Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that if the Hon. Member had read the recommendations in the Marchment Report, he would have noticed that the report recommends providing either alternating services or installing community mail boxes. The Government has looked into the matter, and we decided to go with the community mail boxes and support the recommendation made by Canada Post.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

COST OF DRUGS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who just recently referred to the point made by the Leader of the NDP about the $650 million additional cost to Canadians and said that it was an illusion and a fabrication of his imagination. Does the Minister not agree that this figure came from Currie Coopers & Lybrand, one of the biggest chartered accountant firms in Canada? Is the Minister questioning the figure presented by that firm, which is likely a Conservative firm?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to show me a clause in the Bill that will cause the rise in price of any drug currently on the market. I do not know how Hon. Members can talk about an increase in the price of drugs not yet discovered. An increase over what price?

Mr. Broadbent: Why do you think they want the change?

Mr. Andre: If the Leader of the NDP would allow me to answer, I would say that the Drug Prices Review Board which will be headed by Dr. Harry Eastman, the nation's expert in this area, will ensure that prices are reasonable and do not get out of line. Again I remind the Hon. Member of the fact that it has taken on average 11 and a half years for generic competition. We are proposing 10 years of exclusivity. That elementary fact would seem to indicate that there will not be the kind of dramatically high prices about which he is speaking.

TIMING OF MINISTER'S PRESS CONFERENCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain why he thought it was appropriate before a Bill was tabled in the House of Commons to discuss the specifics of it? Why is he doing the bidding of the Americans? What is the rush? We have lived under existing legislation which has benefited Canadians for 17 years. What is the hurry? Why did the Minister have to call a press conference before the Bill was even introduced in the House of Commons?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find it incredible that for the first time in history a Party would not allow us even to consider first reading.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, go ring a few bells, Harvie.

Mr. Riis: You rushed the Chair to stop the process. Bell ringing for weeks on end.

Mr. Crosbie: Weasels and hypocrites.

Mr. Andre: I would invite Hon. Members—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

EQUALITY OF SERVICE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this winter thousands of Canadians who live in modern neighbourhoods will go out into blizzards trying to get their mail without having it blown away by the wind and without slipping and breaking their necks. They will not forget Cold Côté.

How could the Government approve of a postal plan that removes the equality of service within a given area, a tradition of the post office for decades?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member that the decision to establish two delivery classes, and the responsibility for that decision, lies not with this Government but with the previous Government, which started implementing these procedures in 1974 when it set up the green boxes. It is their responsibility, and now we have to clean up the mess.

UNIFORMITY OF SERVICES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): This reduction in postal services cannot be tolerated! Don't you think you have a responsibility to Canadians to be fair and to give the same service in the same region, from door to door and not from box to box?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will answer that by saying that this Government is committed to providing a higher quality of postal service. I think that everyone knows that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: It comes as a real surprise.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): The plan tabled yesterday answers the needs of Canadians to have a better postal service at an affordable cost.

Mr. Speaker: All Hon. Members will know that that is a hard act to follow.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NEW BRUNSWICK MINISTER OF MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS AND ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Speaker: It might be appropriate to draw to the attention of Members the presence in the gallery of the Hon. Robert Jackson, Minister of Municipal Affairs and Environment for the Province of New Brunswick.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF PROPOSED POSTAL RATE INCREASE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Canadians need some information to understand what he means by a full opportunity to review the rate increase. Will the Committee be given adequate time to do the review, or will it be limited to the month that Donald Landers talked about? Will the Committee be given all the information that it needs, such as full pricing information, or will it be limited to the document that was tabled yesterday? Will the Committee have sufficient scope, or will it be limited simply to examining the 2 cent increase?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the increase in postal rates is an integral part of the corporate plan that was tabled yesterday. Cabinet has decided to refer consideration of the rate increases to a parliamentary committee, before proceeding with publication, and it did so in the very best spirit of parliamentary reform. So again, we are supporting objectives announced previously.

[English]

CONDUCT OF COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has failed to take the opportunity to provide the type of information that would assure Canadians that the review is going to be full and adequate. He leaves us with no other conclusion but that this is going to be an opportunity for back-bench Tories to blow off steam, and a roast for Donald Landers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have not found a question there yet. Perhaps the Hon. Member would put his question.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, my question is this. The Minister said in the House that the plan which was presented yesterday answers the needs of Canadians at an affordable cost. Having put his stamp of approval on this plan, how can Canadians have any confidence that the review is going to be meaningful and have any impact on policy made by the Government?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians know that they were consulted when the Marchment Commission was created. The Commission travelled all over the country, visiting 14 cities. It made 29 recommendations, and we are in the process of putting in place 28 of those recommendations. This is full consultation with Canadians, Sir.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: What about the committee?

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—BRISTOL CONSORTIUM'S BID

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I have here a document which was prepared by the Bristol Aerospace consortium as part of its bid. It states that technology transfer will form a significant part of the task, and the current familiarity with many of the CF-18 systems will minimize the time and cost of the transfer. Why did the Minister say yesterday that there was no such documentation when it is clearly there? Why is he so ignorant of the proposals put forward by Bristol on the crucial issue of technology transfer? Does this not now give superiority to that particular proposal and, therefore, should not the recommendation be reconsidered?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed all the information once again, after many times. There was no written offer of any type of free technology from that consortium. The amounts quoted by both firms, and evaluated by the 75 officials of the evaluation team—

Mr. Orlikow: And they blew that.

Mr. de Cotret: —showed the difference. They included that. Giving one consortium the go ahead rather than another means no additional money for the taxpayers of Canada. By that I mean no additional cost. I am satisfied by the answers I have given so far that the process was carried out adequately.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise Minister that there are a lot of Canadians who are not satisfied with those answers. I want to challenge the Minister about saying in this House that there would be no extra cost when neither he nor his Government has finished negotiating with the various companies that hold the rights to the technology that must be used in the maintenance plant. You have not even finished negotiating, so you do not know what the cost will be. Therefore, there will be an extra cost. How do you answer that?

An Hon. Member: Order. How long have you been in the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. An experienced Member of Parliament will know that if he continues to use the second person pronoun, perhaps the Chair will proceed to another Member and the Minister will not answer at all. I am sure that the Hon. Member would not repeat the incorrect use of the word "you" when the question is being asked.

The Hon. Minister, please.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, through you I would like to inform my hon. colleague opposite that the whole preamble to his question is totally spurious. The Government is negotiating for that transfer of technology. Whether any one of the three consortia received the successful bid, the cost would have been the same. That negotiation is being undertaken by the Government with McDonnell Douglas and the cost would have been carried through to the winning bidder. That was clearly put out in the submissions that were received from the evaluation team.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

ROBOTICS RESEARCH

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The vision system developed in connection with Canadarm is one of the few scientific accomplishments to have been commemorated in a stamp issue. What is the logic behind the cuts to the NRC that leads to the demise of this most outstanding program, not only in basic research, but a program which, among other things has benefited robotics in industry?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I have said repeatedly in the House, it is the intention of the Government to conduct an examination into the so-called cuts that the Hon. Member mentioned to ensure that no injury is done to public safety, to health, or to announced government priorities. The space program is such a priority. I will be in a position within the next few days to make an announcement or statement in the House on the method that will be used to conduct this examination.

Oral Questions

CANCER TREATMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Will the announcement include a correction of the situation with the TRIUMF program which is involved in cancer treatment, and all those other programs that we have mentioned that impinge upon the health and safety of Canadians? If it is his intention to re-examine all of those programs which we have mentioned one by one, is it not about time that the whole process of cutting NRC be stopped right now in its tracks before any more damage is done?

• (1440)

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I do not for a moment accept the Hon. Member's assertion that damage has been done to the integrity of the NRC. As I have said, there will be an examination in light of Government priorities and public health. That examination will proceed reasonably swiftly. Let me relieve the Hon. Member's concern about TRIUMF. I am told that there will be no injury to the programs of TRIUMF, and that the allocations made there have nothing to do with their programs but have to do with their future planning.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST SALMON LICENCE FEES

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Last weekend in British Columbia the Minister announced that he would be doubling licence fees for commercial fishermen to help pay for phase two of the Salmonid Enhancement Program. Why would the Minister single out one sector, or does he plan to share the load with other resource users of this West Coast fishery?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada or the taxpayers of Canada have invested over a quarter billion dollars in the Salmonid Enhancement Program on the West Coast over the past 10 years. At the time the program was started there was a commitment made that when it began to produce dividends to commercial and recreational fishermen, the users who benefited would begin to pay a portion of the cost. These increases would raise about one-tenth of the total cost of maintaining the program, and I think it is a fair contribution to ask of the commercial and recreational fishermen of British Columbia.

MINISTER'S CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that there is a great deal of anxiety and concern on the West Coast about this matter. Where does the consultative mechanism come in here? The Minister is disbanding his advisory council, while at the same time announcing new methods of SEP funding. Whom is the Minister consulting these days?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think this is an important supplementary question. In fact the subject of user fees and the future of the Salmonid Enhancement Program have been discussed over the past 12 months with the Minister's Advisory Council, albeit in somewhat of a vacuum because several user groups—in particular native people, commercial trollers, and latterly sports fishermen—have withdrawn from the Minister's Advisory Council. I felt it important to create a new policy advisory group known as the Pacific Regional Council. All user groups will be represented as policies of this nature are developed in future.

RAILWAYS

FUTURE OF 551 CN EMPLOYEES AT MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In answer to a question yesterday the Minister implied that 551 persons would remain employed by CN in Moncton. Today, calmly, can the Minister give me more details concerning these 551 persons, that is how many will work in Moncton, how many will be transferred elsewhere, and how many will take early retirement?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be too lengthy, but I never said that 551 people would be retaining jobs in Moncton. I said that accommodation had been found for 551 people. There are 165 in the CN Moncton shops complex; 152 in the CN Moncton Gordon Yard; 116 have been offered and accepted jobs at CN in Winnipeg; 34 at CN in Montreal; 9 at CN in Toronto; 6 at VIA Rail in Toronto; 3 at VIA Rail in Windsor; 2 at VIA Rail in Montreal; 54 are eligible for early retirement in Moncton; and 10 come under the category of "various other".

NUMBER OF JOBS RETAINED IN MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, transfers and early retirements are not jobs for Moncton workers; those are jobs lost to Moncton. How many of the 551 will actually stay in Moncton?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I just gave the list. Clearly it is 165 at the CN Moncton shops complex—that is in Moncton, and 152 at the CN Moncton Gordon Yard—that is in Moncton. If the hon. gentleman will add up those two, he will get the answer to his question.

Mr. Robichaud: What about the rest?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver-Quadra): That is really funny, John!

Mr. Nunziata: You ought to be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Crosbie: If the Leader of the Opposition will permit me, and his sidekick with the moustache—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—BRISTOL CONSORTIUM'S TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Earlier in Question Period he inferred that negotiations which the Government has to undertake in order to get the technology for the maintenance of the CF-18 would be necessary for all three companies which made bids. Will the Minister not rise in the House and admit that the Bristol consortium already owns or has access to much of that technology and therefore there could be a great savings to the taxpayers of Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is very short and very simple. The Bristol consortium has access to some technology. The Canadair consortium has access to equivalent CF-18 technology. In the view of the evaluation team it is not even certain that the technology which either consortium has is applicable to the contract under negotiation.

Mr. Axworthy: It gets worse every time you answer.

Mr. Murphy: It is amazing that the Minister would get up and say that the evaluation team would not recognize whether or not the technology available is the technology which is necessary.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday he was asked a number of questions on whether or not he would refer the matter to the Auditor General. In order to reduce regional differences in the country, will he do that?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question yesterday. The Auditor General is responsible to the House. The Auditor General will undertake all investigations or all reports which he feels are necessary. In a contract of this nature, I am sure the Auditor General would want to get to the bottom of the facts. We will, as always, co-operate with him to give him all the information.

IMMIGRATION

SPECIAL MINISTERIAL ENTRY PERMITS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Within a two-week period we have learned that an Hungarian resident, who turned over politically sensitive information on other Canadians to Hungarian secret police, and an individual with a record of over 20 criminal convictions have both received special ministerial permits to allow them to remain in Canada. Why is the Government extending the welcome mat to such undesirable individuals, when thousands of meritorious immigrants are being kept out? Why do you refuse to rescind two such outrageous and indefensible decisions?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am extremely surprised that the Hon. Member personally should think he is in a position to judge applications which are pending and about which the Minister of State has made recommendations on the basis of existing legislation. There is nothing special in the fact that the Immigration Act is being administered.

I would suggest this is quite normal. The Government is simply following existing regulations and I challenge the Hon. Member to say before the House that he is opposed to any kind of rehabilitation for prospective immigrants to Canada.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before the Hon. Member for York West puts his supplementary question I would ask that he be careful about using the word "you" and make his remarks through the Speaker.

REQUEST THAT TWO APPLICANTS BE REJECTED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the senior Minister of Employment and Immigration. I think the Minister should stop waltzing around the issue and admit two serious errors in judgment. Is the Minister prepared to assure Canadians and the House that this Hungarian spy and an individual with 20 criminal convictions should be inadmissible according to the Immigration Act, and that he will say no to giving them permanent resident status in the country?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As Minister of Immigration, Mr. Speaker, I have no pretention to act for judges whose role it is to consider the applications of prospective immigrants to Canada.

I would especially urge my colleague to respect the existing Immigration Act mechanisms which are responsible for the fact that this country can welcome outstanding immigrants.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—OBSERVANCE OF COMMONWEALTH SANCTIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will know that 87,000 litres of South African wine have arrived at the Port of Vancouver, clearly in contravention of the intent of Commonwealth sanctions issued on August 5. The Premier of B.C. is meeting with the South African Ambassador in British Columbia tomorrow.

Has the Prime Minister discussed with Premier Vander Zalm this blatant violation of the federal Government's sanctions policy, or is the federal Government only going to pay lip service to the policy itself?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the story to which the Hon. Member is referring. From my reading of the story I believe that the wine in question would have been shipped before the sanctions were put in place. Therefore, I have no other comment at this time.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that it is not clear that the wine was shipped before.

GOVERNMENT'S SANCTIONS POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): In any event, will the Prime Minister or the Minister ensure that the wine does not appear in B.C. liquor stores? Tomorrow the Premier is meeting Ambassador Babb, who is out making a thank you call. Will the Prime Minister discuss with the Premier the nature of the federal Government's sanctions policy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Stranger in the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Remember, there is no supplementary.

Mr. Mulroney: Let Hansard show that the NDP responded with affection.

Mr. Gauthier: With surprise.

Mr. Mulroney: I believe that the policy of the Government of Canada with regard to the actions of the Government of South Africa is well known. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, I, and others have articulated on many occasions that we are in the process of putting in place further sanctions to demonstrate the revulsion of all Canadians with regard to the policy of apartheid. The position of the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada is well known to all Canadians, including Premiers.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER CLEANUP PLAN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Last week the Minister released the plan for the cleanup of toxic chemicals moving into the Niagara River from the dump sites. When can the people in the Niagara Peninsula expect the cleanup of the toxic chemicals to begin?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I assume the Hon. Member for Davenport has read the Niagara River Toxic Management Plan. That report states that by July, 1987, we hope to be able to set targets and schedules for the actual cleanup of the river based on the scientific information we are seeking through the process put in train.

START OF OPERATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister be less vague and give us a specific date? In May of this year in this House he said: "We are to begin immediately to clean up the toxins in the Niagara River from the dump sites". Rather than postponing until next July, could he tell us exactly when the cleanup operation will begin?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I just said that the four jurisidictions concerned, New York, Ontario, the Government of the United States and that of Canada, have mobilized their scientific resources to monitor the river, to assess the extent of the pollution, to identify the specific pollution sources, and to quantify the relative amounts of toxins going into the river from all sources. By July, 1987, we hope to be able to set a specific date by which we will achieve the cleanup.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—UNITED STATES ACTIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, for whom the NDP does indeed have affection this week because on Monday, at the United Nations General Assembly, Canada voted to endorse the World Court decision condemning United States terrorist attacks and mining of the harbours of Nicaragua.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heap: That is for you, Mr. Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister now assure this House that he will call on his good friend, President Reagan, to stop funding any more terrorist attacks on Nicaragua? Will he warn El Salvador and Honduras that if they continue to allow their territories to be used for these attacks of the President on Nicaragua, Canada will cut off bilateral aid to them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will call on my good friend, Ambassador Stephen Lewis, to continue to represent Canada with the degree of independence and effectiveness with which he has done so at the United Nations. I believe that an examination of Canada's voting record over the last few years at the U.N. will indicate an unusual, and perhaps unprecedented, degree of independence at all times. It is our judgment that it is important for us to assert that independence and sovereignty in all fora, including the U.N. There will be other occasions for us on real grounds to do that. Our alliances and friendships and our support of common values are not in question, but the independence of Canada shall be constantly asserted by this Government at all times.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISER MEET VICE-PRESIDENT OF NICARAGUA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the sentiments which the Prime Minister has expressed. I hope he can dispel the rumour which has arisen today that he is alleged to have snubbed the Vice-President of Nicaragua, Sergio Ramirez, by refusing to meet with him. It is suggested that perhaps our Prime Minister does not want to encourage any more displeasure from Mr. Reagan. Will the Prime Minister dispel that rumour by announcing very soon that within this year he will arrange a meeting with Vice-President Sergio Ramirez of Nicaragua?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have to dispel any rumour. I set out the policy of the Government of Canada in regard to Central America quite clearly in a speech to the Hemispheric Press Association in Vancouver in September. I believe that was a fairly straightforward and appropriate approach which I understand was commented upon by other Members of this House.

The Government of Canada, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has constantly been available to meet with leaders from all walks of political life. We, of course, remain available to do so with courtesy with anyone who is interested in visiting us.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

RESIGNATION OF ANTONIO ARCANGEL FROM HUMAN RIGHTS TRIBUNAL

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Earlier this week allegations were made in this House with regard to the integrity and qualifications of a member of the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal, one Antonio Arcangel. Has the Minister had an opportunity to investigate those allegations? If so, what has his investigation revealed?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to consider the matter. Today I received a telegram from Antonio Arcangel in which he indicated that he is withdrawing his name from the list of members of the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal because " . . . Ms. Sheila Copps' unfair remarks and unjust allegations have seriously impaired my ability to serve effectively as a member of such a Tribunal".

Mr. Axworthy: Good.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have accepted his decision in that regard.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Did you ask for his resignation?

Mr. Gauthier: That's phoney.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why don't you clean up your act?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That's an assassination.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You asked for his resignation, that's what.

Mr. Mazankowski: Come on!

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHY GASOLINE PRICES INCREASED ONLY IN QUEBEC

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but in his absence, perhaps I may direct it to the Prime Minister or the Acting Minister.

Point of Order—Mr. Gauthier

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Conservative Caucus bragged that they managed to stop the two-cent increase in postal rates announced by one of our Crown corporations, Canada Post. Meanwhile, another Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, raised the price of gas on the Quebec market by two cents a litre.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister: why the inconsistency? Why, in the case of Canada Post, did the Conservative Caucus get terribly upset and block the increase, and why is Petro-Canada, also a Crown corporation, allowed to increase the price of gas by two cents a litre, and to do so—and this is particularly outrageous—only in the Province of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have explained to the Hon. Member, there is no constitutional authority for the federal Government to set prices. That is a fact; that is the reality. We have to live with that. We have a responsibility to ensure a competitive market, which we are trying to do to the best of our ability. If the Hon. Member has any evidence that the market is being manipulated in some fashion to the detriment of consumers, let us know and we will act immediately.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REVIEW CERTAIN INCREASES SUGGESTED BY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has a responsibility to monitor this kind of thing. There is nothing in the Canadian Constitution, however, that says a Government cannot tell a Crown corporation that falls under its jurisdiction: You can't raise your prices. So again, I want to ask the Minister, and it seems to be the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, no connection with consumer protection: Why is the Government so inconsistent? They stopped a two-cent increase in postal rates proposed by a Crown corporation, but they refuse to take action when another Crown corporation raises the price of its gas.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the Liberal Government established Petro-Canada it said the company should operate in the commercial market-place as if it was a commercial corporation. As such it is under the jurisdiction of the Competition Act which is there to ensure that Petro-Canada, Ultramar, or anyone else acts in a proper fashion.

I repeat, if the Hon. Member has any evidence that Petro-Canada or anyone else is not operating in compliance with the Competition Act, let us know and we will take action.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby, one question, please.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

STATUS OF ENGLISH IN RCMP

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. A recent report of the Official Languages Commissioner and many people at Division C have condemned the administration of the RCMP by saying that, for all practical purposes, English is virtually the only language of work at Headquarters. My question is this: What action will the Minister take to put an end to this discrimination, not to say this unacceptable racism, on the part of the RCMP?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have already asked my colleague the Sollicitor General to present to me as soon as possible an action plan to ensure that the bilingualism objectives for this agency will be met in the prescribed time limits.

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF TELEGRAM READ BY MINISTER IN HOUSE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) referred to a telegram he received from Mr. Arcangel. Since he read from that telegram I request that it be now tabled.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Wait a second. Your Whip has already spoken.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Before you table it. When the hon. gentleman tables it, will he say whether he asked for that resignation.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this is highly unusual. I will simply say that I did not ask for this resignation—

Mr. Garneau: Somebody else did.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —and I am glad to table the telegram.

I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) should take care in using the protection of this House in making allegations concerning citizens of this country.

Some Hon. Members: You should, too.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is not becoming, John.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister wishes to table the document and has done so.

PRIVILEGE

RELEASE OF INFORMATION BY MINISTER PRIOR TO INTRODUCTION IN HOUSE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier today the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) called a press conference and provided detailed information regarding a Bill which had not yet been introduced in this House. In the information presented to journalists there was an indication that a Bill had been introduced. It went on to detail very specific amendments prior to any Member of Parliament having an opportunity to see the Bill and review its contents. I simply bring this to your attention and ask that you examine the information presented at the press conference to determine whether or not there has been a breach of the privileges of every Member of this House.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as those of us who have been here for some time are aware, the Standing Orders exist to cover the basic operations of the House. In addition to that, however, there are numerous practices which are unwritten but nevertheless essential to the proper operation of the House. One of those practices, which at least this Government applies as a matter of courtesy, is to give the Opposition advance warning of the Government's intentions. We do not have to do that according to the Standing Orders but we do it. In keeping with that tradition, and in trying to maintain decorum and order in the House, as well as a certain amount of respect for each other's opinions, I arranged for a representative of the NDP and representatives of the Liberal Party to be briefed on the Bill at ten o'clock this morning in advance of our introducing it. I thought it was a matter of courtesy so that they could respond to it. The net effect of that courtesy was that they were able to assemble various techniques to prevent us from introducing the Bill.

If it is the decision that we should not extend that courtesy to the Opposition any longer, that we should just sneak up on them so to speak, then so be it. However, the institution will lose. I question whether the House Leader of the NDP thinks it is right, after we extended the courtesy of briefing his official critic, to use that information to try to frustrate the Government in its attempt to expose this legislation to the public.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the House that the Government gave notice on the Order Paper, on November 4, that this Bill was forthcoming.

Mr. Andre: Any day.

Mr. Gauthier: If the Minister will listen, we had notice 48 hours ago. The second point is that until the House has pronounced itself on whether the Bill will be read the first time or not, I do not think the Minister has the right to prejudice that decision which we made today.

Mr. Andre: I just want to make it clear, lest there be some misinterpretation, that except for members of the Opposition who were briefed this morning, no one else has been given a copy of the Bill and there was no intention that anyone else would get a copy. The legislation we would like to introduce and expose to the public if we can is, as I have said in this House on many occasions, essentially the same as the draft Bill exposed to the public on June 27. The fine tuning we talked about is relatively modest. The Bill has not been shown to anyone else except to members of the Opposition as a matter of courtesy, which apparently they do not want.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened with interest to the exchange and I think it would be appropriate to consider the matter carefully and return to the Chamber with comments at an appropriate time. The Chair will be in touch with Hon. Members.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the usual business question. I wonder if the Government House Leader could inform the House what Bills he intends to call tomorrow. As well, given that the House is not sitting next week, can he give us the agenda for November 17?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. Today we will continue with Bill C-17, the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, followed by Bill C-14, the Excise Tax Act, followed by Bill C-16, amendments to the House of Commons Act. If we conclude with those, we will move to the unemployment insurance Bill.

POINTS OF ORDER

PETITIONS—ALLEGED MISREPRESENTATION BY MEMBERS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have reason to believe that the actual wording of the petition tabled by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr.

McCurdy) varies quite considerably from the language used by the Hon. Member when he presented it. I was unable to raise a point at that time, although I was skeptical about the wording he was using, because I was unable to get a copy of the petition which I now have. I want to point out that according to the electronic transcript, the Member said: "The petitioners protest as well the fact that this legislation is a product of American blackmail". Very close examination of the petition gives no indication whatsoever that the petitioners said any such thing, and I believe that the Hon. Member has probably unwittingly misled the House and misrepresented his petitioners. I would ask if the Speaker would be kind enough to review the "blues" and tomorrow's Hansard, and the petition, to see what representation we should make and what we should do in the way of ensuring honesty and courtesy in the House.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. At the same time as you are examining the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) and the wording therein and the words he used in presenting the petition, I would also draw your attention to the words used by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) who stated very clearly, according to the "blues": "They point out that it bears particularly upon the aged and infirm and upon any who needs drugs on an ongoing basis and that the profits will go primarily to the United States and not Canada". I have examined the petition, the wording of these petitions all being the same, and those words are not contained in that petition.

Mr. Keeper: They are not all the same.

Mr. Lewis: We have not had a chance to get all of them and I say with specific reference to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), that when he presented his petition he said very clearly: "The petitioners point out that the Government has caved in to the lobbying of multinational corporations". That is not in the wording of the said petition. I would ask you to examine that as well.

Now we go to the petition presented by the Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) who has recently returned to the House from an unfortunate experience in British Columbia. He says: "The petition states that it is on the subject of the Government proposal to harm severely senior citizens—". That is not in the petition: "—and many other Canadians by providing for unlimited increases in drug prices". Those words are not in the petition either. He goes on to take a shot at my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), and says the people of that riding are outraged. Those words are not in the petition either.

There is nothing more basic to our democratic tradition than presenting a petition from the people of the country. For a Member of Parliament to get up in the House and misrepresent deliberately or unwittingly what petitioners say in writing is an absolute outrage. I would ask that you examine what was said on flights of fancy and compare it to what is very clearly written and brought forward by the petitioners. If you find, as I have, that there has been a complete variance, I would ask and suggest that it is appropriate that those Members apologize to the House.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It is interesting that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) should be getting up again to try to stall, prevent and thwart the wishes of Members of Parliament who wish to present petitions to the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: We are trying to hold you guys accountable.

Mr. Murphy: It was interesting that before the lunch break the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was trying to insinuate that he should have prior access to all petitions that are presented in the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. That is absolutely incorrect. All I asked, and all I sought—and you were in the chair—was to look at the petitions which were to be deposited on the Table.

Mr. Keeper: No, you did not.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The point that is being debated here, to which the Chair must address its attention, is whether Members, at the introduction of their petitions, went beyond what in fact was the substance of the petitions when describing those petitions. I would ask Hon. Members, all of whom have the right to make a contribution in this debate, to confine their remarks to that issue.

That is the issue with which the Chair must deal. Certainly the Chair is not assisted by Members wandering away from that particular central point. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, in his point of order the Parliamentary Secretary talked about a number of clauses and other concerns. He said that the petition itself does not mention pensioners. That may be true, but the petition does say that the measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. I submit that many people across this country to whom this applies are indeed pensioners. I know for a fact that the people who signed the petition that I presented in the House were pensioners from my riding. An Hon. Member certainly has the right to rise in the House and say he is speaking on behalf of pensioners.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that we were referring to blackmail by the United States. That may be a term which he finds offensive, but the petition itself states: "The proposed changes are another example of Canadian Government concessions to the United States, at the expense of average Canadians, in the free trade negotiations".

Mr. Lewis: Where is the word "blackmail"?

Mr. Murphy: The point I am making is that there are clauses in the petition which directly relate to the statements made by members of the New Democratic Party caucus in presenting these petitions on behalf of their constituents. They have the right not to read word for word what is in the petition, but to follow the themes that are presented in the petition. For example, quite often those who would need to use prescription drugs on an ongoing basis are pensioners, and that this issue is something that we and the people who signed the petition deem to be related to the Government concessions on the matter of the free trade talks.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I thought it was a longstanding practice in the House that a Member who has not debated a motion or resolution could not get a copy of the preliminary transcript, which is better known as the "blues". In the past I wanted to know what some Member said in the House and attempted to get the "blues". I was told that another Member is not allowed to see them before they were sent to the Member who made the statement in the House.

I have been watching this debate very closely and I noticed that the Hon. House Leader is in full possession of the "blues", referring to a debate that just took place.

Mr. Mazankowski: No.

Mr. Prud'homme: Not the House Leader, but the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. I apologize to the Hon. House Leader.

I do not know where they are now but the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader was in full possession of the "blues" dealing with something that took place moments ago. I have always been led to believe in the past that this was not allowed because the "blues" belonged to the Member until they were released.

Of course, now we have television and this can be revised. However, while this is a serious matter, if there is a more furious debate in the future, it may be beneficial for the Speaker, who is held in esteem by all Members of the House, to take this into consideration or rule today on the propriety of a Member being in possession of the "blues" of another Member.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps this is something you may want to examine in view of my hon. friend's point that we now have the benefit of television in the House. One can easily recall that particular moment on the television screen and then inscribe it and we would have the same thing. I think you might want to take that into account, Mr. Speaker, when you consider this matter.

I appreciate the fact that I have already spoken once on this matter, but the key to our argument is that there are two very important words in a petition which is presented, "humbly showeth". If one says: "I am presenting a petition which humbly showeth—", and the petition, in writing, shows what the petitioners mean, then it should not be misrepresented in the House. The point I am making, and the point I think the Chair should zero in on, is whether or not when a Member of Parliament presents a petition, he or she should stick strictly to the wording in the petition which the petitioners themselves have signed and not go off on a flight of fancy.

I have no difficulty whatsoever with Hon. Members presenting petitions. However, I do think if petitioners sign something and point to the prayer when they sign it—and, after all, we have had some discussion on whether or not that prayer has to be on every page—then anyone who comes into this Chamber and alleges blackmail in writing, had better be darn sure there is blackmail in writing and it is not just an allegation or flight of fancy.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to join in this debate because I think this is a matter of utmost seriousness and importance. When a Member of this Parliament rises on a Bill the principle of which we are debating, we are all subject to puffing on a number of points. However, when I rise and speak on behalf of my constituents in presenting a petition, it is incumbent upon me in this highest court of the whole land to present it accurately. You practised in the courts for many years, Mr. Speaker, and you know that the court is the search for truth and the judge must be able to rely totally on the words of the officials who have the right to be there, such as lawyers who are representing their clients. A judge cannot tolerate for an instant people misrepresenting the facts. That is a contempt of court for which people can be suspended and disbarred.

I submit that with respect to petitions, it is exactly the same. The New Democratic Party has gotten carried away with its flight of disinformation, as it tends to do, but that should not be done on petitions. In debate, it is one thing, but with respect to petitions we have to be exactly specific. I believe this matter has to be referred to the appropriate committee for follow-up.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Hon. House Leader referred earlier to the "blues" as he was making his presentation. I would ask the Hon. Member to table those "blues" so we can examine the date in terms of the point made earlier that in fact these "blues" only go to Hon. Members' offices. I am simply asking, if he believes in what he is saying, that he simply follow the typical process of the House and provide us with the date.

I want to refer to some of the wording used by my colleagues in the presentation of their petitions. The Hon. Members opposite, particularly the House Leader of the Government, indicated a concern about the language used in the presentation of petitions. I simply want to bring to his attention that if he thinks the language used by my colleagues in the presentation of petitions was strong, he should have heard the language of the people signing the petitions.

Point of Order—Mr. McKinnon

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy House Leader made the claim that when I presented my petition in the House today I misrepresented that petition. He also mentioned something about "sticking to the words". Are we to say, therefore, that the only way to represent a petition accurately is to stick to the exact words, or is there another test, that being the communication of the meaning of the petition?

Mr. Lewis: Oh, I see, the interpretation.

Mr. Keeper: This is the fundamental question of what is "representation" and what is "misrepresentation". I would suggest that the accurate communication of meaning is a fair representation of a petition. With that in mind, I will read from the "blues" which I had to get from the Deputy House Leader, through whatever magical powers he has. These are the words he quoted: "The petitioners point out that the Government has caved in to the lobbying of multinational corporations", and I will read the exact words which were in the petition which was signed by my constituents:

WHEREAS, the proposed changes are another example of the Conservative Government serving the interests of multinational corporations and increasing their profits, at the expense of Canadian consumers.

I ask you to consider, Mr. Speaker, whether that accurately represents the meaning of the words I used, to which the House Leader objects, which were "caved in".

Mr. Lewis: Where are the words "caved in"?

Mr. Keeper: Surely that is what is meant by "serving the interests of the multinational corporations and increasing their profits at the expense of Canadian consumers".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: Surely that is an accurate representation of the meaning.

My hon. friend quoted me as saying: "the Government has caved in to the lobbying of multinational corporations". Every adult in this country knows that the way any interest group gains the attention of Government and gets the policy it wants from Government, is through a process which is commonly known as "lobbying". How else does the Hon. Member imagine that those people who signed this petition think the Government arrived at its conclusion? The petition states, wherein the proposed changes are another example of the Conservative Government serving the interests of multinational corporations, increasing their profits, at the expense of ordinary Canadians.

I suggest that what I said in this House, Mr. Speaker, accurately represents the meaning of this petition. To the extent that those were the very words the Hon. Member himself used when he evaluated my words in this House, when he talked about misrepresentation and misleading, surely the same standard of test should be applied to him and his description of what I did and the way I conveyed the meaning in these documents.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I too feel honour bound to take part in the debate. As all Hon. Members of this House know, there are times when we must, on behalf of our constituents, table a petition in the House of Commons with which we may or may not agree. It may be something to which we are fundamentally opposed, but our constituents have asked us to submit a petition on their behalf. I submit that if we are allowed to stray from the wording of the petition we are tabling, we could undermine our constituents by adding or detracting from their statement. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has made the point very adequately. I only submit this, Mr. Speaker, because I am sure you have had the experience, as I have, and as have all Hon. Members here, that when you submit a petition you do not agree with, you are duty bound to do so because your constituents have asked you to submit that petition.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I regret I was not present to hear the initiation of this debate. I listened very carefully to the intervention of my hon. colleague moments ago when he suggested certain problems might be created if we are tabling petitions with which we disagree. I would hasten to point out I could not agree more strongly with petitions which were tabled this morning.

I would like to mention that I understand that it is an abrogation of the rules of the House for someone to have acquired the "blues" in advance of their acquisition by the Hon. Member whose speech or utterances are recorded therein. I think that is a matter which should be looked into. However, it is my understanding that in the proffering of a petition Hon. Members ought to avoid repeating every word contained in the petition. That is a principle to which I tried very hard to adhere. In doing so I tried to paraphrase the contents of the petition in order to spare the House the unnecessary consumption of time. When I saw a phrase in the petition which states: "Whereas the proposed changes are another example of Canadian Government concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotations", I could only think of one word to substitute for and summarize that phrase. That word was "blackmail".

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have heard enough of this nonsense. I simply say to the Chair with the greatest of respect that the duty of the Speaker in this regard, and I would like to go back to first principles, is with respect to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). I think out of their own mouths members of the New Democratic Party have condemned themselves and, quite frankly, have pointed out that what they said was not what was contained in the petitions.

I would also bring to the attention of the Chair that it is your duty, Sir, only to find a prima facie case, not to determine the matter. If Your Honour finds that there is a prima facie case of breach of privilege, and Members opposite have surely indicated with their own words that there is a prima facie case, then with the greatest of respect to the Chair it is your duty, Sir, to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that it may be investigated and so that a judgment on the Members' conduct can be made followed by censure or absolution.

To you, Mr. Speaker, I say enough of this nonsense. I honestly submit that Your Honour should refer the matter and let us be done with it.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, surely what we are dealing with here is a question of form and of proper procedure rather than a question of privilege. I would ask you, Sir, if you would investigate the rulings, and if there were not rulings then at least the requests, of former Speaker Mr. Lloyd Francis concerning a number of petitions presented in a similar manner by members of the New Democratic Party concerning the Crow issue. I believe at that time we were requested not to read out petitions but, rather, to summarize them, giving the gist of them. I ask Your Honour to review the earlier rulings and requests of a former Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious I should rise more often in the Chamber if Your Honour has a form of amnesia concerning the riding I represent.

Quite frankly, I was here this morning when these petitions were presented. I understand the reasons that they were presented. Frankly, I was amazed that someone representing the leadership of my Party did not rise, not to protest the first protest raised, but to protest the editorial comments concerning the petitions. I do not have to read the "blues", although they have been referred to. As far as I am concerned, I agree with my friend, the Hon. Member for North Vancouver—Burnaby (Mr. Cook). It is not the "blues" with which we are concerned but the fact that any person watching these proceedings will be totally blue and depressed at what has taken place here during the last half-hour. Not one Member, other than the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), referred to the Standing Order concerning petitions, which is Standing Order 106. In particular I refer to Standing Order 106(2) which states that every petition shall contain a clear, proper and respectful prayer. How in the devil can one have a respectful prayer if a great many editorial pejoratives are put forward?

The other point I wish to make is that Standing Order 106(6) states that Members presenting petitions shall be answerable that they do not contain impertinent or improper matter.

I think Your Honour should consider this issue so that we can avoid this type of farce in the future. This will ensure that petitions will be factual and that editorial comments from Hon. Members will not be permitted, in which case the petition should not be read.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has listened carefully to the representations, some reflective and some vigorous, which Hon. Members have made. It is appropriate for me to consider the matter with some care and return to the Chamber at an appropriate time.

The Chair is also concerned about the issue raised by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). Certainly, the practice at one time was very clear. Use of the "blues" was not to be made in the Chamber. At one time the "blues" were not to be given to another Member until the Member involved had a chance to scan the record. That is probably a matter that ought to be discussed among Members since with electronic recording that particular practice may not be as acutely necessary as perhaps it once was. However, the Chair is not making any ruling or decision on that point but indicates that through the appropriate process I will ask Hon. Members to discuss the matter further.

With respect to the debate on this issue, it is important that members of the public who watch the proceedings of the Chamber ought to realize that the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) raised what was a perfectly appropriate point of order. It was not a question of privilege but a point of order. The point of order is that he feels that those presenting petitions earlier in the day had said more about them and more about the contents of them than was in fact contained in them. That is the issue that is before the Chair. That is the issue that the Chair will consider. After having carefully considered the petitions and what was said, and if it is the sense in fact that the introductory remarks went beyond what the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) clearly points out are strict words in the rules, then the Chair will rule accordingly.

I thank Hon. Members for their interventions. I know that the Hon. Members who presented petitions this morning are reflecting views that Canadians have expressed to them. These petitions are most appropriately brought to the Chamber. Those views, of course, must be vigorously espoused, as I think all Members will agree they were. The question is, was some of that vigour earlier today, perhaps on occasion, excessive? The Chair will consider that matter and come back to the Chamber to rule on the matter. I thank all Hon. Members for their interventions.

APPROPRIATENESS OF QUESTIONS—MATTERS BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. While you are reflecting on the previous issue, I ask you to consider something that has been developing over the past little while with regard to questions asked in the House that have a bearing on committee work that is going on. Citation 357 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition clearly outlines certain limitations on the putting of questions. I quote from the citation which states:

Point of Order—Mr. Mazankowski

In putting a question a member must confine himself to the narrowest limits.

One of the limits has to do with subsection (hh) which states:

—seek information about proceedings in a Committee which has not yet made its report to the House.

In the past few weeks there have been occasions in the House on issues with respect to certain appointments to, in particular, the Human Rights Committee, when Members have raised questions about appointments and their reference to committees. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 103 provides for a review of all Order in Council appointments made by the appropriate committee.

The point I wish to make and ask Your Honour to consider is with respect to whether questions such as this are in order when they are before or have the opportunity of being before the appropriate committee and when they are presented in the House of Commons. I can refer Your Honour to some specific examples in this regard. The first is found at page 426 of Hansard of October 16, a question raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). Another example appears in Hansard of October 29 on Page 856 where a question was raised by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). Yesterday, a question was raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), and that question appears at page 1097 of Hansard. In Hansard of October 28, a similar question appears on page 819. Similar questions appear on page 855 of Hansard of October 29 and page 907 of October 30.

I raise this matter, Mr. Speaker, only to seek your guidance for all Members of the House, since I believe this matter could establish certain precedents which may not be in keeping with the spirit of Beauchesne's Citation No. 357 which in effect is the written rule by which we guide ourselves in the House, along with Standing Order 103.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the point made by the Government House Leader. I have some concerns about his reference to Beauchesne's Citation 357 and particularly about his indication that issues that have the opportunity to be before a committee ought not to be raised in the House. I suggest that an issue that has the opportunity to be before a committee could be almost any issue. Any issue may be before a committee or may be referred to a committee some time in the future.

The House Leader's suggestion that issues that have the opportunity to be before a committee should not be raised by Hon. Members during Question Period seems to me to be totally out of order and inappropriate. We would not have any opportunity at all to raise issues in the House, particularly since the new Standing Orders adopted as a result of the reform committee suggest that any committee may take up any issue it deems appropriate whatever its terms of reference.

It concerned me to hear the House Leader suggest that we ought not ask questions about an issue that may have the opportunity to be before a committee. Perhaps I will seek clarification from him. Did he mean what I have just indicated or was that simply an elaboration which he had not intended?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member raising the point and I might just clarify it. I was looking at the matter in the context of Standing Order 103 which deals with the review of certain Order in Council appointments. If he were to examine the examples I have given he would see that in most cases those particular issues are before their respective committees.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I find this interesting but I have difficulty following the logic of the Government House Leader. Indeed, I am not familiar with all the citations from Beauchesne's quoted by the Minister but I do think the spirit of them is to prevent repetition in Parliament. I believe they apply most particularly to legislation.

If a piece of legislation is before a committee, I could see the argument being made that that same subject matter could be the object of some duplication and therefore should not be raised in the House. However, I do not understand the argument of the Hon. House Leader when he says that Orders in Council could perhaps be the object of study in committee.

Personally, I feel that an individual's capacity to comply with the requirements of a job to which he has been appointed could be before a committee but the matter at hand, which is whether or not the individual in question was the object of a criminal investigation or something of that nature, is in the public domain and can be raised. The behaviour of that individual, for example, could be the object of questions in the House. I cannot see how we could avoid asking those questions.

I would ask for clarification from the Minister as to what he means when he is talking about Order in Council appointments. The appointment itself is before a committee, not the behaviour of an individual at his job.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, my point was to seek your guidance and clarification on this issue. I merely cited some examples to try to make the point. On reflection, I believe you will find that in many of those cases the issues raised on the floor of the House of Commons are issues that are currently under consideration in respective Standing Committees.

I agree that there must be a certain amount of latitude. I believe past practices would reveal that, notwithstanding the fact that there may be a piece of legislation before a Standing Committee, questions are not necessarily prevented from being asked in the House. That is quite normal. However, I think the practice has been increasing and if it is considered to be appropriate, that is fine. I simply raised it with you, Sir, to seek your guidance and clarification to guide us in the future.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have one brief point to make in addition to the points that have been well made by Members on all sides of the House. The time of Question Period is valuable. Members from all sides of the House who wish to ask a question and hold the Government accountable may do so during that 45-minute period. If there are things such as the appointments review, which all Members of the House have agreed would be more properly dealt with in committee, it seems to me we would be better advised to use the time of the committee rather than the time of Question Period.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have contributed to the debate on this point of order, and I take with very good grace the comments of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). The Chair might comment on the definition of a precedent. A precedent is something that happened once upon a time and that everyone decided to follow. Looking at a precedent in legal terms, it is usually the consequence of a decision made after argument has been proffered to the Chair or a judge on a certain point.

I would point out to Hon. Members that just because something may turn up in the record of this Chamber which seems to abridge the rules does not of course mean that it creates a precedent. It may be something that slips by because the Speaker did not notice it or the Speaker might very deliberately let something slip by, given what was going on at that moment. Sometimes, as Hon. Members know, it is advisable for the Speaker to not hear something or to let something go.

I do not want Hon. Members to think that if something has happened and is recorded in the minutes of this Chamber, it necessarily creates a precedent. The Chair is sometimes in difficulty but sometimes guided on occasions when there has been a ruling made by a Speaker on a point that has been argued and which is apposite to the point that is causing the concern for Hon. Members.

The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister will know that I have not at this point been able to look at the references which have been put before me, but I will look at them. I am aware of some of them in any event because there were some questions which gave the Chair some momentary difficulty.

I might just make the following observation out of caution and out of concern for good manners and as much fairness as we can bring to bear in our deliberations, without impinging on the duty all Members have to speak fearlessly on matters of public interest. There is concern on the part of some Hon. Members in the Chamber about the fact that certain people, who may or may not be about to be appointed but who will go through the new reform process whereby their qualifications will be examined by all Hon. Members, are mentioned in Question Period, sometimes not in a complimentary way. Perhaps that is something Members will want to consider. In any event, I appreciate the comments. I repeat that Members should not think that because the Chair may choose to let something go under certain circumstances in the interests of good order, common sense, and a happy relationship here, that necessarily creates a precedent. The Chair does not consider that it does.

Mr. Murphy: I rise on a point of order and one that you have referred to when speaking in regard to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). It was mentioned by the Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) that it was apparent that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) was indeed using the "blues" of this House. It was my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that you did not say you would look at that matter, but that it was a matter that Members should look at. I would suggest that it is matter that you should look at.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can allay any fears. The Chair will look at that matter. The resolution of it may well involve a discussion with the Members. I take seriously the point that was raised a few minutes ago.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, may I seek unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Bills for the purpose of introducing, under the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), an Act to amend the Patent Act.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has asked for unanimous consent to revert to an earlier proceeding. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to lend my support today to the Government's decision to terminate the petroleum and gas revenue tax, better known as the PGRT. From the outset I should say that I do not know a heck of a lot about gas and petroleum production. There is no gas or petroleum production in my riding. There is no gas or petroleum production in the Province of New Brunswick. We do have a company which is well known both nationally and internationally that refines these products. I have always believed that what is good for one part of the country is good for other parts of the country. Therefore, I am delighted to be able to say a few words on this Bill.

About a year and a half ago I had occasion to visit the oil sands operation in northern Alberta with the Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). I had a chance to see first hand this gargantuan operation. When we were students in high school we heard and read about this operation, but you have to be there to appreciate its size.

For a while it was a booming operation. In the City of Fort McMurray with a population of around 35,000 over 7,000 were from Atlantic Canada. This means that we in Atlantic Canada have traditionally gone elsewhere to seek employment. We have travelled to central Canada and western Canada. Therefore, when I say what is good for one part of Canada is good for the other, that in great measure and essence is what I mean.

The heady days were short lived. Unfortunately, many of those from the Maritimes who went out west to seek employment and new opportunity had to return. As we now know, the National Energy Program was a disaster. It was a disaster for the West, and a disaster for the oil producers.

The prime effect of the PGRT was western alienation. However, it was not the sole effect. Equally appalling was the signal that it gave to industry. The Government collected taxes from western oil producing companies—collected on revenue not on profit—then proceeded to turn this money over to finance oil exploration in a different area of the country. This was saying, in effect, that you who are successful in generating revenue with oil are not smart enough to know where to search for oil. But we are, so we will appropriate the funds to do so.

This signals to industry that a successful and regionally critical industry had better watch out, because Ottawa will want a piece of that action, and will invent new ways to get it. That type of taxation also creates disincentives to growth. What business will want to expand and generate revenue when the very act of doing so will increase the tax burden? The thinking behind this tax was that a strong and profitable business can be abused by Ottawa. It means that they will get little support from the average Canadian voter. This is a very dangerous thought, and gives little credit to the sense of fairness held by the average Canadian. Sure, we do want industry to pay its fair share, but only what is fair. This is what Canadians want. Industry creates jobs. Industry creates employment. It needs incentive and not disincentive.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) is helping to prove that when it comes to sensible and fair treatment of the oil companies, the Western Accord is far superior to the National Energy Program. Continuous improvements will indeed bring us closer to national reconciliation.

Hon. Members know that the price of oil on international markets has created a climate in which the oil producing companies in western Canada need cash flow simply to survive this temporary world-wide situation. This situation was not created in Canada, but Canadians have to help to rectify it.

The House has been asked to approve legislation which will accelerate the phase-out in direct response to the immediate needs of the oil industry. I do not think that this is too much to ask to help our friends in a time of need.

Simultaneously, two areas of concern are being addressed in Bill C-17. First, the repeal of PGRT, which will be beneficial to the oil industry retroactive to September 30. Second, in the continuation of the spirit of the Western Accord, this legislation continues the process of healing the rift between the energy producing areas and the federal Government in the area of revenue and taxation. It is important to note that the federal Government's revenue expectations are down because of the fall in world oil prices. Although the removal of the PGRT will result in a further drop in federal revenues of $150 million, the Government has seen fit to finally shelve this offensive tax.

Most experts agree that the present price for oil will not remain low. Indeed we have seen the change in the leadership within OPEC and the signal which Saudi Arabia sent out to oil producing countries. Therefore oil producing areas of Canada can look forward to more prosperous times, and we hope it will be soon. It is a task of the federal Government, along with all others concerned, to ensure that our oil companies are still operating and functioning when that happens.

The removal of the tax will greatly improve confidence in the Canadian oil and gas sector. As we know, it is the real catalyst to economic prosperity in western Canada. It is very important to all Canadians that main industrial sectors in all regions of the country have equal chances to contribute to the over-all economic picture.

With petroleum products, agriculture, lumber, manufacturing, and fishing, we have diversification that is the envy of much of the world. We in Government must work to keep all these sectors strong and growing. One way to do it—and I believe it is a critical point—is by ensuring that no sector is asked to provide more than its fair share of taxes to Government. The reasoning is simple; not only will the industry itself be hurt, but all sectors will live under the threat of an inequitable tax system, which destroys confidence and goodwill among all industries.

The public must be made aware that we are not granting windfall profits and benefits to the oil and gas sector. We are simply returning to them what was theirs in the first place. For the first time in many years we have a Government which is actually doing something about fairness in the tax system at both the corporate level and personal level. As consultations proceed, the Department of Finance will bring before the House tax reform proposals which are of the same cloth as this action. That is what Canadians want.

We see a Government which cares enough to act, not just listen. Under the terms of the Western Accord, the PGRT was scheduled for phase out in 1988. This was not good enough, and the Government was willing to bring this action to the forefront, proving again that it is able to deal with the needs of all Canadians when the need arises. I am proud to be associated with a Government which has this attitude, takes the initiative, and responds in a responsible and determined fashion.

As the Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi, my hon. colleagues may wonder what stake my constituents have in the matter. I alluded to it earlier. But all Canadians stand to benefit from decisions which lend strength and fairness to an industry as important as the oil industry. It is within the interest of New Brunswickers to see a strong and prosperous West. It is with great pride and fellowship that we in the Miramichi watched the world visit Expo 86 at Vancouver. Likewise, it is with trepidation that we watched the oil industry backed into a corner by the National Energy Program of the former Government. We know that such arbitrary policies could be directed toward the East as well as toward the West.

Two weeks ago I attended the opening of the $250 million mill in my riding, the most advanced of its kind in the world. As this new mill becomes the backbone of local economic activity, can I expect to see fairness and well thought policies with regard to the growth of that industry in my area? Yes, of course, I can expect this treatment with the present Government. This is why the repeal of the PGRT means so much to all Canadians from coast to coast, from east to west. It is a signal that industry will be rewarded for excellence, as it should be.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a short comment. I enjoyed the Hon. Member's discourse very much. I congratulate him on what he said and the manner in which he said it.

The Hon. Member was not in the House when the PGRT matter was brought in, so he did not hear the very strong debates by Hon. Members from Alberta and from other parts of the country against it. It was an unfair tax under the Liberals, and it is an unfair tax under the Progressive Conservatives. It was not any better under the Progressive Conservatives than it was under the Liberals. It was a tax on production, the only tax on production in Canada of which I know. It certainly did not apply to hydroelectric production in Ontario or Quebec. I am glad to see it being wiped out. I agree with the Hon. Member that it should have been done immediately. I wish it had never been brought in.

Yesterday I was somewhat amazed by some of the comments of members of the Liberal Party who were party to bringing in this tax which utterly ruined an industry in the Province of Alberta.

Some time ago there was a very strong indication of support for the extension of a pipeline from Montreal into New Brunswick, into the Maritimes. Could the Hon. Member tell us whether there is still quite a demand for a pipeline to deliver oil and gas from the western part of the country through Montreal and into the Maritimes, or has that demand somewhat subsided at the present time?

Mr. Jardine: Madam Speaker, my hon. colleague is quite correct that I was not in the House at the time of the PGRT debate. However, during my visit to the oil producing area of the West that topic came up time and time again. I really had to plead ignorance about it because I did not appreciate its full impact upon the industry. Whatever gathering I was at, whether I was visiting the companies or in a social setting, I heard the topic talked about. Indeed my colleagues from the West whom I accompanied spoke out on the subject. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Athabasca presented his case loud and clear, so we from the East had to become aware of it. I am sorry that I missed the opportunity when it was first raised a few years ago.

With regard to an oil pipeline, while it may not be hitting the headlines at the present time it is something eastern Canada would like to see. It would give those of us in the East an opportunity to benefit from the gas and oil which central and western Canada have been benefiting from for years.

As the Hon. Member will know, petroleum products are more expensive in the East than in the rest of the country, I dare say. With a pipeline, we would like to see not only access to Canadian products but also a drop in the price we are now paying.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this legislation to do away with the PGRT. The PGRT was part of the National Energy Program. This debate gives me the opportunity to remind all Members of the House, but particularly Conservative Members, that contrary to a great deal of the rhetoric to which we have had to listen since the introduction of the National Energy Program about how the NDP and the Liberal Party were as one with respect to it, if Members check the record they will see that the NDP voted against the PGRT. We said that it was an unfair tax and all the other things which members of the Conservative caucus said about it. Yet, year after year after the implementation of the National Energy Program we were subjected to inaccurate charges about our blanket acceptance of the Liberal National Energy Program. That simply is not true. It may have been a very effective political tactic in the West, but it was based on something which was fundamentally false. The PGRT is a good example of just how false those accusations about our blanket support of the NEP were.

In debate dealing with legislation implementing the National Energy Program I said that it was a mistake to speak about western Canada as though it was a homogeneous political society. I said that because often Members, particularly Conservative Members from western Canada, said that the National Energy Program was not supported by western Canadians. Yet, there were obviously many western Canadians who supported elements of the National Energy Program, as did the NDP. Many western Canadians thought the 25 per cent backin provision was a good idea. They thought it was a good idea to have more Canadian ownership. They thought it was a good idea to strengthen the role of PetroCan. The point I am making is that there was legitimate difference of opinion among western Canadians about the best energy policies for the country.

During that debate I was bothered to no end by the insistent claim of western Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament that only they represented western Canada with respect to energy policy. They assumed that all western Canadians were in agreement with their every utterance on this subject. That was obviously not the case. It is time for that to be acknowledged by certain Members of the House. Events in recent days have proven me right on that.

During debates on the PGRT and the NEP I often said that when Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament spoke about western Canada they really spoke only about a segment of western Canada, only about a segment of the energy sector which was congregated in the board rooms in Calgary and Edmonton. I remember claiming that the people in the board rooms in Calgary and Edmonton did not speak for me as the Member of Parliament for Winnipeg—Birds Hill or for others from Manitoba.

The Progressive Conservative Party's definition of "western Canada" was becoming much too narrow. It was preoccupied with the energy sector. It is not bad to focus on that and care about it, but the understanding of Progressive Conservatives of the interests of western Canada was becoming very narrow.

We have seen the fruits of that narrowness of vision in the CF-18 decision. The Progressive Conservative Government believes it is able to respond to the oil and gas sector of Alberta, but it is not able to respond to the legitimate aspirations of the people of Manitoba. Aerospace is a major industry in Manitoba. The people of Manitoba have a merited desire not to have it unraveled and seriously damaged by a federal Progressive Conservative Government decision.

This decision illustrates the narrowness of understanding of western Canada which took root in the Progressive Conservative Party during the debate on the National Energy Program and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax. It was at that time that the interests of provinces such as Manitoba began to be excluded from the Progressive Conservative vision of possibilities for western Canada. That exclusion has manifested itself in all kinds of decisions made to the detriment of Manitoba since the election of the Progressive Conservative Government. An example was the immediate deferral of the VIA Rail shop which was to have been built in Manitoba. The continued delay in the ordering of the transcontinental equipment affected Alberta as well as Manitoba and I cannot, therefore, understand why the decision has not been made. Other examples are the cancellation of the manufacturing technology centre in Winnipeg and the continued delay of needed construction of the new Transcona diesel shop.

I could go on at great length, Madam Speaker, but I am sure that you would call me to relevance if I tried to articulate all the ways in which Manitoba has been unrepresented or badly represented since the Progressive Conservative Government took power in 1984. In all sincerity I believe that during the debate on the National Energy Program Progressive Conservatives reached the point of saying "western Canada" when in fact they meant only the oil and gas sector of Alberta. They convinced themselves at that time that they were the only legitimate spokespersons for western Canada and that those of us who may have disagreed with them on certain elements of the National Energy Program, although we agreed with them on others such as the PGRT, did not speak for western Canada. Yet we did speak for western Canada and we speak for western Canada now when we say the Government has not paid attention to the legitimate needs and concerns of the Province of Manitoba on the CF-18 contract. The effect of that decision in western Canada will be far-reaching.

I imagine a great many people in Alberta are concerned about that decision as well. For decades they were told by Progressive Conservative candidates that this kind of thing would happen only under the auspices of the big bad Liberals. If a Progressive Conservative Government were elected that kind of thing would never happen. So what have western Canadians, particularly those in Manitoba, found? They have found that these kinds of things happen under the Conservatives. For years they were told something that was not necessarily true. The worst of it is that they were told this by people who knew it was not necessarily true when they told them. It is for those reasons that I am glad to have had the opportunity in this debate to have said those few words.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, this is a wonderful opportunity to try and set the record straight. I am very pleased that the Hon. Member gave credit to this Government for properly living up to its election promises to the people of western Canada, particularly regarding today's event which is a wake in honour of the death of the National Energy Program.

Does the Hon. Member not recognize that the electorate in western Canada has been pronouncing his party to be the party of reaction and the status quo? Does he not recognize that the Progressive Conservative Government of Canada has been responding to the needs of individual, small enterprise Canadians and workers in the oil fields without any kind of giveaway to the oil companies? Far to the contrary, the abolition of the PGRT is the final discharge of promises made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on July 6, 1984. At that time, in his famous red barn speech, he said the Liberal Government had decimated the western economy through the NEP.

Does the Hon. Member not recognize the total extent of federal financial assistance to western Canada, including Manitoba, over the two years this Government has been in office? Does he not recognize that total federal assistance to agriculture is $4.5 billion compared to $2.8 billion during the last two years of the previous Government? That does not even take into account the $1 billion promised by the Prime Minister a couple of weeks ago. Does the Hon. Member not recognize the relief a western Canadian farmer now experiences when he fills his 100-gallon tank with diesel fuel? An Alberta farmer paid $115 for that fuel in September, 1984. He will now pay about $40. That will save a farmer with 1,200 acres over $5,000 annually on his fuel bill.

I wish to leave the Hon. Member a little time to respond to my questions but I would just ask him whether he will not acknowledge that this Government has done more for western Canada in agriculture and in the critical energy field than any Government since that of the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker?

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, very strange claims are being made by the Hon. Member. He claims the people of western Canada have been particularly mean to the NDP of late. I remind him that we got more votes than the Progressive Conservative Party in Saskatchewan. In the most recent Alberta election we made a major breakthrough and elected 16 Members. In Manitoba we were re-elected. We have the possible exception of B.C., which I would not like to exaggerate, but in the three prairie provinces it does not exactly look as if the NDP has been taking a beating.

Mr. Edwards: The farmers of the west have rejected you totally.

Mr. Blaikie: The Member was not listening to the claim I was making. I did claim that the Progressive Conservative Government had lived up to the promises it had made to the oil and gas sector. I never quarrelled with that. What I argued was that that was too narrow a focus if you were interested in responding to the needs of western Canada.

Mr. Edwards: What about the farmers?

Mr. Blaikie: I argued that the Progressive Conservative Government has paid absolutely no attention to Winnipeg. In fact, it has actively harmed its future. I notice the Hon. Member did not get up and try and deny that. That is the point I was making and I wish he would pay more attention in future.

He talked about all this federal money going to the provinces. What about the cut-back in transfer payments to have-not provinces like Manitoba? It is all well and good for him, being from Alberta, to not pay attention to that. However, provinces like Manitoba depend on equalization payments and EPF. What has been the behaviour of his Government in that area? It has looked for each and every way it could possibly find to cut back on transfer payments. Do not give me a lot of crap about how generous his Government has been to Winnipeg because it has not been. The Government's Manitoba Members might as well not even be on that side for all that has happened to Winnipeg since the Government was elected. We have been shafted left, right and centre and it is about time it stopped.

Mr. Edwards: What about the farmers?

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I want to clarify the record for my friend opposite concerning equalization payments. He knows that the Liberal six and five program was the real cutback in transfers to the provinces. At a time when inflation was 12 per cent to 15 per cent, the former Liberal Government cut back to six and five. That was a real cut in transfer payments. What we did a year and a half or so ago was to reduce the increase in the amount being transferred from 7 per cent or 8 per cent to about 5 per cent when inflation was actually 4 per cent. The provinces are still getting much, much more than inflation would call for. As well, Manitoba received a special sweetener, a lump sum, from this Government. So I do not think he is quite correct when he says this Government has not been fair to Manitoba under the equalization program.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I did not have time or I would have reminded the House that the Liberals also sought to undercut federal transfer payments to the provinces. The Hon. Member and I sat on a task force together which recommended the Government not do that. It went ahead and did it anyway. In any event, at that time the Progressive Conservative Party criticized the Government of the day for tampering with those arrangements. Yet it went on, when it became the Government, to tamper with those arrangements and reduce the amount the provinces would otherwise have received had the Government not amended its fiscal arrangements.

As to the special allocation for Manitoba, that was a result of the new formula which had a particularly deleterious effect on Manitoba. It was not some special gift given to Manitoba, it was a special compensation as a result of quirks in the formula which led to a drastic lowering of the money Manitoba would have received had there not been that special measure.

I agree that the Hon. Member is historically correct about what the Liberals did. However, despite the Hon. Member's arguments, when the Conservatives came to power they still proceeded to break their promises that they would not unilaterally change federal-provincial arrangements.

You were not here, Madam Speaker, but I remember the Conservatives spending hours in the House criticizing the Liberal Government for acting unilaterally on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. They reacted as if it were the most heinous sin on earth, but when they became the Government they changed the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements unilaterally.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I want to direct a question to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). I am sorry the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) is not here but I see several Conservative Alberta Members in the House.

I want to return to whether or not the Government fulfilled its so-called promises. Will the Hon. Member remind the House of the attacks the Conservatives made on the energy policies of the Liberal Government when they were in opposition? They attacked the National Energy Program and said that by eliminating the National Energy Program and getting rid of all the regulations to let the market operate, everything would be fine.

The Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) who was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, said that a Conservative Government would create 200,000 jobs in the energy sector, most of them in Alberta. We have seen the opposite, with the loss of 50,000 jobs. Let us get some facts on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) on a short answer.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, of course one could say much about this, but the fact is that there is a great irony in what is happening in western Canada. The Conservatives always argued to let the market-place determine the future of the energy sector and that everything would come up roses if only the Liberal Government did not get involved in that sector. The fact is that the more the market-place has been allowed to operate, the worse the situation in Alberta has become.

I acknowledge that the situation could improve some day. However, during the debate on the National Energy Program, Progressive Conservative Members from that province predicted that all would be well again if we simply let the market-place take its course. Everything is not well again.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, the petroleum and gas revenue tax will probably be remembered by Canadians as one of the worst tax measures ever implemented by a Government. I say this first of all, because the tax was based on corporate revenue, not profits, so there was no connection with the actual ability to pay. Second, it came on top of the whole existing tax structure. Third, it was an important element of the Liberal Government's new energy policy which cost this country so many jobs and so much investment. Fourth, it was the very symbol of confrontation politics as practised by the previous Government in its dealings with the provinces.

Why is a Member from Northern Quebec speaking to this issue today? There are companies doing exploration work in the northwestern part of my riding, and those companies are creating jobs. That is why I rise to speak to a Bill that marks the end of an era of Government intervention in the business of oil companies, the end of a period during which Western Canada has felt alienated by federal policies.

Madam Speaker, I am also very proud of our Government's decision to move the date on which this tax will be eliminated up to October 1, 1986. This shows that our Government has the flexibility to adjust to the needs of Canadians and it also demonstrates our determination to respond effectively to the needs of regions across this country, in East and West, that are facing serious economic problems today. It also reflects the new climate of co-operation and dialogue with the provinces and industry which the Conservative Government managed to create since it came to power in 1984.

Madam Speaker, by immediately eliminating the PGRT, the Government is meeting its commitments in this area, which I would like to mention very briefly.

The commitment to reduce and eliminate Government intervention in the energy sector has been met by replacing a system for setting oil and gas prices with a system that is market-oriented.

The costly and interventionist grants system which guided drilling activity has been replaced. Another commitment made by our Government was to restore investor confidence in Canada by eliminating the 25 per cent retroactive Crown interest in the Canada Lands and by creating Investment Canada.

Another commitment made by our Government was to promote a climate of co-operation between the federal and provincial Governments, and I am thinking of the Western Accord, the Atlantic Accord and the Nova Scotia Agreement.

The commitment to provide a more equitable petroleum revenue tax system was met by this Government by raising the small producer tax credit as of November 1984, and by declaring that production after March 31, 1985 would not be subject to PGRT.

Furthermore, the Government has provided compensation for the PGRT to help companies without taxable income. Tax rates will be reduced as of January 1986, and there will be a $10,000 deduction for persons and companies receiving royalties after January 1, 1986.

Another point is that synthetic production will not be taxable after May 1, 1986. Small producers will benefit from a higher tax credit as of May 1, 1986 and, two more points, Madam Speaker, the $1.5 million retroactive deduction for individuals and companies, and the abolition of the petroleum and gas revenue tax on October 1, 1986.

The Government has honoured its commitments in the energy sector, and the decision was made in co-operation with the provinces. I am confident that the abolition of the PGRT and the political initiatives taken by the provinces will soften the impact which falling world prices may have had on the oil industry.

Another factor is the re-investment of these funds in exploration and development projects which will protect and create jobs in this vital industry.

This past summer, Madam Speaker, I had an opportunity to visit northern Alberta, and I went to Fort McMurray, Norman Wells, and Inuvik in the Sea of Beaufort. I had a chance to meet with workers from Val-d'Or in my riding, about ten of them who went west under the previous administration. They stayed there because they have jobs.

This decision flows from lengthy discussions the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had with spokesmen for sector organizations and major companies who gave the assurance that savings resulting from the abolition of the PGRT will be re-invested in the industry.

Madam Speaker, this amendment will guarantee a fairer tax treatment for quite a number of smaller oil and gas companies which depend on royalties and which were unable to take full advantage of the recent tax credit increase available to them under the provisions of the PGRT legislation. This assistance attests to the leading role played by these companies with respect to development and job creation in certain industries throughout the country.

The Government has repaired the damage done by the national program established in 1980. Madam Speaker, wherever we may come from, including my vast riding of Abitibi, we all know that gas prices have been going up and down like a roller coaster, prices have always been going up and down since the early days of this country, just like a roller coaster.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to this Bill, but I wonder who wrote the speech for the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien). It seems to me he should have checked his notes, which may have been prepared by others, before saying what he did. Basically, what the Hon. Member for Abitibi told us is that his constituents did not get any benefit from the national energy policy.

Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Abitibi what would have happened during the years 1982-83-84 if there had been no national energy policy that made it possible for his constituents, and Canadians across this country, to pay far less for their heating oil than they would have if the market to which he referred had been completely free. We all know, Madam Speaker, that in the North, the price of energy, especially during the winter, has a major impact on the purchasing power of the taxpayer and represents a major expense for the family budget. If the national energy policy had not been in place for several years, Canadians, and especially Canadians in Eastern Canada and the Canadian North who have to spend a substantial part of their budget on energy for heating purposes, would have been in a very tight spot.

I am surprised that the Hon. Member for Abitibi, usually a diligent defender of the interests of his region, took this position in the House today.

Madam Speaker, the national energy policy was a series of measures. Today, we are talking about eliminating the petroleum and gas revenue tax, but this should be seen in its proper context. It was part of a whole. The national energy policy made it possible to promote Canadianization. Without this program, we would never have had so many Canadian enterprises getting involved in petroleum and gas exploration and development. Without our national energy policy, we would not have been able to spend the substantial amounts that were spent on petroleum exploration in the North and in our northern seas. Without the national energy policy and the assistance given energy development, we would never have been able to carry out oil and gas exploration in the East, especially in Newfoundland and other parts of the Atlantic region.

Ever since the Conservative Government, to all intents and purposes, eliminated the national energy policy, drilling rigs operating in the Maritimes have virtually disappeared. A few weeks ago I was in Halifax to deliver a speech and I put some questions to observers and journalists. It seems there is only one drilling platform left in Halifax harbour and it too is about to disappear.

Madam Speaker, another sector to which the Hon. Member for Abitibi did not refer and which has to be tied in with the national energy policy is the fact that the previous administration made a concerted effort to promote a home insulation program which was part of Canada's overall energy policy. In a recent address in Montreal even the present Minister openly admitted that the home insulation effort which was part of the national energy policy now accounts for an annual saving of 17 million barrels. Talk about a saving! This was made possible through the national energy policy.

Madam Speaker, if we were to consider this policy as a whole and prevailing conditions when it was implemented—oil prices were skyrocketing and most observers felt the price of a barrel of oil would go as high as $56 or $60—I think it was normal that a self-respecting Government would intervene and not let multinationals alone set and regulate not only prices but also the over-all economic development policy as well as the canadianization of this industry, most of which was essential to us. These are some of the very significant achievements made through the national energy policy.

So now we have a Conservative Government in office, and they tell us that the only thing that really works is the marketplace.

Madam Speaker, I would like to ask you who creates the market for petroleum products in Canada right now? Is the price set by the Canadian companies? By the Government? By the producers, the smaller oil companies? Certainly not. All policies and prices are determined by a group of ministers from what is called OPEC, who meet in Geneva and say that the price will increase or decrease.

The roller coaster mentioned by the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien) is not the effect of a well-balanced market. It is a monopoly controlled by a small group.

For my part, I have always said in this House, and I am still saying today, that if there is an efficient market, if a large number of producers and consumers are in competition each in their own sector and a fair price is set by producers who are not being forced to sell and buyers who are not being forced to buy, this is what a fair market should be.

However, this is certainly not the case here. That is not what is happening. Ten or fifteen Ministers from OPEC meet and decide that the price will go up or down. Now, our own Government says: As Canadians, we accept that. We have had enough of policies, of prices for consumers, of oil exploration, we are no longer going to bother with all that, we are getting rid of all those instruments.

We shall let the Kuwait Emir, the Arab Sheik, and so on, have their OPEC meetings and set the prices for Canadians. That is so true that this Government has neither the courage nor the political will to influence the decisions of its own Crown corporation, Petro-Canada.

I had some questions today for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), and in his absence, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) replied for him. Why is it that, in a situation where the market is for all practical purposes non-existent in my opinion, our national corporation Petro-Canada has decided to increase the price of gasoline in Quebec by 2 cents a litre even though the price was already higher in Quebec than in other regions of Canada?

The Conservative Government was more than ready to take the credit through its backbenchers for preventing a 2 cents increase in the postal rates. Imagine! At least, that is what the Conservatives said, but the Minister himself stated the same day that, rather than taking effect now, the increase would take place at the end of March. However, that is not the object of my argument. The fact is that we were told that the Conservative caucus could reverse the decision of a Minister to support the plans of a Crown corporation called Canada Post. It seems that the caucus blocked or at least postponed a 2 cents increase in the postal rates.

Yet, at the same time, another Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, is increasing the price of gasoline by 2 cents a litre in the province of Quebec, but this same Conservative caucus says that nothing can be done. These two Crown corporations belong to the same Government, are owned by Canada; in one case, the price increase for postal stamps is being blocked; in the other case, they say: If there has been collusion between the various companies, let the Hon. Member say so, and I will investigate.

However, I am not asking him to investigate, but to make a decision as a shareholder and to tell Petro-Canada, as a Crown corporation: You are not going to get in on this game, you are not going to follow the movement initiated by Ultramar and increase gas prices in Quebec. We are in a situation where we, as Canadians, have no longer any leverage or say in the area of energy. They abolished everything and now they are bragging . . . Madam Speaker, they have the gall to tell us that by getting rid of the PGRT, they are fulfilling an election issue promise.

Madam Speaker, when the prices for crude oil reached $27, then $28, and finally $30 a barrel in Canadian currency, this brought the Canadian Government over $1 billion in revenues. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said: No, we are not going to cut that. But when the price of a barrel of oil went down, the Minister of Finance realized that he would be losing over $150 million in revenues and said: We are going to get rid of it and fulfil our election promise. The only reason this Government is acting now is because the revenues are no longer there; since there are not getting anything anymore, they say: We are going to get rid of the PGRT, short for Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax.

Madam Speaker, this is really laughing at Canadian producers.

I say to this Government: If we want to help Western producers . . . As a consumer from Eastern Canada, I have always maintained, both during and after the election, that the National Energy Policy had a built in adjusting factor. It could work both ways. When the prices were as high as $40 a barrel, the purpose of the National Energy Policy was to reduce slightly the profit margins of multinationals and offer Canadian consumers more equitable prices. But this factor had to play correctly. Now, the Conservatives have destroyed that mechanism so that it can no longer benefit Western producers. They are getting rid of the PGRT. When it brought in a $1 billion, they did not touch it; now they say it is going to cost $150 million. Who will benefit from that? Multinationals will to a great extent. And what is going to happen to small producers, to Canadian producers who took great financial risks? What is going to be done for them? Zilch, or just about! I maintain that if the national energy policy had been allowed to play the role it was supposed to play, today we could have used that policy to provide assistance to producers other than the multinationals or to producers with a daily production of so many barrels, so that at least those Canadian producers who responded to the appeal of the people of this country and the national energy policy, and who took the concept of Canadianization seriously, could be helped today. Now, what did we on this side of the House have to say about that? We must have a national energy policy that can cope fairly and flexibly with rising and falling prices. We cannot expect Western producers to let us take the icing off the cake when prices are high and expect them to take care of themselves when prices drop. What did our party have to say about this? We suggested that the Government should have an energy policy that would guarantee Western producers—I am not referring to the multinationals but to the other producers who contributed to Canadianization—a minimum price for the period when the price of oil declines. That, I think, would have been fair to Western Canada. It would have been fair to Western producers, and especially to companies that rank as average and small producers.

However, this Government believes that our Canadian economy and the price of our petroleum products should be regulated from Geneva or Bern or the countries where OPEC holds its meetings. This Government has washed its hands of the whole situation. It has eliminated every instrument for intervention, so that Western producers are now at the mercy of decisions made by Arab sheiks or other members of OPEC, and the Canadian Government could not care less. What is particularly outrageous is, that while proposing that these measures should be eliminated, this Government is setting itself up as the saviour of the petroleum and gas industry in this country. Mr. Speaker, in a few years we shall see what the Conservative Government's lack of policies in this area will have done to Canadianization. This Government will be responsible for the fact that many of our Canadian producers will have to sell their oil reserves to the multinationals. It will be the only way to get out of this situation because the multinationals have cornered the refinery and delivery markets, and they stand to make huge profits right there. Sure enough, hardly a few days ago the profits reported by refineries and dealers in this market made headlines in the newspapers. They exact inflated prices from consumers, laugh all the way to the bank, but they simply will not pay Canadian producers a fair price for their products. If we had a Government which would stand up to them and not be afraid to step in when the long-term interest of Canadians is involved, we could have had this kind of measures. I simply cannot understand how western Conservative Members can make speeches such as we have heard when we know that the impact of the national energy policy has been the more encouraging of two trends which the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien) described earlier in his reference to a roller coaster ride. When prices went down they sidetracked the train so that we can no longer help these producers. One thing for sure, Madam Speaker, is that when there is nothing, not even a sound program to help the oil industry—especially Canadian producers—get through the doldrums, no-one can object if the Government should hand out a few goodies, which just about sums up this Bill. So how can we really oppose this minimum hand-out! However I must emphasize as strongly as I can that, by doing away with any Canadian energy policy related to the development of an extremely important natural resource which is vital to Canada, in the long run this Government will have done serious harm to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I am absolutely amazed at some of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). I take it that he was not in the House—and he should have found this out—when Alberta was shipping oil to eastern Canada, not at the world price but at a low price. The people of Alberta gave up at least $5 billion in doing that. If we could have charged the world price then we would not have needed any help from anyone else, not the producers or the Government.

If that were not enough, when we exported our oil they slapped on another tax bringing millions of dollars into the federal Treasury. Surely some of that money should now be given back to the people of Alberta who gave up so much—who shared, as the Hon. Marc Lalonde used to say, with other Canadians. How about sharing the other way? The Government of the day took millions of dollars from the sale of our oil, money which it would not have had had we not produced that oil. All we are asking for is a fair deal. We are not asking for anything special, just a fair deal. We are not getting one.

The Hon. Member suggested that the National Energy Program helped Alberta. It ruined Alberta, and it was intended to do so. Hundreds of our workers had to leave the country. With them went our drilling rigs and our expertise. I remember that the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) brought in a picture showing rigs lined up trying to get across the border because they could not stand it in Alberta any longer. We drove them out. The Liberal Government, with its National Energy policy, impoverished Alberta. I am simply amazed when I hear the Hon. Member talking about giving the producers a better price. If they had the proper price before and had not been taxed to death by the Liberals, then they would not need any help right now. They would be financially sound.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has understood nothing in what I have said. In fact, the Hon. Member is partly right, but now that these $5 billion could have been returned to the West thanks to a national energy policy, you have abolished this policy. What instruments does the Government have now to help those producers? None. This particular oil crisis has developed since his Government was elected. Before, I was in the private sector. The Hon. Member says that there were no investments. Yet, Eastern investors rushed to finance the various projects. The big banks were putting up buildings in the West. Everyone was trying to invest.

What I was saying in my speech is exactly what the Hon. Member would have liked to see when we skimmed the cream off the top, because the prices were high, to distribute this wealth throughout the country and set lower prices for consumers.

What I am saying now is that this money should be returned to the West. But how can we do that? With what policy? You have destroyed the national energy policy! The funny thing is that the Conservatives are criticizing the national energy policy and destroying it at the very time when it could have played in their favour. What can I say? We have to be fair, and since we used the policy to benefit Eastern Canada, that is Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes, when the prices were high, we should have been able to reverse this policy when the prices went down. But now there is nothing. We have to ask the provincial Governments to reduce their royalties. The PGRT has been abolished when it no longer brings in any revenue for the Government, and once more, who will benefit? It will be the multinationals, not the smaller producers.

Mr. St. Julien: Madam Speaker, as my colleague for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said, perhaps we had well-prepared notes, but mine were personal notes and I was reluctant to them on to the page earlier because they were very poorly written and the Government would not have been able to read them. But any way, what I intended to say on that subject is, that it is easy to take notes because we have a good Government.

But as suggested earlier by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, we will see in a few years from now the results of our Government's efforts as shown by this legislation.

The two questions I would like to raise with him are as follows. He referred to oil. I for one remember that in the East end of Montreal, when Ultramar was closed down despite union efforts to keep the plant open, I very well remember that under the previous Government a few years ago, grants were given to oil consumers. Many people in the East end of Montreal, and I know what I am talking about, because I was attending the College Roussin and I knew that this college had oil heating, converted to electricity. This is what caused those refineries to shut down. Those refineries were closed under the previous Government of course. This all started in 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, and kept going on.

I would like to ask him this question: Why did the refinery shutdowns start in 1981 in the East end of Montreal?

Here is the second point I would like to raise: when speaking of take-overs, what comes to mind is Petro-Canada first and foremost. And speaking of Petro-Canada, no Member in this House, not even the Member for Laval-des-Rapides can gain access to the previous Cabinet's confidential notes on the purchase of Petro-Canada. We would very much like to know who pocketed the profits, who was involved in the discussions. These are the two points I wanted to raise with him, and on which I would like to have his comments.

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, one has to be really confused to come up with a question such as the one the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien) has just asked.

The national energy policy has had an extremely beneficial impact in his region. His was probably one of the regions most victimized by soaring gas and heating oil prices, remote as it is from major urban centres.

Imagine, the Hon. Member for Abitibi is pleased as Punch and tells us in his remarks: I come from a region where untapped natural resources are plentiful and I am very glad to see that the national energy policy is to be shelved, because this will be good for exploration.

Madam Speaker, today the Hon. Member for Abitibi urges the Government to scrap the whole thing—more than that, he is glad the Government does not intervene—yet the other day he made a speech in which he stated that the same Government had to step in to maintain flow through shares. That is Government interference on the market place!

The Hon. Member for Abitibi cannot have it both ways. If the Government does not intervene at all, then the Hon. member is in favour of abolishing flow through shares, because this is one way the Government can give money, as was done through the national energy policy, taking money with one hand and giving it with the other. He has to be logical.

Madam Speaker, with respect to the Canadian policy concerning home insulation and the switch to electricity or natural gas, these are two measures which were implemented.

I read the speech of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resosurces, and he was pleased about that. He said it had been a good thing because it made it possible to save a non-renewable energy, oil and gas, by using instead a renewable energy, electrical power.

Well, the Hon. Member must at least try to be logical in his train of thought.

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Madam Speaker, I am absolutely delighted to speak on Bill C-17 because it finally marks the death of the PGRT and the National Energy Program. Finally we in the West are feeling a sense of justice, albeit very late. We are in deep trouble now, but a piece of legislation that was most unjust is being taken off our backs.

It was not only the PGRT that affected us so badly. I suspect that even most western Canadian Members forget that there were some five or six taxes imposed on the industry including the natural gas and gas liquids tax, the Canadian-ownership charge, the petroleum compensation charge and the incremental oil revenue tax. A whole series of taxes were imposed on an industry which was located in one region of Canada, a region from which there were no elected Members in the governing Party. That was most unjust.

At this time I feel it is appropriate for me as a Member from Alberta who lived through that period of time to express my deep personal appreciation for Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament from Ontario who, in those three years, voted directly against the position of the Ontario Conservative Party, at least three times of which I am aware. They did this because they knew that the National Energy Program was not right for Canada. They knew it was inherently unfair and they voted against it even though the Liberal Government of the day described the program as being in the best interests of the consumers of central Canada. It was a deliberate, open attack on one region of Canada for the benefit of another region. It took three years for Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament from Ontario to get the people of Ontario as well as the people of Quebec and Atlantic Canada to finally realize that the program was unfair, unjust and not in their best interests either. I express without any hesitation my thanks to those Hon. Members.

What was the National Energy Program? History will show it to be the meanest attack on a region that has ever occurred in the history of Canada. It was a tax imposed on only one source of energy. There would have been no kicking and shouting from the West if the tax had been imposed on hydro-electricity and on energy across the entire country. It is fair and legitimate for a central Government to raise money but it should not raise money in an unfair way. Of course, we knew that there would never be a tax imposed on hydro-electric power because it is produced in Ontario and Quebec, provinces represented by then governing Liberal Members. That is why the National Energy Program was so wrong.

With great respect to my friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), I believe he was thinking of another figure when he said that $5 billion was drained out of western Canada. That $5 billion was drained out in a different way. These taxes drained over $60 billion out of western Canada. That figure is just incredible. The reason for this was to block British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and to a lesser extent, Manitoba from receiving the full difference between the world price of oil and the cost of producing relatively cheap western sedimentary crude. All of the difference was taxed away to Ottawa. It was a deliberate plan, as Marc Lalonde acknowledged, to prevent those provinces from becoming too rich as compared to the federal treasury.

The Alberta Heritage Trust Fund should contain at least $30 billion to $40 billion rather than the $10 billion to $14 billion it now contains. If the province and the owners of the resources had that money, Alberta would not be in trouble today. It would not have to turn to the rest of the country for help.

The PGRT hurt the oil companies. I can remember hearing Mr. Lalonde say in the House that we had to get the multinational corporations. That kind of statement always triggers an ideological response from members of the NDP who say: "Right-o, anything anti-American is fine, let's go after them". But it was not those six or seven multinational corporations that were hurt, it was the over 600 small Canadian oil and gas producers and the service industry composed of the people who do seismic work and the servicing of wells. Those are the ones who went broke by the tens of thousands in western Canada.

I have spoken to men and women who were 50 years of age and had gone into the oil industry at the age of 18 or 19. These people usually started out working for multinationals and then hived off by creating their own Canadian corporations. They built them up until they were worth $500,000 or $1 million and then they lost everything. The hatred that was directed toward central Canada is something I hope we will never experience again. The fires of separatism were fanned dramatically by this action. I can remember walking out of this House on occasion thinking that I should go home and devote the rest of my life to separatism. I felt that way because the actions of the Government were wrong. They were unfair. The only thing that kept a great number of us from doing that was the fact that a letter would be received from someone in Ontario, Atlantic Canada, or Quebec, saying that they agree it is unfair and will put pressure on our Members of Parliament. They did. That is why the Liberal Party was voted out of power as much as anything else. The people realized that it was truly an unfair attack.

I hope the Members of the House will get on side. The solution is simply an elected Senate which is weighted to the regions of this country. In this lower House represented by population it will be dominated by Ontario and Quebec because that is where the population is. That is a principle for which many of our ancestors fought and died. We need to have a balance to that, and that can be in the upper House. It should be weighted to the provinces; it should be elected, therefore, they are responsible. One of the deepest hurts I personally experienced was in watching the Alberta Senators appointed by the Liberal Prime Minister vote for the National Energy Program. It was an actual attack on their own region. That hurtful action which caused a great deal of pain to many people.

The National Energy Program was a whole new economic policy vis-à-vis energy. Before the National Energy Program the companies drilled for oil where their seismic and geological experts told them they would find oil. Under the tax system if they found oil and had revenue they would be able to deduct the cost of searching for that oil from whatever profits they had. Therefore, you drilled where you thought there would be oil, depending on your experts. After the National Energy Program it did not matter where oil might be found. You drilled based on a region of the country chosen by bureaucrats in Ottawa, and based on Canadian ownership. People literally drilled wells in regions where they knew there was no oil because of the way it was structured. It will always be that way when you take power and have people sitting in Ottawa trying to comprehend an industry. They were actually getting more than the cost of the well, because they could set up subsidiary corporations and have them supply goods and services. They would end up making 130 per cent or 140 per cent for drilling a well. They were not drilling for oil at all, they were drilling for the Government PIP grant, the Petroleum Incentives Program.

It also was centralization of ownership. Another branch was Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada could not make it in the oil industry and the Government had to ensure that it did make it, so year after year the taxpayers had to pump $400 million and $500 million into Petro-Canada. It spent it all around the world, but that was not enough, so the Government had to come back and give it a back-in. We had to give Petro-Canada the right to expropriate 25 per cent of the oil and gas that had been found by Canadian corporations. People bought shares, went out and did the work, would find oil and gas, and then Petro-Canada would come in and take 25 per cent off the top. It was an incredible program, but that is what it amounted to.

Over-all Canada was hurt by the National Energy Program. It is a tragedy that during those prior years enough money could have been built up in the provinces and the companies to see themselves through this time now when they are hurting because of a decline in world prices. Had we let them accumulate that money at that point it could be used now, rather than having to come hat in hand, down on their knees. Nobody in this country likes to come to another part of the country, get down on their knees, and beg for some help. That is not the way this country should be structured. That is why support for separatism in the West rose dramatically.

Canada does have serious problems. During that same period the Government of the day did the traditional trick of Governments, particularly socialist type Governments. It offered people all sorts of programs, kept a low tax, and built up a deficit and a national debt. Over-all Canada still is a land of opportunity, a land where millions of people want to come. Our population is educated. There is a political system that does respond. The lesson of the National Energy Program for me is that Parliament does respond, and the Canadian people do respond. They threw out the Liberal Government and put in a new Government. That is the strength of this country. We do have a stable political climate. We also have independent and ambitious people. We are tolerant and generous. We can be proud to be Canadians because the nation came through. I hope these values will be retained.

My greatest fear is that people will once again succumb to the blandishments of a Government that wants to centralize things. I always point to the NDP because they make no bones about it, they stand for a strong central Government that will take power. They say to people: "Vote for us and we will look after you". I know from my study of history, and talking to constituents, particularly those who come from the eastern European countries, that you can get sucked in by those votes. Once the Government takes over one area it has to take over another area, then another area. The laws then become more and more repressive. People lose their freedoms. That is why I hope people in Canada will retain their independence. When they have their independence they can snap their fingers at Governments. If they have $500,000 of capital gains property they do not need to turn to the Government and be caught by that old age penchant, if they do not obey this Government then the Government will cut down their revenues. They need not come with their hats in their hands and beg to anybody. They can say "we are independent".

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: Those were truly wonderful days. I can remember those bells ringing for days. That was a very aggressive act in a parliamentary democracy. Many of us wondered if it was the right thing to do. In fact, it was the right thing to do, because history has shown us to be correct. The Canadian people in central Canada, Ontario, Quebec, and Atlantic Canada did not find it to be a fair policy that attacked one region. I am delighted to be a Canadian. I am delighted to rise in this House and see the end of the PGRT.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I could not help but note the suggestion by the Hon. Member that, unlike the former Liberal Government which always favoured central Canada—meaning Ontario and Quebec—this Government was fair to all regions. The Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) would not get much sympathy or support from the people of Manitoba who believe that for political reasons the CF-18 contract went to Montreal instead of to Winnipeg where the company submitted the lowest and best tender.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member some questions. The Member is happy that the NEP has gone, and the PGRT taxes will be gone, and the other taxes. When those taxes were put into effect the price of oil was close to $30 a barrel. I ask the Hon. Member what is wrong with a Government trying to get what it considers to be a fair share of the profits? It was not just the federal Government, but the federal Government, the NDP Government of Saskatchewan, the Conservative Government of Alberta and, to a lesser extent, the Social Credit Government of British Columbia, all of which were trying to get what they considered to be a fair share of the huge profits that were being made. I do not see anything wrong with that. It is ludicrous to compare that objective by all the Governments with the failure of the federal Government to tax the hydroelectric systems of Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec. Those were the three that the Hon. Member mentioned. Those are publicly-owned systems which provide power. Their instructions from their Governments—not a socialist Government in Ontario, it was a Conservative Government that started Ontario Hydro—under which they operate were to provide power at cost to the people they serve. To tax them would be to add cost to all the people who use electric power in those provinces.

When we talked about taxing the oil and gas industry, whether it be federal or provincial, we were talking about industries, with the exception of Petro-Canada, which were privately owned and making huge profits. I remind the Hon. Member that the price in the early 1980s was somewhere between $25 and $30 U.S. per barrel of oil. At that time all Governments—the federal, the Conservative Government of Alberta, and the NDP Government of Saskatchewan—believed that the price of oil would go up every year until it hit $60 or $70 per barrel. This is why they were trying to get some of the profits for their needs. What is wrong with Governments trying to get a share of the profits?

I have another question for the Hon. Member. He is happy that the Government is taking its hands out of the energy industry and letting it operate according to the market. I come from the consuming Province of Manitoba. Our people buy large quantities of natural gas. Does the Hon. Member support the idea that natural gas produced in Alberta, and probably in British Columbia, will be sold to customers in the United States at a lower price than it will be sold or is sold to Canadian consumers in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and probably Quebec?

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, with regard to the profits tax, of course as the price of oil went up Governments at all levels shared in it under the system before the National Energy Program. Provincial Governments shared in the sense that land rents went up and in the sense that their royalties went up. Both the federal and provincial Governments shared by way of sales taxes and other direct taxes, because as the price went up oil companies searched for more oil and bought more trucks and cars. They also shared in the income taxes, federally and provincially. When we deduct all those extra taxes, there were not any real windfall profits.

I should like to refer to the second principle of self-sufficiency, which is even more important. Does the Hon. Member know that we are on the edge of the production of conventional crude that it will go down geometrically? I am sure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) knows that the amount of oil we can produce from western sedimentary basins will drop precipitously. We needed the extra price rise in order to bring on tar sands plants.

I can remember the Alberta Government issuing a guarantee to the rest of the country that if it were given world prices, enough synthetic plants would be on stream so that as the conventional dropped, the synthetic would go up and Canada would be self-sufficient.

The National Energy Program taxed away that money. It allegedly distributed it in PIP grants, but as I explained earlier, PIP grants were not finding oil. Thus we run into the problem where conventional is now dropping and we do not have synthetic coming on stream. Self-sufficiency for Canada is truly a problem with which we in Parliament will have to deal. It is much more serious than people realize.

With regard to natural gas to the U.S.A., a home in California at the burner tip will not be facing a cheaper price because transportation is a bigger cost. Some buyers in the United States may be able to get one cent or two cents off per thousand cubic feet because they guarantee to take a huge volume for a set period of time. That would be available in western Canada if some distributor wanted to do it.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I have another question. The Hon. Member and members of his Party have spoken frequently about getting the Government out of the energy industry and letting the free market work. Given the world price of oil, have not all private energy companies in the United States, in Canada, and in other countries cut back drastically on exploration? One cannot blame them. They are in business to make a profit, and there is certainly no profit to be made with the present world price of oil.

If we want to start planning for the time when conventional sources of oil about which he talked are gone, and if we want to start developing new sources in offshore Atlantic, in the Beaufort, or in the tar sands, will the Hon. Member not face up to the fact that the free enterprise system is not working and will not work? Will he not face up to the fact that it will take Government support, possibly in the form of a floor price, for companies to have enough cash with which to operate? If the Hon. Member and his Party think that the free enterprise system works well when the economy is growing—and I question that—will they not face up to the fact that when the economy is in the doldrums, as is the case in the energy industry at the present time, it takes Government planning and support to get the industry to do what is needed?

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, there is no doubt that the Government will have to play a role in that regard. Our Party has never shied away from that historically, whether it was CPR, Air Canada or whatever. We see a role for Government, but the National Energy Program was not the mechanism. It was fundamentally flawed from the start. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is now trying to come up with a sensible program, but we will still retain those market principles so that we have the necessary flexibility. Whenever we let Government in, we lose flexibility.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I was under the impression that the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) was to rise. Those were the instructions I was given. I am sorry to see that some people—

Mr. Lewis: He is going to speak.

Mr. Gauthier: Either we have an agreement here and the Hon. Member for Edmonton South will speak or he will not. If not, I will speak.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I should explain the jack-in-the-box routine. When I saw Your Honour on her feet, of course I sat down.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to intervene, however briefly, in this debate. As was said earlier this afternoon, today we are observing the wake of a late but not lamented tax.

I should say one or two things about the situation in Alberta as it stands today. The result of the National Energy Program and the compounding effect of the plummeting world price of oil are resulting today in over 50,000 people being unemployed in the oil and natural gas field in the Province of Alberta. As a result of the implementation of the Western Accord in the spring of 1985, it is true that 1985 was a banner year in the field of oil and gas in the Province of Alberta. It was an example of the kind of instant recovery which such an industry can stage given the proper tax environment.

When the world price of oil plummeted at the end of 1985 and the beginning of 1986, it was clear that the last vestige of the National Energy Program, the PGRT, would have to go.

Alberta Members of Parliament were assiduous in their campaign to have the tax removed, and of course we had support from all corners of Alberta society. They had support from the workers, the individual entrepreneurs who serviced the rigs and the hotel keepers who had to board up their hotels with the fading of activity in the oil patch. Those of us who spent the summer in our ridings heard stories of tragedy, of opportunities lost, of families destroyed and of people whose ancestors had come to this country as immigrants and had, in the second and third generation, hoped to build up old money, some kind of capital vestige with which other parts of Canada are familiar. All those opportunities were lost.

It is estimated that approximately $95 billion of potential investment capital was driven or sucked out of Alberta during the life of the National Energy Program. I would like to indicate what kind of lost opportunity that represents.

Speakers during this debate have referred to the situation in Manitoba. Those who are familiar with Manitoba history will be aware that the grain fortunes which were made in the early part of this century were readily convertible during the depression of the 1930s into the insurance industry. That opportunity was lost in Alberta because that $95 billion was not available for reinvestment and diversification.

I am proud of Albertans. I am happy that we saw evidence last summer and this fall of their resilience and determination to recover. There are those who say that the removal of the PGRT has been long in coming. However, thank God it has finally arrived. This is a banner day in the history of Canada and Alberta. I mention Canada because I have never seen such genuine understanding of the situation in Alberta as I have seen in Members of Parliament from the Government Party and in the odd one from the Parties opposite. They have recognized the interrelationship of the petroleum and natural gas industry of Alberta with industries elsewhere. There is a causal connection between the diminishment of activity in the oil sands plants in the Fort McMurray area and the shutdown of steel mills in Sault Ste. Marie. I am very proud of the 30 or 40 Members of Parliament from central Canada who took it upon themselves, on their own time and at their expense, to go to western Canada to see the facts for themselves. I congratulate them for their statesmanship and wisdom in supporting the removal of the National Energy Program and, in particular, the PGRT.

In conclusion, I would like to say something about the Alberta Heritage Trust Fund. There are those who ask why Alberta is not addressing this situation. There are two major reasons for that. One is that the Alberta economy is so devastated the Alberta treasury does not have the capability to respond in full. The budget deficit projected by the Alberta Government for the current fiscal year is $2.5 billion and it could go considerably higher.

Beyond that there is the issue of the Alberta Heritage Trust Fund. That fund has a liquidity of only about 18 to 20 per cent of its total value. It is true that it has deemed book assets of $13.5 billion to $14 billion, but that money is invested in hospitals, medical research and outside of the Province of Alberta in what I would submit is the Quebec heritage saving trust fund, Quebec Hydro, and the Ontario heritage trust fund, Ontario Hydro, and in similar low-cost loans to provincial Crown corporations and provincial Governments across the country. I think that is an excellent example of Canadian co-operation from coast to coast.

The death of the PGRT signals the happy salutory abandonment for once, and I hope for all, of an intrusion by the federal Government into matters which are totally of provincial jurisdiction. The ownership of a resource in the country, as defined in our Confederation pact, is with the province. For another jurisdiction to tax a provincial resource is heinous, wrong and a betrayal of Confederation. That betrayal is being rectified today.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like to direct three questions to the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards). Around 1980 the industry was buoyant and the price of oil was around $30 a barrel. The Member said that $95 billion in revenues was given up. Is the Member suggesting that if the oil companies had been able to keep a large part of that money they would now be involved in major exploration with the world price of oil as low as it is? If he really believes that, would he explain why in the United States, which has never had a National Energy Policy and which, since 1980, has had the most conservative president it has had in the last 50 years, the oil companies which also operate in Canada have cut back on exploration as sharply as they have in Canada?

Finally, does the Member really oppose Government involvement in the energy industry? If he does, we can say goodbye to exloration off the Atlantic Coast and in the Beaufort Sea. The Conservative Governments of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia would be very interested to know whether it is the view of the federal Conservative Government that, when the price of oil is so low that the private sector has opted out, the Government of Canada should not, through tax policies or subsidies, help maintain the exploration and development of the energy we will need in the future?

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, as always, I appreciate the very pointed questions of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). In response to his first question with regard to oil company profits, the issue here is not profits. However, I will say something about the reinvestment record of the oil industry in western Canada. I speak of the western sedimentary basin rather than nonconventional sources such as the oil sands, heavy oil, or the offshore. The record of the industry in that area is remarkably positive. It has varied over the last six years from 85 per cent of profits to as high as 110 per cent in certain years. It is not a question of putting money into the hands of the oil companies. It is, rather, an issue of $90 billion made up of $60 billion in subsidizing low-cost Canadian gasoline and another $30 billion differential between what Ottawa collected during the dying days of the Liberal regime and what it reinvested in Alberta. We are now talking about an issue of justice within Confederation.

Justice with respect to oil products, jurisdiction, the economy and employment—

[English]

We are indeed talking about Government involvement in the energy industry. I am happy to be able to say that Government involvement in the conventional energy industry in this country is not justifiable from the point of view of imposing federal taxes on a provincial resource. That is what is at issue here today.

If we examine the offshore, the oil sands and heavy oil, and if energy self-sufficiency and security of supply are the goals, of course there will have to be investment. However, let that be private investment and let us not add inordinately to our deficit by more state intervention and control.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I urge the Hon. Member to explain why the major oil companies have cut back such that there is virtually no exploration going on in the U.S. They have cut back exploration everywhere. Yet they were not harmed, hobbled or hindered, as the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills who thinks everyone to the left of Genghis Khan is a socialist, said, by a Liberal Government in the U.S. Therefore, why have they cut back so drastically?

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, it is some hobbling when 472 rigs go south from Alberta to Montana, Wyoming and Colorado. It is some hobbling when they go down to Oklahoma and Texas. If that is hobbling in an unfettered environment, why in heaven's name did those rigs make the journey south at a cost of about $75,000 each?

Mr. Orlikow: I ask the Hon. Member if he will join me in the parliamentary library. We can look through a recent issue of The New York Times and we will see a picture taken in a Texas field where hundreds of rigs are sitting rusting away. They will soon be scrapped. I am not talking about 1981 or 1982 when they moved from Alberta to the U.S. They are not operating now because there is no profit. Why would the energy companies be exploring in Canada now when the price is as low here as it is in the U.S. and they cannot see a profit in the foreseeable future?

Conservative Members of Parliament have to stop blaming the NEP and recognize that the world price, which was high then and is low now, plays a very important role in what these companies, private or public, will do.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has posed an interesting implicit question in his overt question. The only conclusion I can come to is that he appears to be in favour of leaving the PGRT in place. Coming from a Member from western Canada as he is, I can only put it down to ideological integrity on his part. I would never accuse him of anything else knowing and respecting his political stripe. However, to suggest that it would be wise to continue to inflict a front end revenue tax on companies owned by Canadians struggling to stay alive, many of them the backbone of the economy of Alberta, Saskatchewan and southwestern Manitoba, is irresponsible. It is also a suggestion which the electorate of western Canada would be most interested in knowing about.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member can check Hansard and he will not find where I said one word indicating that I am opposed to getting rid of the PGRT. What I am putting to him is that he should give serious consideration to the fact that, if we are to have an assured supply and energy sufficiency, given the low price of energy now, the only way we will get it is if the industry and Governments work together. Governments have to provide a tax system or floor price or some method by which the energy companies can operate rather than closing down and dying. That is something the Conservatives have never wanted to think about.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, I would be most happy to check Hansard to see the Hon. Member's record. I will also be watching with great relish how he votes.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the agreement to complete consideration of this stage of the Bill by six o'clock and I will speak briefly.

This Bill before us, C-17, removes the PGRT of 1980. The tax was part of the NEP and one has to look at it in the context of related Bills dealing with things such as PIP grants and the Crown share. At the time this legislation was introduced energy prices were high. This was a tax on the net operating revenue of oil and gas producers after their operating costs were deducted. Through this controversial wellhead tax the federal Government sought a share of oil and gas revenues. Indeed, its share was considerable. The PGRT collected large sums of money for the federal Treasury, about $6.6 billion in the period 1983-1985. For 1985 alone the figure was $2.5 billion. These funds were utilized for programs such as energy conservation, oil substitution, renewable energy, alternative fuels, and construction of natural gas pipelines. These initiatives were all designed to reduce Canada's dependance on oil. Indeed, the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) commented on the success of Canada's conservation programs. He said the amount of insulation installed in Canada over the last six years has given rise in 1986 to energy savings equal to approximately 17 million barrels of oil.

Since then the world has changed. The price of energy has collapsed. As well, the Government cancelled most of the renewable energy and alternative energy programs. This is what I wish to express concern about. I am in agreement, in a difficult time, with assisting the Alberta oil energy program, but I have concerns about security of supply because that goal seems to have been temporarily lost sight of.

It is popular to blame the Alberta recession solely on the National Energy Program, as did the Member who just spoke. However, we must remember that the oil industry in California and Texas, and countries dependent on oil such as Mexico and Nigeria, have also been pushed to the edge by the tight energy market.

