor to himself for future consideration. In that respect, he invited his colleague the Sollicitor General to submit to Treasury Board, at the earliest opportunity, the amendments to its official languages policies as planned by the RCMP.

In that respect, according to our information, the Francophone and Anglophone enrolment is not the only item of its internal policies the RCMP intends to amend. This seems to be timely, because active enrolment cannot be separated from the general context of official language use in that important federal agency. We therefore expect the RCMP representations will also include initiatives to improve the situation as regards working languages and language training.

I feel certain the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier will recognize those are important matters that can be improved within the present framework of the Government's current policies. When Treasury Board reviews those documents, after they are submitted, it will be guided in matters of enrolment by Canadian Government policy, which remains equal access to Public Service Employment for all Canadian men and women of both official language groups. This means that opportunities for full enrolment must be exactly the same, both for French and English-speaking Canadians, whatever their ethnic origin or their basic mother tongue. That principle must apply both to hiring and promotions.

Of course, the Treasury Board cannot ignore that the RCMP has to deal with a complex mandate. It works across our vast land in every Canadian province, at the municipal and provincial levels, except in Quebec and Ontario.

In conclusion, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for giving us this opportunity to clarify an important matter of concern to us all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

PENITENTIARIES

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY—REPORTED REJECTION OF BOOK DONATIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House the recent ridiculous situation at the Kingston Penitentiary. Chuck Armstrong, Secretary of the Inmate Committee, dared to write a letter to The Toronto Star asking for donations of used books for the prison library. Not only did the prison warden refuse to accept the books, the inmate was thrown off the prisoners' committee for writing a letter to The Toronto Star, as the secretary of the committee, without having the expressed approval of the prison.

Illiteracy is a widespread problem, particularly among our prisoners. Where is there justification at Kingston Penitentiary in refusing books that libraries and citizens are more than willing to donate when there exists an amazingly high percentage of illiterates among the prison population, and when this is the Year of Literacy in Canada?

I call upon the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher) to have Mr. Armstrong reinstated and begin accepting books at the Kingston Penitentiary. What with the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) decision to build a prison in Port-Cartier at such expense, any donation to prisons should bring a sigh of relief to the Government.

PENSIONS

NEED TO IMPROVE SURVEILLANCE OF EMPLOYEES' PENSION FUNDS BY DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): In his latest report, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General mentions that the Department of Insurance regulates about 560 insurance, trust and loan companies with over-all assets of over $200 billion, and 750 employer-sponsored pension plans valued at $28 billion.

His audit has revealed that the Department of Insurance surveillance of pension plans is a lot less strict than it is with respect to financial institutions. He points out that current surveillance methods do not allow him to have enough control over the solvency of pension plans, so much so that department officials could indeed improve considerably their monitoring of financial institutions.

They should also devote more time to forecasting future trends in this sector and singling out new sectors which may present some risks.

Therefore it is imperative to exercise stricter control over these institutions to prevent surpluses from being used for private investments and avoid speculation with the pension funds of employees, as was the case with respect to Argus Corporation President, who used those funds to buy a daily newspaper in England.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

FINANCE

NON-PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY COSEKA RESOURCES LIMITED

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the recipient of our tenth great untaxed corporation award is Coseka Resources Limited. This company's ability to use generous Liberal and Conservative tax concessions has resulted in current tax credits in every year from 1978 to 1981 on millions of dollars of profits. From 1982 to 1985 the company was granted the right to pay no income taxes at all on $33 million in profits. Had the tax system been fair and equitable, and had this company been required to pay a tax rate of 25 per cent on its profits, Canadian taxpayers would have had their tax bill reduced by $8.2 million.

Canadians are looking for real action in the area of tax reform, not simply more consultation and vague promises about reform for another two years, as was indicated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) yesterday.

S.O. 21

UNITED NATIONS

ANNIVERSARY OF ORGANIZATION'S FOUNDATION

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, today is United Nations day. We would do well to remember the purpose for which the United Nations was founded. Forty-one years ago, as the world was emerging from six years of war, it was set up to create a system for the maintenance of international peace and security. In meeting that basic objective, the international community has, on balance, succeeded, but much still remains to be done. So long as people go unfed, so long as men and women are imprisoned for their beliefs, and so long as the world is threatened by violence and war, no nation or individual can afford to cease working for a better society.

There could be no better way for Canadians to mark this anniversary than by recommitting ourselves to the principles of the United Nations Charter and to the strengthening and revitalization of the organization. Let our renewed commitment be an example to all member states.

STATUS OF WOMEN

SITUATION OF SINGLE, ELDERLY AND HEADS OF FAMILIES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, in their report entitled Progress Against Poverty the National Council of Welfare point to a significant decline in Canada's poverty rate among men and the elderly. While the over-all situation is improving, however, single and elderly women and others who are heads of families are getting ever poorer. Indeed six out of 10 single-parent families headed by women live under the threshold of poverty. The poverty rate among single mothers did not decrease in 1985. In this category poverty has been gradually worsening over the past five years. A single mother is five times more likely than a married woman to end up swelling the ranks of the poor. Inequality among single-parent families is glaring. A single-parent family headed by a woman stands four times as many chances of being poor as a family headed by a man.

In the light of this depressing situation, Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that the comments made last October 21 by the Minister responsible for the Status of Women were particularly ill-chosen; she stated that surely the Conservative Government has done something to improve the status of women in Canada, considering that a few women have been able to sit on Government benches—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but her time has expired.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO SUPPORT AND ENCOURAGE THE DISABLED

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, some 3.5 million Canadians are disabled. This represents some 14 per cent of our population, virtually one person in seven. In spite of inherited financial difficulties, this Government has taken a number of positive steps to support further and encourage the handicapped.

The funding for the disabled persons' program will increase fivefold. A new housing renovation program will raise the maximum subsidy from $1,500 to $5,000. The flat rate disability payment will rise from $87 per month to $224 per month effective January 1, 1987. A broader definition of "disability" will enable an additional 120,000 Canadians to secure an income tax deduction, a deduction which has been increased by $250 this year.

These initiatives, which improve the living conditions of the disabled, are an integral part of the ongoing thrust of the Government toward greater social justice for all Canadians.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

ARRIVAL OF RICK HANSEN IN OTTAWA

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I know all Members of Parliament would want to join me in welcoming Rick Hansen to the National Capital today. He is an exceptional Canadian who has now travelled through 34 countries, including the Soviet Union, China, and Australia, a distance of 40,000 kilometres, on his Man in Motion Tour.

Rick Hansen has simply set out to prove that people who are disabled can realize their dreams, that life does not stop because of disability. He has been seeking to change the perception of Canadians and people around the world about those who are disabled. The disabled are our peers. They are our equals.

• (1110)

I, personally, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, want to pay tribute to Rick Hansen for the courage and the perseverance he has shown following in the footsteps, if I may say, of his friend, Terry Fox. I wish him well on his very difficult journey for the rest of the Man in Motion Tour until he reaches Vancouver.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CAPE BRETON INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my constituents are wondering whether the NDP really do care about people and jobs.

The Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit is attracting investment to eastern Nova Scotia. A number of plants are under construction, and jobs during and after construction will result. Yet each day members of the NDP stand in the House and tell us they are against tax credits.

I can assure these ideological purists that the unemployed fully support these development incentives. To the NDP, the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit may be a loophole to benefit big companies; to the ordinary Canadians I represent, the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit is a valuable investment incentive for our region that is resulting in jobs for the needy.

Are the NDP for it or against it? Come clean with Cape Bretoners!

SOCIAL SCIENCES AND HUMANITIES RESEARCH COUNCIL

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, during the last few days representatives from the Canadian Federation for the Humanities have visited a number of Members of Parliament. This organization represents over 8,000 academics across Canada and is extremely concerned with issues affecting university education.

This year the group brought to the attention of Members of Parliament the fact that there is an urgent need to include research in the humanities and social sciences within the fiscal definition of research and development. Such a move by the federal Government would enable the humanities and social sciences fields to attract donations from the private and corporate sectors.

Now that the federal Government has seen fit to include social sciences and humanities as one of the granting councils, it is imperative that this group be given equal status to medical research and natural sciences and engineering research. Without this benefit the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council will be in serious difficulty within a short period of time. Therefore, I urge the Government of Canada to give favourable consideration to the recommendations brought forth—

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

PRESENCE OF RICK HANSEN IN NATIONAL CAPITAL

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are following Rick Hansen's wheelchair tour across Canada with great interest and sympathy. In fact, Mr. Hansen will be in the National Capital area today. With his determination and great strength of character, Rick Hansen is an example to us all. He decided to make this tour for the benefit of others who are similarly handicapped, making the many sacrifices and overcoming the numerous problems involved in making such a trip.

Rick Hansen, on behalf of the Canadian people I wish you the best of luck in pursuing your goal, and I will most certainly continue to support your cause.

I was truly delighted to meet and welcome you when you stopped at Rivière-du-Loup on October 11, and we all hope your trip will be the success you want it to be.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, when will the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) pork-barrelling stop? It was scandal enough that the Prime Minister short-circuited the usual planning criteria of Correctional Service Canada to have an unnecessary and wildly expensive facility built in his riding in Port-Cartier, but now scandal piles upon scandal as we discover that the PM's interference continues in the construction of the facility at Port-Cartier. The Auditor General has stated that involvement of political officials in such a committee is abnormal. Everything about this project is abnormal.

Canadians will not accept pork-barrelling and political interference as normal aspects of political life. The Tories have learned the lessons of the Liberals well. Constructing prisons as job-creation projects is always unacceptable, and using the excuse that the Liberals did the same thing is an abdication of responsibility. The excesses of the Liberals live on, taken to new heights by the Prime Minister and his advisers. The Prime Minister had an option. He could have said no, but he said yes, to the shame of himself and all his Tory colleagues.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

AUDITOR GENERAL'S COMMENT ON IMPROVED MANAGEMENT PRACTICES

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, for the first time in a long time the Auditor General had something positive to say about government management and spending. The Auditor General said he felt this Government was more concerned and interested in sound management practices than the previous Liberal administration. I know that there is always room for improvement, but I must remind Hon. Members that my Government remains firmly committed to a policy of deficit-reduction and to spending controls.

• (1115)

This improvement in management practices and attitudes was certainly not reflected in the programs and policies of the previous Liberal administation. For example, the Auditor General noted that a Liberal employment program did not necessarily create employment. Furthermore, the NRC, which is presently criticizing my Government for cuts in its budget, wasted about $2.7 million storing furniture and equipment it bought more than two years ago and still has not used. The money thrown away on storage and interest could very easily have covered about 15 per cent of the NRC's budget cuts.

The outlook is positive and the Auditor General has confirmed that this Government is a better manager than the last Liberal—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

TAX REFORM

END RESULT INQUIRY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday the Minister of Finance made a long and expected speech in the House about Tory tax reform. Unfortunately, we know nothing more now than we did before.

I read the Minister's speech carefully and I found it to be full of generalities. It contains no specifics at all. I suppose the columnist from The Ottawa Citizen was right when he called it a flim-flam.

Will the Government guarantee Canadians that Tory tax reform will not increase, either directly or indirectly through other forms of taxes, the total amount of money paid by the average Canadian?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Finance was an introduction to the guidelines which will begin his consultation on tax reform. We are beginning consultation on all of these issues. We encourage Canadians to read this document and we encourage the Hon. Member to read this document. This is the beginning of the consultation and the laying down of guidelines.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, again we should note that the Government does not want to guarantee that taxes will not be increased.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in his speech yesterday, the Minister of Finance said he intended to abolish certain tax deductions now available to private citizens.

Since the Minister and the Government will be consulting Canadians on this matter, could the Minister of State for Finance inform the House what tax exemptions or deductions his Government intends to abolish? Is it the deduction for dependent children, the married deduction or the deductions currently allowed for unemployment insurance premiums or union dues? Could the Government, since it intends to consult with Canadians, be a little more specific about its intentions?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there are two parts to that question. First, in terms of over-all marginal rates for personal income tax, the Government has said that the purpose of this reform is to lower those rates. Second, there are certain preferences and deductions at which the Government must look in terms of any comprehensive tax reform. We are finally doing it.

I would ask the Hon. Member if he is against what we are trying to do. We are trying to simplify the tax system. Is he against that? We are trying to promote fairness in the tax system. Is he against that? We are trying to improve the balance of federal taxes. Is he against that? We are trying to encourage economic growth. Is he against that? All of these guidelines are here. Please, as the Hon. Member for Beaches often says, come clean with us. What does the Hon. Member want—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give judgment on the proposal but there is no proposal on the table. We do not know what the Government wants to do. There are so many generalities that it is like motherhood and cream pie.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TABLE PROPOSAL

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I submit that a real, meaningful consultation requires a clear and detailed proposal by the Government. Otherwise Canadians will not know on what they are consulted. Will the Government undertake to table such a detailed proposal and hold public hearings before the Finance Committee of the House of Commons?

• (1120)

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was not a Member of the House some years ago when there was another attempt to reform taxes, but not comprehensively. The problem was that they did not consult. They acted unilaterally.

Mr. Garneau: I was part of it.

Mr. Hockin: We are not acting unilaterally. That is why we are consulting. For us to come up with detailed proposals before we even consult would be quite wrong.

Mr. Garneau: That is completely wrong and you know it.

SALES TAX—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the previous proposals, the Carter Commission that the Minister has just referred to, pointed out very strongly that income tax which is geared to ability to pay is a much fairer way for Government to get revenue than a sales tax which bears more heavily on the poor. Will the Minister, therefore, explain to the House how he can claim that the emphasis is on fairness when in fact the Government appears to be moving much more in the direction of consumption tax and away from income tax?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there are two obvious answers to that question. The first is to judge the future by the present. We have brought in a refundable child tax credit. We have brought in a refundable sales tax credit for low-income families. That is where we stand with respect to the poor. That particular commitment is there, and in many other aspects of what the Minister of Finance has done. As to the future, those ideas that the Hon. Member proposes can be brought before the standing committee, and can be brought before the consultative mechanism that is going to be set in place.

CONCEPT OF FAIRNESS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, a single parent earning $20,000 and caring for two children will lose nearly $500 this year because of the Conservative Government's tax increases. This family is not eligible for the sales tax rebate. Can the Minister explain to the House how we are to see a promise of fairness in this?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): The very first objective that the Minister of Finance is aiming for in this whole process of tax reform and consultation is the improvement of fairness. All ideas to improve the fairness are very welcome.

CORPORATE TAX REVENUE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It arises out of the proposals made by the Minister yesterday on tax reform. Does the Minister of State recall that in the 1985 budget paper on corporation tax the Government gave a preview in which it indicated that it wanted to wipe out some corporate tax loopholes and, therefore, reduce the rates, but it then went on to say:

> The suggested approach is deliberately structured to raise the same amount of revenues as does the current system.

Is that still the goal of the Government, that is, not to get extra dollars from the share of corporation tax, or has the Government now come to the New Democratic Party's view which is that the share of corporate tax is inadequate and should be raised substantially?

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, comprehensive tax reform means looking at all aspects of taxation: corporate income tax, personal income tax, and sales tax. We are trying to broaden the base and to make it more fair. In terms of corporate income tax reform, it is very wise for us to look at various aspects of corporate income tax reform that should be improved, especially certain resource preferences, certain capital cost allowances. But I remind the Hon. Member that in this past year 13,000 companies in Canada are now paying tax that never paid tax before, so our commitment to getting corporations to pay tax is already bearing fruit.

Mr. Cassidy: I am glad to hear that from the Minister. That leaves only 67,000 companies in Canada which are profitable and are not paying taxes. It is about time they paid taxes as well.

CORPORATE AND PERSONAL TAX REVENUE PROJECTIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Is the Minister aware that the Government's own figures show that between 1984 and 1990 personal tax revenues are anticipated to increase by $28 billion, and corporate tax revenues by only $4.5 billion? The share from corporations is falling. Is that still the Government's intention, or will it be increasing the share that is paid into the federal treasury from corporations, so that we have real fairness in the tax system?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): I know that the Hon. Member will not expect me to accept the premise in terms of the numbers that he has given, because I will have to verify them. The purpose of this whole exercise is to consult. That is what this document is trying to begin. All ideas to improve the corporate tax framework are very welcome. But remember that we are trying to broaden the base, not just load up one pillar with excessive taxes. We have already given the understanding to everybody in this paper that lower rates of tax on the personal income side are in the offing.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF MINIMUM CORPORATE TAX

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this will be my final question for the Minister of State for Finance. The figures I just quoted were sent over by the Minister.

Since the U.S. Congress has just imposed a minimum tax on corporations to avoid a situation like the one that now exists in Canada, where thousands of profitable companies are not paying taxes at all, will the Government consider imposing a minimum tax on corporations to ensure they pay their fare share of the Canadian Government's revenue?

• (1125)

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as for the minimum tax in the United States, it is not working very well and it is very trivial in most instances. If that is the direction the Hon. Member wants us to take, then he should say so. We have a tax system in Canada which, compared with that of the United States, is entirely different for very good reasons. The Hon. Member knows why the two tax systems are different, and corporate tax rates are an example of the difference.

PENITENTIARIES

PORT-CARTIER PRISON—PMO REPRESENTATION ON PLANNING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Solicitor General of Canada. In a conversation which we had with him this morning, the Auditor General stated that the nomination of Mr. Simon Landry, a political adviser in the Prime Minister's Office, to sit on the planning committee of the construction of the Port-Cartier prison was in his view—and he repeated it today—abnormal. Could the Government tell the House today who appointed this individual? What specific qualifications did he have which made his nomination normal? Will the Minister not admit that this was a partisan political move to partake in patronage?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the House that, pursuant to Chapter 140 of the administrative policy manual, there is provision for the setting up of a planning committee. The people who become members are those who are interested, and that in fact was the procedure followed in this particular case.

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. They are representatives of interested Departments, Departments which have an interest in the project. Would the Minister tell the House how the Prime Minister's Office is an interested Department in this project? Is it not a fact that this gentleman sits on the board so that at least eight contracts can be awarded within the Prime Minister's riding, bypassing other guidelines of the Treasury Board, other than the ones which have been broken right now and we proved were broken yesterday?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): I can obviously say no, Mr. Speaker. This particular committee was set up to allow the process of regional development to crystallize. At the request of the local Chamber of Commerce and the local construction association, meetings were called to allow local contractors to have the opportunity to bid on the Port-Cartier construction. This was done in that region, and this was applauded by the people of that area.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the only thing which is crystallizing is the stench of patronage over this particular Government.

ALLEGED PMO INVOLVEMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General who is not prepared to admit that there was no interference by the Prime Minister or his officials. What was the earliest date upon which there was involvement by any official of the Prime Minister's Office in the decision to construct this prison in Port-Cartier, Quebec? What was the earliest date the Prime Minister's Office became involved?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member has been absent on other duties out in British Columbia.

An Hon. Member: Did it do any good?

Mr. Kelleher: Far be it from me to comment on the success of that venture. However, were he here, he would have known that I discussed it. I went back to my officials and I was advised by them that there was no record whatsoever of any involvement by the Prime Minister or any member of his staff in the location of the prison at Port-Cartier.

• (1130)

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, there may be no record, but the people of Canada know well exactly what has happened.

LOCATION OF PRISON

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Does the Solicitor General agree with his colleague from Quebec East who suggested yesterday before the Public Accounts Committee that because the prison is being built in Port-Cartier maybe people will think twice before committing crimes because the penitentiary will be so far away from families and professional services. Does that represent the opinion of the Solicitor General and the Government of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I was not present at the hearings yesterday. I can tell the Member that the prison is being located in Port-Cartier for good and valid reasons. First, there is a need for protective custody cells. Second, it is to assist an economically depressed region of the country. I am sure that the Member and his Party are not against policies of that nature; certainly the former Solicitor General was not.

PARTICIPATION OF SIMON LANDRY IN PLANNING COMMITTEE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. It is reported that records in the hands of the Government show that on April 15 of last year a special planning committee created to monitor the Port-Cartier prison project had as one of its members, Simon Landry, a PMO policy adviser. If that was the case, can the Solicitor General explain why months later, last September, the press secretary to the Prime Minister, Michel Gratton, answered written questions about the Port-Cartier project and said: "There was no interference by the Prime Minister". How can the Solicitor General explain this obvious contradiction?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the fact is easily explained. This particular implementation committee was set up three months after the decision had been taken to locate the penitentiary at Port-Cartier. Any information given to this planning committee was exactly the same as was given publicly to the local Chamber of Commerce and the citizens of that area.

TREASURY BOARD CONTRACT GUIDELINES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Supply and Services. In the Treasury Board contract guidelines—

[Translation]

It is stated that before a contract is awarded, the contracting party must put out a call for tenders, in accordance with article 9, except in cases of pressing emergency where any delay would be harmful to the public interest.

I want to ask the Minister: Can he explain to the House what kind of pressing emergency prompted the Government's decision to ignore this guideline?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there was no particular emergency. I can say that all of the appointments made were made pursuant to Treasury Board guidelines. I can unequivocally advise, and with confidence say, that this procedure was followed in this particular case.

TAX REFORM

GOVERNMENT'S INITIATIVES—CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Again it concerns the whole notion of tax reform as introduced by his Government. We heard the Minister of State for Finance today underline the fact that the importance of the initiative is based on fairness. As well, I remember the Minister stating in this House that all taxes will be looked at in a comprehensive way. Is the Minister of State for Finance prepared to state whether the half a million dollar capital gains tax exemption will also be on the table and will also be up for reconsideration?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that any comprehensive tax reform examination will look at all aspects of tax reform. We are trying to bring about a better balance among the three major elements in the federal tax system. This reform will result in no increase in take-home pay for Canadians. That is the bottom line.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: We are trying also to simplify the tax system. Does the Hon. Member support simplifying the tax system? Does he support us in making it simpler and making it more fair?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Regina East.

REQUEST THAT EXEMPTION BE RECONSIDERED

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, let me get back to the same question again. I did not quite hear an answer to it. I am asking for a specific yes or no. Is the Government prepared to put the capital gains tax exemption that is costing some $600 million a year in lost revenue and which is helping the rich Canadians, those who have half a million dollars in capital gains—

Mr. Mazankowski: The farmers?

Mr. de Jong: —on the table for reconsideration? Yes or no?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is doing it again. He is taking one part of this whole package and singling it out.

Mr. de Jong: Is it going to be on the table? Answer the question.

Mr. Hockin: This is a comprehensive review. I encourage the Hon. Member to look at it.

Mr. de Jong: Is it going to be on the table? Answer the question.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

PARTICIPATION IN WAR AGAINST POVERTY

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of External Relations. Yesterday, you stated your intention to open up CIDA to Canadians. Will this mean that organizations or agencies with an interest in international development, and there are many in my constituency, will be given the means to take part in the fight against poverty throughout the world?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely thank the Hon. Member for her question and for her interest in the development of Third World countries. As I said yesterday, I believe that governments alone cannot do everything and that we should open up CIDA to look for new partners and allow a greater number of Canadians to take part in our work to provide assistance to the Third World.

PENITENTIARIES

PORT-CARTIER PRISON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Supply and Services. Given that he has admitted this morning that he and his Government violated the tendering guidelines for the contract of the Port-Cartier prison—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Another misrepresentation.

Ms. Copps: —will he now agree to refer this whole mess to the Public Accounts Committee so that Members of Parliament can have some accountability instead of the kind of pork-barreling that we have seen by the Prime Minister and his cronies in the Prime Minister's Office?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should correct the record and advise the Hon. Member that I am the Minister for Public Works. Perhaps I could also indicate to the Hon. Member that at no time did I indicate today that there was any breach of appropriate procedure, and, more important, of Treasury Board guidelines.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the administrative policy manual states quite clearly that, before any contract is entered into, the contracting authority shall invite tenders except in need of pressing emergency. The Minister this morning said there was no emergency. It is a clear violation of the guidelines. I ask the Minister once again whether this whole mess will be referred to the Public Accounts Committee so that every Member of Parliament can examine the kind of politics behind the Prime Minister's pork-barreling.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Another misrepresentation.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Member might want to read on.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): She is an expert at partial quotation.

Mr. McInnes: There are a good number of provisions that direct how Public Works should proceed in the awarding of contracts. Any contract over $100,000 goes to public tender. For anything below, there is a committee of civil servants who make recommendations to the Minister. The Minister makes the choice. Any contract under $15,000 is chosen by the bureaucrats in the particular region. Those procedures were followed in every instance.

Ms. Copps: It is a $41 million plus boondoggle.

AIR CANADA

OBSERVANCE OF SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to have a report on the response given to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning his meeting with Air Canada on Air Canada's action in circumventing the Canadian and American sanctions on travel to South Africa.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me thank the Hon. Member for his question, both today and two day's ago. After his original question I spoke to Mr. Pierre Jeanniot, President of Air Canada. Air Canada, in fact, did not act in any way that undermines the sanctions policy of the Government of Canada. However, in order to ensure the more extensive effectiveness of those guidelines, Air Canada gave notice yesterday that it is ending its general sales agency agreement with South African Airlines in Canada and with a private agency in South Africa.

Accordingly, Air Canada will no longer be involved in facilitating travel to and from South Africa.

Air Canada has agreed that when South African Airways closes its Canadian offices on November 1, Air Canada will not undertake to act as the South African Airlines official agent in Canada. I think those are very positive steps by the Crown corporation. I expressed my appreciation of them. I express my appreciation of the Hon. Member for raising the question.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO IMPLEMENT SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, there are certain impediments to the effective implementation of our sanctions represented, for example, by the role of travel agents in this activity, and certain impediments represented in the Common Carriers Act and the National Aeronautics Act. Does the existence of these impediments in our own legislation and international regulations not clearly demonstrate the need for the Government to introduce legislation in this House as recommended by the Human Rights Committee, to give effective implementation to Canadian sanctions, instead of relying on voluntary attempts at accomplishing much less than could be done by that other vehicle?

• (1140)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my view that for a variety of reasons it is preferable for us to proceed with voluntary measures which, by and large, have proved effective. Some questions with regard to international regulations are being looked at now. Air Canada legal authorities are studying IATA regulations to learn what their obligations are under IATA.

I would like to make two other observations on this matter. I will be writing to other Canadian airlines commending to them the action which Air Canada has announced it has taken. Finally, there was an assertion in the House the other day by the Member for Hamilton East that the President of Air Canada had written to union officials saying he was waiting for a directive from the Department of External Affairs. That statement by the Hon. Member was false.

Ms. Copps: I will produce the letter.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In the Auditor General's Report he reveals that the Western Grain Stabilization Act has fallen from over $1 billion two years ago to over a $100 million deficit. Can the Minister confirm that the much ballyhooed $1 billion aid program for grain farmers will in fact be only the regular statutory payments due to farmers under the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the Agricultural Stabilization Act as a result of the low grain prices?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, obviously Question Period does not allow time for an adequate explanation of the shortfall suggested in the Auditor General's Report. However, I have an explanation. This is due to many fluctuating factors, but primarily to the fact that it is impossible to estimate the number of eligible producers.

Mr. Benjamin: The farmers fluctuated again.

Mr. Wise: You are right. With regard to the latter part of the Hon. Member's question, I refer him to our original statements that no existing agricultural program will be cut and no existing agricultural funding will be reduced.

GOVERNMENT'S OBLIGATION UNDER WEST GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister planning to make a special payment to grain farmers in order to reduce the payments which farmers would normally be eligible for under the Western Grain Stabilization Act? Is it the Government's plan to avoid its statutory obligation under the Western Grain Stabilization Act by making a special payment outside of that, thus reducing its obligation under the Act which has been estimated at over $1 billion?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no, because that would be a violation of our stated commitments to Canadian farmers. When this Party makes commitments to Canadian farmers, it fulfils those commitments.

TRADE

UNITED STATES IMPORT TAX—PROVISIONS OF EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT ACT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of International Trade who has now had the opportunity to review the Employment Support Act. She knows it was designed to protect Canadian workers and their companies from unfair trade action by, in particular, the United States Government. Will the Minister now use this tool, which the Parliament of Canada has provided her, to prevent lay-offs in the sawmill industry across Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this legislation is administered by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who is not in the House today. I have looked into it and have found that, although this legislation is effectively on the books, the regulations under it have lapsed. It does not seem to be an effective vehicle at this time. In my view it is premature to make decisions about what kind of assistance measures we should take in this case until we have a better idea of the impact. Our efforts are now directed to getting a reversal of the decision.