I believe both sides of the House would agree that there is a need to provide assistance to the energy sector at the present time. However, we on this side of the House would have preferred to see the assistance directed to some of the small producers. This Bill is a tax break without strings. Most of those who will benefit from the removal of the petroleum and gas revenue tax will be the large multinationals, at a cost of $1.5 billion to the federal treasury. Admittedly, these multinationals account for 90 per cent of Canada's oil production, 70 per cent of the workforce and 80 per cent of PGRT revenues. However, these are not necessarily the neediest oil companies.

The Senate Energy Committee pointed out that the most distressed producers at the present time are the smaller, mostly Canadian-owned firms which: "Drill the majority of Canadian oil wells and are more efficient than the larger companies at finding and developing small oil pools". If we are thinking in terms of security of supply and in terms of looking to the future when the conventional resources which are now well exploited by the multinationals are depleted, we should be looking to those small Canadian-owned producers. This Bill does nothing to help the very people who we may need most if we have to be concerned about security of supply in the near future.

We would have preferred to see a price stabilization program which would assist the small producers. That is also a proposal which has come from the Senate Energy Committee and, in fact, the Alberta Government.

My other concern is that the PGRT is removed without any conditions. The Government tells us that it expects that the companies which benefit will invest this money in the industry, but there are no firm guarantees. We have no assurance that the windfall gained by these large companies will be spent on exploration and development of new sources of oil and natural gas. The industry tells us that it will reinvest savings properly, but what does that mean? There is nothing to stop the multinationals from using their money to buy up struggling Canadian oil firms at low prices, or indeed from making non-energy investments that will not add one barrel of oil to our dwindling reserves.

I hope that Members opposite, to whom the free market ideology is very important, will remember that we also have to consider very much the question of security of supply. We must look to the future because we are, in fact, very open to manipulation by the OPEC cartel. While the measure before us gives some relief to a prosperous sector of the oil industry, it does nothing for the small Canadian firms who have proved themselves to be more innovative at trying to find new sources. The Bill does not concern itself at all with the goal of self-sufficiency and security of supply. I am sure that Members opposite have the same concerns about this issue and I hope we will see it dealt with soon.

Members of an energy lobby group were warning that Canadians will be at the mercy of oil-producing countries in a very few years unless exploration for our own resources is increased.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I found the speech by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) very interesting, and since we share the same philosophy, that of the Liberal Party, I know we will not object to adopting the second reading stage of this Bill. However, the Government that dismantled this energy policy has failed to replace it with appropriate tools. The Hon. Member mentioned security of supply for Canadians with respect to energy resources. Madam Speaker, both in the course of this debate on Bill C-17 and during the election campaign, we said we would be quite willing to see this policy modified or revised to restore a degree of equity to the way our resources are shared, so that the West does not feel alienated or deprived of its rights.

I would ask the Hon. Member to tell us briefly whether she would be agreeable to an approach that, while eliminating the PGRT, would give serious consideration to establishing a revenue stabilization program which we, as Liberals, would have liked to see the Government set up. Its purpose would be not only to guarantee security of supply for Canadians but also to maintain Canadianization, so that Canadians will have real control over their energy resources and will not, as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said earlier, be at the mercy of an OPEC that controls prices on the international market.

So my question is quite simple: Does she favour price stabilization as opposed to eliminating all these energy programs?

Miss Nicholson: The answer is simple: Yes.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Mr. Hockin, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moves that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): May I call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Madam Speaker, I want to begin by offering my congratulations to the CBC on the occasion of the corporation's fiftieth anniversary. For half a century it has provided quality Canadian programming, first on radio, later on television.

In recent years the CBC, like all other Crown corporations, has had to deal with the reality of our times. Parliament has been forced to deal with years of neglect to the public treasury. Every Government Department, every Crown corporation, every Government agency is being subjected to necessary restraints.

For a Crown corporation to give a legitimate argument about lack of funding is one thing, but to do so when it is revealed that gross neglect has occurred in that corporation's accounting practices is entirely another matter. Several weeks ago in his annual report to Parliament the Auditor General stated that the CBC books were in such bad shape that:

I am unable to express an opinion as to whether these financial statements are presented fairly in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles.

In my opinion the corporation did not maintain proper books of accounts from which these financial statements have been prepared.

This is the first time an Auditor General has been unable to report on the financial statement of a Crown corporation. This controversy revolves around the problems with the CBC's multi-million dollar computerized accounting system. The CBC moved to create a centralized accounting system after a 1984 audit by the Auditor General found that the Corporation had no standardized method of keeping financial records. The CBC had four incompatible computers operating out of Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa and Winnipeg.

In going to one standardized computer system, the idea was to give more direct control of financial expenditures to CBC head office. There is nothing wrong with that. This system was supposed to begin on April 1, 1986, but CBC management made a decision to bring it into operation in July, 1985, a full nine months early. More important, it was a CBC management decision to bring in a new system without a parallel accounting system to back it up in case of breakdowns in its early stages.

Regional managers were instructed to follow the new system of accounting, but many of them actually kept separate accounts in case of a foul-up in the main system. We have learned that these hip-pocket accounts turned out to be the only reliable source of information on the CBC's financial accounts. Maclean's magazine, in a recent article aptly portrayed the difficulties with the centralized accounting system:

Because of programming errors, the computer had all along been unable to recognize the electronic labels on certain entries and, like the overworked executive with a bottomless wastepaper basket, had been routinely tossing them into the so-called "suspense accounts" with the result that they never appeared on the printout. According to the CBC Vice-President Stephen Cotsman, "the dollar amounts grew monstrous".

Monstrous indeed, to the tune of $57 million. The CBC had spent the money but the financial system had lost track of the reasons for the transactions.

Mr. Cotsman's candid comments on the state of the CBC's suspense accounts surprised me when I read the Maclean's article because he was certainly tight-lipped when he appeared before the Communications and Culture Committee in May of 1986 when we were examining the Estimates.

The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) asked Mr. Cotsman directly:

Rumours I have received say there is a problem in reconciling books. The CBC cannot account for money spent on joint productions as a result of this new accounting system and there are really quite astounding differences in figures coming out.

Mr. Cotsman replied:

I am not aware of any large, significant numbers where we cannot account for the expenditures. I am not aware of those instances.

How are we to believe that the Senior Vice-President of Finance of the CBC was not aware of $57 million of taxpayers money that was not accounted for? In that same meeting, when commenting on the problems with the centralized accounting system, Mr. Cotsman stated:

Most of those problems, we feel, are behind us and we are looking forward to 1986-87 being a successful year.

However, according to a report to the CBC Board of Directors from the Auditor General dated September 3, 1986, the Auditor General warned the CBC to get its financial house in order because "public funds are at risk." He also added: "—there is no tangible indication that the situation has significantly improved". Again, Mr. Cotsman's comments to the standing committee were not consistent with the facts as stated by the Auditor General.

It is obvious to me, as well as to many Members of Parliament that CBC senior management made a terrible decision in trying to rush its centralized accounting system into operation without maintaining a proper back-up system.

As I stated before, this was a senior management decision. Thus the senior management should take the blame for the resulting chaos in the books. When confronted with this situation, CBC management claimed that it was impossible to operate a parallel accounting system because of a lack of resources due to Government restraint measures. That is garbage! The CBC regional managers kept hip-pocket accounts with personal calculators.

In conclusion, I want to reiterate my view that the President of the CBC, who is responsible for the senior management decision, should appear before the Public Accounts Committee and the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture to explain his actions. An audit commissioned by CBC management itself will not suffice in this instance. Taxpayers' money is at risk—and Parliament needs some answers.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the concerns of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock). As Hon. Members know, the Auditor General has expressed concern over the implementation of a new financial system at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The situation at the CBC has been the source of considerable speculation, both in the media and in the House. While I share the concern of all Members, I would like to clarify a few misconceptions and inaccuracies that have found their way into the debate.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a large and complex organization, employing over 11,000 employees and managing an annual budget of over $1 billion. That is a great deal of money. The corporation's mandate is equally overwhelming. In fulfilling it the CBC operates two television networks, four radio networks, and provides northern, regional and local broadcasting services, as well as international service.

[Translation]

My colleague will admit that in such a complex environment it is difficult to design and set up a new fully automated financial system, yet the CBC did undertake to do just that. There was the odd mistake here and there, we all know that, but I would suggest that such technical difficulties as may have led some people to believe that $57 million were unaccounted for, have been adequately explained in subsequent weeks.

Madam Speaker, I think it is important to keep in mind that——it is true that by year-end some $57 million worth of transactions had been placed into the suspense account. While this is cause for concern, no loss of funds was involved. That is the most important point. Indeed, the Auditor General himself has said that he found no evidence of misappropriation of resources. The management of the CBC has informed the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) that these entries have since been reallocated into their proper expense accounts.

[English]

In concluding, Madam Speaker, I think we must be thankful to our colleague and commend Hon. Members for seeing to it that CBC funds are wisely expended. Canadians have to be assured that indeed there were no losses in these circumstances, that it was an administration matter.

[English]

CROWN CORPORATIONS—CORPORATION'S UNDISCLOSED LIABILITIES. (B) AMOUNT OF LIABILITIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I listened with a sense of rapt interest to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) doing a bit of CBC-bashing in regard to some $57 million, which is a great deal of money. The Parliamentary Secretary has just assured us that this money has not been lost or misappropriated. I have a good one to tell the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North.

I rise this evening because a few weeks ago The Fifth Estate revealed that after selling de Havilland Aircraft of Canada to Boeing, the Government is now responsible for paying tens of millions of dollars in claims against de Havilland. This was not revealed to the Canadian people when the company was sold. In this case the Canadian people were persuaded that a very big deal was being negotiated. The figure of $165 million was put forward, although we know that the full amount will never be paid. We have learned subsequently of tens of millions of dollars the Boeing company is not paying but the taxpayers will have to pay to creditors and claimants of de Havilland.

When I complained to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) about this, he said that no information concerning this issue was withheld in any manner and that it was fully provided by the Minister in January of 1986 when he appeared before the committee of the House which was looking into the transaction. That statement was absolutely wrong. That information was not given to us in the House or in committee.

When I asked for the production of documents, the documents were not produced. When I put in a request for access to information from the Government, the information was not made available and I was not given a refund. When I wrote letters to the Minister asking for it, I did not receive the information. My colleague and I, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), even took the Government to court to try to get an order requiring the Government to give us this and other information but we were unsuccessful. The information is still the confidential property of the Government.

I do not think this is right. I think a Government that is committed to open Government and claims to be concerned about the waste of $57 million by the CBC ought to be concerned about this and ought to be more forthcoming. No one agrees more than I that de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd. has benefited from its association with a company that is successful, believes in the discipline of the market-place and knows how to make money. However, Boeing has been successful with de Havilland because of the investment of the taxpayers of Canada. Canadians have invested talent in the creation, innovation and design of propeller aircraft for this modern age. We are entitled to get something out of de Havilland for our contribution.

As you well know, Madam Speaker, we are not getting $165 million. The millions we are receiving are offset by liabilities like these. As I said, I am glad that de Havilland is successful and I know that Boeing is making a contribution to its success and that jobs are being created. However, we are not receiving a return on our investment because the Government gave the company away on more favourable terms than it had indicated. As demonstrated so effectively by The Fifth Estate just a few weeks ago, the hidden, continuing liabilities and obligations of taxpayers more than cancelled out the multimillion dollar purchase price.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, where I come from, they would say it takes bloody nerve to rise in the House and criticize our Government for the decisions that were made in the course of the sale of De Havilland.

I think the Hon. Member's memory fails him, because on October 15, the Minister referred in his reply to losses of over one billion dollars incurred by this company, which meant that the Government was forced to intervene several times every year. Their Government made a habit of considering the public treasury as an inexhaustible source of funds. The deficit, 200 billion or 300 billion, it all didn't matter. There was never any consideration of the fact that Canadian companies could be helped and supported by the Government in other ways than by just injecting new funds every time there was a shortfall.

The approach taken by this Government was to proceed with the sale of a company to Boeing, a private enterprise, and to ensure that Boeing will maintain existing jobs and to ensure, I have a few notes here, that in Winnipeg the company will proceed with the maintenance—

For instance, in the case of the 747, the Super Jet, facilities in Winnipeg will produce the necessary equipment for this aircraft. The contract will provide 250 jobs and $11 million worth of economic benefits across Canada, and we at least made sure that we would not be constantly spending public funds.

And I am surprised at the Hon. Member's criticism, especially since we took every precaution to ensure that the transaction would be carried out properly, that the private company would be in a position to carry out its main function which is to manage a company and even make a profit, and to maintain jobs for Canadians, and that is what we need, so that we don't have to spend public funds to the tune of hundreds of millions and even billions of dollars every year. That is what they did and we are still paying for their mistakes.

Of course they have conveniently forgotten about that, but it all means that every year, our children and our grandchildren will have to pay back these debts.

You mentioned vigilance, but where was your vigilance when you were supposed to consider those factors and ensure that the Canadian Government was living within its means and knew where it was going?

You did not have those considerations, and, Madam Speaker, I do not agree with the comments made by the Hon. Member today. I think it is a good deal and I think our actions as a Government were entirely appropriate.

EDUCATION—STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF BURSARY PROGRAM. (B) MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, on November 4 I raised a question in the House regarding the Canada Student Loans Program and the desperate plight that many students now find themselves in with very high debt loads that they are bearing at the end of their university days when they get into the workforce to start their working careers.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) was fairly positive in his response. He said that he would be discussing the question with the provincial Ministers of Education. He invited me and other Members of the House to sit down with him afterward to go into the question more thoroughly. I promptly accepted that invitation.

In the meantime, we do not even have a very good idea of how bad the situation is. The last Canada Student Loans Program annual report was for the year 1982-83. This was before the Conservative Government came into office. We know from ad hoc evidence, from the letters we are receiving from constituents, from parents who are telling us the situation of their own children and from the Canadian Federation of Students that the situation is getting tougher and tougher. Debt burdens of $8,000 to $20,000 are not uncommon these days.

We have no definitive information. To devise a reasonable plan we have to look at the present situation. We know that the situation is worst in British Columbia. British Columbia does not have a bursary program, it is entirely a loan program. The Canada Student Loans Program was designed to be complementary to a bursary program at the level of the provinces. Any bursaries previously given out by B.C. no longer exist.

The University of British Columbia financial aid department makes the following dire predictions. The average debt of the 1985 graduate was $10,000. The average debt of the 1984 graduate was $3,700. The predicted debt of the 1986 graduate is $15,000. There are some students who have a debt of $25,000.

The Director of Student Aid at the University of Victoria agrees that British Columbia's student aid program is the worst in Canada. The shortage of aid is causing changes in the types of people who are able to attend university. There are fewer coming from the interior of B.C., which is distant from the university, fewer from low income families and single parents. The causes are obvious. The Social Credit Government cancelled student grants, and immediately there was an enormous increase in the debts. Previously the ceiling was $1,800 a year and now it is $5,400 a year. Student fees have tripled in the past five years in British Columbia. The situation is desperate.

In the case of the Canada Student Loans Program, I should like to look at a few facts. Since 1964, 22 years ago, the federal Government has doled out $3.8 billion in guaranteed loans to about 1.5 million students. Of those 1.5 million students, about 12 per cent have defaulted. Default has a certain connotation. I wonder about the 12 per cent figure. We know that the unemployment rate is about 12 per cent. I wonder whether that is the relevant figure.

The Government has paid $377 million to Canadian banks to cover defaulted loans. A substantial amount of that has been recovered, some $179 million. The rest is still owing. Then the collection agencies come into play. Sometimes they are inflexible and sometimes they are positively brutal in their methods of collection. I note that the Government has been willing to forgive other loans but not student loans. I wonder about its priorities.

The case of female students is an even more difficult one. Women have to pay the same fees and the same rent, yet their opportunities for summer jobs are not as good. Of course the money they make after graduation is not as much as that made by male students on average. Any fairness for female students must mean equal pay for work of equal value.

I do not realistically say that we could decrease the fees or increase the loans to female students to make that up, as it would entrench inequities in the system. However, female students are clearly the worst off. Female students who are single parents are the worst off in that group.

We could be doing more for parents who are students. In many cases education is a desperate need so that they will be able to make their way, get out of debt, and be able to use their education, as we want them to, to earn their livelihood.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State has already indicated that, in the view of the Government, the indebtedness of students is an important matter which deserves serious consideration. I might add that provincial administrations as well are looking into the problem caused by the indebtedness of post-secondary institution graduates.

As a matter of fact, at their last meeting held in Winnipeg in September, the Council of Ministers of Education of Canada decided to set up a federal-provincial advisory committee to review both the Canada Student Loans Program, which they administer, and the student assistance programs sponsored by the provinces themselves. I have no doubt that at their next meeting early next year the provincial Ministers will examine the issue of student indebtedness, among other things.

But a lot of other people are interested in this question. It was raised recently during a meeting of Secretary of State officials, the Canadian Federation of Students, and various other interested parties.

The Hon. Member must be aware that the Canada Student Loans Program has been a resounding success over the years. That is a fact. But problems do crop up, including the cumulative debt load of students, and they can be traced back to several factors. For one thing, in 1983 the Government raised the ceiling on student loans, practically doubling the amounts available. Adjustments were made as well to provincial student assistance programs so that, in some cases, students must borrow more to continue their studies.

It is interesting to note, Madam Speaker, that quite a large majority of students manage to repay their debts after they graduate. You are well aware of course that those who have difficulty repaying their debts, for lack of a job for instance, can apply for coverage under the interest remittal program.

On another point, it goes without saying, Madam Speaker, that the Government will consider any new initiative that may be recommended to it to increase accessibility to post-secondary education, whether through scholarships or grants. However, this will have to be done in a manner consistent with fiscal constraints.

I would finally like to inform the Hon. Member that certain difficulties of an administrative nature have delayed the publication of the annual reports of the Canadian Student Loans Program for 1983-84 and 1984-85.

However, I would like to assure the House that those two reports will be tabled before Christmas.

If in the meantime some Hon. Members would like to have information on those two years of loans, I would suggest that they contact the Student Assistance Directorate in the Secretary of State Departement.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3.(1).

The House adjourned at 6.26 p.m.

THE LATE LUCIE GRATTON

Mr. Speaker: I would like to inform all Hon. Members of the House that Lucie Gratton, whose services as a procedural clerk with the House of Commons have been greatly appreciated since 1978, passed away yesterday at the age of 30 years after a long and valiant fight against cancer. On behalf of the Members and staff of the House of Commons, I have expressed my deepest sympathy to her husband, Michael Kirby, one of our Principal Clerks, and to her mother, Pierrette Gratton, Administrative Assistant to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

QUEBEC CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

ANNUAL CONFERENCE IN HULL

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): On Saturday and Sunday November 14 and 15, Mr. Speaker, in the City of Hull the Quebec Chamber of Commerce will hold its annual convention. This apolitical organization includes over 210 local and regional Quebec chambers of commerce.

I want to focus on this annual event because it highlights the socio-economic prospects in the Province of Quebec.

On behalf of the Government of Canada I extend a warm welcome to all delegates and wish them great success in their endeavour, more particularly to the representatives of the chambers of commerce of the Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup riding who have accomplished an outstanding job in their respective municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all chambers of commerce members, I should like to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for responding to their invitation to be the guest speaker at the annual dinner next Sunday. This is the first time a Canadian Prime Minister has agreed to make an appearance at a Quebec Chamber of Commerce convention, and we are very proud indeed. Best success to all participants.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DELIVERY OF CHEQUES—NEED TO IMPROVE SYSTEM

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, a number of workers in my riding who are entitled to labour adjustment benefits are not treated quite as well as the recipients of other Government services—unemployment insurance, old age security, family allowances and so on—who all receive their benefits on the appointed date.

Unfortunately workers who depend on labour adjustment benefits are not as lucky. Those who have to complete a questionnaire every other week must sometimes wait for four or five weeks before they get their cheque, which is a source of untold problems since the amounts involved are not very big to begin with. Every time they receive a cheque they have no idea when the next one will arrive.

I would therefore ask that a special effort be made so these people will not be victimized by delays resulting from administrative bottlenecks in the Department of Manpower and Immigration or from Canada Post delivery problems.

There is room for improvement in this service, and the recipients are frustrated by the response they get from some of the civil servants who handle their case.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF LABOUR REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, as you may know, the federal NDP is conducting an inquiry into the nuclear industry in Canada, partly as a result of the failure of the Progressive Conservative Government to live up to the promise that it made to the Canadian people to have such an inquiry.

We had our first hearings in Toronto last week at which we had the opportunity to meet with representatives of CUPE 1000, the union local that represents most of the workers at Ontario Hydro. One of the matters they brought to our attention was the request by the Canadian Labour Congress for the Government to appoint a labour member to the Atomic Energy Control Board.

I wish to take this opportunity to call upon the Government to accede to that request and to appoint a labour member to the Atomic Energy Control Board. While the Government is at it, it could consider appointing a wider variety of people to the Atomic Energy Control Board, people who represent energy consumers, environmental concerns and other interests and views which should be brought to bear upon decisions made about the future of nuclear energy in Canada.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORT ON CHARLOTTETOWN DRIVING PARK DENOUNCED

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a negative report which was aired on CBC's The Journal on October 14, 1986, regarding the Charlottetown Driving Park in Prince Edward Island.

The CDP is considered the heart of the harness racing industry in P.E.I. and has been referred to as the Kentucky of Canada on many occasions. The Charlottetown Driving Park has operated since the late 1800s, has one of the highest wager rates per capita in Canada, and is one of the few tracks making a profit. The CDP has turned out such greats as Rumpus Hanover, a pacer who holds the world record for two-year-old colts, and was home to Captain Jamie, who has a trotting record of 1.57.

The harness racing industry is a major contributor to tourism in P.E.I. Therefore, Prince Edward Islanders were angered and appalled when CBC reporter Tom Alderman chose to portray the CDP as a small-time track at which racehorses were of poor quality, no money could be made, and as a track which neither the public nor the harness racing industry should take seriously. Tom Alderman, the reporter for CBC, should not be taken seriously. This type of biased, negative reporting is disgusting and disgraceful.

DRUGS—UNPROTECTED CONSUMERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Conservative Government tabled another Bill that puts an additional burden on senior citizens, low-income families and the sick.

Mr. Speaker, after imposing a 10 per cent tax on drugs and thus taxing illness in this country, just to reduce the deficit, that same Government has now decided to give in to blackmail by the multinationals, the excuse being that it will create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, pretty soon the Government will be praying for people to die in this country, to create more jobs in funeral homes.

Mr. Speaker, this Conservative Government has decided to lean on the poor. Today, 4,000 Canadians have no protection as far as drug costs are concerned, neither from Government or private plans, and these 4,000 Canadians are going to suffer as a result of the incompetence and injustice of the Conservative Government.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my Government was elected in September 1984, because it promised Canadians jobs, jobs, and I want to take this opportunity to prove this was not an empty promise.

Mr. Speaker, in October the unemployment rate was 9.4 per cent, the lowest since March 1982. This means that since 1984, 610,000 jobs have been created in Canada, that we have 255,000 fewer unemployed in this country and that 339,000 more women are working today than was the case in September 1984.

Mr. Speaker, youth unemployment has gone down from 18.4 per cent to 14.9 per cent. Over 80 per cent of the jobs created are full time jobs.

In the Atlantic region, jobs are being created at a rate of 1,080 per month, twice the figure of 509 produced under the Liberals.

Since September 1984, 303,000 jobs have been created in Ontario and 5,760 jobs in Quebec—eight times as much as under the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker, that is a performance that is hard to beat.

PORTS

PORT OF CHURCHILL—PERMANENT STAFF LAID OFF

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is apparent from the Government's recent action that it has no intention at this time of making a commitment to the support of the Port of Churchill. The Government stalled for months before making public yesterday the results of four independent studies which looked at the viability of the port. As has now become known, these studies have shown that the port can be made viable.

The studies point out the unique value of the port as Canada's only Arctic seaport with a rail connection to the south. However, the Government has moved recently to lay off the permanent staff at the port and to shut down the facility completely during the winter for the first time in three decades. This was done in the full knowledge of these studies which were kept hidden.

It is time for the Government to stop pretending Churchill is not viable and to offer this unique resource the support it deserves. It is no wonder that Conservative MLAs from Brandon are suggesting that provincial Tories need a new name.

PENITENTIARIES

OPENING OF PRISON IN RENOUS, N.B.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, according to the November issue of Atlantic Insight, the new maximum security prison in Renous, New Brunswick, is about to open. According to the magazine, it was built as a result of a 1980 election promise made by the former Liberal Government.

The prison was built despite the fact that experts said it was not needed and that it could be built elsewhere for $10 million less. It was built despite its isolated location, and despite opposition from the John Howard Society, the Elizabeth Fry Society, the Salvation Army, and the Criminal Justice Association.

According to the former Member of Parliament for the riding in which it was located, the prison was built because:

"It is the Government of Canada . . . My job was to get what I could for this riding and I have a very firm belief that the free citizens of this country have more rights than prisoners do."

Does that all sound familiar, Mr. Speaker?

REVIEW OF PROGRAM CUTS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) has announced that he will be appointing a committee to review the cuts at the National Research Council, cuts which he himself told the Council to make. Now he is telling council members that he does not like or trust their judgment. This begs the question: why is the Minister questioning the judgment of council members whom he himself has undermined by making ill-advised demands? Why does he not just back off, go back to square one and cancel the cuts?

The Minister has also said that he is dismayed to learn that council members are sitting beyond their term. I think he should be grateful that these people are willing to serve Canadians. Why did the Minister not learn of this before? Did he expect the Council to shut down its operations and wait for him to wake up and name replacements? I would hope that members of the Government, and the Minister, would start reading the correspondence that they are receiving from Canadians and that these harmful cuts are reversed in the shortest time.

NICARAGUA—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about the Government's inconsistency in voting in the UN to condemn U.S. support for Contra terrorism in Nicaragua while at the same time providing aid to Honduras and El Salvador where Contra bases are located. The Prime Minister answered that our alliances and friendships are not in doubt.

We believe that the Prime Minister's refusal to meet Vice-President Ramirez does cast considerable doubt on where this country stands and its degree of independence. That is also true of the Nicaraguan Government, which has recalled its ambassador because of the snub that country's Vice-President received from our Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister wants to show his Government's independence of policy and principle, it should extend an invitation to the Vice-President of Nicaragua.

APPOINTMENT OF TASK FORCE TO REVIEW PROGRAMS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks considerable concern has been expressed in this House and throughout the country with respect to program cuts at the National Research Council. The facts surrounding these cuts have been seriously distorted, and the rationale for some of them is weak, at best.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) will announce today the formation of a three-person task group to undertake consultations on behalf of the Government with the President and members of the National Research Council in respect of programs, management, and budgetary considerations at the NRC. My colleagues and I in the Conservative Party strongly applaud this initiative. Our lobbying efforts and our strong voices have been heard again as responsible recognition that the intellectual wealth and long-term economic importance of the NRC must be maintained and enhanced.

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—
WINNIPEG CITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Council of the City of Winnipeg passed this resolution unanimously:

That the Council of the City of Winnipeg convey to the Prime Minister and Government of Canada this city's profound anger and regret over the Government's decision respecting the CF-18 maintenance contract, and its dismay at the undermining of both the public tendering process and the principle of orderly and equitable regional economic development.

That sense of betrayal has only been compounded by the revelation yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) that it was a sheer political choice made last August. At the same time the people of Manitoba and the Bristol contractors were being misled by Conservative Members of Parliament for Manitoba that everything was all right.

People from Winnipeg are part of Canada too. They are part of the national interest. They want a number of questions answered. They want to know why that crass political choice is not being revealed, together with the documents, so that we know exactly what is going on with this Government, and the people in Winnipeg can feel that they share in the proper development of this country.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF PATENT RIGHTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I had the honour of bringing in the current drug price legislation in 1968. At that time we had among the highest drug prices in the world. Since that date we have had among the lowest drug prices in the world.

The independent inquiry appointed by the previous Government recommended that, in order to encourage more research and jobs in Canada, the patent protection be extended for four years. The Government has extended that period from four to ten years. Why did the Government choose to give two and a half times more protection to the pharmaceutical companies in order to get those jobs in research than the independent inquiry suggested? Was it not because there was pressure from the United States as one of the prices for free trade negotiations?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is correct that in the 1960s drug prices in Canada were above the United States. In the 1980s they are below the United States, even where there is no generic competition. The Patent Act has nothing to do with that fact. The market has changed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: A great many things have changed since 1968 of which the Hon. Member should be aware. If the Opposition would be so gracious as to allow Parliament to examine this Bill and look at the clauses it will be amply demonstrated that the benefits of what we are proposing are of an overwhelming nature. They will restore to this country vigour in the research and development area, which apparently every Party wants in general but not in specific.

INQUIRY WHETHER UNINSURED WILL BE PROTECTED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister stated that the price of drugs would not increase as a result of this Bill. At the same time, however, he had earmarked $100 million for the provinces to protect them against price increases.

Does he really think Canadians are so naive they don't know realize what the real reason is? And didn't the Minister protect sick Canadians who are not protected by drug insurance plans?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not the naivete of the Canadian public about which I am concerned; it is the naivete of the Opposition. Every drug now on the market, brand name and generic, will remain on the market. Whatever market forces are establishing price will continue. That simple, elementary economic lesson should be comprehensible even to the Leader of the Opposition. There will be no increases in those drugs. In terms of the drugs in the so-called pipeline in the future, time in Question Period does not permit an answer to that.

Mr. Axworthy: You can't answer it.

Mr. Andre: Let us introduce the Bill. Let us look at that in committee. Let us examine it. I am sure, if the hon. gentleman is fair minded, he will find out that in fact the prices will be very reasonable and the benefits will overwhelm any minor costs that might be there.

CANADIAN PATENT SYSTEM—REPORTED EXAMINATION BY UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister compared American and Canadian drug prices. Canadian drug prices are appreciably lower than American drug prices, so much so that is he aware that the United States Department of Health has been examining our current patent system in order to try to give lower drug prices to Americans? Why, in this instance, would the Government attempt to adopt an American-styled system when the American Government itself is looking at ours?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will try again. Ninety-three per cent of drugs do not have generic competition. For those 93 per cent of drugs the prices in Canada, without generic competition, are cheaper than they are in the United States. The reason is that it is a different market. It is a different country. We have a different way of selling drugs. The provinces are the big buyers.

Mr. Axworthy: That is right. Let's keep it that way.

Mr. Andre: That will remain in place. We are going to keep it there. In exchange for granting patent protection to inventors or creators, we will gain at least 3,000 high-tech jobs in an area from which it is unforgiveable that Canada should be excluded.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REGIONAL UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR NEW POLICIES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. While the national rate of unemployment has declined to 9.4 per cent—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: —I want to remind the Government that there are still 1.2 million Canadians unemployed. That rate is still far above the pre-recession rate of 7.5 per cent in 1981. However, most disturbing is the continual deterioration in the regions of Canada—in Quebec, Alberta, and especially the Atlantic provinces. The rate of unemployment increased in every Atlantic province. When will the Government recognize that reliance upon a free market economy will not cure these regional problems? When will it recognize the growing gulf between the rich and poor regions in the country; change direction; and bring in policies which will stimulate growth in these regions and create new jobs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right that the level of unemployment today is higher than it was compared with the pre-recession lows. However, it is an awful lot lower than it was in September, 1984. It is down from 11.7 per cent to 9.4 per cent. The youth unemployment rate went down three percentage points during that same period. I agree with the Hon. Member that the rate is still too high. We are doing everything we can to get it down.

The Hon. Member pointed out the problems which have been felt in the regions of the country. Yes, we are acting there as well. We have acted in the Province of Alberta, as he knows. He referred to the Province of Alberta. We have introduced the Atlantic Enterprise Program, the Atlantic Opportunities Program, and the Cape Breton tax credit. We have maintained the investment tax credit—

RESULT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, whatever they have done has not had much effect in Atlantic Canada and the regions of the country. Does the Minister not realize that if he sticks with the laissez-faire approach of the Government, the comparison made by the Minister of Transport of Atlantic Canada with the Third World will become a reality? That is what is happening in Canada, with the division between the rich and the poor.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that 610,000 jobs have been created since September, 1984. The Hon. Member should admit that a number of those jobs have been created in Atlantic Canada, Quebec, and regions of western Canada. If the Hon. Member had a sense of fairness he would be repeating that as well.

We have stated quite clearly that more must be done about the problems of regional disparity, particularly in the Atlantic provinces and the Province of Quebec. More is being done, and we are continuing to work on that. If the Hon. Member would give us credit for what is being done he would know that a tremendous amount of progress has been made.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF PATENT ACT—COST OF DRUGS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In defence of the Government's move to amend the Patent Act for pharmaceutical products, he stated that this policy will not cost Canadian consumers any additional money and will not cause drug prices to rise. Will he not agree with a critic of this policy that Canadians in fact will end up paying anywhere from $100 million to $250 million more on the cost of prescription drugs because of this policy?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that every drug now on the market, generic and brand name, will remain on the market. There will be no change. Therefore, what will cause this tremendous price increase that the Member is projecting?

In terms of drugs not yet discovered, one has to make assumptions about what will happen to price. If you assume today is Tuesday, you can prove that tomorrow will be Wednesday. But what does that prove?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Today is Friday.

Mr. Andre: The assumption can give you any number that one wants.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF STUDIES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should understand that the critic I referred to was the Conserative Member for Hamilton—Wentworth who, on April 11, 1983, said exactly what I just said in the House.

The Minister has just told us that he cannot determine what the cost impact will be. I made an application under Access to Information to get that information and the Minister said that cost impact studies of the proposed policy are cabinet confidences. Will he not come clean with Canadians and release these cost impact studies so that we can see very clearly how much this policy will cost the average Canadian consumer?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the New Democratic Party would allow this Bill to go to committee—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: —we could have those discussions and he would know the facts. Let me quote a statement made by the Consumer and Corporate Affairs critic of the New Democratic Party, the Member for Winnipeg North, who said: "If the higher prices went into a fund which would really be used for research and development, I think that consumers could live with that". That is what we are doing.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

DISTRIBUTION OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The orgy of expenditures to improve the political standing of the Conservative Party in Quebec and Ontario has taken place at the expense of the poorer regions of the country.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Dingwall: Will the Minister explain to the House and Canadians why his Department, the lead Department for regional economic development, has intentionally gone out and cut adrift the people of Manitoba, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and the other poor regions of the country? Why?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Member is not aware of the assistance that has been given to all the regions. I will point out to him some of the most important ones. For instance, there is the $1 billion in assistance we have given to farmers in the west. There is the $580 million for the stabilization program. I could go on to the removal of the PGRT. There is the Atlantic Enterprise Program that cost $600 million, as well as the Atlantic Accord. These are examples of assistance to the regions.

REGIONAL DISPARITIES—REQUEST FOR NEW POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I tell the Minister sincerely that by 1984 the number of jobless in Nova Scotia increased by 4,000. Per capita income in 1984 was 81 per cent of the national average. In 1986 it is less than 78 per cent. Will the Minister introduce a policy to address regional disparities instead of pork-barrelling his friends in Quebec and Ontario?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, no Government has helped the regions more than this Government has since 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Just to help my friend so that he is aware, I invite him to read the record of our accomplishments since 1984. It is available for him.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for trade my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I have here a secret cabinet document—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —dated October 27. The subject matter—

Mr. Siddon: Sticky fingers again.

Mr. Broadbent: —is Canada-U.S. trade negotiations and the automotive agreement. Will the Acting Prime Minister now confirm that the Canadian team negotiating a deal with the U.S. now believe that the Auto Pact safeguards, crucial to investment in Canada, are obsolete? Will he also confirm that they are acting on that assumption in conducting negotiations on the Auto Pact?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister I will take that question as notice. However, I think it has been said many, many times that, if it is working, don't fix it.

Mr. Broadbent: That is precisely the view of the NDP and every Canadian and every one of our automotive communities. We are saying do not touch it, and this document says the Conservatives are about to abandon those safeguards.

METHOD OF APPLYING PROVISIONS OF AUTO PACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, because his name is on this paper. The Minister knows perfectly well that General Motors is considering new investments at Boisbriand in the Province of Quebec. This corporation accepts the principle of the Auto Pact safeguards. My question is quite straightforward. Does the Minister agree the Auto Pact safeguards should be maintained, yes or no?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think the Government has an abiding concern for ensuring that the automobile industry conforms to the provisions of the Auto Pact, and we discuss these matters with the companies that maintain trading relations with us in this respect.

AUTO PACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as Canadians will know, particularly those in automotive communities, this matter affects quite literally thousands of Canadian jobs. I want to get something clear from the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance, someone with authority and responsibility in this domain. Will the Government support what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said unequivocally in the past, that the Auto Pact safeguards will remain and are non-negotiable?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows from his own personal experience, the Auto Pact has been a very important part of the economic development of our country. We are committed to maintaining the impact and benefits of the Auto Pact in the fullest way possible. The Hon. Member well knows that General Motors announced an expansion project in his own riding, I think something like $2 billion or $2.5 billion. That is well above any commitments they need make in the city of Oshawa. Why? Because the productivity of the company in Canada is good and that is something we are committed—

Mr. Broadbent: What about other communities?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am sorry, if the Hon. Member would let me continue? We are committed to maintaining that.

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF ENERGY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In an interview given to La Presse yesterday the Minister of Energy blew the Government's cover on the awarding of the CF-18 contract. He said it was a strictly political choice designed to give the economy of Montreal sectors of hope within the strategy designed for telecommunications, aeronautics, and high technology.

I ask the Minister where are the strategies for the other cities whose economies are also dependent upon aeronautics, high technology, and telecommunications? Can they no longer expect to receive federal investment? Can they no longer make bids on federal jobs contracts? When is the Government going to establish strategies for other cities? When is it going to restore hope to the city of Winnipeg whose economy it is destroying right now?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first with respect to the report which the Hon. Member has referred to, I think he is referring to a headline which appeared in yesterday's edition of La Presse. I think upon reading the full text of that interview he will find there was some inaccuracy in the way in which that interview was reported. Perhaps he may want to check into that.

On the other part of the question, I do not think there is any question about this Government's commitment to Manitoba, western Canada or any other part of the country. The unemployment rate in Manitoba is the lowest in Canada at 6.9 per cent. The Government can certainly take some credit for that.

In so far as the aerospace industry is concerned, he and his colleagues violently opposed the acquisition of de Havilland by Boeing. That company is now generating some 250 jobs in Winnipeg as a result of the manufacturing of the wing of the Boeing 747. Clearly Manitoba has and will continue to have a leadership role in the aerospace industry.

CF-5 CONTRACT—CLAIM MADE FOR BRISTOL AIRCRAFT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am going to be very interested to see how the Deputy Prime Minister explains that in Winnipeg on Saturday, and whether people will really believe him.

If he is talking about the aerospace industry, and we now have it clearly in the words of the Minister of Energy that these choices are made by the Prime Minister according to his strategy, will the Government clearly target Bristol Aircraft for the awarding of the contract for the CF-5 so we can restore the aerospace industry in that city?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the decisions this Government takes are Government decisions, not decisions by the Prime Minister. This was a Government decision. The President of the Treasury Board explained the rationale very clearly in this House on many occasions. I wish the Hon. Member would listen to that carefully because in it he will find his answer.

TRADE

AUTO PACT—CABINET COMMITTEE MEETING INQUIRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I want to quote from this secret memo which—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: —which reached us—

An Hon. Member: In a brown envelope.

Mr. Langdon: —and which indicates that "the trade negotiator's office continue in its fact-finding exercise with the U.S." with respect to the free trade discussions with the U.S. Does the Minister deny that the P and P subcommittee of Cabinet met on October 27 to consider precisely the recommendations coming from the free trade negotiator's office and that, in those recommendations, there were precisely these reports that discussions with the U.S. on the Auto Pact have been taking place?

Some Hon. Members: Great speech!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was not at that meeting and I cannot comment specifically on that. However, I will repeat what I said to his Leader. The Government fully recognizes the importance of the automotive industry to his community, the community of his Leader, and to the entire country. We will not do anything which will undermine the capacity of that industry to create jobs, economic growth or exports, in any part of the country where it is possible to do that. That is the objective which the Government is following and will continue to follow.

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, how is it possible for the Government do justify its Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde approach? The Government tells the House of Commons one thing with respect to this issue and tells the negotiators from the United States precisely the opposite. This memo proves that. I ask the Government to admit how wrong-headed it has been in its approach.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I totally reject that. During the past two years the Government has achieved a record level of new investment activity in the automotive industry. Surely that is a sign of the commitment of the Government to the automotive industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: The Auto Pact.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member yells, "the Auto Pact". Yes, the Auto Pact got this all started, but he knows full well that the commitment of General Motors is way above the requirements of the Auto Pact.

Mr. Langdon: That's one firm.

Mr. Broadbent: What about Chrysler and Ford?

REALLOCATION OF $57 MILLION INTO EXPENSE ACCOUNTS

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Last night during the Adjournment Debate, in response to queries about the $57 million which were unaccounted for in the CBC, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister stated that these entries have now been reallocated into their proper expense accounts. Is the Minister satisfied that the reallocation of the $57 million has been completed and entered into the proper expense accounts? Although the Auditor General found no evidence of misappropriation of resources, how can the Government be assured, without an independent audit, that there are no losses and that it was only an administration problem as was stated last night?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I am informed that the CBC has indeed now made a specific allocation of these accounts under its new financial management system. As a result of that, the staff of the Auditor General has gone back into the CBC to verify whether this allocation is correct resulting from last year's accounts, and whether it forms the basis for a proper allocation in the future.

It must be understood that, as long as that investigation is going on, the concerns of the Auditor General will not have been fully resolved. As long as those concerns still exist with the Auditor General, they exist with me.

APPOINTMENT OF TASK FORCE TO REVIEW PROGRAM CUTS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Minister has announced that he will be appointing a committee to review the cuts at the National Research Council which he himself told the Council to make.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Unbelievable.

Mr. Berger: He is saying that he does not like their judgment, that he does not trust the members of the Council. Why is the Minister questioning the judgment of the members of a Council which he himself has undermined with his own ill-advised cuts?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, this morning I announced the formation of a three-person task group which will examine the reallocations of the Council's resources, to ensure that programs which would have a significant impact on public health and safety and are consistent with Government priorities are not cut.

Mr. Berger: You have a Council. That's its job.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, this amounts to a form of trusteeship that is absolutely unconscionable and unacceptable. The Minister also says he is amazed that members of the NRC continue to sit after their mandate has expired, when he should be thanking them for their dedication to the people of Canada. I want to ask him: Does he think the NRC should close its doors until the Minister wakes up and gets around to his appointments? Is that what he has against the NRC?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, for the last two months the Hon. Member has insisted that I should be responsible for everything the Council does. The Council is not some kind of a private club.

Mr. Berger: You're right. It's not a private club.

Mr. Oberle: From time to time Governments establish certain priorities which the Council has historically consistently respected and taken into account in the allocation of public resources and the formation of programs. That is what has been and is presently happening. The task group which I have announced will ensure that I and Members of the House will understand the rationale which was behind the so-called cuts.

Mr. Berger: You had committee hearings. You're ignoring the committee hearings.

Mr. Oberle: It will also ensure that the Council understands the new priority which the Government has established in line with its national strategy.

INDUSTRY'S PROFITABILITY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The report of the Eastman Commission said in part, "that profitability in the pharmaceutical industry in Canada is relatively high and has remained so over the entire period from 1968 to 1982. The profitability of pharmaceuticals clearly exceeds that for all manufacturing industries".

In view of that, what rational explanation can there be for giving companies which are already at the highest rate of profitability the monopoly protection which they have demanded and to which the Minister has cravenly agreed?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just announced $100 million of investment in new research and development as a result of our plans.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: That figure will reach $1 billion by the end of this decade. I find it passing strange that, on the same day that that Party suggests it wants more taxpayers' money spent on research in such things as radio astronomy, it totally objects to the creation of 3,000 research jobs through the measure we are introducing which will not impact on consumers in any detrimental fashion.

Mr. Young: Prove it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the $150 million the Minister is talking about is one-fifteenth of what they promised.

ACCOUNTING FIRM'S FORECAST OF DRUG PRICES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Coopers & Lybrand, one of the biggest chartered accountant companies in Canada, has estimated that by 1995 Canadians will be paying $650 million more per year for prescription drugs than they have until now. How much more does the Government think those multinational corporations need to induce them to stay in Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the industry of which the Hon. Member speaks is indeed profitable. Through this move some of those profits will be invested in research in Canada which will employ Canadian scientists. That is what this is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: With regard to projections of future costs, I remind the Member of the National Energy Program prediction of $80 a barrel oil.

Mr. Orlikow: And you believed that.

Mr. Andre: Bear that in mind when you predict the future. Let us take this Bill to committee where we can consider the assumptions made in those projections. Hopefully we will come up with a more rational and reasonable evaluation. That is all I am asking.

ALGONQUIN RADIO OBSERVATORY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The group of eminent persons to which he has referred, the Associate Committee on Astronomy, voted 11 to 0 in favour of upgrading the Algonquin Radio Observatory in addition to keeping it open. Will the Minister inform Members of this House why the recommendations of this group of dedicated professionals have been so totally disregarded?

• (1150)

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will naturally be in a much better position to answer that question when I receive the report of the task group I appointed this morning to look into these questions.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CANCEL CUTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. It is quite obvious that the Minister has not listened to this group. It is also obvious that he has not listened to recommendations of the National Research Council or to Canadians. Will the Minister now do the honourable thing and admit his mistake in not listening to these people, cancel the cuts to the NRC, and let this country go ahead in science and technology and research and development as the Conservatives promised in 1984?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we are very anxious to let the country go ahead with important research and science and technology efforts.

Mr. Gauthier: Then leave it alone.

Mr. Oberle: It is a strange twist of logic that both the Liberal Party and its socialist friends will do everything they can to prevent the introduction of a Bill—

An Hon. Member: You are the one that's doing the cutting.

Mr. Oberle: —that would create 3,000 research jobs—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO SMALLER PROVINCES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I am sure the Deputy Prime Minister is aware that since the Conservative Party took office in September, 1984, employment growth in Atlantic Canada has gone up by only 3 per cent, while in Ontario it has risen by some 7 per cent. Despite those figures, the overwhelming majority of moneys of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion has gone to Ontario and Quebec. Does the Government have any plans at all to increase the budget of the Department so that the smaller provinces receive their fair share of money for regional expansion programs?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered this question. I said earlier today that since 1984 this Government has helped the regions more than any other previous administration ever did.

I referred as well to some of the initiatives taken by our Government, and I should like to remind my colleague that he need only read the Speech from the Throne to see that again we are committed to continue helping the regions. We have already announced the establishment of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and made it clear we intend to diversify the western economy.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, we are making a sustained effort to help various regions of Canada.

[English]

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS IN ONTARIO

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Now I understand why the Manitoba Conservatives feel awkward about his speech this weekend. The Department of Supply and Services in 1985 and 1986 let out over half its contracts in the Province of Ontario. Is the Deputy Prime Minister satisfied that one province should receive over half the contracts from that Department? Can he tell us what special effort is being made so there will be more fairness in the future for smaller provinces?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): As my colleague as just pointed out Mr. Speaker, this Government has shown deep concern for regional development.

Hon. Members should keep in mind that purchases by the Department of Supply and Services went up by 105 per cent in the first quarter of this year, and that the purchasing program is cyclical, in the sense that some programs expire while others begin. We have amply demonstrated our intention to help the regions wherever they may be.

INDUSTRY

DECISIONS OF GENERAL MOTORS AND ELECTROLUX—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

This morning, the newspapers reported some bad news for Quebec. The unemployment rate in Quebec has gone up to 10.8 per cent, Electrolux is going to close its doors and 372 jobs will be lost. General Motors has announced it is laying off 29,000 workers in North America, which may be bad news for the GM plant in Sainte-Thérèse.

My question for the Minister of Finance is as follows: What kind of action does the Government intend to take to persuade Electrolux to continue manufacturing appliances in Canada that are purchased by Canadians, and what does it intend to do to ensure that the plant in Sainte-Thérèse will remain open?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as far as Electrolux is concerned, of course we have been kept informed of the company's problems. In recent years, the company has suffered major losses. As a result, it will have to rationalize its entire operations. Actually, it has invested up to $15 million since 1980.

Mr. Speaker, we are doing everything we can, through exhaustive job severance programs and the like, to provide training programs for the workers who, unfortunately, will lose their jobs.

CONSEQUENCES FOR FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the Minister of Finance.

Could the Minister give the House and all Canadians the assurance that what is happening at Electrolux and General Motors is not related to our free trade negotiations with the United States? In other words, are large U.S. corporations getting ready to transfer their production to the United States and serve the Canadian market from their American plants, since free trade will open the door wide to this possibility?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is out of touch with reality.

An Hon. Member: It wouldn't be the first time.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have seen 610,000 jobs—

An Hon. Member: That's not reality.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Yes, it is reality that 610,000 jobs have been created in Canada since September, 1984. The unemployment rate in the Province of Quebec is down 2 percentage points during this same period. Hundreds of thousands of jobs have been created. What is happening with industry in Canada is because of the uncertainty as to whether or not we are going ahead with the trade negotiations. Because of the ferment caused by questions such as the Hon. Member asks, Canadian companies are uncertain as to whether—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is why we have to get on with these negotiations.

TASK FORCE REVIEW OF PROGRAM CUTS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In light of the Minister's announcement this morning that he is creating a task group to review the NRC program cuts, does he anticipate that some of these cuts may be over-ruled by the group or by the Government?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to anticipate anything. I have appointed three eminent persons to consult with the management of the NRC and the Council with regard to its budgetary allocations and other matters. I would prefer to await the outcome of this exercise and for the report.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton on a supplementary question.

TIMEFRAME FOR CONDUCTING REVIEW

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister indicate to the House the timeframe for the group to report to him?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Again, Mr. Speaker, I will be bringing the group together immediately. I would not wish to put undue pressure on it in terms of time, or indeed in its terms of reference.

Mr. Berger: By next April, I would hope.

Mr. Oberle: It would be my wish to proceed swiftly since these cuts would not come into effect until the next fiscal year after April. I would expect this exercise to be concluded before the end of the year.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

ALLEGED CONDUCT OF PRESS SECRETARY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the Government's policy regarding equality for women in the workplace. The Prime Minister will know by now that there have been additional complaints from a number of women reporters concerning the unprofessional sexist conduct of his Press Secretary. Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree that if the Prime Minister believes in equality, and I think he does, he should take this matter seriously and investigate these allegations which really question the integrity of his office?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice responded to that question a couple of days ago and indicated at the time that the Press Secretary was acquiring legal counsel to deal with this issue. I think that has been done. I feel it would be inappropriate to comment any further on this particular issue at this time.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this does not prevent the Prime Minister from taking action within his own office. The question is much broader—

Mr. Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member to put her question.

Ms. Mitchell: Since women across the country—not just women on Parliament Hill—face sexual harassment in the workplace every day but are afraid to make complaints, why does the Prime Minister not set an example for other employers by investigating this matter and by setting a higher standard? Or does he, like some Members of this House, think it's just a big joke?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Hon. Member, for whom I have a great deal of respect, will reflect on the last part of her statement. The Minister of Justice has pointed out very clearly that—

Ms. Jewett: It's not sub judice.

Mr. Mazankowski: —in the interest of fairness in a matter concerning these types of allegations, in Canada one is usually considered innocent until proven guilty.

Ms. Mitchell: I am talking about allegations.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Press Secretary has obtained legal counsel. I suspect the matter will be handled in that manner.

Ms. Mitchell: That's not good enough for the women of Canada.

TRADE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in light of the ambiguous reply of the Minister of Finance to the Hon. Member for Oshawa, will the Deputy Prime Minister give us a categorical undertaking that the Auto Pact, particularly the Canadian production and contents safeguards, is not negotiable and is not on the table in the current talks with the United States?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member was a member of Cabinet when the Auto Pact was negotiated. He knows full well that on one year's notice the Americans can drop out of the Auto Pact.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That's not the question!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What we have to do is ensure that we keep our automotive industry as competitive and as productive as possible in order that the safeguards of the Auto Pact never come into play. That is the case with General Motors right now.

Mr. Broadbent: What about Chrysler and Ford?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is way above the safeguard level, which is why it is investing $2.5 billion in Canada.

AUTOMOTIVE AND STEEL INDUSTRIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that reply scares me to death.

Some Hon. Members: Good!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government has knuckled under in lumber as a result of pressure from American Senators and Congressmen. After the American elections will we knuckle under on automobiles and steel and open up those situations, too?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there was no suggestion whatsoever in my response that the Government is knuckling under in any way to the Americans on anything. The important point I made was that we continue to encourage and assist the automotive industry in Canada to continue to do the great job it is doing now so that it does not have to worry about the safeguards. Members of the industry are way above the safeguards now. The Hon. Member knows it and is just sowing a lot of seeds of discontent.

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—BID BY BRISTOL AEROSPACE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Will the Minister respond to the confirmation given this morning in a telephone call by Bristol Aerospace that the price-tag placed on its bid for the CF-18 contract was inflated because of a lack of recognition that Bristol already had in hand much of the technology that was needed, technology not available to Canadair?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, I will not acknowledge that fact.

Mr. Benjamin: It's a fact but you won't acknowledge it.

Mr. de Cotret: The technical team evaluated the bids. The Bristol consortium had some technology, as did Canadair, technology that the evaluation team did not consider necessarily applicable to the contract itself. All three consortia were evaluated on the basis that the cost of technology would be similar if not equal.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition which has been duly certified by the Table. In it the petitioners state that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of the average Canadian to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 137 people from the cities of Ottawa, Hull, Kirkland Lake and others. They state that the proposed measure of the Government will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They state that the federal Government's proposal will result in higher costs to provincial Government drug plans. They call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the duty and pleasure to present a petition to the House signed by citizens living in a number of locations in Saskatchewan, places such as Wishart, Bankend, Invermay, Rose Valley, Kelliher, Fosston, Margo, Mozart, and even a place called Leslie. The petitioners humbly pray and petition the House to reject proposals to amend the Patent Act which would increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour of presenting a petition from a significant number of Canadians who are extremely concerned about the changes to the Patent Act which will inevitably increase prescription drug prices and give a much greater degree of control over prices to the multinational drug companies, inevitably allowing them to constitute a monopoly in the field of drug prices. They humbly beg the House to reject the proposed legislation.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, the attached petition has been certified correct in form and content. The petitioners from the communities of Flin-Flon, Gillam, Thompson and Herb Lake Landing express their concern with the federal Government's commitment to change the Canada Patent Act in such a way that it will hurt those Canadians who are required to purchase prescription drugs on an ongoing basis and who are concerned that this is yet another example of the Canadian Government giving concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians as a result of free trade negotiations.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition on the same subject from a number of petitioners from Ontario including residents of Hamilton, Burlington, Stoney Creek, Dundas and other parts of southern Ontario. The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject the proposal to change the Patent Act which would raise the cost of prescription drugs and would hurt many Canadians, and they are also concerned that they are being made a part of concessions to the United States in free trade negotiations.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a large number of residents of Semans, Saskatchewan, who call upon the Government to reject its proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians very significantly and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners are very concerned that the proposals of the federal Government will as well result in higher costs to provincial Government drug plans.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 106, it is my privilege and responsibility to present a petition signed by a good number of Canadians concerning the proposed legislation dealing with changes to the Patent Act. They feel that this legislation will result in higher drug costs both for themselves and for provincial drug plans and they are very concerned that this is one more example of the Canadian Government giving concessions to the United States at the expense of ordinary Canadians. They therefore call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition which, in accordance with Standing Order 106, has been found correct by the Clerk of Petitions. The petition comes from a number of Canadian residents of Brampton, Kitchener, Waterloo, Stoney Creek, Hamilton, Burlington, Sudbury, London, Alliston and Pickering. The petitioners are concerned that the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act will cause drug prices to become much higher in the years ahead and will hurt those who are on limited incomes and dependent upon drugs, will raise the costs to provincial Government plans and will hurt the health of the Canadian people. Therefore, they humbly request Parliament to reject the proposals of the Government and to stop this increase in drug prices.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition concerning the Patent Act from residents of my constituency who want to present their concerns to the House, namely that these amendments to the Patent Act will entail sharp increases in drug prices for ordinary Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour to present in the House a petition in which citizens of The Pas, Manitoba, humbly beseech the House of Commons to remove this odious and disgusting proposal put forward by the Conservative Government which represents an unfair attack on Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member will know that a number of Hon. Members engaged in a very helpful debate yesterday with respect to the whole question of presenting petitions. While there were differences of opinion, I believe those who took part in the debate would agree that the words used by the Hon. Member to introduce the petition are quite unnecessary.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if, on behalf of the petitioners, I might continue.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may certainly continue. I just hope that the Hon. Member would continue in a different way.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate your guidance on this matter and would conform to your recommendations. In this serious matter, there is an expression of concern by the residents of The Pas, Manitoba, that this provision proposed by the Government will indeed cause them great financial harm and they urge the Government to withdraw the proposal entirely.

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty this afternoon to present a petition duly certified pursuant to Standing Order 106 and urging this Parliament to turn down the Government's proposed amendments to the Patent Act. Your petitioners claim that the changes advocated by the Government will cause the prices of over the counter and prescription drugs, to go up, and they humbly call upon Parliament to reject such measures.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, the attached petition is certified correct as to form and content. This is signed by the Clerk of Petitions.

This petition opposes amendments to the Patent Act of Canada, and the Saskatchewan residents who have signed it state that such amendments will cause problems for the poor and the sick and that this is why they ask Parliament not to grant passage to this Bill.

[English]

At this time, I wish to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At this point in Orders of the Day I assume we can revert to petitions. I do have a significant number of petitions.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Robinson: I assume we are still at the stage at which petitions can be presented. I have petitions which I wish to present to the House on a number of subjects including local measured service and a range of other subjects.

Mr. Benjamin: Good thinking.

Mr. Robinson: I hope that at this time, Mr. Speaker, you will give me the opportunity to present these petitions on behalf of my constituents who wish to have their various concerns presented to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: We are still on petitions. The Speaker has not called anything else.

Mr. Speaker: I believe that at this time the most appropriate thing for the Chair to do is to see that it is in fact one o'clock.

It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order. When the House adjourned at one o'clock we were at the stage of presenting petitions under Routine Proceedings. Petitions had been presented by a number of Hon. Members and then a vote was taken. After the vote was taken the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), who had risen earlier and presented petitions, rose on a point of order to argue that he should be permitted to present a further petition. The Chair heard the Hon. Member and the House was adjourned at one o'clock. I indicated that I would consider the matter and return to the Chamber. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order of the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

I want the facts to be clearly understood. For the clarification of all Members and those who are watching these proceedings, the Hon. Member is asking to present one or more additional petitions after having already presented petitions.

Mr. Broadbent: On a different subject.

Mr. Speaker: The process in the House has been that under the presentation of petitions during Routine Proceedings a Member who rises and is recognized by the Chair can present one, several or many petitions at that time. The petitions do not have to be all on the same subject, nor do they have to all come from the same part of the country. The practice has also been that, once having presented petitions, that particular Member cannot take his seat and rise again later to present another petition.

I draw to the attention of all Hon. Members the ruling of former Speaker Sauvé on October 28, 1983. Speaker Sauvé then said:

> I warn Hon. Members that if they have several petitions they should file them all when they are recognized, because I will not recognize Members twice on petitions.

On June 11, 1985, former Speaker Bosley said:

> There is no rule that says that the Hon. Member cannot present more than one petition. There is a practice that says a Member may seek the floor once to present petitions at which time the Member may try to present more than one petition. —that has been the practice for some years—

Lest any Hon. Member or the public who follows these proceedings think that the petition or petitions which the Hon. Member for Burnaby has in his hand is, as a consequence of this practice, being prevented from being presented to the Chamber and, through the Chamber, to the Government of the day, I remind Hon. Members that there is another procedure for bringing that petition to the table, that is simply to call for a Page and have the Page deliver the petition to the table here in the Chamber. At that time that petition will be noted just as are other petitions presented when Members rise. That petition, along with the other petitions, will be transferred on that day to the appropriate office of the Government of the day, which Government must reply to petitions within 45 days.

Clearly, this practice does not preclude citizens of the country from having their petitions brought before the Government. Members who, perhaps due to the press of duties or forgetfulness, do not present all the petitions they have while on their feet, can always return on the next sitting day of this House and apply to present the petitions and say some words in support of them.

Therefore, the Hon. Member's petition can, of course, be tabled. The citizens of the country who have signed that petition will have it properly dealt with. There are, therefore, two consistent precedents by which the Chair is bound. I have to rule against the Hon. Member for Burnaby. However, in doing so, I will say that as always the Hon. Member for Burnaby understands the rules of this House and uses them skillfully in the advancement of what he and other Hon. Members feel are the interests of their constituents and in the public interest. In this spirit, of course, I always welcome the interventions of the Hon. Member and his colleagues.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

• (1410)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition on behalf of a number of citizens of Canada—

Mr. Murphy: Point of order. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, that the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) be now heard.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill is too late in rising. The Chair recognized the Member for Windsor West. The Hon. Member for Windsor West.

LOCAL MEASURED TELEPHONE CHARGES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to present a petition on behalf of a number of citizens of Canada who call upon Parliament to direct the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to deny to telephone companies the right to charge for each call, and to order the retention of the monthly rental of telephones.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Some Hon. Members: Hold it.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) rising?

Mr. Broadbent: I am rising on petitions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson: I see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) are both rising on petitions. I move that the Hon. Member for Oshawa be now heard, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby has risen and asks that another Hon. Member be heard. I think it was obvious to all Hon. Members that the Chair had not recognized any Hon. Member. Instead of recognizing one of a number of Hon. Members who stood, the Chair recognized the Hon. Member for Burnaby, so I think the Hon. Member's motion is out of order. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Nystrom: Point of Order. I would like to move that the Hon. Member for Oshawa be now heard—the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa is recognized and has the floor.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Come on.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa has been recognized and has the floor.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am asking the Hon. Member for Oshawa if he would advise the Chair as to why he is rising.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: I accept your ruling as always, Your Honour, and my purpose for rising is to present a petition.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby rises on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I believe that both the Hon. Member for Oshawa and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry rose to present petitions. I move that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry be now heard.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will know that I have dealt with that particular point.

Mr. Benjamin: No, you didn't. It's a votable motion.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa has the floor.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville was, I think, rising to indicate that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry be now heard.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to say that that motion is in order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Come on.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the motion of Mr. Nystrom that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry be now heard. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry has the floor with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Murphy: I said no.

Mr. Keeper: I said no.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is carried.

An Hon. Member: There were nays.

Mr. Nystrom: Point of order.

Mr. Keeper: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry has the floor. Has the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry decided not to take the floor?

Mr. Keeper: Point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: With respect, Mr. Speaker, when you asked whether or not there was consent for the motion regarding the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry there were some "yeas" and there were some "nos"—

An Hon. Member: Where?

Mr. Mazankowski: I didn't hear them.

Mr. Nystrom: On this side of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, I know, is trying to be helpful but the ruling was made.

Mr. Keeper: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The order has been made and the order was that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry has the floor.

• (1420)

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe I heard Your Honour say—

Mr. Benjamin: Remember the days when you guys were doing this with the big Liberal majority?

Mr. Keeper: Could we have some quiet here, please?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the seeking of unanimous consent in terms of having the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) speak, I thought I heard Your Honour say that there was unanimous consent. I distinctly said: "no", when that request was made.

Mr. McDermid: Nobody heard you!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is rising no doubt for the purpose of assisting the Chair and Hon. Members. As the Hon. Member knows, the order was made. There is no provision in the rules whereby an Hon. Member can come back after and argue that what the Chair heard was not what the Chair heard when an order is made under those circumstances. So I ask that the Hon. Member accept the fact that the ruling was in fact made.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DESIGNATION OF THE SOUTH MORESBY REGION AS A NATIONAL MARINE PARK

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, with this show of bipartisan support for this important petition I would like to present it on behalf of the residents of South Moresby. They feel deeply about the actions of the Government in disturbing the natural ecological sites in their area. They petition the House to preserve the entire South Moresby region of British Columbia by designating it as a national marine park in order to allow this unique natural resource to be enjoyed by present and future generations of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North:

That the House now proceed to the next item of routine business.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the said motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Mazankowski) which was agreed to on the following division:

AN ACT TO AMEND THE RAILWAY ACT (FENCES)

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Railway Act (fences).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Manly: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I move that the House proceed to consideration of the Bill standing in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Ms. Mitchell: Point of order.

Mr. Manly: Point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Mazankowski moved that:

The House proceed to consideration of the Bill standing in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

I want to deal with that.

Mr. Manly: Point of order.

Mr. Siddon: There is a motion on the floor.

Mr. Speaker: In the view of the Chair, in these proceedings the House is bound by the Bills as set out in the Order Paper. I think the Chair is bound to advise that we must follow the Order Paper.

Mr. Broadbent: Good.

Mr. Speaker: In view of that, I must advise the Deputy Prime Minister that it would not be appropriate to accept this particular motion.

The Chair has considered this carefully and the Chair is bound by the order as set out here. That is my ruling.

Mr. Manly: Point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that in order to propose a motion, an Hon. Member must have the floor and be recognized by the Speaker. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister did not in fact have the floor for any purpose whatsoever, including the purpose of introducing the motion.

Mr. Broadbent: He ruled against him.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) wants to assist the House and the Chair. However, the matter he is raising has been dealt with in my ruling. In the interests of decorum and order we should proceed on and the Chair will—

Mr. Manly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) on a point of order.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I was not here when Your Honour read the question with respect to the last vote. However, if I had been here I would have voted with my caucus.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which will be much more pleasurable to deal with than the ones you have had to deal with thus far. My point of order is that today and tomorrow mark an auspicious occasion. I draw to the attention of the House that the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), the Hon. Member for Victoria—Haliburton (Mr. Scott), the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), and the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle)—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: —celebrate their twenty-first anniversaries as members of this establishment—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: —from the class of 1965. I am sure the House would want to recognize that and congratulate them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that all Members are cognizant of the matter the Hon. Member raises, but it is not a point of order.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) on a point of order.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce that I am sorry that I was not able to be in the House for the vote—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Ms. Mitchell: —but had I been here I would have strongly supported the Bill of my hon. colleague which would have improved the fencing around railway tracks.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on a point of order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it should be pointed out that there is some duplicitous action going on across the way—

Mr. Broadbent: That is unparliamentary. Watch it!

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Mazankowski: Double-faced action—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Members—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has the floor on a point of order. I ask Hon. Members to hear the Deputy Prime Minister out.

Mr. Benjamin: It's not as good as mine!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Private Members' Bill we were suggesting be dealt with which stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) in the normal course of events would be proceeded with by unanimous consent. It was members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party who caused a division to take place. As a result, if they want to frustrate—

Mr. Gauthier: That is totally uncalled for.

Mr. Mazankowski: —the passage of their own piece of legislation, then we should not—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, that is totally uncalled for.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gauthier: That is totally uncalled for.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Gauthier: If he can do it, I can do it too. That was totally uncalled for. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is reflecting on a vote of the House, which he has no right to do.

Mr. Mazankowski: Then Members opposite are out of order, too.

Mr. Gauthier: You cannot reflect on a vote in the House, whether you are the Deputy Prime Minister or not. I don't care who you are.

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) may wish to rise on a point of order. Perhaps that is what he was attempting to do.

Mr. Gauthier: I think I rose, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier wishes to rise on a point of order, then the Chair will hear him.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is what I was attempting to do. I am just making the point that the Deputy Prime Minister was reflecting on a vote of this House, which I think is totally uncalled for and not in the habit or practice of a gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair might observe that both the Deputy Prime Minister and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier have now made their points.

Mr. Benjamin: As bad as they were.

Mr. Speaker: They were made in a most civilized way, although we had to wait a minute or two for them.

Are there other Members rising on points of order?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have before me Citation 320 of Beauchesne's which refers to parliamentary and unparliamentary language—

Mr. Prud'homme: Which edition?

Mr. Robinson: The edition in question is, of course, the fifth edition.

In this particular citation there are a number of expressions which are set out as being parliamentary and unparliamentary. In the course of his discourse in the House the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), in his innuendo and in his—

Mr. Broadbent: —intemperate comments—

Mr. Robinson: —used language which I would submit, while it is not specifically referred to in Beauchesne's—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Burnaby could assist the Chair by stating precisely what is his point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the word in question is "duplicitous". If the Deputy Prime Minister wishes to suggest that Members of this House, such as my colleagues the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) who, in good faith, seek to explain their votes in the long-standing tradition of this House, are duplicitous, then I suggest that that falls very much in line with other words which have been ruled to be unparliamentary since 1958. I refer to words such as "crook", "deceive", "dishonest", "distort"—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby is rising to indicate a grievance. I think the matter has passed. It is the disposition of the House to proceed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister on a question of privilege.

Mr. Mazankowski: I rise to state that if the House and you, Sir, find that my language was offensive, I will gladly withdraw it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would simply like to add my explanation to that of the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) and the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and indicate my regret that I was not here for the vote and to indicate that I would have very much preferred to vote as my caucus has done with respect to this matter.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for bringing that point to the attention of the House. Are there other Members rising on points of order?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East on a point of order.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which is quite an important piece of information. It is relevant to an issue mentioned earlier during the presentation of petitions. I would like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and, through you, the House that we have received a telegram—

Mr. Speaker: I realize that the Hon. Member has a matter of importance, but it is difficult for the Chair to see how it is a point of order that is relevant at this time.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I too arrived too late to vote. I would like to ask the indulgence of the House to record that my vote as well would have been with my Party.

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult for the Chair to keep from mentioning that on a day when there are so many votes there is certainly plenty of opportunity for Hon. Members to take part.

The Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), stand.

The Hon. Minister of Justice, stand.

The Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), stand.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, since we are anxious to deal with some Government legislation and since the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) is here I seek the unanimous consent of the House to proceed with the Bill standing in the name of the Minister of Labour regarding an Act to provide for the maintenance of port operations.

• (1550)

Mr. Speaker: Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has not been well. I have had a chance to consult with his office and he has told me that if the House would agree unanimously, I could proceed on his behalf to move his Bill—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nystrom: As I said, the Hon. Member is not well. He has not been well for some time. He said that if he were shown the courtesy of unanimous consent, I could proceed on his behalf with a Bill to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member advises that he is seeking the unanimous consent to proceed with a Bill standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I seek leave on behalf of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) to introduce another Bill which I believe Your Honour has not yet called. There are a number of Bills standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and I seek leave to introduce, on behalf of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt—

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Robinson: If I might have the courtesy of concluding—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fennell: The same courtesy you've given us?

Mr. Broadbent: Not that bad, surely.

Mr. Fennell: At least you're honest.

Mr. Robinson: I seek leave to introduce, on behalf of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, a Bill entitled an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (promotional coupons and savings stamps).

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, I spoke with the office of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and his staff asked me to ask the House if there might be unanimous consent to deal with the Bill to amend the Bankruptcy Act. This is a Bill with which the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt wanted to proceed. I am sure if he were here, he would do it himself.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has risen to ask the House for unanimous consent to introduce a Bill on behalf of another Hon. Member. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier this afternoon, you ruled that we must keep to the items on the Order Paper in the way they are placed on the Order Paper. The last item of business with which we dealt was a Bill standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet). We ought not, therefore, to turn to the items standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I would suggest that we now proceed with the Bill standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis).

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member does not realize that there are a number of Bills standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. The usual procedure is to call the Hon. Member's name once, no matter how many Bills may be involved. Hon. Members are seeking to deal with those particular Bills by seeking the consent of the House to move them. The Chair must say that that is clearly in order.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, I heard the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) say that we should move to proceed with the Bill standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis). If he did make that motion, I wonder if he has a seconder and we could perhaps vote on it.

Mr. Robinson: I second the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair did not take quite that sense out of the words of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I respect your ruling and therefore I would like to ask the unanimous consent of the House, once again on behalf of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, to deal with his next Bill, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan. So that I do not waste the time of the House, I will say now that he would also like to have the unanimous consent of the House, if possible, to deal with the Bill to register lobbyists. As I said before, he is ill and cannot do this himself so he has asked me to do it on his behalf.

Mr. Speaker: No doubt the Hon. Member has good and legitimate reasons to seek the unanimous consent. He has asked that he be able to deal with Bills standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt who is not present. That requires unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect to the Bill which stands in the name of the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall), an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, there is a reference immediately following the name of the Bill to the Royal Recomendation and the appropriation of public revenue. It is not clear to me why, in the circumstances set out in the Bill and with the long-standing traditions of the House with respect to Royal Recommendations, it is necessary for us, particularly given the manner in which this whole contract was awarded to Canadair and the diversion of process—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I have to point out to the Hon. Member that the Chair is having a very great deal of difficulty understanding just what point of order the Hon. Member is raising and whether or not it is even relevant to the proceedings which, it seems to me, are being followed in accordance with the wishes of all Hon. Members.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, it would be my submission, if I might just conclude my remarks, that—

Some Hon. Members: Debate!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: You can't have two points of order.

Mr. Mazankowski: I rise, then, on a question of privilege. The rules are being circumvented here and this is becoming a charade. You have called the Bill of the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) and dealt with it. We should now move to the next item standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). He is now talking about a Bill standing in the name of the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall).

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I always have some difficulty with the understanding of some Hon. Members of the difference between a point of order and a question of privilege. I did hear the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski), a good friend of all of us, rise on a question of privilege. I would like the Chair to rule if it was a question of privilege or a bona fide point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair probably ought not to rule on everything on which Hon. Members invite the Chair to rule. Without ruling at all, I must say that that was probably a point of order. I turn now to the Bill standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The Chair would ask the Hon. Member if he could indicate who is seconding the motion. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom)?

Mr. Robinson: No, Mr. Speaker, in view of the particular significance of this Bill to the Hon. Member concerned, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is seconding the motion.

AN ACT TO AMEND THE CRIMINAL CODE (CONTEMPT OF COURT)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Criminal Code (contempt of court).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Robinson) which was negatived on the following division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Some Hon. Members: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would like my constituents to know that I was present in the House, but decided not to take part in the vote. I want my presence to be recorded.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Robinson: Point of order. Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I move that the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) be now heard.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has moved that the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) be now heard. Can the Hon. Member for Burnaby tell the House, heard on what?

Mr. Benjamin: On the point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, earlier in these proceedings it was clearly understood that a Member who was not able to be present during the course of a vote would have an opportunity to explain his or her vote. The Members in question who were seeking to be recognized by the Speaker, as I understand it, were not present in the House during the vote and sought to avail themselves of that long-standing opportunity in this House. I assume they were not rising pursuant to any other provision. They were not seeking to raise a point of order. In fact, they sought to be recognized by the Speaker, and Your Honour did in fact recognize one of the individuals involved. You did not recognize him on a point of order but simply called out the name of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). It is my view, and I move that this House should at this time hear the Hon. Member for Spadina.

I believe the House should be given an opportunity to decide this important question.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I have been following the debate this afternoon and I regret to be in disaccord with my colleague. According to the practice of this House, someone who was absent for a vote cannot explain how he or she would vote. It is not a rule of this House, but a long established practice of it. This has happened time and again. I well remember that in December, 1979, I was present in the House of Commons for a very crucial vote. However, I had given my word of honour to the then Minister of National Defence that I would pair with him and therefore would not vote on that famous night before the Government was defeated. I was present in the House but I did not vote because I had given my word of honour. I was pushed around by a lot of people in order that I vote. In order that my electors would know that I was not absent from my duties and was present in the House, I believed it was my duty to get up in the House and say that I was paired with the Hon. Minister of National Defence and, therefore, did not vote. I drew to the attention of the Speaker that I was present in the House and if I had had the occasion to vote I would have voted in a particular way.

However, to the best of my knowledge and memory, this custom is reserved for Members who are present in the House, as I was a moment ago, although I decided not to participate in the vote. I believe that this is the proper procedure. I disagree that those who arrive late for other than good reason—

[Translation]

One moment. This is what could happen in the days and weeks to come. All Members who are absent from this chamber could come in and say: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wish to draw your attention to the fact that I was unable to come to the House. I was absent or I was in my office and I was unable to vote. I would like it established that this long honoured practice can continue.

[English]

I would like to continue so that this good and long-standing practice will be accepted in years to come. In the past, many Members of the House have respected gentlemen's agreements by not voting—

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I resent some of the language which is used in this House. I know my hon. colleague is usually very sensitive on such matters and it is not very often that he uses these phrases. Indeed, I think this is the first time I have heard him—

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest of respect, I do not think the Hon. Member has said anything which would cause another Member to rise on a question of privilege.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Is this a new question of privilege?

Ms. Mitchell: The question of privilege is that the Hon. Member was speaking of gentlemen's agreements. There are more than gentlemen in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: There are some who aren't gentlemen.

Mr. Nystrom: There are only two gentlemen left.

Mr. Speaker: As the Hon. Member is entitled to, she has made her point. However, it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, my English vocabulary leaves something to be desired. I would like to say to the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), through you, Mr. Speaker, that it never cost the taxpayers of Canada a penny for me to learn the second language which I am now speaking.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: I learn it through practice.

Mr. Broadbent: Cheap shot.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Prud'homme: The best way for people to learn a language is to be corrected, as the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) has gently done. If she would like to tell me the term for an agreement which used to be called a gentlemen's agreement, I would be more than happy to use it.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Burnaby has moved a motion. He argues that the motion that an Hon. Member be recognized in the place of the Hon. Member who has been recognized ought to be accepted by the Chair and that there should be a division, if necessary, in the House. The Chair has considered this practice very carefully. It originated because there were cases in which some Members felt that a particular Member who was recognized ought not to be heard or because a particular Member was not getting a fair chance to rise in his or her place and enter into the debate. These practices go back many years and the time frame in which these rules were made is of great interest to many Members and all historians.

Mr. Broadbent: Would you elaborate on that?

Mr. Speaker: In the case this afternoon there has been no suggestion that Hon. Members rising to explain how they would have voted had they been in the Chamber were being precluded from doing so. In fact, it was quite clear that the Chair was recognizing, and properly so, those who wished to give some explanation. However, it is the Chair's view that this practice, historic as it is, originated to protect a Member who might be unpopular or was, for whatever reason, being precluded from speaking. In my opinion, that practice does not apply to the situation before us this afternoon. As a consequence, I rule that the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Burnaby is not applicable in these circumstances.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a):

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of completing the Introduction of Bills.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: Low-down trick if I ever saw one.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Manly: Privilege.

Mr. Keeper: Privilege.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order. Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, question of privilege.

Mr. Dick: He'll get to you.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Andre: You can leave the room. You don't need his permission.

• (1650)

Mr. Robinson: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby on a point of order, and I thank him for his patience.

Mr. Keeper: Question of privilege.

Mr. Robinson: I yield to my friend with a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege following the comments made by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). He said something about Members of Parliament who are learning French at the expense of Canadian taxpayers.

[English]

He cast aspersions.

He has given the wrong impression.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. With the greatest of respect, the Chair does not feel that this is a question of privilege.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the comments made by my colleagues and to your ruling with respect to the opportunity afforded to Members of Parliament to explain how they would in effect have voted if they had been in their seats when a vote was called. I would like some direction from the Chair. There have been a number of votes today and, due to unforseen circumstances, I was unable to be present for a particular vote. I was on official duty.

I seek some direction from the Chair in terms of what the limitation period might be when a Member of Parliament does wish to explain his or her absence from the House and how he or she may have voted.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to resume his seat. That is not a point of order. That is an invitation for a hypothetical discussion.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to the proceedings now before the House. I am not sure exactly what the proceedings are.

An Hon. Member: We know that.

Mr. Robinson: Your Honour recognized the Deputy Prime Minister when he stood in this House. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) was attempting to seek Your Honour's recognition as well.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is a reflection on the Chair. Come on.

Mr. Nowlan: That's not a point of order and you know it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Burnaby rises on a point of order. If the Hon. Member would put his point of order, the Chair will deal with it.

Mr. Robinson: I am trying to put it, Mr. Speaker, but I am being interrupted over here.

Mr. Nowlan: You sure are.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: At the instant at which the Deputy Prime Minister rose and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville rose, I was on my feet on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may have been. The Chair, however, recognized the Deputy Prime Minister. There may have been other Hon. Members also rising. The Chair—

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude my—

Mr. Mazankowski: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair must make a choice—

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Mazankowski: Sit down or get out.

Mr. Speaker: —and I would ask the Hon. Member to resume his seat.

The question is on the motion of Mr. Mazankowski.

Will those Hon. Members who object to the motion please rise in their places.

I will ask the Deputy Clerk to count the Members present.

And the count having been taken:

Mr. Speaker: Fewer than 25 Members having risen, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b) the motion is deemed to have been adopted.

Mr. Langdon: Point of order.

Ms. Mitchell: Point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, prior to this whole recent—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may have complaints about things that happened prior to whatever he is going to talk about, but if he has a point of order, I want him to make it quickly and succinctly so I can decide whether it is or is not a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: If I could just make the point that prior to the various events which have taken place in the last 10 minutes, if I am not mistaken, I was recognized and given the floor to make—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is not in order. That is not a point of order that is relevant at this stage of the proceedings.

Introduction of Bills

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be read the first time and be printed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Andre) which was agreed to on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with spokesmen for the other Parties with respect to the possibility of receiving unanimous consent to revert to Ways and Means Motion No. 7 standing in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). There is some urgency for this matter inasmuch as the Finance Committee will be travelling to Washington on this very important matter. I think it is important that the committee have this information at a very early date. I would ask you to seek the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of this particular motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) that he also put the other motions for which there have been negotiations, particularly since we want to accommodate the Finance Committee on the working trip it will take. I would agree with his suggestion, if he would also move the other motions. There have been discussions on three motions.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to do that and I seek your guidance as to whether you want to deal with the Ways and Means motions first or whether you want me to present the three motions and consider them all together. I will present them in whatever order might be most appropriate.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) could put them in the order he desires. There seems to be no disposition in the House to quarrel.

AGREEMENT NOT TO SIT ON FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 28

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I move:

That, when the House adjourns on Thursday, November 27, 1986, it stand adjourned until Monday, December 1, 1986, at 11.00 a.m.

And, that, notwithstanding any special or Standing Order of the House, the final date for referral to Standing Committees of Main Estimates for the year 1987-88 be changed from Sunday, March 1, to Monday, March 2, 1987.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): The second order is the following:

That the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs be authorized to travel to Washington, D.C., from November 18 to November 21, 1986, inclusive.

Motion agreed to.

I would ask the Party Whip to move the other order because I believe it is in his name.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

CHANGES TO S.O. 94(3) RESPECTING REPLACEMENT MEMBERS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I want to move under Provisional Standing Order 94(3), that there be changes to increase the number of replacement members on the committees from five to seven. Second, this would provide the Whips of each Party the ability to select from a pool of people to replace anyone on a committee within 24 hours before the committee begins sitting. It also specifies the responsibility of the MP, the Whip, and the clerks in advising one another of the substitution, and makes it clear and helpful for committee clerks to know that a substitution is authorized and valid. It pools the so-called list of eligible substitutes for each Party only for the Whips' use. It is to ensure that their caucus interests are represented.

• (1720)

It also allows a vacancy resulting from a resignation to be filled by the Striking Committee rather than requiring a special order of the House, as has been necessary under the reform rule. The Whips of the other Parties have read this order and have agreed to it. Therefore I move:

That Provisional Standing Order 94(3) be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

3(a) Within five sitting days of the organization of any standing or standing joint committee, and from time to time thereafter, every member of every such committee shall file with the clerk of the committee a list of not more than seven members selected from his or her own Party who may substitute for him or her during a meeting of the said committee, as per the procedure set out in sub-paragraph (b) of this section, provided that they shall not become permanent members of the committee. In the event of a member having neglected to file such a list within the prescribed time, the clerk of the committee will so notify in writing the Chief Whip of the respective party, and the member's name shall be struck from the list of members of the committee, and the striking committee shall select another member to take his or her place on the permanent membership of the committee.

(b) Substitutions in the membership of any standing committee, or so far as the House is represented on any standing joint committee, shall be effective the day after notification thereof by the permanent member of the committee is forwarded to the Chief Whip of his or her Party for signature who, in turn, will forward the substitution to the clerk of the committee.

(c) At anytime when no notice has been received by the clerk of the committee pursuant to sub-paragraph (b) of this section, the Chief Whip of any recognized Party may effect substitutions by filing notice thereof with the Clerk of the Committee, having selected the substitutes from among all the lists filed by the members of his or her Party with the clerk of the committee pursuant to paragraph (a) and such substitutions shall be effective immediately once they are received by the Clerk of the Committee.

(d) When a permanent member of a standing or standing joint committee gives notice, in writing, to the chairman of the said committee of his or her intention to give up such membership on that committee, that Member's resignation shall be effective when a striking committee report naming a replacement for him or her has been concurred in by the House.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Yesterday I moved presentation of the fourth and fifth reports of the Striking Committee. Now I wish to move that the fifth report of the Striking Committee be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the four motions. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the four motions carried.

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act and a related Act, laid upon the table on Friday, October 31, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and a related Act, be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: It being after five o'clock p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 4 this House stands adjourned until Monday, November 17, 1986 at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

NATIONAL REVENUE

LOSS OF MICROFICHE RECORDS FROM TORONTO DISTRICT OFFICE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on November 4 I was informed that a set of microfiche records containing information on some 16 million Canadian taxpayers was missing. This loss occurred in the Toronto District Office after working hours on October 30. After a preliminary and thorough search by departmental security personnel in the Toronto District Office, the Deputy Minister of National Revenue was informed on November 4, and he informed me shortly thereafter.

On November 5 I spoke personally with the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and an investigation by the force into the loss was launched immediately. It was agreed between Revenue Canada and the RCMP that the fact of the microfiche loss and the public investigation should not be made public until such time as the investigation could not be compromised by public disclosure. Since the investigation is now well advanced, and with the concurrence of the Commissioner of the RCMP, I feel that the right of Canadians to be informed about what has happened, and the potential consequences of what has happened, require me to inform the House on this matter.

First, I should explain the nature of the missing information. The records contained the names, addresses, dates of birth, social insurance numbers, spouses first name, nearest District Office and the year of latest tax filing. Additionally, there is coded information which broadly categorizes the taxpayer by the principle source of revenue—farmer or professional, for example. The records were dated February, 1986. These microfiche were in the process of being replaced by up-to-date records and were due to be returned to Ottawa for secure destruction according to the normal departmental practice.

While this is a serious matter, I must re-emphasize that no financial information provided by individual taxpayers on their returns was in the lost records, beyond the coded categories of principal sources of revenue to which I referred previously. However, this does not lessen the concern about private information on Canadians getting into unauthorized hands.

Second, I should outline the potential consequences of the loss of this information. We cannot, of course, be certain of the motivation for this act or of any intended uses of the information. The motivation might have been merely to do mischief, or to damage the reputation of the Department. Or the purpose might have been to secure lists of taxpayers for commercial or more nefarious purposes. Or it is conceivable that the intended use was to attempt to obtain moneys from the Government by using the information for fraudulent purposes.

On this last point, I can assure the House that the procedures used to prevent fraud against National Revenue have been carefully reviewed. For obvious reasons I should not elaborate on either the types of fraud we have to guard against or the measures we employ to combat the risk of fraud. However, based on the best available information, I am assured by my officials that the risk of fraud being successfully perpetrated as a result of the loss of the information which I have described is minimal. Nevertheless, I have asked that additional safeguards be implemented at this time.

I want to further assure Your Honour and the House that the procedures in other affected departments have been closely examined. An assessment has been made of the risk of the information being used to obtain passports fraudulently or to divert unemployment insurance, old age pension and similar benefits by use of false changes of address. In all cases, while the information could provide a starting point for making such false applications, other procedures and requirements now in place are such that the risks of fraud either have not increased or are judged to have increased only marginally. Additional steps are being taken by the Government to counter even a marginal increase in risk.

I wish to emphasize the gravity with which I view this loss of information entrusted to National Revenue. This is the first time that there has ever been a loss of this magnitude. Besides conducting an investigation of the circumstances surrounding the disappearance of this information, I have asked the RCMP as well to conduct a separate review of my Department's security procedures for the handling of all microfiche data.

I will inform the House at the earliest possible moment of the results of the review into this unacceptable breach of security that led to the disappearance of this material. The need for disciplinary action will be determined when the review is complete.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was in touch earlier with the Minister and at my request, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), had certain consultations with him.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this statement by the Minister concerns sixteen million individual Canadian taxpayers. It is a very important matter because it reflects on the whole integrity of our income tax system, which is based on the principle of confidentiality of income tax returns. This is the whole basis of the system under which sixteen million Canadians trust their Government to keep their personal finances a confidential matter between them and the Government.

This morning, we were informed that there was either fraud or negligence or a lack of security in the system. Although no information directly concerning the finances of taxpayers may be involved, one wonders whether with this information, the person who now has the microfiches might be able to insert the requisite codes to find data on just about anyone in Canada and on these 16 million taxpayers.

[English]

We take this very seriously, as has the Minister. Our system of income tax is based on voluntary assessment by individual taxpayers who, on their honour and through their own investigations, submit returns one by one to the Department of National Revenue. The voluntary system only works if individual taxpayers can be assured of the confidential nature of those returns. The returns are becoming more and more detailed. They contain information on a wide range of subjects concerning every individual Canadian. Of course, nothing is more sacrosanct in a free society than a taxpayer's individual affairs.

As the Minister has said, this event reflects upon every non-corporate return. If we translate that from bureaucratic language into language that you and I understand, Mr. Speaker, that means that the stolen or missing material contains information on 16 million individual taxpayers.

We accept the Minister's assurance that at this stage no financial information is included but Social Insurance Numbers, addresses and information about whether or not spouses have filed, whether or not capital gains are included and whether or not the income is professional or from farming and the like.

I would put a question to the Minister, and of course, in due course we will want answers and a further report to the House. I wish to know whether or not whoever holds this information can use it to get into the coding system which will open up other information related to individual taxpayers. If so, this is a very serious matter. I think what the Minister has said today will shake the confidence in the income tax system and will disturb the Canadian public generally. Since it relates to 16 million individual taxpayers, it is a matter of the utmost importance.

We will want to know if there was fraud, if there was negligence, and if there was negligence who was responsible. We want to know if there was no security system whereby—

Mr. Gauthier: Sloppy.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), has said that it is sloppy. Certainly something has gone wrong and we want some answers from the Minister. We expect an early report to the House on this very grievous situation.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the Minister today discloses a very serious breach of security in his Department. The loss of the microfiche records containing information on 16 million taxpayers, almost every taxpayer in Canada, is serious. As the Minister has recognized, and as the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) has pointed out to the House, it shakes the confidence ordinary Canadians have in the tax system.

As has been pointed out, our tax system depends upon voluntary compliance. If Canadian taxpayers begin to feel that the personal information they present to the Government on their tax forms can be obtained by unauthorized personnel, Canadians will begin to lose faith in the Government and in the tax system, and this could have dire consequences.

We are talking about these little microfiche that were stolen from the Toronto office. Yet we cannot help but wonder whether or not the ineptitude of the Government and the Department particularly may have led to this situation. We understand that the Toronto office is going through another major reorganization. Instead of being one central office, it is being broken up into three sub-offices. The morale within the Department has been low for a long period of time. Morale was low when the Liberals were in power. There were all sorts of promises made by the Conservatives when they came into power about reorganizing the Department. Yet we find an ongoing decrease in the sense of confidence of the people working in that Department.

The Department has been hit by continuous cut-backs. There are fewer investigative officers in that Department now than there were in 1980. We learned this weekend as well that there are only 20 investigators working on the case of the $3 billion in losses from public revenue due to the scam the Liberals introduced called the scientific research tax credit. Again, there have been more and more cut-backs.

The question that must be asked by Members of the House and by the Government is how far can we continue to cut back on Departments before we reach a point where the Department cannot properly carry on its duties. How many more cut-backs can there be before we begin to find lapses in security like the one that occurred in this last month? Surely we must reach a point where we cannot cut back any more. Surely this Department simply cannot be cut back on any more without serious mistakes being made, mistakes like the one that occurred in the latter part of October.

This is a serious matter, because if it is possible to break into the computer system all sorts of information on individual Canadian taxpayers is now open to whoever wishes to have that information. That means that those people who are interested in credit ratings will have access to important information. It means that all sorts of fraud may be perpetrated. There may be a redirection of Old Age Security cheques and unemployment insurance cheques. There may be false applications for passports.

To stop those possible abuses, the Government will have to increase its staff in those various departments to make certain that Old Age Security cheques are not redirected to some false address. It is a very serious situation. I would expect this Government to understand the seriousness of it, and to take every possible precaution to make certain that fraud and misuse of this information will not occur.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of citizens from Winnipeg who say that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty on behalf of a number of constituents from Prince Albert to present a petiltion to the House of Commons in which they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposals to increase the cost of drugs, or anything that will increase the prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by citizens from Thompson, Brandon—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I remind Hon. Members that the practice is that all of the petitions to be presented by an hon. Member be presented when the Member rises. If this is just one more petition, I am sure that the House would be pleased to receive it.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2 and 12.

[Text]

PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

Question No. 2—Mr. Boudria:

1. Did the Government employ the services of Colvin Designs Ltd. and/or Giovanni Mowinkle, interior designer during the period September 4, 1984 to June 30, 1986, to supply furnishings, improvements, interior decorating or advice on same for the Prime Minister's residence at 24 Sussex Drive in Ottawa or the Harrington Lake residence and, if so, by residence, what was the cost of each contract?

2. Was all of the work paid for from Government funds and, if not, who paid such costs and what was the amount involved in each case?

U.S. SUBMARINES AT NORTH POLE

Question No. 12—Mr. Nickerson:

In May, 1986, did three United States nuclear powered submarines surface at the North Pole and did any of these submarines travel through waters over which Canada claims sovereignty and, if so, pursuant to what Canadian authority did such travel take place?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Government can confirm that three United States nuclear powered submarines surfaced at the geographic North Pole on May 6, 1986. However, the Government cannot comment on the routing the submarines took to the North Pole. It is Government policy not to comment on the movements of Allied warships that may transit Canadian waters.

STARRED QUESTION

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 11—Mr. Parry:

Did the Minister responsible for Canada Post or any other Government official give orders to the President of Canada Post, Mr. D. Lander, not to answer mail directed to him from Members of Parliament regarding the elimination of postal services?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I should state on behalf of the Government that neither the Minister responsible for Canada Post nor any other Government official has given "orders to the President of Canada Post—not to answer mail directed to him from Members of Parliament".

In fact, the President has received approximately 900 letters since January 1, 1986 from Members of Parliament. All but the most recent have been responded to by the Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that notice was given in respect of making an application pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 29. If I am not mistaken, the appropriate point at which to do that is immediately before Government Orders.

Excise Tax Act

EXPORT CONTROLS STRATEGIC MATERIALS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter which requires urgent consideration, namely, the Government's failure to maintain adequate export controls on materials that may be used for offensive purposes by Iran. With the proclamation of this information in the last 24 hours, and with no opportunity to discuss it, it is a pertinent matter which has bearing upon the external relations of Canada in a number of areas. It requires at this time proper consideration by the House on an emergency basis.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has received notice of the application of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and the Chair will return to the House at three o'clock with a ruling.

I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 15 minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

The House resumed from Monday, November 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill is to increase taxes on Canadians. The Official Opposition objects very strongly to the way in which the Government has proceeded with these tax increases and with the measures it proposes.

For example, there is a proposal to increase the federal manufacturers sales tax. It is an insidious tax in the sense that ordinary Canadians do not find out directly why costs have increased. However, costs increase. The chart provided by the Government in the budget statement indicated, for example, that the increase in the manufacturers sales tax would be from 7 per cent to 8 per cent on construction goods. Also it indicated a similar increase on cable and Pay TV services from 14 per cent to 15 per cent, and on alcoholic beverages and tobacco and all other taxable goods from 11 per cent to 12 per cent. The total revenue derived from this 1 per cent increase will be $700 million in 1986, that is, the year ending in April; over $1 billion in 1987; and rising in the year 1990 to $1,300 million.

I hope Hon. Members of the House noted in the media last week while we were adjourned that the fear or expectation of an increase in inflation is becoming widespread in the country. Compared with the way they felt a year or two years ago, Canadians believe that inflation is on the increase. In the coverage and discussion of that issue in the media, I noted that a considerable number of experts took the view that the current round of inflation was being led by the tax increases introduced by the federal Government.

This particular tax increase which the Official Opposition opposes is that kind of increase. Unlike the income tax which taxpayers face being taken out of their income or perhaps out of borrowings which they have made to pay their taxes, this tax is extracted every day as individual Canadians shop for the necessities of life, for construction goods, and for alcoholic beverages and tobacco.

I should like to say a word or two about the particularity of increasing taxes on alcohol and tobacco. Over the years in Liberal, I admit, as well as in Conservative Governments alcohol and tobacco have been looked upon as products which were almost infinitely susceptible to bearing taxes. In fact, there is probably a connection between increasing taxes and marginally reducing consumption. One could say, at least in connection with tobacco, that by increasing taxes on tobacco, the Government can argue that it is doing Canadians a favour because it is helping to make it easier for them to stop smoking.

There is another side to the story, and I say this as a non-smoker and as one who is committed to trying to reduce the amount of smoking in Canadian society. A suspicion has arisen on the part of Canadians that the Government has too much of a vested interest in tobacco because of the taxes it derives to take any serious action to deal with the problem of smoking and to try to reduce smoking.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I may recall the figures given by the Government when the Budget was brought down, when it recognized that the increase proposed in the Budget, and in that Budget alone, would provide the Government with additional revenue worth $125 million for the current year, rising to $150 million by 1990.

Mr. Speaker, these are very substantial amounts, especially when compared with the Government's recent announcement that it would spend $1 million during the current year on a campaign to reduce the consumption of tobacco in this country.

[English]

One million dollars has been provided by the Government for a campaign to deter smoking, and the additional revenue from the increase in taxes on smoking is in the order of something like $125 million for the current year. People see these figures and they must ask themselves whether the Government wants to see smoking continue in order to derive additional revenue or whether it wants to deter smoking. I would want to seek an undertaking from the Government that the effort to inform Canadians about the dangers of smoking will be increased. It is not enough to raise over $100 million in additional taxes from smokers and to spend $1 million trying to prevent smoking or trying to bring the facts to Canadians about smoking.

Although the tendency to smoking is decreasing in Canadian society, recent particularly disturbing statistics show that among young female Canadians smoking is still increasing. Every year more young females in Canadian society are taking up smoking and are smoking more. It is a discouraging fact that as the movement for equality in the status of women with men in society has become more and more successful as women have begun to achieve equal access to the opportunities in Canadian society, one of the opportunities regrettably in which they are also moving to a level of equality is in smoking. It is particularly disturbing because smoking is very harmful to young women if they are pregnant, and I want to draw the attention of the House to that important fact. Smoking during pregnancy is recognized as a threat to the health not only of the mother but of the fetus.

I do not think it is enough for the Government to raise taxes on smoking by $125 million for the current year and to put $1 million of that into a general public information campaign about the dangers of smoking. I think the Government has to do a great deal more. It is disappointing for those of us who know that the social costs of smoking far outweigh the revenues derived by Government to see the Government proceeding in this way.

This increase in taxes will produce a marginal reduction in the number of people who smoke and in the amount they smoke. It will do very little to reach the target group about which I have been talking, and about which the federal Government should be doing something.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak today on Bill C-14, a bill to increase excise taxes I want to point out a lot of things that are wrong with this Bill, and with the Government's plans for taxation in a more general fashion. We should look at how excise taxes fit into the total package of taxation for Canadians and see the role that they increasingly play.

If we look at the fiscal plan for 1986-87 published by the Department of Finance we see that personal income taxes amount to $37.7 billion; corporate income taxes to $11.7 billion; unemployment insurance contributions to $9 billion; sales tax to $11.7 billion; customs to $4.2 billion and miscellaneous taxes of various sorts to $6.8 billion. The Government also manages to collect some non tax revenue to the tune of $5.7 billion.

If we look at these figures we see that personal income tax is pretty high and corporate income tax is actually a little bit below sales tax. We are concerned about this. We know that 79,000 profitable Canadian corporations are not paying taxes at all. If the Government wants to increase taxes this is where it should be looking. The Government needs to increase taxes for social programs and deficit reduction, but it is going after the hidden taxes in sales tax, an extremely misguided policy. We see this part of taxation increasing while corporate loopholes remain where they are. There has been no more than a token protest against corporate loopholes and no serious attempt has been made to have corporations pay a reasonable share of taxes, a share they used to pay in the past, that they pay in other countries but for which they are being let off the hook in Canada.

Bill C-14 would increase the collection of sales and excise taxes announced in the 1986 Budget. Specifically these changes include a 1 per cent sales tax increase, a great hidden tax and one the Tories hypocritically opposed when the Liberals wanted to increase this hidden tax. Now that the Tories are in Government they can see the benefits of collecting taxes from people without doing it openly and honestly. The rate of the manufacturers sales tax presently at 7 per cent for construction materials, cable and pay television services, 14 per cent for alcoholic beverages and tobacco, 11 per cent for other taxable goods, will increase to 8 per cent, 15 per cent and 12 per cent respectively for the different taxes.

I would like to comment a little about the excise tax increase and duties on alcohol, cigarettes and tobacco products. The previous speaker made some quite sensible remarks about the concerns we must have about Government becoming too dependent on these sources of income. Let us face it, Mr. Speaker, Canadians are not so opposed to paying high taxes on their vices. Some people feel that is not such a bad thing because it may do them some good by curtailing consumption. People would rather see those taxes increase than many other taxes on absolutely essential items which cause real harm when increased.

In the case of cigarette tax increases, we can expect some good. We know increased taxes affect consumption, and especially consumption among young people who do not have as much money to spend. That would be all to the good because age 12 is getting to be the typical starting age for smoking. This group does not have a lot of money to spend and an increase in tax will keep some of them from starting to smoke.

Rather than not having this tax increase, still being aware of the problem this could create for a Government becoming dependent on this source of tax, the best solution would be to channel the money collected in sales taxes and other taxes on cigarette and tobacco products on programs to combat the cigarette habit which is so harmful and is responsible for such a large number of deaths. If the money were channelled into counter advertising, into programs to substitute tobacco growing with other crops, and into programs of research for addiction treatment, this would be a far better use of the money and the Government would not be tempted to use it as an easy way to raise taxes for general revenues.

The impact of all these different increases will mean less disposable income for families. We know in the case of families at a very low level of income, say, $10,000 for a family with two children, the estimated cost of those tax increases is $170. Since there is going to be a sales tax credit of $150 the impact is considerably mitigated, and that is a good thing, although I note it has not been entirely done away with. Families at a very low level of income with two children to support will still have an increase on average of $20 in the sales taxes they pay. For families at the $15,000 level the estimated cost of the tax increase is $215, and a net cost of $65 given the $150 sales tax credit. When we get to families with $20,000, and, after all, this is not an enormous amount of money for families with two children, they will feel the brunt of the sales tax increase and will be hit to the tune of $269 a year. That is a pretty sizeable increase, Mr. Speaker.

When we consider that this Government has made a very big thing of increased average family income—that is certainly desirable and we welcome it—it likes to forget that this is not disposable family income. Those increases in income that people have achieved through a very slight decline in unemployment does not mean that families will have more money to spend on the necessities of life, necessities for their children and so forth because of these increased taxes. It is of course the net disposable income that really counts, so the Government has been somewhat phoney in talking about a decline in poverty because you have to look at the total picture.

The NDP has been looking at the entire tax system for Canadians; we have been looking at income taxes, corporate taxes and sales and excise taxes. The sales and excise tax is regressive. It means you pay the same amount no matter what your income. For the low income person that means a higher proportion of income goes for taxes, and those who can well afford to pay are in fact paying very insignificant amounts. That is of course unfair. A progressive system is the fair way. Canadians approve of a system where those who have the ability to pay bear a greater burden.

The Conservative Government's use of the hidden excise and sales tax is unfair because it puts too much of a burden on those with low incomes. The Conservative tax increases amount to $1,305 for the average Canadian family, that being a $35,000 income and two dependant children. Sales and excise tax increases alone account for $845 of this new burden. The November, 1984 economic statement meant an increase of $350 a year. The May, 1985 Budget meant an increase of $325 a year. The most recent Budget of February, 1986, meant an increase of $170 a year for that family.

Individuals are being treated very differently from corporations by the Conservative Government. The giveaways to corporations are secret. It is done by tax expenditure and the amount of money involved is enormous. One calculation I prepared shows that these giveaways amount to $26.5 billion for this fiscal year. That is an enormous amount of money. The giveaways for individuals, however, are very public. They come by way of a cheque in the mail for the family allowance or unemployment insurance. It is clear where that money goes. Yet now we have this unfair system where corporations get away with so much and individuals are bearing an increasing burden of taxation.

To conclude, I would simply note that this is not going to do the country any good at all. The Government is not spending the money wisely. We still see enormous wastage. The Government is not reducing the deficit.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is so.

Ms. McDonald: That is a phoney excuse. The deficit was estimated at $29 billion at the beginning of the year and it has now been increased to $32 billion.

Mr. Blenkarn: Reduced from what?

Ms. McDonald: We have a very large accumulated deficit of over $100 billion and the Government is going to be adding $32 billion to it. That is not my idea of a reduction. You can easily say we might have had an increase of $50 billion—

Mr. Blenkarn: From $35 billion to $32 billion is pretty good.

Ms. McDonald: —and you only have an increase of $32 billion and that is great. That is not a reduction. It is a reduction in the increase. That is not a reduction. It is phoney indeed to call a $32 billion deficit a reduction. Reduced from what? From what might have been worse, but it is certainly not a reduction in real terms and Canadians know that is so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-14. On October 23 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stood in this House and talked about a new procedure he was establishing to bring fairness and equity and simplicity to the Canadian tax system. If he really believed what he said he would not be proceeding with this Bill. When he outlined his plans he talked about reducing income taxes for low income Canadians. However, if we look at this Bill and his first two Budgets, many of the provisions of which are implemented in C-14, we see that the system is not fair at all. If you look at the taxes being imposed on low income Canadians there is certainly no element of fairness.

Clearly, most of the provisions of the first two Budgets mean regressive taxes. That is, sales taxes which obviously weigh more heavily on low income Canadians. For example, a family with one bread-winner and two children will be paying $255 more in taxes every year. There were increases in the RSP limits and the introduction of the capital gains tax exemption, but most of the benefit there goes to high income earners. For example, those in the $30,000 bracket gain no benefit from the RSP exemption. Those same people also gained very little benefit from the capital gains exemption. So we have a ridiculous situation where the person earning $30,000 or $35,000 is facing an increase in taxes of $250 per year, and the person earning $100,000 will have an increase of only $1,740. It is very clear who has the advantage there. Then we have a single parent family with two children and $20,000 in income. That family will pay $420 a year more.

As I said, when the Minister stood in the House and made this presentation concerning tax reform he did not mean it. If he had, he would not be proceeding with Bill C-14 which has a devastating impact on all Canadians, but especially low income Canadians, where taxes are being increased by $5 billion. Therefore, Bill C-14 weighs much more heavily on low-income Canadians. A family with a $15,000 income will pay $255 more per year. A family with a $30,000 income will pay $630 more per year. A family with a $50,000 income, which is about 66 per cent more than a $30,000 income, actually pays less. Their increase will be only $575. This is a very unfair situation. An elderly couple with an income of $27,000 and no dependents will pay $500 more per year. The tax scheme put forward in the first two Budgets of the Minister of Finance is designed to increase dramatically the taxes of low-income Canadians.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made the spectacular announcement that he was going to exempt the two cent a litre increase which the Government imposed on farmers in September of 1985. If the Government really wanted to help farmers it would make that exemption retroactive to September 1, 1985, when it was first imposed, rather than only to May 1. Agriculture in Canada is clearly in a stressed situation. The situation was just as stressful in 1985 as it is in 1986. That two cent per litre tax would have generated $65 million or $70 million a year in revenues. I call upon the Government to make that exemption retroactive to September 1 when it was imposed. The Government is pretending to make great contributions to agriculture when in fact it is mostly a smoke and mirrors show that does not cost the Government anything while giving the appearance of lending assistance.

The Minister of Finance stood in his place on October 23 and talked about tax reform. He spoke about fairness, equity, simplication of income tax and so on. This Bill goes in the complete opposite direction from that. He did not tell Canadians that the Government was considering the imposition of a business transfer tax which would apply to everything from haircuts to shoe shines to automobile repairs. In addition, it will increase the taxes on a broad range of other things.

Since the Government came to power two years ago the sales tax has been increased by 25 per cent. It was about 9 per cent at that time and will be raised to 12 per cent if the Government forces this Bill through Parliament. The Government is considering the implementation of a sweeping business transfer tax of 9 per cent, if it is not imposed on food. If it is imposed on the food which Canadians eat, it will be only 6 per cent. Everything that we do, everything that we touch, every service that we receive will suddenly become taxable.

This Bill puts a lie to the statement of the Minister of Finance on October 23 when he said he was going to simplify our tax system and make it more fair and equitable. It is clear that this Bill does not do that.

[Translation]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the Bill before the House today. It concerns a very important matter, namely income tax. As Canadians, we all have to pay taxes in this country. Unfortunately, the tax burden on the poor and the middle class in this country is particularly heavy. The Bill before the House will certainly not do anything to improve a situation that will get even worse with Bill C-14.

[English]

I would like to give a number of reasons why that makes it worse for ordinary Canadians. Bill C-14 resulted from the Budget presented in this House on February 27, 1986. This Bill contains a 1 per cent increase in sales tax for all Canadians. We presently have a manufacturers' sales tax of 7 per cent on construction materials, cable and pay television services; a 14 per cent sales tax on alcoholic beverages and tobacco; and an 11 per cent tax on all other taxable goods. This Bill will increase the tax on construction materials from 7 per cent to 8 per cent, the tax on alcoholic beverages and tobacco from 14 per cent to 15 per cent, and the tax on other taxable goods from 11 per cent to 12 per cent. These tax increases will affect all Canadians.

The research we have done on this indicates that the increased cost of this Bill for the average family will be approximately $150 a year, in addition to an increase of $20 in excise taxes and duties. That is a considerable increase for the poorer people, the working poor, single parent families and other such people.

There has been a shift in Government taxation policies in the last couple of years. I have noticed that during the last two years the Conservative Party has increased more rapidly the revenue it generates from sales taxes and excise taxes than the revenue it generates through individual and corporate taxes. For example, sales and excise tax increases have yielded more than twice the amount of revenue drawn from changes to personal income tax and more than four times the revenue drawn from corporate income taxes. More than twice as much money is now generated from sales and excise taxes as from individual taxes, and more than four times the amount generated from large and small corporations.

Since the Conservative Party came into power in September of 1984 there has been an average increase per family of $1,305 for personal, sales and excise taxes. I classify an average Canadian family as one with approximately $35,000 income and two dependent children.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have now had three income tax increases. It started with the Minister's economic statement in November 1984, when there was an increase of $350 per year for the average Canadian family. Subsequently, the 1985 Budget brought us another tax increase for the average Canadian family, and this time it was $325 per year. It was the second time we had a tax increase imposed by the Conservative Party in this country. The third time was in the last Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in February 1986. At that time, the average Canadian family saw its taxes increased by $170 per year. Mr. Speaker, this is a lot for the average family. It is a lot for Quebecers, for the people of Saskatchewan and for all Canadians.

[English]

As I said, there has been a reverse in the way the Conservative Party is taxing Canadians. Since the 1960s under successive Governments in this country, including the short-lived Conservative Government under the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), we saw a declining rate in sales and excise taxes in relation to the over-all collection of taxes by the federal Government. That trend has reversed this year.

Last year some 22.3 per cent of the taxes raised were through sales and excise taxes in Canada. This year, rather than 22.3 per cent, the tax will be increased to 23.2 per cent.

There are three reasons why I am concerned about an increase in sales and excise tax rather than an increase in corporate tax or individual taxes paid by Canadians. First, a federal sales and excise tax is a hidden tax because it is put on the basic price of a commodity. The average Canadian has no idea that he or she is paying an additional tax to the federal Government when buying some goods or commodities. It is a hidden tax, unlike a provincial sales tax of 4 per cent, 5 per cent or 6 per cent which is up front and visible to all. In many cases Canadians have no idea that they are paying a federal tax.

[Translation]

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, the second aspect is that the sales tax, the excise tax levied on Canadians is totally unfair because, when buying a television, a refrigerator, a car or any household appliance, a customer has to pay the same tax whether he or she is poor, or earns an average salary, or is a millionnaire. An excise tax or a sales tax is simply unfair.

A Member who gets $70,000 a year and a working man or woman earning $15,000 or $25,000 annually pay the same tax on anything they buy. Mr. Speaker, this is altogether unfair to ordinary Canadians throughout the country.

[English]

That is the other reason why this sales tax increase is very unfair.

The third reason why I believe these taxes are unfair is ordinary Canadians are already paying too much in taxes. This Bill will tax commodities that previously were not taxed, and increases taxes on other commodities. Canadians are being taxed too much and it is time that low-income and middle-income Canadians revolt against such a taxation system.

An Hon. Member: What should we have, then?

Mr. Nystrom: In answer to my Conservative friend opposite, our Party had a tax probe that was chaired by the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). It studied the taxation system and made recommendations as to what taxes should be cut and what taxes should be increased in certain areas, since the rich are getting away with avoiding tax by using certain loopholes. Furthermore, there are many companies and corporations in this country, such as the Royal Bank, that are not paying taxes as they should. We need a fair taxation system in this country.

The Government should no longer impose taxes on the ordinary men and women who work hard to keep Canada the great country it is today. They are the ordinary people who farm the land, make the factories work and produce the goods and services. It is ordinary people who built Canada into the fantastic country it is, but those are the very people the Conservative Party is taxing over and over again.

I remember when my grandfather said years ago that Tory times are tough times. He grew up in the 1930s, during the Government of R. B. Bennett. My grandfather also said: "Tory times are taxing times". As recent Gallup Polls indicate, Canadians again realize that Tory times are tough times and that electing a Tory Government means electing a Government that will tax, tax, tax.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: They are number three in Quebec!

Mr. Nystrom: As my colleague points out, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party is now number three in Quebec. Every single poll indicates that the Conservative Party, the Government Party with 57 or 58 Members, ranks third in Quebec with something like 23 or 24 per cent of the votes.

With this kind of legislation, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party will be finished for another generation in this country. The very same thing happened after the '30s with R. B. Bennett and Canada's great depression. After this, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party will disappear in Canada for 20 or 30 years.

[English]

It was not until John Diefenbaker came along in the 1950s that the Conservative Party was revived. John Diefenbaker stood for many things that helped ordinary Candaians. It was the wealthy Conservatives of Bay Street, led by Dalton Camp, who stabbed John Diefenbaker in the back and got rid of him. Once again, the Conservative Party disappeared for 20 years. Yet who does the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) hire as his chief adviser but the same Dalton Camp who got rid of John Diefenbaker. As a Saskatchewan parliamentarian, we in the Province of Saskatchewan and indeed people right across western Canada will not forget that.

[Translation]

I know that my friends in Quebec agree with me and are against this Bill. I hope that the Members from Quebec will vote against the Government, against the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), because the Bill is quite unfair to all Canadian men and women.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the House is being asked to agree to Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. Its purpose is to implement the increases in what the ordinary taxpayer calls the sales tax. This Bill is a prime example of how the Conservative approach to our taxation system is based on unfairness, based on putting an undue burden on the middle and lower-income taxpayer.

I want to take a few minutes to review what Bill C-14 intends to do. First, it will put into effect the sales and excise tax increases that were proposed in the Budget of February 26, 1986. It is important to note that all of the items that are targeted in this Bill were also the subject of tax increases by the Conservative Budget of May 23, 1985. For example, effective April 1, 1986 an additional 1 per cent sales tax was levied on all taxable goods. However, the 1985 Budget also raised this sales tax by 1 per cent, effective January 1, 1986.

If this Bill is adopted by the House we will see that the tax on construction goods increased by 1 per cent to 7 per cent effective January 1, 1986, as well as an additional 1 per cent tax, increasing the rate to 8 per cent effective April 1, 1986.

The same is also true for all other categories of goods generally subject to sales and excise taxes. Cable and pay TV services went up 1 per cent to 7 per cent January 1, 1986, and up another 1 per cent to 8 per cent effective April 1, 1986. All other taxable goods were at the level of 11 per cent, which was an increase of 1 per cent effective January 1, 1986. There is now another 1 per cent increase to 12 per cent, going into effect April 1, 1986. We see that effective May 1, 1986 the tax rate on air transportation, the tickets, will increase from 9 per cent to 10 per cent. When we look at the telecommunications programming services tax, which applies to television equipment provided to customers of cable and pay-TV services, and to equipment used by hotels and other closed-circuits broadcasts, we see that this tax will increase by 1 per cent to 8 per cent. It was already increased in the 1985 Budget by 1 per cent. This is a very sizeable jump in less than one year.

What about the tax on fuels? Prior to the 1985 Budget federal excise tax on non-commercial automotive fuels was 1.5 cents a litre. The 1985 Budget increased the excise tax on gasoline and aviation gasoline by 2 cents per litre effective September 3, 1985. This tax is scheduled to increase to 4.5 cents per litre on January 1, 1987. The 1985 Budget also extended the excise tax to diesel and aviation fuel other than gasoline. Consequently, an excise tax of two cents per litre was placed on diesel and non-gasoline aviation fuel for the first time on September 3, 1985. This tax is also scheduled to increase three cents a litre on Janaury 1, 1987.

Let us take a look at the cumulative effect of the increases in what the tax experts call commodity taxes as a result of the Conservative Budget of February, 1986, a Budget which is intended to be implemented as far as commodity or sales taxes are concerned by Bill C-14 currently before the House.

In 1986 the proposed 1 per cent increase in federal sales tax rates will give the Government $700 million in additional revenue. In 1987 this tax will increase to $1.05 billion. In 1988 the amount will increase to $1.125 billion. In 1989 it will increase to $1.2 billion and in 1990 to $1.3 billion. This is hardly tax relief for middle and lower income Canadians. This is a strange way for the Conservatives to be approaching tax reform.

Not too long ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) rose in the House and said: "We intend to proceed with tax reform that will lower the burden of taxes on individual taxpayers". He said he would do that by decreasing the personal income tax rates so that individual taxpayers would have more money in their pockets. But what he did not make clear, although he certainly hinted at it in his statement, is that the Government also intends to increase the extent and broaden the base of commodity or sales taxes through a new business transfer tax. If the Conservatives are able to get away with this it means that they will be putting money into the pockets of individual taxpayers with one hand through reductions in personal income tax rates and with the other they will be removing from those pockets that money, along with even more money through increased sales taxes. Call them what you will, Mr. Speaker, commodity taxes, sales taxes or business transfer taxes, we are talking about increases in taxes which will affect particularly middle and lower income Canadians.

If we are interested in fairness in the tax system, surely that must come from a system which says to people that they pay according to their ability to pay and that the burden of taxation on their shoulders will be greater if they have earned more money through their activities in this country and abroad. Fairness in the tax system does not come about by saying to individual Canadians that it does not matter how much money you have, if you have to spend money for the daily necessities of life and if you have to spend most of your income on buying goods and services, which is the case for most Canadians, then you are the one who is going to pay more, you are the one who is going to assume the higher burden. This is what the Conservatives are saying. This is the message they are sending out in Bill C-14. This message was confirmed by what the Minister of Finance said not long ago in the House when he made his statement on tax reform.

One thing that the Minister of Finance did not make a clear statement on was whether the result of the Conservative so-called tax reform would increase the total tax burden on individual Canadians. He had the opportunity to do so but he did not seize that opportunity to make a commitment and to give an undertaking to individual Canadians that Tory tax reform would mean that the total tax burden on individual Canadians would not increase. In fact, he certainly left that likelihood very much open, very much on the Conservative agenda.

If I am not mistaken, I saw a report in the press last weekend which stated that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) when speaking in London admitted that increases in revenue were very likely to come from Conservative tax reform and that keeping the total tax burden at the same level as it is now on individual Canadians was only an objective and that the Conservatives are already gearing up to hit individual Canadians with an additional tax burden. They have already been hit by an unfair additional level of taxation through the last two Conservative Budgets.

Bill C-14 is only a continuation of this massive, unfair tax grab by the Conservatives from the pockets of individual Canadians, particularly middle and lower income Canadians. Members of the Government intend to keep up this tax grab in a sneaky way claiming that they are lowering the burden of taxation through lowering personal income tax rates. At the same time they are sneaking around behind the backs of individual Canadians, putting their hands into their pockets and taking out the money they give them through lower personal tax rates. They are taking even more money through unfair and increased sales taxes, taxes which they may have a new name for, such as the business transfer tax. However, it is still the same thing. It is an unfair and regressive increase in sales taxes. When people go to their dentists, their barbers or their accountants they will have to pay taxes for the first time on transactions that will be subject to tax.

We should be opposing this Bill. We should be sending a clear signal to the Conservative Government on behalf of individual Canadians that they have had enough, they will not take it any more and they are fed up with the increase in tax burden since the Government took office. Individual Canadians want a change. They are only waiting for the opportunity, that cannot come too soon, to get rid of this Government whose sole purpose is to place an unfair burden of taxation on middle and lower income Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I put the question or call upon the next speaker, I would like to read the following statement.

Excise Tax Act

I have received notice from the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) that due to a prior commitment he is unable to be present in the House tomorrow, Tuesday, November 18, 1986, to move his motion during the hour for Private Members' Business.

Accordingly, in conformity with the statement made by the Chair on May 28, 1986, I am directing the Table to drop this item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence. Since notice will thereby be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business will be suspended and, pursuant to Standing Order 39(2), the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour until the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hockin), which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether there would be a disposition on the part of the House to call it 1.15 p.m.?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that it is 1.15 p.m. The House will recess until two o'clock this day.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LAWYERS' RIGHTS TO COMPENSATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about the suicide last week of Rosa Becker, a woman who made legal history when the Supreme Court of Canada established in 1980 that the contribution of a common-law wife to the building up of a family farm entitled her to a half interest when her common-law husband kicked her out after 18 years, to marry someone else. However, Rosa Becker meant her suicide to draw attention to the injustice of living with that judgment. She received no money at all as of the time of her death. She held a $60 a week job while her ex and his wife lived on the farm she had helped to create. Her lawyer appropriated as fees all the money received.

We can be critical of Gerald Langlois, the lawyer who carried the case for years without financial compensation because of the reward he received in national fame and approval. However, it is regrettable that he pushed to the limit of 100 per cent his right to be compensated ahead of his client. That right of lawyers needs to be examined. I call on law societies across Canada to examine the facts of this case and review their policies on payment of fees to lawyers.

INSURANCE

SUPPORT FOR INDEPENDENT INSURANCE AGENTS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, this Government supports the agency system and general insurance agents. It will not give more power to the banking institutions of this country. As a former operator of a general insurance agency I know how well the consumers' interests are served by their independent insurance agents.

I would like to reassure not only my constituents and residents of my Province of Saskatchewan, but the over 10,000 independent insurance agents and their employees right across Canada that we will vigorously oppose any plan to allow financial institutions to include in their range of services the sale of general insurance products presently marketed through general insurance agents or brokerage agencies.

The driving force for this change seems to be the financial institutions rather than the consumer so it should be quite obvious whose best interests would be served by the proposed change.

ATTACK ON FISHERIES OFFICER ON QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on the November 1 weekend the Fisheries and Oceans patrolman on the Queen Charlotte Islands, Mr. Marvin Boyd, was beaten unconscious, had his face cut up and his leg broken. His injuries were serious enough to have him flown to Vancouver for urgent medical attention. He is now without work, without an income and likely will be laid up for months to come.

• (1405)

Increasingly we hear of such attacks on the Fisheries officers responsible for enforcing federal regulations. The federal Government must illustrate confidence in the good work of its patrolmen and enforcement personnel if we are to prevent a repeat of such incidents. The Government also has a responsibility to pursue all avenues of redress for Mr. Boyd to ensure he is fully compensated for his losses.

I ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to issue, at the very least, a public declaration supporting the often thankless work of those who must carry out his policies on the ground level. We must not allow innocent public servants to take the brunt of a Government's unwillingness to resolve resource conflicts or educate the public on the need to protect fish habitat.

Sadly, I am now informed by the Minister's officials that no supportive action will be taken. The Conservative Government runs out to spend $350,000 to defend Sinclair Stevens on conflict of interest charges. The same Conservative Government refuses to defend a patrolman who has carried out his duty. The Department concludes, in a November 10 letter to the Standing Committee on Fisheries, that because the Fisheries guardian was not on duty at the time he was assaulted by two individuals, no further action is being contemplated by the Department. Is that justice, Mr. Speaker?

CONSEQUENCES OF CALGARY DRUG STORE ROBBERY

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, is anyone listening? Is anyone hearing the cry going across our nation? Victims of crime are fighting back, and the average person on the street understands and sympathizes.

Case in point—Steven Kessler, ordinary, patriotic Canadian of Yugoslavian descent, well known as mild mannered and honest, reacted with violence last week against two armed robbers intent on stealing money and drugs from Kessler's store. This shocking incident left one man dead, another seriously injured, and Kessler charged with second-degree murder.

The facts leading up to the incident as well as the public reaction since indicate a strong message. It is time both federal and provincial politicians listened. We have perhaps the best police forces in the world, but our courts are pathetic and Canadians are showing less and less faith in the system. It is time for toughening and speeding up our judicial system. It is long overdue. Let's get at it.

REVENUE CANADA

THEFT OF TAX RECORDS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, this morning we learned that 16 million taxpayers' files have been lost. The integrity of the entire Canadian tax system is threatened by this inexcusable breach of taxpayers' privacy. How can Canadians trust a Government that cannot keep tax records confidential?

Today Canadians must ask themselves what will happen to our tax structure. Every Canadian files a tax return voluntarily every year. Those tax returns contain vital information. If the Government and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) cannot guarantee the confidentiality of those records, it will be very bad for all Canadians. I hope the Minister of National Revenue will do something about this right away. It took six days to find out that those records were missing. Something is wrong in that Department.

CHOICE OF ANDRÉ VIGER OF QUEBEC AS "PERSONALITY OF THE YEAR"

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the world wheelchair marathon champion, André Viger from Quebec, was voted "Personality of the Year" at the third "Gala de l'Excellence" organized by the newspaper La Presse.

André Viger has been a real winner since the beginning of this year. He won seven out of nine marathons in which he participated, breaking a whole series of records, and he won the world championship for the handicapped in England.

Our champion said during an interview: "I want to tell people to look at the potential, not the weaknesses of others. In my case, my greatest weakness, my wheelchair, has become my greatest strength."

In a text introducing the fifty-two candidates for the award, Mr. Roger D. Landry, president and editor of La Presse, said: "Excellence means setting an example. It means overcoming seemingly insurmountable obstacles. It means wanting to persevere against all adversity and having the ambition to succeed."

Mr. Speaker, with all the Members of this House, I say: Bravo, André Viger!

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—OPPOSITION TO SALE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in his bid to sell lumber to South Africa, British Columbia Premier Bill Vander Zalm has shown contempt for human rights and total ignorance of the vicious nature of apartheid. British Columbians must speak out against such a shameful, selfish, and shortsighted policy. Trading with apartheid will not solve our economic problems.

Vander Zalm's proposal has called the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) bluff. The Prime Minister pretends that he has taken a strong stand against apartheid, but when Vander Zalm thumbs his nose at this policy, our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) says there is nothing he can do unless we pass a law. If that is what it takes, by all means let us pass a law which bans all trade with South Africa.

SABOTAGE COMMITTED IN ICELAND—ICELANDIC COMMUNITY'S OUTRAGE

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, the largest Icelandic settlement outside of Iceland is Gimli, located in my constituency.

The people of Gimli are outraged with the recent sinking of two whaling ships in Reykjavik harbour and the destruction of the offices of a nearby fishing company. They are outraged that a Canadian is openly bragging that his group, the Sea Shepherd Conservation Society, is taking full credit for a criminal action in another nation. They are not pleased that acts of international sabotage are initiated from within Canada.

The action of Paul Watson should be condemned by all Canadians. Acts of sabotage cannot be condoned in any part of the world. I know that I speak on behalf of my constituents when I urge the House and request the Government to co-operate fully with the Icelandic Government to bring those responsible for this crime to justice.

CHEMICAL POLLUTION OF RHINE RIVER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, France's environment Minister, Alain Carignon, has called the chemical spill at the Swiss firm Sandoz near Basel: "An ecological catastrophe".

Residents of many towns along the Rhine River, forced to abandon the river as a source of household water, have resorted to water trucked in from elsewhere by fire departments.

Another chemical company, Ciba-Geigy, spilled 400 litres of the herbicide atrazine into the Rhine.

Swiss officials talk about the Sandoz incident as having shattered their confidence in self-regulation of the industry. The statement issued at a special session of the Basel Parliament said that the fire at Sandoz and its consequences have profoundly shaken confidence in the chemical industry.

The accident has led authorities to focus on the dangers surrounding the storage of dangerous chemicals as well as the more obvious risks from production and transport.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—CONDUCT OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY LEADER

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, free trade should have been negotiated with the United States during the last Parliament. The Liberal-NDP alliance wasted that Parliament with massive deficits and policies like the National Energy Program.

Now, with the Democrats controlling both U.S. Houses, it will be difficult to protect the three million Canadian jobs tied directly to exports to the United States.

Every student who wants a future job, every lumberman, every grain, hog and cattle producer, and every factory worker should be enraged that their jobs and their futures have been put into real jeopardy by the irresponsible conduct of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). The pension of every senior citizen is in danger if Canada loses more jobs due to U.S. protectionism.

I call upon the Leader of the New Democratic Party to stop sabotaging the future of Canada and Canadians. Let Mr. Reisman do his job.

ASSASSINATION OF ROLANDO OLALIA, PHILIPPINES LABOUR LEADER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I want to express our very deep regrets at the assassination last week of Rolando Olalia, the Philippines labour leader who had done so much to try to bring about reconciliation within his country.

His KMU was a coalition which included labour unions, peasants, and unemployed workers. It had close contacts with our own Canadian Labour Congress. His death has cost the Philippines an important spokesperson for peace and for reconciliation in the future. It is to be deeply regretted.

ACTIONS OF SEA SHEPHERD CONSERVATION SOCIETY CONDEMNED

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about comments made to the national press recently by Paul Watson of Vancouver, the leader of the Sea Shepherd Conservation Society.

On November 8 Mr. Watson's organization destroyed two whaling vessels and a processing plant in Iceland. He has publicly announced that he intends to destroy Asian monofilament nets in the North Pacific.

I am concerned as a member of the Standing Committee on Environment, and indeed as a Canadian citizen, that the global village does not view Canada as a country that attempts to come to terms with environmental problems through criminal activities. What Paul Watson has done is criminal and Canadians do not condone this type of action.

BANKS AND BANKING

ESTEY COMMISSION REPORT—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT'S ACTIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Government has made much of the fact that the Estey Report did not find Ministers blameworthy in events leading up to the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank. However, Mr. Justice Estey had some trenchant criticism of the Government's actions during and after the bail-out, the very things about which the Official Opposition has been challenging the Government since March, 1985.

The Estey Report has confirmed that the Government made a hasty and uninformed decision without recourse to facts that would have got in the way of that decision, that the Government then blindly guaranteed the bank's viability and, once it had failed, repaid nearly $1 billion out of the public purse to nameless uninsured depositors. If the principle of ministerial accountability has any meaning for the Government, it must now provide answers in Parliament to the questions it has evaded for the last year and one-half.

REPORTED THEFT OF TAX RECORDS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue, who is now taking his seat, arising from his statement this morning.

[Translation]

My question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Canadians don't want everybody to know about their financial affairs. They don't want their income tax returns to be publicized or used to blackmail them. The Government has failed to protect taxpayers.

My question is as follows: Why did the Minister say he was informed only five days after the event took place? This morning, the Minister said the microfiches were stolen after working hours. Why was the security service not operating between 5 p.m. and 9 a.m.? What is going on here?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the right hon. gentleman for being a bit late.

I tell him and my colleagues that I am not—and the hon. gentleman would not expect me to be—very happy with the situation either. This is one reason why I have ordered an intensive review. In my view the lack of celerity in informing my Deputy Minister and subsequently myself was unacceptable. This will form part of the review. I will try to have answers when the review is complete.

PROTECTION OF TAXPAYERS FROM FRAUD AND INVASION OF PRIVACY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Minister said that he had taken steps, to use his words, to protect the Government from fraud. What will the Minister do to protect 16 million Canadian taxpayers from fraud and from invasion of privacy? What is to prevent someone who has this information from plugging into the computer system and destroying the personal financial security and privacy of 16 million Canadian families?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, again, I respect very much the concerns of the right hon. gentleman. The situation is serious enough without making it worse by careless references to what might or might not occur. I know that he does not intend this. However, let me say to him that there is no likelihood that the information, as gross a breach of privacy as its being taken is, provides an entrée into the computer system of taxpayers and to that particular type of data base. There are safeguards in place to prevent just that.

As far as what can be done to make up, if you will, for the loss of privacy to individual Canadians who entrusted their social insurance numbers to Revenue Canada in the sure and certain belief that they would be held inviolate, frankly, is something I do not know. I do know that there has been an unacceptable breach of security. I know that public interest demands that the public be told as soon as the RCMP indicated it was suitable. The best defence is to be vigilant in terms of each Canadian realizing that the social insurance number and some of the information belonging to individuals is out there and cannot be accounted for at this time.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the Minister would have accepted the ministerial responsibility that is here. This morning he said that he could not be expected, to use his words, to take responsibility for every locked room or every safe or every desk. Will the Minister take responsibility for the financial secrecy and integrity of the tax system which affects 16 million Canadians? Will he accept that responsibility?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my right hon. friend that, to the best of my ability, I will attempt to accept that responsibility by finding out, as I have already attempted to do, the reasons for this breach. I have asked the RCMP to institute immediately an inquiry into the adequacy of the security procedures which are being used to handle this microfiche data and to keep it inviolate. I have instituted a departmental review. I will be taking whatever other measures appear to be proper arising out of this situation. I will be providing answers as quickly as possible to the House.

TRADE

EXPORT CONTROL POLICY—SALE OF HELICOPTER PARTS TO IRAN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to pose questions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his absence, perhaps I could ask them of the Deputy Prime Minister. A document released on September 10 by the Department of External Affairs on export control policy states:

When a class of goods is not clearly and uniquely either military or civilian, there will be Ministerial consultation. Helicopters are an example.

Was the Secretary of State or the Cabinet consulted on the decision to sell helicopter engine parts to the Ayatollah regime in Iran since they could clearly be used for military purposes? Should this decision not have been made at the highest level of Government? Why was a decision made to sell to Iran at that point in time?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that this was approved by officials in the normal course of doing business in this manner. We have been assured by Pratt & Whitney that the spare parts for the engines involved for the Bell 212 helicopter are commercially configured. The company has also stated that the power required for a military helicopter is much greater than that of the Bell 212 and that the engines in question, the PT6 T-3, could not be used for the Cobra helicopter without very major changes in the configuration of the unit itself, something that could not have been accomplished in Iran.

CANADIAN DEFENCE PRODUCTS GUIDE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have here a copy of the Canadian Defence Products Guide, a document put out by the Department of External Affairs. This document clearly points out that the engine to which the Deputy Prime Minister just referred is advertised for military purposes and for use in the Cobra gunship. Do I assume that the Government does not read its own documents, or do I assume that there was another reason the export permits were given authorizing Pratt & Whitney to sell to Iran? How can you justify your own document advertising that engine and then not—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member knows it is improper to address the Minister with the word "you". I would ask him to rephrase the remainder of his question.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister, through you, how the Government can justify a decision to sell those parts to Iran when its own document clearly specifies that they can be sold and used for military purposes?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would submit to the Hon. Member that again we have been assured that this was a commercially oriented transaction. There have been cases where permit applications have been refused. When spare parts for engines used in the Cobra helicopter were requested, those requests were turned down. Where there is a clear case of spare parts being used for military purposes, the export permit requests are turned down. As a matter of fact one such request occurred in January of 1985. I think both the Department and the Minister have carried out the spirit if not the letter of the guidelines to which the Hon. Member refers.

NATIONAL REVENUE

STOLEN INFORMATION—PROTECTION OF TAXPAYERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. We know now that personal information on sixteen million taxpayers is in the hands of a thief. This is a very serious situation. My question to the Minister is as follows: What exactly does the Government intend to do to protect the taxpayers?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, without being evasive, I am not able to say specifically, and I believe he would not be able to either, that the data is in the hands of thieves. It may well be that it is but we do not know that, and that is as much as I can tell him about the investigation that is proceeding.

What can be done? There are additional safeguards being implemented. If I were to tell the Hon. Member what they were, that would be to some extent counterproductive. I can assure him, as I have assured the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, that we have taken this matter very seriously, as indeed we must and we should. We have asked the RCMP to evaluate the procedures which up to now have been satisfactory in keeping this kind of data sacrosanct. I have directed that there be an intensive review. We have notified other Departments and provinces and we will take every measure possible to make certain that this information does not do any damage.

USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that access to this information can be very dangerous indeed regarding the invasion of privacy. A member of my staff, for example, phoned the Toronto-Dominion Bank over the noon hour and simply gave the bank a Social Insurance Number plus a name. That member of my staff was told that that particular person's credit rating could be produced. That is alarming in terms of its potential impact on some 16 million Canadians who now know that that information is in the hands of someone. I want to ask the Minister very specifically what he is doing to inform all those directly affected by this very serious situation what they should be doing to protect themselves?

• (1425)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): I indicated to the House this morning that as soon as I received permission from the RCMP I thought it was the responsible thing to inform Canadians first about the situation, otherwise they would have no way of knowing. Secondly, we are trying to find ways that we can minimize the risk. But I would be less than frank if I told the House, or told my friend opposite, that if this information is in unauthorized hands, which we do not yet know, there could be any blanket assurances. The best assurance that Canadians can have at this moment in order to protect themselves is simply to know that this shocking breach of security has occurred, and that there may be a danger that people will use their SIN numbers for the type of purpose that my hon. friend has indicated.

NOTIFICATION OF PUBLIC

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Minister appropriately warned Canadians this morning by making a statement in the House, and by making a statement outside the House. But I say to the Minister that hundreds of thousands of Canadians may miss that information because they missed the news.

Does the Government intend to write to all the people who have Social Insurance Numbers and inform them directly of the dangers involved so that they will not be left out? Is the Government at least giving serious consideration to changing the Social Insurance Number of every Canadian?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): As I believe the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party knows, we did inform the provinces this morning as soon as it became appropriate to do so. We have informed other Ministers whose Departments are affected and we can count on their assistance and facilities to spread the bad news. We will take every possible step to communicate with individual Canadian tax filers. It is not yet clear whether it is feasible to change individual SIN numbers, or whether there are other appropriate means that we can institute to provide protection. What we could do and what we will do is take whatever requirements are there that allow the summary information on the microfiche to be used, and vary the codes.

DELAY IN INFORMING MINISTER

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The integrity of the entire Canadian tax system is threatened by this inexcusable breach of taxpayer privacy. Why was the Minister only informed on November 4, when the files disappeared on October 30? Why was there a six-day delay in him being informed? Who is running the Department?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. friend opposite that I am no more happy with this than he is. As I said before, this was an inexplicable delay. I know that the officials involved were diligently pursuing this missing data. I should have been informed, and my deputy should have been informed. The investigation and review will perhaps shed more light on this, and there will be disciplinary action taken where appropriate.

[Translation]

TAXPAYERS' CONFIDENCE IN INCOME TAX SYSTEM

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. This theft is a threat to the integrity of Canada's entire tax system. How can Canadians trust this Government if it cannot keep their income tax returns confidential? Could the Minister explain to the House how Canadians can be expected to trust this Government?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): I apologize to the House. I did not get the purport of my hon. friend's question. I can say to him that I agree that the integrity of the Canadian tax system has been damaged. I am sorry that I did not understand the last part of his question.

EXPORT PERMITS—SHIPMENT OF HELICOPTER PARTS TO IRAN

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The policy of the Government on export permits up to September 10 was that such permits could be restricted in the case of goods described as civilian strategic equipment; not just military, but civilian strategic equipment. They could also be banned where a Government was pursuing policies on human rights wholly repugnant to Canadian values. Is the Minister saying that the permission given to Pratt & Whitney and others to ship helicopter parts to Iran is in conformity with the policy which was in existence until September 10 of this year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that Bell 212 helicopters are commercially oriented helicopters with PT6 T-3 engines. They are used for that particular purpose. The spare parts in question were spare parts for that helicopter. As I outlined earlier, Pratt & Whitney officials advise the Government that it would be almost impossible in Iran to reconfigure the Cobra to adapt to the types of engines in question. Once again, we have received assurances that the spare parts for these particular helicopters were used for civilian purposes, and that is where it rests.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister if this could then be described as civilian strategic equipment which under the policy up until September 10 was on the prohibited list. I also asked about the violation of human rights in Iran. I would be grateful if the Minister would reply to those questions, in that what has been done is a violation of the Government's own policy. In addition to answering my first question, would the Minister comment upon the fact that Bell Helicopter in Texas last month declined to sell helicopter parts to Iran because of its confidence that they were being used in Iran's fight against Iraq and in its fight against its own people?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, so did the Government deny that back in January, 1985. An application was received, and it was believed at that time that the spare parts in question would be used for military helicopters and, as a result, the permits were turned down.

ISSUANCE OF EXPORT PERMITS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, following on that answer, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. According to press reports, in September, 1985, the U.S. Commerce Department authorized United Technologies to have one of its Canadian subsidiaries ship Bell helicopter parts. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether his Government received a request from the U.S. administration to issue those export permits? Does that account for the fact that the policy on export permits was not applied strictly, as it should have been?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I am not aware of that particular issue, Mr. Speaker. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that on the issue in question we have been assured that it was a straight commercial, civilian oriented transaction. We have been given that assurance by Pratt & Whitney. For the reasons outlined earlier, I think the issuance of the export permits was in compliance with the policies of the Government at that time.

FUTURE SHIPMENTS INQUIRY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Deputy Prime Minister is being especially forthcoming. Perhaps we can get this out in front of a committee. President Reagan, according to this wire report, says that there will be no further U.S. arms shipments and is encouraging other countries to act in the same manner. Does that mean that there will be no further helicopter parts shipped from Longueuil to Tehran?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. gentleman is suggesting that we are taking our orders in this particular case from the President of the United States. Such is not the case.

REVENUE CANADA

REPORTED THEFT OF TAX RECORDS—ISSUANCE OF OLD AGE SECURITY CHEQUES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Given the seriousness of the situation to which he addressed himself this morning, and especially considering the possibility of fraud occurring, will the Minister be able to announce whether Health and Welfare will be announcing new procedures for those persons receiving old age security cheques, in terms of change of address?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity to check with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and he tells me that measures are being considered. At this time I cannot say exactly what they are. Perhaps the Minister might wish to do so, but he would understand that whatever measures are taken it would perhaps be counter-productive to put them out specifically for public scrutiny at this time.

CONFIDENTIALITY OF TAX INFORMATION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, understanding the fact that to make everything public might not be desirable, I think the Canadian public has a right to know what new security procedures the Government is pursuing. Given the fact that the Conservative task force on Revenue Canada in 1984 indicated that it was concerned about the continuing erosion of the principle of confidentiality of tax information, is the Minister prepared to tell the Canadian public what new measures will be taken to make certain the secret information of Revenue Canada will in fact remain secret?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows and as I have already conceded, this has been the most grievous blow to confidentiality of Canadians' personal information, as far as I am aware, in the Department's history. I am not seeking to minimize it for one moment. The Hon. Member and the House have my assurance that we will be taking every possible measure to make certain that the most stringent attempts are made to try to countermand or repair the damage which has been done. I can undertake to him, perhaps on a private basis, to give him some indication of progress. I will tell the House as soon as I can, if it is proper to do so, what I have been doing.

I should like to take this opportunity to say that the Government has not diminished its commitment to the resources for the taxation side of Revenue Canada. We have in fact added over 600 person years during the last two years. We have substantial resources on audit and investigation.

Oral Questions

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CANADIAN TRADE NEGOTIATOR

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and concerns an unprecedented statement by Simon Reisman. He said: "Canada can no longer expect to continue its practice of subsidizing industry if it wants to escape the effects of American trade laws". Would the Minister explain to the House whether or not he agrees with this particular statement and whether this statement is now government policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think a review of our regional development policy is already under way. In the Throne Speech, the Prime Minister re-emphasized the importance of providing assistance for regional development. The Government has a duty to recognize these disparities and to be willing to work at reducing them as efficiently and productively as possible.

[English]

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I remind him that Simon Reisman is not talking about review. He is talking about major concessions to industry in Canada. I want an undertaking from the Minister that no concessions whatsoever will be made with regard to maritime freight assistance, western grain transportation assistance, assistance to small business, as well as assistance to our primary producers. Will the Minister give us an undertaking that no concessions will be made in those areas?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, since September 1984, the federal Government has signed subsidiary agreements with the provinces totalling over $1.6 billion. These agreements have focussed on creating jobs and providing regional development assistance. And that is exactly what we will go on doing.

PORTS

VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR FUNDS TO UPGRADE FACILITIES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister knows that to be competitive the Port of Vancouver needs at least three new container cranes as well as modernized rail transportation. Will the Government agree today to committing the necessary funds to upgrade the facilities to make Vancouver a competitive world-class port while creating many more long-term jobs?

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, what we hope today is to get unanimous consent from the Hon. Member's Party to proceed with all stages of a Bill to put the Port of Vancouver back to work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister knows that there are many, many people in this country who agree with that principle but do not necessarily agree with some of the compromises.

REQUEST THAT PORT USERS COMMITTEE BE ESTABLISHED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister a second question. He knows that the situation in the Port of Vancouver is a very complex one. Will the Government ask the Port of Vancouver to comply with the Ports Canada legislation, which was passed some number of years ago, by establishing a port users committee to develop a comprehensive plan for the Port so that we can deal with all problems facing that Port?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Port of Vancouver is well served by a very competent board. I know there has been good public dialogue in furthering the interests of the commercial activity of the Port of Vancouver. To the extent that that can be further facilitated, I am sure the Hon. Member's suggestion would be taken into consideration and I will certainly convey that to the board.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT PROVISIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have here part of an internal U.S. Government study of the Auto Pact that concludes:

—the safeguard provisions in the Pact have increased Canada's leverage in prodding Japanese and South Korean producers to invest and buy automotive parts in Canada.

Will the Minister of Finance tell us why, when even the Americans recognize the benefits to Canada of these safeguards, the Canadian Cabinet is considering giving them up as concessions in the free trade talks?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are not. It is as simple as that. We have said that no changes will be considered for the Auto Pact which will undermine the capability and the effectiveness of the auto industry to create jobs, jobs that the Member knows full well are very important to his part of the country. It is one of the reasons that the unemployment rate is as low as it is in Windsor. It is one of the reasons that it is as low as it is in Oshawa. He understands and we understand fully the importance of the Auto Pact, and there is no consideration whatever to undermine that importance.

Mr. Langdon: Once again the Minister is out of touch with the facts, Mr. Speaker. In fact the unemployment rate doubled in Windsor last month.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Will the Minister of Finance give a clear answer and state, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself stated to the House, that:

—the Auto Pact serves Canada's interests well, and we do not see any purpose in changing a system that works.

Or are you, in fact, turning that question—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member does know that it is improper to address a Minister or another Member with the word "you". I would ask the Member to rephrase the last part of his question.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister simply attest to this House that the statements made on occasion after occasion by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the Auto Pact would not be touched because it serves our interests well will, in fact, be respected?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have said nothing that in any way is contrary to what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said. What I do want to point out is what Mr. Murphy, the chief negotiator for the United States, has said in the course of these negotiations, that if he could have more Ed Broadbents on his side in Washington helping the side of the Americans in these negotiations, they would be a lot better off.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE—CANADA-FRANCE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In view of the fact that talks have broken down between Canadian negotiators and French negotiators over the boundary dispute and the fisheries management dispute with France in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, could the Minister tell us what he is now doing to make sure that the interests of Canadian fishermen will be protected? Will the Minister assure the House, as reported in The Globe and Mail by a fishermen's union representative, that we are not going to barter cod for cultural agreements?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can definitely assure the Hon. Member that the interests of Atlantic fishermen, particularly those on the south shore of Newfoundland that might be seen as negatively impacted by the present practice of over-fishing by the French national fleet in the waters around St. Pierre and Miquelon, will be respected and protected by initiatives at the highest diplomatic level.

CATCH TAKEN BY FRENCH FISHING FLEET

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister explain to the House how it is possible, out of a quota of some 6,000 metric tonnes allotted to France in Zone 3PS, that France could take 26,000 metric tonnes in that zone and why no one in Canada knew until reading about it in a newspaper published in France?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member does his reading but we have known since 1983 of extensive French over-fishing in the disputed zone which has not been properly delineated because of a claim by France to a 200-mile territorial sea south of the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. It looks as though ultimately that boundary matter will have to be resolved by international arbitration.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS—PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS AGAINST PRICE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and concerns pharmaceutical products.

Four million Canadians on low incomes are being penalized by this legislation. They don't get welfare benefits, they have no private insurance and no protection against the rising cost of drugs. What is the Minister going to do to help them?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what can be done is to have Hon. Members read the legislation and realize that they are misinforming the public in claiming that there will be an increase in the price of drugs. What there will be an increase in is jobs in the high-tech area. There will be 3,000 direct high-tech jobs produced out of this Bill, and with no increase in the price of drugs to the kinds of consumers about whom the Hon. Member is talking. I wish she would not continue scaring people unnecessarily in that regard.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT PROVIDES FUNDS TO PROVINCES IF DRUG COSTS ARE NOT INCREASED

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the Minister at his word. However, there is a contradiction in his legislation, where the Minister will give the provinces $100 million or $25 million annually.

Considering that this Government wants to reduce the deficit, could the Minister explain why he is giving $100 million to the provinces if there is to be no increase in drug costs?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was right the first time. It is $25 million a year for four years only. That deals—it is too long to describe in Question Period—with 41 generic drugs which we are calling pipeline drugs that are caught between the old law and the proposed law. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the $100 million way more than covers any additional cost—

Some Hon. Members: Additional cost?

Mr. Andre: The consumers about whom she is talking will not be affected.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville.

TRADE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance who should know that not Washington but Windsor, Oshawa, St. Thomas, Oakville, St. Catharines and St. Thérèse have Ed Broadbent fighting for them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. McCurdy: With regard to the statement in the leaked cabinet document that was revealed two weeks ago, does the Minister share the view that the Auto Pact safeguards are an obstacle to necessary changes in the Auto Pact?

• (1450)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think what the Hon. Member missed in my first response was the fact that Mr. Murphy, the chief negotiator for the U.S., was saying that the confusion and fear being sown by the Leader of the NDP was helping the negotiations in the U.S. He said, "yeh, get him to testify more in Washington." He wants Ed Broadbent to keep saying what he has because it is helping the U.S. negotiations. That is certainly not the way we want to go about these negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Shame on Ed!

Mr. Speaker: Order. All Members know that in this House when we refer to another Hon. Member, we do so in the appropriate way.

AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, since you have probably noticed that the Minister's response had only parenthetic relationship to the question asked I will repeat it.

Mr. Langdon: Strictly tangential.

Mr. McCurdy: Was the Minister suggesting on November 13, when he said there are certain improvements which might be made in the Auto Pact, that those of us who believe the safeguards are at the heart of the survival of the industry are suffering a misconception as this secret document suggests?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member is sowing seeds of confusion and that is totally inappropriate. I have never said that we were about to negotiate the safeguards. What I have clearly said is that any changes ever to be considered to the Auto Pact—or automotive trade because as he knows there are a number of other parts of the industry not included in the Auto Pact—would be made only with a view to improving the situation of the automotive industry in Canada because it is so important to us. It creates so many jobs and so many exports, and therefore we are going to do nothing to undermine the industry.

SUPERVISION OF PAROLE SYSTEM

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It concerns his reckless new parole supervision policy. Why is he taking risks with public safety and public confidence by taking the parole supervision system away from professional officials and turning it over to volunteers?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the hon. gentleman that we do not consider what we are doing reckless or playing with public safety. I have reviewed this matter quite thoroughly with my staff. It involves only a maximum of 25 per cent of parole cases in Toronto and public safety is not being jeopardized.

OFFICIALS' ATTENDANCE AT TORONTO RALLY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will be aware that while he was touring the country on the subject of crime prevention there was a rally in Toronto. I want his assurance that the officials who participated in that rally will not be punished for doing so.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that there is a code of conduct for employees of the Canadian Correctional Service of which I am sure they are aware. In any event, I am not aware at this time of any disciplinary action being taken or contemplated concerning the employees who took part in that rally.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REVIEW OF INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT PRACTICES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It has been suggested that some purchasers of machinery and equipment have taken excessive investment tax credits through the medium of overstating trade-in allowances. Does the Minister intend to review what has gone on and, if so, who is he targeting and what taxation years will be affected?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my colleague that indeed there has been concern for some time that there may be some abuse of the investment tax credit and capital cost allowance, contrary to their original intention. There is no specific group targeted. The situation is, as I have said in letters to my colleagues, that it will be done methodically in different areas of the country after taxpayers are given notice. There is no cause for concern. It is just to make sure that there are no abuses of the system.

IMPACT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION ON NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last week the Conservative Minister of Health of Nova Scotia said that the extra cost to that province over the next 10 years if the patent drug legislation passes will be $146 million. He said that unless the federal Government gives the province that extra money it will have to come out of other money the province puts into health care. Why is the Minister bringing in legislation which will increase the profits of the multinational drug corporations, already the most profitable in the country, and thereby harming so many seniors and others in that province?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were sincere in that question he obviously does not know anything about the Bill, what it contains, its effects, ramifications or consequences. I appeal to the Hon. Member and his House Leader to co-operate with our House Leader, reach agreement to proceed with this legislation on second reading, get it into committee, and we can examine all those questions. I am sure if he keeps an open mind and remains intellectually honest he will see that it is good legislation for Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members will know that in the cut and thrust of debate in Question Period we should be very careful not even to get close to imputing motives. I am sure all Hon. Members know that.

JOB CREATION INQUIRY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the figures I used came from the Conservative Minister in Nova Scotia so maybe this Minister should talk to him. That province has calculated that it will cost the province an extra $146 million in the next 10 years. The Minister has talked about 3,000 new jobs. How many of those jobs will be in Nova Scotia given that 96 per cent of the industry is now located in Ontario or Quebec?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just come back from making announcements concerning 50 new jobs and $150 million investment in British Columbia, a $100 million investment in Alberta, and great investments in Quebec and Ontario. The benefits will be very widespread. However, the kind of detailed information he has asked for needs to be provided in committee. I repeat that if we allow this to go to committee and give it a careful and honest examination he will see that it is good legislation and none of the scare stories have any validity.

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It is now six weeks since the Prime Minister announced an aid program for grain farmers who are suffering the lowest prices since the 1930s.

This came after about six months of representation from the various farm groups. Can the Minister say when this money is going to be paid? Will it be paid in time for Christmas so that Canadian farmers can have a Christmas the same as other Canadians?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing interest in this matter. He should realize that both myself and my colleague, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board, met with 35 or 40 farm leaders just a short time ago. They asked us to do some further calculations on some options involving a combination of seeded acreage, production, and grain values. This is exactly what we are doing. In fact I am meeting this afternoon with my provincial counterparts from across the country. The meeting is on other matters but no doubt we will be discussing this specific issue later this afternoon.

TIMING OF PAYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, a recent press report says that the Minister is not going to proceed until after he meets with farm groups again and he is not going to meet with them until around February. If the Minister is not prepared to make this payment in time for Christmas, can he say exactly when he plans to make this payment of $1 billion to the grain producers of the country?

• (1500)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what press reports the Hon. Member is referring. I have seen some that are fairly accurate. I have seen others which are extremely inaccurate, and I refer to them in very complimentary terms.

The last time my colleagues and I met with farm leaders we did not see the purpose for a further meeting because we had agreed unanimously on the formula with the exception of two items. One was whether it would be possible for us to build in further factors to relate to regional yields, but they wanted to leave that challenge to us. The second item was the selection of a base year. A third item would be whether or not we—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has gone on sufficiently long. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt for one question.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—DIVERSIFICATION OF ECONOMY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Falconbridge Nickel Company recently announced that 275 jobs will disappear in Sudbury by the end of this year and another 250 by 1988. The Deputy Prime Minister led a coterie of cabinet Ministers to Sudbury recently. They talked behind closed doors about ways to diversify the economy of northern Ontario. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell this House what steps the Government will take to diversify the economy of northern Ontario? We want specific steps now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I have said in this House on many occasions, this is the first time a national Government has treated the region of northern Ontario with attention which reflects its unique characteristics. Under the leadership of the Solicitor General, who is taking a lead role in that particular area and working with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I can assure the Hon. Member that all the problems with respect to unemployment, economic development and new opportunities and meeting those new challenges which exist in northern Ontario will be fulfilled.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. Rodriguez: A supplementary!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

FINAL PAYMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board is reported as saying, at the Manitoba Wheat Pool Convention, that there is little likelihood of final payment on wheat sold for the 1985-86 crop year. Since it was the number three and lower grades that were actually sold at a loss, the high protein grades one and two are actually subsidizing these lower grades of wheat.

Would the Minister advise the House whether he believes the producers should actually be entitled to the full amount that was realized on their crop that was sold, and whether he would support setting up a separate pool for—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern because it reflects that of many producers who are facing very low grain prices. The final calculations have not yet been done. The Board will not be in a position to make those announcements until some time in the new year. If the Member has concerns, we will certainly be willing to consider them for the next crop year.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt that I had indicated that I would recognize him for only one question because we were near the end of Question Period. We are all delighted to have the Hon. Member back with us. His enthusiasm is evident. I am sure he will have a chance to ask another question soon.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 29

EXPORT CONTROL—STRATEGIC MATERIAL—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: Earlier today I received an application from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) for an emergency debate under Standing Order 29 with respect to the export of certain material to Iran from Canada. I indicated that I would consider the application carefully and report to the House at this time, which I am now doing.

There is no question that the matter is important. That has been evidenced by the questions asked today during Question Period. However, having reviewed the terms of Standing Order 29 with relation to the existence of a genuine emergency, I regret to inform the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry that I cannot accept his application at this time.

I repeat, as I have on occasions of other such applications, that I considered the matter to be serious, and that has been evidenced by the exchange today. I am sure there will be other occasions during the next few days to raise the matter.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the Opposition House Leaders and critics with respect to certain legislation regarding the maintenance of ports operations which was introduced this morning. I know the representative of the Liberal Party would probably be in agreement with the proposal I am about to put forward. There have been discussions with the New Democratic Party as well. I am not sure whether there has been complete concurrence but, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I seek unanimous consent for the following proposal with regard to Bill C-24:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of the House:

Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations, be called for Second Reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole forthwith upon the passage of this Order;

That Private Members' Business shall not be taken into consideration and that the item scheduled for this day in the name of the Hon. Member for Davenport, be rescheduled for Private Members' Hour on Tuesday, November 18, 1986;

That proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 66 shall not be taken into consideration this day; and

That Mr. Speaker shall not adjourn the House this day until such time as Bill C-24 has been passed through all stages.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Does the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is a very important piece of legislation. I would like to indicate that our Party is willing to proceed to second reading today. I would request the unanimous consent of the House to proceed to second reading today. Our Party would certainly be willing to have this completed by tomorrow.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, if that is a commitment to pass this piece of legislation through all stages by tomorrow, I assume they are agreeing to proceed through Committee of the Whole. Hopefully it would be completed today or very early tomorrow. It would be preferable to complete it today. Could we be more precise and say tomorrow at the end of the day or at noon? I believe Hon. Members truly recognize the importance of this issue. If we could have that assurance that it would be passed through all stages by noon tomorrow, I believe there could be agreement.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, as I think many Hon. Members know, the Official Opposition was ready to agree to the Order as originally presented.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): We want to make some points about the Bill, which we are ready to make in debate. We realize the importance of the issue. We were and are ready to co-operate to enable the House to take an early decision, assuming there is an appropriate time for debate of the matters set forth in the Bill. In the spirit of co-operation, therefore, we are certainly willing to go along with other approaches to an early disposition of this matter, including the one suggested by the New Democratic Party. As I have said, we were willing to agree with the order originally proposed by the Government House Leader.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the co-operation of the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Party. Every day is very important. I am amazed that the New Democratic Party is not prepared to work overtime on this issue. I regret that very much.

Mr. Parry: Stop the propaganda.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where were you for the last two weeks?

Mr. Cassidy: You could have put this up last week and you know it.

Mr. Rodriguez: You did not have the Bill ready this morning.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the Chair can assist. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has risen and asked for consent to a motion which was described in detail to the House. There was not unanimous consent. There now seems to be an indication, as evidenced by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), that the members of the New Democratic Party are at least partially prepared to get on with Bill C-24. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has made it very clear that the Official Opposition was prepared to accept the original motion.

Perhaps, in order to expedite the matter, we might put it aside for a few minutes during which the House Leaders can consult and come back to the Chair and the chamber, if that would help to expedite the matter. It is a suggestion that might be acceptable.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I want to agree to your suggestion. I think we have a real disposition in this Party that we start debate today on second reading. We certainly want to finish it by tomorrow.

It may be wise if the House Leaders have a chance to meet and work out some of the details. It is a very important issue in the country and I think we can work out the details if we can get together for a few minutes.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, having regard to those statements and your assistance, perhaps we might agree to proceed with the second reading of Bill C-24, after which we will try to work out that kind of arrangement.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Deputy Prime Minister. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MAINTENANCE OF PORTS OPERATIONS ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations, be read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the introduction of legislation into Parliament is usually among the more welcome of the tasks that fall to a Minister of the Crown. This should particularly be the case for a relatively new Minister in a relatively new session of the Parliament of Canada. It is, therefore, unfortunate that I find myself introducing the present Bill with certain regret. That regret is occasioned by the Government having to intervene in a labour dispute in order to achieve something which the Parties normally are expected to do and should be able to do themselves. I refer, of course, to the termination of their work stoppage and the resolution of their differences.

My reluctance to intervene in this dispute should not be confused, however, with a hesitation to assume my responsibilities and take decisive action in the broader public interest. Therefore, I recommend the present Bill, the Maintenance of Ports Operations Act, 1986, to the House and urge its expeditious passage.

[Translation]

The Canada Labour Code provides a framework for the conduct of collective bargaining in federal industries. For the most part, those industries are essentially of public interest involving key transportation and communications activities that are vital to the economy of our country and the well-being of its citizens. The thrust of the Canada Labour Code places the prime responsibility for bargaining and resolving disputes on the parties themselves. However, it is recognized that they may require help in what may at times prove to be a complex task.

The Code, therefore, provides for conciliation and mediation procedures which may be invoked to assist the parties in reaching their ultimate goal of concluding or renewing a collective agreement.

[English]

It is only as a very last resort that governments should intervene in the collective bargaining process, and such interventions should be minimal if we are to maintain respect for the law and the institutions of Parliament. In the present case, we have unfortunately reached a last resort stage. The parties failed in their efforts to resolve the dispute in direct negotiations between themselves, and subsequently failed to take full advantage of the range of expert conciliation that was extended to them. Following a breakdown in the negotiations in early October, the employer exercised its admittedly legal right to impose a lock-out which was lifted after three days in an effort to promote further bargaining. On October 29, I appointed two mediators to assist in the negotiations. On November 14, I met personally with the two bargaining committees and appealed to them to resolve this dispute through negotiation. Nevertheless, the parties remained unable to resolve their differences.

The inability of the parties to resolve their dispute, indeed their wilful abdication of their responsibility to one another and to the Canadian public, has forced the Government to bring about a conclusion to a work stoppage which the economy of this country can little stand to bear. The recently concluded work stoppage at Thunder Bay delayed grain exports, and the Government is not prepared to stand idly by and see the livelihood of Canada's grain producers placed in further jeopardy by a lengthy work stoppage at West Coast ports. In addition to the damage which a lengthy work stoppage would cause to Canada's reputation as a reliable exporter of grain, the business community and its employees dependent upon water transportation for shipment of their goods and resources, are also subject to undue hardship as a result of this work stoppage. We are once again faced with a situation in which the parties to a dispute are able to inflict more punishment on others than on themselves.

Before providing Hon. Members with the details of this particular labour dispute, I wish to make it absolutely clear that the Government remains totally committed to the process of free collective bargaining and holds the belief that the common well-being can best be encouraged through the constructive settlement of disputes through meaningful negotiations.

[Translation]

Part V of the Canada Labour Code establishes a framework of rights and responsibilities within which management and organized labour are to conduct their relations. That framework places the responsibility for resolving labour-management disputes clearly on the parties to collective bargaining. The Labour Code provides for a complete range of third-party assistance to labour and management to aid them in resolving their differences through the bargaining process.

[English]

Unfortunately, there are rare situations where bargaining fails and the Government, as defender of the public interest and caretaker of the economy, must intervene to prevent irreparable damage. This is the situation we face today in the dispute involving the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association and the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Canadian Area.

The current labour dispute between the B.C. Maritime Employers Association and the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union centres around negotiations for renewal of the collective agreement which expired on December 31, 1985. The agreement, covering some 2,250 regular longshoremen and 2,000 casual longshoremen, was the subject of direct bargaining between the parties from October 4 to December 2, 1985. Following the breakdown of direct negotiations between the parties, the union filed a notice of dispute and requested that the conciliation proceedings of the Canada Labour Code be waived. In view of the dismal record which characterizes labour negotiations between these parties, the Minister of Labour decided it would be inappropriate to waive concilation efforts and thus appointed a conciliation officer from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service of Labour Canada on December 20, 1985, to assist the parties in resolving their differences.

During the month of January, 1986, the parties continued to meet in direct negotations. Conciliation meetings between the concilation officer and the parties began on February 3, 1986, and continued on various dates during the following two-month period before the parties again met in direct negotiations for two days in early April. Talks were subsequently adjourned to accommodate the union's annual convention and election of officers during the second week of April. The incumbent, Mr. Dave Lomas, was replaced by Mr. Don Garcia as President for the Canadian area of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. Mr. Garcia immediately requested that the conciliation officer file his report and that no further third-party assistance be provided. Once again, in light of the difficulties which have typified past negotiations between these two parties, the Minister determined that further conciliation assistance would be appropriate and appointed a conciliation commissioner.

Mr. Dalton Larson was appointed on May 30, 1986, following which meetings with the two sides took place on five separate occasions during the month of June. Following the hearings, Mr. Larson advised the parties by letter dated July 18, 1986, that he would require submissions from them in support of the positions that each had taken during the conciliation proceedings. The parties were requested to submit any data, statistics and historical background information which would provide the Conciliation Commissioner with additional insight into their respective positions on the various contract items in dispute. Following receipt of the parties' submissions, Commissioner Larson afforded each party an opportunity to rebut the arguments put forward by the other.

[Translation]

Following a comprehensive review of the parties' respective positions, Mr. Larson wrote and filed his final report with me. The report of the conciliation commissioner was subsequently released to the parties on September 8, 1986, and further direct bargaining took place on September 25 and October 3.

[English]

On October 6, 1986, the BCMEA instituted a lock-out of the workforce. In response to a telegram which I sent them seeking a resumption of grain shipments, the BCMEA agreed to lift a lock-out for a 30-day period during which time the parties were to continue in their efforts to resolve their differences. Longshoring operations resumed on October 8 and the negotiations reconvened on October 15.

Following the failure of these negotiations, I appointed two mediators on October 29. They immediately convened meetings aimed at resolving the impasse. These negotiations also failed and on November 14 I met personally with the parties in a further effort to convince them to settle their differences through collective bargaining. As Hon. Members are aware, the dispute is continuing despite all our efforts to promote a negotiated settlement.

In order to provide Hon. Members with some perspectives on this dispute it may be instructive if I briefly recount the findings of the Conciliation Commissioner who dealt with this dispute, Mr. Dalton Larson. In his report, Mr. Larson made recommendations dealing with all of the contentious issues, including wages, container handling, bulk terminal operations, pensions, hours of work and automation protection. Conciliation Commissioner Larson recommended a three-year agreement effective January 1, 1986, to December 31, 1988, with a wage freeze in the first year, a 2 per cent increase on the base rate in the second year, and a 3 per cent increase on the base rate in the third year of the agreement.

By far the most contentious issue, and the one which the Commissioner labelled "a singular impediment to the successful conclusion of the new collective agreement", is the container handling clause, article 26.05 of the collective agreement. This clause, which provides the union with jurisdiction over the stuffing and destuffing of consolidated cargo containers which are destined for or come from any point within the Vancouver local area or the Prince Rupert port area, places the Port of Vancouver at a competitive disadvantage with major United States ports such as Seattle and Tacoma.

The BCMEA feels that the removal of the limitations represented by the container clause would sharply increase the amount of container traffic and thus the amount of skilled work available to the union. This view is shared by the Vancouver Port Authority, the Vancouver Board of Trade and a number of shipping lines. From its point of view, the ILWU views the employer's claim with scepticism and is concerned that if the forecast of increased traffic predicted by the BCMEA is wrong the union will have surrendered jurisdiction over a substantial part of its present work with little hope of winning it back.

I think it would be worthwhile at this point to briefly review the situation pertaining to the container clause since its inclusion in the collective agreement in 1970. While the clause was negotiated into the collective agreement with the expectation that it would maximize work opportunities for longshoremen, it has actually proven to have had the reverse effect. With the advent of the container handling clause in the collective agreement, shippers began to move their containers through Seattle and other west coast ports and then truck them to Vancouver to avoid the effect of the clause. While the amount of container traffic to the Port of Vancouver has increased marginally over the past decade, it has lagged considerably behind the increase in the amount of Canadian container cargo handled via the ports of Seattle and Tacoma. Reliable sources have estimated that as many as 80,000 containers shipped through American west coast ports each year are destined for Canada.

The container clause has been the subject of a number of reports and studies by various interest groups. In 1982, a committee of two, one representing the BCMEA and the other representing the ILWU, was appointed to make recommendations concerning the container clause. The report of that committee, co-authored by the current ILWU Canadian Area President, Mr. Don Garcia, recommended a one-year moratorium on the container clause with a monitoring of the related effects on container traffic through the Port of Vancouver and employment opportunities for longshoremen in the Port of Vancouver. That recommendation was subsequently rejected by the ILWU caucus.

During 1985 a larger committee was appointed by the parties to review the container handling issue and attempt to measure the amount of container work being done by longshoremen. Meetings were held from time to time from March to October of 1985 and options regarding the form of employment safeguards which would be required to replace the current provisions were explored.

In his recommendations for resolving the current labour dispute between the parties Mr. Larson recommended that the container clause be eliminated, on the condition that the BCMEA guarantee that the number of hours available to be worked on the containers in any year be fixed at 725,000. In the event that the hours fall below that number, the BCMEA would be required to pay any shortfall at straight time rates to trustees for the benefit of active members of the ILWU to compensate for actual work opportunities lost. The Commissioner also suggested that the guarantee should continue indefinitely until the employer is able to convince the union that there is no longer a need for it.

In other areas, the Commissioner has recommended the extension of the mechanization and modernization supplementary pension agreement to all union members without restriction as to when they joined the union, an increase in the employer contribution to the welfare plan, and increased flexibility in the deployment of dock gantry crane drivers as part of the regular workforce. Commissioner Larson recommended against the employer's demand for a comprehensive new system for bulk terminal operations and instead proposed a revision of work rules to allow for holding over a crew to the next shift to complete unloading procedures at overtime rates.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Bill before Hon. Members today, namely the Maintenance of ports operations Act, 1986, orders the immediate resumption of longshoring and related operations in the West Coast ports. The longshoremen will return to work under the terms set forth in the report of the conciliation commissioner, Dalton L. Larson, with the sole exception of matters related to container handling.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill provides that, if the parties to the collective agreement are unable to agree on the interpretation or incorporation of any of the conciliation commissioner's recommendations regarding the collective agreement, a referee may be appointed to interpret the amendment for the purpose of incorporating it in the agreement and/or to determine the manner in which the amendment should be expressed in contractual language. Because of the critical importance of the container clause to both parties, an industrial inquiry commission will be appointed to make a final and binding determination after conducting a comprehensive investigation of the issue.

[English]

As I indicated earlier, I take no pleasure in bringing this Bill before the House today. However, one need only look at the dismal record of labour relations between the BCMEA and the ILWU over the last 16 years to realize that the parties themselves must shoulder the bulk of the responsibility for the situation in which we find ourselves today.

The record speaks for itself. With the exception of two one-year agreements signed during the period of the anti-inflation program in the mid 1970s, and one round of bargaining which saw wage re-opener negotiations for 1984 result in an extension to the contract through 1985, the parties have engaged in work-stoppage action in every round of collective bargaining since 1970. On three previous occasions, legislation has been required to end work stoppages.

No collective agreement imposed by a third party will ever effectively substitute for a collective agreement which has been negotiated by the parties themselves. However, in this case, I feel that the report of conciliation Commissioner Dalton Larson strikes a reasonable compromise in the dispute between the BCMEA and the ILWU, and for this reason his recommendations will form the basis of the new collective agreement between the parties.

Nonetheless, in recognition of the fact that the container clause has been a matter of contention for at least a dozen years, we are prepared to undertake a comprehensive study of the container issue analysing every aspect of the problem including the effects on the competitive position of the ports. Within a short time, I will appoint an industrial inquiry commission to conduct a comprehensive investigation of the container issue, and its findings will constitute a binding resolution of the matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, failure of the parties to agree is no reason by itself for intervention by Government or Parliament in a labour dispute.

If we were faced with an industrial activity for which there were reasonable alternatives, or in which the parties only inflicted harm on one another, the obvious course would be to let the work stoppage continue until they decided to come to their senses.

However, that is not the nature of the industry in the present case. The West Coast ports are crucial to the economy of this country. Their importance to the ability of Western Canada's grain producers to get their crops to domestic and world markets is unquestionable.

[English]

A protracted work stoppage on the West Coast which further damages Canada's international reputation as a reliable exporter cannot be tolerated.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cadieux: A final resolution of the container issue is imperative. The provisions of the Maintenance of Ports Operations Act, 1986 address these two key issues.

In conclusion, let me summarize. This dispute has dragged on too long and the work stoppage is causing far too much harm to other sectors of the economy. The parties refuse to resolve their differences. Parliament, therefore, is required to act and to fulfil the responsibilities which the parties have abdicated.

The recent Speech from the Throne dealt with the need for a more caring society. It is not just Government that has to care. In this case, the parties have cared little for the impact that their differences are having on significant segments of society. The personal regret I feel over the events which have led to the requirement for parliamentary intervention, regret which I know is shared by many Hon. Members, does not weaken my resolve to protect the public interest from the intransigence of the parties to a private dispute. I therefore urge Hon. Members to give speedy passage to the Maintenance of Ports Operations Act, 1986.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I thank you and I thank the Minister for giving us such a complete rendition of the reasons for this Bill, considering his late-night flights to and from the West Coast. As our House Leader said earlier this afternoon, we are in favour of this Bill. We recognize its necessity, particularly because of the circumstances faced by western farmers who are continuing to fight for international markets and who need the sense of security provided by customers around the world. There must be no hinderance or any form of delay or impediment to the marketing of those products.

I want to emphasize that our approval of the Bill is limited to this specific circumstance. I would not want it to be construed by anyone that we are in any way adopting or accepting the principle that Parliament should be called into session each time the collective bargaining process breaks down or whenever there is a sudden emergency. We feel that one of the great mainstays of our economy has been the collective bargaining procedure. I mention that only because if one were to study the history of the position taken by successive representives of the Progressive Conservative Party on this question, one would find that there tends to be an overweening and sometimes overbearing demand or insistence on some kind of third-party tribunal that will in all circumstances arbitrate or judge upon labour-management conflicts in which there is a service component.

I bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the position taken by the Conservative spokesperson during the debate on the West Coast Ports Operations, 1982 Act. At that time the Hon. Member for Rosedale was making the case on behalf of his Party. In order to come to grips with the solution at the time of the stoppage of work on the West Coast in 1982, he was critical of the then Government of the day for not having a full-time tribunal.

If I may be somewhat bolder, Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the debate in 1978 on the Shipping Continuation Act. At that time you, Sir, were a spokesperson for the Conservative Party on such matters and you said that a permanent mechanism such as an essential services disputes commission should be put forward as a way of coming to grips with these issues.

I could repeat several other of your statements, Mr. Speaker, but I am sure that you know them better than I, and there is no point in taking up the time of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I am quite sure that the Hon. Member can repeat many of my assertions. I wish to assure the Hon. Member, and all other Hon. Members, that even if he does, I will not be tempted to rise in debate.

Mr. Axworthy: You have relieved my anxiety greatly on that point.

I am simply pointing out by reviewing the historical record that there has been a consistent pattern, a presentation on the part of members of the Conservative Party that they wish to see a form of permanent council or tribunal established which would take away the adjudication of these disputes from the collective bargaining process.

I wish to make it clear that we do not see our support of the Minister's Bill in any way endorsing or adopting that philosophy. We see it as a very specific circumstance caused by extremely difficult problems faced by western producers that a work stoppage would aggravate to an unacceptable degree. Therefore, we recognize the necessity of Parliament to act at this point in time. However, I take some issue with certain parts of the Bill. There will be further opportunity when we get to committee to move amendments in this area.

As a second part of the Bill, the Minister has included the implementation of an inquiry under Section 7(2) of the industrial inquiries legislation to look specifically at the container clause. We know that this has been a matter of long standing. The Minister himself said that attempts have been made to find a resolution of this issue for some 16 years. We recognize that it is part of that much larger continuing set of problems and difficulties in labour-management relations. When conditions of work change and new technology or new equipment is introduced, obviously fears of job security are raised, and working people are faced with major problems in coming to grips with these issues. We recognize full well that we cannot stand in the way of change, if we are going to be a competitive society and maintain our productivity and our ability to assure international markets.

The world of port development is one which is highly competitive. I can recall, from my experience as a former Minister of Transport, how important it was to be constantly upgrading and modernizing our approach to port development, because there was so much other competition in both the eastern and western seaboards.

I am afraid that in some ways the net has been cast too small. By concentrating exclusively on the question of the container clause, it tends to put in the background a number of other equally crucial matters relating to the productivity and the competitiveness of the Vancouver port. There could be a built-in bias to the way in which this industrial inquiry has been tailored against the labour side of the equation. We know that labour itself feels that the removal of the container protection clause would cause a major job loss.

I am sure the Minister has the various presentations and proposals in which it is argued quite strenuously that there are a number of other significant factors related to the port that also have to do with efficiency, productivity, and competition. But these are not specifically under the purview of the inquiry. I recognize that the Commissioner may consider them. But when it comes to the recommendations, the recommendation will be for the container clause. It may not be recommendations related to job security, or recommendations related to improvements in the port facilities, or recommendations related to substantial improvement that is required in the railway organization and administration moving into the port; it may not be recommendations related to the marketing questions. So there are a number of related matters of equal, crucial concern to the operation of the port that, as I read the Bill and listen to the Minister, tend to get excluded and pushed aside. Therefore, there might be a bias creeping in by the terms that the Commissioner is using to focus exclusively on the container clause, and not having the power or the purview to make recommendations in a much broader vein.

If the Minister is going to use this legislation as the lever to find a solution finally to the problems facing the Vancouver port, then it would have to be a broader definition than is included in the Bill. It may very well be that the proper way of doing that would be in parallel to the establishment of the inquiry commission, and to have a special ports committee working with the Vancouver port and Ports Canada that would look at the parallel concurrent problems relating to the port in terms of capital financing, improvement of marketing, job security, and the rest. If not, I would suggest quite strenuously—and I thank the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) for appearing in the Chamber to listen to these words of wisdom—that in committee it may be that the Minister will take some time to consider whether the terms as included in the Bill might be broadened in the inquiry itself.

Mr. Kelleher: I won't tell you that it is House duty.

Mr. Axworthy: He sure knows how to hurt a guy.

Whatever the case, Mr. Speaker, in order for us to give assurances to both parties to the dispute that Parliament is acting in the total interest of both parties, and in fact in the total interest of the port community and of the shipping community, we need to broaden, elaborate, and redefine the focus of the parliamentary action that is being proposed, and that action will subsequently follow.

Finally, I wish to say to the Minister that I hope that we have in front of us another case example of how the Government can no longer delay coming to grips with the fundamental issue of technology change and its effects upon labour in this country.

If I may make one small digression. Members of this Party have argued in a different context for the need to deal with the question of labour adjustment, particularly in relation to the matter of trade. We see in front of us a potential for serious dislocations occurring on a number of fronts. The actions taken by the Government in substantially reducing the employment strategies and the national trading Act and other instruments have severely reduced its capacity to respond to the technology change in the labour market. We do not have the same tools that we had two years ago to respond to those issues. The Government has retreated substantially from coming to grips with the fundamental problem that, as we go through a number of changes in our economy, too often it is workers who become the victims of those changes. For the sake of argument for productivity, competition, and greater levels of efficiency, we tend to forget that there are a number of human lives at stake, a number of jobs at stake, a number of very real issues at the individual level which must be faced.

I would say to the Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that as a relatively new Minister he has an opportunity, in fact, an obligation, to bring forward in this House a much broader plan of action, a much broader blueprint, so that not only Members of Parliament but the wider economy can see what signals are being sent by the Government as to what it intends to do about these very crucial issues.

We can no longer simply leave it to management and labour. If we as a Parliament in this case are being drawn in to provide a solution to the problem, it would seem that we have an equal obligation and responsibility to begin giving a broader set of guidelines and blueprints on how we want to come to grips with the issue and how we can assist along the way.

We would support the Bill primarily and fundamentally because of the situation faced by western farmers. We are prepared to work with dispatch. However, when the matter goes to committee, we hope the Minister will have had time to take under advisement some of our recommendations at second reading. We could discuss some of the particulars at that time and perhaps even improve upon the initiative which the Minister has taken.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, like the Minister and the spokesman for the Liberal Party, none of us in the New Democratic Party take any pleasure in dealing with legislation which inserts a third party into settling a disagreement between two parties who should be bargaining collectively and reaching an agreement.

In principle, my Party is philosophically opposed to this type of thing. However, in reality, all parties including mine at the provincial level have resorted to legislative intervention on more than one occasion in a dispute which severely affected the provincial or national larger public interest. We in the New Democratic Party pride ourselves on being in the forefront of support for the right to belong to a union, the right to organize, the right to free collective bargaining, and the right to strike when that breaks down. That is part of the history and foundation of the New Democratic Party. I might also add that it was part of the history and foundation of our forerunners, namely, the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation. That Federation was comprised of farm organizations, the trade union movement, the academic community, and people from other walks of life. However, these three were the main founders. I might add to it the religious community, thinking of J. S. Woodsworth. The reconciling of the interests of those communities was no small task. Our Party knows that as well if not better than any other Party in the country, as a result of some experiences both bad and good.

We recognize that the lock-out is severely harming not only grain producers of Alberta, the Peace River country, and the western half of Saskatchewan, but also potash production and sulphur and lumber exports. I take issue with the Minister and many others who seem to forget that this is not a strike. The International Longshoremen's Union has repeatedly said publicly, privately, in writing and verbally, that it would keep working. This is not a strike; this is an employer lock-out. A consortium of companies has chosen to stop the operations in the Port of Vancouver, just as it did a few months ago at Thunder Bay.

However, whether it is the media, comments in the House or in other places, they are always put in the context of a work stoppage, in the context of labour unions, and in the context of strikes. I have been here along with Your Honour since 1968. There are only 11 of us left out of 96, which tells us something about the mortality rate around here. I have been through this type of thing six or eight times, in terms of back to work legislation involving longshoremen on at least one previous occasion, air traffic controllers, the Post Office, St. Lawrence Seaway pilots, railroaders, and grain handlers twice. Yet this is the first and only experience since 1968 where it is government and parliamentary intervention to make employers unlock the doors of their premises.

Possibly this would cause my colleagues on the government side and in the Official Opposition to say that this legislation should make members of the NDP jubilant and that we would rush to support it because it is against the employers, the bosses.

I must confess that initially that was my reaction, that for a change the real culprit was to get it in the neck. Initially, I suppose as a committed democratic socialist, those were my thoughts about the Bill. However, when I looked with some measure of responsibility at its over-all effects and whatnot, I was not in such a rush—and I do not think my colleagues are—to support the legislation even though it would end an employer strike.

There are some serious ramifications in the legislation, both omissions and commissions, affecting the workforce. I am not only referring to longshoremen, but there are some serious ramifications for workers in other fields, particularly in ports and generally in transportation. We cannot ignore that, as much as I relish the idea of kicking the B.C. employers' associations in the backside.

The Minister mentioned what happened at Thunder Bay, and quite properly so. I want to remind the House that the grain handlers union in that instance knew very well, as all unions do, that you need to have not only a majority of support of your own membership but you must have some measure of public support, or at least sympathy, for your case in order to help you win it. The grain handlers union knew that if it shut down the entire Port of Thunder Bay it would lose whatever public support or sympathy available to it, particularly from northern Ontario west. The union, after 18 months without a contract—you could hardly say they were not patient—struck the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. Before, during and since the debate to get rid of the statutory Crowsnest pass grain rates, all of the grain companies have talked to us about the beauties and blessings of competition, that you need to have competition. The co-operative grain companies said that, the private grain companies said that, so did the wheat pools, the UGG and so on. All have maintained that you need to have competition.

One would have thought that when the grain handlers struck the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool terminal in Thunder Bay, the other grain companies would say: "Oh, goody, goody. Now we get a chance competitively and because of this stupidity to get some of their business away from them." That did not happen. Competition went out of the window. All of the other grain companies locked the doors of their terminals and locked out the grain handlers. In other words, the other employers, and I think of the UGG, the Manitoba Pool, Pioneer Grain and Otto Lang, the Cargill Grain Company, said: "We are not going to allow our members and owners—in the case of the co-operative elevator companies—and we are not going to allow our customers—in the case of the private grain companies—to deliver any grain". So the entire Port of Thunder Bay ground to a halt. I hope that members and shareholders of the United Grain Growers, the Manitoba Wheat Pool and the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool during the course of the next few weeks will ask some very searching and probably embarrassing questions of their management and boards of directors. I do not know how they can get at the private companies. I do not think they can, but at least they can bawl them out and perhaps quit delivering grain to them once in a while. I might say that, in spite of alarmist press reports I have yet to see any evidence of any specific grain sale loss.

Mr. St. Germain: Good.

Mr. Benjamin: In fact, as has occurred in other years, you end up in a catch-up situation and all our contracts will be met. We have not lost any sales, but we may have lost some revenue from sales over the period of that strike. It will, however, all be regained. The problem is that, as a result of the war with the United States and the European Economic Community, there will be a revenue loss, but not a loss in the volume of grain sales. In fact, there will probably be an increase in the volume of grain movement through Thunder Bay.

The next thing we know is that we have a mess at Vancouver. In many respects that port has been in a mess in many ways for many years. There is nothing new about it. Not only the longshoremen's but several other unions have been pleading and begging the City of Vancouver, the Vancouver Port Authority and the federal Government to do a whole number of things to make that port bigger, better and more competitive, and to increase business and increase employment, all of which pleading has been ignored on the grounds of restraint, budget deficits and plain mismanagement from Vancouver to Ottawa. When an impasse is reached between the longshoremen and the Maritime Employers Association, the centrepiece of the impasse and disagreement will be the container clause. That is the one on which neither side cannot, will not and have not for yea these many years reached agreement. All other items get shunted off to the side even though they have been negotiated, agreement reached on a few with disagreement on others. Obviously they could arrive at a contract settlement, I suspect, within 48 hours if that darn container clause 2605 were not in the piece.

I have a personal feeling, and I do not know if it is held by others in my caucus or anywhere else, that both sides want us to settle that issue for them, even though both sides ain't going to like it. Since they cannot and will not reach agreement, I appreciate that the Minister really has not a heck of a lot of choice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: The Minister has to settle. We have to settle the issue for them. Warning was served on both sides to settle or Parliament will do it for them. This causes me to suspect that both sides decided not to settle because they knew they would never reach agreement for another 100 years. Having said that, the Minister includes in his legislation a whole lot of other items on which if they do not reach agreement either he, his Commissioner or his referee will settle. I know he gives them until the end of 1988, a period of two years. But it is not free collective bargaining when a gun is pointed at your head and you hear: "You guys reach agreement on every clause, everything in the Larson Report except the container clause or my referee will do it for you". Why should either party bother sitting down to negotiate all these other things when each one of them knows that all it has to do is to continue to disagree and the Minister will see to it that the issue is settled for them? I would think that the Minister should put in his Bill that this gun will not apply until after December 31, 1988 and only in those areas on which disagreement remains.

As a long-time member of the co-operative and credit union movement and a supporter, having been on boards of directors, credit committees and whatnot for many years, I regret having to say this but I always think that good friends if they cannot talk frankly to one another are not very good friends. I want to say frankly, as I have said to my friends in the wheat pool, what I think they did wrong in the case of the lock-out in Vancouver. The issue is the container clause.

I do not know of any potash or sulphur that gets shipped in containers. I have never heard of it. Maybe the odd time someone fills a container with it, but I would be damned surprised. I do not know of any logs or dimension lumber that goes into containers. I have never heard of it. I am told that some specialty manufactured and processed lumber products in small quantities have been loaded in containers. They might possibly number a few hundred out of tens of thousands a year. I do not know of any grain which is put in containers. I understand that, say, a 500-bushel lot of specialized crop seed can be put in a container. That might happen a few dozen times out of tens of thousands of container movements in the course of a year. Therefore, I fail to understand why the grain companies, the potash companies, the sulphur companies and the lumber companies were party to shutting down the entire Port of Vancouver. Each of those four groups handling heavy bulk commodities should have said, and can still say, for now and for the future, that they are not going to be party to the collective agreement regarding containers; they are not bound by the employers' association when it comes to a lock-out over containers.

What happened? Here are the grain producers of Alberta, the Peace River country of British Columbia, and the western half of Saskatchewan, members and shareholders of the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and the United Grain Growers, who have been told by their management and board of directors that they cannot deliver grain to their own terminals. Yet the dispute has absolutely nothing to do with the handling of grain. The same thing applies to the shipment of potash, sulphur, lumber and logs.

Another thing is that out of roughly 3,500 longshoremen, some full-time, part-time or casual, only about 100, as I understand it, are involved with ships handling grain, potash and sulphur. You need only about three or four men for about 12, 18 or maybe 24 hours in order to handle a grain ship. The overwhelming majority of longshoremen are involved in what is called general merchandise shipping. Whether it be a freighter with a hold full of cars and trucks, containers, or bags of potato chips, it is general cargo which requires many more longshoremen. It has not been the longshoremen in Vancouver or Prince Rupert, or the grain handlers in Thunder Bay, who prevented western grain producers from shipping their grain. In Vancouver it was the companies who are owned and supposedly controlled by the producers who locked out those producers, not just the longshoremen. That needs to be said, and I hope the producers ask questions of the management and boards of directors of the companies which they have spent their lives building and which they own.

As well, I wish that the Minister and everyone else in this House, if nowhere else in the country, would stop calling it a work stoppage because that is not what it is. I repeat, it is not a work stoppage.

I want to say to the Minister that he and the referees he appoints had best take into account the concerns of the longshoremen on at least two or three items in the Larson Report. One of them, of course, is pensions. All Members of this House are aware of the volume of correspondence we get on pensions. Some of my colleagues and I have spent months and months on the CNR pension plan. There are several hundred plans which should be dealt with. This is not a matter of employment, this is a matter of how well you survive upon retirement because then you have no union to fight for you. You have no employer to be magnanimous. You are on your own. Therefore, anything dealing with their pensions will be fought for to the death. Indeed, I hope not, but maybe even to the point of disobeying the law.

Mr. St. Germain: Oh, now, now.

Mr. Benjamin: I said I hope not. I will try to help persuade people not to break the law, but you can only drive people so far. That has been proven so many, many times in our country's history, as well as that of many other countries. If pushed too far, people will rebel, even if it means breaking the law. Therefore, I urge the Minister to make sure he is a close adviser to the referee he appoints in order to avoid a lot more serious trouble further down the road.

The Larson Report also includes a provision for a 12-hour day. Here we are in Parliament and in Government frantically trying to get more jobs created and reduce unemployment, and this report recommends a 12-hour day in certain circumstances. That is incredible. It comes right out of the 1890s, right up to the 1920s. Therefore, I suggest to the Minister that, again, he had better closely advise his referee on that issue.

I hope the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary, or some other member of the Government, will have second thoughts and want to make some changes to the legislation. There is one thing in the Bill, for example, which is very unfair, one-sided and biased. It is a clause which will likely never have to be used, but since we are talking about the principle of the Bill, this clause is a terrible principle. I refer to Clause 13(2) under Offences. It provides for a daily fine for officers and representatives of the union, and officers and representatives of the company. It refers to the employers' association, but I am not sure if it means the individual members of the employers' association. I ask the Minister to look at that question. As he knows, there is a list in the schedule of 30 or 40 employers who are members of that association. Can one of them, on their own, abrogate or disobey the provisions of this Act? Are they covered as an individual employer or an officer or representative of the individual company? Are they covered, or is it only the officer or representative of the entire employers' association?

Under Clause 13(2) there is provision that

> No officer or representative of a union who is convicted of an offence under this Act that was committed while the officer or representative was acting in that capacity shall be employed in any capacity by, or act as an officer or representative of, the union at any time during the five years immediately after the date of the conviction.

What about the company officers? Will the Minister move an amendment that no officer or representative acting on behalf of the Maritime Employers' Association, or any member company thereof, who is convicted may serve in that capacity as an officer, member of the board of directors or representative of that company for the five years after this Act comes into force?

When Parliament has to intervene, however reluctantly, in this kind of situation, it must not only be seen to be but must actually be even-handed. What is sauce for that particular goose is also sauce for that gander. It would only take the Minister a few minutes to add a paragraph to that clause which covers officers, representatives, directors, et cetera, of all the companies which are members of the British Columbia Maritime Employers' Association as well as the association itself.

There is a lesson the Government should learn from this experience. The previous Government did not learn it, or if it did it did nothing about it. There is a requirement for a total look at the operation of our ports on the West Coast. I know the Minister will want his commission of inquiry to study other aspects of the Port of Vancouver and other ports on the West Coast. It should study their competitiveness, how well they are equipped, et cetera. The International Longshoremen's Union has done a thorough analysis, particularly of the Port of Vancouver and other Fraser River ports, of their competitiveness, capacity and ability to compete and attract business. They have studied Tacoma and Seattle as well.

There is a lot of what I would call "chamber of commerce hype" being peddled about saying that if we got rid of the container clause Vancouver could handle 80,000 more containers a year. To put it politely, that is hogwash. In 1986, the Port of Vancouver handled 66,000 inbound containers and 83,000 outbound containers. All year long ships have to wait for a crane in order to load or unload containers. We require at least three more cranes at two of the terminals in order to handle the containers we are now getting. If we were to achieve this nirvana of a no-container clause and 80,000 more containers were to arrive at Vancouver during the next year, I do not know how they would be handled, unless the maritime employers are going to carry them on their backs. There is no way. They need acres and acres more for storage space container traffic, general merchandise and bulk commodities; potash and sulfur in particular. We need at least three large capacity cranes now and three more over the next two or three years. We need that with or without a container clause in the collective agreement.

To lay the blame for the difficulties of the Port of Vancouver on the container clause and the longshoremen is not only misleading, but misrepresenting the requirements of and the situation in Vancouver. There is a perfectly good reason why Seattle and Tacoma are doing so well. It is not just a container clause. It is their new and modern facilities. We are wringing our hands about being competitive and saying that it is all the fault of the container clause. That is really stretching it, Mr. Speaker.

We will not be able to handle any increased traffic in the Port of Vancouver without a massive investment in enlarged and modernized facilities, automated equipment, etc. The union recognizes that because it means job security for them and more jobs eventually as well as the welfare and good order of their employees, the Port of Vancouver, the whole Province of British Columbia and the entire country.

I have research here to which we must pay attention. I believe it will be circulated to all Members. I hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and others will proceed to kick the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) around and get some activity on the things which need to be done in order to keep the West Coast ports competitive and able to attract and properly and efficiently handle increased traffic. Although containers are being held up as causing all the problems, that is not the case.

In fact, of 176,000 containers handled in 1985, 16.5 per cent of those inbound were subject to unpacking. Two point seven per cent of the outbound containers were subject to packing. In 1986, 12.6 per cent of 66,000 containers were subject to mandatory unpacking under the collective agreement. Of 83,000 outbound containers, 2.1 per cent were subject to mandatory packing. It is not true that the container clause is the major impediment to increased capacity and handling for container traffic. The best one can say for anyone who claims that is that they are badly misinformed. Let us not get ourselves distracted from the real issues, about how we make our West Coast ports better.

In conclusion, we want time to think about this tonight. We may or may not have some amendments, and I say to the Minister honestly that we hope he will have some forethought and accept some amendments which we may be contemplating. I assure him that we will notify him and the Official Opposition of any amendments we may have so that we may consult, reach an agreement on what is acceptable and deal with the Bill very quickly. The interests of the New Democratic Party are like those of all other Members of the House. We want to get the best possible and most acceptable legislation, even though it is legislation that none of us want to impose.

I believe we will have legislation by six o'clock tomorrow that may not make everyone happy, but as the Minister warned the employers and employees, if they force Parliament to do it there will be measures that neither one will like. That is exactly what is happening, and I close by asking Members to keep in mind that this is not a strike or a work stoppage, and that we are here to pass the best possible legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member on a point of order, I must make this announcement.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE RAISED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—Environmental Affairs—Use of low sulphur coal; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)—Regional Development—(a) Future of Winnipeg rail shops (b) Aerospace industry inquiry; the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi)—Immigration—(a) Awarding of ministerial special entry permit (b) Request that Minister revoke decision.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux that Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) may have unintentionally misled the House in two portions of his speech. I believe it is inadvertent, but when he spoke in terms of parties arriving at an agreement, he went on clause by clause—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order.

Mr. Cook: It is a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, it is a point of debate. I see that the Hon. Member is on the list. I am sure he can bring that to the attention of the House. Debate.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) referred Hon. Members to the fact that the West Coast dock dispute has brought about an unfortunate situation in the West Coast ports in that today they are not in operation. I submit that this has to be acknowledged by all Members of the House as being a primary consideration in giving quick passage to the Bill before us, Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations.

The dispute between the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association and the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union represents a serious source of harm to a large number of people not directly involved in the dispute, and especially to Canada's grain farmers located in the prairie region. It is for that very reason that everyone must have a serious regard for the difficulties this dispute could cause to innocent parties who have no say in its resolution, if it were to continue. Decisive action is required to ensure that the sectors of the economy that depend on the port, including the grain economy, are allowed to function to their fullest capability.

The ports involved in this question are in British Columbia. I am a Member from British Columbia and do not only speak as a Member from that area, but as one who grew up in southern Saskatchewan on a mixed farm in a farming community. I can relate the concerns that must be expressed and have been shown by Members from all Parties who come from the Prairies.

Canada's grain producers have faced considerable uncertainty in the past few years as the result of developments in international competition among grain exporting countries that have sought to expand their markets for their domestic grain production. Despite this intensified level of international competition, Canada's grain exports in the 1985-86 crop year increased by some 1.2 million tonnes, or approximately 5 per cent, compared to the previous crop year.

In the 1985-86 crop year, our prairie grain farmers began to rebound from the effects of a severe drought in the previous year which greatly reduced the total crop. In that same year, 1984-85, we began to see the effects of greatly expanded production in other grain-growing regions of the world, especially in the United States and the European Economic Community. This contributed to a growing world surplus which drove down international grain prices and intensified the degree of competition among major grain exporting countries.

As we all know, the degree of international competition has continued to heighten over the past year, with grain exporting countries seeking to expand their share of the world market. These are the circumstances in which Canada has to compete to market the produce of our prairie grain farmers, and these are some of the market realities we must keep in mind as we consider the necessity of the Bill before us.

The West Coast ports exported approximately 12.2 million tonnes of grain in the 1985-86 crop year. The volume of grain which passed through the ports in this period represents a significant improvement of approximately 15 per cent over the volume exported from the West Coast in the previous crop year. While the level of grain exports in 1985-86 was below the previous record for the West Coast of 12.5 million tonnes reached in 1983-84, it was only marginally lower, and this gives us an indication of the solid performance in the industry in the past year. It should also be noted that grain exports from the West Coast have more than doubled the levels of only a decade ago. This gives us an indication of the progress that has been made over the years in expanding our capacity to handle the continuing growth in grain production.

I should also mention the significant role of the new, highly automated terminal grain elevator facilities at Prince Rupert, and especially the fact that almost a quarter of the increase in West Coast grain exports in the past year has been derived from the increased throughput of the new facilities at Prince Rupert. I might also add that as a member of the Transport Committee I was privileged to see that terminal firsthand. It was built by a consortium of grain-handling companies from the Prairies, including Cargill, the United Grain Growers, Pioneer Grain, and the Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta Wheat Pools which, along with the Province of Alberta, formed a consortium and provided the ownership of that world class facility.

The significance of the West Coast ports to the ability of western Canada's grain producers to ship their crops to international markets is widely appreciated. However, it is worth reminding ourselves of the pre-eminent role Canada plays in the world's grain markets and of the fact that our total grain production gives Canada a rank of sixth place among the largest grain-producing countries in the world. This comparison takes into account the huge land masses of China, the U.S.S.R. and the United States. Wheat accounts for approximately one-half of Canada's total grain production and is our single most important grain commodity. Not all of the countries mentioned are exporters of wheat and it is in wheat exports that Canada ranks second in importance as a source of this valuable food commodity. Canada ranks second only to the United States in wheat exports, and it is this significant fact which gives an indication of the extent to which the rest of the world depends on us as a reliable supplier of this commodity which is so vital to world grain consumption. Seen in this perspective, Canada's role in the international grain trade and the actions we take to ensure its continuation must be viewed as of vital importance to the many nations that rely on us.

The 23.7 million tonnes of grain we exported last year was the product of many thousands of grain-producing farms which rely upon a complex infrastructure of trucking, rail and shipping modes which constitute the grain industry's transportation system, and a vast elevator network which performs the essential functions of storage, inspection and weighing of grain, the cleaning and treating of grain and the transfer of grain forward. Prairie grain is processed through a network of some 2,000 primary elevators licensed by the Canadian Grain Commission to receive grain for storage and forwarding. This elevator network is linked by the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific Railways to Thunder Bay and to the six terminal elevators in Vancouver and Prince Rupert, British Columbia.

The terminal elevators on the West Coast have a combined licensed capacity of approximately 1.1 million tonnes of grain. Of the 23.7 million tonnes of grain Canada exported in the 1985-86 crop year, 12.2 million tonnes, or approximately one-half of total grain exports, were cleared through the West Coast terminal elevators where the grain is weighed, cleaned and stored before being loaded into ships docked next to the elevators. The longshoremen have the important task of directing the huge spouts through which the grain flows to the appropriate hold in the ship, and of trimming or levelling the grain as it enters the ship. The longshoremen are dispatched by the B.C. maritime employers to the docks to perform this essential function as the final and critical step in the transfer of grain before ships embark for their specific destinations, the largest of which are the U.S.S.R., China and Japan. Other important markets served through the Pacific Coast are South Korea, Egypt, Taiwan, Peru, Brazil, Venezuela and Colombia.

It is the abrupt halting of this critical function performed by longshoremen in Vancouver and Prince Rupert in loading grain into ships that threatens to disrupt the flow of grain. It is paramount that Parliament act expeditiously to pass this Bill and have the West Coast ports resume operations without delay. I might add that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) ably stated the fact that it is not the longshoremen who have withheld their services but that the ports have been closed down. So not just has the handling of grain been affected but the whole operation of the ports of British Columbia has been affected.

The Minister of Labour has provided Members of the House with a detailed perspective on the issues and on the opportunities the parties have had to resolve their differences in this dispute through direct bargaining through the conciliation officer, the Conciliation Commissioner and mediation assistance. The Minister has also pointed out the record of collective bargaining disputes in the West Coast longshoring industry and the fact that since 1970 legislation has been required to terminate work stoppages on the docks on three previous occasions. That is not a very good record for us to look back upon. Consequently, it has required the intervention of the Minister today.

If there were some reasonable grounds for optimism in the belief that the parties could resolve this dispute without inflicting harm on those who depend on the ports for their livelihood, I am sure we would be dealing with other pressing matters of the House at this very moment. However, the delivery of grain to our customers in other nations is essential to the well-being of our grain producers and to all components of our grain transportation system.

It is unfortunate that the net cast by the parties to this dispute is so widespread as to include grain-loading operations in B.C. ports. Hon. Members will recall the earlier remarks of the Minister of Labour in which he indicated the critical difficulty in the dispute between the B.C. maritime employers and the longshoremen as being the resolution of the container clause. That clause concerns the packing and unpacking of containerized cargo.

The transference of grain to ships at docks is conducted in bulk by a conveyer spout from the grain elevators and certainly bears no resemblance to container cargo, as we have heard before. Yet a primary issue in dispute has precipitated a course of action by the parties which reflects a disregard for the importance to the local and prairie economies of an interrupted flow of export grain. Nevertheless, all Members of the House should recognize the candid assessment given by the Minister of Labour on the container issue, which has been in contention for some years, and the fact that it warrants the special attention of an industrial inquiry commission. The difficulty the parties have had in resolving the complexity of this issue warrants a full opportunity to present their points of view to a skilled commission.

I might add that in the creation of this Bill there was certainly no limitation on how the parties can enter into drawing a conclusion to the situation. The provision is there, but the Minister has placed some time limits on when he expects them to come to an agreement. If that is not possible then a referee will be put in place to arrive at a solution.

The Minister has given serious consideration to the resolution of this dispute and has chosen a course of action which is fair to both parties. Passage of the Bill before us must be viewed by all parties as being fair to all sectors affected by the dispute. Hon. Members of the House should be aware of the Government's commitment to the role of collective bargaining and its adherence to the belief that the constructive settlement of disputes through meaningful negotiations can take us further as a society in pursuit of the common well-being.

Part V of the Canada Labour Code places the prime responsibility for the resolution of labour-management disputes on the parties to collective bargaining and provides them with third-party conciliation assistance to aid them in difficult circumstances in the resolution of their differences through the bargaining process. In rare instances, as is the present case, the Government must intervene to prevent the parties to the dispute from inflicting irreparable damage to the public interest and to the economy.

I have given Members of the House some of my reflections on the more salient dimensions of the grain export industry, particularly as it relates to our export markets and the prairie economy. The measures contained in the Bill are intended to accomplish an immediate resumption of port operations, which is of vital importance to the people affected by the disruption of the port. The Bill will also impose the terms of the report of Conciliation Commissioner Dalton Larson, which is a reasonable and fair compromise on the issue in dispute and allow for a comprehensive study of the sensitive container clause.

I urge Members of the House to support the Bill and to work toward its passage without delay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the Hon. Member's views with respect to Clause 13(2) which provides that punitive actions can be taken against union officers and representatives of the union. They can be denied the right to be employed by the union for five years following any conviction under the punitive section. Does the Hon. Member agree that this subclause should be removed? Does he think that the same type of punitive measures should be taken against company officials and company officers or their affiliates in similar situations?

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, if one reviews the history of the operation of the ports in British Columbia and looks at the various times there have been disputes caused by both sides of the issue, I think the Hon. Member will agree that there has to be some teeth in this legislation. I appreciate the Hon. Member asking whether or not both sides should be part of this situation. I think that there should be something provided for both sides. I would support such an addition to the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-24

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Subsequent to earlier discussions with regard to the process for the expeditious passage of Bill C-24, there were discussions with the representatives of the two opposition Parties, and those discussions have concluded. I think, Mr. Speaker, you would find that there would be unanimous consent to adopting the following proposal:

That the business to be considered between 5.00 o'clock p.m. and 6.00 o'clock p.m., this day, shall be the continuation of consideration of Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenanace of ports operation;

That on Tuesday, November 18, 1986, when Government Orders have been called, the Order of the Day shall be consideration of Bill C-24;

That, not later than 4.45 o'clock p.m. on that day, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the House, and shall put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, all questions necessary to dispose of all of the remaining stages of Bill C-24;

Maintenance of Ports Operations Act, 1986

Private Members' Business originally scheduled for Monday, November 17, 1986, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Davenport, shall be considered on Tuesday, November 18, 1986, between the hours of 5.00 o'clock p.m. and 6.00 o'clock p.m.