PROTECTION OF LUMBER WORKERS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, two weeks after my colleague, the Member for Essex—Windsor, raised this matter this spring with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, those regulations disappeared from the books. The Minister knows full well that there will be lay-offs in the Canadian industry while she is trying to convince the American Government to drop the imposition of the tax on Canadian lumber going into the United States. Will the Minister use the principles within this Act, even if amendments are required, to protect the workers who will be laid off while she is negotiating with Washington?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member was already aware that this legislation was not appropriate, I wonder whether it was appropriate for him to raise the question. In response to the Member's suggestion, I can only repeat what I have already said. It is too early to assess the impact of the decision on the industry and we are directing our efforts to having it reversed.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Timiskaming for a question supplementary to the questions of the Hon. Member for Algoma.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he inform the House whether grain producers other than those in western Canada will qualify under the $1 billion subsidy which he announced earlier?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is yes. This is a federal program which is national in scope.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. We learned today of another hare-brained scheme of the Minister which would destroy the National Research Council and basic research done in government labs across the country. Thousands of researchers would be put out to Tory pasture. Will the Minister confirm that he will not pursue his plan to destroy world-renowned research activity across Canada?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am totally unaware of the document to which the Hon. Member is referring. There are dozens of consultation papers in circulation in industry, universities, and among government agencies. None of these papers would provide substance for the fear-mongering question which the Hon. Member asks.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, we have been waiting for two years for a full response of the Government to the report of the Wright Committee. Will the Minister confirm that no changes will be made and no policy will be implemented regarding government science without full public consultations with private sector clients of government labs, the National Research Council and other agencies, and the scientists themselves?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, if I made no statements and we brought in no policies, we would simply be following the 20 years of deliberate policies of neglect of the former Government. We will act.

UNITED STATES TARIFF ON CANADIAN LUMBER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of International Trade and is supplementary to my colleague's question to which the Minister replied that it is too early to assess the impact of this lumber decision on workers. Is it too early to recognize that an economic disaster has hit British Columbia, northern Ontario and Quebec, and requires action from the Government? Why is the Minister not prepared to act?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may be interested to know that we have a variety of assessments of what the impact of this particular tariff will be on the forest industry. In the case of British Columbia, the head of the IWA feels that there will be no impact. Other people suggest that there will be some impact. We are assessing the situation before deciding what measures are required.

The answer to the problem is to seek to reverse the decision. That is what the industry, the union, the provinces, and the federal Government are seeking to do. I am surprised that I do not have the Hon. Member's support for that position.

• (1150)

REQUEST FOR ACTION IN CANADA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we have had evidence in front of the House already of about 20 per cent of the workers in northern Ontario being laid off and 1,500 shipyard workers across Ontario being affected. Clearly this is an economic disaster.

I ask the Minister yet again if she will not do anything but act within the American system, which is the system that she herself says is an attack on our sovereignty. Will she not instead take action here in Canada for some change that will make the United States pay attention and reverse its stand?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the House that we are seeking to negotiate a trade agreement with the United States which will deal with just these kinds of issues. That is the kind of protection that we need in this country. That is the kind of mutual benefit that we will have from a trade agreement.

May I point out to the Hon. Member that the Economic Council report states that freer trade with the United States will generate 376,000 extra net jobs by 1995, and if we stay on a protectionist course we will lose 500,000 jobs. That is why I wonder why the New Democratic Party does not support the position of the Government on this issue.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED KINGDOM—SEVERANCE OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH SYRIA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I think the whole world has been watching with concern the court proceedings in the United Kingdom. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs comment on Britain's breaking of relations with Syria today, and Canada's response to that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, earlier today the British Foreign Secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, announced in Westminster that Britain was breaking diplomatic relations with Syria as a result of evidence adduced in a court case relating to terrorism. The Government of Canada fully supports the action of Great Britain in this regard. I want to indicate to the House that today I have been in touch with our ambassador in Damascus, calling him home for consultations. I have arranged to speak to Sir Geoffrey Howe later in the day, and I will keep the House of Commons apprised of other actions we might consider.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN POSTAL RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for Canada Post, I shall address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

On October 22, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business wrote a letter to the Minister for Canada Post to express its strong opposition to any increase in the postal rates.

Why is the Government congratulating small business for having created 70 per cent of new jobs on the one hand and planning to impose them higher costs by increasing postal rates on the other?

How can he explain this contradiction?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Post Office has said in the House and outside the House many times that it is the desire of the Government to improve service and reduce the deficit of the Post Office. To that extent a new corporate plan is being developed and should be tabled very soon.

GOVERNMENT'S OBJECTIVE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, does the Deputy Prime Minister not believe that it is wrong to bail out Canada Post from its current deficit problem by applying another stamp tax?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, improving service is one way of reducing the deficit as well as making the Post Office operation more effective and efficient. I am sure the Hon. Member would not disagree with that objective. I simply remind him that there is no Government that has done more to support small business than this Government, and we will continue to support small business.

Oral Questions

RESEARCH UNDERTAKEN IN GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In Wednesday's debate the Minister agreed with the Member for Winnipeg North that our research efforts should be concentrated in areas where we already have expertise, such as agriculture, forestry, fisheries and mining. Why is his Department preparing policy guidelines that will effectively gut research in these line Departments and cost up to 1,000 jobs in each of these Departments?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we are doing no such thing. Instead, we are mobilizing the collective energies of all Canadians to prepare a place for Canada on the new frontier in the next century.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, this jargon about mobilizing collective energies will mean that thousands of research people will be laid off and any attempt at replacing them will be like trying to fit round pegs into square holes. It will not work.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister make a commitment now that any guidelines will come before the Science and Technology Committee before they are implemented so that the committee can approve them and ask the proper questions?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member take control of his lively imagination. There is no intention to break down those inherent strengths. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North did nothing more than to requote what I said in my speech 10 minutes earlier, which was to build on our national strengths and resource industries and to revitalize our regions with the tools of science and technology. That is what we are doing.

INSURANCE

SUPERVISION OF REGISTERED PENSION FUNDS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Many of my retired constituents, and indeed many retired Canadians, want to be assured that supervision of pension funds is adequate to ensure the security of their incomes after retirement. In light of the Auditor General's remarks in his most recent report, what assurance can the Minister give the House and those Canadians that their post-retirement income is secure in pension funds?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for his close interest in this question. The Auditor General's Report was a reflection on what could be done in the future for federally registered pension plans. All of his suggestions are being examined and a number of them are already being worked on by the Department of Insurance. I assure him that the problem with federally registered pension plans up to now is that they are producing huge surpluses, not problems.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ENERGY INDUSTRY—JOB LOSSES IN ALBERTA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister for International Trade, stated that over 100,000 new jobs would be created as a result of the energy policies that were implemented when she was Minister. We learned this week from a report submitted to the Alberta and federal Governments that over 50,000 jobs will be lost this year in Alberta and 6,000 additional jobs will be lost throughout Canada. Will the Minister contact his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and his provincial colleagues, to see what corrective action might be taken to deal with this serious employment situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is an excellent question. Everyone is aware of the employment situation in Alberta, which is the result of the problems in agriculture and the oil industry.

We are closely monitoring the employment trends in the province, and with the co-operation of all Cabinet members, especially the Minister of Industry, and taking into account the options open to me, as I have already said on a couple of occasions, we may be able to find special applications of our jobs strategy for this province.

[English]

JOB-CREATION FUNDING FOR ALBERTA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, how does the Minister respond to the charge by Mr. Oman, a Minister in the Alberta Government, that Alberta is not getting its fair share of job-creation money—only 1 per cent of the job-creation money—when Alberta's unemployment average is higher than the national average? How does he deal with that allegation that the Alberta Minister levelled against the federal Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would not have expected the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East to give me an opportunity to tell him that the programs mentioned by Mr. Orman were programs implemented by the previous Government in 1982, and I can give a series of examples of these programs. Some of them have already been mentioned in the newspapers this week. All are programs and projects authorized by your Government which we have replaced by the job-creation program.

Mr. Orman was therefore referring only to the job creation programs in effect from 1982 to 1985.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED FALSE STATEMENT—TABLING OF LETTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I believe you received notice of my point. During Question Period the Secretary of State for External Affairs made a statement in the House in which he accused me of having made a false statement with respect to the position of Air Canada and its decision not to cut off links with the South African airlines and other South African connections.

For the purpose of the House, I would like to table a letter from the Chairman of Air Canada in response to a request from the union. I am sorry the Minister's correspondence is that far behind.

In a letter dated November 20, 1985, in response to the union call to sever connections with South African airways and any air links to South Africa, the Chairman stated:

> These activities are the subject of bilateral and multilateral agreements made on a country-to-country, designated carrier to designated carrier, or multilateral basis in which all airlines participate. Unilateral action by Air Canada is, therefore, inappropriate.

The Chairman further stated that he had been in touch with the Department of External Affairs in order to ascertain this. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the statement made in the House today which was false was not my statement but the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to table the appropriate document.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to have the document tabled. It will then let Members of this House read the document for themselves in light of the statement which was made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) in which she said that the President of Air Canada said he was waiting for a directive. That is a false representation of this letter. I am quite prepared to have it tabled and have it judged by every impartial observer.

I hope—let me put it this way—that the standard of integrity practised by myself and by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East might come closer together. I do not intend to move.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say we have no objection whatsoever to this document being tabled.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened with some care to the comments of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), the Minister and those of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). It is not the usual practice in this House for Private Members to table documents, unless I am compelled by an extraordinary show of unanimity in this House by all Parties that that is what they wish to do in this circumstance.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Let the record show for itself.

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is unanimous consent in these circumstances to table the document?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I will abide by the wishes of the House, but point out that I am abiding by the wishes of the House, that the House has quite clearly decided to move outside the usual practice.

I would now like to deal with the question of privilege. I must say to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), having listened very carefully to her representations and the representations of the Minister, that in the view of the Chair the matter is not a point of privilege. It is an argument over facts. The facts may or may not be more elucidated by the tabling of the document. In that regard, I am, of course, as always, your servant and in your hands when there is unanimity.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Thursday, October 23, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to contribute to the debate today. There are a number of issues which I consider to be of vital importance, not just in terms of my constituency but in terms of Canada, that I would like to raise today. However, since this is the first opportunity in debate that I have had to address Your Honour, I would like to say to you, Mr. Speaker, congratulations on your election to the position of First Commoner. It is a delight to see you in the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, today I would like to address the issues of social justice and issues related to women. In the context of the Speech from the Throne I would like to read into the record the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who, with compassion and understanding, described the goals of the Government on matters of social justice. He said:

My government will continue to enlist the support of all in pursuit of the common goal: a modern, tolerant, and caring nation in which its citizens are secure and prosperous. Canadians would want their governments to give the highest priority in social policy to those who are in greatest need. As well, Canadians expect to enjoy the highest quality in health care and other social benefits that have become fundamental to our national quality of life.

When I reflect on those remarks I must say that we have come a long way since the Parliament of 1974 to 1979 when my colleagues and I, and in particular the distinguished Hon. Stanley Knowles, repeatedly espoused the cause of widows, spinsters and other women in like condition, that major element of society which lives below the poverty line. Their condition has been improved, but not by the Government of that time which remained entirely insensitive to the pleas, urgings and requests of Members of Parliament from our Party and from the NDP.

We can see them today still, those who are in this unfortunate condition. We see them in supermarkets—quiet, proud, dignified, and poor. We see them as they examine the contents of their change purses before they take their purchases to the check-out counter. They look at the figures on the till adding up and they look at the nature of the food that they can afford. We all know that while we are clearly better off than many nations there are still those in that an element of society who continue to have to ration themselves both in terms of quantity and quality of food.

When I think back to the proceedings of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare in the period 1974-79, I can only say that it was a dusty demonstration of concern ignored by an insensitive Government. Speaking of insensitivity, it should be noted for the record that at that time it was the Hon. Marc Lalonde, the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, who represented a profligate Government which was insensitive to this type of need.

Anomalies still exist within this group. Our Government has passed legislation that extends eligibility for the spouses' allowance to an additional 50,000 low-income widows. This has been most helpful in capturing a major portion of society that has been in difficulty. The question has been addressed on many occasions, how we will manage the balance. I think that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has addressed that issue, both in the sense of his appreciation and understanding of the problem and in describing how he would seek to resolve it. On February 4, 1985, the Minister of Health said, as reported in Hansard, the following:

This Government is the first to acknowledge that there are other near-elderly persons in need who remain excluded from the important financial protection provided by the spouse's allowance program. However, as was recognized by the all party Task Force, the Government of Canada, in other words the Canadian people, cannot at this time go much beyond the proposals we have made.

What we can do and must do, given current economic circumstances, is to take this next logical step in extending the spouse's allowance program. The other most logical step after this legislation is seriously to take the pension reform proposals that have been made by both the task force and by other groups and give them life over the course of the mandate of this Government.

Nothing could be more heartening than to understand that there is a Minister of Health with an understanding of these conditions who indicates his intention, given the first opportunity, to address that particular circumstance. There are many benefits, the system of benefits of spouses' allowance, widows' pensions and CPP that escape this element of society. I say it is important that we address them, that they be included in the social safety net at the earliest possible opportunity.

There are other groups in society who need help. I would like to quote again the words of the Prime Minister as set out in the Speech from the Throne. He said, again in the area of social justice, the following:

Canadians are becoming increasingly aware of the suffering of battered women. This intolerable affront to human dignity and personal security compels my government's commitment to work with the provinces to implement on an urgent basis the most effective means and methods of action.

Clearly, the most effective means and method of action is to encourage the provinces to increase significantly their funding to transition homes for battered women. This increase, to be matched by the Government of Canada under the Canada Assistance Plan, is a part of the federal-provincial cost-sharing plan.

Further, the provision of a means test in this circumstance should be removed. Battered women come from all walks of life, from positions of poverty to positions of wealth, from women who are childless to women with children, either one or several. In many cases when a battered woman flees the threatening home environment she flees with no possessions, no suitcase filled with clothes, no purse with money. She leaves with only the clothes on her back and her children clutched in her arms. There is nothing there, nothing else for her. I could never be convinced that, given this type of circumstance those women who may come from a home that is comfortably well-off, or wealthy, should be subjected to a means test. Are we to say, "Yes, you can stay here, but after three or four days we expect you to start carrying your weight"? Let us hope that in a circumstance of that nature the family problems will be sorted out and resolved, and that those women who are in a position to afford the type of care that a transition home can provide will ultimately make a contribution.

• (1220)

The record shows that this problem crosses all elements of society, rich and poor alike. The Women In Need Society of Trail, British Columbia, makes an amazingly excellent contribution to the emotional and physical hurts of women in need in Trail and district. I say an amazing contribution because excellent care is provided with such limited resources. I have had the opportunity to visit that home on a couple of occasions and I have been very impressed, not only with the facility itself but with what has been done with the limited resources available. Therefore, I would be the very first to endorse a program which provides in a meaningful way for federal and provincial assistance for these people.

I have spoken of women who are in need and who need care when they are being threatened or battered. I have spoken of that element of society composed of people who are 50 to 65 years of age and who do not have a social safety net. There is a third element of society of which I would like to speak. One might say that I am changing gears regarding the groups of which I am speaking.

I would like to speak now of the deaf, the profoundly deaf and the inadequacies of the appeal system as well as the failure to understand the true nature of the disorder of the deaf. I speak of the deaf in the context of applications or appearances before appeal boards when a decision has been rendered that an individual does not qualify for a Canada Pension Plan disability benefit.

Let me tell the House of but one example. About two or three years ago now, one of my constituents was discharged from his employment with the Canadian Pacific Railway because a foreman had spotted him wearing a hearing aid. When one works in the railway business and is around railway cars, hearing aids are not permitted. I can understand at least in part the need for such a regulation, and more particularly when a test will ultimately determine that the hearing aid itself is of little benefit to the victim.

After 17 years of service, my constituent was discharged. He had no other means of support. He was not skilled in other fields. When he made his first appeal, it was determined that because he hunted and used a rifle, like I do and like many other Members of the House and our constituents do, his habit of sighting his gun and doing occasional target practice was what had most materially contributed to his deafness. The fact that in his early life he worked on farms and with farm equipment that can clearly be demonstrated as affecting hearing was also raised. What was carefully ignored, in my view, was the level of decibels to which this man was subjected both in engines and cabooses of trains. That was not a consideration, yet clearly that was the source of the greatest volume of noise.

Regardless of those circumstances, I would like to tell the House what happened when this man appealed before an appeal board. An expert witness whom I had been able to retain described to the appeal board the nature of this man's disability and how he was affected by it. There was also a Crown witness who testified, a physician who had never examined this man but who had examined his records. When the Crown witness was asked as a physician what this man could do for a useful occupation, she said that he could be a commercial painter and could do sand blasting. She also pointed out that the man would have to wear ear-muffs while he was doing this to protect his hearing. The fact is that the minute he put on ear-muffs, he would have no hearing at all. He would be totally deaf. If he were to have some hearing so that he could hear the cry of someone else or a word of caution, he would have to remove the protective ear-muffs. The noise of spray painting and the machinery that operates it as well as the sand blasting would increase and aggravate the deafness.

Given the fact that he could not very well do painting and sand blasting, the physician suggested that he would make a good gunsmith. She suggested that because he hunted. I wonder how many hunters are familiar enough with their guns to properly disassemble them. Certainly this man had an awareness of his rifle but that clearly does not make him a gunsmith or an apprentice-gunsmith.

When my expert witness was asked what gainful employment this man could have, his response was, and I suppose it was ironic and perhaps a touch sarcastic given the previous testimony, "Well, Your Honour, he could probably address envelopes and seal them". That statement spoke volumes about the condition of this element of society. The deaf and the profoundly deaf are ignored by those of us who have that treasured gift of hearing.

The doctor who served as a witness on behalf of this individual said something to me which I found very profound and shocking. He said: "If I had a choice to make, and thank God I have never had to make it, between having a child who is deaf or a child who is blind, I would choose blindness over deafness because having the ability to hear provides the ability to communicate and opens the world whereas deafness is a lifetime of loneliness".

What is not understood in so many of these cases is that simply turning up the volume on a hearing aid does not solve the problem. Turning up the volume, although it increases the volume, also increases the distortion heard by a deaf person. A deaf person does not hear noise the way you and I would hear it, Mr. Speaker. It is totally distorted and is like moving the radio off the station.

What I seek to put to the Government, the House and my colleagues is that this is one area for which we need more advocacy to Parliament. I urge Hon. Members to consider that. I urge Hon. Members to talk to the organizations in their constituencies which deal with the deaf and profoundly deaf. I submit that under the disability provisions of the Canada Pension Plan, the deaf and profoundly deaf are dealt with unfairly, and I think we should resolve that problem.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Collins for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments on the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment my colleague on his presentation to the Chamber this morning. I was particularly impressed by the fact that he chose social justice, particularly because of the importance of that role as it relates to battered women. It was a very reflective presentation that he made to the House.

I noted in passing that in his presentation he touched upon the role of volunteers in the community. We all should note that this was a highlight in the Speech from the Throne. In my own community volunteers are very important and vital persons. They operate our local libraries, and our local fire departments. They run most of our recreation programs in minor sports. They are deeply involved with local historical societies and local museums which are dramatically important in reminding us of our culture and our heritage. Volunteers are very important persons in my community.

I was delighted that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Ministers saw fit in the Speech from the Throne to find ways of highlighting the role of volunteers. Will the Hon. Member comment further on the significance in his eyes of volunteerism in Canada, particularly in his constituency?

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to reply. Last weekend in my constituency, in Castlegar, I listened to an address by a woman who was very well informed on the subject of volunteerism. She was speaking to a large group of people principally interested in recreation, but who were involved in volunteerism in the community. Her speech was to provide the volunteers with an opportunity to attract others, and sell volunteerism. One of her remarks that I thought was both thoughtful and profound was that many years ago civilization started with the agricultural revolution. After the agricultural revolution we moved into an industrial revolution. From the industrial revolution we moved today into what is known as a period of energy revolution. She then went on to say something that really struck home: "By the year 2000, I submit to you that we will move into a new revolution, a revolution of humanitarianism." The volunteers in our communities must and will be a vital part of that. We have all heard the trite phrase that you only get out of something what you put into it. That may be trite, but it is certainly very appropriate in terms of volunteerism. I am delighted that our Government is taking every initiative open to it to encourage that particular philosophy, the philosophy and the principle of volunteerism.

Mr. McKenzie: I would like to congratulate my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), on the excellent points he made on the improved social programs that have been introduced since 1984. I would like to take this opportunity to put on the record the excellent work that this Government has done on behalf of Canada's veterans.

One of the most beneficial programs to veterans is the Aging Veterans Program which was introduced a number of years ago. We have improved on that. The name of this program is now called the VIP program, or the Veterans Independence Program. This program helps veterans stay in their own homes, therefore, they do not have to be placed in institutions. Since we took office, another 18,000 veterans over the age of 65 and in receipt of War Veterans Allowance became eligible for the program as of January 1, 1986. We will be expanding on that particular program.

There has been other legislation passed since we formed the Government. We have the improvements for compensation for former prisoners of war. We have improved the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act. We have also improved the Canadian Pension Commission and the Pension Act. The Veterans' Land Act has also been improved. Veterans' widows are now eligible for VLA assistance. We have improved the War Veterans Allowance Act. This program provides financial assistance on an income-tested basis for veterans and their survivors. This is certainly a great improvement to the problems we had with the previous administration, where we had great difficulty getting pension applications processed. It was taking up to seven years to process pension applications. We have streamlined that dramatically and we are now processing veterans pension programs within months, not years. This has been well received. We also passed Bill C-28, an Act to amend the Pension Act, containing long overdue amendments. This will benefit veterans and their families.

These important changes came about within six months of our taking office.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke to me personally when he formed the Government and became Prime Minister. He told me one of his first acts would be to allot an additional $22 million toward veterans' pensions. He fulfilled that promise and that was the start. A great deal of additional money has been provided for veterans through improvements to their pensions. I have been involved in veterans' problems for the last 14 years, and I have received a lot of mail during that time. Very rarely today do I receive a letter from a veteran about a pension, because we have improved the conditions within the Department of Veterans Affairs. This should be on the record to show the excellent performance of the Government in helping out war veterans across Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin).

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I had a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): It is a pleasure to participate in the Throne Speech debate for the second time. I would like to talk from the perspective of the City of Windsor in that the southernmost part of our country. It is a city that is almost embedded within the territory of our neighbours to the south. The implications of this location are not often appreciated by the rest of Canada. Sometimes Windsor feels as isolated from central Canada, Toronto, Montreal, and Ottawa, as from parts of the west and parts of the east.

• (1240)

When Governments send out tour groups to significant Canadian industrial cities and forget Windsor, again our isolation, the apparent unconsciousness about our existence, and our peculiarities are emphasized. We can reflect upon the fact that Air Canada and VIA Rail often seem to regard us as easily dismissible. This often leads to significant errors. For example, the rather cavalier nature of the treatment of Windsor by Air Canada. Its treatment should have been based upon the abundant market in that area as represented by Windsor combined with Detroit. However, Air Canada flights were cut, leading to the development of a market in Detroit for Republic Airlines. Now the situation is that Air Canada lacks what could have been a very lucrative market, while Republic Airlines flies eight hours per day between Detroit and Toronto and often offers the public a much more convenient route between Ottawa and Windsor than the ones offered by Canadian carriers.

We sometimes feel isolated. We are sometimes puzzled by the reaction of others in Canada to our situation. We are often accused of having an American accent, as if being where we are and talking as we do somehow makes us less Canadian than other Canadians. If we compare, as we did yesterday within the context of our knowledge of the United States which is much more intimate than that of most Canadians, some of the things occurring in the United States with our own situation, we are accused of being too pro-American. On the other hand, if because of our familiarity with the United States we criticize it or express reservations about bilateral trade negotiations, we are accused of being anti-American. Of course it is an absurdity. Windsor, with all its isolation and with all the ignorance in the rest of Canada it must face about what we are like, what we do, and what goes on there, really has the same concerns as the rest of the country. Some of the decisions and some of the policies of the Government of Canada are brought to crystal clear focus there.

The Government has chosen as its mechanism for economic development to place a huge focus—indeed, we would suggest that it is an imbalanced focus—upon opening our borders with the United States to free trade. Often we hear, this town which has benefited so much by the Auto Pact, how the Auto Pact represents the model of what we are trying to achieve across the broad spectrum of trade. We are puzzled by this. On the one hand we are puzzled because the Auto Pact represents a trade arrangement with certain rules in respect of Canadian content and employment. On the other hand, we do not see this sort of thing being aimed for in the bilateral trade negotiations. We think that they are a mistake because we should be facilitating international trade, multilateral trade.

If we look around us we see that the Government is undermining the very model it would present to the world as the model of what can be achieved in the negotiations with the United States. We see offshore producers from Japan and Korea coming into the country, often with the financial inducement of Governments, to assemble automobiles under circumstances where parts are not being manufactured or acquired in Canada. This is in contrast to what happens in respect of domestic manufacturers regulated by the Auto Pact.

Although we in Windsor feel particularly concerned about the issue, we are not the only ones who are concerned. We see the unions involved. We see the chief domestic manufacturers, such as Ford, Chrysler, and GM, asserting that this represents a danger to the domestic automobile industry and to employment in an industry which provides jobs, not only by automobile assembly, but by parts and machine tool manufacturing. The same fact has been reiterated by those who represent parts manufacturers and machine tool manufacturers.

It is not as if we were crying foul only from Windsor and only among a minor sector of the community. It has been repeatedly called to the attention of the Government that in the economic context the present demand for automobiles will not go on forever. There will certainly be over-production in the future, creating a situation in which we will be trading one job for possibly three jobs produced by domestic manufacturers.

We are concerned about this rather conflicting message which is communicated to us about the Auto Pact. On the one hand it is used as a model, and on the other hand actions are taken which would undermine it. We understand that in a completely free bilateral trade environment between Canada and the United States there is little likelihood, under the rationalization processes in which major American companies are engaged, they would allow for very long the continuation of manufacturing by their subsidiaries in Canada. When we think about that, we think about the hundreds, nay the thousands of jobs over the years which have been lost in Windsor by virtue of decisions made in the interest of rationalization by American management. These decisions will be repeated many times over in a future free trade environment with the United States.

The Government introduced and passed the Investment Canada legislation which increased the measure of American ownership of our plants and increased the power they had in respect of the jobs of our citizens. When we note that so far this year there has been a 50 per cent increase in the rate of acquisition of Canadian companies by American owners, we wonder if the Government has a notion of where the real potential for economic development resides.

The day before yesterday during the opposition day debate on science and technology policy, I said that, viewed from the perspective of the need for Canada to develop a science and technology based industrial future, free trade is perhaps the last thing we should be seeking. We should not be looking at Washington and New York for answers to our economic development problems. We should be looking at home, at the creativity of our own people, at what can be done with our own resources, at the enhancement of our creative ability, and at what knowledge can do as a tool within the confines of our own country, before looking elsewhere to create future employment and future economic growth.

Surely the argument can be made, Mr. Speaker, and it is an argument that I would advocate, that we should not even contemplate entering into a free trade arrangement with the United States until we are in a position to compete with the Americans scientifically and technologically, and until we are able to make our resources work for us by virtue of knowledge. We should not open ourselves up to what could be an abortion of our science and technological growth by the massive quantities of moneys available to the Americans through investment and defence research, constituting 77 per cent of American government investment in research. We cannot now compete against that and ensure the survival of those who are necessary for our future.

Although we have a number of concerns as well, we are representative of the rest of the country, though we are far from the consciousness of so many in government and elsewhere. We have, for example, serious concerns about the environment. We are conscious of the agreement between the President of the United States and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on the issue of acid rain. This is an agreement that demonstrated, not so much how much progress we have made on trans-boundary pollution but how little we have in controls to ensure that what goes into the air from United States factories will not hurt citizens here.

We have been frustrated for weeks because the City of Detroit is about to construct a huge incinerator, an incinerator that lacks the essential controls to ensure that the citizens of Windsor will not be subject to poisoning from the atmosphere from the burning of garbage in Detroit. Yet we find that not only has the Environment Protection Agency in United States been ineffectual, there is little on the basis of which one can mount an effective fight. At least so far there have been no solutions forthcoming.