That upon the completion of the adjournment proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 66, on Tuesday, November 18, 1986, Mr. Speaker shall suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair, for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to Bill C-24; and,

That, upon the giving of Royal Assent to the Bill, Mr. Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. As the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) indicated, we are in agreement with the order. I would only raise one caution and that is that during the course of second reading debate thus far, several proposals for possible amendments to the Bill have come forward. I am not sure if the Minister is disposed to this or not, but members of the Opposition have been putting them forward in the spirit of genuinely wishing to improve the Bill.

I just hope that the House Leader will keep in mind when establishing the time allocation that there may be possibilities for amendments to be accepted along the way. I hope we do not end up with a very short time available to us to consider what might be useful amendments to the Bill before it passes at 4.45 p.m. I simply raise that as a matter that ought to be taken into account when allocating time among House Leaders.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, of course, I confirm that we agree with the order and there is certainly consent in this corner of the House to it. I would like to support the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) that we informally ensure that we allocate enough time to agree on amendments if there are some on which we can agree.

We heard an example a few moments ago of a member of the government Party suggesting an amendment, one which we on this side of the House would support. There may be several amendments to that effect, and if we had some kind of informal agreement that we would have a lot of time to do that later on, I am sure we would all benefit from it.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to look at any suggestion to amend the Bill if it is to improve the Bill. There is no problem with that. I note that the Member from the NDP has already indicated that we would be given amendments in advance so that we would have time to look at them. If by tomorrow morning we have all the proposed amendments from both Parties, I would be more than willing to look at them and to allow time in order to dispose of them.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Further to what the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) has just said, I hope as well that should he feel there are some amendments to be made, he would provide us with copies in advance so that we may discuss them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Very well. Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Mazankowski) agreed to.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, on a further point of order, I seek the co-operation and consent of the House for another matter, if I may. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) made a very important statement in the House this morning. There have been some developments in regard to that and he would like to make a further report on it. He has contacted the critics of the two opposition Parties. I understand that the representative of the New Democratic Party is here but the representative of the Liberal Party may not be here. Perhaps the Minister could wait until the critic arrives or perhaps he could proceed now. It is a very short statement simply describing a new development that has occurred. Consistent with the spirit of keeping the House up to date, he would seek your support and co-operation so that he may make that statement now.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we would like to have our critic present. I know he is on his way to the House so perhaps we could continue with debate and then proceed in another five or 10 minutes.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, on the same point, perhaps any time used by this statement and replies to it could be added on after six o'clock so that we do not lose any time to discuss the ports issue. Is that agreed?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MAINTENANCE OF PORTS OPERATIONS ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux that Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a few points to make with regard to Bill C-24. The problem that is before us today and which is occurring on the West Coast where the port is completely shut down to shipments including grain shipments from the Prairies is a very serious one. It is one that has been before the Government since January 1 when the old collective bargaining agreement ran out. Somehow or other, this time has been spent getting to the point where legislation of the lock-out by the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association is being called for.

The problem with regard to container shipments is even older than this problem. I understand that this issue has been before the parties concerned for some 16 years. In any event, the port has been shut down due to the container issue and of course all parts of the port are shut down even though container shipments make up a very small portion of the total shipments that go through the port. In fact, I believe that between seven million and eight million tonnes of general cargo have been handled at the Port of Vancouver since 1977 but only 12 per cent to 15 per cent of the total was containerized. It is a relatively small portion of the port's activity.

As illustrated today by the problems of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), the Government is governing from crisis to crisis. In fact, this particular crisis was not a crisis at all last spring, last summer or even this fall. It is now, however. The need for emergency legislation was telegraphed to us over the weekend by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux).

It is interesting that these issues are left to fester for so long by the Government. There was a strike at the Port of Thunder Bay beginning September 1. That went on until early October. The Government took no action, even though we are facing the worst crisis in history in the grain-handling industry, until early in October. When the Government did get around to appointing a mediator, Mr. William Kelly, one of the most distinguished mediators in Canada, the strike was resolved in a matter of five or six days.

If a strike like that could have been resolved in five or six days, why did the Government wait a month to do so? Of course, that is the same question we are asking today. Why did the Government wait for nine and a half months to bring this legislation before the House?

In any event, we have to deal with the situation as we see it today. The Bill provides for the legislation of a conciliator's report. The report was completed in early September by the Conciliation Commissioner, Mr. Larson. That report makes provision for a long list of outstanding issues in the negotiation including wages, deep-sea ship gangs, bulk terminals, welfare plan, pension plan, automation protection, and hours of work. It also contains the contentious report on container shipments and the handling of it. The original Conciliation Commissioner, Mr. Dalton Larson, in his report of September 3 provided for the removal of the container clause, Article 26.05, on the condition that the B.C. Maritime Employers Association guarantees that the number of hours available to be worked on containers be fixed at 725,000 hours per year. Any shortfall was to be paid at straight time rates to trustees for the benefit of active members on the basis of work opportunities lost. This guarantee is to continue indefinitely. That is the clause which was not acceptable to the parties concerned. It is proposed that it be sent to a labour conciliation inquiry under the labour legislation and authorized by this Bill.

As we look through this legislation we see a number of concerns. It is not a precedent for a conciliation report to be authorized by legislation. This in fact has been done previously, I believe in 1975 in the Montreal strike, and also again in 1968 in the western grain industrial dispute. We do have a precedent for this.

The concern with this legislation is twofold. One relates to Clause 7, the Industrial Inquiry Commission. This commission would be set up by the Minister. It is provided in Clause 7(1) that he may establish this commission. However, that is where the dispute comes in. The union believes that it will lose some 300 jobs if that container shipment clause is removed because of the provisions provided in it. The B.C. Maritime Employers Association is arguing that if that container clause is removed, some 80,000 additional containers will be handled by the Port of British Columbia. There is great uncertainty on both sides of this industrial dispute. When we get to the clause in the committee stage we will be recommending that the Government deal with the provisions in the Bill now. Under Clause 7(1) it states:

> On the coming into force of this Act, the Minister shall refer the matter of the container provision set out in article 26.05 of the collective agreement to which this Act applies and such other matters related to that provision as the Minister deems appropriate—

We will be suggesting that the Government include provisions for job security, development of the Port of Vancouver, rail facilities, and improvement of the competitive position of the port. The employers are not agreeing to take this clause out of the collective bargaining agreement, but if this legislation does that for them, then what they are concerned about is the loss of jobs. The employers' associations are saying: "Take it out. We will bring in 80,000 additional containers a year. That will create more jobs in the Port of Vancouver". But you cannot necessarily handle 80,000 more containers in the Port of Vancouver. There is the question of the efficiency and the operation of the port. There is the question of the development of business. There is the question of job security. We want to see some provision in the legislation in that regard.

In the Western Grain Transportation Act there is provision for improvements to the port and the railway facilities both by CN and by CPR in the Port of Vancouver. Yet the Government has not acted on that, even though the former Minister of Transport is now the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), of whom they are all terrified of. Still they have not acted and put in place those additional facilities. So it is not certain whether the B.C. Maritime Employers Association can actually put in place those additional jobs and handle those additional containers.

I am receiving signals, Mr. Speaker, from my House Leaders. I understand that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) now wishes to make a statement and have the other Members respond. I would agree to interrupt my speech for a few moments, so that the Minister can make his statement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Do I have unanimous consent to revert to Statements by Ministers?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL REVENUE

LOSS OF MICROFICHE RECORDS FROM TORONTO DISTRICT OFFICE—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank my colleagues for the courtesy that they have afforded me.

I wish to inform the House that at 3.30 this afternoon my colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), informed me that the RCMP had recovered a package of microfiche at or around two o'clock this afternoon. The Commissioner of the RCMP has informed me that he is satisfied that this material is indeed the missing microfiche which was removed from the offices of Revenue Canada on the evening of October 30, 1986.

The RCMP are continuing their investigation. As Members of the House understand, it would not be proper for either myself or the Solicitor General to comment further on this matter until the investigation is complete.

However, I do want to assure Members that the investigation will continue in respect of the motivation for the removal of the microfiche, whether the information it contained was put to any use whatsoever, and whether the microfiche was duplicated in whole or in part while outside the control of Revenue Canada.

While I am sure the House is as pleased as I am at this fortunate turn of events, this in no way lessens the concerns I expressed to the House a few hours ago over the lapse in security that allowed this loss to take place.

Again I wish to assure the House that the investigations which I have asked the RCMP to conduct into the security of microfiche data held by Revenue Canada, and into this particular incident specifically, will be expedited. I will report back to the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Today really is an exciting day. This morning we found out that we had lost 16 million tax filers' data had been lost or stolen. I thank the Minister for bringing the information to the attention of the House, but the fact remains that 16 million taxpayers' files were missing or stolen. Even though they have been found 17 days later, there is no guarantee that the information contained in those files or microfiche was not used or copied.

We will definitely await the result of the investigation. However, I urge the Minister to keep on top of the investigation because the integrity of the tax system, as I said earlier, is in jeopardy. We should not enjoy what has happened; it is really a sad day.

[Translation]

Our taxation system is based on the voluntary filing of returns by all Canadians, and if the confidentiality of these returns is no longer respected, obviously Canadians will start thinking twice about filing their income tax returns. I hope an inquiry will prove we can have a more secure system in the future, and that the Minister will report back to the House as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in expressing the sentiment that it has been quite a day. One comes to the office in the morning and expects to do one's normal duties, but then one is hit with the fact that 16 million names and social security numbers are missing from the Revenue Canada office in Toronto.

We can all give a sigh of relief. Canadians can go to bed tonight feeling a little more secure in that the drama has ended. The microfiches have been recovered. However, as the Minister indicated, we do not know whether improper use was made of the microfiches or whether they were copied. Hopefully we will obtain those answers in a short period of time.

The situation indicates that there was an opportunity for individuals to take the documents. There is an obvious lapse of security but, as one of my colleagues indicated, it is good to know that the RCMP always gets its microfiche.

I assure the Minister that we will co-operate in any way we can to help devise a more secure system so that the confidentiality and privacy of Canadian taxpayers will be maintained. I am sure every Hon. Member of the House will co-operate in that effort so that our tax system is a secure and fair one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, this day's sitting will be extended by six minutes. Therefore, the adjournment debate will begin at 6.06 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux that Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has seven minutes remaining in his speech, followed by 10 minutes for questions and comments.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations. Earlier I mentioned that the Government seems to be governing from crisis to crisis. The announcement this afternoon that the microfiches have finally been found after a three-hour or four-hour delay indicates that it governs from crisis to crisis. Perhaps that is why the Goldfarb poll published in early September indicated that two-thirds of the people who responded felt that the Government governed from crisis to crisis.

I should like to return to the Bill before us. I mentioned that we wanted to see the appointment of the Industrial Inquiry Commission so that it can deal not only with the question of containers but with the operation of the port itself. The British Columbia Maritime Employers Association is holding out the prospect of dozens or perhaps hundreds of jobs, whereas the employees and their union are fearing the loss of some 300 jobs. We want to see the terms of reference of the commission as well as a provision in the Act for a review by the Industrial Inquiry Commission of job security, the development of the port, rail facilities, and improvement of the port's competitive position. If those physical structures are not in place, obviously the estimate of the employers association indicating that an additional 80,000 containers per year could be handled will not come about. Naturally the employees union is very concerned about the situation.

I hope the industrial commission will comment on the lack of action by Canadian Pacific and Canadian National in terms of their responsibilities under the Act governing western rail transportation and their commitments to improve and enhance their facilities. I understand that those commitments have not been kept.

I should like to turn to subclause 13(2) which deals with punishment for offences. They seem to vary from $500 to $100,000 and include the loss of the privilege of serving in a union capacity. Surely officers in the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association should be subject to the same sanctions. If they break the law and are convicted under the Act, they should be subject to the same sanctions as union officials or executives.

I think subclause 13(2) should read as follows:

> No officer or representative of a union or of British Columbia Maritime Employers Association who is convicted of an offence under this Act that was committed while the officer or representative was acting in that capacity shall be employed in any capacity by, or act as an officer or representative of, the union or the association at any time during the five years immediately after the date of the conviction.

Without that provision, we would come down in a very uneven manner on the side of the employers association.

This is not a strike; this is a lock-out. The action is being taken by the employers association to block the shipment of grain and other commodities from a British Columbia port. The port desperately needs every ounce of economic activity it can get, now that Expo 86 is over and the realities of the lack of that activity are so apparent in British Columbia.

We want to see the piece of legislation go forward. We have agreed to the House order to conclude consideration of the legislation tomorrow. We would like to see a number of things introduced at committee stage, but for now we want to see the legislation go forward.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill C-24 with a great deal of feeling as the Hon. Member for Vancouver East wherein the port is located. We are very proud of our port. It is important to Canada. I also speak on behalf of my constituents who are both directly and indirectly affected by the legislation. By far the greatest source of employment in my riding is in port related industries and shipping.

We know that the Port of Vancouver is a major link for Canada to the Pacific Rim. Every day we see ships at that port carrying bulk goods such as grain, potash, lumber, and coal. Last year the Port of Vancouver handled over 59 million tonnes of bulk cargo, resulting in many jobs for workers in Vancouver.

In addition to bulk goods, in recent years there has been a tremendous increase in container goods—smaller goods and general merchandise which go from Canada to the Far East and Pacific Rim countries and those which come in from such countries. There has been a great increase in container traffic, but not nearly as much as there has been in ports to the south of Vancouver. Only 12.6 per cent of container traffic through the Port of Vancouver is affected by the controversial container clause. I will return to that point later.

We know that the Port of Vancouver is crucial to Canada's economy, as it is to our future trade and our future economy. It is essential not only to people on the West Coast and western farmers. It is also essential to the total nation. It is very important that we keep the port open. It is very important that we have a competitive port. It must be able to handle our goods efficiently and increase our trade with the use of modern technology.

I would like Members of the House and Canadians to know, particularly western farmers, that the problems in the Port of Vancouver go far beyond a container clause which affects only a very small fraction of the container traffic. There is enormous competition from Seattle and Tacoma to the south of us. I want to mention that these ports are very highly mechanized. The Port of Vancouver has only five cranes to handle containers, whereas Seattle has 21 and Tacoma has 10. We have only four container berths, whereas Seattle has 21 and Tacoma has 8. The growth rate to the south of us is pulling Canadian goods southward, not only goods from the Orient, because the American ports are better equipped. This is a major point of which we must be aware in this debate.

I do not think there is anybody in this House, and certainly very few Canadians, with the regrettable exception of the ship company employers on the West Coast, who want the Port of Vancouver closed down. This is a lock-out. It is a lock-out by employers who had a choice. Even if they chose to lock out the workers, they also had a choice to keep the grain from the Prairies moving at a very crucial time of the year. They have not used that choice. I am very concerned at the action taken.

We all want the Port of Vancouver to be working. We do not want it closed down. On the other hand, I am very concerned with Bill C-24 because it is not just legislation to make sure that the lock-out is removed and the Port is open and working while collective bargaining takes place. It is an arbitrary act which imposes a list of things that have been part of a contract, that are part of the Larson Report and are part of collective bargaining. I hope people will realize it is much more than just dealing with the immediate situation of getting the port working. That is why we felt it was very important. We could not possibly look at this Bill and automatically pass it without looking at the considerable ramifications contained within the Bill.

I would like to say also, speaking for my constituents, that they haved faced enormous unemployment. The shipping has closed down, the lumber industry has closed down and jobs are disappearing all around us. I can be extremely sympathetic to the legitimate concerns of longshoremen. They really have to protect the jobs, unless they are sure that there are alternative secure jobs to replace some of the existing tasks they are performing.

If the container clause is removed, they will not have that security, unless the port is improved and there are real guarantees that there will be permanent jobs to replace those on the containers. Let us face it, Mr. Speaker, containers have to be emptied. It is not as though they did not have to be emptied. I like to point out that in the United States the container clause has recently been approved by the courts. It is not an unreasonable clause at all. I am not speaking for or against the container clause per se, but I am trying to present the position so that people will understand that workers in my riding are concerned about jobs. They want to make sure that there is some alternative if that clause is to be removed.

There are much greater problems affecting the port. I just gave a couple of examples that our own Crown corporations are contributing to the competition because they have policies or want policies to ship Canadian goods through the United States.

The CNR is giving incentive rates to move Canadian goods south from Ontario through Chicago and to the Ports of Seattle and Tacoma. It is immoral and absolutely wrong that a Canadian Crown corporation should be doing that. Why should CNR not improve its service? It is a criticism of its service. CNR should be making competitive arrangements and upgrading its services here, including double-decker trains which are needed and are available in the United States to carry containers. We have a lobby also trying to change the Western Grain Transportation Act which will allow shipments of Canadian grain through U.S. ports. I cannot for the life of me see how this is in the interests of Canada. We have to make sure that that does not happen.

Bill C-24 has one provision which is to get the port working. This would have removed the lock-out. We never like this kind of legislation because it is arbitrary. Sometimes it is necessary. That part is not quite as bad as the other part. The part about which we are very concerned is that it imposes very arbitrary conditions on both parties. I am speaking for my constituents, so I will be biased. These conditions will have a serious impact on the workers. It overrules the collective bargaining process. It sets a precedent for other disputes. One cannot help but wonder whether this is the kind of tactic that the Government will use to impose settlements on other measures. My colleague has asked that if there is a safety concern, does it mean that there will be no chance of dealing with it?

The Government wanted to impose very complex legislation in one day. I hope it realizes now why it is still very important that all of us learn more about the implications and consult the various persons affected by it.

Clause 7 is a particularly bad clause. The Minister will appoint an Industrial Inquiry Commission to resolve the container clause. At first I thought maybe that was better than having it imposed by the Larson recommendations. On the other hand, one cannot help but wonder—and I hope the Minister will clarify it—who this commissioner will be. Will it be one person or several persons agreed upon by the parties concerned? How can all parties, particularly the workers in my riding, be assured that they will have an objective review? Will this person or persons be appointed in consultation with the parties concerned?

Subclause 13(2), as has been pointed out in questions already, is a most discriminatory anti-union clause. There is no question about it. It reveals the government philosophy. It states that the punitive measures can take a job away from a union officer for five years. There is no mention of taking a job away from the industry if it breaks the law. This shows again why amendments are so important.

As I say, I am speaking on behalf of my constituents. I make no apologies for that. They include more than longshoremen. They include grain workers, shore workers, warehouse workers, retail operators and their families who are very much affected by what happens in the Port of Vancouver. The longshoremen are located in my riding as are all maritime unions.

I have been in consultation with the ILWU and want to put on the record some of the concerns it is raising. I hope we will have more details on that. Its concern is that if the Larson Report is imposed, as proposed in this Bill, there will be only a 1 per cent increase in wages. The cost of living has increased by 4 per cent. There will be an increased workload. On the bulk shipments they may have to work 12-hour days, which is a very retrograde step. Pensions are very much left up in the air, and the question has been raised whether the referee would define this further.

The unions are also concerned about the container clause. The Larson recommendations were bad enough, in their view, but this leaves it wide open, and that is even worse. At least Mr. Larson advocated some job security. He says that the container clause has diverted traffic to the U.S. only to some extent. The union has offered to give up the clause if jobs are retained. There can be no doubt that the container clause constitutes a legitimate mechanism to serve and preserve bargaining unit work, not unlike clauses under other collective agreements. He also notes that if Vancouver wins new business because of the elimination of the clause, few if any of the displaced workers would get the new skilled jobs operating cranes and so on. Therefore, there are legitimate reasons for not giving up this clause unless there is some guaranteed job replacement.

The union is also concerned that the legislation takes away the right to strike for two years. There are many issues besides those here which waterfront workers will be concerned about. If safety on the job becomes an issue, for example, there is no way to protest the situation. This Bill appears to supersede the Canada Labour Code concerning the right of workers to refuse unsafe work. It is excessively punitive. Unfortunately, the container clause has been used as a scapegoat because it is really a very small symptom of a much larger problem. Even if the clause is removed, the evidence is clear that it will not make our port competitive unless a whole range of improvements are made.

I would like to refer to a backgrounder paper which was circulated to all Members today. It was prepared before the current crisis and quite apart from the issues at stake today. It is put out by the longshoremen's union. It says that Vancouver will not recover the lost business nor win new business unless the railways, the federal Government, the Vancouver Port Corporation, and the western provinces make major improvements in the transportation and goods handling systems in Vancouver and across Canada. We have spent a lot of time and money ensuring that we have the most modern state of the art facilities not only in North America but in the world, said Mic Dinsmore, Director of Marine Operations, Port of Seattle, but, "You have done none of that in Vancouver".

The report talks about inadequate port facilities. We need at least three new modern container cranes right now. The federal Government has to contribute to the capital cost involved because it is a very expensive investment. However, we must invest in this for the future or we will have no future. Why are there no more cranes? Apparently because of an incredibly slow-moving bureaucracy in Ottawa which has not made a financial commitment.

There is also concern that despite the Canada Ports Act of 1981, the Port of Vancouver has not implemented a port user committee as recommended to look at the problems and come up with solutions. It is desperately needed. There is very little port autonomy as well. A port users committee is a very critical ingredient to any changes. It would bring together business, labour and municipalities, shipping lines and railways, in short all those concerned with the port. There must be an upgrading of railways. Our railways are not competitive with the railways in the U.S. We have to invest for the future. We have to have double-decker cars to transport containers rapidly to connect with the ships at our port. Yet our own railways have not committed resources. Instead, they are giving incentives to carry Canadian goods through American ports. There must be a firm commitment from freight forwarders and shipping lines. The shipping lines are winners, whether Vancouver or the American ports are used. They should be requested to issue a clear statement of intent respecting future use of the Port of Vancouver.

I have spoken to shipping line operators. I know they would rather ship through Vancouver, but they use Seattle or Tacoma. We need to have facilities to accommodate them and get a commitment that if money is invested in the Port of Vancouver, that will be their priority shipping point.

The federal Government also has to protect shipping and make sure the policies are pro-Canadian. I referred earlier to the Western Grain Transportation Act. The grain transportation agency is apparently recommending sweeping changes to the Act, including one to allow these cargoes to be transshipped through American ports for shipment overseas. We have to bring in provincial Governments as well.

What I am trying to explain to the House and the people who may be watching is that this is a very complex problem. We need to have action on many fronts. We have to make sure we have a modern competitive port. That in turn will guarantee permanent jobs, as well as an increase in jobs in the future so our young people can get involved.

There is the option of removing the container clause. There has to be job security, as I have said over and over again, if the parties concerned are going to do that. However, there has been no guarantee to date. As was pointed out very adequately in this report, which I urge Members to read, there is no guarantee whatsoever that containers being diverted to Seattle and Tacoma will come back to Vancouver. Just removing a container clause would not guarantee that. We need to have a competitive, modern port.

I know that my time is up and I just want to say once again how very important this issue is. It is important not only for today but also for the future, not only of the West Coast, but that of Canada. I can tell you as the Member for Vancouver East that it is tremendously important to thousands of ordinary people in Vancouver and their families. They need the jobs and they have the skills to make our port very effective.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) expressed some of my own thoughts on this occasion. It is not often that we agree, but there are a number of things she said that we do agree on. However, I would ask her one specific question. Her whole speech seemed to indicate her thinking and I would like a little confirmation.

If the commissioner comes down with the rule that there will be job security for the longshoremen to the extent that it involves destuffing, would it be her opinion then that that clause be removed from the contract in order to make the Port of Vancouver at least a little more competitive? I suppose that could be answered with a yes or no, but I do not expect it.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but note that the Hon. Member, whose riding encircles the Port of Vancouver, like mine does, has not been very vocal on many of these issues. I certainly hope he is going to be the next speaker to tell his constituents what he intends to do about this situation and the Port of Vancouver generally.

The destuffing clause is going to be referred to a conciliator. It has been a part of the collective bargaining process to date. I have listed some of the pros and cons. It is not my job that is at stake, at least I do not think it is. I think it is incumbent upon a conciliator who is going to be very objective and careful and will consider the views of both sides as a result of this Bill to deal with it.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that the situation of containers and destuffing is extremely complex. She likes to tie it to job security. Is the Hon. Member aware of a move in the U.S. to build a 28 acre port facility between Blaine and Bellingham to handle only Canadian trade? If that happens, I do not see how we will save jobs in British Columbia if we do not get rid of that clause. It is my understanding that many shippers would move their freight to Vancouver if that clause were eliminated.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member aware that this clause has been in existence in the United States and was just challenged in the courts? The courts upheld the clause, which affected the longshoremen there. That should indicate something about the competitiveness.

I would like to quote as follows from the Larson Report: "There can be no doubt that the container clause constitutes a legitimate mechanism to secure and preserve bargaining unit work, not unlike provisions against contracting out or non-affiliation clauses under other collective agreements". That is an expert in the field saying that this is legitimate.

I do not speak as a union member, but my understanding is that there has been a history of the union being willing to look at this clause. If there were real guarantees of permanent jobs, perhaps there might be some changes. However, you must understand how jobs for longshoremen are dealt out in the hiring hall. A person released from this job will not be hired to man a crane. There are specific jobs for real people who are affected. I hope that answers the Member's question.

Mr. St. Germain: The Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) said there were no plans for improvement to the Port of Vancouver. Is the Member aware that there are presently bids out for cranes, which are contingent upon resolving this container clause? I do not blame either labour or management. They are both responsible for resolving this situation. However, I think members of the NDP, the socialist Party, are making innuendoes that the Government is not taking a responsible role in providing for future planning for the port. In fact, the Government is doing that.

The Member referred to a port user committee. The Vancouver Port Corporation is in place. It is planning effectively. The establishment of a port user committee would be redundant and would add to the bureaucracy and confusion. You would not be able to find the crane among the piles of paper which would be established as a result of forming another committee.

Is the Hon. Member aware that plans are under way? I would like the Hon. Member's reaction to the long-term operating agreements which have just been put into place by the Vancouver Port Corporation which awarded these long-term contracts which will give stability to the port. Did the Member know these things were taking place?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I know that there has not been a major improvement in the port since that Member's Government has been in charge in Ottawa. I know that there were two or three years of planning for a master plan which has remained on the shelf of the Vancouver Port Corporation office. The community people in my riding are extremely concerned about all that wasted effort. There have been three different port managers in the last two or three years, which must indicate something.

The Member should be studying the Bill on which we worked very hard in 1981 which said that there should be port users. Does he not realize that the Vancouver Port Corporation consists of political patronage appointees to the board by the Government? Through a port user committee we would bring the railroads, shipping companies, workers, municipalities and the grain industry from the Prairies together to study the intermodal connections of transportation. Such a committee would come up with a comprehensive plan for immediate implementation rather than a master plan for 25 years in the future. I urge the House to make this a top priority item for the agenda of the Transport Committee which is meeting tomorrow. This Member had better go to the committee meeting and speak to this.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, government Members seem to be indicating that they want to keep the port open and that the way to do that is to remove, through legislation and the process which follows, the container clause from the collective agreement. It is interesting that the Government acts so vigorously when faced with a labour dispute. Although this sort of crisis management approach to the port may keep it open, I wonder whether it is going to keep it competitive and keep business flowing through it. Is there not more to having a good, competitive port than simply fiddling around with a collective agreement?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, it is very important to remember that this is a lock-out. Over a month ago the employers chose to lock out. I commend the Minister for intervening. They were persuaded to have a 30-day cooling off period. Unfortunately, nine days before the cooling off period was over they were talking about locking out again. That was not very conducive to settling anything.

I agree with my colleague who talks about crisis management techniques. That is exactly what I was saying earlier. Positive solutions demand a careful analysis of the problem and a comprehensive approach involving a number of different levels of transportation and port users. I urge the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), the Minister of Transportation (Mr. Crosbie) and the Government in general to do what they can through the Transport Committee and the Port of Vancouver to ensure that planning is done to solve the problem. This band-aid approach is no good for anyone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on Bill C-24, the Maintenance of Ports Operations Act, 1986. We all recognize that decisive action is required given the widespread consequences of further disruptions to West Coast operations. I want to praise the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) for his concern, compassion and prompt decision and sound leadership in handling this issue.

• (1750)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Germain: Certainly the issue has been referred to as a crisis. Logically, we would not be taking this action if it was not a crisis, but would be allowing the parties to resolve the situation.

As has been pointed out by the Minister of Labour, Governments should intervene in the collective bargaining process only as a court of last resource, and only after all voluntary, mediation and conciliation efforts have proven ineffective, and only where the parties have clearly failed.

As one who has represented labour as a union president, I understand this fact better than most in the House. This type of action should only be taken as the last resort. No government can continue to allow unresolved private differences to impact on the public interest so seriously.

Part V of the Canada Labour Code which governs industrial relations at the federal level sets out a structure to regulate union-management relations which provides the parties directly concerned with every opportunity to resolve their differences with minimal government intervention. The Canada Labour Code has evolved over the years, taking into account different social and economic circumstances, always recognizing that parties directly involved are best able to resolve their differences.

In view of the fact that in some circumstances the parties may need assistance in resolving particularly difficult problems, the Code makes available the provision of conciliation and mediation mechanisms to facilitate union-management resolution of sensitive and complex issues.

Negotiations for a renewal agreement between the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association and the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union-Canadian Area began in October, 1985. There followed a series of direct negotiations between the parties themselves, and then there was a series of meetings at which conciliation assistance was provided. Following the unsuccessful efforts of the conciliation officer, the Department of Labour appointed a Conciliation Commissioner to make further effort at bringing the parties together.

The Conciliation Commissioner, Mr. Dalton Larson, conducted hearings and received briefs and finally submitted a report to the Minister of Labour, which was released to the parties in early September. At the beginning of October, the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association implemented a lock-out, which is their legal right under the Canada Labour Code. Shortly thereafter, the lock-out was ended to give further collective bargaining a chance. Toward the end of October, the Minister of Labour showed the leadership to which I referred in my opening remarks and appointed two mediators in an effort to help the parties find a solution to their differences. This effort unfortunately did not succeed and neither have admonishments by the Minister of Labour to both disputants.

In the situation before us, as can be seen, the parties have made use of extensive conciliation and mediation assistance without a successful outcome. It is in such exceptional circumstances that a Government must take action in the best interests of the general public. An extended work stoppage on the West Coast could only damage Canada's international reputation as a reliable trader. In the present circumstances, the country cannot accept any further deterioration of our standing in world markets.

Clearly, in the absence of any reasonable hope for settlement, and in the absence of any practical alternatives to the crucial role played by West Coast port operations, the Government is required to act with due dispatch in the interests of the economy. I am referring to the local port area economy, the British Columbia economy and the Canadian economy as a whole.

There are many workers whose economic position is directly related to high levels of activity in the West Coast facilities directly involved in this dispute. They include the longshoremen, the grain handlers, the railroaders, the truckers, and other associated transportation industry workers. The extent to which their income base is undermined by a prolonged work stoppage is of direct importance to the local economy, and particularly to the numerous small businesses and entrepreneurs who rely upon the consumption of goods and services generated by these workers.

The local port operations and the local community are not the only economic units inherently dependent on a smoothly functioning port system.

British Columbia is a major exporter of forest products, mineral resources, and manufactured goods, and also serves as a vital transit point for the marketing of grain, the resources and products of western Canada. British Columbia's major ports are an irreplacable link in the transportation infrastructure needed to move the vast quantities involved.

Furthermore, our port system is a major gateway for the importation of goods from major trading partners in the Pacific Rim. Our country's future depends upon the rentention and expansion of such mutually beneficial links.

The survival in the new trading environment of the late 1980s of our markets for western and central Canadian products and resources, and of our reputation as a dependable and efficient trader, is certainly at stake. We in Canada must maintain a reasonable balance of trade through an efficient, reliable and smooth functioning transportation system. Otherwise, our national economy will suffer, our standard of living and our quality of life will inevitably deteriorate and we all will be the losers.

From past disputes at the West Coast facilities, we recognize the short and long-term consequences of disruptions to port facilities. The scheduling of ships for loading and unloading at our West Coast ports is a complex and costly operation. The logistics involved in arranging crews, routes, departure and arrival times function well only in a predictable environment. Down times for ships and crews are immensely expensive, not to mention the costs associated with lost sales or unfulfilled contracts. It is costly to have those ships docking in Burrard Inlet or English Bay. Our economy cannot tolerate its continuation. Unfortunately, we have been victimized by this type of situation in the last while.

In a similar fashion, the vast and costly rail infrastructure that transports grain, bulk resources and general cargo for export involves a highly sophisticated marshalling and routing system designed to provide fast, efficient and economical transportation. It is quite apparent that unpredictability in port operations creates havoc in this system, with major cost considerations involved. Extra costs, of course, weaken our competitive position and contribute to a loss of markets. I am directly concerned with rail transportation because my new son-in-law works for the CNR. During the first round of walk-outs—as members of the NDP have correctly identified it—he was laid off because of the lack of work. He has ten years seniority in the system. Chuck Tanner and others cannot afford to be locked out by management or put on strike by labour because the economy and these individuals cannot afford it.

From the point of view of the railways, the losses associated with their disrupted operations render them less able to respond to the transportation needs of the economy.

For the year 1985, the Vancouver Port Corporation reports encouraging progress in positioning the port as a major gateway for export cargoes to the expanding markets of the Pacific Rim and for imports bound for western and central Canadian centres. In 1985, for the third consecutive year, the Port of Vancouver set new records for the number of containers handled and for the total tonnage of containerized cargo moved in and out of the port. That is a clear indication that we are managing the port well as a Government and that the people whom we have placed in those positions are doing an excellent job.

Containers handled through port facilities rose by 17.5 per cent. The total tonnage of all cargo shipped was 56.1 million tonnes, a decrease of 5.3 per cent from the 1984 record tonnage. Declines from the previous year were recorded in coal, grain, lumber and potash. Sulphur exports reached a new record level of 6.1 million tonnes and wood pulp shipments increased 7.7 per cent to 888,000 tonnes. The Prince Rupert Corporation reported that 1985 set new records for traffic growth.

Under reasonable circumstances the British Columbia economy is expected to grow this year in the 4 per cent range, one percentage point above last year's rate. Expo 86, strong consumer spending and growth in the forest products sector should play an important role. It is estimated that in 1986, the forest, manufacturing and goods producing industries will grow by 5.3 per cent, 9 per cent and 4.8 per cent respectively. Average weekly wages are expected to increase by an average of 3 per cent in 1986, and the Consumer Price Index to remain in the 3 per cent range. Employment is expected to increase by some 5.5 per cent. Concurrently, the provincial unemployment rate should decline to about 11.7 per cent from 14.2 per cent in 1985. However, this figure will remain significantly higher than the national average. Real growth in 1987 will be largely determined by the strength of the province's resource-based industries and our ability to compete in an increasingly competitive international market-place. The current strike in the forest sector, unfavourable U.S. protectionist policies, and an inadequate competitive response could dampen the province's prospects for the coming year.

Regional wage settlements reported by Labour Canada showed that the average annual increase in base rates for Ontario in 1985 was 4.9 per cent and 2 per cent for the West. The figures for British Columbia are the lowest of the four western provinces for the second quarter of 1986 at 1.8 per cent. For the same period, Ontario settlements reached 4.5 per cent. These differences reflect the varying economic environments in our country. Regional disparities have to be dealt with. This area is a clear indication of where we have to become competitive in Vancouver. The port has to become competitive, and all industries have to become more competitive. As a federal Government we have shown the initiative and the intent to deal with these regional disparities. I bring this point forward at this time because I think it is of prime importance to all Canadians, especially to British Columbians.

Uninterrupted operation of the ports and stable industrial relations are imperative for the continued movement of our western grain and resource-based products. Enterprises and producers facing an increasingly competitive world need to operate in a more predictable and efficient environment. The problem areas in the country are based upon our resource-based industries and our commodity items. We have to diversify but we cannot lose those traditional markets in these areas. The protection of existing jobs and expansion of our markets depend upon our response to present challenges.

It is vital that we all take seriously the responsibility we have to ensure that the British Columbia economy reaches its potential. New investment, expansion of our markets, increased efficiency, growth in personal income, expansion in employment opportunities and reduced unemployment are best fostered in a positive and predictable industrial relations environment.

The Bill before the House orders the resumption of longshoring and related operations in the West Coast ports. With the exception of the container handling issue, the longshoremen are to return to work under the terms contained in the report of the Conciliation Commissioner, Dalton Larson. I am confident that the proposed Industrial Inquiry Commission on the container handling issue will resolve this serious problem and provide the ports of British Columbia with the necessary stability to fulfil their key role in the province's crucial transportation infrastructure. The local economy, the province, the nation and the disputing parties will, I believe, all be the beneficiaries of this particular resolve.

Again, I compliment the Minister of Labour for his leadership and his compassion in dealing with labour and management. Let us be on record as saying that we understand that this is a lock-out. It is an initiative taken by management, not by labour, but it has to be resolved to the satisfaction of both parties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before we go into the adjournment debate, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that he has 10 minutes on questions and comments when Orders of the Day are called tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—USE OF LOW SULPHUR COAL

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on October 15, 1986, I asked the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) the following question:

When may we expect a decision on the use of Canadian low sulphur coal in Canada?

The Minister replied with the following answer:

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Mines, the Minister of Transport and myself are trying to formulate a decision or response to the task force report which was released on August 20, 1986. I hope that we will be able to make some sort of preliminary decision on the whole question of displacing American high sulphur content coal with low sulphur content coal from western Canada before very long, perhaps before the end of the year.

On the same day, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), asked the Minister of the Environment the following question:

Bearing in mind the Government's interest in environmental protection, improvement for the western economy, and the enhancement of Canada's balance of payments, what action is the Minister undertaking to encourage the use of low sulphur coal in the industrial heartland of Canada?

The Minister said that it did not make sense for the Government of Canada and the country as a whole to be encouraging the importation of high sulphur content coal from the United States when low sulphur content coal is available from western Canada with all of the attendant environmental and economic advantages inherent in displacing American coal. He then said:

—to the extent that the federal Government can do anything about the problem, we are acting on it.

Let us note the following major relevant points as confirmed in the report referred to by the Minister: first, western coal has one-half of 1 per cent sulphur content whereas U.S. coal has 5 per cent sulphur content. The $7 million the federal Government is now providing to clean up the acid rain mess in Ontario could have helped to haul hundreds of tonnes of western coal from Alberta to Ontario and we would not be in this terrible acid rain mess. Second, the Government of Ontario has made a commitment to reduce acid rain in that province by 50 per cent of the 1980 emission levels by 1994.

Third, without emission controls, Ontario Hydro will exceed the provincial limit on acid gas emissions by 1994 when the emission limit of 215,000 tonnes per year nitrogen-oxide, NO8 and SO2, comes into effect. Fourth, Ontario Hydro can meet the provincial emission limits until the year 2000 by using more western Canadian low sulphur coal or by a combination of the use of more western coal and U.S. coal with flue gas scrubbers or solely with the use of flue gas scrubbers on American coal. Fifth, Ontario Hydro is required between now and December 1988 to submit its methods of emission control to the Government of Ontario.

The coal report states that the use of western Canadian coal will have a national benefit through the creation of 13,000 jobs with an income of $41 billion in 1985-dollars.

How can we make our western low sulphur coal competitive with U.S. coal? There are several ways to do so. We can do it by using unit trains to haul the coal and by finding ways to reduce the mining costs. These items alone account for 58 per cent of the estimated price of $88 per tonne. Second, increasing the cost of scrubbers by 20 per cent would make Canadian coal 10 per cent cheaper than the U.S. coal options. Third, we can do it by upgrading the heat values of western coal through research and modern technology.

Ontario will benefit through jobs and taxes, as will the federal Government. In addition, both governments will benefit and save thousands of dollars because of much less acid rain. Also, we will be developing a Canadian industry with all of its economic benefits. If necessary, both governments should provide some financial help for transportation and research.

In the light of the facts presented in the report, it is high time that both the federal Government and the Ontario Government took all necessary actions to substantially reduce the amount of U.S. coal imported into Canada, and to develop our coal resources for the benefit of Canadians. I am satisfied that the capital is there to open and reopen our own low sulphur coal mines in Alberta, and elsewhere in the West. For years Canadians like the late Jessie Gouge and Mr. Omar Patrick and his father worked and pleaded for an opportunity to provide coal to the East, but to no avail. I hope that this latest coal report, which substantiates everything that westerners have been saying for years, will not be another cave-in.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's question regarding the use of low sulphur western Canadian coal.

On August 20, 1986, the federal-provincial task force on the use of low sulphur western coal released its report. It was in October, 1984 that the federal and provincial environment Ministers set up the task force to determine the costs and benefits of increased use of western coal in Ontario. The study focused particularly on the role that low sulphur western Canadian coal could play in reducing acid rain causing emissions.

Ontario Hydro is the largest consumer of coal in eastern Canada. The utility must reduce its sulphur dioxide emissions—the principal cause of acid rain—by more than 50 per cent by 1994, in accordance with regulations adopted by the Ontario Government.

The task force report is, therefore, timely for Ontario Hydro, as the document offers comprehensive information for the federal and provincial governments that is frequently not available when evaluating emission control options. This is socio-economic information, information on Canadian jobs and income in different Canadian provinces: Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta, and British Columbia. Each of the four options proposed in the report has different benefits for job creation and stimulation of industry in the mining, transportation and public utility sectors.

The report strongly recommends co-operative follow-up initiatives by industry and federal and provincial governments to improve the economic attractiveness of western Canadian coal to Ontario Hydro. Ontario Hydro is now in the process of preparing its emission reduction plan to meet the sulphur dioxide emission limits imposed by Ontario for 1990 and 1994. As the Hon. Member stated, that plan is to be submitted to the Government of Ontario by December 31, 1988. The western coal task force report is timely in that regard. It will permit the socio-economic information developed to be considered in Ontario Hydro's decision-making process.

However, it is not only up to Ontario Hydro to take action. The federal-provincial task force recommended that governments and industry study methods to increase the use of western Canadian low sulphur coal, by investigating means to reduce production, mining, and transportation costs; and by allocating more funds for the research and development of new, more efficient techniques to improve coal quality.

The question of increased use of low sulphur western Canadian coal now requires a resource development focus. In this vein, on October 30, 1986, the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources assumed the lead role in directing and co-ordinating the activities needed to put into effect the task force recommendations. To achieve this goal, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources must act in co-operation with provincial resource departments, as well as with federal and provincial departments of transport and regional development. Together they must choose the best means to increase demand for low sulphur western Canadian coal in Ontario.

In recent weeks representatives of Transport Canada and Ontario Hydro discussed problems related to the cost of transporting western Canadian coal to Ontario. Discussions of this type will continue in order to resolve the situation. In fact, on November 19, 1986, the Alberta Coal Development Adviser is meeting with the Coal Association of Canada, representing coal producers as well as Canadian National and Canadian Pacific. Also, on November 25, Transport Canada and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources will be meeting with Canadian National, Canadian Pacific, and Thunder Bay Terminal and Great Lakes freight operators.

Furthermore, in September Environment Canada initiated a macro-economic study to build upon the socio-economic information generated by the task force. The study will deal with some aspects not addressed by the task force, such as the effect of increased electricity prices in Ontario on product prices and markets.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—FUTURE OF WINNIPEG RAIL SHOPS. (B) AEROSPACE INDUSTRY INQUIRY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up on a question which I directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) the week before we recessed. It concerned the future of the Winnipeg economy and, of course, the awarding of the contract for the maintenance of the CF-18 to Canadair in Montreal instead of to Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg where a great many people thought it ought to have gone on the basis of financial and technical merit.

Having just spent a week in Winnipeg, and after shovelling snow, I had an opportunity to meet with many people who lived beyond my particular street.

Mr. Marchi: I was there too.

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member was there for a conference on immigrant women. He had the opportunity of experiencing something which occurs once in every 20 years in Winnipeg—the blizzard.

In any event, I wanted to report to the House the incredible unanimity with which Manitobans regard this decision, the incredible unanimity of contempt for both the process and the outcome of the particular decision.

I rose in the House to ask the Prime Minister whether or not a Minister would make a statement about just what the Government had in mind for Winnipeg. There is a great deal of general rhetoric about western Canada. We hear a lot about the $1 billion farm aid program for grain producers, which is all well and good. We hear about the things which have been done for the oil and gas sector in Alberta. However, I was asking the Prime Minister whether or not someone would stand and give Winnipeg an idea of what kind of future the federal Government had in mind for it.

We in Winnipeg are certainly in a position where we have grave doubts about whether the Government has any future at all in mind for Winnipeg. Our only experience since September, 1984 has been bad news. It is not like the joke about first the good news and then the bad news, or first the bad news and then the good news. There has been nothing but bad news. The awarding of the CF-18 contract to Montreal was really the icing on the cake.

In that context I said in the House, and I say it again: What does the Government have in mind for Winnipeg? All we have seen is the seemingly indefinite deferral of the VIA Rail shop which was supposed to have been built in Winnipeg. It was planned to have been built but it was cancelled by the Conservatives.

We saw the cancellation of the manufacturing technology centre. The building is there but the program is not. We had a provincial Government willing to contribute, but a federal Government that wanted to go ahead only with rehabilitating one-third of the 1,000 boxcars which could have been used in Churchill. CN said that was all it needed. Then, just a few months ago, sure as shooting, when there was trouble in the other ports, CN said it did not have enough cars to take all the grain to Churchill. We have seen the putting off from one year to the next of the needed building of a new diesel or motive power shop in Transcona.

The Government talks about giving money away here and there, the latest being I do not know how many millions of dollars which may be going to preserve an automotive plant in Ste. Thérèse, Quebec. Yet the one thing we know we are going to have for the foreseeable future is the railway. We know it needs new facilities. People are working in shops built in 1909 and 1910. How much foresight does it take to say that rebuilding these would be an investment well made? Yet the money that CN would like to spend on that keeps getting delayed from year to year by the Government. It is an investment that will never go somewhere else. It will not trail off down to the U.S. There is no risk at all involved in building the necessary infrastructure for our transportation system. Yet it is put off and put off and put off. There is just a total lack of foresight and it is becoming very, very irritating to anyone who knows anything about it. There is continued reluctance by the Government to go ahead with the things we know need to be done to develop and maintain the Port of Churchill, as well as the building of lightweight hopper cars.

I am also interested in the future of Versatile in Winnipeg. I met with representatives of the Canadian Auto Workers while I was in my constituency last week. They have been trying to get a meeting with the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) to discuss what the Government is doing to make sure the 1,000 unemployed there now find their way back to work through arrangements which we hope the Government is working on. They have been unable to get a meeting with him. I can understand why Tory Members from Manitoba are not in a big hurry to meet with anyone these days, but these people have been trying to get the meeting for weeks and I hope this does not turn out to be another example of how Manitoba is neglected by the federal Government.

I repeat what I said in the question I am following up today. We need a statement from this Government about how it sees the future of Winnipeg. There were certain understandings between the federal and provincial Governments that the strength of Manitoba was transportation. There were agreements with Alberta which reflected that province's strength in energy. However, all we have seen is the undercutting of Manitoba's transportation sector since the election in 1984. I would like to know just what the Government has in mind.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised a number of questions and I would like to deal with them as quickly as I can because I have only three minutes and you will have to cut me off.

First, by 1980 Transcona will be the main shop for heavy maintenance work and equipment refurbishing in the CN system. Transcona is located within the riding presently represented by the Member and it will benefit enormously from that work. There will be many new jobs and people transferred from other parts of Canada who wish to work in that facility. That is one example of good news for the residents of Winnipeg.

The aerospace industry is obviously of concern to the Member. There are three major aerospace companies in Manitoba which represent about 5 per cent of the total sales of the aerospace industry of Canada and 5 per cent of the employment of the industry.

As one example of what we have done for Manitobans and Winnipegers, Boeing now has the contract to do the wing ferry construction for the Boeing 747s. I understand that creates about 250 jobs, which we hope will be permanent. That is one of the good results of allowing de Havilland to purchase Boeing. I wonder whether the Member has taken a position with respect to that purchase. I seem to recall that his Party was vehemently opposed to that. If that had not happened, those 250 jobs in Winnipeg would probably not exist today.

I was born in Winnipeg and lived there for a quarter of a century and have very strong feelings about Winnipeg, as has the Member. I understand that Manitoba now has an unemployment rate of about 6.9 per cent, the lowest of all the four western provinces.

Mr. Blaikie: It's an NDP Government.

Mr. Kilgour: Would the Member tell us how it makes any sense for the NDP Government of Manitoba to have a payroll tax? If there is any better disincentive for having employment in a province, it seems to me that the NDP Government tax would be at the top of any intelligent person's list. I do not know how that Government can talk about creating jobs when it does everything it can to make it harder for people to create jobs.

We have helped to create an atmosphere in which 75,000 new jobs have been created on the Prairies since the election. We have reinstated VIA Rail which is important to Winnipeg and westerners generally. We recently declared that the Yellowhead route would be part of the national trans-Canada system. We committed $1 billion to the hard-pressed grain farmers. We announced the red meat stabilization plan. There was a major commitment in the Throne Speech to diversify the economy of western Canada.

I will conclude on the very important issue of preserving the 2 million to 2.5 million Canadian jobs which now depend on our trade with the United States. We are doing everything we can to preserve access to that market against the daily opposition of the Member's Party. Approximately 200,000 western Canadian jobs now depend on that market. If the Member's leader continues to do things which will make it harder to maintain a continued access to that market, it can only result in harm to a great many men, women and children in our part of the country.

IMMIGRATION—AWARDING OF MINISTERIAL SPECIAL ENTRY PERMIT. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVOKE DECISION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise this evening to review a series of three questions which I asked the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) during the sittings of November 4, 5 and 6. They were with regard to two questionable and very frustrating judgment calls made by the Minister to grant two ministerial permits to two different individuals. One individual, who had a criminal record of over 20 convictions, obtained a ministerial permit from the same Minister to remain in Canada as well as a recommendation that this individual be granted landed immigrant status. Another decision which came to light involved a Hungarian immigrant who was known to have given to the Hungarian Secret Police secret and politically damaging information on Canadians with ties in Hungary.

The most frustrating aspect with regard to immigration policies and programs in this country is the fact that Canadians cannot sponsor loved ones and relatives from abroad to have them join families in Canada. This is despite the fact that under Liberal Governments, family reunification was the cornerstone of our immigration policy.

With the announcement of the 1987 levels, we see that the Conservative Government has lowered the threshold for family sponsorship and family reunification to some 30 per cent. They were considerably higher under Liberal Governments. Second, if they are successful, it usually takes years.

It was no coincidence that there was such outrage and frustration expressed by Canadians across the country when we learned that an individual with a record of over 20 criminal convictions was not only accepted to the country and received a special ministerial permit to allow that person to remain in Canada, but that the Minister had the temerity to recommend him to the Government and Cabinet for special landed immigrant status.

That is shocking because there are thousands upon thousands of legitimate and meritorious individuals who wish to come to this country, as my family and many others did, to create a better life-style and, in the process, create a better Canada. They want to join in the construction of a new country. It behooves the Minister to give out ministerial permits to individuals who merit such consideration, not to individuals who, such as in the Hungary case, give secret information about Canadians who have ties with Hungary. In fact, it is testimony to the fact that these individuals should not be granted status in this country. That status should be offered to those individuals who warrant and deserve immigration here.

Furthermore, both cases do not come out of the blue. With respect to the individual having over 20 criminal convictions, three previous Ministers of Immigration rejected the lobbying efforts that were made on his behalf. The bureaucracy and the Deputy Minister continue to this day to react negatively and are at odds with the ministerial decision.

With respect to the Hungarian case, again, two previous Ministers of Immigration rejected the lobbying efforts on behalf of this gentleman, particularly by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). We know about these two cases and perhaps there are others which will become public. The Minister has made a very serious call, he went against the advice of his Department, and it seems that while he is probably well intentioned, he has difficulty saying no to lobbying efforts. Previous Ministers and departmental officials clearly rejected special ministerial permits to these two individuals. The present Minister somehow found it possible to grant such ministerial permits.

Canadians are asking, as I did during the week of November 4, what has changed to allow the Minister to contravene his departmental officials and go against the recommendations of three previous Ministers, not all of whom were Conservatives, because the first case goes back to John Roberts when he was Minister of Employment and Immigration.

I am anxiously waiting to hear the Parliamentary Secretary tell us why the Minister granted special ministerial permits in these two particular applications. What were the circumstances that changed since the last Ministers made their recommendations? What has changed in the advice of the Department to warrant special ministerial permits?

Unless the Parliamentary Secretary can give legitimate reasons for these two cases receiving ministerial permits, I believe that he, the Minister for whom he is speaking this evening, and the Government should clearly revoke such ministerial permits. It is only in this way that we can send a strong signal to Canadians and those wishing to enter Canada that they follow proper procedures and regulations because there is no watering down of ministerial permits to people who simply and quite frankly do not deserve them. I look forward to hearing from the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I guess I would be much more impressed, as would all Canadians, with the arguments put forward by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) if it were not for the number of inaccuracies, false innuendos and the number of downright questionable comments the Hon. Member makes, both in the House and outside the House, comments which he cannot substantiate.

First, I will deal with the question of whether or not the Minister did or did not follow the recommendations of his Department. If the Hon. Member for York West was open and forthright, or if he really knew what happens in the Department—and I can forgive him for not knowing since he has not had the experience of being in government—he would know that the Minister was provided with options. The fact is circumstances change.

An interesting notion is the one that this person who has been in Canada now for a number of years was all of a sudden created out of thin air by the Minister or by the Government. We have been in government for two years now and this person has been in Canada for a number of years. If the Liberal Government and the policies which the Hon. Member would like to support were really concerned about this particular case, then I do not know how this person can still be here in Canada to be considered by the Minister.

The point I would like to make is that the Minister has acted legally. He has made recommendations to the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) with respect to his consideration. Cabinet determination must be given with respect to whether this person should be considered under the provisions of the Immigration Act of 1976 as a person who has been rehabilitated. I challenge the Hon. Member to take a look at this person's record, since he likes to judge. I hope that some day people can judge him as fairly as the Minister is trying to judge this person. The Government will in fact take due consideration of all elements of this case, some of which have changed in the last year.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1986-87

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 83 I move:

That Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, laid upon the table earlier this day, be referred to the several standing committees as follows:

Since the list is rather long and there is a detailed allocation of the Supplementary Estimates to the committees, if it is agreeable to the House, I would ask that the list be printed in Hansard as if it had been read.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): We are agreeable to this procedure, as long as the Minister gives his assurance that it is presented in the usual form, and there are no surprises in it for us.

Mr. Mazankowski: I can give the Hon. Member that assurance. If he does find some technical error, I assure him that I will make that correction.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MAINTENANCE OF PORTS OPERATIONS ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, November 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cadieux that Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations, be read a second time and by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: When the debate on Bill C-24 was interrupted last evening at six o'clock p.m. the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) had completed his speech.

I will now recognize Hon. Members who wish to participate in the 10-minute question and comment period following the Hon. Member's speech.

There being no questions or comments, on debate, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, obviously we have not had a great deal of time to review the proposed legislation which was only tabled in the House yesterday and received in our offices at approximately 10.15 a.m. yesterday.

There are a number of points that I wish to make. One point that jumped out when I read the Bill, and I think it would probably impress itself upon all Members, is that in Clause 13(2) when the Minister invokes prohibition against unions or employers for breaking the regulations as set out in this new Bill:

> No officer or representative of a union who is convicted of an offence under this Act that was committed while the officer or representative was acting in that capacity shall be employed in any capacity by, or act as an officer or representative of, the union at any time during the five years immediately after the date of the conviction.

For some reason there is no such application against the employer. If this legislation is intended to bring an even hand to a difficult situation, in Clause 13(1) why did the Government see fit to apply the offence prohibitions against the individual, the union, or the company? Yet in Clause 13(2) the only people who stand to lose their jobs for five years are representatives of the union? This is clearly an indication of the anti-union sentiment and anti-union mentality of this Government.

Furthermore, there is one way of adding some sense of balance to the Act. Those Members who are from British Columbia will want to take a specific look at Clause 13(2). If there is an obligation imposed to respect the law, that obligation should be imposed on both sides. At the very least, there should be an amendment coming from the Government which includes similar sanctions against the employer.

In reviewing the legislation imposed by previous Governments, for example, the Shipping Continuation Act of 1978, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and related operations at ports on the West Coast of Canada, assented to in 1982; and an Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services assented to in 1978, for the first time in the history of this Parliament the Government is talking not only about proceeding with regulations which govern both union and management with respect to the application of this Bill, but it is also talking about kicking someone out of a union office for five years if there is a contravention. When we had a postal strike in 1979 the imposition was a $100 a day fine. There was never any consideration that someone should be kicked out of the union office for five years.

When we had the imposition of a back-to-work order on the West Coast longshoremen's strike of 1982, the prohibition was a contempt-of-court charge, if you did not live within the regulations as imposed on the back-to-work order. Likewise, in the Great Lakes shipping agreement of 1978, the only penalty imposed was a contempt-of-court order.

Why is this Government proceeding with legislation which would deny a union office holder the right to serve in that union as an officer for five years at the same time that there is no concurrent penalty being applied against the employer? Are we now suggesting that the employer should be kicked out of his or her office for five years?

I suspect that Clause 13(2) was a deliberate attempt by the Government to essentially buy the company line when it comes to this back-to-work legislation. The provisions for the industrial inquiry commission buttress my argument that the Government has bought the company line hook, line, and sinker. In the industrial inquiry commission the one area that is turned over to the commission is the container issue. Membership in this commission is again chosen in a rather ambiguous way by the Government.

The long-standing problems surrounding the Port of Vancouver were cited in the press release of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) when he announced the changes yesterday. He talked about the difficulties which have existed over the last 16 years. In fact some positive suggestions have been put forward by people working on the docks and in the port. They say that the container clause is only a smokescreen. It is the tip of the iceberg.

In fact there is a lack of competitiveness on the part of that west coast port. The Government is not prepared to provide the kind of massive investment into upgrading the port which we see in the United States.

Let us look at the report on the St. Lawrence project in 1985. It cites the Port of Vancouver as handling only between seven million and eight million tonnes of general cargo. Only 12 per cent to 15 per cent of this total is containerized. Therefore, containers are not the only problem facing the Port of Vancouver. That same report of June, 1985 cites the real problem—the lack of competitiveness of the port. For example, between 1976 and 1983 there was reference to cross-border container traffic between Canada and the United States, according to Ports Canada data. In 1983 there were 47,362 unloaded containers destined for Canada in American ports. That amounts to a business loss to Canada because our ports were not competitive. However, 16,103 unloaded containers destined for the United States were waiting on the West Coast of Canada in the same period of time. The lack of competition is not strictly related to containers, because containers only amount to 12 per cent or 15 per cent of business ventures at the port.

I am sure most Hon. Members have had an opportunity to review the brief delivered to our offices by the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. It pointed to the real problem. Let us look at the Port of Seattle which is in direct competition with the Port of Vancouver. That port has invested over $90 million in the last two years to build new facilities or upgrade existing ones. A comparison of container capability—who can deliver how much and how quickly—shows that Vancouver has five cranes and that Seattle and Tacoma combined have thirty-one cranes. Is it any wonder that there are competition problems in Canada? Is it any wonder that many of our containers are now being unloaded in the United States for shipment into Canada?

It is not the container clause problem. That is a smokescreen for a far more serious problem which relates to the Government's inability or unwillingness to upgrade the capacity for container movement or shipments over the last number of years. Let us look at the decision-making process in the United States. The union pointed out that most ports were under local control, so decisions could be made quickly and directly by those persons involved. In Canada we have theoretically passed legislation which decentralized authority. However, in practical terms most decisions are still made 3,000 miles away in land-locked Ottawa. We must not only look at the question of containers, we must look as well at the over-all issue of productivity at Vancouver ports.

We will in fact propose a number of amendments. It is our belief that the industrial inquiry commission to be set up by the Government should not be restricted to looking only at the container question. If that is the case, it has clearly bought the argument of the employers that the only problem is in fact containers. We would prefer to look at the over-all question of productivity and competitiveness.

One key issue which the Government has not addressed in this particular piece of legislation is the question of job security. We will be proposing amendments in that regard as well.

I should like to refer to the industrial inquiry commission. The Government is rather vague about who will be appointed to the commission and what will be their qualifications. I wonder whether the qualifications of the appointees to the commission are anything akin to those of recent Senate appointees. To wit, a Senate appointee was quoted this morning as saying the reasons the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed her were because she was a woman, a Catholic, and from the outports of Newfoundland. There were no references to capability or capacity. She was appointed simply because she was an outport woman who happened to be a Catholic. If that is the nomination process chosen by the Government in the setting up of this industrial inquiry commission, we see very serious problems in the actual application of the responsibilities laid out by the Minister, even as limited as they are.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think this forum should be utilized by the Hon. Member to make statements relating to Senate appointments. I do not think it has anything to do with the debate. It is character assassination, and it should be stopped immediately.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ with the Hon. Member. That was not a point of order; it was strictly debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The first part of the point raised by the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) suggested that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) might have commented upon Senate appointments. As far as relevancy is concerned, she did that for an extremely short period of time. Obviously the Hon. Member did not intend to speak on it for a lengthy period of time. I do not consider it to be a point of order. Also, I do not consider the second part of the Hon. Member's point to be a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I believe my comments were related to subclause 7(1) wherein it is indicated that the Minister shall confer upon himself or herself the right to make appointments to the industrial inquiry commission. If we look at the precedent which was apparently set as a result of the Senate appointments announced today, obviously we have a few questions to ask the Government. We should like to propose—and we will be moving amendments to that effect—that the appointees to the industrial inquiry commission must have the approval of both the union and the management.

I think there are plenty of precedents. For example, if we look at the general composition of unemployment insurance boards, generally speaking there is a union representative, a management representative, and a third representative appointed by Government. We feel that that would be a more desirable model than the commission membership being appointed by the Minister.

Who is on the commission? What are their qualifications? What expertise do they bring? According to the Minister's press release, this is the result of 16 years to 17 years of debate and discussion; also there has been a number of studies. We should like to see someone on the commission who knows what he or she is talking about. Naturally, coming from the Conservative Government, that might be a little difficult to find. However, it is something which must be considered. We will be making some amendments in that regard.

We have concerns about appointees to the industrial inquiry commission. We should like to know how they will be appointed, and we should like to see an extension of the terms of reference of the commission. Because the terms of reference are restricted solely to the container issue, which represents from 12 per cent to 15 per cent of the business in Vancouver ports, 85 per cent to 88 per cent of the problem is not being dealt with. An examination of the brief submitted to all Hon. Members by the ILWU would be a good way for us to consider some of the amendments.

At the same time I must point out how concerned my Party and I are about subclause 13(2). It discriminates against union workers because it indicates that if one is a company man, there is no problem. The prohibitions against companies are excluded from Clause 13(2). If one is a union office holder then he can be thrown out of the union for five years. He can even be deprived of his livelihood if he breaks any of the provisions of the proposed legislation. It seems to me that fair is fair; if legislation is to be introduced which imposes a penalty on one party then the same penalty should be imposed on the other party. It will be our proposition that the only way of dealing with this unjust subclause in the legislation is to strike it altogether. There are plenty of precedents to suggest that contempt of court provisions, a fine or other such provisions may be substituted which will indeed get the point across that legislation which must be obeyed is being passed. However, at the same time we do not want to penalize someone by taking five years out of his life from union or working activity simply because he has not followed the provisions of the Bill when there are no similar prohibitions against the employer.

[Translation]

So there are certainly a number of amendments we would like to propose, including amendments which, I feel, are simply a matter of fairness to the workers, because if we look at the provisions of Clause 13 (2) of the Bill, they clearly reflect the policy of this Government which has decided that if employees do not agree and break the law and are convicted, they are faced with the possibility of being kept from promoting union policies for a period of five years. And the Hon. Member says that—I don't know whether he read the clause, but in any case, Subclause (2) provides that:

> No officer or representative of a union who is convicted of an offence under this Act that was committed while the officer or representative was acting in that capacity shall be employed in any capacity by, or act as an officer or representative of, the union at any time during the five years immediately after the date of the conviction.

Unlike Subclause 13(1), the reference is not to both employees and employers, to both workers and companies.

The second subclause refers only to workers, not to companies: And we think that penalizing a worker or a union member by prohibiting him from union activities for five years is much too harsh. It is an abuse of the legislative process, and we would prefer to see the subclause withdrawn altogether. That would be our choice, first and foremost. Failing that, we should at least have the same prohibitions, the same interdictions applying to employers. How can we tell employees that, if they break the law, they could be kicked out of the union for five years when there is no equivalent sanction for employers? We are going to move to have this provision withdrawn, because I know there have been instances, involving even Liberal Governments, where the Government and the Opposition supported back-to-work legislation, whether the problem was a strike or a lockout. There are precedents.

There have been quite a few instances but, to my knowledge, this is the first time, as far as we have been able to ascertain, that we have a penalty to the extent of putting someone out of his job for five years. For instance, if we look at the Shipping Continuation Act which was passed in 1978, at the time the penalty for refusing to submit to the legislation and breaking the law was contempt of court order. That was the penalty in 1978. Contempt of court. If . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude as her time has expired.

Ms. Copps: It meant a $100 fine. So I think there are precedents for imposing less serious penalties and for at least having the penalty apply to both employees and employers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain).

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) questioned numerous aspects of the Bill. I would like to address a couple of the matters she brought up this morning. She obviously has only one issue in question, that is, Clause 13. She mentioned this point twice in English and once in French. She repeated herself three times on this very clause. She pointed out that she did not have time to study the Bill, which was obvious by the fact that she kept repeating herself on this particular issue. It is an important issue. I agree with the Hon. Member in that respect. However, I do not think that we need her making the country believe that she is the sole protector of labour in the House of Commons. As a union president in the past I will certainly stand up for labour front and centre, which was proven in this House when the issue of shakes and shingles was before us. At that time her own Party refused to protect the jobs in the shake and shingle industry by refusing to reject the exportation of logs, blocks, bolts and blanks to the United States of America. So we do not need any lessons on the issue from the Hon. Member. The NDP stood with us on this issue when it was raised. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) took a strong position with us, but Members of the Liberal Party did not. The Liberal Party was prepared to sell out to the shake and shingle industry.

Let us now come down to the ILWU union aspect. Had the Hon. Member been in the House yesterday to listen to the debate on this particular issue she would have heard the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) bring an amendment forward to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux). The Minister of Labour said it was an excellent idea. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment will be implemented into the legislation.

The Hon. Member has also misled, not intentionally, the House in that she said these people will be deprived of being able to earn a livelihood. That is totally wrong. If she were to read the clause she would see that they will only be deprived of sitting as executives of the union, but they will still be able to be longshoremen. If she were to read the proposed amendment—

Ms. Copps: You don't even know what a bargaining agent is. Have you not ever heard of a full-time union appointee?

Mr. St. Germain: The fact is that the amendment which has been presented so adeptly by the New Democratic Party and which we are prepared to accept as a Party is well taken.

The Hon. Member spoke of cranes. If the Hon. Member knew anything about the West Coast she would know that there are 31 cranes in Seattle and Tacoma simply because the business has been going there. That is what we have to stop. If the Hon. Member knew anything about the West Coast she would know that the Americans are thinking of building a port in Bellingham, which is just south of the border. That is why we have to get the business back to British Columbia. For years the matter has not been resolved.

I would like the Hon. Member to comment on what she really knows about the West Coast in terms of shipping and cranes. It is a disgrace to get up in the House and not know anything about an issue on which one speaks. This is nearly a repeat of the shakes and shingles issue. And Members of the Liberal Party are all excited again because they do not know the issues on the West Coast and they are trying to deal with a problem about which they know nothing. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the cranes and why she was not here yesterday to hear the Hon. Member for Regina West when he so adeptly brought forward his recommendation.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, for one who describes himself as a former union president, I am disturbed that he does not seem to understand how unions operate. Of course I repeated the issue with respect to Clause 13. I repeated it and I will continue to repeat it because it is a union-busting clause. This is anti-union legislation and Members of the Conservative Party got caught with their pants down. The Hon. Member should not talk to us in the Liberal Party about fighting for the working man and woman. I represent the most industrialized riding in the country and I have the right to speak out on labour matters.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the clause in question states:

No officer or representative of a union who is convicted of an offence—while the officer or representative was acting in that capacity shall be employed in any capacity by, or act as an officer or representative of, the union—

Now, presumably the association which the Member purports to speak for has paid employees. If they happen to be found in contravention of this law they can be thrown off their jobs for five years.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. St. Germain: They are longshoremen.

Ms. Copps: Absolutely. They also have bargaining agents. The Hon. Member talks about shakes and shingles—

Mr. St. Germain: You know nothing about them.

Ms. Copps: He had the President of the U.S. shaking so much that Canadians were left with a case of the shingles because that Government put us in a position to be ripped off by the Americans. Where was he? Was he speaking for Canadians when it came to saving Canadian jobs? He was shaking in his boots because he was listening to that shekel salesman, the President of the U.S., who sold this country out to get a fast-track deal on free trade.

As for the NDP double-talk, they can take whatever position they want. They may take one position in B.C. and another here in Ontario, but we speak as one.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I find it totally disgusting that the Member would get up and question the action taken on shakes and shingles. There is one thing about it, we are in control.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. St. Germain: Today the U.S. would give anything to remove the tariff on shakes and shingles. They realized they erred in their judgment. The fact is that the action we took was so positive and so definitive that we saved 99 per cent of the jobs in that industry. That industry is going to come out ahead because we control the production of raw cedar in North America. We will continue to control it through the limitations on exports of cedar shakes and shingles to the U.S. or anywhere else. I do not need any lessons from her on this.

She asks if I know anything about labour. At least I represented labour and stood in the rank and file.

Ms. Copps: So have I.

Mr. St. Germain: As was pointed out by another Hon. Member, no one over there has run companies or represented unions.

The Hon. Member also brought up the matter of the Commissioner. She said we are the Government and we should be showing leadership. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the leadership shown by the Minister is second to none on this particular issue.

Mr. Foster: Why do you want to apple polish? This is a serious matter.

Mr. St. Germain: I realize that. It is very serious, to the point that I think the Minister made an excellent choice in Mr. Kelly as a mediator. This is an example of where we are prepared to make certain that there is compassion and understanding, and that labour is given its full day in court the same as management. We want to see the situation resolved to the benefit not of a select group of employers or employees, but for all Canadians. If the Hon. Member realized the dilemma that Canada is in as a result of our dependency on our natural resources, and how we must maintain a solid transportation operation on the West Coast—

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member is making a speech. He had his time yesterday. Today he is supposed to make a comment or ask a short question.

Mr. Blais: It was a comment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is commenting. He started the question and comment period. No other Member stood up to comment and therefore the Chair went back to the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain). I ask the Hon. Member to quickly close so that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has equal time to answer.

Mr. St. Germain: It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal Party of Canada is quaking in its boots. The Hon. Members are shaking right now. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East is liable to end up with a case of shingles. Maybe she should put shingles on her roof and start buying more Canadian products so we can improve the plight of all Canadians.

I want to know whether the Hon. Member for Hamilton East opposes this legislation? Would she sooner see a major shut-down and lock-out on the West Coast as opposed to the resolution of the problem presented to this House so efficiently by the Minister of Labour?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would stop apple polishing. He should realize that the Prime Minister is not going to give him a promotion just because he makes kind comments about the Minister of Labour. If he heard what I had to say in my speech, I made a number of specific proposals and we are going to be making a number of specific amendments. I would like to work with the Hon. Member to improve the legislation. At the moment it is anti-union and the Government's employer bias was clearly demonstrated by the fact that the commission is looking strictly at the question of containers. Also because of the aforementioned penalties assessed against union workers but not against management. If we can address some of these very serious anti-union problems, then certainly I am prepared to look at a compromise. However, the Bill as it stands at the moment is in favour of the employers. The Government bought the employer version, line and sinker and we would like to have someone speak for the workers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for North Vancouver—Burnaby (Mr. Cook).

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, to emphasize the seriousness of this debate and what is taking place in the Port of Vancouver at the moment, I have been in touch with people in that city in the last 10 minutes and I can report to this House that there are now 24 vessels sitting there, 18 of which are grain cargo ships. The other 6 are there for other cargo. Some 18 of those grain ships will have demurrage charges which will have to be paid by the Canadian Wheat Board, which in turn is paid for by the farmers of Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and part of Manitoba. This dispute involves every farmer on the Prairies. It involves one in 10 people who depend upon the Port of Vancouver for their livelihood. Keep that in mind. If this legislation is not passed today the other six vessels will undoubtedly leave the port and go elsewhere. They are waiting only in the hope that this port can be opened by tomorrow morning, which hopefully it can.

It is a fascinating dispute in one sense of the word. It has a long history. We have had the container clause in contracts on the coast since 1970. Finally, in 1982, in the collective agreement signed that year, they made some forward movement in connection with that clause. One representative of the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association and one representative of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union were to do a study on the container clause and determine its effect and whether it was really that damaging to the Port of Vancouver. It is interesting to note that Mr. Don Garcia, at that time the Canadian area president of the union, worked on behalf of the union, and D.B. McLennan worked on behalf of the employers. They brought in their report which basically said that perhaps the container clause could be dropped for at least a year with guarantees from the employers that there would be no loss of work during that year to union members. It looked like it was a possibility. It is interesting to note that Mr. Garcia agreed to that. However, the 3,700 longshoremen in Local 500 turned it down totally. They would not agree. Mr. Garcia was defeated as union president in the 1984 union election. I suspect that was as a result of his agreeing to have the container clause removed for a year to learn what the result would be. Dave Lomas became the president of the longshoremen in 1984.

In 1984 the Vancouver Ports Corporation, representatives of the employers association and Mr. Dave Lomas went to the Far East searching out new cargo for Vancouver. They wanted to learn why shippers were not using the port and to tell them why they should use it. It was reported that many shippers in the Far East said it was the container clause which caused them to avoid the Port of Vancouver. In fairness, there were other reasons, but the container clause was one reason.

Having learned this, Mr. Lomas began to express the view that something be done about the container clause. It is interesting to note that in April of 1986 Mr. Lomas lost his job as union leader. That possibly had a good deal to do with the fact that he had realized that the container clause was affecting the Port of Vancouver. Mr. Garcia won the election and became the president again.

There is absolutely no way Don Garcia could agree to anything with regard to the container clause. I think he believes that he lost his job over it on one occasion by attempting to be reasonable. Certainly Mr. Lomas lost his job because the 3,700 longshoremen in Local 500 want that bird in the hand and are not prepared to consider anything else. Even if it were guaranteed that the union would lose no work if the container clause were removed, could the union president agree to such a thing? Even if he did, the membership of the union would not ratify it. The 3,700 members of the union are absolutely immovable. The union executive would not dare to entertain such an idea. In addition, we now have an irresistible force because the employers now believe the clause must come out of the contract because of what it is costing them, the Port of Vancouver, the people of western Canada and our national image with regard to Vancouver becoming a major trading centre.

I am not prepared to say that the container clause is the only problem with the Port of Vancouver. It certainly is not. I found myself nodding my head in agreement with many of the comments made by members of the Opposition. However, we have an immovable object, the union, and an irresistible force, the management, which has locked the workers out because they want the contract settled. That situation presents a dilemma. The only answer is to force a solution, and that is the reason for the Maintenance of Ports Operations Act, 1986. The port must be put back into operation.

Is this Bill fair? I think most Hon. Members would agree that it is. It forces the employers to open their doors in order that work may resume. It specifies the Larson Report as the basis of the contract until 1988, but only because the parties are at loggerheads and cannot agree on anything. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) has not denied the parties the right to bargain and reach an agreement on anything. If they reach an agreement, Clause 12 of the Bill applies. That clause states, in simple terms, that if the two parties can agree on any contractual language, that language will apply. The Act also calls for an industrial inquiry commission into the Port of Vancouver and the container clause. It specifies that the conclusion of that commission will become part of the contract until 1988 as well. How else can you solve a problem when people are not talking to each other?

In his opening remarks on this Bill the Minister of Labour said that in this situation there is more punishment for others than for those involved. That is true when the port is closed down. One in ten people in Vancouver, every prairie farmer, every shipper of wheat, potash or anything else is affected. There are 24 ships in the port now. If this strike were to continue for another couple of days, prairie farmers may be paying for more than 18 ships awaiting grain. That is money out of their pockets every day.

There is only way in which I believe that we will be able to change the attitude of the longshoremen. I am not talking about the union leadership, because I believe the leadership knows the container clause should be investigated and removed for a trial period. The only way to change the attitude of the longshoremen is to guarantee them the same amount of work when the clause is dropped. In that way we can learn whether there will be as much work and whether the employers will have to pay a subsidy. We will find out if the removal of that clause will bring shipments back to Vancouver.

Another reason why I sincerely hope that the industrial commission removes the clause is that the Port of Vancouver and its officials have used the container clause as a crutch to explain why the port has not done better. If we take that clause out and the Port of Vancouver does not do any better, we had better look seriously at the management of the Canadian ports, and the employers will have to consider the kind of marketing they are doing because they will no longer have the container clause to use as an excuse.

I am not baiting labour. The employers are so convinced that this is the answer, they have already agreed that if there is any loss of work as compared to previous years they will subsidize the union for as many hours of labour as was done in the past. What could be fairer than that? If there is no improvement in the port without the container clause, and if the number of hours of work for longshoremen decreases substantially, then the union is right and the management and the port are wrong. They will have to realize that.

On the other hand, if there are 3,600 longshoremen who have been looking at the bird in the hand as opposed to the bird in the bush during this period of time, this is the only way they can be convinced about what is in their own best interest.

The longshoremen have made a number of valid points in the material that they sent to every Member of Parliament. There is more wrong with the Port of Vancouver than merely the container clause. The railway infrastructure is not as it should be. I can recall reading about the Port of Vancouver and the silk trains in the early 1920s. Shipments of silk would arrive from Japan, be instantly loaded onto trains which would be given a clear track right to eastern Canada. Silk from the Orient would arrive in eastern Canada quickly. It was a romantic period during which the silk trains became famous in the country. During my life I have not seen anything that the railways have done in terms of co-operating with the Port of Vancouver, either by applying rates or making it easier for shippers to use the Port of Vancouver. Without the co-operation of the railways, the trucking lines and the entire infrastructure, the Port of Vancouver will continue to be defeated by Oakland, Seattle, Tacoma, and now even Bellingham. This is because the American railways are better competitors.

The double stack train has been mentioned. Many of them are being used because shipping a container from Seattle to Chicago by using double stacking saves the shipper approximately $400 per container. Canadian railways do not have this capacity, although Canadian Pacific is talking about implementing something similar next year.

In order for the Port of Vancouver to compete, obviously the federal Government through the Department of Transport must lean on CN and CP to pay more attention to the West Coast ports of Canada and ensure they have an opportunity to compete fairly, as they cannot do now because of the railways.

I agree with the Member who spoke previously that the scope of the industrial inquiry commission should be broader than just the container clause. It should cover the whole gamit. I am surprised at the attitude of the Liberal Party. For years I sat in opposition in the House of Commons asking for an industrial commission into the Port of Vancouver. That never happened and I never had any co-operation. I spent years dealing with the Canada Ports Act and fighting for more autonomy for the Port of Vancouver.

Let me give an example. When a shipper in Seattle wants to move a million widgets through the Port of Seattle, knowing the rates and the arrangements, a board meeting can be convened to make a decision in half a day. While there may be slightly more autonomy to the Port of Vancouver in Canada, that kind of special deal would involve telexes heading back and forth to the Canada Ports Corporation in Montreal so that possibly in a week or two something may be done. By that time, those million widgets would have gone through the Port of Seattle.

The Port of Vancouver will never realize its full potential until it can function independently. Unfortunately, that has not yet happened and those of us from the West Coast will continue to fight the good fight in that regard.

This Bill must pass today for the sake of all Canadians. The union is prepared to work. The Bill will force the employers to stop their lock-out, because it is an absolute necessity that the port begin to operate again. The issue may be settled by knocking heads together. If the parties are not satisfied with the Larson report, they only have to arrive at an agreement between themselves. We cannot allow the port to be closed because it is essential. I hope the legislation passes today so that the port will open. We can then proceed to address this long dispute at the Port of Vancouver.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24 is an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations. Those who are beginning to follow this debate have come to realize that the purpose of this legislation is essentially to end an employers strike. The fact is that employees are the ones who are locked out. My Party finds it interesting that we are seeing a capital strike by the Maritime Employers Association who are looking for more benefits. The fact is they are being ordered to open their doors.

My concern about Bill C-24 is that it is essentially an apple containing a razor blade. I say that because there are a number of matters that have to be addressed very carefully, including the process of selecting the referee, the final terms of reference for the industrial inquiry commissioner, who it will be, and how the much bandied about Clause 13 is finally handled.

Before I move on to the specifics, I want to comment on what the Liberals have been saying today. I found it interesting that today they are proposing many amendments and finding many things wrong with the legislation, yet only 45 minutes after they received it yesterday their House Leader stood in the House to demand that it go through all stages in one breath so that the lock-out can end immediately. They did not want a full debate to take place in the House of Commons.

Another concern, which I address to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) as much as to anyone else, is that it was unfortunate that even as Members of the House received copies of this Bill the ILWU and members of the MEA on the West Coast had not received a copy of the legislation. They did not receive a copy until we vaxed one over the telephone at 10.15 yesterday morning. I recognize that the Minister had time constraints, but I think that when any legislation affecting employers or employees comes before the House, there is a responsibility of the House to ensure that those who may be directly or indirectly affected by the legislation are given copies before a debate takes place.

It is clear that this legislation is to order employers to open their doors because the situation on the West Coast is a lock-out. I have read the press clippings and I am amazed at the number of journalists, not only in the print media, but on radio and TV, who have called this a strike by longshoremen. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is the employers who have been involved in a lock-out.

Let me deal with Clause 13, particularly Clause 13(2). The Minister moved quickly on the suggestion made in the speech by my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). He agreed in principle that what is being applied to union officers must be applied to corporate officers as well. I am sure that everyone involved would have preferred that Clause 13(2) simply be deleted. I find no comparable precedent in the last decade of legislation before the House that was solely directed against a union. That is why the criticism directed against Bill C-24 as it now stands is correct. It is clearly anti-union. Because of the speed with which the Minister of Labour moved, I think he was intending to send a signal to the Maritime Employers Association as to where this process is going to go rather than simply taking a smack at the ILWU. The reason I say that is because there are two big sleeper sections in this Bill. The first section is the referee clause which is for the implementation of the Larson Report which touches on many different things. It requires the referee, who is acting directly for the nine locals of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and the 65 shipping and stevedoring companies to deal with various things, some of which are not fully delineated in the Larson Report as it stands. They are; recognized holidays, vacation with pay, the welfare plan, taking into account the effects of the unemployment insurance carve-out and the effect it will have on many workers. I would encourage Hon. Members of this House to take a look at the pension section of the Larson Report because I do not see how a referee, no matter how fair minded—and I understand from the Minister the referee will be chosen from Labour Canada—would be able to implement that with the kinds of wording and recommendations which have been left by the Larson Report.

There is automation protection. The public should be aware that the section on wages provides for no increase in 1986, which means an absolute freeze, 2 per cent starting January 1 of next year and 3 per cent on January 1 of 1988. All three of those increases run far behind the consumer price index or inflation. Therefore, the longshoremen are being asked to take a drop in wages for each of the next three years in terms of real pay.

There are sections on deep sea ship gangs, hours of work, despatch to rated classes, on-site training, continuous operations, transportation and travelling time and employment on the job. A previous speaker from the West Coast pointed out Clause 12 allows for the two sides, the ILWU and the MEA to come together to find common ground if they can find contractual language on any of these matters they find more satisfactory than the implementation of the Larson Report and its recommendations.

I would like to spend a moment on the other big sleeper. It concerns the industrial inquiry commissioner who is to be appointed by the Minister to deal with the container clause, the famed provision in Article 26.05, and such related other matters as the Minister deems appropriate to the container clause. This commission will have all the powers under the Inquiries Act and I, therefore, think Hon. Members of the House should keep in mind that that inquiry commissioner or commissioners will have the power to subpoena witnesses and documents, to cross examine, to take sworn evidence and so on, and perhaps for the first time on the West Coast really dig to the bottom of the container clause. But some kind of process should have been agreed upon in advance in terms of the appointment of the industrial inquiry commissioner. Other speakers have proposed that a short list be put forward and someone who is jointly acceptable to the two sides be chosen or that perhaps a short list of names be brought before a committee of this House, or the House Leaders, so at least there is a process to protect both sides.

I come back to my acronym of there being a razor blade in an apple because we can see clearly the anti-union bias in Bill C-24, and the signals which have gone to the Maritime Employers Association as a result. I think we want to be sure that not only the referee but the inquiry commissioner in particular must be and must be seen to be without bias in dealing with this highly contentious provision on containers in Article 26.05.

I would like to refer Hon. Members and those people who are interested to the Larson Report. Page 48 deals with both the Vancouver and Prince Rupert areas with respect to the packing and unpacking of containers at the docks and in warehouses, and I quote:

That requirement is emminently defensible based on the fact that a consolidated cargo must be packed or unpacked in any event in order to dispatch it to the several consignees to which it is destined or to consolidate it for shipping to a single destination.

Mr. Larson continues on this same point on page 54. He refers specifically to the container clause and why it is so important that the Minister move with extreme care in whom he choses and what is the attachment of related matters to that industrial inquiry:

There can be no doubt that the container clause constitutes a legitimate mechanism to secure and preserve bargaining unit work not unlike provisions against contracting out or non-affiliation clauses under other collective agreements.

Mr. Larson next says the following on page 56:

The employers expect that the profit from the one operation may be equal or greater than the profit from the other but for the employees who are presently loading and unloading containers it is a virtual certainty that only a few, if any, have the potential to be trained to operate cranes and even if all could be trained, there would not be enough work for them to do because the cranes are not labour-intensive.

Mr. Larson then goes on to say at page 57:

It has only been in the later stages of the negotiations that the Union has refused to bargain about the elimination of the container clause and I take that refusal to stem more from the failure of the Association to devise an acceptable guarantee than a firm decision that the clause not be eliminated under any circumstances.

Mr. Larson studied this in considerable detail and he gives us some idea of where to go in terms of the "container clause". I think some considerable study is required because, as we have learned from this debate, in the United States, following a number of very lengthy and protracted court procedures, the container clause is being reinserted on the West Coast of the United States because it was found that for many of those commodities it is more cost effective for them to be destuffed the way they did in the past.

In terms of the referee, who I understand from the Minister will come from Labour Canada, and in terms of the industrial inquiry commissioner, it is very important that not only myself, but other Hon. Members of the House not give the Minister carte blanche to wander off unwatched when we in this House are giving such powerful tools in Bill C-24 as those particular clauses.

I would like to look at some of the very important points raised by the ILWU in the release by Dan Cole, the Secretary-Treasurer of the ILWU, just in the last 48 hours. I quote from one of his documents:

Our Union understands the Port and its issues as well as anyone. We know that eliminating the Container Clause and crossing your fingers in the hope of increased business will cost us jobs without ensuring one more container moves through Vancouver.

Vancouver cannot compete with Seattle or Tacoma, not because of the Container Clause, but more imporantly due to inferior facilities, lack of local planning and control, and ineffective marketing of port operations.

The Port of Seattle has invested over $90 million in the past two years in building new facilities or upgrading existing ones. A comparison of container crane capability shows Vancouver with 5 cranes while Seattle and Tacoma combined have 31 cranes.

In my area on the north coast of British Columbia, there are several hundred longshoremen, about 150 full-time operating out of Prince Rupert and many more working part-time. We have 40 to 50 working regularly out of Stewart and 40 to 50 working regularly out of Port Simpson. We do not handle or deal with a lot of containers, it is principally raw logs being loaded for export to Alaska and to the Orient, wood in its sawed form coming principally by rubber and by rail to Prince Rupert, pulp, some explosives, grain and some other commodities. In Vancouver it is a much more complex fabric in terms of the work undertaken by the ILWU.

I want to spend another moment on Article 26.05, the container clause, because it has been touted by the Maritime Employers Assocation as being the big issue which is holding back development of the Port of Vancouver, but I believe it is more complicated than that. I quote from the background paper provided by the ILWU:

The container clause—Article 26.05 of the I.L.W.U.—B.C. Maritime Employers Association Collective Agreement—establishes a 90-mile radius around Vancouver (east to Hope, south to the U.S. border and west to Vancuover Island). Any container destined to a location outside the radius goes directly to that location. Any container destined to a location within the radius going to one owner, also goes directly to that location. Only containers with goods going to more than one destination and/or owner within the radius must be unpacked and loaded onto trucks or railway cars by longshoremen.

As Table 1 shows, the container clause affects less than 15 per cent of all containers which pass through the Port of Vancouver.

The report has this to say about container traffic:

Container traffic through the Port of Vancouver has been increasing: Since 1982 inbound container traffic has increased by 44 per cent and outbound by 64 per cent. The problem is that container traffic through American ports has increased even faster. In 1972, Vancouver container volume was 9.5 per cent of total U.S. West Coast volume. By 1985, Vancouver volume was only 4.8 per cent of the West Coast total.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that it had been basically cut in half. The report continues:

There are several factors accounting for different growth rates: In 1985 Tacoma more than doubled its container traffic as a result of the move of Sea-Land, one of the major shipping companies, to Tacoma from Seattle. Seattle suffered a corresponding decline.

A major comparative study of West Coast ports concluded that the ports which showed the most growth—Long Beach, Los Angeles, Tacoma—were those where the local Port Authority had been the most aggressive in marketing and developing inter-modal connections. Seattle, for example, has spent US $35 million on terminal improvements just to keep one major customer, American President Lines.

One only need refer to the chart provided in the same background document to see the problems we are having in the development of ports in British Columbia, including those of Vancouver, Prince Rupert, Stewart, Kitimat or any on the Fraser System. The political intervention in our system includes the federal Cabinet, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), Transport Canada, the Canada Ports Corporation Board of Directors, the Vancouver Port Corporation Board of Directors and finally the Port Manager and staff. There is this incredible bureaucracy, and of course those at the port level are all at this time appointed Conservative hacks.

The situation in Canada is not the same as the typical situation in a western U.S. port. The political intervention in that system begins with city council and goes to city officials, the port itself which is a public corporation, the Board of Harbour Commissioners, the executive and staff and then the actual seaport landlord. There is a much more direct chain of command for any borrowings required to develop the port.

I would like to deal with whether or not containers will come back to Vancouver because I think that is the key that has been misunderstood in this debate. I have touched on my concerns over Clause 13(2), and I think the Minister has agreed in principle that, although he will not take the clause out as it applies to unions, he is prepared to apply it evenly to corporations as well as the union. It is a saw off. I would prefer to see Clause 13(2) dropped.

Regarding the industrial inquiry commission, the commissioners and the final terms of reference, I am hopeful that the Minister will, later today, come to some kind of agreement on an amendment or procedure to see that fair-minded and unbiased people who are agreeable to the positions of both the ILWU and the MEA are chosen. This will provide for a process that will work and will be satisfactory in its conclusion. I think it is very important that whoever is chosen from Labour Canada to be the referee exercise great caution in providing contractual language so that it is acceptable and can be lived with by both sides in the dispute.

Let me wind up with something about containers which is not fully understood. I am quoting again from the union background document under the heading "Will The Containers Come Back To Vancouver?"

About 92,000 containers will cross the border from the ports of Seattle and Tacoma to Vancouver in 1986. Fifty thousand of these containers will be landed in the American ports by ships that also call at Vancouver (Dual Callers). If the longshoremen would only give up their container clause, so the critics argue, the shippers and freight forwarders would drop those 50,000 containers in Vancouver. The increased work would more than offset the 12,000 containers which the longshoremen currently unpack as a result of the container clause.

Then there are another 42,000 Vancouver-destined containers shipped to Seattle on lines that do not stop in Vancouver. Opponents of the container clause argue that a portion of these would be off-loaded in Vancouver as well.

So giving up the container clause should mean more work for Vancouver longshoremen, not less. The increased volume of containers moving through the port of Vancouver should more than make up for the loss of work unpacking a small number of containers. Why won't the Longshoremen's Union give up the clause?

Quite simply, there is no guarantee whatsoever that the containers presently diverted to Seattle and Tacoma will come back to Vancouver.

The Ports of Seattle and Tacoma will do whatever they can to keep those containers flowing through their ports. The Port of Seattle will be "very responsive to whatever Vancouver does if they are successful in removing their container clause," says Seattle Port Manager Ross Dwyer. Their track record indicates they have been very successful in attracting business because of their aggressive marketing approach. An example is Seattle's promise to install three cranes with longer gantries to handle the new wider-body vessels ordered by American President Lines—each vessel can carry 3800 TEUs—even before these ships have been launched.

Vancouver, in contrast, has done little to get a larger share of the business or even keep what it has.

So far, there has been no indication that the Vancouver Port Corporation is prepared to change. The current strategy seems to be "get rid of the container clause and keep your fingers crossed."

I know that farmers across Canada are greatly concerned about the movement of grain, as are people in Vancouver. The over-all amount of merchandise coming into the Port of Vancouver for off-loading destined for areas throughout Canada and the number of commodities going out through Vancouver, Prince Rupert, the Port of Stewart and other ports clearly means that we must come to some kind of an acceptable process designed to get the collective agreement process moving again.

I can only say about the container clause that there seems to be a degree of acceptability both on the part of the ILWU and the MEA, but I would urge the Minister to move much more cautiously in the referee process and the industrial inquiry commission process regarding the appointments that are made and the terms of reference. Particularly, I would urge him to gut the anti-union signals he has so clearly entrenched in Clause 13(2) which provides that sanctions may be taken against unions and their officers with no similar provision for action to be taken against Maritime Employees Association companies. At least to this point in time, those are the ones who have been the dogs in the manger.

We are talking about a lock-out by the employers. This is not a strike by the workers. The workers have made it clear all along that they intended to continue to move grain and other commodities without any work stoppage whatsoever. They are the ones who have been the good operators. The MEA has brought this matter to the point where the House of Commons had to deal with it rather than the collective bargaining process.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Hon. Member has the same concern as our Party about the clause in the Bill which provides for the industrial commissioner, that is, that the clause is drawn too narrowly. It refers only to the container clause and does not deal with the concerns the workers will have with regard to job security, the development of the port, the development of rail facilities and improvement in the competitive position.

The B.C. Maritime Employers Association is arguing that there will be an additional 80,000 containers going through the port if the container clause is taken out. At the same time, the unions are very concerned that there will be a loss of jobs. The Hon. Member has to some extent already made this point, but I would be interested in hearing confirmation from him that the terms of reference and that Clause 7 should make provision for the matter of development of the port, and so on. Without the development of the port and the competitive position, those jobs may well not be there.

The Hon. Member has very well outlined the type of aggressive marketing made by the ports of Seattle and Tacoma. But there was legislation in the Western Grain Transportation Act which required that CN and CP improve rail facilities and port facilities in Vancouver and other West Coast ports. Yet the Government is not pressing to see those actions taken to improve the port and make it more competitive. I would be interested to know if the Hon. Member feels that these types of provisions should be included in Clause 7 of the Bill. These provisions require that the industrial disputes commissioner report—perhaps not in a binding way—on the container clause, because that is in the Act, and as well that he report on job security, development of the port, development of rail facilities, and the improvement of the competitive position of the port. Unless that happens, there will not be the extra jobs which the employers' association is forecasting. Naturally, the employees will be unhappy if that competitive position does not improve with the removal of the container clause and the jobs are not there.

Mr. Fulton: I will be very brief in response to that question. The industrial inquiry commission will find that it has to look at some of the points that the Hon. Member has touched on. There is no doubt that in terms of the questions on rail, warehousing space, crane capacity, docking facilities, it is a great deal to ask of the commission to get a clear grip within six months. Because of the broad powers provided under the Inquiries Act, to be able to cross-examine witnesses and subpoena documents, a considerable amount of information at the nub of the issue will be looked at.

In terms of the broader aspects of the port, in terms of grain handling capacity, to ask the industrial inquiries commission to do all of that within six months would be unrealistic. Then you start getting into the questions of hopper cars, demurrage, how much grain is going to be moving out, what are the likely long-term contractual prospects with the Soviet Union, China, and everyone else.

In terms of what is presently in the Bill, I do not think it is possible to amend that clause to provide for something much broader. Certainly, as a British Columbia Member, I would like a process put in place that takes a closer look at all of the ports on the West Coast, and looks at the best way of developing those for dealing with the Pacific Rim, and market commodities that are just now starting to come on line. Here I think of new coal prospects, new grain markets, new wood products, and other new products that may come on line, as well as new imports coming into the country.

In terms of asking the industrial inquiry commission to deal with everything that has been dealt with in the Larson Report, it is quite clear that the Government has decided to go another way. In terms of amending this Bill to try and throw all of the Larson recommendations in under Clause 7, I frankly think that would be ruled out of order during this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is as follows: The Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux, Minister of Labour, moved:

That Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the Chair.

The Chairman: House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of port operations.

Shall Clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2—Definitions

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-24 be amended on page 1 by deleting line 21 and substituting the following:

—payments in respect of pensions, M & M, Supplementary Pension, Welfare Plan and Supplementary Unemployment Benefit Program.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that the amendment proposed by my hon. colleague is unnecessary in view of the fact that those items mentioned in the amendment are already included in subparagraph (b). That is the reason why subparagraph (b) is there. I do not see the necessity of such an amendment.

The Chairman: The Chair is ready to rule on the amendment. The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: There are two different things. Obviously, the Chair does have the right to rule. However, in response to what the Minister has said, I do believe it is very important that we have some real guarantee that the words I have mentioned are included with what is in subparagraph (b). I would certainly prefer to see the Minister stand up in this House and indicate that he is willing to accept this wording just to make sure that the worker's right to these extra benefits are guaranteed.

The Chairman: I am ready to make my ruling. It may not be necessary to hear the Minister. I have the proposed amendment by the Member for Churchill which appears to me to be a substantive amendment to the interpretation clause. I cannot accept that amendment by virtue of 773(10) of Beauchesne. Therefore, I must rule the amendment out of order.

On Clause 2, the Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan.

• (1240)

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, if I might discuss your ruling, on a point of order, he has indicated that it was basically concluded, so how can it be substantive?

The Chairman: The Chair has ruled on the proposed amendment, and of course the Chair must stand by its ruling.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I rise to seek further clarification. Perhaps the Minister could assure the House that it is his understanding that the current wording in fact includes the items to which the Hon. Member for Churchill referred, namely,the discussion and negotiations on the M and M supplementary pension, the welfare plan, and the supplementary unemployment benefit program. Would he assure us that it is the Government's intention to include these items?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I believe I have already indicated that. We have been informed by the drafters of the Bill that they were included. That is why subclause 2(1)(b) is there.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 3—Resumption of Operations and Work

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I have a number of amendments to Clause 3. However I should first like to move the following:

That subclause 3(a) of Bill C-24 be amended by deleting line 18 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"all grain handling operations at ports".

The Chairman: The Chair has read the proposed amendment of the Hon. Member for Churchill and finds it to be in order.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, could the Hon. Member explain the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, the amendment in the name of the Hon. Member for Churchill along with another three amendments to be dealt with later are designed to meet the intent of the legislation. As we understand it, the intent of the legislation is to ensure that Canadian grain will begin to move again on the West Coast.

Rather than tinker with the collective bargaining process, which one would assume is still under way in British Columbia, our purpose is to instruct the companies, through this amendment, to open their gates so that workers can return to work at those places which deal with grain. Thereby we would relieve the pressure upon the federal Government and upon western Canadian farmers by allowing their products to go to market. At the same time we would not be interfering further in the collective bargaining process. The union and company association involved would continue to take whatever actions they deem appropriate to achieve a collective agreement dealing with all other bulk commodities and, in particular, with the question of the movement of containers. That is the intent of this particular amendment as well as the additional three amendments to the same clause.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I need a few more details about what is being proposed by the Hon. Member. He referred to grains. Is it his view that other agricultural products should be included in the same way? If that is the case, why are they not covered by the amendment of the Hon. Member for Churchill?

Having conferred with the Hon. Member for Algoma, who is our Party's critic and an expert on such matters, far more than most Members of the House, I am not even sure whether oil seeds and other agricultural products have been included. Perhaps the Hon. Member could indicate whether he feels oil seeds would be covered by the description of grains in his amendment. Perhaps he could elaborate upon whether or not he feels other agricultural products should be covered.

The reason I am asking these questions is that while it is recognized that "grains" is a generic term, we often refer to grains and oil seeds. I want to be assured that both are covered under his proposal this morning.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member used the term "grains" as being generic. In drafting this particular amendment and those to follow, it was the intention that it would be interpreted as the generic. If a grain product is being prevented from moving because of a decision by the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association, we think that it should be allowed to be moved. Quite frankly, those particular gates should be unlocked for the purpose of supporting prairie producers of any kind of grain commodity. Supposedly the whole purpose of the legislation is to provide for the movement of grains and agricultural products.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I am not being critical; I am just seeking further explanation of the meaning of the Hon. Member's amendment.

Would he entertain a further amendment, or is he thinking of amending it further, to cover other agricultural commodities shipped out of the same port?

Although we are speaking largely in terms of grains and oil seeds exported from that port, nevertheless it deals with other agricultural commodities, perishables, and some livestock, although certainly not in as great quantities as the other products. We recognize the general difficulty faced by agriculture, not just the grain sector. Although we know that its case is a particularly difficult one, generally we recognize that agriculture is faced with difficulties. Would the Hon. Member entertain amending it to cover other agricultural products? Perhaps it is just an oversight. I think it would further his very good proposal this morning.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, of course I have no problem with modifying it. Perhaps I am in your hands, Mr. Chairman, in terms of the most appropriate mechanism and whether I can in fact accept a friendly amendment in this particular place or whether the Hon. Member would in fact have to move a subamendment to meet the intent of what he said. Either way we would certainly support the suggested change.

The Chairman: Certainly the Hon. Member could move a subamendment, providing it is in order.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, some of my colleagues have indicated a desire to speak on this particular clause. While they are doing so, perhaps the Hon. Member could look at the wording and see whether he can come up with a very specific amendment before we complete consideration of the particular clause.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I will follow the Hon. Member's suggestion. While some of his colleagues are directing further remarks to the particular clause, I will draft an appropriate subamendment and present it shortly.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, in moving the amendment it was my intent to focus on what the Government and others have said was the real purpose of the legislation. There is a concern, especially in western Canada, that grain must be moving to port. In the past, union representatives have indicated their willingness to move grain. The problem is that they are locked out at the present time. If the real intent of the legislation is not to force workers back to work with a new collective agreement, and if we want to deal with the main problem of getting grain to market, that is what the Bill should do. If that is what the Bill proposes to do then that is what it should state.

What is now happening is that, by law, we have a situation in which the workers have the right to strike and the employers have the right to lock out. They have been denied the opportunity to come to any sort of negotiated settlement in this Bill. They fall under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code and must negotiate as employers and employees with rights in terms of this legislation. By acting today to close the situation we are saying that we will not let them negotiate.

The port has not been shut down for a very long time. We have an offer from the workers that they are more than willing to move grain products. I would like to hear from the Minister as to why this legislation does not restrict itself to that one item and why he will not support the amendment.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I should speak right away in view of the fact that there might be a subamendment to the amendment. Nevertheless, since my hon. colleague indicates that I would not support the amendment I might as well make it clear that I will not support the amendment.

The Bill we are dealing with now is entitled an "Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations". We intend to have all commodities dealt with in the ports of British Columbia, which is what has to be done right now.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Chairman, since some of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Churchill disturbed me, I would ask him to look at Clause 12 of the Bill. The Hon. Member says that they cannot negotiate. They have every right to negotiate, and that right is maintained in that clause. If the parties can agree on any particular clause at all then the Bill will not apply to that clause. The suggestion that they cannot negotiate is entirely wrong. I think that should be very forcibly stated.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to move an amendment to the amendment which states:

That the amendment be amended by inserting immediately after the words "grain handling" the following:

"and other agricultural"

The Chairman: The Chair has received the proposed subamendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. In the opinion of the Chair, it seems to extend the scope of the amendment. However, I am ready to give it the benefit of the doubt. Therefore, I find the subamendment to be in order.

Therefore, the debate is on the subamendment.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your ruling with respect to the subamendment. The purpose of this subamendment is to clarify what is meant in the amendment. I believe this has been acknowledged by the Hon. Member who proposed the amendment in the first place.

So that members of the Committee of the Whole can understand the purpose of the subamendment, it is to further define what is meant in the amendment. First, it is not entirely clear whether grain handling would always cover oil seeds. The subamendment would ensure that there is no confusion and that, in fact, we mean grain in its generic sense.