We need to have sound agreements on trans-boundary pollution that will protect not just those of us in Windsor but citizens of Canada generally. Quite fairly it has to be said that there is an interest on the part of the citizens in the United States that our air pollution will not descend upon them. One should look at already existing agreements with respect to the Great Lakes water quality. We should consider the scandal of pollution in the St. Clair River. Then we should look at the failure of the international water quality agreement to do its job effectively. In order to bring about an effective solution to the problems already identified, it will cost us about $8 billion by the mid-1990s. We should consider the basic ineffectiveness of our agreement so far to deal with the problems we have in the Niagara area, in the St. Clair basin area. This situation gives us pause with respect to what will be necessary to ensure that the battle of air pollution will be fought to a successful end.

It should be said about the area represented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and myself that the area is extremely flat. You would not want to go there for downhill skiing, Mr. Speaker. You could only contemplate cross-country skiing. I should say this too, that the land is not only flat but it is low, and it could fall victim to serious flooding. Lake levels have risen to unprecedented levels. We have repeatedly in this House, as have others in our community, called attention to the need to take effective action in the face of, if not present danger, certain future danger, from serious Great Lake flooding. We have asked that the broad question of how to control the levels of the lakes be looked at to determine the degree to which they can be controlled. We have also asked that the federal Government engage with the provincial Government and the municipalities to ensure that not just those who live on the shores of the lakes but those who live in Essex county and nearby counties living considerable distances from the lake will not have their lands flooded or towns destroyed because of a failure to deal adequately with this very serious problem which affects both sides of the border.

This is an international issue, a municipal issue and a provincial issue. Related to environmental questions in one part of our city, in the Turkey Creek watershed area, we have a serious problem of biological pollution derived from the fact that most homes in that area are using septic tanks. The only way this situation can be corrected is by considerable investment. Something in the order of $35 million will be needed to correct it. This is an environmental problem of serious concern to our particular municipality; but it signifies the kinds of problems that so many municipalities in this country have, of serious infrastructure deficiencies for which they have no funds to correct. They have looked to the federal Government as you know, Mr. Speaker, and have asked for the expenditure of some $10 to $12 billion dollars over the next five or ten years to address some of the infrastructure deficiencies that our cities have. I think this is a matter that the Government should look at seriously, not only on its own merits but from the point of view that there are serious unemployment problems, and a need for economic development, and an important contribution the Government could make would be to ensure that those needs are met. This should not be done simply by the unilateral provision of funds, but in co-operation with the municipalities that are willing to pay their share and the provinces that ought to pay their share.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would my friend opposite permit a short question before one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) has one minute left.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I will see if I can wrap it up in 30 seconds, 15 seconds for the question and 15 seconds for the answer. The latter, of course, is impossible, Mr. Speaker.

Windsor, like any other community in this country, has its problems for which it looks to the federal Government for help. It is no different than any other community. There is a perception that there is a certain unconsciousness about Windsor's needs. There is also a more crystallized notion about many of the problems in Windsor, because of its location, that will affect all Canadians and on the basis of which we ought to be able to develop policies more in the interests of Canada.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, my friend opposite from Windsor—Walkerville speaks strongly against free trade. I do not share his fears of economic or cultural domination by the United States. Can he kindly tell me how many Canadian jobs and workers are employed in the building of a Mazda automobile? What would he say to Canadians who buy those cars?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I would say that any Canadian ought to be able to buy a Toyota, a Mazda or a Hyundai in Canada with the assurance that those cars have been built with the participation of Canadian labour here based on the conditions of the Auto Pact, namely, that there be 60 per cent Canadian content, a matter which the Government has refused to address.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When we adjourned at one o'clock there were nine minutes remaining in the period for questions and comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) and I both have very large ports in our ridings. A lot of people residing in both of our communities work in the United States. In view of his attack on free trade, would he advocate that the border be closed and that people living in Canada not be allowed to work in the United States?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I have had occasion previously to comment on the necessity for reasonableness in debate. The Member knows, of course, that the issue to which he refers is one of immigration. It should, however, be recognized that there are problems appearing at a number of border areas because both Canada and United States have imposed limits on the extent to which we will receive immigrants or temporary workers in our jurisdictions.

I would call to the attention of the Speaker the fact that workers are being imported from the United States to Windsor, through the misapplication of immigrant rules, to carry out skilled trade work which Canadians could well do. From time to time we have had occasion to call attention to that circumstance which we consider to be a serious problem in the construction field in particular. Time after time the construction trade unions have called attention to the far too facile provision of licences for such workers to work in Canada.

My constituency shares problems similar to those which the Hon. Member has cited, but I repeat that the issue of working in Detroit when one lives in Windsor and vice versa is quite distinct from the issue of free trade. We look forward to a serious debate on free trade rather than the irrelevant issues which might be raised with respect to that topic when it comes into question.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of comments on some of the points raised by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy). During his debate he said several things about the Windsor-Essex County area. I am very proud to represent the area of Essex County along with Kent County. I would not like the House to be left with the impression that the Windsor area is up to its neck in water, although that is partially true, that there is an incinerator in Detroit spewing pollution into the Windsor area and that we have a very bad air transportation system making it very difficult to get down to that forgotten land. The Hon. Member seems to want to portray Windsor as an area which has been forgotten by the Government.

I am sure it was an omission by the Hon. Member that he did not point out that in the past two years the Windsor area has been one of the greatest recipients of the prosperity brought forward by the Government. Unemployment in that area is down to approximately 5 per cent. When this Government came into office the unemployment rate was approximately 13 per cent. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that. That area has also been the recipient of several IRDP grants with the automotive industry expanding and new companies being brought in. I would not like the Hon. Member to speak lowly of the Windsor-Essex County area. We want to encourage people to go there and see the prosperity which the Government has brought to it.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, as is so often the case, my hon. colleague from Essex—Kent has missed the point. The intent of my speech was to demonstrate that Windsor does experience a certain isolation from the rest of Canada, largely in terms of the knowledge which this and previous Governments have about our neck of the woods. However, I would like to make it clear that not only is Windsor much warmer than most parts of Canada, the hearts as well of the people there are much warmer than in other parts of the country.

I believe my hon. colleague attempts to exaggerate the role of Government in that area. He indicated that Windsor, along with other communities of the country, has been the beneficiary of certain programs. It is true that Windsor has a relatively low rate of unemployment. However, the suggestion that Windsor is experiencing its present prosperity as a result of federal government initiative could only come from someone who fails to read the newspapers or fails utterly to understand the economic situation in which the country finds itself and, most importantly, fails to understand some of the initiatives which the Government has failed to take with respect to the Auto Pact, which failures could seriously affect our city in the future. Surely the most valid test of the validity of this interjection will come at the next election when we revert to our usual pattern in Essex County of not having one single Conservative Member.

• (1410)

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not seem to believe that unemployment has come down since the Government came to power, but I think he will have to admit that. Prior to the last election Windsor had the distinction of having three Liberal Cabinet Ministers located in that area. Were things better under those three Ministers than they are now?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I am often astounded by the claims made by the Government about events that have occurred since its entry into power. I suppose the next thing for which the Government will claim credit is the fact that we have had more rain this year than last year.

I am certainly not standing here before you, Mr. Speaker, to defend the record of three Liberal Cabinet Ministers who we had in Windsor. I would ask the Government to undertake a serious policy study so it may come to the conclusion, as so many have, about what is appropriate for Windsor's future. I have said it is true that the unemployment rate of Windsor is presently at a relatively low level. However, it is not inevitable that the low unemployment rate will remain unchanged. It is clear that there will be changes with respect to the automotive industry. The generation of over-capacity in particular will severely change the automobile industry in Windsor and other parts of this country. Therefore we must have an industrial strategy that is not based on central decision-making in Ottawa, or free trade, or any of the other simple answers of the past. There must be more emphasis on providing local communities the wherewithal to engage in future economic planning so they may use their resources to develop a new economic future that will enable them to replace the jobs that will inevitably disappear in the automobile industry, particularly if the Government continues its present policies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Resuming debate. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt).

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity today to take part in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, in my capacity as Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism.

I may point out that this Speech from the Throne reiterates our Government's strong and continuing commitment to two important sectors of our economy: small business and tourism.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne revolves in part around the theme of entrepreneurship and the entrepreneurial spirit which this Government sees as the principal tool for the development of small businesses and tourism in this country. In its quest for economic renewal, the Government's focus has been and remains the promotion of entrepreneurship.

Mr. Speaker, where the previous Government did nothing but talk to assuage the concerns of small entrepreneurs and developers of tourism facilities, we have taken action. We have recognized the rich potential among our vast community of small entrepreneurs, and we have also adopted rigorous marketing methods for making Canada internationally attractive to tourists.

Mr. Speaker, as my fellow Francophones outside Quebec and my fellow Acadians pointed out upon my appointment to Cabinet, I am the only Francophone outside Quebec sitting in the Cabinet. Having grown up as part of a minority group in New Brunswick, I feel I am particularly well-equipped to deal with a difficult task, namely to be responsible for the Native Peoples Economic Development Program.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, our Government is committed to economic autonomy for native peoples, and that forms the basis for my commitment to this program.

The Throne Speech also promises the Government will introduce changes to the Official Languages Act. My goal as a francophone outside Quebec is that the Government, in addition to recognizing language rights in the Act, go one step further to ensure that these rights become a reality in the lives of francophone minorities across this country.

Mr. Speaker, whether we are talking about native peoples economic development programs or the tourist industry or expanding small businesses in this country, our main focus is to promote entrepreneurial values.

[English]

The Progressive Conservative Party of Canada has long been the vehicle chosen by independent business entrepreneurs to address their concerns, their needs and their aspirations. For much too long federal policies were implemented without regard to their impact on small business. This Party and this Government have changed that unacceptable situation.

The first Budget of the Government, introduced in the spring of 1985, is widely known as the budget for small business because of the many measures it contained to encourage investment in small business. The 1986 Budget continued along this vein by reducing further the tax burden on small businesses, and by announcing a major incentive to encourage research and development by small business.

We added $1 billion to the amount available for loan guarantees under the Small Businesses Loans Act and we have extended the small business bond program to the end of 1987.

More important, however, the Government has moved to create a better economic climate for the growth of small business. Interest rates, which are of such concern to small businesses, are at their lowest level in years. The climate of confidence has led to increased investment in Canada, has benefited, and will continue to benefit small business operators across the country. In addition, the Government is increasing the amount of government purchasing of goods and services directed to small businesses.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne delivered by the Governor General on October 1 attests to our lasting commitment with respect to small business.

Reflecting the achievements of our Government since the election, the Speech from the Throne proposes a fairer and simpler tax system more finely atuned to our economic environment. Our Government is considering new initiatives to strengthen the competitiveness of our businesses; it wants to remove obstacles to economic growth by reducing the burden of paperwork and regulation; it will press for the removal of barriers to interprovincial trade; and it will introduce programs to promote small business and entrepreneurial values. To this end, it will take measures to improve procurement procedures, to strengthen unsolicited proposals, and make it easier for small business to have access to the technology of Government laboratories.

Mr. Speaker, intent as we are on promoting the entrepreneurial spirit, we must be careful not to smother it. We must keep in mind that our entrepreneurs do take risks, they work long hours, they are at once owners, executive directors, marketing experts and accountants, and because of these many responsibilities they always have hard decisions to make.

I am sure Hon. Members will agree that it is difficult enough for an entrepreneur to launch a new business and make it prosper without having to cope with interference from governments at various levels.

Mr. Speaker, this is why, having recognized these facts, our Government identified the need to reduce red tape and to ensure that Government regulations become a tool to help businesses rather than to hinder their growth.

My predecessor, the Hon. André Bissonnette, initiated a federal-provincial survey of the bureaucratic problems which hinder the small business sector. Over 1,100 small businessmen throughout the country were also asked for their views on this question: Who in their opinion impeded their efforts to expand their business?

Mr. Speaker, I shall be meeting with my provincial colleagues next week to assess the results of this survey, and I can assure the House that our Government will develop an action plan to attack squarely the obstacle to entrepreneurship posed by red tape.

We shall improve further our procurement methods which I have already mentioned by formulating a policy for the efficient promotion of subcontracting to small businesses in both the public and private sectors. The Small Business Secretariat is sponsoring a debate on subcontracting in the private sector at the Small Businesses Show which I inaugurated this morning in Montreal. The forum provided by our Department at the show will allow small and large businessmen to exchange ideas on how subcontracting can promote and enhance small businesses while benefiting larger companies.

We are also on the point of completing a major study to determine to what extent small and large businesses can cooperate in the development and transfer of new technologies through business associations. This is something which we intend to pursue because we are convinced that it could provide a means to improve the competitiveness of small businesses.

As a Member from New Brunswick and more especially the Madawaska—Victoria constituency, Mr. Speaker, I cannot outline my action plan as Minister for Small Businesses and Tourism without first commenting briefly on a vital issue for Atlantic Canada and New Brunswick, as well as for many other regions throughout the country. Mr. Speaker, I am referring to regional development.

The Throne Speech clearly shows this Government's commitment to meeting the challenge of reducing regional inequalities, and in a novel way. This Government's approach, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) referred to in his speech in this debate, is aimed at recognizing entrepreneurship as the way to salvation.

Development policies of the past have failed miserably. We believe the development policies that work are based on the potential of local entrepreneurs. Also, the time has come to recognize the need to coordinate Government efforts and harmonize them with the initiatives of entrepreneurs on the regional level.

Mr. Speaker, that process reflects this Government's new approach and Prime Minister Mulroney's commitment to regional development and to the citizens of Atlantic Canada.

Our objective for reducing disparities in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere, for instance for diversifying the Western economy, necessarily entails the development of small businesses. The latter are a key component of this objective and we must spare no effort to reach that objective.

I would now like to comment in a somewhat more detailed way on the means I propose to recommend to the Government, first to help promote Canada's small businesses. Second to fully exploit the tourist potential of our great country, and finally to support native self-sufficiency.

Mr. Speaker, only since this Government was elected has the potential of our tourist industry been recognized in the Canadian economy. Only since this Government was elected has support been forthcoming for the efforts made by our resort operators who are attempting to put this country on the international map by promoting Canada as a tourist destination area. Mr. Speaker, 1986 will have been an excellent year for tourism in Canada, and by far. More than two million tourists visited our country during the first eight months of 1986. This means our tourist trade deficit has decreased 92 per cent, with gains of more than $200 million for the Canadian economy. That remarkable recovery was obtained because of the ability and leadership of my predecessors in this function. They turned Tourism Canada towards foreign markets and established a new relationship with the tourist industry, the Provinces and the Territories. Such a success is also due to Expo '86, which we have supported financially, and also to the organizers of Expo '86, the British Columbia Government and, of course, the City of Vancouver.

Thanks to them, this year, that world exposition brought a great many visitors to Canada. I must also recognize, however, that another factor explains the record number of tourists who came to Canada this year. I refer to the marketing effort directed at the United States by our department on the theme Canada, the World Next Door. An assessment, of this new marketing approach, Mr. Speaker, has revealed that this campaign has made Americans much more aware and informed concerning Canada as a tourist destination and that, thanks to this awareness, they were much more eager to come here. The importance of the tourist industry in Canada demands an aggressive approach focussed on our successes. A great many people do not seem to realize that the tourist industry in Canada contributes $20 billion to the Canadian economy and accounts for over 600,000 jobs for Canadian men and women. Well, we have to build on this resource.

• (1420)

[English]

To achieve this, I intend to continue working closely with our partners in industry and our provincial colleagues to ensure that our joint tourism efforts remain co-ordinated, stable and representative of the needs of the industry. I will also continue our focused marketing effort on the international front, particularly in the United States where our biggest market lies within a day's drive from our border. Next year, with Expo 86 over and the Calgary Olympics a year away, we must be even more aggressive in promoting Canada in our key foreign markets.

While 1986 was a great year for tourism in Canada, the benefits of this year were not felt evenly across the country. I will, therefore, be examining ways to spread these benefits more broadly in all regions of the country. I believe now is the time to have more regionally-sensitive marketing campaigns which will show off all regions of the country through specific products grouping. This will, of course, come under our major umbrella marketing campaign.

We will continue to explore new ways to market Canada abroad through our partners in industry under joint cost-shared efforts. We will continue to manage the tourism subagreements with the provinces in the fields of product development, marketing and planning, thereby ensuring top-notch tourism facilities across the country. Tourism can be a strong regional development tool. It seeks to promote the best Canada has to offer in terms of culture, hospitality, leisure activities and scenery.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like now to advise you and other Hon. Members of what we intend to do concerning small businesses. My first and foremost priority will be of course to assume fully all my responsibilities as defender of, promoter of, and spokesman for small businessmen in this country. I shall assume these responsibilities by working in close co-operation with my Cabinet colleagues who will strive to implement the various measures announced in the Throne Speech. All Hon. Members will agree, Mr. Speaker, that the forthcoming debate on the tax reform announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will affect directly all small businesses in Canada. The Minister of Finance with whom I have discussed this issue is very well aware already of the needs and concerns of small businessmen in this area of utmost importance. I intend to consult with him frequently and, as the reform process is progressing, to submit to him the options most likely to benefit small Canadian businessmen.

As I have already indicated, we will table soon a detailed action plan to solve the problem which heavy paperwork is creating for small businesses. The plan will deal more specifically with the needless duplication of forms.

[English]

We must also take steps to improve delivery of financial assistance programs to small businesses. This means simpler application forms, reduced bureaucratic red tape, particularly for lower levels of assistance, and faster turnaround of each application. We will continue to find ways to meet the financial needs of small businesses across Canada. Existing financial mechanisms will be assessed for their ability to provide adequate debt equity and venture financing to small businesses. In particular, we must look at the financial needs of our smallest small businesses and find new ways to anchor equity investment in their start-up and future expansion.

[Translation]

One of the most important contributions of the small business community is related to industrial innovation. Entrepreneurs are by definition innovators. It rests with the Government to see that its policies promote that role.

With respect to another program for which I am responsible, the economic development of native people, we will have to carry on along the same lines despite the fact that some people will claim the results are not very sensitive.

• (1430)

[English]

I agree that much work remains to be done in the efforts to promote economic self-reliance among our native populations. By necessity, that work must begin with existing native economic development programs. Therefore, I am considering measures to improve the delivery of the Native Economic Development Program, to expand the eligibility criteria associated with the program and to ensure a greater regional balance in its efforts by encouraging more projects from the North and from the Atlantic region. Each of these improvements has resulted, and will continue to result, from close consultation with native leaders and with the Native Economic Development Board itself.

Why do we attach so much importance to small business? Because small business is responsible for 70 per cent of the new jobs that are created. It is largely in small business that the spirit of Canadian entrepreneurship manifests itself. Indeed, the dynamism of our entrepreneurs has now become the main source of employment and economic growth in Canada.

Another important aspect is that women entrepreneurs, who are playing increasingly important roles in our economy now, own one out of three small businesses, up from 18 per cent a decade ago. Studies also show that the success of female-owned small business is almost double that of their male-owned counterparts. The Government will do everything possible to create an environment in which these businesswomen can create jobs.

[Translation]

Similar efforts will also be made to encourage our young people to contribute to the prosperity of our country by instilling into them that spirit of entrepreneurship and by providing them with that institutional framework which without restricting their independence and their creativity will still allow them to see their dreams come true.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I seek the Minister's comments with respect to the Canada-Alberta tourism subagreement. I speak for southern Alberta when I make this comment. As the Minister knows, although in a sense it was before his time in public life, relations between the federal Government and the provincial Governments were at an all-time low. I suspect that one of the major reasons he became involved in politics was because of this. However, as a result of the Progressive Conservative Government coming into office with the feeling that federal-provincial relations were at an all-time low we have now signed, I believe, over 50 economic regional development agreements in the Province of Alberta. One such agreement was a tourism subagreement. I want to tell the Minister just how well that agreement is working.

As the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills it is an absolute delight to attend meetings at which there are tourism officials from the City of Lethbridge, a city of about 60,000 people, and officials from the surrounding towns and villages, including Waterton Lakes National Park. It is a pleasure to watch these people finally come together under the auspices of this tourism subagreement. They now look at southern Alberta as a whole as opposed to the City of Lethbridge competing with the Town of Cardston or Crowsnest for these tourists. They are now coming together to develop plans by which people can make a circle tour and spend a day or two in all parts of southern Alberta. This is an absolute delight to watch, and it would not have occurred without the tourism subagreement.

The tourism subagreement has permitted people with all sorts of good ideas and energy to come forward with innovative projects and make applications for up to 35 per cent capital contribution from the tourism subagreement. As a result some very innovative projects have been approved in my riding. I know that this is happening in other parts of Alberta as well. On behalf of the people who come to me involved in this tourism subagreement, whether they be tourist officers, motel owners or small business people, I wish to thank the Minister. I wish to express to the Minister their appreciation for this approach.

I would now like to ask a question of the Minister. Can the Minister tell us how many other provinces have these tourism subagreements? If the other provinces do not have such agreements, then I would strongly urge the Minister to press them for this type of agreement since it works quite well.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member raises this important point since it must be fitted into the general framework of what the Government has been trying to do. Our detractors laughed when we talked about national reconciliation. If we cannot work with the provinces, our partners in this federation, how will things work? We have signed tourism subagreements with every province in Canada and with the Territories. They are working very well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Valcourt: It is one thing to serve people well with words and another to serve them well with deeds. I have toured the whole country. I have met many of my provincial counterparts. All the agreements that we have signed with the provinces are working very well. We are being told that for the first time they have a sense that the federal Government realizes the importance that tourism plays in the economics of Canada. We are talking about an industry which involves 600,000 workers. In terms of input, it is a $20 billion industry. We are keeping in close contact with our provincial counterparts. I am sure this is for the better interests of the people of Lethbridge, Alberta and everywhere else in the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) for a question or a comment.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt).

I was delighted when I heard the Minister emphasize the number of businesswomen and underline the fact that there are more businesswomen than businessmen. Yet, I should like the Minister to tell us what his Government has done to help these people, because I do not think it is thanks to this Conservative Government that the proportion of businesswomen is so high.

I should like him also to tell us what his Government is prepared to do to maintain this proportion.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend opposite is probably asking the most important question. What has this Government done for Canadian businesswomen? Well, we have taken budget and tax measures, put Government expenditures in order, embarked on a deficit reduction program that has created something which neither the Liberal Party nor the New Democratic Party could measure: confidence in the Canadian economy. The interest rates currently are at their lowest level in eight years. That is exactly what the hundred or so businesswomen whom I met last week in Winnipeg told me they needed. Those are the steps we are taking.

Everywhere in this country, when we consider—

Mrs. Pépin: It is not because of this Conservative Government—

Mr. Valcourt: The Hon. Member is saying that it is not because of this Conservative Government. What is significant is the number of business ventures; but what is still more significant is the number of these new business ventures which fail. That is the criterion for judging the effectiveness of a Government. If my hon. colleague cares to check the facts, she will realize that with interest rates at their lowest, there are fewer business ventures operated by women which are going bankrupt.

• (1440)

As to the steps we are planning to take in the future, I can say that we will maintain the same direction and promote the same healthy economic climate. For instance, we now have pilot projects which are opened to young business people throughout this country, both men and women. Before long, I hope to introduce a policy which will, I am sure, benefit all business people who will have access, we hope, to such business centres throughout Canada.

Mr. St. Julien: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear the remarks of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. I have two questions for him, the first one concerning native people.

Reference has been made to the James Bay Cree/Naskapi agreement, and we know that yesterday Great Chiefs Ted Moses and Billy Diamond made a few comments about the economic situation. My question has to do with James Bay and the Native Economic Development Program. So far the Government has done a lot for the James Bay Cree. Does the Minister intend to make changes to the native people economic development program, or may we expect assistance for the northern Abitibi region?

My second question relates to the Canada Tourism agreement with Quebec. Abitibi is a huge riding, the largest in all ten Canadian provinces. Some changes should be made to this agreement, so does the Minister expect to review the agreement with the Quebec Government? Under this $100 million five-year agreement with Quebec, the only sectors concerning Abitibi are hunting and fishing, and we would like to have some changes made to the agreement. Will the Minister be meeting with the Quebec Government in the near future?

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, in response to my colleague's first question concerning the Native Economic Development Program. I can tell him that since I took over this portfolio we have launched a thorough review of the program, in close cooperation with the native people themselves of course. As you probably know the program is administered in part by a council made up mostly of native people, and they have made representations to me concerning the program delivery, which could stand improvement, and its eligibility criteria.

Consultations with native people and other departments involved are taking place now, and I should be in a position to make an announcement about this in the not too distant future.

As for the Quebec tourism agreement, it is so successful that, after only a few years, the funds are being quickly exhausted. Hon. Members should know that there remains one aspect of our tourism agreement with Quebec to be settled, that of hunting and fishing outfitters.

The Hon. Member is asking us to consider the Abitibi region, a large region in Quebec with admittedly a lot of tourism potential. His representations will certainly be discussed when I meet with my provincial counterpart, Mr. Picotte, whom I have already met once and should be seeing again in coming weeks. At that time, I shall certainly consider it my duty to discuss the issue raised by the Hon. Member with Minister Picotte.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall pursue the debate with the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin).

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise in the House today to give you my comments on the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, my first comment concerns the order in which the various issues were approached by the Government in the Throne Speech.

The Conservative Government started with national reconciliation, followed by economic renewal, constructive internationalism and, finally, social justice.

Mr. Speaker, with respect, I doubt that Canadian men and women are more concerned about Canada's international role than they are about social justice. In fact, many polls have clearly indicated that the main concerns of the Canadian people are unemployment and social needs. I am afraid, however, that the rank given social justice in the Throne Speech is an accurate reflection of its place on the Conservative Government's priority list, despite the Government's flowing rhetoric on the subject.

Where the status of women is concerned, the Conservative Government has announced some intentions that are indeed of interest. In the past, however, statements by this Government have seldom been translated into concrete action. It would seem this time will be no exception.

I am delighted that the Government has at last recognized the need for adjusting to structural changes in the family unit. Indeed, only about 15 per cent of our families consist of a husband who works while the wife stays home. If we look at the structure of our families today, we must not forget that a number of years ago, women did not work outside the home and had an average of four children—I am talking about 25 years ago—and if we look at today's birthrate and the profile of the traditional family, we realize that the picture has changed quite a bit. We must remember that the traditional family, where children are living with their biological parents and the father is the sole breadwinner, accounts for only 10 per cent.

Single-parent families constitute 29 per cent of Canadian households. And according to Statistics Canada's figures as of November 1985, 57.5 per cent of women with preschool children are on the labour market; 67 per cent of women who have paid employment are working full time although they have young children, and the majority of women in their optimum childbearing years are on the labour market. In 1984, 69 per cent of women between the ages of 25 and 34 were on the labour market.

Considering the various roles played by women in our society, I think we should introduce a series of measures aimed at helping couples to cope satisfactorily with the needs of their families. Among these measures, daycare is a priority. Perhaps I may add that the need for daycare centres is recognized in the Speech from the Throne, but instead of announcing specific measures, the Government has simply decided to undertake some vague discussions with the provincial governments, the unions and the private sector. In brief, a lot of rhetoric but little action. Canadian men and women expected much more on child care from this Government, because we are now facing a real crisis. Indeed, there is only room for 9 per cent of our children who need those services in the child care system. People who work there are paid less than zoo attendants.

Mr. Speaker, that situation is totally unacceptable. Thousands of people have testified before the Special Committee on Child Care. Men and women from all across Canada have explained to us their dismay at the difficulties they experience, the enormous problems they are facing to have their children cared for when they have to go to work or attend classes. What the Canadian people need and are now looking for is action, not empty words.

When you see what this Government is doing for pension funds, you ought to look closer into having homemakers covered by pension plans in Canada. That was one of the many promises made by the Conservative Government during the election campaign, and made again last year by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). The shifting phraseology I noticed in the Throne Speech is worthy of ancient Greek philosophy. In fact, they are now talking about admitting spouses of existing contributors into pension plans rather than all those who look after the household, those who are without a spouse.

This, Mr. Speaker, discriminates against the heads of single-parent families, 72 per cent of whom are women. The most insidious aspect is that once again women are discriminated against, based on whether or not they have a spouse. It seems to me that in 1986, the Government should be ready to change all that.

If we take a closer look at the National Council of Welfare report we can see that the poverty rate for the elderly and for men has declined, but unfortunately poverty is getting worse with respect to the condition of women who are single, elderly and heads of families.