Second, the purpose of the subamendment is to reassure the agricultural community, not just the grain producing sector, that we want to afford them the same protection as grain producers. The reason for this is because of the U.S. farm Bill and other policies which have hindered areas of agriculture in Canada that are not solely restricted to grain production. Indeed, there are various other sectors of our agricultural economy which are suffering as much as the grain area. My remarks are not meant to diminish the gravity of the situation with respect to farmers in the grain sector but, rather, to indicate that this is a burden that all farmers have been asked to carry. Therefore, potential damage from stoppages of shipments of any agricultural product is serious and the devastating effects, although considerable in the grain handling sector, also exist in terms of stoppages of potential exports of other agricultural commodities as well.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I would like to indicate our support for the principle of the subamendment. It extends and confirms the original intent of the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Churchill.

The Chairman: Shall the subamendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Subamendment (Mr. Boudria) negatived: Yeas, 9; Nays, 29.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Churchill on the amendment.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the amendment, we certainly support the subamendment. We thought that was actually a very good suggestion by the Hon. Member on behalf of the Liberal caucus. However, we also, as we stated earlier, believe it is important to deal with the amendment itself and see that it is passed. There is certainly a perception in this country that we are ordering these people back to work because we want the grain to move. If that is not the case, then the Government should say so. It is very important to understand that we have legislation which regulates collective bargaining and gives certain powers to both sides if they are unable to reach a successful conclusion. What we are doing with the passage of this legislation is saying that the Canada Labour Code is not being allowed to work in order to settle collective agreements.

• (1300)

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. It being one o'clock, shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the Bill again later this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.03 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

EASTERN ONTARIO PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is raping the economy of the Ottawa Valley. The people of eastern Ontario elected several Tory Members to Parliament in September, 1984, but they are now wondering where those voices have disappeared to.

While the Government romps merrily onward destroying many of the fine achievements of the National Research Council, right here in the city of Ottawa and across Canada, the people are asking what has silenced the voices of the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper), the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner), the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), and the Hon. Member for Lanark—Renfrew—Carleton (Mr. Dick) who is a member of the Conservative Cabinet and is supposed to be the defender of eastern Ontario interests.

All the Members carry on a deafening silence while the public service and scientific community of Ottawa are torn asunder, while one of the finest world-renowned science and technology achievements, namely, the $50 million Algonquin Radio Observatory at Lake Traverse is being phased out after only 20 years of operation, while another great achievement of Canadian science and technology, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, is cut to shreds and leading members of the scientific community are leaving Canada, and while the Government arranged for the sale of Mitel Corporation to British Telecommunications Corporation only to have the latter decide to cut several hundred jobs—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

MINES AND MINING

OPENING CELEBRATION FOR LARGEST MINING PLANT IN ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): On Saturday, November 15, Mr. Speaker, Selbaie Mines, north of Joutel, marked the opening of the largest open-pit mining plant in Abitibi, or zone A-1.

This project called for investments of $130 million by Ressources BP Canada, Esso Mineral and TransCanada Pipelines, as well as 800 extra man-years of work for development and construction. In every respect, the project was carried out in a commendable spirit of team work.

Thanks to the outstanding performance of executive director Robert C. Bryce and the active participation of Quebec's Department of Energy and Resources, the employees are proud to work for Selbaie Mines and play a leading role in the mining industry of Abitibi-Témiscamingue and Canada.

ACID RAIN

QUEBEC MAPLE TREES—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Over the past five years, Mr. Speaker, Quebec maple syrup producers have tapped 2 million fewer trees as a result of the acid rain phenomenon, a loss estimated at a minimum of $87 million by the Agricultural Producers' Union. In addition, if this serious situation does not improve, the Quebec maple syrup industry is expected to disappear within five years.

Mr. Speaker, owing to the nearly slavish respect of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for President Reagan, this Government is destroying the source of income of 10,000 men and women in Quebec.

[English]

But acid rain not only threatens Quebec's maple syrup industry, it also threatens one of our national symbols. If arguments of reason and common sense cannot convince the Government of the urgency of the problem, we can only hope that the evocative image of a withered and colourless maple leaf, and empty maple syrup bottles, will have the power to stir the Government to action.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

REOPENING OF OTTAWA FACILITIES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of Members to an event occurring today that is of interest and importance to all Canadians.

Today the Royal Canadian Mint is officialy reopening its historic facilities at 320 Sussex Drive here in Ottawa. These renovated facilities will provide a renewed impetus for the Mint's future success in the highly competitive minting industry.

As members may know, the Mint's international marketing achievements were recently recognized when it won the 1986 Canada Export Award. This achievement speaks both to the technical expertise which resides in the Mint, and also to the excellence displayed in marketing this expertise all over the world.

Success stories like the Mint demonstrate how we Canadians can meet international challenges and compete successfully on a world-wide scale. I ask Hon. Members to join with me in congratulating the staff of the Mint and wishing it the best success in the future.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CANCELLATION OF MEETING BY MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Canada Post has acted in a cowardly and irresponsible manner by cancelling at the last minute a meeting scheduled between himself and a group known as "Citizens United for Equitable Postal Service".

Representatives from this organization had made all their plans to travel to Ottawa from various communities in the country. Airline tickets were bought and other expenses had been incurred. The alleged reason for the cancellation of the meeting that was scheduled for November 18 is that the Minister is speaking in Vancouver two days later, on November 20.

I have news for the Minister. Holiday week was last week and nobody requires three days in 1986 to get to Vancouver, even if one is a Tory and a little slow at moving about.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) used one word in his statement which seems to the Chair to be unparliamentary. The word is "cowardly". I wonder if the Hon. Member would please the House by withdrawing it.

Mr. Boudria: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

FASHION ACCESS CANADA

NEW NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATION WELCOMED

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise before the House today to encourage my fellow Members to support an exciting new national non-profit organization that will assist young Canadians make realistic and informed decisions as they seek education and career opportunities in the Canadian fashion industry. Fashion Access Canada-Entree Mode Canada, will publish a career guide next year. In 1989 it will convene a national symposium, to be followed by the creation of a fashion access resource and development centre.

This dynamic group has organized a phenomenal fashion presentation, with contributions from a stellar group of the brightest lights in Canadian fashions, as well as some promising newcomers, Friday night in Ottawa at the Capital Congress Centre.

As it happens, the Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) and I today are wearing creations of a young designer from Toronto. With all the promise that Fashion Access Canada represents for the youth of tomorrow in one of our most important industries, I am confident that it will not be long before I will be wearing a dress fashioned by a young person from Argenteuil-Papineau.

INDUSTRY

MITEL CORPORATION—ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF RENFREW PLANT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago Mitel Corporation announced a major export of production which will result in the closing of that company's Renfrew plant at a cost of more than 500 jobs.

Mitel has said that the Renfrew plant must be closed so that production can be moved closer to international markets. We have to recall, however, that it is no longer Mitel management which is calling all the shots, but British Telecom which, thanks to the Government's blind faith in foreign ownership, now owns a majority stake in Mitel and is moving that company's technology to Wales.

On May 16, 1986, in Parliament, the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion read from a letter of intent signed by British Telecom promising to preserve Mitel's Canadian workforce of 2,500. That job guarantee has now been broken.

Since 1978 over $32 million in federal grants has gone to Mitel for the purposes of technology development. My leader has called for a full accounting into the contractual obligations of Mitel in all past and present federal spending agreements in light of the Renfrew plant closing. The Government should also table in the House all documents pertaining to the sale of Mitel to British Telecom so that a parliamentary committee can review the situation and this shoddy loss of Canadian jobs.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S ALLEGED NEGATIVE ATTITUDE TOWARD QUEBEC PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to call the attention of this House to the fact that Quebecers are very disappointed with the cavalier attitude taken by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) to the development of Quebec's pharmaceutical industry, when he sent a letter that was critical of this project to the entire English-speaking population of this country, forgetting Quebec altogether.

On Friday, November 7, Mr. Speaker, under the approving eye of their leader, the stalwart troops of the socialist party found nothing better to do all day in the House than delay the tabling of our Bill on the pharmaceutical industry.

Why does the leader of the socialist party want to deprive Quebecers of industrial investments totalling nearly one billion dollars? Why does the leader of the socialist party want to deprive Quebec of 3,000 jobs with very substantial technological benefits?

Mr. Speaker, Quebecers are not about to forget the socialist party!

NUCLEAR ENERGY

ONTARIO—PREMIER'S REJECTION OF FURTHER NUCLEAR POWER PLANTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Premier Peterson made the right decision not to favour the building of more nuclear power plants in Ontario. "I don't see another Darlington being built", he said. That is a wise decision considering Ontario Hydro's $25 billion debt is one half of the provincial debt. Peterson rejected the possibility of power shortages within five years and said his Government feels no pressing need to plan new generating facilities. He hinted his Government might try to save power through conservation rather than build a multibillion dollar plant.

The Ontario Select Committee on Energy called for a change to the Power Corporation Act to allow Hydro to invest in conservation efforts. Currently Hydro is only allowed to spend money to create power. We urge the Premier and his Cabinet to put Ontario Hydro on the path to energy conservation to reduce our dependence on nuclear power.

ANNIVERSARY OF PROCLAMATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on November 18, 1918, Latvia was proclaimed an independent democratic republic. Independence perished when the Soviet Army marched into Latvia in 1940.

The anniversary of Latvian independence is celebrated in recognition of the spirit of independence and freedom which still burns bright in the hearts of the Latvian people. As a nation, Latvia has had to endure great hardship, suffering from the devastation of two world wars and lengthy periods of foreign occupation. Today, on the 68th anniversary of its independence, Latvia remains illegally occupied by the Soviet Union.

When at times we take for granted the liberties we enjoy in Canada, we need only recall the adversity and strife suffered by Latvia to appreciate our good fortune as Canadians. November 18 is an important day of commemoration for Latvians throughout the free world. Let us join with them in marking this day as one of special significance for all who value freedom, liberty, and justice.

CHEMICAL INSTITUTE OF CANADA'S CRITICISM OF BUDGETARY CUTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) has responded to the criticisms of the cuts to the National Research Council budget by stating that those criticisms are due to partisan considerations. I want to bring to the Minister's attention the fact that the Chemical Institute of Canada, representing 8,000 professionals in the chemical field, has written to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) criticizing the Government for the cuts it has made to the National Research Council budget, and stating that continuous cuts in research will dismantle many scientific endeavours which have taken decades to build, and will relegate Canada to the position of a second-rate science nation.

We in the New Democratic Party agree with that view. We believe the announced review is unnecessary and what the Minister should do is put back the funds he has taken away from the NRC. Research teams are being broken up, expensive equipment such as the $50 million Algonquin Observatory is being effectively abandoned, and we have to ask ourselves whether we can afford not to make these—

REPORTS ON QUALITY OF ST. CLAIR RIVER WATER

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as all Hon. Members are aware, my constituency of Sarnia—Lambton contains many chemical plants situated along the St. Clair River. Similarly, every Hon. Member knows that occasionally we experience chemical spills into the river from these plants. This is the negative news of which we are all made aware in great detail.

For example, when the least toxic form of dioxin was detected in the parts per quadrillion range in a single sample of Sarnia drinking water, the information was immediately released and highly publicized. While not pleasant, this report was accepted as it fell within the Ontario provincial Minister's statement that he would not be party to any delay in reporting of data, good or bad.

It is, however, unacceptable that the constituency of Sarnia—Lambton had to wait several months for the news from the Ontario Minister of the Environment that, after extensive testing, no dioxins had been found in the St. Clair River between January and June, 1986. In fact the news was released to the press in late October. Several weeks later the report was given to the concerned organizations in my constituency. I would urge the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to liaise with his provincial counterpart to ensure that timely reporting with a balanced perspective becomes a fact.

SHIPBUILDING

MINISTER'S REPORTED REFUSAL TO MEET INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform the House of the so-called consultation process of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) and the Government's attitude toward the shipbuilding industry of Canada. Last week the President of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repair Association was informed by officials of the Minister that the Minister could not meet with everyone and that he was simply too busy.

The Minister's predecessor was not too busy to meet with representatives of the Fisheries Council of Canada when it wanted to discuss the retention of the import duty exemption for foreign-built fishing vessels. Why then has the Minister refused to meet with representatives of Canada's hard-pressed shipbuilding industry who seek to reverse this exemption? Is it because the Minister is all too familiar with the broken promises the Government made to the Canadian shipbuilding industry? Is it because the Government has made a decision to write off this industry and allow thousands of jobs to be exported to other countries?

Canadians want a full and fair consultation process, not a process whereby only those with special influence or ties to the Conservative Government have access to the Minister. The Minister should acknowledge his grave error and should meet with the President of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association to come up with a suitable policy for this sector.

REVENUE CANADA

DISAPPEARANCE OF TAX RECORDS—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. When the Prime Minister was Leader of the Opposition he said:

> Effective and proper conduct of the affairs of the Department of National Revenue is based on two-way trust. That is indispensable.

Yesterday the Minister destroyed that trust by refusing to accept responsibility for the disappearance of the microfiche tax records of 16 million Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): This is the biggest invasion of privacy in Canadian history and perhaps in world history. Why is the Minister evading responsibility for this invasion of privacy? Why is he evading responsibility for this bad management of his Department's affairs?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not seeking to evade responsibility; neither am I seeking to minimize the gravity of what has occurred. I have undertaken to the House, and will undertake again to my hon. friend, to take steps to try to make certain that the Department is more secure in the future and that there will be security procedures which will make the situation less likely to occur again. I have undertaken to do this and to report to the House as soon as possible.

[Translation]

CONFIDENTIALITY OF INCOME TAX RETURNS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, for two weeks, the Minister has been aware of the greatest invasion of privacy in Canada's history. What steps did he take during those two weeks to keep the information contained in the microfiche from being used to obtain details of the income tax returns of Canadians, and can he guarantee in the House today that the information provided by Canadians in their income tax returns is fully protected? Can he answer this important question?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first I think my hon. friend would realize that while the investigation was going on it was difficult to inform the House and the country of what had occurred. Second, I immediately asked my Deputy to exercise his responsibilities under the Financial Administration Act to account for the delay in the reporting of this loss.

We have sent directives across the country to ensure that the microfiche which are a necessary part of tax administration are in secure custody, that all of the necessary security procedures are in fact in place and that they may be improved upon. I have asked that the necessity for so many sets of microfiche be reviewed. I have asked that security procedures, not only as far as the custody of the material is concerned but as far as the suitability of personnel is concerned, be reviewed as well. There will be other measures taken in due course.

POSSIBLE USE MADE OF MISSING INFORMATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to what the Minister said. I recall that he said yesterday "there is no likelihood that the information provided an entrée into the computer system of taxpayers, there are safeguards in place to protect that."

Will the Minister confirm that even today, two weeks after he found out about this mess, it is possible to obtain information from the tax returns of taxpayers by simply phoning a Revenue Canada district taxation office and giving the type of basic information to the person who answers the phone that was found in the missing microfiches? Will he confirm that in spite of what he has just told us it is possible to use the information from those missing microfiches to obtain information about the confidential tax returns of Canadian taxpayers?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly to what circumstances my honourable friend is referring. What I have tried to say to Canadians and to this House is that one can never be sure in individual cases that there might not be a lapse in security. But to say that the information that was made available on this type of microfiche would automatically provide an entrée, or that telephone inquiries to a Revenue Canada office under these circumstances would produce information, I do not think is in accordance with what usually occurs.

INQUIRY CONCERNING PROTECTIVE MEASURES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): At my request this morning a woman telephoned the Revenue Canada office in Montreal. She gave my name, my social insurance number, my address, my date of birth. She was able to get into my 1985 income tax return.

My question to the Minister is this. Since November 4 you were aware that 16 million tax files had been lost. What type of measure did you implement?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask that the Hon. Member remember that when addressing another Member or a Minister, he is not supposed to use the word "you".

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I gather that my honourable colleague certainly gave permission to this lady to do that. He probably also gave her a Power of Attorney. I do not know what the circumstances were. But if this situation has occurred, and if it is irregular, then there are measures that will have to be taken. On the other hand, I would like to know more about the circumstances before answering the question and just exactly why he did this, and under what circumstances the lady used his name and his data.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, you cannot give Power of Attorney by telephone. Therefore, the woman just picked up the phone and said that "I am Alfonso Gagliano, this is my social insurance number," and she received the information.

[Translation]

CONFIDENTIALITY OF INCOME TAX RETURNS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Considering the declaration of taxpayers' rights that guarantees that financial and personal information is confidential, how do you account for the fact that although since November 4, you were aware that tax files had been stolen, this morning, November 18, it is still possible to have access to that information by telephone? Is this declaration worth the paper it is written on?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): That kind of telephone access, if it is exactly as the Hon. Member described it, is certainly not a proper type of access. I will take that very seriously. As I did yesterday, I am also suggesting that in view of what happened there has been a breach of the Taxpayers' Declaration of Rights. The very fact that this information disappeared is a guarantee of that breach.

DETROIT CONFERENCE ON GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY CONTROL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Starting yesterday and continuing today and tomorrow there is an important conference taking place in Detroit on the subject matter of water quality control in the Great Lakes.

• (1425)

Attending that conference are the Governors of two U.S. States and the Ministers of Environment from both the Province of Quebec and the Province of Ontario. At a time when we are trying to get the Americans to take environmental matters seriously, why was the Government of Canada represented by only an empty chair?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is based upon a story in The Globe and Mail this morning which was as outrageously unfair as it was totally inaccurate. It was unfair because I had three speaking engagements within the same 72-hour period, so it was not physically possible for me to be in Detroit, and inaccurate because the Government of Canada was in fact represented at that conference by the seven top experts on the subject in the entire country.

Mr. Broadbent: I want the Minister to know that, however the Government may act, we do not rely upon The Globe and Mail for our facts.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister confirm that he just informed the organizers of the conference not many days ago that he would not be attending? Will he admit to the House that while there were officials there, there was not a political representative of the Government of Canada and there were political representatives of the Governments of Ontario and Quebec and of two U.S. States? Where is the leadership from Canada on this?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would be the last one to accuse the Hon. Member and his Party of relying totally upon The Globe and Mail for their facts. When they rely upon facts at all, which is rare enough, they come from the Canadian Labour Congress. The truth is that the Government of the United States was not represented by a major politician. It was represented by a senior official. For our part, we were represented by among other people Dr. James Kingham, the Director General of the Great Lakes program.

Mr. Broadbent: The two million Canadians represented by the Canadian Labour Congress will have noted the Minister's comments with interest.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not think that the Government of Canada is lending credibility to the arguments of certain American politicians, namely, that we do not take the issue seriously when we do not send a political representative down there to make the case which would demonstrate Canadian government leadership? Surely that is the issue.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I agree that it is very important for the Minister of the Environment and other Ministers to go down to the United States to plead Canada's case in the United States. I have done that more often in 12 months than any previous Minister of the Environment has done in 12 years.

TRADE

EXPORT OF HELICOPTER PARTS TO IRAN

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. There is increasing concern that our export control policy may be dictated by Washington. In January of last year, as the Deputy Prime Minister properly pointed out, export permission was refused for T-400 engine parts being shipped to Tehran. In September, the U.S. Department of Commerce authorized United Technologies to authorize Pratt & Whitney Canada to ship helicopter parts to Tehran. During the same month export permission was granted. During that period of time were there representations made by the U.S. administration to the Canadian Government to relax or set aside our export control policy?

• (1430)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the reason that that process took place is because the assemblies in question had a U.S. component for which an export control permit was sought. Because the assemblies in this particular case were used for civilian commercial use, no permit was required.

MINISTERIAL CONSULTATION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister tells us that they were used for civilian purposes, something which I do not think we know yet from the evidence. That being said, the control policy itself provides that there will be ministerial consultation when any component could have a military or civilian application. Was there such ministerial consultation? What evidence did the Minister in question look at that satisfied him that it was for civilian application only?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House yesterday, we were assured by Pratt & Whitney that the parts in question were for civilian commercial use. That undertaking was reaffirmed in a letter to the Canadian Government. Furthermore, on September 10 the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced a new export control policy and drew attention to the fact that the area of helicopters is one that provides some difficulty because of the interchangability of the use of helicopters from commercial to military service. As a result, the Minister drew that question to our attention. It is a matter which is being considered currently by Cabinet. If there is to be any change in that policy it will be announced in due course.

DETROIT CONFERENCE ON GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The fact remains that at a major conference at which issues of Great Lakes water quality were being discussed there was an empty chair in which a Canadian should have sat. Why did the Minister, or the officials in his Department, allow such a deplorable image to be created, that of an empty chair in which a Canadian should have sat? Never mind who attended the conference, the fact remains that beside the Canadian flag at an important panel discussion there was an empty chair. Why did the Minister allow that to happen?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, the Government of Canada was represented officially by the seven top experts on Great Lakes water pollution in the country: Elizabeth Dowdeswell, Regional Director General of Ontario; Dr. James Kingham, Director General of Great Lakes Programs; Dr. Ron Shimizu, Corporate Adviser on the Great Lakes, and four others. There was no empty chair.

Mr. Broadbent: Where was the Government of Canada?

Mr. McMillan: There was a Canadian flag and sitting behind that flag were seven of the top experts on Great Lakes water pollution in the entire Dominion of Canada.

EMPTY CHAIR

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, no one is disputing who attended the conference. What we are disputing is why the Government of Canada allowed an empty chair and why it did not arrange for at least one of those seven top officials to sit in the chair representing Canada when an important discussion was going on. Why did the Minister not arrange for that to happen?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has the mistaken impression that a conference was being held in Detroit at which Canada and the United States were negotiating key questions—

Mr. Broadbent: No, he did not say that.

Mr. McMillan: —in the absence of an official delegation from the Government of Canada. That is not true. It was a forum in which Great Lakes related issues were aired, just as they were several months ago on Mackinac Island when I was present with many of the same participants.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

USE OF PRATT & WHITNEY ENGINES IN IRAN—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I'm afraid that Canada is sending supplies to both Iran and Iraq, the two belligerents in the Persian Gulf, because according to my information, Iraq uses eight B-212 ASW-type helicopters, in a special configuration, to attack ships equipped with the same engines manufactured by Pratt & Whitney. It uses them to sink Iranian tankers in the Persian Gulf. I want to ask the Minister: How can he possibly believe Pratt & Whitney's claims that the engines are used only for peaceful purposes, when we know perfectly well that helicopters of this type require a steady supply of spare parts to be able to continue their missions?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we believe that Pratt & Whitney has acted in good faith. As well, we believe that the parts in question were destined for civilian commercial use. I can inform the House that as a result of the questions that have arisen Pratt & Whitney has voluntarily postponed further shipments of the order in question, the order being in the amount of some $2.7 million U.S. About $624,000 U.S. of the order has been shipped. However, until such time as the investigation and examination of this issue are completed, Pratt & Whitney has voluntarily withdrawn or postponed any further shipments.

As I said, there has been an acknowledgement of the dual capability of these machines.

Mr. Garneau: That is not what you said yesterday.

Mr. Mazankowski: I informed the House yesterday on the basis of the information I had at that time. There is new information. I have always qualified my answers in that regard. I am trying to be as forthcoming as I can. If the Hon. Member has some criticism with that, then he is probably not interested in my further completion of the answer.

Mr. Garneau: That is what I have, some criticism.

PROVISION OF HELICOPTER PARTS TO PERSIAN GULF REGION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is telling us that he has every confidence in the information provided by Pratt & Whitney which, in turn, gets its information from the Ayatollah Khomeini. That is how it works.

I want to ask the Minister how he expects this House to believe that helicopters, not commercial but military helicopters, in Iran and Iraq can keep flying without having a steady supply of spare parts to repair engines on a daily basis. How?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I think I pointed out, there is a difficulty in proving categorically that these machines are used for one specific purpose or the other. I think the Hon. Member knows that we do not have an embassy in Iran and that this is like selling a typewriter or a telephone. Conceivably, these items could find a way to be used militarily.

Mr. Gauthier: Come on, you can't kill with a typewriter.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Thank you for the admission.

Mr. Mazankowski: I repeat, Pratt & Whitney, because of the questions that have arisen, has voluntarily postponed any further shipments until this case can be further analyzed.

EXPORT OF AIRCRAFT ENGINES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Minister know that Pratt & Whitney has also been providing engines for military aircraft—not helicopters but military aircraft—being used in the Iran-Iraq war? Is the Minister aware that the Pilatus PC7 produced by a Swiss company with Pratt & Whitney engines has been used by both sides in the Iran-Iraq war? Did Pratt & Whitney ask for permission to export those engines? Did the Government give such permission?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that assertion. I will certainly undertake to the House to try to find out and report back as soon as I can.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, although one cannot expect the Deputy Prime Minister in the ordinary course of events to know about these matters since they are not in his jurisdiction, I wonder if he could explain why he would not know today and have been informed that Pratt & Whitney has in fact been exporting engines for military aircraft. Does the Government not know anything about this at all? Were export permits granted? The onus was on Pratt & Whitney. Did it ask for the permits?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making some very serious allegations. I hope that she can substantiate them. There have been ongoing discussions between the Department of External Affairs and, indeed, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and Pratt & Whitney. I am sure that any and all of the questions the Hon. Member is raising will be pursued.

I repeat, in our opinion-Pratt & Whitney has acted responsibly. It has followed the rules. It has followed the guidelines. The fact of the matter is that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry tried to allege yesterday that the specific engine in question was used strictly for military purposes, by using the Canada Defence Products Guide. He was stretching it somewhat in that the PT6 T-3 engine does not have a military application, but the PT—

Mr. Mazankowski: —family of engines does.

Ms. Jewett: That is not what I am talking about.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is getting into debate.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EXCLUSION OF WOMEN FROM CALGARY PETROLEUM CLUB

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. In light of the Neanderthal vote yesterday by the cavemen at the Calgary Petroleum Club, does the Minister intend to instruct the chairman and chief executive officer of Petro-Canada to turn in his membership, and then ensure that no employees of any other Crown corporation are subsidized in any way by the Canadian Government in order to belong to this club?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member might be interested to know that today I wrote a letter to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women in the Province of Ontario, pointing out that the Agent General for the Province of Ontario belongs to the Canada Club in London which excludes women.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Next question.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BURN MEMBERSHIP CARD

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister talks about another lousy Conservative appointment—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —I would like to get back to the question. Does the Deputy Prime Minister intend to instruct at least one of his cabinet Ministers, listed in the 1986 issue of Who's Who as a member of the Calgary Petroleum Club, to burn his membership card? If he does not burn it, some people in this House are going to ask him to do so.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Stand up, Harvie.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, I think we all recognize that there are private clubs in this country where men go and there are private clubs where women go. I think if little boys want to belong to clubs and little girls want to belong to clubs, they are perfectly free to do so. It is not a policy that I support.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL MINES LIMITED—ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Falconbridge Nickel Mines Limited will eliminate 275 jobs by the end of this year, and another 250 by the end of 1988. The company is claiming poverty as the reason for these lay-offs. At the same time it found $31.6 million to buy 24 per cent more of Western Platinum, a South African mining company. Can the Minister tell this House what kind of accountability the Government requires from Falconbridge when it treats Canadian workers in such a cavalier fashion, totally ignoring its social responsibility to the community?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we are deeply concerned about the lay-offs. We are also concerned about Falconbridge's reacquisition of 24 per cent of that South African firm. My understanding is it was a strategic corporate move which was not destined to be a long-term policy. Notwithstanding that and not having all the facts before me, I placed a call to the president of Falconbridge and asked to see him to discuss this and other matters, particularly the issue of jobs and the future of Falconbridge as it relates to the future of northern Ontario.

CORPORATION'S INVESTMENT IN SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, that is sufficient only for now. Would the Minister not agree that the voluntary guidelines regarding investment in South Africa are not working? What does he intend to do about Falconbridge's blatant disregard not only for the guidelines but for the Secretary of State for External Affairs' letter regarding the guidelines? What does he intend to do about that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, part of the purpose in having the president come to Ottawa is to examine this proposed transaction in light of the Canadian Government's policy, to ensure that it is consistent and that we have all the facts.

As to the longer question, I repeat that this Government has taken a very special interest in the economic welfare of northern Ontario. There have been more than seven possible initiatives outlined under the leadership of the Solicitor General, and the federal Government is going to continue pursuing those initiatives and try to address some of the very serious problems affecting northern Ontario. We hope we will have the support of the provincial Government as well.

FINANCIAL CONSEQUENCES OF AMENDING PATENT LAW

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and concerns pharmaceutical goods. Now that he acknowledged yesterday that the price of drugs will go up, is he prepared today to admit that the vague $1.4 billion investment in 10 years promised by the multinationals pales in comparison to the $211 million annual saving multiplied by 10 years? Why is the Minister willing to forgo a $2.11 billion saving for a promise of $1.4 billion?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I made no such admission yesterday because the price of drugs will not increase by one cent, not those now on the market, not those coming on the market. I wish Hon. Members would stop trying to put false words into my mouth.

As to the potential savings and costs, when we get to committee, if the Hon. Member is there and looks at the true facts, she will see that the benefits from this Bill completely overwhelm any costs and those costs will not be in the form of higher drug prices.

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Minister read yesterday's Hansard to see the reply he gave me then. Yes, I am willing to go to committee to study it, and I have a question en français.

INQUIRY WHY COST STUDIES NOT TABLED

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): If the Minister is so sure that this legislation will have more benefits than disadvantages, why is he refusing to table the cost studies?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the whole idea behind a committee study is that all of these facts, studies and analyses can be gone over in a reasonable fashion and reasonable people can make judgments. If we are able to get along and pass the Bill through second reading and into committee, all of the evidence will be there. She will be able to see that drug prices will not go up by a single penny.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

SOLICITATION OF FOREIGN FIRMS TO ESTABLISH PLANTS IN CANADA AND PARTICIPAGE IN SDI—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister of Trade for Quebec, Mr. Pierre MacDonald, has just invited French companies wishing to take part in the Star Wars program of Mr. Reagan to locate in Quebec. My question is this: Does the Minister agree that the provinces or the federal Government can invite foreign companies to locate in Canada if they wish to take part in the Star Wars program of the United States?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the position of the Government in this matter has always been quite clear. We want to let the companies decide for themselves whether they want to take part in this program or not, and as for any invitation made by the provinces, this is naturally a decision made by the provinces themselves and we simply intend to follow the debate.

POSSIBLE PARTICIPATION BY PROVINCIAL CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): In that case, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister with regard to Government policy. Is the Deptuy Prime Minister in agreement with the Quebec Minister, Pierre MacDonald, who says that the federal Government policy permits provincial Crown corporations to participate in Reagan's star wars program? Does he not agree that that is a violation of what the Prime Minister of Canada said about a year ago the guidelines should be?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary. I think the policy of the Canadian Government was quite clearly spelled out. While Government initiatives were not to be condoned, private companies and institutions interested in participating in the program would be free to pursue such opportunities.

HERBICIDES

USE OF WEED KILLER 2-4-D

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. For the past 40 years or so Canadian home owners and farmers have relied on a chemical weed killer called 2-4-D. Is it true that the Minister intends to ban 2-4-D prior to the next growing season?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that. There is a constant review of various herbicides which are used both domestically and for commercial farming purposes. I, along with the Minister of Agriculture, examined this very carefully, but no decision has been taken.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade, but in her absence I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. The 15 per cent countervail duty imposed by the United States on softwood lumber is costing Canadians jobs. Last Friday the sawmill at Searchmont, Ontario, shut down laying off 150 people. What action is the Government going to take to stop this loss of jobs and restore those which have already been lost due to the United States countervail?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will reply on behalf of the Minister who is presently at meetings with her provincial counterparts involved in discussing the United States countervail. There were meetings yesterday and there are meetings today. The Government is committed to fight this action.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT LAUNCH CAMPAIGN IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in view of the tremendous loss of jobs, the benefit of which is going mainly to three United States lumber companies, why is the Government not prepared to mount a massive offensive in the United States with consumer groups and house-building groups in order to fight this countervail? We must take action now if we are going to turn this back, rather than holding endless meetings as we are at this time.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the provinces own the resources in this country. We are working in co-operation with our partners, the provinces which are affected. Those decisions will be made by the Minister and the provinces as the negotiations proceed. It is very important that we work hand in hand with the provinces, as we are doing.

EMERGENCY MEASURES

BOOK'S ADVICE ON DEALING WITH NUCLEAR ATTACKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. His Department has recently published a book on what Canadians should do in the event of a nuclear attack. It makes recommendations such as digging a trench a foot deep and three feet wide, crawling into it and pulling a door or some boards down on top of you, and all sorts of other interesting proposals.

Is the Minister aware that tens of thousands of copies of this publication are being sent to Canadians? Did he authorize it?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I am not aware of the publication. If the Hon. Member has a particular question, I would be prepared to respond after making inquiries.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER EXAMINE PUBLICATION'S CONTENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I do have a specific question. Part of the publication indicates that appropriate shields would include the following: water beds, tables, magazines, bookcases, doors, chests of drawers, dressers and so on. Surely the Minister will admit that this is a bizarre publication reminiscent of the Cold War of 30 or 40 years ago. Would the Minister take steps to examine this situation and ensure that tens of thousands more copies of the publication are not sent out to Canadians? This is an unbelievably bizarre Government publication.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has presented a situation which is deserving of an inquiry. I do not know the date of the publication. I will investigate and reply to him.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LAPSING OF FUNDS BY DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The issue of lapsing funds at the end of the fiscal year in dozens of Departments was to be addressed by the Government in the past months. It is certainly of concern to the Public Accounts Committee as well as taxpayers in general. What progress, if any, has been made on this issue?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to report that we have been monitoring our spending patterns very closely. As he will know from the Supplementary Estimates which I tabled this morning, which were the lowest for any equivalent period of time since 1972-73, we are on track and well within the spending limits set by the Minister of Finance. We follow the issue of lapsing funds very closely. We were able to reduce the amount of lapsing funds considerably last year. Through the measures which were introduced by the Treasury Board and the Comptroller General this year, we expect that performance will be repeated.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DUTY ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. We are rapidly reaching the end of the road of negotiations with the United States on the dispute about softwood lumber. Although we question the action, Canada has only until November 28 to negotiate a suspension agreement with the United States in response to the 15 per cent duty on softwood lumber.

Is it the intention of the Government to negotiate such a suspension agreement with the United States? If so, has the Government come to an agreement with the provinces with regard to the level to which the stumpage fees will be increased?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I just replied to the Hon. Member's colleague that meetings with the provinces and the federal Government are taking place at this moment. When there is an announcement to be made with regard to the action being taken, it will be made in the appropriate manner by the Minister.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I recall very clearly the question asked by my colleague for Algoma a while ago. The Minister did not reply to my colleague and he is not replying now. We are simply asking whether the Government of Canada intends to use the suspension agreement in the softwood lumber disagreement. Is this what the federal Government has decided to do or does it intend simply to appeal to international organizations such as GATT?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the Hon. Member is expressing his position on the negotiations.

Mr. Garneau: I am asking the question.

Mr. McDermid: If that is the Liberal position, we are pleased to have it, because that is something new and different.

Mr. Garneau: Answer the question. You are the Government.

Mr. McDermid: I will repeat what I said earlier to the Hon. Member. Those discussions are going on at this time. When there is an announcement to be made, it will be made in the proper forum by the Minister.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

SETTLEMENT OF COMPREHENSIVE CLAIMS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question would appropriately be directed to the Prime Minister who, on several occasions, has stated a commitment on the part of the Government to fairness and justice for the native people of Canada. Can the Government assure this House and the native people of Canada, whose future so much depends on it, that there will be adopted in the near future a fair policy for the settlement of comprehensive claims?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the record of the Government in the area of Indian affairs has been outstanding. The Minister in charge today, the Member for Kindersley—Lloydminster, and the former Minister, the Member for Rosedale, have both done an outstanding job on behalf of the Indian people of Canada. I am sure that the Hon. Member recognizes that these are very difficult and complex issues. Nonetheless, the Government is working very actively in this particular area, as well as other areas that affect the Indian people. I am sure that a more comprehensive response could be provided by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development when he returns to the House.

POLICY INQUIRY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, since the Standing Orders do not allow for commercial breaks, and since the problem is that this responsibility is always delegated by the Government to the particular Minister, will the Deputy Prime Minister give some commitment from the Government to the introduction of a comprehensive claims policy which will improve on the previous abysmal record in the settlement of these claims?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows of the Cooligan report on comprehensive land claims. He has been told before by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development about the Government's response to the Cooligan report and the comprehensive approach that the Government is taking. This is also in preparation for the constitutional conference in May, 1987. I think the Hon. Member should co-operate very closely with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who has focused these issues and directed them toward that meeting.

ALLEGED INTERCEPTION AND OPENING OF MAIL

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Has he investigated the comments of the President of the Manitoba Institute of Chartered Accountants who said that local chartered accountant firms routinely intercept and open mail without required court authorizations? How widespread is this practice and how many Canadians have had their privacy violated without a court order?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have just been informed of this situation. I shall soon have an opportunity to speak to the president of the Institute of Chartered Accountants and I shall report to my colleague later.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the incident was reported in the Free Press on November 14. I think the Minister had enough time to investigate. I hope he will carry out a thorough investigation, and is he now committing himself to that thorough investigation so that this will not be repeated?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that the corporation is not investigating. I am saying that I am not aware of the progress of the investigation. As soon as the investigation is completed I will inform the Hon. Member of its conclusions.

PRIVILEGE

COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTEES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I seek your guidance under the new Standing Orders. According to Standing Orders 104(1) and 104(2), Parliament has empowered committees with the responsibility to examine appointees within a specific period of time, which is 30 sitting days, pursuant to Standing Order 103.

In an organizational meeting approximately a week ago, the Standing Committee on Human Rights decided to invite some 16 of the 28 recently appointed members to the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal for questioning pursuant to Standing Order 104. That particular agenda was agreed to by the subcommittee, which included a majority of members of the Conservative Party as well as representatives from each Opposition Party.

When the proposition was put to the committee, it was decided at a meeting that each Member of Parliament would have the opportunity to invite only one person to appear before the Committee. Therefore, instead of reviewing the 16 appointees which was originally decided by the subcommittee, we are now talking about reviewing two appointees, one nominee from the Liberal Party, one nominee from the NDP and the balance from the Conservative Party.

If the Parliament of Canada was truly sincere about reform of the committee process, to permit Members to review all Order in Council appointments, I submit that the action of the majority Conservative Members on the Human Rights Committee was a perversion of the attempt to democratize the process and allow Order in Council appointments to be improved—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You cast reflections on people. I would not do that to you.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Hamilton-East (Ms. Copps) will know that it is against parliamentary decorum to impute motives to any Hon. Members. I know the Hon. Member would not want to do that.

The Hon. Member is giving an explanation of a situation that has arisen in committee. I think it would be advisable if Hon. Members paid attention to these matters because, as a consequence of reform, committees are being asked to do things and use initiatives that they have not had before.

It is the Chair's disposition to continue listening to the Hon. Member. It may not be a question of privilege, but there certainly seems to be a point that the Hon. Member wishes to bring to the attention of the Chair. I would ask Hon. Members to hear the Member thoroughly.

Ms. Copps: I certainly did not intend to impute any motive. I am seeking your guidance because, as I see our responsibilities under the Standing Orders, specifically to be in a position to review all or part of Order in Council appointments as recommended under Standing Order 104, I do not see how we can fulfill those responsibilities when we are being limited as to the number of persons who can be brought before the committee in a kind of lottery system.

I seek your guidance as to whether or not the intent of Standing Order 104 is being subverted because of an arbitrary decision of the committee.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I was in attendance at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Human Rights yesterday. It had been agreed by the steering committee of that committee that some 16 appointees to Human Rights Tribunals would in fact be heard by the committee and examined with respect to their qualifications under the Standing Order in question.

Yesterday, over the opposition of both members of the Opposition who were present, it was decided that that list would be eliminated and, instead, each member of the committee would only be entitled to put forward one name. That means that each opposition Member could put forward one name and Government Members could each put forward one name. That is an attempt to muzzle the committee effectively in its important role of monitoring the appointments to the Canadian Human Rights Tribunals.

I, as a member of the committee, raised serious questions with respect to the qualifications of a number of members who were suggested for appointment. The actions of the majority effectively deny me as a member of that committee and, more importantly, a Member of this Parliament, from giving any kind of effect to the Standing Order that provides for overview and scrutiny.

The final point is that the process of scrutiny in this particular instance is of particular significance because a broad coalition of organizations, including the Canadian Jewish Congress, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Canadian Human Rights Advocate, and many others, raised serious concerns with respect to the qualifications of the individuals who were appointed to this very important position of a member of the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal.

What we saw yesterday in the Standing Committee on Human Rights was an attempt to deny Members of Parliament our right to question these appointees with respect to their qualifications. Surely that kind of muzzle constitutes a breach of the privileges of Members of the House, as well as a breach of the Orders of the House. I would ask Your Honour to take the necessary steps to ensure that the full intent of this very important and new Standing Order is in fact respected.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I attended that committee meeting as well. I can confirm the description of what occurred. I agree with the description given by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

I want to make the point that this is a new section of the rules. I know it is very rare that the Chair will enter into procedures and decisions made by chairmen of committees. However, I want to ask you, Mr. Speaker, to bear in mind that this is a new section of the rules and a new power being given to committees. The practice followed last night effectively eliminates this rule, which is a rule of the House of Commons.

The Chair, I submit with respect, has a duty to ensure that these rules are applied and that committees do not follow procedures which prevent members of the committee, in their duties as members, from seeing that the rules are available and that the review of newly appointed individuals pursuant to Orders in Council does occur.

In effect, of the 16 members who were selected by the committee, nine will not be able to be reviewed because of the interpretation imposed over the objections of the Opposition by the majority of government Members at the committee last night. It is not a matter about which the Chair ought to say, with respect, this is a matter for the committee to settle. A real abuse took place last night.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first I would submit there is absolutely no breach of an Hon. Member's privilege here. It is my understanding that the subcommittee made one decision and the full committee, all members of the committee, made another decision. What the Hon. Member is complaining about really is that she did not win at the full committee. I am sorry, but that happens around this place and the majority rules.

It is a very good principle that each member of a committee be asked to pick one member who he or she thinks should come forward under the appointments process. Something which has not been brought out, and I am sure you will be aware of it, Mr. Speaker, is that we have a committee of chairpeople who look at the budgets of all committees. Each committee has a budget for calling witnesses. If a committee has a sufficient budget, it can call witnesses within that budget. However, it would be an abuse of the process, and what we are trying to do around here, if every appointee to every committee were invited to appear before the committee.

Lastly, I would point out that only yesterday the Toronto Star, which does not exactly support our Party in every case, drew to the attention of the Ontario Liberal Party that the federal Government has an appointments review process in existence which was brought in by this Government under parliamentary reform, and we make no apologies for bringing in what this Hon. Member never brought in at all when he was in Government.

Mr. Gauthier: You are making a farce out of it.

Mr. Lewis: It is a lot of nonsense that all of a sudden it is a breach of privilege to have the right to review appointments, which was never given under the previous Government.

Mr. Gauthier: So what is your argument?

Mr. Lewis: That is nonsense and everyone in this House knows it. Me thinks thou doth protest too much.

We submit that every committee of this House is the master of its own destiny and that a full committee has a right to take what the subcommittee suggests and either endorse it or change it. That is the process which has been in existence since I have been here. It is just a continuation of the process, and I submit there is absolutely no abuse of privilege.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Liaison Committee and someone who has served as a chairman of a Standing Committee since the election of this particular Parliament. I am pleased in a sense that the issue has been raised because I believe we do need opportunities in the House to address the new rules, the purposes which brought them into existence and the possible consequences for the future and for the welfare of Canadians which can come out of the process of parliamentary reform.

It seems to me that the principle that committees must remain masters of their own destiny is a very important principle. The House should be very careful about going back to a system which really existed before, which is that the House had to rule on the activities which would engage the committee. Outside of Main Estimates, most of the committee in this House had no permanent standing reference. If we were to adopt the principle, which I think is implicit in the submission of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), that the House should determine, or you, Mr. Speaker, as the Speaker should determine the activities that a committee must engage in, we would really be taking a step backward from the notion of reform.

There are clear indications that the workload for different committees is of a very different order. However, there is a responsibility, I think particularly in the first two or three years of the new parliamentary rules, for committees to look very carefully at two things, both the opportunity and the responsibility to develop policy, to assert it to the House and to the Government, and to have the Government forced to respond to the policy ideas of Members who have taken the time and trouble to inquire into policy matters in detail. That is one sense of responsibility. The other is really the oversight responsibility. I think we often think of that as the financial oversight responsibility, but it includes the oversight responsibility in relation to appointments to boards and commissions.

I think of my own committee which has a lot of Crown corporations, bodies and appointments which are referred to it. It would be conceivable that my committee, for instance, if it were to examine each and every one of them, could spend four, five or six meetings a week and several times the allotted budgetary amount, simply to look at that particular responsibiilty of oversight. Instead, representatives from all three committees up to this point have decided that the policy development phase of our activities is the most important part of what we wish to do on behalf of the Parliament of Canada and the Canadian people. We have chosen to use our scarce resources to advance that cause.

I would hate to see any sense of principle enunciated in this Chamber which would take that right and responsibility away from the Members which this Chamber saw fit to appoint to the committee. Therefore, I would urge you, Mr. Speaker, to take that line of reasoning into account in whatever ruling you might be prepared to make in relation to this particular point.

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I attended the committee meeting in question last night as an alternate. I am not a regular member of that committee. I was astounded to see that a committee was thinking about talking to 16 people. However, it was explained to me that it did not really expect 16 people to attend—perhaps they would not be available that day. So the committee was really only expecting to see a small group of that 16.

I rise to put on record this fact. One of the Hon. Members opposite who spoke in favour of this point of privilege stated on the record of the committee that he was prepared to bring Canadians here from right across Canada, sit them in a committee room and give them a two-minute examination. That is simply an abuse I could not countenance, and I made a strong protest at that point.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think you very generously allowed the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) to make a point of privilege. I submit it is not a point of privilege. It is not even a point of order. Without getting into the issue per se, I submit in support of my colleagues that this is a committee issue. The committee has certain powers, obligations and responsibilities and, as has been said earlier, it clearly is master of its own House. In the true spirit of parliamentary reform, I think that has to be considered as well, because if the committee has more powers and more latitude in doing certain things then certain responsibilities and decisions it makes are part and parcel of that process. I simply want to bring the point back to the basics of parliamentary procedure and draw to your attention, Sir, that Beauchesne's Fifth Edition clearly outlines at Citation 117(7):

> The opinion of the Speaker cannot be sought in the House about any matter arising or likely to arise in a committee.

I think this is still essentially the bible which governs our rules of procedure, consistent with the Standing Orders, and I would hope the Chair would take that into account when it adjudicates this issue.

• (1520)

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Government proposed to the House with a great deal of fanfare and self-congratulation a number of changes to the rules, including the rule we are discussing, Standing Order 103, which says in part:

> A Minister of the Crown may, from time to time, lay upon the Table a certificate stating that a specified individual has been nominated for appointment to a specified non-judicial post. The same shall be deemed to have been referred to a standing committee—

And it goes on. With an equal amount of self-congratulation, the Government proposed to the House Standing Order 104 which reads in part as follows:

> The committee specified pursuant to Standing Orders 67(5) and 103, during the period of thirty sitting days provided pursuant to Standing Order 103, shall if it deems it appropriate, call the so named appointee or nominee to appear before it during a period not exceeding ten sitting days.

It may be generally true that a committee is the master of its own business, and it may also be true that even Standing Order 104 gives some discretion to the committee with respect to what it should do in carrying out the direction of the House pursuant to that Standing Order. However, I submit that the words of the Standing Order are clear. The committee must look at the advisability of calling each specific appointee whose name is presented to the House—

Mr. Mazankowski: That's not what it says here and you know it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —whose name is presented to the House by the Government in an individual order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): My hon. friends are attempting to interject and make comments. They must be trying to interrupt me because they know that they have a weak case.

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) that the Chair is hearing every word. I did not take it that anyone was seriously impeding the Hon. Member's ability to put his case.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am saying that I do not think it is appropriate for the committee to carry out the directions of this House pursuant to Standing Order 104 by making a blanket determination that all the people in a certain category referred to it for consideration not be heard. Rather, since each name is tabled in the House individually and referred to the committee individually, the committee must make an individual determination.

If the Government majority on the committee in question operates so as to prevent the Standing Order from applying in a meaningful way, then I submit with the utmost of respect that the Government and its supporters will be seen as not taking seriously what they claimed by presenting the new Standing Orders to the House as a major reform.

Further, not too long ago when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) was asked during Question Period why he appointed to the Human Rights Tribunal a supporter of Ferdinand Marcos and a supporter of martial law in that country—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has, I believe, been generous in assuring that all Hon. Members have made a contribution to the argument, both pro and con. I would ask the Hon. Member to perhaps close off his argument now and not to wander too far into debate, history or other circumstances.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I will relate my last comment directly to the issue on which you are asked to rule. I am paraphrasing and speaking from memory when I say that the Minister of Justice said that the question interfered with the work of a committee because the particular individual and his qualifications had been referred to the committee for consideration.

Either the Government is serious about having committees review the qualifications of appointees or it is not. If it is serious, then nothing should be done to prevent the committee from looking at each and every appointee. If government supporters on the committee use their majority to prevent that from happening, then it is a distortion of the intent of the House which passed the Standing Order in question. I therefore ask you, Mr. Speaker, to accept the proposals made in that regard by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Mr. Speaker: I believe it is the prerogative of the Chair to close off the argument. I want to assure Hon. Members that I have listened very carefully to the points that have been made. As I said at the beginning of this debate, this is a matter which clearly does arise from a committee, but in view of the fact that changes are taking place in the committee procedures and approaches as a consequence of reform the Chair felt that this matter ought properly to be debated here in the Chamber so that a considered opinion could be rendered by the Chair at an appropriate time.

I would prefer not to make a ruling at this time. I can assure the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who raised this matter, as well as all other Hon. Members who have spoken, that I shall look with very great care at the submissions made and will try to come back with some comments which may be helpful. I will, of course, advise the Hon. Member and others when I will render a decision. Perhaps I can contact Hon. Members about that later. I want to thank all Hon. Members for their interventions. The Chair has found them all to be very helpful.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the House a notice of a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm). The Hon. Member for Peterborough does not wish, as I understand it, to argue the case today, but wishes to be assured that there has been no delay which would prevent the Hon. Member from bringing his question of privilege to the Chair. I want to assure the Hon. Member that I consider this to be a valid notice, and when it is appropriate for the Hon. Member to raise the matter in argument, as I understand it is important and complex, that will be arranged.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciated the remarks that were made. I was trying to rise to catch your eye, Mr. Speaker. Here under the shadow of the clock, it is sometimes a little difficult to catch someone's eye.

There is one other point I would like to mention which no other Hon. Member mentioned. The House Leader made mention of reflections on the work of a committee. We can see what happens to the House when that happens, but you have taken that into consideration, Mr. Speaker.

There was another point made under Standing Order 59 that was to me equally germane to the issue, and that is that there is not to be a reflection on a vote taken in the House, mutatis mutandis, under the rules. That also applies to committees. Even with the sincerity that exists and because of the new ground being broken by committees, something which should be left to the committees, we can see the procedural wrangle we can get into. No matter how well intentioned is a point which comes to the floor based on a vote of a steering committee, let alone an entire Standing Committee, the whole place bogs down. Standing Order 59 which says that no Hon. Member may reflect on a vote in the House applies equally, I would suggest with the greatest of respect, to the committee.

I am not going to deal with the argument of my good friend from Windsor. He must be a little tired as he heads into the last of the month. He made a very interesting argument. The angels on the head of pin had more vitality than the conviction in his voice. Nowhere in Standing Order 103(1) is there anything about a steering committee. It is the committee itself and that is what we all know is the committee—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) has contributed to the debate and I shall take into account his comments. Certainly all Hon. Members will agree that this place cannot be used endlessly and continually to settle all matters that take place in committees. However, the Chair has indicated that it is my view that this is an important matter. As I say, I hope I will be able to make a ruling which will be of assistance to all Hon. Members and to the committees.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MAINTENANCE OF PORTS OPERATIONS ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations—Mr. Cadieux—Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose for the luncheon break, Clause 3 was under discussion and an amendment had been proposed by the Hon. Member for Churchill. Therefore the question is on the amendment.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on NDP amendment No. 1(A). The Government has said all along that its main concern about the lock-out of West Coast longshoremen is in the area of the stoppage of grain shipments from the Prairies. We share that concern. There has never been any question about it. I hope it is the priority of every Hon. Member of the House.

Why did the Government choose such a broad shotgun approach to this piece of legislation? It affects all operations, removes collective bargaining rights and imposes a contract. Why could we not have legislation to deal with the movement of grain and to provide for ways to deal with the other disputes?

Therefore our amendment asks the Government to be specific and to apply this piece of legislation to the handling of grain rather than to all port activities.

An article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press referred to prairie farm groups and grain companies which were demanding that Ottawa prevent a planned lock-out this week of West Coast ports, thereby shutting down half of Canada's export capacity. Mr. Moore, the general manager of United Grain Growers, said: "We want them to leave grain alone. If that does not work, we will be going to the Government". That is history now, but it is unfortunate that the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association refused to exempt grain from the lock-out. The longshoremen have stated publicly a number of times that they would work the grain.

The amendment before us would delete "longshoring and related operations at ports on the West Coast of Canada" and substitute therefor "all grain handling operations at ports". The effect of the amendment would be to require employers to lift the lock-out of workers in grain operations. The workers could return to work. The gates at the Port of Vancouver would be opened as would the gates at the grain elevators. Then waiting ships could be loaded with this year's abundant crop of grain. Also waiting trains could continue to unload their cargo into B.C. grain elevators for future shipment to Pacific Rim destinations.

I think the Minister wants a positive resolution of the situation so that there will not be undue bitterness in the future. I urge him to consider seriously an amendment which would help resolve the lock-out and would allow the few longshoremen who work on the shipping end of grain to resume their work.

We all deplore the lock-out imposed by the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association which closed down the operations of the port. It is always very unfortunate when such a thing happens. Apparently it was a tactic to try to force an imposed settlement of the contentious grain container clause, which involves only a small aspect of port operations. Only a very few longshoremen handle grain on the ships, and they have always been willing to continue grain handling during disputes.

Again I ask the Minister to consider the amendment. It would allow time for other aspects to be resolved and it would keep our grain moving. We believe that Bill C-24 takes away the rights of workers and imposes a contract which I do not think is agreeable to either party.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments on the proposed amendment and on the points raised by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East and by other Hon. Members who spoke this morning.

I do not want to repeat the speech I made yesterday. It was a relatively long speech which outlined the history of the negotiations between the two parties involved. Everyone knows that their bargaining record is a dismal one. The reason that we are dealing with the Bill today takes that into consideration.

This Act may be cited as the Maintenance of Ports Operations Act, 1986. I should like to answer certain concerns by quoting from my speech. As reported in Hansard at page 1231, I said:

> In addition to the damage which a lengthy work stoppage would cause to Canada's reputation as a reliable exporter of grain, the business community and its employees dependent upon water transportation for shipment of their goods and resources, are also subject to undue hardship as a result of this work stoppage. We are once again faced with a situation in which the parties to a dispute are able to inflict more punishment on others than on themselves.

Therefore we will not support the amendment.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I seek clarification of the Hon. Member's amendment. As I read it, it would reinstate grain handling operations but would not reinstate the handling of minerals such as potash from Saskatchewan, other minerals from British Columbia or lumber from British Columbia and Alberta. Would it strictly reinstate grain handling operations but not the handling of the other major resource commodities of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I should like to respond quickly. Clearly the intention was to focus upon grain. That seems to be from where public pressure is coming; to my knowledge, there has not been an overwhelming cry about the other sectors. It has been indicated that if we are to allow for the collective bargaining process, we cannot leave one element working in the system. Both sides must have flexibility to take whatever stands or use whatever tactics are appropriate from their perspective in order to try to reach a collective agreement.

We have conducted a very narrow focus on the grain sector to allow it to get back to work. It is a very small component in terms of the members of the union. It is a very small component in terms of the companies involved. I think if Hon. Members look at Schedule I they will see that there is only one company listed that would be covered by this clause. I refer to the association of terminal operators. All the rest of the companies would be left out, allowing the collective bargaining process to continue.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Amendment 1(A) (Mr. Murphy) negatived: Yeas, 11; nays, 56.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Just so that everyone is clear as to what we are doing, there are three additional amendments that relate to the same matter of substance and we will not be moving them. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West, will move the next amendment on our behalf.

Clauses 3 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 6—Terms, etc., of agreement amended.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to move with respect to Clause 6. I move:

> That Bill C-24 be amended in Clause 6 by deleting lines 40, 41, 42, and 43 on page 3 and substituting the following:
> "—1986, other than the recommendations contained in the report concerning Articles 12, 13, 14, 16, 19.08, 21.03(1), 26.05 and 28.01(1) of the agreement."

Mr. Chairman, I will be quite frank, open and honest with the Minister. The purpose of this amendment is to comply with a request by the union to switch the location in the legislation of where items in the collective agreement will be decided upon and be binding on both parties by a referee, that it be done by the industrial Commissioner or the commission. These items have to do with pensions, the welfare plan and a host of other items. It is felt that since they are subject to binding decision in any event one can now assume, although it is a risky assumption, that the two parties will continue their collective bargaining from now until the end of 1988, as is specified in the legislation. Quite frankly, and to be perfectly blunt, there is no incentive for the employers to continue the collective bargaining process. I say this because in my opinion, and in the opinion of many others, the employers believe that they have the least to lose when the matter goes before a referee and when they cannot agree on the interpretation of various parts of the Larson Report or on the contractual language. It is our view and that of the longshoremen that they would prefer to have these matters dealt with by the industrial commission or the Commissioner. They would rather rely on that binding decision than that of the referee.

I submit that this will make the decision making that might be required of the referee less onerous in terms of the numbers of items on which the referee will have to make decisions since they will have already been considered by the industrial Commissioner. Thus the remaining items of the collective agreement will be subject still to the collective bargaining process and the rulings of a referee.

I submit that this would speed up the process and that there would be less time required of the referee. I admit at the outset that this would place more duties on the industrial Commissioner. However, the Commissioner already has access to a number of people. I presume the Minister will be generous in terms of the number and quality of staff the Commissioner will have. I presume that they will be the most competent people available, including the official he has sitting in front of him. In fact, the official he has in front of him now would make an excellent industrial commissioner. In fact, he would make a good Minister, provided he ran for the NDP.

In all seriousness, this is not only a genuine concern but a sincere request of the Minister to consider this amendment favourably. We provided copies of the amendment to the Minister and to members of the Official Opposition in advance. We have had conversations and the Minister has assured us, and we believe him, that he will give the most favourable and sympathetic consideration he can to this matter. He has said that he will continue to think about it right up until the time at which he has to decide whether he will accept it or vote against it.

I am faced with an onerous task, one which I do not know if I am quite up to or not. With all my charm, my perspicacity, my sweetness and light, I am trying to persuade the Minister, if he is not persuaded already, that this amendment is a good one. It is worthy of acceptance. I think it will help in the matters which have to occur over the months ahead, particularly in the next six months. I think it will also help to get a message through to both parties about reaching an agreement on all the other remaining items to be negotiated in the collective agreement.

Goodness' knows, both sides need to be given a message on many items. The Minister is somewhat more optimistic than I or many others are about the possible success of the collective bargaining process until the end of 1988, without the referee having to do very much, if anything. I might say to the Minister that I believe his optimism is on very shaky ground. In fact, in light of his experience and that of his predecessors, he is somewhat more than optimistic and is on very, very shaky and weak ground. What he is faced with is the fact that the referee is going to end up doing the collective bargaining. It is highly unlikely, in my opinion, that the two parties will reach agreement on very many if any of the clauses other than the container clause. That is why, Sir, we ask the Government to accept this amendment. We genuinely believe it will assist him, his officials and the two parties to get a fair decision from the Commissioner on the clauses we have mentioned in the amendment.

It will also, we believe, spur the two parties on to reach an agreement on the remaining items. That would also serve for the time when there are disputes not only in the ports but in many other areas, whether it be railroads, grain handling or whatever. I would think it would have a beneficial effect on disputes in bargaining in many other areas of this country. When they realize what Parliament did in this instance, particularly if the Minister will accept our amendment, they are more likely to come to an agreement rather than lock-outs or strikes.

All of us who have been here any length of time have had to face this sort of situation, at least since I came here, six or seven or eight times. Nobody likes it, nobody wants it. No one on any side of the House is a winner. All Members and all parties are damned if they do and damned if they do not, and both at the same time. That is why the better this Bill is, the more likely that it will have an effect on collective bargaining in many other areas of the country. Both employers and unions will have to think about this as they begin the collective bargaining process.

Sir, I know the road to hell can be paved with good intentions but we feel this is a good intention worthy of acceptance. We really do believe from discussions and meetings we have had in many places and with many people, including Members of this House, that it will be helpful. It will strengthen the legislation. I plead with the Minister, who has been sitting carefully thinking, to agree that this motion is acceptable and would be of assistance as well as a good addition to this legislation.

The Chairman: The Chair finds the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina West to be in order.

Mr. Fulton: I have just a brief point in support of what my colleague has reminded the Minister of. The Minister is aware that some of the points dealt with in the Larson Report are not conclusive. They have not completely gelled. I am thinking of matters relating to pensions and welfare plans and the UIC carve-out and so on. Quite frankly, I do not think the referee is going to find it that easy to get together with the two sides and simply find contractual language in that Larson, as he completed his study, found certain points that had not gelled.

He simply was put into a situation where he could not come up with a conclusion.

I do not think the proposal being made by my colleague would add substantively or enormously to the work to be done by the Commissioner in that the amount of track, so to speak, left to be put in place to complete some of those items is not that great. I think the commission is likely a better place for that to take place in that, as I said earlier, the referee may find it necessary on some of these points to come back through Labour Canada to the Minister, back to the House, to get direction through something other than Bill C-24 that would allow the process to be completed. I do not think that is what is intended by this legislation. I think that since the process as set out for the industrial inquiry commission is of a specific duration, that of six months in which to come up with the basic part of it, it gives the Minister some leeway in coming down with final contractual language and so on. This is really a more appropriate way for it to be done rather than throwing those uncompleted items to the referee who may in all likelihood be unable to complete them.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, on the same point, unfortunately the legislation we are dealing with today is very complicated and difficult. Instead of referring all the problems related to the breakdown of negotiations to one body, we have a number of different agencies involved. However, as any of us who have been involved in collective agreements, either through negotiating them or administering them or just studying them, realize, what happens in one section of a collective agreement has a definite bearing on other parts.

One of the problems faced by the union with the proposal of the Minister is that if the inquiry comes down with a certain recommendation or recommendations regarding how the container issue will be resolved, it certainly will affect the clauses we have suggested and should also be referred to the same authority, for example, the clauses affecting such things as welfare, wages, automation, hours of work, hours of work at bulk terminals, et cetera. Obviously if there is a recommendation on the container clause that reduces the hours of work, it will have some effect on the workers. It will also affect how the pension plan is going to be implemented, as well as their medical and dental plans. It will affect a number of issues which are very important to the maintenance of that collective agreement. You cannot divide them. You cannot say the container clause is very important and we will send it over by itself and forget about the other items in that collective agreement.

If the worst happens as far as the employees are concerned and the container clause is removed and a number of people lose work, then obviously they are going to be very concerned with what additional benefits should be there concerning their pension. They are going to be very concerned about the hours of work and how they are determined. That being the case, it is very important that the Minister listen to the representations made by the Hon. Member for Regina West and the Hon. Member for Skeena and by myself to make sure he does not send parts of the collective agreement to the referee and other parts to an inquiry restricted to the container clause. The collective agreement is one agreement. It affects the workers and their families. It affects the performance of the workers on the job and it is very important that it be dealt with by one group, especially when there can be no joint agreement.

It is very important that this matter be resolved in the manner which we have just suggested. If the agreement falls apart six, eight or nine months down the road, it could very well be because of the split jurisdiction which the Minister is recommending. If the container clause goes one way and the hours of work, automation and welfare clauses are not appropriate, there will not be peace on the waterfront in B.C.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a couple of points to the arguments made by my colleagues. It is not necessarily to the advantage of the union to have the recommendations in the Larson Report reopened. There are instances in which the Larson Report recommends in the union's favour, but those clauses are included in this package to allow that crossover. Instead of a very narrow focus on the container issue, a number of things are included to allow the give and take which is necessary in the collective bargaining process to arrive at an agreement which the parties are prepared to accept and tolerate. I urge the Minister to give very serious consideration to our proposal to broaden the scope of the Commissioner in order to achieve a true collective agreement. Clearly, anything imposed from above is not a collective agreement.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, the issue which has been raised today is very serious, and what we are doing today is also very serious. If the issue were not so serious, we would probably not have introduced this special Bill. This legislation was introduced in the House because, as far as I am concerned, the parties have a horrible record with respect to collective bargaining. They were not able to arrive at an appropriate agreement between themselves. We have given them all the help possible. We gave them a conciliator, a commissioner, and then two mediators. All efforts were made to enable the parties to sit at a negotiating table and prove to the Canadian people that they could finally reach an agreement. They have failed.

I have been to see the parties. I told them that they have the responsibility to reach an agreement and that if they did not we would impose an agreement upon them. The Larson Report is based upon discussions which have taken place with the parties. In the circumstances, I think it is the best compromise we can make. This does not prevent the parties from sitting down and coming to an agreement. We will not support the amendment.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I regret very much the Minister's decision. Our amendment fits perfectly with the arguments he has just made. We were only asking that these crucial items, on which it is unlikely they will ever bargain collectively, be part and parcel of or connected to the container clause. The container clause affects most seriously the other articles which we have named. The remaining items can be left to the collective bargaining process.

Our amendment was designed to fit in with the arguments put forward by the Minister yesterday and just now. We urge the Minister to reconsider. This amendments suits his purposes and those of this House exactly. The amendment was drafted after a very great deal of careful thought and consultation. The union is no more happy about a binding decision of Parliament than are the employers. However, even the union admits that those are items which they would prefer to leave in the hands of the industrial commission which will make a binding decision. That surely fits in with what the Minister just said. I hope he will make a last minute reconsideration and agree to accept the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Benjamin) negatived: Yeas, 11; Nays, 27.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I hope the Chair will watch closely when votes are called. As soon as the Chair calls the vote no one else may enter the Chamber.

The Chairman: The Chair takes note of the point raised by the Member for Regina West.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, all of the additional amendments on the page entitled: NDP Amendments 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, were consequential and will, therefore, not be moved.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 6 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On Clause 7—

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I would like to amend Clause 7 by moving:

That Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations be amended in Clause 7 by striking out line 1, at page 4, and substituting the following therefor:

"this Act applies, including provision for job security, development of the port, rail facilities, improvement of competitive position of the port and such other matters relat-"

The purpose of this amendment is to make it clear to the industrial inquiry Commissioner that these other matters should be reported on by him. The employers association is arguing that if the container clause is removed, tens of thousands of additional containers will come through the Port of Vancouver. That clearly will not happen without these other matters relating to the development of the port and the rail facilities being dealt with.

I have spoken a couple of times this morning about the obligation which CNR and CPR have under the Western Grain Transportation Act to improve those facilities. There is also the competitive position of the port. These recommendations will not be binding on the Government, they are simply other matters relating to the port operations. They are, however, very germane to the some 300 workers who are threatened with lay-off if the container clause were to be removed. It will make it clear to the Government and to the Port of Vancouver that it must get on with these improvements.

I think it is important that this amendment, including the provision for job security, be accepted. I hope the committee will give us full support for the amendment.

The Chairman: The Chair finds the amendment to be in order.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, we think that the amendment makes sense because it fully clarifies the role of the Commissiner. We will support it.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, first I want to take this occasion to thank Hon. Members of both opposition Parties for their co-operation in giving me the text of their amendments in advance. Obviously it makes our task a little easier. I have had discussions with some members of each Party this morning in order to give them some preliminary impressions of the amendments. The effect of this particular amendment would be to require the Minister of Labour to refer to the industrial inquiry commission matters which are well beyond my authority as Minister and which are well beyond the scope of the collective agreement. Therefore we cannot accept the amendment as it is.

As I assured my colleagues this morning, the terms of reference that will eventually be given to the commission will definitely be large enough for it to look at those points that have been made by Hon. Members.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, it just occurs to me that the Minister seems to be saying that all of this will be done and that clearly the matter relating to job security is in the clause of the conciliation report now, so that there is no question about job security. The Minister seems to be saying that this will be done, that hopefully the industrial Commissioner will make this report and explore all of these matters, advise the Government and the port authority about what has to be done to ensure that the port handles more containers in the future. However, the Minister does not want to put it in the Bill.

Since the Minister expects the Commissioner to do this, I would feel much better if he would agree to put it in the legislation, even at this late moment.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, again I will assure my hon. colleagues that the terms of reference will be wide enough to include such points as job security. As a matter of fact, the Commissioner looked into that in his own report. I am sure that all Members of the House will be very satisfied with the terms of reference that would be given to the commission.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister's answer still raises a lot of questions. Terms of reference are one thing; what actually happens with the recommendations is something else. That is the major problem with setting up this inquiry. It will only have the power to act in one area with regard to recommendations. It will be able to write a clause, include a clause in the collective agreement on the container issue, or remove a clause. It can make all sorts of other recommendations, some of which will go to the Department of Transport, some of which may go to the employer, and some of which may go to the employees. However, the point is that if the other bodies do not feel like acting, nothing will happen. That is a real problem facing the workers.

They have some security with the present clause in the collective agreement. That could be taken from them and no other agency of Government, the employer or anyone else must act on the recommendations. Only the container clause will be binding on the parties. There is no need to act on the other recommendations.

I know the difficulties involved in getting labour legislation passed in the House of Commons. There has only been one decent piece of legislation introduced during the seven years I have been a Member of Parliament. That was the legislation on occupational health and safety and maternity leave clause extensions. It took four years before the Government even bothered to introduce that legislation and it was almost killed at the last moment before the election. When one considers the history of how the House of Commons deals with labour legislation, I am not very optimistic about what the Minister just said.

We need some guarantees that if there are other recommendations, they will be acted upon by the Government. We cannot simply tell the workers to accept whatever comes down from the Commissioner because Parliament will look after the other recommendations that may be imposed. History has proven that the House of Commons will not act quickly on the recommendations that affect the job security of workers.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the support of the Hon. Member for Churchill on this amendment. This issue has existed for 16 years. It is obvious that the Government, in concert with the employers association, plans to remove this clause. Surely it is not asking too much of the Government to include in the legislation the consideration of these other factors. There is the whole question of job security, the development of the port, the improvements that will be made, and the requirement for the port to be competitive so that we will in fact be moving containers back from Tacoma and Seattle.

I believe that if the industrial Commissioner ends up removing that container clause as recommended in the conciliation officer's report, he would feel much better if he described everything that must take place in order for that port to become competitive, attract additional containers, maintain and hopefully increase the number of jobs. I hope the Minister not only agrees to do this in the report but will agree to do it in the legislation itself.

Amendment (Mr. Foster) negatived: Yeas, 10; Nays, 30.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We gave notice before that we were having trouble with Conservative Members coming in when the vote already commenced. I think it is incumbent upon the Conservative Whip to have his Members here before the vote commences. It is not too difficult for them to stay here for the next 25 minutes and listen to the debate, instead of wandering in when they choose.

• (1620)

Mr. Lewis: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think it should also be pointed out to the House that Hon. Members on the government side are allowing full rein and discussion on the opposition amendments.

Ms. Mitchell: Allowing? Do we have rights?

Mr. Lewis: It would be very easy for every one of us to be in here speaking to the opposition amendments. Instead, we are carrying on business in the lobby behind the curtains. If the Hon. Member wishes plenty of discussion on every one of the opposition amendments, we will get into it.

Ms. Mitchell: Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. Lewis: But I think we are doing the business of the House and we should proceed.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The Chairman: On Clause 7?

Ms. Copps: Yes. I think we predicted that the previous amendment would not pass, so I have an amendment to Bill C-24 which has also been handed to the Minister as well as to the New Democratic Party. I move:

That Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out line 1 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor.

"this Act applies, including provisions for job security, and such other matters relat-"

I think if you refer, for example, Mr. Chairman, to the recommendations of the Larson Report, the section which is being deleted, that is, you will find that the question of containers which is being referred to this commission deals in part with the question of job security because it suggests that there be a guarantee that the number of hours available to be worked on containers be fixed at 725,000 per year. So I do believe this amendment is within the terms of reference of the commission. It also speaks specifically to one of the concerns which has been expressed by the longshoremen, and that is, the question of job security. Surely, if we are going to look at the container question as an isolated case, we should have a more wideranging view. Even if we are restricting our commission specifically to looking at the container situation, I think this particular amendment provides for a chance to look at provisions for job security and should be supportable by all Hon. Members, and I so move.

The Chairman: The Chair does find the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East to be in order.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take the time of the House. I gave my arguments previously on the first amendment. I think they apply to the second amendment. Again, I just want to repeat that the terms of reference will definitely include that.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the arguments on the first amendment, as I understood the Minister, he could not agree to a provision for development of the port rail facilities' improvement of competitive position because it was outside the terms of the collective agreement. Quite clearly, the container issue, which is the one being put forward to the commission, includes a guarantee regarding the number of hours available to be worked on containers, so it is included in the container provision.

It is in fact a more stringent interpretation of the amendment. When the first amendment failed to come back, we decided on this one as it specifically relates to job security. Job security has a place within the confines of the collective agreement and surely the whole reason for the container issue is the question of job security for the workers. All we are asking is that in the context of this commission, among the other parameters and frames of reference set in the legislation as established, the Commissioner also be asked to look at provisions for job security. I do not see how this in any way is outside the jurisdiction of the collective agreement or the Larson Report because it was indeed in the Larson Report that reference was made to the minimum number of hours worked which translates in a certain sense to a kind of job security.

Amendment (Ms. Copps) negatived: Yeas 10; nays 28.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, reluctantly, especially after the Minister complimented us on giving him copies of our proposed amendments in advance—he actually meant well in advance—he just received part of our, if you like, Plan B, which we always need to have because we want to ensure that we keep working on behalf of the people out there. Therefore, I move that:

Bill C-24, Clause 7(4), shall be amended by deleting line 6 on page 4 and substituting the following:

—by the Commisison, however in no event shall the recommendation provide for a lower work guarantee than was recommended by the conciliation commissioner.

In brief, this establishes a bottom line. It says the commission cannot impose something which is less than what has already been recommended, nor can it negotiate below that point.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Hon. Member for giving me the amendment, notwithstanding that fact that it was not received well in advance. Because we also like to work for the people out there, I have given consideration to the amendment. I do not think it would be right to impose limits, whether bottom or top, in the inquiry, and I will let the commission make its own decisions.

The Chairman: The Chair finds the amendment to be in order.

Amendment (Mr. Angus) negatived: Yeas 10; nays 28.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment concerning Clause 7 on page 4, to strike out lines 4 and substitute: "—appointed by the Minister, subject to the approval of the employers association and the union". It seems to me that we are really making a very historical decision.

Ms. Copps: Historical blunder.

Mr. Foster: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, says it is a historical blunder, and only history will prove whether or not that is true. In any event, it seems to me that the Minister would want to appoint an industrial commissioner who carries the respect and the confidence of both the employer and the employees. Whether he does that by appointing a single commissioner or a group of commissioners, I think it is essential that both the employers association and the unions involved lend their support to this amendment. Therefore, I move:

That Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out line 4 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"sion appointed by the Minister, subject to the approval of the employers association and the union, for a final"

• (1630)

This amendment is a very simple one. It simply provides that the appointment of the Commissioner is subject to the approval of both the employers association and the unions concerned so that the final recommendation will be the most acceptable one by both the union and the employers association.

The Chairman: The Chair does find the proposed amendment to be in order.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, on this particular point, I would like to indicate to Hon. Members who are working so hard in committee this afternoon that these parties have not been able to agree on very much for the past 16 years. Unfortunately, I would not expect them to be able to agree on this either.

I would like to assure the House that in order to ensure that there will not be a blunder as someone has suggested, the best possible person or persons available will be appointed to head this commission. I am sure everyone will be very happy.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, according to the words he just spoke, the Minister is almost acting in such a way as to create no possibility of future success. The amendment, which is something we supported in previous conversations with the Minister, is something that is necessary. If there is a time frame in which employers and employees must agree on a person to head the inquiry which is not met, then the Minister can act unilaterally.

It is important to consult both the employees and the employers to see if they can come to some agreement as to who should head the inquiry. This is a safeguard which is used in many arbitration laws across Canada. The reason for that is that there are people who are knowledgeable in various areas of transportation and labour relations on which both parties can agree. These people have dealt with certain people in Vancouver and in British Columbia. I am sure the union and the employers association could agree on a person who would listen to their arguments and would have some basic understanding of the transportation industry in B.C.

I do not think the Minister would have to accept that much if he were to agree to this amendment. If he wishes, we could move a subamendment putting a time frame on it. That would be agreeable to our caucus. However, I do think it is important that he does consult with and get the approval of both parties, or at least make the attempt to get the approval of both parties. He said that the parties have not agreed on very much in the last 16 years and that may be true, but I do think it is important that the Minister take another stance to show that he does believe that they can work together and that he give them the opportunity for which this amendment calls.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment to Clause 7 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Foster) negatived: Yeas, 9; Nays, 29.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 7 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 7 agreed to.

Clauses 8 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 13 carry?

On Clause 13—Punishment for offences

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I would like to propose an amendment to Clause 13, copies of which were circulated to my hon. colleagues well in advance, I believe. I move:

That Clause 13 of Bill C-24 be amended by adding, immediately after line 16 on page 7, the following:

"(3) No officer or representative of a member of the employers association, including any corporation listed in Schedule I, who is convicted of an offence under this Act shall be employed in any capacity by, or act as an officer or representative of, the employers association at any time during the five years immediately after the date of the conviction."

That, I believe, reflects a very serious concern that was raised both yesterday and today in debate about Clause 13 and the additional penalty as it was referred to. I thought that concern had to be remedied. That is why the Government is proposing this particular amendment. Hopefully, Mr. Chairman, you will find the amendment to be in order.

The Chairman: The Chair does find the amendment proposed by the Minister to be in order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Chairman, we do have a number of concerns about the clause. I am afraid, however, that this particular amendment does not respond to those concerns.

In the Bill, the Minister is suggesting that an officer or representative of the union can be prohibited from holding the position of officer or indeed from actually working. For example, a person who happens to work full time for the union who is involved in a work stoppage which is a contravention of the proposed law could be deprived of earning a livelihood for five years because this particular—

Mr. Scowen: Serves him right.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member says that it serves him right. We in the Opposition believe that there should be justice. The wording of the Minister's amendment suggests that no officer or representative of a member of the employers association may be employed by that association. That means that on the employees' side, a full-time union member can lose his job for five years, but on the employer's side, someone who happens to be a member of the employers association cannot hold office or membership in the association but can carry on his own private business in the private company which is a member of the association. On the employer's side, there is no way that a person may potentially lose his livelihood for five years, whereas on the employee's side, those who might be working full time for the union could actually lose their livelihoods for five years.

It seems to me that this is a punitive piece of legislation. We discussed this with the Minister and looked back on other precedents which do include fines or contempt of court charges. In fact, a five-year ban on officership in a union or on being an employee of a union is a penalty that is far too harsh when the impact of depriving one of membership in an employers association as called for in this amendment will essentially have no effect on the individual employer. It only means that an offending employer may no longer be a member of the executive of the employers association. However, people who work full time for the union and are involved in an illegal work stoppage can be thrown out of their jobs for five years.

Unless there is a similar prohibition against employers, this amendment is simply a facade because it pretends that we apply the law equally to employers and employees while in fact that is not the case. I believe that the current five-year penalty is too harsh and that it does not apply across the board. For these reasons we cannot support the amendment.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I should like to move the following subamendment to the proposed Clause 13:

That the words "employers association" be replaced with the word "company".

I do not have the amendment in writing. I refer Hon. Members to Clause 2 of the Bill wherein the word "company" is defined as meaning the employers association or any member of the employers association, including any corporation listed in Schedule I.

The intent of my subamendment is to ensure that if employees of one of the companies make a decision to continue a lock-out, either because they are members of the employers association or because it is a decision of the company, they will be liable for the same punishment as members of the executive of the union whether they be in full-time paid positions or volunteer members of the executive. If my subamendment were accepted, it would ensure a total balance in terms of this particular clause.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Chairman, my understanding of Clause 13 is that the livelihood of union members would not be lost in that their seniority within ILWU would remain. By virtue of that fact, they could still earn a livelihood by becoming longshoremen.

In the case of a company member who is a director of the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association, he could return to his livelihood. A member of the ILWU could revert back to his original role as a longshoreman. It would not deny him the opportunity of obtaining a livelihood for his family or himself as an individual.

It is important to understand that each of them would be deprived of serving in their respective organizations as a result of a violation or breach of any law. However, it would not deprive them of returning to their original sources of livelihood. Union stewards or representatives come from the rank and file. Members of the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association come from the executives of various companies. Basically we have an equitable situation. I think the intent of the Minister when he brought forward this piece of legislation was not to deny the right of people to enjoy a reasonable livelihood.

The Chairman: The Chair finds the subamendment of the Hon. Member to be in order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody is really sincere about fighting for equality, I think he has no choice but to support the amendment which puts companies and unions on the same footing and does not make a differentiation. That is a smoke-screen behind which they are hiding.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is trying to mislead the committee. It is not a smoke-screen. It is equity that we are seeking. We are making certain that each individual can source a livelihood from where he or she originated. It is important to understand that they are not being deprived of the ability to work in their original function.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to indicate, for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody, that the same applies to the employer, the representative of the employer or the company. Such a person would be prohibited from being a representative or officer of the company but could return to his original employment in the company. The same principle applies. He can return from wherever he came in the company but can no longer occupy a position as he did for five years. That should apply to companies as it does to the union.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, this is an extremely Draconian measure. In fact, it has never been contained in a federal piece of legislation before. We are to deprive union members of holding office after they have paid a penalty or fine, which in this case can be as much as $100,000.

If we look at the 1978 legislation dealing with Great Lakes shipping, there was no such penalty. The individual could be convicted of contempt of court. It was the same situation in the West Coast strike in 1982 and in the postal strike in 1979. There has never been a provision like this one before. I want to move an amendment which would completely remove Clause 13. I believe that the entire clause should be struck.

With the permission of the House, I would move that lines 9 to 16 on page 7 be struck. That would be my subamendment when we get to it.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Algoma on two grounds. First, I must rule out of order the subamendment which the Hon. Member is proposing to the subamendment now before the committee. Second, it being 4.45 o'clock, pursuant to the order made on Monday, November 17, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forwith every question necessary to dispose of Committee of the Whole stage of Bill C-24. Accordingly, the question is on the subamendment.

Subamendment (Mr. Angus) negatived: Yeas, 14; Nays, 31.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment of the Minister carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Cadieux) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 13, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 14 agreed to.

Schedules I and II agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I rise and report the Bill, as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: On division.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? Pursuant to the order made on Monday, November 17, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cadieux moved that Bill C-24, an Act to provide for the maintenance of port operations, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Environmental affairs—(a) United States funding of measures to combat acid rain (b) Sulphur dioxide emissions; the Hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young)—Patent Act—Effect of amendments on drug prices; the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens)—Consumer affairs—Possible gasoline price increase—(a) Delayed implementation on behalf of consumers (b) Government measures to give equality of treatment to Canadian consumers.

[English]

Shall we call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We would be prepared to call it five o'clock if the private Member whose Private Members' Bill it is were here and ready to proceed. I believe he is a member of the Liberal Party. But in the event that Member is not here, it would be my suggestion that we suspend the sitting until five o'clock in order to give the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) an opportunity to come and properly present his Bill. I think that all Members of the House would be in agreement with that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the term of the proposal by the Parliamentary Secretary. Does the House agree?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: I take the suggestion positively. I will try and contact the Hon. Member for Davenport now and bring him into the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will suspend the sitting until five o'clock this day.

At 4.52 the sitting of the House was suspended until 5 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 5.04 p.m.

PESTICIDES

EFFECTS OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing a task force to examine, on a national basis and with full public participation, and to report to this House, the threats to human health and damage to the environment arising from the application of chemical pesticides on forest, agricultural and other lands, and to recommend alternative methods or practices of pest control.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the 10 minutes available I will try to put to you my case on the merits of this motion. I am grateful to the system for having it drawn for debate today.

I will start by saying that the question of pesticides and their use in society is becoming a national issue. Why do I say that? Because of the evidence produced almost daily by way of the printed media. I will give you a quick run-down. From Toronto there is an article entitled "Time for farming to break its chemical dependency". From Winnipeg, "Concern about safety of farm chemicals fuels debate over pesticide registration". From Calgary, "Study claims pesticides upset the immune system". From Halifax, "No 2,4-D spraying until review ends". From Montreal, "Pesticides are not sufficiently controlled". From B.C., "Chemicals poisoning wells", and,

"B.C. is to await federal word on chemicals". From Regina, "Pesticides in groundwater". From Vancouver, "Lawyer wants 2,4-D spraying voices heard". Again from Montreal, "There has to be a better way of keeping pests down". From Toronto, "Study launched into effects of herbicides on New Brunswick workers". Again from Montreal, "Popular weed-killers days may be numbered". From Washington, "Emergency order bans much-used pesticide". Again from Toronto, "Insecticide cited as health danger should be banned, officials say". That referred to Temik. Again referring to Temik, "Study cites insecticide detected in P.E.I. wells". From Ottawa, "Pesticide polluting Ontario waters, govt. report says". Again, "Ontario corn-belt rivers have pesticide, report says". Another more recent headline reads, "Poisoned well was a nightmare, farm woman tells Lasso inquiry". Again, "Pesticides may boost illness." Another one reads, "Neighbourhoods alarmed by poison sprays used in lawn care". Another one reads, "Minto stops using 2,4-D on properties". "Ministry spraying cited in three planters' ailments". "Conservation council concerned over chemical usage". "Chemical disposal rapped in Alberta". "Chemical warfare: bugs, weeds are winning it". "Farmers trying in vain to curb hoppers".

If time permitted, I could go on to give you a full run-down as to how frequently the media are reporting on the question of pesticides and how they are seen to endanger human health. Therefore, the question is: Are we not ready, as I submit we are, to investigate this matter fully on a national basis in order to hear the views of those who are using the chemicals, those who are concerned about them, and the public in general?

As we all know, pesticides are biologically active substances. They pose a potential risk to human beings. We know that the effects of chronic exposure to certain types of pesticides can lead to some forms of cancer or tumours, reproductive disorders, birth defects and other long-term illnesses. Numerous areas of Canada have had groundwater contaminated, as has been frequently reported, by chemical pesticides. These substances are now believed to pose a substantial threat to human health. You will also recall the effect on nature as described some years ago by Rachel Carson in her book Silent Spring. That book has become part of what has become almost a collection of memorabilia on this subject.

We are now in a new phase where the media are reporting to us incidents which confirm the preoccupation of the 1960s. This motion proposes the launching of an independent task force which would cross this nation to investigate this matter. It could be tailored along the lines of the Pearse water investigation which took place in 1985 and would attempt to achieve the following. First, it would establish the need to collect information on the existence and use of herbicides and pesticides and pass it on to the public. Second, it would endeavour to hear from concerned citizens, non-Government organizations, municipal, provincial and federal officials, labour and industry their views on the use of pesticides and alternatives. Third, it would search for new directions for research and development and alternative methods.

A very important role for this task force would be to search for alternative products and practices in agriculture and forestry. The task force would provide a forum for a good discussion of the fact that we will have to share the world with a few pests in the decades ahead, particularly with regard to lawns, highway green areas and parks. We have become almost obsessive about weeds. The use of certain herbicides, particularly 2,4-D are unacceptable to human health, both to those who have to utilize it and, in the long term, to the public which comes in contact with the substances in areas which have been sprayed.

Those are the five or six major points which this national task force would endeavour to identify. I emphasize in particular the part of the investigation which would deal with alternatives. There is great potential to finding better answers through biological controls such as a product called Bt. There are also answers through manual methods such as the clearing of forests and through a better understanding of the role of predators in nature.

Time does not permit me to elaborate further on this matter. I thank you for this opportunity to put this proposal to Members of the House. I look forward to the comments of Members.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, last October 9 the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) suggested that the Government should consider establishing a task force to examine, on a national basis and with full public participation, the extent to which the use of chemical pesticides over forest, agricultural and other lands threatens human health and destroys the environment. He also said that the task force might recommend alternative methods or practices of pest control.

The Minister of National and Welfare (Mr. Epp) shares the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member and did seriously consider the most appropriate solutions, in co-operation with his colleagues who are responsible for pest product control regulations. In this case, Mr. Speaker we must bear in mind a number of major factors. Indeed, I would suggest that responsibility for protecting the environment and health of Canadians against any possible negative impact of pesticides belongs to both federal and provincial administrations.

In addition we must remember that at each level of Government this task might fall within the jurisdiction of several departments, so much so that a change such as proposed by the Hon. Member, no matter how innovative it might be, could only come after consulting the various Government agencies involved.

Furthermore, while many traditional scientific and technological methods to ensure the safety of pesticides both prior and subsequent to the authorization of their use in Canada have been introduced or reviewed since the last time several years ago, tremendous progress has been made since then in identifying and measuring many contaminants that are present at very low levels in the environment.

Today, chemical analysts can easily measure chemicals in drinking water in quantities as minute as a few parts per trillion. Expressed in terms of time, this would correspond to one second per 32,000 years.

Since we are now able to detect such minute levels of chemicals, people tend to think the whole environment is polluted by dangerous levels of pesticides or other man-made chemicals. However, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case.

In this respect, it is important to realize that public health experts, toxicologists, biomathematicians and other experts responsible for assessing the impact of minute concentrations of contaminants on human health have not been able to keep pace in their research with what has been achieved by chemical analysts in detecting increasingly low levels of chemicals. We may therefore have to spend a lot more time and effort on this aspect of safety evaluation, before consultations by task forces with the general public can be productive.

Furthermore, new initiatives and directives will be necessary to guarantee the safest possible application of the latest contributions being made by biotechnology and genetic engineering to the already vast range of pest control products that may be used in Canada.

For instance, thanks to genetic engineering, it is now possible to develop agricultural plants that are capable of producing their own biological insecticide. This ability to kill insects is found in nature among certain types of bacteria. It follows that any new plan to improve the safety of pesticides will have to cover not only the conventional chemical pesticides but also these so-called biological pesticides.

I can assure the Hon. Member that this Government has already taken steps to incorporate the new technology in existing programs, to ensure that these products are safe and that further progress will be made in this respect.

The Hon. Member also said that it would be desirable to involve the public in the process. Public awareness of the presence of contaminants in the environment and of their potential negative impact has heightened considerably in recent years. In a democracy like ours, it is common practice for the Government to act on the public's informed concerns, and the most productive way to air such concerns has been within the context of public hearings conducted by special commissions.

In fact, both federal and provincial Governments have benefitted from the recommendations made by these commissions, whose terms of reference have included holding public hearings on matters related to pesticides safety and environmental solution.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), whose department is responsible for the registration of pesticides under the Pest Control Products Act, is assisted by the Advisory Council on Pest Control which has just been created. This council can deal with a wide variety of problems related to the use of pesticides, and it can also hold public hearings.

The Minister of Agriculture is empowered as well to establish review boards to look into problems having to do with particular issues or specific pesticides. It should be noted that, under their mandate, such boards may also hold public hearings. As an example, Mr. Speaker, I might mention the Alachlor Review Board which is now holding public hearings on the harmful effects of this herbicide.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite relevant to point out that in recent years the provincial Governments have set up a number of royal inquiry commissions or other bodies with similar powers. These commissions held public hearings on the hazards of chemical pesticides and on the safer alternative now available, namely biotechnological products.

Finally I might recall that a meeting is scheduled for early 1987 when provincial Ministers concerned over pesticides and environmental contamination will express their views and make recommendations on this subject to their federal counterparts.

Considering that the Government wants all provinces to be in on this, it is too early to make final recommendations such as creating a national task force empowered to hold public hearings on the threat of pesticides and on alternative solutions, even before the provincial Governments have had an opportunity to express their views on this matter.

Once they have been consulted, we will seriously consider every option available to reduce the threat of pesticides and the contamination of the environment. This study will include measures designed to ascertain whether new biotechnological products developed through genetic research might be hazardous to human health and the environment.

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, my brief remarks will be of some help to the Hon. Member.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by expressing my support for the concept behind the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I want to concentrate on a few specific issues with respect to the whole question of herbicides.

The case of the herbicide 2,4-D is but one example of the pressing need for real improvements in the control of pesticides in Canada. As far as I am concerned, this is a substance that evidence has shown should be banned.

Recent, well respected epidemiological studies in the United States show that 2,4-D is a likely carcinogen. A study by the National Cancer Institute has shown that Kansas farmers who had worked with products containing the chemical were six times more likely to develop non-Hodgkins lymphoma than farmers who did not use such products.

In another study by Hazelton Laboratories, sponsored by the chemical industry itself, 10 per cent of rats exposed to quantities of 2,4-D developed brain tumours. What makes the problem of 2,4-D so urgent is that the chemical is extremely widely used both domestically and in agriculture. More than 1,500 weed killing products sold in the United States alone contain 2,4-D. In Canada, approximately 7 million hectares of land are treated with products containing 2,4-D.

Also worrisome is the widespread domestic use of the chemical in lawn and garden products. Surely it is totally unacceptable that domestic gardeners and what I affectionately call lawn fanatics should put their health and the health of others, particularly children in their neighbourhoods, at risk for the sake of flowerbeds and a greener than average lawn.

We see this happen right under our noses at the House of Commons. For the last few years we are treated every summer to little yellow signs on the front lawn that warn us that the grass has been treated with some kind of herbicide and that we ought not to go on the grass because it would endanger our health. This also takes place on railway roadbeds and the sides of highways. I think it is scandalous that we should be taking such risks with these known carcinogens simply in order to have weed-free railway roadbeds or weed-free lawns. It is clearly an example of putting short-term convenience ahead of long-term health and concern for others and the environment.

The Environmental Protection Agency in the United States is accellerating its review of 2,4-D. It is encouraging that even Chemlawn, the largest U.S. lawn care company, has withdrawn 2,4-D products. Yet what has the federal Government done in Canada? It has written to the provinces, drawing their attention to the results of the American studies. Is that decisive action? The provinces have acted in a variety of ways. New Brunswick has banned the use of the chemical until December. Ontario is refusing to schedule new products containing the chemical but has done nothing to stop the use of products currently on the market. Manitoba is putting warning notices on the labels of products containing 2,4-D but unfortunately is in no way restricting their use. Other provinces have done nothing.

Our current haphazard federal-provincial arrangements for pesticide and herbicide control, combined with a lack of federal willingness to take the initiative in a case like 2,4-D, has meant that the response to the problem has been inadequate and inconsistent. Obviously we need to restructure our federal-provincial mechanisms to avoid situations such as this, where some Canadians are protected from known or suspected environmental health hazards while others are not. What is a carcinogenic in New Brunswick is carcinogenic in Manitoba, British Columbia and anywhere. The laws of toxicity do not change from province to province. We need regulations which obey the basic laws of science, as well as those of the constitution.

Another example of this confused situation is the case of Pentachlorophenol which, like 2,4-D, has also been linked to cancer and other health disorders.

As a result of mounting scientific evidence against PCP, Sweden has already banned the chemical, and the United States EPA appears to be on the verge of doing likewise. In addition, several plants around the world that produce PCP have been forced to close for a variety of environmental and health reasons. Despite this world-wide trend toward banning PCP, what do we see in this country? We are currently witnessing the bizarre spectacle of Bradbury Industries' efforts to build a PCP plant in western Canada. First, it proposed to locate in Lone Butte, British Columbia, but was forced to abandon its efforts due to intense local opposition. Now Bradbury plans to build in Alberta where it hopes the provincial Government will be more sympathetic. However, I noticed that the residents of Fort Saskatchewan were out in numbers to protest the fact that their community might be the location for such a plant.

This situation is ridiculous. Not only is Bradbury proposing to produce a dangerous product that fewer and fewer people want, but the federal Government appears content to drag its feet and allow the project to go ahead when it has it in its power to ban PCP altogether.

Finally, I draw the attention of the House to the case of Alachlor. Despite mounting evidence that Alachlor is also a carcinogen, the Government appears to be talking out of both sides of its mouth on the issue. On the one hand, last year the Government deregistered Alachlor. On the other, due to intense pressure from Alachlor's manufacturer, Monsanto, the Government has appointed an Alachlor review board that has already recommended a temporary reregistration of Alachlor and may recommend a permanent reregistration of the chemical when it submits its final report.

This ad hoc approach to these substances must stop. The Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan) has promised what he says will be tough new environmental protection legislation to deal with toxic chemicals in this country. Government Members may have something to say about this during the course of this debate. Obviously, the control of these substances is part of a larger problem, and in so far as the environmental protection legislation lives up to the Minister's rhetoric about what to expect, I will welcome his initiative in that regard.

However, it is my understanding that the new Bill will deal primarily with new chemicals and it will do little to address the pressing concern raised by 2,4-D, PCP, Alachlor and a host of other potentially dangerous substances currently in use in this country. In addition, even if the new environmental protection legislation is to provide the so-called cradle-to-grave protection that the Minister says it will, I remind the House that pesticide registration falls under the jurisdiction of Agriculture Canada. This situation has long been of concern to both myself and many others because Agriculture Canada rarely places sufficient emphasis on the environmental consequences of the substances used in agriculture.

We have suggested, and I suggest it now, that if the Government is truly serious about the threat of toxic chemicals such as herbicides and pesticides, it should transfer responsibility for the testing of these substances and the registration of them to Environment Canada and beef up Environment Canada accordingly.

What is important to keep in mind, I think, is that very often we concentrate on the costs of what not using a particular substance would involve either to agriculture or to whatever is the involved industry. What we need to do is to change our way of thinking, do our bookkeeping differently, keep a different set of books, and ask the question, what does it cost to use these substances? This is a much more difficult thing to do.

It is very easy to calculate what the loss would be in terms of yield agriculturally if we do not use these substances. It is much more difficult to calculate what the cost will be in terms of increased cases of cancer, allergies and other health effects with the use of these chemicals. It is much more difficult but it is every bit as important. We need to arrive at the point where that is the kind of calculation we make when we decide whether or not to use a particular substance for a particular purpose. I hope the debate today will be helpful in bringing the handful of Hon. Members who are here for the debate, those who may be watching on television and those who may read Hansard, to the point where they will encourage the Government to think in that way when it is thinking about the question of herbicide and pesticide use in Canada.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words with reference to the motion before the House today as someone who has a particular interest in agriculture and as someone who represents a western Canadian constituency. I would like to begin by complimenting the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for addressing what is obviously a very important issue, one which is recognized throughout the country. That has been true for a long time and, quite frankly, some of the mechanisms in place today, I readily concede, were commenced by the previous Government, and we are pleased to be a part of that process.

The pesticides program in Canada has been reviewed on a number of occasions. The whole question of seeking input of information is a continuing process as it properly should be.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers prepared a position on registration and use of pesticides in 1982 which referred to the subject before the House today. In addition, the previous Government appointed the Salter Commission. Its report was tabled in 1984 and its recommendations, according to my understanding, have been implemented by the present Government. Therefore, I think there has been a considerable amount of continuity on this particular issue, as indeed there should be, because it is one of the issues for which I do not think there is any particular partisan position. If I may say so, I think sometimes we in this House do ourselves a disservice by allowing the division which exists in the House to receive a great deal more publicity than those issues on which there is general agreement. I think this is an area where there has been general agreement and perhaps that is worth noting. The ministerial task force which commenced in late 1984 looked at the question of program review as well. However, I do not believe that in itself has been as significant as the studies to which I have already referred.

The thrust of the reviews to date and the concerns of Governments, both past and present, is in terms of providing more information to the public with respect to pesticide programs and the need for pesticide control, and in terms of seeking and providing for public input. In that regard, there has been a considerable amount of progress, and the question before the House today is not so much whether the issue itself is worthy of our attention because, of course, it is, but of how best to proceed and whether or not we need to depart from that which is currently being done.

Beginning in October of 1984, there have been several attempts to provide the opportunity for more public involvement. That has included, for example, the creation of a Pest Management Advisory Board which as part of its responsibilities makes recommendations on broad policy questions and on issues of special concern. The PMAB consults with members of the public and with groups concerned about the assessment and registration of pesticides. As all of us know, the question in some parts of Canada today with respect to the chemical commonly known as Lasso lies very much within the jurisdiction of this particular board.

In addition, an information secretariat has been established within the pesticides directorate. It has as its responsibilty and function improvement in communications in general. There is evidence that a considerable amount of progress has been achieved in that direction. For example, as I am sure many Hon. Members know, there is a toll free telephone number or pesticides "hot line" where public inquiries can be dealt with in an expedient manner. According to my information, in the first year in which this hot line was in operation, the year 1986, approximately 500 calls per month were received on average from the public at large, Government officials, the media, the scientific community and many other interested parties. So that would seem to indicate, first, that there is a great deal of concern, as I think is evident to most Hon. Members of the House, and second, there is a method by which the concerned can be registered and by which information can be provided to those who seek it.

It seems to me that the media played a fairly important role up to this point. There has been a great deal of attention directed by the public. There is a great deal of awareness. I think there is every reason to believe that this type of input is both being sought and will continue to be provided.

I suppose the question now before the House is, therefore, not whether the issue is an important one, because all of us would recognize that it is. Certainly, it is an issue to which the Hon. Member who presented the motion has given a great deal of his own particular time, and he should be complimented for that.

I think the issue is whether or not a national task force is the way to deal with the question of providing public information and seeking public input.

I would like to speak as someone who is relatively new to this place and in doing so reflect some of the feedback I receive from my constituents, and that is with respect to task force and/or studies. As an academic, I would never hesitate to defend the need for intensive examination of issues of importance. I think that is a very worthy undertaking and in many cases is well worth the expense of both time and dollars. However, I also think there is a considerable amount of cynicism within the public community with respect to task forces. There is a suggestion that here is another task force or another inquiry with no particular objective in mind. I say that in no way reflecting upon the Hon. Member whose motion is before us. I am simply trying to reflect the type of concern I often hear from the public. In that regard, I must question the expenditure of time and money on what I am afraid many citizens would perceive to be just another task force. There are some people who would suggest we in Parliament study things to death. In view of the reviews which have already taken place and the fact that many of the recommendations which came out of those reviews have been implemented, I would hestitate to go in that particular direction believing that the expenditure of time and money would not be warranted.

I think the mechanism which is in place, the Pest Management Advisory Board, the information system, the constant soliciting of public input, which is very much in place, all combined will ensure, at least into the foreseeable future, that there is adequate opportunity for public input to take place and a guarantee that its input is being recognized and responded to.

In closing, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Davenport on his motion. I agree with him that the issue he addresses is a very significant one which is worthy of the attention of this House and the public, but I question whether or not at this point in time we need a national task force to accomplish the objective he has in mind.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to address this very important issue set forth for us by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Pesticide control and pest management in Canada is a partnership, a partnership in the co-operative efforts between federal Departments and, of course, between the federal Government and the provinces. At the federal level, Agriculture Canada takes the lead as that Department is responsible for the Pest Control Products Act.

Agriculture Canada is supported by three other federal Departments. Health and Welfare is concerned with health issues such as residues of pesticides in foods and exposure to pesticides by the user, those involved in the manufacture and handling of pesticides and bystanders. Fisheries and Oceans looks at the effect of pesticides on fisheries and fish habitats. Furthermore, all Canadians are concerned about effective pesticide use on the environment and wildlife.

On the provincial side, the provinces are responsible for the sale and procedures for the use of pesticides within their borders. Agriculture Canada has undertaken many initiatives along with the other federal agencies to improve the federal regulatory system for pesticides and to restore public confidence and credibility in the management of these important chemical products.

Within Environment Canada, improvements have been made to ensure that the environmental perspective in the regulatory decision-making process is sound and strong. In addition, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has made the resolution of the problem of toxic chemicals in Canada one of his chief priorities and we are now beginning to see the results of that effort.