I should like to remind the House that, unlike most other groups of Canadians, six out of 10 single-parent families headed by women live under the threshold of poverty. The rate of poverty among single mothers did not go down in 1985, quite the contrary, they have been getting ever poorer over the past five years. Compared with a married woman, a single mother is five times more likely to end up among the poor. Women account for nearly 60 per cent of underprivileged women between ages 16 and 64. Although they make up 51 per cent of the population, seven poor and elderly persons out of 10 are women. These women represent 83 per cent of low income, single and elderly people. Such disparity is even more obvious among single-parent families. A family headed by a woman is four times more likely to be poor than another one headed by a man.

I think this is an altogether discouraging situation and I am somewhat upset to hear the Minister responsible for the Status of Women say that the Conservative Government has done a lot for women. It may be that she has done a lot for women who are fairly well-off or who belong to the middle class, and it would seem that the Government is taking a rather socialistic and elitist approach, because I suggest that Government action with respect to the poor and low-income families has been minimal at best. Not a word in the Speech from the Throne relates to homemakers.

There is also a reference to the number of women appointed recently to the highest levels of the Public Service and to federal boards and commissions. I admit this came as a great surprise to me, because I monitor these appointments very closely, and I would like to know which statistics the Conservative Government was using to be able to make those claims. Personally, I take a different view of the situation, since hardly 20 per cent of the appointees are women.

Another promise made by the Conservative Government concerned part-time work. The Prime Minister spoke very firmly on the subject and said several times that one of his priorities in helping women would be to establish a definition of part-time work and to require employers to provide fringe benefits in proportion to the number of hours worked. Unfortunately, two years later, still not a word, not a single reference to part-time work. Not even in the Throne Speech. We all know that today, many families need that second salary, and in 42 per cent of families with two parents and two children, most women have to work because one salary is not enough to keep them above the poverty line. The Conservative Government had promised to take action in this regard, but there is not a single mention of it in the Speech from the Throne.

If we look more closely, we find that there might be legislation to eliminate violent forms of pornography. I trust that this legislation will not suffer the same fate as Bill C-114, which died on the order paper.

Finally, how can we talk about assistance to battered women when the Conservative Government is willing to subsidize only halfway houses and shelters which operate under pilot programs? I was rather surprised to note that the Conservative Government is now saying that it will provide some assistance to shelters for battered women because the excessive cutbacks to this program in the last two years have resulted in the closing of many such shelters.

Last June, a meeting of the national women's groups was held in Ottawa, and the then Secretary of State, Mr. Bouchard, met with their representatives who told him how harmful the cutbacks had been. Naturally, the Minister replied that the Government would take care of everything and that there would be no recurrence of the problem. Recently, we heard about all the women who had to be refused admission to the shelters. In Edmonton, 250 women who had been the victim of family violence had to be turned away because of a lack of space. The same happened in Calgary and it is happening now in the Yukon and in Winnipeg. The Government is now saying: We shall deal with it. I think that it would be more honest for the Government to say that the problem it has created will be corrected because the situation of shelters for battered women is quite disastrous.

The Government also states that the family is the foundation of our society. That is all very well, but I hope that the Government will act on it because, after its two Budgets, we found that a family with two children and an income between $18,000 and $25,000 was paying substantially more taxes than before, which was certainly not the case for families which much higher incomes.

When I look at what the Throne Speech says about women, I have the feeling that it is mostly paying lip service to this issue. We are told that the Government has taken action, that it has done something useful in introducing the Employment Equity Act. Yet, all the groups that appeared before the committee said without exception that the Bill would be totally ineffective because it has no teeth. I only hope that the Government will stop talking and finally take some action to help women. We want to promote women and give them their rightful place in society, but the most important element to consider is the economic position of women. Without good day-care, without part-time work, without work-sharing and without an affirmative action program, it will be extremely hard to give women the place they deserve in our society. I hope that the Government will stop being content with promises, consultations and discussions and that it will take concrete action.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) is concerned with women's issues and I would like to congratulate her for that commitment. Although no parallel is perfect, Mr. Speaker, as is often said, I would like to draw one just the same. This parallel I would like to draw between the serious problems faced by women, especially single-parent women and the disintegration of our forests in Quebec. You will understand why. Twenty years ago the then Government should have done something; it should have foreseen what was going to happen to our forests. There should have been some legislation put in place twenty years ago, specific projects to help restore our forests in Quebec, and especially a reforestation effort.

Mr. Speaker, the previous Liberal Government ten years ago should have had projections made on the quality of life of today's women. Tomorrow's problem was not solved yesterday, especially by a government. A government must have long-term projections, what with all the scientists and researchers around. The problem has been there for a long time. Now it is hitting us straight on.

I too, Mr. Speaker, am the first to be sorry, I feel like crying when I see those single-parent women, when I see those errant women in Montreal who do not even have a place to live. I am shocked that fellow women, girls just like me—some my age, 35 or 36—have no homes. We did not foresee that the breakdown of families would lead to that today.

Now this Conservative Government is being blamed for that. Well, I am sorry. I am sorry, but it is not this Conservative Government's fault. It is the previous Government's fault.

I would like to ask my colleague for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) a question: What about her Government, at the time, exactly five years ago, not two but five years ago, what did they do to anticipate what is happening today? Today, if there had been an accurate projection, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we would not have to face the problem. But then here it is and we must do something about it.

Indeed and I am the first one, and the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, (Mrs. McDougall), is the first one to work on that. The Prime Minister said so on a number of occasions, Mr. Speaker. This is a serious problem, a societal problem, a problem that involves each and every one. We must address it.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member the following question: What did her Government do five years ago to anticipate those things?

Mrs. Pépin: Mrs. Speaker, I think comparing the problems of single-parent families with the problems besetting our forests is tantamount to dismissing them as an ecological problem.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the Liberal Government did more for Canadian women than her Government has done so far.

Today, Canada is recognized as one of the countries with the most progressive legislation for women, and this did not come about under the Conservative Government.

The Hon. Member wants to know what my Government did. I am going to ask her what her Government did with the housing program. You made major cuts, especially in this program which affects single-parent families. Today, it has become a major problem.

How about Bill C-62 and employment equity? I was on that committee, and I saw some of my Conservative colleagues, whom we had not seen throughout the committee's proceedings, come and vote against our amendments. Not a single Conservative woman on that committee supported the 30 amendments which were specifically proposed to help women. Not a single one.

What the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says and what he does are two entirely different things. And there, as you say, you have a problem. We had done some important preliminary work which you have totally destroyed. You say that today you feel sorry for all those poor and battered women, but there was a program, and you made cuts, and you did so ruthlessly. You made all these cuts in subsidizing shelters for women. Now, you say, we are going to take care of them. Obviously, now you have to pick up the pieces.

If we look at this Government's good intentions, there are plenty, because that is all we have been hearing about for two years. But if you look at what the Government has actually done, it does not amount to much, if you don't mind my saying so.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I must remind the Hon. Member that what I said when I made my comparison was, that 20 years ago they should have foreseen these developments and acted accordingly. They should have passed legislation to keep our forests in Quebec from deteriorating as they are today. That is what my comparison was based on.

The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) referred to the housing program. I may remind her that for the very first time, the federal Government has concluded agreements with the provinces. After all, wouldn't a provincial government be better able to identify housing needs? The federal Government couldn't do it at the time, because of the endless quarrelling which kept the parties from sitting down and negotiating important agreements. Unfortunately, people today tend to forget this.

Quite possibly the women of Quebec mentioned by the Hon. Member for Outremont, those battered women, are the victims of these quarrels. Five, six or ten years ago we should have been able to sit down with the provinces in an attempt to come up with adequate and constructive programs to help these people rather than look for problems elsewhere in the Third World. I can appreciate that Third World countries have problems, but then we too have serious problems right here.

For the first time, Mr. Speaker, we sat down with the provinces. We put an end to the bickering, we took a look at the situation, and we made a concerted effort to set up a federal-provincial housing program. One thing I can say for sure is that I discussed this matter with Quebec MNAs and they are pleased, just as I am and just as we on the Government side are pleased about this new housing agreement. Preference will be given to co-operatives and housing for single-parent families. A great number of housing units have been built in the past, but we must continue to build because our population is getting older and there is an urgent need of housing for senior citizens. However, there is also a great need of housing for single-parent families. It is in this area that we must focus our energies.

Once more, my colleague is very concerned by women's issues. She is very knowledgeable in this field as she was President of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women. She is more familiar with these issues than anyone else in this House. However, to avoid any partisanship, the Hon. Member should recognize that this problem is not new. It may have come to the forefront recently, but it has been around for a long time. Because we sit on different sides of the House is no reason to blame each other for this problem. We should sit down together and try to find the means to help women and to channel our energies as women parliamentarians. We should sit down together more often. I regret that partisanship sometimes seems to be stronger than anything else. The Hon. Member and myself, as well as the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), who is also very concerned by this issue, should put aside any partisanship and say: When shall we meet to discuss what could be done? This is what we should do to solve the problem of our sisters in trouble, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate my hon. colleague's comment. May I add that when I called a meeting last year of women Members of the three Parties, very few came. Perhaps if I did call one again this year, more would come.

My hon. colleague has stated that provinces used to quarrel and that there appears to be a difference since this new Government came to power. May I remind her that all provincial Governments are quite irritated by the Government's attitude concerning equalization payments. As evidence of this, I should like to point out that in Quebec, Mr. Lévesque, the Minister of Finance, has indicated that the cuts imposed to them by the federal Government were unacceptable. There is also the Minister of Energy and the Prime Minister of Alberta. The provincial Governments are not any more in agreement with this federal Government than they used to be with previous ones. At any rate, when we are working and putting forward resolutions or moving amendments in committee to try and help women, I should like all women, and also all men in all three Parties, but more particularly women in the Progressive Conservative Party to attend and support our amendments. Unfortunately, it is always the opposite that happens.

We saw what happened with Bill C-92, the Bill on prostitution and pornography: all the women voted against it. Therefore, we could start helping ourselves by supporting these goals when dealing with Bills.

[English]

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, first let me congratulate the Speaker and the members of his staff on the positions which they hold and the work which they are doing. There has been a will of the House to change the attitude of behaviour which was the practice of the last very few years. I think that that change of attitude imposed by the Speaker and his staff will result in better decorum and a better picture of the structure of the entire Government of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate you both on your office and the type of work you are achieving.

I should also like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, as well as the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) who in his usual way and with his usual ability has represented the needs of his constituency and his province, while staying in harmony with the needs of the nation. That, of course, has been a characteristic of his since first being elected to this House. The Hon. Member for Madawaska—Victoria (Mr. Valcourt), my colleague from New Brunswick, the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism, has made his first speech in this House as Minister. Again, he has taken a look at the national as well as the local requirement of the tourist industry and of small business. I think he is dedicated to his position in Cabinet and the results of his work will be positive in a better and stronger small business and tourist economy in Canada.

Let me address the speech itself for a moment, Mr. Speaker. This Throne Speech is an unusual one, unusual because it is a list of commitments for the Government. It shows the imagination and planning of Government in what it thinks are the ojectives which the Government should have for the well-being of our country.

One should not criticize the Throne Speech because it does not say how these objectives are going to be achieved. No Party in this House at any time has delivered a Throne Speech and bored the nation with all the details of how its objectives will be accomplished. Many Governments have given Throne Speeches which were a litany of bragging regarding the accomplishments of the past without any constructive planning for the future. That is why this Throne Speech is a pledge to the nation of Canada that things have been done but, what is more important and longer in list are the things which need to done, together with the dedication and the commitment to do them. Therefore, I think you have before you, Sir, and the nation has before it, for consideration one of the most constructive, positive Throne Speeches which it has been my privilege to debate in the years in which I have been elected to office.

There is another group I would like to draw to the attention of this House, namely, the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. It is a council, voluntary in nature, made up of a group of people dedicating their own time to the development of policies and objectives for Atlantic Canada. This group of able people has in turn engaged very able people to formulate and express the objectives and needs of Atlantic Canada. These people have established for themselves a credit in the eyes of the people of Atlantic Canada, which is extremely important to that area and should be recognized.

I think perhaps a constituent of mine expressed himself about as well as anybody that I have heard express himself as to what Canada needs and what our local area of Atlantic Canada needs. How it would be achieved was given in a speech that he delivered to the founding meeting of the Chamber of Commerce in the town of Woodstock. His name is Mr. W.C. Bull, Senior Vice-President of Corporate Planning of the Royal Bank. He was at one time a constituent of mine. He is now in higher office and has moved to another office in which he can exercise his new duties. The following is what he said to that Chamber of Commerce. I think it is a proper piece of advice and direction for Government and Canada as a whole. It reads as follows:

> Shared commitment and mutual interest in the welfare of your community and region should bring you together. Coming together is a beginning but sticking together is the challenge.

That is the challenge and the objective of this Government, to get the people of Canada as a community to come together and to stick together. That is the challenge, and it is not being recognized or appreciated by the opposition Parties which are doing what they can as a group to divide and conquer the voters of Canada for their own particular end, without consideration for the needs of Canadians. The opposition Parties have instead followed a selfish political course which is not in the best interests of this nation. I plead with them to allow us to go forward to develop and create a better Canada not a divided Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: Let us not divide the voters of this nation. Let us not put culture against culture, region against region, man against woman, women against everybody and man against all concerned for political purposes and for the gain of votes. That is not being good Canadians, let alone good parliamentarians.

Let me carry on a little bit with what Mr. Bull said. He said:

> First of all, dedicated people have to want to work together. This requires a high degree of teamwork.

That is what we should look for in this House of Commons, a high degree of team work and constructive input from the Opposition, not a critical and destructive input on a constant basis. To resume the quote, he said:

> —the good of the community takes precedence over more narrow interests.

That is what this House and all its Parties must begin to address, the broader and major interest of the nation as a whole. Let us go forward with that.

We are undertaking as a Government negotiations to obtain a better trading situation with the United States and with the world at large. Of all industries that have suffered from bad trade negotiations in the past, agriculture is really at the top of the heap. It and its products have been the bargaining ploy that we have put on the table of international negotiation to obtain ends for other interests. In 1954 the imports of horticultural products amounted to $125 million. In 1985, 31 years later, we are now importing $1.1 billion worth of fruits and vegetables as a result of very favourable access for international suppliers in the Canadian market. This is something which must be brought to a halt. We must ask for fair play. We can no longer receive on the Canadian market bottles of wine from foreign countries, particularly from the EEC, at less than the cost of bottling in this country. I use this item because wine only arrives here with a subsidy, and it is the most extreme example that I can give.

However, let us come to the apple industry. We find that in the past we have received apple juice in the Canadian market—a product produced in Canada—at less than the cost of packaging and transportation. It is dumped into this market to the detriment of the Canadian industry.

It is then imperative that Canada seek fair trading opportunity in the world. Whether it applies to agriculture, fish or in whatever product we may trade, our markets in the world must be fair. We are a trading nation. We must seek to achieve world competence, world quality, world productivity and world competitive costs. That must become an objective of Government in leadership and an objective of unions, management, capital and financiers throughout this land. These are our objectives and on this basis we can compete in an international society. We must compete if we are to survive. This must be the tenet upon which all facets of our economy and our Government must base its future negotiations and retain a competitive position within our own market and a competitive capability in those items in which we can be world productive and competent. That has to be our objective. Then and only then can we be a prosperous nation as we should and wish to be.

In the horticultural industry, there are certain seasonal tariffs which are not negotiable as far as that industry is concerned. We have come into production in most of our horticultural crops at that season of the year when the United States of America is just about at the end of its production and is dumping any balance it may have on any market which it can find, and Canada is the handiest market. Therefore, producers of certain fruits and vegetables in Canada cannot hope to compete with the surplus stocks which are disposed of by the U.S. producers at the tag end of their crop. That is at the beginning of our crop when our prices should be at their best. We must then retain an element of protection to retain some strength in that horticultural industry.

We must also take a look at what is the pesticide requirement within Canada and what is the pesticide requirement of products imported into Canada. Pesticides which are denied to farmers in Canada are permissible for imported horticultural produce. This is not right. International markets are using every barrier to trade that they can including pesticides used on horticultural products and medicines used in the feeding of animals. We should protect our producers to the same degree as foreign markets protect their producers. We are very weak in our protection of the trading structure of Canada.

It is impossible for us in this land to compete in many industries. Our apple industry was healthy. Although we always imported apples, our export of apples was major. We are now importing apples from the EEC and other sources and landing them in our stores at less than our cost of production. The market is therefore no longer available for the apple industry. Mushrooms are being imported from Taiwan and China. Apple juice will probably be imported from China in the near future. If we are to compete in horticulture and other aspects of agriculture we must extend to the agriculture industry an element of fair protection for their markets at home or economic assistance on a scale much larger than that which we have provided for the last several years.

What a pity one does not have time to cover all the subject matters which are so pertinent. However, I will speak of the fisheries for a moment. I want to issue a challenge to Government, unions and management involved with the Star-Kist plant in the Bayside, New Brunswick. It is time they sat down around the table with a dedication to put a good product back on the market. As far as consumers are concerned, the quality of that product is above question. Of the last 500,000 cans which were marketed prior to the CBC program, not a single can was returned by virtue of bad quality nor has a single can of product been found to be detrimental to the health of any consumer. This plant can continue to satisfy the consumer. It can once again produce 52 per cent of Canadian consumption with a minimum of complaint. Over the 20 years of its operation there have been a few cans returned with bitter complaint, but no sample has been returned to the company. The company has not seen a sample of rejected product.

I appeal to unions, management and Government to sit down around the table and resolve the problem which is keeping 600 people out of work in an area with about 40 per cent unemployment. This is a vicious and unfair struggle which is taking place at the expense of approximately 600 innocent, low-paid workers who, before Christmas, find themselves without unemployment insurance, dependent on welfare and living in a community which is collapsing due to lack of cash flow. It is time that a meaningful interest was taken in these people in my constituency.

Of the fishery as well, I wish to say that there is a seal problem. It is important that Canada understand how great this problem is. There is a chart which indicates that the birth of seals has risen approximately 25 per cent in a five-year period. As the population of seals has risen the quota allowed to fishermen has decreased in almost direct proportion. The total seal population of the North Atlantic is such that it is now consuming 2.5 million tonnes of fish per year. I will not tell you how much fish is caught in the North Atlantic by the combined fishing fleets. However, if anyone has an honest interest they will look it up and learn that we are not catching 2.5 million tonnes of fish for human consumption. As the total allowable catch decreases and the seal population increases, poverty is becoming more and more embedded in the fishing communities of Atlantic Canada, the quality of fish available to world consumers is going down and our economy is suffering in a major way.

It must be recognized in this nation and internationally that the seal population of the North Atlantic Ocean must be controlled, regulated and reduced. Canada is not the only country interested in this subject because international quotas to fish within the 200-mile limit will either disappear completely or be so substantially reduced by Canada that there will be no international fishing within that 200-mile limit. We are not alone in our demand for an economic reconsideration of the devastation by the seal in the North Atlantic. Whatever means is acceptable to society must be found and that acceptable means must be used.

One could continue to speak of the fisheries for a long while because there is a great deal of requirement. We must consider the devastation to equipment of the fishing industry as well as the decline in fish stocks. A single fisherman in my community lost $100,000 as a result of seal damage to his equipment. That is a lot of money for one man to lose and it would not have been lost 15 years ago when Canada was addressing the seal population and keeping it under proper control. I certainly do not advocate extinction, but control of that population is vital.

The Post Office of Canada has probably regressed more as we became more electronically competent than one could ever have foreseen or imagined. The Post Office of Canada should be operating on the same basis as any other public utility. It should have to appeal to Government for permission to reduce services. It should not have the right, within its own management, to cut service without notice. The Post Office is a disgrace which the Government inherited and the Opposition must assume some responsibility for it.

In the 1920s I had an aunt who lived in Ottawa and wrote to my mother on a weekly basis. She mailed the letter on her way to work every Monday morning. Every Tuesday afternoon, almost without fail, it was in our rural mailbox. It got there via an old steam engine. It was picked up by a horse and wagon at the train station. It was delivered to the Florenceville post office for sorting and was then delivered by horse and wagon and arrived at our home at approximately three o'clock. What became of this system which was so very competent with a steam engine and a horse and wagon?

I challenge labour, management and Government to put that system back in place. The modus operandi today is that every post office must be a profit centre. There is not a public utility in Canada governed by federal or provincial regulation which can lay claim to profit from every community it serves. The Post Office as well as the Customs offices are trying to make every centre a profit centre without regard for the services which the people of Canada require. That is a crass and brutal treatment.

In the Glassville area of my constituency six offices have already been closed and the seventh one is going down. Perhaps I could take another two minutes to add to those remarks, if I may. Not only is that office being closed, the service is being changed in such a way that there is another 48-hour delay in delivery of a letter in the parish of Aberdeen in the County of Carleton. During the 1920s a letter could be delivered from Ottawa to rural New Brunswick in 30 hours. Now one cannot respond to a letter for another 48 hours because of a reduction in service of Canada Post. That is not good enough for rural Canadians. I hope I did not impose upon the time of the House and I thank you for the extension.

• (1530)

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, rarely have I heard such practical solutions and comments with regard to Canada Post as those given by the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain). The system is a disaster. It is not only a question of our attitude toward the Post Office, but the attitude within the Post Office and the frustration of the public. I cannot think of a single issue, including taxes, social problems and others, that is more important intrinsically to Canadians than reliable mail service.

I can remember carrying mail at Christmas time as a young man. While I will not mention his name out of respect, our postman was a super person who gave good mail service, and everyone in the neighbourhood loved him. I can remember carrying the mail at Christmas as a young man because I was not quite big enough to carry the postman after he was given a small libation by the neighbours after providing a year of dedicated service. I also used to finish the routes the odd time when he decided to pause for a rest.

I want to point out an incident that was brought to my attention and about which I had to write a letter recently. It concerns a mailman who refused to deliver mail to a particular household because of their dog. I know the household and can say that the dog was nearly blind. When the excuse for non-delivery was dropped off at the Post Office, saying that the dog was threatening, during that two-week period in which it was supposed to be threatening, the dog was dead and buried. The excuse was as dead as the dog. After the dog expired, another excuse followed which stated: "White cat obstructing sidewalk".

While I agree that such an attitude is shown by a limited few who serve the Post Office, how can we expect such attitudes to contribute to a resolution to the problem?

I want to change the subject for a moment and support the speech given by the Minister of State for Small Bussinesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt). There is a small business in my constituency that required the particular attention of the Minister and his Department in order for the business to proceed. While some Governments become hidebound in legislation and regulations, opportunities exist to take a second look and choose alternatives which may not be carved in stone. That is precisely what happened in my constituency, so that there is every assurance that there soon may be 40 jobs in a new industry. I want to thank the Minister and the people in his Department, both in Vancouver and Ottawa, who made that possible.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his support of my remarks. I would only add that Canada cannot prosper if we do not have a co-operative interest in the well-being of our society. All of us must have a basic interest and understanding of the needs of places like Montreal, Toronto, Saint John, as well as rural Canada. These concerns must be rolled into a package and become the common interest of Government, management and labour so that our postal service may work with the same historical degree of efficiency, effectiveness and satisfaction to the public.

I ask all facets of the postal system to consider these service requirements. If we must bend a little to accommodate the public, that is our duty, whether it is management, the Minister or the letter carriers. All of us serve the public and we should do so with courtesy and effectiveness.

The Post Office has become the greatest promoter of electronic and courier services in Canada, at a massive expense to those who would still use the postal service exclusively if their letters could be delivered in 30 hours, as they once were. I do not know why management, Government and labour are no longer interested in making that kind of service available so that the Post Office could prosper.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his speech. He made reference to the population explosion among seals in the northwest Atlantic. What do the fishermen in his area believe should be done to eliminate the problems in the fishing industry that are caused by seals?

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for his question. Historically, the population of seals in the presence of a national fishing industry has been taken into very careful consideration by the Government. When these policies of population control were removed by the Government, I believe the seal population in the North Atlantic, particularly among harp seals, almost doubled in approximately seven and a half years. This means that the number of fish consumed has virtually doubled and will double again in the next five to seven years.

If this happens we will be in a situation which people on shore refer to as the rabbit and the fox. We can have seals or we can have fish, but we cannot have both. Seals consume a major source of excellent food that is needed in this country, in Europe, in the United States and in the Third World. The Government must find a way to address the population control of those seals which swim in the North Atlantic or that source of food will not be there.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to talk about an aspect of the Throne Speech which I believe has received too little attention. I am referring to a brief paragraph which states: "My Government recognizes that security is the surest safeguard of liberty". It goes on to talk about increasing our NATO contingent in western Europe.

I am one who, against the general weight of feeling within the Christian tradition, was persuaded in World War II to join the Army in order to kill people for the opposition of facism. I have since then wondered very deeply why our country and our allies become engaged in war. I very much regret the one-sided emphasis in those words. I very much regret the exaggerated reliance which that paragraph places on terror, the suggestion that we will have liberty and, for that matter, peace through terror. There was once the Roman Empire. Those of us who studied Caesar will know the motto of the Romans was: "If you want peace, prepare for war". That was good in Julius Caesar's time when he had a growing and expanding empire. But that is long gone. Its power to terrorize its neighbours disappeared when it made its neighbours its slaves and no longer had the power to terrorize them.

I deeply distrust the continuation of the philosophy that we must terrorize whoever it is we think disagrees with us. The previous Prime Minister entertained a similar philosophy when he said: "What we have to do is scare hell out of the Russians". It did not work. The means used to scare hell out of the Russians are scaring hell out of us. I would rather place my reliance not only in the Christian and Jewish tradition, but I believe with the majority of the people of the world, in words such as these: The work of justice shall be peace and the effect of justice, quietness and confidence forever, keep judgment and do justice for my salvation as near to come and my justice to be revealed. In other words, while we struggle with our conflicting actual fears, the hope should be placed not in creating more fear. The hope for peace and liberty has to be placed on the creation of a more just world, not on the creation of more terror.

For that reason, I regret further that there is no warning in the Speech from the Throne against the dangers of militarization. We think of this as a country of peaceful people. Yet our economy and our Government are becoming militarized. By "militarization" I mean mainly the promoting of war-related enterprises only for profit or income and without serious examination of the danger they pose to life, peace, the economy and even to the environment.

In the five years I have been in Parliament, there has never been a serious debate on defence. Neither this Government nor the previous Government has ever put forward a rationale for how our money is spent on defence to be debated in Parliament. There is very little public opportunity to examine the facts. There is very little listening to the millions of people in Canada who, in one way or another, have gone on record, and will go on record again this weekend, and who have been going on record daily during this week in Toronto, asking for peace, for an end to the arms race. These are people who hoped that there would be some result at the summit conference in Reykavik two weeks ago. They were disappointed when the President of the United States, our ally, stonewalled all the substantial offers made by the other side by insisting on his absolute right to conduct the crazy scheme of star wars. But it is not only our ally. This Government, under the excuse of restraint, starves unemployment insurance allowances, public day care, health and education expenditures, social housing and even the farming industry, giving too little too late to recognize disasters. The sake of maintaining our industry against subsidized imports, as one of the previous speakers mentioned, this Government starves the manufacturing industry. Perhaps it would like to see it disappear from Canada as has the clothing industry. Only one industry is actively supported by the Government. When the Government brings the shopping team up from the Pentagon and continues subsidizing the export of arms, that is where its heart is, in the high profits, not in defence. It gives critical backing to the terrorist policies of the United States Government in Nicaragua. It gives back-door support to star wars. It allows more and more nuclear-capable ships and submarines to enter our harbours such as Vancouver, Halifax and even Toronto.

The Government is planning more and more military bases and installations and even may bring the first NATO base to the western shore of the Atlantic Ocean at Goose Bay. The result is that the whole defence and armaments enterprise is being judged primarily by its profitability and not by any careful examination of how it contributes to peace. Of course, those who dare to criticize that enterprise are often accused of having doubtful loyalty to Canada without any basis for the accusation.