On October 20, 1986, at the Air Pollution Control Association's environmental Government affairs seminar, the Minister of the Environment released two landmark documents. The first such document entitled "From Cradle to Grave: A Management Approach to Chemicals" is the result of the efforts of a group composed of representatives from the chemical industry, labour, environmentalists, consumer groups and federal and provincial Governments. The group came together to devise a management strategy for chemical compounds that would minimize risks to human health and the natural environment without jeopardizing the competitiveness of the Canadian chemical industry. The second document released by the Minister is the report of the consultative committee on the Environmental Contaminants Act amendments which recommends reforms to that law.

The work of both groups assumed added importance and indeed urgency when the Minister announced in 1985 the federal Government's intention to introduce a comprehensive environmental protection Act that would concentrate on toxic chemicals. The legislation was also heralded in the Speech from the Throne.

The document entitled "From Cradle to Grave: A Management Approach to Chemicals" provides the conceptual underpinnings of the proposed environmental protection Act with its stress on prevention. In December, the legislation will be tabled in draft form for public consultation. It will then be introduced in Parliament, hopefully in the spring of 1987.

Environment Canada also has responsibilities that go beyond the strictly legislative base of the Department in the area of chemical management. These include providing an environmental perspective on the process of pesticides registration and regulation.

The Environment Minister went to the Treasury Board and gained an additional 13 person-years and $1.5 million for 1986-87 as the first phase of a three-year concerted effort to ensure that the Department has the capacity to assess the potential impact of pesticides and to ensure that use of these products does not have undue adverse consequences for the environment.

The first phase of that program is now in place. Pesticide products now submitted for review for registration under Agriculture Canada's Pest Control Products Act are subjected to complete and comprehensive environmental reviews. Implementation of the full three-year program will make Environment Canada an effective and efficient partner in the pesticide registration process.

Environment Canada has begun the development of regulatory guidelines for pesticides. In co-operation with Agriculture Canada, the Environment Department is preparing guidelines on environmental chemistry and the fate of pesticides in the environment. In consultation with federal and provincial colleagues, Environment Canada officials are preparing guidelines for the disposal of these chemicals and their containers.

Agriculture Canada, with the co-operation and support of Environment Canada, is preparing guidelines for the registration of non-chemical pesticides that are biologically based. These guidelines, by defining the requirements for registration and by clearly defining the scientific questions that must be answered before registration of a pesticide can be considered, will allow the regulatory process to become more efficient and effective. Further, the regulatory guidelines, when published in an integrated form, can define for the public the criteria used in the evaluation of pesticides. Development of the guidelines will continue over the years until a complete and comprehensive set of instructions defining the full spectrum of environmental requirements is completed.

While the initial registration process for pesticides is a very important component of the management of these chemical products in Canada, it is equally important that the regulatory process have the capacity and flexibility to re-evaluate older products and to reconsider precautions and restrictions put in place in the past. Older regulatory decisions must be reviewed in the light of new information and new advances in science and technology in order to ensure that the use of pesticides continues to meet modern standards of environmental safety. This re-evaluation process, led by Agriculture Canada under its Pest Control Products Act, is in place. To serve the re-evaluation process, the Minister of the Environment has implemented a co-ordinated national research and monitoring program which will provide the necessary environmental data to undertake regulatory re-evaluation. This is, in effect, an early warning system which will allow preventive action to be taken before significant environmental contamination can occur.

The research and monitoring program conducted in close co-operation with provincial agencies will determine the actual presence, levels and trends of pesticides in the environment and will also define their fate and effects. The first phase of this research and monitoring program is under way. This year, Environment Canada has, in co-operation with its federal and provincial colleagues, established a municipal water testing and survey program in Atlantic Canada. In Prince Edward Island, the Department of the Environment, in co-operation with the provincial Government, is assessing the fate and impact of pesticide use in both ground water and surface waters.

We have signed agreements with Newfoundland, Quebec and British Columbia to implement a federal-provincial index station network to provide data on water quality and the future measurement of trends in water quality in major river basins within these provinces. Environment Canada hopes to expand this network to encompass major river basins in all regions of Canada.

In the area of wildlife, Environment Canada is developing methods to measure the persistence of low-level pesticide residues in birds of prey such as peregrine falcons. The Department is also conducting assessments of the impact of forest pesticide use on song birds and other wildlife.

In concert with the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, Environment Canada is preparing water quality guidelines which will include acceptable maximum levels of pesticides in water intended for various uses.

In the regional offices of Environment Canada inventories of pesticide use will be employed to identify specific products of regional concern and to identify environmental locales and wildlife populations which are particularly sensitive to environmental contamination so that appropriate precautions can be taken to protect them. Agreements and protocols for sharing this information have been reached between Environment Canada and many of its provincial counterparts.

At Environment Canada's National Water Research Institute in Burlington, Ontario, methodologies are being developed which will allow detection of minute residues of specific pesticides in the environment and allow an even earlier analysis of effects of these pesticides on aquatic organisms.

The Department's Atmospheric Environment Service has undertaken a program to determine the precautions necessary to minimize the drift of pesticides during their use. The service has also initiated an analysis to determine the importance of atmospheric transport of pesticides in contributing to environment pollution.

This list of accomplishments, by no means complete, represents the beginning of Environment Canada's renewed efforts in assessing the state of the environment and in defining the precautions necessary to protect the environment from the adverse effects of chemicals, including pesticides.

The Department intends to extend and expand its environmental research and monitoring program for pesticides until it forms, in co-operation with other federal Departments and provincial authorities, a truly national, co-ordinated program.

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to participate in the debate. Certainly the Hon. Member's motion captures my interest. I have great respect for his past experiences and knowledge in the environmental area. I am in favour of supporting his endeavours, although I have some question about his particular motion today.

I am sure the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) knows that the main value of the motion before us today is that it will stir up interest in this area. I am sure he is succeeding in that particular regard. The problem which he addresses is a massive one. Every Hon. Member is concerned about human health and the status of the environment. We are very eager to see something positive happen.

Perhaps it would take a task force study to establish what should be studied in this regard. The Hon. Member wants us to study the use of pesticides. It would be very important to study herbicides and other chemicals used in the agricultural field as well. What about the vast array of other chemicals, such as the ones used to ripen fruit and the ones used to prevent fruit from ripening? Chemicals are used in many different areas. Why should they not be included in such a study? The task would be a monumental one.

Can we afford to put all our efforts, time and money into a task force which would require years to produce a report? In that period of time each agency involved in pesticides and herbicides would probably say: "We will wait for the report of the task force to come down and then take action". It is possible that a task force could end up delaying the procedure.

Of course we cannot think of agriculture without thinking of the use of chemicals. At least that is my impression based upon what I have seen in my riding of Perth. Their use is essential for the prosperity of the area. In fact, they are essential for people in the area of the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes) who spoke so eloquently just a few minutes ago. She represents consumers, as do I, who wish to eat inexpensive Canadian food. Thus farmers will have to use some chemicals.

If we set up a task force, would it concern itself with only the effects of chemicals upon the environment and human health? Certainly it would have to look at other issues. What about alternative methods which do not involve pesticides or herbicides? What can be done to help the situation in that regard?

My area of the country is a high corn growing region where the product Atrazine is used to dedicate the land for use in corn year after year. In fact, it allows the land to be used in that way. However, what is the spin-off effect of that chemical? I do not believe that this chemical presents a health hazard. Perhaps this raises another topic. How many chemicals are being used about which we do not know? As I said, the land in my area is dedicated to corn use year after year. The land gets packed. Farmers are required to use larger tractors to break the land and to plant their corn. The situation becomes less efficient as time goes on. At present the tendency in farming areas is to recognize that we cannot continue with this farming method and that we must look for a rotation method which allows the texture of the soil to improve. If we want to keep our topsoil—it is shrinking—we must look at different farming methods.

Would the task force study such alternative methods so that it would not be necessary to use chemicals? I would suggest that the task force would study that topic as well as a number of other ones.

In the centre of this debate is the tendency to sensationalize. We recognize that risks have to be taken in life and that many of the hazards are blown out of proportion by people who choose to do so for their own reasons. Perhaps they wish to sell newspapers. Other people might do it for political reasons, just to be on the other side of the debate or perhaps to garner votes from the people who are concerned about the issue. Some people feed upon the concern of others in terms of the use of chemicals in forestry or agriculture.

Returning to the farmers in my area, they were really sad when they lost the chemical Alachlor last year. It was an important chemical to them. However, they had alternatives; and they did not have to use Alachlor. Perhaps the greatest problem was that it took competition out of the field. It took a major chemical, which was shown to work and was working, out of the fields. Farmers in my area are also responsible people. They do not want to be part of a process where well water or other drinking water in Ontario might be contaminated. As a result, they took the responsible action and agreed that it should not be used. They still suffer from the loss. They would like to see more study of the situation to see whether the product can be used. If it is found to be safe and that it does not contaminate water—and I know that the evidence available at the present time is limited—Canadian farmers would use the chemical in a very responsible manner.

I have experienced chemical use on farms and the pressures faced by farmers. The only control they have over avoiding poisoning themselves is to mix their products standing with their backs to the wind, so that any fumes from the product are wafted away and they are not exposed to them. Perhaps these chemicals are more dangerous to users. Of course we worry about the end result, the contamination of the environment, the contamination of food product, and the contamination of water. However, very often there is more danger to the person applying the chemical product than there is to any end user.

I believe a task force at this time might perhaps be counter-productive. There are many other initiatives going on in any case that will come toward the end point in our problem. We can talk about initiatives such as the integrated pest management control.

Mr. Speaker, I have come to the end.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—UNITED STATES FUNDING OF MEASURES TO COMBAT ACID RAIN. (B) SULPHUR DIOXIDE EMISSIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, on October 28 I asked the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) a question that was very simple and straightforward, namely: Since March of this year how much money has the United States put into the abatement—I repeat, the abatement—of acid rain as a result of the envoys' report. The Minister of the Environment replied by saying that $400 million was put into that direction on nine major projects. The Environment Minister was wrong at that time. He was also wrong on March 19 of this year when he informed this House, and I quote from Hansard at page 11657, that the U.S. President had:

—committed himself to hundreds of millions of dollars of cash to abate acid rain in the United States.

On both accounts the Minister gave this House the wrong information. The fact is that he referred to $400 million in his answer on October 28. That amount should read $360 million. It has nothing to do with an abatement of acid rain flowing from the report of the envoys and the adoption of that report by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of Canada and the President of the United States. What the Minister was referring to was an amount of $360 million which has to do with the demonstration and commercialization technology which is part of a clean coal technology program adopted by the U.S. Congress in December, 1985. That amount has nothing to do with an abatement program in the U.S. from which Canada could benefit.

I hope that today the Parliamentary Secretary will come clean with this House and answer the question that the Minister avoided answering on October 28. This House is entitled to an honest answer to this very simple question. How many kilograms of SO2 have been reduced by way of the agreement that was announced in March of this year between the leaders of the two nations? This is what we want to know. We do not want to know what was done under the clean coal technology program. This is a U.S. Congress program. What has been achieved since March of this year? Why I am asking this question is that on more than one occasion the Minister of the Environment has raised hope during Question Period in this House, and has given answers that have turned out to be incorrect or outright wrong.

In the meantime, while these exchanges take place in this question and answer period that is so unsatisfactory, the cost of acid rain is accumulating in a variety of ways. As the Parliamentary Secretary knows from a committee meeting this afternoon, there is an increasing and substantial cost to the maple syrup producers in this country. It amounted to something like $87 million in 1986 alone according to L'Union des Producteurs Agricoles.

There is a cost involved in inhibited forest growth. There is a cost to motel owners and the tourism industry. There is a cost to the public purse through incidence of respiratory diseases and hospital admissions when air pollution reaches certain levels. There is a cost to buildings and structures eroded by acid rain. There is a cost to salmon breeding grounds in eastern Canada. There is, of course, this phenomenal cost imposed on the sports and fishing industry, as well as resort areas such as Muskoka affected by acidification. The Government took great pride in the envoy report which was going to resolve the question of acid rain and the emissions which pour over our border daily, totalling some 26 million tonnes or more of SO2 a year. Therefore my question was intended to get an indication from the Government as to what the agreement has achieved so far. The question was simply this. How much money has the U.S. put into the abatement of acid rain since March and how much of a reduction was there in sulphur oxide emissions which cause acid rain and which spew across the border, damaging the Canadian economy and environment? That question is still valid today and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will come clean with us.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to respond to this important question. The Hon. Member can be sure that the Parliamentary Secretary will come clean on all questions, not only with him but with all Hon. Members.

The endorsement of the report of the special envoys on acid rain by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan in March, 1986 was not the final word on a joint solution to our common acid rain problem. It established a foundation and a process which the two countries can use to move toward our ultimate objective of solving our transboundary air pollution problem once and for all.

One of the key recommendations of the special envoys was the need for the United States to establish a five-year, $5 billion control technology commercial demonstration program. This recommendation was designed to expand the menu of control options and make it easier to formulate a U.S. acid rain control plan. It was also designed to provide some near-term relief from acid rain.

From the Canadian perspective, two of the special envoys' criteria are of particular importance. It is primarily against these that Canada will judge existing and new initiatives in the United States. These criteria are, and I quote from the envoys' report: "More consideration should be given to projects that demonstrate retrofit technologies applicable to the largest number of existing sources that, because of their size and location, contribute to transboundary air pollution"; and, "It should also result in some near-term reductions in U.S. air emissions that affect Canadian ecosystems".

We have established clear objectives on the acid rain issue. Acid deposition must be reduced to less than 20 kilograms per hectare per year. To do this, sulphur dioxide emissions in eastern Canada must be reduced by 50 per cent and the transboundary flow of pollution from the United States into Canada must be reduced by 50 per cent, from four million tonnes down to two million tonnes.

Canada assesses any U.S. clean coal technology demonstration initiative primarily by the extent to which the technologies can be applied to the principal sources of emissions affecting Canada and by the extent to which the demonstration projects provide immediate relief in the transboundary pollution flows. It is these criteria we are using to assess the nine projects under the U.S. Department of Energy's clean coal technology program.

PATENT ACT—EFFECT OF AMENDMENTS ON DRUG PRICES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) about the anticipated increase in drug costs to Canadians because of the changes he has introduced to the Patent Act with respect to pharmaceutical drugs. The Minister has responded that prices for drugs already on the market will not go up and that one has to make assumptions about drugs not yet on the market. The drugs we are talking about are, of course, those drugs which will come on to the market under the new arrangement if the Bill is indeed passed.

The Minister tried to dismiss the question by underlining the difficulty of predicting future price increases. In fact, the Government knows that drug prices for Canadians will indeed go up and has done cost studies to predict the results of its new legislation. The Minister is afraid to make those studies public because they will show how adversely Canadians will be affected.

During the summer I made a request for those cost impact studies through an application under the Access to Information Act. I was denied access to those cost impact studies as it was alleged that those pertinent documents are Cabinet confidences and, therefore, shielded from public view. All along the Government has wanted to handle this Bill as quietly as possible. It meant to introduce the legislation on the last day the House sat in June in order to lessen the public attention that would be paid to the Bill. The Government knows that, according to a Gallup poll released in September, 57 per cent of Canadians are opposed to those proposed changes.

Due to changes in the Patent Act in 1969, Canada went from having drug prices that were among the highest in the world to having drug prices which are now among the lowest in the world. By allowing increased competition among drug manufacturers, Canadians have benefited from lower drug prices compared to other countries. This legislation will change that situation by gravely increasing the length of time that the multinationals have exclusive rights to manufactured drugs.

Due to pressure from the multinational drug companies, and now the American Government, this Government has introduced this legislation which is certain to increase the cost of prescription drugs to all Canadians. The multinational drug companies feel the situation in Canada must be changed, not only because of the higher profits they see possible in Canada but because Canada sets an example these large companies do not want to have followed elsewhere in the world.

Neither the Government nor the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, which is the group representing the large multinationals, have come forward with any estimates of how the proposal will affect drug prices. However, according to the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association, which is the body which represents the generic manufacturers in Canada, the additional cost to Canadians in 1995 will be $650 million, and $745 million in 1996.

The cumulative cost is far higher than the increase in investment promised by the multinational manufacturers. These multinational companies have promised some $1.4 billion in investment over the next 10 years. Although the Government will not say it, these companies would only offer this additional investment if they could be assured of additional revenues which will come from higher prices. The multinationals have offered this publicly but the Bill the Government has introduced requires no guarantees about investment, research and development or job creation.

While the Minister argues that we cannot know the effect of price increases on new drugs, the Bill includes provisions to pay the provinces $25 million a year for four years to compensate them for a short-term impact on provincial pharmacare plans and give them additional security against any adjustments which have to be made. The Minister knows that by giving the large multinational drug companies this kind of freedom from competition in the market-place, the prices of drugs can only go up. The provinces, which through their pharmacare programs pay a large bill for prescription drugs, realize that prices will go up and that they will be stuck with higher bills.

• (1815)

The Minister of Health for Nova Scotia, for example, says that the increased expenses to his province's pharmacare program will not be offset by the money offered so far by the federal Government.

I call upon the Government again to release all the cost impact studies it has done regarding the changes proposed to the Patent Act because Canadians have a right to know exactly how much it will cost them as a result of the Government's action. We know even before we start that it will cost them $100 million in the first four years. If the Minister or the Government does not understand that this will be paid by Canadians, it will be the first Bill that Canadians will have to foot as a result of the amendment the Government is proposing to this Act.

• (1820)

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to give the Hon. Member the assurance that none of the proposed amendments to the Patent Act will increase the prices of the 3,000 drugs available on the Canadian market.

The competitive pricing brought about by the generic sector will continue under the new policy, since generic products now on the market will not be affected by the proposed changes. Furthermore, the new compulsory licences will continue to be granted to generic producers as soon as the compliance period for patented products expires.

Furthermore, the proposed amendments to the Patent Act provide for establishing a Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which will be authorized to review prices of all patented medicines. If a price is declared excessive according to the standards set by the Board, the latter will be empowered to impose sanctions on the producer. The Board can then prescribe a reasonable price level. It can also revoke the compliance period for the medicines concerned or for any other medicines sold by the manufacturer.

To set standards for evaluating the prices of medicines currently on the market, the Board will be authorized to consider the prices of other medicines in the same therapeutic class, the prices at which the same or similar products were sold in the past, prices charged in other countries, the costs of making and marketing the medicine, the rate of increase of the price of the medicine compared with the Consumer Price Index, and any other factor the Board deems relevant.

In the case of medicines being brought on the market for the first time, the Board will be authorized to set an entry price on the basis of factors similar to those mentioned earlier.

The Patent Act requires every manufacturer to provide the Board with the information it needs to carry out comparative analyses. Failure to do so will be dealt with in exactly the same manner as the setting of excessive price levels. In this way, the Board can be certain it will obtain the information it needs to determine whether medicine prices are reasonable.

Finally, the Bill contains provisions that allow for a review of the legislation, four years and ten years after its implementation, at which time the price trends for medicines and the level of industrial benefits will be analyzed and, if necessary, adjustments made to the original legislation.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—POSSIBLE GASOLINE PRICE INCREASE— (A) DELAYED IMPLEMENTATION ON BEHALF OF CONSUMERS (B) GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO GIVE EQUALITY OF TREATMENT TO CANADIAN CONSUMERS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Last October 30, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) a question concerning gasoline prices at the pump.

• (1825)

It is quite normal that gasoline prices should go up or down according to supply and demand, on both domestic and international markets. What is not normal is that when oil prices go down the impact is not as quickly felt at the pump. Yet when the price of crude oil increases the consumer can feel the impact very rapidly at the pump. Consumers are fully aware of this phenomenon, and recently this prompted Consumers' Association of Canada President Sally Hall to state:

> The oil industry claims that it takes between 75 and 100 days before lower oil prices are reflected by a decrease at the pump. (. . .) Therefore the same time lag should exist whenever prices go up.

As he said in his reply last October 6, the Minister can tell us that the federal Government has no constitutional authority to set gasoline prices. Fair enough. He might also tell me that he can only do his best to make sure that market prices remain as competitive as possible. I agree. But, Mr. Speaker, if we go back a few months when oil prices were going down for every customer, much more rapidly elsewhere in the world than in Canada, the federal Government—it has no constitutional authority, the Minister said—did send a telex to the oil companies to ask them to reduce gasoline prices at the pump. It had become obvious that the oil companies were dragging their feet and seemed in no hurry to lower prices at the pump.

Under pressure from the Opposition, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at the time sent a telegram to the oil companies. Its purpose was to ensure there would be a speedy cut in the price of gas. Did she have any constitutional authority? No, but she did have, still has and always will have, a moral authority and obligation to do so. Mr. Speaker, I think the same moral authority and obligation is binding on the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The Minister may answer, as he has done on several occasions in this House, that the Director of Investigations and Research in the Competition Branch is monitoring petroleum markets directly. Mr. Speaker, the Director does this under the provisions of an Act of Parliament. In fact, it seems Petro-

Canada is being monitored by our Director of Investigations and Research because the Corporation will not let the U.S. buyers of its refinery at Come-by-Chance in Newfoundland sell petroleum products to the majority of Canadian consumers.

The Minister could also answer that there are price wars in various communities in Canada. He is comparing apples and oranges. Price wars are fought by gas retailers, not by the oil companies. If an oil company were found to be supporting a price war for the purpose of eliminating a competitor, or if the oil company were setting the prices to be charged by the retailer, it would be a direct infringement of the Combines Investigation Act. Consequently, when the Minister is talking about price wars, he must realize, if he knows anything about the subject, that retailers pay the price of these wars. The retailers are stuck between the consumers and the big oil companies that lease garages and sell their gas at high prices. The Minister ought to know that generally speaking, gas retailers do not make money selling gas. They make money on other activities such as car repairs and towing services.

The Canadians who elected us, Mr. Speaker, have a right to expect their Members and Ministers to uphold our laws. But they also expect leadership from their Ministers. And when a Minister hides behind legalistic arguments like the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) has been doing, he may be legally right, but he is not showing any moral or political leadership.

And in the final instance, he is leaving consumers to fend for themselves.

I have here a letter to the editor that appeared in the Montreal Gazette on November 12, signed by Mr. David Senenbaum of Saint-Laurent.

[English]

I, like most Quebecers, am sick and tired of being conned by the oil companies and government.

It's not enough that we are being ripped off by outrageous gasoline prices; the oil companies take a sadistic pleasure in rubbing salt in the wounds.

Ultramar was the first to raise gasoline prices 2 cents a litre and the other goody-goody rip-off artists played coy.

Carole Pressault, of Petro Canada, said "We haven't done anything yet (re increases)." Pierre Després, of Imperial Oil, said "At this moment we have not increased our pump prices".

Yet they, and the rest of the gang, raised their prices within 24 hours.

Why are we taking this kind of abuse? Where are our politicians, spokespeople, human rights groups, lobbying groups and protestors?

Can anyone out there explain to me why there is no competition in gasoline prices in Quebec?

I was always under the impression that a cartel in this country was illegal. Then why is the price of a litre of gasoline exactly the same at so many service stations, not only to the cent, but tenth of a cent?

Unless something drastic is done by the general public, this wanton gouging will continue.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will take note of my comments and those of Canadian consumers.

Royal Assent

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): In response to my colleague, Mr. Speaker, I might repeat, as the Minister stated last October 30, that the federal Government has no constitutional authority to set gasoline prices, and I know she agrees with that. Last September 8, however, when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) was in Calgary to announce the abolition of the petroleum and gas revenue tax, he indicated that he had already been assured by the major oil companies that any crude oil price increase will take as much time to be reflected at the pump as when prices went down earlier this year. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources closely monitors the price of crude and refined oil products.

Crude oil prices now account for less than 30 per cent of gasoline prices and are only one of the many elements which bear on prices at the pump. All things considered, market competitiveness is the determining factor of gasoline prices.

The Government has taken several initiatives to ensure maximum market-place competitiveness. Last year it used the Western Accord to deregulate the oil industry production sector, and since then Canadian crude oil prices have dropped as a result of world-wide demand. Lower crude oil prices did translate into decreasing gasoline prices, to the benefit of Canadian consumers.

In June 1986 the Government pushed for the adoption of the competition legislation, thus completing the long-awaited reform of Canadian legislation concerning competition. This competition legislation, being of a general nature, will apply to the oil companies and will eventually protect the interests of consumers, not only with respect to the petroleum sector but also in all spheres of economic activities.

The Director of Investigation and Research appointed under the competition legislation constantly monitors changes in the oil sector, and I can assure you that should he find evidence of conspiracy, price fixing or any other unlawful activity, he will take the necessary action as he did in the past.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the order made Monday, November 17, 1986, the motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

[Translation]

Accordingly, the sitting is suspended to the call of the Chair.

At 6.28 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 7.35 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate has passed Bill C-24, An Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations, without amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Rideau Hall
Ottawa,

November 18, 1986

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Antonio Lamer, Puine Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 18th day of November, 1986, at 7.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Léopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1940)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-5, An Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act—Chapter No. 45, 1986.

Bill C-24, An Act to provide for the maintenance of ports operations—Chapter No. 46, 1986.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Government House Leader what the business will be tomorrow so that we will be organized and can probably debate some interesting Bills.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to respond to that request. Tomorrow we will be dealing with Bill C-25, followed by Bill C-20 and Bill C-22, but not necessarily in that order. Bill C-25 will be called first.

Mr. Speaker: It being 7.45 p.m., pursuant to an Order made on Monday, November 17, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 7.46 p.m. the House adjourned.

Wednesday, November 19, 1986

The House met at 2 p.m.

THE LATE HON. DONALD CAMPBELL JAMIESON

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my unhappy duty to draw to the attention of all Hon. Members the death of a colleague and friend, Don Jamieson. Certain Hon. Members will be rising and paying tribute. We will commence with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we learned with shock this morning that Donald Jamieson died while he was jogging in Swift Current.

At the outset it is hard to say something sad about a man who really expressed and reflected such joy. Don Jamieson approached the challenge of life with energy, vigour, and enthusiasm. As most Hon. Members of the House know, his first political involvement related to the pre-Confederation debates in Newfoundland where he opposed the entry of Newfoundland into Confederation. The battle was far closer than anyone imagined, but Newfoundland chose to join Canada. From that moment Don Jamieson accepted the result with grace and became a total Canadian.

Don often remarked that he became a Canadian not by birth, not by conviction, but by conversion. In his subsequent career he was able to prove time and time again how useful it was for both Newfoundland and Canada to have our newest province as part of the terms of union with our country. Of course he ended his career in the House of Commons speaking for us Canadians as a nation and speaking for us eloquently on the world forum after his retirement as a Minister and a Member, representing our country so elegantly in the United Kingdom.

[Translation]

Even if over time, Don Jamieson became one of Canada's most ardent defenders, he never missed an opportunity to promote the interests of the province of his birth, and he did so with his legendary humour.

• (1405)

[English]

I think we all knew that Don Jamieson was gifted in his sense of humour. In fact, I was always convinced that Don had invented the so-called Newfie jokes himself. I remember he always told me that they said in Newfoundland:

> If you have a reputation for getting up early in the morning, you can sleep in until noon.

We all recall with warmth the day he intervened in the House of Commons during a discussion of payments for farm-stored wheat. He exclaimed:

> Mr. Speaker, I am very sympathetic to financial support for farm-stored wheat, but I have to ask the House to give a favourable ear, as well, to the question of sea-stored cod!

He embodied the highest standards of public office—commitment, compassion, and integrity. He came from a humble background. He rose by way of his own abilities to a senior position in the Canadian broadcasting industry, but he never forgot where he came from, nor did he ever lose touch with the people who elected him and whom he represented.

I am very proud in personal terms, Mr. Speaker, to have known Don Jamieson as a colleague and to have treasured him as a friend. I extend on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada and our caucus colleagues, our deepest sympathy to Barbara Jamieson, his widow, and to their four children.

I think it would be appropriate to close by quoting from Don's very first, his maiden speech in the House of Commons, made on May 9, 1967, because I think most of us who knew him and had the honour of sharing this place with him will recognize that there never has been a finer speaker in this Chamber than Don Jamieson:

> This country has survived and flourished because its people have been prepared to fly in the face of conformity. The very existence of Canada, I suggest, proves the claim that most worthwhile things in this world are done by people who, when they are told that their dreams are vain, go on to realize them anyway.

I am happy to bear witness to the fact that Don Jamieson's dreams were realized, were fulfilled and that he made an immense contribution to Newfoundland and to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in this tribute to our former late colleague, Don Jamieson, on behalf of the Government of Canada and our Party. I think he would have to be recognized by everyone in Newfoundland as being one of the greatest political figures of Newfoundland in the 20th century and I think of Canada as well.

Don turned 65 last April. He was working, I believe, on a book on events that occurred preceding and during Newfoundland's entry into confederation. I am sure it would have been a great book had he finished it.

The Late Donald Jamieson

On a personal note, I had known Don Jamieson ever since I was a boy. He was associated with my late father, Ches Crosbie, when he started in business many years ago with Gaden's where he started as well in the radio business broadcasting sports for Gaden's Ltd. He was associated with my father also with a group of people who urged that we pursue economic union with the United States rather than confederation with Canada and that we keep our options open. There were the famous referenda of 1948 and 1949 in that regard.

Even then Don was a golden-tongued orator and was one of the greatest political speakers of the 20th century. He was certainly in a class with Joseph Smallwood himself, which was no mean feat. He was a broadcaster, a communicater and an author. He wrote a book "The Troubled Air" before going into politics, so the trouble did not refer, of course, to the political sphere. He was a patriot. He was a great representative of Canada as Secretary of State for External Affairs. He was warm-spirited, convivial, thoughtful, not narrowly partisan and certainly articulate.

I well remember the period that he was a Minister. He was elected to this House first in 1966 in a by-election and sworn into the Privy Council on July 6, 1968 as Minister of Defence Production. He became Minister of Transport, Minister of DRIE, Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce and then on September 14, 1976 he was appointed Secretary of State for External Affairs, a post he filled for three years. We were very proud of him in Newfoundland that he had been chosen to represent all of Canada and that a Newfoundlander had achieved that position. He did a remarkable job. He was on top of his files wherever he went and he always looked convincing. I think I can remember seeing him on television giving Brezhnev a bear-hug. I have to say this, that Brezhnev shook first when that great bear-hug took place.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1415)

Mr. Crosbie: It is interesting that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) mentioned that Don never forgot his roots. He lived in Swift Current where the Beck family came from. His great grandfather had come from Scotland and had lived on Sound Island which is in Placentia Bay and later resettled. Don built a residence on Sound Island some years ago and lived there for part of the year himself.

During the time he was a Minister and Newfoundland's representative in Ottawa, as we call it, the Progressive Conservative administration under Mr. Moores had taken over the Government of Newfoundland, and during the period from 1972 to 1979 our relationship with Don Jamieson was very, very warm. He always worked together with the Newfoundland Government to see what he could do for Newfoundland, not forgetting of course that his own district was one-seventh of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. The relationship was a good one despite the difference in parties.

I noticed when I came here that Don was warmly regarded on all sides of the House. He had friends in all parties. That is as it should be. I think Don well illustrated what Thomas Haliburton once said, that to handle a ship you must know all the ropes. He knew all the ropes of the ship of state as he exemplified in his career.

He left this House in 1979 to go back to Newfoundland and became Leader of the Opposition. He left politics in 1981 to become our High Commissioner at the end of 1982 in England, a most capable High Commissioner for Canada in the U.K. He had a very significant career both in Newfoundland and Canada and I want to pass on our condolences today to his wife Barbara, his four children, Donna, Heather, Roger and Debbie, and his three grandchildren.

I would close by saying that Don exemplified something that John Bunyan said in Pilgrim's Progress when he was defining democracy. He said that democracy was primarily an attitude of mind, a spiritual testament, in which politics was still the greatest and most honourable adventure. Don came from a very successful career in the public sector, particularly in broadcasting where he was the best known broadcaster in Newfoundland. He was four years president of The Canadian Association of Broadcasters, by the way. He entered into politics because I think he thought that politics was still the greatest and most honourable adventure. That is a thought and spirit not much in evidence today, more's the pity, but I hope one that we will get back to before too much longer because politics is still in my view as well the greatest and most honourable adventure. Don himself was one of the greatest and most honourable adventurers in that profession.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, today Canada has lost a distinguished citizen and Newfoundland has lost a noble son. I would like to pick up from where the Minister just left off in quoting Bunyan about the life of politics and referring it entirely appropriately to Don Jamieson.

Don Jamieson brought to Canada many significant attributes as a human being. Before I say something briefly about them, I think it is in one sense supremely ironic that in order to win his subsequent battles he had to lose a decisively important one first. That has already been referred to concerning the battles of 1948 and 1949. As he said subsequently, he was on the wrong side. As a good Newfoundlander he campaigned against Newfoundland joining Canada. He of course changed his mind and we can all be glad that he lost his first battle in order to go on and make a great contribution, not only to his native province, which he loved so well, but to the great land of Canada, which we all love so well.

He did a rare thing in politics. He was a Liberal who was, in his time, with perhaps one or two exceptions, the best orator in the House of Commons. In crucial moments he was able to revive the spirits or lead the charge of members of his own party. He did it in such a way as to devastate, perhaps only momentarily, the arguments of the competing Parties while not leaving an iota of bad feeling in the House of Commons. It is a remarkable accomplishment to be passionately and intelligently committed to your cause, to emerge victorious in a debate, and still somehow manage to leave your opponents feeling pretty good about the situation. That is a considerable politician, Mr. Speaker. He was that kind of man.

It has already been said that he was humorous. He could laugh at himself and make fun of his personal circumstances. He spoke with conviction. He served as Minister in a number of Departments. He was a distinguished ambassador for the people of Canada in the United Kingdom. He served ably in the private sector. All in all, he was a very fine Canadian.

[Translation]

He was a good citizen of Newfoundland and a good Canadian. He was passionate and had a great sense of humour.

[English]

We will all remember him with affection. We send to his wife and his children our deepest sympathies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) to say a few words in tribute to a former colleague, a great Canadian, a son of Newfoundland and a friend.

All of us here knew of Don Jamieson, the public man. Some here have valued his friendship for many more years than I. We each remember him in different ways. He inspired us, he challenged us, sometimes he left us in awe and he could always make us laugh, even in the most difficult of circumstances. He was a complete human being and whatever our differing recollections of Don Jamieson, on this I think we can all agree. He was an orator who knew no equal, neither in this House nor on the political stump in the charged atmosphere of a political meeting. His was a spellbinding oratory, born not of rhetoric but out of commitment and burning passion for those things he believed in. The quality of those great sterling pipes that represented Don Jamieson at his best in full flight was exceeded only by the sterling quality of that great mind that gave birth to his words.

As the Leader of the Opposition said, he spoke for the first time in this House on May 9, 1967, when he delivered the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. He said:

> We in this House ought to remind ourselves more often than we do that it is in fact the people's house and that everything we do here affects the lives of people.
> The great grey, anonymous bureaucracy may have no alternative but to deal with statistics and references to units of population, samples, cells, and all the other jargon of the trade, but as Members of Parliament we are involved and must be concerned with human beings. The machinations of our political parties, the conflicts that occur between parties and between individuals naturally attract a great deal of attention, but they are really the froth of public life. The substance lies in what we do here—

As Don Jamieson's executive assistant from Newfoundland, I was moved by his great commitment to public service and public duty. But I can tell you that his public commitment, as profound as it was, was no greater than his commitment to his family. In the last analysis, it must be said that his wife, Barbara, his children Donna, Heather, Roger and Debbie, were at the centre of his universe always. Family is the way Don Jamieson saw this country; each of us unique, seeking different goals, but with responsibility and commitment to each other.

He was born a Newfoundlander. Against his will he became a Canadian, and out of conviction his love for Canada grew. Nearly 20 years ago he said these words in the House of Commons, and I know that he would want to leave them with us today:

> I believe that we can restore to our children of the streets their rightful heritage of broad open spaces and good, clean air. But this will not be done by cold-blooded theorists or by slide rule administrators. This is not something that will appeal to those who believe that man is content with clothes on his back, three square meals a day and a roof over his head. The challenge is to those who would free the human spirit and relieve the monotony of our every day lives. It is to those who would create new horizons of beauty to delight the eye, new cultural experiences to stimulate the mind, and peaceful havens where we can relieve the tensions of our hurried pace. That dream has stirred the hearts of men and women since the beginning of time, and I believe that if we have the will we have the ability to make it a reality.

In closing, I know that that dream was alive in Don Jamieson this morning. I believe he has passed the torch to all of us and it should be said that when last we saw him he was in the place that he loved best, at home in Swift Current, Newfoundland. He was with the people he loved best, his family and neighbours. He was doing the thing that he loved best and talked about in the dream, being out in the wide open space taking in the good, clean air. May God speed him on his way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of every broadcaster in Canada who ever had the experience of knowing Don Jamieson, and what a rich experience it was. Don Jamieson knew the thrust and the throb of the broadcasting industry, and as President of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters for four consecutive years from 1961 to 1965 he was considered one of the most important influences in what was emerging as a new era in mass communications. Mr. Jamieson spoke loudly and often in favour of private initiative. Largely because of him, the "we" versus "them" attitude between private broadcasters and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was broken down. Don Jamieson proved that the two sectors could indeed co-exist.

As a private broadcaster myself, it was through Don Jamieson that I fell in love with his cherished Province of Newfoundland back in the 1960s. Throughout the 1970s, Mr. Jamieson was instrumental in helping me sign on as a Parliamentry Press Gallery correspondent for CJON-TV in St. John's.

It was during these years that I learned of his phenomenal photographic memory, his ability to glance at a wire story and sit down in front of a camera and go for a half hour without a script, commercials and all. The fact is, according to his wife, Barbara Jamieson, with that particular art, he would forever forget to pick up the laundry on the way home.

If anything endeared Don Jamieson to his host of friends from all political Parties, it was his wonderful sense of humour, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) pointed out. My favourite story—at least one that can be repeated here— was told to me by Senator Finlay MacDonald, a long-time broadcaster and friend of Don Jamieson. Hon. Members will recall that the referendum which brought Newfoundland into confederation was extraordinarily close. Shortly after that historic day, Senator MacDonald asked Don Jamieson how those who opposed confederation felt afterward and whether they were bitter. "Well, Finlay, it's like this", said Mr. Jamieson. "I have a half interest in a racehorse in Corner Brook. You could never get him out of the starting-gate unless you put a bottle of screech in his feedbag". "So what happened?" asked Fin MacDonald. "Well, he never won a race but he was the happiest loser you ever saw".

Don Jamieson was very much a winner to broadcasters. He was inducted into the Canadian Association of Broadcasters Hall of Fame in Vancouver early this month. Don Jamieson once said: "I think I'm the first Newfoundlander in public life who is a total Canadian". He will be sorely missed, Mr. Speaker, by Canada's broadcasters and by Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, it may surprise some Hon. Members that I want to add a few words to what has already been said. I am not going to repeat what has been said but there is a part which has been missed. The Hon. Member who just spoke came close when he talked about Mr. Jamieson's photographic memory. I was in the House and heard the maiden speech mentioned by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). He is right. The House of Commons is the people's court. I do not speak in any representative capacity as Leader of the House, nor do I have a former association with broadcasting, but I was a brand new Member sitting almost behind the seat of the former Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe who with his own rhetoric emulated his boss. I sat there by the curtain and heard his maiden speech. It was not what he said, although that was tremendous, but it was how he said it.

As the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said today, Don Jamieson personified the essence and spirit of this place. On May 9, 1967 he rose in his place to make his maiden speech and without a note, without a piece of paper, his eloquence was heard. I will never forget that speech. My friend, the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) was here but he was sitting a little closer to Mr. Diefenbaker. He was always a little closer to him than I sometimes was. My leader of the day, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker wrote a note, again in the spirit of Parliament, and that note may be in the book which is being written. I hope it is. It has been said they differed strenuously on the floor of the House, but it was never with malice. John George Diefenbaker wrote a note saying it was the greatest Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne that the late Hon. Member for Prince Albert had ever heard.

Those of us who were privileged to know Don Jamieson are the poorer for his loss. Newfoundland is the better because of him. Let us hope that, in his memory, we will make this place a little more the way he would have liked it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words because I had the privilege of serving as Parliamentary Secretary to the Hon. Don Jamieson. Speaking on my own behalf and on behalf of all Quebecers, I would like to join in expressing to his wife Barbara and his children our great sense of loss. Thanks to Don Jamieson, many of us learned to know and love Newfoundland and the people who live there. Those who, like myself, had an opportunity to travel with him to various parts of the world when he was Secretary of State for External Affairs, learned to know and love people and to understand the basic principle of how to communicate with people, even with those whose opinions we often do not share. I therefore wish to join my colleagues in extending to his family our heartfelt sympathy, and especially to his wife Barbara, who I had the honour of meeting, and his children.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding, I would ask all Hon. Members to stand with me for one minute of silence.

INDUSTRY

MITEL CORPORATION—CONSEQUENCES OF SALE TO BRITISH TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Government took great pride in the fact that it arranged the sale of the Mitel Corporation to British Telecommunications less than nine months ago and gave great assurances with regard to the benefits of such a sale to all Canadians. Within the last few days British Telecommunications has in turn decided to cut several hundred jobs at the four-year old Renfrew plant and has plans to close down that plant operation entirely after only four years of operation.

To add insult to injury the Government is allowing British Telecommunications to lift the research and development of the Mitel empire out of Canada in spite of the fact that Canadian taxpayers have a major investment in that research and development.

With regard to the sale of Mitel to British Telecommunications, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion stated on February 26, 1986: "Jobs will be preserved as a result of this transaction as Mitel's manufacturing as well as research and development activities will continue to be carried out in Canada". This sounds like all the other profound promises of this disastrous Government.

Today I have learned that the President of the National Research Council of Canada, the Vice-President and the section head from the Hertzberg Institute—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

PEACE

MESSAGES FROM HOLY ANGELS PRIMARY SCHOOL PUPILS

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, the other day in my riding, I took part in a march for world peace through the streets of Saint-Lambert, with the pupils of Saints-Anges primary school. More than 350 pupils gave me their peace symbols and messages, and I promised I would let the House know about them. Although I cannot read them all, here are a few passages which make one stop and think.

Vincent Dostie (9 years old) said: "To me, peace means no violence and people who have settled their differences. Where there is peace, there is harmony and gentleness. The reason I want peace is because I don't want a third world war."

Geneviève Gosset (9 years old) said: "Peace means love and no more war on this earth. No more poverty but healing the sick and feeding the hungry. What I want most is peace, love and happiness."

Marie-Flo Ménard (9 years old) said: "All we want is tranquility, kindness, goodness, gentleness, calm and harmony. When people start loving each other and there is no more poverty, we will all be happy. If we sent food and clothing to those who need it—"

Mr. Speaker, I think that if we show love and respect for others, we will find the peace so earnestly desired by the people of this earth.

UNITED NATIONS

OPENING FOR APPOINTMENT OF WOMAN UNDER-SECRETARY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Canadians were startled to hear that there is not a qualified woman in Canada for an important position at the under-secretary level at the United Nations who would be charge of the public information office. This is especially embarrassing since Canada itself has publicly criticized the UN for being such an all-male club. Canada has urged the UN to seek out and appoint women to senior positions. Preaching equality but not acting on it is not appreciated anywhere in Canada except perhaps the Petroleum Club.

Apparently a few Canadian women were approached about the job and but were not available or interested, but surely the Government could look further. Doubtless the Department of External Affairs itself needs to fill more senior positions with women so it will have the necessary contacts with well qualified women. Now that the Secretary General has asked for a nomination, we expect the Department of External Affairs to keep looking until it can make a good nomination.

AIR CANADA

CUT IN DIRECT SERVICE BETWEEN EDMONTON AND OTTAWA

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, on October 26 Air Canada unilaterally, without consultation, deprived 1.5 million citizens of Edmonton and Alberta of daily direct flights to Ottawa. This route was economically sound. It is inconceivable that Edmonton, the capital of Alberta, would be forced to face a cut in its link to the nation's capital.

Yesterday morning I met with the President of Air Canada who claimed the airline must save money so it must cut the line. Due to the newly extended length of the flight, Edmontonians will be obliged to add an extra day to their travel time between Ottawa and Edmonton. This added expense of overnight accommodation and time lost at work will cost western Canadians extra tens of thousands of dollars in travelling expenses.

I would like to state here and now that the Crown corporation Air Canada is doing a disservice to the city of Edmonton and its people. I urge Air Canada to reconsider its decision, restore the direct route, and treat Edmonton in a fair and just manner.

REFUGEES

PLIGHT OF IRANIAN REFUGEE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Canadian Press has just reported that the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) has refused refugee status to an individual who will face torture and probable execution when the U.S. deports him to Iran next week.

When the U.S. tried to return this individual to Iran earlier this year, the man attempted suicide by slashing his wrists during a stopover in Paris. Consequently, France refused to send him on to Iran and, instead, returned him to Washington.

His plea to Canada for a humanitarian reconsideration was shunted aside by the Minister with the cold comment: "We have no grounds to intervene".

It is ironic that the Minister can issue a ministerial permit to an individual with a record of over 20 criminal convictions, and give special entry to a Hungarian spy, but refuse to deal compassionately with a human being who faces almost certain death. The Minister's decisions are inconsistent, illogical, and confusing.

I suggest that the Minister review his policy position so that immigration decisions can once again be returned to a firm, compassionate, and sensible ground. Anything less is simply not good enough.

BILINGUALISM

FRANCOPHONE RIGHTS IN ONTARIO

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, by unanimous action the Legislature of the Province of Ontario took an historic step toward official bilingualism yesterday.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PUBLICATION OF GUIDE FOR VICTIMS OF SEXUAL ABUSE

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Hnatyshyn) recently announced the publication of a guide for victims of sexual assault.

Today I would like to draw the attention of the House to this guide because it is a tool that provides victims—most of them women—with information on the services that are available to them and on how the judicial system works.

In addition to explaining the legal provisions that apply to sexual assault, it also describes the whole mechanism of investigation and criminal proceedings that is set off by a charge of sexual assault.

Furthermore, this kind of initiative answers a need that has existed for a long time, and it reflects this Government's concern for these victims who are often misunderstood and left to fend for themselves. The guide will not only help give victims a sense of direction, it will also make the various intervenors in the judicial system better aware of their needs.

Finally, I would remind all those who at some time will be involved in such proceedings that to keep silent when one can speak is to promote deliberately what is morally wrong.

ENERGY

DEREGULATION OF NATURAL GAS INDUSTRY—ACTION TAKEN BY TRANSCANADA PIPELINES

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, on October 29 I rose in the House to call for TransCanada Pipelines to sever its production and marketing segments from its natural gas transmission. With natural gas deregulation I was concerned that third parties would not be allowed access to TransCanada's pipeline on the same basis as TransCanada's marketing affiliate.

One of the major impediments was TransCanada's proposal to charge each third party $12,600 per month per contract for those wishing to ship natural gas through TransCanada's pipeline. This proposed charge was rescinded on November 10. Rescinding this charge benefits consumers and producers alike, consumers by giving them access to lower-priced gas and producers by allowing them market access.

TransCanada must be complimented on the removal of this impediment to a freer gas market.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

INCREASED COST OF MAILING PRESBYTERIAN RECORD

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government talks about supporting the family, volunteers, and the church. I had a visit to my office last week from someone from the Presbyterian Record who pointed to a situation in which, because of changes in Canada Post, the publication faces a financial crisis of major proportions. At one time the publication had second-class mailing privileges. Up until October of this year the cost of mailing the Presbyterian Record to every Presbyterian in Canada who subscribed to it was $3,600 per month. As of last month the cost increased to over $17,000 per month.

This is the effect the change in designation has had on one church, one voluntary organization. But there are hundreds of other voluntary organizations facing the same problem. They will have to cut back on communicating with their members because of the negative policies of Canada Post and the negative policies of the Government.

I urge the Minister to intervene to force Canada Post to permit second-class mailing privileges for voluntary and church organizations.

WOMEN

THREE WOMEN APPOINTED TO SENATE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Today, Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend congratulations to Mrs. Spivack, Mrs. Rossiter and Mrs. Cochrane for their recent Senate appointment. By selecting three women to fill these Senate vacancies, the Prime Minister of Canada has highlighted the work and dedication of women within community organizations, the teaching profession, and social planning agencies.

Mr. Speaker, our Government did nothing more than acknowledge the wide-ranging experience of these women, something the private sector has already done since all three sit on boards of directors or are associated with various companies.

Mr. Speaker, it so happens that, since September 1984, 40 per cent of this Government's Senate appointees have been women. And the Progressive Conservative Government did honour its commitment by increasing to 25.1 the percentage of women on federal commissions, agencies and councils.

This is an unparalleled achievement, Mr. Speaker, and our Government will continue to appoint women to positions for which they are ideally suited.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SENTENCING OF LAWYER FOR CONTEMPT OF COURT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on November 6 Toronto lawyer Harry Kopyto was sentenced for the criminal offence of contempt by scandalizing the court. The scandal was not Mr. Kopyto's remarks about the apparent tendency of the courts to favour police in civil and criminal matters, but, rather, his conviction under this archaic and dangerous law.

Some Hon. Members: Order! Order!

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member knows that it is inappropriate—

Mr. Forrestall: No, he doesn't know.

Mr. Speaker: —to attack in this Chamber a conviction by the court. If the Hon. Member wishes to attack the law, that is, of course, open to him. I would ask him to complete his statement keeping in mind the admonition of the Chair.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the law in question denies the defence of truth. It is a clear violation of Harry Kopyto's right to freedom of speech as guaranteed by the Charter of Rights. Harry Kopyto should have been the last person charged under this repressive law.

Some Hon. Members: Order! Order!

Mr. Robinson: To this end, I plan to introduce a Private Members' Bill to repeal this offence in the Criminal Code. As well, I call upon the federal Attorney General (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to grant immediately a full pardon and vacate the conviction of Harry Kopyto who has so courageously fought this battle against this unjust law on behalf of all Canadians.

The scandal was in Harry Kopyto's conviction under this law.

MINES AND MINING

REQUEST THAT FLOW THROUGH SHARES SCHEME BE MAINTAINED

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, spokesmen for Canada's mining industry and prospectors from Abitibi-Témiscamingue, Chapais and Chibougamau strongly urge the Governments of Quebec and Canada to retain the existing flow-through share provisions for the mining exploration sector.

For several months now I have been an active proponent of these provisions because they are important to northern Quebec.

As a result of discoveries made in 1985, nine projects will lead to productive operations within two to five years. Mr. Speaker, I can state that as a direct and indirect result of these flow-through shares, 5,000 permanent jobs will be created in the North within five years.

Mr. Speaker, before making any changes to tax shelters in the mining sector, the Governments of Quebec and Canada ought to bear in mind that such shelters can indeed prove to be an effective mechanism to tap the American market. Our tax system needs to be simplified, fair enough, but this should not signal the end of all tax shelters.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLL RESULTS FAVOURING PROTECTION OF ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Decima Research reports that to most Canadians protecting the environment is more important than saving jobs. Sixty-nine per cent of Canadians who were polled last June were willing to back moves to protect the environment, even if those measures affected employment. That survey revealed that most Canadians believe the risks of pollution are not worth the benefits to society or the economy.

All but 5 per cent of those surveyed said that Governments must get tougher with chemical companies. Seventy-five per cent said that chemical companies get away with too much. Sixty-five per cent favour jail for executives of companies which pollute the environment.

The strong desire of Canadians to protect the environment is good news. It is important news for municipal, provincial, and federal Governments. The Conservative Government has made many environmental promises. It is time now to deliver, in recognition of the values Canadians have articulated through Decima's poll.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

NEED TO ENCOURAGE CONSUMER PREFERENCE FOR CANADIAN PRODUCTS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak in favour of the current "Think Canadian" campaign. It is imperative that Canadians acquire the habit of buying Canadian-made products.

Every year we spend thousands of dollars to buy clothes which Canadian manufacturers market at competitive prices. Indeed our products are second to none when it comes to quality.

Each dollar spent on products made in this country spurs the economy and all Canadians stand to benefit.

This will make it possible to create and maintain employment for thousands of textile and clothing workers who will be able to keep the jobs they like, at which they are proficient, and which is their source of income.

So next time we go out shopping let us remember to "Think Canadian". All we need do is to check the labels to find out where the products come from and ask the store owners to point out those which have been made in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: In view of the earlier proceedings, I wish to bring to the attention of all Hon. Members that Question Period will now start and will carry on for 45 minutes.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AMERICAN LOBBYISTS' ALLEGED KNOWLEDGE OF LEGISLATION CONTENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I listened to him very closely last night on television when he attempted to explain why it was that the lobby group known as the American Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association knew what was in the legislation before Canadians knew. It seemed to me that last night he felt that his options were either to punch somebody in the nose, or to call in the RCMP. Why is it that American lobbyists knew what was in the Minister's mind and what was in the legislation before the Consumer's Association of Canada knew?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, nobody knew what was in that Bill before it was presented to the House except for spokesmen for his Party and the New Democratic Party.

As I have indicated publicly, and discussed on many occasions, we have been consulting on the legislation since its draft was tabled last June. For example, I had consultations on September 5 with the National Pensioners & Senior Citizens Federation, the National Anti-Poverty Association, the Medical Reform Group. I had consultations on September 12 with the Consumer's Association of Canada. On October 14 I had consultations with the Canadian Drug Manufacturers' Association, and the Pharmaceutical Association of Canada. On October 31 I had consultations with Dr. Harry Eastman. My office has discussed it with many people. We have been trying to improve the Bill. We came up with some improvements. Somebody may have guessed that they—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: But nobody knew what was in the Bill. If, in fact, some officials leaked it, then we will deal with them.

[Translation]

STATEMENT MADE BY DR. HARRY EASTMAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Americans had a good estimate of the contents of the Bill. Last night, even the Minister said: "I'm not surprised people were informed." Those were the Minister's words. The trouble is that Americans, not Canadians, were aware of the Minister's intentions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister whether he agrees with Dr. Harry Eastman, whom he appointed Chairman of the Patented and Medicine Prices Review Board, when he claims that the purpose of the legislation is to increase costs for the consumer.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my office has been in contact with Dr. Eastman this morning. He is in agreement with me that both of us were misinterpreted and taken out of context by the CBC.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Dr. Eastman agrees with me—obviously the Liberals do not want to hear the truth.

Dr. Eastman agrees with me that there is nothing in this legislation that will cause the rise in the price of a drug by one cent: not old drugs, not new drugs, not pipeline drugs, not by one cent. Dr. Eastman agrees that he was misinterpreted and taken out of context by the CBC.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO DR. EASTMAN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is a little hard to take it out of context when Dr. Eastman says this on CBC: "The answer is undoubtedly so. Indeed that's the purpose of changing the legislation". Now, how he can be taken out of context with his own words, I do not know.

Some Hon. Members: Where is the question?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will read the question. Mr. Speaker, they want the question. "But the very man Harvie Andre has appointed to head the Drug Price Review Board said there is no doubt in his mind that prices for new drugs will be higher."

Some Hon. Members: Where is the question?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The answer is yes, that "is undoubtedly so. Indeed that's the purpose of changing the legislation".

Some Hon. Members: Where's the question?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question for the Minister is this. Does Dr. Eastman still have that job? Why does the Minister insist on denying that the purpose of the legislation was to please the Americans in the current free trade negotiations, and that the legislation will inevitably raise drug prices in this country, as Dr. Eastman said clearly last night?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I hope by now it will have come to the Leader of the Opposition's notice that what he stated there was editorial opinion by the reporter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They are the words.

Mr. Andre: Yes, Dr. Eastman is going to head up the Drug Price Review Board. The fact of the matter is that since 1969 every one of our partners in the western industrial world has been asking us to restore patent protection. The prices of drugs will not go up one cent as a result of this legislation. Help us get the legislation into committee, so I can show this to you and to everybody else who is interested.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENT MADE BY UNITED STATES INDUSTRY'S SPOKESMAN

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In last night's TV report, Mr. Stettler of the American multinationals said, and I quote: "The success of the Canadian system was and is a threat."

Why does the Minister favour a lobby group which has illegally tried to lessen competition, said that no-name drugs are inferior drugs, and has held a former Minister personally accountable for the deaths of thousands of people? Why does the Minister not favour the sick, the weak, and the elderly?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I favour the restoration of patent protection for drugs for the same reason that the past Liberal Government did when they announced their decision in that regard in June of 1983.

If there is going to be research in this important area of biotechnology and drugs, and it is foolhardy for Canada to exclude itself from this important area, there has to be patent protection provided. The rest of the world recognizes that. I wonder why the Hon. Member and her Party do not at this point in time, although they apparently did three years ago.

PROPOSED REVIEW BOARD'S PRACTICES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): In answer to a question from our Leader, the Minister said that he improved the Bill. According to Mr. Stettler yesterday, they were not happy with the sanctions. They wanted to lighten the sanctions. He got what he wanted from this Government, the sanctions were lightened. Does the Minister know that the review board can now investigate only one drug, plus another one, instead of the whole company, as it was in the Côté Bill?

• (1500)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I happen to believe as a matter of principle that punishments should match the offences more or less. I thought the punishments were excessive. As I have said publicly to Dr. Eastman and to anyone else who was interested, I am willing to discuss that. If in fact evidence can be presented that the sanctions need to be toughened up some, I am willing to consider those. I am not of a closed mind on that. However, I would hope the fundamental principle that the punishment should match the offence is a principle which Hon. Members could respect and understand.

FOREKNOWLEDGE OF LEGISLATION'S CONTENT CLAIMED BY AMERICAN LOBBYIST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and it is on the same subject. Mr. C. Joe Stettler, the former head of the American drug company lobby which got the Government to change its drug legislation, said on television last night that a week before the Minister introduced the Bill he knew of two precise changes which would be in it. When the Bill was introduced, lo and behold those precise changes emerged. Could the Minister explain to the House of Commons how this man, a resident outside Canada, knew before elected Members of Parliament what would be in the legislation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question which was put by the Leader of the Opposition. I pointed out that the draft Bill was released at the end of June. I had discussions with a wide variety of groups, as did my office and a lot of my officials, to discuss ways in which it might be improved, amended, and adjusted. Those are consultations. During the course of consultations, one discusses things like that. People may make assumptions, but the only ones who had access to that Bill before it was brought into the House were the spokesman for the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, and the spokesman for the Liberal Party, whom I briefed in advance as a matter of courtesy.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister knows that the Members on this side of the House had a briefing about two hours before. This other gentleman, who is a United States citizen living outside Canada, was informed a week before. That is the big difference.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER LIE UTTERED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister. Yesterday the Minister said on television that anyone in Canada who suggested that the price of drugs would increase would be lying. Dr. Eastman, an expert in the field, said that this would happen. Is he a liar?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I just answered that question to the Leader of the Opposition. My office was in consultation with Dr. Eastman this morning. He informs us that the CBC took his remarks out of context and that in fact he agrees with me and understands, as anyone with an open mind would understand, that there is no increase in price of any drug possible as a result of the changes which we are proposing. If the Hon. Member would co-operate and allow us to take this matter to committee, I will be happy to demonstrate it to him and to anyone else who is interested.

CBC INTERVIEW

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister to co-operate. I will ask him a very precise question. Perhaps he will explain to the House how Dr. Eastman could have been taken out of context. In part the transcript reads:

Will prices go up?

Eastman: The answer is undoubtedly so. Indeed that's the purpose of—the legislation.

How could that be taken out of context? Surely Dr. Eastman is saying what every person in the country knows—pensioners, retirees, consumer groups—that this legislation will raise prices. Why do you not withdraw the Bill like you should?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party knows that the use of the word "you", while it sometimes happens in the Chamber, is frowned upon.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was on that program for about 20 seconds after 45 minutes of taping. It was spliced to produce a program which had about as much veracity as an episode of Dallas. The fact of the matter is that the only people who believe that the price of drugs is going to go up are those unfortunate persons who read the letter from the Leader of the New Democratic Party, in English only I might add, making that claim, which is false.

TRANSCRIPT OF INTERVIEW

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have another quote for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which could not possibly be edited:

Reporter: So there is no doubt in your mind as the chairman of this price review board that prices will rise.

Eastman: Yes, there is no doubt at all.

How could that be taken out of context?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that was the question my office raised with Dr. Eastman this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: As Dr. Eastman pointed out, he tried to explain to the reporter, while he was talking about cash flows to the industry, possible reductions in prices and the delay in those reductions. He knows, as I know and as everyone who honestly looks at the situation knows, that prices will not go up by a single penny as a result of Bill C-22.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Minister suggesting that the exchange between the reporter and Dr. Eastman was edited and spliced? Does he not admit the integrity of that particular quote?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I just indicated, that particular program was by and large a fabrication designed to support—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Go back to Dallas.

Mr. Andre: There is one way in which this can be resolved. Let us pass the legislation, take it to committee, look at all these questions, and then let the people make the judgment after they have seen the facts and analyses we will be able to present in that forum.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATOR

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. He has told the House that Dr. Eastman was misquoted. Let me quote from the same program what Clayton Yeutter said, the American negotiator on free trade. When referring to the Bill, he said:

It may raise prices at the retail level of some of these products but better this than low retail prices based on piracy.

Was Clayton Yeutter misquoted? Does the Minister agree with Clayton Yeutter that what we have been doing is piracy?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what Clayton Yeutter thinks or says. However, I know the Bill will not raise the price of drugs by a cent. I know that we have a Direct Prices Review Board in place to ensure that this fundamental economic fact remains a reality. I know that we have a four-year policy review by Government. I know we are proposing a 10-year policy review by Parliament to check on these things. I know that 3,000 young scientists are anxious to have a research opportunity in Canada, which apparently the New Democratic Party does not want to see come to pass.

CONSUMER ASSOCIATION'S POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister continue to say that all the opposition is based upon a partisan approach when organizations such as the Consumers Association of Canada have come up with the strongest opposition to the Bill since it was tabled, having looked at it and having consulted or discussed it with the Minister? They reject all the arguments put forward by the Minister. Would the Minister explain that.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated to the Hon. Member on I do not know how many occasions the facts of the Bill are clear to those who want to keep an open mind when they look at it. Some people are ideologically upset about the fact that there are private sector companies involved in health care. That is fine, if they have the conviction and want to argue it. However, let us get the Bill to committee. Let us look at it and its details. Let me present the analysis which I can present—

Some Hon. Members: No way.

Mr. Andre: They are shouting "No way". They do not want the facts out. They know the facts will defeat their arguments.

Oral Questions

INQUIRY CONCERNING UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister, as he might expect. In the same program which he says was a fabrication, there was another statement by the chief spokesman for the drug industry in the United States. He said: "I think we have made more of an effort recently to talk to the U.S. trade representative, our Department of Commerce, our Department of State, and to say this is a bad law for us." To what extent did the United States Government, through the interaction at the trade negotiations between the Department of External Affairs and the office of the Secretary of State, make representations after June that the Canadian Government change the patent law as the Minister has now introduced it?

• (1510)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was a Cabinet Minister in the Liberal Government which decided to change the patent law and restore patent protection in 1983.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): We did not.

Mr. Andre: The Member knows, if he is paying attention, that we have been under pressure from all of our trading partners since 1969.

Mrs. Killens: Only four years.

Mr. Andre: Let me read just a bit from a letter dated September 24, 1986, from the British Pharmaceutical Association, London. It is concerned that the Canadian Government—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

INQUIRY CONCERNING POSSIBLE REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary, if there is any example of fabrication in this House, it has just been given by the Minister. There was no decision in 1983 by our Government to change the Patent Act. We established a commission of study to look at the entire state of the art.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Axworthy for leader.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Axworthy: I will put this question to the Minister because he did not answer it the first time. To what extent did the United States Government make direct representation during the trade negotiations or by other diplomatic means to have the June draft of the Patent Bill altered to suit the kind of interest of the American drug industry?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No one made representations to me either from the United States, through the trade office or through the External Affairs office or in any other way, Mr. Speaker. I consulted with groups in Canada on their reaction to the draft legislation. I recommended to my cabinet colleagues ways in which I thought the legislation could be improved. If, in fact, in committee Hon. Members are able to convince me that I am wrong in some of my suggestions, I am ready to listen to them. The recommended changes came out of consultations in which I and my office engaged, and from no one else.

FIRM'S ESTIMATE OF COST TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He keeps telling the House that there will no additional cost to Canadians. Is the Minister aware or familiar with a study conducted by a respected accountancy firm, Coopers & Lybrand, which estimates the cost to Canadian consumers, as a result of those amendments, will be in the area of $650 million?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know who did that study but he, she, or they should be embarrassed. One of the other reasons I am anxious to get this Bill to committee is to look at those kinds of assumptions. The person who did that study would flunk Economics 101 if he or she presented it.

Let me repeat again that there is nothing in the legislation that will raise the price of drugs by one penny.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE COST IMPACT STUDIES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is for the same Minister. Both the Minister's Department and the Minister of National Health and Welfare have conducted cost impact studies into this legislation. I applied for that information under Access to Information and it was denied under ministerial privilege or whatever. I ask the Minister again if he wants to come clean with Canadians, why does he not table these cost impact studies in the House so that all Canadians can take a look at how much it is going to cost?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the reason we have our parliamentary system of second reading debate and committee study. At committee we will look at all those cost estimates and we will look at all the price estimates. We will do that. If the Hon. Member is interested in having Canadians know the truth, he will co-operate in having that Bill moved to committee.

An Hon. Member: What are you hiding?

Mr. Broadbent: Give us the information.

TRADE

SHIPMENT OF HELICOPTER PARTS TO IRAN—RELEASE OF AMERICAN HOSTAGES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East just reminded me that one should never send a boy to do a man's job.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Sit down then.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: My question is on another subject, Mr. Speaker. In the absence of the Secretary of State and the Prime Minister I will return to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Where is the babysitter, Don?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Johnston: In September, 1985, Mr. Speaker, four days after Pratt & Whitney received an order from Iran for helicopter parts, an American hostage was released. On November 2 of this year an American hostage was released approximately two weeks after Pratt & Whitney shipped helicopter parts to Iran. Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with that chronology? Does the Government believe or suspect that there is a relationship between the shipments from Pratt & Whitney to Iran and the release of American hostages?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is suggesting some very serious motivations here, motivations which I do not share and which the Government does not share.

UNITED STATES-CANADA CONSULTATIONS INQUIRY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has repeatedly over the last several days refused to answer a very straight question, namely, were there representations or consultations made by or with the American Government and the Canadian Government with respect to these export commissions for shipments from Pratt & Whitney to Iran? Did they take place?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question in the House on Monday, and the answer is no.

REVENUE CANADA

CONFIDENTIALITY OF TAX RETURNS—STATEMENT MADE BY MEMBER FOR SAINT-LÉONARD—ANJOU

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Yesterday in the House the Member for St. Leonard—Anjou stated, as found on page 1275 of Hansard:

> At my request this morning a woman telephoned the Revenue Canada office in Montreal. She gave my name, my social insurance number, my address, my date of birth. She was able to get into my 1985 income tax return.

Has the Minister checked into the circumstances and can he indicate to the House if that is really what happened?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the House would expect, I took the representation from my colleague very seriously. I did cause a very thorough inquiry to be made. As my colleague indicated, calls were made at 10.43 a.m. and at 10.59 a.m. Our Department has ways to authenticate and to find out which employee accessed every taxpayer's file. However, what my colleague from Saint-Léonard—Anjou failed to say is that there were three additional key elements of information supplied by the callers to authenticate the validity of the request. They were volunteered or requested and correctly provided by the caller. The information was on the Member's income tax return, and because of the secrecy provisions of the Income Tax Act, I would not, and I know he would not want me to say what they were.

However, I believe that the record should be cleared, not to minimize the seriousness of what has occurred, but to point out to my colleague from Saint-Léonard—Anjou that under the circumstances he did not give the full story and in so doing has needlessly alarmed, I suggest to him with respect, millions of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think it is quite apparent to Hon. Members that as a consequence of that question and answer the Hon. Member concerned is rising. I would think he probably has a question of privilege to raise. I want to advise Hon. Members that since the rules were changed questions of privilege are not taken at this time. I do want to assure the Hon. Member, however, that I will hear him later.

Is the Hon. Member rising on a supplemental question?

MINISTER'S REPLY

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my supplemental question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Yesterday I said that a woman made a phone call, gave my social insurance number, my address and my date of birth, and had access to my income tax return for 1985. That is what I said exactly. The difference between what the Minister is saying and what I said—

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: Has the Hon. Member a question?

Mr. Gagliano: Would the Minister not agree that the report he has is a matter of opinion and not exactly what was discussed between my source and his officials?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): No, Mr. Speaker, with respect, I would not agree. I am not attributing motives to my hon. friend any more than to suggest that on a matter this serious the full story ought to have been given. The information as given was incomplete in so far as any meaningful access to my friend's income tax form was concerned.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE COST IMPACT STUDIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As he knows, the Hon. Member for Beaches has applied for the cost impact studies concerning the drug legislation under the Access to Information legislation. That was denied by ministerial discretion. In order to clear up this whole matter will the Minister assure the House today that he will table those cost impact studies in the House?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, they were denied because they are confidences of the Privy Council and I am unable to give out those studies as requested. However, I am able and more than willing to discuss all of those projections and cost estimates in committee as is intended with this kind of legislation. Why is the Hon. Member's Party not willing to go to committee to look at and analyse these questions if it is so confident in its position?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is so sure that there is not going to be an increase in the price of drugs by one cent, I assume he would want those studies tabled in the House so the people of Canada can see them. They are being hidden for political reasons. The Minister called the other studies a fabrication without ever seeing them. We in this House and the people of Canada want to see those studies tabled.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

CANADA EMPLOYMENT CENTRES

REPORTED REMOVAL OF FILES FROM KITCHENER OFFICE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government has made claims about increased security. Therefore, can the Minister explain why there is a story today in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record which shows that this week an employee of the Canada Employment Centre in Kitchener lifted from that office microfiche files which covered virtually every Ontario worker who filed an unemployment insurance claim in recent years?

Mr. Crosbie: A microfiching expedition.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the only point this individual made is that he is not worthy of the trust placed in him by the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Weiner: He has also betrayed his thousands of co-workers across Canada who handle Government records each day securely and confidentially.

Ms. Copps: First we had tuna fish, now we have microfiche.

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

SECURITY OF FILES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, how can the Deputy Prime Minister slough this off when, over a year ago, the union located at this Centre held a meeting with the Hon. Member for Kitchener in which the specific issue of security of files was raised? That was a meeting held on September 5, 1985. Until this week those concerns about security have been ignored by the Government.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, an investigation is ongoing. We have to rely on the integrity of our employees to safeguard sensitive information. I want to assure the House that every effort will be made to find the individual and do what is appropriate.

REQUEST THAT COST IMPACT STUDIES BE RELEASED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said that these cost studies are being kept from the House for Privy Council reasons. Surely the Minister would be prepared to recognize that it is precisely because of the importance of these studies that he should be prepared to release them to Canadians so they can make a judgment on whether his charges of fabrication are correct or not?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the reason the Hon. Member and I and others were elected is to act in the best interests of our constituents. We have a procedure for doing that. We have second reading and then committee study. In committee we look at all of the questions raised by the Hon. Member and others. We analyse them. It is an opportunity for us, as the people's representatives, to make a proper judgment and then divide in the House. I would like to proceed with that centuries old tradition. It is an honourable way to go. Why will the Hon. Member and his Party not co-operate?

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROMISE TO RELEASE STUDIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his lesson in parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Beatty: You needed it.

Mr. Langdon: However, is he prepared to prove the points he has made today by promising the committee and the House that these studies will be released? He knows, as I know—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that the question he is posing has been asked several times. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): You took the words right out of my mouth, Mr. Speaker. I do not know how many times I have to repeat the answer before Hon. Members will accept it. The answer to his question is the same answer that I have given to the same question the three, four or five times it has been asked by members of his Party.

NARCOTICS

GOVERNMENT'S ANTI-DRUG ABUSE STRATEGY

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, drug abuse in both schools and the workplace is a serious concern. In my constituency a group known as the Lambton Families in Action has been fighting this problem through a program of information and education since February, 1982. To this group, our Government's commitment in the Throne Speech to bring forward a national drug strategy was reason to celebrate.

Given the Government's commitment to the strategy of education and interception, can the Minister of Health inform the House and interested groups across Canada when further details and information on this program will be forthcoming?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member. I am sure most Members of the House would agree with him that the strategy announced in the Speech from the Throne has been welcomed by parents and others. The strategy has a number of components. The major one, which has to be stressed and which is not yet complete because of the consultations which have to take place, is that of education. Quite frankly, that is my emphasis. There are other components dealing with the justice system and others. They have their part to play. I hope we will be ready to make announcements concerning further developments, after those consultations, at the end of January or February of next year.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC RECOVERY PACKAGE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to my hon. friend, the Deputy Prime Minister. On several occasions in the recent past he has boasted in this House about the good things the Government has in store to help the faltering economy of northern Ontario. We welcome good things from any source. Is the Minister willing and able today to tell the House exactly what is in the recovery package for northern Ontario which was alluded to following a Progressive Conservative caucus meeting in Sudbury just a few weeks ago?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do that. First, this Government has recognized the difficulties in northern Ontario, the uniqueness of the region, and there are at least seven possible initiatives at which we are looking. They are to establish a federal economic development committee for northern Ontario, to transfer some federal agencies and services related to northern Ontario, to dedicate program moneys to northern Ontario, to establish a stabilization program for forestry and mining, to invest in northern Ontario schemes, to give special tax treatment to equity investors, to strengthen marketing assistance companies in the region and to encourage development of a strategic partnership.

• (1530)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Penner: We will have to absorb that, Mr. Speaker. I had the impression that those were directions rather than details.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON SOFTWOOD LUMBER—EFFECT ON NORTHERN ONTARIO COMMUNITIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that since the imposition of the countervail tariff on softwood lumber some sawmills in northern Ontario have had their sales reduced by as much as 90 per cent? Has the Minister anything at all in mind for those communities which have lost hundreds of jobs because of the reduction in sales of softwood lumber? These communities include Terrace Bay, Hearst, White River and Longlac.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have a tremendous amount of respect for the Hon. Member. I can assure him that I in no way want to belittle the seriousness of this issue of the difficulties in northern Ontario, nor the problem to which he alludes. I think the Hon. Member is aware, however, that discussions have been going on between the provincial Ministers and the federal Minister with respect to the strategy which will be employed to fight this countervail tariff. A First Ministers' conference will take place in Vancouver during the next couple of days. This will be a topic for serious discussion there.

Consistent with the Government's approach to governing the country, a joint federal-provincial approach will be taken. I am sure the strategies will be discussed in detail in Vancouver during the next two days.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

JUSTIFICATION FOR SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Privatization. How can she justify the sale of a Crown corporation that is in good shape and making a profit, in a sector where in other countries, such services are provided by the public sector? If she wants to bring prices down, why not urge Teleglobe to cut its prices, which can be done just as well by a public enterprise?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I have stated a number of times before that the principle of privatization is that when there is no longer public policy to be served, we seek greater economic benefits by having companies owned in the private sector. This is a good and profitable company. I think it has a very dynamic future in the private sector. It is the policy of the Government to ensure that the economic benefits for the employees of this company, as well as for all of Canada, are best realized in this way.

EMPLOYEES' PENSION PLAN BENEFITS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister admit that Teleglobe employees, who presently have a good pension plan, will be disadvantaged through a sale? Will she undertake to ensure that employees will not be worse off than they presently are with regard to their pension plan under a new employer?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, we have discussed the pension issue with the employees. There are avenues open for the employees to continue to carry on conversations with company management and ourselves about the future of the company. Contrary to the employees being worse off, they will be much better off in a dynamic, growing company. The people to ask are the employees of de Havilland, Canadair and Canadian Arsenals, all of whom have been buoyant and optimistic about their future.

EASTMAN COMMISSION FINDINGS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Does the Minister not agree that, after studying the problems of the pharmaceutical industry for two years, the Eastman Commission found that compulsory licensing has had no visible effect on the profitability of the pharmaceutical industry? After two years of study Mr. Eastman found that the pharmaceutical industries' profit exceeded that for all the manufacturing sector. He found that the former Patent Act saved the consumers of this country $211 million a year.

If the Government agrees with the findings of the Eastman Commission, what is it doing introducing a Bill which will give a period of exclusivity twice as long as that recommended by Eastman?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member acknowledged that Eastman recommended change from the existing system. I would like to quote the words of the Hon. Member, the Liberal health critic. He said: "Higher prices might be justified if it led to more drug research in Canada. The proposed price increase should have a minor effect on consumers". I will assure the Hon. Member that we will have a lot more research in Canada and that there will be no price increase.

COMPENSATION OFFERED TO PROVINCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs stand in this House and say that the cost of drugs will not rise by one penny when the Minister has offered $100 million a year in compensation to the provinces for anticipated increases in the cost of drugs?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it will take too much of Question Period to explain all of that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I hope the Hon. Member was careful in his use of language when he talked about cost to the provinces. I hope he was careful to listen to what I have been saying all along, that the price of drugs will not go up by a penny.

Mr. Frith: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Andre: If he thinks about it for a little while, maybe he will understand.

Mr. Frith: You don't understand the Bill.

Mr. Rossi: You never understood it.

ENERGY

DEREGULATION—INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC NATURAL GAS CONSUMERS WILL BENEFIT FROM LOWER PRICES AT SAME TIME AS OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister announced on November 1 of this year that natural gas prices will be deregulated, arguing that this would be beneficial to Canadian consumers.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary give the House the assurance that manufacturing industries and consumers in Quebec will benefit from a reduction in the price of natural gas at the same time as the other provinces?

[English]

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, deregulation went into effect on November 1 which allowed buyer and seller to negotiate the price of natural gas freely without Government intervention. This added competition and supply should result in lower prices to all consumers in Canada and a better deal for the producers.

EFFECTIVENESS OF AGRICULTURAL CHEMICALS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture who is aware that many farmers from Eston, Saskatchewan, have been trying for five years to get $1 million in damages from Dow Chemical over the use of the chemical Tordon 202C which proved ineffective and damaging to their crops. In 1980 Dow Chemical said that the problem appears "to be that our present formulation, even at the high rate of application, does not give adequate control of volunteer rape seed, stink weed or wild mustard".

What plans does the Minister have for more effective policing of agricultural chemicals which are not performing as claimed on their labels?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I take the Hon. Member's question seriously. I take it more in the form of a representation. I must confess that I am not fully aware of all the details in this case. This is a representation which is not made all that often. I know that there were a series of problems prior to the Government's decision to change the labelling of chemicals. That has eliminated and alleviated a good number of problems.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT MONITOR FARMERS' COMPLAINTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell the House whether he is ready to make some changes so that complaints from farmers about farm chemicals can be monitored and evaluated by his Department rather than requiring farmers to go through very expensive court procedures against huge multinationals?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question is yes. We are always anxious to change policies and programs for the better. This case may well require a change or amendment to the appropriate legislation. We will study that. The answer to the Hon. Member's question is definitely yes.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise Hon. Members that I have received notice of several questions of privilege which I will proceed to now.

PRIVILEGE

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—COMMITTEE DECISION ON VOTABLE ITEMS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege affects every Member in the House and the very nature of Parliament. The reasons given to the House of Commons and the press for rejection of various private Members items as being votable seriously erodes my opportunity to represent my constituents while taking away from Parliament a right that it has always had. It is in direct violation of Standing Order 96(1).

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that when a Member rises on a question of privilege, it may not always be a question of privilege. That is a matter on which the Chair must rule. However, it is usually a grievance, and I would suggest to Hon. Members that when a Member is speaking to a question of privilege, Hon. Members should that Member the courtesy of attention.

Mr. Domm: During my seven years as a Member of Parliament I have had the opportunity during four of those years to be Deputy House Leader responsible for Private Members' Business. I have never seen such a flagrant disregard for Standing Orders, and the taking away of the rights of Members of Parliament, as has been evidenced by recent decisions of a committee of the House, set up by Members of Parliament, to review votable items as they come before that committee.

The committee said that my motion was rejected because it did not have the power to: "empower the Justice Committee to study the motion". I want to remind the House that empowering a Standing Committee to review and report to Parliament is an inalienable right that all Members of Parliament have enjoyed over the years. This committee that was set up by private Members to represent their concerns has essentially told members from the New Democratic Party, members from the Progressive Conservative Party and members from the Liberal Party that we no longer have the right as Parliamentarians to vote and send what we believe is an urgent and pressing matter to a Standing Committee for study and report back to Parliament.

Let me explain how important this issue is to me, and I am sure to all Members of the House, regardless of which Party they represent. I am not in a debate with the Government I am not in a debate with my colleagues who are all back-benchers. I am not looking to the front-benches of Government to stand up and tell me why this is happening. They have never had control over Private Members' Business and they are not intended to have any control over Private Members' Business in the House. It is a private Members' committee that went to the media with a private members' issue to give the reasons why it has not accepted a motion before the decision was even tabled in the House. That back-bencher had been assured under the Standing Orders that the committee would enter into full consultation with that back-bencher in determining the priority for a votable item, having regard to that Member's motion.

A member of that Standing Committee is quoted in The Ottawa Citizen on Friday, November 7, as saying:

> The controversial bill was also thrown out because "it simply empowered the justice committee to do what it already has the power to do—"

That was before the decision was tabled in the House and before the Member was advised of any of the reasons why that item was turned down by that committee. That is a flagrant disregard for the authority and power of a Member of the House to represent not only his constituents but all Canadians.

Let us consider other motions on the Order Paper. Motion No. 12 in the name of the New Democratic Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), states:

> That the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General be empowered to study the question—

That motion is on the Order Paper. The purpose of this committee is to serve the back-benchers of the House. It says that Parliament no longer has the authority to direct the Standing Committee to study and report on an issue.

Not only should New Democrats reconsider whether some of their motions are eligible for a vote, Progressive Conservatives also have motions, such as Motion No. 25 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Hardey). That motion states:

> That the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs be empowered to study and consider—

I believe we have lost a right and I want to move a motion in the House that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to determine whether Parliament, not Government, has the right to refer an item to a Standing Committee for study and report. I say to Hon. Members that if we lose this fight on this very important issue, as back-benchers in the House of Commons we lose that for which the McGrath committee fought. The Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), who is sitting here as a back-bencher, knows as well as every Member in the House, that it was the intent of the McGrath report to give more authority to Parliament and back-benchers, and less authority to Government. We have a role to play in the decision-making process of this nation. If we allow our peers to tell us that we do not have this authority, then we are violating Standing Order 96(1).

In my motion , I also want the House to consider the terms of reference for the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business itself, found in Standing Order 36(1)(a), which provides no evidence to support the reasons given for rejecting my motion. Standing Order 36(1)(a) states:

> In making its selection, the Committee shall not take into account the number of Members jointly seconding an item, but shall allow the merits of the items alone to determine the selection—

I and other Members of the House appeared before that Standing Committee. We gave all of the reasons why we thought our Bills or motions met the terms and conditions of the Standing Order. Not once was I challenged that my Bill did not meet the terms and conditions as outlined in that Standing Order.

That committee which represents us and which is the only committee we have to take our case to Parliament, met in camera. Only members of the committee can attend to discuss the reasons why an item should or should not be voted on in the House of Commons. That committee then went to the media before it consulted on its decision, and before it tabled it in the House.

Not only was this reported in The Ottawa Citizen, the Toronto Star phoned and asked me to respond to the committee chairman who said: "Domm's Bill was rejected because the committee did not have the power to empower the justice committee to study the Bill." This means that New Democratic Members, Liberal Members and Conservative Members should check their motions and Bills on the Order Paper, because by virtue of an in camera decision made in committee and discussed with the press without consulting Members of Parliament they have been ruled out of order. No longer do we have the power to refer these matters to Standing Committees.

This is without a doubt a breach of Parliamentary privilege. Parliament has always had the right to refer items to committee and empower it to study and report back.

I repeat that the committee has exceeded its own terms of reference by doing this. It has detrimentally affected the role of all back-benchers in the House. A basic and elementary right of all Members of Parliament is their right to refer pressing and urgent matters to an appropriate committee for extensive review and analysis. This inalienable right exceeds all Party lines and goes to the root of what an individual Hon. Member can do for his or her constituents.

• (1550)

It follows that the Standing Committees of this House remain a fundamental method of allowing not just Members of Parliament but all Canadians a degree of access to the decision-making process. I have personally been denied even the possiblity of having a subject of extreme importance to my constituents referred to a committee, drawn out of a drum and brought to a votable item. The objective of having the subject voted on has been denied.

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition is quite clear with respect to the rules governing Standing Committees. I refer to Citation 621(2):

> A committee is bound by, and is not at liberty to depart from, the Order of Reference.

Nowhere in the order of reference for the Committee on Private Members' Business does it state that this particular committee cannot refer a subject such as that contained in my motion to an appropriate Standing Committee for investigation.

The inspirational reforms of the House of Commons arrived at by the McGrath report are adamant in their concerns over the eroding role of back-bench Members of Parliament.

It was the committee's belief, and one which I am sure is shared by all Hon. Members of the House, that the committee sytem could provide a means of enhancing the position of Members of Parliament and also represented a viable method of democratizing the decision-making process.

Pages 21 and 22 of the report state in part:

> More use could also be made of existing Standing Order 72(1) which allows, as an alternative procedure for introducing Bills, a motion to appont a committee to prepare and bring in a Bill. Such an Order of Reference could be given by the House upon adoption of a motion presented by a private Member, during Private Members' Business, to have a committee bring in a Bill on a particular subject.

The report concluded by adopting Recommendation 4.12 which states:

> We recommend wider use of parliamentary committees to review draft legislation, to conduct general inquiries when policy choices have not yet been made, and to bring in draft Bills.

The objective of the McGrath committee and its attempts at reform were based on the need to enhance the role of Members of Parliament. It is obvious from its conclusions that one of the most appropriate ways to accomplish this task is through a renewed and more effective parliamentary committee system. The decision as reported by the Chairman of the Committee on Private Members' Business undermines the spirit of these reforms and consequently impairs my ability as a Member of Parliament.

Therefore, with all due respect, I urge that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure for a full parliamentary investgation into the right of Parliament to empower Standing Committees to study and report to Parliament on items arising under Private Members' Business.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I will not take too much time on this matter. The committee, when it was formed, received a mandate, we might call it, from the McGrath committee, with its acceptance by the Government, to deal with private Members' bills and motions. There were no instructions, not even a guideline given as to how we select these bills or motions. Consequently, the committee on its own developed a rule or guideline of nine items by which we would help private Members draft their bills and motions. Each Hon. Member was sent a copy, and I might say the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) met the nine conditions set forth.

The difficulty we had at committee at the time is that we unanimously agreed we were not empowered to instruct another committee to take a certain course of action, particularly when that committee could take that course of action on its own. That was the position we held to. Further, the advice we received from our procedural people reinforced that position. I understand there is a division of opinion with the procedural experts as to whether we do or do not have the power to empower another committee to look into matters such as this, but that was the unanimous decision of our committee. We believe the matter really should go back to the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure for review.

It is difficult to deal with this matter because we meet in camera. I cannot really reveal in the House of Commons what we discussed in camera, otherwise, why have an in-camera meetings? That is a difficulty we have.

An Hon. Member: What deals are cooked up there?

Mr. Kempling: My colleague asked what deals are cooked up. I think that is a very unfair comment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I indicated to Hon. Members, there seems to be a grievance here, and feelings are fairly tense. However, I would ask all Hon. Members not to impute motives to other Hon. Members, and that applies to all of us.

Mr. Kempling: I might also say we are not asked by the regulations laid down in the establishment of the new Private Members' Rules and Regulations that we disclose why we accept a motion or a Bill, or why we do not. We are not required to do that, so we have not done so.

We believe, Sir, that the Committee on Justice and Solicitor General has the power in itself to undertake the study on its own. Why did we come to this decision? We draw 20 Bills and we can only select up to six Bills.

Mr. Vankoughnet: Only five are selected.

Mr. Kempling: If the Hon. Member wishes to speak on this matter, I wish he would do so later.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Burlington.

Mr. Kempling: We pick up to six bills or motions—

Mr. Vankoughnet: Five.

Mr. Kempling: —which are drawn from the hopper. I should say the last time we went through this procedure we picked three because there will be a further draw after we dispose of 10 items. What would be the point of pulling another 10 items if the Hon. Members felt there was no possibilty of that item coming before the House of Commons for a vote? Therefore, we chose them on that basis. We selected three the first time. We selected five when we disposed of 10 of the motions or bills we have before us. We will select another 10, and one of those may possibly go on for a vote.

I want you to understand as well, Mr. Speaker, that we are breaking new ground. The first batch of bills we had before us in the first session were basically bills and motions some of which had been in the hopper for years. Some of them were flawed procedurally, some were flawed legally and some were flawed constitutionally. But those bills were put into the hopper for the first draw. Most of the bills have been redeposited. Some of them have just been changed from bills to motions. It is a learning process for Hon. Members. I believe that as we go down the road we will eventually begin to produce better motions and better bills. At the disposal of the committee is the advice of legal and drafting experts. We urge Hon. Members to seek out the advice of these experts to ensure that when their Bills come before us they are in the best possible form.

As far as the committee is concerned, and my colleague the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) may wish to comment on this point, if the matter is referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, we would be pleased to hear it. We would also be pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) when the committee next meets, if he wishes to appear before us.

I cannot comment on the leak to the press. That is a separate issue. I was as shocked as all Hon. Members when I picked up The Ottawa Citizen on the morning the committee reported to the House to find comments regarding the report. At the final meeting of the committee the members of the committee authorized me to speak on their behalf to the media after the report was tabled. I did this. I spoke to a number of journalists outside the Chamber with respect to this issue. I might add that it is the only issue about which they were really concerned.

I leave the matter in your hands, Mr. Speaker. Numerous rulings have been made in the past about the business of committee members and whether or not Speakers should intervene. I will not read those rulings into the record, since I am sure Your Honour has them at your fingertips. I think this is a serious matter. It is a grievance. It should be referred to another committee which could perhaps give us more direction with respect to how we should proceed in the future.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm). My remarks are not with respect to the merits of his motion, since obviously that is not my role at this time.

There are two issues before us to consider. The first is with respect to the media leak. I was fortunate enough to have had my item chosen. Like many others I learned of it on the radio of my automobile while driving home on Friday afternoon instead of learning about it through the regular means by which Members normally find out about such matters. I found that procedure to be somewhat unusual even though it was good news for me personally.

The second item I wish to bring to the attention of the Chair is the matter of a committee sitting in camera. Citation 628 of Beauchesne's defines in camera sittings of committees. As I understand it, and as has been explained to me privately by the Hon. Member for Peterborough, the in camera sittings with respect to this committee were somewhat different from those associated with other committees of the House. What I mean to say is that under the definition of in camera sittings in Beauchesne's a committee has the right to exclude strangers at any time. I do not know of an in camera sitting of a committee which excluded Members of the House from attending. The incidents described to me by the Hon. Member for Peterborough, although briefly, lead me to believe that Members were not permitted to attend this particular in camera sitting. I have a problem with the procedures of a committee which create a precedent by which Members would be prevented from attending an in camera sitting of that committee, notwithstanding the good intentions that were obviously there in this case. It is a dangerous precedent, one which should be discontinued.

Just as any Member of the House of Commons has the right to enter the Chamber, every Member has the right to attend the meeting of a committee of the House. If we are not extended that right then I strongly suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that an individual Member would be denied the powers given to him or her upon his or her election to the House. It is really that part of the deliberations of a committee which I find the most objectionable, notwithstanding the fact that there were good intentions involved in this case, at least I believe they were, knowing the calibre of the Hon. Members who sit on this committee. Notwithstanding that good intention there should be a review of this procedure by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure to ensure that there will never be a repeat of the process whereby a committee of the House denies a Member of the House either directly or indirectly the right to be present at any sitting of a committee.

Those are the brief comments that I wish to make. I believe they are important since they concern the rights of every Member of this House, regardless of political stripe. My comments have not been made either for or against the proposition which was considered by the committee in terms of the Hon. Member for Peterborough. There will be another time to discuss that. My comments are made to express the view that all Members of the House should have the power and privilege to participate in any process of this House, which includes attending the deliberations of a parliamentary committee.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks both as a member of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business and as a member of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons which made the recommendation for this particular process. If I understand the main point of contention put forward by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), it is that in some way the committee endangered the power of the House of Commons to refer matters to committee. That is the substance of Standing Order 96(1) about which he spoke. I would like to speak to that matter first.

The judgment of the committee with respect to which of the 20 items that came before it were to be selected as votable in my judgment does not, either in theory or in practice, impair the ability of the House to refer matters to committee. We did not not choose the Hon. Member's motion because we did not think the House had that power. We had to consider that motion, among others. It was our view that, because of the very reforms which the Hon. Member cites, brought about as a result of the McGrath Committee, committees now have the power to do things which before they only had the power to do when the House empowered them to do so. For this reason, I suggest to the Hon. Member that when he invokes the McGrath reforms he is not being completely accurate. It is precisely because of those reforms that the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General has the power to do what it would have been asked to do had the Member's motion been made a votable item and passed in the House.

One of the matters that the committee has to consider, and which we have made no secret we were considering, is that there is a limited number of items which can come to a vote in the House. This is part of the criterion, a public criterion known to all Members of Parliament, which is to say, that we must ask, is there any other way that this matter can come before the House? Is there any other way that either a committee of the House or the House itself can consider this matter?

It is certainly true of what would have been the result of the Hon. Member's motion being passed by this House that that could happen in a number of other ways and that the Justice Committee itself could decide to proceed with that type of investigation.

I say to the Hon. Member, who makes the point about Standing Order 96(1), that I do not think, Mr. Speaker, you can consider that to be a valid point. The power of the House to do that remains. The power of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business remains to choose a similar motion in some other context, if it felt it should do that. So nothing in principle has been endangered whatsoever.

A number of other things have been mentioned, and with the Chair's indulgence I would like to touch on them briefly. The point was made that Members whose items were not selected as votable items, or in the case of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) whose item was chosen, did not find this out before it was tabled in the House. I do not remember that there were any complaints about this type of thing the last time, when people found out which items had been selected when the report was tabled in the House. As I understand it, there is no obligation on the part of the committee to give advance notice to Members as to the fate of their Bills. That is what reporting in the House is all about. That is when people find out.

With respect to the question of in camera meetings, I acknowledge that it is an exceptional procedure. As far as I know, no Members sought to be present at those in camera meetings. There are many decisions made around here, perhaps not committee decisions, but in the final stages of drafting a report the committee meets in camera, and that is common procedure. That is basically what we are doing when, after having heard all the Members, we get down to the business of deciding what our final report will be.

I suggest to you that as one of the people who was involved in the reform this system will not work without in camera meetings. Others may argue that it is not working, and that is fair enough. But it will not work, Mr. Speaker, if there is no opportunity for an in camera meeting. I think it is unfortunate that Members have not respected the judgment of the committee. The Member for Peterborough feels very strongly about this issue, but I think he has done the process of reform and private Members' business a great disservice by bringing it up in this way.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the Hon. Member does not wish to cast any aspersions on the Hon. Member for Peterborough.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I also want to indicate that I am a member of the selection committee for Private Members' Bills.

I will commence by saying that inherited by Canada from the British parliamentary system is the division of law. We have the politicians who write law, the police who enforce law, and the courts who interpret law. It is incumbent upon those who write law to write it precisely. It cannot be left to the police, or to the courts, to try to guess what the writer of law meant. There must be precision on how a motion or a piece of legislation is set forward.

In the setting forth of the case by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), he asserted that Members of Parliament as private Members no longer have the right to refer to or ask a committee to make a study. I submit that this is inaccurate. The fact is that the Hon. Member for Peterborough did not ask that the committee undertake a particular study. What he did do precisely, and I read it, is to ask that the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General be empowered to study and report.

Sir, the fact of the matter is that the committee is empowered to do so today. In the changes that came about as a result of the McGrath Report we no longer require that there be a reference from a cabinet Minister to a committee for it to undertake a study. Within the concept of law, what the Hon. Member for Peterborough has asked the committee to do is something that it already has the power to do. In effect, his motion was redundant.

The other observation I would make is that the Hon. Member, in putting forward his case that his privilege had been denie,d indicated that his Bill met the criteria. While I submit that it did not for the reason I have previously stated, namely that it was redundant, that observation in and of itself is not a criterion for its acceptance.

The committee receives 20 motions, pieces of legislation, or combinations thereof from which it will accept up to 6. Given the hypothetical situation where the committee receives 20 which are eligible in terms of criteria, by the requirements placed upon the committee, it cannot accept all 20, because it is restricted by regulations to accept only up to 6. Therefore, the other condition that the Hon. Member for Peterborough sets before us again does not bear on the argument. The committee has to ascertain whether the motion or legislation is acceptable on other grounds and for reasons of other merit.

Having said that, I am sure that committee members are all offended by the fact that there was a breach and that this information ended up in public sources before it was tabled in the House. Mr. Speaker, that concerns us all and ought to concern us all.

Whether or not this matter should be studied, and whether or not this should or should not be done in camera, I submit that we are new in this practice of trying to extend our parliamentary practices to enhance the power of private Members. To that extent, openness is always encouraged, even though there are reasons in this decision-making process for there not to be a continuing and ongoing battle with those who petitioned for their legislation and motions during the decision process to have to continue that process.

Nevertheless, if in your judgment there is a benefit in this issue being studied further, I would certainly be agreeable to doing that. But I cannot accept, on the basis that I have already given, that privilege has in fact been breached.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I want to support with all the power and force at my disposal the representation made by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), which in pith and substance is that his privileges as a Member of the House of Commons have been adversely affected by the process followed by the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business.

I wish to focus attention not on the membership of that standing committee or its method of operation, but on the rights of the Member for Peterborough which represent the rights of all Members of the House. At the same time, I wish to express my gratitude to you, Mr. Speaker, for hearing what I think is a vital matter to all Members of the House here present and for the future.

In this process of reform what has happened is that the system has been changed. Under the British parliamentary system, it is the ancient right of a Member of Parliament to introduce in the House of Commons specific matters of interest to the Member, his constituents, and hopefully to all Canadians. What the Member can do is to present a motion or, a Private Members' Bill, and there may be other processes which he can commence in the House of Commons. In the case of a Bill, and in the case of a motion, the Standing Orders prescribe the process and procedure that is to be followed. The House of Commons in its wisdom has added an addendum to that time honoured centuries' old system which involves a reference to a standing committee of the House of Commons. That addendum changes the nature of the whole process.

One can no longer proceed in the normal course with a motion or with a Private Member's Bill. In order to be successful in the new system, one must gain the support and the judgmental decision of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business. Otherwise, one might as well forget about one's Private Member's Bill or motion. It will be lost in priority to Members who have been given the status of votable items. That is why a Member's privileges are affected by the actions of the committee.

Who cares who is on the committee or what decisions they make? What matters is that a Member can no longer process these matters of Private Members' Business in the way a Member could prior to the changes. Mr. Speaker, that is what you must focus your attention on—what has happened to the private Member in this process.

I do not need to add anything to the words of the Hon. Member for Peterborough. He has explained fully his situation. He had what could be considered an appropriate item for action by the House of Commons. Many others have had similar items. However, the committee has intervened in a process which has been in force for centuries in the British Parliament and side-tracked his motion. It put it on the dump heap. It will no longer be of any real interest because an adjudication has been made. That is why his privileges are affected. That is what happens to any Member who is subjected to the scrutiny of the committee and does not receive a favourable judgment. That is why someone should look at the process and ensure that the rights of Members are protected in all situations.

I said that I do not think the membership or processes of the committee are at issue in this matter of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Peterborough. However, from personal experience I want to make two points which have been raised in the debate by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and by others. There is absolutely no justification for in camera sessions. I cannot agree more with my colleague who said that unless the light of day shines on any parliamentary process, it is worth nothing. One cannot meet behind closed doors in any public forum, especially not in the Parliament of Canada. It may present difficulties. It may work to the disadvantage of Members who have their proposals criticized, but the whole purpose of the Parliament of Canada is to make all aspects of its operations open.

I also want to point out that Standing Order 36 is very clear on some of these matters. First, a Member who has a proposal selected by the committee must be consulted under the rules. They cannot brush it aside and say, "We are going to meet and decide; we do not like this proposal". They have to consult with the Member. It is not a matter of privilege. It is not a matter of saying, "Be here at ten o'clock or lose your chance", if one is down in New York and cannot come before the committee. That is the requirement of the rules; consultation is required. A second point which is very clear under the rules is that it is the merits of the items alone which determine whether they should be selected at the committee.

What does that mean? I do not know if it can be cited in the context of a question of privilege, but it is very clear to me. One looks at the item and, if it is a good item and it is worth the attention of the House, it should be brought to the attention of the House. I cannot imagine how one can work procedures, other availabilities, and other forums into that decision-making process on the merits of the matter. One can do other things with a motion or a Bill. One can advertise it or put it in the newspaper. However, this is the Parliament of Canada. The purpose of the exercise is to get it before the House, get the attention of Members on it, and get the matter decided upon by the House of Commons. Anything that stands in the way of that ultimate end affects the privileges of a Member of Parliament. If it affects a Member in an adverse or unfair way, it is a proper matter for study and adjudication by the House of Commons.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to enter into this discussion for a couple of reasons, one being that I was a member of the McGrath task force and was involved in the drafting of this process. When the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) first addressed the Chair, there were two elements in his case. However, since that time it is like the pebble having been dropped into the pond, and there have been ever-widening ripples. I want to deal with a couple of the ripples as well as the substance of the Hon. Member's intervention.

I find the whole discussion of the matter of in camera meetings a little unusual. It has been a long accepted practice of the House of Commons and it is very important to the House. I would argue that to take it away would put the various committees in a very difficult spot when it comes to drafting of reports, such as the Board of Internal Economy, the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, and various other committees studying matters in camera around here. I would argue that this particular committee certainly has a justification for holding its final decision meeting in camera, in that any other Member who attends and has a Bill or motion before the committee would obviously be in a conflict of interest position. That must be taken into account.

The second ripple with which I wanted to deal is the argument made by my hon. friend who spoke prior to my intervention. He indicated that somehow Hon. Members' rights had changed in a negative way in terms of their Bills and motions since there were reforms to Private Members' Business. That escapes me completely.

As I understand it, those Bills and motions can proceed much as they did before. In addition, an Hon. Member has the right, opportunity, and chance to have the motion go one step further, that is, to a vote or decision of the House of Commons. As all of us know from practice, it was a very rare circumstance.

I should like to deal with the substance of the intervention of the Hon. Member for Peterborough. I do not believe he has a point of privilege. However, I think there is a serious point of order here and perhaps a role which the Speaker will want to play in terms of advising the House or making a reference to a committee, if that is the route the Speaker chooses.

I do not think the Hon. Member has a question of privilege. Although comments released to the press on an in camera meeting have time and time again been a grievance or a point of anger for many members of committees and Members of the House of Commons, I do not believe a precedent has ever been established to determine that it is a case of privilege.

That brings me to the second point raised by the Member, namely, whether or not the particular committee has the right to instruct another committee to take a certain action. It is at this point that I think we have a couple of difficulties. It is my understanding that some Members, in the drafting of their Bills and motions, have been given the advice that they should use the word "empower". I also understand that it is the word "empower" that is causing the procedural difficulties.

I can understand the difficulty. In a sense the Hon. Member's motion which is of concern to the House today, in using the word "empower", is asking the committee to do something which it already has the power to do. However, it is very important for the House to establish and the membership to understand that a private Member has every right, through the private Members' process that has been established, begin the process of instructing a committee to take a certain action. Obviously the individual Member cannot make that instruction. The committee on selection of Private Members' Bills cannot make that instruction. The only way there can be that instruction is when there is a decision for the vote. The House then divides and gives the instruction. It is not the private Member and it is not the committee dealing with Private Members' Bills that gives the instruction. It is only the House of Commons that gives that final instruction to a committee.

I believe there are two problems with that section. One concerns the word "empower". If it is causing procedural difficulties, I think the word has to be addressed. It is something I should like to see the Chair address. Second, it is very important to establish clearly that the House of Commons retains the right to instruct any committee to take any action it sees fit. That process can be begun by a private Member's intervention in the form of a Bill or motion which goes into the draw, is drawn, goes through the proper committee process, and then goes to the House of Commons.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the particular standing committee, and I read in the newspaper on the West Coast the results of the meeting. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I was disappointed that a breach of security, what I felt was security, had taken place with regard to the findings of the particular committee on which I sit. I read about it in one of the national newspapers.

If the privilege of the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has been breached, it would be because the announcement was made in the fashion that it was, either by some Member or by somebody in that committee leaking it. If we meet in a steering committee or in camera, we meet for the purpose of meeting privately. If there is no privacy, it is a redundant act to meet in camera. If the privilege of the Hon. Member for Peterborough has been breached, it is because the information was made public beforehand.

As to the content of the motion, I do not think that is a matter for discussion here. I think it comes down to a question. There is a process in place. There is a draw. Twenty names are drawn. For those whose names are not drawn, has their privilege been breached because their Bills have not come from the draw? That is the question, Mr. Speaker. If the regulations stipulate that six Bills have to be chosen, what happens to the 14 Bills remaining? Those Members affected could say that their privileges have been breached because their Bills were not chosen. If there has been a breach of privilege brought upon the Hon. Member for Peterborough, it would be that an announcement was made or a leak occurred prior to the findings of the standing committee being reported to this House. That took place, and it is something that I abhor. We meet in camera and in steering committees. Obviously members of this House, deliberately in certain cases, have gone to the press and made these things public. If there is anything we should deal with, that is what we should be dealing with.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief comment. There has been quite a bit of comment this afternoon on why we meet in camera. I might clarify that. The very first meeting we had of this committee was held downstairs in Room 112-North. Two members of the Official Opposition appeared with a number of cameramen and reporters and stated that their purpose was to filibuster the possibility of the selection of a Bill on capital punishment put forth by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm). That was their purpose. I refused as chairman to recognize the Members, and they left. We all agreed that if we had not done that, we would have gone nowhere with the selection of any Bill, let alone the Bill of the Hon. Member for Peterborough. That is why we met in camera. It was to discuss the various items before us and to come up with the proper selection.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to a couple of points made. The first one that I wish to make, and I wish to make it emphatically, is that I did not rise in my place today on a question of privilege because my Bill was not chosen. I rose on a question of privilege because of the process being used in selection. I am prepared to take part in the draw. We have to remember though that now there are different classes of Private Members' Bills. You could be a Member of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, like I have been for six or seven years and you might never have an opportunity to debate or discuss a piece of your own private Members' legislation. The process in place makes it necessary that 20 Bills be drawn. Your Bill could be among the other 140 Bills and that is where it could stay for your total life in Parliament. It is not a case of whether my Bill is chosen or not chosen; it is a case of what process is used to choose it as a votable item. I maintain that when a process is put in place that exceeds the mandate given to the committee to make that selection, there is a question of privilege.

I am not arguing about the rights of the committee to select and bring to a votable item four Bills, six Bills or whatever it chooses. This time five Bills were chosen, although six could have been chosen. I am arguing that the committee has to be clear in its mandate. I suggest, with all due respect, that the mandate given to the committee under the Standing Order about which I rose on a question of privilege is not clear. Let me tell you why the Standing Order is not clear, Mr. Speaker.

This whole debate started out, as pointed out by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), with two main points and about five ripple points. All are very valid points, but they are not my question of privilege. When we refer to a motion empowering a standing committee to study and report, we do not refute the fact that Parliament has always been able to do that. Everybody in this House knows that Parliament has been able to do that. Nor am I refuting the fact made by the Chairman of the standing committee that this power to refer, discuss and report is in effect now under the reform brought about by the McGrath Committee. The McGrath Committee made it possible for standing committees to initiate their own studies. I do not find any fault with that at all. That gives more power to the standing committees.

I am arguing that in the process of disallowing my motion the committee has removed that right from Parliament. It argues and states in the decision that my motion simply empowered the Justice Committee to do what it already has the power to do, namely, the authority given to it under the McGrath Committee. By giving that authority from the McGrath Report to the committee, a report endorsed by all three political Parties, I did not think, and I am sure no one in this House believed, that we were removing that right from Parliament.

All my Bills and my motions, speaking only about my own particular case, went through your office, Mr. Speaker, for acceptance as to their condition and form. I had several sent back before they went into the draw. They met the conditions. That motion asked only for the right to refer it to by Parliament's direction and be put to a vote in the House. I did not ask the standing committee to refer it to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. I asked for permission to have the motion voted on in the House so that Parliament, not the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, would direct that other standing committee to study and report. I was not under the impression, and I am still not under the impression, that Parliament has lost that right as the supreme body. This committee is only a finger wave of the main body, that is, of Parliament.

I hope that in this debate we are not all sitting here prepared to compromise Parliament's position in the issue. Parliament is supreme. Parliament can send anything it wants to any standing committee, notwithstanding the McGrath Committee which has given that authority to the standing committees.

I hope we can get this matter before the standing committee. Just to show you that I am sincere, Mr. Speaker, I have requested of the standing committee the right to appear before it. I have sent a letter to every member of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business in order that I might appear before it to argue this point. I have not been given that opportunity. I have also sent a letter to every member of the Justice and Solicitor General's Committee asking to appear before it because it does have—and I agree with the standing committee—the authority to initiate a study. I am asking for more than the authority given to the standing committee. I am asking for the authority of Parliament to refer the matter and require a report. Other NDP, Liberal and Conservative back-benchers have put the same motion many times over as allowed under the present Standing Orders. They might just as well be prepared to withdraw them all because the committee unilaterally, without the authority of Parliament, removed that right through its rejection of my motion, giving that as the "reason" for the rejection of my motion.

As my privileges have definitely been violated, I therefore urge you, Mr. Speaker, to refer this matter to the appropriate committee in order that public hearings be held so we can document our case, hear the responses, and come to a resolution of the problem which does not dilute the power of Parliament in dealing with matters of urgent and pressing national concern.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have just two points to make. I would agree with the Hon. Member if in any way the committee had said that under no circumstances, as a matter of principle, would any Private Members' Motion to empower a committee to study something be accepted. However, the committee did not say that. If it had, the Hon. Member would be making a very serious point. I myself would not want to eliminate the ability of a private Member to bring a motion to have the House refer something to a committee for study. However, that is not what the committee did. The committee did not make its argument "in principle", and did not say "under all circumstances".

The reason given is not new. We used it in the last round. I recall the motion of the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) who wanted the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to study the matter of credit card interest rates. We argued that the committee had the power to study that matter if it wanted to, and that, all other things being equal, there were other things that could not come before the House except in the form of a Private Members' Motion. Therefore, we suggested to the Hon. Member that he should try to get the committee to do that. That is all we have done in this case. That is not new. We did not invent it. It was employed once before by the committee. Therefore, I do not think the Hon. Member is being fair to suggest we pulled it out of a hat.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have helped the Chair a great deal in their interventions. The matter is of grave concern to Members and the Chair is going to consider all of the representations very carefully and report to the House as expeditiously as possible.

The Chair is also aware that feelings in this matter are and have been tense. I want to thank Hon. Members for accepting my suggestion that we make a little extra effort this afternoon to be sure that however severely we may feel about any of the issues raised in this particular matter, we recognize the civilities of this place. That has been done and the Chair wants to express its appreciation for that conduct.

The Chair is also aware that the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) is placed in a difficult and uncomfortable position. I want to thank Hon. Members for hearing him out as courteously as he was heard.

There is another matter of privilege and I recognize the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

ALLEGED ASPERSION CAST ON CREDIBILITY OF MEMBER

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon in Question Period the Hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), in answering a question from his own back-benchers, tried to discredit my credibility in this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House I said, and I quote from Hansard at page 1275:

> At my request this morning a woman—

—I repeat, a woman—

> telephoned the Revenue Canada office in Montreal. She gave my name, my social insurance number, my address, my date of birth. She was able to have access to my 1985 income tax return.

The important thing here is that a woman—and I don't think I could be mistaken for a woman—was able to have access to my income tax return.

So as far as I know, it seems that when someone calls and gives a social insurance number, they get out the first page of the income tax return containing the following information: address, date of birth, social insurance number, married or unmarried, single, divorced, and sex: male or female. It was obvious that here was a woman calling about an income tax return that belonged to a man, and the person at the other end of the line should have wondered about this.

Mr. Speaker, there is something wrong with the whole procedure, and it is dangerous, since traditionally, information on income tax returns is confidential.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker, is that the Minister is questioning my credibility, because it seems there were other versions. Of course he has every right to think so and say so, without challenging the credibility of other Members of this House. Besides, my version is also different from his.

Mr. Speaker, the matter of principle I wanted to stress in my question yesterday, and that is in fact why I am raising a question of privilege today, is that my credibility is being challenged. Instead of trying to challenge my credibility, the Minister ought to make sure that after this microfiche theft, Canadians need not fear that anyone could have access to their income tax returns, because, Mr. Speaker, income tax returns are sacred, they are personal.

Mr. Speaker, I would therefore ask, through you, that the Minister apologize in the House for having challenged the credibility of a Member and give Canadians the assurance that accidents like the one that happened yesterday will not happen again.

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am very much indebted to my colleague for giving me a further opportunity to set the record straight. First, if he examines my remarks, I suggested that he did not tell the whole story. That is why I am glad to be able to take this opportunity very briefly to say to him, a Member for whom I have the greatest respect, that in a matter as serious as this—and I and the Government have made no attempt to minimize its seriousness—no additional speculations, extrapolations or half data should be put before the public to make them needlessly afraid of what might or might not occur.

What my colleague said, in so far as he said it, was correct, but he did not leave the impression that I think Canadians were entitled to receive under the circumstances. He says he has a different version, and perhaps he does, but it raises a lot of questions when he puts the question to me as he did yesterday about employees' integrity and violation of the system which he implied may have occurred because of the data he supplied.

With the leave of the House I will be very brief and put down, without violating his confidentiality, what actually did occur on the basis of what I was given by my Deputy Minister. I think it is of interest to all Canadians.

• (1650)

At 10.43 yesterday a call relating to my colleague opposite was received by an inquiries officer at the Montreal district office. The caller, an English-speaking female, after giving the SIN number and date of birth of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), asked about a particular item in his return. Through our computer system the employee satisfied herself that such an item was in fact in the return. No confidential information was given since, when our employee asked the caller for further detail about the deduction, the caller hung up. I think that is relevant and gives some assurance to Canadians.

At 10.59 a French-speaking female person called the Montreal district office. The call was received by another inquiries officer. The caller gave my colleague's name, SIN number and date of birth and again asked about an item. I will not, of course, say what that item was. The employee asked for further detailed information. The caller provided the information. At 11.01 the employee accessed the computer and confirmed that the information provided by the caller was correct.

The employee then asked the caller to provide even further information about my colleague's return. Again the caller responded with the precise correct information. At that time the employee provided public information to the caller based on questions about the return. The caller terminated the conversation by informing our employee, without her having asked for it, of further tax information pertaining to my colleague.

In the two calls three pieces of information, either volunteered or otherwise, were requested and confirmed by the callers. Let me point out for the benefit of the House that, it is clear that no one in the Department can access confidential information without leaving a record for audit purposes. I think this information ought to be very reassuring to Canadians.

I have always had the greatest respect for my colleague. He is a good accountant. He knows that these safeguards are in place. As grievous and unfortunate as it is that this information may be on the record, it is clear that there are safeguards built into the system. Canadians need not have the impression that simply by calling the income tax office and providing a SIN number access to and information about that return can easily be obtained. That is my point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will, of course, reserve on this matter and make a ruling at a later date.

CHILD CARE

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Special Committee on Child Care in both official languages. If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence on this report later this day.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 106. I have a petition which has been certified to be correct as to form by the Clerk of Petitions and signed on October 16, 1986. This petition calls on the federal Government to change its mind with regard to the Patent Act. It points out that the proposed measures will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health requires the purchase of prescription drugs on a continuing basis. It is from residents of the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan and the neighbouring riding of Thunder Bay—Nipigon.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition signed by a number of residents of Canada. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 106, this petition has been found to be in order by the Clerk of Petitions. It was signed accordingly on November 7. The gist of the petition is that the signatories believe that the Government's proposed legislation to change the Patent Act will have the effect of increasing drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of the average Canadian to buy the necessary drugs. Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject those proposals to raise the drug prices and to reject the law which would have that effect.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in compliance with Section 106 this petition was certified to be correct as to form on November 7 of this year. It is from residents of the Lestock and Leross areas of my riding. They point out that the proposed changes to the Patent Act would increase drug prices and unfairly hurt Canadians whose health requires the purchase of prescription drugs. They indicate that the proposal would result in higher costs to provincial Government drug plans and is another example of Canadian Government concessions to the United States in the free trade negtiations at the expense of average Canadians. They therefore call upon this House to reject these proposals which will increase drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of persons from Thompson, Manitoba. They state that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act in relation to prescription drugs will increase drug prices. In view of the refusal of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to table crucial Government cost studies in this House with respect to these concerns, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds the motion to be in order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Young) which was negatived on the following division:

PARLIAMENTARY LOBBYISTS

REFERENCE OF DISCUSSION DOCUMENT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think you will find unanimous agreement for the following motion. I move:

That the document entitled "Lobbying and the Registration of Paid Lobbyists, a Discussion Paper", tabled in the House on Thursday, December 19, 1985 (Sessional Paper No. 331-4/14), be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure;

That the Committee consider and report upon the issues discussed in the above-mentioned document;

That the evidence adduced by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure in the First Session of the present Parliament be deemed to have been referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee report its findings and recommendations no later than Friday, February 20, 1987.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) have unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CHILD CARE

REQUEST RESPECTING CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin) presented under committee reports the first report of the Special Committee on Child Care and indicated that under motions she would be asking for unanimous consent of the House to move concurrence in the report.

I ask whether there would be unanimous consent for myself, on behalf of the Hon. Member for Lincoln, to move concurrence in the first report of the Special Committee on Child Care.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the House and the Hon. Member that we are not willing to give concurrence to the proposal that he move the motion on behalf of the Hon. Member. In fact, to save time, I want to tell him that we are not ready to agree to the Hon. Member moving the motion.

I would be happy to discuss the matter further at an early meeting of House Leaders.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to indicate that we are also unprepared at this time to give the necessary unanimous consent. Perhaps we ought to have further discussions and consider it later.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Question answered orally is indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 14.

[Text]

RECRUITMENT OF OFFICERS IN RCMP

Question No. 14—Mr. Nunziata:

1. How many officers in the RCMP represent (a) native Indian or Inuit (b) black African (c) Indian/Pakistani (d) Oriental (e) Arab (f) Jewish ethnic or racial groups?

2. Are steps being taken to encourage the recruitment of officers who represent visible minorities and, if so, what are they?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. The RCMP is unable to provide the data requested, as the RCMP application and personnel forms do not contain any questions which could identify an applicant or serving member by race, national origin, color or religion.

The RCMP employs, through a special program, 189 Native Special Constables in regular policing duties associated with Canada's native people, at several locations. For the reasons stated above, however, no further information exists on the numbers of native people, or those from any specific ethnic/racial background who are serving in the RCMP.

2. Yes. RCMP recruiting affords enhanced employment opportunity to four applicant categories, one of which is indigenous persons (Indians, Métis, Inuit).

The RCMP attempts to encourage Canadians of other ethnic backgrounds to consider a career in the Force by advertising for recruits in publications produced by visible minority groups. In addition, the RCMP has participated actively through the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police in co-operation with the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism to improve the delivery of police services to Canada's ethnic communities into the policing profession.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

Mr. Lewis: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to begin second reading debate on Bill C-20. Perhaps we could wrap it up today. The Bill was introduced in the House on November 5. In speaking to it, I think it is necessary to give the House the history of what we as the Government have been trying to do.

Through the 1984 Economic Statement and two Budgets, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has established a coherent and co-ordinated program to scale down the burden of Government, to improve our competitive position, and to free up our human, physical, and capital resources for use in a productive capacity.

There is under way a determined and planned process of deficit reduction, with 70 per cent of the reduction coming from expenditure cuts and only 30 per cent from increased revenue. For the first time in 40 years discretionary spending has been reduced.

The House will also remember that we instituted a task force on program review in which the private sector and public servants got together to review the efficiency of Government programs. We have been trying to do more with less. That is the management credo we are using.

Each Department of Government is examining its operating and management practices to eliminate waste, duplication, and inefficiency. The Government has initiated a program of selling surplus assets and privatizing Crown corporations which are no longer serving a public policy role. All Crown corporations are forced to be more efficient in using taxpayers' dollars.

I should also like to point out at this time that when the Government sold de Havilland, there was a great hue and cry on the part of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. Since that time de Havilland sales are booming. It has never had such a big order book. Quite frankly, those people buying aircraft have more confidence in an aircraft company being behind an aircraft company than in the Government of Canada being behind an aircraft company.

We have launched a comprehensive program of regulatory reform to lift the burden of unnecessary economic regulation. Be it in energy, transportation or communications, we are establishing a new environment which will encourage improved services and more competitive prices. This is a strong record of accomplishment, but we realize that more needs to be done.

Mr. Boudria: You don't actually believe that.

Mr. Lewis: Certainly. The Minister of Finance has embarked upon a major process of tax reform to simplify and streamline a tax system which became so complex under the previous Liberal administration as to be incomprehensible to the average Canadian.

The tax system is based upon trust. Such trust will only exist if Canadians believe that our system is fair and equitable. It is our purpose to ensure that the tax system no longer acts as a road-block, but serves to promote investment, job creation and growth on the road to economic renewal.

In all of these initiatives we faced some tough choices, especially with respect to expenditure reduction. We did not shrink from these decisions. As a Government, we were elected to make such decisions. We have made them, and we will continue to make them. We recognized, in order to gain support and understanding for these initiatives, that we must set a good example and practise what we preach. Accordingly, in the November 1984 Economic Statement, the Minister of Finance announced a voluntary decrease in the salaries of cabinet Ministers, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Prime Minister himself took a cut of over $20,000 for his first two years in office. The rest of the Cabinet sacrificed almost $10,000 per Member in order to assist in the maintenance of fiscal restraint.

In February of this year we had the budget address of the Finance Minister. In this Budget, the Minister of Finance asked all Members of the House and the Senate to accept a reduction of $1,000 in their salaries this year. It means that the Prime Minister and all of our colleagues in Cabinet will have $1,000 less at the end of this year in addition to the other reductions to which I referred previously.

As long as our Government must correct the problems of 16 years of mismanagement of the economy, we will have to take measures such as this from time to time.

Bill C-20 implements the measures introduced by the Minister of Finance. I urge all Members of the House to support our leadership in fiscal restraint and deficit reduction. Although sacrifices have been made, such is done to correct problems of the past and to create more hope for the future. It is for this reason that we, as Members of Parliament, have been asked to make a sacrifice of our own to continue assisting the positive effect the Government has had on the economy.

I want to give credit where credit is due, Mr. Speaker. We have done this because we have a Finance Minister who knows how to manage the economy and a Prime Minister who foresees the importance of planning for the future. For the second year in a row the deficit has gone down. Even recently The Ottawa Citizen said that the Minister has:

> A good forecasting record for any Finance Minister managing a $111 billion a year budget.

I remember sitting here in the past listening to Liberal Finance Ministers come up with projections on how much the deficit would be. At no time in my experience in Parliament was any Liberal Finance Minister anywhere near correct in predicting the size of the deficit. Time and time again the deficit was far greater, and I mean billions of dollars greater, than was predicted by the Liberal Government's Finance Minister. Those doubters who now sit, and deservedly sit, in opposition always stated that the country needs a responsible Government to get it rolling. I suggest to you, Sir, that our Government is giving the country responsible Government, and we have proven by our record that we can do that.

I just want to give a few ups and downs for my friends across the way. Unemployment is down since we took office to 9.5 per cent from 11.7 per cent. We have created 600,000 jobs since 1984, 328,000 of which were for women. I point out to my hon. friends opposite that we have appointed more women to positions than the Liberals ever did during their years in office. I remind members of both opposition Parties that time after time they said that if we brought in our deficit reduction measures it would cost us jobs. It has not cost us jobs. It has given 600,000 Canadians an opportunity to work, which is more than the Liberal Government ever did.

I want to talk about another item, that of interest rates. They are down to 9.75 per cent, the lowest level in eight years.

Mr. Gauthier: What about the Bill?

Mr. Lewis: What does the Hon. Member mean, the Bill? The bill that the Liberals left for the Canadian taxpayers will be very difficult to pay.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to address the Bill itself and never mind his politics. Let us have some explanation of what is in the Bill.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, would it be fair to ask a page to bring a copy of the Bill to my colleague?

Mr. Gauthier: Explain it.

Mr. Lewis: The Bill reduces salaries of Members of Parliament by $1,000 a year.

Mr. Gauthier: Make your comments relevant.

Mr. Lewis: Let us talk about relevant things. We understand why the Liberals do not want to hear about interest rates coming down or about unemployment levels coming down. They were never able to accomplish that when they were in office. I can understand their concern. It is a moment of great embarrassment to the Liberals to have those facts trotted out. They could never explain 19 per cent interest rates or 13 per cent unemployment or the great differences between Lalonde's projections and his actual deficits. There were never any explanations. Now they want explanations. They are entitled to an explanation of the reason that unemployment has decreased.

Mr. Gauthier: We do not need an explanation.

Mr. Lewis: This is a personal thing and I know the Liberals are taking it personally and I want to get personal on this. I understand their concern, Mr. Speaker.

Let us talk about poverty. There are 300,000 fewer lower income Canadians in 1985 than there were in 1984. The reason we are cutting our salaries is to show people that we are serious about deficit reduction. The Hon. Member opposite lives in a house. I want to talk to him about housing starts. The Liberals lost two Ministers over housing start problems. Housing starts are up by 61 per cent since September, 1984. The number of small businesses which have started up are up by 11 per cent since last year. Then we come to tourism which is up by 17 per cent. According to the Conference Board, consumer confidence is at its highest level in 21 years and at its second highest level on record. That is an economic record of which to be proud, Mr. Speaker. When we have a reduction in the salaries paid to cabinet Ministers and when the Prime Minister takes a reduction in salary, we are telling Canadians that this Parliament and this Government are serious about reducing expenditures. For that reason we are asking all Members to participate in this sacrifice of $1,000 a year in income.

I close my remarks by urging my colleagues opposite, who were prolific spenders when in office, to join us in supporting this worthwhile Bill and to vote for it.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, let me make a preamble to my remarks by saying that I have never heard so much nonsense in so little time since I have been in the House of Commons to hear a Member of Parliament lead us to believe that there has actually been a decrease in salary for cabinet Ministers. First, that is factually inaccurate and wrong. Second, to tell us that that has cured the malaise of the nation and that in the Member's view that is why the Government is doing well is grossly inaccurate.

I will continue my remarks on this topic at the appropriate time when the Bill is brought back before the House. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that those kinds of inaccurate comments cannot go on unchallenged and Members should speak in this House in such a way as to reflect roughly what is the truth.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of Canadian residents who protest the proposals of the federal Government to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs.

They petition that these proposals will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers, will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis, and will result in higher costs to provincial drug plans, despite the protestations of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to the contrary.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour to present a petition, which has been certified correct as to form and content. Like the petitions I had the opportunity to present once before, it has not been vetted by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

It is a petition from many Canadians in my riding of Winnipeg—Birds Hill who take the opportunity to protest the Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from many residents of Flin Flon, Manitoba and Winnipeg, Manitoba. These petitioners are protesting the changes to the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They protest that these changes will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs and that they will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. Furthermore, they will only result in higher costs not only to the provincial Government drug plans but also to individual consumers. These petitioners call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will only create great hardship for many Canadians.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of towns and cities in Manitoba, including, Teulon, Sandy Hook, Balmoral and Portage La Prairie, in which they say that the proposed measure with regard to changing the prescription patent law will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They therefore humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petition has been certified as correct as to form and content. The signatories to this petition live in such places as Kanata, Hull, Ottawa and Gloucester, Ontario. The petitioners say that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of the average Canadian to buy necessary prescription drugs. They also charge that the proposed changes are another example of Canadian Government concessions to the United States, at the expense of average Canadians, in the free trade negotiations. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for all Canadians.

Questions on the Order Paper

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 106 it is my privilege and responsibility to present a duly certified petition from residents of Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands, a riding, incidentally, which has a high percentage of senior citizens. The petitioners are very concerned about changes in the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs which will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They are concerned that these changes will result in unnecessary hardship both for individual consumers and for provinces. They see this as an another example of Canadians bowing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members, I think, have been given a fair amount of latitude by the Chair in making sure that the House and those who are listening know the thrust of the petitions. I would ask that the Hon. Member not go on overly long.

Mr. Manly: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the petitioners urge that the House of Commons reject the proposed changes to the patent law.

REQUEST THAT BUDGET CUTS TO RESEARCH BE RESCINDED

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and duty today, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to present a petition to this honourable House.

Mr. Speaker, the petition is signed by residents of Kanata, Ottawa, Navan, Orleans and Gloucester who ask Parliament to abolish the budgetary cutbacks affecting research, especially in the budget of the National Research Council.

[English]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition which is signed by residents of the areas of Devlin, Emo, Fort Frances, Stratton and Barwick in my riding. This petition again, as with so many others, calls upon the Government to rescind the proposed changes to the Patent Act which will inevitably increase the drug prices paid by ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to get up yet once again and present a petition under Standing Order 106. This petition has been certified by the Clerk of Petitions. As far as I know, it has not been seen yet by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), but I understand that that is not required under the rules of the House of Commons.

Mr. Lewis: Not yet required.

Mr. Murphy: I heard the threat from the Parliamentary Secretary. In the petition these people from numerous communities in Ontario, including Mississauga, Oakville, Scarborough, London, Toronto and Hamilton, express their deep concern that the cost of drugs will go up as a result of the Government's action. They also protest strenuously the fact that this is yet another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the United States, at the expense of average Canadians, as a result of the free trade negotiations. These petitioners believe that they will be unfairly hurt, especially those whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They call upon the House to protest the Government's actions.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to join with my colleagues in presenting petitions on behalf of a number of western Canadians who are very concerned about the Government's plan to introduce changes to the Patent Act which they believe will increase the price of prescription drugs dramatically. They call upon us as parliamentarians to do whatever we can to encourage the Government to change its mind and reject the concept of changing the Patent Act which will, in their words, increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Wednesday, November 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Senate and the House of Commons Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, a special "thank you" to my colleagues for their warm applause.

[English]

Yesterday afternoon we listened to a speech by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: It was not a very good speech as you will recall. Let me repeat to you what he said. He said:

> In all of these initiatives we faced some tough choices, especially with respect to expenditure reduction.

The Hon. Member was telling us how the Government had these tough decisions to make on reducing expenditures. Perhaps the Hon. Member could explain, was he referring to expenditures of the Prime Minister's Office? Was he referring to the fact that staffing in the Prime Minister's Office increased by 50 per cent since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took over? Or was he referring to the fact that the Prime Minister now requires not one, not two, not three, but five cars in order to travel up and down Parliament Hill and go for lunch at noon? Is that the expenditure reduction the Hon. Member was referring to?

Perhaps he was talking about the newly established legal aid service for cabinet Ministers. You see, if you are an ordinary Canadian in trouble with the law—and you, Mr. Speaker, who are learned in the law, will know this—you go out and find a lawyer. Unless you have a very, very low income, which most cabinet Ministers do not, you have to pay for legal advice. It is a kind of business transaction between the lawyer and his client. The lawyer says he will charge you so much to represent you, and the client says, all right. That is usually the way it works. At least that is the way I thought it worked. Not so if you are a cabinet Minister. A certain former cabinet Minister ran into a situation whereby there was a $350,000 legal bill over an alleged conflict of interest.

Mr. Lewis: Is that Kaplan?

Mr. Boudria: This particular cabinet Minister decided he would avail himself of cabinet legal aid. The Government of Canada will now pay, so we are told, $350,000 of taxpayers' money for his legal bill. Do you know that the savings represented by this Bill at the rate of $1,000 per Member of Parliament and Senator is roughly the same as paying the legal bill of the Hon. Member for York—Peel (Mr. Stevens)?

Mr. Fennell: You caused that.

Mr. Boudria: This $350,000 is allegedly saved to pay for a former cabinet Minister's legal bill. That is what this scheme is all about. It is not a matter of the Government saving money. It has nothing to do with that. It has to do with a certain sense of moral dishonesty on the part of the Government. That is what it is all about.

Albeit unlikely, if you think that I am partisan in making those remarks, which you probably would not, if you think I am not totally objective, let me read to you what some Tories have said in the past about saving money. Once upon a time there was this author. He was not very good. He wrote only one book and the book was called Where I stand.

Mr. Gagliano: Where he stood.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, that is very appropriate. That will most likely be the sequel.

At page 44 of the book it says: "How can the Government call on the nation to restrain itself, to be more realistic in its collective demand, when its own record is an unbroken stream of fiscal excesses? Canadians may be many things but stupid we are not. We have a leadership that so blatantly has one code of conduct for itself and quite a different one for the rest of us."

Mr. Rodriguez: Author!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I was not going to reveal the author but I am being provoked by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). The book was written by one Martin Brian Mulroney.

Mr. Rodriguez: No!

Mr. Boudria: Yes, indeed. He wrote this book which I have right here in my hands. Now we know why the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) said the book should be retitled "Where I stood".

We have a Government which uses two jets, one to carry the Prime Minister and the other to carry his ego, or his cameras, or even his limousine, upon occasion, so that he can have the pleasure of travelling down the streets of New York or wherever with a licence plate on his car that says CAN 001 instead of some other number. That is what it is all about. It is the fiscal excesses of this Government, a Government and a Prime Minister that went on a Far Eastern trip with a butler and a maid. However, they were not an ordinary butler and maid. Yes, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) told us that this was no ordinary butler. This butler was a combination of James Bond and a butler. He was a security butler so we could ensure that indeed the Prime Minister's clothes and so on were in the proper place at the proper time for security purposes. I ask you, since when is the Prime Minister's underwear a national security issue? I am wondering. I am waiting to be briefed on that particular topic.

Mr. McDermid: Hah, hah, hah.

Mr. Boudria: Then the Government has the unmitigated gall to tell Canadians they must tighten their belts after that string of excesses.

I was at the Standing Committee on Public Accounts earlier this week. Government officials were asked why a building in Hull, known as the Louis St. Laurent building, stayed vacant for nine months after construction.

Mr. Tupper: Why was it ever built?

Mr. Boudria: I am asked two questions and I will answer both of them. First to the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper), and he was not at the committee and that is understandable because he is not a member, but I want him to be aware of the fact that the building was supposed to have been used at the time it was completed and there was a demand for every square foot of space, according to Government officials who appeared in front of the committee. We were told in committee on Tuesday morning that after the building was complete, the Minister was supposed to hire a person to do the interior design. That process normally takes 10 days. I asked how long it took in this case. The Government official said seven months. It took seven months for the Government to appoint a consultant to do the inside of the building.

Do you know how many taxpayers' dollars were wasted in that case? I asked what it was and I ask all Members to review the record of that committee. It cost $1 million a month so that the Minister could decide who he wanted to do the interior design of that building. It is not I who said that. It was said in a committee of this House this week. That is a $7 million waste. We are told by the Government that Canadians must tighten their belts. The Government must be a little more honest with Canadians. I invite the former Minister of Public Works to review the report of that committee. He will see what was said there. If it is inaccurate, I hope he will so state in the House of Commons.

• (1130)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, today we are being asked to adopt this Bill. It is not a very important one financially speaking, but it is important as a symbol and for two reasons: first, the Government announced in its Budget that as a symbolic gesture, Members of this House and parliamentarians in the other place would be asked to forego $1,000 of their annual increase.

[English]

On page 1338 of Hansard of yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary said:

> In February of this year we had the budget address of the Minister of Finance. In this Budget, the Minister of Finance asked all Members of the House and the Senate to accept a reduction of $1,000 in their salaries this year.

That is not correct, Mr. Speaker. You and I know that that is incorrect. Members of this House were asked to forgo $1,000 of their increase in salary for this year. The Parliamentary Secretary continued:

> It means that the Prime Minister and all of our colleagues in Cabinet will have $1,000 less at the end of this year in addition to the other reductions to which I referred previously.

That is incorrect as well, Mr. Speaker. We will not have $1,000 less this year than we had last year. We will have about $3,000 more in our salaries. I am not advocating that it be different, but why do we not reveal the facts and tell the Canadian people the truth? That which we are telling them is not correct.

During his speech yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary spoke about the plight of those less fortunate than many of us in this House. He talked about poverty. He said:

> There are 300,000 fewer lower income Canadians in 1985 than there were in 1984.

The Member spent a considerable amount of time talking about that. However, he did not tell us that the budgetary changes will result in massive tax increases for the same people about whom we say we are so concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have a chart here showing that a family with one breadwinner and three dependents and an income of $30,000 for a family of four—I would say this is certainly not a rich family, Mr. Speaker—will have to pay 2.1 per cent more in taxes this year, while a family with an annual income of $50,000 will have a 1.2 per cent increase in income tax, and that from the very same Government which claims to be the defender of the needy. Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is less than honest to make claims of this kind.

I may draw the attention of the House to the fact that a single-parent family with two children and an annual income of $20,000 will have to pay $420 more in income tax in 1986, according to the last two Budgets. Now, the Parliamentary Secretary told the House that Hon. Members would, according to him, have to forego $1,000 of their salaries. Mr. Speaker, that is not correct, that is not true. We are being asked to take a cut in our salary increases. However, Canadians who have to live on very low incomes, the family to which I referred earlier, are faced with a real increase in income tax and thus a net reduction in income for that family. That is what is happening to them. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Government's symbolic or quasi-symbolic gestures will not go down well with Canadians.

[English]

In the Parliamentary Secretary's fine speech yesterday he pretended that this Bill was important for deficit reduction by the Government. He knows that that is not the case. He knows better than to make the claims which he made in this House yesterday.

This is but a tiny Bill. It has only four pages. We are taking much time in the House of Commons to debate this Bill. However, in addition to debating the Bill, we are debating the inaccurate comments made in the House yesterday. I think the Government should be held to account for that. It is our duty to hold it accountable. We are trying to do that, but it is pretty hard to keep the Government straight. We are doing our best because we know the kind of Government that this is.

I have read the translation of the Bill before us. The French text and the English text do not appear to be the same. I consider them to be different. I invite you, Mr. Speaker, and the Table Officers to examine the text of the Bill. I believe that in the English text of the Bill we are talking about rounding off the salary at the level of the total indemnity, including the expense allowance. However, that is not explicitly written in the French text. You are learned in the law, Mr. Speaker. I invite you to read page 2 of the Bill. I believe there are discrepancies in the translation of the Bill. I invite Members to look at this because it does not appear, at first glance, to be identical in both official languages.

I will take a moment to talk about more of the fiscal policies of the Government. After all, we are talking about a budget Bill. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou is paying very close attention to these remarks. I know he would want me to bring to your attention the fact that there has been a tax increase on certain construction goods and other products. I know he is very concerned about this because he has spoken to me about this in the past. The Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou is a very fine Member of Parliament and is obviously very concerned about these things. As you know, he is the small business critic for our Party, a duty which he discharges very well. He wanted me to bring to your attention that the tax rate on construction goods after the 1985 Budget was 7 per cent, and 8 per cent after the 1986 Budget. Of course, that will increase the price of housing and commercial structures in Canada.

It is time that these facts were brought to the attention of the House, and I congratulate the Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou for bringing this to my attention so I could raise it with the House. Let me expand on the fiscal policy of the Conservative regime.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we could talk, for instance, about the 1 per cent increase in sales tax on alcohol and tobacco. Well, most Canadians may not object that much, because these taxes do not affect so-called essential goods. That may be true, but the fact remains that increasing the cost of these goods means increasing the cost of living. Whether they are essential or not, these products are purchased by the Canadian consumer, and price increases in this area help increase inflation. Mr. Speaker, these are problems we have to consider.

All things considered, we are still talking about a Bill which flows from the Budget. I draw your attention to the increase in the air transportation tax, and I do so for the significant reason that, as I said, a lot of goods are transported by aircraft. It is still a working tool for quite a few Canadians such as northern residents and businessmen. So again this tax will fuel inflation since it will boost the price of products and goods marketed by these companies, and all Canadians will eventually feel the pinch.

Mr. Speaker, a word about the telecommunication programming services tax, another case of an increase to 7 and 8 per cent by the Conservative Government.

[English]

The Government has been less than sincere in its statements about these tax increases. I would not want to use other words in the fear that they may not be parliamentary. I certainly would not want to do that, out of my great respect for the House. However, let me point out that the Government made commitments to the people of Canada during the election campaign. I may have already said that the Government made 338 Tory promises during the last election. I have listed them in a book called "338 Tory Promises". A copy of this book is available to any Canadian who wants to write me. There is no postage necessary and I will send them a copy of the book "338 Tory Promises".

Let me quote from this book so we can compare what the Conservatives promised with what they have done. I know that you have had to endure, as I have, listening to those partisan Tory promises during the last election campaign. I know that you look at those promises objectively since the Speaker is always non-partisan.

I believe it is important to remind those partisan Tories opposite about those promises that were made in the last election, and I invite my colleague from Saint-Léonard—Anjou to note some of the contradictions between the Tory promises and the budget Bills, including the Bill before us today.

In the category of Government management, the Tories said that they would adopt a positive approach to productivity management through the development of incentives to meet objectives specified in any programs placed before Cabinet or Parliament. What was the positive approach to productivity in delaying for seven months the appointment of a consultant to finish the building? I suggest to the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) that it simply does not coincide with that promise.

The Conservatives promised to ensure that Parliament performs a stronger role in creating and monitoring the expenditures of the Government. Was Parliament consulted before the prison was built at Port-Cartier?

Mr. Gagliano: The Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) was not even consulted.

Mr. Boudria: The Member for Drummond was not even consulted, as the Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou says.

[Translation]

Besides, we had good reasons to believe that the majority of Cabinet members had not even been consulted. Some Ministers were contradicting themselves. A Minister, whose name I shall not mention, had stated it was his responsibility to decide that the prison was going to Port-Cartier, despite the fact that it was not his Department's role to decide where prisons should be built. I will not say who it was, but you probably know indeed that the media did report the statement had been made by the Minister involved. Hard to believe I admit, Mr. Speaker, but I am told the statement was made.

The Chief of Staff or an official in the Prime Minister's Office said that the decision had not been made by the Prime Minister, yet the Prime Minister was bragging that he was the one who did make the decision. The Solicitor General kept saying the prison was needed, but the Auditor General maintained that there was no use for it at all.

In answer to a question I directed to him in the House the new Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) indicated there was no conflict of interest in the award of a certain contract in Port-Cartier; 30 seconds later his colleague—I am referring to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret)—replied in answer to my supplementary that an inquiry had already been launched with respect to this alleged conflict of interest.

Mr. Speaker, such flagrant contradictions are just one more example of the broken promises made by the Progressive Conservative Party during the 1984 election campaign.

It stretches one's imagination to think that a Government may have broken so many promises in so little time. This Government was elected with the greatest majority ever given a political party in the history of this country, but in very short order it quite simply whittled down the confidence of the Canadian people. Would you believe it? In very little time indeed, Canadians no longer believed what this Government and this Prime Minister were saying. Some people have gone as far as wondering whether the Prime Minister is always telling the truth. Doubts have been raised. It is hard to believe that a Government would lose this confidence so quickly, but sure enough, that is exactly what is really happening.

The ultimate conclusion is that never again will Canadians have confidence in the Conservative Party.

[English]

Canadians can no longer trust these Tories. They made too many promises to Canadians and have deliberately broken most of them and failed to deliver promises they could have fulfilled.

Let me give a few examples. During the last election campaign the Prime Minister, then the Leader of the Opposition, raised an issue involving patronage. The issue of political patronage was raised by the Tories during the last election. They said how evil the previous Government was because it appointed 19 people to certain Government positions. That was wrong, according to these Tories, and they wanted to correct that situation. They said that under a Tory regime these kinds of things would never be allowed to happen. I have a little list of Tory political appointments in a book called The Black Paper on Tory Patronage. In this book is a list of approximately 1,000 political appointments during the first seven or eight months the Conservatives were in power. That is one appointment every three hours, 24 hours a day, seven days a week for seven months. That is not bad for an outfit which said it was not going to partake of patronage.

• (1150)

I ask the Tories opposite to stand and defend some of those patronage appointments. I ask them to defend the appointment of Gail Christie who said her qualifications were that she could drive a car and that is why she should sit on the Board of Air Canada. I ask the Tories to try to defend the appointment of Marie Marchand of North Bay who said to the North Bay Nugget concerning her appointment to CN Rail: "I come from North Bay, a railroad town, and my grandfather was a well-known railroader in the Maritimes". Those were the qualifications she attibuted to herself. Can you believe that, Mr. Speaker? And the Tories had the unmitigated gall to make the promises they did during the last election campaign.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member would accept a question on the remarks he has just made?

Mr. Boudria: At the appropriate time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will accept questions at the appropriate time. As I was saying before I was interrupted, I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, a few quotes made in the past. On May 24, 1983, the Leader of the Conservative Party said, concerning patronage: "There will be jobs for Liberals and NDPs, too, after I have been Prime Minister for 15 years and cannot find a living, breathing Tory in the country".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: If they are all like you, we understand why.

Mr. Boudria: Those were his words. I know they are hard to swallow. I can see the Tories opposite wincing. They are embarrassed, and I do not blame them. I would be embarrassed, too, if I were a Tory, heaven forbid that would ever happen. A little later, on July 16—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) on a point of order.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order. I cannot see the relevance of the Hon. Member's remarks to the specific items in this Bill. I would respectfully request that the Member be required at least to be relevant to the topic.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point made by the Hon. Member for Kitchener is, of course, well understood by the Chair. However, we are dealing with a matter that involves the salaries of Members of Parliament, and taking into consideration the speech made yesterday by a member of the Government, I must give the benefit of the doubt to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) with regard to his comments.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was indeed very well adjudicated by yourself, as usual. I am speaking on one of the Bills introduced pursuant to the Budget. I feel it is my responsibility to bring to your attention the fiscal policy and waste of taxpayers' dollars by the Government. That is what I am doing. I am also, as you indicated, Mr. Speaker, responding to the fact that the Parliamentary Secretary said yesterday that this Bill was one of the measures used by the Government to curb Government expenditures. I am trying to demonstrate why that is not so.

As I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted by the Conservative Member opposite, let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, of an article in the Ottawa Citizen on July 16, 1984, in which the Leader of the Conservative Party said about his pro-patronage statements during the Progressive Conservative Party leadership race and his harsh criticism of the June 1984 Liberal appointments. He said: "I was talking to Tories then and that's what they wanted to hear. Talking to the Canadian public during an election campaign is something else". Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, that someone who is now the Prime Minister could have made statements like that?

I have another quote from July, 1984. However, this one is so bad that if I were to read it, the Chair would probably rule it unparliamentary. The Leader of the Conservative Party also said to the Canadian Press on July 16 about patronage and about the method of making appointments: "The method of making appointments could be corrected by dramatic measures. We are going to bring in a brand new dimension of objectivity, representation and fairness to all Canadians".

As you probably very rightly understand by now, Mr. Speaker, these statements not only contradict the present policy of the Government but they contradict each other. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was saying something different when talking to Tory partisans from what he said when talking to the Canadian people.

In 1977 I considered running for provincial office in the Province of Ontario. I later decided to wait until the next election. A close friend said to me at that time that if I run for office I should remember one thing because only one thing is important: "Ask yourself continuously the question; what happens in case I get elected?" That may sound funny to Hon. Members opposite but he went on to say: "If you are defeated, there is no problem. You just go back and do what you were doing before. But if you are elected, you have to deliver those things you told the people you would do for them". I think the present Prime Minister should have asked himself that question before making his 338 promises. He should have asked himself: "What happens in case I get elected?" If he had done so, he would not have made those contradictory promises. He would not have made those statements to the people of Canada which have caused the Government and the Prime Minister to lose so quickly the confidence of the Canadian people. Obviously, it was not carefully thought out.

[Translation]

But Canadians will not be fooled again. They know better Mr. Speaker. Canadians have been misled once by the Conservatives, and I can tell you that it will never happen again as long as the Government operates this way. Canadians want a more open Government, and you will see that after the next election we will again have a Liberal Government.

[English]

Mr. Reimer: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I might seek the unanimous consent of the House to ask the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) a question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. Resuming debate.

• (1200)

Mr. McDermid: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) said that he would be happy to consider questions at an appropriate time. He has finished his speech, and I think this is an appropriate time for him to accept such questions. The only person who said "no" was the Hon. Member for—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I asked Hon. Members for unanimous consent and I heard someone say: "No". Thus, there was not unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) on debate.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is really unfortunate and a disservice to this House that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) made such a speech lambasting the Government, quite correctly, and then when the opportunity came about for Hon. Members to put questions to him it was a Liberal colleague of his who denied us the opportunity to explore this matter further with him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, those to my right are called Grits. I think they should be called "hypo-Grits". We saw a perfect example today of the pot calling the kettle black. The Liberals were great for spending money uselessly.

Mr. Della Noce: He was not there, he was working in the kitchen at that time.

Mr. Rodriguez: Bill C-20 proposes to cut the wages of MPs and Senators by $1,000.

Mr. Boudria: Not quite $1,000.

Mr. Rodriguez: This is really a symbolic measure. I think every Member in the House would agree that if we really want to show some symbolism, this is an appropriate way to do it. However, I think members of the Canadian public will not be satisfied with mere symbolism. What they are really looking to Parliament for is leadership in terms of cutting expenditures, something about which the Government has declared itself in favour. They are looking to Parliament and saying: "How are you really taking care of our accounts? We want an accounting of your stewardship. We are not satisfied with symbolic cuts. When you say it is $1,000 per MP and Senator, it could well be less than that". That is the crux of my remarks today. Since this is second reading debate and since we are dealing with principles, I wish to deal with the principle of symbolism.

Incidents which have occurred recently have cast doubt on the seriousness and validity of this symbolic wage cutting which Members of Parliament and Senators are being asked to support.

Mr. Blaikie: Tell us about the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) symbolism.

Mr. Rodriguez: We in this Party will not oppose the symbolism which is before us in Bill C-20. It is but flimsy symbolism which signifies really nothing. For the first time since I have been around here the Auditor General has just taken on a project which has not yet been built.

Mr. Boudria: It's half built.

Mr. Rodriguez: That's right, it is half built. The contracts that were tendered have been assigned, which is another process.

Mr. Lewis: Like roads.

Mr. Rodriguez: The people look at the prison which will be built in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding and see that it will cost in excess of $41 million to move the prison from where it was originally scheduled to be built in Drummondville to put it in place in the Prime Minister's riding. Canadians will look at that move and say: "He is the leader of the country. After all, he is the Prime Minister. What is the symbolism in that move? What is he saying to Canadians?" What he is saying is: "It's my skin and to heck with the costs". That is what he is saying. He is saying that he is more interested in saving his own re-election skin than in giving leadership to the country. Canadians will see all this foo-fa-raw about wanting to cut Government expenditures and the deficit and see that in fact the Government is really only playing a shell game. On the one hand the Government is saying that MPs will take a $1,000-a-year cut in pay and on the other hand, out the back-door go millions of dollars to save the Government's neck and the Prime Minister's political hide.

Another example in this respect is the ex-Minister who was accused of conflict of interest. He requested a judicial inquiry and the Government acceded to his request. Lo and behold we find out that the taxpayers of the country are picking up the tab for the ex-Minister's lawyer's fees of $1,700 a day. That was a contract which was not tendered. Surely we could have gotten a lawyer for less than $1,700 a day. Not only that, the Government has said that the ex-Minister's secretary must also have a lawyer, and the taxpayers will have to pay for those services as well. We should extrapolate that principle and apply it to each accused in the country for whom the taxpayers should pick up the tab.

Where is the symbolism in that action? Canadians are saying: "Look at those MPs. They are planning to take a $1,000-a-year cut in pay and yet look at how they are handling the big bucks. They are just opening up the barn-door and shovelling it out."

I would now like to deal with the case of Mr. Dalton Camp. Why did he have to be put on the Civil Service payroll at over $100,000 a year? Members of the Government could have received his advice free just by reading his column in The Toronto Star. Why did he have to be put on the payroll when for 35 cents on weekdays and $1 on the weekends members of the Government could have received his advice? He does not bring any particular expertise with him concerning Government procedures. He is merely bringing political advice to save the Prime Minister's political hide and to save the hide of the Tory Government. That is what he is doing.

Mr. Blaikie: He's not doing it in western Canada, I can tell you that.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where is the symbolism in paying Dalton Camp over $100,000 a year, plus benefits?

Mr. Blaikie: John Diefenbaker is rolling over in his grave.

Mr. Rodriguez: In the same moment the Government erected a statue to the Chief. Members of the Government could not even bring off the dinner party.

Mr. Blaikie: Did you see the frown on that statue?

Mr. Rodriguez: I sure hope the pigeons are having a hey-day out there.

Mr. McDermid: They wouldn't dare!

Mr. Rodriguez: I will bet Hon. Members that the Government has even installed Dalton Camp in the Chief's old office. One could only imagine what the ghosts in the halls of this building are going through.

Members opposite might laugh, but I wish to tell them that since television came into the House, the Canadian people are more aware of these types of expenditures that the Government is putting out.

• (1210)

We are talking about the symbolism involved in a $1,000 cut in the pay of MPs. If the Prime Minister would only stay home for one week, we could save as much money as that. Have we forgotten his sojourn in New York? Have we forgotten what it cost for the hotel suite in which the Prime Minister stayed in such regal style? Have we forgotten the cost of transporting all the media equipment required when the Prime Minister goes abroad? If Pierre Trudeau had done that, Tom Cossitt would have brought this House down brick by brick. Imagine Pierre Elliott Trudeau living that lifestyle and spending that kind of money.

Let us be fair about this. What is the symbolism of that kind of spending in the minds of Canadians? Canadians are not saying that those MPs are wonderful for taking a $1,000 cut in pay because they are looking at the larger figures. We are not diverting their attention by making piddly cuts that actually mean nothing and are symbols of nothing. Canadians are looking at the bigger picture.

I well recall how Conservative Members used to count the number of people employed in Pierre Trudeau's office daily. Today, the Prime Minister's Office has undergone a geometric expansion. Perhaps he could provide an example to Canadian taxpayers by cutting back on the size of his office. It seems to me that Canadian taxpayers are looking at the way the leadership conducts itself and at the lifestyle here on the Hill. The Prime Minister's Office has expanded while the public looks on.

The other matter that comes to mind is the expenditure of $9 million on the Forget Commission. That money is being spent to study the unemployment insurance program.

Mr. Blaikie: To figure out how to take away money from people who need it.

Mr. Rodriguez: This money is being spent largely because the Government did not have the courage to look at the program and make recommendations to the House with respect to changes it wanted. From where does this $9 million come? The Government has not taken it from general operating revenues—

Mr. Blaikie: As it should have.

Mr. Rodriguez: It took it right out of the unemployment insurance fund. The Government has taken away funds contributed by employers and employees. That is the lousiest action that I have seen taken around here in a long, long time. Imagine if that had been done by the previous Government. The ceiling would have fallen into this place.

Mr. Nunziata: We wouldn't have done it.

Mr. Rodriguez: I know the Liberal Party's historic position on unemployment insurance. Do not let us get into that. We will have to look at how Mackenzie King handled unemployment insurance, brother, so, Liberal Members, do not think that you are squeaky clean on that matter.

I have never before seen behaviour like this, the taking of $9 million for the Forget Commission from the unemployment insurance funds. The money is not even coming from the Government's contribution to the extended benefits. It is coming right out of the premiums contributed by working Canadians and employers. That is not fair.

Even more ridiculous is the fact that considering all the previews we have had of the Forget Commission Report, the Government will not touch its report with a 10-foot pole. The report will be put on a shelf because the Government is not interested in stirring up any hornets' nests two years before an election. The Government will simply sit on it and waste the $9 million that has been spent from the unemployment insurance fund so that Mr. Claude Forget and his commission could travel around the country hearing briefs on the unemployment insurance program. What is the symbolism of that, Mr. Speaker?

There are 282 Members in the House of Commons. If each gives up $1,000, that amounts to $282,000. There are another 102 Members in the Senate. What is the symbolism of that? It is absolutely hollow. It is not even based—

Mr. Thacker: Put in an amendment increasing it to five.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member from the other side said that I could amend it to five. I would certainly do that if I also had the power to cut out the large giveaways in which the Government has involved itself. I would do so if I had the power to say to the Prime Minister: "Thou shalt not send the transport plane with all your t.v. cameras and all the rest of it on trips and thou shalt leave your secret service butler and maid at home". If I had the power to say that, I would do so, but I am not interested in empty symbols like the offering up of a $5,000, $2,000 or $1,000 cut in our pay.

Mr. Beatty: Are you going to vote against it?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, I am voting for it. All I am saying is that it is an empty symbol because it is not matched—

Mr. Beatty: Why did you just say you are opposed to it?

Mr. Rodriguez: It is not matched by more responsible behaviour in the spending of taxpayers' money.

The pay cuts would be meaningful if I had the power to fire Dalton Camp. The pay cuts would be meaningful if I had the power to tell the Prime Minister that the prison will not be built in Port Cartier and that he could get by with a much smaller staff. There are so many people on his staff that they are tripping over each other. They cannot even communicate with the press.

Mr. Beatty: What would you do about Ian Deans?

Mr. Rodriguez: The pay cuts would be meaningful if I had the power to tell the Prime Minister that the Senate goes. He keeps appointing more Tory hacks and flacks into the Senate, and that creates an expenditure that is costing taxpayers millions and millions of dollars. I do not think the Canadian taxpayers are interested in these symbols. They are interested in meaningful leadership in the handling of taxpayers' dollars.

I said that we will vote for the Bill. We have no axe to grind and will not hold it up. We have no reason for not supporting it. However, it only goes so far because it is symbolism of the lowest rank. It is not backed up by meaningful behaviour patterns on the part of the Government.

In conclusion, I want to say that the Government has a responsibility to lead. I accuse the Government of not showing leadership with respect to this Bill.

Another thing that really bothers me—

Mr. Nunziata: I thought you were concluding.

• (1220)

Mr. Rodriguez: One of the things that really bothers me is things like the situation of which I read in this morning's Toronto Star. It says a lot to Canadians. A Canadian Press story appeared in today's edition of The Toronto Star entitled "Tory bagmen study new pitch to well-to-do". In part the article reads:

> Well-to-do Progressive Conservatives may get a chance to dine privately with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney for a $5,000 contribution to the Party.

What is the symbolism of that? It goes on to indicate:

> Flushed with the success of the Tory 500 Club, the Party is considering creating a select category within that group—called governors—

Mr. Blaikie: That is a nice American phrase.

Mr. Rodriguez: I think it has imperialist overtones. The article continues:

> —to encourage donations of $5,000 a year, said Brian Gallery, 500 Club chairman.

Is that believable? Mr. Speaker, guess how much is membership in The 500 Club? The article indicates:

> Membership in The 500 Club is $1,000 a year.

Membership in The 500 Club is $1,000 per year, exactly what Members of Parliament are being asked to give up in their wages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member to show the relevance of his remarks to the Bill before us.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the relevancy is that we will not all belong to the club. I want to make that crystal clear. There are at least 70 Members in the House who will not join the club. I do not want people to get the impression that all of us will join the club. It is a $1,000 membership, and the Tories can write it off on their income tax returns. We are not applying for membership in the club. The articles continues:

> Among the benefits for governors would likely be a private dinner "with the members themselves and a guest, hopefully the Prime Minister,"—

It continues:

> Governors would also be entitled to trade in their 500 Club lapel pins and ties for new pins and ties with a G on them.

Mr. Blaikie: It is the Tory answer to the G-string.

Mr. Rodriguez: Right. They should have at least put a T on it. The article goes on to indicate:

> But the main attraction would be the recognition "and the satisfaction that you are a governor and that you have contributed," he said.
> The new pitch would be modelled on the Republican Eagles club in the United States, which has a $10,000-a-year membership fee and provides regular meetings with party leaders, including President Ronald Reagan.

This kind of behaviour on the part of the Government raises question in the public's mind about the hollow symbolism of what is in Bill C-20. If the principle of the Bill is to show that Members of Parliament are examples of leadership on the whole question of cutting Government expenditures, how is the Government following through with its expenditures from the larger purse of the public?

The article about the new 500 Club governors indicates that in fact the Tories are tied in with a very elitist element in society. In fact, they have to keep handing out the porkbarrel consistently. Dalton Camp would have probably belonged to the club. They will now have a barrel into which they can reach any time and pick governors for the thousands of appointments they will have.

Mr. McDermid: Ian Deans is inquiring about a membership.

Mr. Blaikie: In Manitoba these memberships are going for five cents a piece.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. It has been said that no Conservatives from Manitoba are joining. As a matter of fact, the Conservative Party of Manitoba wants to secede.

Mr. Nunziata: Why?

Mr. Rodriguez: I think they have some problems there.

The Tories are institutionalizing porkbarrelling with the particular kind of structure they are setting up. The Liberals did it as just a normal behaviour, as a way of life. The Conservatives are now raising it to a new level of sophistication. They are establishing structures or governorships. Of course any governor would want to serve his country, but the Tories should hang their heads in shame.

It is the Party of Tom Cossitt. That hon. gentleman made a name for himself in the House by exposing the Liberals consistently. He was correct to do that. He was interested in how many bulbs were on the Christmas tree at 24 Sussex Drive. He wanted to know those kinds of interesting and scintillating pieces of information.

Mr. Blaikie: He was thorough.

Mr. Rodriguez: Exactly. I wonder how he would have reacted to the behaviour of the Conservative Government today in respect of the way it spends taxpayers' money.

In 1984 we were promised a different style. We were promised that it would be the dawning of a new day. We were promised that the Conservatives would be different from those old porkbarrel Liberals. We were promised that, and we looked forward to it. We really wanted that change. We were tired of Liberals handing out jobs to Liberal hacks and flacks. We were sick and tired. We had Liberals coming out of our ears. They had infested every commission and board across the country. It was a scandal.

Mr. Nunziata: You are going too far.

Mr. Rodriguez: It was, honestly it was. We really expected better behaviour from the Conservative Government.

There is no decency left in the Government. It is even doing these things blatantly now with the governorships. By appointing one New Democrat and one Liberal, it feels justified in appointing 10,000 more Tory hacks and flacks.

The Conservatives are not kidding anyone with that game, so they should not throw around the names of Ian Deans and Stephen Lewis. For every one of those extremely competent people who rightly occupy positions, they have appointed some 15,000 to 20,000 hacks and flacks who have absolutely no qualifications whatsoever, other than the fact that they belong to the Tory Party. Now they will be elevated to governorships.

I can foresee levels in the Tory Party. It is now stratifying; it is now a hierarchy. For an appointment to the Human Rights Commission, one just has to be a Tory member.

I do not want to delay the Bill. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That the question be now put.

• (1230)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. The debate will be on the motion. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is very presumptuous of the New Democratic Party to move that motion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: A lovers' quarrel.

Mr. Nunziata: There is no question that the motion is in order. If you bear with me a moment, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Parry: We didn't need your opinion anyway, John.

Mr. Nunziata: Thus far we have had a representative of the Conservative Party speak on the Bill, a representative of Her Majesty's Loyal and Official Opposition, and a Member from the New Democratic Party, the third Party, speak on the Bill.

Mr. Rodriguez: What more do you need?

Mr. Nunziata: The New Democratic Party prides itself on openness. If often argues in this House and at committee that elected Members have a right to speak to legislation. New Democrats continually argue that it is important for Members to express a point of view in order for their constituents to understand where they stand.

The New Democratic Party speaks out very vigorously on the issue of closure. What absolute hypocrites the New Democrats are. I ask you, Sir, and other Members in the House to review the record on the issue of closure. On many occasions the Conservative Government has decided to invoke closure on pieces of legislation that were considered controversial, and members of the New Democratic Party, including the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), have stood up and criticized the Conservative Government for invoking closure. They have argued, and the record will show, that closure is undemocratic and that closure has no place in a parliamentary democratic system. Yet the New Democratic Party, for whatever reason, decides today to invoke a form of closure. That is hypocritical, Mr. Speaker.

Members in this House have a right to speak to this legislation. I am sure there are a number of Members opposite who wish to express a point of view, and I know that there are a number of individuals in the Liberal caucus who wish to speak to this legislation. For the New Democratic Party to invoke closure is inexcusable. The Member for Nickel Belt said that the Government should hang its head in shame. I agree with him that the Government ought to hang its head in shame for the things it has done and for its record of Government. But the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and the rest of his Party should hang their heads in shame for doing what they are doing and for being as hypocritical as they often are. They are a self-righteous group of socialists.

When Mr. Deans was in the House he spoke of patronage. He said: "Shame, Shame" to patronage. He said: "Shame, Shame" to double dipping. But what did Mr. Deans do, Mr. Speaker? He waited until he had six years of service in the House of Commons. Why is the six year period significant? Because after six years a Member of Parliament has a pension. Is it any wonder he chose to resign after six years? He said that he was fed up with the Government. He said that the Government was lousy. Then he went to the Government cap in hand. "I want", he said on his knees, "a Government position. I need something to survive". What hypocrisy!

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member said that we were trying to cut off debate on the Bill and that he wanted to speak about it. I hope you will consider that the Member has strayed from the subject matter of the Bill and that he no longer is relevant to the Bill.

Mr. Gauthier: He is speaking to the motion.

Mr. Nunziata: The Member by moving his motion has precluded me from speaking to the Bill. Indeed, I am speaking to the motion. I am trying to point out that the New Democratic Party's motion to invoke closure is hypocritical and that it is reflective of the actions of the Party to my left.

Mr. Mazankowski: Right on.

Mr. Nunziata: The New Democrats say one thing out of one side of their mouths and they say something else out of the other side. I was using the example of the Hon. Ian Deans.

Mr. Mazankowski: He is not an honourable.

Mr. Nunziata: A former Member of this House and a member of the New Democratic Party of Canada.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In listening to the Hon. Member who is speaking, will you first review the application of the rule of relevance? Second, will you advise this House whether such an infantile personal diatribe against a former Member is admissible under any circumstances?

Mr. Beatty: It is messy when a marriage breaks up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that you have ruled that my comments are relevant. I am speaking to the motion. I am pointing out the hypocrisy of the motion itself. Once again, I have chosen to use the case of Ian Deans as an example to illustrate the hypocrisy of the socialists to our left.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The previous speaker stated that you, Sir, had made a ruling. Is he in order in imputing a ruling when you have made no such ruling?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) dealt with the fact that the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) was making comments on the nomination of Mr. Deans, comments which I am allowing to a certain extent. One of the considerations is that recently we heard comments made by another Member of this House on the nomination of Mr. Camp. I would not want the whole debate to deal with the nominations of either Mr. Camp or Mr. Deans, but I am willing for a few minutes to entertain some comments about their nominations.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, members of the New Democratic Party, which includes Mr. Deans, stood up on many occasions and complained about patronage. The New Democrats purport to represent the working class, the poor and the downtrodden in society. They speak in a very self-righteous fashion about the disadvantaged in society. I ask the New Democratic Party how many of those downtrodden have a Government job that pays $93,000 a year.

Mr. Beatty: Ian Deans does.

Mr. Kaplan: Plus.

Mr. Nunziata: Plus a pension. It is one thing to accept a Government job but it is another thing to accept a Government job together with not one pension, not only his House of Commons pension—

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know why the Hon. Member is trying to hold up a Bill that will save at least some money for the Canadian taxpayers. I wish he would stop filibustering a Bill which is obviously designed, even though it is a symbolic gesture, to save at least some money for Canadian taxpayers. Is the Hon. Member just looking after his own skin?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This being not necessarily on that point, but I would like to advise the House that once the motion being debated is "That the question be now put", the debate may continue on the original question.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely hilarious that the Member should talk about saving money. If we want to save money, why does the former Member for Hamilton Mountain not forgo his pension? My colleague here says that the former Member for Hamilton Mountain was double dipping, but he is triple dipping. Not only is he getting a salary of $93,000 as Chairman of the Public Service Commission, he is also receiving a Government pension from the House of Commons, which is about $30,000 or $40,000 a year, and he is also receiving—and listen very carefully—a pension from the provincial Government in Ontario.

Mr. Gauthier: None of them are here.

Mr. Nunziata: The New Democrats have all left, Mr. Speaker. There is not one single, solitary New Democratic Member of Parliament—I cannot comment on the presence or absence of Members. They are so embarrassed they left the House and are hanging their heads in shame.

Enough said about the NDP. Let me now speak for a few moments about the hypocrisy of the Conservative Government as shown in Bill C-20. Who is the Government trying to kid? It argues that Bill C-20 is meant to show to the people of Canada that we parliamentarians are leading by example in taking a $1,000 cut in pay. What are Canadians saying? Big deal. They are asking, if the Government is sincere and honest, why not take effective measures to lead by example? If it is concerned about the salary of Members, why not propose that they be reduced to the poverty level? I challenge the Government. If it is true to its word, then let it bring in a motion to cut our salaries to the poverty level. Then we can say we are leading by example. We can say we are concerned about the 1.5 million young people in families with incomes below the poverty level. Canadians will then appreciate that the Government is leading by example. Yet, for whatever reason, the Government decides to cut our salaries by $1,000. It does not have the guts to cut salaries to the poverty level.

Mr. McDermid: What about your Leader? He took a nice cut.

Mr. Nunziata: The salary of Members of Parliament and Senators is not the issue. What is at issue is the fairness, equity and justice of the policies advocated and implemented by the Government of Canada. If it was truly concerned about the plight of the downtrodden and disadvantaged it would not have brought in two regressive Budgets which amount to a massive frontal assault on the poor. The Government deindexed family allowances and tried to deindex pensions. If it were truly concerned about the disadvantaged then it would declare war on poverty. Let it bring in measures to assist the poor rather than assisting its rich brothers and sisters on Bay Street, the richest businessmen in Canada.

Mr. Della Noce: Where is your Leader from? Bay Street?

Mr. Nunziata: If the Government was able to find the means to assist the oil industry in western Canada and find $1 billion for failed banks, or billions of dollars to help business in Canada, it can find the resources to assist the poor.

The Government, by its actions, has led Canadians to question seriously its credibility and integrity. If it were truly concerned about waste in Government, why would the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government support the relocation of a prison to the Prime Minister's riding? That decision is a classic example of crass porkbarrel politics at its worse. Some $41 million has been absolutely frittered away because the Prime Minister wanted to play sugar daddy to his constituents. How far could that money have gone to assist the poor? It would have gone a long way to help the thousands and thousands of Canadians who suffer the indignity of standing in line at food banks in every major city in Canada. It is a national tragedy that our fellow Canadians have to stand in line for food.

Mr. McDermid: When did the food banks start?

Mr. Rodriguez: They did not start yesterday.

Mr. McDermid: That is for sure.

Mr. Nunziata: Yet the Prime Minister decides to waste $41 million of taxpayers' money while his Government, through his wife, takes particular pride in opening food banks. It is the goal of the Liberal Party of Canada to close every last damn food bank in the country. The fact that these food banks have spread out over the country suggests a very serious problem in our social welfare system.

Mr. McDermid: When did they start?

Mr. Nunziata: Instead of building prisons in the Prime Minister's riding, instead of padding his office with Tory hacks and flacks and bagmen, instead of hiring Dalton Camp at over $100,000 a year, instead of wasting money on Challenger jets to follow the Prime Minister around, the Government should be directing the money toward the needy.

I have attempted to point out the hypocrisy of this legislation. Of course, it will carry. It may result in a one-paragraph story in major newspapers, but Canadians will see through it, see it as a facade. They will recognize the hypocrisy in this move. I believe very strongly that they will reflect their opinion at the ballot boxes in the next election. It is very obvious, if one reviews the public opinion polls over the last two years, that the Conservative Government has lost the trust and faith of the people of Canada. The voters gave the Government an opportunity in September of 1984 to govern. Members opposite have done one hell of a lousy job and Canadians know that now. Is it any wonder the Conservatives are tied with the NDP for last place in popular support?

In closing, may I indicate that Members on this side of the House intend to support the legislation. It is hypocritical legislation but, nonetheless, if the Government wants to play its petty little games, we will respond accordingly. However, it is regrettable that the NDP wants to cut off debate. I have considerable respect for the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I think he works hard. I ask him to reconsider the position he has taken. I know that if he looks in the mirror and rereads Hansard he will understand the hypocrisy behind the motion he has presented. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to say a few words, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McDermid: How can you say that with a straight face?

Mr. Rodriguez: It's easy when you do not have a straight face.

• (1250)

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). Can he tell us which Prime Minister in the history of Canada has proposed and taken a 15 per cent pay cut? Which Cabinet in the history of Canada took a 10 per cent pay cut? Which House in the history of Canada has reduced its salary by $1,000? Did the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) accept the 10 per cent pay cut equivalent to that which the Cabinet took? If not, why not?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can ask the Hon. Member a question or two.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Some Hon. Members: Answer, answer.

Mr. Nunziata: I do not ask for answers, Mr. Speaker. I know it is not appopriate for me to ask questions of the Member. I will wait until for that opportunity he has spoken. However, in response to his question, I would like him to reflect upon some questions which I would like to ask of him.

Which Government in Canadian history has had the biggest Cabinet ever? Which Government in Canadian history has appointed commissars, chiefs of staff, at over $80,000 a year? Which Prime Minister's Office in history has increased that office by over 50 per cent? Which Prime Minister in history has hired Dalton Camp or an equivalent at over $100,000 a year of taxpayers' money? The answer to all those questions is, the Conservative Government of Canada led by the present Prime Minister.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Member's speech. It was the most incredible misinformation that I have heard delivered in this House in a very long time. The Member was accusing the Government of hypocrisy. Let us put some facts on the table.

He spoke about poverty in the country. When the Liberals defeated the Conservative Government in 1980, 15.1 per cent of Canadians were living below the poverty line. Four years later, after the great Liberal management of the economy of the country, the poverty rate had climbed to 17.3 per cent. That is when the food banks started. They started with that Government because of the way it mishandled things. The facts are there. If the Hon. Member would deliver the facts and if he were honest with this House, we would not have to listen to the falsehoods which are spread.

Another fact is that one year after that 1984 election the poverty rate had declined to 15.9 per cent, which means that 300,000 fewer Canadians are living below the poverty line. All these facts contradict what the Hon. Member is saying. I would like to make it clear that we are not happy with that. That is not good enough in this country. We want it to get better and that is what we are working toward.

The Member's friend got up earlier today and attacked women appointees. It is interesting to note that this Government has increased the appointment of women to federal bodies by 25 per cent over that of the Liberals. The Liberals talk a lot but never act. This Government acts. I suppose the Member will oppose the recent appointment of women to the Senate by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I am sure he will have something to say about that. The facts are here.

The Member stands up and delivers his diatribe, which is completely wrong, with a straight face. I am not a lawyer but—

Mr. Nunziata: That's obvious.

Mr. McDermid: —I can imagine that in law school there is a course on keeping a straight face while telling a big whopper. I believe that there is a course on that because the Hon. Member told the greatest string of tales with a straight face. The nerve of him to accuse the Government of hypocrisy! He is a new boy in here and maybe he did not study that which has gone on in the past. He should study what has gone on in the past and then maybe he would get up in the House once and deliver a straight speech with the facts in it.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in view of the concerns of the Hon. Member, allow me to lay out the facts with a smile. I will try to smile as I lay out the facts. As a result of the two Budgets of the Government of Canada, taxes have increased by $5 billion in 1986 to 1987. A one-income couple with two children earning $30,000 a year will pay an additional $630 in taxes, while a one-income family with two children earning $50,000 a year will pay only $575 in additional taxes. That is a difference of over $50. Those are some facts.

Mr. McDermid: Tell us about tax reform.

Mr. Nunziata: If the Member wants facts with a smile, I will give him facts with a smile. We know for a fact that the Prime Minister has decided to construct a prison in his riding at a cost of $41 million, notwithstanding the fact that a prison is not necessary. We know for a fact that there are new chiefs of staff who are being paid in excess of $80,000. We know for a fact that Mr. Dalton Camp was hired and is being paid over $100,000 a year. I am trying to relate these facts with a smile, Mr. Speaker. We know for a fact that the Prime Minister uses a Hercules jet to transport video equipment in order to film his every move, including the changing of the diapers of his children. We know as well that the Gulf-Reichmann deal cost taxpayers $1 billion. We know as well that uninsured depositors were paid over $1 billion.

If the Member wants facts, I will give him facts. I will lay out all the facts rather than only selective facts. The bottom line is that the facts speak for themselves. It is a fact that the Government has decided to pay the legal fees of the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to the tune of $350,000. The Government of Canada has decided to pay the legal fees of someone who may be found to be in contravention of the conflict of interest guidelines. The Government is paying that when other Canadians have to pay their own legal fees for a divorce or to fight a speeding ticket. Those are the facts, my friend. When one looks at the facts and the record of the Conservative Government it is no wonder that the Conservative Government is so far down in public opinion. Canadians are looking at the facts when they speak about the Government in disparaging terms.

The Member wants to talk facts. The facts are there, my friend. The facts of the two regressive Conservative Budgets are on the table. I only ask that the Hon. Member have the backbone and courage to stand up and hang his head in shame.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At one o'clock p.m. the House took recess.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—GOVERNMENT'S RECOVERY PACKAGE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, at long last, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) revealed in the House the elements of the so-called recovery package for northern Ontario. I am grateful that the Government has recognized the difficulties being experienced in northern Ontario. We have a failing regional economy.

What are the Government's initiatives? The establishment of an economic development committee. We know all about committees in northern Ontario. There is the transfer of federal agencies to northern Ontario. Which ones, where, and when? The Government will dedicate program moneys to northern Ontario. Will that be new money, how much, and when will it be received? There is special tax treatment for investors. What are the details and when will we have them? So far what we have are general directions and some good intentions. What the people of northern Ontario want is immediate action leading to the restoration of lost jobs.

AGRICULTURE

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LTD.

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, last week I visited with some 300 farmer delegates from all points of the Prairies at the 80th annual meeting of the shareholders of the United Grain Growers Ltd. I ask Members of the House to recognize one of Canada's great self-help organizations, and to reflect for a moment on its origin.

May I start with the United Grain Growers' mission, and I quote:

> United Grain Growers is a farmer-owned and controlled company, with the objective of furthering the economic well-being of western Canadian farmers by providing agricultural services and influencing farm policies.

This great institution was born from need. At the turn of the century farmers were opposing grain handling and rail combines that were fixing prices, grades, and shipments.

After 80 years of working for farmers, the mission of this organization remains the same, farmers working with farmers, for farmers.

Most Canadians would recognize the names of Senator Thomas Crerar, former Member of Parliament for Manitoba and United Grain Growers' second President, Mr. Mac Runceinan, who retired recently, to be succeeded in office by the able current President, Mr. Lorne Hehn.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

RETENTION OF GENERIC DRUGS URGED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to share with Members of the House, particularly with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), a letter that I recently received from a woman in Winnipeg who wants to see generic drugs retained. She wrote:

> I work in the health care industry rehabilitating persons who have had heart attacks or other heart related illnesses.

It goes on:

> More than a few of our members spend $120 or more on one of their prescribed medications every month. Usually, these individuals have more than one prescribed drug and they look forward to the availability of these drugs in their generic forms because of the price cut and the pharmaceutical effect which is equal (to the brand name drug).
> Individuals on drugs prescribed by their physician are usually of two types where I work—seniors, or persons of the age of majority who are unable to work a 40-hour work week because of the nature of their illness.
> All have in common—a fixed income!
> Keep the generic drug trade—in fact promote it!

That is exactly what New Democratic Party Members of Parliament intend to do.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PRIVATIZATION OF PAROLE SYSTEM QUESTIONED

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, this week a shopkeeper in Montreal shot and killed a thief during an attempted robbery. Two weeks ago a pharmacy owner shot and killed another robber in Calgary.

Reactions to these vigilante incidents clearly demonstrate the lack of confidence Canadians have in the ability of our justice system to deal effectively with criminals.

In light of these incidents and the reactions to them, the decision by the Correctional Service of Canada to hand over part of our parole system to a volunteer organization seems somewhat incredible. It is no reflection on the John Howard Society, but can the public truly be expected to believe that this will mean more, not less, strict supervision for convicted criminals on parole? Is this really the message the Government wants to send out at a time when more and more Canadians are deciding to take the law into their own hands?

WELFARE

NEED FOR EXISTENCE OF FOOD BANKS CONDEMNED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is disgraceful that in these days, with Canada's wealth of human and natural resources, there are thousands of Canadians standing publicly in food-lines waiting to receive food for their families from food banks in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal and several other communities.

Some people are there because they do not have the adequate skills in order to get a job. Some people are there because under our current system there are not enough facilities for child care. It has recently come to my attention that patients who are released from mental hospitals have inappropriate support systems and are now standing in the foodlines.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to Hon. Members, there is something wrong with the way in which we run our country if we have to depend on our churches and volunteers to provide food for our people. I am sure you know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, of the situation of the food bank on the corner of Georgia and Burrard Streets in Vancouver. I urge the Government to take the recommendations of the Conference on Hunger three weeks ago and do something about this situation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN-IRAQ WAR—UN RESOLUTIONS CALLING FOR CEASEFIRE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): The unfortunate and tragic war between Iran and Iraq enters its seventh year with mounting loss of human lives and causing severe damage to the economy of the region. The Middle East is already a politically explosive area and the perpetuation of this conflict could ignite into a full-scale tragic experience for all of us.

I draw attention to the sage pronouncement by our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who urged compliance with United Nations Security Council Resolution No. 582 of February 24, 1986, and Resolution No. 588 of October 8, 1986, calling for an immediate ceasefire, withdrawal to internationally recognized boundaries, and the initiation of negotiations toward a peaceful settlement using the good offices of the UN Secretary General.

I, therefore, urge parties to the conflict, as well as all Governments, to heed the words of our Secretary of State for External Affairs and to help bring an early resolve to this tragic war.

VIA RAIL

TESTING OF BRITISH DESIGNED RAIL BUS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, insult has been added to injury in Manitoba. We learned recently that VIA Rail plans to test a $500,000 British rail bus this winter rather than pursuing the testing of a $150,000 prototype developed in Canada—in Manitoba, I might add. By allowing VIA Rail to do this, the federal Goverenment has reneged on an 1984 agreement to continue testing the Canadian rail bus for use in the North, particularly in the riding of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). This is another example of federal-provincial agreements affecting Manitoba which have been broken by the federal Government.

We also learned today that the Conservatives are considering forming a new club in which people would pay $5,000 to chat with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, after the CF-18 decision and after this decision and many others which affect Winnipeg, Conservatives will be lucky to sell memberships in that club in Winnipeg for five cents, never mind $5,000.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF MENNONITE CENTRAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, just recently the Mennonite Central Committee opened a community self-help centre in Brandon, Manitoba. This centre will provide clothing for people in need and will also sell crafts from Third World countries. It is just one of the many projects sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee, a highly respected group which does much good work both at home and abroad.

This year the Mennonite Central Committee will spend some $15 million in developing nations. Well over half of this money comes from the congregations of Mennonite Churches all across Canada. Over a thousand volunteers from the Mennonite Central Committee are currently working in 50 developing nations. They are helping people learn to read, to stay healthy, and to improve farming practices, to mention just a few activities.

• (1410)

The Mennonite Central Committee has a reputation among Third World nations which is exceeded by none. It is an excellent example of what Canadian volunteers can accomplish. Such volunteers prove that by working together in an unselfish manner Canadians can help to improve the quality of life both at home and elsewhere in the world.

VIA RAIL

BRITISH RAIL BUS CONTRACT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my voice against the weekly campaign of desecration that the Mulroney Government is visiting upon my home Province of Manitoba.

Mr. Malone: Order!

Mr. Axworthy: The fact of the matter is that once again we have an example in which the Mulroney Government obviously—

Mr. Malone: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that it is improper to use the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the way in which he is using it. Would the Hon. Member continue his statement, please.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, it is sometimes hard to admit that, in fact, he is the Prime Minister of the Province of Manitoba.

I want to make the following point. The rail bus technology and the agreement we signed back in 1984 were an idea conceived in Manitoba. A local manufacturer was given the opportunity to carry out the design. The prototype work and the testing were done with the co-operation of the people in the North. Once it reaches a stage at which it is about ready to come to fulfilment, what does the present federal Government do? It decides to move it and contract with a British firm to do it.

It seems to me that in the case of the CF-18 the Government said it wanted to keep the transfer of technology in Canada. But now the Government has seemed to reverse itself. What it really seems to be saying is that it simply wants to mess up Manitoba.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ALLEGED UTILIZATION OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I would rather not comment on the open dissension and the collective anxiety of Liberals on the eve of their convention. However after reading an article in today's La Presse I am quite concerned over the fact that the Liberals are spending taxpayers' money to finance their convention.

Will the Liberal Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), ex-Minister to boot, explain why he used public funds to make 56,000 photocopies of press clippings favourable to his boss? The Leader of the Liberal Party will have to enlighten the House today with respect to the behaviour of his third-ranking Quebec lieutenant. Can former Liberal Ministers not tell the difference between Parliament and their political Party, or are the Liberal Party coffers so bare that an ex-Minister would see fit to pick the pockets of other people?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REINSTATEMENT OF BAND STATUS—CALL FOR RESTORATION OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Government waxes eloquent about its compassion, sensitivity, and understanding of native concerns in Canada. Last year the House acted to reverse discrimination inherent in the Indian Act. All Parties agreed to the passage of Bill C-31 with the understanding and the commitment that funds would be provided to assist many of the 70,000 people who have applied for reinstatement.

The commitment has now been broken by the Government's refusal to continue funding for the co-implementation of Bill C-31. This means that nearly 100 trained native people can no longer do the leg-work, the research and, in many cases, the Translation work necessary to help correct decades of unjust discrimination.

By taking away this funding, Indian war veterans who lost their status to fight for this country will be on their own, as will children born out of wedlock, men who took work in Depression labour camps and, of course, native women who married non-natives.

The Government must act now to restore this funding to help many people regain the heritage that unjust laws took away.

QUEBEC ASSOCIATION FOR LEISURE ACTIVITIES FOR THE HANDICAPPED

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the Association québécoise de loisirs pour personnes handicapées or the Quebec recreation association for the handicapped for sponsoring last weekend's annual provincial prize award reception in Quebec City. I commend the association for showing such innovative and far-reaching leadership which makes it one of the major champions of Quebec's handicapped people. This annual event held by the association is aimed at highlighting the endeavours of municipalities and community groups to have the handicapped participate actively in the social activities of their locality. The Secretary of State was present and was duly impressed by the efficiency and professional approach of the reception organizers. The Union des municipalités du Québec, the Union des municipalités régionales de comtés, and all community associations which sent delegates deserve praise for their work and participation. Their strong support to promote the cause of the handicapped is the key factor of the unprecedented success of this important event.

In conclusion, allow me to thank the representatives of my region for taking part in this event.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

SALE OF LAND HOLDINGS OPPOSED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the National Capital Commission announced today that it intends to sell publicly owned land in Ottawa to comply with a Treasury Board request to cut its budget by $25 million. The citizens of Ottawa should express their views about this request.

It does not make much sense to sell publicly owned open space in a city which treasures every square inch of green. If anything, the NCC should be encouraged to acquire land so as to ensure for future generations the green urban spaces which have to date given Ottawa the reputation of being one of the most beautiful capitals in the world.

How can Treasury Board and the National Capital Commission reconcile the demand for a 27 per cent cut in the NCC budget with the mandate given to it as stated in the 1986-87 Estimates, which was to plan and develop from a national perspective the physical and spatial character of the Capital of Canada which will contribute to its aesthetics, symbolism, function, and effectiveness?

CONFIDENTIAL RECORDS REMOVED BY KITCHENER OFFICE EMPLOYEE

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I rise in reference to the recent incident of a federal Government employee removing confidential unemployment insurance records from the Canada Employment Centre in my riding of Kitchener, Ontario.

According to the employee, the motivation for this action was to embarrass the Government by proving how easily Government security could be breached. However, I would submit that the only thing demonstrated by this illegal publicity stunt is that this individual is not worthy of the public trust. Furthermore, he has betrayed the confidence of his colleagues in Kitchener and throughout Canada who serve the Canadian public with integrity each and every day.

This individual must be suspended without pay pending a full RCMP investigation and, if found guilty of theft, must be fired from his position and the appropriate court action must be taken. Canadians expect public servants to serve them effectively and efficiently. The vast majority of them do. Any breach of this privilege and responsibility cannot be tolerated.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PRICE OF DRUGS—STATEMENT MADE BY DR. EASTMAN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday the Minister accused the CBC of fabrication and implied that it was splicing the words of Dr. Eastman. Dr. Eastman was reinterviewed and said again yesterday that he believes the prices of drugs introduced in the future will be higher than they were under the old law.

Will the Minister withdraw the statement he made yesterday? Will he apologize to Dr. Eastman and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and will he apologize to Canadians?

Mr. Broadbent: And then resign.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of a letter to the Editor of The Globe and Mail from Dr. Eastman in my hand and this letter says in part:

> Mr. Andre says that the changes will not cause the prices of the new branded drugs to rise above the levels at which they are introduced in the market. I agree.

The fact is that there is no disagreement between Dr. Eastman and me. If the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition had listened to last night's As It Happens, another CBC program, he would have heard Dr. Eastman and me discussing our points of agreement and the points about which there may be a difference in our points of view. However, it is not on price.

Let us get this legislation into committee and have Dr. Eastman appear. I will appear before the committee as will anyone else the Opposition wants. We will have a chance to examine this legislation.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I cannot follow the Minister in all his public appearances. I have enough trouble listening to him right here in the House of Commons.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Eastman has been quite clear in his position that only competition from generic drugs has been keeping prices down and that the projected law before the House will destroy that competition. I suggest to the Minister in the strongest terms possible that both yesterday and today, through his performance in the House, the Minister has been misleading Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I wonder if he has not come to the conclusion that he ought to resign his portfolio.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the only person misleading Canadians is the person who is saying that drug prices will rise as a result of this legislation. That is misleading and is designed to frighten those—

Mr. Riis: They will.

Mr. Andre: They will not.

Mr. Riis: They will so.

Mr. Andre: I challenge—

Mr. Isabelle: Put your seat on the line.

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could complete his answer.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the letter I am holding will cover any questions of differences of opinion. In terms of the details of what will be the effects of the legislation, the proper forum for doing that is in fact committee. That is how our parliamentary system is designed. If the Opposition will co-operate in that—

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister refers to a difference of opinion, but Dr. Eastman is very clear and very specific when he states that the price of drugs will increase. The Minister says no. We take the position that in the circumstances, the Minister has misdirected the debate on this issue and he should now do the honourable thing: he should hand in his resignation to the Prime Minister. Is he going to do that?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the letter contradicts what the Leader of the Opposition says. If a drug is introduced at the price of a dollar under the old law, it will be introduced at the price of a dollar under the new law. The purpose of the Drug Prices Review Board under Dr. Eastman is to ensure that that happens. Prices will not rise. What will rise are research and development activities. What will rise are jobs in this important sector. Why is the Liberal Party opposed to research and development and jobs for Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY WHETHER DRUG PRICES WILL INCREASE

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister is contradicting his own words. Monday, when he answered my question about the $100 million granted to the provinces, the Minister said: "I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the $100 million way more than covers any additional costs". "Any additional cost" . . . ! Mr. Speaker, that is an admission that prices will increase. Yesterday, in answer to the same question put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Sudbury, the Minister said: "I hope he was careful to listen to what I have been saying all along, that the price of drugs will not go up by a penny." Could we have the truth, once and for all? Are prices going to go up, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the truth lies in recognizing the difference between price and cost as we move from the old regime to the new regime. Because of the backlog of some 41 generic copies which have generated as a result of the intended change, there might be some increased cost to the provinces, not because of any increase in price of drugs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I repeat, not because of any increase in price of drugs. In June, 1983, the Liberal Party stated that to generate further growth in this industry the Government of Canada had decided to change the Patent Act to rebalance the 1969 policy. We are going to do that. Why has the Liberal Party changed its mind?

[Translation]

SITUATION OF CONSUMERS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, at his press conference this morning, Mr. Calenti of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada said that if the Bill is passed, they will have no option but to increase the price of generic drugs. Since the Minister has no control over the industry's decisions, how and by whom will Canadian consumers be protected?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was very disturbed to see that threat.

Nothing will change in terms of the market for generic drugs currently on the market and brand name drugs. Since there will be no change, any threat of increase by Mr. Calenti borders on the irresponsible. Perhaps in committee we should examine allowing the Drug Prices Review Board to examine the behaviour of generics. It is a very profitable industry which has become profitable by copying the innovations of fundamental researchers. If they are saying that their profits are not high enough and they are going to gouge more, perhaps we should examine some controls on that industry.

PRICE OF DRUGS—STATEMENTS MADE BY DR. EASTMAN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I think we are in high risk of getting to the bottom of the matter as a result of what the Minister, perhaps inadvertently, said today about the letter from Dr. Eastman to The Globe and Mail. According to the Minister, in the letter which we have not seen yet, Dr. Eastman is going to be saying that the prices of brand name drugs will not be above the levels at which they were introduced in the market. He also said last night that they will be higher in the market-place in general because of the absence of generic competition. Is it not a fact that, because he is saying that they will be introduced at higher levels and the Minister is saying today that they will not be changed, they will not go down to what they would go down in general? This is because generic competition will not be provided. That is the essence of the Bill. Does the Minister deny that?

• (1425)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time a spokesman for the New Democratic Party has not claimed that prices will increase. He is saying that when generic competition comes it causes a price decrease. I agree, and so does Dr. Eastman. We both agree. What effect will the 10 years' exclusivity that we are providing have, and what degree will this onset of generic competition have? On average it has taken 11.5 years for a generic competitor to come on the market. We are proposing 10 years of exclusivity. On average there may not be any difference. There might be, but it is these kinds of details that we should be discussing in committee.

AVERAGE PRICE OF NEW DRUGS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister to consider the exact words of Dr. Eastman last night:

—the average level of new drugs will be higher than it would be were the legislation unchanged.

He is saying that the average price of new drugs in the market-place will be higher as a result of this Bill. Those are Dr. Eastman's words, not mine. Does the Minister deny that?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not deny that those are Dr. Eastman's words. I am saying that it is a legitimate item for a sensible debate between responsible individuals to discuss what effect on generic competition the changes will have, and to balance whatever costs might be arrived at in that regard against the benefits of the thousands of jobs in research and development that will occur in Canada. That is the kind of intelligent debate we should be having instead of these silly debates in which people are claiming that drug prices will rise when they will not.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister may think this is a silly debate, but I can tell him that thousands of seniors across the country think this is a serious debate indeed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER WITHDRAW AMENDING LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Will the Minister now clarify once and for all whether he agrees with the statement, not with whether it is a quote from Dr. Eastman? Dr. Eastman is saying that as a result of this Bill general prices of drugs, including newly introduced drugs, will be higher. Does the Minister agree with that and, if he does agree with it, will he withdraw this Bill?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, again, in his effort to over-extend, the Member exaggerates and frightens old people. Dr. Eastman did not say newly introduced drugs. He says in his letter, and I quote again:

Mr. Andre says that the changes will not cause the prices of the new branded drugs to rise above the levels at which they are introduced in the market. I agree.

That is Dr. Eastman. He agrees.

Mr. Broadbent: After the market. You can't even read the statement.

DRUG PRICES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister compared media commentary on this question to "an episode from Dallas". By continually repeating that the price of drugs will not go up, this Minister belongs on an episode of "Another World".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: How can the Minister expect Canadians to believe that the price of new drugs produced in Canada will be as cheap as generic drugs if allowed to be produced? Does he expect Canadians to believe that?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all of the generic drugs on the market will remain on the market, including 41 that are now in the pipeline which will come on the market. Yes, that will have an effect on reducing prices. In fact, after 10 years generic drugs will come on the market in terms of any not-yet-discovered drugs. That will have the effect of reducing prices.

What we are trying to do is to give effect to what the Liberal Government of 1983 decided, namely, to produce a more balanced policy so that we will have jobs in this important area of research and development in Canada rather than seeing it all exported to other countries.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ORDER WITHDRAWAL OF LEGISLATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the sick, the elderly, mothers and fathers, no one in this country believes the Government when it says prices will not go up. Therefore, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell this House why the Prime Minister does not order the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to withdraw the Bill and tell the Americans to go take a pill?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in order that we might enlighten Hon. Members across the way the best thing would be to allow the Bill to proceed to second reading debate. Then they might be in a position to understand what the Bill contains. Most of those questions would then be answered.

COST TO PROVINCIAL TREASURIES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs advised the House "that there is nothing in this legislation that will cause the rise in the price of a drug by one cent: not old drugs, not new drugs, not pipeline drugs, not by one cent." Would he now agree with what the previous Minister said on June 27 of this year, that "It is our estimate that the total cost to provincial treasuries resulting from the delay in the introduction of generic drugs will not exceed $100 million by 1990. In order to ensure that those most in need bear no cost, the federal Government will provide transitional financial assistance to the provinces."

Mr. Blaikie: Why would they do that if they are not going up?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, for I do not know how many times, there is a difference between price and cost. The price of drugs will not go up, but because of this group of 41 generics which are caught by the changes between the old and the new Acts there might be some delay, between two months and five years depending on the drug, which might have the effect of, at the maximum, increasing the cost to provincial pharmacare plans, because of the delay in introduction, by perhaps $60 million over the next four years. That is a far cry from the Hon. Member's statement that drug prices will go up.

STATEMENTS MADE ON DRUG PRICES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is more and more beginning to sound like the Minister of bafflegab. Mr. Eastman says prices will go up.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He does not.

Mr. Young: The accounting firm of Coopers & Lybrand says drug prices will go up. The previous Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said prices will go up.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): False.

Mr. Young: Everyone says prices will go up except this Minister. How can Canadians possibly believe that drug prices will not go up after all those respected Canadians say they will? Will the Minister not agree to table in the House the cost impact studies the Government has so all Canadians can look at them?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the NDP will not allow this to go to committee so we can examine all aspects of it. Are they afraid of what the Canadian public might understand?

Mr. Broadbent: Give us the studies.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They are afraid of debate.

Mr. Andre: Here we have a typical example of what is wrong. Having written out his questions in advance of Question Period—

Mr. Young: I was quoting from Hansard.

Mr. Andre: —when I quoted what Dr. Eastman said, that did not prevent the Hon. Member from standing up and claiming just the opposite. One wonders how loudly, shrilly, and often one has to quote things and state things before the Hon. Member will accept them. What is wrong with the Hon. Member?

EFFECT OF GENERIC DRUGS ON PRICES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with some interest to this exchange and confusion. A moment ago I heard the Minister say that after 10 years the presence of generic drugs would drive the price of drugs down, that is, drugs not yet discovered. Surely a conclusion to be drawn from that is that with the presence of generic drugs the prices would be lower. How can the Minister say that the price of drugs will not be higher if generic drugs will drive the price lower?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Hon. Member is absolutely correct, I have not said that. What I have objected to are statements designed to frighten and which say prices will rise. Generic competition will indeed bring prices down. However, I would say it is a debatable point as to whether our amendments are going to delay by any significant amount the onset of generic competition, given our experience. Most importantly, what our legislation will do is generate thousands of jobs in research and development in Canada. I thought the Liberals and the NDP wanted to see more research and development in Canada.

INQUIRY IF DRUG WILL COST MORE WHEN PLACED ON MARKET

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I'm starting to understand the Minister's position or the point he is trying to make, which is not quite logical since we can hardly expect the price of a drug that is not yet on the market to increase. I agree, because the price hasn't been set yet. So if we are agreed on that point, does the Minister also agree that once the drug is on the market, prices will be higher because there will be no competition?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when a new brand name drug is introduced there is no competition under existing law or under the new law. The question is when do the generic drugs come on the market. On average, historically, generics have taken eleven and a half years to come on the market. We are proposing a 10-year period of exclusivity. So the argument about when the generics come on is the kind of debate we should be having in committee. I hope the Hon. Member will co-operate in getting this Bill to committee so we can discuss it.

TRADE

EXPORT OF HELICOPTER PARTS TO IRAN

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My understanding is that his Department was reluctant to permit the sale of helicopter parts to Iran in the fall of 1985. President Reagan then phoned the Prime Minister and enlisted his support for that sale because of the covert action he was then taking to send arms to Iran. The Prime Minister, through the Minister, decided that the permits would be granted. Was Canada the third country referred to by President Reagan last night? Are those facts correct?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to say that the allegations just repeated on the floor of the House by the Hon. Member are 100 per cent false.

Mr. Crosbie: As usual. The little girl who cried wolf.

SHIPMENT ROUTE INQUIRY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we are also reliably informed—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: —that the helicopter parts were included in a cargo shipment from Italy where they were being stored by Pratt & Whitney, via Israel to Bandar Abbas in Iran. Will the Minister tell us if that is the case?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the particular route. What I do know is the process by which the exports from Canada were authorized. That was a Canadian process by a sovereign Government acting absolutely independently.

I should say, by the way, that there was in 1983, by the Liberal Government, the authorization of the export of military engines to Iran. That came back to me for a decision in 1985. I reversed the Liberal decision and stopped the export of those military engines to Iran.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SEA SHEPHERD CONSERVATION SOCIETY—ACTIVITIES IN ICELAND AND NORTH PACIFIC

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the Sea Shepherd Conservation Society and its leader's recent comments in the national press. Paul Watson, a Canadian from Vancouver, admitted that his organization destroyed two Icelandic whaling vessels and a processing plant, causing $2.8 million in damages. He has now publicly announced that his group intends to destroy Asian fishing nets in the North Pacific. What is the Canadian Government's reaction to one of its citizens playing havoc on the seas and publicly boasting of breaking the laws of other countries?

Mr. Benjamin: In this case it is a good idea.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a Member of the NDP said "In this case it is a good idea". I reject absolutely that kind of encouragement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): This Government condemns any illegal action. The RCMP is conducting investigations now to see if any Canadian laws have been broken. If they were, the action which would ensue from that investigation will ensue.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my question—

Mr. Axworthy: I beg your pardon. Excuse me.

Mr. Rodriguez: Listen, brother, you're not from Nickel Belt.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't fight.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill—Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Axworthy: I am glad you got that right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member should get his question out as fast as he can.

Mr. Broadbent: No comment.

TRADE

EXPORT OF HELICOPTER PARTS TO IRAN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He said that the decision relating to the Pratt & Whitney export of engine components to Iran was taken solely within Canada. Could he explain to the House why the spokesperson for Pratt & Whitney said that not only did they gain permission from the Canadian Government, they sought authorization from the United States Government at the same time?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there were American parts involved as there were Canadian parts involved. They required American authorization for the export of American parts. They required Canadian authorization for the export of Canadian parts. Surely the Hon. Member would not suggest that the United States should give authorization for Canadian export policy. That is not the view of the Government.

PRATT & WHITNEY—COMMUNICATION WITH UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I never said it was. The point is that this is the Government which was making the decision. Pratt & Whitney, a subsidiary of United Technologies, decided to export an engine made totally within Canada to the Iranian Government, conceivably for military purposes. Was the Minister or his Department aware that Pratt & Whitney was, at the same time, in communication with the United States Government about the export to Iran of its engines made in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, they may well have been. However, the Member is trying to suggest that there was some kind of collusion between the Government of Canada, the Government of the United States, and the Government of some other country. That is absolutely false and the Hon. Member should recognize it as false.

As was admitted when I brought forward amendments to the export control law in September, we have a situation which was caused by bad law endured for so long under the old Liberal Government. We have introduced changes to that law. We have already stopped the export of some military engines which the Liberal Government was prepared to send to Iran. I would not send them to Iran.

We have indicated that there is a very real problem with dual use. We have said that we are trying to determine how we can resolve that problem in a way which protects all Canadian interests. I hope that now that there is a Government in Canada which takes seriously this problem of Canadian exports and export permits, we might have the co-operation of the House of Commons.

Mr. Axworthy: Get serious.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—INVESTMENT BY FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL MINES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for External Affairs. Two days ago in this House I raised the issue of Falconbridge Nickel Mines reinvesting $31.6 million in Western Platinum, a mine in South Africa. The president of Falconbridge Nickel Mines completely ignored the Minister's letter with regard to voluntary guidelines for investment in South Africa. Therefore, will the Minister tell this House whether he intends to instruct Falconbridge to divest itself immediately of its holdings in Western Platinum in South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that action of Falconbridge which I think defied Canadian Government policy. I have expressed my regret at that action. When the Deputy Prime Minister met with the president of Falconbridge yesterday he re-expressed that and the president of Falconbridge indicated that Falconbridge intends to divest of its holdings in South Africa as quickly as it can.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I applaud the Minister for the statement he just made.

REQUEST THAT MANDATORY EXPORT GUIDELINES BE INTRODUCED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is fairly obvious that voluntarism has not been working. What are really needed are mandatory guidelines. Is the Minister prepared to introduce mandatory guidelines for the "Falconbridges" of the country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the contrary I think there is abundant evidence that voluntarism has been working. The Falconbridge example is a bad one and we trust that it will be changed.

Three weeks ago I asked Archbishop Ted Scott, who served for Canada on the Eminent Persons Group in the Commonwealth, to undertake direct consultations with companies in Canada and the United States which had practised disinvestment recently or were intending disinvestment. Archbishop Scott reports to me that there is a very positive attitude on the part of the Canadian business community, that there may well be actions in the very near future with respect to disinvestment, and that he has some recommendations to put before me which may allow us to make even more effective the voluntary approach to this problem which has been effective so far in Canada.

I would hope that this House of Commons, believing as it does in trying to encourage people to lead rather than forcing them by laws, would applaud that attitude which has been shown by the Canadian business community.

REVENUE CANADA

INFORMATION DISCLOSED TO NEWSPAPER REPORTER

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Around 3.30 in the afternoon of last Tuesday a reporter from the Windsor Star called the Revenue Canada general inquiries number in Ottawa. Using his editor's name, social insurance number and date of birth, he said that he had lost his copy of his 1985 tax return and needed some information from it.

The journalist received by telephone the amount of his editor's charitable donations, he learned that he did not claim any extra medical expenses, and that his wife's income was not in his return because she had filed a separate tax return. What does the Minister of National Revenue have to say to the House about that?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my response to my colleague is the same as it was when he raised the question of his own tax return in that regard. I have caused an investigation to be made. There is more than one district office involved. An audit trail has been left. We have identified the employee. There was some additional information supplied. When I have a complete picture, I will report to the House.

NUCLEAR ATTACK CONTINGENCY ADVICE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works who has now had ample time to peruse the publication put out by his Department a few weeks ago advocating that prudent Canadians would do such things as dig a shallow trench for themselves and their family members and cover it over with boards in the event of a nuclear attack. Does the Minister really believe that this is appropriate advice for the Government of Canada to be giving to prudent Canadians?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Indeed I do, Mr. Speaker. For the past 25 years Governments have been printing publications of this kind at the request of Canadians. Indeed, some 4,800 requests have been received by the Government since August. A good number of other countries have asked for a copy of this publication because it has that kind of merit.

COST OF PUBLICATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it cost $140,000 of taxpayers' money to publish 140,000 issues of this publication. Of those, 100,000 are still sitting in a warehouse and 40,000 have been distributed, 8,000 to Americans. Does the Minister believe that it is appropriate to use $140,000 of taxpayers' money to produce this bizarre, macabre publication?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the cost is $145,697.11. The Government considers that to be a very appropriate expenditure because Canadians have asked for some guidance and direction on what they might do in their homes in case of a nuclear attack.

YOUTH

GOVERNMENT'S PROMISE TO ANNOUNCE NEW PROGRAMS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Youth. Last March 21, the Prime Minister promised new programs for young Canadians by saying that the Government would be announcing new programs, including programs to deal with the problems facing Canadian youth, at the proper time or near the end of the fiscal year, and in the appropriate circumstances.

Where are these new programs, Mr. Speaker? Is this another one of the forgotten or broken promises of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer officially my best wishes to the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice on his election to the House. I can offer him all my co-operation and the benefit of my long years of political experience and tell him that I am certain that he must be happy to see that the unemployment rate for young Canadians has been going down consistently since this Government has been in power. In contrast with what the previous Government had done, we have implemented a Canadian Jobs Strategy which takes the training needs of young Canadians into account.

Since my appointment to this portfolio, we have reviewed all the programs and looked at the general situation facing young Canadians. I hope to be able to make certain proposals to this House and the Government relatively soon.