A principal example which has come to my attention in the last few months is the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, with the training in low-level flying under contract for NATO Governments, to the great distress and harm to the life of the native people in that area. For some years there has been a program of training pilots to fly low over the hills of Labrador. This is not for sport, of course, although they tend to make it a sport. They seem to like to scare the caribou herds, which can be fatal to caribou cows when they are calfing. They seem to like to scare the Indian and Inuit families when they are hunting, as they have done for thousands of years before we interrupted them. They seem to like to pollute the air and lake waters with the exhaust of their low flying aircraft. The excuse is, of course, to train pilots to fly low over the hills of Eastern Europe and into the Soviet Union under its radar. In other words, this is to provide for a policy which the Americans sometimes call "deep strike" but which in fact amounts to "first strike".

The native people of this area for years have struggled with the Government over their land claims, that they should be able to exercise their right over the land as they did for a long time. Nevertheless, the Government has stonewalled them, and even when a vast iron ore deposit was opened up, little was done to ensure that it was a means of livelihood for the people who had lived there for so long. In fact, the company which was operating the iron ore mining in one part of Labrador decided to close it down shortly before the Canadian President of that American subsidiary decided to go into politics to become the Prime Minister of Canada. Now that those people have been deprived of that livelihood, they are being pressured into becoming hewers of wood and drawers of waters, or perhaps becoming servants in the cafeteria on a NATO base which the Government is willing to attract to Labrador by spending perhaps $100 million of taxpayers' money.

Our Government, and the people of Canada, have an obligation to respect all the cultures of our country, not only the French and the English, the Italian, the Chinese, the Ukrainian and others who have come here, but also that of the peoples who were here for thousands of years before our ancestors arrived. A year ago the Government heard briefs at a short committee hearing in Yellowknife from representatives of the Dene Nation and the Métis association in which they called for a defence policy and foreign policy of non-alignment. These people have, for many generations and centuries, tried to live in such a way as not to threaten their neighbours and not to pollute and destroy the land on which they live. They do not eagerly tie themselves to a boom and bust economy of competition and war. We should be listening to their wisdom and considering the question they ask. Is it really necessary for Canada to follow one of these two armed giants in the world?

Another committee of Parliament listened to a similar representation from a group which spoke on the matter of Goose Bay. The Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry in its report tabled in Parliament at the end of June addressed a motion to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) which stated that he should immediately halt all north shore and Labrador low-level military air flights and assess the effects of such flights on the environment in these regions as soon as possible. The committee, made up of course by a large majority of government Members, studied the protests of the native peoples against the pollution and the disruption of their lives caused by the low-flying planes. This was the direction the committee gave to the Minister of National Defence.

I think that the 120 days which he has to respond to the committee have just about expired. I hope he will soon tell us whether he respects the advice of the committee and the plea of the people in that area. By this motion the committee is defending Canadians, defending Canada's land, by asking the Minister to halt the flights now and to investigate.

The Government of Quebec is taking a similar stand. The Government of Quebec will not leave it to the slow-moving investigation to be undertaken finally by Cabinet. It will add its own investigation, too, since it is not only Labrador that is threatened by this low-flying program but also certain parts of Quebec. Church leaders in the Goose Bay area, and other areas, have publicly questioned who it is that will benefit from the half a billion dollars or more that would be spent on the NATO base and whether, in a starving world, it is right to waste so much money on armaments.

Of course, the argument of the Minister of National Defence and the military is that they believe they are defending Canada. But that is exactly the claim that many Canadians are calling into question. In the case of the base at Goose Bay, the pilots who will be trained to fly over the hills of eastern Europe and into the Soviet Union give the Soviet Union good reason to fear a first strike. It is common knowledge that if one believes in the effectiveness of the fear of first strike, then the response to that fear is to strike first. In other words, if we believe that the Soviet Union is willing to attack our country, then the danger of bringing that attack much sooner than we expect is increased by the provocative and threatening plan called deep strike, and by the training of our pilots for carrying out such a plan. This is of a piece with the Pershing and Cruise missiles in Europe which are 10 or 12 minutes' flight away from Moscow, or whatever it is, depending on where they are based.

We have no such threat against us in North America. It is not easy to imagine what it is like to live in a country that has already within living memory been twice invaded by the armies of the West, once by what we called the Allies and once by a country we called the enemy but which was partly armed for that purpose by corporations, especially American ones. It is now threatened with the destruction of its major cities in a matter of minutes. There is no sign that the citizens of that country are being intimidated into surrendering their country. They have made an extraordinary move of unilateral nuclear disarmament. That is the only name that can be put on the moratorium on testing, since the United States claims that to stop testing would weaken it militarily, to quote the words of President Reagan. The Soviet Union has been willing to accept a one-year cessation of its nuclear testing in order to invite the United States and its allies, such as Canada, to reach an agreement to end the testing altogether. There is no mention of this in the Speech from the Throne, which I think is unfortunate.

This is a debate which is being carried on in city after city in Canada, not only by people in their living rooms, by people in churches and other public places, but by members of city and municipal councils. It is a debate that will be entertained by the Ontario Legislature within the next few weeks. It will entertain a motion to make Ontario a nuclear weapons free zone. Granted, a motion such as that was passed a few years ago in Toronto City Council, and in many other cities, which does not by itself bring about the goal that it states. However, it registers a strong, wide consensus of the people who believe that we do not get peace or liberty by terrorizing people on the other side of the world or on the other side of the border. If we find a threat which we agree among ourselves must be met, then let us use the means to meet it, as we did in World War II. But let us not continue piling up armaments endlessly in the foolish belief that somehow or other we will terrify the whole world into doing every little thing that President Reagan would like it to do. The belief that every country should turn its Government inside out to suit the President of the United States is an insane belief. It is worrisome that such a person should be the President of the largest country in the world. Canada must disconnect itself from that craziness. We can begin to do that by saying that there will be no NATO base at Goose Bay and no more low-level flying training at Goose Bay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco).

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I listened to part of the Hon. Member's speech. I wonder where he gets the idea that low-flying aircraft pollute the inland waters of the Labrador Coast. Could the Hon. Member perhaps cite some specific examples or give us some reference to verify his comment? Could he also tell us how well informed he is with respect to the migration of the caribou on the Labrador Coast or whether he knows anything about caribou migration at all?

• (1600)

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I read the statements of people resident in that area and of representatives of the United and Anglican Churches who served in that area. I read the statements of social scientists who have gone there to study the situation I have described. There are many reports and eye-witness accounts of the very things I was describing. If the Hon. Member really wants them, I would be glad to send him copies.

The authority that I first heard speak about the migration of the caribou was the President of the Inuit Taparasat who spoke to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence a year ago at Yellowknife. It was he who warned that the caribou herds can be destroyed by careless application of low-level flying. I myself have not yet been up to the northland but I would be quite willing to send the name and address of the President of the Inuit organization to the Hon. Member if he really wants to go there to find out if that man is telling the truth about the part of the country he represents.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the other night, the CBC Journal broadcast an account of this particular Labrador issue. That program indicated that because of the size of the territory and the population, the odds are that there would be an over-flight of a populated area about once a month on average. Could the Hon. Member tell me how an over-flight occurring once a month could possibly hurt the ecology or the population?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has said that the ecology has not yet been destroyed. That is true. It is being urged that we stop before we inflict increasing damage. It is being urged that the flights stop until there has been an adequate environmental study. That is the principal request of the people who live there, of our own parliamentary committee and, I believe, of the Quebec Government.

Even if there are only over-flights once a month in certain areas at present, the fact is that people cannot live the life they have preferred to live for centuries without knowing when they will be buzzed by these pilots. This considerably disrupts their attempts to earn their living in a normal way. There has already been an indication that there is a decrease in the wildlife available in the area of the over-flights.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague for his really quite fine speech. I would hope that other Hon. Members would recognize the sincerity of it and the research that went into the comments he made.

If I could, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question about the issue of militarization of which he spoke. If, as a country, we are to fight back against the militarization of the world, which frightens so many people not only in Canada but throughout North America and the entire world, what kind of steps and gestures would be useful? What kind of public demonstrations has the Hon. Member, a person who is deeply interested in these issues, seen in Canada in the past year? What would he recommend that Members of the House and people across Canada who are concerned with this militarization involve themselves in?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question although I will not be able to do justice to it in four minutes. I would mention three actions without trying to deal with all of them.

On Saturday, from Vancouver to St. John's, many of us will engage in a public walk calling for an end to the nuclear arms race. This is an old subject. Many of us were doing the same thing 40 years ago. We have not met our objective yet but there are a great many more people with widely differing political points of view who agree that we have to put an end to the arms race.

Second, I believe we should look to ways to build up our economy and to restore the growth of industries which manufacture goods for peaceful use. I am not ashamed to mention the clothing industry as being one which is important to the riding of Spadina. We must do this so that we do not become dependent on the export of arms for a significant part of our national revenue and so that we do not participate in the export of arms to countries which will see, directly or indirectly, that they are used for the suppression of human rights in places like Latin America, Africa and the western Pacific islands.

Third, I believe we should address our own fears by meeting with the people we fear like the people of the Soviet Union. We should all sit down, not only the two top men, to speak with each other. We should make much more use of the opportunity that exists in the Circumpolar Conference, a conference of the countries around the world that border the Arctic. Those three actions are the kinds of actions I would like to see Parliament discuss as ways of creating peace through justice and through the discussion of a just settlement between us and those we fear.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to be able to participate in the debate on the latest Speech from the Throne. Certainly Canada is in such a state now that economic revival and renewal is something we all eagerly anticipate. I was extremely encouraged by several of the remarks that were made in the Speech from the Throne and would anticipate that indeed the serious issues of the day will be addressed.

The Speech from the Throne outlined the Government's three-part strategy designed to promote economic renewal through fiscal responsibility, the removal of obstacles to growth and the encouragement of new investment. We know that the initiative has been taken over the past two years since the election of the Progressive Conservative Government and we know that that initiative has been successful to a certain degree. Indeed, we have seen growth.

Approximately 24,478 new jobs have been created each month since the election of the Progressive Conservative Government. We have seen the Bank of Canada rate fall. We have heard the Conference Board of Canada state that consumer confidence is at its highest level in some 21 years and is at its second highest level on record. The inflation rate has remained pretty well stable at the 4 per cent range for the past two years and we are in the most stable price environment since 1971.

Coming from Atlantic Canada and the constituency of Fundy—Royal, I am no stranger to economic and regional disparity. It was of some concern to us before the Speech from the Throne that this Government perhaps had not moved in distinct enough fashions and ways to address those regional disparities. All of us from the Atlantic region were very pleased to see that the problems of regional disparity were clearly acknowledged in the Speech from the Throne. I believe it is high time that this Government, and most people, acknowledge that inequity is not acceptable to Atlantic Canadians, who generally come from a root stock of proud and self-reliant people determined to play a full and active role in Canada's national life and in this Confederation. Atlantic Canadians are not in the business of looking for more handouts. The fact of the matter is that we want to work our way out of the situation where we have such a significant and substantial dependence on others in this nation to assist us. We must recognize that Atlantic Canada accepts from the federal Government something in excess of $9 billion more annually than it pays out. That sort of inequity is not justifiable.

There have been several initiatives taken by the Government to facilitate enduring economic development in the region, such as the Atlantic Enterprise Program which will provide $1 billion in loan guarantees; the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Program to promote and encourage government procurement by local firms; Enterprise Cape Breton; and economic and regional development agreements that have been in place now and have demonstrated some sense of success. The agency set up by Atlantic Canada Opportunities will co-ordinate all federal development initiatives in the area. It will have its roots in Atlantic Canada. It will tap the resources and ideas of Atlantic Canadians who will have a direct hand in the operation, policy, and program of development.

We have seen in recent days, and heard in recent hours, of other initiatives and programs that have been put into place. We heard today the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) talking about the virtues of small business and how they must be encouraged to establish in Atlantic Canada. In recent weeks, we have heard the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) from Saint John declare that the Port of Saint John has been given local port status. This will be a tremendous boon to the Port of Saint John and to New Brunswick as a whole.

More must be done. There is no question that the right steps have been initiated and the right steps have been taken. Atlantic Canada must realize more from this Government than we have ever realized from any of the previous Governments or administrations. Atlantic Canada is in a state of economic decline. It has been in this state of economic decline ever since the national policy was announced in 1879 when there was a determination by the then Government of the day to redirect the normal trade routes from north to south and concentrate in an east to west direction. This was harmful to Atlantic Canada. It was harmful to the maritime provinces, as they were known at that time. Atlantic Canadians and maritimers had been traditionally north-south traders. That hurt us economically, and we have never come back to that time when we did enjoy economic prosperity in concert and equally with the rest of our neighbours to the west.

I believe it is high time that we recognized that there has to be a special relationship between Canada and Atlantic Canada, and recognize the special status that Atlantic Canada has played in the past in the development and creation of this nation.

Mr. Speaker, I am suggesting to you that at this time in our negotiations with the United States when probably the future of the nation, let alone of Atlantic Canada, has never come more into prominence than it has today, that Atlantic Canadians be accorded that special status and recognition which I am calling for.

The New England states represent a market with which the maritime provinces are associated and, geographically speaking, we are a natural part of the New England states. It has a population of something in excess of 48 million people. It has a market potential that is twice the size of the entire nation of Canada. Maritimers have had a long historic relationship with the Boston states. We refer to the Boston states with almost a kindred spirit. We look to them as a friendly neighbour and a part of our Atlantic Canadian heritage. It is natural that it should be an area of special consideration, and economic ties between the two should be considered. This is nothing that is new. Back in the 1880s a maritime partner sister of Nova Scotia considered leaving Confederation when it perceived that the union of the provinces and Ottawa had failed to deliver on the promised economic benefits of union and the establishment of Canada.

The coastal states represent the largest market for Atlantic goods. It is a market that has been steadily growing. Our net exports in Atlantic Canada are more than we import. Atlantic Canadians have historically supported a freer trade relationship with New England. I perceive, now that we are involved in these talks, that there is a renewed interest in the Atlantic region and in the concept of a federal regional economic development. We have now seen two decades of policies and programs that have been directed towards developing Atlantic Canada which have not been very effective, to say the least. It is time now that we looked at new avenues of restoring economic confidence in Atlantic Canada.

Many are wondering if stronger economic ties to New England might offer a different type of development and opportunity which may work. As a maritimer and an Atlantic Canadian, I am convinced that more open access to the New England market would bring benefits to our region. Our major exports of fish and forest products could be expected to increase both in output and in level of processing.

We have been hurt by the recent imposition of tariffs and taxes on lumber products. That is just an indication of why it is more important at this stage in our development that indeed we do secure our future by realizing an enhanced trade agreement with the United States. It is particularly important to Atlantic Canadians. If we are successful, that will reduce the uncertainty and difficulties in the present countervailing American duty legislation. Companies in Atlantic Canada have been subjected to commerce investigations to determine if they have been hurt by U.S. companies. This is a very expensive process indeed. We want to be finished with that so we can secure our markets and ensure a future for our people.

If the huge northeastern United States market was opened up to Canadian producers and manufacturers, some of them might be induced to locate in the maritime provinces to manufacture their products for export into the U.S. I call upon the Canadian Government to recognize in its negotiations with the United States the special situation and status of Atlantic Canada and to bear that in mind when it is concluding its negotiations with our American neighbours.

I should like to deal with the shipbuilding industry, an extremely important matter to those of us living in Atlantic Canada. I draw the attention of the House to a statement which was made by the Progressive Conservative Party on August 2, 1984. In part it indicated that we must work to meet a greater share of our domestic requirements for vessels used in defence, coastal trade, search and rescue patrol, and the offshore fishery. Also it indicated that a top priority of a Conservative Government would be to create a more viable and prosperous shipbuilding industry and that proposals would be submitted during the consultative process. At that time there were some seven or eight recommendations which we would implement if and when we became the Government of Canada.

The shipbuilding industry in the nation, let alone in Atlantic Canada, is in extremely serious economic difficulty. Unfortunately I have not seen much in the way of movement on the part of the Government to implement any of the policies about which we talked prior to the 1984 election. I would suggest that we move to implement some of the programs about which we talked.

Also I draw to the attention of the House a statement by the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repair Association which directed its thoughts toward four of the policies which we noted at that time—to impose a moratorium on ship imports for domestic use, to introduce concessionary financing for Canadian domestic ships, to apply a 25 per cent tariff on fishing vessels over 100 feet, and to accelerate the naval programs and the Polar 8 ice-breaker program. I support and endorse those recommendations of the Canadian shipbuilding industry. I call upon the Government which I support to implement those policies which we said we would implement prior to the 1984 election. It is high time that we recognized the contribution which the shipbuilding industry has made and can make to the nation. We recognize that that industry is in a state of decline and that merchant fleets are overwhelmed with excess tonnage.

The Saint John Shipbuilding Company is comprised of a group of people with tremendous vision and foresight. It has now put together a team of experts in the field of naval construction and has determined that it will specialize in this direction. I applaud the initiative and foresight of that company. If it is to succeed, as I am sure it will, it must direct its attention to more specialized fields. With the type of infrastructure currently in place, there can be no doubt that a significant amount of naval contracts, whether they be for frigates or submarines, should go to shipyards in Atlantic Canada, particularly that shipyard in New Brunswick which has focused its attention on that particular sector.

I note as well that the Saint John yard is one of the three yards being considered by a consortium looking at the construction of the Polar 8 ice-breaker as being the logical place for it. I call upon the Government to give high priority to the yard located in the City of Saint John when the contract for the Polar 8 super ice-breaker is let.

My final point concerns the policies announced by the Minister responsible for Parks Canada. I am delighted that we will look at a new parks policy. Fundy National Park is in my constituency. In the opinion of many people—and it is mine as well—it is one of the most beautiful parks in the Dominion of Canada. I ask that serious attention be paid to that park. There are several areas which we could improve. There are also several things to which the Minister can respond. They have been brought to his attention by the people of Alma and other nearby villages. Some of the suggestions were to reinstate the interpretative walks, to hire a recreational director and staff, to construct a visitors' centre with a marine display and a tidal viewing stand, to extend the golf course by 18 holes, to update the Highlands Inn to resource status, to restore the Alma mill site, and to construct the maple sugar grove. Fundy National Park is the nearest national park in the entire nation to the American border. It is only realistic that it should be developed with special attention and with special care.

I applaud the Minister for his visit to the region last spring. The people were delighted that for the first time since the park was inaugurated in the 1950s a Minister responsible for Parks Canada had the interest to visit Fundy National Park, our little region of the country, to talk with them, to hear their concerns firsthand, and to witness the beauty of the region.

The process for economic development has been started by the Government. I look forward to serving with it over the next two years in a very positive and constructive way. I wish us the best in developing the political will to implement the policies we have started.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I spent part of my summer vacation in the Fundy National Park of which the Hon. Member for Fundy Royal (Mr. Corbett) spoke so highly. Indeed it is a very fine part of the country. I have two questions for the Hon. Member.

Has it not been a source of disappointment to him to have had so little definition and direction given to the much heralded Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency announced in the Throne Speech? This is the end of the Throne Speech debate. I hoped that by now there would be at least some sense of what exactly the agency is to do. Does the Hon. Member share my sense of disappointment that the agency is still some kind of pie in the sky solution to Atlantic Canadian problems without being defined in any sense?

Based upon some discussions with those involved in the free trade negotiations with the United States, does it seem likely that it is necessary for us to give up in order to attain certain objectives for which the Conservative Government is looking in its free trade talks? Does it seem necessary to give up the regional support packages which were so much a part of the country's commitment to Atlantic Canada and to other parts of the country? If we seem likely to have to sacrifice that, as is my view of what is likely, will this change the Member's view of what is so advantageous with respect to the potential of free trade arrangements between Canada and the United States?

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) on his good judgment in choosing Fundy National Park for part of his summer vacation. I am saddened that he had not contacted me while in the area because I could have introduced him to a number of interesting aspects of the park, to some local people, to the local heritage and the history of the area in which I am sure he would have taken a great deal of interest. Perhaps he will think about coming back to Fundy National Park in the future. With the Minister's new proposals and his interest in parks across the nation, Fundy as well as other parks will be the beneficiary of those programs.

As far as the Atlantic Enterprise Program and the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Program are concerned, it must be recognized that these are mammoth undertakings upon which the Government has embarked. Let me draw to the Hon. Member's attention that just last year the IRD Program alone committed something like $88 million to small business promotion in New Brunswick. I am not sure what the total figure is for Atlantic Canada, but that is a significant amount of money for the Province of New Brunswick alone. The billion dollars to which the Atlantic Enterprise Program has committed itself in guaranteeing loans to small businesses is probably one of the most substantial moves that I have witnessed. If the Hon. Member knows of any other program by previous administrations, I invite him to draw it to our attention. I do not think that that can be the case. Nevertheless, the Atlantic Enterprise Program is one of the most exciting programs and one of vision, that I have witnessed in my experience as a Member of Parliament. These programs, just by nature of their size and complexity, are naturally taking some time to implement. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Moncton a few days ago has lowered the ceiling for eligibility to apply for that program from $200,000 to $100,000. We were very pleased about that. Despite the fact that there have been some hitches, some natural problems that you would expect in dealing with a program of this size, the fact is that the program is in place. It is moving ahead and people will and are taking advantage of it. I am certainly very enthusiastic about its prospects.

The freer trade issue to which the Hon. Member refers cannot help but benefit Atlantic Canadians. I believe that along the way there will be casualties, but there will be more winners than losers and the winners will be winning big. The casualties will probably be casualties at any rate. These casualties will be the people located in Atlantic Canada who are finding it very, very difficult to compete in industry and in manufacturing in Canada just because of their distance from markets and difficulties in establishing their industries at arm's length from where they have an opportunity to sell their products.

Being an Atlantic Canadian I know that with our historic ties, the opportunities we have had in the past, our natural heritage and the fact that so many people go back and forth to the New England States—the Boston States as we refer to them—the impact will be substantial. If there is to be criticism about our trade negotiations it cannot be criticism for trying. I should think that the only criticism that one should get would be for not trying. We should not be criticized for trying. If we are the winners, I suggest to the Hon. Member that Atlantic Canada will be as big a winner if not the biggest winner in the entire nation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have about one minute left for both the question and the answer. The Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, mine will be a short comment and I will try to stay within the minute. Atlantic Canada is an area which deals in agricultural, fishing and forest products in the main plus an element, an important element, that of manufacture. It is an area which can only prosper more by an extended market in a fair trade opportunity. I am certainly a supporter of the concept of approaching free trade as closely as we can get to it but of achieving fair trade.

One of the objectives of the Atlantic Enterprise Program is to reduce the red tape, to expedite the application from date of receipt until reality. A major factor in the process is to inject new expertise and to reduce the red tape. Once these steps are accomplished, that program will go forward in a smooth and productive fashion, which will be of major benefit to Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, a Throne Speech is an interesting reflection of the social and political philosophies of a Government. We learn a great deal about its political program and agenda and what it does or does not stand for. This past year in its Throne Speech the Government returned to the 19th century, the social Darwinism theories of survival of the fittest. That is where the Government seems content to remain. The Government takes away from the poor and the powerless and gives to the rich and strong. We agree that the deficit must be addressed, a deficit that grew because of its great safety net which supported our citizens during the severe recession of the early 1980s. We also agree that action must be taken, but not on the backs of the elderly, the sick, the one-parent families or the middle-aged unemployed, those who are least able to bear the burden.

This Government seems unable to act in a consistent fashion. We are told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that the country is almost bankrupt, that government spending must be reduced, that transfer payments to the provinces must be cut because the federal deficit must decline. But at the same time, the Prime Minister finds $1 billion to save the uninsured depositors of the Western Bank disaster. He found another $600 million to assist in the purchase of Gulf Canada, and yet another $56 million to change the colour of our soldiers' uniforms. He just recently decided to spend $41 million on a maximum security prison in his riding, the wrong type in the wrong place. This is a first-class boondoggle.

The media has said that the Throne Speech contains something for everyone, that it tries to be all things to all people. Well, I disagree. All that is demonstrated is the Government's lack of political will to close the widening gap between the rich and the poor. It contains an unfair, uneven approach to responsible Government. The Government continues to practise the favouring of the well-to-do by increasing capital gains allowances and RRSPs to levels that the majority of Canadians cannot even dream of while it continues to deindex family allowance and the income tax table a sneaky hidden 3 per cent per year.

Not only am I concerned about the social and economic well being of the people in this country, I am interested as well in the country's growth as an independent, sovereign political entity with all its indigenous richness of heritage and culture.

Under Liberal leadership in the 1970s, the arts in Canada enjoyed a growth rate of which there were few equals in the economy. At the start of the decade there were five professional dance companies in Canada. By 1980 there were 23. The number of professional theatres increased sixfold to 121 and half of their productions were Canadian. The number of professional visual artists more than doubled to 28,755, while the number of publishing houses had more than doubled to 89, almost three-quarters of them now Canadian-owned.

I could tell you about what happened in theatre, dance, symphony orchestras. However, the point that I would like to make is that Pierre Berton, appearing before the Senate Committee on Mass Media in 1970, said that we must sing our own songs and dream our own dreams. It was with this in mind that Canadian artists began to repatriate themselves to Canada and they won major victories.

Canadian content requirements for TV and radio, in the latter instance creating a foundation for a Canadian pop music industry, the withdrawal of tax privileges from foreign magazines, the disallowance for tax purposes of commercials placed by Canadian companies on U.S. border TV stations and, by far the most important of all, the increase in spending on culture by all Governments, which reached more than $2 billion by the early 1980s, was very important. The Liberal Government was a Government of vision promoting pride in our Canadian heritage.

I wish to comment upon the specific language used by the Government in the second to last page of the Throne Speech. I cannot refer you to the particular page number because the Government has omitted to place any page numbers on the copies of the Throne Speech which it distributed.

In the first paragraph of the second to last page of the Throne Speech it is stated:

—we must ensure that all Canadians can pursue their own dreams and expand their own opportunities through greater use of information and knowledge about one another and the world beyond.

I wonder how Canadians are able to "pursue their own dreams" when they do not see images of themselves reflected on their own broadcast media.

For instance, the Caplan-Sauvageau Report on broadcasting concluded quite correctly that there is too little drama programming available on our TV sets. Only 2 per cent of the drama programs seen on English-language TV in this country is Canadian in origin. Furthermore, only 28 per cent of all programming hours available in this country in the English language is Canadian in content. English Canadians, in other words, are virtual strangers in television's land of the imagination. When the Throne Speech refers to expanding information and knowledge about the world beyond, I say that we would like to learn of the world including areas beyond the United States.

On French-language TV 57 per cent of the programs available are Canadian, but the actual viewing of Canadian shows exceeds the proportion of available French-language programming. According to the Caplan-Sauvageau Report this demonstrates that Canadians do watch Canadian content programs. In fact, according to that report the amount of Canadian programs which are watched by our viewers is directly proportional to the amount available. In other words, the more Canadian programs are available in the English and French languages, the more Canadians are likely to watch.

We do not need the Caplan-Sauvageau Report to tell us that there is a chronic shortage of quality Canadian TV programs for our children. The report does tell us, however, that the production of children's French-language and English-language TV programs at CBC Radio Canada is declining because of budget cut-backs imposed by the Government on the CBC. This leaves our children to watch American cartoons which exhibit a tendency for strident, often violent, action. How can the Government continue to play politics with the minds of our children? This issue is too important to be left to partisan politics. Therefore, I had hoped there would be some indication in the Throne Speech that the Government would work with both opposition Parties to increase Canadian content programming for our children as well as Canadian programming in general. Unfortunately, no such statements are to be found in the Throne Speech.

In a speech delivered by the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) to the Financial Post Conference on Broadcasting on September 29, 1986, she outlined a process which would lead toward the eventual implementation of the Caplan-Sauvageau Report. The Minister stated in her address: "I will be doing everything in my power to ensure that the initiatives emerging from this process will be carried out before the end of this Government's first term of office". One would have expected that the Minister's commitment to implement some of the Caplan-Sauvageau Report would have found expression in the Throne Speech. Unfortunately, that is not so. It was totally ignored.

The second paragraph on the second to last page of that speech states as follows:

To begin debate on this fundamental challenge, my government will define its objectives and ways to achieve them.

I have two comments about this statement. First, the Government has held power for more than two years. It is about time the Government defined its objectives. Second, I do not understand why the Throne Speech uses the phrase "To begin debate". Surely we have already had considerable debate. Since taking power in 1984 the Government has commissioned nine separate reports to advise it on what it should do in matters of broadcasting and culture. This is most unexpected from a Government which professed, when elected, to have a direct plan of action which it was eager to implement.