PROGRAMS FOR THE YOUNG—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I probably do not have as much experience as the Hon. Member, but my own analysis of the facts did not produce the same figures nor, unfortunately, the same conclusions as his own. The reason for my question is that, on November 18, a drastic cut-back of $76 million was announced at the Department of Employment and Immigration and the additional funds required by the Government will bring absolutely nothing new for young people. What does the Minister intend to do to reverse this trend and ensure that young people will have programs to meet their needs and expectations, as promised by the Government?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice that his memory is faulty. First, the unemployment rate for young Canadians is about 14.9 per cent. He is saying no, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps he does not like to hear it. Last year, we spent over $750 million, which benefited 256,000 young Canadians. As for the cut back to the Innovation Program, this was a 3.7 per cent cut back applicable to all departmental programs. This program was slow to give results because of its originality, Mr. Speaker. Apparently, the funds would not have been used one way or another and this is why we chose to do what we did.

On the other hand, I can inform you that my predecessor had been able to obtain or to guarantee $16 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Skeena.

UNITED STATES DUTY ON SOFTWOOD LUMBER—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the countervail duty. If a suspension agreement on the softwood countervail is not reached between Canada and the United States in the next seven days, then those hundreds of millions of dollars paid in duty at the border will go to the United States treasury, not the Canadian treasury. Therefore, will the Minister advise the House of Canada's position on a suspension agreement? We know the provinces have different positions. Since we are down to the last seven days, what is Canada's position on a suspension agreement?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will reply on behalf of the Minister who is at the First Ministers' Conference in Vancouver today. The Hon. Member may not have been in the House yesterday when it was explained that these discussions are ongoing with the provinces. The provinces own the resources and are the ones who have been charged under the countervailing Acts of the United States. They have to come to an agreement on fighting what we consider to be an unfair countervailing duty. I believe there will be discussions tomorrow at noon on trade matters affecting Canada and the United States. I am sure that the Hon. Member will hear an announcement after that meeting.

CANADIAN OFFER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister for International Trade made a once-only offer to the United States in seeking an out-of-court settlement, and it failed. Will there be another offer? Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why, during these crucial seven days, the Minister for International Trade will be in Japan rather than here in Canada helping the Canadian forest industry?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, may I correct the perception the Hon. Member is trying to leave? It was at the request of the provinces, the request of the unions, and the request of the industry that an offer was made to try to suspend the action. The Hon. Member can stand up and say it was the federal Government's decision, but it was not. It was a decision of the provinces, in co-operation with the industry and with the labour unions to try that course. Decisions will be made by Friday on the approach that will be taken in co-operation with our provincial partners. The case will be well handled by the officials in our Department, once that decision is made by the leaders of this country.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF FISHING TRAWLERS—REQUEST FOR CANADA-FIRST POLICY

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. He will be aware of the Canada-first purchasing policy in the development of the East Coast offshore oil and gas industry. Why has the Government not moved to implement a similar policy for the construction of fishing trawlers over 100 feet, which would greatly assist the ailing shipbuilding industry in Atlantic Canada and make good on a commitment to impose tariffs that the Government made two years ago?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, a significant part of the policy was the request by the shipbuilding association and the repair association to impose a tariff on large vessels. This was considered very carefully in preparation for the 1985 Budget. At that time it was found that the cost differential that would be imposed as a result of such a tariff would be very burdensome, and it was opposed by the fishermen. We should know if anything has changed since 1985 and I will make sure that our officials look at this to see if there are any significant economic changes.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PROPOSED SALE OF TELEGLOBE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The Government called for bids and promised early decisions on previous occasions, for the privatization of Teleglobe. Now there is a new game plan because the Government has announced a new round. It has clearly undermined the sanctity of the bidding process. Businesses are losing confidence.

Since Teleglobe profits have poured non-stop into the federal treasury, including $108 million last year and a further $80 million expected this year, where is the economic sense and what is the economic benefit to Canadians in selling this money-making machine?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we believe that the sale of Teleglobe will be very beneficial for the country. First, as a result of the sale Canadians will be paying less for overseas calls. Second, Teleglobe will be in a much better position to enter into new competitive environments in the whole telecommunications business. Third, that money that is now being put into the federal treasury will be freed up for other priorities of the Government in social programs, research and development, assistance to farmers, and so on.

INQUIRY WHY CANADIANS MUST WAIT TO BENEFIT FROM REDUCED RATES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister. Is the Minister aware that thousands of Canadians who phone their families abroad each week could save a lot of money if long distance rates were reduced immediately? If Teleglobe is that profitable, why must Canadians wait two years to benefit from reduced rates? This has nothing to do with privatization. Do you think the Canadian public can be fooled in this way?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the selling of this compagny will mean that Canadians will pay less for their calls abroad.

[English]

Beginning in 1988, the reduction in cost will be some 13 per cent. After that, the CRTC will be able to regulate further reductions. We see those reductions continuing.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

COMPETITION POSED BY GENERIC DRUGS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He has kindly provided us with a copy of the letter from Dr. Eastman to The Globe and Mail. Why did he neglect to call to the attention of the House the following sentence in that letter:

> My expectation is that the proposed legislation will delay generic competition for some of the new drugs and in consequence delay the reduction in their prices which such competition causes.

Why did he neglect to bring that to our attention?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not neglect to do that. In the course of my answers to several questions today, I pointed out that that is in fact where differences of opinion may lie. That is the kind of question we should be discussing in committee. Dr. Eastman pointed out in his letter:

> As I understand it, the Minister believes that generic competition may not be delayed and hence that new drug prices may not be affected by the proposed legislation.

That is the kind of discussion we should be having in committee. Why will the New Democratic Party not help us take it to committee?

COST OF DRUGS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in light of all the evidence, why is the Minister the only one in the world who believes that the cost of drugs in Canada will not be higher than they otherwise would be as a result of this legislation which he is insisting on imposing on Canadians?

• (1500)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think almost everyone noticed the change in tone from the questions the Hon. Member's neighbour asked earlier in terms of prices. However, let me indicate, as I indicated earlier, that on average the generic competition has taken 11.5 years to come on. This Bill provides for generic competition after seven years if it comes through manufacturing. In fact we could and should have that discussion. We should look at costs and benefits, jobs, and the fact we are going to have people doing research, looking for cures for the sick and elderly, about whom the Hon. Member's Party claims it is concerned.

PATENT PROTECTION FOR MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs just repeated for a third time today that it takes on the average 11.5 years for a generic drug to come on the market. Can the Minister explain why he is now offering the brand name manufacturers a 10-year protection?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the explanation is very simple. For an individual company planning a research program, trying to develop a new drug, which takes about $100 million, averages are not that helpful. The company could be driven out of business in three or four years or five or six years. It needs the security of the 10 years to do its planning, to do that research and to employ perhaps some of the Hon. Member's constitutents.

Mr. Broadbent: Their profits are already higher than the Canadian average.

REASON FOR PROTECTION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Eastman thought that four years was enough. However, if it takes these companies three or four years to develop the product, as the Minister says, why would they need the protection, since the Minister says that it takes on the average 11.5 years for a generic product to come on the market? That is hard to reconcile.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of debate we should be having in committee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Right here.

Mr. Riis: This isn't the Petroleum Club, Harvie.

Mr. Andre: Let me repeat again, averages are very important to provinces which deal with over-all costs. Averages are not very helpful to an individual company which might be hit with a generic competition. I believe if the Hon. Member thinks about it for a while he will see that is a pretty reasonable argument.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader for a statement of Government business for the coming week.

And also, if I may do so, I would ask that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) table in the House the letter from which he has quoted so fulsomely but not necessarily completely.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we will be proceeding with Bill C-22, Bill C-25, Bill C-18 and Bill C-19. Next Friday the House will not sit because of a very special event taking place in connection with the Liberal Party. With respect to the tabling of the letter by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I am sure that he—

Mr. Andre: I just did.

Mr. Mazankowski: He has already done so voluntarily.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Clerk has the letter in question and I would be pleased to table it formally.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED MISREPRESENTATION OF FACTS

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw to the attention of Hon. Members an application on a question of privilege and recognize the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer).

Patent Act

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which arises out of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) in her supplementary question to the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). Her comments amount to a misrepresentation of the meeting held between myself and some members of the Public Service Union in Kitchener.

The issue raised with me by the Public Service Union was initially the issue of the confidentiality of the employment records and files in the Kitchener Employment Centre. To that point, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is correct. However, as the September meeting to which she referred continued with union representatives, they admitted that the real issue was not confidentiality but was, first, contracting out of cleaning services and, second, job security. This is where I believe the Hon. Member for Hamilton East was not fully informed.

Unfortunately, because the Hon. Member was not fully informed, she ended up misrepresenting what took place at that meeting. I, therefore, respectfully request that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East be ordered to withdraw her allegations and correct her misrepresentation of the very good and productive meeting I had with the Public Service Union representatives in Kitchener.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) at least has the decency to admit that the meeting did deal with the issue of confidentiality of records. Of course, it dealt with the issue of contracting out at the same time because there is a lot of concern by a lot of Public Service unions in Canada that it is impossible to guarantee confidentiality when they have a contracting out process which does nothing to guarantee the kind of commitment to the Public Service by private companies which must come perforce from public servants. Therefore, I see no conflict between a discussion of contracting out and confidentiality. In fact, the two go hand in hand.

The representations which were made to the Hon. Member were that the concerns about confidentiality were raised because of contracting out. The Hon. Member said he was going to take those concerns to Ottawa. The concerns were expressed more than a year ago. The confidentiality was breached at the Kitchener office this week. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he and his Government should get their act together on the issue of confidentiality.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has heard the question of privilege and has heard the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) in reply. I think I would have the approval of all Hon. Members in noting that this is not a question of privilege. It is certainly a question of a different recollection of facts. Both Hon. Members have had a chance to put the record as they would have it and that closes the matter.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PATENT ACT

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate—

Mr. Murphy: Point of order.

Mr. Robinson: Point of order.

Mr. Andre: —today in the second reading debate—

Mr. Murphy: Point of order.

Mr. Andre: —on Bill C-22.

Mr. Murphy: Point of order.

Mr. Andre: This is an essential and important piece of legislation for Canada.

Mr. Murphy: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) on a point of order.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, as soon as you recognized the Minister, I rose at that very same point with the intention of moving that the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) be now heard.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Sure you did. Forget it.

Mr. Murphy: I did so. I do move, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Burnaby be now heard.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members will know that under the procedure which is in effect at the present time it was appropriate to recognize the Minister and it was not appropriate to recognize any other particular Hon. Member. The Hon. Member who rises to move that some other Hon. Member be heard must realize that there are times when the Chair would have to entertain that particular motion. However, this is not one of them.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the debate surrounding Canada's Patent Act has been long, complex and controversial. When the Liberal Government made changes to the Patent Act in 1969, it was a regressive step for Canada. These changes not only resulted in misuse of the Patent Act in an attempt to control prices but also tampered with the fundamental purpose and objective of providing protection for new inventions and discoveries.

In essence, the amendments I propose in Bill C-22 will create a climate favourable to new investment in research and development by giving patent holding pharmaceutical firms in Canada a guaranteed period of protection. These changes will also ensure consumer protection by creating a drug prices review board to monitor drug prices. The amendments will also allow the Government to review and alter the policy after a period of four years, and again in Parliament in the tenth year, to ensure the policy works to the benefit of all Canadians.

• (1510)

The general amendments to the Act not relating directly to pharmaceuticals seek to bring Canada's patent system into line with international practices, to speed the transfer of technological information and to simplify patenting procedures both for the applicant and for the Patent Office.

[Translation]

This package of amendments has been carefully designed to reward private initiative and to adjust investments to support Government efforts aimed at promoting sustained economic growth, job creation and the protection of Canadian consumers.

During the last few months, I have taken every opportunity to meet as many people as possible and to learn their views about this important subject. I have thus met with groups representing consumers and seniors citizens. I have also had lengthy discussions with generic drug companies, manufacturers, researchers, and members of the academic and scientific communities.

[English]

Because of the complexities of the issue many people have been asking questions. These questions touch on all aspects of the Bill. One of the questions is related to intellectual property and the protection of intellectual property rights in Canada. I would like to speak for a moment about the question of intellectual property and patents.

The principle that the creator, the inventor, has created something of value and has a right to develop, to own that thing and to have some benefit from it, is a centuries-old tradition. If we were to say, for example, that in order to benefit the consumer we will not recognize copyrights any more and we will allow anyone to publish any author's work in any way they choose, provided they pay the author a 4 per cent royalty, there would be justifiable outrage at the theft of that author's creation. That is what it would be viewed as. If someone invented a widget, a gadget, something of value and we said that it is perfectly all right for someone to copy that invention and to produce it provided they pay a 4 per cent royalty to the creator, we would be outraged. Yet that is exactly what we did in 1969 with regard to the patents on drugs. We violated a literally centuries-old principle which says that the creator, the inventor, has a right for some period of protection to what he has worked on, invented and developed. It is shocking that Canada should have done that in 1969.

I have been misspeaking myself somewhat in saying that Canada was the first country in the western world to do that. I apologize to Members of the House. We were the second country to do that. According to an article in Canada Business of September, 1986, the first country to treat drugs differently from other inventions was Italy, when Benito Mussolini abolished drug patents before the Second World War. However, Italy was forced to restore full patent protection in the 1970s after joining the European Economic Community.

It is an absolutely unchallengeable principle that if we are to have creation, invention and development, if we are to have that type of progress, then we have to provide the inventor, the developer, the creator, with the right to own exclusively that which he has created, at least for some period of time. When that policy was abolished in 1969, we did this country an enormous disservice.

I have been around the country talking to professors of pharmacology, biochemistry, microbiology and the like. They question the wisdom of a group of elected representatives who, in essence, would say: "But you are different. We will protect Pierre Burton's novels. We will protect the creations and patents of General Motors but you happen to be working in this area—" which, incidentally, is of very important significance to the health of Canadians—"you are on your own. We will not protect you. What you are doing you will be doing for altruistic reasons because there are no protections in our law". That is very short-sighted. It is an offence and one cannot justify that on the basis of "Ah, but the consumer is benefiting". If one uses that argument, then we should remove the laws against selling stolen goods because, surely, the vendor of stolen goods is benefiting the consumer. That can never be justification for the conscription of somebody's property.

Just 100 years ago this year Canada was one of the signators to the Paris Convention wherein, along with the rest of the industrialized world, we said we would recognize the inventions of each other. That was 100 years ago that we did that, and in 1969, in essence, we abandoned that fundamental principle.

The question of intellectual property and respect for it is in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. It is entirely possible that we might have been compelled by some future GATT agreement to make these changes in order to remain a member of GATT. Does it not make a lot more sense that we do it ourselves?

I maintain that the question of fundamental property rights, the respecting of patents, is in and of itself justification for restoring patent rights to Canadians. By itself that is enough reason to undertake this action. However, there are a great many more benefits to Canada as a result of restoring these patent rights.

Let us consider the question of industrial benefits. Every Party in this House has said on more than one occasion that it is vitally important to Canada's future that we do more research and development in Canada. We must learn to live more by our wits and less by our resources; we must be there in terms of the new technologies. One of the most important new technologies on the horizon, a technology that could have the most profound effect on our lives, on our society, and certainly on our health, is biotechnology. We are not there yet. Who in their right mind will do research in this important area if the results of their research cannot be patented? The answer is nobody and, in essence, that is what is happening in Canada.

Last year in the United States there was $4 billion spent on biochemical research. In Canada the figure was $75 million. Some $3 billion of that money in the U.S. was spent on medical research. The equivalent figure for Canada was $25 million. So in this important area Canada is non-existent. We are totally out of it.

In terms of jobs, by conservative estimates, this change will generate 3,000 new high-tech jobs. In October of this year, the economic supplement of Le Devoir estimated that with multipliers and the like, this change will generate 10,000 new jobs in the Montreal region alone. How can members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties call for jobs, jobs, jobs, high-tech jobs and jobs in research and development while at the same time say that they are opposed to this measure which will generate exactly the things for which they have been calling? How can they say, almost in the same breath, that they want more money spent at the NRC to continue to employ 20 radio astronomers and that we should not make these changes which will generate 3,000 research jobs in this important high-tech area?

We will be discussing whether or not there will be any costs. However, if there are to be any costs, they will be borne by the Government primarily because of pharmacare. One hundred per cent of senior citizens are covered by drug programs as are over 85 per cent of the population in general. Whatever costs there may be will not hit the consumers directly, as has been claimed. Even using the worst estimates of members of the New Democratic Party, the pay-out in terms of research jobs versus costs is far in excess of any pay-out that would come from providing the extra funds they would like to see us provide the NRC. To put it mildly, opposition Members are not being consistent in their arguments.

There have been suggestions made that the generic industry will be hurt by this measure. Nothing could be further from the truth. To begin with, all generic drugs currently on the market will continue to be marketed and sold. Second, drugs are coming off patent all the time. New opportunities for generic competition arise constantly. Finally, I would ask Hon. Members to look to the example of the United States. In that country, the generic sector is the fastest growing sector of the drug industry. That sector has been growing by 15 to 20 per cent per year and now represents 25 per cent of the market. As well, the sector is very profitable, but the profits do not go into research and development. The numbers of jobs per unit of sales are far fewer in that sector than they are in the brand-name sector.

The generic industry will carry on and will be very profitable. It will exist and it will grow. It will not be damaged by anything we are doing here today. What will happen is that the innovative companies, the companies that undertake fundamental research, will now be confident that the fruits of their labour will be protected for at least a period of time and therefore they will be justified in carrying on with research.

We have received commitments from the industry to invest directly in research and development $1.4 billion and to create 3,000 jobs between now and 1995. The commitment is worded so that 10 per cent of sales will be invested in research and development. That is about average for the rest of the industrialized world. Up until now, only 5 per cent of sales had been invested in research and development.

If one were to look at the industrial benefits by themselves without considering the questions of intellectual property and patents and our international relations, and even ascribing the most horrendous estimates of costs put forward by members of the New Democratic Party, one would see that this measure still points to a net benefit to Canada. There is a third reason for this action, and that has to do with multilateral relations.

It has been argued by some, and certainly by the CBC in its propaganda piece, that this action is somehow tied to the trade talks and that somehow we are being forced to do this by the Americans.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised the President of the United States. You know that.

Mr. Andre: Since 1969, every single one of our partners in the western world has been after us to restore patent protection. A few years ago, the former Prime Minister tried to negotiate a special arrangement with Europe, and I think he called it a contractual link. He wanted to try to reduce our dependency. He found that the Europeans were just as upset as anyone else at what we were doing with patents.

In terms of multinational relations and lost opportunities for trade deals and investments, the cost to us of the Patent Act provision, which made us the only western industrialized nation that did not respect patents, has been enormous. The High Commissioner in London received a letter from the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry which read in part:

> It is of concern that the Canadian Government, a regular participant in world economic summit conferences, should continue to promote a patent law which is so heavily biased against one innovative industry on which the well-being of the world is so heavily dependent.

That came from the British, not the Americans and not Ronald Reagan. The British are asking how Canada can expect to be treated as one of the top half dozen countries in the world and can demand that kind of respect when it behaves like a Third World country when it comes to intellectual property, when it is willing to confiscate the intellectual property of people who work in the pharmaceutical sector. That is a legitimate question.

Tom Axworthy, the former principal secretary to the former Prime Minister, said that the greatest diplomatic coup of the External Affairs Department of this Government was get admitted to the then G-5 and now the G-7 group. Well, he was right. It was a tremendous tribute to the diplomatic skills of our Prime Minister. Part of being a member of that group, of demanding to be respected as one of the major industrialized countries in the world, is to respect its rules, including its rules of commerce, trade and property. We cannot, as we have, confiscate private property and expect others to say: "Oh, well that's all right. We will let Canada be the one exception in the western industrialized world. Canada can behave like Argentina or other Third World countries and we will understand and tolerate that and of course we will not take that into account when we discuss other important questions". Of course they will take it into account. Of course that has cost us.

It strikes me as being completely absurd that with the blessing of opposition Parties, and quite properly so, we spend hundreds of millions of dollars every year on our relationships with our partners in the western industrialized world in an attempt to sustain and foster them and to work together as partners while we do something as silly as this. This tells everyone else that when they are dealing with Canada, they may not be dealing with a country like the others but with a country that cannot make up its mind if it wants to be a first-class industrialized country or a Third World country which sponges off the investments of others.

I put the following question to any Hon. Member: what would happen if nowhere in the world were there patents for drugs? The answer is very obvious. There would be no research. There would be no drugs to help cure the sick and the elderly. No one can argue against that fundamental premise. I would then ask Hon. Members the following question: what justification is there in all honesty for thinking that Canada should be excluded from having to pay for any of this research?

What if we thought the rest of the world should do that research? It would be wonderful if they found a cure for cancer, a better ulcer treatment or better heart drugs. Would we try to get access to them as cheaply as we could and not respect the property of the people who had made those discoveries? Nobody could do that and hold up his head. However, that is what we have been trying to do, and it has cost us dearly.

A few years ago I was in London talking with the Agent General. He was trying to raise some investment funds from their large pension funds. In talking with him I asked what was wrong with Canada as a place in which to invest. He said that there were three things wrong with Canada in particular, the Foreign Investment Review Agency, the National Energy Program which confiscated private property, and the Patent Act which confiscated private property.

What did that cost us? Who knows? It was certainly hundreds of millions, if not billions of dollars, of investment capital. No one considers that in the equation. How many people might be working today if in fact this law was not in place in 1969? I am sure it would be quite a few more.

There is the question of consumer protection. What good would come of it if we had all kinds of new drugs and no one could afford them? If the sick and elderly could not get access to the drugs, what good would come of it? Opposition Members have been trying to scare everyone to death by saying that prices will rise and the sick and elderly will not have access to them. That is absolutely irresponsible propaganda, worthy of the CBC and nowhere else. The fact of the matter is that as soon as Prince Edward Island brings in its pharmacare scheme, 100 per cent of senior citizens in Canada will be covered by drug plans.

Mr. Orlikow: Then the provinces will pay any increased costs.

Mr. Andre: I agree with the Hon. Member. However, does the Hon. Member feel that it is therefore dishonest for him and others to say to senior citizens, as they have been doing: "You will pay more for your drugs"? Does he not think that it is dishonest to say that they will pay more for their drugs?

Mr. Orlikow: Don't seniors pay taxes?

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member is trying to frighten senior citizens by telling them they will pay. He knows that is false.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. I ask Your Honour to rule on whether the Minister has the right—and I will deal with his arguments when I speak—to say that I know what I am saying is false.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will certainly read the "blues" and report back to the House later this afternoon.

Mr. Andre: I am prepared to concede that he may be saying that out of ignorance. That is quite possible. It could be deliberately; it could be out of ignorance. In either case it is hardly forgiveable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would just ask the Minister to not use comments such as the word "deliberately", please.

Mr. Andre: Over 85 per cent of Canadians are covered by drug plans. In terms of the consumer per se, the direct effect if any is very minimal. What will be the effect on drug prices in general? What will be that effect? Let us consider what happens in Canada in terms of the marketing of drugs. I will return to the 1950s and 1960s.

In the 1960s we had prices in Canada which were higher than those in the United States. They were reportedly some 20 per cent higher. However, I might say parenthetically that I came across a paper that was presented to the Liberal Government in the 1960s. It made the point that the figures the then Ministers were using to justify a change in the Patent Act were false; they were cooked numbers. In fact, the whole initial change was based upon false numbers in terms of what drugs cost in Canada versus the United States.

There is no question that prices were quite high in Canada at that time. The reason was very simple. We had just come into the pharmacare or medicare era. That meant that many people who had previously paid for drugs out of their own jeans, so to speak, suddenly had a third party paying for them. When one does not pay for something oneself price discipline tends to disappear. What does it matter what it costs if someone else is paying? That had an upward pressure upon prices in Canada. The provincial Governments which were funding pharmacare schemes started to get their acts together to try to compensate for market pressures. Today, provincial Governments buy 60 per cent of the drugs sold in Canada. In essence they have very sophisticated price setting mechanisms. Every six months they establish something called a formulary which states the price they will pay for drugs. They organize bulk purchases and get volume discounts and so on.

There is no generic competition in 93 per cent of the drugs sold in Canada. Some people are under the impression that there is generic competition on all drugs. That is not true; 93 per cent of the drugs sold in Canada have no generic competition. They are low volume and so on. In that area, the prices in Canada are only 80 per cent of what they are in the United States. There is no generic competition. We cannot look at the Patent Act and claim that it has lowered costs for Canadians but, in fact, the prices in Canada are lower than they are in the United States. That will continue. There is nothing in here which will jeopardize in any way, shape or form the fundamental relationship between pharmaceutical manufacturers and provincial Governments. Those market dynamics will remain in place.

One can expect that the relationship of 80 per cent of U.S. prices will remain in place. Unless there are some other changes in the market caused by external forces, either in the United States or elsewhere, we should continue to have that kind of saving. It has nothing to do with the Patent Act. This is another reason I object so strenuously to opposition claims regarding drug prices. For 93 per cent of drugs there is no generic competition. There will be no effect one way or another.

We are talking about a comparatively small group of 7 per cent, albeit they are the high volume drugs and represent 20 per cent in terms of costs. However, that is a far cry from the statements made that all drug prices will go up, in an attempt to frighten people.

We are calling for the creation of a drug prices review board to monitor the existing prices of drugs and the prices of any new drugs to ensure that the market situation which exists now, where our drug prices are at about 80 per cent of those in the United States, remains in place. The board will be headed by Dr. Harry Eastman. Surely that should give confidence to members of the Opposition. Dr. Eastman is not likely to have his name attached to something which is a sham, a toothless tiger or something like that. He has a lot of personal integrity and personal investment in it. He would only be a part of the board if he recognized, as any fair-minded person would recognize, that in fact it will have teeth and be in a position to ensure fair prices.

Earlier today in Question Period there was some debate about what effect the Bill will have in terms of bringing on generic competition in the area where generic drugs compete. For the moment I will try to indicate some of the factors involved in generic competition. To begin with, when a company discovers a new drug it applies for a patent. It takes eight years of testing, on average, before the Department of National Health and Welfare authorizes the company to sell the drug to the public. Also it takes a number of years and a lot of expense to develop the market and to convince physicians to prescribe the drug for use. A lot of cost is involved in monitoring use, getting feedback from users, physicians and so on.

If the drug turns out to be a drug used by many people then it attracts the interest of generic copycat companies. These companies have to find somebody in a country that does not have patent protection to manufacture the drug, which is not easy. Then they apply to the Government, having to pass certain tests to ensure that that generic equivalent, whether in capsules or pills, is safe. That whole process takes a long time, on average eleven and a half years.

No one can claim absolutely that 10 years of patent protection will delay generic competition. It might. But anyone who says absolutely it will is not being intellectually honest. That is the kind of thing we should and will be discussing in committee.

Averages are important to provincial Governments that buy all the drugs and look at the whole spectrum. To an individual company, averages are not very helpful. If a company spent $100 million developing a drug, bringing it to market, but as a result of some quirk three years later cash flows and sales volumes are cut back because a copycat came on the market, it would then be out of luck could lose its investment. The $100 million spent bringing the drug to market may not be recovered. Consequently if you are thinking about a new research program, you will be very careful about investing in Canada for fear of being cut off.

We have very low research and development activity in Canada and very few drugs. I was at the University of Montreal last week talking to people in the Department of Pharmacy. One of the professors found a new drug that in his opinion has some therapeutic value. He has, however, patented it in the United States. He did not patent it in Canada because he did not want to have his discovery exploited by somebody, to his detriment. I also spoke to a new professor who had arrived from France where he worked for a drug company; a French company, not a multinational. When that company discovers a new drug it licences companies in other countries to do the marketing. He told me that the company did not license companies in Canada because it did not want to lose the technology through lack of protection.

New drugs are being discovered which could help cure sick Canadians but they are being kept off the market and are unavailable to sick Canadians because of our Patent Act. If Members of the Opposition were here to listen and had real concern for sick Canadians they would include that as part of the equation. How many drugs are not available in Canada or are delayed entry into Canada because of our pharmaceutical laws? What is that cost?

I was at the University of Alberta last week where I met a bright young biochemist who I believe is doing some really fascinating work in the area of drugs. He was not able to raise any research funds in Canada, nor was he able to interest any Canadian company in pursuing this research. Why fund research in Canada if you cannot patent your results? He contracted with a Japanese company which funded his research. Part of the funding, $80,000, was to buy the rights to his creation. The Japanese company in turn sold those rights to Cyanamid in the United States for $15 million. Here was a discovery by a Canadian scientist in a Canadian university doing research here, but because of our patent laws it is enriching a Japanese company.

How many people in the Opposition making their cost calculations have included figures like that? What cost is that? What can you say about a country that educates brilliant young people but says, in essence, do not do research in that area because we are not going to protect the results? If you want to live in Canada and continue to do research find yourself a Japanese company to interest itself in what you produce? How in heavens can we hold up our heads continuing to do that kind of thing?

There is anecdotal evidence all over. Dr. de Bold, now at the University of Ottawa, while at Queen's University discovered a naturally recurring hormone that regulates high blood pressure. It is an amazing discovery, for which he has had all kinds of awards; he recently won the Manning Award. In Saturday Night magazine for August, 1986 it was stated:

> There are, in fact, many reasons why de Bold, Queen's University, and Canada will not reap the full benefits of this medical discovery. Foremost are the lack of a strong domestic drug industry; patent laws that give consumers low priced generic drugs, but make it uneconomical for drug companies to do research in Canada—

Here is another case of a brilliant scientist, funded by Canadian taxpayers as a university professor and researcher, who has come up with a very important discovery but Canada will reap none of the economic benefits because of our patent laws.

How many Members of the Opposition have put that calculation into their sums when they looked at cost and benefits? Not one, Mr. Speaker. They would rather rant and rave about the National Research Council and so on rather than recognizing that what they are advocating is causing more damage to research in Canada than can be imagined.

Here is a letter from a physician at the Hospital for Sick Children:

> I am a paediatrician training in pharmacology at the Hospital for Sick Children; in this capacity I was recently at an annual meeting of the American Society for Pharmacology and Experimental Therapeutics in Baltimore. While attending the meeting presenting a paper on research done in our lab, I was struck by the quantity and quality of research done by the pharmaceutical companies that was being presented. I also noted that, while many of the scientists and physicians were non-Americans, the majority of the work was being done in the United States. The challenge is clear—

He is pointing out that in order to do work in research and development our scientists have to go to the United States. We train them. I do not know what it costs to turn out an MD, Ph.D in Canada but a few hundred thousand dollars I would guess. We spend those tax dollars, then they go elsewhere to do their research and development. If Hon. Members in the Opposition are truly interested in costs, as they claim in their questions asked in Question Period over the last few days, let them put those costs into their equations. What is the cost to us as a country?

I humbly submit that anybody who takes an objective view of what we are proposing will see that we have in place enormous checks and balances to ensure that consumer prices of drugs remain reasonable. They should look at what we will get by way of research and development, and at the jobs this will create.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Minister that his time has expired. In these circumstances it is often customary for the House to give its unanimous consent to the Minister so he can continue for a few minutes in order to finish.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the indulgence of the House. I thought the opening speaker had unlimited time. I will wind it up very quickly.

This Bill provides protection for consumers through the Drug Prices Review Board policy review in four years and parliamentary review in 10 years. All of the price control mechanisms provincial Governments have in effect will also remain in place. Indeed, the head of the British Columbia pharmacology program indicated that in his view there was likely to be no effect on the cost to British Columbia because the existence of the price review board will help them in their job.

Whatever costs might be associated with this legislation will be minimal. They will not hit the consumer. They will be worth it in the sense of helping to improve our international relations. They are worth it in the sense of respecting the principle of intellectual property, recognizing that people who create have a right to enjoy their creation. However, when you look at the industrial benefits, the research and development, and recognize their importance, and balance that against any potential increase in costs, you cannot reach any conclusion other than that this is a good Bill, good for Canada, and will provide enormous benefits. I look forward to committee study so I can talk about this in more detail.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the House was magnanimous enough to allow the Minister to continue beyond his allotted time I would ask you to canvass the House to determine whether or not there is unanimous consent to allow questions of the Minister in view of his lengthy statement.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has requested unanimous consent to put questions to the Minister. That is not the rule, but if it is the unanimous wish of the House and the Minister, then it can be done.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I am really anxious to get this Bill to committee so I can answer all the questions which might be put. I am reluctant to take up more time of the House and deny the Liberal Party spokesman an opportunity to participate in the debate. I gather there was a precedent this morning as well where we were denied that opportunity, which causes my colleagues to say, regrettably, no.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Inquiry whether agreement exists to reduce number of Francophone employees. (b) Request for explanations concerning letter; and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Regional Development—Distribution of expenditures. (b) Regional disparities—Request for new policy.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the proposed drug patents legislation, and it is indeed a pleasure to do so, since this is the first time I have had a chance to rise in the House as the Official Opposition critic for consumer and corporate affairs.

In fact, the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) had just given me that responsibility, when fate decided otherwise. A car accident kept me from any active involvement in the legislation tabled by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs last year and passed by Parliament. I am referring to the amendments to the Tax Rebate Discounting Act and to the Competition Tribunal Act.

Before going any further, I would like to take this opportunity to thank publicly my colleagues who substituted for me during my convalescence. They are: the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who was very successful in his work on the two Bills I just mentioned; the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) who took charge of the lobbying dossier; the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), who monitored the copyright issue and diligently attended the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs; and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who saw to the representation of my constituents and their concerns. I also wish to thank those Members who covered all proceedings relating to consumer and corporate affairs. Furthermore, I want to thank all Members and employees on the Hill who sent me their best wishes for a speedy recovery. It was much appreciated. Finally, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) who was in charge of monitoring the drug patents dossier and who prepared the Liberal response in anticipation of the introduction of this legislation on June 27 this year. The Hon. Member for Sudbury condemned these proposals as being too severe and lacking any justification, considering the absence of any firm and explicit commitment in the Bill.

When the revised version of the drug patent provisions was tabled last November 7, I denounced the Bill because these propositions quite simply ignore the Eastman Commission recommendations and tip the scales in favour of the multinationals.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure that Hon. Members fully understand my position and that of our Party. The Liberal Party has never come out against changes in this sector. The Eastman recommendations are acceptable to us, for the report did strike a proper balance between the interests of consumers and those of the drug industry generally.

But these provisions go far beyond the Eastman report recommendations, so much so that they unduly favour multinational drug companies to the detriment of generic drug companies and consumers.

The Liberal Party has always made it a point to introduce policies which are fully consistent with the interests and needs of the people who are directly concerned. It is a significant characteristic since it sets us apart from our NDP colleagues who go to one extreme, while our Conservative colleagues go to the other extreme.

The status quo advocated by the NDP faction would have helped consumers, I agree, but then it would have killed any incentive the drug industry might have had to develop new drugs. On the other hand the Party in office wants a radical change which, for all practical purposes, amounts to a backward step. The big winners, the multinationals, will rake in millions of dollars in exchange for unsubstantiated and rather vague promises. The big losers, the consumers, will end up with a toothless patented medicine prices review board, as its only protection.

Mr. Speaker, senior citizens, the sick, the people who are not covered by health insurance plans know that song well. The same refrain has struck their ears once more. Indeed, quite recently, the CRTC, a creature similar to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board proposed by the Minister in this legislation, has found that Bell Canada had overcharged its telephone users. So the CRTC ordered Bell Canada to have the overcharge refunded to telephone users. Everyone applauded. The only thing is, Bell has appealed the ruling and we are back to square one of an unending process.

There is nothing in Bill C-22 to prevent the same thing from happening to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board's findings.

Moreover, we know about the multinational drug industry and its performance. That industry has tremendous funds at its disposal and money is no object when it comes to launching all sorts of court proceedings.

We also know that those funds have been used by the multinationals in major public relations campaigns to make their views known to the Canadian public through radio and newspaper advertisements. We also know that their financial strength has enabled them to carry on since 1969 in their attempts to have the Act amended. Now they are getting what they have always been asking for. The Minister would have us believe that the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board and the policy review by Cabinet four years down the road, and the review by Parliament 10 years from now, are a safeguard against the evil practices of those corporations. The average man and woman know what to expect. They have already realized there is nothing good in this legislation. But since the Minister is not an ordinary citizen, an average Canadian, I will have to go out of my way, resort to complicated explanations to make him understand what the majority of Canadians realized a long time ago, that the Minister has just given out the whole pie to the multinationals.

Let us start with a few historic facts. In the 1950s and 1960s, several complaints were filed by Canadians who found out they were overcharged for their drugs. Later, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission enquired into the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs, under Section 42 of the Combines Investigation Act. The Commission's enquiry was thorough and complete. It dealt with several issues already covered by the Eastman Report.

Mr. Speaker, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission's findings were as follows, and I quote:

> Consideration should be given to the establishment, under the auspices of the federal Government, of an authoritative publication giving all necessary particulars concerning new drugs.
> As the Commission believes that the close control exercised through patents has made it possible to maintain prices of certain drugs at levels higher than would have obtained otherwise and that such patent control has produced no benefits to the public of Canada which would outweigh the disadvantages of the monopoly, the Commission recommends that patents with respect to drugs be abolished. In the opinion of the Commission this is the only effective means to reduce the price of drugs in Canada.

This means therefore that the prices of certain drugs protected by patents were very high and were felt to be excessively high. Other studies have confirmed that the drug manufacturing industry was characterized by excessive profits and a level of research and development which was not in proportion with the magnitude of its profits.

The other two studies were the 1964 report of the Royal Commission on Health Services and the 1966 study by the Special Committee which considered the costs and prices of pharmaceutical products. There were several other studies, but all agreed on the same findings.

The pharmaceutical industry charges high prices, collects very high profits, but does not carry out much research and development work, at least proportionate to its sales. As a matter of fact, research and development represents only 3.5 per cent of sales.

In 1969, in an effort to lower prices and increase competition, the Liberal Government of the day allowed for compulsory licenses. From then on, some very popular drugs were manufactured and sold as generics.

In June, 1983, the Hon. Member for Papineau, the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, tabled a working paper on the compulsory granting of licenses in the area of pharmaceuticals. He recognized the fact that there were a number of problems and that those problems tended to make it less attractive for innovative companies to engage in research and development.

Considering the complex situation in the pharmaceutical industry, the Government decided to pursue the matter further through a commission of inquiry, which would be free of all partisan considerations, and to ask the commission to examine the pharmaceutical industry with a view to recommending the fairest possible solutions.

I shall quote, if I may, from the Order in Council:

> And whereas it is desirable that proposals for incentives for the development of the pharmaceutical industry be evaluated, as well as the relationship of the pharmaceutical industry to the health care delivery system throughout Canada, the cost of pharmaceuticals to consumers in Canada, the clearance procedures for new products and any other policies and programs administered by the Government that relate to the pharmaceutical industry.
> Therefore the Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, advise that Dr. Harry Eastman of the City of Toronto, in the Province of Ontario, be appointed a Commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire into and report upon the current situation in the pharmaceutical industry in Canada, the prospects for a significant expansion of this industry in Canada and the policy framework for the development of the pharmaceutical industry and, within that framework, to identify proposals that might form the basis for reaching a consensus on licensing policy.

The report says clearly that the Commission will identify proposals that might form the basis for reaching a consensus on licensing policy. The two major recommendations are the following, and I shall quote directly from the Eastman Report. The Commission recommends:

> that new drugs should be awarded a period of exclusivity from generic competition of four years after receiving their Notice of Compliance authorizing marketing; > that a Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund be established and be financed by payments made by firms holding compulsory licences, the payments to be determined by the value of the licensee's sales of compulsorily licensed products in Canada multiplied by the pharmaceutical industry's world-wide ratio of research and development to sales.

There are several other recommendations in this important report by Dr. Eastman. However, the point I wish to make is that the recommendations of the Eastman Report represent a balanced view between the interests of consumers, that is reasonable prices, and the interests of the pharmaceutical industry, namely funds for research and development.

These recommendations have been thoroughly examined. In fact, the Eastman Report states that, according to the comprehensive data of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada, there is no indication that the compulsory import licensing implemented in 1969 has had any unfavourable effects. In addition, the Eastman Report notes that the profits of the pharmaceutical industry have clearly exceeded those of all manufacturing industries as well as those of the chemical industry as a whole, except in 1974.

This industry is therefore generally healthy. Dr. Eastman explains why, in spite of the health of the industry, he is recommending a four-year period of exclusivity. The report says that the purpose of the four-year exclusivity period from the date of issuance of a compliance notice authorizing marketing is to encourage the rapid introduction of new drugs in Canada by improving the profitability of the company bringing out the new products. He also explains that insufficient protection does not motivate the companies to do research, while too much protection promotes waste, bad allocation of funds and research that is not really necessary.

The care put into the Eastman Report, and its conclusions regarding the protection of patents for a four-year period, once more bring me to say that what the Minister is proposing is excessive. Ten years of exclusivity is very far from the four years recommended by Dr. Eastman.

According to the observations of the Commission, ten years of exclusivity will promote a waste of money and needless research. I am strongly convinced that the Eastman Report shows what direction we should be taking. It gives a fair and balanced view of the interests of both consumers and the industry. The proposals of the Minister will cost the consumers a lot more than necessary and will allow the multinationals to waste their overly large profits in useless activities.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand how the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) can tell us that this will not cost Canadian consumers one penny. The Eastman Report is very clear about this, as Dr. Eastman pointed out yesterday and today. What does the Eastman Report say? Simply that the appropriate mechanism to boost the profitability of multinational companies—that is, earning more income to invest in research and development—is a four-year prohibition period.

So the report says that there would be no competition from generic products during four years. The industry would be free to change prices to recoup or gather funds for past and future research. Needless to say a new drug would cost more. We in the Liberal Party believe that a ten-year restriction period is too high a price for Canadian consumers to pay. The evidence is there. The Eastman Report says so. We feel that a ten-year prohibition period is an altogether unreasonable and disproportionate demand on the part of the multinationals. We also believe that the Minister is making a big mistake. He is definitely going too far in his efforts to promote a climate conducive to investment and industrial development.

Spokesmen for retired people, elderly Canadians, women and consumers at the Liberal Party's public hearings last September 23 unanimously agreed that the Government proposals were excessive. A number of them said they would prefer the status quo, while others indicated that the Eastman Report recommendations were acceptable even though they did not appear to be in their interest. Nobody was as arrogant as the multinationals when they warned that their investment promises would best be forgotten unless the legislation were adopted.

Mr. Minister, here is what we have against this Bill: the ten-year prohibition period is simply too long. I explained why. The seven-year prohibition period concerning the manufacture of drugs will leave generic drug companies with only three years to recoup expenditures incurred for developing their products. After that period, they will be facing the competition of imports. In their case, they will not be able to recoup the expenses.

Mr. Speaker, there is no obligation in this legislation for patent-holding multinationals to manufacture their drugs in Canada. This is important. That obligation was included in the Government's proposal of June 27th. Actually, if a multinational failed to manufacture its drugs within the 2 years following the previous Minister's legislation of last June, and I repeat: if a multinational failed to manufacture its drugs within 2 years, it would have lost the privileges associated with the patent. That provison has been taken out of new legislation. It would really have encouraged the development of a manufacturing sector in the drug industry.

Turning to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, its authority is limited as far as collecting data on prices and research and development activities are concerned, because a major part of those activities are carried out abroad and all the multinationals have their headquarters in countries outside Canada. Since we have no jurisdiction whatsoever on countries such as France, Switzerland and the United States, the board will be limited in the information it can collect.

Mr. Speaker, the criteria for monitoring and determining whether a drug price increase is excessive open the door to abuse and to the setting up of higher prices. One criteria in particular comes to mind: the selling price of drugs outside Canada. We all know that Canada has the lowest prices in the industrial world. Another criteria is the patentee's selling price over the five years before the ruling. We know that the prices of drugs have increased approximately from 3 to 43 per cent since the Eastman Report was published. We also know that before 1985, the introductory price of drugs varied from $70 to $100. But this year we have seen some drugs introduced on the market at prices between $100 and $150. As you can see, those criteria will have to be very closely monitored. Contrary to what the Minister claims, they show that an increase in the prices of drugs is to be expected.

The powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board to correct the abuses of guilty companies are weaker than they were in the Bill introduced last June. Indeed, the original proposal was that the Board would be authorized to lower the price not only of the medicine involved, but of all medicines produced by the company.

In the present Bill, only the price of the medicine involved and that of one other medicine are subject to reprisals by the Board. I ask the Hon. Members to note this point because it is important.

The Minister claims that the penalty is proportionate to the crime and that the previous proposal was excessive. We have to recognize that the Conservative Government is consistent. Indeed, our competition legislation, while better than it used to be, is certainly one the weakest pieces of legislation on economic competition in the world.

The penalties provided by our competition legislation are not very severe. Therefore, if the Government wanted to bring our pharmaceutical patent legislation up to world standards, it should have done the same for our competition legislation.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to note that this bill is retroactive to June 27, 1986. This is totally unacceptable. Canadians are entitled to benefit from the amendments of 1969 until Bill C-22 is passed by this House. This provision of the Bill is rather fishy. The Government is going to grant ten years of exclusivity to the multinationals, and these same multinationals cannot wait for the bill to be passed? What does that mean? It is completely and totally unacceptable. There is no reason for such a provision.

The Minister tells us that the multinationals will invest $1.4 billion into research and development and that this should create 3,000 jobs. Regretfully, this is not spelled out in the Bill. All I know is that the multinationals have announced some of their investments, and not all of them, but only after they were forced to do so. This happened both times legislation to amend the Patent Act was introduced. Last June 27, the multinationals announced some investments, and last November 7, they again announced some investments. Moreover, when the Liberal Party held public hearings last September 23, they once again announced investments.

Do we have to scare them every time we want them to do their share? The Bill includes no written guarantee and no investment schedules. The ordinary consumer always has a guarantee when he buys something. Why, then, would the Canadian people buy such an industrial policy without any guarantee? The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) could provide such a guarantee for Canadians who are already paying high prices and who could find themselves paying even more.

In addition, this Bill does not define research and development. Does this mean fundamental research, research applied to manufacturing processes or chemical research? If the Goverment really has a research and development policy, it should be able to tell us exactly what it wants. When you do not know where you are going, you can end up just about anywhere. Since the decision is delivered to Cabinet, the definition of research and development will be subjected to risky decisions by ministers experiencing pressures of all kinds. It is a serious shortcoming, a broad gap and clear proof that the Tory Government does not know where it is going or what it is doing.

The amounts allotted to the provinces seem to me to be totally inadequate in the long and in the short term and it is once again an admission that drug prices will surely go up. If not, why provide those funds to the provinces?

The policy will be reviewed by Cabinet after a four-year period and by Parliament after ten years. This would seem to be acceptable except that if the Members of this House want to be realistic, they will appreciate that in those ten years many things may happen, many excuses may be voiced to justify unachieved investments: a depression, a crisis in the industry concerned, retaliatory measures from other countries and so on.

Let me be cynical and skeptical. Moreover, I doubt very much that after a four-year period, Cabinet will have enough information to act efficiently to promote the development of our drug industry.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the prices of drugs will increase. Everyone seems to believe it except the Minister. The Government is granting a ten-year monopoly without any written guarantee of investments by the industry, without any commitment by the multinationals as to the manufacture of drugs in Canada, without any specific definition of what is considered as research and development, without any commitment to table cost studies in the House or in committee. I regret but the Bill is inadequate and incomplete. One has to be blind to support such a proposal. Who will pay the bill, Mr. Speaker? Our sick people, those who are not covered by social welfare and whose income is not high enough to pay the premiums for a private insurance scheme; the people on welfare who will have to buy drugs not covered by their provincial drug insurance program; the people on social welfare who will have to pay part of the costs of their medicine where they are not covered 100 per cent by the province. The provinces which will have to make cuts in their Medicare programs to pay for these drugs. The taxpayers who will have to pay higher taxes to cover the increase in costs for medicine. The Canadian men and women who have private drug insurance programs. The drug insurance companies will have no other alternative but to pass the increase on to them. It is Canada which is scuttling its generic pharmaceutical industry which was about to start innovative research, but which will not be able to do so.

In his remarks, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (M. Andre) wondered why the Official Opposition opposed this legislation. He shouted: "The opposition is asking for jobs, jobs, jobs". Yes, its true, we want jobs, but not at the expense of the weak, the poor and the sick.

This Bill is not tailored to meet the needs of our country in the area of drugs; rather, it is the culmination of a host of clumsy efforts to meet the needs of a foreign-controlled industry. This Bill, therefore, has not been conceived to meet the needs of Canada, it is not a proper instrument for research and development, and our sick people, old people and taxpayers will pay dearly for it. The Liberal Party of Canada simply cannot support this Bill in its present form. We will make every possible effort to amend this Bill at least along the lines recommended by the Eastman Report. I join with the many Canadian men and women who are totally opposed to this Bill, and I will do everything in my power to make it more reponsive to the real needs of all Canadian men and women.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the Minister that my position towards this Bill will be: "Desperate ills call for desperate remedies." Therefore, I move the following amendment:

• (1620)

[English]

Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray):

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and substituting the following:

Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Speaker: We will now debate the amendment.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, since this Bill was proposed by the Government last spring it has been opposed by Hon. Members of my Party. The earlier version did not receive first reading in June, and it has been opposed by my Party since the House resumed in September. We did everything we could to prevent the introduction of the Bill and we intend to continue to oppose this Bill in every way possible, and to defeat it if we can.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) in answers to questions put to him earlier this week, and even previously, has implied that the opposition to his Bill comes from opposition Members of Parliament for purely partisan reasons. He implied that other people who oppose the Bill are doing so because they do not understand the fact, or because the facts have been misrepresented by members of the Opposition. In my years in Parliament I have never encountered a proposed Bill which has brought forward such unanimous opposition as this Bill.

An Hon. Member: Do you remember the Crow Bill?

Mr. Orlikow: The Crow Bill was a disaster. It affected farmers very adversely. However, this Bill has produced resolutions, letters to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) from senior citizen organizations from one end of Canada to the other, from consumers associations, from co-operatives, labour unions and farm organizations. I have never before seen this virtually unanimous opposition which has been produced by this Bill. These organizations have been joined by newspaper editorials, by newspaper columnists.

In today's Citizen there is an article by Don McGillivray. The headline reads: "Don't swallow Tories' drug-bill line". He states in part:

—the Tories now have a two-year record of mismanaging the issues that arise.

A little further on he states:

The change in the law abandons Canada's unique system of keeping medical drug prices low by denying patent protection to the big multinational drug companies.

I would like to deal for a few moments with a couple of the arguments put forward by the Minister in his speech today. He stated that the Bill under which these companies have operated since 1969 really permits the theft of intellectual property. I suppose he means that the results of the research done by the multinational companies who bring forward a new drug are then used by the generic drug companies. That is true. Under the law, as it has been from 1969 until now, after a little more than four years, by payment of a royalty, the generic companies can get a licence to produce the drug. Under the Bill which the Minister is proposing the generic drug companies will be able to produce drugs under licence after 10 years. Is the Minister saying that it is theft if the licence is used after four years but that it is not theft if it used after 10 years?

• (1630)

Mr. McDermid: Yes.

Mr. Orlikow: If it is theft, and if the Minister really believes that, then obviously the company should have patent protection for 99 years, not for four years and not for 10 years.

The Minister then says that seniors will not be affected because, after all, they are covered by provincial pharmacare plans. Seniors are taxpayers just like everyone else. The provincial pharmacare plans are paid for out of the revenues of the provinces. The provinces obtain their revenues through various forms of taxation. If they have to pay more, as they will, for the cost of prescription drugs for seniors, or for anyone else, then the cost of the programs will have to increase. If the provincial pharmacare programs and health care programs, along with private insurance plans of which there are many, have to pay more for prescription drug costs, then either they will have to increase the premiums which they charge or they will have to cut back on the benefits which they provide for other services over and above the cost of paying for prescrition drugs.

I would like to take a few moments to consider the history to the point we are now, from where we have come and where we will go if this Bill passes. I remind Hon. Members that before 1969 Canadians paid among the highest prices for prescription drugs in the world. In the period from 1945 to 1965 the cost of prescription drugs rose by 150 per cent. The Government of the day, because it was receiving so many complaints from so many people with respect to not being able to afford prescription drugs doctors prescribed when they were ill, appointed three commissions to study the problem. All three commissions made proposals with respect to changing the patent law as it affected prescription drugs.

In 1968, a parliamentary committee chaired by Dr. Harley held many public hearings. Interested people, companies involved and research scientists were allowed to come forward and testify in public before the committee. After the committee held its hearings it brought down a report. It was on the basis of that report that the patent laws as they affected prescription drugs were changed.

The result of these changes was that the generic drug companies were permitted to obtain a licence to produce drugs after the company which had developed them had had the exclusive right to produce and sell them for a number of years. This permitted them to import the active drug ingredients needed to produce the drugs, which resulted in bringing competition into the drug market. The results were dramatic. From having the second-highest drug prices in the industrialized world we moved to the situation where, up until now, we have had the second-lowest drug prices in the world.

The multinational corporations were unhappy with this situation, to say the least. They were dissatisfied. They fought the system with every means available to them. They had, they have now, and they will continue to have one of the most powerful lobby groups in the country, just as they do in the United States. The pressure they brought to bear was continuous. Finally, a couple of years before the then Liberal Government was defeated, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who was then the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, caved in somewhat to the pressure. He began to look for ways to satisfy, at least in part, the demands of the multinational corporations. However, his portfolio was changed and a new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was saddled with the responsibility. I refer to the Hon. Judy Erola.

Despite the fact that the system we had since 1969, and have up until today, was working well and giving the people of Canada prescription drugs at a reasonable price, Mrs. Erola, to lessen the pressure on her and her Government, appointed Dr. Harry Eastman to investigate the situation. Dr. Eastman brought down his report after the Liberal Government was defeated and the present Conservative Government took office.

What did Dr. Eastman say in his report? Essentially, what he said was that the system which we now have in place is working quite well. He said that the system under which the generic drug companies are permitted after a number of years to produce a drug, after paying a royalty to the company which originally developed it, saved the people of Canada $211 million in 1983. Dr. Eastman also said that we could make some changes to the Act, although the ones he proposed were relatively minor. He proposed that the four-year patent protection now given to drug patent holders be looked at, that the royalties paid by the generic producers should be increased from the present 4 per cent to 14 per cent, and that there should be specific grants for research and development from the funds collected from the royalties.

The Government could have accepted Dr. Eastman's proposals, or it could have held public hearings such as were held in 1969 under the chairmanship of Dr. Harley. But the Government ignored the public way of dealing with the situation in favour of working secretly behind the scenes. It brought the two antagonists—the multinational drug companies and the generic drug companies—together. It told them that they had to negotiate and work out an agreement that would be acceptable to both of them. However, the Government was really only listening to the demands of the multinational companies; not just the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada but its real master, its real owners, the pharmaceutical manufacturers in the United States. The results of this type of pressure and this type of wheeling and dealing behind closed doors had predictable results. The multinational corporations got what they wanted.

In the original Bill, which was to be introduced before the summer recess by the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, multinational corporations would have had the exclusive right to produce and sell drugs they had developed for eight years to 10 years, an increase over the four years to six years provided by the present law.

Under the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs the penalty clause has been softened to make losing exclusivity on one drug and one other from one drug and all others. The import restrictions have been lifted on the import of active independents rather than the manufacture of them in Canada. The cost provisions to be reported to the Prices Review Board were changed and the process made easier.

We know what will happen when this Bill is passed because we know what occurred previous to 1969 when we passed the legislation under which the manufacture and sale of prescription drugs has since operated. The companies will set the prices by what the market will bear. There will be no competition for at least 10 years. We know from experience that the people of Canada will suffer tremendously.

In the proposed Bill there are no cost estimates beyond the Minister's statement that there would be not one cent more in additional prices. The only person who believes that is the Minister himself. Yesterday and today the Minister charged that quotations which the CBC program The Journal put in the mouth of Dr. Eastman were taken out of context and that Dr. Eastman had agreed with him that there would be no extra cost. Today, an article in the Toronto Star quotes Dr. Eastman as saying that the price level of new drugs would be higher under the Bill than if there were no legislation.

I called Dr. Eastman last night and asked him if in fact he had been misquoted or misrepresented on the CBC program. I asked him if he believed that prices would not be higher after this Bill had passed. Dr. Eastman pointed out a very obvious fact. Under the present system a company which develops a drug has at least four years, and according to the Minister this works out to an average of 10 and a half years, in which it has the exclusive right to sell the prescription drug. After this Bill is passed the four years provided by the present system will grow to 10 years. The multinational corporations which develop the new drugs will have an extra six years to sell the drugs, and in this time generic companies will not be able to get licences to produce the drugs and will not be able to bring down prices as they have up until now.

Let me give Hon. Members and the Minister some examples of how the system works right now. I will deal with two or three prescription drugs which are used very frequently. Valium is probably the most widely used prescription drug in Canada and virtually every other country. In Winnipeg the retail price for 100 tablets of the brand-name prescription drug is $15.10. For the generic equivalent, the retail price is $5.64. Let us deal with the drug Tagamet which is now very widely used by people who suffer from ulcers. One hundred tablets of brand-name Tagamet costs $39.38 in Winnipeg. For the generic equivalent, the cost is $15.34.

For one of the newest antibiotics, Amoxicillin, the brand-name drug costs $18.25 while the generic equivalent costs $9.25.

Under the present system, because of the wide use of generic equivalents for the most prescribed drugs, consumers pay half or less than half the cost of the brand-name drug for prescriptions. That is the system which the Minister is proposing to virtually destroy.

The Minister has said that not only will the cost of present-day drugs not rise, but the cost of drugs manufactured in the future will not rise. He is certainly alone in that view. Clayton Yeutter, the chief trade negotiator for the United States, said in an interview by the CBC after he made a speech in Chicago on September 30 the following:

> It may raise prices at the retail level of some of these products. If you're going to have low retail prices based on piracy that is not a sound way to run a country.

I would like to hear the Minister tell senior citizens and young families with children who get sick and need prescription drugs whether he agrees with Mr. Yeutter, that the system we have had which has saved them money is based on piracy and we must get rid of it. Even the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs knew better and was more forthright than this Minister. He said—

Mr. McDermid: One man's opinion.

Mr. Orlikow: The Hon. Member says that that is one man's opinion.

Mr. Riis: The Minister's.

Mr. Orlikow: It was the then Minister's opinion. On June 27, 1986, he said that it was their estimate that the total cost to provincial treasuries resulting from the delay in the introduction of generic drugs would not exceed $100 million by 1990. If there is to be no increase in costs, why did the former Minister agree, as has the present Minister, that he would pay the provinces this $100 million. It is obviously because they know that there will be increased costs.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), and other Hon. Members have called on the Government, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to make public the studies they have in their possession, studies which tell the real story about what the increased costs will be.

• (1650)

I would ask the Minister to tell Hon. Members and Canadians why the Government has refused to make those documents and studies public. We have every right to assume that the reason they will not make those documents public is that the documents would tell Canadians that there will be very sharp increases in the cost of prescription drugs after the Bill is passed.

We could not obtain those figures. However, other people have looked into the matter. The Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association, an association of generic companies, commissioned a study. It was not done by some fly-by-night group, by some wild-eyed radical or by some know-nothing. The Minister tried to indicate that all the people opposing the Bill do not know what they are talking about.

Mr. Riis: Who did the study?

Mr. Orlikow: The study was conducted by one of the largest, most respected firms of chartered accountants in Canada, Currie, Coopers and Lybrand.

Mr. Riis: Very reputable.

Mr. Orlikow: Of course they are. That firm has done work for the federal Government and for many provincial Governments.

In the study it was found that without generic competition as a restraining factor on the desire of multinational drug companies to maximize their profits, prices would increase quickly for new drugs. It was estimated that by 1995 Canadians would be paying $650 million more than they are now paying. The total would be $4.73 billion over a 10-year period. Let us compare that cost with the claim—and I emphasize the word "claim"—by the Minister and the Government that multinational drug companies would invest $1.4 billion in that period of time if the Bill were passed. For every dollar multinational drug companies might invest, Canadians will pay $4.

I think we have every right to question the claim that the companies will invest that amount of money. Until 1969 companies had patent protection. They had all the patent protection they wanted, all the patent protection they needed. If it is the patent protection they will get under the Bill which will induce them to do research in Canada, why did they not do research in Canada when they had prior patent protection?

The facts are very simple. Multinational drug companies, like other multinational companies in virtually every area of industry, have a very simple policy. They prefer and almost always conduct their research at head office, not in one of their subsidiary companies. We have no right to believe that they will invest the amount of money and produce the kinds of job which the industry and the Government accept without question.

We realize that the study conducted by Currie, Coopers and Lybrand was as a result of an organization being hired to do the study by one of the interested parties which would be very seriously and adversely affected if and when the Bill was passed. We tried to be as certain as we could that the position we were taking was the correct one. Therefore, we took the Currie, Coopers and Lybrand study, which indicated that by 1995 Canadians would be paying an extra $650 million per year for prescription drugs, to a leading economist in the drug policy field. We cannot give his name because he works for the federal Government. The economist told us that the assumptions and estimates made by Currie, Coopers and Lybrand were conservative on the whole.

Let me return to the fact that we know what will happen because we know what occurred regularly in pre-1969 years. In those years companies were able to set prices at whatever they thought the market would bear. They knew then and they know now that if the Bill passes there will be no competition from generic companies for at least 10 years. There will be no need for them to reduce prices. As I have already indicated, the prices they charge are at least twice and often more than what the generic companies charge. We know that prices will accelerate immediately. In fact it is already happening for new drugs.

Let me look at two new drugs which were introduced in the last six months, Tegison and Carderone. They were introduced at wholesale prices of $150 per hundred for Carderone and $77 for 36 tablets of Tegison. We can compare those prices with the previous wholesale introduction prices of new drugs of between $50 to $70 per hundred tablets.

Drug companies now know they will get away with price increases, since last June is the retroactive date when the Bill will come into effect. It only stands to reason that drug companies will set the highest price possible since the drug will be under price controls thereafter?

Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That the amendment be amended by deleting all the words after the word "they" and by substituting therefor "12 months hence".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will take the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) under reservation and make a ruling at a later time.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--PUBLIC BILLS

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved that Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, today we are looking at historic legislation. For the first time we are examining an extremely important Bill concerning the health of all Canadians. It is akin to a Government bill in its complexity and it is possible thanks only to the reform in our parliamentary rules. The intention of the bill is to establish a smoke free work-place for all employees under federal jurisdiction and to ban the advertising and all promotion of tobacco products. It is as comprehensive a bill as a private Members' Bill can be because a private Member cannot spend money. There cannot be provisions for counter-advertising or for support for substitute crops for tobacco, for example.

• (1700)

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) himself has said that a comprehensive approach is needed. I call on the Government today to reflect that concern by supporting Bill C-204. This Bill has a chance to pass under the new rules. It was selected by an all-Party committee as a non-partisan subject. This all-Party committee on private Members' business was dominated by Conservatives who met, incidentally, in a smoke-filled room. Hon. Members put aside their personal considerations to put a health issue of such national importance to the fore.

[Translation]

The problems of tobacco consumption are well known. Every year, 35,000 Canadians die of diseases related to cigarette smoking—cancer first of all, coronaries and emphysema. And 1,000 of those 35,000 Canadians who die every year are not smokers themselves but the victims of sidestream smoke. There are also non-fatal illnesses. Smokers are ill more often than non-smokers. In a family where one member smokes, the children are twice as likely to be sick and get bronchitis, for instance, as children in families where no one smokes. Tobacco consumption causes very serious problems: death, illness, suffering, disability, decreased productivity and fires.

What can we do about it? The majority of smokers are trying to stop smoking. It is not easy, and it would be better not to start in the first place. That is why we must ban tobacco advertising. Because many Canadians have stopped smoking, especially men, and since 35,000 smokers die every year, the tobacco companies have to recruit new smokers, and unfortunately many of these are women. Advertising campaigns are aimed at young people and women, and take advantage of the insecurity and vulnerability of these two groups.

[English]

These campaigns have succeeded magnificently. We have seen a 4 per cent increase in tobacco consumption this year over last year. The advertising campaigns are working. We have a terrible irony that the symbols of emancipation for women are used in these campaigns to induce women to smoke. We will be seeing equal lung cancer death rates for women compared with men long before women achieve equal pay with men.

Society has a stake in the health of its citizens. When a person is ill, absent from work or dies leaving young dependents, society must pay. Society pays for medicare, society pays for dependents, and society pays for pensions. Smokers themselves pay $3 billion a year in taxes but they cost the system $8 billion. The tobacco companies do not have to pay compensation to their victims. I am not suggesting that that is the best route, although lawsuits may have to be the answer if we do not get adequate legislation. When the harm of thalidomide was discovered, the drug was banned. No one would suggest that what we needed was better legislation to enable the victims to sue the companies. The drug was simply banned.

There is no right to advertise any product. In fact, restrictions for advertising apply to all kinds of perfectly legitimate services, lawyer services and drug products. The idea that there is a right to advertise a hazardous product is absolutely preposterous. A hit man cannot advertise his services, a supplier of arms for terrorists cannot advertise, and poisons for bumping off your spouse cannot be advertised.

Freedom of expression in the Charter is for individuals to express views. People are free to argue the merits of smoking but no one is free to advertise a hazardous product. Further, the Charter stipulates exceptions where these are demonstrable in a free and democratic society. Certainly free and democratic societies have banned cigarette smoking. I note that the one that has ban adopted the most stringent, Norway, has seen a significant drop in tobacco consumption, especially among young people.

The statement that advertising will not do everything, will not stop all people from smoking is perfectly correct. If perfection were a criterion for accepting legislation we would not have any bills before this House. Advertising is absolutely essential to the tobacco companies. A ban on advertising is absolutely essential. No campaign of good health put on by the Minister can possibly overcome the insidious campaign of the advertisers to associate a product with life, health, sports, glamour, success and to prey on people's fears. I would advocate a counter-advertising program, but only after a ban on the positive advertising program. The Government cannot put up the money. That would be enormously costly when the tobacco companies are spending $200 million a year to try to meet that.

[Translation]

The impact of this Bill on employment should not be exaggerated. I hope there is a drop in tobacco consumption, but we are not talking about banning tobacco production or the manufacture of cigarettes in Canada. Farmers are already being affected by competition from the Third World, and even if tobacco consumption remains at its present levels, farmers will still be competing with cheap Third World tobacco. So long as we have smokers in Canada, we should not import tobacco or cigarettes, and the manufacturers will survive. The changes in these industries will be gradual. As demand drops, jobs will be lost in the long run. On the other hand, this will mean more jobs in other sectors. People who stop smoking buy other products and other services. They go to the movies and to restaurants, they buy clothes, and so forth. I think rising demand in these sectors will create more employment.

[English]

This Bill in action would give employees in the federal work-place the right to a smoke-free work-place for the first time. Employees have been demanding it but without success. Health and Welfare voluntary guidelines have not worked. Putting a sign up to stop the tobacco smoke from circulating does not do it. Specific cases have been taken, but they have not been very successful. They have taken years, as in the case of Mr. Timpauer, or they have been turned down on appeal by the Federal Court of Appeal. It is expensive, time consuming and it is not the way to do it. This is a serious problem and it needs legislation.

I note that in the field of transportation the transportation companies have welcomed regulation from the Government. They find it difficult to adjudicate between smokers and non-smokers. They want this legislation. My private Members' Bill includes common carriers, the airlines, railway companies, marine transportation and interprovincial buses. They want this regulation as well.

There is a great deal of support for this Bill, Mr. Speaker, from the Canadian Cancer Society, Physicians for a Smoke Free Canada, Non-Smoker's Rights, Nova Scotia Medical Associations, the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, and I expect we will be seeing lots more support come in as Canadians see what are the possibilities.

This Bill could be landmark legislation. It could be the first Bill passed under the new reformed House rules, and it certainly could be the first comprehensive law dealing with Canada's preventable health problems. I call on all Members of the House on both sides to give employees under federal jurisdiction the right to a clean, safe, disease-free working environment. I call Hon. Members in all three Parties to promote the health of children, to stop the sophisticated marketeers, these pushers in pin-stripes, as the doctors have called them, from using the allures of their trade to attract children into a habit that they will regret. I call on all Hon. Members to put aside all partisan considerations and support a Bill that will give employees the right to a clean environment and will give children the protection that they need to grow up safely.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to comment on Bill C-204 introduced by my colleague from Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). This measure is aimed at several objectives, including restricted smoking in the workplace, a ban on tobacco advertising, and restricted sales of tobacco products. My intention today is not to deal with every single sector which might be affected by this piece of legislation. Instead I will concentrate my remarks on its consequences in the workplace.

Mr. Speaker, there is already in place a mechanism to deal with the problem of workers' health and safety, and I am referring to the joint committees on health and safety.

At the local level, health and safety committees are the ideal means to tackle the complex issues related to the safety and health of workers, so we should not take any initiative likely to undermine their efforts. As it happens, that would be the ultimate result of Bill C-204. An explanation is in order, Mr. Speaker.

As all my colleagues already know, employers and employees under federal jurisdiction are governed by the provisions of the Canada Labour Code and its attendant regulations. Labour Code Part IV covers employment health and safety. It applies to every workplace referred to in the legislation now before us, including the federal Public Service, the airlines, the banks, the postal service, radio and TV stations, the railways, the grain elevators and some Crown corporations.

The primary purpose of Part IV of the Code is to prevent employment accidents, injuries and illnesses in the carrying out of duties covered by the Code or arising from or connected to them. To that end, it requires employers to protect adequately the safety and health of their employees. Part IV of the Code also empowers the Governor in Council to enact regulations for the safety and health of workers. It is within that mandate that the Canada Regulations on safety and health in the workplace have been established.

Those 18-part regulations establish the standards for everything that concerns the safety and health of workers, from hygiene measures to boilers. Part X of the Regulations deals with dangerous substances and is of particular significance to the debate. It sets up the procedure for investigations, even when there is only a possibility that the safety and health of workers might be endangered. Limits are indicated for the permissible exposure to dangerous substances. It is recognized that the exposure to dangerous substances must be limited as much as possible by technical means.

Mr. Speaker, Labour Canada is responsible for recommending safety and health regulations to the Governor in Council and for enforcing the regulations as authorized by the Governor in Council. However, the Code recognizes the very important role played by employers and employees alike in eliminating as much as possible the existing hazards in the workplace.

The Code makes it mandatory for employers with twenty employees or more to establish a safety and health committee made up of an equal number of management and labour representatives. Small businesses with fewer than five employees may select one worker as a safety and health representative, instead of setting up a committee. It is Labour Canada's sincere hope that those safety and health committees will strongly support our efforts to reduce worker exposure to dangerous substances. Those committees are the cornerstone of Labour Canada's policy of internal responsibility, under which workers and management should find mutually acceptable solutions to problems in the workplace.

Whenever parties cannot reach a satisfactory resolution of a specific problem, an inspector from Labour Canada may be called in. This in my view is the most reasonable and economical way of ensuring safety and health in the workplace. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there are already in effect in Canada a whole set of regulations aimed at protecting worker health and safety. There is also an excellent mechanism giving workers all the protection they are entitled to under the Act.

Let us now turn to the very issue of tobacco smoke in the workplace. This is an extremely complex issue. It is not just the case of an employer using a dangerous substance in his manufacturing process or of a manufacturing process emitting a dangerous substance against which workers should be well protected. Both the employers and the employees do smoke.

Bosses as well as workers are affected by secondary smoking. It is therefore not, Mr. Speaker, a matter of employer versus employees. It is not a technical problem either, and it is therefore not appropriate to look for a technical solution. According to the experts of the Occupational Safety and Health Branch of Labour Canada, trying to determine maximum levels of secondary smoking by measuring the concentration of some component or other might be very tricky. That approach is not recommended.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I doubt that we could have a smoke free environment just by imposing a regulation banning smoking, unless it were to be strictly and firmly enforced, particularly in federally regulated workplaces with a lot of public traffic. I am thinking of airports, stations, and the rest, where a whole army of inspectors would have to be hired to enforce the ban on smoking, and where the regulation would involve a lot of red tape. Surely this is not what the people of Canada want.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not want to give the impression that I think smoking is a harmless habit. There is irrefutable evidence that the smoker's health is affected. I also firmly believe that more and more Canadian citizens object to breathing an air which is polluted by other people's smoke. More and more of them are concerned and displeased with that situation.

While I sympathize with them, I do not think it advisable to regulate further. The solution does not lie in greater Government interference in the day to day lives of Canadians.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the answer must come from those directly affected, that is from the workers and the employers. That way it would be possible to find solutions suitable for each work environment.

Moreover, a local solution, devised by those most directly concerned by the problem, would be more likely to be favorably accepted than a solution imposed by a faceless bureaucracy in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe that this complex social problem must be solved on a voluntary basis, in a spirit of cooperation, by employers and employees.

It is my opinion that the problem of smoking in the workplace must be considered through health and safety committees, and this is precisely what Labour Canada is trying to do.

As I said earlier, we should not pass a measure which would in any way undermine the role of health and safety committees, even on a narrow question like this one.

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise this afternoon to address Bill C-204 presented by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). Essentially the Bill would regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers, as well as amend the Hazardous Products Act with regard to cigarette advertising. The Bill is timely and represents a concerted effort to try and come to grips with the problem of smoking in our society in those areas under federal jurisdiction.

The Hon. Member who just spoke essentially characterized the legislation as interventionist. He seemed to support a voluntary approach. With all due respect, that is a cop-out. It is the same as saying inaction is preferred over action.

In the 10 minutes that I am allotted this afternoon I would like to go into what the Bill purports to do and give you some statistics which would perhaps serve to disprove the theory that this legislation is interventionist. First, the Bill would mean that employers under federal jurisdiction have to provide a smoke-free environment. What is wrong with that? It would provide for designated smoking rooms for those individuals who do not smoke, who happen to be a majority in this country. It would also mean that there would be no smoking in common carriers under federal jurisdiction.

In the last week the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) suggested that as a start there should be no smoking on flights of less than two hours duration. Smoking is a health hazard in airplanes because of the compressed air, and is also a hazard to the aircraft itself. I think it will be only a matter of time before smoking is entirely eliminated on airplanes. We are also considering this option for ships, trains, and public transport road vehicles.

This Bill would change the Hazardous Products Act to ban the promotion and advertising of tobacco products although allowing the sale of them. The Bill is saying that those who choose to smoke know the risk and are responsible for their decision. However, it is completely absurd to try to promote smoking as a healthy and fun life style. That is misleading and erroneous. It is particularly harmful to address such campaigns to younger people. We must eliminate that.

Statistics indicate that two-thirds of Canadians are non-smokers. Many companies and institutions are already developing non-smoking policies and designating smoking and non-smoking areas. Approximately 30 major municipalities across the country have already instituted non-smoking by-laws. Rather than breaking new ground, the federal Government would be showing leadership, which has already been shown in the private sector and at other levels of Government. The federal Government would be saying that it will do what it can to undermine the present pro-smoking campaign which is hazardous to health.

Let us look at the effects of smoking. This Bill is not interventionist and does not trample on the rights of individuals. The statistics fly in the face of any such argument. Statistics show that smoking is the greatest cause of preventable death. Smoking accounts for almost 20 per cent of Canadian deaths, killing more Canadians than alcohol, car accidents, violence, drugs, suicide and poisoning combined. Smoking kills 32,000 Canadians every year. Four million Canadians will die from the effects of tobacco products. Each smoker will die, on average, eight years prematurely.

There is a growing awareness of the dangers of second-hand smoke. A recent Health and Welfare study found that one in five Canadians has a serious medical condition which is aggravated by second-hand smoke. One need only speak to people who have asthma, emphasema or heart disease to substantiate that. Health and Welfare also estimated that 1,050 non-smoking Canadians will die from lung cancer, perhaps one-half from second-hand smoke.

With regard to the economic costs of smoking, Health and Welfare Canada estimated that the cost associated with smoking is twice as much as the revenue from tobacco taxation. The Health and Welfare study pointed out that the economic costs of tobacco use in terms of mortality, disability, fire damage, direct hospitalization and physicians fees is $7.12 billion versus only $4.2 billion in economic revenue from the tobacco industry.

Therefore, by debating this kind of legislation we are not trampling on people's rights or trying to legislate people's lives. We are trying to address the case of the majority. Two-thirds of Canadians do not smoke. They are dying along with the people who smoke. We are only trying to minimize the effects of smoking on both smokers and non-smokers. I do not think any Canadian would object to that as long as the legislation allows those who wish to smoke to do so. No one is trying to remove that right from those individuals. After all, we live in a free society.

We are trying to do two things. We are trying to protect those who do not wish to smoke and who do not wish to be affected negatively by second-hand smoke. Second, we are trying to educate the Canadian public about the many statistics which indicate that smoking is a hazard. The Government has an obligation to instruct Canadians, particularly our youth, that smoking is not healthy and does not represent the "in" lifestyle which the advertising companies would have us believe it does.

We on this side of the House welcome this legislation. We welcome the opportunity to try to address this problem in the federal sphere. If municipal Governments and private companies can initiate non-smoking by-laws, why is the federal Government not taking that kind of leadership in the areas under its jurisdiction? If we are serious and responsible we will not allow this legislation to become inactive and say that we must strike a voluntary chord. Statistics show that voluntary chords do not work in this matter. I hope my colleagues on all sides of the House will co-operate on this. Let us allow this Bill to go to committee where we can hear from witnesses, on both sides of the issue, from the entire country. When the evidence is in, I think it will support this legislation.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add my comments on this Bill. I commend the Member for introducing it. The Member has done us a great service. I agree with the thrust of the Bill. The Member reminded us that the reform of the rules of this House make it possible for us to vote to send this Bill to committee. The Bill would then return to the House for two or three hours of debate and then be voted upon to determine whether it will be adopted. That is a very important reform procedure.

I am a member of the committee dealing with private Members Bills. I am pleased that in this session some Bills will go through the whole process and come to a vote. I am particularly pleased that this is one of those Bills, because I heartily support it. While there are a few minor concerns, they can be addressed in committee and I encourage the passage of this Bill.

Cigarette smoking represents the most important cause of preventable illness and death in Canada and results in over 30,000 deaths annually in this country. Of 180,000 deaths in Canada, one-sixth were related to this one preventable cause. I believe this Bill is important, because if we can begin to show some progress in reducing smoking we will be saving the lives of some Canadians, improving their productivity and saving on many related costs. This Bill will help us to begin making progress in dealing with a preventable cause of death and illness in Canada.

I recently talked to a physician who works in the area of cancer research. He is a chairman of a committee at the University of Ottawa that is studying cancer research. He told me that 92 per cent of the people who enter hospital with lung cancer will be taken out in a coffin. That is an alarming statistic and if this Bill can in any way address that problem we will be showing tremendous progress.

The statistics on smoking in Canada show that there is a very serious health problem, and also suggest some disturbing trends. Currently, Canada has one of the highest rates of per capita cigarette consumption in the industrialized world. Approximately 36 per cent of Canadians aged 15 and over are smokers. While the proportion of smokers has been slowly decreasing, the latest poll shows that the number of young Canadian women who smoke is sharply increasing. For example, the proportion of young women smokers aged 20 to 29 has increased from 36 per cent in 1983 to 45 per cent in 1986. Moreover, there is a rising prevalence of smoking among the very young teenagers. The recent over-all decline in smoking may be offset in the near future by current increases in the number of young smokers.

Canadians are increasingly voicing their concerns over the effects of smoking. They seem to be especially concerned with issues of tobacco advertising and smoking in public places. I agree with those concerns. I agree with their view that tobacco advertising misleads consumers and attempts to recruit new smokers among Canadian youth.

I was a teacher of health and physical education for four years in a high school in Kitchener. We dealt with this topic in our health courses and I found it alarming that, while we could do the best we could in presenting all the facts, we knew there would be certain children within those classes who would end up smoking, no matter what the information. It is alarming because the whole purpose of school is to provide information and allow people to make intelligent choices. Unfortunately, the children would not always listen to the facts.

Canadians are demanding protection from involuntary exposure to smoke as they become better informed about the serious health hazards of second-hand smoke, which contains over 60 poisons.

I commend the Government for its actions and I commend the actions of Air Canada in at least eliminating smoking on aircraft in the triangle between Ottawa, Toronto, and Montreal. I encourage the important recent step announced by Transport Canada to experiment with banning smoking on flights lasting up to two hours. When I am on an airplane on a longer flight I find that after three hours I may as well begin smoking myself, because I am inhaling just as much as the person who is smoking two rows behind me. When I leave the airplane at the end of the flight my eyes are watering and my lungs are full of smoke. I resent that. I am glad that the Government is beginning to react so that we are at least seeing some progress. This Bill will help us go further.

The public became more aware about the issue of tobacco advertising when the RJR-Macdonald Tobacco Company sponsored the Canadian Ski Association in 1983. At that time there was a public outcry over the fact that amateur sport was being used as a vehicle to promote tobacco products. In response, the federal Government enacted a policy in January, 1985 which required all amateur sport bodies funded by the federal Government to desist from any new or renewed tobacco sponsorship contracts. Such an approach means that we are at least beginning to attack the problem on many different fronts.

Although the RJR-Macdonald Tobacco Company recently announced that, due to poor sales, Tempo cigarettes will no longer be sold, the ad campaign for this cigarette also raised public concern about current tobacco marketing practices. Many Canadians felt that the campaign was directed at recruiting new smokers among Canadian youth, in contravention of the tobacco manufacturers' voluntary tobacco advertising and promotion code. This is, of course, a tempting marketing strategy, given the fact that smoking habits are established before the age of 20.

The Non-Smokers Rights Association has also documented numerous other violations of the manufacturers' code, including the practice of advertising tobacco products on billboards and store posters within 200 metres of school property. I want to call to the attention of the House a full page advertisement that appeared in a local newspaper in my riding. This ad, which appeared in papers across Canada, encourages people to write to their Member of Parliament. It states: "Tell your Member of Parliament there is no freedom of choice when a product is addictive. Tell him it is time to stop kids from beginning an addictive, killing practice." That is a good advertisement and I welcome every letter I receive about it. I welcome this Bill because it will help us begin to deal with the problem. These activities by different groups across the country are beginning to have an effect.

The new 15 cigarette Export A pack has also been a worrisome tobacco marketing practice since the low price makes the product more accessible to youth. Unfortunately, in a declining tobacco market more of these questionable advertising and promotion campaigns can be expected. Therefore, I am pleased to support the Bill before us today.

Advertising and promoting such a hazardous product has for some time been a source of concern. Advertising associates tobacco products with healthy, exciting, and glamorous lifestyles, increases the acceptability of tobacco products among young people, and generally legitimizes tobacco use. We have seen very colourful and attractive full page advertisements in magazines. The companies would not invest their money in such ads if they did not work.

A number of Canadian magazines and newspapers, including the Kingston Whig-Standard, the Brockville Recorder and Times, and The Globe and Mail, are now refusing to accept tobacco advertising because they believe it is unethical to advertise a product that is so clearly hazardous and addictive. I commend them for that action.

Although voluntary undertakings by the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council have proven useful in partially restricting tobacco advertising, in ensuring that health warnings appear on packages and in lowering tar and carbon monoxide levels in cigarettes, as code violations show, this self-regulation approach has its limitations. Without any built-in compliance processes, manufacturers are not obliged to follow their own code. I commend the Hon. Member for attempting to address that in introducing her Bill.

In conclusion, let me say that I find it remarkable that research indicates that by banning smoking on the job, not only are health hazards avoided but $5,000 per employee can be saved within three to five years of implementing such a policy. The savings to employers come from lower accident and fire insurance premiums, reduced routine maintenance costs, reduced absenteeism and lower mortality rates among employees. Surveys show that smokers take 50 per cent more sick leave than non-smokers. Mortality rates for smokers in the peak working years of age 30 to 35 are four to seven times higher than that for non-smokers. These are alarming statistics. That is why I feel this action is so needed.

The Government has begun to take some action on this issue and we have before us another Bill along the same line. Whether the spokesperson is from the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party is not the issue. The issue is that this House as a result of the reforms can finally come to grips with something. We can leave our Party labels aside and start to address an issue, as our electors sent us here to do. I commend the Hon. Member for her Bill and hope it ends up being passed.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address the problems and benefits associated with applying a law such as Bill C-204 to means of transport and transportation terminals, especially where such facilities are also workplaces. The proposed legislation seeks to accommodate within reason both smokers and non-smokers who are employees in the federal Public Service as well as users of federally regulated means of transport.

In the transportation sector, as in other sectors, employees providing a direct service to the public share their workplace with the public, and in locations such as large airport terminals and railway stations, with private users of the facility such as restaurateurs, shopkeepers, advertisers, repairmen and, of course, passengers, none of whom may be subject to federal regulation. In these circumstances, it is hard to see how legislation such as Bill C-204 could be successfully enforced.

Ms. McDonald: They all need to breathe.

Mrs. Sparrow: Furthermore, a brief review of attempts to create a smoke-free environment in the transportation sector suggests that legislation might not be required and might, in some cases, prove to be counter-productive.

In 1984, Transport Canada and Health and Welfare Canada examined the issue of smoking in transit, in consultation, of course, with the provinces, the carriers and public interest groups. The consensus appeared to be that while legislative restrictions might be desirable, they should be examined from a practical point of view. Since then a number of initiatives have been investigated and I shall deal with them individually.

At the beginning of September, VIA Rail introduced non-smoking facilities in all except four of the corridor services. Each train now has one car for the exclusive use of non-smokers—

Ms. McDonald: And no space at the stations.

Mrs. Sparrow: —and the remaining cars will have 70 per cent non-smoking and 30 per cent smoking areas. These percentages represent the demands and preferences for seats—

Ms. McDonald: It is not non-smoking if you are in the same enclosed space.

Mrs. Sparrow: —by VIA Rail's customers as shown in their reservation patterns. Computer services are not, of course, a federal responsibility. However, it is worth noting that in Toronto, a smoke ban on all rolling stock has existed for 20 years. This year it was extended to include smoking in all enclosures and bus shelters. In Montreal smoking is banned on all rolling stock but not in shelters or on platforms.

Intercity bus service also falls under provincial jurisdiction, but federal-provincial negotiations are now taking place for the implementation of non-smoking services. The question of enforcement presents some problems which are now being discussed. However, some large bus companies have already undertaken some initiatives, including provision of completely non-smoking buses. Generally, surface carriers are very supportive and active with respect to providing non-smoking facilities. They are responding to the new trends and demands for non-smoking services which now exist in their respective markets—

Ms. McDonald: But far too slowly.

Mrs. Sparrow: —as a simple matter of business planning and strategic marketing devices.

In view of the efforts already undertaken by these carriers, a major federal policy initiative or statement would likely be considered by the operators as unnecessary—

Ms. McDonald: Talk to the customers who are suffering in smoke-filled areas.

Mrs. Sparrow: —and given the lack of federal jurisdiction in most surface areas, might dampen or even diminish the current atmosphere of co-operation.

Mr. Parry: Surely you jest.

Ms. McDonald: Co-operation? It's a question of health.

Mrs. Sparrow: As far as aeroplanes are concerned, I think everyone is familiar—

Ms. McDonald: You want to co-operate with lung cancer?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mrs. Sparrow: I listened to you, perhaps you can give me the same courtesy.

Ms. McDonald: You are talking total nonsense—total nonsense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Could we have the courtesy of listening to the Hon. Member's speech.

Mrs. Sparrow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As far as aeroplanes are concerned, I think everyone is familiar with the success of Air Canada's pilot project banning smoking on flights of two hours or less in the Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa corridor. On November 17, 1986, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) announced proposed regulations to ban smoking on all flights of two hours or less in Canadian commercial aircraft. The Minister will recommend to the Governor in Council that the new air regulation, which proposes to ban smoking on Canadian aircraft for both domestic and transborder flights of two hours or less, be published in Part I of the Canada Gazette to solicit public comment before a final decision is taken early in 1987. The new regulation would require Canadian air carriers to post signs prohibiting smoking on such flights and that crew members may request any passenger who is smoking to stop. If a passenger does not stop smoking on request, the air carrier, under the regulations, would be required to have the passenger removed; of course, at the next available stop.

Mr. Parry: Preferably before.

Mrs. Sparrow: Flight crew members on the flight deck would be exempted from the smoking ban. Currently there is no legislation in effect in Canada which requires air carriers to provide non-smoking areas in aircraft.

Ms. McDonald: That's the point of this Bill.

Mrs. Sparrow: Most of them do so on a voluntary basis.

Ms. McDonald: Its not non-smoking if you are in the same enclosed space.

Mrs. Sparrow: In the marine mode, there appears to be less need for regulatory measures to afford passengers reasonable freedom from tobacco smoke because of the larger area and mobility available to them which offers more scope for avoiding tobacco fumes.

Ms. McDonald: So non-smokers have to go outside.

Mrs. Sparrow: One measure taken earlier this year has been to place "no smoking" signs in ferry cafeterias and restrooms. Operators of some ferries have also considered establishing specific smoking areas, but only one ferry has such an area to date.

In addition to ferries, Transport Canada is currently considering possible initiatives in facilities serving the marine sector such as cruise ship terminals at Halifax, Montreal and Vancouver.

The Coast Guard fleet on the other hand, raises more complex issues. It might be reasonable on the part of the federal Government to require that employees refrain from smoking during normal working hours in buildings and workshops, since they are free to smoke as much as they wish once they leave the public facilities. The majority of the Coast Guard fleet, however, spend more time at sea than alongside and it would be unrealistic to anticipate a total ban on smoking aboard Coast Guard vessels. The crew are "at home" when they are not on duty and are entitled to the same liberty on their own time as are land-based employees.

Ms. McDonald: And those who don't smoke are entitled to a smoke-free environment.

Mrs. Sparrow: With regard to tranport terminals, in 1982 Transport Canada introduced restrictions on the smoking of tobacco products within federally owned and operated air passenger terminals. However, this is a complex issue which, in the case of airports and large railway stations—

Ms. McDonald: They all stink!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Gérin), on a point of order.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, you called for order a while ago, but the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party who moved the motion, the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who is right next to the Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) who is speaking, is constantly interrupting and making it very difficult for us to follow the speech. I believe this interferes with my rights and privileges as a Member of this House which include being able to listen to the Member, who is making a very interesting speech, without having to put up with uncalled for interruptions by the other Member.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The reason we are experiencing a bit of a problem is that there is obviously a Member who is doing some heckling, which is not more than Members do generally, except that the microphone very close to her is open.

I would ask the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) to conclude her speech as she has approximately one minute left.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, while it is clear that tobacco smoke can be a serious source of annoyance and discomfort to non-smokers, as well as a health hazard to some, legislation of the kind proposed—

Ms. McDonald: Some 35,000 people die every year.

Mrs. Sparrow: Would you please give me the courtesy of letting me conclude?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the Hon. Member for Calgary South a minute in which to complete her speech.

Mrs. Sparrow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, in conclusion, while it is clear that tobacco smoke can be a serious source of annoyance and physical discomfort to non-smokers, as well as a health hazard to some, the legislation of the kind proposed in Bill C-204 is premature. Self-regulation and voluntary imposition of restrictions have so far proved to be an effective means of accommodating both smokers and non-smokers. Legislation would probably diminish the atmosphere of mutual respect within which these initiatives are now being adopted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise today with some pleasure in taking the opportunity of addressing the very important motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), but also with great sorrow that there is even the necessity to debate in the Chamber measures aimed at eliminating a murderous and totally irresponsible habit that claims the lives of some 35,000 to 40,000 Canadians yearly.

I was amazed at the speech delivered by the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow). I could not believe my ears. Had the rules permitted the opportunity to ask questions of that Hon. Member I would have asked if she had composed the speech she read. If she had I would be doubly horrified. If it was simply a pre-packaged speech that the Government Members' services bureau provides for its acolytes, then I have to say that those who put it together literally exhibited—and I am fully conscious of the pun—a breath-taking degree of irresponsibility in regard to this particular question.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) has imputed motives to the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow). She is quite capable of writing her own speeches. There is no sense or reason for the Hon. Member to impute motives, to the effect that someone else wrote her speech. I think he should withdraw his imputation.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Perhaps the speaker from the New Democratic Party who has the floor was imputing a motive; but perhaps he was doing it inadvertently. The Chair might want to give him the opportunity to retract his statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have listened to the representations of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). I am not convinced beyond a doubt that the Hon. Member was in fact imputing motives. Therefore, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) has the floor.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, in fact, I was about to rise on the same point of order. With Your Honour's permission I would like to respond to it before returning to debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am willing to allow the Hon. Member to respond to the point of order before resuming his speech, but I have made a ruling. According to the Chair the Hon. Member was not imputing motives. However, the Hon. Member may well want to comment on my decision. I would certainly be willing to allow him to do that.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, in deference to your ruling, I will simply continue with my speech and say, as I was saying before I was interrupted, that in my opinion the grouping of the legislative measures that is countenanced by this Bill is a sensible one, and I think a good first step in the ultimate objective which must, of course, be the elimination of the use of tobacco products from the Canadian scene.

The Bill looks at directing the federal Government to ban completely the promotion and advertisement of cigarettes. It guarantees workers under federal jurisdiction the right to a smoke-free environment. It provides Canadians travelling on common carriers the right to do so without breathing cigarette smoke.

Two of the speeches made this afternoon with respect to the Bill were obviously opposed to the spirit of it. I would like to comment briefly on those two speeches.

The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) referred to this measure in the context of ensuring a smoke-free environment in the federal workplace as an intervention. So it is. Let us face it, by our very presence in this House we are intervenors individually and collectively. We have no other purpose in this House but to intervene in order to ensure that that which we as legislators desire takes place. I would say that is on the same level as accusing a midwife or a gynaecologist of intervening in a birth. It is on the same level as accusing a policeman who prevents a crime of intervening in the commission of a crime. So much for interventions!

What we are looking for here is legislation aimed at saving lives. Frankly, I was amazed to hear the words of the Hon. Member for Calgary South, whom I understand, and I hope she will correct me if I am wrong, was at one time a nurse. She must have been spared the horror of seeing people die in agony, wracked by cancer, if she could make the remarks she made. I must also say that for her to express such a disdain for legislation fundamentally denies the very purpose for which she was elected to serve the riding of Calgary South. What do we come here for if not to legislate?

I have to thank very much my friend, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), for his intelligent and well-argued intervention in favour of the Bill. I believe it takes courage for a Member whose riding is so close to a tobacco-growing area to stand in the House and so firmly nail his flag to the mast of health protection and health promotion, as he did.

Before any Member opposite begins to think that mine is a partisan speech, I wish to say that I condemn my own Party, too, for its failure to act on the question of health promotion through the prevention of smoking. I condemn a Party that appoints a self-confessed, acknowledged smoker as its health critic. I have to say that I condemn, too, the provincial wing of my Party which prevented the discussion of an anti-smoking resolution at the recent provincial convention. If, after that, any Member cares to interpret my remarks as being partisan, let the Member do so.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—ENQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT EXISTS TO REDUCE NUMBER OF FRANCOPHONE EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATIONS CONCERNING LETTER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak again on the subject of official languages. To me it is an important subject, and it seems to be important to the Government. In fact, the Government included a number of promises concerning official languages in the last two Speeches from the Throne.

The Minister has assured me in the House that his Government had no intention of relaxing its efforts to strengthen the francophone presence in the Canadian public service. The Minister's statement would seem to be consistent with the policies announced by the Conservative Government in the last two Speeches from the Throne. However, the real situation is not at all consistent with these objectives. Indeed, the Commissioner of Official Languages said as much in his annual report. He expressed his concern about the position of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on official languages. As we know, the RCMP has announced that it intends to reduce the percentage of Francophones within the force from 20 per cent to 14 per cent. Even worse, it intends to change the classifications of bilingual positions, and I will get back to this later on. Once again, we see that the Conservative Government promises one thing and does the exact opposite.

Meanwhile, there are new developments, life goes on and the Government has once again failed to act responsibly, as I said before, because up to now it has consistently failed to take a clear and unequivocal position on reinforcing policy on official languages programs. This means that managers just have to do the best they can with the few resources they have, because the people in charge, the Government, are shirking their responsibilities.

The effects of this lack of Government leadership are disastrous. No coordinated efforts can be made, and in some cases, we are unfortunately seeing a reduction in services to Francophones. That is already the case with the RCMP, which has announced it will reduce the number of francophone constables in the force from 20 to 14 per cent. The Minister however, in one of his answers to me in the House, stated that this was just something being discussed by a few officials and that no decision had been made.

I have referred to a document of the highest level between the RCMP commissioner and the Treasury Board officials then responsible for implementing the official languages policy, and this document clearly states that there has been an agreement in principle. The Minister rejected this offhandedly by saying that no agreement had been made, that these were only discussions between officials and that he himself had agreed to nothing. This truly shows that the lack of action of the Minister has had negative results. If the Minister is right in saying that no relaxing of the policy will be tolerated, he is nevertheless guilty of letting his officials waste some precious time by negotiating among themselves to conclude unworkable agreements.

Mr. Speaker, if the agreement in principle is implemented as anticipated in the documents which we have obtained, the Minister will have to apologize for having misled the House. Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what is happening now in my opinion. After the Minister stated several times in this House that he would not tolerate any reductions from the levels provided in the official languages policy, we are seeing movements everywhere to reduce these levels. An editorial in the newspaper Le Droit of November 18 said, and I am not the one to say so, that the French language has lost a lot of ground in the RCMP since a Conservative Goverment has been in power in Ottawa. Not only have hiring standards been changed, but the whole bilingual staffing sector will be turned upside down. All this is confirmed by an internal document of the RCMP of which I have a copy. After reading this document, the Le Droit reporter noted that the obvious objective of the management of our federal police force is to require a sufficient knowledge of both official languages of Canada only on rare occasions, so rare in fact that the Commissioner has just conferred upon himself the exclusive power to approve "the unit bilingual complements with Level C profiles".

The Commissioner feels that the B level profile would be enough for the RCMP. I do not agree, Mr. Speaker, and although the RCMP is to be blamed, final responsibility for those unfortunate decisions rests with the Minister himself, and the Treasury Board among others. Since the Tories came to power, they have allowed the situation to deteriorate by doing nothing, showing no leadership. The Minister in charge, the President of the Treasury Board, has stated in this House that he would not back out of his objective to strengthen the French-speaking presence. But apart from his rhetoric, he has done nothing, Mr. Speaker. The Minister and the Government are responsible for that situation. They have failed to show any leadership. Nothing is being done, and when nothing is being done there is no progress. This is why I feel the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary should tell me why this Government does not act, take concrete steps, translate its rhetoric into actions.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear my colleague for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) speak in such a demanding tone. One would think there was an election on. We are reminded of his usual speeches, except that, first, Mr. Speaker, I rise at the request of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). I will not speak in English, whatever the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) might think in that respect.

One thing is sure, Mr. Speaker. With the experience gained by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier over these last few years in this House, he should know that regulations have to go before the Treasury Board. The decision is made by the President of the Treasury Board. We receive a great many reports.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier stated earlier that there were internal reports saying this or that. We know very well that a great many reports are received by the Department every day, whether under the Liberals or the Conservatives. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier would stop looking at this issue through his political glasses; he ought to face facts and focus on the way the law is being applied.

The law states that, with respect to the official languages, it is up to the President of the Treasury Board to decide what is good and what is not good. When the President of the Treasury Board rose in the House to respond to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier he made it quite clear that he did not agree with the document which had been submitted by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. If he does not agree, Mr. Speaker, it means that the RCMP document is not good enough for him. I think respect ought to be shown for minimum standards. We respect the Constitution, and we respect the very principle of bilingualism in Canada. As a long-standing and strong proponent of bilingualism, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier should rise and thank the President of the Treasury Board for doing the utmost to support and promote bilingualism.

But you know, Mr. Speaker, we cannot do everything overnight. We simply could not have tackled every single issue after only two years in office. So when I listen to my colleagues across the aisle, they were there for 20 years, I have serious reservations about their integrity with respect to responsibilities. They had 20 years to raise standards and strengthen policies, but today we can see that they did not accomplish anything over 20 years and it is now up to us as a responsible Government to do something about improving French, and promoting bilingualism throughout Canada.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—DISTRIBUTION OF EXPENDITURES. (B) REGIONAL DISPARITIES—REQUEST FOR NEW POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week I directed a question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) regarding comments made by Canada's chief negotiator in the bilateral trade negotiations with the United States. Mr. Reisman said that Canada could no longer expect to continue its practice of subsidizing industry if it wanted to escape the effects of American trade laws.

I posed that question to the Minister because I believe the answer to it is germane in terms of national policies which must be instituted to provide economic viability and opportunities to some regions of the country. Unfortunately—and I say so sincerely—the Minister chose not to answer the question. In fact, my disappointment was even greater because on subsequent days I had hoped to question the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). However, due to previous commitments she was not in the House to receive my question.

It is fundamental that Canadians know and understand the effects of what the chief negotiator for Canada is talking about. He is not talking about a review of regional economic development policies. He is talking about major concessions with regard to subsidy to industry in Canada.

We do not know whether or not there will be major concessions with regard to maritime freight assistance. We do not know whether the Government of the day is preparing to make major concessions with regard to western grain transportation. We do not know whether the Government is intending to terminate assistance to small business or to terminate assistance to our primary producers. The Minister and the Government should avail themselves of every opportunity to explain to Canadians what the statements mean in their totality. This could have an extremely negative effect on Canada's economy.

In particular, I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to some of the musings that were in the Throne Speech of some months ago. There in a paragraph or two it talked about regional disparities. We read that the Government was going to try new solutions for Atlantic and Western Canada.

It is imperative for policy makers at the national level to let us know exactly what is in the mix that is being given away, if you will, to the United States as part of the concessions that we will have to make as a result of these bilateral negotiations. I think Canadians, being the reasonable group of individuals we are, collectively would respond in a reasoned and objective way if the Government saw fit to elaborate with some degree of specificity as to what Simon Reisman is talking about.

There are provisions in the Canadian Constitution that call upon the Government of Canada to provide equal opportunities for all Canadians regardless of where they may live in the country. I suggest that the refusal by the Government of Canada to respond in a detailed way to questions about a very important statement made by our chief negotiator leaves reasonable, objective individuals to question the seriousness of a commitment the Government may make with regard to regional economic development. It raises fear, animosity and concern among Canadians who are receiving benefits under the programs of, say, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion as well as those of Crown corporations. It raises fear because people may be terminated.

Take a look at a community such as Terrace Bay in northern Ontario. It is under the threat of major lay-offs as a result of the 15 per cent countervailing duty on softwood lumber. Will the Government terminate all forms of assistance under the Labour Adjustment Program for that particular sector? Will the Government terminate unemployment insurance benefits or make that a major concession? We have to know so that we can intelligently look—and I say this through you, Sir, to the Government—at the options being presented.

For the Minister to rise in his place and give a nothing answer to an important statement made by Canada's chief negotiator is not only irresponsible, it is an abdication of one's oath of office, an abdication of responsibility to the House of Commons and an abdication of responsibility to the Canadian people. In particular, it is a betrayal to the regions of Canada which depend to a large extent on the national programs of the national Government. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will clearly spell out today what that statement by Canada's chief negotiator means in its full impact.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it means, among other things, that our Government is attempting to take us out of the uncaring morass that we inherited from a Government the Member supported. We are attempting to change the direction of Canada's economic future. What we are attempting to do is to recognize that which the former Government did under mounds of rhetoric for so many years and which now affects the lives and the livelihood of every Canadian.

The Liberal Government hid from us the truth about the Auto Pact. The Liberals never told us the truth about the softwood industry. They hid it and buried it. They never told us our industries were in danger. I ask my distinguished friend from Cape Breton, when did he ever hear from a Liberal Government that within 12 months the Auto Pact would come to an end? When did he even hear that suggested? Look at the fishery, the forest industry, the Christmas tree industry. When the hell did we ever hear from you people about the potential danger these traditional industries faced?

The Minister said in response to the Hon. Member the other day that we are doing much. The question is of course serious. If I can go back to questions raised by the Hon. Member a couple of weeks ago, he knows we have a pulp and paper subagreement with Newfoundland worth $46 million. We have a highway transportation subagreement with that province worth $180 million. There was a forest resource development subagreement with Newfoundland worth $48 million. There was a meat processing facilities subagreement with Prince Edward Island worth $10.5 million. There was a tourism development subagreement with Prince Edward Island worth $8.9 million. An industrial competitiveness subagreement with that same province was worth $8.5 million. There was a technology transfer subagreement with Nova Scotia worth $34 million. There was a Sysco modernization subagreement with Nova Scotia worth $157.1 million. We are labouring on and I think I share the Hon. Member's concern with the final outcome. We all listened to Premier Buchanan this afternoon.

I could go on for some considerable period of time but let me simply wind up by saying that we are concerned about the impact of these programs. We are also concerned about the development of new industry and creation of new jobs in the disparate regions of our country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.23 p.m.