I understand that I have run out of time. I would like to conclude by saying that there have been enough studies done by the Government. It is really time for action.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 4.45 o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 62(5), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the main motion. The question is on the main motion. Mrs. Collins, seconded by Mr. Girard, moved:

That the following Address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, a Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Address be engrossed and presented to Her Excellency the Governor General by Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 4.47 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 27, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

POINT OF ORDER

APOLOGY FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to apologize to the House for any offence that remarks attributed to me in the press last week may have caused. I regret that what I said may have left the impression that I and some of my colleagues do not support the role of Canadian women in today's society. Such is not the case.

I made a personal apology to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), whose work on behalf of the women of Canada is well known. I fully support their efforts and those of the Minister responsible for the status of women. They are all working diligently to establish true equality for women in our society. As one who has a daughter deeply involved in her own professional career, I can assure the House that I fully support the goal of improving opportunities for women in Canada.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 82—TRADE POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for confusion, lack of direction, and secrecy in its trade policy, and specifically, condemns:

1. the misguided efforts of the Minister for International Trade to present a unilateral proposal to the United States which undercut the Canadian position before the Commerce Department's lumber countervail decision;

2. the weak and contradictory response of the same Minister to that lumber decision, by which she has neglected firm Canadian action and possibilities and used mere rhetoric and legal appeals within the very U.S. system of countervail she criticizes;

3. the failure of the Canadian Government to eliminate the damaging trade effects of the U.S. Farm Bill which hurts so many Canadian farmers;

4. the weakness of the Canadian Government in its response to the customs surtax and the differential U.S. tax on imported as opposed to domestic oil;

5. the way in which this Government's free trade talks with the U.S. have made Canada a target of U.S. countervail and congressional action rather than helping this country escape such actions;

6. the lower priority given by this Government to GATT negotiations rather than to comprehensive bilateral talks with the U.S.; and

7. the failure of this Government realistically to assess the massive constitutional roadblocks in the way of a truly fair bilateral agreement between Canada and the U.S.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I must confess that this is not the first speech on the subject I have made in the last year. In fact, there have been a number of attempts to put a case against freer trade across the country, from Vancouver to Quebec, from Hamilton to Lethbridge, from Sault Ste Marie to Winnipeg and on and on. However, never have I felt more angry and ashamed of the Government than I have in the last few months as the Government has contradicted itself, surrendered before the fact, fumed with empty rhetoric, exhibited complete weakness and inaction, and has stepped up its campaign to confuse the Canadian people completely with respect to this issue.

In my speech I wish to deal with the great trade initiative and then to talk about the alternatives that we could have pursued. Finally, I will focus on the present record of incoherent incompetence that the Government has shown. In doing so I wish to assure the House and, indeed, the country, that it is not an anti-American speech that I wish to make.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Langdon: Indeed, it is not that at all. It is an anti-Conservative speech that I wish to make.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: I say that because that is the target which deserves attack, especially at this stage.

In her speeches the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has claimed that those of us who oppose free trade are not interested in economic arguments. As usual, she is wrong. She has not been listening. In fact, there is a strong and powerful economic logic against the course on which the Government is taking us.

Let us follow that logic. To begin with I would like to deal with the question of economic policy. At the heart of economic policy, in a country with unemployment rates at the levels that we have, it is crucial that the potential job implications of free trade be looked at most carefully. The Government has launched studies to do just that. For instance, it launched a study, undertaken by the University at Maryland, which was finally released for public consumption last year, which suggested that an immediate, comprehensive free trade pact with the United States would cost us 131,000 jobs. This is directly contrary to the claims of the Economic Council of Canada in its recent report.

I attended a recent committee meeting to try to get the Economic Council experts in this area to explain this difference. Frankly, they could not, except to say that they have left out various important considerations since that is part of the nature of economic modelling. If it were just a question of contradiction between two different sets of econometric studies, then one could raise one's eyebrows and say: "So what?" But what we have here is not just that. What we have here are studies that have come from the Province of Quebec, the Province of Ontario and, indeed, from the Province of Manitoba. All of them have been made available to the public, unlike the federal Government's studies. All of them have raised severe doubts about the job impacts of this great project which is before us.

Besides looking at the job question it is important to look at the basic argument which the Government made just a few months ago when it tried to sell this project to the people of Canada. It said—and members of the special joint committee looking into international relations heard it so often—that we would escape U.S. protectionism simply by entering into negotiation with the United States on free trade. It has become clear that rather than finding an escape-hatch we have become a target of U.S. action by entering into these negotiations. In case after case of countervail, in action after action in the U.S. Congress, we have seen Canada attacked. It was attacked recently through a whole host of points that are noted in our motion, including a 15 per cent duty imposed on lumber, including a differential tax on oil imports and a customs surtax.

If we talk about the economic logic of this great project, we have to see a basic economic divide which exists here in Canada. It is the difference which exists for those who say that some kind of free market continentalism is preferable to government leadership which, in countries like Japan, Sweden and Austria, has led to much better economic performance than that which we have experienced in the two years of Conservative Government. The Minister herself has admitted that the first and foremost goal of the U.S. in the negotiations is to reduce our capacity to act directly through economic activity by the Government and to provide assistance, whether it be for farmers, regions or people, which the United States interprets as being subsidized by what is taking place.

Fourth, we have to stand back and look at what is actually happening within North America. We have to see that the drift in this continent is very much to the southern part of the United States and the West Coast. It is a drift which is moving in that direction because of lower wages, better weather and economic advantages caused by union legislation which is freer in terms of employer rights than that which exists in Canada.

Just as has happened with the United Kingdom when it entered the European Economic Community, what is bound to happen if we enter into a free trade arrangement with the United States is that we too will become an exploited margin within this continentalist drift. That will leave us in a position just like that of the north of England, of Scotland and of Wales. We will be a part of the world which is very much in decline rather than able to move ahead with drive, dynamism and excitement.

Fifth, we have to look at the economics of bargaining itself and we have to ask about the quid pro quo. Assuming we did get a free trade arrangement with the United States, what would we have to give up in order to get that arrangement? Anyone who has looked carefully at the economics of bargaining with the United States and who has followed these trade negotiations knows that the potential sacrifices are immense. There are potential sacrifices in our entire regional development program package, in our agricultural policies, in the safeguards in the Auto Pact and indeed in our social programs and in many of the safeguards which protect a certain cultural integrity in Canada. Those are the things we stand to lose in the economics of the bargaining that is now occurring.

The economic logic which stands against a free trade thrust is powerful, clear, and to many people in Canada, compelling. Perhaps it is not compelling to the Minister and the Government but I think to many in Canada it is ultimately far more persuasive than the economic logic which the Government is attempting to pursue.

We have to face the fact, however, that if we are not to follow the free trade course, there must be an alternative. The alternative is one that we have often tried to outline. It is an alternative which demands first that we withdraw from comprehensive talks, talks which themselves have ignored the various disputes which are so crippling to our economy. For instance, the lumber dispute has not even reached the table despite its seriousness to our economy. It has not been discussed as a point at issue at the free trade talks despite its importance.

If we had pulled out of these grand talks and instead concentrated on the bilateral disputes that divide us, we would have made so much more progress and we would now not be facing the threats that face us from every direction, threats facing steel, lumber and fish, commodities that affect every part of Canada. If we had taken the route which those of us on the joint committee from our Party recommended, which is to talk about the disputes themselves and to try to work those disputes through, we would be so much further ahead.

We could as well benefit from an advisory dispute settlement mechanism. This would help us at least to keep statistics on which we are all agreed. Perhaps it would help us through conciliation to come up with solutions to some of the disputes we face with the United States.

In addition to that, there are sectors like the automobile sector for which arrangements with the United States could be developed, arrangements that give us safeguards, that protect employment and that protect the chances for small business. I am thinking, for instance, of chemicals, computer and mining machinery for which potential sectoral arrangements could have been explored. However, that chance too has been lost by this comprehensive reach for the sky of which the Minister has been a part.

We believe that we must take seriously and implement Canadian-content legislation. This legislation has shown in the case of the Auto Pact to be powerful in getting jobs, safeguards and opportunities for our workers and producers. For instance, the potential is very much there for Canadian content legislation in the aircraft industry and agricultural machinery sectors, if that had been the goal instead of this great, misguided dream. By this point, we should have implemented the recommendations of the special joint committee with respect to providing assistance to small and medium sized businesses to try to improve their export performance. As well, we need to give restructuring help to enterprises and workers to assist in the transition process which changes in trade policy inevitably bring about. Finally, we would have taken the GATT round which started in this past month as the heart of our approach. That would have permitted us to deal with the United States, not as a country one-tenth the size of the United States, but instead as a country forming partnerships with others in an attempt to have the United States back off on its aggressive use of countervail legislation, and its attempt to take the notion of subsidy and expand it so far that it threatens completely the sovereignty of this country.

• (1130)

There is very much another direction. At the heart of that new direction there has to be a competence and a coherence which Government policy to this stage has missed completely. To use the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) jargon, the Minister has: "Indeed picked up the ball and scored a touchdown for the opposition team".

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: You don't even know the field yet.

Mr. Langdon: Look at the record. She has first undercut our own position with respect to the lumber countervail before that decision was even announced, by running the white flag of surrender up and saying that we would be prepared to recognize that our stumpage fees were indeed too high.

Mr. Speaker: I rise to remind the Hon. Member that his time has nearly expired and perhaps he could judge the remainder of his remarks accordingly.

Mr. Langdon: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have to talk about the weakness which has persisted in the responses to that decision itself. We have to focus on the continuing incapacity of this Government to put its act together and shape out a direction for the future and give this country a sense of hope. Instead, we have a Government that has said that the only hope is abdication and joining with the United States in a free trade pact. We say the opposite: It is time to take a different direction. I appeal to the Minister and to the Government, and ultimately I appeal to the Canadian people, to change the direction which has been taken so far and give us a sense of hope which this country so badly needs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brisco: I am disturbed by what I have just heard in the context of—

An Hon. Member: Or didn't hear.

Mr. Brisco: Or didn't hear, that is right—in the context of a number of areas, and I would like to touch on a couple of those. First, I would like to reflect back to the last time the countervail issue seized the House of Commons. That was in the period 1982 to 1983. While it may not be engraved in stone or found in the records, in terms of the unanimity of the House to fight that issue, pull together, and see this problem resolved to Canada's satisfaction, that circumstance clearly has not prevailed this time around.

Mr. Riis: Thanks to Mr. Vander Zalm.

Mr. Brisco: Members of the NDP have broken ranks repeatedly right at the outset. All they have to do is to read the record of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and they will see the evidence clearly there in Hansard of attempts to undermine the efforts of the Government and of the industry of Canada.

Mr. Murphy: You guys threw in the towel.

Mr. Brisco: Then we have the Liberal initiative when we were debating the tariff on shakes and shingles. That was an amusing debate triggered by the Opposition. We found that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) refused to answer what his position was on the export of cedar logs to the United States. He said that it was a debate for another time. Then we had another member of the Official Opposition who said that of course they do not support the export of logs. They would not condone that kind of action: Ship jobs to the United States? The debate concluded, in terms of speakers from the Opposition, with an Hon. Member saying that he fully supported and endorsed the shipment of cedar logs to the Unites States in spite of all the efforts of the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) to dissuade him from taking that political route, that statement of farce, but he made it and stuck by it.

What is most germane to this issue today is, what are the alternatives? We have heard a litany that I would not want to repeat anywhere else for fear of embarrassment—an embarrassment of riches in my case and an embarrassment of desperation in theirs—and yet they have not put forward one valid proposal in terms of an alternative. Why do they not lay out their position on this entire issue? Tell us what they would have done. Tell us what Jack Munro would have done.

Mr. Riis: We are trying to figure out what you would do.

Mr. Brisco: Clearly, they do not know. I think it is time they got down to the business of the House and offered credible alternatives, instead of sitting back there and whining and complaining, which is the tradition of their Party in any event.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Belsher: I have listened to the debate of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) this morning and talk about confusion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should have permitted the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor to reply to the last intervention. I do so now. I know that the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) will agree with that ruling.

Mr. Langdon: I want to suggest first that the Hon. Member has clearly not listened this morning. At least a third of my speech was an attempt to set out whole sets of alternative policy directions. Many of them were recommended by the special joint committee which took testimony across the country in the summer of 1985. If they had been taken, that would have put us in a position far superior to the vulnerable and very difficult position in which we find ourselves at the moment.

Mr. Kempling: You are a dreamer.

Mr. Langdon: Somebody says I am a dreamer. I think that is only possible to say when you recognize the nightmare into which this Government's policy has taken us.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: The clear point that I want to respond to is the suggestion that there should be some clear unanimity with respect to countervail. There was complete unanimity of support throughout the House with regard to the countervail action until the day the Minister for International Trade stood and waved the white flag of surrender. At that time she said that we would not defend any longer the principle we had defended through three cases, that our stumpage fees were our business, that they were not too high, and that they were the business of the provinces to set as they wished. When she took that position, she, not us, destroyed the sense of unanimity or the sense of complete co-operation which existed throughout the House in respect of the countervail fight. That is certainly true as far as the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is concerned. I will not speak for members of the Official Opposition. They can speak for themselves; I am sure they will. I do not want to suggest that they are absent from confusion. My first point is that there is an alternative, and my second point is that there was complete unanimity until the Minister destroyed it.

• (1140)

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, in listening to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) it has been clearly demonstrated that members of the NDP do not know what they are talking about. Talk about confusion! Along with their counterparts in the Official Opposition, they talk about free trade when we talk about an enhanced trade agreement. Let us talk about what we are trying to do instead of confusing the people of Canada.

The Hon. Member and his Party represent labour unions and talk about how they want everything out in the open. Does he really think that we can negotiate in the newspapers and on the streets in the open? Is that the way he thinks collective agreements should be arranged in the future? Is this what he is advocating?

We have seen opposition Members take different sides. In fact, they have taken both sides. One day they say that we should keep up the trade talks and not let up. The next time they say that they should be stopped. When it comes to the lumber issue in British Columbia and in other parts of the country, the Government is showing leadership. It is speaking on behalf of each province and on behalf of the industry. The provinces and the industry are welcoming the leadership which the Minister has shown to the people of Canada.

Why do they not stop their rhetoric and get on with offering help and support for the clear direction of the Minister?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, if a clear direction could be discerned in the salamander-like wanderings which have characterized the Minister up to now in respect of her policy directions on these issues, it might be possible either to say yes or no. In fact the position has veered from left to right, from empty rhetoric fuming at the United States, to positions which have defended the course wherein she says that the only way to deal with the lumber issue is in fact to deal with it in United States courts and in the United States system. It has been a contradictory, confusing, and quite frankly bewildering performance on the part of the Minister. That is absolutely the case.

Regarding the specific questions raised by the Hon. Member, there is no suggestion that collective agreements or bargaining should take place out in the open. In the United States, as the Hon. Member should know very well, it has been possible to talk publicly with the negotiator who is carrying forward with the negotiations. It is also possible to get into the open what is the mandate of that negotiator. That has not taken place here. Instead, the public has been kept in complete darkness about the whole strategy or approach which the Government attempts to have Simon Reisman follow. That secrecy is damaging, not just to the country but to the Government's own attempts at achieving some kind of solution. In respect of the Hon. Member's last point about our demonstrating confusion over the trade talks, we have said consistently from the start that we should not be part of those talks—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the Hon. Member that the allotted time has expired. There are other Hon. Members seeking the floor. If it were the unanimous wish of the Chamber to allow one more question, I would do so.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member who is a spokesman for the New Democratic Party clearly set out that Party's view? We must bear in mind that the Tokyo Round of tariff negotiations will be completed next year with a reduction of our tariffs to the lowest level ever and indeed the reduction of the tariffs of the rest of the world to the lowest levels ever. Also we must recognize that non-tariff barriers are now the principal problem between states in terms of trading.

Does the Hon. Member believe that we should abandon all negotiations with our largest trading partner now if those negotiations involve tariff and non-tariff barriers? Does he believe that we should let things stay without negotiation or that we should negotiate a reduction of non-tariff barriers, a removal of those barriers, and a reduction of tariffs at the same time?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. My speech dealt with the broad alternatives we would have followed. In respect of the specific point raised by the Hon. Member, of course non-tariff barriers have to be dealt with. However, there are two choices in how one deals with them. One can deal with them on a bilateral basis from a position of weakness, in which one may be badly outbargained simply by the power and weight of the partner with which one is dealing. I think that is the course the Government has taken. The other alternative would be for one to deal with them through the next round of trade talks, which has already started, involving countries throughout the world. Those talks—and I speak from having seen their start in Uruguay last month—seem to have the likelihood of bringing to our country a fairer, clearer, and better bargain with the United States than we would be likely to get through bilateral negotiations.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity once again to outline our trade policy in the House, since this is a great issue that affects many Canadians. Having listened to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), I think I can sum up his speech in three words: negative, negative, and negative.

He has shown once again that the New Democratic Party is out of touch and out of date. There is nothing constructive in his speech. There is nothing that shows that trade employs one out of every three Canadians. There is nothing that shows that our trade policy must be aimed at securing and enhancing jobs for Canadians. There is nothing that recognizes that Canadians must compete, they do compete, and they want to compete. Confusion is the game plan of the NDP.

I have stated in the House our Government's record in international trade initiatives. It is the opposition Members who must defend the positions they have taken. I need only repeat our clear policy directions and our clear accomplishments.

Let me begin by explaining the background of this Government's approach to trade policy. Our approach realizes the global changes that are taking place in the world today, such as changes in technologies, the changing players in the world economy, and the unsatisfactory state of rules that govern international trade today.

The program outlined today shows that the Opposition is still living in the stone age. The Opposition is not in the 1980s, nor is it aware that changes are taking place in the world. These are changes that challenge Canadians. The New Democratic Party wants to scare Canadians, but Canadians are confident of their ability to live and work in the world of change in which we find ourselves.

We on the government side of the House understand that trade, investment and technology have created an interdependent world. Countries rely on each other as never before as lenders, as borrowers, as buyers and sellers. However, nations and businesses situated within them also compete as never before. Since global competition is increasing, Canadian business must respond to the challenge and Canada's trade policy must foster our ability to meet that challenge. This is particularly true because we have a small domestic market and Canada needs foreign markets to sell our goods. Our trade policy must always reflect that fact. This is something the New Democratic Party never recognizes.

The Hon. Member talks about the GATT. He failed to recognize that we have initiated a two-track trade policy strategy. On one track we have our bilateral negotiations with the United States, by far our most important customer, which takes more than 70 per cent of our exports. The other track that is equally important in our policy is the Uruguay Round of trade negotiations under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Let me discuss the Uruguay Round first. The result of Punta del Este was a ministerial declaration concluded in the early hours of the final day of the conference. It is an impressive declaration. It is far more ambitious and comprehensive than anyone would have expected, in view of the pressures that surrounded its drafting. The Uruguay Round will be one of the most far-reaching set of negotiations ever held under GATT's auspices. Key matters of importance to Canada were placed on the agenda by Canada. What did we obtain?

First, the Ministers committed their countries to a standstill and a rollback of protectionist measures and provided for better surveillance measures to strengthen the GATT. That is important today because the GATT system has been weakened.

Second, agriculture was given a high priority. Here, Canada's participation in the Cairns Group of fair agricultural traders helped to get wide-ranging language in the agriculture negotiations on the agenda because we want to bring an end to the subsidy wars. We do not cause the wars, we are victims of those subsidy wars. We cannot play "break the bank" like the United States and the European community. We are striving to put an end to that.

Third, Canada's need for more secure market access was highlighted. In this area, Canada formed a coalition with a number of other resource-producing countries and succeeded in getting the special problems of trade and natural resources and resource-based products on the agenda.

Fourth, we agreed to deal with the new issues of services, trade related investment measures, and intellectual property. These issues have not been addressed in the GATT, and services in particular are a very important part of the Canadian economy.

This is not an exhaustive list of accomplishments but they underline our strong continuing commitment to the GATT.

The Punta del Este negotiations were a great success both internationally and domestically. Internationally, they will help to stem the forces of protectionism, and to the extent that the upcoming negotiations strengthen the international trading system, they will improve Canada's trading prospects.

The negotiations were a domestic success as well. For the first time since Canada started participating in multilateral trade negotiations, about 40 years, ago a contingent of provincial ministers as well as opposition MPs was present to see the proceedings. The Canadian delegation was also accompanied by private sector representatives. This is a good illustration of the kind of consultation and collaboration that the Government is fostering.

I think all Members will agree that the multilateral approach of our two-track negotiating policy is firmly in place. I have described it before in the House.

Let me turn now to the other track, the trade negotiations with the United States. This initiative arose from the realization in many quarters of Canadian society that Canadian exports were increasingly going to one foreign market, the United States market, and that protectionist pressures were growing all over the world. What do we want to achieve in these negotiations? We want to redefine the rules that presently govern trade between our two countries. We want to secure and enhance our access to the U.S. market, and we want to lock those rules and that security of access into the form of a long-term, binding treaty.

The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor keeps saying that this is a secret deal and that we never tell anyone what we are achieving. I have said over and over again that we are achieving security of access, enhancement of our growth and a long-term binding treaty.

We want to end the kind of harassment we have faced in the United States. We want to shield important sectors, such as our forestry industry, from the forces of protectionism.

We want more certainty in our trading relationship, and a more confident environment for investors and producers in Canada. Those are our objectives and it is in our national interest to achieve them.

There are many trade actions taken by the United States with which we are unhappy. However, we on this side believe that it is wrong to walk away from the protectionist threat. Rather, we must address it in negotiations in the hope that we can provide a better framework for trade between us.

A graphic illustration of what Canadians view as trade harassment is the series of actions that led to the recent imposition of a provisional duty of 15 per cent on Canadian softwood lumber exports to offset alleged Canadian subsidies. This decision has concerned us and should concern all of the United States trading partners, because we view it as an unacceptable attempt to impose U.S. views on how other Governments should manage their natural resources. Furthermore, we feel that this preliminary ruling by the U.S. Commerce Department has no basis in U.S. law, is badly flawed, and is inconsistent with the U.S. obligations under the GATT. That is why, following the meeting I convened last week in Toronto with my provincial counterparts, industry and labour leaders, we unanimously agreed to fight this case to reverse this decision. I am pleased that our coalition has remained strong and united.

The Hon. Member keeps suggesting that we waved the white flag in seeking to make an out of court settlement. Again, I tell the House that because of the gravity of this kind of decision and its importance in U.S.-Canada relations, and because of the precedence that it sets for other industries in Canada, it was the unanimous view of the provinces who owned the resources, the industry who manages them, the workers who work in them, and the federal Government to try to seek an out of court settlement so that we could avoid the kind of legal situation we are in now.

While there have been other recent actions in the United States which concern us, and we will have to deal with these unfortunate developments, let us not forget our successes where, through diligent efforts, measures that would have had an adverse impact on Canada were successfully opposed. These successes are rarely reported and never given credit in the House by the Opposition.

Let me list just a few. We have fought off restrictions on uranium inports from Canada; restrictions on potash imports from Canada; amendments to the Department of Defence procurement policy; the Miscellaneous Tariff Bill which would have changed various tariff provisions to our disadvantage; the sugar quota reallocation amendment; and the steel import quota legislation. We have fought off the buy America and domestic content elements of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act; the buy America provisions of oil regulations; and the buy America preference on NASA procurement. We have fought off those harassments and changes to our situation and we will continue to do so, with or without the support of the Opposition.

Let me return to the trade negotiations with the U.S. Despite the tremendous growth in trade between Canada and the U.S., and profound changes in our commercial relationship, there are those today who oppose an attempt to improve our relationship. The echo of "no truck nor trade" with the Yankees is still heard and the same old arguments are being made. Our opponents are asking us to believe that freer trade with our largest partner is against our best interests. They oppose us for a variety of reasons, some because of fear of change, some because of fear of the unknown, some because of narrow self-interest, and some because they think, wrongly I believe, that they can score political points.

It is time for the Opposition to defend the inconsistent and frequently contradictory positions they have taken. We read them every day and hear them in the House every day. We have heard them once again from the NDP today. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said last June that there is nothing wrong with trying to obtain freer trade with the United States as long as Canada also works to achieve freer trade with everybody else. I have already explained that this Government is not putting all its eggs in one basket, as our role in ensuring a clean launch at Punta del Este shows. Later on, the Right Hon. Member said that the Canada-U.S. negotiations might be "contributing to the breakdown of the international trading system by encouraging a regional trading bloc in North America". Just a few days ago he said "to walk away now may unleash damaging countervail actions against us". He cannot have it both ways. Either he believes we should take advantage of every opportunity to advance Canada's trading interests, both bilaterally and multilaterally as we are doing, or he believes we should turn our backs on securing the best possible advantage on all fronts for our future prosperity.

It is no wonder that Canadians are perplexed. They understand that a whole pie is better than half a pie. They understand that a negotiated agreement with the U.S. could be accomplished in one year or 18 months, whereas the GATT negotiations will take four or five years. Canadians understand that U.S. trade laws are of general application and only through a bilateral agreement can a special new regime be established with Canada.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) apparently does not seem to agree with his own Leader. He wants Canada to walk away from the U.S. talks in a fit of spite. He seems to be pushing an alternative to the trade talks by advocating something called an industrial strategy. I wish to point out that this whole notion of an industrial strategy, that you can deal with trade between the two countries by sectors, was advanced by his party when it was in government and it was rejected by both Canada and the U.S. He has recycled the same old thing and brought it forward again.

I will not dwell on the history of that Member's Party with respect to co-operation. Our trade policy is based on co-operation with all the parties involved. I will not remind this House of the Liberal Party's raised fingers to the West, the imposed disaster called the National Energy Program, and of sentiments like "why should I sell your wheat?". I will simply point out that national reconciliation has been one of the foundations of the Prime Minister's Government, and the co-operation we have fostered through the softwood lumber dispute is an excellent illustration of that fact.

Let me now turn to the NDP whose motion is before the House. The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) would have us walk away from the table as if that would accomplish anything. Well, it is a big, cruel world out there and petulance does not count for much. It would be easy to walk away from the negotiations, but that would not protect Canadian workers' jobs. It would not secure future growth and prosperity. It would not enhance our world community and our standing in it. We will not take the easy course and run away. Canadians understand that, even if the Hon. Member does not.

Yet even here the NDP is not clear. On the one hand NDP Members call for the talks to be called off. On the other hand, we had the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor calling for them to be suspended, and then presumably resumed. Not only is there confusion in the public mind over whether the NDP wants the talks called off or pursued, there is confusion as to why the NDP is not whole-heartedly supporting negotiations which will secure and enhance job opportunities for Canadians.

Every major Canadian economic analysis, including last week's report of the Economic Council of Canada, has shown that a trade agreement will produce jobs, thousands of jobs. Yet the NDP opposes this. May I remind you that the Economic Council, in running its scenarios and examining free trade, suggested there could be as many as 321,000 net new jobs if we pursue the free trade option? It also pointed out that if the protectionist forces succeed and we continued down the road of increased protectionism, Canada could lose more than half a million net jobs. While we are fighting to secure and enhance jobs and job opportunities, the NDP wants us to walk away. Yet it does not offer any useful alternatives. Instead of dealing with the long-term binding trade treaty that would resolve the problems between us in a permanent and lasting way, that Party wants us to deal with a laundry list of irritants between Canada and the U.S which evolve year by year in our trading relationship.

Our objective is to deal with that situation and those irritants through a long-term binding treaty that either dispenses with them or puts in place methods of settling disputes between us. To have us involved for years and years, into the 21st century, arguing about a laundry list of trade irritants is not the constructive way to deal with the problem. The constructive way is to deal with the underpinnings of our trade relationship and put in place a proper framework that will deal with them.

Unlike the two Parties opposite, the Progressive Conservative Government has great faith in the productivity, ingenuity, competitiveness and resourcefulness of Canadians. Unlike those two Parties, we do not seek to smother this country in a self-defeating, protective, government-imposed cocoon which tries to insulate us from the world. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said that if it is a bad deal, there will be no deal. We have the courage and confidence to try. We believe in Canada, and in doing so we are working together with our partners, the provinces, industry and labour, to ensure that future generations can look back with pride at the initiatives the Conservative Government is undertaking today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest when the Minister indicated the number of jobs that free trade could create in Canada. However, I recall that she was the Minister who stood in her place many, many times and promised 200,000 jobs as a result of the Western Accord. That would come as rather surprising news to people in Alberta today. Perhaps when she talks about the jobs being created here, we have to take it with a grain of salt.

My question is twofold. The U.S. Senate saw fit to provide open public hearings so people could ask questions about the implications of the talks taking place. Why do we not do something similar to that in Canada at this critical point?

In addition, would the Minister suggest how I should respond to my constituents when they ask me the following two questions. Free trade exists in lumber and shakes and shingles, yet in Canada today, particularly in British Columbia, we have been hard hit in those two areas. If we are successful in our free trade talks, does that mean the countervailing duty threat will remain in place and in effect nothing will change? How would she suggest I respond to my constituents when they ask me what the implication of these talks will be to the Okanagan fruit industry and our fledgling breweries and wineries in British Columbia? What will this mean with regard to live cattle trade with the United States? As a parliamentarian I feel a little embarrassed when those serious and legitimate questions are put to me. I feel sad that I am unable to respond specifically with regard to the likely outcome of these negotiations in critical areas. Perhaps the Minister can enlighten me and my constituents at the same time.

• (1210)

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, in discussing the need to consult, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) ignores the fact that we have a very impressive consultative process in place. I remind him that a royal commission on our economic future spent two years listening to Canadians on this subject and reported in favour of this initiative. He ignores the fact that the parliamentary committee headed by the present Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) travelled the country with MPs from the opposition Parties to hear comments on these areas.

Mr. Axworthy: And we recommended against what you are doing.

Mr. Riis: Do you follow their advice?

Miss Carney: The Member failed to point out that there are approximately 300 Canadians from every industrial and cultural sector which could be affected who are part of our consultative process. There are 15 of these groups which meet regularly to review our progress on the free trade initiative. ITAC is our major industrial consulting group which represents the major companies in Canada. We meet regularly with ITAC for advice in these areas.

We are getting an unprecedented inflow of ideas, comments and suggestions in this area. At the appropriate time these negotiations will be ratified in the House. The Member will have lots of opportunities to examine them.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, sometimes it is terribly frustrating to sit on the left of the NDP as I do in this section of the House. The converse is that they are on the right of me.

The Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) indicated that a new trade deal with the U.S. might result in 150,000 lost jobs. After our Economic Statement in 1984 his Leader said that there would be tens of thousands of jobs lost. As we all know, quite the contrary was true.

Mr. Riis: Visit Alberta.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Does the Minister agree with the Member for Essex—Windsor that a new trade deal with the U.S. will actually result in a net loss of jobs for Canadians?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the comment made by the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). When we dismantled the National Energy Program, the industry in Alberta had its best year ever in terms of new jobs and new investment.

Mr. Riis: I was talking about 1986.

Miss Carney: When international oil prices resume their upward path, as they will, those people will be free of the red tape and strangling regulations which drained them of the cash flow they needed to survive downward cycles in commodity prices.

With regard to the question of the Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner], I do not agree with the NDP argument that free trade will lead to job loss. What is equally important, the Economic Council and other major Canadian economic groups do not agree. The numbers show that freer trade in the past has always led to new and more secure jobs. That is what the economists are telling us now. The NDP is quoting American studies to suggest that there will be job loss.

There is job loss every year in a changing society. Every year Canadians change jobs. As a matter of fact, the Economic Council says that every year nearly 3 million Canadians change jobs. We now have an opportunity to see where those job changes will take place, plan ahead and ensure that Canadians are upgraded, trained and ready to take on those new jobs in order to move into the 21st century.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister wrote to the U.S. trade representative, Clayton Yeutter, asking the U.S. administration not to approve the import surtax. Shortly thereafter the President approved that Bill. Does that reflect on the ineffectiveness of the Minister in Washington or on the ineffectiveness or insensitivity of Mr. Yeutter? Is that to be attributed to the postal service in the U.S., or is it perhaps a demonstration of the great regard in which President Reagan holds the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney)?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States certainly holds the present Prime Minister of Canada in higher regard than he did the previous one who represented that Party.

Mr. Marchi: You can't buy respect.

Mr. Axworthy: Steel, softwood lumber, shakes and shingles and the fishery.

Miss Carney: I indicated previously that we opposed the oil import restriction which applies to all countries rather than only to Canada. It is a waste management program, and I am surprised that a former Minister of the Environment would speak against an American program aimed at dealing with nuclear waste and all sorts of environmental problems which are to be funded through that Bill. We are opposed to it being applied to our exports to the U.S. We lost that. However, I have today listed all of the areas affecting MPs on both sides of the House in which we successfully fought against such restrictions. We should get support from the opposition Parties for those efforts.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, the Minister listed several areas in which we successfully fought such arrangements. I would like to add two more which are very important to Guelph. They are our successful fight against forklift tariffs and our even more successful fight against iron casting tariffs which would have affected most ridings of the country. The Minister and her Department should be congratulated for the way in which they handled both of those issues.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member. I will take this opportunity to congratulate all our officials and negotiators who worked so hard in these complex areas. They are seeking a long-term binding agreement to deal with these issues.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would sum up the Minister's speech as "clichés, clichés, clichés".

Mr. Axworthy: Touché, touché, touché.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: I would like to ask the Minister two questions. In view of the success reported by the Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard), why does the Minister feel it does not make sense to concentrate on the areas of dispute and attempt to work out a response to them as the New Democratic Party and the committee to which she referred, headed by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), have argued? Why does it not make sense to make that our first priority at a time when the United States itself is facing a tremendous protectionist surge throughout the country?

• (1220)

Second, why is it considered petulant to take the position that this country deserves to keep its freedom to make policy, which it could lose very, very quickly in a free-trade arrangement, and we should, therefore, walk away from comprehensive free-trade talks in favour of this attempt to deal with the disputes themselves?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, let me answer the first question offered by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor, and that is what I call his "laundry list" of trade irritants. He asks why we do not sit down and talk about potash or uranium or steel. We do that all the time. We have consultative committees, as Hon. Members on this side of the House know, meeting all the time on steel. That does not resolve the problem. That attracts disputes.

The Hon. Member asks the question. Surely he would give me the courtesy of answering. We feel that that approach of dealing with irritants under the U.S. trade laws attracts disputes because any industry under the U.S. law can file a countervail or launch a trade action. We feel that that is dealing with the symptom. We want to deal with the whole area and the cause of trade law remedies through a comprehensive trade agreement.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, to begin on Monday morning to make comment and criticism of the policy of the Government on trade is a little bit like doing a Monday morning post-mortem on a football game played by the Ottawa Rough Riders.

Mr. Gauthier: Hey, careful.

Mr. Axworthy: What one is talking about is no offence, poor defence, lousy coach and no crowd.

Mr. McDermid: Oh? Look behind you, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: Perhaps the worst weakness we would have to analyse is when the ball was handed to the new full back and she somehow decided that the most advantageous form of offence was retreat. She will now go down in history in the game of trade football as "Wrong-way Carney".

The Minister raises a question of confidence. I think that is the right and proper question to raise, confidence in the Government's ability to design effectively a trade strategy and then to carry it out. We have no lack of confidence in the Canadian people and their abilities. We have seen over the years their willingness to respond to the challenges of change in the global environment. We also know they have done that by way of partnership. There has been a full and coherent arrangement of co-operation between Government, industry and labour in achieving that. However, the starting point of this Government is a total lack of willingness to co-operate with the key elements of our industrial sectors to meet new industrial challenges. One can ask the farmers in western Canada who have lost markets by the tens of thousands of tons of produce in the last two years if they have confidence in the Government's ability to deal with them. The scientific and research communities know they are the ones who will have to provide the innovation, the new development and new products, and they see their budgets being slashed, their scientists being fired and the lay-offs. One can ask them if they have confidence that they can go forward and create the kinds of conditions which will enable Canada to compete. Does the scientific community have confidence that it has a Government which is prepared to defend its interests and promote its ability to move ahead?

The Minister told us to look at all the trade cases we won. In the last two years the Government has been in power, close to $5 billion worth of Canadian products have been put under countervail or anti-dumping or anti-trade actions. That is more than in the previous 10 years. This is the Government which was going to change the climate. The people who have the least confidence in the Government are the people in the United States of America. I believe they laugh at the Government. They have no respect nor admiration for it, and they know they can at will get away with what they want to impose upon the Canadian people. That is the end result of the trade strategy by the Government which said its strategy was going to be the centre-piece of its economic program. The Government makes Napoleon's march back from Russia look like a victory by comparison because all we have had is one step backwards after another.

We have the record to which the Minister points as a sign of accomplishment. When the cedar shakes and shingles issue arose, what is the first thing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did? He asked for compensation. The Americans said: "No compensation". The Minister of Finance said: "Okay. I will then go to retaliation". Then, in a brilliant move, he hits teabags, Christmas trees and books. That was a brilliant trade strategy. It really hurt the Americans when we put tariffs on our books so that when they go into a bookstore it costs an extra $3 or $4 to read a book. That is the sign of a brilliant trade strategy at work.

The Minister said to the House again today that when she plea-bargained in front of the Americans on the softwood lumber issue: "I was doing it because they wanted me to do it". The question we ask is, where is the leadership of the federal Government? It is supposed to be responsible for the entire coherent trade policy. Surely the Minister should have known and understood that what was at stake in the softwood lumber issue was a fundamental principle. We were being challenged by the United States. It was going to fix our resource prices. As soon as the Minister conceded and said: "All right, Your Honour, I think I am innocent but I am prepared to take 10 years", she gets slapped with 15 years. How does she expect anyone in this country, in the American administration or in the international trade body to treat this Government with the kind of respect and confidence which is required in order to have an effective trade strategy? Of course, all this is about confidence. This debate is about a total lack of confidence that the Government either knows where it is going or how it is going to get there.

I could go through the sort of ups and downs of trade policy we have witnessed over the past two years. The Government has been busier than a toilet seat going up and down. It just does not have any idea of where it is going or how it is going to get there.

I am glad to see the Minister once again is not prepared to engage in full democratic dialogue. That is again a proper sign of how serious the Government treats this issue. It says: "Let's have a dialogue", until the dialogue starts happening and the truth starts coming out, then once more we have a retreat.

Mr. McDermid: Where is the retreat? I can handle you, Axworthy.

Mr. Axworthy: Let us examine the question put forward at the base of the talks. At the Quebec Summit and later in the television speech Mr. Mulroney gave to the nation on trade—

Mr. McDermid: The Prime Minister to you.

Mr. Axworthy: The Prime Minister. I keep forgetting, Mr. Speaker, as do most other Canadians. The fact is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) introduced what I think has to be the basic principle around which this debate is taking place. He did not shilly-shally as do many government Members in talking about enhanced trade and so on. He came out full square. He said we are after a comprehensive trade agreement based upon the principle of national treatment. I will give him credit for that. At least he was prepared to say we were going for a comprehensive trade agreement. He also clearly underlined that the objective would be the achievement of "national treatment". That is a little bit of a jargon word in trade language which means there can be no special program, policy, advantage or preference given to a Canadian manufacturer, region or business which is not available to an American, and vice versa. He said that it was a level playing field, and that underlies the entire negotiations. No one should make light of how important a principle that is. What it means is that no Canadian Government, federal, provincial or municipal, can provide any policy, any initiative, which would give an incentive to a Canadian firm or organization which it did not also make available to an American firm or organization.

• (1230)

I would like to give Hon. Members an example of what that means. It was clearly outlined in the report handed down by the U.S. Commerce Department on softwood lumber. If one reads the entire report one will see that not just stumpage fees are being challenged. What is being challenged? Economic regional development programs which we pioneered and which provide economic development assistance are being challenged. That already forms part of the decision of the U.S. Commerce Department based upon the principle of national treatment. If the wish is to sign an agreement to aid the forestry industry in British Columbia through an ERDA, then that will now be considered an unfair trade practice. If Quebec wants to sign what is called a general agreement on science and technology, then it will now be considered to be against national treatment. The point of the matter is the incredible cost that will ensue from accepting an agreement on trade using the principle of national treatment in a total and complete elimination or reduction of a wide variety of initiatives that we have used over the years to provide for the equal and fair distribution of goods and benefits.

In this regard I would like to give Hon. Members an example that is, perhaps, horrific and which demonstrates most graphically why the present negotiations run against the job interests, the employment interests and the growth interests of Canada. This summer a proposal was put forward by a group of federal and provincial civil servants which was designed to achieve two major accomplishments. The first was with respect to finding a way in which the Province of Ontario could reduce its acid rain emissions by 50 per cent, which the province must do by 1991. The task force said the province has but two choices. It can either introduce very expensive scrubbing equipment into the Ontario Hydro smoke-stacks or bring in western low-sulphur coal from Alberta and British Columbia. The second option has incredible economic benefits. It would create 200,000 jobs and an additional net capital of $4 billion as opposed to the continued importation of U.S. coal from the Midwest and the necessity to build in expensive scrubbers.

The only policy change which would be required to implement this option would be to write down freight rates. That is a very traditional Canadian way of dealing with the fact that we have big geography. We have special maritime freight rates. We have special freight rates for moving grain to export markets. We recognize that in order to ensure the proper and equal distribution of goods we have to have a freight arrangement which will allow us to move our goods at a competitive level. In this regard I have done some quick calculating. In order to bring in western coal it would cost about $14 a ton. Over a five-year period the amount of money involved would be $300 million, which is half of what we pay to move western grain. Some $300 million over five years to obtain $4 billion of new capital investment and 200,000 jobs, especially in the depressed regions of British Columbia and Alberta, is not a bad deal. However, the Government cannot carry this out. It says that it has study committees but it cannot do it. It is impossible to carry out because the solution of underwriting freight rates runs absolutely counter to the principle of national treatment. It runs totally counter to providing a special transportation incentive to western Canadian coal producers which is now provided to midwestern coal producers. And the Americans would have a legitimate right to complain. They would say that we are negotiating free trade and taking away their coal markets by giving a writedown in freight rates to western coal producers.

The Government talks about jobs. We are simply throwing 200,000 jobs out of the window because of these negotiations. When Members and Ministers opposite get up and wave their brave documents saying that they will create more jobs I must say to them: "How about those 200,000 jobs in western Canada that you have just blown down the drain? How about the $4 billion of capital investment that you are throwing away because of these negotiations?" I ask Members opposite to answer these questions. I ask them to tell me how we can bring in a new underwriting of the freight rate to move western coal east for Ontario Hydro and still honour the principle of national treatment that the Prime Minister has put at the centre of his free trade discussions with the United States. I ask Hon. Members to answer that question for the 75,000 workers in Alberta who are unemployed. Tell those people that this free trade deal is a good deal for them. The Government is knocking out of the box one of the most important national initiatives that we can undertake, which is what the country is buying. It is buying a total and complete restriction of action. It is buying the fact that it can no longer at the federal or provincial level take initiatives to respond to economic disparities. These are the types of problems which we face.

Let us now consider the other issues. The Minister has said many times, as have other members of the Government, that the reason we are negotiating is so that we can stop the harassment from the United States on a number of trade issues. However, in the letter which President Reagan wrote to Senator Packwood he said: "We will not change our trade legislation". Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, said: "We are not negotiating countervail powers". When the United States signed a free trade agreement with Israel any reference to a limitation on countervail powers was explicitly eliminated. The Government is spending its time in Fantasy Garden. Members of the Government have spent too much time with Bill Vander Zalm in his Fantasy Garden. There is no such thing as a limitation on countervail powers. Of course they will continue. The only measure that really limits the application of countervail is the international trade rules. It is the international trade rules which place the discipline on what countries can use and what they can complain about as being unfair trade subsidies.

The Government is engaging in the big lie. It is saying to the Canadian people: "You allow us to do the negotiations, we will not have softwood lumber cases". Says who? The Americans say that that is not on the table. Ministers say that they will not give away our countervail powers. They say that we will now have a dispute settlement mechanism, something like a trade forum of IJC, except that we all know the way the IJC works. It has no mandatory requirements. It is a body of recommendation. No one is opposed to that, but will it end these harassments? No. The way to stop harassment is to strengthen the GATT, strengthen the international trading system and ensure that discipline is applied, not just because of leverage between the United States and ourselves but because of leverage within the entire international community against the United States. That is the way it works.

I then go to the next point raised by the Minister who says that we have no argument, we have a two-track strategy. To paraphrase Robert Frost, those two-tracks are diverging in the woods. They are not parallel. They are going off in separate directions. When tracks go off in separate directions pretty soon the train will run off the rails. That is exactly what is happening right now. It is not possible to undertake a two-track strategy. I am reminded of the U.S. two-track strategy of arms control in Europe. On the one hand the Americans said that they would negotiate and on the other they said they would bring in Pershing missiles. We know what happened. We got the Pershing missiles but not the negotiations. This is the same problem we face here.

Simon Reisman, the chief trade negotiator, says that GATT does not work. He says it takes too long, it is too complicated and too awkward. The former Minister for International Trade, the present Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), says that we cannot rely on GATT. He says that it does not work, that it takes too long and that it is too awkward. We know what the two-track strategy is. On one track we have a full-blown locomotive pouring down with all its energy trying to get a bilateral agreement signed. On the other track we have a group of people tiptoeing about in their ballet slippers saying that perhaps we can get an agreement signed in the future.

When we attended the negotations in Uruguay we spoke to people in the GATT Secretariat. We spoke to representatives from the Pacific Rim nations and to delegates from Latin America. They all said without any equivocation that if Canada signs a deal that is discriminatory against them—and how can a free trade deal not discriminate against other nations?—if we sign that deal then they will form their own regional blocs. They will make their own regional arrangements and we will be right back where we were in the 1930s with internecine guerrilla warfare going on between regional blocs of nations. Of course, GATT says that one can sign a regional agreement. However, just because it is legally right does not make it economically or politically right. When these countries see Canada heading for cover, scurrying inside a North American arrangement, that sends the message out to all other countries that the Canadians are giving up on GATT. We had better find some security blanket as well.

• (1240)

The fact of the matter is that we must provide a leadership role for international trading nations. Country after country has asked where Canada is providing leadership. The Minister said we are providing leadership in agriculture. That is not so. Leadership was provided by the Australians and Argentinians. We spent much time in Uruguay not fighting for the interests of Third World nations, not trying to provide a counterbalance to the bullying tactics of Americans but trying to get Third World nations to go along with us.

A nation cannot provide a second track if it is seen as being nothing but a sycophant of one of the largest trading partners. It must be independent. We are not being seen as being independent but are seen as trying to cut the quickest and best deal for ourselves while abandoning the national trading system.

The reason we have raised these criticisms is that we want to show that there is a major change taking place in the global trading strategy. There are major new challenges to Canada, but we want Canada to respond in a global way, as a world trader, and not to run for cover or to cut a deal that will work against the interests of Canadian workers and the country's ability to develop a fully competitive, productive international trading strategy. That is what we want Canadians to provide.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has risen in the House today along with his coalition partners in the NDP to preach fear, negativism and pessimism and to try to scare Canadians. If this country had been run by men and women like those who represent the Liberal Party and the NDP today, we would still be sitting on the edge of the St. Lawrence River. We would never have built a railway across Canada.

I find it very surprising that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry would try to defend British Columbia and Alberta when he sold them down the river with the national energy policy. He was one of the designers of that program. It is a shame.

The Hon. Member spoke of the shake and shingle industry. Eight-five per cent of that industry is in my riding. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) did not know what their positions on logs, bolts and blanks should be. Jobs would have been destroyed had we not put the exportation limitations on cedar at that time. The Hon. Member is now saying that we did nothing.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) showed leadership on the shake and shingle issue, but members of the Opposition said that he over-reacted. When I asked that restrictions be put on the exportation of cedar logs, bolts and blanks, they were put on immediately. That was the leadership our Government showed. It preserved the jobs in the shake and shingle industry. Certainly we lost a few but we preserved most of the jobs and today the Americans want to remove the tariff.

The Macdonald Commission, the BCNI, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Chamber of Commerce have advocated proceeding with a free trade deal. Mr. McGuinness, the new President of the Chamber of Commerce, said that we have no choice, we must proceed. He said that those who choose not to proceed with free trade will be walking with the turkeys while those who choose to proceed will be soaring with the eagles. I would like to know the Hon. Member's reaction to the position taken by these major organizations along with Jack Munro of the IWA. He said that we must proceed with free trade negotiations immediately.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, let us talk about which Party was responsible for opening up Canada's trade opportunities to the world. Who was in government and provided the architecture for establishing the GATT system back in 1948? Who introduced and built up an international trading system? Who opened up the transportation system called the St. Lawrence Seaway? Who had the guts during the last administration to change the railway system in western Canada so that we could move commodities at a lower price? Who provided the leadership and initiatives designed to make sure that we would invest in the infrastructure of Canada so we could move our products, goods and commodities? If the Hon. Member wants to know who has provided leadership, I would ask him with the greatest of respect to extend the speaking hours of the House for another 10 hours so that I could complete the list.

The fact is that the difference between our Party and yours is that we do not limit our trade horizons to the continent of North America. We see our trade as being with the world. That is where we wish to pursue our trade strategy. We want to protect the mining industry of British Columbia—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I wish Hon. Members would direct questions and comments through me.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in deference to your sensitivities, I—

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Did the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) finish his remarks? If so, I now recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid).

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's usual bombastic style. He spoke for 20 minutes this morning and made one suggestion in his entire speech. The rest was negativism, pooh-poohing and saying, "Down with what the Government is doing". The only suggestion he made was that we should work with GATT. Right now, the leader in GATT, the country that participated very actively and successfully in Uruguay, is the Canadian Government. Certainly Canada participated in co-operation with other countries. That is what GATT is all about. Members of the NDP do not understand that co-operation is what it is all about.

Was the Hon. Member speaking for himself or was he speaking for his Party? We hear one point of view from the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) who is all for trade negotiations and we hear another from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry who is against the negotiations. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) agrees with both of them. Which position did the Hon. Member enunciate today, his Party's or his own?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to know exactly what we will do about trade, I suggest that he does not have very long to wait. The next election will be in about 18 months. Then the Hon. Member will see exactly what a Liberal Government will do to promote trade. If he would cool down his impatience for a while, he will see what we are putting together.

We would be glad to tell him exactly what we are doing now, but the problem is that if we put it all on the table now, the Tories would try to steal half of it but they would bungle that half of it and we would end up worse off than ever. There is no point in giving good ideas to buffoons. They will do with those good ideas what they have done in the past. They will simply stumble over themselves going around in a revolving door.

The Hon. Member wants to know where we stand. I speak for a combined position that was derived from a series of extensive debates in caucus. A paper outlining the position we have taken and will continue to take has been issued. I would be glad to send a copy of it to the Hon. Member at any time.

Mr. McDermid: Send it over.

Mr. Axworthy: I would be more than pleased to do so. I would be happy to send the Hon. Member the entire portfolio of statements that were made while building up a series of trade strategies.

What I would like to point out is very important. The Government itself failed at the outset to follow the recommendations that were put forward by the joint committee, a committee of all Members of Parliament. Part of the problem is that the Government failed to deal with the major trade irritants. It also failed to provide a proper debate in the House of Commons. Such a debate should have outlined exactly where the Government wants to go and how it would get there. It is no wonder that there is confusion.

• (1250)

There could be nothing more important for this Government to do than to provide the House of Commons with the opportunity to examine fully what this trade strategy could be. The Hon. Member was the Parliamentary Secretary last year and he recalls, when the papers were released, that they were supposed to outline the research, the various strategies and the position adopted by the Government. When we got them back, it was as if the John Crosbie pornography Bill had already been applied to them. There was more left out than there was left in. It was like a colouring book. You had to supply your own pencils to fill in the blanks it was so empty. What we can assert, and what we said today, is that the Government's approach to trade strategy is wrong. It is time to reassess that trade strategy. It is time for the Government to sit down with President Reagan and take a look at what the basic premises of the negotiations are, because obviously the Americans are not following them.

Mr. Caccia: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) in his excellent speech made a reference to national treatment, which is a very important aspect in this policy. I would like the Hon. Member to comment very briefly on the statement that has been attributed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he said that national treatment means that goods from Manitoba will be treated exactly the same as goods from Minnesota. How will that affect the economy of the province where the Hon. Member comes from?

Mr. Axworthy: This partly goes back to the question that was asked before. I would refer to a study which has just been released by the Canada West Foundation. This study goes sector by sector in terms of the impact of free trade upon the western provinces. What they point out is that in a province like Manitoba the furniture industry is basically wiped out; the service industry is on a decline; the poultry, egg, turkey, chicken, and all the feather trades, are basically wiped out; and major parts of the textile industry are wiped out. I would be glad to quote from the study when they talk about the service industry. They say that,

> In short, free trade offers considerable downside but little upside to Western Canada's service industries.

There is one example of a highly reputed economic organization in western Canada that says that unless the Government is prepared to make a great deal of change and maintain a system that is there, then serious problems will ensue. The problem is that under national treatment all the substructures put in place, for example marketing boards, procurement policies that protected the industries of western Canada will be wiped out, therefore, those industries will be wiped out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order! The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. The Minister of State (Forestry and Mines) (Mr. Merrithew).

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to make a few comments on a debate that is so important to the future of Canada.

In reading the motion of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) I was rather surprised. I would like to quote what he said here, because I think it is quite important:

> That this House condemns—
> 1. the misguided efforts of the Minister of International Trade to present a unilateral proposal to the United States which undercut the Canadian position—

I would like to assure this House that the Hon. Member does not have his facts right, I am afraid. The decision to make an offer to the United States as the basis for a possible settlement came with the unanimous support and encouragement of the provinces, industry, and organized labour.

It was also clear from the signals that we were receiving from the United States that Secretary Baldrige and the Administration were continuing to look for a resolution to this issue outside of following the normal routes.

It was clear that the political environment in the United States was such that it was definitely in our interest to try to find a solution to this issue. It was clear to Canadian industry and labour who urged us to pursue this course. It was certainly clear to the Canadian provinces which participated in this initiative. It was clear to the Government that this issue is of such importance that its resolution could not be left entirely to the vagaries of the U.S. quasi-judicial process.

It was clear to the most informed political commentators both in Canada and in the United States that this was a helpful initiative pursued by the Government. The provinces, industry, and organized labour thought so, and urged us to try to settle this dispute out of court, if possible. We made our best effort to do so. It is unfortunate that the U.S. industry did not accept what in our view was a fair and reasonable compromise. What is not clear is why the Hon. Member cannot see what everybody else could see at the time, that is, that it was a useful and helpful initiative on the long road to managing this threat against our $4 billion industry trade in lumber with the United States.

Let me address the assertion that this offer undercut the Canadian position before the Commerce Department's preliminary determination. One only has to read the flawed and contrived preliminary determination brought down by the International Trade Commission to see that this contention is obviously unfounded. The Commerce Department has resorted to unprecedented and highly controversial interpretations of the law to arrive at the findings in the preliminary determination. There is no relationship between what we see in that flawed determination and our efforts to diffuse this situation in September.

To comprehend fully the background to this issue, we should pause and review the circumstances leading to this preliminary determination. Over three years ago, some U.S. lumber interests initiated a countervailing duty investigation against Canadian softwood lumber imports. They alleged that the Canadian industry was subsidized. Three years ago, the Commerce Department cleared Canada completely of wrongdoing. I was there and very much a part of that as a provincial Minister of Forestry at the time. Unfortunately, that did not put an end to the issue. The U.S. lumber interests, encouraged by growing protectionist pressures in the U.S. Congress, continued their attacks on Canadian lumber. They lobbied Congress for changes in the widely accepted rules governing trade. At the same time, they initiated another countervailing duty case. This time it was skillfully timed to capitalize on the upcoming mid-term elections in the U.S. To quote the recent comments of the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), in the United States:

> They created a political environment that could only enhance their own narrow interest, to the detriment of the other interests in the United States. This time, although the facts were the same, the U.S. Administration has chosen to reverse its earlier decision. We in Canada find the basis for this reversal deplorable and badly flawed.

I am sure that the House appreciates that given the environment surrounding this issue, it was only prudent for the Government, provinces, industry, and for organized labour, to pursue all avenues open to resolving it. Given the political environment surrounding the issue in the United States, it was clear to all parties involved that the actions pursued were only prudent and certainly not prejudicial to our long-standing position.

If the Hon. Member still cannot see the validity of our action, I can only again refer to the preliminary determination and ask him to read it carefully this time.

I see that the time is approximately one o'clock. Perhaps I could continue after Question Period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister will have 14 minutes left in his debate, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Canadian craftsmen who for 50 years have set an example of professionalism of which this country should be proud.

Mr. Speaker, you probably have guessed that I want to draw the attention of the House to the fiftieth anniversary of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Fifty years of serving Canadians, in whatever capacity, is a feat that deserves to be mentioned here in this House.

When in addition to the Corporation's longevity, we consider the quality and professionalism these communications professionals have taught us to expect, I believe there is a case for drawing very special attention to this event. That is what I want to do today, and I would like all Members of this House, whatever some of my Tory colleagues may think, to join me in extending our best wishes to those Canadian men and women who have contributed to the Corporation's success for half a century.

In many ways, Canada owes its position as a world leader in communications to the CBC, which I think should get the credit for this.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

RE-ELECTION OF SOCIAL CREDIT GOVERNMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday British Columbia voters made a choice of how they wish to be governed. They chose to be governed by a Premier who did not promise them the moon but has promised them an open Government, a Government which will work co-operatively, a government for the people of British Columbia and by the people of British Columbia. B.C. voters chose a Government which promised to consult the people rather than be governed by the NDP who adopted a Doomsday approach.

To Premier Vander Zalm and his colleagues we say congratulations and best wishes, as we work together for the common good of Canada and particularly of B.C. To each of the winning candidates who are part of Fraser Valley East, I should like to extend my personal congratulations. I look forward to working with them in the best interests of our constituents in British Columbia.

EXTERNAL AID

CONTRIBUTIONS TO INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Desmarais task force on Canada's development assistance program recommended reducing our contributions to international development organizations such as the United Nations. This is directly opposite to the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations which affirmed "the Canadian tradition of treating multilateral and bilateral aid channels as complementary". Canadians do not want our development assistance program to be just a front for dumping Canadian goods on poor nations.

Instead of cutting back on multilateral funding, we should be looking at more effective vehicles for that funding, for example, the International Fund for Agricultural Development. IFAD has low administrative costs, works effectively to improve the living standards of the world's poorest people, and places special emphasis upon programs for women. We should be raising, not lowering our multilateral contributions.

BANKS AND BANKING

ESSENCE OF ESTEY REPORT

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, last week, Commissioner Willard Estey made public the report of the Commission of Inquiry in the Collapse of the CCB and the Northland Bank.

Mr. Speaker, in his 750-page report, Judge Estey exonerated our Government of any blame, adding that there was no justifiable basis for criticizing the Ministers responsible, nor were they blamed in any of the submissions.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Opposition did not wait for evidence, and throughout the sequence of events it did not hesitate to lay all the blame at the Government's door, although today, the facts reveal that the situation had existed since 1982.

If anyone is to blame today, it is the former Administration which, although well aware of irregularities in the system, never took steps to save one billion dollars in taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents will remember this irresponsible behaviour on the part of the Opposition.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, those Tories have done it again; yet another broken promise for Canadians. During the last election campaign the Conservatives promised, among their 338 promises, to increase expenditures on research and development to 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product during the first five years of a Tory Government. Luckily they probably will not be in power for five years.

However, after two years the NRC, our own national research arm, has been savaged three times by the Tory Government, first on November 8, 1984; then in the Budget, and now so that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can satisfy his space age fetish. The result is that hundreds of researchers, scientists and others will lose their jobs at the National Research Council, and much needed research will come to a grinding halt because of the ridiculous policies of the Tory Government.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

ESTEY COMMISSION REPORT—NEED FOR NEW BANK ACCOUNTING AND AUDITING STANDARDS

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, last Friday Judge Estey released his report into the insolvencies of the CCB and Northland Bank, finding in each case that the banks were practically insolvent by 1982 or 1983, that both banks adopted tactics to increase earnings and assets, and that the auditors of the banks unconditionally approved these tactics.

Last weekend the Liberals seemed to have forgotten when the insolvencies occurred, and all three auditing firms denied that they participated in any actions which resulted in overstating earnings or assets.

My purpose in rising today is not to place blame on the previous administration or on the auditors, but to press for new standards of bank accounting and auditing as outlined in Recommendation 7 of Judge Estey's report, since the current standards are so inadequate that no Government or supervisory authority can adequately supervise troubled financial institutions.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CONTENT OF NORTHERN SERVICE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, there exists in several remote reserve communities across Canada a situation that defies logic and certainly annoys those who watch television.

For example, Fort Hope is a native community located some 250 miles north of Thunder Bay, on the beautiful Albany River system. At the end of a day, reserve residents, like us all, sit down to watch their favourite TV shows. Most of us take for granted that when we watch the news or the weather, or a documentary, that it will be geographically and linguistically relevant.

Not so in Fort Hope. The Crees of this community receive the CBC Northern Service, with news and weather from Newfoundland and Labrador, Baffin Island and northern Quebec.

What is more, none of them know Inuktitut and therefore cannot understand much of what they see and hear.

Canada recently hosted a world exposition with the theme of transportation and communication. The Government and the CBC would do well to look at examples like Fort Hope and do something to meet the communications needs of our northern residents. Let CBC start its second half century by extending culturally relevant progamming to all.

S.O. 21

ESTEY COMMISSION REPORT—INADEQUACIES OF SUPERVISORY STRUCTURE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the exhaustive report of Mr. Justice Estey has basically confirmed the conclusions of the Commons Finance Standing Committee which, in May, 1985, examined the Canadian Commercial Bank and noted first: "CCB's accounting practices overstated income and understated loan losses"; second, "it would seem appropriate to raise as a matter of public policy the question of what responsibility the external auditors of financial institutions have vis-à-vis the public at large"; and third, "management accepted risks beyond the realms of prudence—the question then becomes whether supervision in this instance was adequate."

The basic problem is inadequacies in the structure of the supervisory establishment.

Last fall the Finance Committee tabled 134 recommendations concerning financial regulatory reform. Now that the Estey Report is in, it is time for action to update and modernize the regulations governing the financial institutions of our country.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REINSTATEMENT URGED OF TOXICOLOGY CENTRE PROPOSAL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the construction of the toxicology centre, announced in 1983, in response to a request by the Toronto and Guelph Universities, was scrapped in 1984 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Yet warnings about the scale of the toxic chemical problem in the Great Lakes were raised in reports released by the Niagara River Toxics Committee, the International Joint Commission, the Royal Society and the Canadian Environmental Law Research Foundation.

I call on the Government to reinstate the Toronto-Guelph Toxicology Centre to give Canada greater knowledge about the volatization of PCBs, Mirex, benzenes and other highly toxic chemicals discharged into the Great Lakes, and how they are returned through the atmosphere to the soil, considering that their presence has been measured in cattle, milk, and crops. The health implications of this toxic cycle require the research that would be conducted at such a centre.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, where does the Liberal Party, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, really stand on the issue of Canadian trade negotiations with the United States? Is it against any negotiations whatsoever, as repeatedly implied in the House by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), or is it in favour of negotiations as called for by the same Leader of the Opposition on October 20?

Is it for suspending the talks, as demanded by the Liberal trade critic, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), on October 20, or is it in favour of continuing the talks, as stated by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition the very next day? Is the Liberal Party engaged in a trade policy war of its own? Or, do Liberals really have a low regard for the intelligence of the Canadian public?

TRUST COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this week's winners of the grand prizes for untaxed companies are the trust companies. Today, our prize winner is Montreal Trustco, which enjoyed tax credits for the years 1981, 1984 and 1985, with profits totalling over $37 million. This was possible thanks to lucrative tax rebates provided by Liberal-Conservative tax measures.

If the tax system had been fair, and if Montreal Trustco had been made to pay 25 per cent tax on its profits, the tax bill for Canadian taxpayers would have been $9.3 million less.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

SALUTE TO RICK HANSEN—DONATIONS FOR SPINAL CORD RESEARCH

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, in a unique gala event fit only for heroes and champions, wheelchair champion Rick Hansen was honoured by his fellow Canadians last night. One of those Canadians was none other than the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who agreed to be both toasted and roasted in order to raise more than $100,000 for Rick's cause, that of spinal cord research and rehabilitation. Yesterday as well, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) added to this event by presenting a cheque for $1 million to Rick's fund.

Our young hero has learned not only to cope with disabilities but to excel in spite of them. Now two-thirds of the way through his Man in Motion tour, Rick will salute the people of the Ottawa region and continue his 40,000 kilometre trek around the world. It is now our turn as Members of Parliament to salute this young man and remind ourselves and our constituents to give, give, give to the cause of spinal cord research and rehabilitation. Good luck, Rick Hansen, and may God be with you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

MEMBERSHIP OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, when this House recently agreed to a package of parliamentary reforms it was, in part, to give standing committees more freedom and independence from the Government. That being so, you will understand my astonishment when late last week the Chief Government Whip showed up at the organization meeting of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development to impose upon it, as Chairman, a new MP who has never before served on this committee. The ranking Conservative member, a man of experience and empathy with Canada's indigenous peoples, was passed over. What goes on? Simply, Sir, the Government has decided to cool down native issues, to dampen expectations raised by the previous Minister responsible.

In my nearly two decades as a Member of this House I have never felt quite so discouraged and despondent about the possibility of progress being made toward the recognition and implementation of aboriginal rights in Canada.

POLLOMANIA

FREQUENCY OF POLLS CONDEMNED

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, have you ever been called in a poll? I have not, no one in my family has, and neither have my neighbours. There are real polls, anonymous polls, private polls, and public polls. They do polls to ask people what they thought of recent polls. They ask questions about your age, sex, and serial number, about what you ate for breakfast, lunch or dinner, about what you watch on TV, listen to on the radio or read in the newspapers. They ask if you are happy with the Government and its Leader, as well as with the performance of the Opposition and its Leaders. Before this month is out there will be a poll to see if MPs are pleased with your performance.

Canadians are polled out by poll junkies. They are too frequent and too futile. Leave us alone and let the Government get on with the job of running the country.

DISARMAMENT

CALL FOR AGREEMENT BETWEEN SUPERPOWERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, last Friday in New York the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told the President of the United States that he was right in not abandoning star wars for an arms control agreement. This is typical of the Prime Minister's double-talk on this issue. Several months ago he said his Government was opposed to star wars but now he says it is all right for the United States to continue.

• (1415)

This is Disarmament Week. There are now approximately 50,000 nuclear weapons in the world, 30,000 with the United States and NATO and 20,000 with the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact, which are one million times more powerful than the bombs which fell on Hiroshima, and represent 4 tonnes of TNT for every person in the world. Will the Prime Minister use the occasion of Disarmament Week to reconsider his position on nuclear disarmament and star wars and press for a superpower agreement to control and reduce all nuclear weapons, including star wars?

TERRORISM

COMPLICITY OF SYRIAN GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. After a weekend of study and consultation is the Government of Canada ready to accept as conclusive the evidence from Great Britain of the complicity of the Government of Syria in terrorist activities?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will know that I have called Canada's kAmbassador in Damascus back to Canada for consultations. I believe we have been in touch with representatives of the Hon. Member's Party and representatives of the New Democratic Party to offer them the opportunity of a briefing with the Ambassador and other officials of the Department.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE IF RECOGNITION GIVEN TO SYRIAN COMMITMENT AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF TERRORIST ACTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. Terrorism must be condemned, in the name of whatever causes it is claimed to have been perpetrated.

Yesterday our ambassador said on television: "I will be back in about two weeks."

Here is my question. If Canada acknowledges that Syria did commit or encourage acts of terrorism, what other steps, what other diplomatic, economic or political measures is the Government prepared to take?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): One thing is quite clear, Mr. Speaker, namely that certain elements of the Syrian Government have been directly involved in terrorist activities. What the Canadian Government wants to do is to encourage other countries to support, as we did, the action taken by the Government of Great Britain against acts of terrorism abetted by certain elements of the Syrian Government. A meeting is scheduled for this afternoon between officials of my department and representatives of European Community countries to urge the Europeans to support the position of Great Britain.

[English]

GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Government has accepted the evidence given in an open court in Britain. The Government is committed to responding in positive terms against acts of terrorism. So far our Ambassador has been recalled for consultations only. Other than the heavy rhetoric of the Minister and of the Prime Minister when attending the United Nations in New York, what concrete steps is the Government of Canada really going to take?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of calling the Ambassador home for consultations is to discuss with him and others the actions which it would be appropriate and effective to take. At the moment the most important and effective thing for us to do would be to try to encourage members of the European Community to join with us in supporting the position of Great Britain against state terrorism by elements of the Syrian Government. It would also be our hope that the cumulation of these pressures will cause the Government of Syria to cause Abu Nidal to move his operation entirely out of Syria.

ESTEY COMMISSION REPORT—CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK BAIL-OUT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. While the Canadian Commercial Bank bail-out was agreed upon in March of last year and the money paid out in April, the Government did not begin to find out what it had bought into until it appointed Mr. Hitchman at the end of June. By August 1, according to the report of the Estey Commission, "the only question which remained unanswered was how long this bank had been disguising itself as a solvent bank". Why then was the Government still sending out letters to shareholders on August 9 advising them that the bail-out had ensured the bank's viability?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear from the report of Mr. Justice Estey that there was an understanding of the problems with the bank. But we also had to be very careful as to what messages we sent out during the course of this period until we were absolutely sure of the final predicament of the bank. That status was found out towards the end of August and the Government acted quickly once it was apparent to us.

MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Estey Commission Report has confirmed that the banks participating in the bail-out last March wanted a comprehensive, independent review of the loan portfolio, but that the Government made no effort to press for an early examination of the loan assets of the bank. Why was the Minister content to gamble taxpayers' money on an uninformed rescue attempt which, according to Mr. Justice Estey, "was ill starred from the outset and had no chance of success"?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think Mr. Justice Estey makes it clear that we were entitled to rely on the information which was provided to us. We probed that information, and during the course of the time following the putting together of the support package and into the summer there was a considerable amount of work which was coming on.

When we called in support through the help of Mr. Hitchman, we did so because it was apparent that the problems were becoming greater. We responded very much to that information which was provided to us, and acted accordingly.

DELAY IN EXAMINING BANK'S ASSETS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directly supplementary to the question just answered by the Minister. It is true that Mr. Justice Estey's report exonerates the Government from any wrongdoing in the period up to March, 1985, when the original bail-out decision was reached. However, Mr. Justice Estey goes on and states:

> Clearly there was a complete inadequacy of follow-through in obtaining the information necessary to produce the final Participation Agreement and to properly monitor the progress of the rescue program. In particular, the Minister of State appears to have made no effort to press for an early and organized hands-on examination of the loan assets of the bank.

Would the Minister not agree that this wording effectively condemns the former Minister of State for Finance for failing to exercise her ministerial responsibility?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I would disagree entirely with that conclusion. The Estey Report makes a very clear statement. There is nothing in the evidence which leads to criticisms of these Ministers. The Ministers gave the officials adequate guidance and support and properly left the execution to the administrators. I think the report speaks for itself.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into a verbal game with the Minister about ministerial responsibility. I want him to give us his understanding as the senior Minister involved. The cost to Canadian taxpayers during those summer months went from the original estimate, which was just over $130 million, to a final cost of $1 billion. During that period not only chartered banks but other major depositors were making withdrawals from the Canadian Commercial Bank. During the same period of time a proper loan portfolio assessment had not been done.

• (1425)

Considering that Mr. Justice Estey states that there would have to be other forums to make a final judgment with respect to the question of ministerial responsibility, does the Minister not think that his junior Minister failed to do the proper job under the circumstances?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no, not at all. I think that the Hon. Member is either reading very selectively from the report or that he has not read the report at all. It is important for the Hon. Member to understand the total spectrum of comment that has been made. I have indicated very clearly that the report speaks for itself. The conclusions that are being drawn by the Hon. Member, or those which might be drawn by me, are less important than those found in the report of an objective and independent judicial inquiry. That was the purpose of the inquiry. That is why we went ahead with it. I believe it is important that we abide by the conclusions of it.

EXERCISE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that we made an attempt in the House to have referred specifically to Mr. Justice Estey the idea of ministerial responsibility and that the Government refused to add such words. He knows that Mr. Justice Estey, and other judges in that position, are reluctant to become involved in making essentially what are political judgments. Considering that there was a failure after the March period to supervise the activity of the officials, a failure to understand the seriousness of the portfolio loan problem, and a failure to watch the millions of dollars that were being withdrawn, does the Minister not think, for future reference, that a Minister, male or female, exercising proper responsibility ought not to make that type of mistake?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I refer specifically to the words of the report: "There is nothing in the evidence which leads to criticisms of these Ministers". How clear could Mr. Justice Estey be?

The Hon. Member talks about supervision. In the words of Mr. Justice Estey, "the Ministers gave the officials adequate guidance and support". Surely the Hon. Member can understand the import of the conclusions reached by Mr. Justice Estey.

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED INTERFERENCE IN PLANS FOR USE OF FORMER CANADIAN FORCES BASE IN MANITOBA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister personally investigate the circumstance in which the Department of Indian Affairs has withdrawn its Treasury Board submission that would have transferred land at the Canadian Forces Base Beausejour to the Long Plain Indian Band in the honouring of a major commitment, because of the interference of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in trying to promote a prison in his own riding? Will the Prime Minister personally investigate this matter?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Minister in question is in Winnipeg today meeting band councils. I will take the question under advisement.

USE AS PRISON PROPOSED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I thought that in light of the Auditor General's Report and the well known experience the Prime Minister has in these matters he might be prepared to undertake a response to this fact. Will the Prime Minister give us a commitment that no additional federal funds will be used for the promotion of this prison unless there is a proper alternative site found for this Indian band in fulfilment of its long-standing commitment?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have already advised the Hon. Member that the Minister in question is not in the House to answer his question. I will take the question on notice, and we will supply the Hon. Member with an answer in due course.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

ESTEY COMMISSION REPORT—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance arising out of his actions and the actions of his colleagues which have cost the Canadian taxpayers close to $900 million because of their failure to act between March and September of 1985 when the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank were going down the drain. Is the Minister aware that in his report Mr. Justice Estey quite clearly related to the fact that he had not been asked to look at the matter of ministerial responsibility and stated: "It may be that other forums and tribunals having different objectives will reach different conclusions with respect to duties and obligations of the participants in these events"?

Is the Minister saying that, regardless of this disclaimer, Mr. Justice Estey's opinion is the only one that should apply? Will the Minister on his own behalf and on behalf of the Minister of State for Finance accept that they are responsible in the parliamentary system for this loss of $900 million to the taxpayers?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a very large report. I am sure the Hon. Member has read the entire report.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, no.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Probably not. However, it says very clearly that there is nothing in the evidence which leads to criticisms of these Ministers. The Ministers gave the officials adequate guidance and support. I could repeat a number of other elements of what Mr. Justice Estey has said in the report, but surely the Hon. Member must accept that the report speaks for itself.

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I can point this out to the Minister of Finance.

Is he aware of the fact that many times in his summary and in his report, which I have read almost in its entirety since Friday, Mr. Justice Estey is quite critical of the Government and its Ministers? He specifically states that the action they took was altogether inadequate to make sure that they would monitor the program to bail-out the bank which began in March.

Now then, is he prepared to accept the criticisms of Mr. Justice Estey and assume responsibility for the loss of $900 million, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear from what Mr. Justice Estey has said that the Ministers did in fact undertake to be informed about the consequences and state of the portfolio and that we did give direction to the officials involved and supported them in the acitivities they were undertaking. Mr. Justice Estey says that the information that was provided was inadequate, but we got on top of that information with the work done by Mr. Hitchman and made our decisions accordingly later on in the summer.

THE ECONOMY

NORTHERN ONTARIO RECOVERY PACKAGE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The economy of northern Ontario is at its lowest ebb since the days of the Diefenbaker Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Penner: Already extraordinarily high unemployment will be made even higher as a result of the U.S. tariff on lumber. Is the Prime Minister prepared now to reveal to the House and the people of northern Ontario the details of the so-called recovery package for northern Ontario, details that were shrouded in secrecy when the Conservative caucus met in Sudbury this weekend?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to tell the House that, perhaps for the first time in the history of northern Ontario, cabinet Ministers visited the area to deal with the real issues affecting northern Ontario. It was a very positive meeting.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Very many suggestions were made. There is a clear opportunity to build upon the natural strengths of northern Ontario. The Solicitor General is taking a leading part in stimulating the discussions and the policy development in that area. Just watch us. We will bring forth a very good policy which will be good for northern Ontario and for Canada.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he would not be frank and admit to the House that this so-called recovery package for northern Ontario is nothing other than a philosophical statement on regional development which lacks substance? It is nothing but a little soft sound and fuzzy fury that signify nothing.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been a Member of the House since 1968. He represented a Government that had been in power from 1968 until 1984. He should be the last guy to criticize by pointing out what is missing in that area because he has failed to do his job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Am I frank? The answer to that is yes. Even my second name is Frank.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: One might say that's the only thing frank about you.

PATENT ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS AFFECTING GENERIC DRUGS—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. I have a confidential document sent by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to delegates at the Conservative policy conference in Calgary. In it the Minister says about the proposed generic drug law changes that they "may benefit from trade discussions with the United States". Can the Minister tell the House the nature of the linkage between generic drugs and free trade? The statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare contradicts the statement made in the House on April 14 by the former Minister for International Trade who said that "generics were not in any way tied to the present discussions".

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member and the House that the proposed changes to Canada's patent law will be made for the benefit of Canada and Canadians and for the benefit of research and development that will affect the health of Canadians. When he sees the entire package and analyses the facts, I am sure the Hon. Member will agree.

CONTENT OF TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): That answer does not deal with my question at all so I would like to put a further question to either Minister. The Minister of National Health and Welfare also said in that document that "the recommendations contained in Dr. Harry Eastman's report on pharmaceuticals are under review by the Government and may form part of the discussions with the Americans". In the discussions on free trade, is the question of the patent law with regard to drugs being discussed—yes or no?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should be aware, there have been discussions on Canada's patent laws since 1969 when the patent laws were changed. All of our trading partners are vitally interested in this question. As the Hon. Member may surmise, there is a great deal of interest in intellectual property generally, but in terms of the specific proposal we are making it is because it is of benefit to Canada and Canadians that we are proceeding with it.

MATANE PAPER-MILL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, could the Prime Minister answer a question that is being asked by thousands of Quebecers, namely, what kind of investments will the Government make to stimulate Quebec's economy? There have been no announcements to date for Montreal East and none for the Matane region about the paper mill. The Government only seems interested in building the penitentiary at Port-Cartier.

I want to ask the Prime Minister when an announcement will be made about the federal Government's participation in the paper mill project for Matane?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the Hon. Member's question, because when I look at the facts, 149,000 new jobs have been created in Quebec since we were elected, compared with the 41,000 created over four or five years by the Liberals. We have created an average of 6,200 jobs per month, eight times the Liberal average for job creation spread over five years. Now that is the kind of remarkable progress we have made in Quebec and across Canada.

IMPATIENCE OF MATANE CITIZENS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the Prime Minister is refusing to give the people of Matane this information.

I want to ask him why the people of Matane should wait much longer for a decision on the paper mill, when the Government hurried through a decision to transfer a penitentiary to the Prime Minister's riding? Why should the people of Matane, just across the St. Lawrence, have to wait any longer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the people of Matane should realize that the Hon. Member is a member of a party that, when it was in power, said no to the people of Matane for 15 years. They will realize that it was the Liberals who always said no to regional economic expansion, especially in Quebec's remoter regions, including Matane. And the people of Matane realize that this national Government is going to make decisions that will benefit their economy.

ESTEY COMMISSION REPORT—COLLAPSE OF BANKS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister has read part of a sentence from the report of Mr. Justice Estey's inquiry. I would like to read to him the beginning of that sentence which is as follows:

> Apart from a delay in formulating government policy as to the intervention with public funds in the rescue program of the banks and a tardiness in responding to the request of the major banks for a detailed and comprehensive loan portfolio assessment—

• (1440)

Will the Minister admit that the Government has some responsibility in the fiasco, that indeed Ministers did blow it? A billion dollar blow-up?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Now answer that, Michael.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Again, the Hon. Member is being selective himself on what he draws from the report. The report also goes on to say that the seeds for the failures of the banks were sown in the late part of the 1970s, as improper and imprudent lending practices by the banks themselves led to the problems that ultimately resulted in the failure of the two banks. Surely the Hon. Member can acknowledge that in the course of his next question.

USE OF TAXPAYERS' MONEY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Again, Judge Estey called the bail-out half-baked, ill-starred. He compared it to the Government letting a toboggan run down a hill without any control. This is his criticism of the Government's bail-out. We admit that the previous administration is also at fault. Surely the Government of today has to accept some responsibility for the billion dollars that it lost of Canadian taxpayers' money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The report speaks for itself.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, it sure does.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have repeated on a number of occasions the conclusions that Mr. Justice Estey drew from the extensive amount of review that he undertook during the course of this investigation. I asked the Hon. Member to read the conclusions that he draws.

STATUS OF WOMEN

SINGLE FEMALE HEADS OF FAMILIES—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSIST

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Last week, Mr. Speaker, the National Council on Welfare stated in their annual report that the situation of elderly Canadians had improved considerably, whereas the condition of single women and heads of families was lagging far behind. My question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women.

Since six out of ten single-parent families headed by women are poor and make up the only group in our society whose poverty has worsened since 1981, I should like to know what our Government is doing or intends to do to improve the condition of women in our society?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. This is an issue that this Government takes very seriously. It is a problem that has been very serious in our society for some time, and it can only be dealt with on a variety of fronts. That is why we have taken action in some of the areas like employment equity. That is why we have taken action in terms of the Pension Benefits Standards Act. That is why we appointed the Parliamentary Task Force on Child Care. The only way we are really going to get at this very serious problem for low-income women is to ensure that there is equality of opportunity throughout the system. That means a whole range of policies and programs.

POSSIBILITY OF TARIFF ON UNITED STATES CORN IMPORTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In his absence, maybe Frank will choose to reply.

Can the Minister confirm that the delay by Revenue Canada in rendering a decision from September 30 to November 14 in the case of a tariff on U.S. corn was no accident, and that this delay was caused by a desperate and futile attempt to please the Americans on the softwood lumber issue?

Finally, can we get the information from this Government as to why the interests of Canadian farmers have been sacrificed again to please the Americans?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to caution my friend opposite that he should not misinterpret an administrative process. If he studied the situation, he knows that on May 12 the Ontario corn producers filed what was found to be a properly documented complaint, which is now being looked after by the Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise exactly in the way that is set out under the Special Import Measures Act.

[Translation]

CONSEQUENCES OF DECISION CONCERNING CORN PRODUCERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Does the Minister know that, in this case, a delay concerning the countervailing tariff at this time of the year, harvest time, means that he might just as well say no to farmers right now, because by November 14 the decision will be meaningless since all imports will already—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member ask his question, please.

Mr. Boudria: Does the Minister realize that the delay will cost Canadian corn producers $150 million, and that the delay until November 14 amounts to a refusal this year? What does he intend to do to expedite this matter?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, once more I want to point out to my colleague opposite that these procedures are set down very clearly. There is a purpose for the deliberations that take place. There is a lot of material to be studied. These matters have to be carefully weighed. There will be a decision made in due course.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PROTECTION OF WORKERS UNDER FEDERAL JURISDICTION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour what protection he plans to give federal employees in the workplace from hazardous substances, now that we have the decision from Friday by the Federal Court of Appeal? Is he satisfied with the present situation, namely, that hazardous substances are acceptable in the federal workplace as long as they are introduced by other employees and not by management? Isn't this hair-splitting and not protection?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, our Department, of course, is following that situation very carefully. We are obviously subject to court decisions that are being made. We will continue to monitor the situation and will do what has to be done in due course.

CANADA LABOUR CODE AMENDMENTS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister: Will he tell us if the new Canada Labour Code with the amendments just recently in effect will be an improvement? Will they give the necessary protection against hazardous substances? I remind him that the court did not dispute that secondary smoke constituted a hazardous substance. Will the new Canada Labour Code give the necessary protection?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, all amendments to the Canada Labour Code are obviously improvements.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

APPOINTEES' RESUMÉS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I would like to ask the Minister why his office doctored seven of the twenty-eight resumés of applicants to the Canadian Human Rights Commission so that all references to the Progressive Conservative Party were removed before the resumés were sent to parliamentarians for investigation?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I thank the Hon. Member for that question. I have been waiting for over a week to be able to set the record straight and say that the allegation is completely false.
